Dysea had awakened to the burning of her wolf blood and the painful yet totally glorious feeling of being completely stuffed with Immortal cock. She didn't know how long they had been fucking her, but the pain in her anus had rapidly been replaced by divine sensations as their two huge cocks had sawed in and out of her lithe and muscular elven body. Her nipples were searing points of wanton hardness, the silver studs through both of her nipples only serving to magnify the immense satisfaction that ripped through her. Only Martin had ever penetrated her so completely in that most private of places and the enormous pleasure she had gotten from that experience had led to many more similar to it with her Nauta Melme. Yet now, the Immortal cocks stretching her body were larger and thicker than Martin, and they were driving her utterly insane with rapture. Their Immortal bodies were so hugely powerful and they now held her balanced between them, impaled on their dominating cocks as their large hands discovered her body in a way only her beloved Nauta Melme had ever done. Their skin was a dark gray in color and the disparity between them and her deep tan only served to enhance their passion as they drove their cocks into her. She had never been so staggeringly filled before, her warm, tight elven pussy and ass quickly stretching to accommodate the pulsing hot Immortal cocks buried in her body even as her wolf blood screamed for more. She had tried to fight them at first, but the battering she had taken had served to weaken her considerably. When that first Immortal had erupted deep in her pussy after only a few brutal strokes she knew all was lost. That Immortal was shifting positions as the second man was erupting into her bowels with savage glee. The first one had wasted no time in twisting her around on the small bunk, and taking hold of her head, laughing hysterically as he forced his slick and still very hard cock into her mouth. She tried to push him away as he drove his cock into her throat causing her to gag, but the second Immortal only grabbed her arms and held her with his cock still buried in her sore ass. The moment the Immortal began exploding into her throat and belly Dysea could only think of one thing. With his entire cock in her throat she tore her hands free from the second immortal and wrapped her arms around his powerful ass cheeks holding his dominating cock in her throat as he filled her stomach with his seed. She could feel the effects of his addicting come racing through her as he withdrew his cock from between her lips. The need to have him fill her over and over again beginning to grow stronger by the moment. Dysea knew she was all but gone when she did not fight him as he lifted her off the small bed, twisted her body around once more and impaled her one more time with his Immortal cock, which amazingly was still hard as iron and ready for more.

Dysea could not feel her Nauta Melme's aura or his Mindvoice presence and through the fog of delight coursing through her mind and swiftly overwhelming her senses, she remembered that he was gone forever. He had been violently killed protecting those he so loved on Earth. Those that she had loved so completely as well. Dysea's wide emerald eyes blinked rapidly and she realized through that fog that these Immortals had already filled her with their blistering hot come at least once, and they had only shifted positions. She had no concept of time and didn't know how long they had been using her, or how many times they had emptied their seed in to her, all she knew was that she was beginning to covet the sinful pleasure she was experiencing. It was unlike anything she had ever felt before and she felt her resistance crumbling ever so rapidly. This should not be happening to her now, she was too powerful, and Esther had given her the serum before the battle on Kranek. She should not feel anything but immense pain and humiliation at what these monsters were doing to her, but the wicked pleasure was undeniable and her being well into phase now made it even worse. It amplified all of her pleasure receptors to the extreme and no matter how she fought against it she could feel a monstrous orgasm building inside her.

"Phy'iad... Phy'iad will kill... will kill us if he finds out!" The Immortal driving his cock into her ass once more groaned against the side of her elven ear.

"Fuck Phy'iad!" The second Immortal exclaimed between clenched teeth. "Osiri said she wouldn't become immune to Immortal come!" He gasped as he slammed his cock into Dysea again and again. "She is... she is mine now! I... I emptied my load into her throat and pussy once already! She is mine now! When I fill her with my come again she will be my slave! Look how she... look how she holds us as we fuck her senseless! She will do anything I want her to! She is my Elf Queen bitch now!"

"Shit! She... her ass is too tight! I'm... I'm going to... Aaargh!"

The Immortal rammed his cock as deeply into her ass as he could, his throbbing balls pressed tightly to her ass cheeks and Dysea felt his searing hot come filling her bowels. It was too much then and the walls of her control came smashing down like children's building blocks. The magnificent Immortal cock slamming into her pussy was the final catalyst to her fall and her head flew back, her lips opened in a soundless wail of defeat and wonderful acceptance. Long, silky platinum blond hair flew in all directions as her head slammed into the jaw of the Immortal behind her causing him to fall away spent, his immense cock still spewing his seed all over her skin, covering portions of her tattooed body. It didn't matter to her as her hands flew to the Immortal's shoulders as he increased his fifteen inch plunges into her lush body to mind numbing speed. She could feel every splendid inch of his cock as he speared her, every thick angry vein pulsing in dominance over her. Her mind was unable to resist the sensations that told her she belonged to this Immortal now.

"You... you are mine now Elf Queen!" He snarled. "Mine! I'm going to fuck you every day for the rest of your life!"

The last vestiges of who she was reached out and Dysea Leonidas shook her head only slightly, all resistance falling away. "N... no... please!"

His laugh was harsh and demeaning and he gripped her firm ass cheeks tightly as he rammed his cock into her completely, the bulbous head slamming into her far deeper than anyone had ever reached before and she gasped in unabashed enchantment as his volcano hot balls pressed tightly to her upturned ass cheeks.

"Tell me what you want Elf Queen!" He barked loudly. "Tell me what your body craves Dysea my bitch! Tell me now! I want to hear you scream for me as I dump my come into your womb!"

Dysea's will broke then. It snapped as cleanly as a board would snap when struck by such an overwhelming force. Her head flew back once more and she let go, surrendering to the utter supremacy of the orgasm as it cascaded through every minute portion of her body. Her pussy clamped down on the entire length of the Immortal's massive cock as she clung to his arms and howled out her delight.

"YES!!!! Ahhhhhhhhhhhh... fuck yes! Break me my... break me my Immortal Master!" Dysea Leonidas screamed out. "Break me to your will! Fill... fill me with your Immortal come! I beg you... Master! Break meeeee!"

The Immortal groaned at her words and her incredible tight body and with his hands holding her hips firmly he began to spew his hot come deeply into her convulsing elven body watching with a twisted grin as she shuddered violently in the grips of her own massive orgasm. The tattoos that adorned her sweaty skin only increased the intensity of his orgasm because of the sultry nature of the coloring and he continued to empty his load into her for several long minutes, each blast of his hot come further erasing who she was and making her his slave for all time.

Then his head snapped forward and his vampiric fangs sank deeply into her exposed neck and she began screaming yet again in another earth shattering orgasm as he fed deeply on her blood, sealing her fate as she clutched at him in wanton need. Her pussy was milking his cock for every drop of his Immortal come, unwilling to allow any to escape her body so that she could sate the burning of her blood and mind. As he leaned back, pulling her shuddering body up tightly to his he withdrew his fangs slowly from her neck, licking the two puncture holes so that they sealed instantly. Never had he tasted such sweet blood and he would taste more of it soon. So much more. He could feel her pussy muscles clenching and unclenching on his cock, taking every drop of his come and he knew she was his forever now. Her head flew up and she gazed at him with sizzling emerald green eyes.

"Kiss... kiss me my... my Immortal Master!" She gasped loudly. "I am... I am yours! Kiss me I beg you!"

The Immortal felt his cock thicken almost immediately at her whimpering words even as it still leaked his come into her body. He grinned viciously as he slammed his cock upward into her and he saw her face contort in a delighted expression.

"I may kiss you Dysea my Elf Queen!" He growled. "I have three more hours before my relief comes and I intend to pump my seed into you until it spills from your openings. Then you will be mine forever! Perhaps then I will kiss you! After you have cleaned our Immortal cocks with your tongue!"

Dysea nodded her head quickly and without reservation. "Oh yes... oh yes my Master! Anything! Anything! I need your Immortal come Master! I need it!"

"Then fuck me Dysea! Fuck me like you used to fuck your wolf King!" He laughed at her. "Fuck me like you fucked him and I might just give you what you want and need! Sling your tight Elf Queen pussy on your Immortal master's cock now bitch!"

Without hesitation or pause Dysea Leonidas began to do just that. With unabashed glee and energy.

NORMYA'S LIGHT THIRTEEN HOURS BEHIND PHY'IAD'S COMMAND SHIP

Cha'talla turned when he smelled Esther's sweet blood waft into the large lounge area on NORMYA'S LIGHT. It was usually a place where the crew would come and joke and relax, but now they were only talking amongst themselves quietly, the usual banter gone and in its place a deadly seriousness. The crew of NORMYA'S LIGHT had long ago accepted Cha'talla and now when he walked the corridors there were no longer looks of suspicion and concealed fear and hate. He had been on board many times over the last months to meet with Admiral Thodias and Dysea on one thing or the other. While she spent most of her time on the surface of Kranek to show her trust and support of what they were building, there had been many days where they met late into the night and Cha'talla would remain on board. He and Esther had their own large quarters only a few doors down from Dysea, and this more than anything showed them that he was sincere in not only his words but his deeds. Since his impassioned speech on the surface of Kranek had been broadcast throughout the entire Strike Wing, now when they looked at him he saw respect and honor in their eyes.

Esther walked with Lisisa, Narice and Denali Leonidas as she strode across the lounge area, her dark eyes focused on him entirely. She stopped in front of him and looked up into his face. A face that could not have been more handsome to her now, but a face that would change and become even more desirable to her in the future.

“Speak to me my Du'ased 'ranndi.” Cha'talla spoke softly.

Esther slowly held up the data pad. “The ship's doctor and I researched everything within the data banks that I have worked on; everything that Anja sent to me. We even contacted four senior Hadarian Healers that worked closely with Anja on many of her projects. They work out of the research facility she built on Apo Prime.”

“Do not delay the news my wife.” Cha'talla spoke. “Is what Gareld said true?”

Esther forced herself to nod. “Yes.” She spoke ever so softly.

Cha'talla closed his eyes tightly and exhaled slowly before opening them again. “How... how is this possible?”

“You know that the Senior Polemarch of the Union is...” Esther began.

Cha'talla nodded. “His Spartan name was Dymas. He was one of Leonidas's Captains at Thermopylae. I do not know what name he goes by now, but I do know that since the Battle for Earth he is responsible for the deaths of more Immortals than the King he followed so loyally. The High Lord had a price on his head almost as high as your father.” Cha'talla spoke looking at Denali and Lisisa. “He created the elves that were on Earth. Yes... I know this. Dysea's mother and father were two of his original clones. She is called a second generation Earth Born Clone I believe she told me was the name that is now used.”

Esther looked at him surprised. “How...”

“We talked of many things we did, Dysea and I, on the nights we were up here Esther. After you had gone to bed.” He spoke softly. “Not everything was focused on the present and future. She told me many things of herself, how she and your father met Denali and Lisisa and I spoke of how I was finally blessed when you came into my life. We spoke of our children and our parents... a great many things.”

Esther nodded slowly. “When... when Dymas created the clones his work was almost perfect for the equipment he had to use. The EBCs are an almost perfect genetic match to the elves on Elear. However all of the Earth Born Clones lack one chromosome that the elves on Elear have. They lack a Telomere Chromatin Chromosome. When an elven male or female is turned by a Lycavorian, that Telomere Chromatin chromosome is part of the molecular bonding structure that unites their wolf DNA to their elven DNA. It is part of the molecular structure that relates to their ability to heal and resist disease and foreign bodies that enter their body and their blood.” Esther looked at him and took his large hand in hers. “It is also the single chromosome that allows a turned elf born on Elear, or born to parents from Elear, to eventually fight off the affects of the Eukaryote cells within Akruxian males. Without that chromosome she will be just as susceptible to the addicting nature of the chemicals in Akruxian semen as any normal female elf who is not turned. It will not matter that she is also half wolf now. Without that chromosome she...

Cha'talla lifted a hand and put a finger gently to her lips and stopped her from continuing. "I understand Du'ased 'ranndi." He said softly.

"There is more I discovered Du'ased M'ranndii." Esther told him softly.

Cha'talla shook his head. "Little else matters now." He said in reply. "Little else matters. You can... you can cure her of this my wife?"

Esther nodded. "Yes. It is different than the serum I gave to her weeks ago, but I can easily synthesize the correct one with the equipment on this ship." She saw his confused look and placed a hand on his chest now. "You know that her gift within Mindvoice has to do with precognition."

Cha'talla nodded. "Yes... she has told me of some of the visions she has had. Several helped the Union to win battles against the Evolli with little or no loss of life."

Esther nodded. "She had a vision that she was captured by... by Immortals several weeks ago. She was very... she was very calm about it and simply pulled me aside and asked that I give her a dose of the serum we have developed for those Phy'iad is holding prisoner. At the time I did not know the serum would not work because she is missing the chromosome that interacts with the particular serum I developed."

Cha'talla looked at her stunned. "She knew... she knew this might happen? Why did she not..."

"She did not want you to blanket her with additional security." Esther said. "She knew you would fawn over her protection and it is not what she wanted."

"I could... I could have prevented this!" Cha'talla gasped.

Denali stepped forward a little bit, Lisisa holding to his hand. "No." He said. "You can not plan for everything Cha'talla and if your enemy has an equally excellent plan, the forces to execute it and the element of surprise, they will more than likely always succeed. This was not something you could have prevented. The Kavalians and those with this Phy'iad had to have been planning this operation for some time. There was nothing you could do. Nothing any of us could do."

Cha'talla shook his head once more. "If this has happened... if they have debased Dysea in such a manner, then all is lost for my people. We will never be able to regain our honor in the eyes of so many."

"There is more Du'ased M'ranndii." Esther said again.

"What more could possibly matter?" Cha'talla asked softly.

"I discovered... I discovered some things while I was working." Esther spoke. "Things in the Union medical database that you need to know. It relates... it relates to the Akruxian people as a whole my love."

"What could be more important right now than rescuing Dysea and begging her for the forgiveness that she may well not grant." Cha'talla asked softly.

Esther squeezed his arm. "You need to... you need to know this Cha'talla." Esther said. "You need to know that this is not your fault!"

"Whose fault is it then my Blessed Wife, if not mine?" Cha'talla asked.

"It is our fault." Narice spoke softly. "More specifically... my father's fault. A blame I share as his daughter."

"No you do not Narice!" Esther snapped looking at her. Esther took the pad from his hand and typed in a single command before giving it back to him. "It's the High Lord's fault and Aikiro's fault! And it is theirs alone! You bear no shame for something that happened long before you were ever born Narice! Before any of us were ever born!" She stated pointedly as she turned back to Cha'talla. "It's been the High Coven's fault since the day they began to assault the Akruxian homeworld."

Cha'talla looked at her evenly, unwilling to read the pad. "I don't understand most of what is on this pad my wife. You know that."

Esther snatched it back out of his hand now. "Veldruk and Aikiro ordered the use of a unique biotoxin they invented and that was then introduced into the upper atmosphere of your homeworld six months before they invaded!"

"A biotoxin?" He asked.

Esther typed madly on the pad and then held it up to his face. "This is from the data banks of the Lycavorian City Ship Cha'talla! The ship where most of the new advances in technology that the Union has come from. That ship held data cores of information and the history of this quadrant of space dating back nearly three hundred thousand years! This is what the Akruvian people looked like before Veldruk introduced the toxin into your atmosphere! Look at it husband!”

Cha'talla took the pad from her and looked at the image on the small screen. His eyes grew wide when he saw the tanned like skin of the obvious Akruvian male. The bone spurs were there yes, the eye sockets not so sunk in but this Akruvian had long black hair and bright blue eyes. His body still had the same powerful and imposing build common in all Akruvians but his skin was deeply tanned, a deep bronze color not unlike that of his sons. The wrinkled and gray mottled skin of common Immortals was completely non-existent. The skin was smooth and unblemished like that of his sons. Cha'talla looked up at her.

“I don't understand Esther.” He said. “This can not be right. My... my people have never looked like this.”

“That is what your people looked like before Veldruk came along!” Esther hissed rather vehemently.

Cha'talla shook his head. “The plague struck our planet before Veldruk came my Du'ased 'ranndi.” He said confident in his words. “That is what caused our physical condition. That is what caused us to look as we do!”

“No it is not!” Esther exclaimed. “They used a biotoxin my love! Six months before they invaded they released this into your atmosphere! They knew they could not defeat your people in a stand up fight on the ground. You are too powerful... too durable. There was no way they could stand and win a slug fest with the Akruvian people! Veldruk wanted your people as his slaves! This is how he and Aikiro made it happen!”

“Esther... millions... billions of my people died!” Cha'talla protested her words. “Our history scrolls...”

“Your history scrolls are wrong!” Esther snapped pulling the pad away from him again. “The toxin warped your DNA! The contaminant they released into the atmosphere was the plague! It mixed with the oxygen in the atmosphere and caused mutations in your people! The mutation that makes you look as you do! Veldruk knew what he was doing! He waited until the contagion had swept across your planet killing Akruvians in droves! When he finally came, you fought him for a short time... but then he offered your elders a choice. He could cure the plague if they allowed him to turn a hundred of your strongest warriors into vampires. He would then allow those hundred to turn a hundred more! It was a cycle Cha'talla! A cycle that sick monster started and kept going! He wanted your people as his slaves. His shock troopers!” Esther turned quickly and looked at Narice before taking a deep breath. “Forgive me Narice.”

Narice shook her head holding her hands clasped behind her back. Narice knew the type of man her father was, she had heard all of what he had done in the years after his death simply by listening to Yuri and her mother rant what a fool he was. The only problem Narice saw was that they never talked of themselves in the same way for the deeds they had committed and they should have in Narice's mind.

“Do not apologize for stating the truth Esther.” She spoke softly.

“Esther... the Tomes of my people...” Cha'talla began.

“They are my people too Du'ased M'ranndii and I have read them as well.” Esther said. “The earliest Tome is dated three months after the plague began. Three months Cha'talla! Why is that? It is said that the Tomes of the Akruvian people went back thousands of years before the Coven ever showed up! What happened to them?”

Cha'talla's dark eyes met hers. “My... my father said they were destroyed by the Coven during the invasion.” He said.

Esther nodded. “Of course! So your people would not know what your history was before the plague and so that they would never discover it! How many Akruvians that lived before the plague still draw breath Cha'talla? Think about it husband! Within the first few hundred years after Veldruk enslaved your people, nearly anyone who had lived before the plague was gone. Veldruk either had them killed secretly or they died because they refused to be turned and the plague killed them!” Esther thrust the pad at him, pressing it against his broad chest. “This very image is dated before the plague began Cha'talla! Before! Why would the Lycavorians have this in their databanks if it was not the truth? They have nothing to gain by having false information in their computer cores!” Esther pressed close to him now, spreading her hands against his chest and looking up into his eyes.

“This is why our sons are different Cha'talla my Du'ased M'ranndii.” Esther gasped. “I did... I never thought to scan their embryonic DNA molecules for reversion.”

“Reversion?” Cha'talla asked.

Esther nodded slowly. "I am immune to this toxin that infected your people Cha'talla. All vampires are... elves and Lycavorians as well. The first time... the first time I tasted your blood husband, the DNA strands of the toxin were destroyed instantly by my blood. When..." Esther looked sheepishly at Denali and the others before turning back to Cha'talla's stunned face and continuing. "When I first conceived... my blood destroyed the DNA strands of the toxin in your bodily fluids. It left nothing but pure Akruvian strands and that is why our sons look so different than others Cha'talla! That is why the children of the Akruvian and elven marriages look so different!" She was speaking excitedly now. "This is why Aikiro exiled me. Exiled you. Why she tried to kill us! She knew what our sons would look like. She knew we would discover the truth! She has always known vampire blood would destroy the toxins that have been passed down through your people for hundreds of generations. It would reveal to your people what was done! It was why Veldruk tried to kill you when you came to him about Lisisa!"

Lisisa moved up next to Denali now. "You were getting too close Cha'talla. Too close to discovering the truth and you didn't even know it. When Veldruk found out you were the one who had taken me... he knew that it was only a matter of time before you discovered what he had done. He couldn't let you live. You would have discovered the truth."

"Don't you see my love?" Esther exclaimed as she took his face in her hands. "The serum I made for you was not the reason you began to change! The reason you began to change is because you were taking my blood while we made love and it was killing the toxins! It is why you look as you do now! Every time you have taken my blood it has only reinforced what is already inside you! That is why you have not reverted back! If I scanned your DNA right now I know I would find that these toxins are so much less than they were when I fell in love with you."

Cha'talla stood there dumbfounded by what they were telling him. Thousands of years of servitude to the High Coven. Thousands of years believing it was Veldruk and the Coven that had saved his people from extinction. Millennia serving and dying at the whim of a man who had wrought this upon them to begin with.

They are not beyond these things my brother. Vollenth's voice filled his mind clear and strong. I have experienced their twisted methods just as you have.

Vollenth?

As we have discovered each other my bonded brother and our future is now united, perhaps it is time that the future came to your people. Just as it has mine. Just as it has us. Vollenth spoke.

Narice stepped closer to him. "Esther can make an antibody Cha'talla. She can synthesize a drug that will kill the toxins within the blood of every Akruvian Immortal alive. She can give all of you your lives back! The lives my... the lives my people took away. You can start again! And I will stand beside you as a friend and ally to try and make amends for what my mother and father did if you will allow me."

Cha'talla looked at his beautiful vampire wife. His goddess and the one thing he would sacrifice all he was for. "Esther... you can... you can do this?" he gasped.

Esther nodded quickly. "Yes!" She stated instantly. "With the medical equipment on NORMYA'S LIGHT I can synthesize enough doses for everyone we have with us. It will be a concentrated dose and the reversion will be very uncomfortable initially but it will happen within a minute as soon as the toxins are destroyed. I will need Anja's material support when we return to Kranek, but I can make enough to distribute to the entire population of our settlement within a week. In a month we can make enough to supply to the entire High Coven!" She took his arms in her hands. "We will free Dysea Cha'talla! No matter what it takes! And then... then we will free our people from the Coven oppression they have been under for so long."

Denali stepped forward then drawing Lisisa close to him and taking Narice's hand. "We need to contact Andro with this information." He said. "We need to let him know what is going on Cha'talla. With the lock down... only he can cut loose the equipment and medicines Esther will need."

"Your mother Denali, I will do nothing until after we have taken back your mother and returned her to her family!" Cha'talla hissed. "I swore this to your brother and I will not break my vow to him after what he has done for us."

Denali nodded. "Then let's get that ball rolling shall we."

Cha'talla nodded. "I have been thinking that with Vollenth and all of you here, if we combine our abilities within Mindvoice and with you and Lisisa keeping us steady... I want to see if I can touch my son Lynom. He can provide us with a wealth of updated information that we do not have right now."

Deni looked at Lisisa and nodded. "It's worth a shot." He said.

PHY'IAD'S COMMAND SHIP EIGHT HOURS FROM BELID

"...tapped into the main internal sensor system here." Lancy was speaking to Normya and Cirith as they sat in the pilot and co-pilot's seat. He was pointing at the small monitor, one of four that they had set up between the two seats. "It took an extra two hours because of their patrols but we got it done."

"Patrols?" Cirith asked. "How many?"

"Three that we could count." Lancy answered as he turned when Tir'ut moved into the cockpit. "Tir'ut?"

Tir'ut moved up behind Normya as Lancy made room for him. "If they have three, then we must assume they will have more. We only saw three as Lancy said." He stated. "And the three we marked were patrolling these sections of the ship, but doing so in a random way." He indicated three different points on the schematic of the ship.

Cirith nodded. "Engineering of course." She said. "This is where you said they have routed all their power conduits Lancy?"

Lancy nodded. "And most of their remote access cables."

Cirith touched the last spot Tir'ut had indicated. "And this is the brig." She stated looking at Normya. "Where they are holding your mother."

Tir'ut nodded his head in agreement. "We used the shadows to get as close as we could. We had to move slowly but we swept through the area four times before moving as close to the detention area as we dared. As near as we can determine with the portable sensors... Dysea Darthirii Ilhar is in this cell. It is on the starboard side all the way in the back."

Cirith nodded. "Maximum Security Cell." She said.

Lancy nodded. "Yes."

Normya looked at them. "What? What does that mean?" She asked.

Cirith looked at her. "Maximum security cells are tied directly into the bridge's tactical console. They operate on an entirely different power grid than the rest of the prisoner holding cells. The moment the cell is breached externally, an alarm will go off on the bridge and they will be all over us."

"Can't we reroute the power somehow?" Normya asked.

Cirith shook her head. "Unlike the LEONIDAS IIA-Class ships of the Union Normya, the High Coven wanted to insure their prisoners did not escape. While your cells would deactivate so whoever was inside them would not die in an emergency, the Maximum Security Cells on a High Coven dreadnought warship will not. And any attempt to tamper with their direct power source will result in us being discovered... and our mission will be over."

"There has to be a way!" Normya growled. "I will not leave her to..."

Tir'ut dropped his hand on her shoulder and squeezed gently. "No one has given up yet Il darthirii kal'daka." He looked at Lancy. "Tell them."

Lancy nodded with a smile. "There is another way." He spoke quickly. He pointed with his finger to the print of the ship. "We use the maintenance shaft that runs under the cell block and burn our way through the floor into her cell. It completely bypasses the security in the walls and corridor."

Cirith looked at him. "You can do that?" She asked.

Lancy nodded. "On a normal ship, with a full crew, I would say no way. There would be too many maintenance people in and out of the shafts. With the skeleton crew they are working on... it will be easy. Conlar will connect our portable power supply to the cables just beneath the cell block. We use two torches cutting in opposite directions and we're in. We grab her... and then we blur back here and get the vith off the ship."

"How long?" Cirith asked.

Lancy met her gaze. "That's the tricky part." He said slowly. "If the sensor readings are correct we are moving at one hundred and five percent on the Sub Light Drives. This Phy'iad is obviously in a big hurry to get home. At this speed we'll be arriving at Belid in under ten hours. If that is where he is going... and the sensor logs back up Tir'ut."

Cirith nodded. "We detected a long range transmission that lasted approximately thirteen minutes." She said. "It was right after that when they increased power to the SLDs."

Lancy and Tir'ut nodded. "My guess is they spoke with whoever hired them... Kavalians by the look of their attack on Kranek."

"How long will it take you?" Cirith asked quickly.

"Getting there isn't really a problem." Lancy said. "All of the strike team fits in the shafts easily enough. Even Tir'ut here. Figure three hours to get into position and then Conlar will need a minimum of four hours to infiltrate the system and connect our portable power generator without it being detected as a power surge on the bridge. Another ten minutes at least to find and remove the Static Inhibitor so she can talk to Normya and Tir'ut in Mindvoice... and then we blur and shadow our way back through the Brig area. They won't expect us to be coming out. You and Normya have the ship ready to go and the moment we are on board we blast a hole in the dock doors and get the hell out of here."

"Three hours to get there?" Normya asked.

Lancy nodded. "The portable generator is nearly two hundred kilos Lady Normya. Two of us will have to carry it... and it isn't exactly made for moving in the shadows."

Normya looked at him sheepishly and shook her head. "Forgive me." She stated.

Lancy brushed it off. "If it was my mother I would be acting the same way." He said. "We will get her back."

"We do not know how close they will be to Belid when they drop from SLD operation Lancy." Cirith said.

Lancy nodded. "It's a risk we will have to take Lady Cirith. And we have Tir'ut here... which is another plus. None of us would be able to hold up for long in a stand up fight with an Immortal. Tir'ut can and will."

Cirith looked at Normya. "Normya?"

Normya nodded without hesitation. "Yes."

Cirith nodded. "I will go with you." She said.

Lancy looked at her and shook his head. "That is not needed Lady Cirith. And it is too dangerous. Your father would cut my throat if I allowed harm to come to you. He is already going to beat me for allowing you to fly us onto this ship to begin with."

"My father knows risks must be taken." Cirith said. "And I can shave off seven of those ten minutes at the end in finding and removing the Static Inhibitor. We may need them. I will help Normya prep the ship and when you are nearly ready to enter the cell I will move to your location."

"Cirith you..." Lancy started.

Cirith looked at him. "Normya is by far the better pilot between the two of us and... if they still followed standard doctrine they will have striped her of all her clothing in an attempt to degrade her. I will not have you searching Dysea's naked body for the Static Inhibitor Lancy!"

Lancy's eyes showed that he had not thought of that and he nodded slowly. "I didn't think of that." He said.

Cirith smiled. "Make your preparations and inform us when you are ready to depart."

Tir'ut leaned over the back of Normya's chair and kissed her hard, her hand coming up to stroke his cheek. Cirith and Lancy watched this with a mixed order of emotions, more so for Cirith since she had never experienced the physical contact with a man that Normya obviously had. They were Blessed Husband and Wife and Cirith had no doubts that they had partaken of the pleasures of each others flesh. Cirith knew her wolf blood craved physical contact and through the years she had learned how to fight it down and resist that call. Watching Normya Leonidas, who had far more powerful wolf blood running in her veins, watching how she and Tir'ut were constantly touching one another was making it infinitely harder for Cirith to fight down the powerful urges of her own wolf blood.

"Be prepared Il darthirii kal'daka." Tir'ut spoke. "We will be moving very fast when we return to the ship."

Normya nodded confidently. "I'll be ready. Don't worry."

Tir'ut nodded and turned to Lancy. He nodded and they both headed into the rear of the SCYTHER. Normya looked at Cirith and saw her staring at her intently. "What?" She asked.

Cirith shook her head slowly. "The... the love you and your husband share Normya." She said softly. "It is almost... it is a overt thing."

Normya blushed. "I'm sorry." She said.

Cirith shook her head. "Don't be. Perhaps one day I will have something just as intense and passionate." She said turning back to her instruments. "Perhaps one day."

TALON OF JUSTICE SIX HOURS FROM RENDEZVOUS

Devra placed the data pad down on the table and looked up as her daughters settled to the table across from her with small trays of food. Devra had been pleasantly surprised at first when she discovered that the TALON had several Vanari food selections, and then she remembered that Nirilo almost always traveled with Dutkne. That they would stock food on this ship for him as a normal course of action was a sign Devra knew. It was a sign that what she had believed for many years was indeed true. These Lycavorian men and women were not the savage and cruel men and women the older members of the Board of Regents thought them to be. Ever since she and Arduri and Naesta had come on board they had been treated with the utmost respect. The six members of her Vanari security detail, four of whom were females, were treated as equals in everything without question. There was a buzz among the crew for all of them and what they were doing and where they were. Devra found that Dutkne and Wayonn did not keep things from the crew and the excitement of what they were doing and who they were going to meet had everyone talking animatedly whenever she saw them.

She watched as Arduri took a small bite of the Vanari specialty food and began chewing. Her stunning green eyes opened slightly wider and she stabbed another piece of the Avian Spice Stew. It was a delicacy on their homeworld of Austrova and it was the finest Devra had tasted in many years and apparently Arduri felt the same way. Her daughter Arduri was the more free spirited of her daughters, always open to new things and new experiences. Her actions during the three Celebration of the Hundreds that she had participated in marked her as one of the more progressive of the younger generation. She made no bones about her sexual openness and her free nature and it had surprised Devra when she agreed to join with the son of one of the more conservative members of the Board of Regents. She sensed that it was not truly what Arduri wanted and part of her heart was not in it. Cruor Ahn Vernalo was a rising star among the young generation of politicians on Austrova, due in part to the influence of his family, but while he clung to the past as his father and others within his family, Arduri did not. Devra knew that Arduri no doubt screwed his brains out during the Celebration of the Hundreds and he had been hooked on her ever since. Though she was only five foot two, Devra knew her daughter was a package of skill and ability rarely found even among their males, and her beauty was exquisite even for a Vanari with her short stature but large breasts that strained against almost any clothes she wore. She had powerful legs and a supremely toned ass that went to with those legs. Arduri had rapidly ascended through the ranks and at only age twenty-one she had obtained the rank of Cadre Leader. Devra also knew Arduri to be completely uninhibited sexually, and willing to try many things. Arduri kept nothing from her mother in that regard. She was just as passionate, sexual and comfortable with men as she was with women and Devra did not doubt that if she wanted too, Arduri could have any male on their homeworld. Why she had accepted Cruor Ahn Vernalo's proposal Devra didn't know, for the last time she had talked to Arduri, her daughter had unwittingly revealed to her that while Cruor Ahn Vernalo was well equipped he was also considerably under skilled in the art of pleasing a woman. He did not take the time to incite true electric passion within her and in Vanari society this was not considered the basis for a lasting relationship that would produce strong and fruitful children.

Naesta Re Mydala was far more sedate than her sister, but she was no less skilled. Her piloting talents were without question and while she was just as stunningly beautiful as Arduri, Naesta preferred to let the many males come to her. Naesta was just as open sexually as Arduri; she just chose to utilize her passion and skills in a more passive role by allowing the men to chase her. Devra knew of at least four young males that pursued Naesta on a regular basis when she was home. In a unique twist, Naesta was the only one of Devra's daughters who did not want or wish for the company of other women. She wasn't against it, indeed she had several very passionate encounters with other women during her own Celebration of the Hundreds, but she much preferred men. As the youngest Re Mydala child, she had also had more interaction with her father, which in turn had made her less accepting of the Lycavorian people as a whole. Since being on this ship however, Devra could see that those long held beliefs and false attitude were changing rapidly. She had been spending quite a bit of time with Dutkne's young sister Caia, and her green eyes were slowly being opened.

"This stew is... it is excellent mother." Arduri spoke as she swallowed the last bit of stew she had been chewing.

Devra smiled and nodded. "Yes I know... I had a portion before you arrived." Devra leaned forward in her chair. "So tell me..."

Arduri and Naesta looked at her knowing what she meant. The Vanari were a naturally inquisitive species and this was the most interaction they had had with the Lycavorian people in decades aside from the occasional trade convoy that came to Austrova every few months. Those Lycavorians were essentially confined to the spaceport area of the capital city and not allowed to wander the streets as so many other species were. There had never been an instance where the traders had violated that rule and the many dockworkers that Devra had spoken to through the years had all told her the same thing. The Lycavorians were friendly yet very cautious; they adhered to the rules on them without question and they never complained that they were treated differently. It was almost as if they didn't really care.

Naesta played with the food on her plate before looking at her mother. "I would say that I don't know yet." She spoke.

Arduri snorted softly and shook her head. "They have refused us nothing mother." She said. "Not one piece of information or one question we have asked them. Nirilo is considered a valued member of this crew and they know we are his family. You know how they view family mother and I believe they consider him family. You know he has a Lycavorian lover and he has not returned for the Celebration of Hundreds since they have been together."

Devra nodded. "Yes, I know. Family is very precious to them. And do not remind me about your brother not returning. Every time I see your father he reminds me and tries to place the blame on me that your brother prefers the company of a Lycavorian female more than his own kind."

"Father believes it is your fault?" Arduri asked surprised.

Devra nodded. "Because I have not participated in the celebration since we ended our Union." She replied. "He believes I have influenced Nirilo because of this. That is neither here nor there. Your father's concerns about who shares my bed are none of his business. And nor is it his business who shares Nirilo's. Let us get back to the Lycavorians."

"They have not shared everything they know with us mother!" Naesta protested gently. "We did not know about the advances they have made in their engine designs. Nirilo never passed this information on to Vanari Intelligence. We did not know that Wayonn has been coming to this quadrant of space regularly enough to have up to date charts. And we certainly did not know that this ability they have... this Mindvoice. We did not know it was so prominent or powerful."

Devra nodded. "All good points." Devra said.

"Perhaps if we had not shunned them for so long and treated them as if they are beneath us it would not be this way. Perhaps we do not know these things because we have not asked the right questions!" Arduri spoke.

"You just say that because the men look at you like they want to eat you!" Naesta spat but with a playful tone to it.

Arduri smiled brightly. "Well... there are several that I have seen that I would not mind taking into my bed, or letting them eat me, but that does not change the fact that they have been very forthcoming with us since we came on board. And they kept us from coming into this area of space completely blind with no idea of where to begin looking for Caliria. If what they say is true and those in this quadrant of space are nothing like we have seen before... we just may have been in over our heads."

"I would have figured out my mistake!" Naesta snapped.

Arduri reached over and placed her hand on her sister's arm causing Naesta's eyes to lift and meet her own. "That was not meant as a critique of your skill sister. Far from it in fact. You are a much better pilot than

I.” She spoke with a soft tone. “Nirilo is right though... we need them right now. Once we have Caliria we can make our way on our own. But we need their help to find her.”

Devra looked at her youngest daughter. “Naesta?”

Naesta nodded her head with a sigh and leaned affectionately into her sister. “Arduri is right.” She said finally. “I have asked a hundred questions about their weapons and engines and shields. They have not refused to answer one of them. The Chief Engineer of this ship even gave me a tour of their Phased Quantum Drive Units.”

“And?” Devra asked.

“They are very advanced mother.” Naesta said. “In some cases even more efficient than our own engines. The technology that they use is... I have never seen...”

Devra slid the data pad across the table to them. “Is something none of us have ever seen before?” She stated confidently.

Naesta nodded as she looked at her mother. “Yes.”

Devra tapped the pad gently. “Wayonn gave this to me. It relates a part of their history and path that up until now we have never known. A sometimes violent history that they and their ancestors have fought and clawed their way out of in order to make themselves better as a people. And this pad tells of a history that dates back at least thirty thousand years before what the Lycavorians call The Black Day. That is as far as I got in reading anyway, and I only read perhaps half.”

Arduri nodded. “That was the time when the Coven conquered their original planet and enslaved them.” She said.

“I have always wondered why Wayonn is different somehow.” Devra said softly as she nodded. “He does not seem to have the same feral instincts that any of the others do. This data pad explains why. You both remember the history cubes of our own people and how at times through our own development and rise to our current level, they spoke of interaction with a strange and stately species of men and women?”

Naesta nodded as she lifted the pad. “Yes. We called them the Travelers. They flew huge city sized ships and were always benevolent in their actions. We encountered them half a dozen times during our exploration years but contact was never really made except for one time. The meeting was difficult for they were highly advanced, they did not want to share their technology with us and they only used their...” Naesta stopped talking and looked at her mother.

Arduri’s green eyes were wide as well now. “They spoke only with their minds.” She gasped.

Devra nodded slowly smiling at how quickly her daughters put it together. “We have always thought of Wayonn as a statesmen of sorts. A more refined version of the Lycavorians. He is in fact one of these Travelers our own history speaks of sparingly. He was turned by a Lycavorian that he made his wife. They were known as Pralors. The ship he was on... one of those City Ships... it crashed on Lycavore nearly thirty-five thousand years ago. Over the course of the next thousand or so years the survivors of this ship were turned and blended into the population of the Lycavorians. This began the stimulation of the Lycavorian people into what we see with the Protectorate and the Union. I do not know how their people became separated... I can only assume it has something to do with the High Coven and the Black Day. There are some large gaps in this information and I believe it is information Wayonn does not want us to have. At least not just yet.”

“Does not want us to have mother?” Naesta asked. “Or information he is intentionally not giving to us.”

Devra shook her head. “I don’t believe it is that. I think the gaps in this information will be filled in when we meet with these men and women from this Lycavorian Union. Or at least they will begin to be answered.”

“It has to do with that man we saw in the transmission doesn’t it?” Arduri asked. “The one who rode that beast. This Androcles Leonidas?”

Devra nodded. “I believe it does yes.” She replied. “With him and with his father and family.”

Arduri looked at her inquisitively. “Then there is more about this King Leonidas from Wayonn’s history... more to this Leonidas family than what our Board of Intelligence has?”

Devra nodded again. “Much more I believe.” She stated. “The ship that crashed on their original homeworld Lycavore, it was led by what is referred to as a Chief Elder Pralor. His name was Sumar. At the time he was considered to be one of the three or four most powerful of these Pralors in existence. The King Leonidas that died on this planet Earth... the one we have in our own intelligence journals and the one Wayonn has told us of, he is the direct descendant of this Sumar. The men we will be meeting are also his direct descendants, and if what Wayonn says on this pad is accurate, they are nearly as powerful as this Sumar once was.”

“This... this is all very fascinating mother...” Naesta spoke softly. “But how does this help us find Caliria? That is what drives me now.”

Arduri nodded in agreement. “I as well mother.”

Devra shook her head slowly. “I don’t know exactly... but somehow I feel our futures will become intertwined deeply. The way we should have embraced those in the Protectorate we will now have to embrace these men and women in the Lycavorian Union.”

“Do you believe they will help us find Caliria mother?” Arduri asked.

Devra met her daughter’s gaze. “I believe they are the only way we will find your sister.” She answered. “And when we do it will bind us together in such a way that nothing will ever come between us.”

Arduri looked at Naesta who met her eyes. They both turned back to their mother. “There is one thing that could come between us mother.” Arduri said. “All those stuffy old Regents who now sit on the Board with father.”

HARBINGER

4.3 LYs FROM BEKLAN TWO

Whatever Lu'ria and Ne'Veha had expected when they departed Earth, it was certainly not this.

As elves they were very sensitive to the fact of everything that was happening around them. They did not expect the man they both loved so completely would have any interest in anything that resembled pleasure. They were both still learning about Androcles Leonidas and the connection they all had. Lu'ria never imagined she would have three women of such beauty that would call her Mistress as Sadi, Carisia and Ne'Veha had almost from the time she woke on this very ship as they were heading home. She never believed she could desire three women as much as she desired them, nor did she imagine that they would be so deeply intertwined within Mindvoice as they were. It was only another sign, like so many others before, that they were all meant for one another.

It was no different for Ne'Veha. Raised to dislike Lycavorians by her father, his actions almost took from her a part of her life that she had never known. All the silly moments feeling about Tarren as she did had only been part of the obstacles that she now knew were put in front of her so that she would ultimately meet Androcles and know what true love and devotion were. She could not imagine herself without him and the three women who she had bonded with so completely now. Having shared Andro’s bed enough times to now be able to sense the changes within her elven body made Ne'Veha so very happy. She so wanted him to turn her fully so that she could feel what Sadi felt. She could feel it now yes, but it was muted to a large degree because she was not fully wolf. Ne'Veha wanted him to change her completely for it would seal them together for all time.

Neither Lu'ria or Ne'Veha expected to see much of him on this short trip and they had immediately gone to the quarters assigned to them. It hadn’t taken them long to find their way to the large bed and collapse onto it. It had taken less time before they were locked in a sizzling kiss of passion and discovery and pulling at each other’s clothes. This was how the man they loved found them. Their bodies were covered in a fine sheen of sweat and Ne'Veha was nestled quite happily between Lu'ria’s thighs feasting on her Drow Mistresses delicious center. Ne'Veha was so intent on exploring the wondrous dark skin and inviting honey melon scent of Lu'ria’s dripping pussy while Lu'ria squirmed in her hands that neither of them smelled Andro when he came into the room. Neither of them knew he was even there until Ne'Veha’s beautiful face, slick with Lu'ria’s sweet nectar, came up from between those satin like dark thighs in a wail of utter bliss.

Lu'ria watched with wide craving amber eyes as Ne'Veha’s face twisted into a mask of divine pleasure. Ne'Veha could do nothing but sing out her glee as Andro’s exquisitely chiseled body lowered to her back and he sank every scorching hot inch of his thick twelve and a quarter inch cock into her spasming pussy in one marvelous plunge. She began coming the moment she felt his large balls press tightly against her divinely shaped ass and her fingernails dug into his forearms as his face lowered to the side of her head, firmly nuzzling the back of her four inch high elven ear and sending her into cataclysmic heaven.

“You... you are mine SirsanGai!” He hissed into her ear, his deep voice raspy and filled with passion and desire. “And now I will... I will insure you know that!”

Ne'Veha's desire quickly slipped past molten need as Andro began to stroke into her with incredible twelve inch thrusts. Lu'ria could only watch in awe and lick her lips for she knew without question she was next. She could smell his lavender and pines scent permeating the air all around them, and mixed in with Ne'Veha's sweet amaretto scent it was quickly sending her back to where Ne'Veha's tongue was driving her. Ne'Veha's face was pressed to her abdomen, her gasps of blissful delight blowing warm air across Lu'ria's own engorged clit and supremely aroused pussy. Her long dark brown hair was whipping back and forth, the sounds of his hips slapping into her upturned ass almost deafening in the small bedroom. Lu'ria had never been with a man before and watching the man who had turned her take Ne'Veha in such a way was driving her wild with desire of her own.

“Please... please Andro!” Ne'Veha screamed out. “Make me... ma... make me yours forever my love!”

Lu'ria watched as his hands filled with Ne'Veha's firm cone sized breasts and he pulled her up against his broad chest. As she sank even further onto his wonderful shaft Ne'Veha began coming again, every nerve in her elven body singing out for him and feeling his powerful chest press against her back and shoulders. Her hands went to his hips, her nails dragging along his skin as she shuddered in her orgasm. Then she felt his lips next to her ear once more and her dark eyes flew open at his words.

“It... it is time SirsanGai!”

Ne'Veha had no time to blink or utter a sound before she felt his dual fangs pierce the flesh of her lower neck and sink in deeply. Gripped as she was in orgasmic bliss, the pain was barely felt as the virus raced through her veins and blood. Her arms flew up to grip his head tightly, his face locked in an expression of dreamlike bliss, as the most powerful orgasm of her life smashed aside all she was and began to reshape her. She felt his huge cock swell within her depths and then his explosion shattered the remnants of who she had once been. As his hot come flooded her body, the virus scorched through her lush elven body. In the grasp of the volcanic orgasm tearing through her, Ne'Veha could actually feel her muscles thickening and contorting, bringing her to the pinnacle of the threshold of pain and pleasure unlike any she had ever experienced. She could feel the virus spreading to every millimeter of her body, cleansing it of everything that could ever harm her and forging her into the woman she so wanted to be. The utter completeness and torturing pleasure overwhelmed her quickly and Andro crushed her to him as her eyes rolled into the back of her head and she went limp in his arms.

Andro held her tightly to him, his dual fangs still anchored deeply in her flesh, as he lowered her supple frame back to the softness of the bed and his come continued to empty into her velvety depths. His breathing came in great heaves of his chest as he slowly withdrew his fangs, lovingly licking the angry marks in her otherwise flawless skin. His black ringed azure eyes watched as the wound sealed instantly and he drew back to nuzzle and lick her delicious ear.

“For eternity SirsanGai! All of us... for eternity!” He huffed softly.

Lu'ria gasped softly as his eyes lifted to gaze at her and she saw the burning desire in those black ringed azure orbs. She could feel his aura reaching out for her, caressing her own, and she attempted to direct her female aura back towards him as Sadi had told her only a few short hours ago. She would have to punish her beautiful green eyed wolf slave for not telling her that Andro was planning on doing this all along.

You will feel it when the time comes Mistress... as surely as his hands fluttering across your skin... you will feel it. It is like a blanket that wraps around you, touching every nerve, every single part of you that elicits even a simple sensation of pleasure. All at the same time.

Will... will I feel it like you do Sadi my... my slave? Lu'ria had asked with a seductive smile.

Oh yes. SirsanGai as well. I have only discovered this since he came back into my life and I have spent time with the Feravomir. Andro's blood... his father's blood... it is so utterly powerful that even SirsanGai will be able to feel his full aura. Sadi said as she stroked Lu'ria's arm lovingly. His father has not unleashed it on his mothers For'mya and Anja because I don't think he realizes just how potent his blood is. Normally... normally if an alpha turned more than one female, only the first he has turned could tolerate his unshielded aura. With Andro and his father it is different.

I... I have never been with a man Sadi. Lu'ria admitted.

Sadi pressed close to her, brushing her lips against Lu'ria's cheek. He will stretch you in a way that makes you cry for more Mistress. When you feel him inside you, the throbbing of his manhood, it will be all you can do to keep from exploding continuously. No matter... no matter how many times he has taken me since we became mated, it is always like the first time. Do not be frightened Mistress... just allow yourself to surrender all you are to him and he will do the same.

Lu'ria watched him slowly withdraw his huge cock from Ne'Veha, shifting his body on the bed and moving towards her. Lu'ria's black ringed amber eyes were wide as she watched his head lower to her flat muscular abdomen and his tongue came out to drag gloriously across her quivering skin. Her large breasts were slightly bigger than Sadi's and Carisia's and they stood out proudly, the nipples surrounded by dark areolas and standing out begging for attention of any kind. She was wolf now and Lu'ria of the Drow was quickly discovering that his aura was like an aphrodisiac. Sadi had been so right as every nerve ending in her body was screaming out in gleeful joy.

Andro let his tongue draw across her dark satin like skin, her honey melon scent filling his nostrils completely now that he was so close to her center. Her skin tasted as she smelled as he moved closer to her. The color of her beautiful dark flesh was driving him insane with want, and Androcles Leonidas suddenly realized that like his father, he needed each of these women in his life. They were his center and his power. As his lips grew closer to her engorged center, he could feel her aura pulsing him strongly. She was learning quickly Andro thought as his lips brushed the softness of the thin strip of shimmering white hair above her throbbing clit. Her juices coated the outside of her labia, no doubt in part because of Ne'Veha's oral talents, and this only served to enflame Andro's instincts that much more. Oh yes, as with Sadi and Carisia and then Ne'Veha... Andro was going to enjoy exploring every millimeter of her treasures. Her dark skin was a deep pale brown and like his other mates, it was flawless in its texture. Her skin was closest to Sadi's in touch as his tongue licked her sensuously. Yes... he was going to take his time very soon and explore her lush body for hours. Now however, now he wanted his Drow wife and mate. And he wanted her badly.

Lu'ria gasped when she felt his warm breath blow ever so gently across her throbbing clit, closing her amber eyes for a split second in unabashed pleasure and anticipation. She expected to feel his tongue taste her in the next moment and when it didn't she opened her amber eyes and gasped even louder when she saw those azure orbs staring at her with lustful want and pure, unblemished love. He had shifted his powerful body once more and Lu'ria glanced down swiftly between their bodies to see his huge cock poised to enter her. The flared head of his cock was only millimeters away from her craving pussy. The lips of her center had parted like a flower and were slick and glistening in the dim light. Her eyes cut back to his face as her hands came up to his shoulders. "Andro... Andro my love... I... I have never..."

"My... my exquisite Drow mate... now I will truly make you ours." Andro gasped before driving his hips forward and plunging the entire length of his pulsing cock into Lu'ria in a single and absolutely will crushing plunge.

Lu'ria's head flew back on the bed as she felt each gloriously powerful inch of his superb cock penetrate her body and propel her into a world of ecstasy she had never known could exist. She wailed out her fantastic satisfaction as his large balls came to rest against her tight ass and she was connected to him in a way she was only just beginning to comprehend. As his pulsing aura swarmed around her tightly and his throbbing twelve inch shaft reached inside her silky tightness far deeper than she had ever imagined a man could, Lu'ria could no longer hold it in and she howled out her sheer bliss, oblivious to who might hear her. The power of her orgasm gripped her like a raging hurricane and she exploded all over his massive shaft while she shivered in uncontrollable delight. She felt his arms pull her tighter and lift her into his lap and then he began to make love to her with deep, driving strokes. He lifted her easily, slamming her back down on his thick cock, heedless of her juices which were rapidly soaking both of their lower bodies. Her pussy had opened completely to him, as if it had been carefully crafted just for his pulsing cock.

Lu'ria quickly grew accustomed to his huge size, her tunnel literally drenched in her own juices and easing her initial feelings of slight discomfort at being so utterly filled with throbbing cock. His warm lips engulfed her left nipple and he suckled her breast hard, nibbling on her eraser hard nipple, as one hand came up to hold her full breast and his other thick arm wrapped around her waist. This was far beyond anything her mother and sisters had ever told her to expect the first time she gave herself to a man and all Lu'ria could do was wrap her arms around his broad shoulders and hold on for dear life as she began to come continuously. Wave after devastating wave of wicked pleasure; so different and so pure, surged through her lithe Drow body, her hips now moving of their own accord as Andro slid from the bed holding her tightly. Lu'ria locked her heels behind his powerful ass cheeks as he stood up and moved to the bulkhead to press her fiery skin against the cool metal. This did nothing to dampen the fire of passion that seared her veins and when he began to pummel her tight body against the wall, cushioning her by wrapping his arms around her back, Lu'ria began to respond as a Drow and a female wolf would respond to the glorious fuck her husband and mate was giving her.

Lu'ria rubbed her cheek against his, nibbling hard on his ears as she began to meet his commanding thrusts into her with equal fervor. Each time he rammed home into her Lu'ria gasped in delight, her clit being tortured by the base of his cock and his powerful abdomen. She instinctively began squeezing him with her inner muscles every time he moved to draw out of her silky warmth, drawing hisses of bliss from him. She could feel his aura wrapped around her, and as he began to speed up his driving strokes into her, she found herself floating within the confines of his mind. Lu'ria saw then the utter depth of his love and desire for Sadi, for her; for Carisia and Ne'Veha. She saw and felt the utter fidelity to them and his overwhelming need to be everything they had ever desired in a man. As Lu'ria's belly undulated in the rapid fire orgasms that were hitting her, she knew he was possessing her as a Drow woman wanted to be possessed. Drow females were not afraid of rough displays of affection during lovemaking; it was one of the reasons the Drow were considered so close to Lycavorians in many respects. They held to their instincts more closely than other species and one of the ways a Drow male would show his commitment to his Drow wife was to make love to her with every ounce of power and total determination at his command. They gave all of themselves and held nothing back, and that is certainly what Andro was doing right now.

It smashed into her with a force that stole her breath away, her fingers gripping his thick neck as the crushing orgasm shattered every boundary of reality she had ever known. If Lu'ria thought she had screamed when he first sank into her velvet depths, she was quickly proven wrong as every nerve, every pleasure receptor, and every strand of who she was erupted at the same instant and she wailed like a banshee. She felt him slam into her one final time, his hands gripping her hard, firm ass cheeks and pulling her down on him until he had no more to give her of himself. His long, thick shaft impaled her totally, his large lava hot balls were pressed against her ass cheeks and Lu'ria felt his huge cock swell even more in size. When that first wondrous, molten detonation of his come rocketed into her depths, Lu'ria Leonidas began screaming in pure unadulterated ecstasy. Her head whipped back and forth, her long shimmering white hair wildly flailing from side to side, her black ringed amber eyes dilated in pleasure as everything her green eyed slave had told her came true. Three times... four times. Five. Six. Seven huge explosions of his seed filled her, each eruption triggering yet another staggering orgasm within her body that rippled incessantly along the edges of cosmic harmony. It was all she could do to simply hold on to him as their auras mingled and combined and became one with three others.

Andro staggered slightly, catching himself as he pulled her away from the bulkhead, his chiseled body now covered in sweat from exertion. He turned back to the bed and slowly, his lips and cheek firmly nuzzling her elven ear; he lowered her quivering body back to the bed without a sound. Lu'ria did not released her legs from around his waist or her arms from around his shoulders and his full weight came to rest on top of her making her coo out her absolute enchantment. With the last remnants of his come leaking into her from his still hard and pulsing cock, his lips claimed her soft pink ones and Lu'ria submerged herself completely in the wholly unreal heaven of his kiss.

This is what we are my Ilythiiri Tessai. His warm voice filled her mind even as his kiss caused her toes to curl inward in delight. This is what I am. KertaGai. You. SirsanGai and Enylarcopri. We have been guided to one another Ilythiiri Tessai. We will always be together now, until we move into the life beyond this one.

Lu'ria knew instinctively he did not expect her to say anything in return and she simply released her female aura, slipping it tightly around his essence and deepening their ardent kiss. The single tear of rapture rolled from her eye as his arms crushed her even tighter to him and they both reached for Ne'Veha to draw her within their embrace. They did not have much time until they arrived, Lu'ria knew, but now they would simply lay together in a manner that was more dear and intimate than any she had ever known.

And it was only the beginning.

TALON OF JUSTICE

The bridge was crowded now with Devra, Arduri and Naesta remaining out of the way as the crew went about their duties. Nirilo manned an extra large sensor station next to the Tactical Sensor Officer, all of the TALON'S eyes reaching out and searching. Dutkne stood next to Wayonn near his command chair, while Drey stood behind the weapons station Caia slightly to his left.

“Report!” Dutkne barked.

“Holding at the established coordinates.” The helm officer replied instantly. “Two point seven light years from the planet known as Beklan Two.”

“Tactical?” Dutkne turned to the female officer.

She shook her head. “Nothing within ten light years.” She answered immediately. “A lot of activity... if these charts are accurate... a lot of activity near their border with The Gellen Asteroid Belt.”

Dutkne’s eyes cut to where Nirilo was sitting. “Nirilo?”

Nirilo nodded. “Long Range Translinear Arrays are detecting over two dozen ships. Most of them appear to be warships of some kind ranging in size.” He turned to look at Dutkne now. “Several of them are equipped with a type of Hyper Matter Fusion Coil Dutkne.”

Dutkne glanced at Wayonn who only nodded. “They’ve developed their own type of engines based on those from City Ship 41?” He asked.

Wayonn nodded. “It was only a matter of time before they discovered this technology Dutkne. Especially if Avatar 41 has been helping them as I suspect he has.”

“If they have developed these types of engines then they can not be far from discovering Phased Quantum Drives like those our peoples use!” Naesta spoke as she stepped forward.

Dutkne nodded as he looked at her. “If they haven’t already.” He stated. “Naesta... your expertise would be appreciated.” He told her pointing to the sensor station with her brother.

Naesta looked at her mother quickly and Devra nodded. “Go.” She said.

Naesta moved swiftly, striding across the bridge to stand beside her brother at the sensor station. Nirilo pointed to one side of the tri-portioned console. “Start cataloging the types of ships that we pick up.”

“Detronal output?” Naesta asked.

“Keep it below point five.” Nirilo told her. “If they have developed these engines than it’s a good bet their sensors are much improved. We don’t want to give away our position and have multiple warships coming down on us.”

Naesta nodded as she settled to the second chair that was beside her brother.

Dutkne turned back to Wayonn. “Grandfather?” He asked softly.

“We must be patient Dutkne.” He spoke.

“Patience has never been one of my virtues grandfather.” Dutkne answered.

“Yes I know.” Wayonn answered with a grin.

Dutkne snorted and turned away from him. “What is the composition of these Shrouds that they use?” He called out.

“It’s some form of Spatial Displacement.” The sensor officer answered him. “I have been looking at the specs of their larger ships that Wayonn gave to us. It’s similar to the Flat Space technology that they use.”

“Flat Space technology?” Devra asked quickly looking at Wayonn. “Our scientists are only just beginning to research this Wayonn. Are you saying that these men and women have this technology already?”

Wayonn nodded. “Let’s just say it was a gift of Pralor technology to them from a young woman who should have remained far away.” He spoke sternly.

Devra moved closer to him. “The Pralors had this technology?” She gasped.

Wayonn nodded. “We did.”

“Flat Space technology is supposed to be lethal to those caught within its Geometrical Tensors.” Devra spoke. “It is one of the first things we discovered about it. It distorts the Scalar and Vector space around an object.”

Wayonn nodded. “True... unless you have hyper regenerative healing particles within your body as all Lycavorians do. It negates the negative covariant of the vectors and allows them to use it without harm.”

“What... what do they use this technology for?” Arduri asked now. “Is it some sort of weapon?”

Wayonn shook his head. "Not in the true definition of the term weapon, but something similar. It will be easier to explain when you see it. I am not a Metaphysics Engineer or Quantum Mechanics scientist and my knowledge of those things is limited."

"Then who gave this to them?" Devra asked.

"A Pralor Scientist." He replied meeting her gaze. "And that is as far as I will go with that information for the moment."

Dutkne turned back to his sensor officer. "Can you localize the displacements?"

"I can try." She answered. "But without the correct Spatial Displacement Gradient and Deformation Frequency that they are using the chances are infinitesimal that we will find them. The best we can hope for is to detect the change in the Vector Frequencies. That would at least give us an idea that there is a ship in the area."

"How long to make the adjustments?" Dutkne asked.

"Three or four minutes." She replied. "I will need to realign the Translinear Deflector Grid."

Dutkne nodded. "Do it." He told her. "Make sure all of our weapons are offline." He added quickly. "Navigational Shields only but put the Refractive Shielding in standby."

Wayonn looked at him. "They are not enemies Dutkne." He stated.

"I know that grandfather." He replied. "However... we have no idea what their weapons are capable of. I do not wish to lose any of my crew because of an innocent mistake."

Wayonn nodded his head after a moment. "You are right."

"This branch of your species appears to be more technologically advanced than you first led us to believe Wayonn." Arduri said.

Wayonn met her gaze. "I lead you to believe nothing." He stated in a slightly humorous tone. "What you perceive I have told you is completely different. And they are not a branch of our species Arduri Re Mydala... the Protectorate is the branch. This is where over ninety-five percent of the survivors of the Black Day and the rebellion came too. The men and women we are about to meet are the Lycavorians. This is where our people have come and where they now call home."

"And the Protectorate?" Devra asked.

"We are the branch." Wayonn said. "Part of what my son Canth told Martin Leonidas twenty-five years ago was that he would need to find the Lost Ones. We... the Protectorate... we are who Canth meant."

"But the Protectorate has you." Devra said. "You were a Pralor before you were turned. It is why you are the strongest."

Wayonn nodded his head to her. "Perhaps among the Protectorate... but that will not be so within the Union. Martin Leonidas and his children all carry the blood of Sumar in their veins. And while his children not of pure Lycavorian blood are indeed powerful, he has four children that are pureblood Lycavorian. I was Sumar's friend and mentor and as I told Martin I could be known by any number of names, but my Pralor blood was no where near as strong as Sumar's. In terms of sheer force of will and raw power, Martin and his son Androcles far dwarf me in what they are capable of. In terms of being able to focus their power to abilities... that is what they lack. At least right now."

"And you will teach them this?" Devra asked.

"That is my place in the scheme of things." Wayonn answered.

"There is much you have not told me." Devra said softly.

Wayonn nodded. "I know. And there are reasons for that Devra Re Mydala... none of them having to do with a lack of trust. I assure you... as events begin to unfold... you will learn more and you will understand."

"Understand what?" Arduri asked.

"Why it is so important for us to come back together with our brethren." Wayonn answered.

Devra nodded her head. "In the hundreds of years I have known you Wayonn you have never been deceptive." She said softly. "It is the main reason the Board of Regents trusts you as much as they do."

"Then trust me now." Wayonn said. "Trust me and you will..."

The sensor officer's voice interrupted him. "Ah... Dutkne?"

All heads on the bridge turned to look at her because of the tone of her voice. Dutkne moved closer. "Have you found something?"

"Umm... you could say that." She said.

“What?”

“A four hundred percent increase in Vector frequency variance from the surrounding space.” She stated.

“What?” Dutkne gasped. “Where?”

“Ohh... is right above us too close?” She stated.

“Above us?” Dutkne almost shouted as he turned. “Ship dorsal view!” He barked. “Now!”

All of them watched as the two large view screens shifted their image to a visual of the top of the TALON. All they could see were stars however. Dutkne turned back to his sensor officer. “There is nothing there!” He snapped.

“Nubou lae!” She gasped as she read her console. “Radical particle shifts! Something is... something is materializing directly above us! Something really nubous big!”

Dutkne turned back to the view screens along with everyone else’s eyes and they could only watched as the shape of the massive ship began to form not five thousand meters above them.

“Son vada carians!” Drey stammered.

As Dutkne watched the shape of the HARBINGER became clear and focused. As he gazed at the lines of the ship, and the numerous weapons turrets Dutkne came to realize that this ship was completely unlike the TALON in every respect. The TALON was one of the newer class ships within the Protectorate and only one other ship was larger. This ship before them however, this ship was built for fighting with a long angular hull design in the shape of a spear head. As they watched, smaller objects began bursting from either side of the ship like angry hornets.

“Sibfla! Fighters!” His sensor operator called.

Dutkne tore his eyes away from the view windows and looked at her. “Hannae?” He asked.

She glanced at him before looking at her consoles. “Four thousand three hundred meters! Multiple turrets of a plasma design! At least fifty... with what appear to be heavier turrets mixed in! Hull is... the hull is comprised of Depleted Laminate Crystanium and some metal I’ve never even seen before! Detecting a Hyper Matter Fusion Coil Reactor power signature. Carians Dutkne... this ship is...”

Dutkne nodded. “Yes. It is built for war.” He stated softly.

“Multiple fighter contacts port and starboard!” Nirilo barked out. “Twenty either side! Fast moving and heavily armed! Comparable in size and maneuverability to our STILETTO fighters Dutkne!”

“Incoming transmission hail!” Another voice chimed in from the opposite side of the bridge. “Narrow beam and focused!”

“Let’s see it!” Dutkne barked. “Activate main holodisc!”

All of them turned as the main communications holodisc flared to life with the image of a young man sitting in the chair. He was tall and obviously very well built under the strange almost armor like uniform he wore. His hair was cut short and he had a meticulously trimmed mustache and goatee. Dutkne felt a powerful fluttering within Mindvoice. It was focused and controlled and he stepped closer to the transmission as the young man’s brown eyes remained unwavering. Dutkne began to turn but stopped when the young man began to speak.

“This is the ULU HARBINGER. I know you are receiving this transmission and it is not polite to have a one way conversation. Please activate your own communications array or I will consider you hostile. You would not like my response.”

“Do it!” Dutkne barked before anyone could stop him. He knew this young man. He did not know how but he had seen this face before, but it was a face with azure blue eyes.

“Transmission open!”

“I am Dutkne.” He spoke moving closer as he saw those brown eyes open just slightly wider. “I command this ship. The TALON OF JUSTICE from the Protectorate.”

“TALON OF JUSTICE?” The young man said. “A fitting name for a fearsome looking ship. My name is Admiral Andro and I have been tasked by the Crown Prince of the Lycavorian Union to take a number of you onboard my ship and return to Earth.”

Dutkne’s eyes narrowed and he began to turn his head to look at Wayonn but stopped when he felt his grandfather reach out to him in Mindvoice.

[Do nothing Dutkne.] Wayonn spoke.

[Grandfather that is...]

[Yes... it is Androcles. I wondered why he wore his helmet when we contacted Helen. It was to hide his features from those who were not wolf. His father taught him well.] Wayonn said.

[Why?] Dutkne asked.

[He knows that we will know who he is.] Wayonn spoke softly. [And what would you do if someone had just attempted to kill most of your family and a new group of people you have never met contacted you and told you we had to meet.]

[I would be skeptical to say the least.] Dutkne answered.

[Yes.] Wayonn said. [Play along with him for now Dutkne. And rest assured he can feel us as strongly as we can feel him.]

“I am the Director General of the Protectorate.” Dutkne spoke again. “I am very happy to finally make your acquaintance Admiral Andro.”

“We need to return quickly.” Andro spoke from the HARBINGER. “Do you have a transport that can bring you here?”

Dutkne nodded. “A small one yes. Total capacity is eleven. I was... I was hoping to bring more.”

They watched as Andro got to his feet from the chair he had been sitting in and his head tilted to the side slightly. “For what purpose?”

“I represent the Lycavorian Protectorate... but I also have several representatives from the Vanari Empire on board as well.” Dutkne held out his hand for Devra and she stepped up beside him without hesitation. “This is Regent Devra Re Mydala of the Vanari Board of Regents. They have a party of nine who accompanied us and they have come to ask for the Lycavorian Union’s assistance. I would like to select perhaps a dozen more of my people to accompany us as well. I would understand if this is not acceptable.”

There was no hesitation in Andro’s response which surprised Devra to some extent but she said nothing.

“Do you have a universal docking clamp?” Andro asked.

Dutkne nodded. “Yes.”

“I will send a MENKLA transport to dock with you.” Andro answered as his eyes shifted to Wayonn.

“No more than twenty. And no large weapons please. We do not have the space to accommodate more than that in what guest quarters we do have on board.” They saw him turn and type something on the arm of the chair.

“Your ship will proceed to these coordinates and wait there.”

Dutkne turned as Hannae pulled the data pad from the slot and tossed it to him. He looked at the small screen and then back up to who he knew to be Androcles Leonidas. “May I ask why?”

“An attempt has been made on the Royal family by Kavalian assassins.” Andro answered calmly. “They have managed to kill the King and quite possibly one of his mothers. The Crown Prince does not wish to bring an unknown ship to Earth because there may still be Kavalian agents hidden among the populous. It is for your protection as well as our own.”

“So you do not trust us?” Devra asked him in a neutral voice. “These men and women are your people Admiral.”

Once more Andro’s head tilted and he gazed at her. “If you do not like my terms Regent Re Mydala is it...?”

“Yes.” Devra answered.

“If you do not like my terms Regent Re Mydala, than you can turn your ship around and carry your asses back to wherever they came from.” Andro stated bluntly.

Devra opened her mouth to reply but stopped as she looked at the young man in the transmission. “You appear... you appear quite young to hold the rank of Admiral.”

Andro shrugged his broad shoulders. “I am what I am.” He told her with a small smile. “It’s all in the genetics. Do you agree?”

Dutkne nodded his head without question. “We will be waiting.” He replied.

Andro pointed at Wayonn. “Is he coming with you?”

Wayonn stepped forward next to Devra and nodded. “I am Wayonn Admiral... and yes.”

Andro gazed at them from within the transmission for a few moments longer and then nodded. “My transport will be there in six minutes. Be ready. HARBINGER out!”

HARBINGER

Ne'Veha's dark eyes fluttered open slowly and she blinked several times to try and focus through the myriad of colors she had never seen before. Her four inch high elven ears were tingling at sounds she had never noticed and her nose twitched as if she needed to scratch it at the smells that assailed her senses. She felt a momentary flash of fear fill her mind and she sat up quickly unable to comprehend what was going on, the thin sheet falling away from her still gloriously lush and naked body. She blinked half a dozen times trying to focus on the figure she saw in front of her and then the voice she had come to adore listening to these last months sounded in her ears.

"Well now... breathe deeply child." Na'rnoas spoke from where she sat on the side of the bed holding the glass of liquid.

"Grandmother!" Ne'Veha exclaimed reaching out with her hands. "Grandmother it is... it is too much!"

Na'rnoas reached out with one hand and grasped Ne'Veha's fingers. "Breathe Ne'Veha. I know Sadi has been instructing you since the small changes started. The principle is the same child. Breathe and focus until you feel calm. Categorize everything and let your mind and senses do the work."

Ne'Veha shook her head back and forth quickly. "I can't... it is too much!"

Na'rnoas nodded. "I thought as much when I was first turned. It will come naturally in only a few hours Ne'Veha. Just focus and let go of your fear at all the new things you smell and hear. This is what you wanted child... everyone could smell it."

Ne'Veha squeezed her hand hard and let her words filter into her head. She concentrated on the single image of Andro holding her in his arms at his villa. Their villa as he had told her so often. How his aura swept around her and made her feel so safe and secure. She took deep breaths as her grandmother had said and slowly she could feel his aura reach for her and swarm around her. Her dark eyes flew open at the intensity of it, the power and clarity that was Androcles Leonidas. He was reaching out to her from wherever on the ship he was, feeling her anxiousness and fear, and using his aura to caress her into calmness. Na'rnoas smiled as she saw Ne'Veha's expression and she knew that Andro was reaching for her, speaking with her on a much higher plane of Mindvoice than she was capable of.

Do not fear SirsanGai. Andro's voice filtered into her mind so warm and inviting. I am with you always. We are with you.

How could we not be, as much as we love you? Lu'ria's voice was like sweet music in her head.

I am sorry SirsanGai... we should have been there for you when you woke, but by the time we awoke we were almost to the rendezvous. I am lucky that your grandmother offered to come. Andro spoke. As it turns out... she was needed.

I want... I want to be with you! Ne'Veha gasped within Mindvoice.

You are too weak right now Ne'Veha. Lu'ria's voice interjected with love. As it was for me... it will be several hours at least before you have the strength to move about. Rest now my beautiful she-wolf slave.

We will come to you after we meet these people SirsanGai. Andro told her. We will come to you and take you to the Mess Lounge. Your new wolf blood will new food.

I need you! Ne'Veha protested.

And you will have us SirsanGai. Andro told her confidently. And we will have you. Let your grandmother help you to begin to adjust and then I will finish what she starts. A few hours my Elven Heart. Only a few hours.

Promise... promise me. Ne'Veha spoke.

With all that I am Ne'Veha. He answered. With all that I am.

Ne'Veha felt sadness when they ended the connection but it lasted for all of a split second. She was wolf now... she was truly wolf now and she wanted to scream out her joy in that. Now she would feel Andro's full love for her. For all of them and she looked at her grandmother with a giddy expression.

"You see." Na'rnoas told her. "Androcles blood is so pure that you are adjusting far quicker than most who are turned." She held out the glass. "Drink this."

"How... how did you know?" Ne'Veha asked as she took the glass.

"He told me what he intended before we left Earth." Na'rnoas explained. "He wanted me here to support you if he could not." Na'rnoas chuckled softly. "That young prince does not know his own strength and the power he has over you and the others. Since Lu'ria is with him I will teach you what you need to know as a female wolf.”

Ne'Veha looked at her with a stunned expression. “You are...?”

Na'rnoas nodded her head with a smile. “Since the year after we married.”

“You... you didn't tell me.” Ne'Veha questioned.

Na'rnoas nodded. “Because the decision needed to be yours completely. You needed to make that decision out of love for him and what he felt for you. And trust me when I say Ne'Veha... that young man loves you with every waking step he takes. He loves Lu'ria and no doubt I would sense the same from him for this Carisia you have told me of... and his anome Sadi. I have never felt anything like it before and I have seen many alphas claim their brides and love them totally. What he feels for the four of you is as powerful as a burning star.”

“It is... it is no different than what I feel for them grandmother.” She stated.

“Yes I know... I could smell that even before you were fully turned.” Na'rnoas inched closer on the bed and touched the glass Ne'Veha still held. “This is a concoction that the Feravomir gave to me just last night. It will not ease the pounding of your head... but it will take away the sensations of wanting to vomit. It is common in the first few hours after being turned. All of the symptoms will be gone by later today... but you will need to ease into what you do granddaughter.” Na'rnoas pointed at her. “And certainly no fooling around for at least several days. Your body will not be up for it.”

“Grandmother!” Ne'Veha exclaimed shyly.

“Don't you grandmother me!” Na'rnoas told her. “When my mate takes me even after all these years together, it still takes my breath away, and most Lycavorian men are built like bulls in the cock department.” Ne'Veha looked shocked at her grandmother's use of language and Na'rnoas chuckled. “I may be your grandmother child, but I am still a woman. If the smile on your face that I have seen these last weeks is any indication, the smile on all your faces, then I will assume Androcles Leonidas is quite gifted and he knows exactly how to use it, unlike so many others.”

Ne'Veha glanced at her timidly once more and nodded her head. “Yes.”

Na'rnoas nodded. “I thought so.” She stated. “Now drink that up. Then I will show you some simple exercises to make the transition to wolf so much easier.”

CHAPTER FIFTY-FIVE

HARBINGER

STARBOARD LANDING BAY

Dutkne walked down the center aisle of the MENKLA transport as it began easing its way into the cavernous landing bay of the enormous ship. The pilots, a female wolf and a female elf from what he was able to smell, had said nothing to him while he stood in the cockpit with them while they flew. Elves were a new race to the Protectorate. They had heard of them of course, even seen holovids of them in their history archives, but no one had ever met any living elves. Both of the pilots filled out their uniforms quite nicely if Dutkne was any judge, and he liked to consider that he was. He was an Alpha, and as such he had had several relationships through the years, but none that lasted for any length of time. The two pilots hadn't been rude or unfriendly, just indifferent, and Dutkne knew why. The Lycavorian Protectorate was an unknown entity to them and the last time the Union had encountered a separate Lycavorian society, that society led by the exiled Chetak, had wrought horrible sins upon one of their beloved Queens. They were not going to let that happen again. It was not a concern for Dutkne or any of those with him or within the Protectorate. They clung to the history and tradition of the Lycavorians of old, those started by Canth his grandfather and King Resumar. Drey, his sister Caia, all of them were very excited and ready to meet the men and women that their history only told them about in data pads and scrolls. As the other members of those who had accompanied him were glued to the windows on the transport, their eyes wide in wonder and speaking amongst themselves quietly, Dutkne let his eyes fall to the father of his grandfather.

Wayonn's dark eyes were fully focused on him. His grandfather had taught him so much through the years, guided him in a singular direction, as if he knew this day would come. The closer Dutkne drew to him, the stronger it became inside his mind and heart. No matter how much he tried to fight it, he could not refute that the pull had been there for many years now and he could no longer deny it.

[He is much like you Dutkne.] Wayonn's voice filled his mind easily as it always did.

[Grandfather?]

[When I spoke with Martin for those few hours, he allowed me to see things within his mind. Much of it in regards to Androcles. He is a great deal like you. He is resilient, intelligent, and so very passionate about the things he believes.] Wayonn spoke.

[You knew, didn't you grandfather?] Dutkne said as he stopped next to where Wayonn sat. [You knew this day would come.]

Wayonn shrugged his broad shoulders and nodded. [It was only a matter of time my boy. Shiria helped to speed it along with her actions, disapproving of them that I am, but it would have happened regardless. You have spent so many years fighting what your blood and heart knew your station was to be, that all you succeeded in doing is making it happen that much sooner.]

[Grandfather...?]

[No... for once I want you to listen to me and see what I am saying.] Wayonn spoke. [All of us have a purpose... a reason for drawing breath. It was one of the things we as Pralors so loved about our lives. The drive to find what our purpose was. The path to what you are meant for is sometimes much more enjoyable than actually finding that station Dutkne my boy. Sumar and I had many adventures along the way. He will not attempt to change who you are Dutkne... how do you change part of yourself grandson?]

[What do you mean?] Dutkne asked. [And please grandfather... no cryptic talk now.]

Wayonn shook his head from where he sat. [Something that you have in common with him already. No... there will be no more cryptic talk from here on out. I promise you.] Wayonn looked at him. [You and he are as Sumar and I were when we were young. We complimented each other Dutkne. We made each other better. No... he will not attempt to change you, because in many respects he is just like you. And like you... there are times when he drives his father absolutely insane. He walks a different but parallel path with his father. He is like him and he is not. Just as you are like your father and different in the same breath. You will see how closely you mesh after you have been around him for a time. He will teach you much Dutkne... and you will also teach him. I told you before that there will be two people in the future who will hold more influence over him than any others. Two individuals that he will most always turn to for guidance and to use as a sounding board. One of them is the green eyed wolf Sadi, who is now his anome and the one that holds the core of his heart within her hands. The other is you Dutkne.]

[He does not even know me. Or I him.] Dutkne protested.

Wayonn smiled. [Are you so sure about that grandson? Or do you just try and deny what I know your Pralor blood feels. Why do you think he directed all of his conversation to you and no others. He can feel it as well, though unlike you, he doesn't know why.]

[And what of the future?] Dutkne asked.

Wayonn met his eyes. [The moment we step into their world, the future will begin to play out Dutkne. How that future turns out will be dictated from decisions that start today.]

[That isn't cryptic?] Dutkne asked with some exasperation.

Wayonn chuckled. [I thought it was one of my most revealing statements to be honest.]

Dutkne shook his head in disgust, but he couldn't help but grin as well.

"Dutkne!" The male voice called and he looked up to stare at the Lycavorian man that was one of his long time team members. He was a hundred years younger than Dutkne and was considered very much a ladies man as the expression went. Warem could charm the pants off many females, and he had done so through the years. His extreme good looks and chiseled body had female wolves chasing him whenever they were home, and he knew just how to talk to them. He was also one of the finest soldiers Dutkne had ever seen and a complete whirlwind in battle. "You have to see this! There are dozens of gorgeous females walking around! Elves too Dutkne! I have only seen elves in holovids! They are said to be very open and extremely sensual. I have died and gone to heaven!"

“Forn wen sraap Warem!” One of the females on Dutkne's team spat playfully. (You are a whore Warem)

Dutkne chuckled softly. “Warem... this is not the Protectorate!” He scolded. “Just insure you keep your celie in your pants! We don't want you to offend anyone! These people follow a code of honor that we do not fully know yet.”

“Where is the fun in that?” Warem exclaimed waving dismissively at him and returning his gaze out the window.

Dutkne shook his head with a small smile as the ship shuddered gently and he turned to look out the closest window. He could see dozens of fighters parked side-by-side or positioned in what appeared to be launch tunnels of some kind. The fighters were sleek and lethal looking; all of them carrying pods of varying size under their wings or fuselages, which he could only ascertain were for weapons. Dozens of male and female crewmembers moved deftly among the fighters and many other obstacles without a pause. He could tell by their actions that they were all supremely well trained and knew what they were about. The ship itself was a marvel. It was easily twice as large as the principal Protectorate or Vanari ship he had ever seen, though its design spoke of speed and maneuverability that a ship this size should not have. As Dutkne watched, he could see men and women scurrying around where their ship had touched down on the deck. He looked back to Wayonn. [They will not like that the Vanari are armed grandfather and nor do I.] He said.

Wayonn nodded slowly. [I know... but it is also why I did not press the issue with Devra. They need to learn that they can trust us and that we are not an enemy. We never have been. I think Devra knows this... and allowing them to keep their weapons... well as twisted as it may sound, a confrontation with the Durcunusaan will open their eyes to what we have been trying to tell them for centuries.]

[You think there will be a confrontation?]

Wayonn nodded his head. [Devra and Arduri seem to be much more open to what is happening, but Naesta is still clinging to the teachings of her father. Coren may well be a good politician, but he is closed minded and does not like our people. He never has. After what has happened recently, the Durcunusaan will not allow them to keep their weapons unless Andro approves. And if they won't surrender them, the Durcunusaan will take them.]

[Vanari Commandos are not to be trifled with grandfather.] Dutkne spoke. [What they lack in size and strength, they more than make up with guile and cunning and superior skills.]

Wayonn nodded. [All true... but they have never confronted a Durcunusaan either.]

Dutkne turned when one of the pilots, the Lycavorian female, stepped out of the cockpit and looked at them from the small step landing. As she moved down the steps closer to him, the others turned and watched her. She stepped right up to Dutkne.

“The ground crew is securing the ship.” She stated evenly. “A Durcunusaan detail will be entering shortly and they will escort you off the transport through the rear ramp once they have surveyed the situation.”

Dutkne nodded at her professionalism. “I understand.” He said. “Will this Admiral Andro be waiting?” Dutkne saw the slight twitch of her jaw and he knew then that the crew of this ship would protect the identity of Androcles at the cost of their lives if need be. He watched her eyes and how they gazed at him steadily. Eventually she nodded her head slightly.

“He will greet you.” She stated as the side door of the MENKLA hissed slightly and the massive internal locking mechanism shifted. “A word of advice if I may?” She asked him.

Dutkne nodded. “Of course.”

“Be honest in all that you do and say.” She told him softly, so that only he could hear him. “Given what has happened in the last few days it may be the difference on whether you live or die.”

Dutkne did not take offense in the least at her words and he nodded his head. “I thank you for your words...”

“Commander Rekia.” She told him.

“... Commander Rekia.” Dutkne nodded. “Thank you... and I will take them to heart and keep them in mind.”

“We'll see.” She stated as the side hatch opened and four heavily armed Durcunusaan team members entered the transport. “You and he will exit down the ramp first.” She indicated Wayonn.

Dutkne tilted his head. “Protocol?” He asked.

Rekia shook her head. "Insurance." She answered.

"I don't understand... insurance?" Dutkne said.

Rekia's smile was anything but friendly. "If this is a trap then you and the old man will die first."

Lu'ria felt utterly divine.

The scents and sights and sounds were still all very new, but Sadi had been a fine teacher in only the few hours they had together. She had not shown her anything about shifting her form just yet, for until this morning she had still been weak. Recovering quickly but still very weak. The last few hours had helped to change that.

As each hour passed it became so much easier to file away a unique new scent to her mind knowing that her wolf blood would remember it even years from now. It was part of their nature as wolves and one of the things that was so very distinctive about the Lycavorian people. They would remember you five or six hundred years from now, even if they hadn't seen you in that long, simply by your scent. At the moment, the only scent that appealed to her was the one of lavender and pines and she relished in that scent as it swept around her. It permeated her very being just as Sadi said it would. Before just a few short hours ago, Lu'ria had never been with a man in her entire life. Females yes, but never a man, because even then she knew only one man could make her feel what she wanted to feel. And feel it she did last night as Androcles molded his flesh to hers and filled her with his essence. He had loved her in such a way that surpassed anything she had ever even fantasized about, and now Lu'ria knew why Sadi and Carisia and Ne'Veha looked at him with that unique glint in their eyes. He had loved all of them just as completely as he had loved her only a few hours ago, and now nothing would ever compare to his touch upon her body or the feel of him filling her. Nothing would compare to the touch of Sadi, Ne'Veha or Carisia on her body, and while she cared not for the traditional Drow terms of Mistress and slave, Ne'Veha had told her last night before Andro arrived that it had a certain thrill to it that all of them loved.

Lu'ria stood slightly forward of the two Drow and two Durcunusaan members of her security detachment and waited for Andro to move over to her. He was talking with the captain of the HARBINGER only a few meters away, and her wolf nose sniffed the air slightly drawing in his delicious scent deeply. Lu'ria knew she would not always have this many Durcunusaan or Drow security personnel, but given what had happened no one was taking chances. Lu'ria had opted against wearing the Mark IV ArmorPly uniform for the more comfortable Drow Scout Uniform that she was accustomed to. Even before she had made her way to Cranæ Island, the word had apparently gone out among those whose job it was to take care of the royal family. The uniforms had appeared in their villa as if by magic, and she discovered they all fit her to perfection. The matte black leather like material conformed to her lithe five foot nine frame like a second skin, with additional protection across the front of her large chest and abdomen. The tightness of the uniform in all the right curves and places reflected the strong sensual nature of many Drow, and it left almost nothing to the imagination with the way it layered across her supple body. While Lu'ria may have been wearing a pair of red thong underwear, the material of her uniform did nothing to hide the outline of her mound between her legs. Normally she would have forgone any underwear at all, and even as Androcles had protested while he watched her get dressed with hungry eyes, she had worn the underwear. This meeting was not a meeting of family or friends, and none of them knew just how open a society that this group of Lycavorians had. She felt the slight tug at her shoulders and glanced sideways to see the clips where the gold trimmed, crimson colored cape fell behind her back to brush gently across the deck. Another sign that she was not dreaming. Within the inch wide gold strip that ran along the edge of the crimson cape were sentences and phrases written in the ancient Drow language proclaiming to all who read them just who she was.

At first Lu'ria had been hesitant about her status and if people would accept her as one of the wives and mates to their Crown Prince. She was now wolf yes, but there had never been a Drow who was fully wolf as she was and she thought perhaps that might be a stumbling block. It had been a silly worry as Sadi had first told her on Earth, for when she had been walking here with only her detail accompanying her, almost everyone she passed in the corridors had nothing but smiles and pleasant greetings for her. The further she walked the more comfortable Lu'ria became in this new world she had desired for so long. She looked out of the corner of her amber eyes and saw Majeir sitting only a few meters away, her massive bulk resting easily on her four legs and her front talons occasionally tapping the metal deck. Elynth sat beside her and Lu'ria could tell they were deep in conversation within Mindvoice about one thing or the other. Lu'ria began to wonder what that was when she felt his aura sweep over her. She closed her eyes in delight when she felt him step up behind her and press his hard, powerful body against her back. Lu'ria's hands dropped discretely to her sides and her slim fingers gripped the front of his thighs and squeezed as he leaned against her and nuzzled her four inch high pointed elven ears.

"You look delicious my Ilythiiri Tessai." His voice rasped.

Lu'ria turned her head and looked at him with adoring amber eyes. "I did not want to leave our bed and Ne'Veha this morning Andro." She said softly.

Andro moved up beside her and took her hand within his, his azure eyes now covered in brown contacts but never leaving hers. "Nor did I." He answered honestly. "Na'rnoas is with SirsanGai right now and we will join them in the mess lounge after we meet with our guests."

Lu'ria reached over with her other hand and placed it flat against his abdomen. "I... I have not yet thanked you for saving my life."

Andro smiled at her. "You can thank me when we are all together once again." He said. "This is not the way..."

Lu'ria reached up and put a finger to his lips. "Do not apologize to me for what you have done my love." She whispered. "You have made me like you and I could not be happier. It is how it was meant to be and I embrace that. I embrace all of it!"

"I make you this promise now Lu'ria of the Drow." Andro said. "You will have the Drow wedding you deserve. As Ne'Veha will have the elven ceremony she wants. I just don't know when that..."

Lu'ria shook her head. "I know that. And so does SirsanGai. For the moment however, I will be very content to lay within your arms, within Sadi and Carisia and Ne'Veha's arms and partake of the joy that gives me. I have yet to experience the pleasures of my beautiful slaves and Enylarcopri... her eyes make me shudder."

Andro grinned and placed his forehead to hers. "Well... I believe they look forward to it too." He said leaning over and nuzzling her elven ear. "Can I watch?"

Lu'ria laughed softly and reached up confidently to slap his face lightly. "You will do more than watch!" She growled. "You will make us howl out your name!"

Andro turned when he heard the clicking of the ramp on the MENKLA transport indicate it was about to start coming down. "I look forward to that." He said softly.

Lu'ria's eyes followed his and she pressed closer to him. "Who are these people Andro?" She asked softly.

Andro watched as the ramp began to come down. "We're about to find out Ilythiiri Tessai. But... something tells me that they are part of what my father started many years ago and we will not need to fear them."

[We still must remain on our guard Andro.] Elynth's voice filled both their minds and they turned back to look at her beside Majeir. [Too much has happened so fast. Everything that is going on is being driven outside our control.]

[Remember Vile One Maraud.] Majeir echoed.

Andro nodded. [I remember Majeir.] He answered. [It was one of the first things Torma and my father shared with Elynth and I when we were old enough. Do not worry... my father taught me how to see men like that for what they are.]

Majeir nodded her huge head. [Then I will say no more. But I will burn whoever attempts to injure you or my Lu'ria.]

Elynth nodded her head as well. [As will I.] She echoed. [KertaGai would be very upset with us if we did not.]

Andro turned back to the ramp. [We will not need to burn anyone.] He said softly. [What exits this ship is part of our future. And we must embrace it.]

[And we will.] Lu'ria said. [And we will.]

"I must play my role now Ilythiiri Tessai." He said turning back to look at her. "At least for a short time."

Lu'ria nodded. "I know. I don't like having to play this game my love. How long will it have to be done?"

"If all goes well... only for a few hours." He stated. "If these men and women are who I think they are... they will know who I am almost immediately and I will know their intent just as quickly."

Lu'ria squeezed his hand. "Then we need to discover their intent quickly. I do not want SirsanGai to have to hide the love for you that we both feel."

Andro nodded. "I promise."

PHY'IAD'S COMMAND SHIP FOUR HOURS FROM BELID

Dysea dreaded what would walk through the door of her cell yet she yearned for it as well. She felt the enormous shame wash over her as her body called for her Immortal Master. She was a slave to Immortal cock now, and she would do anything he asked of her. She would fuck any of these monsters, she would fuck all of them, she would let them ravage her body senseless and fill her with their Immortal seed so that she could receive only what her master could give to her. How could she have fallen like this? Her Nauta Melme was dead, the man who was the spark of her entire life and yet now her body only craved her Immortal Master and what he could give her. The shame was a crushing weight upon her heart and soul, yet even through that shame and pain all she wanted now was to feel her master's Immortal cock filling her again and again.

Her emerald eyes focused on the huge form of the Immortal who now entered her cell, an Immortal that was not her master, and behind him the stunning blond haired elven female. She watched as the Immortal turned and spoke gruffly to the two others in the corridor and they nodded before sealing the door shut. She watched as the Immortal moved along the wall oddly until he came to a single section, the elven female staying just inside the door with a small bundle in her arms. Dysea watched as the Immortal opened a hidden section of the wall that she would never have found and he pulled several blue cables out slightly. He attached something to them, waited for several seconds and then turned to look at the female.

"It is done Osiri." He spoke.

Dysea watched then as the elven female broke from in front of the door and crossed the room to where she sat naked on the cold floor. As she drew closer Dysea could make out the tense lines in her face, lines that made her appear much older from a distance than she actually was up close. She watched the female kneel down in front of her and place the bundle on the floor, removing something from within the layers. Dysea flinched when the woman lifted the small, portable medical scanner.

Osiri's blue/green eyes looked at Dysea then. "I will not hurt you my Queen." She stated in a soft voice. "I am here to try and help you."

Dysea's eyes darted to where the Immortal stood beside the wall, his eyes not looking at her. Osiri followed her gaze and saw where she was looking and turned back quickly. "Kr'nak will not hurt you my Queen." Osiri spoke.

"He... he is the one from Kranek!" Dysea hissed softly. "He is the one who struck me with his weapon!"

"Osiri... give her the blankets so that she can cover herself and regain a small amount of her dignity." The Immortal spoke gruffly.

Osiri set the scanner down with a sheepish look on her face. "Oh... forgive me." She stated quickly and unwrapped the thick blanket, holding it out to her and draping it over her naked form.

Dysea clutched the blanket tightly to her, covering herself as the Immortal turned then and came over to squat beside Osiri. She picked up the scanner again and activated it, sweeping it slowly over Dysea's body. "Have... have you come to see if I have been broken?" Dysea snarled.

Osiri looked at her oddly. "I... I am checking you for injuries." She said.

"Injuries?" Dysea snapped. "I... I have been injured! In the most vile of ways!" She said unable to meet the woman's eyes. "I should not have been affected... it should not have happen to me! I am wolf... I..."

"Osiri... what is she talking about?" Kr'nak asked. His Immortal features were lighter in color than most, not as gray toned and though they were fearsome in many ways there was something different about them.

Osiri shook her head. "I don't know." She answered as she adjusted the medical sensor.

Dysea's head snapped around and she glared at them. "Have you come to gloat?" She spat. "Have you come here to see me grovel before you and beg for the Immortal who broke me?"

Osiri looked at her shocked. "Broke you my Queen? What are you speaking of?"

"Do not mock me!" Dysea snapped. "And do not play to be my friend when you are not! Two of the Immortals you serve were here! They used me for hours! They broke me! I can feel the need burning inside me even now. The need to..."

Osiri looked at Kr'nak and saw him shake his head. "Impossible." He told her. "My men guard her cell. No one has been inside this cell since she was brought aboard!"

"You lie!" Dysea shouted. "I begged him to break me!" She sobbed now as the tears came. "I... I betrayed my Nauta Melme! I begged that monster to break me to his will! I... I wanted nothing more than to feel him inside me! I..."

"Osiri...?" Kr'nak gasped.

Osiri adjusted her sensor once more and shook her head. "No." She stated. She looked at Dysea. "This did not happen!"

Dysea cut her eyes back to her. "You think me a fool!" She barked. "I... I would know if I have been raped! Two of your pig masters were here! They used me like a common whore! They..."

Osiri turned the sensor face towards Dysea so she could look at the data. "No!" She barked now. "These readings show no sign that you have been violated my Queen! You have been alone in this cell since Kr'nak brought you here!"

"You lie!" Dysea snapped. "You think to trick me! To use my need... to use my need against me!"

"Osiri ussta 'chev... we don't have time for this." Kr'nak spoke causing Dysea's eyes to cut to his face. (My Beloved)

"Dysea!" Osiri exclaimed loudly making Dysea turn back to her. "Look at the readings! This did not happen to you my Queen! I would not lie about that! It is..." Her voice grew soft and she looked at the deck. "I know what... I know what it means to be broken Milady and to need as you say!" Her eyes came back up to Dysea's face. "This did not happen to you... I give you my word as any elf would swear to their Queen!"

Dysea's emerald eyes looked at the information on the scanner. Having Melyanna in her life and then having a friend such as Esther gave Dysea quite a bit of medical knowledge and she could read the data scrolling across the screen easily enough. And she also could understand what it all meant. She reached out and began to take the scanner from Osiri's hand only to have the blanket fall away from her ample chest. She flinched when the Immortal's hand snapped out and caught the edge of the blanket, holding it up away from her skin but doing so in a way that she was not exposed to his eyes. She snatched the corner of the blanket from him and pulled it tighter, her eyes darting back and forth between the two of them.

"Who... who are you?" She spat quickly. "What... what do you want with me?"

"My name is Osiri." She answered hastily. "And we are here to insure you are physically unhurt my Queen. I am... I am Phy'iad's..."

"Osiri..." The huge Immortal spoke softly.

"No Kr'nak... she must know." Osiri said quickly looking at him. "I am strong enough Kr'nak."

"I don't doubt that ussta 'chev... but why speak of it if you do not need to." He asked her in a soft voice that caused Dysea to look at him oddly.

"Because in order for this to work there can be nothing but truth." Osiri said. "We have talked about this."

"I know... I just..."

Dysea watched as she reached up and placed her hand delicately on his weathered cheek. His small dark eyes gazed at her with something akin to what Dysea had seen from Cha'talla when he gazed at Esther.

"You have made me strong ussta daxunyrr. And that is why I go on every day." She stated.

Kr'nak nodded slowly. "We must be quick."

Osiri nodded and turned back to a confused Dysea. "I... I am Phy'iad's slave." She stated then. "I know what it feels like to need my Queen. I know what it feels like to desire his vile touch when my mind screams for me not to." Osiri shook her head. "This has not happened to you Dysea Leonidas." She touched the scanner with a finger. “Your body is completely void of the chemicals in an Immortal’s semen. What you... what you believe has happened to you did not occur.”

“Then... then why do I...”

Osiri took the scanner back from her. “You have been injected with several chemicals my Queen. One to keep you from being able to shift to your wolf form. Another to keep you unconscious for a long duration and a third to keep your body temperature lower than normal so you feel sluggish and unresponsive.”

Dysea shook her head. “It was real!” She gasped. “I... I felt them. I felt them and all they did to me.”

“It did not happen!” Kr'nak growled now. “The two men outside your cell are my men! They are loyal to me! They would not have allowed it!”

Osiri placed her hand on his arm to calm him and looked at Dysea. “I suspect your power within Mindvoice is playing a large role in this my Queen, combined with the mixture of the drugs they gave to you. There is a capsule under the skin at the back of your head under your hair. It is tiny and you would never notice it unless you knew it was there. It basically inhibits your Mindvoice powers almost completely. It is like a dead space around you.” She watched Dysea reach up and feel along the back of her head. Osiri reached out and guided her fingers to a miniscule bump at the base of her neck. “There.” She stated. “I... I suspect without your abilities in Mindvoice to allow you to focus, you are reacting instinctively to some sort of dark dream or vision you may have had.

“Remove it!” Dysea exclaimed. “Take it out of me!”

Osiri met her eyes. “Your powers within Mindvoice... the powers of the King and the other Queens... it is well known Milady. I will remove it... but first you must hear us out. If I remove that now you could kill us both easily, and that is something I do not want. I want to be free... just like you. If I am right... and what you have described to us is accurate... than I believe this capsule is the reason you perceive something happened when in fact it did not.”

“Why should I trust you?” Dysea said harshly. “Why should I believe anything you tell me?”

Osiri glanced at Kr'nak briefly and then back to her. “You should believe me Dysea; you should believe me because your body lacks the chromosome that makes elven females turned by wolves immune to Immortal semen. You are the daughter of clones Dysea, not pureblood elves. This chromosome is passed within the DNA structure from generation to generation. Even though you are now wolf, your body lacks this particular chromosome, and you are just as susceptible to Immortal semen as I was when Phy'iad broke me.”

“How... how do you know this?” Dysea gasped.

“I was a molecular scientist before Phy'iad captured me.” Osiri told her. “I was married and I had children. All of whom are now dead because of Phy'iad. He thinks I do not know... he thinks I believe them to still be alive but I discovered several months after he captured me that he had them butchered. I hate... I despise him with every breath I take.”

“Phy'iad met with the Kavalian Marshall Pusintin... several months ago.” Kr'nak spoke now. “He wanted Phy'iad to capture several elven females, among them a half breed. He wanted to learn how Immortals would affect a turned elf.”

“You are speaking of As'hia.” Dysea said.

Osiri and Kr'nak looked at her surprised. “You... you know of her?” Kr'nak asked shock in his face.

“Of course she does.” Osiri said. “Just as we know of Lynom.”

Dysea’s eyes darted to her face just as equally shocked. “You...”

“We have known about Lynom for over a year.” Osiri told her. “There are no Immortals that I know of that can blur in motion like a vampire. Unless of course they are the children of an Immortal and a vampire and have those skills when they are born. Namely the children of Cha'talla and his Blessed Wife Esther.” Osiri set the medical scanner down. “We have kept his secret safe all of this time Dysea. Even during the times when Phy'iad is rutting like an animal above me and using all of my openings and I am at my weakest, I have never exposed his secret to him.”

“Why?” Dysea asked more quickly than she intended.

“Because our goals are the same... we have just been going about trying to achieve them in different manners. We are only four hours from Belid and we need to make our plans on what to do from here on out.” Kr'nak spoke now.

Dysea Leonidas may not have been able to Mindvoice, but she was still wolf and she still had her other senses. The first thing she noticed was that she could smell no lie coming from either of them. The second was that she caught the faint scent of ginger on the air and knew immediately what it was. She remained as calm as she was able wondering how in the heavens Tir'ut was able to get on board this ship and wanting to cry in relief that he was. She caught the slight movement out of the corner of her eye as the wall panel began to shift silently. It was in the corner of the cell, behind and to the right of the direction Kr'nak and Osiri were facing. She kept her eyes on Kr'nak as he spoke.

"... tired." He told her, soft his voice causing her attention to focus on him once more. "Phy'iad promised us riches when we deserted. A return to the old ways of our people where honor was foremost among our ideals. Instead he makes us into mercenaries, selling our many services to the highest bidder! I followed him for six hundred years before we deserted... and I followed him when we left the Coven. I followed him... I embraced all that we were doing because I believed it would lead us to what he had originally promised. I followed him and all that he made us do until ten years ago. I discovered something then that changed me."

Dysea's heart was racing as she listened to him. She had to keep them talking to her so they wouldn't notice. She glanced quickly to Osiri and then back to him when he said that.

"Yes." Osiri said. "Phy'iad left on some mission and he gave me to Kr'nak while he was gone."

"Gave you to him?" Dysea gasped.

Osiri nodded. "I am a slave." She stated almost nonchalantly. "He has given me to many of his men through the years. And if I wanted what only he could provide to me I had to comply with what he said I must do."

Dysea glared at Kr'nak. "So you raped her?" She spat.

"Kr'nak didn't touch me in that way." Osiri said softly. "Not for the entire month that Phy'iad was gone. Oh... I was willing to do whatever it took to insure that I got what Phy'iad had left for me. Kr'nak simply gave it all to me the first day and allowed me to rest and eat and for the first time in a decade, feel like a woman again. At least as much as I could." Osiri looked at him with blue/green eyes and Dysea saw an adoring love in them. The same look she saw in the eyes of Esther for Cha'talla and the eyes of all the elven females on Kranek who had taken Immortal husbands. "I got him to talk to me after the first week... at first it was just a few small sentences... but as the days passed it became more and more." Osiri turned to look at Dysea once more.

"And then the dam broke and he was telling me of what Phy'iad had promised them, what many of them had hoped for. I discovered that Kr'nak and half a dozen others were the only ones left who still clung to their original goals and ideals. It was quite the shock to me." Osiri told her.

Dysea looked at him. "But you are the... you are the one who took me from Kranek!" She gasped. "Why... why not just disregard what this scum wanted you to do? Cha'talla would have accepted you without question!"

"And leave Osiri behind? Leave behind my future?" Kr'nak said softly. "Never."

"Why didn't you leave before now?" Dysea demanded not really wanting to believe them.

"And go where?" Kr'nak asked her. "There is... Osiri would have died within a week without..."

Osiri squeezed his arm again gently. "How exactly would you propose I tell Phy'iad that I need enough of his semen so that I can survive without him Milady? At least until we could somehow develop a serum to at least curb the need enough that I could lead a reasonable life far away from him. Think about it Dysea. You are an extremely intelligent woman... how exactly would I have Phy'iad do this? He is not a fool or stupid. He is the most cruel and savage and cunning man I have ever met in my lifetime. He would see right through this and know that there was something wrong."

"What does this have to do with me?" Dysea demanded once more.

"This idiot Pusintin met with Phy'iad and had us do what we did for a reason." Kr'nak spoke. "He sent us to capture you for a reason and now they have targeted not only your King and mate, but your entire family. You are here for a reason Dysea Leonidas. Pusintin and Phy'iad have something planned for you. When I told Osiri of this... of what I knew, she told me we could not let it happen. She said we had to help you and then we could be free."

"And taking me from Kranek advances your freedom how?" Dysea snarled.

"I am not a fool Queen Leonidas." Kr'nak spoke. "Taking you was the only way to insure that I could accomplish my task. Taking you from Kranek was the only option. Once he told us of the plan I made sure I was the one leading the assault team. Another Immortal among those of Phy'iad's men that he trusts would not have insured nothing happened to you. I knew that if we had you, then I could successfully take Osiri and the five others that feel as I do and escape with them and you once we returned to Belid. Once in The Wilds you would have been set free. I only needed you to insure I was able to escape with Osiri."

"You expect me to believe all this?" Dysea growled.

"It is the truth." Osiri said.

"What you believe does not matter to me Elf Queen." Kr'nak spoke sternly. "I am three thousand six hundred and seven years old. I have seen war and bloodshed on a scale that would stagger your mind. What I am doing helps not only us, but you as well. It will reveal what plan that Phy'iad and this Pusintin have designed. It will help your people. You are nothing more than a pawn Dysea. This is not about you... it was never about you! What we have done in taking you has a different purpose! A larger purpose... and it will allow you to discover that purpose and why the Kavalians have suddenly begun attacking you."

"And I ask you again... why should I believe anything you have to say?" Dysea barked at him. "I am a prisoner! Your prisoner!"

"You are not a prisoner Milady." Osiri stated. "I know that is hard for you to believe right now, but we had no intention of holding you I swear."

"Why are you doing this?" Dysea demanded.

Kr'nak met her eyes. "When we left the Coven, Phy'iad told us we would be able to make lives for ourselves! That we would return to the old ways! I had no wife! No children! The High Coven refused this to us! Only they decided when and who we could marry and have children with! Phy'iad told us we could make our own decisions when we were free of the Coven! I only traded one form of control for another! I made the decision ten years ago to work towards my own goal then!"

Dysea's eyes grew wide and they darted back and forth between him and Osiri. "Wait... you..."

Osiri nodded with a gentle smile. "I have been Kr'nak's wife for the last seven years yes." She said. "It is... it is the only thing that has kept me sane all of this time. It is the only thing that saved me."

Dysea looked stunned. "But... you..."

"Yes." Kr'nak spat. "Do you know what it could possibly feel like to know your Blessed Wife has to fuck other men to survive Queen Dysea? Can you even imagine how that feels to me? Having to be in the same room as a man you have come to hate more than anything in this twisted universe treats your woman like a whore and she can not control herself and screams for him to take her! Screams for two and sometimes three men to take her because that is what that deranged fuck Phy'iad wants? And then listening to him laugh through it all? Given the first opportunity... the first chance and knowing that my Osiri would be free of him forever, I will cut that man's cock off and shove it down his throat. That is before I peel the skin from his foul body and allow the sun to cook him slowly."

"Kr'nak my husband..." Osiri said looking at him. "You know I don't like it when you speak like that. And especially not in front of the Lycavorian Queen."

Kr'nak met her eyes and incredibly he seemed to flush with embarrassment Dysea saw. He bowed his head slightly. "Evagna uns'aa ussta Du'ased 'ranndi." He said softly. (Forgive me my Blessed Wife.)

Osiri smiled brilliantly and leaned over to kiss the top of his head tenderly. She turned back to Dysea and saw her expression. "I never imagined I would find love again Milady... and certainly not with an Immortal... but I have. For seven years now we have hidden our marriage and our love. We have snuck moments to be together through that time, and when Kr'nak makes love to me I feel reborn each and every time. And this time... this time I need for it to last my Queen."

"This is... this is all so unbelievable." Dysea gasped. "Why... why would this Phy'iad work for Pusintin? Why... what does he want with me?"

"Whatever it is for... it can't be good Milady." Osiri spoke.

"Phy'iad does not reveal much of anything Queen Leonidas. Not even to those he says he trusts. Like me." Kr'nak spoke. "From what I know... as I said, you are only a key part of some larger plan of the Kavalian dogs."

"Why would he get involved with the Kavalians?" Dysea asked now thoroughly focusing her attention on Kr'nak and Osiri.

“Profit.” Kr'nak spoke. “Profit and the promise of as many elf females as Phy'iad wants over the next years. He has not confided in me or anyone else why taking you was necessary. Only that... only...”

“What?” Dysea asked.

“I know that Phy'iad is to break you while someone watched via a secure channel from our base. Then he is to hand you over to someone when his task is done and not tell this person what he has done.” Kr'nak spoke.

“He knows?” Dysea asked in shock. “He knows about me?”

Osiri nodded slowly unable to look at her. “That is my fault. I did not know what he intended and I inadvertently told him of my discovery when discussing the results of this As'hia you spoke of. He contacted someone within the Kavalian command almost immediately after. I don't know what was talked about.”

“But if... if he did this and then gave me to this unknown person I would...” Dysea asked them her eyes wide.

Kr'nak nodded. “You would be dead within the week without receiving additional....” He said shaking his head. “This is something I think they... the Kavalians I mean... something they want after your usefulness to them is done.”

“What could they possibly need me for?” Dysea asked holding the blanket tighter.

“I do not know.” Kr'nak spoke. “And I would tell you if I knew Lady Dysea.”

Osiri had been working with some items that were in the bundle while Kr'nak spoke and she lifted the high pressure injector. The shadow out of the corner of her eye caused her to turn and her eyes grew wide when she saw the hulking figure unwrap the shadows from around his body and the savage face appeared.

“Kr'nak...!”

He was moving before the words finished leaving her lips but he was far too slow. The large hand clamped around his throat with brutal power and lifted his six foot four and two hundred fifty pound body clean off the floor. Osiri tried to move to protect her beloved husband but was caught by several pairs of hands as Lancy and another vampire also unwrapped the shadows from around their bodies and held her.

“Ilhar vith'rell! Nin Usstan orn elgg dos whol vel'bol dos inbal xunor!” Tir'ut's voice was savage in the cell and Dysea felt enormous relief wash over her as she watched the man who had claimed her daughter lift the Immortal as if he was a child and ram him brutally into the bulkhead. Esther had told her of the strength her son possessed and Dysea was witnessing it first hand now. His combined vampire and Immortal strength was far more than what Kr'nak was used too and he grunted painfully as his body was smashed into the unyielding metal wall. (Motherfucker! Now I will kill you for what you have done!)

Another odd but extremely pleasant vanilla/berry scent filtered to her quickly along with the beautiful scent of delightful orange cloves she was so familiar with.

“Mother!” Normya's voice rasped softly and Dysea turned to see her scrambling from the opening into what appeared to be some sort of access shaft.

“Oh Normya my child!” Dysea wailed softly as she scrambled to her feet.

Mother and daughter met halfway across the cell in an embrace of love and relief. Cirith had unwrapped the shadows from around her and Normya just before exiting the shaft and now she stood to her full height of five foot eight and simply watched as mother and daughter were reunited. Cirith was struck by the uncanny resemblance that they had, though Dysea was several inches taller than her daughter. The platinum blond hair and firm physical builds were almost exactly the same, and Cirith found herself admiring the parts of Dysea's flesh that were exposed from under the blanket. She shook her head quickly to dismiss these thoughts and turned to watch as Tir'ut tightened his death grip on Kr'nak's throat, slowly beginning to kill him.

“No!” Osiri screamed. “No! Let him go!” She struggled against the two men holding her trying to get to her husband. “Let him go! I can not lose him! Let him go!”

Her voice caused Dysea to pull away and look at Tir'ut's back. “Tir'ut... sut ukta ussta Rinovdro dalharuk.” She spoke quickly. (Release him my Immortal son.)

“Let...uurkkk... let her go!” Kr'nak hissed out the words even with the hand crushing his throat.

“I will kill him for what they have done to you and our family Darthirii Ilhar!” Tir'ut snarled without looking back at her.

Dysea broke away from Normya's embrace and moved up beside him. She reached up and placed her hand on his shoulder. “No Tir'ut.” She said. “I... I don't believe they are the enemy.”

Tir'ut turned his head and looked at her. "Darthirii Ilhar?" He questioned.

Dysea nodded as her confidence rapidly began to return to her now that the scents of Tir'ut and Normya filled her mind. She did not know who the others were, but if they were with Normya and Tir'ut then they must be trustworthy. "Release him." She said. "There is... there is not much time and..." She turned to Normya. "Your brothers and sisters? How did you get...?"

Normya stepped up to her, embracing her once more as Tir'ut released Kr'nak and he dropped to the deck gasping for breath. "It was you mother." Normya told her.

Dysea hugged her tightly. "What... what do you mean?"

"Your order to put Tir'ut and I in the ship with Cirith." Normya said. "We were closing on some unidentified ships when the ship carrying you came from the planet. Cirith..." Normya motioned to the stunning raven haired vampire female. "Cirith got us close to the ship. Tir'ut and I could feel you on the transport. We..."

Cirith stepped forward now. "Normya flew our heavy fighter into the landing bay when it opened to receive the transport. We have been slowly working our way towards you once we discovered your location."

Dysea looked at Cirith intently; taking in the way the dark uniform fit her lush figure and conformed to her large breasts and flat abdomen. Her long black hair framed a face of unearthly beauty with glittering dark eyes and soft full pink lips. Dysea nearly groaned as she looked at Cirith, suddenly realizing that she was in full phase now and her body was craving the touch of her lovers and mate. Touches that she would not be receiving anytime soon and never again when it came to her Nauta Melme. Dysea choked back the tears and shook her head turning back to Normya. "Deni, Lisisa, the others?" She asked.

Normya shook her head. "I don't know." She said softly. "Once we jumped out of Kranek's system, Tir'ut and I were just not strong enough to reach anyone." Normya met her eyes. "I don't know what..."

"You... your forces crushed the Kavalians!" Kr'nak gasped as he got to his feet. "Phy'iad contacted Pusintin as we were returning here. Your forces annihilated the Kavalians. When the Coven ships jumped into the system you overwhelmed them. When we left the planet... when we left your dragons were just beginning to enter the battle and slaughtering the Kavalian troops." Kr'nak looked at where Lancy and his soldier were still holding Osiri's arms. "Release her!" He snarled beginning to move towards his elven wife.

Tir'ut began to try and grab him, but Kr'nak batted his arm away. Tir'ut blurred then and wrapped his arm around Kr'nak's chest. Exerting his great strength he lifted the Immortal off the floor again, slamming him painfully to the floor.

"Stop it! Leave him alone!" Osiri screamed. "My Queen... please! We only came to help you!"

Dysea turned from where she held Normya and looked at the two men. "Release her." She said.

Lancy and the man did so immediately and Osiri rushed to where Kr'nak was flat out on his back. She shoved at Tir'ut, knocking him out of the way. "Get away from him!" She snarled. "Get away!"

Tir'ut looked at Dysea confused as he stood up to his full height. "Elf mother?" He asked softly.

"They... they came to insure I was unhurt." Dysea said. "I think. They..."

"Lady Dysea we have to go." Cirith spoke now. "We don't have much time before we arrive at Belid. We can force open the bay doors and depart the same way we entered. We can return through these shafts but if we don't leave now, we'll have to fight our way back through the corridors."

Dysea looked at her. "You are... you are Valin's daughter?"

Cirith nodded. "Yes."

Dysea turned to look at Osiri as she stroked the skin of Kr'nak's face and helped him to sit up. "We can't leave." Dysea stated.

Cirith looked at her stunned as did Normya and Tir'ut. "Queen Dysea... you can't... you can't be serious!"

"Mother!" Normya protested. "This is the only chance we will get! We... we worked so hard to get here!"

Dysea turned back to Normya. "The Kavalians have taken your father from me Little One! Possibly one or two of your mothers!" She spat angrily. "They attacked Kranek as a diversion to get me! They have gone after our family and I want to know why!"

"Mother you..." Normya looked distraught as Dysea turned back to Osiri.

“Prove to me that you are telling me the truth!” Dysea snapped. “Prove that to me by taking this thing from my head!”

“Do it Osiri.” Kr'nak spoke rubbing his head. That he said it first almost sealed her decision for her regardless of what Osiri did in Dysea's eyes. “As you have said my wife... nothing but truth!”

His words caused both Normya and Tir'ut to look at him with wide eyes. Cirith shook her head unable to believe what she had heard. Tir'ut watched as Osiri went to the small bundle she had brought into the cell and took a small device from the folds of the blanket. Lancy and Cirith both gasped in surprise.

“A Static Inhibitor!” Cirith almost barked out as her hand came up with the small hold out Kinetic Magnum in her grasp. She leveled it at Osiri's head but felt Dysea's fingers wrap around her hand quickly. Cirith almost gasped at the touch of Dysea's hand upon hers and she looked at those incredible emerald eyes. “Dysea... that is...”

“She has told me what it is.” Dysea said. “This thing is already in my head. She has shown me. I want her to take it out Cirith. Put your weapon away. There is far more going on here than we know and I have every intention of finding out what is going on. And then I will take my vengeance on those who have hurt my family. And I will not stop until they are all dead!”

Osiri bravely stepped right up to Dysea, ignoring Cirith altogether. She reached up to push Dysea's silky hair from the back of her neck and Dysea grabbed it with both hands not caring that the blanket fell away revealing her naked body. Of everyone present, only Cirith and Normya did not look away instantly, for much different reasons. Normya because she grabbed the blanket to return it to covering her mother and Cirith because the sight of Dysea's naked flesh caused a raging warmth to cascade through her unlike any she had ever felt. It passed quickly as Normya covered her mother back up, but it didn't fade as it normally did when Cirith looked upon an attractive woman as a prospective bed partner. Osiri placed the Static Inhibitor on the back of Dysea's neck, found the tiny bump with her fingertip and then placed the angled end of the device over the tiny bump.

“It will sting for a few seconds.” She stated before pressing the red button and not giving Dysea a chance to prepare herself.

Dysea's eyes flew open in unequivocal shock and she opened her mouth to cry out before collapsing into Normya's arms.

“Mother!” Normya echoed. “Mother!”

CURILA 6

Anja stood beside Aricia and they simply stared at Martin's form on the bed in front of them. The stark white sheet covered just his lower body, leaving his chiseled upper body bare. The scars from the shrapnel Anja had long since made to vanish and now the only scars that remained were the ones they were all accustomed so well to, for each of them had explored his body as intimately as he had explored theirs.

“There is risk Anja.” Aricia told her softly. “You know that.”

Anja nodded. “He's been like this for hours Little Wolf.” She said using the name they had called her so long ago. A name they now only used to express their undying love and devotion to her. “I did a light probe as Helen taught me, and it is very much like it was when Walter first had me bring him and Dysea back on the Raptor.”

“You were not wolf then my love.” Aricia said looking at her. “He is wolf and now so are you. If you are successful and you pull him out of whatever is trapping him, he will smell that you are in full phase. He will not know it is you initially and he will unleash his full aura upon you. You will... you will be helpless before him.”

Anja met her azure blue eyes. “If you had told me that at any other time Aricia, I would be so wet it wouldn't be funny. Helpless before Martin does not frighten me Little Wolf.”

“You have never experienced his unshielded aura Anja.” Aricia said.

“Then maybe it's time I did.” Anja said. “Do we know it will affect me for sure? He has always held back Aricia. He turned me... just as he did Dysea. How do we know I won't be able to tolerate as she does. As you do?”

Aricia blinked several times as she looked at her. “We... we do not.” She said.

“Does that... does that bother you Little Wolf?” Anja asked.

“Carians Anja... nothing would please me more than to have you and For'mya be able to share what only Dysea and I can feel. His aura is so... so pure and so powerful! When he wraps us within it, at its height it is the most divine feeling in the universe.” Aricia told her squeezing her hands. “To know that you and For'mya could feel that too... it would make us... it would make us so complete.”

“I can do this Little Wolf.” Anja said.

Aricia nodded. “I will be monitoring from the next room.” She said. “If I sense you need me I will join the connection but you will have to guide me for I have never done what you are going to do.”

Anja chortled. “Well... it isn't like I do this all the time either.” She said. She squeezed her hand again. “For'mya? Deia?”

Aricia shook her head slowly. “Nothing yet.” She answered. “Sadi will contact me immediately if they discover something.”

Anja's eyebrows rose a little. “Sadi?”

Aricia nodded. “Apparently this Pralor that Martin spoke of before all this happened contacted Andro and Helen. They went to meet with them.”

“Pralor?” Anja gasped. “Avi said all of the Pralors were... he said they were extinct!”

Aricia nodded. “That is not the case it seems.” She said. She pressed close to Anja and drew her tight with one arm. Anja's arm slipped around her waist as well and they looked at each other intently. None of the Queens were afraid to show affection for each other, no matter if they were in public or not. “I will be in the next room. If I see... if I see you are successful and... I will seal the room so no one can disturb you. If he starts... neither he nor you will want to stop.”

“You are in phase as well Little Wolf.” Anja said. “Even in the next room it will affect you. It is a need for all of us... a real need Aricia. Don't deny it. We never have before and we should not now.”

Aricia smiled and nodded. “Very well.” Aricia leaned over and they shared a deep kiss of love and feeling. She drew away after a long moment and nodded her head before turning and leaving the room.

Anja turned slowly and looked at Martin on the bed. Even had she not been wolf and tied to him so deeply, Anja would still have thought he was the most delicious man she had ever laid eyes upon. She knew it that first night they were together so long ago. Martin had loved her so thoroughly that night, so utterly captivating her senses and every pleasure receptor in her body. And he had done the same thing for the last twenty plus years as well. No matter how many times, no matter how intense, he could still steal her breath away with just a simple caress. He needed her now, and Anja didn't hesitate. She began to pull her uniform off, quickly striping away the layer of Mark IV ArmorPly. That was quickly followed by the t-shirt she wore underneath, her large breasts proud and firm, and the nipples hardening ever so slightly in the cool air. She stripped off her thin pink panties and began pulling the sheet from Martin's body, easing her petite frame onto the bed and stretching out her five foot three body onto his deliciously chiseled six foot two frame. Her blood began a slow burn for her handsome wolf mate but Anja knew she had a task to do first. She situated her body on top of his, the sheet now covering their lower bodies only and she began to lick and nuzzle her way up and across his broad powerful chest.

Her four inch long tongue explored flesh she knew so well and she did it slowly and delicately. As she moved upwards she made sure to shift her hips slightly every few moments against his flaccid cock. She needed him to know she was here with him; she needed him to feel her flesh against his. As she came level with his head, she took his handsome face in her small hands and dropped butterfly kisses all over his cheeks and lips. She was careful to rub her cheek against the stubble of his face and the softness of his beard. There were powerful scent glands behind the ears and Anja made sure to drag her ears directly across his nose so that the only thing he smelled was her sweet honey scent filtering to him. Almost thirty years of sharing him with the other women she loved, and they all knew exactly what each of them did to him that could set him off. Anja was the smallest of his Queens, the most petite in physical stature, and she knew he loved to feel her small form spread across his body with his beautiful cock filling her. He could hold her impaled on his shaft with one arm, leaving his other hand free to explore her body in invigorating ways. When in the midst of passion Anja would often talk dirty to him while she nuzzled his cheek and nose making sure all he could smell was her. He loved it when she did that and Anja did that now.

Anja used her thumbs to stroke his cheeks as she stared at his face. “I need... we need you to come back to us Marty.” She whispered softly. “We... we can’t live without you. I’m... I’m coming in there with you Martin Leonidas my mate. Whatever it is holding you I won’t allow it to keep you any longer.”

Anja closed her jade green eyes and pressed her forehead to his, dropping any and all pretense of Mindvoice shielding and reached out with tiny fingers of Mindvoice as Helen had instructed her. The Mindvoice shields of Martin Leonidas were the most powerful of any being in the universe and any attempt to enter his mind without his permission would result in an attack that no one would survive. When he came together with Torma those skills only grew in power and it was Helen and Arzoal who guided them in what they learned. Anja concentrated harder than she had ever concentrated on one thing and began to skip across the outside of those dominating shields looking for the one crack she needed to ease into the threads of his thoughts. She found it after only a few moments, the backdoor so to speak, that only his wives and mates and his first born son knew of. She found it and Anja Leonidas she leaped without question or pause from the prepace of those shields into the realm of the single mind in the universe that so many lifeforms feared.

Eurin turned to look at Aricia as she came into the small room with an over abundance of medical monitoring equipment. Sivana, Ceuma and Yuriko stood silently watching Anja as she began to disrobe. Aricia glanced at Atropos and Belen where they stood in the back of the room with Zaniai.

“Aricia my sister...” He spoke softly as Aricia came up to him. “I don’t like this. It is dangerous for her. Too dangerous. The King... Martin... he is ten times more powerful than even the Feravomir. If something... if something goes wrong he could shred her mind and not even know it.”

“Do you believe he would do anything to harm us Atropos?” Aricia asked. “Any of us?”

“Not knowingly... no.” Atropos answered. “He would cut his own arm off in order to keep any of you safe. But this... Aricia... I have heard what Daniel and For’mya have said about the day he came from that place on Ukwav. He pulverized two slabs of black granite with his mind alone. The slabs weighed two or three tons apiece! He pulverized them into dust! And he has grown far stronger since then.”

Aricia reached up and placed her hand flat on her older brother’s cheek. “I love you brother.” She said softly. “And I need you to have the same faith in Martin that we do.”

“I do sister.” Atropos said. “That does not mean I will not worry for my charge.”

Aricia smiled and reached up on her tip toes to kiss his rough cheek. “She will succeed.” Aricia said. “Take Zaniai and Belen from here brother. This is not something I will allow them to witness.”

Atropos nodded his head instantly. “Belen... Prefect Zaniai... we must go.” He said looking at them. “Now!”

Belen didn’t hesitate and grabbed Zaniai’s arm and pulled him from the room. Atropos leaned over and kissed his sister’s cheek. “I will be waiting your word.” He said.

Aricia nodded and waited for him to leave before turning to Sivana. “Sivana... seal the door to Martin’s room and this room as well.”

Sivana turned and moved to the control console in front of her as Aricia settled into the chair next to Eurin.

“Aricia... what is she doing?” Eurin asked.

“She is going to attempt to do something that only she has ever done before.” Aricia said. “Enter our beloved’s mind when his shields are still up.”

Eurin blinked several times. “But I thought... aren’t you all connected within Mindvoice already?”

Aricia nodded slowly. “Yes we are. We have free reign within Martin’s mind...” She answered. “But there are places that even we do not go and things we do not attempt with him Eurin. He is just too strong.”

“Then I... I don’t understand what is going on.” Eurin said.

“Many years ago there was a pureblood vampire named Deval.” Aricia said. “Anja was angry at the time and she... somehow she was able to reach through another’s mind and touch this Deval across a thousand kilometers Eurin. The Feravomir believes it is because she is a surgeon by nature and she is very exacting in her skill. Her anger gave her added focus and she was able to follow the strands of Mindvoice through this third person back to the one who she sought. He was responsible for hurting a dear friend of ours and ultimately he was responsible for turning her into a vampire. The skill needed to do something like this only Anja possesses. It takes a finely tuned mind used to working under delicate conditions.”

“You could not do this?” Eurin asked.

Aricia shook her head. “Neither I nor Dysea are capable of such precise control as is needed for this. We are too passionate. Only Anja has the ability to master her emotions in this way, though she hardly ever shows it. We believe it is because she possesses this skill that most of the time she is the one who guards her emotions least when in public or private with us.”

Eurin looked at her. “What happened to this Deval?” She asked.

Aricia didn’t take her eyes off where Anja laid on top of Martin in the next room, their heads touching. “Anja shredded his mind into nothing.” Aricia said softly.

“Oh wow!” Anja spoke as she stood among the towering black rock walls all around her.

She turned in her spot, seeing nothing but these walls reaching to the blue sky above. She wore her Mark IV ArmorPly, which was surprising for she had stripped out of her uniform and underclothes before getting into the bed with Martin. As she completed the full circle she did, she realized then she was within Martin’s mind, yet now it was so much clearer than it had ever been and utterly focused. She had seen this terrain before and immediately she knew where she was. This was Thermopylae on Earth. This was where his father had died. She had been here before, many times with him, as all of them had. He had brought them here within the realms of his mind so that they could know who he truly was. She recognized the trail he usually led them down and she began to scramble across the worn path between the skyscraper high walls all around her.

It had never been so vivid before. She could actually smell the scent of the sea nearby, feel the whisper of the ocean breeze as it swirled through the canyon, and she could... she could smell the faint traces of burning wood. Anja quickened her pace, almost slipping on the smooth rocks, as she made her way towards where she knew the entrance to The Hot Gates would be. Yes he had brought them all here before, and he had shared his father’s memories of those few days with them. None of them had been the same after, and none of them were able to hold back the tears of what he had allowed them to see. The scale of brutality and death was far beyond anything any of them had seen as they witnessed those terrible battles as if they were there with them. Every thrust of a spear, every slash of a Spartan sword, every clang of a Spartan shield on steel. The screams of the vampires disguised as Persians as they fell. The horrible howls of the wounded wolf Spartans as they battled beside their King in what was, even to this day, the greatest show of courage and determination ever displayed in the history of the universe. Three hundred Spartans and their allies. Three hundred Lycavorians and their human allies had stood here and fell to the last man for the right to be free of oppression. This was the turning point of the Lycavorians and their rebellion Anja now knew. This single event had caused them to finally unite under one banner and throw off the High Coven yoke of slavery for all time. He showed them this as a means to convey to them what he would resort to if the need ever arose. What he could and would do if he was ever called upon to do it. It had terrified all of them to know that he was capable of such violence, but coming here allowed them to understand why and it gave them a closeness to him that they had not had before.

Anja, Aricia, all of them knew he came here often when his mind wandered. He would sit on the cliffs high above where his father had fallen and simply listen to the ocean and inhale the scent of the sea. They knew it was his way of being close to the father he never knew. The father he had only seen in visions. Anja caught his minty scent on the wind and this stunned her for it was just as powerful now as it was when she was near him in the physical realm. The potency of his scent energized her now as her wolf blood surged with the knowledge that her mate was so close. Anja scrambled up the last steep portion of the path that would lead her to the opening of the Hot Gates and she came to an abrupt halt at what she saw, her eyes wide.

She expected to see the ocean stretched out before her as they always did, the sun slowly crossing the horizon in the distance. Martin had pointed out to them once where each of them had a doorway into his mind and soul. Each of them represented a spot on the horizon that made the scenery complete. He had told them that when For’mya had finally become Queen and they were all truly together, the scenery of the horizon had calmed to the most tranquil bit of perspective he had ever seen. Four sections of horizon were simply serene while the fifth wavered ever so slightly, like ripples of a pond when one tossed a rock into the center. It was not something any of them had ever asked him about after the first time. He never told them which one of them generated that ripple on the horizon and he never volunteered it. He told them this was what it all meant to him. They were the ones who allowed him to come here and not see the savagery of the place where his father had died, but the almost majestic sight of beauty that the place had been before that first day so long ago. He told them this is where he had spoken to his father on several occasions, something all of them hadn't believed but kept to themselves.

What Anja saw now were two angry black sections of the horizon that touched the cliffs and led to the ocean far below. What she saw now were two towering black portions of the horizon that should not have been there. And at the base of one of those black walls of nothing was Martin Leonidas. Anja blinked several times in shock for the Martin she saw now was nearly feral looking. He wielded his Nehtes and a sword not unlike the ones that Androcles had forged and he was smashing those weapons against the unyielding black wall screaming out his rage. He was naked, his entire body covered in sweat and dirt and sand from the hard packed ground beneath his feet. He looked like some angry god from the story books her human father had showed to her as a child.

Anja hesitated for only a moment before moving forward again, this time at a dead sprint. She covered the distance quickly and soon was able to hear what he was raging at the blackness and it brought her up short once more.

"...will not take them from me!" He bellowed. "Give them back! They are mine! I won't allow you to hurt them! Give them back!"

As each sentence passed from his lips he added another crushing blow against the shimmering black shield. It was almost as if it was made of liquid, yet no matter how much strength he hammered this wall with, it left no mark. Anja knew what her Martin could do with a Nehtes, and every time he swung his weapon it could cleave a fully grown wolf in two, yet now it left not even a scratch.

"Martin?" She heard her voice squeak out softly.

Anja gasped when his yellow/gold eyes snapped around to look at her. His features were angrier than she had ever seen them, his dual wolf fangs so unique to the Leonidas line, were now fully bared and exposed in all their ferocious beauty. She moved forward without fear, her jade colored eyes taking in his dominating physical body. Anja would never fear him, no matter the cause or reason; she would never fear this man. His wolf eyes focused on her and his face lost a small portion of the angry swell to it.

"Lover? It's me..." Anja spoke.

"They won't give them back to me!" Martin snarled. "To us!" She watched him turn once more and slash out with the sword, watching as it remained unblemished against the blow that would undoubtedly be a devastatingly fatal wound on a living person. "I want them back do you hear me!" Martin screamed. "You will give them back to me!"

"Martin... what..."

"I can't feel them!" Martin raged. "It is a blackness! They..." He turned back to the wall. "Return them to me damn you! They do not belong to you! They are mine!"

Anja stepped closer. "Marty... lover... who... who has them? Who are you talking about?"

"My Melda Min!" Martin barked. "My Kinsoargai. He is keeping them from me! He won't give them back!"

Anja looked at the towering blackness. "Who?"

"Can't you see Red?" He barked. "Look... look at the threads of blackness! It is that... it is that medwawnubous Xaxon! He won't give them back to me! He's pissed because I told him to go nubou himself and now he has taken them from me!" He looked up at the towering blackness. "Fight me you nubous coward! You want me... fight me! Be a man!"

Anja stepped closer to him, reaching out with her hand and placing it on his arm. Her eyes grew wide as she realized that he felt so real, his flesh hot to the touch, the blood pulsing through his veins. As she moved closer and his head turned to look at her, Anja was very nearly overwhelmed with his powerful minty scent. She felt his wolf aura then, so powerful and pure, and it caused her knees to become weak. Her own wolf blood began to burn hotter than it had in all the time they had been together. Her mind began to lose focus, his image beginning to blur out of clarity as the nipples on her breasts became painfully hard, shoved against the material of the inside of the ArmorPly she wore. Her center became instantly drenched in her sweet honey scented juices and every nerve ending in her body was sounding off as if she was submerged in a stadium of magnificent pleasure. So overpowering... so deliciously, wonderfully overwhelming.

Anja summoned the last dredges of the incredible willpower she possessed. She called upon all of her reserves of command and her strength of will. The resolution and strength of will that was the reason so many people within the Union considered her second only to Aricia in Mindvoice power and ability.

“Martin...” She gasped raggedly. “Marty... you have to come... you have to come back to us!”

“I will not!” Martin shouted. “Not until this dog faces me and gives me back what is mine!”

“Martin!” Anja barked now as her own eyes shifted and her fangs burst from her gums. The tone of her voice made his head snap around and glare at her once more. “Little Wolf... I... we need you Martin! So... so many need you!” Anja met his eyes now, seeing the feral glow in them and needing to be wrapped in that savage and wild aura. “You... you must come back! You must leave this place!”

“I will not abandon those I love!” Martin snarled.

“Martin... we...”

“They are not dead!” Martin screamed. “I would know! You would know! I will not leave until that ronnu gives them back to me! I will not!”

Anja shook her head back and forth, tears beginning to fall from her eyes. “You... you can not help them in here!” She shouted. “I... I can’t stay in here! It’s... it’s too much Martin. I can barely... I can barely...”

She staggered forward against him and without hesitation his weapons dropped and he gripped her arms. “Anja!”

She whimpered loudly as his naked flesh touched her and he drew her close. The burning was almost too much to bear... it felt so divinely breathtaking... yet the burning was almost truly painful now. “Lover... Martin... you are unshielded here! Your aura... I can’t...” She shook her head back and forth. “It’s too much... I...” She lifted her head and looked into his wolf eyes of yellow/gold. Eyes that she had loved from the very first moment she had discovered what he was. Eyes that had always made her feel safe and desired like no woman ever had. “We... we need you Martin Leonidas! You can not help them in here... and we need you!”

The blackness closest to them suddenly shimmered violently, a terrible sound like metal flapping in the wind reverberated all around them and then it vanished completely before their eyes. Once it was gone both of them could see the serene horizon once more and they both felt the whisper of love and passion caress their skin, along with the faint scent of fresh wildflowers. Martin’s eyes grew wider as he faced that horizon.

“Melda Min!” He gasped still clinging to Anja and holding her close.

As immersed in his mind as she was, Anja felt it as well, and the added threads of Dysea’s powerful mind no matter where she was reinforced her own and she dug her fingers into his shoulders. She could feel Dysea’s life force, her very essence filtering through him and by default her as well, and suddenly Anja realized just how important they all were to him. How important they all were to each other.

“You... you see!” She gasped. “We... we can fight this! We can fight this... but we need to be together! We need to be strong!”

Martin closed his eyes and basked in the feeling of Dysea’s essence, wrapping it around himself tightly, entwining it even deeper with Aricia and Anja. He turned slowly to look at her shivering in his arms.

“Please... please Martin!” Anja gasped. “Come back with me! Come back with me and we will fight this! All of us! I can’t stay... I can’t stay here any longer! I want to... I want to surrender... I want...”

Martin lifted her into his arms and crushed his lips over hers causing Anja’s mind to explode in bright beautiful lights. “All of me Red!” His thoughts reached for her. “All of me! I will hold nothing back any longer! The old me... the old me is dead and gone! My own son has taught me something and I will hold nothing back any longer! The old me is gone and you are stronger than you know!”

Anja’s mind screamed in unadulterated harmony and she wrapped her arms around his head and poured forth her entire essence in returning his volcanic kiss.

“...gods!” Ceuma gasped as her fingers danced across the console in front of her. “Her vitals just went through the ceiling!”

“Her endorphin levels just spiked at three hundred percent!” Sivana stammered. “Her heart rate has tripled and all of Martin’s vitals just blew off the chart!”

Eurin looked at Aricia who had an almost dreamlike expression on her face. “Aricia! What is happening? What’s wrong?”

Aricia turned slowly and looked at Eurin, easily feeling Anja and their beloved Martin pulling themselves from wherever they had been. Anja would tell her all about it in time. They never kept secrets from each other. “She is... she is experiencing all Martin has to give her Divine One.” She stated gently. “He is holding nothing back now and it is so wonderfully glorious.” She rose to her feet pushing back from the small console she had been sitting at. “I... I must go to them.”

“Aricia...” Sivana asked moving closer to her. “Anja... she is...”

“Ahhhhhhhhhhhhhh!!” The female voice echoed through the small monitoring room drawing all of their attention to the room on the other side of the view window. Anja rose up on top of Martin’s body, her eyes fully changed and her fangs extended to their full length as she tossed off the sheet that covered their bodies. They watched Martin sit up suddenly and his powerful arms engulfed her petite form, rolling her over beneath him and covering her gasping lips with his own.

Eurin’s eyes were wide in shock as her hand went to her throat. “Oh... oh my!” She gasped softly. She turned back to Aricia and inhaled sharply as she saw Aricia’s eyes had fully changed now as well, her long wolf fangs exposed from beneath her lips. “Aricia?” She rasped.

“Forgive me... forgive me Eurin. I must... I must go to them.” She stammered before moving quickly for the door.

Eurin turned to look at Sivana and Ceuma, her eyes wide. She watched as Ceuma touched several controls on the console and the large view window became darkened and they could no longer see inside the room. She saw something on their faces, understanding and contentment and realization finally began to wash over her.

“Sivana?” She asked softly. “Ceuma?”

“I believe it is time we find something to eat and discover where we will be staying while we are here.” Sivana said.

Ceuma nodded. “Yes... for I need my husband and mate to...”

Sivana looked at her and took her hand quickly knowing exactly what she was going to say. “Yes... so do I.” She said with a smile as she nuzzled her clone sister’s cheek. “So do I.”

PHY’IAD’S COMMAND SHIP

Dysea collapsed into her daughter’s arms even as Cirith reached for her as well. Osiri staggered back unable to understand what was happening. Normya dropped to the deck, Cirith’s hands helping her to steady Dysea as she shuddered almost violently. Cirith’s eyes grew wide when she felt the tremors coming from Dysea’s body and the heat that raced up her fingers and into her arms from where she held Dysea’s arms. She felt an enormous surge of uninhibited sexual energy and Mindvoice power rise through Dysea and it rippled through her unlike any sensations she had ever felt. It was very nearly overwhelming her own control and had Lancy not stepped forward behind her to take her shoulders and support her, she would have surrendered to the magnificent vibrations completely.

“Mother?” Normya gasped fearfully strangely unable to sense what Cirith was feeling. “Mother... what is wrong?”

“Nauta Melme!” Dysea sobbed. “My... my Nauta Melme is...”

Normya stroked her mother’s head as tears flooded her eyes. “I know Amille. I know.” She whispered. “I... I miss him... I miss him terribly too. He...”

Dysea’s head pulled away from Normya’s chest and she looked at her daughter with wide emerald eyes. “He lives Normya!” She gasped. “Your father is not dead!”

Normya’s eyes grew wide. “What?”

“I can... I can feel him within me daughter.” Dysea spoke with a brilliant smile on her face. “I can feel him... and he is so beautiful now!”

“Mother... they... Andro said...” Normya couldn’t believe her words yet the vibrations coming from her mother were unmistakable.

“Andro knows... lower... lower your shields Normya.” Dysea said turning to where Tir'ut stood with an expression of disbelief on his face. “Lower them Tir'ut. You... are tied together now and you must lower your shields together.”

Tir'ut moved up behind Normya quickly, putting his hands on her shoulders and completely ignoring the fact that his elf mother was exposed to his eyes. Once he was touching his Blessed Wife, he dropped all of his Mindvoice shields without hesitation and he heard and felt Normya gasp out and shiver, one of her hands reaching up to grip his hand tightly.

“Alvva!” Normya cried gripping her mother's arm. “Alvva!” (papa)

The tears were pouring from Dysea's eyes now and she basked in the tremors she felt. The distance was too great for her to communicate directly, but she could feel him easily, like a luminous star on a dark night. She could feel Aricia and Melyanna as well, and the joy all of them felt at being able to feel her once more. She felt Bella's presence and the happiness that was coursing through her and it was very nearly overwhelming. Dysea also felt something else, another mind; a powerful mind within their connection but remaining just on the fringes and then she sensed that For'mya was not with them and her attention went to reaching for her.

“Stop!” Cirith barked quickly pulling on Dysea's arms. “Lady Dysea you must stop!”

Dysea looked at her. “Wha...?”

“Someone on this ship might detect you!” Cirith exclaimed.

That simple sentence caused Dysea's mind to refocus and she clamped her shields down once more, but not before sending her warmth and love to the ones she desired most in the universe and not before she felt the commanding pulse of love and passion from her Nauta Melme for her. She almost whimpered out loud in need but controlled her reactions. As her shields began to drop into place she felt the warm fingers of their oldest son as he caressed her and sent a sudden throb of happiness and reassurance to her. Dysea closed her eyes tightly, gripping Normya's arm and nodded her head as she turned and squeezed Cirith's hand on her shoulder.

“Thank... thank you.” She gasped opening her eyes and looking at the beautiful vampire female. A female that she suddenly realized was not completely vampire. Her eyes grew a little wider as she looked at her. Her vanilla/berry scent was far more pronounced than any vampire scent she had ever smelled. Even more than Isabella's soft Lilac scent and it tickled her wolf nose deliciously. “You... you are not entirely...”

Cirith shook her head. “No. But that is a discussion for another time.” She said quickly. “Immortals have incredible natural shielding ability within Mindvoice, but there is the distinct possibility one or two could have enough strength to detect us even at our advanced level.”

Dysea nodded her head once more. “You... you are correct. I forgot... I forgot where we were for a moment.” She said.

“We really need to leave!” Cirith stated. “Now!”

Dysea shook her head again. “No.” She said as she got slowly to her feet and pulled the blanket around her tighter.

Normya scrambled to her feet as her mother turned to look at Kr'nak and Osiri. “Mother this is crazy!” She exclaimed. “We have to go!”

Dysea moved closer to where Kr'nak held Osiri tightly to his body, even as the second Coven troop held his rifle on them. She looked at Osiri and reached up to brush the spot on the back of her neck where the Static Inhibitor had been. “Thank you Osiri.” She said softly. “Thank you both.”

“You... you should listen to your people.” Kr'nak told her. “Get out while you can. We will be arriving on Belid in a few hours and I can't guarantee what will take place once we do.”

“How much time do we have before they come for me to take me to the surface?” Dysea asked.

Kr'nak met her eyes. “We'll arrive in perhaps two hours. Phy'iad will want to depart the ship immediately upon arriving. As it stands now... I was to take you to the transport fifteen minutes before we arrived.”

“Then we have ninety minutes to try and figure something out.” Dysea said.

“Mother...” Normya spoke coming up beside her. “What do you mean?”

“Your father's brother intended this for a reason.” Dysea said turning to look at her. “I am not a major piece of whatever he is planning... only a pawn as Kr'nak has said. For what purpose I do not know, but I do not like being a pawn of anyone.”

“This is not wise Darthirii Ilhar Dysea.” Tir'ut spoke moving up beside Normya. “My father would not approve.”

Dysea nodded looking at him. “Yes... and I'm quite sure neither would my Nauta Melme.”

“Then why?” Cirith asked.

Dysea turned now to look at her. “Because whatever is happening is larger than just me. Pusintin came after our family for a reason. He set out to kill all of us for a purpose and I want to know what that purpose is.” Her emerald eyes narrowed. “And I want to meet this traitor of Lycavorians... for when I do, I will end his miserable life myself.”

“Shu!” Cirith swore. “Then we'd better come up with a plan quickly.” (shit)

Dysea's tilted her head slightly as she looked at her. “You understand?” She asked in genuine surprise.

Cirith met her gaze. “I'm half Lycavorian.” Cirith stated proudly. “Yes I understand. And I would do the same thing.”

Dysea felt a powerful warmth cascade through her at this news but she fought it down and turned to Tir'ut. “I know my sons Tir'ut and they will be coming after me. And I have learned a great deal of your father over these last months.”

Tir'ut shook his head. “My father is coming.” He stated unequivocally. “We only need to survive until he arrives.”

“Lynom!” Normya gasped. “We should contact Lynom! We are close enough now to do this without being detected. Iriral taught us much mother!”

Dysea's eyes grew wider. “Oh my Iriral?” She gasped beginning to reach out for her Bonded Dragon Sister.

“No... if you reach for your dragon in Mindvoice it will be like a beacon!” Cirith stated grabbing her arm once more. “Even an Immortal with no training will detect it!”

Dysea kept her shields clamped in place and nodded. She turned to Kr'nak and Osiri. “Will you help us?”

“That is not a question you need to ask.” Osiri answered immediately.

Dysea looked at her and then to Kr'nak. “Then I have to know why?” She asked.

Osiri looked at Kr'nak with adoring eyes before dropping her hands to her abdomen and rubbing it gently. She looked back to Dysea. “We want our child to grow up free.” She stated.

Dysea stepped closer to them now, surprise etched on her face. “You carry his... you carry Kr'nak's child?” She asked.

Osiri nodded with a bright smile as she pressed back against Kr'nak. “I am... I was a scientist Milady Dysea. I know enough to insure I do not become pregnant unless I want to. Kr'nak gave back to me something I never thought I would have again when Phy'iad killed my first husband and my children. This is what I need to insure our future. I... we want this child Milady. More than anything.”

Dysea looked at Kr'nak and saw him nod his head without a moment's hesitation. “I will do anything to see my son born! To see my Blessed Wife free” He stated. “And I will not allow Phy'iad to take that away from me. Command me Queen Dysea. Command me and I will follow you without question to achieve this goal.”

HARBINGER

Dutkne and Wayonn walked down the ramp first, Drey and the others following directly behind them. The buzz of work and machinery did not stop as they reached the bottom of the ramp, their eyes going to where the dark skinned elf female stood a few meters away. They could see nearly two dozen heavily armed men and women like the ones that had come onto the transport, and though their weapons were not pointed directly at them, they were within easy reach for well trained troops. And something told Dutkne these men and women were far more than well trained troops. All of them wore similar uniforms with crimson coloring down the outsides of their arms and legs. Dutkne knew without being told that these were the soldiers that Wayonn had told Devra about. The Durcunusaan. The Wolves of the Blood. The elite force that guarded the Lycavorian Royal family and all those they considered important to them.

They watched as the tall figure of the Lycavorian broke from the rank and stepped up to them. His helmet hid almost all of his features, crimson paint streaked down the sides of his helmet in angular design. His dark eyes were looking not at Dutkne and Wayonn but at the blue skinned Vanari security detachment of four females and two males. All of them were armed still and they stood around Devra in a loose formation that provided them excellent opportunity to respond to almost any threat.

“You were told no weapons would be allowed.” The Durcumusaan officer spoke gruffly to Dutkne, but his eyes remaining on the Vanari security detachment.

“They are members of Regent Devra’s Vanari Security Detachment.” Dutkne spoke calmly. “I will vouch for them.”

The officer cut his eyes back to Dutkne. “You will vouch for them?” He asked him indifferently. “What makes you think I care what you vouch for?”

Wayonn stepped forward slightly. “I am...”

The officer turned to him. “I know who you are Val’istar.” He said gruffly. He turned his head slightly until his eyes fell upon Lu’ria where she was standing. He saw her nod her head and he motioned with his hand. “Confiscate their weapons.” He barked out as he turned back.

“No!” Naesta barked bringing up her hand weapon as she moved closer to her mother. The rest of the Vanari detachment moved with blinding speed in forming a tight circle around Devra, Arduri and Naesta, their weapons coming up into ready positions.

Vanari Commandos were the finest of the Vanari Defense Forces. The finest trained and the most skilled; the strongest and the fastest. Even as they settled into stances that would allow them to protect their Regent from harm, the Durcumusaan troops had already moved. The Vanari suddenly found themselves surrounded by no less than ten Lycavorians that had moved with a speed unlike any they had witnessed, and their P190A3s were now leveled at them from less than twelve inches away. Devra’s eyes were wide at this incident, while Naesta and Arduri were shocked that the Lycavorians had gotten so close so quickly. Any firing now and they would all die, while taking perhaps only one or two of the Lycavorians with them. The Vanari were not as tough as they knew Lycavorians to be, and at this range they were at a decided and quite obvious disadvantage and they knew it.

Dutkne blinked several times himself, never having seen any of his kind move with such speed, and he turned slowly from where the officer was remaining in front of him with a very confident smile on his face.

“If you vouch for them... I suggest you inform them to lower their weapons.” The officer spoke calmly watching as Dutkne turned back to him. “I will not ask again.”

Wayonn turned now and looked at Devra. “Devra... order your people to lower their weapons!” He said firmly. “We are in no danger here!”

“No one disarms us!” Naesta barked. “We will decide if there is danger or not!”

“Naesta is right!” Arduri snapped. “We will protect our mother!”

“Protect her from what?” The new voice spoke loudly. “No one here has any intention of doing her harm. I believe you came to us.”

Dutkne and Wayonn smelled him first and they turned quickly as Androcles moved around from under the side on the MENKLA transport, his fingers tracing the smooth belly of the ship. He moved a few meters away from the ship and stopped with his hands clasped behind his back, looking at Dutkne and Wayonn intently. Dutkne and Wayonn were the only ones who noticed that Andro now wore brown contacts to hide his true eye color and Wayonn was struck by how much he looked like Resumar and his father. The resemblance was unnerving.

Without thinking about it, something that Dutkne would not even realize until many months later, he stepped away from the others and moved right up to Andro. Drey, Nirilo and Caia were the ones who took notice of this fact more than anyone and Caia’s hands gripped Drey’s arm tightly. Wayonn noticed their reaction and hid his small smile. Androcles was shielding heavily, allowing only a small portion of his aura to escape from around him, though Drey and Caia sensed something was awry. Nirilo had been among their people and worked with Dutkne enough to know his grandson very well and though he could not feel a Lycavorian aura as other wolves could, he also knew something was amiss when the Durcumusaan did nothing to stop Dutkne from moving.

“The Protectorate and the Vanari have a... tenuous relationship.” Dutkne spoke as Andro met his eyes. “We are not enemies... but nor are we allies. I ask... I ask that you allow them some leeway... Admiral.” He finished emphasizing the Admiral.

Andro’s eyes stared at him for a long moment. He could feel the power in this young man in front of him, he could feel the blood pulsing through his veins and oddly enough, it made him relax ever so slightly. Not in any sort of defensive manner, for Andro could tell this Dutkne and all of the Lycavorians now standing on the deck before them would side with them in any sort of confrontation. It was more an overall sense of calm that Dutkne exuded and in turn, passed on to him. Andro turned back to where the blue skinned Vanari were standing with their weapons up and surrounding the three females.

“I will allow them leeway when they lower their weapons.” He finally said. “Greeting me with weapons drawn is not the way to invoke my good nature. They are in no danger here.”

“So you say!” Naesta spat from where she stood.

Dutkne rolled his eyes and turned back to look at her his own patience with Naesta’s attitude wearing thin. Nirilo beat him to the punch though.

“Naesta... for once shut your mouth and be still!” Nirilo barked. “I grow tired of your inability to see beyond what our father has taught you!”

“I will not!” Naesta snapped. “You have been among them too long Nirilo! You are blind to the past!”

“I am not blind to the past! I simply do not choose to live in it!” Nirilo snarled at her. “Dutkne and the Protectorate have done nothing but help you... help all of us since you joined with us!”

“We can find Caliria on our own!” Naesta snapped.

“And you would have blundered somewhere you should not have been and gotten mother captured or killed. And Arduri and the others as well!” Nirilo popped.

“Naesta...” Arduri spoke softly. “Perhaps Nirilo is right.”

“Naesta... stand down.” Devra told her daughter. “I do not believe we are in any danger here.”

“Mother... how do we know that?” Naesta hissed. “Father has said they are cunning and just like the animals they can become! We should...”

“If I had wanted you dead or captured...” Andro spoke now moving closer to the group of Vanari. “It would already be done.”

“Hah!! We are not as helpless as you think!” Naesta snapped turning back to him.

“Yes... actually you are.” Andro spoke.

The combined trumpets of two dragons in the landing bay echoed painfully around the walls even as cavernous as it was. The snap and pop of Elynth and Majeir extending their wings out to their full extension was deafening as well. The sound caused everyone but those from the Union to cower and drop to the deck in real fear as first Elynth and then Majeir lowered their huge heads over the shoulders of the Durcunusaan that they had come up behind.

“Nubou!” Drey exclaimed as he pulled Caia close to him.

Devra’s eyes were wide in terror as she gripped Arduri’s arms where they had dropped to their knees on the deck. “By the Grace of the Four Prophets!” Devra almost screamed.

Elynth’s golden eyes and Majeir’s ruby orbs glittered in the light of the landing bay, giving both of them an extra fearsome appearance. When a dragon extended its wings out to their full span, it made them appear much larger than they may have been, and it was an extremely intimidating visage. Wayonn, who knew of the existence of dragons within the Union before coming here, even he was taken aback by their size and savage looking appearance now that he stood before them. The pure Lycavorians from the Protectorate, while better able to control the fear they felt, still moved closer together amongst themselves. Naesta and Arduri were holding their weapons on Elynth, their eyes wide as their hearts raced in fear. Even Dutkne was frozen in his spot, his dark eyes wide as he looked on.

“Your weapons will not harm us.” Andro’s voice stated.

Naesta spun around, her hand wrapped around the small Pulse Blaster as she attempted to bring it to bear on Andro’s head. His right hand snapped out with lightning like speed and he slapped the weapon from her grasp before she was able to complete her turn. One of the male Vanari Commandos began to bring his smaller Pulse rifle up but Andro’s right hand snapped out again and his closed fist smashed across the man’s jaw with enough force to spin him around and send him to the deck unconscious. Arduri was turning now, bringing her own pulse weapon up and she saw the light blue shimmer around this Lycavorian's body. A flash from the side and she saw a mane of glittering white hair zip past her with a similar shield around her figure. It was the strange dark skinned female with white hair she had seen standing a short distance away. Arduri, Naesta and Devra could only watch in shock as Lu'ria used her inbred elven speed, now augmented by her wolf blood, to move in front of a Vanari commando. The light blue shield around her flared briefly as she slapped away the barrel of the pulse rifle and impossibly used the body of the commando to walk up the front of his chest. Just before she used her legs to push off his shoulders and flip a hundred and eighty degrees backwards, the toe of her combat boot connected with his jaw and snapped his head back viciously. The blow carried enough power in it to physically lift him off the deck and drop him back down to the hard surface completely dazed and only half conscious. As Arduri began to bring her weapon up Lu'ria's hand snapped out, now filled with a gleaming Drow Glaive. The two blades were four inches long from the base and the tip of one end of that glaive pressed to her throat.

"I wouldn't." Lu'ria stated calmly.

"ENOUGH!" Devra screamed as she stepped away from Arduri and looked at Andro as he tossed a Vanari pulse rifle to the deck. Devra's lips snapped shut as Elynth stepped closer to her and breathed heavily through her nostrils, the sound very nearly a growl. "We surrender to you! Do not hurt my people!" She turned on Wayonn with evil green eyes. "You lied to us Wayonn!" She snarled. "Curse you... you have led us into a trap!"

Nirilo stepped forward. "Mother that is not..."

"This is no trap." Andro's deep voice sounded from behind her. Devra turned around quickly to see him standing right in front of her. She watched as he held out his hand and gasped as Naesta's pulse hand weapon leaped into his grip from six meters away. Andro flipped it around in his hand so that the grip was facing her. "I just do not care for weapons that are pointed at me when I have made no threatening actions. I imagine you would feel the same if our roles were reversed?"

Devra met his dark eyes intently. There was something about this young man, something that she could not place her finger on. He was far too young to be an Admiral in any fleet that she knew existed, yet he spoke with the words of someone who had great wisdom and inner peace. Devra looked down at how he held the weapon out to her and she reached up slowly to curl her fingers around the grip. That tightness of fear she had felt in her gut only moments ago was slowly drifting away. "Yes... yes I suppose I would." She said softly.

"Lieutenant?" Andro barked without taking his eyes off her.

"Milord!" The officer responded before thinking. He shook his head at his stupid mistake and cursed under his breath. "Sir?"

"Have our Hadarian medic inspect our guests for injuries." Andro said with a smile at the man's self admonishing tone of disgust at his slip of the tongue.

Devra continued to stare at him. "You are no Admiral." She stated confidently. "I have been around enough of those pompous fools to know the difference. You do not have... you do not have that sense of superiority about you."

"Actually... Admiral is my military rank." Androcles told her.

Devra glanced quickly at where Elynth still stood ready to spring into action to defend her Bonded Brother. She looked back to Andro and it all clicked into place. "You are him." She spoke softly her eyes wide.

Andro's eyes narrowed in confusion. "Him?"

"The one we saw in the transmission." Devra spoke trying to keep her voice low so that no one heard her speak even with their heightened wolf ears. "You... you are the Crown Prince. You are his son!"

Andro looked at Dutkne as he came up beside them. "We intercepted some of your more recent Netnews feeds before we left. One of them... one of them was when you destroyed some clinic in Sparta." He said just as softly. "You were... you were riding that beast and..."

Beast! Elynth exclaimed as she moved closer. I am no beast little man!

Dutkne's eyes grew wide as he stepped back, all of the Lycavorians from the Protectorate able to clearly hear Elynth's words. All of them would be considered low Tier Six Mindvoicers in the Lycavorian Union since the Protectorate had never stopped using this ability. "He... he understood me?" Dutkne gasped.

He? Do I sound like a male to you fool? Andro my brother... who are these Lycavorians that they can not tell the difference between a male and female? And yes... I understood you! I am not as unintelligent as you seem to be! Elynth demanded.

“Sibfla!” Drey spoke from where he stood next to Caia staring at Elynth. Caia was barely able to hold in the snicker of humor along with several of the Protectorate troops that had come with them.

Andro couldn't help but smile as he looked at Dutkne. He stepped away from Devra and moved over under Elynth's head as she lowered it down. His arm reached up and he slid it along the side of her muzzle. “This is... this is Elynth.” He said. “She is my Bonded Dragon Sister, and yes... she understood you Dutkne.” Andro saw Lu'ria still standing with her blade to Arduri's throat and the two women staring at each other. “Ilythiiri Tessai... there is no danger here.”

Lu'ria stared at Arduri's stunning green eyes for a few moments longer before she deftly pulled back the glaive and it disappeared into a hidden sheath at the small of her back. She bowed her head slightly, blinked her amber eyes and using her newly discovered TK power leaped up and back nearly seven meters to land catlike next to Majeir. As Majeir lowered her head, Lu'ria pressed her cheek to her snout and wrapped as much of her arms around Majeir's head as she could. It looked almost comical, but they got the message. Lu'ria turned back to face the group as well.

“And this is Majeir.” She said with warmth as Majeir closed her ruby eyes and brushed her snout against the back of Lu'ria's shoulder.

Wayonn moved forward from where he had stood allowing things to play out. “Perhaps it would be better if we did not hide what we are from each other any longer Andro. Truth is our tool now.” He spoke gently. “Dutkne and I know who you are, reveal it to the rest of us so that we can move forward past this point before someone ends up getting hurt! I did not come all this way for a conflict!”

Caia looked at Wayonn. “Grandfather... what are you talking about?” She asked him. “If he is not an Admiral in the Lycavorian Union... then who is he?”

Wayonn continued to stare at him. “Andro?”

Andro met his gaze for a moment longer and then turned to Dutkne. He stepped away from Devra and slowly nodded his head. “It is what we have come here for.” He stated. “What we have waited many years for.”

Wayonn smiled to himself when Andro simply turned to Lu'ria. “Ilythiiri Tessai... take them out.” He stated.

Wayonn clasped his hands together in knowing retrospect. He was much stronger than Wayonn had first thought, much stronger than Martin had led him to think. Even then he had been protecting his son from a potential threat Wayonn realized. A son that did not need as much protection as his father thought, considering the untapped ability Wayonn felt within him. He had acted without question after Dutkne's words, and this only served to confirm for Wayonn what Dutkne's role would be moving into the future. He watched as the dark skinned elf female, a Drow Wayonn knew them to be called, moved right up in front of him and reached up to his face. Wayonn inhaled deeply and he could smell the Drow's honey melon scent deeply imbedded in Andro's blood, mixed in with the dominant scent of sugar plums and spice. In her blood he could detect the heavy scent of lavender and pines. He could feel the tendrils of Mindvoice connecting the two of them and three others together, one of them on this very ship somewhere. They were unbreakable strands within the fabric of Mindvoice, much like those he felt from Martin and his connection to his Queens. He watched as Lu'ria delicately used her index finger to remove first his left and then his right contact, exposing his azure blue eyes for everyone to see. Wayonn heard Caia and several of the female members of the Protectorate gasp after he blinked several times and then they were clear and focused. Wayonn stepped closer to him now, coming up beside Devra.

“Our Vanari friends will not be able to feel it Androcles.” Wayonn said. “But we will... now show us who you are boy!”

“Androcles?” Caia hissed in shock. “Grandfather... are you...”

“It is not something my father looks upon as appropriate Val'istar.” Andro told him. “We are not better than those who follow us. He has taught this to me... to all of my brothers and sisters since we were babies.”

Wayonn nodded. “I know this Androcles. But it will allow us all to see that we have not come here to this new area of space for nothing. That our hopes for the future still live on brightly, and that our people are once and for all finally reunited.”

Andro glanced at Dutkne quickly before lowering his Mindvoice shields almost entirely and allowing his aura to cascade outward so that every Lycavorian nearby could feel it. Devra turned quickly as first Dutkne and then every member of the Protectorate dropped to one knee and bowed their heads. She looked at Arduri and Naesta as they came up to her wide eyed as well and Wayonn basked in the aura of the direct descendant of his dearest friend and the man he had sworn to himself would live on in his descendants.

Wayonn didn't hesitate and he crossed the few meters to stand in front of Andro with a smile. He reached out and gripped Andro's shoulders. "You don't know how long I have waited for this day Androcles." He said softly. "And when I stand before your father, all I have worked for these past millennia will come together. Our people will be whole once more... the first time since the Black Day that we will be united again and the five Bloodlines will be one once more."

Andro drew Lu'ria close to him as he looked at Dutkne once more. "Five Bloodlines?" Andro asked.

Wayonn smiled and squeezed his shoulders again. "You have felt it within you... and I will fill in the unanswered questions... but now... where is Helen? Where is the First Oracle?"

Andro looked at him oddly. "She waits for us in the conference room." He answered. "Why?"

"Because it is time she realized her own bloodline." Wayonn spoke with a warm smile. "And then my family will be whole once more as well."

Andro's head tilted to the side. "Your family?" He asked.

Wayonn nodded his head. "Oh yes... you see... Helen... Dustha... whatever you wish to call her... she is of my bloodline. She is my son Canth's great granddaughter. She is of my blood Androcles." Wayonn spoke proudly.

PHY'AD'S COMMAND SHIP

[...is insane brother!] Lynom's voice filled the heads of Dysea, Normya, Tir'ut and Cirith as they sat in the cell.

[Can you do it Lynom?] Tir'ut asked.

[Yes... but father will have our heads if we fail!] Lynom replied. [It is too much of a risk Darthirii Ilhar Dysea. You should have left before. You should get off the ship now!]

[If what you and Tir'ut believe Lynom, if what I know of my children is accurate, your father and my children will not be far behind us. Perhaps twelve hours.] Dysea answered. [And no doubt they will be coming in ready to do battle.]

[This I do not doubt.] Lynom answered. [It is doable Darthirii Ilhar, but not without great risk. I must think of As'hia as well now.]

[We will do it.] The gentle female voice echoed within the highly shielded connection. Cirith knew as Dysea did, that no Immortal could detect their conversation on the level they were speaking. She was amazed at the ease with which Dysea manipulated the tremors of Mindvoice in order to do this. Her strength was rapidly returning due to her elf and wolf genes no doubt. Normya and Cha'talla's son Tir'ut were also incredibly skilled Mindvoicers, and they shared a unique connection which nearly tripled their individual power. Tir'ut's brother, this Lynom, obviously was of similar strength and the hybrid female she sensed within the shielded connection appeared to be growing in ability even while they spoke.

[As'hia we...] Lynom began to speak.

[We will do this Lynom my love.] The voice answered. Her reply caused Tir'ut to look at Normya and Dysea to smile.

[Phraktos belbau uns'aa z'ress!] Lynom muttered softly. [Brother... we will begin to make our way back to the main Immortal base. We have moved a hundred and sixty kilometers away but with As'hia leading us we can be back within six hours after you arrive. There is a cave two kilometers west of the southern entrance to the base. It is secluded and we can meet there.] (Gods give me strength)

[I told you I was a handful!] As'hia exclaimed brightly, her voice teeming with love and happiness. [And you are stuck with me now! Forever!]

Tir'ut nodded his head with another smile and looked at Kr'nak. "There is a cave two kilometers west of the southern entrance. Do you know it?"

Kr'nak nodded immediately. "Yes. It sits a hundred meters above the valley floor. It is a good vantage point to watch the entrance and none of Phy'iad's people will venture out to it."

"Why?" Dysea asked.

Kr'nak could not meet her eyes. "They... they will be otherwise involved Lady Dysea." He answered distastefully.

Tir'ut nodded. [We will meet you there Lynom.]

[Then we will pack our equipment and begin moving. We will see you shortly.] Lynom answered and then he and As'hia left the connection.

"Will you be able to communicate with Cha'talla when he arrives?" Kr'nak asked Tir'ut.

"The moment they enter the system." He answered.

"You must show no mercy Tir'ut, son of Cha'talla." Kr'nak spoke somberly. "You must tell your father this. I will direct those men who feel as I do to gather the elf females into one location and remain there when the attack begins. Your mother... she has... she has truly made this serum you speak of?"

Tir'ut nodded his head. "Our tribe has many happy Immortal and elf marriages." He said. "Once my mother discovered what it was that caused this within our males, they lined up for three days to get the serum. If your heart is true Kr'nak... you can start a new life with our tribe."

Kr'nak looked at Osiri and saw the love written on her face and he nodded without a moment's hesitation. "No doubt your father and the Union will have a multi-pronged attack planned. I will gather what information I can before you meet with your brother and you can pass this to your father when he arrives. We are supposed to make contact with the Kavalian scum within twelve hours of arriving. It is an open communication on an Immortal channel for some reason and Phy'iad already has the men on the base preparing the main control room."

"Open communication?" Cirith asked. "Why would they request that?"

"I would imagine to keep their involvement secret for as long as possible." Kr'nak said. "No doubt Union Communications Experts are scanning every known Kavalian frequency to try and figure out what is going on."

"But if it is intercepted... this would only indict Phy'iad." Dysea said.

"He does not care." Kr'nak answered. "As soon as the communication is complete, we will begin breaking down the base to depart." He looked at Tir'ut. "That is why you must show no mercy Tir'ut. These men... and I count myself among them... they are a blight upon the honor of what our people once held dear. They can not be allowed to escape."

"Kr'nak... you are not like them!" Osiri protested taking his hand. "Stop thinking like that."

"She is right you know." Dysea told him. "After all this time has passed and knowing what Osiri must endure and still you love her... that tells me you are not like those others Kr'nak."

"I once was Lady Dysea." Kr'nak spoke honestly.

"And as my father is fond of saying, once you step through that door of change, whatever happened in the past remains in the past." Normya spoke proudly. "And your future begins with each step forward that you make."

Kr'nak looked at each of them and finally his eyes settled on where Lancy squatted next to Cirith. The grizzled vampire commando nodded his head. "I have killed far more innocents than you ever will Immortal." Lancy spoke. "If I can change... then there is hope of redemption for anyone."

Osiri moved closer to Dysea and lifted the medical scanner once more, passing it over her body. She nodded her head after a few seconds. "Your healing system has purged the drugs that were affecting your body temperature and keeping you unconscious... but the Lilzin will need several more hours to wear off completely. I do not recommend shifting and most certainly do not let Phy'iad or any of his men sense that you have this ability back or that you can Mindvoice again."

"Will he notice that the inhibitor is gone?" Cirith asked with concern in her voice that caused Dysea to look at her.

Osiri shook her head. "He would not know what to look for either way." She said. "I may be his sex slave... but I am by no means as stupid as he seems to think. He knows what the Static Inhibitor does, but not how."

"Osiri... I..." Dysea began.

Osiri moved closer to her and held out her hand, unfurling her palm. Dysea looked at the small yellow pill. "Irixtol." She said softly. "It is not as refined as what this Esther has designed but it will do the same thing. Unlike her creation however, it will not work on those who are already infected."

Dysea took the pill without hesitation and popped it into her mouth. "We will succeed." She said finally. "I promise you this... we will succeed and your child will be born free."

HARBINGER ENROUTE TO EARTH

Helen had stood up from the massive table in the HARBINGER'S main conference room when Andro led them in. She hated meeting others for the first time in such surroundings like those in the landing bay and that is why she had chosen to come here and wait. It was a quirk of hers that Martin and the others had quickly discovered and learned to get around through the years. She had to admit to herself that Martin, his Queens and Gorgo had learned how to cater to her without it seeming like they were. They had also learned how to manipulate her almost as well as she manipulated them she thought with a smile. They would never be as good as she was however, something that Helen found much easier once she and Arzoal bonded together. From the day they had first met, there had been something between them. Helen was the First Oracle of the Lycavorian people and Arzoal the Dragon Elder Mother. Throughout the entire Union these two positions and the females that held them were revered by all, no matter their species. After that day in Sparta when Martin had defeated his brother and Gorgo had truly returned to them, it seemed that no matter where they traveled, Arzoal and Helen ended up with each other. It reached a point after a few years where one would not travel without the other. With the ships that Martin had built for the dragons, it was a simple matter for Arzoal to request a ship to take her somewhere. As the Elder Mother of the Dragon Species, she would always be shuttling back and forth to Apo Prime and to Earth, and when she did they always seemed to end up together. When Helen wanted to go somewhere it was no different, and soon they were visiting different planets and meeting people together. Their friendship grew, and as it did so did their bond; and soon they could deny it any no longer. There were many things they shared with each other that no one else knew about them. There were secrets that Helen held inside her heart about her Bonded Sister, and there similar secrets that Arzoal held about Helen. Secrets that would shock even Martin Leonidas if he knew, though Helen had a sense that the King she served so willingly knew far more than he let on to anyone but that infernal cyborg Avi and his son.

Helen had watched them walk in while returning her mug of tea to the massive table top, seeing the strange blue skinned male and females and the healthy looking Lycavorians that wafted of tradition and culture and honor. She could feel the touch of Androcles's aura upon them, for she had felt it even here, nine decks above the landing bay when he lowered those powerful shields around his aura. The tall, deeply tanned young man she knew as Dutkne that entered just behind Andro and Lu'ria seemed vaguely familiar for some reason she could not place. Andro had passed to her the images of everyone from the landing bay to her within Mindvoice almost without thinking. The next male and young female she knew immediately were mated and the female was of the same lineage of the first young man Dutkne, so she was his sister. The young woman's mate was a handsome young wolf who just by his scent Helen could tell worshiped the ground upon which his wife and mate walked. Helen could barely keep the joyous feelings from overtaking her as she felt the vibrations of excellent Mindvoice control and the natural instincts of their people burning deeply within these young people.

When he entered the room Helen stiffened considerably as she looked at him. His face... his eyes... they were so very familiar to her. His almond spice scent tickled her nose and Helen found herself rapidly trying to determine where she had met him before. She was over four thousand three hundred years old and if he seemed familiar to her then she should know who he was. She watched his eyes sweep across the room and finally come to settle on her. She then watched him cut behind where Andro stood, and when Andro did nothing to stop him or the young man Dutkne and woman when he followed, Helen knew these men and women were no threat. She blinked several times as the came to stand in front of her, much taller than her and close up the lines of age etched deeply in his face. Yet his features... and those of the young Dutkne and his sister... they were so very familiar. Their scents drifted to her as well, Dutkne's a warm Ambrosia spice scent and the young woman an enticing Gardenia Spice.

Wayonn's heart was racing as it hadn't raced since the birth of his first child with his beautiful wolf mate so long ago. He stood in front of Helen and it was easy for him to see the face of his son. She had his eyes, so very bright and intelligent. It appeared that Canth's eyes were the one thing that had been passed to all of his descendants as both Dutkne and Caia bore his eyes along with their sister.

"I can not... I can not put into words what it means to finally see you standing in front of me Dustha." Wayonn spoke softly.

Helen's eyes were confused as she glanced between him, Dutkne and Caia. "I... I feel as if I should know you... but I have never met you. Any of you." Helen said.

"But we have spoken. Many times through the years." Wayonn said with a smile.

Helen's eyes grew a little wider. "You must be mistaken." She said. "I am not one to ever forget a face..."

"Wayonn. I am Wayonn. And this is Dutkne and Caia." He told her.

Helen stared at him for a long moment. "You are the Pralor." She stated. "That much I can sense from you. That is easy enough to determine... but I have never met you."

Wayonn reached down and took her hands. "It is I who has been communicating with you all of these years Helen, using the face and voice of Canth because that is who made you most comfortable."

"You!" Helen gasped pulling her hands away. "You must think me a fool. How would... how would you know this?"

"I would know... I would know because Canth... Canth was my son." He stated looking at her and seeing her eyes grow wider. "He was my youngest son."

"Your... your son!" She gasped.

Wayonn nodded and motioned to Dutkne and Caia. "Yes. This is Dutkne and his sister Caia. Carana, who is Caia's twin, is not with us right now. They are Canth's grandchildren. Two of his three remaining descendants. My descendants. My grandchildren." He turned back to look at her. "We have waited many years to discover the last member of our family. We have known whom she is; we have just not been able to come forward until now."

"What are... what are you saying?" Helen gasped.

Wayonn smiled. "You are that third descendant Dustha." He stated. "You are my son's third generation granddaughter."

Helen's heart was now beating out of control and she staggered back slightly against the table. "That's... that's not possible." She gasped. "Canth... that's not possible."

Wayonn moved closer and took her hands once more. "But it is possible... and it is the truth." He stated confidently. "Canth's mate, her name was Dalena, she was believed killed at the beginning of the Black Day. Killed in the bombardment of the capital on that first day. He could not find her body or the bodies of his children at their home and he searched for three days among the rubble. When the Coven began landing troops he had to stop searching for them or be killed himself. He felt he abandoned them and that is why he never took another mate the rest of his life. Dalena did perish on Lycavore as they were executing our people in the streets over the next week but she died saving their youngest children. A boy and girl. She gave them to a family she didn't even know, that were making their way into the mountains. They were later picked up by High Coven patrols, but by then the executions had stopped and they were enslaved like the rest of our people." Dutkne reached out and placed his hand on Wayonn's shoulder.

"Grandfather you do not..."

"Yes I do!" Wayonn hissed softly. "Yes I do! I need to speak it! I have held it in for far too long Dutkne! And she needs to know! She needs to know where she comes from for it is a question she has asked all of her life!" He turned back to Helen who had a look of astonishment on her face. "Isn't it Helen?"

"How... how do you know that?" Helen gasped.

"My granddaughter died in the first year." Wayonn spoke. "Leftover affects of the poison missiles that the Coven used. My grandson lived on. He married while enslaved and had three children. The oldest was a boy. When the Coven burned the School of the Oracles and ordered all of them killed, that boy and his mate, who were both students at one of the Academies, they escaped into The Wilds. You are their only child."

Helen shook her head. "That can't be!" She said. "I... I spoke to Canth! I was the one who told him the Spartan people on Earth were..."

Wayonn nodded. "The perfect fit for our people." He said. "Yes I know. It is one of the things I saw before Canth passed all he was to you during the Tuarvomir." Wayonn smiled brightly at her expression when he said that and he nodded. "Yes... how many people know that Dustha? What are there... perhaps a hundred... perhaps a hundred that know it was Canth who conducted the Tuarvomir with you that day. How could I know that if what I am telling you is a lie? And tell me... who recognized it first?"

Helen's dark eyes grew even wider. "Deia?" She gasped.

Wayonn nodded. "The sister of Queen Eliani. She recognized it for what it was for she had seen it before. My son thought his family dead Dustha... he had no reason to suspect that you were of his blood when you spoke with him. By that time he had committed himself to making sure those Oracles that had survived the Purge remained alive and in hiding, and planning the rebellion with Resumar."

"How... how do you know all this?" Helen asked shaking her head.

"That is a question I would like an answer to as well." Andro spoke moving further into the room while holding Lu'ria's hand. "Union... Union history says that all records that were kept during that period of the rebellion were destroyed by the Coven when they assassinated my great grandfather."

Wayonn nodded. "Lycavorian records were destroyed." He said. "Not the records kept by the High Coven."

"The Coven?" Helen gasped.

Wayonn nodded. "Yes. The Coven kept detailed files on anyone of importance within our society and of many events that took place. It is how I know of my grandchildren and your mother and father Dustha."

"And how would you have obtained these records if you have never been to this quadrant of space before?" Andro asked.

Wayonn met his eyes. "I have never said I haven't been here before. I said I haven't been inside the Union. If I had entered Union space you would have detected me before the time was right Dustha."

"My name is Helen!" She snapped pulling away from him now. "You expect me... us to believe you got these records by just walking up to some Coven officer and taking them?"

Wayonn shook his head. "I never said that either." He stated. "I received them roughly thirty five hundred years ago. I received them from the descendant of the Lycavorian Fifth Ruling Bloodline."

"That is a lie!" Helen snapped. "You..."

"No Feravomir." Andro spoke stepping forward next to Dutkne and looking at her. "He... he speaks of Cirith. Her father Valin."

"What?" Helen stammered.

Andro looked at Wayonn. "Don't you?"

Wayonn smiled warmly. "Your insight is just as keen as your father's my boy." He said with a nod. "Yes... Valin is the one who gave me the records. I was able to track him down using the DNA sequences of the Five Bloodlines that we have in the Protectorate medical labs." Wayonn looked back to Helen. "I can prove it to you Dus... Helen. Do you remember what I said to you after Sadi left that day in your garden? Do you remember my words to you?"

"How... how do you know that?" Helen stammered her eyes wide.

"It is beginning." She said softly.

We knew this day would come eventually. The male voice spoke in reply inside her mind like the whispering of the winds through the pines.

"Will it be enough Canth?" She asked softly.

Only time will tell Dustha. Only time will tell. The male voice filled her head as she looked up into the sky at the bright sunshine. It is a start however. Androcles is very much like his father and grandfather... but he is more like Resumar than either of them and that is our advantage. He has taken the best of all three and blended them into one person Dustha. We can not hope to stop what is coming... but it will be the defining moment for all of them. Androcles especially. We must trust in what you and his parents have taught him and all their children. What you continue to teach them. You have accomplished far more than even I could have dreamed in teaching both of them Dustha. Trust in that training and be there for them when they come to you for council. And they will come to you Dustha.

“I thought we would have more time.” Helen said.

The first son’s existence has changed events. Canth spoke. We must adapt and respond or all will be lost.

“I hope you are right.” Helen said. “I hope you are right.”

Helen shook her head and looked at him as he projected the words from that conversation into her mind. Words that only she and he could have known. Her dark eyes blinked several times and became moist as the truth of what he was saying began to wash over her like the warm spray from a sun shower. Those eyes cut to Dutkne who stood there looking at her with a smile. Caia had tears rolling down her cheeks as she squeezed her brother’s arm. And then Wayonn stepped forward and wrapped his arms around her and pulled her into his powerful embrace.

Helen whimpered loudly as the vibrations of truth rumbled through her and one of those secrets that only her Bonded Sister knew came true. As her arms slowly wrapped around Wayonn’s waist and Dutkne and Caia stepped closer to press their bodies against them, Helen surrendered to the one feeling she had always lacked and never thought she would experience. The one sensation that had always escaped her.

The feeling of blood and family.

CURILA 6

The bed had not lasted long at all; especially not after Aricia joined them. By that time, Anja was beyond caring about anything. By the time Aricia had gotten her clothes off, Anja was impaled on Martin’s beautiful twelve inch cock and coming continuously. There was nothing she could do to stop it, not that she would have. Every single nerve in her body was screaming out in rapturous abandon, her pleasure receptors working in overload. Each glorious stroke of his dominating shaft and she clawed at his shoulders and back as a kaleidoscope of illuminating colors and agonizing pleasure seared her very being. It was so very passionate, so exquisitely breathtaking. His minty scent permeated her senses, filling every crevice of her mind, and even though she barely had the ability to draw a breath between her howls of delight nothing else mattered to her in the least. She wanted nothing more than to be wrapped around Martin’s large chiseled body for the rest of her life, yet even though she could not deny the supreme pleasure she was experiencing, Anja had control. She had not lost her cognitive reasoning, her mind was just as sharp as it was before, only now it was processing the pleasure every thrust of his cock made. It was registering every stroke of her skin by his fingers, every nibble of his dual wolf fangs, it was collecting all of this information and returning it to her brain and body as the most inconceivable vibrations of pleasure Anja ever believed could exist. When she felt the burning of Aricia’s lips upon the flesh of her neck, the press of her firm breasts against her back, Anja Leonidas howled long and loud.

It hadn’t ended there.

As she shuddered almost violently in an unearthly orgasm, while her mate filled her to overflowing with his essence and seed, the tremors didn’t die. They only grew stronger and when Martin kissed her as the last of his seed filled her womb, Anja shivered in explosive bliss as she was rocked by another orgasm even more powerful than the last few. Then the sweet lavender and coca scent of their beautiful raven haired mate caught their senses. As her sizzling azure eyes told them she was ready... the pleasure began anew. Within moments they had Aricia joining in their howls of enchantment as their lips and tongues explored every contour of her body, rediscovering familiar flesh as if it was the first time. They lavished the pink scars of her recent wounds with soft, butterfly kisses, Martin paying extra attention to them for he deemed them his fault.

Anja didn’t know how long they had pleased each other, as she had lost all track of time. All she knew now was that her deliciously sore petite figure was molded to Martin’s left side while Aricia’s svelte muscular form was molded to his right. The fingers of their hands danced lightly across his rippled abdomen, delighting them as they saw the clenching of his stomach muscles and the control over his body that they had. Anja knew she had not lasted as long as Aricia, but given the fact that he had not lowered his shields back into place and she still basked in the brilliance of his unshielded aura, Anja doubted he would ever use them again. It took her many minutes to focus and regain the clarity under the dominance of his aura, but Aricia had helped her without hesitation and soon they were both laying with their heads on his chest simply listening to him breath as the aftermath of their encounter strummed through them.

“Dysea and I...” Aricia whispered to her as she entwined her fingers with Anja’s. “We always hoped that one day you and For’mya would be able to feel what we feel when he takes us. It is divine isn’t it?”

Anja smiled brightly as she tightened their finger grip. “Divine doesn’t begin to cover it.” She said blissfully. “Will... will it be like that every time?” Anja asked wistfully.

Aricia nodded with a seductive grin. “Every time.” She answered softly.

Anja rolled her eyes and dropped her head to his chest, her Persian red haired wild and unkempt. “Carians... I will need to start working out again.” She said gleefully.

“You two can stop talking like I’m not here now.” Martin’s voice grumbled. “Given our current position that seems kind of ridiculous don’t you think?” Anja lifted her head and looked at his face just as she and Aricia brought their fists down on his granite like abdomen as hard as they could. “Owwww!” Martin barked at the sharp pain, sitting up quickly and holding his stomach while Aricia and Anja sat up as well heedless that they were both quite naked. “What the hell was that for?”

“For almost dying on us you nubous rock head rensibfla!” Anja barked right back.

“I didn’t almost die!” Martin snapped.

“If Filrian and Yuriko hadn’t saved your tight ass, you would be!” Anja barked right back. “Were you crazy or something? You should have told us this is what you were planning!”

“I didn’t make the decision to do it until the last second!” Martin said pulling himself up off the floor, also heedless of the fact that he too was completely naked. “We had spoken of doing this before! All of us!”

Anja and Aricia moved closer together as they watched him. One set of azure blue eyes and one set or jade green eyes watched him get to his feet, both of them shuddering with renewed desire. No matter how many times either of them saw him naked, no matter how many times he made love to them with passion and love, gazing upon his chiseled body never ceased to make their own wolf blood churn in need. He was the largest man either of them had ever taken into their bodies, the largest man any of them had ever had in their lives, yet for all his size and stamina he was the most skilled and gentle lover they knew. He could turn all of them to putty just by having his huge tool buried inside them and flexing it while his hands explored their flesh and his lips dotted their skin with kisses and nibbles. Of course... neither Aricia or Anja had many experiences to compare to him. Aricia much less so than Anja for other than Martin, only that barbaric animal Joric had ever partaken of her womanly delights and that had been far from mutual, but neither of them would have it any other way. Of all Martin’s Queens, Bella was the most experienced in terms of partners she’d had, but even she couldn’t imagine herself with any other now. Between Dysea and For’mya, there had been only five men who had shared their beds in their combined lifetimes, three for Dysea and two for For’mya. None of them compared to Martin in the least.

“I didn’t have time to tell you before I did it!” He spoke forcefully. “The Kavalians were closing in around us! They would have overwhelmed our position before Fache got there! I had to do something!”

Anja became serious then and looked at his face. “Lover... do you know what you did to us?” She asked. “Do you have any idea how it affected us?” Martin turned and looked at her with his dark brown eyes, eyes that all of them could stare into for hours and never tire of what they saw, full of questions and concern for them. “Marty... it was like a piece of our souls were just ripped away in that instant. I... when... when you shut us out Martin, I felt it on Hadaria. I felt it like I had been right next to you and Aricia when it happen.” Anja said softly.

“I didn’t mean... I didn’t mean for it to happen as it did.” Martin said. “Once I got up to Yuriko’s ship I was going to touch all of you immediately. I wouldn’t do this and leave you not knowing... none of you! When I found... when I found I could not touch Melda Min and Kinsoaurgai I panicked. When I saw those two black... I thought I had lost them.”

Aricia held out her hand for him and he didn’t hesitate. He returned to the floor next to them and both Aricia and Anja pressed their bodies close to him as his arms went around their waists and held them in a near crushing grip.

“You concentrated so hard Beloved... you concentrated so hard that you cut yourself off from Anja, Bella and I.” Aricia said softly. “We couldn’t feel you... couldn’t sense you. It was like... it was like you were dead.” She pulled her head back and looked at him. “How... how did Andro know? Where... where did you learn to erect shields so powerful?”

Anja pulled her face back and looked at him as well now. “I’ve never felt... in all the years we have been together Lover, I’ve never felt shields like you had up.”

“It was... it was something Torma and I did several months ago.” Martin told them. “Sort of a preprogrammed message to Andro and Elynth. We had made them for all of our family and they would activate when we raised our new shields. I never... I never intended for any of this to happen. For some reason only the one to Andro and Elynth got out. I think maybe the one to Deia as well. I can’t remember now.” Martin looked at Anja. “How did you get here?”

Anja stroked his cheek lovingly. “Yuriko contacted me on the SPIRIT.” She said.

“Andro touched me in the hospital.” Aricia said. “He showed me what he knew and then he gave me medicine to fake my death as well.”

Martin looked at her wide eyed. “Why?”

“We are anomes Beloved.” Aricia told him reaching up to touch her cheek. “If you were truly... if you were truly gone... I would have followed within a short time. He knew you were alive and even though my mind thought otherwise, my body would have known you were still alive and it would have been very hard to explain why I was not reacting as history tells us anomes react to the death of their soulmate.”

“And the shields you erected?” Anja asked.

“Something we learned from Avi.” Martin told them.

“Avi?” Aricia gasped.

Martin nodded. “He was Sumar’s constant companion... aside from Wayonn that is. He stumbled across several programs in his central data core modules. Teaching programs. He brought them to me when he discovered them and between the three of us we determined they were core teaching elements of a system that Sumar had been designing to teach my grandfather when he got old enough. Apparently he never finished them, but there was enough for Torma and I to learn how to erect shields based on the electrical impulses of our brains. These skills are like a modulating frequency shift for Mindvoice.”

“Lover... is what... that wall... it was this Xaxon?” Anja asked softly.

Martin nodded. “The blackness... the emptiness. I don’t know why he released Melda Min, but For'mya is not dead. I would know if she was. We all would. He is... he is keeping her from me.”

“She was... she was with Deia at the Senate Building Martin.” Anja said as he looked at her evenly. “The Kavalians... the Kavalians brought the building down. Hundreds are dead. They are still trying to recover all of the...”

Martin shook his head. “She is not dead and neither is Deia.” He stated. “Deia is weak... very weak... but she is too strong to die like that.”

“Is Kinsoargai... is she injured perhaps Beloved?” Aricia asked.

“I don’t know.” He answered in a whisper dropping his head to Anja’s shoulder.

Anja reached up to stroke his long black hair. “You need... you need rest Martin.” She said. “You need normal sleep and then food.”

Martin pulled both of them tighter. “Don’t... I don’t want you to leave.” He said softly.

“We have no intention of leaving Beloved.” Aricia whispered. “Not now...”

“Not ever...” Anja finished.

HARBINGER

Andro stood by the large monitor on the wall watching on the screen as Wayonn, Caia and Helen walked along one of the interior landing bay decks of the HARBINGER. He could see Helen walking between them and they were all holding hands. The walkway was high up near the ceiling and circled the entire length of the landing bay below and many of the crew used it to run on or to simply come and chat when it was quiet. There were several sets of benches set up along the walkway for just this purpose.

“I’ve never seen him so animated.” Dutkne’s voice echoed softly next to him and Andro turned to look at him. “She is in no danger Androcles.”

“Her being in danger is something that never crossed my mind.” Andro spoke. He turned back to the monitor. “She has been like a grandmother to me... to all of my siblings for as long as we can remember. Yet in all that time... there was always a sadness within her that we could sense.” Andro smiled. “I don’t feel that from her anymore.”

“That’s good.” Dutkne said.

Andro turned fully and looked at him evenly. “Would you care to explain why I feel as if I already know you? Why I already trust you to the extent that I do?”

Dutkne rolled his eyes. “My grandfather would say it is all in the blood.” He said. “He was Sumar’s First Oracle and best friend. Canth was Resumar’s; my Aunt there was meant for your grandfather and instead became your father’s closest confidant in many ways. It has to do with our Pralor blood and our roles. It’s all been pre-determined according to Wayonn.”

“I don’t believe in pre-determination.” Andro said. “Nothing is ever set until it happens and becomes part of the past.”

Dutkne’s eyes grew a little wider and he smiled as he looked at Andro. “I’ve been trying to tell him that for years!” He stated. “Finally... someone who agrees with me. I don’t suppose my Aunt believes as you do?”

Andro couldn’t help but smile. “No.” He answered shaking his head.

Dutkne swore under his breath, but he was smiling as he did. “Well... we can work on her.” He said finally.

Andro looked over Dutkne’s shoulder at where Devra and the others sat at the massive table looking at data pads or talking softly. [Who are these people you have brought with you?] He asked.

[The Vanari?] Dutkne answered. [They are an advanced race within our quadrant of space. As I said... we are neither allies nor enemies. We have agreed to mind our own business and they have as well. One of Devra’s daughters was taken by pirates and they tracked them here. We stumbled across them before making the last jump.]

[Pirates?] Andro asked.

Dutkne nodded. [They call themselves the Orionis Syndicate. A particularly nasty group of humanoid pirates and mercenaries. We have tangled with them in the past. That ceased when we eliminated one of their bases of operation. They have been around for millennia... and they have quite the history with the Vanari.]

[How so?] Andro asked as they both, turned almost reading each other’s thoughts and faced the table.

[Vanari females are highly prized as slaves.] Dutkne told him. [They are a very open race and much like us they do not shy from expressing their openness. Every Vanari, whether male or female, learn the arts from a very young age.]

Andro looked at him, his eyebrow going up. [Arts?]

Dutkne nodded. [Let’s just say... they have an oil they can secret through their pores. It is an extremely powerful oil, odorless unseen and it can make a person very open to suggestion if you get my meaning. This Orionis Syndicate learned very early on how to break Vanari females and turn them into willing slaves.]

[No one is a willing slave Dutkne.] Andro spoke.

Dutkne nodded. [The Vanari are. Their species began as a mono-gendered species. They could take whatever form they wanted given the situation. Through the centuries that changed as their numbers grew. They are a female dominated species. The ratio is like three to one. They are like this in order to continue to produce children. Apparently this Orionis group learned how to cause their bodies to alter their chemical makeup forcibly. They are very successful in doing this. It causes the female’s body to believe they are male and while their outward appearance is not altered, their internal composition is changed somehow at the genetic level. The Vanari government has some sort of ongoing agreement with this Syndicate. They will not attempt to wipe them out, if the Orionis Syndicate does not take more than a few dozen Vanari females as slaves per year.]

Andro looked at him horrified. [You are joking?]

Dutkne shook his head. [No. If this Orionis Group is interfered with in any way, they have said they will unleash a systematic attack on Vanari colonies and pour this chemical into the atmospheres of these colonies. It will essentially make all Vanari females sterile. If this were to happen...]

[Their species would die out.] Andro said.

Dutkne nodded. [They are taught from a very young age to resist capture and slavery to a point... but then give in for the continued survival of their species.]

[Their government allows this?] Andro said.

Dutkne nodded. [Not willingly... at least not the younger members of their Ruling Body, the Board of Regents. Grandfather has spent more time with them than I have. They know he was a Pralor before he was a wolf, so they trust him more than the rest of us. Many of their older Regents believe we are nothing more than animals.]

[And that is why this one at the table... this Naesta. That is why she acts this way?] Andro asked.

[I had thought when she came onboard the TALON that she was beginning to see that what her father raised her to believe is not true. Apparently based on her actions that is not the case.] Dutkne replied.

[The male does not seem to harbor the same feelings.] Andro spoke.

[Nirilo has lived and worked among us for nearly a hundred years.] Dutkne explained with a smile. [He has a Lycavorian woman who worships him and who he adores in return. No... he does not harbor the same sentiments about our people. He knows they aren't true for he has seen it himself.]

[The other two females?] Andro asked.

[Devra is their mother.] Dutkne said. [She is one of the more progressive Regents on the Board and her interaction with grandfather has given her some trust of us. Arduri... Arduri I don't know. She is the middle daughter, again one of the more progressive generation, but from what Nirilo tells me she is going to be married soon to the son of one of the backwards Regents like her father.]

[An arranged marriage?] Andro asked in disgust.

[No... she accepted the proposal after the last Celebration of the Hundreds.] Dutkne said.

[Celebration of the Hundreds?] Andro asked.

Dutkne grinned. [A topic for another time perhaps.] He said. [As I was saying... they have apparently tracked an Orionis Syndicate ship into this Quadrant of space. Somewhere in what you call The Wilds. This ship had Devra's oldest daughter on it. She was captured sometime last week from one of their colony worlds. We...]

"It is very rude to talk about others in the manner you are doing right now." Arduri spoke from the table as she was looking at them.

Andro and Dutkne turned to look at her. Andro took in the petite figure with very large breasts that, incredibly, looked like they fit her body perfectly. Her silver/yellow hair fell far past her shoulders and her green eyes were bright and very intelligent. Her Brandeis blue skin was flawless in every way, her full lips a soft amethyst color. The uniform she wore conformed to her petite figure like a second skin and showed off all of her supple curves, of which there were many, to include an incredible ass that almost matched his KertaGai's amazing backside. Andro looked at Dutkne who broke away to return to the table and he turned back to Arduri and bowed his head slightly.

"You are right. Forgive me for being rude." He stated as he came up to the table and settled into the chair facing the doors into the huge conference room and across from them. He reached out and poured himself a mug of his mother's coffee from the urn and then sat back in the chair.

"What were you talking about?" Arduri asked with an even voice.

"Arduri?" Devra gasped.

"It is alright." Andro spoke gently. "I have nothing to hide. If you must know, we were talking about why you are here." He said. "I know now why Dutkne and Wayonn have come but considering the distrust Dutkne has told me that you have of my people, I find it odd that you would come to a new society of Lycavorians asking for help. A society of people that you neither trust or call friend. We may be separated by thousands of light years, and until this day we may have had no contact, but we are still the same species and I dare say we will have many of the same mannerisms and traditions."

"I told you they wouldn't help us mother!" Naesta popped. "We should have come on our own and found her!"

Devra glared at her daughter. "Naesta that is enough!" She spat. "We..."

"Over the last three long weeks I have seen my younger sister brutally raped by the High Coven as a means to obtain information she has within her head." Andro spoke softly his azure eyes turning to look at Naesta. "I have seen the Kavalian Empire systematically try and butcher my entire family. They have tried to kill one of my wives and mates. They have come very close to killing my father and now he is in hiding because they think him dead. They have quite possibly succeeded in killing one of my mothers and my favorite Aunt and their agents have also captured and are holding another of my mothers. My brother and his mate and several friends and other family members are deep within Kavalian space on a very dangerous mission that could very well tip the balance of power within this quadrant. More of them are on their way to him even as we speak. With everything I have going on right now, do you believe for an instant that I give a nubous sibfla about how you view my people!” Andro finished his sentence with an angry growl. They watched him get to his feet slowly. “I agreed to listen to you because Dutkne and Wayonn asked me to. I do not have the patience or desire to listen to you berate me or my people when it is obvious that you don’t know shit about us!”

Andro stabbed a button on the console in front of him. “Captain Velnar?”

“Milord?” The response was immediate.

“Prep the MENKLA to return our Vanari guests to where the TALON has gone.” Andro spoke. “Inform Admiral O’Connor they are to be put on their ship and then escorted out of Union space. If they attempt to deviate from course while they are within Union space their ship is to be destroyed immediately.”

“Understood Milord.” Velnar answered immediately. “Captain Sa’sur contacted me as well sire. She and the SCIMITAR will be joining with us in three hours.”

“Thank you Velnar. We will transfer to her when she arrives and then you can rejoin with Miranda’s command.” Andro said.

“As you order Milord.” Velnar answered.

Andro looked at Devra then. “The Durcunusaan outside the door will escort you back to the landing bay and you can depart and make your own way since it appears that is what you want.” Andro turned from the table. “I wish you all the best.”

“Androcles you...” Dutkne began to speak.

“Wait!” Devra shouted as she came to her feet interrupting Dutkne. “This... this is my daughter we are talking about!”

Andro looked at her. “And this matters to me why?” Andro asked her. “The Lycavorian Union is on the cusp of a war that I will have to start because of what the Kavalians have done. I have neither the time nor the desire to stand here and listen to you or your daughters speak about my people as if we are somehow inferior to you. I do not care where you have come from or what you want. I will have Captain Velnar give you copies of the star charts for this quadrant of space and you can make your own way. Given your attitudes... I estimate you will last about two days in The Wilds. The Durcunusaan will be along shortly. Good luck in your endeavors.”

Devra was speechless as Andro turned and without further pause walked out of the conference room. She turned quickly and looked at Dutkne. “Dutkne... can you do nothing?”

“My grandfather and I warned you Regent Re Mydala.” Dutkne said gently. “We told you the men and women of the Lycavorian Union were not like us. We have lived with your distrust and your feelings of superiority over us for millennia. We have learned how to accept it for what it is. The Lycavorians here now... as Androcles has just expressed to you... they are not like us and they have no desire to tolerate or help a species that looks down upon them with one hand while asking for their help with the other.” Dutkne shook his head slowly. “No, there is nothing I can do. You can thank Naesta for pissing off the one man in this quadrant of space who would have helped you and asked for nothing in return. The Lycavorians here... they were slaves once. They were slaves to the High Coven for over ten thousand years. They despise any kind of slavery. They would have helped you based on that fact alone. No... even if I could do anything I would not. To be honest... I have been tired of your people’s attitude towards mine for some time. I have just not voiced that displeasure because of my grandfather and how he feels about you. If you will excuse me...”

Even a stunned Nirilo could do nothing but stand there in shock and watch Dutkne follow Andro out the same door.

You are sending them away without helping them Andro? Elynth asked as she watched the Durcunusaan troops leading the Vanari delegation into the landing bay towards where the MENKLA transport was being readied.

Andro turned from where he was inspecting Majeir’s flank and how she was adjusting to wearing one of the Mark Eleven saddles. He followed her gaze and then faced her. “Yes.” He answered finally.

Because they have this complex with the Lycavorian people? Elynth said.

“That’s not the only reason sister... you know that.” Andro answered. “So much... so much is happening right now. We do not have the resources to help them.”

We do not have the resources... or they angered you enough with their fool attitude that you will not give them the resources? Elynth asked.

“Both.” Andro said.

So you will send them into The Wilds knowing full well they will more than likely be dead or enslaved themselves within a week. Elynth blinked her golden eyes. That is not my Bonded Brother speaking.

“Elynth we...” Andro began.

Who was the first to visit the Evolli homeworld after the end of the war? Elynth asked. Who was at the forefront of giving them the means to rebuild what war took from them. Who remained on their homeworld for three months even though we both find them distasteful and hold a great dislike for them in our hearts for what they perpetrated?

Andro looked at her. “We did.”

Do you know why men and women follow you my Bonded Brother? Why they follow you and your father without so much as a second’s pause? Elynth asked him. They follow you because they believe in you. Your father and you, above all your father’s children, adhere to the saying of your grandfather.

“Fight with your head. Lead with your heart.” Andro said softly.

Whatever may have happened between them and Dutkne’s Protectorate did not happen between us. Majeir spoke now. And given their attitude towards your people, it does not seem like it would take much to make them such. Especially if what Dutkne has told you is true.

The Lycavorians. My kind. Elynth spoke. We have tossed aside the bonds of slavery and oppression and crushed them under our talons and claws. Perhaps what is needed for these Vanari... perhaps what is needed is for someone to show them that it is not something they must live with.

“And if we help them and it changes nothing?” Andro asked. “If we help them and it costs us blood and sweat and tears? Resources that could be used against the Kavalians!”

Then we will be the better for it. Elynth said. For we will have acted in the superior manner... and they can wallow in self pity and wail over the opportunity they let pass them by. And you have said yourself... the Kavalians are up to far more than we know right now. And think of the allies we could gain.

Andro shook his head after a long moment. “I hate it when you are right.” He said.

Elynth laughed softly within Mindvoice. That means you hate it when you are right. She said with some humor, reaching out with her head and butting him in the chest with her snout. For you and I speak with one voice and one heart.

Androcles? Majeir said.

Andro turned to look at her and she motioned with her large head. Andro followed her gaze and saw Devra striding purposefully towards him, the Durcunusaan officer trying to catch up and stop her. She stopped in front of Andro, her green eyes passionate and clear. She held out the data pad in her hand to him. “Look at it!” She snapped.

The Durcunusaan officer finally reached them. “Milord... I apologize! The Regent caught me when I wasn't looking. I...”

Andro held up his hand as he took the pad from Devra. “Stand down Lieutenant.” He said. Andro held up the pad. “What is this?”

“The technical details on refining your Hyper Matter Fusion engines.” She snapped. “I will... I will give you anything you want. I will beg if that is what you require of me. I only ask that you help me find my daughter. She is... she has been through enough in her life because she is different and I will not allow her to believe we have just dismissed her.”

Andro met her eyes and his head tilted slightly. “Different?” He asked. “Different how?”

“My people... the Vanari... the majority of our females are born with the features you see in me. Green or blue eyes; silver/white or blond hair.” Devra told him. “There is a much smaller percentage that are born with black hair. These females are most often looked down upon and considered genetically defective in some ridiculous manner because of this gene they are born with. Caliria... my daughter has this gene. Her hair is as black as night and she has ice blue eyes. She is beautiful... but because she has black hair, her father and many others do not treat her the same way.”

“I take it you do not conform to this way of thinking.” Andro said.

“She is my daughter. The oldest of my daughters. I have loved her no less because she is different.” Devra stated. “Nor do Nirilo, or Arduri or Naesta. She is their sister, and the way they have treated her has given their father fits for years. Coren... Coren is not a bad man... he is just too entrenched in the past.”

“This Coren is your husband?” Andro asked.

Devra shook her head quickly. “We haven’t been married in almost thirty years. Nirilo is our oldest child at almost five hundred years old. Caliria is the next oldest at just over three hundred. Arduri and Naesta are still considered extremely young, for they are less than a hundred years old. Like your people we are a long lived species. Caliria is part of the Vanari defense Cadre and a strong advocate for those females with dark hair who aspire to other duties within our society that right now they are not granted.”

“Why did you come here Regent Re Mydala?” Andro asked.

“Wayonn... he told me you would help us to find her.” Devra replied. “He told me that if she was within this place you call The Wilds, your people could find her. I love my daughter Androcles Leonidas. I love my daughter and I will not abandon her to this fate. I will give you anything you require. Anything.” Devra stepped closer to him. “Just please help me find my daughter.”

Andro held out the data pad to her without even looking at it. “Take this.” He said.

“Please... I’ll give you anything!” Devra almost shouted. “Name your price.”

Andro took her hand and placed the data pad back in it. “My price?”

“We have... we have technology you could use... we have...” Devra began.

Andro stepped closer to her, his azure eyes bright and glittering. “I have eight sisters Devra Re Mydala, eight sisters and five brothers with another brother who will join us in a few months. There is no price in this universe that is worth any one of them. How do you put a price on blood?”

Devra blinked several times at his words and the closeness of him. “You can not.” She stammered. “That is why I will give you anything you ask for.”

Andro smiled warmly and squeezed her hands within his. “My price? My price is an open mind.” He stated. “An open mind Regent Re Mydala. An open mind and we will find your daughter. That is my price.” Andro released her hands and looked at the Lieutenant. “Tell the Commander the trip is no longer necessary Lieutenant. The Vanari will be accompanying us to the SCIMITAR when she arrives.”

The Durcunusaan officer nodded. “As you order Milord.”

Andro looked at Devra once more. “An open mind.” He said softly. “And an opportunity to show you that my people are not what the Vanari think we are. Something I believe Dutkne and Wayonn have been trying to show you for centuries.”

“That... that’s it?” Devra asked stunned.

“You have nothing that I want Lady Devra.” Andro said with a smile. “I invite you to sit with us for dinner when we transfer to the SCIMITAR. Aside from that... we’ll begin to figure things out when we return to Earth. The Wilds is a very large area and we will need all the information you have on this Orionis Syndicate.”

“I... we have several pads of information.” Devra spoke slowly.

Andro nodded. “Good. If you will excuse me... I need to find my new mates and nuzzle their elven ears for a time.” Andro bowed his head to her and then turned and began walking away leaving Devra standing there completely astonished.

This was not what she had expected. Not in the least.

CHAPTER FIFTY-SIX

RITAAH

“He... he has entered Union space.” Shiria said softly.

They were all gathered in the control room of VORTEX Cruiser 341, Avi and 341 just off to the side while the others sat on the make shift chairs and crates or within the actual chairs of the bridge stations themselves. Resumar looked up from where he was sitting next to Athani, who clung tightly to Nikkei's hand in her lap. The last few hours had gone by quickly, everyone ending up here in the control room. Dario and Channa stood slightly behind Resumar, Channa leaning casually against the front of Dario's body, her tail curled several times around his left leg the tip twitching absently against his knee. Vonis stood next to Mican and Na'lia, Ckaoa standing just behind where Shiria sat. It had been awkward at first, no one really knowing what to say as they took stock of the aftereffects of the Coven assault. Shiria had remained out of the way for the most part, talking with Ckaoa, Athani and Nikkei as they listened to Athani relay to them all that had happened to her in the last months. Athani had been stunned to hear that Jalersi had finally had her eyes opened to the truth, and even more stunned at who exactly had shown this to her. A man Athani had suspected for some time who held more than just a passing fancy in her sister. Nikkei was the confused one, Pian's mother and Shiria beginning to make her see how things truly were, but it wasn't until she was beside Athani that she saw that all they were telling her was true. Nikkei saw how Resumar treated her Aunt Athani, as if she was some precious jewel, and she saw how her Aunt looked at this Lycavorian Prince. She had been far too shocked that Athani was now a Princess of the Union for it to set in right away, but as she saw others take directions from Athani and not question her orders or status, it had begun to sink in quickly.

Resumar's Hyperetes and his two Durcumusaan troops had tracked the remaining two High Coven troops through the dense timber. They managed to bring one of them down before they reached the clearing where the Coven G9 LRR was waiting. They could do nothing as the G9 lifted off and engaged its Shroud before it was even five thousand meters into the sky. As quickly as everything was happening there was no way to inform the PILLAR'S captain in time for him to act. Doing so would expose his position and Antell would not do that. He and Maros had split their ships to cover as much of the area around Ritaah as they could. With the Coven ships on the other side of the planet, the G9 was able to slip right between the two groups of ships without ever being detected. The Hyperetes stripped the body of the High Coven troop, an officer, and they left his carcass for the beasts of Ritaah as they headed back to the cruiser. He had carried several data pads, which they gave to Avi and 341 when they returned.

Resumar looked at her as she spoke. "Who has entered Union space?" He asked.

Shiria met his eyes evenly. "Wayonn." She replied. "Sumar's Oracle. He has entered Union space."

"How do you know?" Athani asked.

"I can feel him." Shiria answered. "I can feel his happiness within Mindvoice. He is not shielding very well." She said with a knowing smile. "I will have to scold him about this when I see him again." She met Resumar's eyes. "He has met with your brother and they are returning to Earth."

"How do you know that?" Resumar asked.

Shiria smiled. "It is a skill that takes time to develop, but you have it. Just as your father and your brother have it, truly your entire family. Anyone with the blood of Sumar or Wayonn in their veins. Any Pralor who had obtained the rank of Elder. It is a unique skill that only the most powerful Pralors, our Elders, had. Just as you are able to sense your family even over great distances, though you may not be able to communicate with them directly within Mindvoice. It is similar to this, but much more focused. If the target individual's shields are low enough or they allow you, you can sense emotions and in some cases, you can even see with their eyes. It is how I knew you were here. That and the fact that I lost contact with Avatar 341. No one in your family is very adept at fully shielding themselves, especially from someone like me or Wayonn."

"So you felt us?" Athani asked still trying to comprehend that this woman was the Scribe Mother. Demahra had looked so much older when Athani knew her.

Shiria nodded. "Yes. And you are now wondering how I could be the same person that you knew as Demahra aren't you Athani." She said with a smile.

"The thought had crossed my mind." Athani said.

"She altered her appearance." Resumar spoke looking at his striking Kavalian wife. "She altered her appearance just enough not to reveal her true nature."

"Why?" Athani asked.

"Senior Polemarch Dymas did the same thing." Dario spoke. "It was a way to hide his true age from those elves he associated with most on Earth. Before my Uncle Martin returned. The Feravomir did so as well, though not on as large a scale."

"And again I ask why?" Athani asked.

“Athani my child... if your father knew what I was from the outset, do you believe for an instant that I would be sitting here now with you?” Shiria asked with a soothing smile. “If I was not in one of his wretched labs somewhere while his unskilled scientists dissected me I would be dead. He would not seek to learn what I know... he would seek only to discover how I can do what I can do so that he could have it as a weapon. It is his largest fault, yet his greatest asset and it makes him somewhat predictable.”

“But you... you have hid yourself out in the open all of these years. He even consulted you on several occasions.” Athani said. “Many of our people look to you as a... as...”

“A symbol of what could be?” Shiria asked. “Yes I know. It may have appeared that way to you, but in fact your father severely limited what I could do and where I could go. Well... he tried to anyway. He was attempting to put on a good front for you and your sister and others so that he could use you how he saw fit to advance his plans. He knew how you both felt and if he played to your weaknesses he could control you. It suited my overall plans regardless. While he may have thought he was keeping me in check as some sort of spiritual advisor, he never took my advice by the way, while he thought this I was setting up my own underground so to speak.”

“Underground?” Mican asked now.

Shiria nodded. “Ckhoa and her sister Poysa are only the tip of the mountain. Many of the border Prides help me and they adhere to new ideals and values that your father would find most traitorous. Ideals and values that I showed them, and they have advanced through the generations. The Nruarani Pride is only the largest and most powerful Pride that has sided with me. Pian’s love for your sister drove him Athani and in order for him to win your sister’s heart he knew he had to change. He embraced it willingly and in the process he brought his entire Pride along with him and they embraced it. When he realized the knowledge and freedom what I taught brought them, Pian saw the future not as something to fear... but something to hold on to tightly.”

“How many?” Mican asked.

Shiria looked at him. “Far more than even Keleru suspects or would believe. Many of those like you secretly follow us Mican. You are an inspiration to them you know. Your actions through the years.”

“Me?” Mican gasped in disbelief.

Shiria nodded. “Your refusal to give up. Fighting and saving biogenic clones that your father and Pusintin dismissed and simply threw away when they had outlived their cycles.” Her eyes cut to Na’lia. “And you Na’lia of the elves.”

Na’lia pressed closer to Mican. “Me?”

Shiria nodded her head with that ever present smile. “There have been rumors for months that a way to keep the clones alive after their cycle is over exists and that you and those elves with you here are the ones who developed it. A superior effort and even larger breakthrough and I commend you. I too am a scientist of sorts... not within the genetic field... but I know good work when I see it and from what I have seen... you do excellent work.”

Na’lia couldn’t help but blush slightly and smile. “Thank you.” She said.

“How did you get here?” Resumar asked causing Shiria to turn back to him. “Within Kavalian space I mean?”

“I came with VORTEX Cruiser 341.” Shiria answered without pause. “I was one of the last Acolytes of the Elder Pralor Scientific Council. A junior scientist working on the Pralor homeworld. When it was determined that our species would not be able to win the war we were embroiled in, the decision was made to put me on the cruiser and send me away with all of the knowledge of the Pralors stored on this ship. Our entire history. All of our main library archives and data cores. It was... it was meant only as a safeguard for we did not think our end would come.” Shiria paused and Ckhoa took her hand in hers and squeezed.

“Shiria you don’t...” She began to say.

Shiria nodded. “Yes I do Ckhoa.” She stated with a smile as she looked at her. “All we have done... you, me, your sister... it was all meant to bring us to this point. The End of the Beginning. From here... from here, now that we are finally beginning to come together... now anything is possible.” She turned back to Resumar. “The Chief Elder Pralor, the senior Pralor, our President is a term you could use. He was elected after Sumar was lost on CS41. He made the decision to send VORTEX Cruiser 341 into this quadrant of space for two reasons. This is where he knew Sumar’s ship had crashed and he hoped perhaps I could find them, and he knew our enemy would never think to travel this far to look for us. The second was that we have had a presence in this quadrant of space for many thousands of years. VORTEX Cruiser 341 was the first in a class of ships that ultimately were never built. Our most advanced warship and he did not want it falling into the hands of our enemy. I was chosen in a lottery to travel with this ship and attempt to maintain a link with the homeworld. Fully five years into our voyage the homeworld stopped responding and all we received after that was the same repeating message that said all was lost and... and to pray for redemption.”

“Wait a moment!” Resumar spoke getting to his feet quickly. “You said you’ve had a presence in this quadrant for thousands of years. A Pralor presence?”

Shiria nodded her head looking at him. “Yes. You caught that didn’t you?”

“Who?” Resumar asked. “Someone on Earth? Apo Prime?”

Shiria smiled and shook her head. “I’m sorry but I will not reveal their identity to you Resumar Leonidas. I cannot. It is something only I know and my duty would be to deliver this information to the most senior descendant of Sumar. I’m sorry but it is something I can only tell to your father. Wayonn knows of them, but I would not tell him who this individual was either. They were embroiled in troubles of their own at the time and they did not need any additional, perhaps harmful distractions. I will happily tell your father however... though considering the abilities your father has and continues to show, I would not be surprised if he has not already figured it out. From what I have been able to witness and read about your father since his return, he is perhaps the most intelligent and cunning individual I have ever known.”

Resumar drew silent and stared at her for a long moment. Athani saw the look on her husband’s face and she got to her feet and moved to him, pressing close to him and using the small female aura that she possessed to wash over him. She turned to Shiria after a moment. “You do not know?” She asked softly.

Shiria looked at her. “Know what?”

“My... my father is dead.” Resumar spoke the words with a pained expression on his face. “He was... he was killed several days ago by Kavalian assassins sent by Keleru and my uncle.”

Whatever anyone expected from her they did not foresee Shiria breaking out in genuine and hearty laughter. There were gasps from everyone present and eyes flew open in stunned shocked. Athani’s expression of disbelief rapidly turned to one of intense anger and she stepped closer to Shiria.

“How dare you!” She snarled angrily. “How... dare you laugh at this knowledge? How could you?”

Shiria glanced around the room and could see that perhaps they did not understand why she was laughing. She got to her feet quickly and faced Resumar her face becoming serious. “You misunderstand my actions Resumar Leonidas... Athani. I...”

Vonis was the one to step away from the wall. “Then perhaps you’d better explain them!” He growled viciously.

Shiria looked at Vonis and her dark eyes narrowed. “Do not bark at me young man!” She snapped. “You do not frighten me Vonis, descendant of Xaxon! Though you may not have been touched by that fool as your mother and sister were, you are still descended from his foul line! I have seen more in ten millennia than you could possibly imagine and your tone of voice to me is disrespectful!”

“Disrespectful?” Vonis snapped. “You insult...”

Shiria waved her hand almost casually and Vonis went sailing back across the bridge by some unseen force to impact the control console that Avi was working next to. As he grunted in pain and slumped to the deck Avi’s head turned to look at him.

-Colonel Vonis may I suggest you do not anger the Elder Pralor in the future. She is a Category nineteen Elder Pralor and there are only ten others in the known universe that would have the ability to defeat her if a conflict ensued. You are not among those ten I’m afraid Colonel-Vonis looked at Avi sternly as he pulled himself to his feet. “Thanks you for the vote of confidence Avi!” He barked.

-Always Colonel-

Shiria turned back to Athani and Resumar, her face back to normal as if nothing had just happened and she hadn't tossed Vonis across the bridge. "As I said... you misunderstand the source of my laughter and the reasons behind it."

"You laugh at the news that Resumar's father has been killed Scribe Mother?" Athani gasped. "How... how could you?"

Shiria shook her head and looked at her. "Martin Leonidas is no more dead than you or I." She spat vehemently. "It will take far better men than your father and Pusintin, that fool lap dog of his, to kill your father Resumar."

Resumar looked at her with wide eyes. "I felt... I felt it." He gasped softly. "My brother Andro, he..."

"When was the last time you spoke to your brother?" Shiria asked quickly.

Resumar looked at her. "We are not... we are not due to communicate for another eight hours." He replied.

Shiria nodded. "He is dealing with much right now Resumar, more than he should have to shoulder for one so young, but he is holding up far better than I had thought possible. He is aware you do not know and he will not violate the safety of you or your mission here to inform you of this. You know as well as I every communication has the chance of being detected, no matter how good the equipment you use. Your father is not dead Resumar Leonidas. He still burns very brightly within Mindvoice, just as he always has, though lately he has shown the ability to understand and utilize the many tremors and threads of Mindvoice with consummate skill. No doubt in part because of his relationship with Avi. Something that Wayonn and your Feravomir will no doubt change when they join with him, if only to keep him safe. Lower your shields and let me guide you."

"How do you know this?" Athani demanded.

Shiria turned once more. "When you get to be my age, you do learn how to do things that others cannot. Avatar 341?" She barked.

-Elder Pralor Shiria- 341 turned from the station he was standing at.

"341... activate a holochart display and overlap your most recent quadrant wide Etheric Scan." Shiria ordered. "Give me the details. Category sixteen and above only 341. And do not include any Cretvore Draconius or other species in your calculations since any of them that are bonded with a rider will be Category sixteen or higher to begin with and other species will only alter the conclusions I am trying to reach."

Avatar 341 looked at Resumar. -Resumar Leonidas?-

Shiria smiled and turned to Resumar. "I had forgotten that he is now programmed to respond only to a descendant of Sumar since you have activated this ship. Please Resumar... allow me to prove to you that what I say is true."

"How?" Resumar asked the hope in his voice very genuine.

"Every Pralor ship to leave our homeworld in the last fifteen thousand years leading up to our end was equipped with a separate Etheric Sensor Array." Shiria told him. "It runs the entire length of the ship and because it does not work on the consumption of power as we know it, it runs continuously even though the ship may be powered down. It is basically the same principle as when Channa first entered this ship. Her level of Etheric skill, though she did not know of it at the time, it allowed 341 to activate many of the ship's other systems until you and the others arrived and your Etheric abilities were sensed by the internal ship sensors and full power could be obtained."

"Do it 341." Resumar snapped without question.

"Won't this scan be detected by the Kavalians?" Dario asked moving closer.

Shiria shook her head. "Not unless they have discovered a way to scan for those who can Mindvoice. The Kavalians do not have this ability naturally; only through certain circumstances can it be obtained."

"Like me being Resumar's wife?" Athani asked.

Shiria nodded. "That and the fact that his dragon touched you. Cretvore Draconius seem to have the ability to stimulate the certain synaptic tendrils in an individual's mind that allows them to Mindvoice. And your continued physical relationship with Resumar has triggered the L-stereoisomer cells in your body to the point that any changes are now permanent.”

Athani nodded. “Resumar’s mother Anja explained it to me when they discovered we had married. She said the same thing.”

Shiria nodded. “Anja Leonidas is the foremost medical mind in the universe. I dare say she could hold her own even against some of our senior physicians were there any left. She is utterly brilliant.”

“Tell me about this sensor array.” Resumar spoke.

“Only Pralor ships had this sensor ability. It is a low power automated sensor sweep that takes place every twenty-four hours. It is also probably one of the ways 341 discovered you were coming here.” Shiria explained. “And it will also pinpoint the majority of Mindvoice users in this quadrant when keyed to a certain level.”

“The majority?” Channa asked.

Shiria nodded. “It will not pick up those like Wayonn and myself when we are shielding our minds with our complete focus.”

-Overlapping most recent Etheric Scan. Five point three hours ago- 341 announced quickly. -Scans indicate eighteen contacts at Category Sixteen or higher. Adjusting scan for Etheric variance by point two. One Category Twenty-one... one Category Twenty... nine category nineteen... five category eighteen... and two category seventeen contacts have been found-“Locations?” Shiria asked.

-One category twenty, two category nineteen and one category eighteen currently in transit within Lycavorian Union space. Supposition. Based on Etheric resonance levels, probability that this is Androcles Leonidas, Elder Pralor Vizier Wayonn and Lycavorian First Oracle known as Helen is 98.3%. Fourth contact is unknown at this time however the scans of Etheric resonance variables indicate that the Lycavorian First Oracle and unknown contact are related to Elder Pralor Vizier Wayonn-

“Related?” Shiria asked surprised. “Are you certain 341?”

-My calculations are accurate Elder Pralor Shiria. Resonance variables indicate that the First Oracle is a third generation descendant of Vizier Wayonn. The unknown contact is fourth generation descendant-

“His grandchildren.” Shiria said softly. “No wonder he has spent so much time using the Mark II Boosters since your father returned. And he is not focused on his shielding which is very unusual.”

“Who is this Wayonn?” Resumar asked.

Shiria looked at him. “He is a Pralor. Or he was. He still is. It is very confusing when one tries to think about it. He was Sumar’s Oracle... like Helen is to your father. He is one of the original members of City Ship 41. A pureblood Pralor. I discovered him... or he discovered me actually... roughly fourteen thousand years ago give or take a century. He saved my life to be honest.”

“And this Wayonn is with my brother now?” Resumar asked.

Shiria nodded. “Yes... it would appear so. Continue 341.”

-One category twenty-one and two category nineteen Etheric contacts currently located on the Lycavorian Union world known as Curila 6. Most likely hypothesis... based on current resonance levels; this is King Martin Leonidas, Queen Aricia Leonidas and the Hadarian Queen Anja Leonidas-

Shiria looked at Resumar and saw the stunned expression on his face. The stunned but joyous expression. “You see Resumar. Your father lives. I did not lie to you.”

-One category nineteen currently located in The Wilds on the planet known as Belid with two category eighteens in transit and approaching the same location. Based again on resonance levels this appears to be King Leonidas's Elven Queen Dysea Leonidas and his children known as Denali and Lisisa Leonidas. Another category nineteen is also located on Belid. Identification unknown at this time- 341 continued.

-One Category eighteen contact currently in transit within Union space. Closing on the position of Androcles Leonidas. Contact is unknown-

“Interesting.” Shiria said softly. “Two unknown contacts that I had no knowledge of. Discovering who they are will be most fascinating.”

-One category nineteen currently located on the Union world of Earth. Most likely analysis of resonance levels indicates that this is Androcles Leonidas's Lycavorian Anome Sadi Leonidas-

-One category nineteen and one category eighteen currently located on Kavalian Federation world of Ritaah-

Shiria looked at Resumar. “That would be us. I am purposely not shielding so that you can see I am telling you the truth.”

-One category nineteen and one category seventeen currently in transit in High Coven space. Based on previous scans this indicates the vampire female Yuri and one of her offspring-

Resumar stepped forward quickly, moving right up next to Shiria while holding Athani's hand tightly. “That bitch Yuri!” He snarled.

Shiria looked at him. “More than likely yes. They escaped Earth after their attack on your sister did they not?”

Resumar nodded. “That is what Andro told me.”

-Remaining category seventeen currently located in The Wilds on the planet known as Kranek. Based on current data, analysis would indicate that this is the vampire Queen Isabella Leonidas-

-Error-

-Current scan is not accurate with previous versions-

Shiria moved closer to him. “Explain.” She ordered.

-Previous Etheric Scans indicated nineteen total contacts. There is a Category Nineteen not listed in the current scan or the two previous sweeps. Odd. The category nineteen Etheric resonance of Dysea Leonidas did not register on the previous scan as well-

“But she is a positive contact now?” Shiria asked confused.

-Affirmative-

“Last location of the lost contact?” Shiria asked.

-According to previous scans... plotted location was Sparta on Earth. Mostly likely deduction is that this is the Elven Queen For'mya Leonidas-“Why are you not picking her up?” Shiria asked as both she and Resumar moved closer to 341.

-Unknown at this time. Running a systems diagnostic. I will need four minutes and thirty-three seconds to complete the diagnostic-

Shiria turned to Resumar and saw his still wide eyes. “Your father is alive Resumar Leonidas. Something that your brother Androcles more than likely would have told you when he contacted you next.”

“Why not right away?” Resumar asked gently, not directing the question at Shiria.

“I don’t know but as I told you before, there is much going on back on Earth and he is having to deal with it alone.” She said swiftly. “We know that Keleru and Pusintin have begun moving against you and your family. I warned Wayonn that this might take place and he would have passed this information on to your father.”

“Wait! You knew?” Athani gasped.

Shiria shook her head. “I knew of something thanks to Ckhoa’s sister Poysa. Her current position allows her to gather much needed pieces of intelligence for me, but not all of the pieces unfortunately. She warned me that there was talk and rumors of an direct attack against the Union and its Royal family several months ago. I did not have the opportunity to pass this on to Wayonn until only a few weeks ago.”

“Why not contact my father directly?” Resumar asked.

Shiria shook her head. “And risk your father starting a war to come and retrieve me from Kavalian space and destroy this ship? No. And you know as well as I that is exactly what he would have done. Ckhoa and I had this very conversation before we left Rizon Four. As the direct descendant of Sumar, his combined Lycavorian and Pralor blood would have drove him to come into Kavalian space at any cost. To retrieve me. To the best of my knowledge I am the only remaining pureblooded Pralor. Wayonn and I agreed many years ago once your father returned to us that we needed to keep my existence secret from him for fear of what he might do as he discovered knowledge of the past from Avatar 41.”

“Avi?” Resumar asked.

Shiria smiled at him. “Do you think your father would dismiss the knowledge that Avatar 41 holds within his memory cores?”

“Avi.” Athani said. “His name is Avi. He is not just a machine.”

Shiria looked at her and smiled. “Forgive me... Avi then. I should have known he would have developed his own behavioral parameters once he was reactivated, especially being around your father. It is what the avatars were supposed to do.” Shiria turned back to look at Avi and 341. “No doubt he has passed this independent behavior to 341 by now since they have been connected within the systems of this ship for the last few days.”

“If this Wayonn was on Lycavore... how did he not fall during the Black Day? Or get captured by the Coven?” Resumar asked.

“Wayonn and approximately twenty thousand of your people, many of them now with Pralor blood in their veins, attempted to return to Pralor space millennia ago.” Shiria explained. “This is how he explained it to me when we first discovered each other. They succeeded, but they arrived in the middle of the beginning of the war that eventually led to the death of our species. They escaped but did not make it back to Lycavore. They settled on a world in the Beta Quadrant of space and...”

“The Beta Quadrant?” Dario exclaimed. “That is... that is like a hundred thousand light years from here! It would take us decades to get there!”

Shiria nodded. “Not anymore.” She looked at Resumar. “Why do you think your father made it a priority to take from City Ship 41 the intricacies of Quantum Fusion Drives Resumar? And our Multiphasic shields. Why not try to develop weapons to protect the Union? Avatar... Avi would have done whatever your father asked of him.”

-King Leonidas was very specific in his requests of knowledge and how it was to be applied Elder Pralor Shiria- Avi broke in from his spot. -Conquest of others is not in his nature and it did not interest him in the least-

Shiria nodded. “Your father could feel it then Resumar. He could feel the call of his pure Pralor blood and he used the advances from CS41 to further the gains you had already made in engine technology. What did Martin Leonidas tell you the goal was Avi?”

-He never specifically stated a goal Elder Pralor Shiria. Only that he wanted to go very far and see new places, and he wanted the ability to get back- Avi answered.

“Your supposition?” Shiria asked him.

Avi paused for a long moment and Resumar turned to him. “You can answer her question Avi. Now is not the time to keep my father’s secrets.”

-I will not violate operational plans or concepts that King Leonidas was working on without his order. However... analysis would support that your father’s goal was to one day return to Pralor space- Avi answered honestly. -The development of the HMFC Drives of the LEONIDAS IIA Strike Cruisers further support this. In their current configuration designed by Zaala Randall, and with the new Quantum Resonance Field Reactors of the new ARIZONA Class, with proper coordination and accurate star charts, this task could be accomplished in only two years-

“Two years!” Resumar gasped.

“Exactly how far away is Pralor space?” Mican asked.

-The far fringe of Pralor space is not marked in any way- Avi stated. -341 would have more accurate data-

“341?” Resumar asked.

-The nearest border of Pralor space at the time VORTEX Cruiser 341 departed was exactly five hundred thousand, six hundred and fourteen point three light years from our current location-“Nubou lae!” Dario spat.

Channa turned and slapped him hard in his chest. “Your language Dario my mate!”

Dario looked sheepish and smiled. “Sorry.”

-Travel to the Beta Quadrant would require accurate calculations and current star charts, but with the existing drive configuration as given to me by Avatar 41, such a trip would only require three, possibly four targeted jumps- 341 continued. -Factoring in Jump Drive recharging rates... and Light Speed Drive Coils... time to complete this transition would be two days at most-

“The Lost Ones!” Resumar gasped causing everyone to look at him.

Athani looked at his face as he stepped away from her deep in thought. “Resumar? What do you mean?”

Resumar turned back to look at her. “It is something... when my father destroyed Ukway, when he released the Mindvoice essence of Canth, my grandfather’s Oracle... Canth told him he would have to discover the Lost Ones.” Resumar looked at Shiria. “That’s who these people are! The ones that remained on Lycavore! These ones that follow this Wayonn! That is what he meant isn’t it?”

Shiria smiled knowingly. “You share the incredible insight and keen mind of your father and brother Resumar Leonidas. Yes... Canth was Wayonn’s son.” She said. “And until right now I did not realize that your First Oracle... Helen... she is of his bloodline as well. I always thought she just received Canth’s essence during the Change of Oracles. It appears that is not the case at all. So there is much that Wayonn has not shared with me, and much I have not shared with him because of the situations we were both in. That will need to end very soon in order for us to understand all that is happening right now.”

“What do you mean?” Athani asked.

“Everything that is happening now... all of it... it was set in motion by actions that we as Pralors took thousands of years ago. We did not understand them at the time for these Pralors were acting out of what they thought was in their best interests at the time.” Shiria said. “I only arrived after these things were already in motion and I tried my best to offset the awkward balance of things. Why do you think I chose to remain here among the Kavalian people? Who do you think it was that gave the knowledge and technology to the Lycavorians of how to utilize your Shi Viskas?"

"You?" Resumar gasped.

Shiria nodded. "I did it as a means to balance the advantage that the essence of Xaxon gave to the Coven in other ways. Wayonn did not approve I tell you, but I knew it needed to be done and this technology was not something Wayonn had access to. I gave it to the Lycavorian people and I made sure it made its way to Earth so that those Helen had brought there could be balanced."

Resumar stepped closer to her. "Who is the third Pralor?" He asked. "They are here in Kavalian space aren't they? They're Kavalian. That is why you have remained here isn't it?"

"Resumar that isn't possible." Athani said. "My father would not allow this person to exist or act without his permission."

"What if he doesn't know about them?" Resumar asked looking at her.

Shiria shook her head. "I'm sorry Resumar... but I will not reveal that knowledge to anyone but your father. This... this Pralor has had far too long to contemplate the results of their actions and I tell you it has not made them very willing to reveal things. They harbor a deep seated regret for what their actions have wrought throughout the millennia and they have been trying to atone for that equally as long."

"But we..." Resumar began.

-Resumar Leonidas... my diagnostic is complete and my conclusions are... odd- 341's voice interrupted them.

Resumar tore his eyes from Shiria and looked at him. "Odd how?" He snapped.

-I am detecting minute trace levels of the negative Etheric Resonance of City Ship 19- 341 answered.

Vonis stepped forward now. "City Ship 19." He asked. "That's... that's the ship that crashed on Nuwaroa. How is that possible... it lost all power over ten years ago."

-My calculations are accurate Colonel Vonis- 341 answered.

Shiria stepped forward. "341... you said the negative resonance." She stated. "Are you certain?"

-The data is 99.2% accurate Elder Pralor Shiria-

"What is negative Etheric resonance?" Resumar asked.

Shiria looked at him. "Every Pralor ship had a room or rooms, libraries if you will, that were used for meditation, contemplation and study without the constant battering of Mindvoice resonance against one's shields. They were designed with material that blocked all Mindvoice abilities and communications. All of it. Completely. A negative resonance chamber if you will."

"There are rooms like that on CS41." Resumar spoke. "The largest one is used as a nursery for dragon hatchlings so that they do not get overwhelmed in their first few weeks of life."

Shiria looked at him oddly for a second. "An interesting use." She said softly. "That does not explain how trace levels of this negative resonance chamber from CS19 got to Earth. It..."

-I am also detecting trace levels of a similar design surrounding a High Coven ship now in orbit around Belid. They are nearly identical in composition Elder Pralor Shiria- 341 was working quickly at his console. -These trace levels of negative resonance were not present on Earth four days ago, nor anywhere in the sector of space surrounding Belid. Avatar 41?-

-Adjusting previous scans and then overlapping them with the trajectory of travel corridors in The Wilds- Avi's hands also were a blur of movement. -The negative resonance anomaly was activated on Earth approximately 91 hours ago and on the High Coven ship approximately 83 hours ago. When activated on the High Coven ship, the ship was holding station 4.8 million kilometers from Kranek-

“Kranek!” Resumar exclaimed. “That is when the Kavalians were attacking the Immortal settlement there! That is where they took my mother from.”

Shiria looked at him. “What do you mean took your mother?” She asked quickly.

“Immortals.” Athani spoke now. “Immortals that are in my father’s employ. They took Dysea... kidnapped her during the battle there! Denali and Cha'talla have gone after her from what Andro told us during the last contact with him, but we do not know what has come of it.”

“Why would they take your mother?” Shiria asked softly.

“I don’t know.” Resumar answered. “It is something that has occupied my thoughts for many hours now. At least until you arrived.”

“With your shields at the level they are can you feel your family?” Shiria asked. “Use me as a continued guide if you must!”

Resumar closed his eyes and reached out gingerly within Mindvoice using both Athani and Shiria as anchors. Almost immediately he was able to detect his brothers and sisters and once more his father. He could feel his aunt and the Feravomir as well as all of his mothers except for For'mya. He opened his eyes after a moment. “Yes.” He answered swiftly. “All but my mother For'mya. We... she was with my aunt in the Senate Building when the Kavalians destroyed it with explosives. Andro... we believe the explosion...” Resumar took a deep breath. “We believe she may have died in the explosion.”

-I do not believe that is the case Resumar- Avi’s voice spoke now.

Resumar looked at him. “What do you mean Avi?”

-Reviewing the data from the Etheric scans and when they activated coincides to almost the exact time frame when your mother’s disappeared from the sensor array- He looked up at him. -Activation points of these negative Etheric anomalies are eighteen point nine percent higher than the trace levels we are now detecting-

“I’m not following you Avi.” Resumar spoke.

Shiria’s eyes grew a little wider. “But I am.” She stated firmly. “Avi... 341... what is the percentage that someone with knowledge of Pralor technology could take minute portions of the interior of a negative resonance chamber and make it portable?”

-There would be no purpose in such an endeavor Elder Pralor Shiria- 341 answered.

“Indulge me.” Shiria spoke.

-With the proper schematics and knowledge of Pralor technology the probabilities are 82.5%- Avi answered. -However only certain sections of a negative resonance chamber would be useful in such a device. The molecular structure of the bio-mechanical properties within a chamber would be begin to degrade after only a few hours leaving miniscule amounts that were useable. Certainly not enough material would be left that could effectively hide a ship-

“I’m not taking about a ship Avi.” Shiria said urgently. “Would there be enough material left to effectively eliminate someone’s Mindvoice essence? To block it from being detected by others?”

-With the proper adjustments to negative coefficients and resonance variables. Yes. Such a device could be built to hide an individual as well as completely inhibit their Mindvoice abilities- 341 answered.

“And how big would it be?” Shiria asked.

341 held up his hand and looked at it. –No larger than my fingernail- He responded. –If not smaller-

Shiria looked at Resumar then. “Your mother isn’t dead Resumar Leonidas.” She stated. “You cannot feel her because her Mindvoice resonance is being blocked. And if I had to guess I would say she is no longer on Earth either.”

“What?” Resumar exclaimed. “Why?”

Shiria turned to Ckhoa. “Ckhoa... what time is it on Cabelir?”

“Four hours after sunset.” Ckhoa answered immediately. “The main meal time would have finished thirty minutes ago.”

“Then Poysha would be back in her quarters?” Shiria asked.

Ckhoa nodded. “More than likely preparing a burst transmission to send to Rizon Four yes.”

“Use the communications array here.” Shiria ordered quickly. “It will not be detected by Kavalian Intercepts. We need to talk with her now!”

“Avi... help her!” Resumar snapped moving closer to her. “Shiria... what do you think is going on?”

Shiria turned back to him. “The timing is too precise.” She stated. “The attack on Earth, on Kranek. The attempts on your father and your family. The Drow elf bases you have in The Wilds. Now this use of Pralor technology that the Kavalians should not have. You and your brother are right to think something else is going on Resumar, but I cannot for the life of me figure out what it is! They accomplish nothing by killing your father and members of your family. If they think this will not lead to war they are more insane than I first thought. To do this and not follow up with a full scale invasion? You are more of a military officer than I... does this make sense to you?”

Resumar shook his head. “No. And neither does it make sense to Andro.”

“Hadaria then.” Vonis spoke. “To insure they had a secure footing on Hadaria?”

Resumar shook his head. “That was a political coup against mother.” He stated. “They only supported it. They know the Union Senate would never approve of forcibly returning my mother to power and they gain what they always wanted without any bloodshed. Hadarian Healers in their ranks. Hadaria is a founding member of the Union. The Union Senate would never allow us to attack it; my father would never attack it.”

Shiria looked at him. “Would your brother?”

Resumar met her eyes for a long moment before slowly nodding his head. “If he deemed the Kavalian presence there a threat yes.” He stated confidently. “Andro is not our father and I do not believe he would hold the same convictions as our father in some respects. If Andro sees the Kavalian presence on Hadaria becoming a threat to the Union or to others within the Union yes, he will attack without hesitation. He will go after that Kavalian presence until there is no more threat.”

Shiria shook her head. “It isn’t Hadaria. As you said Resumar... why use force when they have gained what they wanted politically.”

“Then why attempt to kill my father?” Resumar asked. “Why attempt to kill my mothers and my siblings?”

“I don’t know.” She stated softly. “That is why I’m hoping that Poysha can give us some clues to what is going on.”

SCIMITAR

FOUR HOURS FROM EARTH

The slap was hard enough to echo slightly even in the landing bay of the SCIMITAR and Andro reached up to rub his cheek for the second time in less than ten seconds. Wayonn was walking down the ramp of the STRIKER DT with Helen when he saw this, Dutkne and the others as well. Devra stood with Arduri and Naesta at the bottom of the ramp while Elynth and Majeir had already exited and were sitting on the deck watching with what would amount to an amused expression for a dragon. Wayonn looked quickly at Helen.

“I take it this is normal?” He whispered.

Helen smiled and nodded her head as she saw the burgundy red hair of Eliani Leonidas. "Oh yes... quite normal." She stated looking at him. "Eliani shares the sharp tongue and quick temper of her mother Anja." They turned back to watch as Andro lowered his hand and moved his jaw back and forth while Lu'ria looked on with a humorous glint in her amber colored eyes and Ne'Veha couldn't help but giggle while holding Lu'ria's hand.

"Are you quite through?" Andro asked his sister as he towered over her five foot three frame.

"Forn igord riad aulved!" Eliani hissed staring at him with her fern green eyes blazing in anger. "You should have touched us! You should have told us!"

"And if I had done that when you were not in front of me you would have rejoiced to the stars and allowed everyone in three systems know our father was alive." Andro spoke calmly. "That is something he didn't want."

Eliani glared at him for a moment longer before throwing her arms around his shoulders and burying her face into his neck and hugging him tightly. Andro smiled and returned the embrace, feeling the tension leaving his sister but also feeling something heavy weighing on her mind that had nothing to do with their father. He squeezed her tightly and Eliani relished in the feel of his arms around her. Eliani was strong, she knew that, but Andro had the unique ability to calm her and sooth her wilder nature. It was something she always loved about him and why she did not want to be very far from him. She could tell him anything, no matter how personal and it had always been that way.

Andro pulled his face back and stared into her tear stained eyes. [Eliani what is wrong?] He asked her.

[I need... I need your opinion of something Andro. I'm... I feel torn up inside.] She answered him.

His eyes narrowed and he held her tighter. [What? Tell me!]

Eliani kissed his cheek. [Soon. I know we have much to do first.]

[Eli...?] He began.

Eliani shook her head as she touched his face. [Soon.] She spoke. [Zarah is busting to...]

[You are just as important to me as Zarah sister.] He spoke. [I am here for you... always. You know that.]

Eliani nodded. [I know... and when I gather my thoughts enough where I don't ramble I will come to you. I always do.]

Andro nodded and set her back on the deck. [No matter the time.] He told her.

Eliani nodded. [I will... right now I want to immerse myself in the happiness that I feel that father is still alive and meet your new mates.]

Andro leaned over and kissed her cheek once more before nodding. Eliani squeezed his arms before turning to Lu'ria and Ne'Veha and reaching for them. Andro turned and looked at Zarah's beaming face. Lucia was beside her looking equally as happy and Andro knew that they were slowly growing closer and closer. He stepped forward quickly and crushed Zarah in his arms, squeezing her tighter than he had Eliani because of the bond they both shared. Zarah exerted all of her combined vampire and wolf strength and squeezed him back just as tightly as she rubbed her cheek against his. He set her down and brought his hands to her face.

"You are...?"

Zarah nodded. "I am fine Andro." She whispered. "I am... I am healing."

He closed his eyes and touched his forehead to hers. "Zarah I..."

Zarah shook her head. "Don't... you dare apologize to me." She hissed softly. "You saved me Andro... you saved us."

"Yes you did." Lucia spoke softly causing both of them to look at her. Her vampire features also beamed with happiness as Zarah reached out and pulled her close to them. Andro didn't hesitate and encircled Lucia's waist with his arm.

"You brought us together." Zarah whispered as her head dipped and she touched Lucia's cheek. "You made it so we could find each other. As it was meant to be. That is the gift you have given us."

Lucia nodded as her arm snaked around Zarah's waist and pulled her closer. "And it is a gift." She spoke softly. "A gift I would never have found without you."

Andro chuckled. "Alright... enough you two." He said pulling back and kissing both their cheeks. He reached up and traced their skin with the back of his knuckles.

"Andro I wanted to go after mother." Zarah said. "Why did you make us come back?"

“Janae is missing Zarah. The Kavalians hit her apartment at the same time they attacked Grandfather Panos’s home.” Andro told them. “Marci is holding things together very well... but she needs skilled operators that know Sparta and Earth. That is why I had Anton and Cihera return as well. I think Janae is still on Earth and I don’t believe she is dead. I need you and Lucia to find her for me, using Anton and Cihera as your backup. I need you to use your skill to find her. With Lucia beside you it will be even stronger now.”

“Father does not want me using that skill Androcles, you know that.” Zarah said. “He thinks it is a severe invasion of someone’s privacy.”

Andro nodded. “I know... but I am not father.” He answered. “Janae has been trained by our mother, Aunt Aihola and Armetus. She knows her importance and if she was attacked she will drop off the grid completely and not resurface until father returns. And if she was attacked and is being held somewhere because they could not get her off Earth, I want her found. Our father can’t return; he needs to stay dead for now in case the Kavalians have a follow on attack planned. That is why I need you to find her.”

“What of our mother and Aunt Deia?” Zarah asked.

Andro shook his head. “I don’t know.”

“I can’t feel her presence at all Andro. None of us can.” Zarah said softly. “That... that could only mean one thing.”

“I will not believe that until we know for sure.” Andro said.

“And if it’s true?”

Andro met her eyes evenly. “Then as I told Res... the Kavalians will rue the day they ever started down this path.”

Zarah nodded. “We will do it.” She said. “We’ll find her.”

Andro nodded. “Good.”

Zarah looked around his shoulder and saw Eliani step away from embracing Helen and she began to introduce her to the men and women gathered around. Zarah’s dark eyes fell on Dutkne lastly and she felt an involuntary shiver course through her. “Why is it that these people feel so familiar Andro?” She asked looking back to him. “It is almost as if I feel I should know them for some reason.”

Andro gripped her hand. “Come... I’ll introduce you and you can discover it for yourself. But you are right to a degree. We should know them. They are... they are the true Lost Ones that father has been searching for all these years.”

RITAAH

VORTEX CRUISER 341

“... This secure Mistress?” The dark haired Kavalian female spoke from within the secure holotransmission.

Shiria nodded her head with a gentle smile. “I would not put you in danger Poysha... you know that. We are on VORTEX Cruiser 341. No one will be able to detect this signal let alone intercept it.”

“The VORTEX cruiser?” Poysha gasped. “Why? How did you get there? Where is Ckaoa Mistress?”

“I am here sister.” Ckaoa spoke stepping up beside Shiria. “We are safe so do not worry for us.”

“I was... I was just preparing a report to you.” Poysha spoke still somewhat confused at what was happening.

“Poysha... you can tell us what you were going to report now.” Shiria said. “And then I have some questions for you.” She reached out and held her hand to Resumar who took it and moved up on the opposite side of her. “Poysha... you know who this is don’t you?”

Poysha’s blue/green feline eyes grew slightly wider and she nodded her head quickly. “He is... he is Resumar Leonidas. Mistress... he is there with you? What is going on?” Her eyes grew even wider. “If he... the Union has discovered VORTEX Cruiser 341!” She gasped.

“We always knew it would happen sooner or later. Let’s just say that Resumar is here with a separate mission, but one that is necessary and vital.” Shiria said. “I have...” She looked at Resumar. “I have told him who I am... and he can feel it within his blood.” She looked back to Poysha. “Tell us what you were going to report?”

“There is a standing low alert among Kavalian forces.” She said quickly. “There is rumor among the officers here that it has something to do with a report from a field team that Prefect Keleru received two days ago. He cancelled all of his meetings after this report, including the daily military brief which is very unusual, and his nephew Kattu has been seen several times at the main Military Headquarters.”

“Kattu?” Ckhoa said coming forward. “Are you sure sister?”

Poysha nodded. “I saw him once myself.”

“Who is this Kattu?” Resumar asked.

“He is my father’s enforcer.” Athani spoke now. “His oldest brother’s son. He makes... he makes people disappear that do not agree with my father. He’s very strong, very cruel and very good at what he does. He usually remains in the shadows but if he is being seen by others then whatever this rumor is...”

“What are the rumors?” Shiria asked.

“Something to do with Pusintin’s youngest son Leruk.” Poysha said. “No one is speaking openly of it for fear they will draw Kattu’s attention... but the consensus among many of the military is that he has been killed by someone while operating within The Wilds against one of the Drow outposts. It is being kept very low key Mistress... almost as if they do not want Marshall Pusintin to find out. The consensus is that it wasn’t a Drow but someone else who killed him. I think... I think that frightens them. To kill Leruk was no small deed.”

Shiria looked at Resumar when she felt him fidget next to her. “You know something of this Resumar?” She asked.

“I know it’s no rumor.” Resumar stated calmly meeting her eyes. “Andro killed him on Irazuzu. He was the one that was leading the attack on the Drow settlement there. He almost killed Andro’s Drow mate Lu’ria.”

“Your brother did this?” Shiria asked.

Resumar nodded. “Yes.”

Shiria shook her head slowly. “I am not as familiar with Spartan customs as I should be. This is not a good thing I take it? Attempting to harm the wife and mate of a Spartan?”

“Not if you wish to remain living a long and prosperous life.” Res answered. “Going after a Spartan’s mate is a singularly stupid thing to do. It has no honor to it and it shows that you are weak and cowardly and afraid to act as a man. At least to a Spartan.”

Poysha looked stunned. “Leruk was no mere soldier Mistress. He was a fully trained Puma Bane Commando. One of their best by all accounts.”

Shiria nodded still looking at Resumar. “Yes well... not trained enough it seems if he is now dead.” She said turning back to Poysha to answer and then cutting her eyes back to Resumar. “I take it your brother will act as your father has acted in the past when his wives and mates are threatened or harmed. As you would act?” She said.

Resumar shrugged laconically as he drew Athani closer to him and her face beamed as her hand rested on his abdomen. “It’s a pretty safe bet.”

Shiria smiled and turned back to the transmission. “What else Poysha?”

“The Union still has not been able to stop the flow of forces to Hadaria it seems.” She told them. “My guess is that the Prefect had a single Jump Gate built somewhere close to the Union border and somehow was able to connect it to the Union Jump corridors. How I don’t know... but it is the only reason I can think of. The Union Jump Gates are all controlled and operated from a secure facility on Apo Prime. I find it hard to believe he was able to penetrate that facility.”

“Resumar?” Shiria asked.

“She’s right.” Resumar spoke. “It’s a secure facility... no effort has been made to keep it secret, but I disagree with her in that it could not be penetrated. Someone did only a few months ago, for they hid an attempt on my sister Normya by hiding the fact that one of our Gates had been destroyed. My mother believed it was linked to this Rinard and his success at getting my mother removed as Queen of Hadaria.”

“Rinard?” Poysha said quickly causing them to look at her. “I know this name Mistress. A Lycavorian. He was here on Cabelir several times nearly a decade ago.”

“What forces are on Hadaria?” Resumar asked now.

“Upwards of five million biogenic clone ground troops and at least a thousand warships.” Poysha answered. “If it comes to it Resumar Leonidas... the Prefect will not give Hadaria back easily. If at all.”

“Poysha tell me... has there been any unusual activity concerning Keleru or Pusintin?” Shiria asked.

“Unusual how Mistress?” Poysha asked.

“Abnormal behavior perhaps.” Shiria stated. “Meetings that may have took place that are not normal. Any out of place activity around either Keleru’s or Pusintin’s homes. Anything of that sort?”

“Not that I can recall Mistress.” Poysha said. “Everything they do is abnormal to me. I could ask... wait...” She turned from the transmission and appeared to be searching through a short stack of data pads. She turned back quickly. “I don’t know if this is what you mean... but in the last seven weeks the requisitions officer has seen a significant increase in Class Nine Mindvoice dampeners. He did not have any on hand and he had to purchase them in The Wilds.”

Shiria looked at Resumar quickly and then back to her. “Why is that significant?”

“The cost of a Class Nine MV dampener in The Wilds is outrageous Mistress. Upwards of twenty million credits. For some reason the pirate and mercenary scum believe this will shield them from being detected by an individual who can Mindvoice. The fool idiots don’t understand that we can detect that as well.” Poysha answered her. “The Requisitions officer was instructed to purchase thirty of them.”

“What were they to be used for?” Shiria asked.

“Ten of these dampeners were installed in Marshall Pusintin’s home while he is offworld, ten were installed in the Prefect’s home and five were installed in a single examining room within the secure Medical Center near the Prefect’s office. All within the last three days. I know this because I was the technician who made sure they were active and working.” Poysha replied.

“The medical facility?” Shiria asked. “Why? Aside from yourself no one on Cabelir has the Mindvoice ability that a Class Nine Dampener would be needed for.”

“I don’t know Mistress.” Poysha spoke.

“And you say Pusintin is not within the capital?” Shiria asked.

Poysha shook her head. “He left aboard his ship two days ago.” She answered. “No flight plan was filed, which is usually the case with him. I don’t know where he has gone. And I dare not press too hard.”

“Can you get into this medical facility?” Shiria asked.

Poysha nodded without hesitation. “Easily Mistress. My clearances extend to the medical facility. I have been tasked with maintaining the dampeners. The better question is why would I want to?”

Shiria looked at Resumar once more. “Your mother isn’t dead Resumar.” She said with some confidence. “She has been taken from Earth and they are bringing her back to Cabelir. More to the point, Pusintin is bringing her back to Cabelir.”

Resumar’s eyes were wide. “What? Why?”

“That I do not know.” Shiria stated. “There would be no reason to install such powerful dampeners at their homes and in this medical facility unless they plan on holding a powerful Mindvoicer prisoner. Someone like your mother For’mya.”

“How would they... there is no way they could have gotten her off Earth! Why would they want to?” Resumar protested. “That’s just not possible. They would have needed help from the inside. Someone close to my family that could...” Resumar stopped as his eyes went even wider.

“What?” Shiria asked.

“Someone who would know the Durcunusaan and how they would react to an attack on my family.” Resumar answered. “Someone who had working codes to get them into secure areas that are not accessible to normal people.”

“A traitor.” Shiria said softly.

Resumar nodded. “Yes.” He replied as his jaw hardened and the look in his dark eyes made Shiria shiver; and not from the chilly air in the cruiser. He looked at Poysha in the secure holotransmission. “I need you to find out what you can!” He barked the order. “Everything that you are able!”

Poysha looked at Shiria. “Mistress Shiria?” She asked.

Shiria placed her hand on Resumar’s arm just as Athani stepped closer and took his hand. He turned to look at his wife and pulled her close, leaning over to inhale deeply of her sweet tangerine scent and nuzzle her cheek. It had the desired effect and Shiria could feel the tension and anger leaving his body, more from the touch and scent of Athani than anything she did and it only proved to her that indeed they were on the path to the future. She nodded to Poysha.

“We knew this day would come Poysha.” She said softly. “It is what we have worked towards for many years. Can you accomplish what we need without endangering your position and cover?”

Poysha nodded immediately. “Yes.”

Resumar looked up and took a deep breath. “Forgive me for sounding rude.” He spoke. “Do nothing to compromise yourself no matter what you may think you can discover. If you are as deep as I think you are... you are a far greater asset to us than anything we have and I will not risk you no matter what.”

“You... you believe Pusintin has taken your mother from Earth?” Poysha asked. “He cannot be that insane. That is an open and unquestioned act of war.”

“I don’t know what he thinks to accomplish...” Shiria said. “But this action would give some explanation to why they have done what they have. Perhaps they intend to use her as a bargaining chip of some sort. To keep your brother from attacking. Perhaps that is why they haven’t invaded. When do you think you will have something Poysha?”

“It will look odd if I try to enter the facility at night.” Poysha responded. “I will go there tomorrow and contact you on this same channel at this hour tomorrow night.”

Shiria nodded. “As Resumar has said Poysha, do nothing to risk yourself. I would never be able to forgive myself.”

Poysha nodded. “I will be careful Mistress. I will contact you tomorrow.”

Shiria and Resumar watched as the transmission faded and then Shiria turned to Resumar to talk. “I’m sure you have many questions.” She said.

Resumar met her gaze evenly. “And you would be correct.” He stated calmly. “First and foremost is who is she and how deep is she? The next is how did you accomplish that with her being a female?”

Ckhoa stepped forward slightly. “She is my sister and she is helping you!” She hissed softly.

Resumar nodded. “Considering the way females are treated within the KFI, her being a tech that has access to this type of information is extremely out of place isn’t it? How exactly is she able to know all that she knows?”

Athani squeezed his arm gently and looked at Shiria. “Is it what I think it is Scribe Mother?” She asked softly.

Shiria looked at Ckhoa for a long moment and then back to Resumar. He saw the look on her face and then turned to Athani. “Aryschanne... what do you mean?”

“There is only one way she would have the secure access that she does Res. The technical training that she seems to have, as well as the ability to move within the senior ranks of those close to my father.” Athani said softly. “Isn’t that right Scribe Mother? Ckhoa?”

“Would you care to fill me in?” Resumar asked softly.

Athani looked at him. “When my father discovered that the biogenic clone treatments could alter the appearance of females so that we lose the coat of hair that we normally have, make us look like those females within the Union, many of the Puma Bane Pride leaders and officers found them to be very pleasant to look upon.”

Resumar’s dark eyes narrowed. “Please don’t tell me what I think you are going to tell me.” He stated.

Athani nodded. “There is a small group of females that were given the treatments. Some are the daughters of senior Pride leaders and military officers. They were given the treatments and then additional training not usually afforded to our females.”

“In exchange for what?” Resumar demanded.

“The men who walk the power corridors with my father are very vain men Resumar.” She stated. “They feel most everything is beneath them. What better way to stoke this feeling of superiority than make females do the jobs that they won’t do themselves, make them all look like me and Jalersi and Ckhoa here, and then be able to fuck them at their leisure!” She finished the sentence with a harshness in her voice.

Resumar looked at her with wide eyes. “That’s a joke right?”

Athani shook her head. “It is a status thing for the Prides. It gains them my father’s favor to commit their daughters to such a life. And you know how they view females.”

Resumar looked at Shiria. “You allowed this?” He asked.

Ckhoa stepped in front of Shiria. “Mistress Shiria had nothing to do with this!” She snapped. “This was a decision that Poysha and I made together. Shiria tried to stop it when she discovered it, but by then Poysha was already within this inner circle. She is... she is more of what those foul men desire in her appearance and she is... she is better at responding to them in ways that pleases them.”

Shiria watched Resumar’s face for a moment. “Resumar you...”

Resumar ignored her and turned to look at where Mican and Vonis stood. “Mican, Uncle Vonis... prepare a plan to move to her location and extract her if need be. Mican... you know the capital well enough?”

Mican nodded. “Perfectly.” He answered.

“We are closest to her and if she needs our help I want to be able to give it within hours.” Resumar spoke. “Use Avi and 341 to assist.”

Vonis stepped closer to his nephew his vampire blood beginning to churn with incentive as he was a former Intelligence officer and operative. “Objective?” He asked.

Resumar looked at Ckhoa. “Pulling Poysha out of the Kavalian capital if we need to and any of those females who want to go with her.” He stated turning back to him. “Aryschanne?”

Athani nodded without question. “Between Mican and myself... there should be nothing about the capital that we will forget.”

“You cannot do this!” Ckhoa spoke moving up to him. “Think... think of the intelligence you will lose!”

Resumar turned slowly and looked at her. “I will not leave your sister... any of them to sell their bodies or their dignity for information! Not for you, not for us... not for anyone!” He snarled. “It is one of the most vile things I have ever heard of and I will not let it continue one moment longer than necessary. And if my father and brother knew of it they would act in a similar manner!”

Ckhoa looked at him stunned at his words. They were filled with such conviction and anger over what he had discovered. “You must.” Ckhoa said softly. “If you do not... if you do not you will condemn all of them to die.”

“What do you mean?” Resumar demanded.

“All of them... all of them have been implanted with a micro explosive device in their heads.” Ckhoa told him. “It can be triggered by anyone with a detonator or if they leave the planet.”

Athani’s eyes grew wider. “You must be joking!” She exclaimed. “Who... who would do such a thing?”

Ckhoa met her eyes. “Your father ordered it after you defected Athani Leonidas.” She said softly. “Poysha believes none of the others know of it. She discovered it after the medical exam given to her after your defection. All of them had one. It was fused into the base of her skull at the juncture of her spine and her brain under the guise of tests. If you... if you remove them from Cabelir, they will all die.”

“Vith!” Vonis swore. “That is... that is...”

Shiria looked at him and nodded. “Yes... unconscionable.” She said softly. “Yet this is the enemy we face, and they are children compared to others I have witnessed.”

Resumar turned now and looked at Shiria. “What do you mean by that?”

Shiria shook her head. “A discussion for another time perhaps young Resumar. We are here... and it would be foolish of me to return to Rizon Four. You need me here. At least right now. What can we do?”

“I must contact Andro and let him know what we have discovered.” Resumar said instantly.

“We don’t know if what we think is actually true Resumar Leonidas.” Shiria said.

“If you are who you say you are... who I believe you are... then Andro will not question what you and I think.” Resumar answered. “He will act on discovering if it is true. Something we cannot do from here.”

Shiria nodded after a moment. “Of course. It would also allow me to speak with Wayonn since he is with your brother now.”

“Avi... Spartan Secure 11!” Resumar barked as he turned away. “Find my brother and let him know we need to talk. Like yesterday!”

NORMYA’S LIGHT SIX HOURS FROM BELID

Cha’talla stared at himself in the mirror of the quarters they had been assigned, unable to truly comprehend what had taken place in the last seven hours. That is when Esther had finished developing the agent to counteract the biotoxin present in his body as well as every Immortal soldier that had accompanied him. It had truly been a miraculous event. The initial pain of the transformation, the toxin being eradicated from within his body, was minor compared to the joy and euphoria that he felt when he looked upon himself in the mirror several hours later. What he saw... it was the epiphany that he had been waiting for all of his life.

His skin was no longer drawn tight, no longer wrinkled and grayish in color in some spots. Now his skin was a deep bronze color, as if he had spent all of his waking moments in the sun. His bone spurs, beginning to grow back since he had stopped filing them down, they were now a healthy white color and set against the bronze color of his skin they were nowhere near as fearsome looking. His forehead was no longer sunken and his eyes appeared so much brighter and clear because they were no longer set back into his skull. His face still bore the scars of over seven thousand years of life, but he now had short dark hair beginning to form a beard around his strong jaw and short dark hair quickly growing in on top of his once bald head. It was a miracle unlike any he had ever witnessed and now when he stroked the flawless skin of his Blessed Wife he would no longer see the large grayish colored hands. Now he would see strong hands and fingers that danced across her flesh with love and honor.

Cha'talla turned when he heard Esther enter and he looked at the vampire pureblood who had first saved him and then altered the course of his life. She was over six millennia his junior in age, yet she had utterly rewritten everything about him from the first moment he had taken her blood to save himself. It was not a question of whether he loved her, but only how much. He startled her when he moved faster than a man his sized should have been able and he scooped her into his powerful arms and covered her sweet lips with his own. Esther whimpered in total, unrestrained delight and wrapped her arms around his head as she returned the blistering kiss with all that she was. She hadn't known before what he would look like if he continued with the treatments she had thought were changing him. She had fallen in love with an Immortal and she did not want him to look different. He was beautiful to her no matter what his outward physical appearance was. Seeing him now, Esther cursed herself for not thinking about it sooner. It was not something she had expected, but it was a miracle for lack of a better word. She knew that he would look something of what their sons looked like, but Esther had no idea he would be so ruggedly beautiful. She could feel her body call out for him in a way that it never had before and she allowed her fingers to caress his face as he drew back from her and she saw for the first time what the man who had claimed her heart and soul justly looked like.

Cha'talla grinned at her, baring the tips of his vampiric fangs. "Do I... do I meet with your approval my Blessed Wife?" He asked.

Esther could only shake her head as tears filled her eyes. "Oh... my Blessed Husband." She said softly running a finger across his thin lips as she stared into his eyes. "You... you are the most... the most delicious man I have ever laid my eyes upon. You always have been no matter what you looked like."

Cha'talla pulled her close, burying his face in her dark hair and spinning her around. "I feel... I feel reborn Esther!" He gasped. "I feel... I feel reborn!"

"You are Cha'talla." She cried with a smile. She pulled his head back again. "You... you do realize that I will... I will need to spend days rediscovering you in our bed."

Cha'talla laughed and squeezed her tighter. "That is a time I look forward to!" He spoke. "And perhaps it will be time to give our sons the daughter that you want so badly and they have been badgering us to have."

Esther smiled brilliantly and kissed him hard. "I will definitely hold you to that Cha'talla my Blessed Husband!" She said.

"A promise I look forward to fulfilling." He spoke.

"Come with me. I want to show you something." Esther said taking his arm in her hands.

Cha'talla didn't know how she had memorized how to get to the landing bay so easily, only that several twists and turns and an elevator ride down and suddenly Cha'talla was standing in the port landing bay of NORMYA'S LIGHT. As he stepped off the elevator with Esther, his eyes took in not the dozens of fighters that were being prepped in the background, or the hundreds of crewman that scurried about with a singular purpose. No... what caught Cha'talla's eyes were the several hundred Akruxian Immortals that were mingling with the Spartan troops, all of them preparing their equipment for battle.

And all of them looking exactly as he did.

Cha'talla knew it wouldn't have mattered to the Lycavorian Spartans what his people looked like. The majority of them had stood together on Kranek and thrown back a superior Kavalian force soundly forging a bond of brotherhood that would now never be broken for it was part of Spartan and Akruxian honor, yet

Cha'talla didn't doubt it made things so much easier. No longer did the Spartans see the gray skin of their once vaunted enemy, now they saw the tanned flesh of new allies and friends. Cha'talla heard the laughter and saw two of his people standing with a group of Spartans, all of them holding their weapons and discussing one thing or the other. Not one of his people had refused the anti-toxin produced by Esther. She was well known as Cha'talla's wife and considered by many as their Matriarch Mother and they would never question her skill or heart. He saw dozens of his people with dark hair just beginning to grow on their heads, blond hair, brown hair, many of them like him with facial hair beginning to form. No doubt this was taking place on the opposite side of the ship in the starboard landing bay Cha'talla thought. He would never have thought six short months ago that he would be standing here on a Union ship and considered an ally and friend.

"Brother?" T'lolt's voice from the side caused him to turn and look at his brother. They were equal in size and build, but T'lolt had light brown hair beginning to grow on his head, and his eyes were light brown instead of dark brown.

"T'lolt!" Cha'talla gasped.

They embraced each other tightly and then held each other at arm's length. "Never did I imagine a day like this brother." T'lolt spoke. "This is beyond what we had ever..."

Cha'talla nodded slowly. "Yes it is."

T'lolt looked at him. "I wish... I wish he was here Cha'talla." He said. "For the first time in centuries I wish he was here among us. Beside us as we used to be. It would be different then."

Cha'talla squeezed his brother's arms. "That may be too much for us to hope for T'lolt." He answered. "But... I wish the same thing."

T'lolt nodded and took a deep breath. "We are ready." He stated as Denali and Danarla walked over from where they had been standing beside the STRIKER DT.

Denali looked at Cha'talla as they stopped beside him and T'lolt and shook his head. "As my sister Eliani would say, this is going to utterly freak people out." He stated with a smile as he took Cha'talla's hand in a firm grasp and shook it. "I was able to talk with Andro briefly and he sends his regards and his happiness at what you and the others have discovered."

"He... he approves of the plan we have?" Cha'talla asked.

Denali shook his head. "He didn't ask about it." He said. "My brother is no fool Cha'talla. He is not going to second guess us from halfway across the universe." Denali grinned broadly. "My father is alive Cha'talla."

Cha'talla's dark eyes grew wide and he gripped his hand tighter. "Alive? But... we saw... how is this possible Denali?" He glanced at Esther and saw her smiling brightly. No doubt she knew this when she had come to their quarters.

Denali shook his head. "Andro didn't go into details... only that our father is alive and no matter what we hear or see on the Netnews it is only a façade to protect that knowledge. He has linked up with the SCIMITAR again and is returning to Earth from some meeting he had but he wanted us to know."

"Your mother? Does she know?" Cha'talla asked quickly.

"Andro was able to feel her very briefly." Denali spoke quickly. "Whatever was blocking her Mindvoice resonance is gone and no doubt she would have been able to feel him. She is heavily shielded now, as are Normya and Tir'ut, but they know we are coming. I imagine once we arrive in Belid's system we'll know more for we'll be able to touch them easily, as well as your son Lynom, without worrying about someone among Phy'iad's group detecting us."

T'lolt nodded his head with a large smile as well. "Then I will be able to finally thank your father in person for the life he gave back to me on Lycavore." He stated. "That is enough reason to obliterate these fools under Phy'iad and return Dysea to our tribe and family."

Cha'talla nodded. "Indeed it is." He said. "Indeed it is. We are ready?"

Danarla nodded her head. "We were just going to start shuttling our forces to the VIPER. Ta'lon is already onboard and prepping the troop areas." She stepped forward closer and looked at him, imagining a young half Immortal half vampire that looked like him loving her daughter. Danarla found that if his son was half the man that Cha'talla had proven to be, she would never have need to worry about As'hia again. "I... I speak for my husband as well Cha'talla... I speak for us both when I say we were wrong. We were wrong about so many things."

Cha'talla shook his head. "I have dwelled in the past for too long." He spoke. "I will not do so any longer. Nor should any of us. It is a new beginning for all of us..."

Danarla nodded. "Yes it is."

"My orders still stand." Cha'talla spoke straightening up to his full six foot five height. "These animals that follow Phy'iad are not AkruXian. Unless they throw aside their weapons and surrender, we will take no prisoners. They are beyond any hope of redemption and I have neither the time nor the patience to try and make them see things our way. We will execute our plan... we will remove the threat in any way possible... and we will return Dysea to her rightful place with her family. Our family."

Denali nodded his head. "Best damn news I've heard in the last hour." He stated. "Oh... one more thing. According to my brother... you've been frocked."

Cha'talla looked at him confused. "Frocked?" He asked. "What... what does this mean?"

Denali grinned even wider now. "Until this mission is over, and unless you refuse, you are now a General of Lycavorian Union forces." Denali spoke seeing the look on his face go from one of confusion to total astonishment. "Overall command is yours... and I am your second in command with T'lolt."

"But you are... you are a Prince of the Union." T'lolt gasped.

Denali nodded. "And I've never commanded anything larger than a company in battle." He stated. "Something that both of you have done more times than me. I wanted Andro to do this. It is customary for our people, Lycavorian Spartans... it is customary for us to learn all we can from those who have more experience than us. I don't have a problem with this." Deni turned to Danarla. "Colonel?"

Danarla shook her head immediately. "Not a one." She stated.

"There you have it." Deni answered. "My time will come soon enough, and until it does I intend to learn all I can."

T'lolt laughed now. "Hah!!! You have never been a General brother! This ought to be good!"

Cha'talla looked at Esther and saw her face beaming with pride. He turned back to Denali and nodded his head. "So be it." He spoke. "Begin shuttling our forces to the VIPER and let's go get back our Queen."

SCIMITAR

NINETY MINUTES FROM EARTH'S HOME SYSTEM

"These are his women Dutkne?" Arduri asked as they sat at the single large table in the mess lounge of the SCIMITAR.

Dutkne looked up from his food and glanced over to where the two female elves were sitting with who they now knew were Andro's sisters. He turned back to face Arduri, who sat with Devra on one side and Naesta on the other. Nirilo sat across from his mother and Drey and Caia were sitting on his opposite side. Dutkne turned back to Arduri and nodded. "His two elven mates yes." He answered casually. "Sadi his anome and Carisia his vampire wife are on Earth keeping up appearances."

Arduri looked at him. "I thought your people hated vampires." She asked.

Dutkne put his fork down and dropped his hands to either side of his plate. "Many thousands of years have passed since that day Arduri Re Mydala." He stated. "While it is true that those in the Protectorate have a profound dislike of vampires, we have lived away from our brothers in the Union. I have discovered through the years that millions of High Coven citizens defected to the Union. If what I have seen is accurate, the vampire population within the Union is over fifty million now."

"What you have seen?" Devra asked softly. "I thought you said you've never been here."

Dutkne nodded. "I haven't. Androcles has shown me."

"Showed you?" Naesta asked. "Showed you how?"

"Within this Mindvoice that your people use?" Devra stated as she looked at him.

Dutkne nodded. "Yes."

"So passing knowledge and such is possible with this skill? You can read minds?" Devra asked.

Dutkne shook his head quickly. "No... nothing like that. It is more being able to pass images and certain visual things to men or women that you are able to connect with. Reading a person's thoughts as you suggest is strictly taboo within the Protectorate and from what I have been able to see... it is severely frowned upon within the Union. It is just not done.”

“But it is a skill you possess?” Naesta pressed.

Dutkne looked at her. “Anyone with the ability to Mindvoice can sense another’s surface emotions and thoughts.” He said. “It’s in our blood because of our Pralor ancestors. The Pralors used Mindvoice exclusively to communicate. Actually going deeper than surface thoughts and emotions is something we are raised and taught to avoid at all costs. As I said... it is simply not done.”

“But you can?” Naesta pushed him.

“If you are waiting for me to say yes Naesta... then yes. It is an ability I have.” Dutkne answered. “Using the system that the Lycavorians here in the Union use, anyone who is a Tier Six Mindvoicer, with the proper instruction and schooling could do this.”

“And how many of these Tier Six men and women are on this ship right now?” Naesta asked.

Dutkne tilted his head to the side for a moment. “Including Wayonn, myself, Drey and Caia... thirteen.”

Arduri looked surprised. “Only thirteen?” She asked. “I thought all of your people could do this.”

“We can... but to achieve the level that would require a Lycavorian to read someone’s thoughts takes years of training.” Dutkne said. “The vast majority of our people do not bother to get that schooling because quite frankly... it is extremely boring and tediously annoying.”

Devra and Arduri couldn’t help but smile at the disgusted way he answered the question but Naesta continued to press him. “How many of these... these Tier Six people are within the Union?”

Dutkne sipped his drink and then lowered his cup to the table. “If you include those bonded to a dragon... less than five thousand.” He answered.

“That is a significant number.” Naesta insisted.

“Perhaps to you...” Dutkne said. “But when you consider that the population of the Lycavorian Union, at its last census, was well over thirty trillion lifeforms... five thousand is microscopic”

“Thirty trillion!” Arduri gasped. “That is more than double the Vanari Empire!”

Dutkne nodded. “Yes... I know.”

“So there is no one higher than this Tier Six?” Naesta asked.

Dutkne met her green eyes. “Why the intense interest in how many there are Naesta?” He asked with a grin. “Are you hiding something you don’t want anyone to know?”

“Certainly not!” Naesta popped. “I am... I am curious. That’s all.”

Dutkne smiled. “At the moment there are ten individuals who cannot be labeled as Tier Six.” He answered. “They cannot be charted... or are close to the point where they can’t be measured.”

Devra looked at him. “Androcles Leonidas is one of them isn’t he?”

“Why?” Dutkne asked her softly.

“I looked into his eyes Dutkne. There is... there was wisdom and power within those eyes. Wisdom and power that one so young should not have yet he wields it as if it is second nature to him.” Devra said.

Arduri turned to look at her. “How did you convince him to let us accompany them mother?”

Devra smiled. “I don’t think I did.” She replied.

“But they allowed us to come with them at the last minute mother. While you were talking with him.” Arduri said.

Devra nodded. “Yes I know. Yet I don’t believe it was anything I said that changed his mind. I believe... I believe it was his dragon.”

“What did you offer him mother?” Naesta asked.

Devra looked at her. “Anything he wanted.” She answered quickly. “Engine technology, weapons, anything he wanted.”

Naesta’s eyes grew wide. “Mother how could you?” Naesta rasped.

Devra looked at her. “Because I want your sister back with us and they can help us to achieve this goal.” She answered sternly. “I do not care what it takes or what I have to do. I will not abandon your sister as so many outside of us at this table have done!”

“And I suppose he took it all?” Naesta spat.

Devra looked at Dutkne then and she shook her head. “He refused.” She said softly. “I was willing to give him anything and he refused.”

Naesta's eyes grew even larger and she looked at her mother. "If... if he refused what you offered him... then what... what did he want?"

"His price was that I keep an open mind." Devra said gently. "That was it. To keep an open mind. And to give him the opportunity to allow him to show us that what we fear most about the Lycavorian people is something that we fear for no reason."

"That by itself should show you..." Dutkne began.

The loud smashing sound and the skittering of utensils across the metal floor drew their attention quickly. Dutkne's eyes went wide when he saw Warem on the deck on his back and the female elf standing over him.

"Are you mentally defective?" She barked at him loudly. "I told you to stop that!"

Warem shook his head to clear his thoughts. Her punch to his jaw had carried quite a bit more power in it than her body appeared to be able to hold. He looked up at her as he pushed himself up on his elbows. "But... your scent... it..."

Dutkne shook his head and got to his feet. "If you will excuse me ladies. I need to save one of my men before he gets his mida handed to him."

The female elf, a Commander in the SCIMITAR's fighter wing, had long blond hair and stunning gray eyes Dutkne noticed as he moved across the room quickly. She filled out her flight suit exceptionally well, and her four inch high elven ears were almost turning red in anger. "Just because my scent tells you that I find you attractive does not give you the go ahead to come up to me and start playing with my ears or hit me with your aura you arrogant fool!"

Warem began getting to his feet. "But it said... it said this was the way to see if your species are interested!"

The elf looked at him with wide eyes. "What? My species? You are mentally defective! Vada carians rhin jar! Who told you that?" (The gods save us)

"I read it!" Warem exclaimed as he got to his feet. "You speak the ancient language!" He spoke surprised.

"Of course I speak the ancient language! Do you think I am stupid? Over half the Union speaks the ancient language and almost all of the elves who are pilots in the fleet!" She spouted back. "And my name is E'yarna igord!"

"I am not a fool!" Warem protested.

"Coming up to an female when you are not their mate or involved with them and fondling their ears is not the way to get her interested in you! Nor is it wise to hit them with your aura when touching their ears doesn't work! Some of us elven females have been around Lycavorian males enough to know when you're doing that." E'yarna shouted. "It's a good way to piss them off and get your ass kicked though! Now what does that make you?"

"You did not kick my ass!" Warem barked.

"And what do you call it where you come from matus haro?" E'yarna asked him smugly as she folded her arms under her medium sized chest, purposefully lifting her firm cone shaped breasts upward. (Big boy)

"I am not... I am not from this quadrant of space!" Warem spoke.

"Vinn' sibfla!" E'yarna snapped. (No shit)

"You do not have to use foul language!" Warem popped right back.

E'yarna looked at him stunned. She then executed a perfect front side kick that caught Warem unprepared and sent him sprawling once more. E'yarna used her elven speed to pounce on him and slap his face as he turned to look up, his own eyes angry now. "I will use whatever language I deem fit!" She snarled at him as she grabbed the front of his uniform and jerked him upwards as much as she was able. Warem was not a small man and E'yarna only managed to get his upper body an inch or so off the deck, but it had the desired effect. "And if you so much as touch me or hit me with your pathetic aura without my permission one more time I will gnaw off your arm at the elbow igord! And then I will give it back to you! Do I make myself very clear?"

"Yes!" Warem barked. "Now get off me!"

E'yarna released the front of his shirt and stood up to her full height of five foot two. She brushed back her hair and turned to go back to her table. She picked up her mug from the deck and sat back down next to the other two elf females who were watching. She leaned close to the dark haired female.

“How did I do?” She whispered.

“I don't know E'yarna.” Her friend answered. “You may have scared him off.”

“He's a wolf!” E'yarna spoke. “They don't scare easily. And he's so handsome I almost jumped his bones right there on the floor!”

The three of them shared a female laugh as Dutkne stepped up to Warem and looked down at him. “I distinctly remember telling you to mind your manners Warem.” He said with a knowing grin. “I told you the females here in the Union are more traditional.”

Warem pulled himself to his feet. “I didn't know she could feel my aura!” He growled. “And I only touched her ears because they looked tasty and she smells delicious! She tickled my nose.”

“Tickled or not... I'd say she doesn't want anything to do with you.” Dutkne spoke. “For once can you try and keep it in your pants.”

“I will now!” Warem snapped. “I will also stick with females of our own species!” He said rubbing his jaw. “She hits harder than you Dutkne. I'm a lover not a fighter.”

They heard the soft laughter behind them. “She likes you Warem.” The voice spoke.

Dutkne and Warem turned and saw Andro standing beside the Durcunusaan officer in the doorway. Warem bowed his head quickly. “Forgive me Milord... I did not...”

Andro stepped up to him and slapped his shoulder lightly. “Don't bow your head to me Warem. I'm still a man just like you.” He said. “E'yarna likes you.”

“Likes me Milord?” Warem gasped. “More likely she wants to kick my ass.”

“She's been on the SCIMITAR for three years now and in all that time I think every single Lycavorian on this ship has hit on her at one point or another.” Andro said. “You are the first one to get that much of a reaction out of her. Normally she just cusses them out... but she actually knocked you around. That's a good sign.”

“You are jesting Milord.” Warem said with wide eyes. “Aren't you?”

Andro looked at Bren. “Bren?”

Bren nodded his head. “It's the truth.” He stated. “She has also never crossed her arms and stuck her chest out at any of them like she did with you.”

“Milord... surely you are joking with me.” Warem said. “She was angry. She wanted to kick my mida.”

“Trust me on this Warem.” Andro said. “You want her to become interested in you... put aside the ladies man routine and show her that she is worth the effort you put forth. Most elf females will not arbitrarily sleep with any male unless they believe that a relationship will ensue and be sincere. If that's what you want... then show her this. If it isn't... stick with females of our kind Warem. They will know exactly what you want and they won't expect something more in return.”

Warem looked at Dutkne quickly and then back to Andro. “Thank you Milord.” He spoke.

Andro smiled and looked at Dutkne as Warem turned and headed back to his table. “Dutkne... this is Bren. He is the senior Durcunusaan officer in my security detachment.” Andro said.

“So then you do have security?” Dutkne said as he and Bren shook hands.

Bren laughed. “If that is what you want to call it.” He chortled. “I haven't been able to protect him since he was sixteen. He won't let me. Besides... when you have four tons of teeth and tail wherever you go, you can't get much more secure than that.”

Dutkne grinned and nodded his head. “I see your point. Where are Wayonn and Helen?”

Andro pulled him along as they began to walk further into the mess lounge. “They are eating together in one of the smaller lounges on the deck above us.” He replied as he directed them back toward the table Dutkne had just left. “Probably devising more ways to drive my father and I completely insane with their cryptic talk.”

Dutkne rolled his eyes. “Ah yes... cryptic talk. Sometimes I wonder if that is an inbred trait among our Pralor ancestors. It is an incredibly taxing method of teaching; for those poor slobs doing the learning that is.”

Andro grinned. “I take it you get that quite a bit from Wayonn?”

“You have no idea.” Dutkne said. “Though I would hazard a guess and say that since Helen is also descended from my grandfather, our Aunt it would seem, I would say that you and your father know exactly what I am talking about.”

“In that you would be a hundred and ten percent accurate.” Andro stated.

“Then you know of the mind twisters they can hit you with?” Dutkne said.

Andro chuckled again. “Only too well.” He said as they came up to the table where Devra and the others sat. Nirilo and Drey started to get to their feet but Andro waved them down. “You will find that on this ship we do not stand on protocol.” Andro said. “I hate protocol in fact. Gives me a heat rash.”

Neither Drey nor Nirilo could keep from smiling broadly as they returned to their seats and Andro looked at Devra. “Regent Re Mydala... I would like to introduce you to Commander Bren of the Durcunusaan.”

Bren bowed his head as Devra came to her feet. “Regent... it is an honor.” He said.

Devra looked at this dark haired man intently. He was easily six feet plus and looked to be well over two hundred pounds of chiseled muscle. His dark eyes twinkled with something that Devra had never seen in before and it caused her to shiver slightly. “Commander.” She said in reply.

Andro looked at her. “I have arranged for you to stay at my villa on Cranae Island in the port city of Gytheio once we arrive on Earth. All of your party actually. Dutkne and the others, with the exception of Wayonn, will be staying at my brother Resumar’s villa a short distance away.”

“That is not necessary Prince Androcles.” Devra said. “We would be more than satisfied with guest quarters.”

Andro smiled. “They are guest quarters.” He replied. “We are close enough to Earth now that I have already spoken with Sadi within Mindvoice and she is arranging it as we speak. I did not want to use the communications array so that the signal is not picked up by just anyone.”

“In Mindvoice?” Arduri asked now. “We are still... we are still over an hour from Earth are we not?”

Andro looked at her and nodded. “Yes.”

“You are strong enough to talk to her from here?” Arduri asked.

“Sadi is my anome... we have a much deeper connection that allows us to do many things that others cannot.” Andro said. “It is no different than my father and my mothers.”

“And do you share this type of connection with all your wives and mates?” Arduri asked.

“To a somewhat lesser degree right now... but yes.” Andro said.

“And later?” Naesta asked.

“Eventually yes.” Andro said.

“Who don’t you want to know we are coming?” Devra asked calmly.

“There is a possibility that there may still be Kavalian assassins on Earth.” Andro spoke. “Someone of importance is still missing and she is not one who would simply just disappear without reason.”

“Will we be in danger?” Devra asked.

Andro shook his head. “No. I’ve assigned Bren as your personal security and he has several other Durcunusaan team members waiting at my villa to remain with your daughters.” Andro looked at Nirilo. “Between the Durcunusaan and your own security there should be no issues.”

“So we’ll be confined to your villa?” Naesta asked with a tenseness in her voice.

Andro met her eyes. “It is my home Naesta Re Mydala. Not a prison. I don’t imagine you will want to do much sightseeing, but if there is anything you desire you only need to ask Bren and he can arrange it. Gytheio is a beautiful city and you can go there if you wish. I do not want you going to Sparta at this time for obvious reasons.”

“So you are dismissing us then?” Arduri asked with a very neutral voice.

“Not hardly.” Andro spoke. “Based on what I have already studied of the information that your mother gave to me, I have many questions for you. This is my home you will be staying at. It has become the... temporary headquarters for me since my father must remain dead for now and I am... I am in charge so to speak. At least that is what everyone thinks right now. It will not look odd if I choose to work out of my home for a time.”

“How much time?” Devra asked.

“Until such time as I discover why the Kavalians have attacked my family in so many locations and what their ultimate goals are.” Andro answered. “That does not mean however that we will do nothing to attempt to find your daughter. I gave you my word and I intend to keep it. Our intelligence division is taxed right now and The Wilds is a very large place, but we will find where these men have taken your daughter.”

“And you are going to do this all for nothing?” Naesta asked.

“Naesta!” Devra snapped turning to look at her. “Enough of this... please!”

“You have nothing I want Naesta Re Mydala.” Andro said calmly. “You seem to have some preconceived notion of who and what my people are. Whatever the history you have with Dutkne and the Protectorate does not widen to include us, though I believe this attitude extends less from Dutkne and the others and more from what you fear and what you don’t seem to understand. Or what you don’t want to understand. As I told your mother... if you will allow me and others to show you, I think you will find that we are not so different from you and your people in what we desire. We just go about it differently. If your sister is in The Wilds... then we will find her. It is not a matter of if... it is a matter of when. You just need to trust us.”

“Trust is a relative term Androcles Leonidas.” Naesta said softly. “It is not something very easily earned.”

Andro nodded. “You see... something we agree on Naesta Re Mydala. We are starting already.” He said with a smile. “There is hope for us yet.”

Naesta met his gaze and for the first time since coming here with her mother, she allowed the genuine smile to crack her soft violet lips. “Perhaps.” She said softly.

Andro turned his head and his eyes found Lu'ria and Ne'Veha watching him expectantly. He turned back to Devra. “Regent Re Mydala... you will be joining us on my STRIKER DT when we leave the SCIMITAR once she is in orbit but if you will excuse me now... I have neglected my SirsanGai for too long since I turned her.”

Devra opened her mouth to reply but her choice of words died in her throat as in two incredible bounds Androcles Leonidas had leaped across thirty meters of mess lounge and gather Ne'Veha into his arms. She watched as the elven female wrapped her arms around his shoulders and they shared a blistering kiss of passion right there in front of everyone as Lu'ria and his sisters looked on with beaming faces. She turned slowly back to Bren and saw his own dark eyes gazing at her and she felt that shiver course through her once more.

“They are... they are quite passionate.” She stammered.

Bren smiled. “Wait until you see him greet his anome Sadi, but it has been like that for anyone who spends much time around the Leonidas family. They have a very unique and quite unquenchable passion about them. It is contagious.” He answered as he settled into the chair next to Nirilo and Dutkne pulled one from another table.

“What he just said.” Arduri asked. “What does it mean?”

“SirsanGai?” Bren asked.

Arduri nodded. “Yes.”

“Elven Heart.” Bren answered.

“And she is like him?” Devra asked as she reached for her own chair. “She is wolf?”

Bren nodded. “Yes... Lu'ria he turned in order to save her life and Ne'Veha he turned because she wanted it and he loves her.”

“But this Sadi... she is his...” Arduri began.

“His anome... his soulmate.” Bren answered. “Yes that is true.”

“And yet he can still say he is in love with these others.” Arduri said softly. “That doesn’t seem... that doesn’t seem possible.”

“It is.” Bren spoke. “He is much like his father in that regard... and to this day no one is able to explain it. No one tries anymore. As with our Queens, Lu'ria, Ne'Veha, Carisia and Sadi love each other just as much as they love him. Sadi is his anome, and she will always have a larger pull over him based on that fact, but never doubt they don’t love each other.”

“Are there many relationships like theirs and his father?” Devra asked.

Bren shook his head quickly. “No. They are very rare... though the most well known among them happen to be close to the Leonidas family which should tell you a lot. The man the King considers his brother has two mates, both elven females, one he turned and the other he did not. She is also a Drow like Lu'ria. I’m sure you will meet them all at some point if you remain among us for any length of time. One of the things we cherish as a people is family.” He waited for Devra to return to a sitting position as he gazed at her. “I imagine you do as well or you would not be here.”

Devra met his eyes evenly. “Yes.”

“Good... another thing that we have in common it seems.” Bren said looking at Naesta. “We may not be that different at all.” He turned back to Devra. “I’d like to ask some questions if I may.”

Devra nodded. “Certainly. What sort of questions?” She replied.

“Andro and Dutkne here have given me some idea of the history of your people.” Bren spoke evenly. “I’d like to hear in your words about the history of your people with this Orionis Syndicate.”

It didn’t take Andro long to pull Ne’Veha and Lu’ria out of the mess lounge and walk with them back to the large Ready Room he shared with Sa’sur. She was on the bridge and he just wanted to spend time with his elven mates before his duties took him away once more. He rested on the floor with Ne’Veha sitting on one side, Lu’ria the other. Their heads rested on his shoulders, the fingers of their hands entwined with his and they basked in the feeling of his aura swirling around them and his physical presence beside them.

[You will grow stronger... both of you.] Andro’s voice filled their minds. [Sadi and I will always help you, but do not be afraid to ask anyone within my family about something that seems odd or out of place to you.]

[These new Lycavorians?] Ne’Veha asked. [Are they our friends?]

[Lu’ria asked the same question.] Andro replied. [And I believe they are. They are part of the Lost Ones that my father has been searching for. And this Dutkne... he is somehow different than the others.]

[In what way?] Lu’ria asked.

[There is a connection I have with him.] Andro answered. [Like I know him... like I have always known him. It is very strange... but it is comforting at the same time.]

[Andro...] Lu’ria drew her head back and looked at him. [I spoke with my mother. She says... she told me that my entire family is waiting to meet with you at the villa.]

Andro nodded. [I knew this Ilythiiri Tessai. It doesn’t frighten me.]

[My father... he may not be happy my love.] She told him. [He is a very traditional Drow and he wanted me to marry a Drow warrior that he thought could...]

Andro reached up and touched her cheek, loving the way his tanned skin contrasted against her dark caramel colored skin. [You let me worry about your father Ilythiiri Tessai. No one will separate us now that we are all together. I won’t allow it.]

Lu’ria’s face beamed at his words and she rested her head on his shoulder again. [We are not yet all together Andro.] Ne’Veha spoke softly. [Not as we should be.]

Andro smiled. [You have been talking with KertaGai.] He said.

[Yes... but I feel it as well Androcles.] Ne’Veha said. [It is like an echo... an empty thread in Mindvoice that is supposed to be filled.]

[SirsanGai is right qu’ess d’ussta xukuth.] Lu’ria spoke. [I feel it too.]

Andro nodded. [I know... I feel it too... but I have only just discovered you Ilythiiri Tessai and SirsanGai is newly wolf. I want time to explore all of you.]

[Destiny sometimes does not wait for us qu’ess d’ussta xukuth. You know that better than us.] Lu’ria said.

Andro smiled and nodded his head. [How well I know this.] He stated. [We...]

The internal COM shattered their moment and Andro’s eyes darkened at the unwanted interruption as Sa’sur’s voice broke into their time together. “Andro... we’re receiving a Priority Alpha communication on your Spartan 11 channel. It’s from Resumar and it’s coming in on an odd frequency.”

Andro nuzzled both Lu’ria and Ne’Veha’s elven ears as he got to his feet quickly. “What do you mean odd?” He asked as he stood completely.

“Very high frequency and incredibly focused on a narrow beam.” Sa’sur answered.

“He’s using the MV ship’s COM array.” Andro said as he moved for his desk. “Route it here to my desk Sa’sur. And have Helen and Wayonn join me as soon as they can. Dutkne as well.”

“We are here already.” Helen’s voice broke in as Lu’ria and Ne’Veha turned. They saw Wayonn and the vampire officer Valin but ignored them both and held out their hands for her. Helen didn’t hesitate and took their hands as they drew her close. “Wayonn, Valin and I were coming to speak with you anyway.”

Wayonn stopped just behind Helen, Valin moving to the side as they all turned to look at Andro as he tapped on his command console and the holodisc on the floor activated, flickered and then cleared instantly with the image of Resumar.

“Res!” Andro barked. “What is wrong? Have you been compromised?”

Resumar shook his head. “No. Andro... we think... we think we know why we can’t feel mother within Mindvoice. Why there is nothing but a void there... as if she is gone.”

“We?” Andro asked.

They watched as Resumar reached to the side and the female hand took his and he gently pulled Shiria into the transmission. Wayonn gasped and stepped forward instantly. “Shiria?” He almost shouted.

Andro looked at him quickly and then back to the transmission as he gazed at the very attractive and exotic looking female. He moved around the desk slowly his azure eyes focused on her, alarms going off in his head and in his blood that this was another person he should know.

“It is very good to see you again Wayonn.” Shiria spoke with a dazzling smile. “It has been too long in my opinion.” Her dark eyes fell on Androcles and her smile grew more brilliant. “And you are Androcles Leonidas no doubt. Your eyes give you away you know.”

Helen stepped forward quickly after glancing at Wayonn. “Andro... Andro she is a...”

“Pralor.” Andro said softly as realization dawned on him.

If it was possible Shiria’s smile grew even wider and her dark eyes shone with happiness. Wayonn stepped closer to the transmission. “Shiria what are you doing? You should not be there! It is dangerous!”

Shiria looked at Resumar and then back to Wayonn. “I am quite safe Wayonn... I doubt very much a descendant of Sumar would allow any harm to come to me. I now have twice the security I normally have thanks to Resumar and we have information that Androcles needs to hear. I decided it was time to stop playing this hiding game that you have insisted I play for ten millennia. When I received the signal that Avatar 341 had been activated and would no longer respond to my directives I came here immediately. It’s a good thing too.”

“If The Kavalians discover you are there...” Wayonn exclaimed.

“They won’t.” Shiria stated. “At least not yet.”

“Shiria...”

“No Wayonn... you have protected my existence for ten thousand years! I know why this needed to be done and I accepted it... but not any longer!” Shiria spoke calmly. “All of us... all of us with Pralor blood can feel the call now Wayonn. We can no longer deny it... not even you. I will no longer deny it. I want to be among my people... those who have the same blood pumping in their veins.”

Andro looked at Wayonn his eyes wide. “She is... she is a pureblood Pralor?” He gasped.

Wayonn nodded slowly. “For lack of a better term... yes.”

Shiria chuckled in the transmission. “I actually like the term pureblood.” She stated with a grin. “It sounds so feral.”

“She is the last of the Pralor species. I was going to wait and tell your father when this business with the Kavalians was over.” Wayonn spoke softly. “I did not expect she would do something so foolish though.”

“She has done nothing foolish old man!” Resumar snapped angrily. “She and those she came with kept the Coven from escaping this planet with detailed plans of VORTEX Cruiser 341 and if not for her we would never have discovered what we have in regards to my mother! Now be silent and let me speak to my brother old man!”

Wayonn took his words in stride and he even felt the small smile cross his face. He hadn’t expected so forceful a reaction from Resumar, but he was very happy he got it. It gave him a great deal of peace that Resumar Leonidas would defend Shiria no matter the cost. Helen did not let it slip however.

“Resumar Leonidas... that is not the way you have been raised to speak to your elders and your betters!” She barked loudly. “We will have words when I see you again young man!”

Resumar blinked several times but looked properly chastised and he bowed his head to her. “Forgive me Feravomir. This man... he is not you.”

“Enough of this!” Andro snarled. “I am tired of not knowing what is going on and who all the players are! Everyone be silent and let me speak to my brother!”

“Androcles we...” Wayonn began to speak.

Helen turned quickly and held up her hand, shaking her head just enough to get her point across. [We do not want to interfere grandfather. Not when he is like this. We would not like the reaction we get.]

“Brother... talk to me! What have you found out! Is the ship...?” Andro started.

Resumar dismissed everyone around him and looked at Andro. “We devised a way to complete our mission with what we have on hand as I told you before. That is nearly complete. Another day at most. The Coven survivors hit us yesterday Andro. They knew how to breach the ship in a way that suggests that either Yuri or Aikiro gave them the information from Xaxon’s dark influence.”

“Sibfla!” Andro swore. “We did not think of that!”

“We did not know of it at the time brother.” Resumar said. “They did not go after the cores as we expected Andro. They were almost empty anyway. They went after the other Avatars.”

“Other Avatars?” Andro said.

Shiria nodded from her spot next to him. “VORTEX Cruiser 341 had five avatars Androcles. Only one is ever operating at a time.”

“Had?” Andro asked.

“We had to destroy three of them Andro. And one just stopped operating when it detected me.” Resumar answered. “The Coven however, they made it off the ship with six data pads worth of what they downloaded from the avatars. We were able to neutralize all but two of them.”

Andro moved closer to him in the transmission. “What did they get Res?” He asked.

“I’ll let Avi answer that.” Resumar replied.

Andro saw the familiar hulking form of Avi come up behind his brother. “Avi... talk to me.”

-As Resumar stated they were able to download six data pads Androcles. Essentially every bit of knowledge held within the avatars themselves about this ship, its systems, the history cores, and countless star systems-

“What was on the pads they did get Avi?” Andro asked.

-Quantum Drive Propulsion Schematics. Sublight Engine Designs and Base Core Fields- Avi’s red eyes focused on him. –Androcles... they were able to secure several different types of advanced weapons designs. Many of them for this very ship... but the principle variants can be adjusted easily with the base plans-“Nubou!” Andro growled viciously.

Resumar stepped forward. “I’m sorry Andro.” He stated.

Andro looked at his brother. “This is not your fault Resumar!” He insisted turning back to him. “None of it! We were unprepared for the existence of this ship and the mission happened too quick! Sibfla! Avi... how long before they could have working prototypes of what they stole?”

-Six months at a minimum for the weapon designs Androcles. A year at most for the Propulsion Plants- Avi answered. –The Coven engineers are equally as skilled as Zaala Randall but will not have her sense of safety-

“The machine is right.” Valin interrupted now causing them to look at him.

“Admiral Valin?” Andro said.

“The Empress had a special shipyard built for just this purpose. The thing is massive and it orbits the third moon of Usu Ozeib 7.” Valin spoke. “I have seen it. If they got away, this is where they will go with the new data to begin work immediately.”

Andro turned back to Resumar. “Narice and I will speak of this when she returns with Arrarn.” He said quickly. “You said something about why we can’t feel mother. What have you discovered Res? Tell me!”

“Andro... I don't think we can feel mother not because she may be dead... but because her Mindvoice Etheric resonance is being blocked.”

Andro's head drew back and his eyes grew a little wider. “Blocked?” He asked. “How is that even possible?”

“It is possible.” Valin spoke now moving even closer to Andro. “It is not only possible... it is a fact.”

Wayonn looked at the man he had know only as a boy many years ago. “You can not completely block a Mindvoice resonance.” He said. “Even the Pralors never managed to do that.”

Valin looked at him. “Oh but you did Wayonn.” He said seeing Wayonn's eyes grow larger. “Yes... I remember you Wayonn. I was only a boy, not yet ten years old when you came to see my parents. A vampire father and Lycavorian mother. You came to see them and you told them who my mother was. The last descendant of the Lycavorian Fifth Ruling Bloodline. That you had made it so deep into High Coven space impressed my father enough to listen to you. My father... he loved my mother with all that he was and he did not care that she was wolf and so very different from him. And she adored him equally. So much so that he made her to look like a vampire so that at first glance she would not be noticed. My father's last words to me were to honor my mother's bloodline just as you had asked them to do so many years before. When Cirith was born they told me... they told me she would be the key. To keep her safe, for one day a time would come when that bloodline... our bloodline would be needed. That time is coming, isn't it Wayonn? It is why I felt the need to lay with that wench Aikiro and hide who I was. It is why I forced her to give birth to Cirith, and it is why I have protected my daughter, trained her to be perfect all of these years.” Valin moved closer to him. “That is why we both felt the need to leave the Coven now, isn't it? We discover something new about ourselves every minute... is that not what you told my father?”

Wayonn nodded slowly. “It is.”

“You are the one he gave the Coven records to, isn't he?” Valin spoke. “The records of the Black Day and the slavery after?”

“Yes.”

“Then you should know that the Pralors did invent the technology to do what Resumar Leonidas says.” Valin spoke. “It was not intended for this task as you built them, but you did develop the technology.”

“Explain yourself Admiral! Quickly!” Andro barked.

Wayonn's eyes were wide now. “The negative resonance chambers” He said softly.

Valin looked at Andro and moved closer. “Yes... the rooms on the ships!” Valin told him. “You must know of them! If City Ship 19 had them... then City Ship 41 had them.”

Andro nodded. “I know of them!” He snapped. “Why would...” His eyes grew larger.

“Of course!” Wayonn exclaimed moving up to Andro as Dutkne came rushing into the room now. “Shiria... did you...” He began to speak to the transmission.

“Yes Wayonn.” Shiria answered. “341 detected trace levels of residual components from inside the negative resonance chambers of CS19.”

Valin nodded. “It was something she worked on for decades.” Valin spoke still looking at Andro. “We called them Static Inhibitors!”

“Xaxon!” Wayonn spoke. “He was a technical genius with negative resonance waves! If his Mindvoice essence is as intact as I think it is, then he could pass this information to Aikiro easily. Even Yuri. Almost anyone!”

Valin moved closer to Andro still, right up next to him. “An entire developmental batch of these were taken during a Kavalian Raid on one of the High Coven Research facilities near Pe'Iohagro. She had many senior officers that defected to the Kavalians Androcles. Several of them that are still alive and had knowledge of this facility and what these Static Inhibitors could do.”

“But why?” Andro asked no one in particular. “Why attempt to kill my father... all of us? Why take her? It doesn't make any sense! None of it!”

Dutkne moved up beside him. “Then they intended to use her as a tool.” He stated. “To force the Union to do what these Kavalians wanted.”

Andro shook his head. “My mother would never betray the Union! Never!” He stated. “And she would never allow anyone who remained to concede anything for her return! She would take her own life first!”

“Even if they thought you were all dead except for your mother?” Dutkne asked softly. “Your entire family? They... the Union Senate would do nothing to avoid a full scale war?”

Andro met his eyes. “This is crazy.” He said. “What could they hope to accomplish?”

“To keep the Union out of the war with the Coven.” Valin said. “It has to be! Why else go to these lengths? They must have known you were training the Coven dragons long ago in order to plan things this well. This way... if they held your mother prisoner... they could guarantee you would not interfere while they took the Coven apart!”

Andro looked at him. “They could do this?” He asked.

Valin nodded. “Yes. Not within the next few years... but they can breed their clones in cycles. Each cycle is bigger. In ten or fifteen years they would have worn the High Coven down enough to eventually wipe them out by sheer numbers. If they held your mother... and the rest of your family was dead... they could guarantee that none of you would attempt to rescue her and that you would remain out of the war as they destroyed the Coven.”

“Pusintin is not that smart.” Helen snapped.

“Perhaps not Dustha.” Shiria spoke once more from the transmission. “But Keleru is. I have had someone inside their network for over thirty years now... and even we did not see this coming. These attacks against the Union now. It all makes sense though, the way your vampire friend just explained. It also ties in with the way they assisted the overthrow of your mother on Hadaria as Resumar has explained it to me. The Hadarian Elders... this Buonau and Wiktor, they kept trying to take your siblings Retta and Calyb did they not?”

Andro looked at her. “Yes.”

“Which means Buonau and Wiktor must have had some idea what the Kavalians were planning all along.” Helen said as she put it all together. “Why else continue to try and take Retta and Calyb from your mother and father? They wanted what they thought belonged to them before the Kavalians acted as they have, knowing they would kill Retta and Calyb as well as the other young ones.”

Shiria nodded. “And it is why they continue to pour troops towards Hadaria via this Jump Gate that you cannot find!”

“Andro... according to Shiria’s contact, they have over five million troops on Hadaria right now. And nearly a thousand ships in the active system.” Resumar spoke. “If we are ever to take Hadaria back we need to stem that flow now. Andro... we must execute Command Order Nineteen.”

Helen glanced between the two brothers her eyes wide. “What... what is this?” She demanded. “What is Command Order Nineteen? Resumar?” She looked at Androcles. “Andro?”

“ENOUGH!” Andro shouted as he snarled angrily. He moved to his desk once more and stabbed his finger down on the console. “Sa’sur?”

“Go!” She answered immediately.

“My grandfather Riall! Get him on a secure COM right now!” Andro demanded.

“Stand by!”

Helen stepped forward slowly. “Andro what... what are you going to do?” She asked softly. “What is this Order Nineteen?”

Andro looked at her. “Something my father would have expected me to do a long time ago.” He stated. “Sa’sur... how long until we reach Earth?”

“We’ll be entering the system in eighteen minutes.” Sa’sur answered. “I have Admiral Riall. Routing it to you now.”

Andro watched as the face and shoulders of his grandfather appeared in the holoimage projected from the desk. “Grandfather?”

“Andro... Sa’sur said it was urgent. What is wrong? Where are you?” Riall demanded.

“Eighteen minutes from entering the system and an hour from Earth.” Andro answered. “Where are my brothers and sisters?”

“I did as you instructed me. I just put them on an AUTUMN MOON with Gorgo and Dasha not an hour ago.” Riall said. “We got them out under cover of night and they are on their way to Curila 6 as we speak.”

“Our façade is holding?” Andro asked.

Riall nodded. "For now... yes." He answered immediately. "The Netnews people are beginning to reach out to their own contacts within The Wilds however, to try and discover what is happening with your mother Dysea on Kranek."

"They will get no where near Kranek." Andro stated confidently. "Anyone who tries now will be killed instantly by the forces still there."

"I warned them of that." Riall stated. "They chose not to listen."

"Nubou them!" Andro snarled. "Grandfather... what are the estimates from our drones and contacts on what the Kavalians have put on Hadaria?"

"You... you won't like it?" Riall answered.

"I'm sure." Andro spoke looking at Helen directly.

"The last report came in an hour ago." Riall stated. "At least a hundred divisions of ground troops and nearly a thousand ships in the Hadarian system. No one at JGC can say how they are operating our Gates and they've tried everything they know to shut them down. Our only guess is they built a Gate close to the border somewhere and then somehow got their hands on our codes and have linked into our system in and around Hadaria."

Andro looked at one of them men who had guided him as he grew. A man whose total knowledge of fleet operations and ship to ship combat was nearly unmatched by anyone. A man who commanded the whole of the Union Fleet and military for that very reason. "Grandfather... I need you to do something by my order and my order only."

Riall nodded his head slowly. "Command me."

"Grandfather... Admiral Riall... I need you to execute Command Order Nineteen on my authorization, transfer the command overrides to me here on the SCIMITAR and I need you to do so immediately." Andro said.

"Andro... we..." Riall began to speak but shook his head. "I will do it." He said finally.

"No... this is my decision and mine alone. Transfer the overrides here." Andro spoke.

Helen moved forward now. "Riall... what is this Command Order Nineteen? I demand you tell me right now!"

Riall seemed to be working at his console and he finally looked up and nodded. "It is done." He said.

Andro watched the display on his console light up with several lines of code and he nodded. "Thank you."

"Andro... you don't have to do this." Riall said.

"Is there another way to stop the Kavalian reinforcements?" Andro asked.

Riall shook his head. "Not that we have discovered so far. No one's command codes work Andro, it's like they have all been locked out of the system somehow."

"A traitor." Resumar spoke from the main holotransmission.

Andro nodded. "Then it must be done." He said softly. He looked first to Lu'ria and Ne'Veha and saw in their beautiful eyes unquestioned trust and love. "Sa'sur... realign the subspace deflector array please. Coordinates 75639.4 and lock."

Sa'sur's voice was soft when she replied only a few seconds later. "Coordinates 75639.4 confirmed and locked."

Andro looked at his brother in the holotransmission. "Res... I have help coming your way. Once you complete your mission... you'll have a new one. Send me whatever data you have so far, everything from the ship."

Resumar nodded. "Avi is standing by to transmit." He stared at his brother. "There's no other way Andro."

"I know." Androcles answered. "I will confirm what you believe when we reach Earth Resumar. You know that our father lives."

Resumar nodded somberly. "Yes. What of 341 Andro?"

"He is no different than Avi." Andro answered. "He goes with you. He is too valuable to us as a teacher to let what he knows die with that ship."

Resumar nodded. "I'll make it so."

“I will contact you in six hours Resumar. Be standing by.” Andro said. “SCIMITAR out.” Andro turned as Dutkne came up to him and stood directly in front of him. “I can’t let it happen again Dutkne.” He said softly.

Dutkne nodded. “I know.” He whispered back.

Androcles Leonidas turned back to his control console and without pause he stabbed his finger down on the blinking green light. There was a confirming beep and then he looked up at Helen. “I’m sorry Feravomir... but I will not let it happen again.”

“Let what happen?” Helen gasped. “What did you just do Androcles?”

“If everyone will excuse me... I need to tend to my bonded sister.” Andro spoke before turning on his heels and walking out.

“Andro?” Helen called to his back. “Androcles Leonidas anse forn!” She whirled around and stabbed her own finger down on the control console. “Sa’sur?”

“I am here Feravomir.” Sa’sur’s soft voice answered.

“You will tell me what just happened Sa’sur!” She snarled. “What did Andro just do?”

“The only thing we could do to stem the flow of Kavalian troops to Hadaria Feravomir.” She answered.

“And that would be what?” Helen nearly shouted.

“Androcles just sent the automated signal that will command the four Jump Gates leading to Hadaria’s home system to self destruct.” Sa’sur told her not seeing Helen’s eyes go wide in horror and shock. “In twenty seconds the four Gates will implode.”

“Sa’sur... that will... that will kill anything traveling in those Gates as well as anything within half a light year!” Helen exclaimed. “There could be... there could be refugee ships moving for those Gates!”

“Yes Feravomir... we have been tracking everything within the system.” Sa’sur said softly.

“How many?” Helen shouted.

“Twenty-three Feravomir.” Sa’sur answered. “Nineteen of them will be caught within the blast radius of the four Gates.”

“How... how many people?” Helen gasped.

“Feravomir...”

“How many of our people damn it!” Helen snarled.

“If the ship classes are accurate and they are fully loaded... nearly three million four hundred thousand.” Sa’sur answered painfully.

Helen staggered back as if she was in physical pain and Wayonn and Lu’ria caught her as she shuddered in agony. “Son vada carians.” She whispered. “No!”

CHAPTER FIFTY-SEVEN

HADARIAN SYSTEM

JUMP GATES 13-16

1.4 LYS FROM HADARIA

It was not as dramatic as one would think, though no less deadly in its affects.

The subspace signaled arrived just as it was intended. And it triggered the self destruct on all four of the Jump Gates, again just as it was calculated too. Essentially, since all of the Jump Gates around Hadaria were newer and more efficiently designed, the signal reached all of them in a cascading order by virtue of where they were. The small explosive charge built into the Polarion Matrix Core frame activated upon receiving the signal. It was just enough explosive to cause a small rupture in the Polarion Matrix Core Chamber only three centimeters wide. Three centimeters may have well been three light years as the Polarion Core began to leak, flooding the entire Core Chamber with toxic and highly volatile gas. As the gas swirled around the chamber, the pressure built against the outer casing which was built to protect the core from the outside. The reaction took only seconds to reach critical status and then the Core Matrix Chamber blew outward. As the heavily armored pieces of the chamber were sent hurtling into the Jump Gate Power nodes, a series of catastrophic explosions followed in almost perfect order. The resulting main explosion was not large but enough to rupture the active end of the Jump Gate causing the Jump Corridor, essentially a man made worm hole, to close prematurely. As the worm hole closed prematurely and without precise control it caused the entire Gate to implode upon itself, instantly crushing steel and armor that could have withstood a sustained bombardment from a heavy cruiser for hours. As the imploding Gate reached terminal velocity inward, it suddenly reversed course and blew outward. The Polaron particles increased the explosive force of the wave outward to hyper velocity and anything within the half a million kilometer radius of the explosion was caught in the wave of destructive expanding energy and instantaneously vaporized. This included the nine colossal civilian transport liners that had been making their way towards the furthest Gate from their home planet in order to escape Hadaria. Each of those ships carried twice their normal capacity of civilian souls, and none of them had time to react or contemplate their deaths. A million and a half died among those nine ships, another million at the next Jump Gate, and nearly three quarters of a million between the last two, including the one closest to Hadaria. A Jump Gate that could be seen with powerful telescopes on clear nights from many of the cities on the surface.

A Jump Gate whose death did not go unnoticed by those on Hadaria.

What would go unnoticed by many people for months to come were the nearly six and a half million Kavalian Clone troops that were eradicated in the destruction of the four Gates, and the four hundred and sixty-three Kavalian warships that died as well. As the four Hadarian Jump Gate Corridors prematurely ceased operation, the many Kavalian ships, and the troops on those ships, came out of the Jump Corridors at the speed of Light. Two separate Fleet Groups collided with several large moons two systems away from Hadaria their final destination, and the majority of the PROTOSS-Class Troop carriers exited their Jump Corridors directly into a radioactive nebula that cooked most of them alive within minutes.

With this single act, and unbeknownst to him at the moment, Androcles Leonidas had forever sundered the one and only Kavalian supply line to those troops and ships that were already on Hadaria. They were now alone.

At least for a time.

EARTH

SPARTA

SENATE OFFICE BUILDING

The Commander of the two ERT teams from Athens stood with the ERT Team Leader from Sparta. Millennia ago these Greek cities had been dire enemies here on Earth, yet through the years since and more so since the passing of The Comet, they two cities had become like brother and sister in their closeness. The Governor of Athens had his ERT Teams moving to Sparta before the last images of the Senate Building crumbling had filled his screens. Within hours, doctors from medics and plain ordinary men and women were flocking to assist their sister city in whatever they needed. Like Sparta, since the return of King Leonidas, Athens had grown and prospered greatly. A rapid transit system was nearly done connecting the two large cities to better allow them to share their ancient Greek and Lycavorian culture, and allow their citizens to travel back and forth quicker for work or entertainment. While many of the citizens of Athens were human, a growing number of Lycavorians and others species were beginning to move to Athens because of its diverse population and its adherence to the same deep traditions as Sparta, and they were welcomed with open arms.

Both of them were stunned when the STRIKER DT had roared overhead and within minutes Androcles Leonidas was striding towards them with a purpose. Elynth dashed to where Aurith sat on the ground nearby refusing to move from where her bonded sister was buried. The Netnews crews that were set up all around the area were quick to notice Andro and Elynth and they directed their video drones on him from the moment he left the STRIKER. They noticed Eliani Leonidas trying to keep pace with her brother's much longer legs while her dragon Tharua followed Elynth. This was very unexpected as the video drones zoomed in and filmed it all. Andro and Eliani walked right up to the two men as they crowded around the portable table with computer monitors on it.

"Milord! Princess Eliani!" The senior commander spoke quickly. His name was Raeus and he was a grizzled Lycavorian with nearly five thousand years of life behind him. He had been married to the same woman from Athens for over three millennia, a human woman of Greek heritage that he had turned and whose scent still made his wolf blood churn in delight. He had called Athens his home for over a millennia now and was forming his men up before the Governor had called him to issue his deployment orders. He had never met the Crown Prince in person and was struck by how much he looked like his father. Or how much Princess Eliani resembled her fiery haired Hadarian mother. “Sire... I can have a full report ready for you in moments.”

Andro waved his hand dismissively. “We are not here for a report... we are here to help.” Andro stated evenly.

Raeus looked quickly to his counterpart and friend from Sparta. “Sire... we already have several hundred men and women working on site. It is very dangerous work and we can not risk you and the Princess.”

The Spartan ERT commander Nascal shook his head slowly. “Raeus is right Milord.” He said in agreement.

Andro stepped closer to them so that only they could hear him. “There is a possibility that my mother was taken from the secure bunker before the building came down.” He stated softly seeing their eyes go wide.

“The Kavalians?” Nascal gasped.

Andro nodded. “Yes. If that is the case it means there was a traitor among us that helped them. I need to know for sure if this is the case before I can do anything. The interior of the bunker was coated with a material almost exactly the same as the meditation rooms in Dragon Mountain. We would not be able to and we can’t right now, feel her within Mindvoice at all.” Andro looked at them. “That leaves only two possibilities. She is either dead or she has been taken. I need to find out as quickly as possible. How is the work proceeding and what can we do?”

Raeus looked at Nascal stunned and then back to Andro. He turned quickly to the monitor on the table. “We’ve cleared away the majority of the debris where we know the tunnel exited, but the top floors fell directly onto the last hundred meters of the tunnel and have flattened everything.” He started. “Our dragon brothers and sisters have helped us clear a section further back and then we chose to go in from the side!” Raeus spoke.

“The side?” Eliani asked. “Why not from the top?”

“We risk puncturing either the damaged power conduits or whatever means they are getting their oxygen from if we do Princess. There are many pockets of air that are formed in a collapse like this and the vast majority of them are formed over the top of the debris area.” Nascal said now.

Raeus nodded his head. “We have breached the emergency tunnel a hundred meters closer to the foundation of the building and we are in the main evacuation tunnel now. I have two dragons and thirty-six men and women inside this tunnel. We have reinforced the ceiling above us so that it does not trap us, and now we are digging sideways through the debris to the actual bunker door. Infrared scans reveal a gap of about seven meters from the door itself until the debris begins.” He spoke pulling up the plans on the small monitor on the table and showing them the detailed seismic scans. “We are perhaps ten meters of digging from this gap. It is slow going Milord, as we are not digging a very large entrance of our own to keep from disturbing larger debris above us.”

Andro touched the screen. “The bunker door looks to be either gone or pinned open.” He said.

Nascal nodded. “It is... and the stairs down into the actual bunker space are crushed. It is a six meter drop to the floor where our rescue tunnel will come out, but it is as low as we dare dig. We have moved two laser drills into the tunnel to carve out a path down to the bunker itself but we need to stop every few hours to allow the dragons to clear what we cut away. Most of it they pull out with their TK power and some of it they have to melt into slag before it can be moved.”

“How long until you actually breach the bunker itself?” Andro asked.

Raeus met his Prince’s eyes. “If we double our shifts and...”

“No.” Andro said. “I will not take unnecessary risks with your people’s lives. Moving as you have been now maintaining safety for your crews and those who may be trapped... how long?”

“Another six hours Milord.” Nascal spoke. “Raeus?”

Raeus nodded. “Six hours should do it sire.”

Andro nodded. “Eliani and I are here to help. Put us where we can be of use.”

Raeus nodded. “This way.”

Eliani grabbed Andro’s arm as they began to follow the ERT Commander. “Andro... I don’t know jack about this type of work.” She hissed softly.

Andro nodded. “I know... neither do I.” He stated.

“Then why are we going in there?” Eliani asked.

Andro looked at her as they walked. “Because behind mother and Aunt Sivana you are the most powerful Hadarian Healer in the universe Eliani. We can’t feel mother... and the more time that passes the more I believe what Resumar and Shiria told us is indeed what has happen. As I put all the pieces together... what they said makes perfect sense.”

“Then we should be preparing for that.” Eliani said.

“And leave Tenna Deia to die?” Andro said. “Never.”

Eliani’s eyes grew wider. “You can feel her?”

Andro nodded. “The closer we are yes. I... Elynth and I are getting flashes from within the Bunker from her. Nothing we can focus on entirely which leads me to believe the inside of the bunker is damaged and the material used to coat the inside to hide Mindvoicers is broken in a way that allows us to catch these glimpses. There is another in the bunker with her, one of the Durcunusaan, that is much stronger than normal. If we get closer to them, Elynth and I might be able to focus on him. Tenna is fading Eliani.” Andro said softly. “She has perhaps a few more hours before she is lost to us. I have just had to kill... I have just had to kill over three million of our people sister... our father’s people. Your people. I will not let Tenna die if it is within our power to save her!”

Eliani stopped and gripped his arm tightly. “You did... you did what you needed to do Andro.” She told him gently. “What only you could have done. I know our history too Andro; I know it took over a hundred million of our people to free Hadaria from the Coven. If you had let them keep bringing troops there, we would never have been able to free the planet. You did... you did the only thing you could have done.”

Andro looked at her for a long moment. “Perhaps.” He said softly. “Right now I need to find out about mother and get Tenna out of that hole.”

Eliani nodded. “Then let’s stop talking about it and do it!” She spoke, happy to be rid of her own problems right now and not have to think about Nyla and Malic and wondering why it was that she did not miss them as much as she thought she should have.

Andro nodded and taking her hand he began to follow Raeus and Nascal once more towards the opening in the tunnel and debris spread all around them.

SPARTA SENATE BUNKER

“A few more hours at most Jomann.” Lysandra spoke softly. “I can do nothing more for her with the equipment I have. Without food... without water... but most of all without the medication to treat her.”

“We cleaned her wounds!” Jomann protested softly.

Lysandra nodded. “And if she had the strength to shift to wolf form, her wounds would not be an issue. But she can’t and they are!”

“Nubou!” Jomann cursed. “We have not survived this long to die! I won’t let her!”

“You have... you have no choice.” The raspy and soft female voice spoke from the side.

Jomann turned quickly, his own face still bloody and dirty. The slice on his cheekbone was beginning to scab over; Jomann discarding the bloody bandage for it was helping nothing. He crossed to where Deia was laying in three steps and knelt beside her once more. “There is always choice Prime Minister!” He hissed.

“I... I have lived... I have lived a full life Jomann.” Deia spoke with a weak smile. “It did not turn out as I had liked... but I will join my sister and so many others who I have missed for so long.”

“You can... you can choose to fight!” Jomann snarled. “They will come to us!”

Deia shook her head slowly and reached up to place her palm on his injured cheek. “My... my Mandri is gone. Your King. For'mya... For'mya has been taken. And I will die here in this hole for all the mistakes I have made in the past. It is my punishment. My burden to bear.”

“I refuse... I refuse to believe that!” Jomann barked as he covered her hand with his own. “I won’t believe that!”

Deia forced another smile. “You... you are so very proud and strong Jomann. I feel your blood is... it is so pure and clear. Do you know... do you know your bloodline young man? I would have... I would have liked to see you become part of my family young wolf.”

Jomann nodded slowly. “I do Prime Minister. My father has told me that we descend from Ontar and Koval. He and... he and my mother both.”

Deia’s smile was warm now. “I remember them.” She said softly. “Sons of Pavalera and Humal. The only reason they were not included among the Six Ruling Packs was because they were a new pack and their numbers were not yet large enough. Resumar and my sister... they tried to change the laws to allow them to participate but he was overruled. Instead... instead he made them permanent Council Members which was more than acceptable to them and the other Ruling packs. Their blood was so pure like yours. They were... they were fine Lycavorians. Did you know that?”

Jomann looked at her with wide eyes and even Lysandra had moved closer. “Prime Minister... they... you knew them? How?” He gasped.

Deia smiled. “I will tell you a secret that I have told no one in my lifetime Jomann. Not even your King who is of my blood. I am over twenty-two thousand years old Jomann.” She said seeing his eyes grow even wider. “Yes... many of our people who do not know me, they believe me to have been born after our slavery began but that is not the case. I was there with Resumar and Eliani almost from the very beginning.” She smiled again. “You even look like Humal... and he would be very proud of what you have accomplished. You shield very well Jomann... and that tells me you are more gifted than you allow others to see. Go after what it is you want young wolf Jomann.”

“What... what I want Deia... is for you to hold on!” Jomann spoke. “Draw what strength you need from me if you must. As... as the King was the heart of our Union... you are the mind! We can not lose both of you! We can not!”

“It is my time.” Deia said softly.

“NO!” He almost shouted. “I...”

“Captain!” The voice echoed in the bunker causing all of them to turn and watch as Anicetus skidded around the corner. “Captain... you’d better get over here.”

Jomann turned to Deia quickly. “I will be back!” He snapped. “I forbid you to die on my watch Deia! I forbid it!”

Jomann got to his feet and followed his senior enlisted man as he headed back through the dust and shattered remains of the interior of the bunker to the rear wall that once was a door. It stood ten meters high now of nothing but solid debris.

“Anicetus what is going on?” Jomann demanded seeing Nusa and others of his team standing before the huge wall of debris as if looking for something. “The Prime Minister...”

“Listen!” Anicetus barked holding up his hand.

Jomann became silent instantly at the tone of his senior sergeant’s voice. He trusted the man implicitly and always had. He reached out with his wolf ears trying to find anything that was different from the sounds they had heard for the last three plus days buried in this hole. Then he heard it. A soft whining noise almost like...

“A cutting laser!” Jomann gasped.

Anicetus nodded quickly. “And close!” He stated confidently. “They are cutting their way to us! They know we are alive!”

Nusa placed his hands on a piece of debris, a massive slab of granite that had collapsed above the doorway. He drew his hands back quickly. “Sibfla!” He swore. “It’s hot!”

“There!” Anicetus shouted pointing about seven or eight meters above their heads where a small whisper of smoke was pouring from the slab of stone as it grew redder in color.

“They must have got a drone sensor cable through the debris!” Nusa exclaimed.

“Back!” Jomann shouted. “Get back!” As the words left his mouth the spot on the slab of stone grew larger in the shape of a circle perhaps a meter across and then the entire circular laser drill cut through the stone showering them with small pieces of molten rock which quickly fell away. Within seconds of the laser drill stopping a white gas began to pour through the opening.

“Coolant!” Anicetus barked.

“Clear what you can away from the opening!” Jomann barked as he began to pick up large chunks of stone and steel and toss them to the side. “Hurry!” Even as they were doing that Nusa looked up and saw the half a meter wide camera drone exit the newly created hole and begin to sweep downward.

He stopped and grabbed at the drone, bringing it right up to his face. “Hey! How bout a little help here!” He shouted into the drone’s camera.

Jomann turned and saw what he was doing and snatched the drone from him. “This is Captain Jomann of the Durcunusaan Senate Detail! I am...”

“...solves nothing Androcles. You are accomplishing nothing by being there.” Panos spoke from where he stood next to Walter in the transmission from the Durcunusaan base.

Andro looked at the man he called grandfather and brushed his sleeve across his dusty and sweaty face. “I can not go into details on an open line grandfather.” Andro answered. “You must trust that I know what I am doing.”

“It is not a matter of trust boy!” Walter snapped. “Your father is dead! You are King now and you must start acting like it! Panos and I have been calling for Daniel for hours and he will not respond! Anuk and Nayeca will not tell us where he has gone! Tareif and Lynwe are mobilizing half the Spartan forces on Earth and sending them across the planet. Nestor and his entire Reactionary Division have dropped off the grid and no one will tell me what is going on! We need to come together... not pull apart!”

Andro’s eyes narrowed. “Have you not talked to grandfather Riall?” He asked.

Panos shook his head. “We have only just returned from Eden City where Tarifa sent us for our protection! Aihola’s Drow were very insistent and they threatened to force us if we did not go willingly! I will have words with her when I find her! Where is she now? Where have you been for that matter? Lynwe told us you were off world!”

“Grandfather there is much going on that you do not know.” Andro stated. “I need your detail to take you to my villa. I will join you there in a few hours. Sadi and the Feravomir are already there.”

“Andro... what in the hell is going on?” Walter demanded. “I am the Senior Polemarch of the Union Army and I don’t know what is going on!”

“I will...”

“Milord!” Nascal’s voice echoed in the tunnel causing Andro to look up and face where all the digging was. “We are through! We are through!” He screamed waving his arm.

Andro looked at the monitor. “I must go! We have breached the bunker to Aunt Deia and my mother.”

Andro didn’t wait for a response and sprinted to where Nascal was waiting. Nascal took his arm and led him past tons of debris and equipment until they stopped by where Raeus and Eliani were looking at the monitor.

“This is Captain Jomann of the Durcunusaan Senate Detail! I am the ranking officer within what remains of the Senate Bunker.” The young man’s face appeared injured but his eyes were very clear and alert. “I have six members of my detail with me and the Prime Minister. She is badly injured and we need medicines and an immediate evacuation out of her. She is... she is very close to death and we...”

Andro grabbed the monitor in his hands. “Captain Jomann!”

The officer’s eyes grew wide. “Milord Prince?” He gasped.

“My mother!” Andro barked. “Is my mother...?”

Jomann shook his head quickly. “She was taken from the bunker Milord. Taken by the Kavalians and helped by Laustinos!”

“Laustinos?” Eliani snarled from the side.

“I do not know all of what happen prior to us arriving before the explosion.” Jomann told him. “Deia... the Prime Minister knows but we...”

Andro tossed the monitor down and began looking all around them. “A cable!” He barked. “Give me a cable! Long enough to reach them!”

A member of the ERT team knew what he was thinking almost instantly and he quickly unhooked the safety line around his own waist and moved up beside him beginning to buckle it around his waist. “A thousand meters Milord.” He spoke. “Secure it when you get down there and we can then use it to transfer equipment!”

“Andro?” Eliani exclaimed.

Andro looked at her. “Follow me sister!” He spoke before moving to the front of the tunnel the laser had drilled and without thinking swung his feet over the lip and dropped into the smooth opening. He disappeared almost instantly because of the twenty-five degree slope that they had drilled.

Eliani didn’t pause either and snatched the large medical kit she had brought with her from the SCIMITAR and pulled it onto her back. “Shit!” She swore softly. “I hate dark tunnels!” She hissed before diving head long after her brother.

The only mistake she made was not putting on a safety cable.

Jomann threw down the camera drone in disgust. “Nubou! We must have lost the feed!” He snarled.

“I... I don’t think so Jomann!” Anicetus stated looking at the dust coming from the opening above them. “Something is coming down that tunnel!”

As if to emphasize his words, the large body of their Prince came shooting out of the tunnel above them and they watched in amazement as he adjusted his position in midair and landed between them in a squatting position.

“Milord!” Jomann exclaimed.

Andro’s eyes adjusted instantly to the dimness of the bunker and he rose to his full height as he unhooked the cable from his waist. “My Aunt!” He snapped.

“Through there sire!” Jomann answered.

Andro didn’t pause and began walking. “Catch my sister Captain.” He spoke as he disappeared around the corner.

Jomann looked confused. “Milord? Your sister? What...?”

“Siibbbffflaaa!” The female voice echoed from above them.

Jomann looked up just in time to see the burgundy red hair and the petite form of Eliani Leonidas explode from the tunnel above them at very high speed. He stepped directly under her without thinking and caught all one hundred and eighteen pounds of her tightly muscled body square in the chest as she fell. He could have caught her easily had she not been falling head first and picking up speed as she went and he went down awkwardly, falling first to his ass and then onto his back where he slammed his head hard on the stone floor. Eliani was only a couple of inches taller than her mother’s five foot three frame, but much like her mother she was very solid in a distinctly muscular way. She grunted in pain as her forehead impacted the front of Jomann’s Mark IV ArmorPly painfully but aside from that her landing was surprisingly far softer than she had predicted it would be as she cursed herself for not doing as Andro had done and hooking herself to a safety cable. In her dazed state she heard the loud and decidedly male groan of pain and her head snapped up quickly until she was looking into the most incredibly scrumptious eyes she had ever seen in her young life and the delicious scent of jasmine coffee beans filled her nostrils. Eliani realized she had collided with and landed on the very muscular form of the male Durcunusaan officer from the monitor they had been watching above. Eliani also suddenly realized that her taut, lithe frame was practically molded to his in an extremely intimate way as she straddled his hips with her legs and her large breasts were crushed against his broad chest.

She watched as those eyes blinked and then opened fully and then the most delightful sexual rush surged through her as she looked into the deep, dark ocean blue depths of those eyes and that jasmine coffee scent spiked even stronger. She heard the man groan softly, his chiseled body shifting under her and causing vibrations of forceful enchantment to sweep through her frame.

“It... it is a pleasure to make your acquaintance Princess...” Jomann stammered as he too could feel every succulent portion of her firm body pressed against his. “But do... do you think you could get off me now!”

Eliani sprang up cat like, her fern green eyes flashing angrily and she glared at the officer for several seconds with those eyes before stepping over him and moving into the next room. Nusa and Anicetus stepped up to their captain with huge smiles of humor and happiness now that they knew help was here and they would be leaving this hole soon. Jomann took the hand that Anicetus offered.

“An excellent first impression sir!” Nusa spoke as he helped Jomann to his feet.

“Indeed.” Anicetus agreed. “A princess of the Union splattered across you and you tell her to get up.”

Jomann groaned in pain as he got fully to his feet. “That hurt.” He said softly as he bent over to stretch out his back. “She is more muscle than she looks!”

Nusa nodded. “And she looks tasty as always! A shame she is now mated.”

Anicetus grinned. “I always preferred Princess Lisisa myself.” He stated. “Her dark hair is so...”

“Enough!” Jomann barked as he shook his head at their antics. “I will make sure I tell your wife that old friend.” He said as he turned his head towards the next room and began moving in that direction. “Prepare to get a stretcher and other equipment from the tunnel that they might send down!” He spoke as he moved around the corner and slowed his gait as he saw the Prince and Princess kneeling beside the Prime Minister.

Deia’s face was almost radiant now as she gripped Andro’s hand and Jomann could feel the tremors of a very powerful Mindvoice connection with shields unlike any he had ever felt before. He could see tears pouring from Deia’s eyes, almost as if she couldn’t catch her breath and she kept nodding, opening and closing her eyes. His eyes turned to look at the Princess as she listened to Lysandra and lowered her small hands to her aunt’s abdomen and a soft white light began to pulse outward from those hands. Jomann watched with some fascination as that soft white light pulsed several times across Deia’s abdomen and then her chest. He had seen Hadarian Healers perform their work before, but watching Eliani Leonidas, it almost seemed like he was watching a riveting play from the Sparta Opera House. Jomann suddenly felt those powerful shields dissipate within Mindvoice and then he heard Crown Prince Androcles speak openly.

“What... what happen here Tenna?” He asked softly.

“Laustinos!” Deia gasped and Jomann noticed that her breathing had become far less labored as Eliani continued to use her healing power to treat her aunt. The color was returning to her face quickly as well and her strength seemed to be returning albeit to a much lesser degree. “We were... we were reeling from seeing... seeing your father. We never saw them coming! They took your mother Andro! They took For’mya!”

“Laustinos... he was helping them?” Andro asked with wide eyes.

Deia nodded and squeezed his hands. “You... you must get her back Andro!” Deia spoke. “I fear... I fear what your... what your uncle will do.”

Andro nodded and brought her hands to his lips and kissed them gently. “We will Tenna. We will. Now you must rest... you must rest and let Eliani treat you! I will see to getting you out of here.”

Eliani leaned forward and looked at Deia, her fern green eyes moist with tears. “Tenna... I must put you to sleep now. When... when you wake you will be in the hospital.” Eliani spoke in a voice that was like chimes on the wind in their beautiful sound Jomann thought. Deia nodded slowly, her face relaxed and at peace Jomann saw. He watched her turn to look at him with clear eyes.

“Androcles.” Deia spoke softly.

Andro looked at her. “I’m here Tenna.”

“If ever... if ever there was a Captain for you. As Andreus is to your father...” Deia told him softly. “He... he stands there my Mandri.” Her eyes shifting to where Jomann stood behind them.

Andro nodded his head. “I will heed your words Tenna. I will.”

Eliani caught herself once more looking at the Durcumusaan Captain she had fallen upon and she could not suppress the shudder of desire that she felt ripple through her. He was utterly gorgeous even with the injury to his face, from his tall, powerful body to his incredible ocean blue eyes. She found herself comparing him to Malic almost immediately and wondering why he made her tremble with such feelings when Malic could not. She shook her head slightly, unable to comprehend why she felt so forcefully drawn to this man when she still loved Malic. She watched as Andro got to his feet slowly and she placed her hand over Deia’s forehead. “Sleep now Tenna.” She whispered. “Sleep now.”

Jomann watched as Deia’s eyes slowly closed and Eliani drew her hand back after a moment. She looked up at Andro, his eyes already focused on her.

“Eli?”

“It’s bad Andro.” She said softly. “I’ve healed the most damaging wounds, but Lysandra here had nothing to treat for infection. That has taken its toll on her body. All of her internal... organs are at or near collapse. There is a projectile lodged next to her heart that I can’t remove here and one appears to have clipped her spine. Andro... I don’t know if she will ever walk again.”

Jomann saw his Prince take a deep breath at this news. Nothing was more horrible to a wolf than never being able to walk again. It meant that they could not run in their natural forms, something that they both knew Deia loved to do; something any wolf loved to do and to lose that ability had seen many wither away into nothing and finally die.

“Laustinos!” Andro snarled softly. That single word came out as a curse to Jomann and he shuddered for he could feel the savage anger and hatred pouring from him. He took a deep breath and looked at his sister once more. “Do what you are able to stabilize her Eli.” He said. “We will see to getting a stretcher down here to remove her from this place. I will have Thaura lift her out using TK to keep from jarring her.”

Eliani nodded. “It won’t take long.” She said.

Andro nodded and turned to look at Jomann who tore his eyes from Eliani and looked at his Prince. “She... she showed me what you have done these last days.” Andro said softly. “You... you kept her alive you know.”

Jomann bowed his head. “I was only... I was only doing my duty Milord Prince.” He said.

Andro looked at Eliani quickly and then back to Jomann. “Perhaps.” He said softly. “Leave your men here with my sister. We need to return to the surface and speak of what has happened. Then we need to make a visit.”

Jomann looked at him. “A visit Milord?” He asked.

Andro nodded. “Yes. I’m going to visit the Kavalian embassy and find out what they have done with my mother and where she is. And if they do not tell me... if they do not tell me then I will bring the remainder of that building down upon them as they brought this one down upon our people!”

Jomann nodded without question. “As you order.”

[Protect him Jomann... descendant of Humal.] Deia’s voice entered his head so smoothly and warmly that his eyes grew a little wider as Andro began to walk away. [Protect him for this has become a precarious time!]

[Prime... Prime Minister? Deia... how...?]

[You are very different Jomann.] Her voice continued warmly. [You were put here with me for a purpose Jomann. A purpose I have not discovered yet... but I will. Protect him now Jomann. That is my directive to you. We will talk in the future young wolf. We will talk in the future.]

I WILL BURN THEM ANDRO! Aurith screamed out within Mindvoice. I WILL BURN THEM ALL!

Her savage outburst did not go unheard as every dragon and Lycavorian within half a kilometer turned to watch as she lifted her body off the ground. Any thoughts she may have had of shielding were tossed to the wind as her sapphire colored scales rippled with tension and muscles as she snapped her wings out to the sides with a resounding pop, hissing loudly enough that everyone that was even close to her began to scatter in all directions. Reaching out with her TK power, refined over the years with her bonded sister For'mya, Aurith snatched up a three quarter ton lifter with her mind and brought it smashing back down to the earth in her rage. It was said that Aurith was the conduit for For'mya’s more refined and patient nature, but also for the vicious anger that could grip her. Almost anyone knew that to truly anger For'mya Leonidas, you also angered her bonded sister Aurith, and no one wanted a three ton snarling dragon with superheated breath angry at them.

Only three stood before her rampage and did nothing. Jomann held no fear of these great and powerful creatures and though he had never seen an angry dragon before in his life he stood beside his Prince and didn’t move a muscle. He felt such power within Mindvoice sweep over him, such power and control that he could not help but reach out and touch it with his mind and allow it to swirl around him unchecked. Jomann had always been considered a high level Tier Six Mindvoicer, but as the tremors of three that were so staggeringly powerful cascaded totally unchecked around him, those tremors swept him up in their embrace and allowed him to feel and experience the marvelous connection of those that were bonded to dragons. Jomann trusted his Prince without hesitation, and if he would not move from in front of the raging dragon, then nor would he.

They have taken my sister from me! Aurith shrieked. Why have they taken my bonded sister! Why can I not feel her! I will go to their embassy... I will find them and I will tear the flesh from their bones until they tell me!

That is when Andro stepped forward without hesitation and lifted his hands to touch her broad chest. He did not fear being stomped by her razor like talons or batted aside by her huge wings. Andro knew who she was, knew who he was, and he reached out with all the power at his command.

NO! His voice rose amid the echo of her cries in Mindvoice like a fog horn in the night and Aurith's head snapped around to look down at him with wide golden eyes.

Andro... no! Aurith cried. I must get her back! I must...

Andro looked up into her eyes and lifted his hands up. Aurith lowered her huge muzzle without hesitation until his warm palms touched her scales, pressed tightly and she could feel his power, Elynth's power, skitter across her shields and her mind like a soothing balm.

[If you do that Aurith we will never discover why they have taken her.] Andro spoke. [If you start killing their people they may even hurt her.]

[NO!] Aurith cried out.

Jomann stood just behind them with wide eyes as he was hearing every word they were speaking and it shook him down to his boots how easily he was able to remain within their shielded connection.

[I will go Aurith. Elynth, Jomann and I.] Andro told her as his hands rubbed her snout.

[You want to hurt them!] Aurith said. [I can feel it within you Androcles!]

Andro nodded his head slowly. [I do Aurith. I do. But I know I can not.] He said. [So much is happening Sapphire Scales...] Aurith moved closer to him and settled to the ground once more when he used the name that only he and Elynth had called her for many years.

Elynth extended her head out and touched her snout to her sister's scales. [Our... our fathers would want us to move carefully my sister. They would want us to be strong and act in such a way that does not harm your bonded sister and Androcles's mother or others of our people.]

[So we let them do this?] Aurith gasped.

[We don't know where she is Aurith. Where they have taken her, or if she is even still here on Earth.] Andro spoke. [We can not feel her within Mindvoice. They have... somehow they have learned to block her resonance so that we can not feel her.]

[If we act in a manner that they find threatening... they could hurt For'mya.] Elynth said softly. [Even take her from us for good. That is why we must harness our anger and hate and then channel it into ways of finding her.]

[You have seen how Athani is Aurith. You saw how her sister and the others protected my mother. Not all of their people are bad.] Andro spoke. [Resumar and Cemath are even now among Kavalians who hate their leaders just as much as we do. She is... she is your Bonded Sister... and she is also my mother! I will not put her in danger by my actions. I can not. It is also the vow we have taken as Bonded Pairs.]

Aurith blinked rapidly several times and Jomann watched those golden eyes soften considerably after Andro had spoken. Her next statement made his eyes grow very wide. [What will your father do Androcles? They have taken his Kinsoargai. He will be crazy with anger.]

Andro nodded. [My mothers will calm him just as Elynth and I have calmed you. No matter what happens I know he will do nothing that could cause her pain.]

Aurith met his eyes and nodded. [And nor shall I.]

[Go to Cranae Island sister.] Elynth spoke. [Grandmother and the Feravomir are there now. Spend time with them. Speak with them.]

[Anything you discover!] Aurith announced. [Anything at all...]

Andro nodded. [You will be the first I contact Aurith. On that I give you my solemn oath as a Talon Guardian.] Andro said.

Aurith nodded. [And like your father you have never broken your oath.] She said. [I will do as you ask of me... but know this Elynth... Androcles... if they harm my Bonded Sister... if they...] Aurith blinked, closed her eyes and took a deep breath. [I will take my vengeance upon them. And I will not stop until those who have done this are all dead before my talons!]

Androcles leaned forward and placed his forehead to the tip of her snout. [As will we all Aurith.] He stated. [As will we all.]

Andro stepped back as Aurith turned and leaped for the sky without another word. Elynth turned and looked at Andro without pause for she could sense the seething rage building in her Bonded Brother.

[We must tread very carefully Andro.] She stated softly. [One wrong step and it could cost For'mya her life. It could cause everything to spin completely out of control.]

Andro nodded his head slowly. [I know.]

[When word of this breaks... and it will... we must hold them all in check.] Elynth stated as she leaned closer to him. [If we do not... all will be lost in an instant.]

Andro reached up and placed his hand on her long neck as his mind raced with options and scenarios. None of them were very good right now. The concentrated attack against his family, the Drow outposts, the Immortals taking part in the attack on Kranek and taking his elf mother Dysea from there. Now the kidnapping of his elf mother For'mya and possibly Janae. What those with Resumar had discovered. Androcles was a student of history, Lycavorian history and Spartan history both. He could rattle off every battle fought by the Spartans here on Earth in their rise to greatness under his grandfather, and he could spew out forces and numbers and objectives of nearly every battle the Lycavorian Union had fought to get to the prominence they had now. None of them compared to what was happening here. Not even the penetration of the High Coven agents so deeply into Union society that his father and Armetus had swept aside twenty-six years ago could match these events. Now... now everything hinged on his words and his orders as long as they maintained the ruse that his father was dead. Now that was the most important thing they had to maintain, for if the Kavalians discovered that his father was still alive they would undoubtedly order his mothers killed and begin pouring across their borders in more locations than they could respond to. In the confusion of everything that was happening at this moment, that would be a fatal blow from which they would never recover.

"I must speak to Armetus." Andro said finally as he looked at Elynth. "And we need to find Uncle Daniel. When my father discovers they have taken mother... only Uncle Daniel will be able to control him. Keep him from doing something stupid."

[I agree.] Elynth spoke. [And my father will not question him or council against it. They are too tightly bound together as you and I are.]

Andro turned and looked at Jomann who stood there still injured but not bowed. His blue eyes were wide at what he had heard the last few minutes but he had said nothing. "My Aunt... she said if ever there was a Captain for me it was you. Why would she say that?"

Jomann blinked several times and shook his head. "I... I don't know Milord."

Andro inhaled deeply allowing Jomann's jasmine coffee scent to filter through his senses and smelling the pureness of his Lycavorian blood easily as well as the trembling power within him. He turned to face him fully now. "You are... you are different Jomann." He said softly.

"Sire?" Jomann asked him puzzled by his statement. It was almost the exact statement that Deia had made.

It felt right. It felt somehow like it was always supposed to be. Androcles Leonidas made his decision without further thought and following only his instincts. It would be a decision that many would question in the beginning... but Andro didn't care. This is what his instincts called for him to do.

"Do you think you can hang with me Captain Jomann?" Andro asked him.

"Milord... I am a junior Captain of the Durcunusaan." Jomann replied knowing what he was asking. "There are far more experienced officers who should hold the position of your Royal Captain."

Andro shook his head slowly. "No... I don't think so." He said softly. "You've just been promoted Jomann."

Jomann could not help but feel his heart racing at this unbelievable news. There had not been a Durcunusaan Captain permanently assigned to Androcles Leonidas since he came of age for the expressed reason that no officer could guarantee his safety. He was often too reckless and did things that drove officers trying to protect him crazy. Jomann knew of the Commanders Bren and Famus acting as his Durcunusaan detail commanders, but no permanent officer had been assigned as Star Colonel Andreus was to the King or Atropos and Lexi to Queen Anja and Queen Dysea. This was not the path Jomann had foreseen himself taking in his life and even though he knew it could very well lead to the demise of his career, his own instincts screamed for him to speak the words.

Jomann drew himself to his full six foot three height. "As you order Milord!" He snapped loudly.

Andro nodded his head. "Good."

"Milord... you said... I could hear you within Mindvoice sire. You said the King was not dead." Jomann stammered.

Andro shook his head. "He isn't." He answered. "Right now however... given all that is happening... as far as the Union is concerned he is dead."

“Who knows this sire?” Jomann asked.

“My family.” Andro answered. “And now you.” Andro turned and used his TK power to propel himself up into the saddle on Elynth’s back. “Do you have a fear of heights Jomann?”

“No sire.”

“Then get on.” Andro spoke. “We have an embassy to visit. And then I need to speak with Armetus at the hospital.”

With nary a blink or pause of hesitation Jomann slung his 190 and began climbing onto the saddle behind his Prince.

SPARTA KAVALIAN EMBASSY

“...nothing since we learned he landed at the site of the Senate Building.” Matuarr spoke as Qurot paced back and forth in front of his desk. “The Netnews have stopped transmitting a live feed from there since he arrived with his sister and I can only assume it was at the order of the Durcunusaan.”

“The only reason he would be there is if they have discovered the truth!” Qurot barked as he turned back to him. “Our plan called for a least a week before they discovered about the elf wench! It has been barely four days!”

Matuarr nodded. “I know how long it has been Qurot!” He spoke. “I am more concerned with the fact that his Hadarian sister is with him. She was reported as being among his siblings that went to Kranek. If she has returned as well that can only mean that the attack failed. She was not supposed to be alive let alone back here on Earth. Can we find out from our Puma Bane team if they have heard anything from the Prefect or Marshall Pusintin?”

Qurot stopped pacing and looked at him. “I can inquire of them when they make contact next in eight hours. We should not reach out to them from here however. We can not trust the Lycavorians who are helping us even if they are part of Laustinos’s group.”

“They are all that is keeping our people hidden Qurot.” Matuarr said getting to his feet. “Laustinos was correct in that they hate the Leonidas family enough to betray them and help us. I would like to know why though.”

“Their hate is why we should not trust them.” Qurot spoke. “Hate is unreliable.”

Matuarr looked at him. “Hate has served you well through the years.” He stated. “Or do you expect anyone to believe you did not order that attack on their colony. The Prefect and Pusintin do not believe it and nor do I. Why do you hate them so Qurot?”

“My reasons are my own!” Qurot hissed in reply.

“Indeed... and that hate increased when Resumar Leonidas took Athani’Puat from you.” Matuarr said.

“Athani’Puat was mine!” Qurot snarled. “She is still mine! And when we discover her I will take her and make her mine! No matter how much she fights me! She will be mine Matuarr mark my words!”

“If you survive Qurot I have no doubts you will make this so.” Matuarr spoke.

“He will come here you know.” Qurot spoke. “If they have discovered she is gone he will come here.”

Matuarr moved to the large window of his office and gazed out over the once pristine gardens on the embassy grounds. “Then we will stick to the story that Prefect Keleru told us to use. It is half the truth anyway.”

The grounds had been destroyed when the Coven nearly destroyed their building, the fire and debris that rained down on them from the explosion blackening the ground all around. The Lycavorians built their buildings well though and the interior of the embassy was almost back to what it had been when they arrived. The damage had not been as extensive as they first had thought, only a portion of one of the floors collapsing, and the Lycavorians and their lackeys had rushed to help them put things back together. That was until four days ago when the Prefect put his plan in motion and all of the Lycavorians and their workers were refused entrance as the embassy was surrounded by what could only be an entire regiment of Spartan troops. Eight of their superiorly designed S94 Main Hover Tanks could be seen from every corner of the embassy, two of the MHTs at every turn in the road. A complete battery of their MP9 Plasma Artillery was situated in a small clearing that had once been a park half a kilometer away. He had seen one of the V24 Mobile Command and Triage Centers pull behind on five story building on the first day and at least a dozen of their SID75 Armored Scout Vehicles scurried about all of the time now.

The Hadarian embassy, the next embassy building closest to theirs, had men on its roof twenty-four hours a day now. Matuarr had been the one to suggest they get Buonau and Wiktor to place an ambassador in their embassy here that was sympathetic to their cause. They had refused this advice believing they had the will of the people behind them and within hours of the new government taking power on Hadaria, the Hadarian Ambassador to Earth had made a very public and impassioned statement condemning this action and all those who had taken part in it. He had renounced the new Hadarian government and then proclaimed that the embassy on Earth would now be the conduit from which Queen Anja would continue to legally govern. It was nothing more than a symbolic gesture, but a powerful one nonetheless.

Matuarr turned back to Qurot. “Frankly I’m surprised we are not all in shackles already.” He said. “This only shows me that they cling to their ridiculous laws more so than I thought. Once the plan is fully in motion... it won’t be stopped.”

They both turned when the enlisted soldier came running down the short corridor and came to a stop outside the office door.

“Ambassador!” He gasped.

“What is it?” Matuarr asked.

“We just received an emergency burst code from our team on the outside.” The soldier rasped out. “They have been monitoring the events at the dig site. The elf Queen’s dragon took off moments ago headed south and Prince Androcles...”

“Spit it out man!” Qurot exclaimed.

“They say he took off as well.” The soldier stammered. “They said he was headed here!”

As if it had been perfectly timed, the moment the words left his mouth they heard the horrible sound of a trumpeting dragon and the front entrance of the Kavalian embassy, untouched by the High Coven attack, blew inward. The massive double doors splintered under the impact and the grand foyer, so immense in its size, suddenly became a very small area as a massive obsidian colored dragon now filled that space with two extremely well muscled young men launching themselves from the saddle that dragon wore.

EARTH GYTHEIO CRANAE ISLAND

“Wayonn...?” Helen spoke as they walked along the white sands of Gulf. Since arriving back here to Cranae Island they had spent little time apart, Helen listening in rapt fascination as Wayonn relayed to her all that had happened in the years the Protectorate had been apart from the Union. He was hitting the high spots she knew, but just being around him and knowing that she did have a history and a family, that knowledge alone had returned to her a passion that had waned through the many years turned her toward regarding Martin and his family as her own. Helen would never change that, the Leonidas family was too much within her blood now, but now she was discovering that she too had her own blood and family and to know that the two were so uniquely bound was only an added bonus. Arzoal felt this within her Bonded Sister and she shared Helen’s joy as if it was her own. Wayonn looked down at her as they walked and he admired her beauty and poise. He knew immediately that Helen carried far more influence among the Lycavorians than even she knew. And without a doubt, she was perhaps the single strongest anchor for Martin Leonidas outside of his wives and mates.

They had come here immediately after leaving the SCIMITAR and even Devra had been struck by the beauty of the island and the villa itself. To impress a Vanari in such a way was no small feat Wayonn knew. The Lycavorian called Bren had immediately taken the Vanari to the south wing of the villa where he could show them where they would be sleeping and to begin putting together information that would help them find Caliria. Dutkne, Drey and Caia were very quickly introduced to the dark skinned elf that Helen called Lynwe, and the exquisitely beautiful vampire half elf she introduced as Selene. They had apparently been permanent fixtures in Martin’s life since he had returned from the moon so long ago and they were both considered family. As far as Dutkne and the others were concerned this was what they had hoped and wished would happen for so many years and now that it was, they were going to make the most of it.

“Yes.”

Helen looked up at him. “Why... why did Canth pick me?” She asked softly.

Wayonn smiled gently. “It began with you Helen.” He stated. “You were the one that picked the Spartans. You were the one that shaped the future for all of us whether you knew it or not. And no... it was not because you were the last Oracle. If my son so wished, when Martin freed his essence he could have passed his knowledge and abilities to Dutkne. To Caia. Any number of others. He chose you because of who you were.”

“My actions almost cost us our future.” She stated.

Wayonn chuckled. “Isn’t it Martin who says almost only counts in horseshoes and hand grenades?”

Helen looked at him with wide eyes. “Where did you hear that?” She gasped with a small laugh.

“It was something he said to me when I first spoke to him at the tomb of his father.” He answered.

“What are horseshoes?”

Helen laughed and was about to say something when her head snapped back around towards the villa and the color drained from her face. “No!” She gasped.

“Helen... what is it?”

“Arzoal... are you certain sister?” Helen gasped.

Wayonn felt the immensely powerful shielded Mindvoice connection as Helen spoke with the dragon knew as Arzoal. He had talked to the Dragon Elder Mother through Mindvoice on many occasions through the past years and he had rejoiced when Martin had gone to Enurrua and finally freed them from their misery there. He had not expected what those acts would bring but given that dragons were now a revered member of the Union, he could feel noting but joy for them. Their numbers were growing quickly as they used City Ship 41 as their primary nursery here on Earth, and each years the numbers of men and women that bonded to dragons was growing. It was something that Arzoal and Martin monitored very closely for they knew even one bonded pair that went astray could cause untold misery, but from all he had seen so far, that was not an occurrence they had dealt with yet and given their strict guidelines it was something that should never become an issue. He had met Arzoal on the SCIMITAR and was taken aback by her size and majesty but the three of them had talked as much as possible and Wayonn felt he had gotten to know her quite well in only a few short hours. It was odd though that he felt he should know her from somewhere else and he had decided to sit with her some time in the future and discuss such things. He wanted to know if it was possible for the many Lycavorians in the Protectorate to bond with dragons first and foremost.

Wayonn looked at Helen as she squeezed his arm tightly. “What is it?” He asked feeling the tension in her body and smelling the worry drifting from her pores. He turned when he saw Dutkne running across the sand in wolf form towards them and a sudden feeling of dread began to fill him. “Helen what is going on?”

“We will return right now sister.” Helen finished speaking and looked at him just as Dutkne shifted back and came to an abrupt halt beside them.

“Grandfather! First Oracle!” He gasped.

“Aurith has returned from Sparta! They breached the bunker. Deia is alive but badly injured. Eliani is taking her to King Yelu Hospital! Wayonn... the Kavalians have taken For'mya.” Helen said.

“Taken her?” Wayonn gasped.

“It’s on the Netnews now!” Dutkne gasped out. “Andro and Elynth... they just broke down the front doors of the Kavalian embassy and there is a battle going on inside.”

Helen nodded. “Neither Arzoal or I can breach the shields of Elynth or Andro when they don’t want us too. And there is another person with them who is also adding to their power.” She said. “We must get back to the villa!”

Jomann had never flown on a dragon before this day, and no matter what else happened in his life, he decided that this was to be his destiny in the future. He rode behind his Prince without a flicker of fear filling him, their legs securely anchored behind the advanced Dragon Armor braces, and their hands on their thighs. Though the psychic shield that surrounded them kept the vast majority of the wind from their bodies, it could not keep out the sensations of the blistering speed that Elynth was using to swerve among the tops of the buildings of Sparta, her wings and tail propelling them into dizzying maneuvers. Jomann also sensed that she could go even faster if she so desired. His keen ocean blue eyes picked up the Kavalian embassy along Embassy Row in Sparta and without thinking he reached out within Mindvoice to touch his Prince.

Milord... our forces have the embassy sealed. Jomann spoke. They have seen no one except in the windows. How do we know they will even acknowledge us when we arrive? They would not be fool enough to keep your mother in their embassy.

They'll acknowledge us. Andro said confidently.

How do you know that sire?

We are going to knock. Andro answered.

Jomann blinked several times. Knock Milord? They will not receive us if we knock.

Andro chuckled. Elynth my sister... would you be so kind as to show Jomann here how we knock?

Elynth turned her head back to look at them between great sweeps of her wings and Jomann was certain he saw a glint of savage glee and mischievousness in them. Why certainly Andro my brother. She answered.

Jomann felt his stomach drop as Elynth folded her wings and dove for the ground. He could barely keep track of the myriad of buildings that whistled by or the people that were shouting and scrambling to get out of the way of the massive dragon that was rocketing along the streets barely fifty feet off the ground. Jomann saw the Kavalian embassy loom in front of them and begin to focus and take shape. He also felt Elynth increase her speed somewhat and suddenly he realized how his Prince intended to “knock” on the Kavalian door. Jomann couldn't help the wicked grin that came over his face as he reached back for his 190.

No killing Jomann. Andro's voice carried a cautionary tone in it and Jomann sensed it was for their enemies. Stay within twenty meters of Elynth and our psychic shield will protect you. No blades on Shi Viskas either. I do not want to make them overreact and kill my mother. I want them to know that we know what they have done and perhaps show their hand a little more as to why.

Can we hurt them Milord? Jomann asked as his hand came back down.

That you can do. Andro spoke just as Elynth released a savage trumpet of anger, folded her wings inward even more and flew directly into the massive double doors of the Kavalian embassy.

All of the embassies on Embassy Row as it was called were elegantly built structures that kept with the look of ancient Spartan décor because of the area of the city they were in. Almost all of these embassies had massive double oak doors frame in gold steel that opened into a huge Grand Foyer where Ambassadors or their agents could greet visitors and hold their many parties and gatherings. It was into this Grand Foyer where three and a half tons of dragon moving at nearly seventy kilometers an hour by the time she struck splintered those double oak doors like so much firewood. The right side door was torn completely off its automated steel hinges and propelled across the foyer like a missile where it impacted the far wall and shattered in half. The left side of the door broke in half instantly under the impact of Elynth's muscular body, half of it smashing into three Kavalian soldiers who were rushing towards the door and sending them sprawling and out of the fight immediately with a multitude of broken bones and lacerations. As Elynth dug her curved talons into the polished marble and granite floor Andro leaped from her back with barely a pause, followed quickly by Jomann who leaped in the opposite direction of his Prince.

Jomann felt an unusual rush of energy and power filter through his body and in an instant his left arm came up and his Shi Viska burst into existence leveled at three Kavalians who were rushing at him from down a corridor. Jomann didn't hesitate or blink and launched his Shi Viska with merely a thought. Even without the razor like blades that could extend and slice through most anything known, the Shi Viska was still a devastating weapon. The Kavalian in front of the other two caught the brunt of the launched shield full in his chest and it lifted him up and dropped him to the floor withering in agony from his shattered ribs before speeding past him.

Jomann was an equal in size to almost any Kavalian at six foot three and two hundred and twenty plus pounds of chiseled muscle. As the two soldiers reached him and began bringing up shock sticks, his hand snapped out and he grabbed one Kavalian by his fur covered throat before the man could bring the shock stick forward. The shock sticks were the weapons allowed to all the embassies because no deadly weapons were authorized. Basically an eighteen inch staff with power cell and exposed end, they could render a fully grown Lycavorian helpless with one or two well placed hits. Jomann had no intention of allowing the Kavalians to hit him with them. As the Kavalian's eyes bugged out of his head and he was lifted into the air by Jomann's wolf strength and used like a shield. The second soldier was slower to react and the end of his shock stick slammed into his comrade's back just as Jomann released the first Kavalian. His body danced with the electricity cascading through him, until he dropped to the floor useless and quivering in helplessness. The third Kavalian turned with wide eyes at what he had done just as Jomann hit him with an open heel strike to his chest directly over where Jomann knew the Kavalian heart was. The soldier's eyes bugged out of his head as well, as his heart skipped a beat from the power of the impact and he lost control of the shock stick. He was unprepared for the crushing uppercut that impacted just beneath the right side of his jaw and lifted him a good three inches off the floor before sending him sprawling. Jomann whirled around prepared to defend his Prince and found it was unnecessary.

Two Kavalians were already slumped at Andro's feet and he was taking great pleasure in beating the much larger third Kavalian with his bare hands. Jomann watched as blow after blow struck the midsection of the Kavalian soldier, Andro's hands moving in almost a blur with the speed he was using. His Prince was perhaps two inches shorter than him, but just as equally thick and chiseled as any true Lycavorian Spartan was. The return of King Leonidas and the supremely defined body he had, along with that of Daniel Simpson and those who followed him had brought a renewed surge of pride within the ranks of the Lycavorians. Now, even those men who had long retired and were no longer soldiers and even thousands of years of age, had taken to becoming just as physically fit as possible to show the standard that their King himself lived by. This stress on physical fitness had even begun to expand to other species and races and now it was common to see male elves who sported solid, muscular forms whereas before they may have been lean and fit. The Algolian members of the fleet were now seen much more often within the many gyms and centers on the ships and had become the favorite workout partners of many Lycavorians for the immense strength and keen minds. Watching his prince in action filled Jomann with a sense of surreal honor that he was here with him.

The movement out of the corner of his eye caught his attention and they shifted up to see the two Kavalians move to the railing just above where Androcles was and leap without hesitation. This set Jomann in motion as well... and given who his prince was... it was really no contest.

Qurot thought to leap over the railing and drop on Androcles from above while he was occupied and pummel the young prince into the ground. If he been more versed in fighting on the ground than from in space from the safety of his ship he would have known this would not work on a Lycavorian. He also made the mistake of completely ignoring Jomann who was on the other side of the huge room. Qurot was a large man, nearly six and a half feet tall and well over two hundred and forty pounds. He was cruel and violent, and had beaten more than one Kavalian into the ground beneath him. Andro detected his scent the moment he entered the building. As Qurot was about to land on him from above Andro stepped back from beating the soldier in front of him, rotated his body forty-five degrees and cut loose with a Mindvoice fueled punch right to Qurot's jaw while he was still in the air. Qurot's dark eyes went wide just before the blow landed and then pain lanced through his jaw and neck as his body was propelled through the air by the force of the blow. Right into a waiting Jomann.

Jomann had seen all his prince was going to do within his mind and he leaped into the air just as Andro landed his punch and sent Qurot reeling. Jomann used all of his body weight and incredible strength and plowed into Qurot's body while he was still airborne, turning slightly and driving the heavier Kavalian into the unyielding floor with crushing power and then Jomann began to pound Qurot while he was dazed. Andro was turning towards them and he sent a clenched fist into the soldier's face with savage anger, the Kavalian spinning away, his fur bloody and matted; his midsection a mass of welts and bruises. Jomann grabbed Qurot by the collar of his uniform and without even thinking used the small amount of TK power he had used before to throw Qurot hard into the nearby wall. He grunted in pain, his eyes wide and his fur covered face a mask of feral anger, and he surged off the wall with renewed strength and rabid anger. He whipped out with his hand extending his claws from his fingertips as he did, bringing them down across Jomann's face and opening up three deep angry slashes and causing him to spin away in pain.

"I will kill you Lycavorian dog!" He bellowed.

As he brought his other hand forward to slash him again Jomann twisted his body even more, turning outside the wild sweep of Qurot's hand and then stepping into a punch directly to the side of his face that staggered Qurot. It was then fell Andro upon him, grabbing the front of his shirt and viciously sending his forehead into Qurot's face. Qurot bellowed in pain as his nose splintered and gave way. He brought his hand up and raked his claws across Andro's lower jaw and neck before Andro sent his forehead smashing into Qurot's face once more. The combination of the force of the blow and the pain already coursing through his body caused Qurot to stumble and stagger back falling to the ground. As Andro stepped forward to pounce on him again the voice brought him up short.

“ENOUGH!” Matuarr’s deep voice echoed against the walls in the grand foyer as an even dozen Lycavorian troops poured in through the now shattered doors.

Andro’s head snapped around and he saw Matuarr standing in the open corridor that led back to the offices. He leaped without thinking, his hand closing around Matuarr’s throat and ramming him into the wall.

“WHERE IS MY MOTHER?” Andro’s voice carried over everyone in the foyer.

Matuarr was digging at the iron like vice that gripped his throat, unable to get his fingers under the crushing grip and tangling in his fur. “Re... release me boy... or... you will... never see her alive again!” Matuarr rasped out as his eyes looked at Andro with distain.

Andro did release him, but as he did the psychic knife exploded from his right fist and the tip came to rest just under Matuarr’s jaw freezing him on his tip toes. His black ringed azure eyes were wide in ferocious anger, his duel wolf fangs fully extended and giving him a crazed look of sadism.

“MILORD!” Jomann screamed his eyes wide.

ANDRO NO! Elynth shouted within Mindvoice as they both moved towards him.

Andro stared at Matuarr with killing eyes, holding the tip of that psychic knife ready to plunge into his brain. “Where... where is my mother?” He snarled. “You took her from the bunker with that nubous traitor Laustinos! Where is she? My Aunt lives Matuarr! She told me this! Tell me or I will...”

“You will do nothing!” Matuarr barked viciously. “If you kill me she dies! If you do not leave this place she dies! What will you do whelp? Release me now and leave this place! You stand on sovereign Kavalian territory! You...”

“THIS IS SPARTA!” Andro screamed spraying Matuarr with saliva. “You have attacked my people! You have killed hundreds of citizens of the Union! You have killed my father! Taken my mothers! WHY HAVE YOU DONE THIS?” Andro screamed leaning forward until his burning azure eyes were inches from Matuarr’s. “WHY?”

Elynth had never seen her Bonded Brother so incensed with a killing rage as he was now. Not even during their hours on Alba Tau had she seen him pulse so powerfully within their bond in Mindvoice. She knew he was capable of so much than he had already shown, they both were, but he was so close to the edge of the abyss now and she could not allow him to fall with such anger and hate eating away at him. She moved closer to him, the injured Kavalians madly scrambling to get out of her way.

[Andro my beloved Bonded Brother!] Elynth’s voice surged into his mind. [You must not do this! This is not what we came here for!]

[So many dead!] Andro cried out to her his facial expression never changing. [So many dead Elynth! Dead by my hand! My order! Because of them!]

[I feel your pain my beautiful Androcles.] Elynth spoke. [We are one... you and I... I feel the agony within you for I share it as well! This is not how our fathers would want us to act in their stead! You know this! Especially not now!]

Andro’s head turned quickly to look at her golden eyes and she stepped even closer to him. [Fight... fight with your head.] He spoke more softly now.

Elynth nodded her massive head now. [Lead with your heart.]

Andro turned back to Matuarr. “Where is my mother?” He snarled.

“I will tell you nothing boy!” Matuarr growled. “We are only insuring our future as a people!”

“Your people have no future!” Andro snapped. “Not after what they have done!”

“You were training the High Coven dragons to fight the Kavalian Federation! Even as you used deceit and guile in public to lull us into a sense of friendship!” Matuarr shouted. “We are not fools boy! This alone is an act of war! We took actions that insure the survival of our people! As is our right!”

“Your right?” Andro screamed. “Hundreds of my people lay dead! You have attacked my family! Killed my father and taken my mothers! How does this insure the survival of your people you fool! What did you think we would do? Tell me where my mother is! Tell me now and you may yet live to see another sunrise!”

Matuarr grinned viciously. “Kill me and she dies!” He said again. “I do not know where she is but rest assured she is no longer in Union space! Your father is dead! The Hadarian witch you call mother is no longer in power! What we have done is secure the future of the KFI by eliminating threats to us! Now release me whelp! Release me and leave this embassy for this is Kavalian territory by order of your own government and the Galactic Court!”

“Fuck the Galactic Court!” Andro shouted.

“So now you will dismiss the rule of law young Leonidas?” Matuarr snapped. “Just as your father did. The law you uphold so valiantly when it suits you and dismiss when it doesn’t!”

“You hold a Queen of the Lycavorian Union prisoner! My mother!” Andro shouted in his face. “You...”

“Your father is dead! Therefore she is no longer a Queen of the Union! And she is not your mother!” Matuarr barked. “A Queen of the Elves she may be perhaps... and we will deal with them to entertain her release! And you will not be King for very long boy! Now you will release me and leave this place! Or she will die just as surely as I will!”

“Tell me what you hope to accomplish by this?” Andro growled but more subdued now. “These are nothing more than acts of terrorism! Terrorism! Who will believe anything you say after what you have done?”

“What we have done?” Matuarr snapped. “We have done what we needed to do to survive as a species! As a race! Something your father was working very hard to insure did not happen!”

“You lie!” Andro snarled.

“Do I?” He answered. “We will make our case before your Galactic Court concerning our actions! We have not invaded your precious Union! Our forces ready to continue our war with the vampires animals! We have done what was necessary to keep you from helping them! If you kill me... there will be war! And we will sweep your pathetic Union aside like so much fodder beneath our might! You will be responsible for the death of your people as well as the one you call mother! Now release me you fool child! Before you start something you can not finish!”

Andro glared at him for a moment longer before willing away the psychic knife and stepping back from him. Matuarr reached up and rubbed the fur under his chin his eyes cruel and filled with hate. He glanced quickly at Jomann as he came up beside Androcles and then his eyes went to where Elynth held her own anger in check as she stared at the him.

“Do not think to hinder us boy King.” Matuarr snapped. “I have already demanded a setting before the Galactic Court where I will present our case. Until that time... we will hold Queen For'mya of the Elves to insure you do nothing stupid!”

Andro took a step forward but it was Jomann who gripped his arm. “No Androcles.” He stated softly using Andro’s name and causing him to turn to look at him. To Jomann it was the most natural thing in the world to speak his name, as if they had been friends for years, and this knowledge struck him as odd. Jomann shook his head. [Another time. Another place. We are at the disadvantage here now Androcles.]

Andro’s face was sweaty and bloody. The second head butt he had given Qurot had opened up a nasty split in his own flesh just above his eye and blood leaked from the wound down the side of his face. He turned back to Matuarr and saw Qurot beginning to get to this feet under the watchful eyes and barrels of two Spartans and their 190s. He lifted his hand and pointed at Matuarr.

“Mark my words carefully Matuarr.” Andro growled. “The day will come when there is a reckoning. And when that day comes... your blood and your life are mine!” Andro spun around and lashed out with one last devastating punch that struck Qurot directly in the cheek and lifted him up off the floor and dropped him unconscious. He leaned over and spit on Qurot’s form then and walked out into the center of the foyer. “That is for my brother and Athani!”

Andro turned to the Spartan officer that was behind them. “Pull your people back to their positions Colonel! Do it now! This may be Kavalian territory inside here, but out there it is Sparta. No one comes or goes without direct communication with me or Captain Jomann.”

The Colonel nodded his head. “As your order Milord.”

“Do not think to restrict us!” Matuarr barked.

Andro turned and looked at him. “As of this moment you are a hostile race and terrorist government to the Lycavorian Union. I will insure no more of my people die at the hands of your assassins. Your movements outside this embassy will be monitored and tracked! Any of your people found outside this embassy will be arrested and immediately imprisoned to await execution as terrorists!” Andro pointed at him once more. “And I will find Janae as well Matuarr. That I promise you.” Andro saw the flash of recognition in Matuarr’s eyes but said nothing before turning and looking at Elynth’s beautiful and sleek form.

Andro moved up to Elynth and put his hands on her chest as her head came down and curled around his back until her head rested on his shoulder. [Thank you sister.] He whispered.

[Without you I am nothing.] She told him.

[I am nothing without you.] Andro repeated the words.

[Let us leave this place Andro. Before I lose what little control I am maintaining and burn it all down.] Elynth said.

Andro nodded and leaped the two and a half meters on her back and into the saddle. He looked at Jomann to see him staring at him. [You are my Captain now Jomann. You go where I go.]

Jomann didn’t hesitate and followed suit and settled into the saddle behind Andro. Andro turned to look at Matuarr who was leaning over an unconscious Qurot. “Remember my voice to this day Kavalian.” Andro growled seeing Matuarr turn to look at him. “Remember it well for it will be the last thing you hear before you die! Sister go!”

Matuarr watched as Elynth turned and moved gracefully out of the foyer and back into the sunlight. His eyes remained on the doorway until all the Lycavorian troops had exited out the remains of the shattered doorway and then he smiled.

“Young fool!” He hissed softly. “In several weeks you will no longer be of any importance to anyone. And the KFI will rule the Union.”

BELID

“Brother!” Tir’ut almost shouted as they turned and watched Lynom unwrap the shadows from around his body to reveal the petite half elven female clinging tightly to his shoulders, her two toned black and blond hair wildly unkempt.

They had found the cave easily enough with directions provided by Lynom after they had landed the SCYTHE Heavy Fighter. It was half kilometer away still under Shroud and carefully hidden. The cave was also well hidden given its close proximity to the actual Immortal base, both of the two entrances concealed behind thick brush that could easily be brought back into place in seconds. The interior was dry and cool and dimly lit by several beams of sunlight that came in through cracks in the cave ceiling. Normya and As’hia could do nothing but watch as the two brothers, equal in size and build in almost every way, embraced tightly and held each other. It had been nearly two years since they had physically seen one another and no matter their current situation, they could not deny themselves the joy of seeing one another again in person.

Tir’ut pushed him back and looked at him. “I see you have let your hair grow again!” Tir’ut spoke with a smile. “Mother will not approve you know.”

Lynom nodded. “And you as well. Last time I saw you, your head was as smooth as our brother’s et’zarreth when he was born!” (ass)

Tir’ut chuckled and nodded his head. He held Lynom’s arm and turned holding out his hand for Normya. “Lynom... this is my Il Kal’daka Darthirii. This is Normya... my Blessed Wife.”

Lynom looked at the platinum blond hair and dazzling emerald green eyes and smiled as Normya stepped right up to him. He bowed his head to her as was the Akruxian custom when greeting another’s wife and he took her hand in his. He lifted it to his cheek and placed the back of her knuckles against his cheek.

“It is a blessed honor to meet you Normya Leonidas.” He spoke softly.

Normya smiled brilliantly as well. “And to finally meet you.” She said in reply.

“I had often wondered if my brother, as ugly as he is, would ever find a wife.” Lynom spoke with a smile. “Did he drug you perhaps in order for you to allow him to let beauty such as yours grace his miserable life?”

Normya couldn’t help but laugh and she shook her head in happiness. “You are one to talk.” She said cutting her eyes to where As’hia stood shyly.

Lynom turned quickly and took As’hia’s hand, pulling her to him. Normya noticed that As’hia immediately pressed close to him, still unsure of everything around her, but knowing that Lynom was her anchor. Normya could smell Lynom heavily in her blood, and she in his and this only confirmed to her that As'hia had allowed him to scent her in the ways of her wolf blood and the Lycavorian people. It was not something done without the consent of the female and the acceptance by her of his scent within her blood would announce to any wolf around her that she had been claimed by another. "Brother..." Lynom said softly. "This is... this is As'hia. She is who I wish to make my Blessed Wife, if she will have me."

Tir'ut looked at the female elf with two toned hair and could not deny her beauty or the strength that permeated from her. The simple way she held to his brother, one hand around his waist and the other holding his abdomen told him all he needed to know. He smiled and looked at his brother. "It appears she has already made that decision for you Lynom." He stated. "I can detect your foul stench within her blood brother. Now... who drugged who?"

As'hia couldn't help but laugh now as she looked at Normya and she watched as the young Princess of the Union reached for her hands. As'hia didn't hesitate and took those hands as Normya drew her into an embrace.

"Your mother and father will be here soon." She whispered. "And we will leave this place shortly after so that you and Lynom can begin a life together."

As'hia hugged her tightly. "We have... we have already done that Princess." As'hia said. "And I do not fear what anyone else says. Not anymore."

Normya nodded and pulled back to look at them. "Lynom... As'hia... this is Cirith and Lancy." She spoke motioning to where they stood a few meters away. "They have been helping us and they are our friends."

Lynom and As'hia nodded to them as they came closer. "You are purebloods." Lynom stated.

Cirith shook her head. "Lancy is... I am not." She said.

Lynom looked at As'hia quickly before turning back to Cirith. "That is not true." He stated.

Cirith looked at him confused and Lancy smiled from his spot next to her. "He can smell the wolf in your blood Cirith." Lancy spoke looking at her. "Technically... you would be considered a pureblood since you can't get much purer than Aikiro and your father."

"Aikiro?" Lynom hissed. "She... she was your mother?"

Cirith met his eyes. "Yes." She said sternly expecting some sort of rebuke or snide comment.

Lynom looked at Tir'ut and Normya before turning back to her and nodding his head. "Then it is excellent you have decided to use your bloodlines for the purpose of good." He spoke. "It shows that you are considerably smarter than your mother."

Cirith chuckled now as well as she relaxed. "Yes... well I guess it does considering she is dead now." She said.

Tir'ut took Lynom's arm. "Father and Denali Leonidas will be here in the system in a few hours. Six at most. We must prepare. What do you know of an Immortal called Kr'nak?"

Lynom nodded as he moved to where they had heated the small boulders in the pit in the center of the cave. As he and Tir'ut squatted across from each other Cirith saw Normya and As'hia settle to the ground in front of them as both Cha'talla's sons drew their women close to them. For a fleeting moment Cirith felt a slight tug of pain at never having experienced this same sense of devotion from a man, but she dismissed it quickly. They had too much to be concerned with and could not worry about what hopes and dreams she had for the future.

"Phy'iad's right hand. One of them." Lynom spoke. "I did not spend much time with him in the two years I have been here. He is very private for an Immortal though Phy'iad trusts him more than the others I think."

"Why do you say that?" Normya asked.

Lynom looked at her. "When Phy'iad would leave on certain missions within The Wilds there were times he would not take Kr'nak."

"What missions?" Tir'ut asked.

Lynom shrugged. "From what I understand from those he did take it was to meet with new suppliers from a criminal organization that was moving into The Wilds. Word is that they were being funded in part by the Kavalian Federation, but Phy'iad did not care."

"Why would this make Phy'iad trust Kr'nak more?" Normya asked trying to direct him to the answer she wanted to hear.

“He would leave his elf... his elf slave Osiri in Kr'nak's care and no one else's.” Lynom spoke. “He went twice in the two years I have been here and both times he was gone for at least a month. This has been going on for some time from what I understand. He trusts no one else to look after her while he is gone. Some say that Kr'nak wants her for himself but he knows Phy'iad will never give her up. She is too valuable to him as a scientist. She is the one that was able to discover the information about As'hia.” Lynom looked at Tir'ut and Normya. “Why do you ask about him? Phy'iad has many captains so why would this Kr'nak interest you so?”

“I doubt all of Phy'iad's captains can claim Osiri as their Blessed Wives as Kr'nak does.” Tir'ut answered.

Lynom's eyes grew wide. “Blessed Wife?” He exclaimed. “Is that... is that a joke?”

Normya shook her head now. “Far from it. They were with us when we contacted you and As'hia from Phy'iad's ship. They were there to check on my mother's health and plan their escape with her.”

“Escape?” Lynom said.

Tir'ut nodded. “Osiri... she has been the Blessed Wife of Kr'nak for seven years now.” He told his brother. “There was no mistaking this brother... Il Kal'daka Darthirii and I... darthirii ilhar Dysea... we all saw it.”

“We did as well.” Cirith spoke.

Lancy nodded. “There was nothing fake about they way they looked at each other.” He said in agreement.

“And she carries his child.” Normya said softly.

Lynom's eyes were wide now in disbelief. He shook his head slowly and pulled As'hia close to him. “I never... I never suspected. No one did.” He said.

“And they have known about you for over a year.” Tir'ut said.

Lynom gazed at him with wide eyes. “How?”

“Osiri told us she saw you blur away from the communications room one evening.” Tir'ut spoke. “She knew then that you were not who you said you were. She told Kr'nak and he went ahead and secretly installed a monitoring device in the room. It is how they knew your name. They must have heard you talking to one of our parents or me at some point.”

Lynom looked at his brother. “Tir'ut if they have known that long and never...”

Normya nodded. “Yes... that was our deduction as well. Nothing could have given more truth to what they were telling us than that.”

“How soon before father arrives?” Lynom asked.

Tir'ut looked at the timepiece on his wrist. “NORMYA'S LIGHT should be arriving in the system in just under an hour. Another two to reach the planet. The plan is simple but it will be effective if Kr'nak can provide us with what he says he can. He was to meet us here but he...”

“He is here.” The voice spoke.

They all turned to see the hulking Immortal move into the main portion of the cave with one of Lancy's men beside him. His eyes were on Lynom and held genuine surprise in them as he moved up. He tore them away from Lynom and looked at Tir'ut as he stood. “I wanted to make sure I was not followed.” He spoke.

“Phy'iad?” Tir'ut asked.

“Things are moving more quickly than I thought.” Kr'nak spoke. “Phy'iad contacted the Kavalians and they will be in range for the transmission in roughly four hours.” He handed Tir'ut the data pad. “These are the codes to the main base doors and can be opened remotely. Osiri will have all the elven females gathered in one room.” He turned to Lynom. “The slave quarters. Four of my men will be guarding the outside of this room when you attack but your medical people will need to move quickly with the serum your mother has developed for them.”

Tir'ut met his eyes. “Why?”

Lynom looked at As'hia before rising to his feet as well and looking at his brother. “Kr'nak is right. Over half of the elven females that are here have been held for at least two years or more Tir'ut. If they believe we are here to kill the only thing keeping them alive... well it will not...”

Tir'ut nodded. “I did not think of that. I will tell mother.” He looked at Kr'nak. “Where will you be?”

“I am to escort Queen Dysea to the main chamber when the communication begins.” Kr'nak answered. “I do not know what will happen once we are in the main room or how things will proceed... but you will need to move quickly.” He looked at Normya. “I will not allow Phy'iad to... to dishonor your mother Normya Leonidas... but I will need help.”

Cirith stepped forward. “That is where we come in.” She stated. “This main room... can you get us into it?”

Kr'nak nodded immediately. “If you are wrapped in the shadows yes.” He reached behind him and pulled out the two matching blades that Cha'talla had given to Dysea when she had first arrived on Kranek. Normya’s eyes grew wide when she saw them. “Your mother... forgive me but she will be without clothes Normya Leonidas. It is how Phy'iad thinks he will break her down in part... having her exposed and being leered at by so many. There will be no place for her to hide these. If you are wrapped in the shadows with Tir'ut then at the right moment one of you could return these to her and give her back a small portion of her honor and dignity until she is once more fully clothed. If she is as skilled as the forger of these blades that she carried suggest... then no doubt any she faces will be more concerned with staying alive then looking at her nakedness.”

Normya took the blades from him slowly and saw his embarrassed eyes by what he had just told her. She nodded and touched his arm gently. “Remember what we told you.” She spoke softly.

Kr'nak nodded and looked at her hand. “I intend too.” He turned to Tir'ut then. “Come... let us go over the plans of the base and where the main number of the Immortals will be. It should make it easier for your father when he arrives.”

EARTH

KING YELU HOSPITAL

“What the nubou was that?” Eliani barked at him in the corridor. “It’s all over the Netnews!”

“It was a tactical decision.” Andro spoke.

Eliani wore surgical garb and she stepped right up to Andro and slapped him. “Tactical decision my ass! You piegn igord!” She hissed before throwing her arms around his shoulders and hugging him tightly. “Don’t you dare do something like that again Andro! Not now!”

Andro nodded and squeezed her back as she brought her hands to his face and the warm soft white glow bathed his neck and lower jaw healing the marks from Qurot’s claws. “I had to know for certain.” He said softly.

Eliani looked at him. “They have mother don’t they?” She asked.

Andro nodded slowly. “And because they believe father is dead, they acknowledge her only as a Queen of the Elves and will not discuss anything concerning her with me. Only the elves.”

“Andro... why?” Eliani asked. “It doesn’t make any sense.”

“I know.” He said. “Tenna?”

“She’s resting.” Eliani said. “We were able to remove the projectile lodged against her heart and repair the damage it did. Part of one projectile did clip her spine, but thanks the gods it didn’t severe her spinal column.”

Andro looked at her. “Will she be able...”

Eliani squeezed his hands and nodded quickly. “It will be a long time before she is fully healed. Months before she will be able to run again... but yes... she will be able to run.”

Andro closed his eyes and placed his forehead against hers. “Avoi.” He whispered.

Eliani caught the sweet scent of jasmine coffee and she turned quickly to see Jomann come walking forward with Nusa and Anicetus. She disguised her gasp at his wounds as a grunt and turned to him as he came up to Andro.

“I have assigned Nusa and Anicetus to the Prime Minister Androcles.” Jomann spoke. “No one gets close to her without our approval.” His eyes went to Eliani and her willow and peach scent engulfed him once more as it had in the bunker when she fell on him.

Eliani looked at Andro quickly, surprised at the informal tone of voice he spoke to her brother with. Andro nodded. “I have made Jomann my Captain.” He said.

“Your... your Captain?” She gasped stunned. Eliani felt a blissful rush surge through her at this news but it was tempered and confused as well. Part of her... part of her reveled in the scent of this Lycavorian and the strength she felt from him, but the other part of her couldn't understand how that could be. She was Malic's mate, he had bitten her at the peak of their lovemaking, making her his soulmate for it happened by instinct alone. She should not be so aroused by the scent of this man, or so giddy that she would now be around him.

Princess Eliani Leonidas did the only thing she could think of at the moment. She lashed out. “Isn't... isn't your Captain supposed to keep you from doing such stupid things then!” She barked as she glared at Jomann. He blinked several times at the suddenness of the verbal attack and glanced at Andro who had a look of surprise on his face as well.

“Eli... what's wrong?” Andro asked her.

Eliani turned back to him. “If he is your captain... if he is your captain... then he needs to keep you from doing stunts like you just pulled.” She hissed. “He can see the medics around the corner. They'll fix him up. I have more important things to take care of. I'm going to make sure Aunt Deia is set for the night and then I'm going back to Cranae Island.”

Andro stood there in shock as Eliani spun on her heels and marched away down the corridor. Stunned as he was, Jomann could not tear his eyes from the way her medical garb clung to her lush body or the way her willow and peach scent caused his blood to churn in a way he had never felt before.

“Jomann... I must apologize for...” Andro stammered.

Jomann turned back to him and shook his head. “It is alright Milord.” He said softly. “It would not be the first time I have angered a woman.” He spoke with a forced smile. “I will go and see the medics.”

Andro nodded slowly. “I'm going to see Marci. She is in with Armetus and I need to ask her some questions. That is where I will be.”

Jomann nodded. “I will join you shortly.” He said.

Andro looked back down the corridor where his sister had disappeared and then turned to move in the opposite direction. It took him all of thirty seconds to find Marci by her scent and she was still in Armetus's room, now talking with several Krypteria analysts. Andro's eyes went to the bed where Armetus lay and he was taken aback by the bandages that wrapped around his head and those of his arms and chest. Both of his legs were wrapped in purple tinted gel packs that were only used on very critical patients. He moved slowly to the bed as Marci nodded to the two men she was conversing with and then dismissed them to do whatever task she had assigned. She moved up next to him, her face drawn and tired. She had yet to change out of the uniform that still bore Armetus's blood.

“Marci?” Andro asked not taking his eyes from Armetus's face.

“They have him in a medical coma.” Marci answered. “They took his eye Andro! The vithin bastards tore it out of his head and left it dangling because they thought it was funny! They shattered his legs and his left arm. Near as I can tell they had him for at least five hours before the attacks on your father and the rest of your family even started.”

Andro reached out and touched the cool gel packs that encased Armetus's legs. “His legs?” He asked.

“The doctors were able to repair his legs.” Marci said. “I think every Hadarian on Earth has volunteered to come here and work. Riall gave the authorization for them to come even from Eden City. I don't think I've seen so many Healers in one place since Alba Tau. Even those who aren't Healers are swarming around acting as nurses... whatever they can do to help.” Marci moved closer and took Armetus's good hand in hers and squeezed. “They were able to save most of his arm, but it was so long before they got him here that he will never have full use of it again.” She brought his hand to her cheek and held it there. “He has been like a grandfather to me Andro. Everything I know I have learned from him.” She placed his hand gingerly back on the bed and looked at him. “I want blood. I want someone's ass for this and if you don't let me get it I will find it on my own!”

Andro met her eyes. “They took my mother Marci.” He said softly seeing her eyes go wide. “Laustinos helped them. He's been helping them all along. For how many years I have no idea.”

“Laustinos!” She exclaimed. “That fucking weasel bastard!”

Andro nodded. “I went to the Kavalian embassy before coming here.”

Marci stepped closer. “That was the commotion I heard about a hour ago. Everyone was dashing to the holo/monitors?”

Andro nodded. “Matuarr fed me some line of rensibfla about how they did all this to protect themselves because we were training the Coven dragons to fight them.” He said meeting her steady gaze. “My father isn’t dead Marci. He’s alive and when I tell him they have taken her he will fly into a rage.” Marci’s eyes were wide but she had enough control to not rejoice to the heavens about what she had just heard. “We must tell no one Marci. If they know he is alive they will undoubtedly kill her instantly. They know what he will do. They say because he is dead she is no longer Queen of the Union and they will deal only with the Elven Parliament for her release. Matuarr told me he has demanded a hearing before the Galactic Court to explain why they have done this and to present their case for the reasons why.”

“That is so much...” She stopped herself and held onto her temper. “Bullshit!” She spat.

“Matuarr told me if I do anything to retaliate for what they have done they will kill her and send the forces they have ready to invade the High Coven pouring across our borders.” Andro said turning away from her and moving to the end of the bed. “Marci... I activated the self destruct on the Jump Gates around Hadaria.” He stated turning back around to face her.

Marci nodded. “My people told me.” She said softly. “Andro you had no choice. We couldn’t find how they were accessing our Gate system! It had to be done!”

“Tell that to the nearly three million lives that were lost because of my actions.” He stated. “Our people.”

Marci stepped closer. “And if you had not... what would it have cost us to retake Hadaria when the time came. If you had not done this... they could have put millions more troops on the ground and thousands of ships. The price would have been infinitely higher if you did not do this.”

Andro met her eyes. “If Laustinos is helping them then we now know where they got the knowledge to access our Gates. The knowledge of where my mother was on Kranek. Armetus’s home. All of it. He was Krypteria before becoming Deputy Prime Minister wasn’t he?”

Marci nodded. “An analyst. One of the very best according to Armetus.”

“The intelligence on the Drow outposts and their locations. No one but the Krypteria knew this. Did he still have access?” Andro asked.

Marci shook her head. “Armetus would have pulled all his access when he went to work for Deia.” Marci reached out. “Gods Andro... Deia... your mother Dysea... I... how is she?”

Andro nodded. “Tenna will recover fully according to Eli.” He replied. “But she will be out of it for several months. I’m going to be announcing that grandfather Panos will step in as acting Prime Minister. Denali and Lisisa will get our mother back from these Immortal pirates that much I do know. We obliterated the Kavalian forces sent to attack Kranek and when they took mother it sent Cha’talla into a berserker rage.” Andro looked at her. “They will retrieve her and hopefully discover why she was taken in the first place. Why would the Kavalians want both my elven mothers taken alive but try to kill the rest along with my father?”

“They already have Hadaria... maybe they figured with you, your father and your siblings dead they could deal strictly with the Elven Parliament and get concessions.” Marci said. “They know what your response would be to this. Any of your father’s children. There would be no negotiations and your mothers would tell them to get fucked. They must think the elven parliament has more sway over the Union Senate than they do.”

“If they believe that then they do not know how our system works. And if Laustinos is helping them he would have told them this.” Andro said. “It just doesn’t make any sense.”

Marci turned back to look at Armetus. “None of this makes sense.” She said softly. “The only drugs they found in his system were to keep him from shifting. No interrogation drugs, no mind altering drugs, nothing. They tortured him for hours for no reason. They had to know he would never reveal anything. Armetus would die first! I don’t know if they even asked him any questions.”

“The more we discover... the more questions are revealed and the fewer answers we have.” Andro stated. “My Aunt Tarifa has left with a tactical unit to link up with Resumar in Kavalian space but she will be promoted to Governor of Sparta. I will say she has left for Apo Prime and the Durcunusaan facility there for her own protection until we get a handle on matters here.”

Marci nodded. “Makes tactical sense.” She stated. “No one will question that.”

Andro looked at her. “Janae is missing.” He said. “Whether because the Kavalians have taken her or she has gone underground I don’t know. Did Laustinos know of her significance?”

Marci stepped closer to him shaking her head. "I don't see how. The only ones who know who she really is are members of your family, me and Armetus." She replied. "Even I don't know all of it; only that she is important to your family and that she holds some very heavy clout. Armetus trained her himself along with Aihola and Lynwe."

Andro moved to the chair at the foot of the bed and sat down. "And now you must know. Our history states that the last Elven King was assassinated by the High Coven during the Slave Years, you know this?"

Marci nodded. "Yes."

"His two surviving children were brought to my grandfather Resumar. The daughter... the last female of elven royal blood at the time... she became Resumar's elf concubine." Andro explained.

Marci nodded. "And his son and his elven wife had one son before they too were killed by the Coven during the purge just before the Ten Thousand were sent to Earth. Their son, he was Minister L'tian's father. Your mother For'mya's grandfather. That left your mother, when she was born, as the only living female descendant of elven royal blood."

Andro nodded. "The last surviving member of elven royal blood." He said looking at her. "Or so everyone thought."

Marci stepped closer with wide eyes. "Andro... are you saying..."

Andro nodded. "My grandfather's elf concubine had two children with him. Twin boys. Children that the High Coven knew nothing about for that is how Resumar, Eliani and their concubine wanted it."

"They survived?" Marci asked.

Andro nodded his head. "Armetus is the one who discovered them actually. When he was researching the records here in Sparta, just before my father fought my uncle that day, he found the information about them buried in some mundane agriculture report. After things with my uncle were over he went back and continued his research and discovered the information about them. Only one still lives and he resides on Elear in a very secluded estate close to Dragon Mountain with his much younger mate and wife. A Lycavorian. Janae is his last child." He said with a sly grin.

"Wait!" Marci said. "That would mean he is an uncle to your father! To you! Andro this is... that is incredible!"

Andro nodded once more. "My father went to see him many years ago with both of my elven mothers and Aunt Deia and they have seen them often since. In reality he and my mother For'mya are related as uncle and niece as well. He did not want Janae to come forward and take her place among our family openly, but my father and Deia told him it was her birthright to be here among us... the rest of her family. As it was his. She is just as much a relation to my grandfather as any of us. And this man was my grandfather Resumar's son. Janae's father did finally relent but he made my father and Deia swear that we would watch out for her and insure that she was protected for she is his only child. We have done so for nearly ten years now, pretending that she is just an aide to grandfather Panos and a close friend of our family. She is far from helpless and some would say she is almost as skilled as my sisters in many respects." Andro looked at Marci. "I will not go back on the promise my father made to him Marci." He said coming to his feet. "I need two things from you."

"Name them." Marci stated instantly.

"I have brought Zarah back with Anton and Cihera to find Janae. If she is here on Earth hiding then Zarah will find her." Andro said.

"Using her Cognitive Empathic abilities?" Marci asked softly.

Andro nodded. "Yes. Now that Lucia is in her life and they share a unique bond, her own skills with this ability will be nearly tripled with Lucia helping her."

"Your father wouldn't approve Andro." Marci said. "He feels it is an invasion of an individual's most private thoughts."

"My father is not here." Andro answered her. "I will tell him when I contact him after speaking with you. I doubt he will disagree with me... and even if he does... I am here and he is not."

Marci nodded. "True enough. What do you need from me?"

"Complete and utter access to everything for Zarah, Anton, Cihera and Lucia." Andro said. "I need them to be able to go anywhere they need to and do anything they need to with no questions and that includes Krypteria operations."

Marci nodded. "Done. What else?"

Andro stepped closer to her. “You pull as many people as you need. Suspend ongoing operations if they are not critical to assist your people, but I want to know what Laustinos knew. I want to know the size of his cock and what color he shits. He may be the main player in this, but he didn’t help these Kavalian assassination teams get on Earth and hide out all of this time here in Sparta. You find me those people who are working with Laustinos and those that have been helping these Kavalians.”

“That may cause me to step on some toes Androcles.” She stated.

“Then step on them. Crush them if you have too.” Andro stated harshly. “I want those people found.”

“And when we find them?” Marci asked softly.

“Then you interrogate them... drain their brains of every bit of information they might have in regards to these Kavalian dogs and Laustinos.” Andro snarled.

“Then I give them to the Durcunusaan for trial right?” Marci asked hopefully.

“No.” Andro said shaking his head. When he answered Marci detected only the finality of death in his voice and it made her shiver right down to her boots. “Then you make them fucking disappear! Forever!”

KAVALIAN GREATSOUL-CLASS DREADNOUGHT PUSINTIN’S COMMAND SHIP PRIDE OF PUMAS

“...no one has touched her?” Pusintin asked the Puma Bane Commander as he watched the two Puma Bane troopers lower For'mya’s inert form to the bed in the specially designed personal quarters.

“No Marshall.” The officer answered instantly. “She has been kept sedated just as you ordered. The implant is in place and she has been given the injections. I did them myself.”

Pusintin nodded. “Excellent work Commander. You are to be commended.”

“We serve the Prefect Keleru, you and the Prides, Marshall Pusintin.” The man spoke.

Pusintin nodded. “I have arranged for some down time for you and your team.” Pusintin spoke. “The port lounge is now yours for the duration of the rest of our trip. You will find as much ale and food as you can eat and drink as well as some amicable company.”

The Puma Bane officer’s eyes grew a little wider. “Altered females Marshall?” He gasped.

Pusintin nodded. “The only requirement is that you don’t mark them or hurt them.” He stated. “In any way Commander. I have been in the field just as you and your men and when you return you have much energy built up. Use them as much as you want but do not injure them in any way.”

The officer smiled. “I will inform my men sir.” He stated. “And what of Laustinos?”

Pusintin looked at him. “Your opinion?”

“It is strange Marshall Pusintin.” The man spoke. “When we first came on board I did not trust him in the least. Over the past days however...”

“Speak your mind Commander.” Pusintin said.

“He seems to harbor a deep seated hatred for his own people Marshall. Some would say in a manner similar to your own dislike of your people.” The man said.

“They are not my people Commander.” Pusintin spoke evenly. “I became Kavalian when my father took me from Earth and brought me into his Pride. In truth... my people abandoned me long before that even when I was on Earth.”

The commander lowered his eyes. “My apologies Marshall.”

Pusintin shook his head. “No need. As Keleru stated... we allow you and the others of Puma Bane Pride much more freedom to speak and do things because of your loyalty and your intelligence. You get the hardest missions and you go through the hardest training. We should allow you more freedom.”

“Thank you sir.” The man answered. “As for Laustinos... I did not trust him when we first began this mission. Now however... now he may turn out to be a larger asset than I first thought.”

Pusintin nodded his head. “And there may be more like him who didn’t care for my brother’s rule. They could help us in the future as well.” He spoke moving up to the bed and looking down on For'mya. He reached out and ran his fingers along the outside of her thigh and across the curve of her ass. “But this one will play the largest role. She will help us bring down the Lycavorian Union and she will do so willingly.” He moved his hand to For'mya's left arm and drew back the cuff of her sleeve to reveal the Shi Viska bridle. "All because my now dead dear brother turned her."

"I would keep the power dampeners at point seven electrojoules or lower in this room in order for her not to be able to use that." The voice said. They turned to see Laustinos enter the room slowly. "That is the lowest setting for your Tri-Cobalt Reactors. Anything higher and she may still be able to call it from Flat Space."

Pusintin looked at him. "I was under the impression that point nine was satisfactory." He said. "That is what all of our scientists have said."

Laustinos nodded. "Point nine would be sufficient if you were not dealing with someone who can Mindvoice on her level. Many tests have been done since Queen Aricia was taken by Chetak and he did much the same thing Marshall Pusintin." He came fully into the room now. "Most of your brother's family can still call their Shi Viskas even at point nine electrojoules. There are documented studies that have been recorded where your brother and his son were able to call their shields even when the power levels were at point five. This is due to their command within Mindvoice however, and while For'mya's is powerful, she will never be on the same level as them."

Pusintin turned to the Puma Bane officer. "See to it." He said. The officer nodded and headed out of the room as Pusintin turned back to Laustinos. He waited until the officer was gone before moving closer to Laustinos. "Perhaps now you can tell me why you are doing this."

Laustinos met his gaze. "Would it matter to you?" He asked calmly.

"It will help me to understand you better Laustinos." Pusintin answered. "This way... you will not end of very dead by accident."

"You do not want to kill me." Laustinos said.

"Do not overestimate your worth to us Laustinos." Pusintin spoke in a menacing tone.

"I'm overestimating nothing." Laustinos spoke. "You still need me."

"And why is that?" Pusintin asked. "I spoke with Prefect Keleru just before we arrived here. It appears that they have discovered For'mya is missing, that we have her and that you helped us. If that is the case... no doubt whatever access you may have thought you had is now gone."

"I know Lycavorian law. I know which Senators supported your brother's rule and which did not. And I know who among them wavers like a reed in the wind." Laustinos continued unhindered by this knowledge. "I know things that your brother did that will help you complete this goal you have. Knowledge is power in many respects Pusintin."

Pusintin motioned with his head to For'mya's inert form. "She will help me complete our goal Laustinos, not you. Why should we trust you after your part in this? Indeed... you failed to kill Deia and no doubt you will be the most wanted man in the universe shortly."

Laustinos looked surprised at this news. "Deia isn't dead? I... I shot her twice in the chest!"

Pusintin shook his head. "You should know by now that woman is very tough to kill. Many have tried through the years and like you... all of them have failed."

Laustinos shook his head. "It does not matter. If she still lives then I am a bigger asset than you realize. I know Deia. I know what she will do and what she won't."

"So you say." Pusintin said.

Laustinos shook his head. "Then give me what you owe me and I will be on my way." He stated.

"I could just toss you out an airlock." Pusintin said with a grin.

Laustinos nodded. "You could. But then your new business partners would come to realize that you are not as trusting as you have led them to believe. What do you think they would say about that?"

Pusintin's eyes narrowed and he stepped closer. "What are you talking about?"

"You didn't actually think you could hide your numerous dealings with this new criminal organization did you?" Laustinos asked calmly. "An organization I might add that you and the KFI helped to fund and get off the ground, not to mention an organization that you channeled weapons and funds to the Evolli government through during their war against the Union. An organization that has outgrown your ability to monitor and control by the way since they have somehow developed a working relationship with an outfit called the Orionis Syndicate. Another mercenary group that does not reside in this quadrant of space it seems."

"Bullshit!" Pusintin declared.

“Then you know where they are getting these new slaves that are appearing in The Wilds in select and very secluded places. These blue skinned females that have the ability to influence men by secreting an oil through their skin. Not many of them mind you... I know of only three at the moment.” Laustinos spoke. “They are certainly not from any world I am familiar with within this quadrant of space. How exactly did they obtain these females? And you know that they are branching out and even dealing with established mercenary and pirate organizations in The Wilds contrary to what you directed them to do. Among them Phy'iad and his ilk. I assume you know all this then?”

“How do you know this?” Pusintin demanded.

“As I said... information is power Marshall Pusintin.” Laustinos spoke.

“Why don't I just have you hooked to a pain drone and extract this information from your head myself?” Pusintin snapped.

Laustinos shook his head. “I am not a fool Pusintin. You can do this of course... but my Mindvoice abilities are far superior to yours or any Kavalian. The moment this happens and I become your prisoner with this intent; I will simply activate the small explosive charge I have in my head. Since I will die anyway... why should I give anything to you for free? You will know nothing more than what you do now, which is far less than what I know, and in the end you will gain nothing.”

“You play a dangerous game Laustinos.” Pusintin spoke. “A very dangerous game. Very well... I will talk to Keleru about what you have told me. He will be very interested in this information you say you have about this organization. He will also want to know why. Why do you do this?”

“Does it matter?” Laustinos asked.

“It does if you want to live.” Pusintin told him.

“If you must know then... it is because of the Ten Thousand.” He stated.

Pusintin looked at him oddly. “The Ten Thousand? Those that were sent to Earth?”

Laustinos nodded. “Yes.”

“What about them?” Pusintin asked.

“My grandmother was chosen as one of those who would send a child to Earth when the time came.” Laustinos spoke. “My father.”

“So?”

“At the last minute before the last transport left King Resumar altered the selection and took another unborn instead of my father.” Laustinos spoke. “The child of parents who were not even ruling members of the council. He took them over my father. My grandmother was about to give birth when the Coven came to assassinate all those who had taken part in this scheme. She was killed seconds after my father arrived. I have hated everything about your bloodline and the one chosen over my father ever since I was a boy.”

Pusintin looked at him. “Your family has held this hate for over ten thousand years?” He asked.

“It is a deep seated hatred Marshall Pusintin.” Laustinos spoke.

Pusintin chuckled for a moment and shook his head. “So it would seem. And I thought I had issues.” He stated as a Kavalian officer came into the room. Pusintin turned to him. “Yes... what is it?”

“We have plotted our course and will arrive at the designated coordinates in two hours Marshall Pusintin.” The officer spoke holding out the data pad. “Sensors indicate there is no activity near Nuc-Quli Beta. Nearest ships are hovering along the Icalro Alliance border and Talbor Seven. Transport ships mostly... a few civilian carriers but nothing that indicates a warship of any kind.”

Pusintin nodded and took the pad. “Very well.” He stated. “You may return to your duties.”

Laustinos looked at him. “I thought we were going to Belid.”

“A slight change of plans.” Pusintin spoke. “Now that the Union knows we have her, we need to move more quickly... at least initially. Don't worry Laustinos... I have already made arrangements for Dysea's transfer to Kavalian custody when her part in this is done. You must be patient.”

“I have waited many years.” Laustinos said. “I have no problems waiting a few more days. I estimate I have at least two more weeks before my window of opportunity passes. And I trust you to uphold your end of our bargain.”

Pusintin nodded. “Then allow me to show you to your quarters.” He stated. “And we can talk to Keleru about this information you have.” He said motioning towards the door. “This may prove to be very interesting indeed.”

EARTH
GYTHEIO
CRANAE ISLAND

Sadi and Carisia had not been very good hostesses when everyone arrived for both of them could feel the turmoil in Andro the moment the SCIMITAR entered orbit. Lu'ria and Ne'Veha only confirmed it for them when they arrived on Majeir, and while they were both giddy with happiness that Ne'Veha was now wolf and Androcles had made them both his completely, this was tempered by the fact that their husband and mate was angry and in pain over so many things. When they felt him land outside on Elynth, it was Helen who kept everyone inside as Sadi and the others sprinted for the double doors that led to the patio and the dragon landing pad that was now seeing quite a bit of action.

The smell of sugar plums and spice swirled around his head as Andro crushed his anome in his powerful arms and kissed Sadi with more passion and feeling than he had ever kissed her before. Emotions driven by his mental state, but also by his feelings for her and what she meant to him. Sadi could do nothing but whimper in delight and bask in those feelings as his heavenly lavender and pines scent tickled her wolf senses like no other could. After a long moment he set her down and she held his face in her hands.

“Andro my love!” She gasped finally as she rubbed his cheeks.

“Lu'ria and Ne'Veha told you?” He asked softly.

“Yes... and Aurith confirmed it when she arrived.” She answered. Sadi stepped back and drew Carisia close and Andro scooped his lithe vampire wife into his arms and laid a blistering kiss on her as well. Carisia cooed out her delight and then Lu'ria and Ne'Veha were next until finally he drew Sadi back to him tightly. To those many who did not know the Leonidas family, Andro or his father intimately, they would wonder how four women could love him as they did, or how he could love them in return. They would wonder the same thing when they saw the king and Queens, yet there was no doubting the emotion in any way. Even as Andro drew Sadi firmly to his right side, Lu'ria pressed close to his left, Carisia against her and Ne'Veha against Sadi.

“Why have they done this Andro?” Carisia asked softly.

“They... they say it was because we were training the Coven dragons but I don't believe them.” Andro answered quickly seeing her maya blue eyes go wide.

“How can they block her Andro?” Sadi asked. “We should be able to at least feel her tremors within Mindvoice yet there is nothing?”

Andro nodded. “Valin... he told us they got their hands on something that Aikiro had engineered using parts from the Mindvoice ship on Nuwaroa.” He said. “It operates in much the same way as the rooms on CS41. Negative Resonance Chambers they are called. It is why we couldn't feel my mother Dysea and why we can't feel my mother For'mya.”

“But Dysea...” Carisia said. “We can sense her now.”

Andro nodded. “Somehow... this device was either removed or it malfunctioned with her.” He answered. “Valin is here yes? I need to find out more about this device before I contact my father.”

Sadi nodded quickly. “The South Wing of the villa is nearly empty and that is where we put everyone. The Durcunusaan have turned the East Wing into their Command Center.” Sadi looked at him. “Andro... these new people...? They are Lycavorians... but they are different somehow.”

Andro nodded. “I will tell you everything I know.” He said. “The Vanari delegation?”

Sadi nodded. “The South Wing as well. There is... there is something about them as well Androcles. Not sinister in any way... almost hypnotic and extremely alluring. I have never seen their species before, even in the databases.”

Andro nodded. “They come from the same Quadrant of space that Dutkne and the others come from. Eighty thousand light years from here by my reckoning.”

“Andro that's beyond the Perseus Arm!” Carisia exclaimed.

“I will share everything with you. All of you... but I need...” Andro shook his head. “I need to do so much. First and foremost I must explain to my mother and father how I am responsible for the deaths of nearly three million Hadarians.”

Sadi reached up and pulled his face towards her until she was looking into his azure blue eyes. “You had no choice Androcles Leonidas.” She stated firmly. “There were no other options and it was the only thing you could have done. It had to be done... and your father would have made the same decision in your position. You know this.”

“Some will call me a butcher of innocents.” Andro said softly.

Sadi nodded her head. “Perhaps. But they fail to see it is your actions that allow them to keep their freedoms and say such things.”

Andro leaned his forehead to hers and closed his eyes inhaling deeply and allowing her dominant scent and the scents of all his mates to permeate his body and sooth him. “My father knew KertaGai.” He whispered.

“What do you mean?” Sadi asked him softly.

“When Elynth and I entered the clinic.” Andro said. “He and Torma touched us there! They told us we knew what needed to be done. He knew I would have to do this. We told him... we told him they would hate us.”

Sadi squeezed his face and pulled him even closer. “What did he say my love?”

“He said... he said only for a time.” Andro whispered.

“Then that is what you must believe.” Sadi answered. She kissed him hard on the lips and drew back after a moment. “The others wait inside. Where... where is this Jomann that you have made your Captain?”

“He will return in the morning.” Andro said. “He was going to see his parents and then check the villas of my siblings to make sure no one has attempted to enter them.” Andro turned to Lu'ria. “Your father and...”

“They have left but will return in the morning.” Lu'ria said. “They are staying in Gytheio at Queen Aihola's villa.”

“I will greet them first.” He said.

“Andro it is not necessary.” Lu'ria spoke quickly.

“Oh but it is Ilythiiri Tessai. For me as well as for them.” Andro said pulling her closer and kissing her softly on her soft pink lips. A kiss of passion and love and desire. He nuzzled her elven ears lovingly and saw her amber eyes close as her face basked in the attention. He drew back slowly. “Let me go receive my tongue lashing from the Feravomir for going to the Kavalian embassy and doing something so utterly stupid as she would say.”

All of them chuckled gently at his words and Andro looked at Sadi.

“I won't tell you what she said when we saw it on the Netnews.” Sadi spoke as she kissed him. “Better that you go in and face her unprepared. It will be easier on you.”

Andro rolled his eyes and shook his head as he released Sadi and Lu'ria and began to walk through the double doors into the villa. Sadi stepped closer to Lu'ria and slipped her arm around her waist. Lu'ria reciprocated this action as Carisia and Ne'Veha drew closer to them as well.

“I told you Mistress.” Sadi said softly leaning over to nuzzle her elven ears and cheek.

The slap carried quite a bit of power to it and Andro felt the heat and stinging on his cheek. He turned his head back and looked down into Helen's dark angry eyes. Wayonn and Dutkne stood to the side watching with Selene, Riall and Lynwe while Bren stood with his arms across his chest smiling broadly as he stood next to Devra Re Mydala, Arduri and Naesta, all of whom had looks of astonishment on their faces.

“I... I take it you do not approve of my actions Feravomir?” Andro spoke as he reached up to rub his cheek.

“Approve?” Helen almost screamed. “Wen forn nubous malda?”

“Feravomir... I don't believe I have ever seen you this upset where you start using foul language right from the start.” Andro said with a hint of a smile.

“Foul language!” Helen shrieked. Helen's hand snapped up and she slapped him again across his other cheek. “You are just like your father!” She shouted. “Have you completely lost all command of your senses or have you and Elynth flown too high into the atmosphere where there is no oxygen and it has affected your rational thought just as it has your father and Torma? Do you know what could have happened?”

“I was in complete control of all my actions Feravomir.” Andro said as he rubbed his other cheek.

“Then you have gone crazy!” Helen screamed. “I should have you committed somewhere in a padded cell! You could have been killed Androcles!”

“The Kavalians are not fool enough to kill me here on Earth.” He stated.

“No!” Helen snapped. “They have kidnapped For'mya! They have attacked our family! They have attacked the Drow! They almost killed your mother and father! They were behind Anja being usurped on Hadaria and they are responsible for your mother Dysea being taken from Kranek! These are not things done by people who are fully cognizant of their actions and what they will wrought! These are not things that are done by people who care what their actions will wrought! What could possibly make you believe they wouldn't kill you? They have already tried fool boy!”

“And they failed.” Andro said. “Feravomir you...”

“And this Jomann who you have appointed as your Captain!” Helen continued her rant ignoring him. “He followed you into this ridiculous action, when it is his duty to keep you from doing such utterly stupid things! He is no better than Andreus!” Helen declared. “I will have words for him when I see him! I did not work so hard and wait for so long to see the return of your father to his rightful place among us; I did not work to see the joy on his face and that of your mothers when you came into this world; I did not work to watch as his oldest son... the Crown Prince of our Union, act in such a wholly and completely asinine way and laconically risk his life as your father does so very well! Son vada carians... every time you or your father does something like this I feel as if my head will explode! Have you and Elynth listened to nothing I have taught you through the years?”

“Of course we have Feravomir.” Andro stated.

“Then why do you insist on conducting yourselves in this way?” Helen screamed. “And do not think that Elynth is not hearing this exact speech from Arzoal!”

“I'm sure.” Andro spoke.

“Then why?” Helen screamed. “It is not enough that they have taken For'mya from him! He will be insane with rage because of that alone and you know this... but if they had taken you from him he would have gone off the deep end and plunged the entire universe into chaos in a blood rage unlike anything I can begin to imagine! It would make the Black Day of our people pale in comparison! Even your mothers would not have been able to control him! No more than Sadi or your wives would have controlled you when you thought he was dead! I felt it within you Androcles Leonidas! Do not deny it! You came within a hair's breath of unleashing that... that hell!”

“What do you want me to say Feravomir?” Andro asked softly. “Do you wish me to tell you that when I see a tactical decision that will reveal information to me... do you want me to tell you I will not take that action? They took my mother!” He roared now. “I needed to be sure!”

Helen glared at him. “Do not raise your voice to me young man!” She popped just as loudly. “I am not one of your soldiers! And you are not too big for me to turn over my knee and give you the lashing you deserve!”

It was Bren and Riall who finally broke the tension that was rising in the room and had been rising for hours now as more and more information came in on the extent of what was happening. Neither of them were able to contain the laughter that picture in their heads caused no matter how much they tried and they both lost it. Helen's head snapped around and she glared at Riall but also noticed that Wayonn and Dutkne were also on the verge of losing their ability to contain the laughter and then they were laughing as well.

“This is not in any way funny!” Helen snarled.

“Feravomir...” Andro spoke now stepping closer to her. “You have not disciplined me since I was five years old.”

“I should have done it more!” Helen exclaimed turning back to him. “It's obvious you needed it!”

“Feravomir, if you are waiting for me to remain here in the safety of my villa surrounded by my mates and respond to such things by my words alone I think you know what my answer to that will be.” Andro spoke as he reached out and took her hands in his. “Elynth and I have... we remember it all Feravomir. Everything you have taught us... and continue to teach us. It is part of what has made us who we are. But I am my father's son.”

“That is not something you need to remind me of.” She snapped but with much less force now.

“Then you of all people should know that I will act as my father will act. I will do what is necessary to get answers. I will do what is...” Andro lowered his head. “I will do what I must to keep our people safe. To keep my family safe.”

Helen saw the pain in his eyes now and she reached up and took his face in her hands pulling him down so that he was bent over to be near her five foot two height.

“Do not allow... do not allow what you did, what you had to do, do not allow this to make you reckless Androcles.” She whispered to him. “Too many people rely on you now.”

“Almost three million relied on me.” Andro said softly. “And I let them down Feravomir. Now I must tell my father that they have taken his Kinsoaurgai. I... I could have prevented this if I had not left him alone here.”

“Don’t say that!” Helen snapped. “Don’t you ever say that Androcles! Your father would never blame you for what has happened! Never! And nor does anyone else!” Helen shook her head slowly. “Promise me... promise me that you will at least think before you act! You are not alone... ever! And there are situations where you and Elynth can not do it by yourselves. You must allow others to help you! Promise me this Androcles... you are like your father and you have never broken a promise you have made... promise me this for I could not stand to bury another Leonidas. Not after... not after what you and your father have come to mean to me.”

Andro stared at her for a long moment, his azure eyes soft and bright. He leaned over finally and placed a kiss on her forehead as she closed her eyes. “Then I will make you that promise Feravomir.”

Helen nodded slowly and opened her eyes, dropping her hands to his where he held her waist. “Good. Now release me.” She stated.

Andro looked at her. “Does this mean you will not attempt to turn me over your knee and lash my bottom?”

Helen couldn’t help but smile as Bren, Riall, Dutkne and Wayonn and now everyone else began laughing once more. “No... I will leave that duty to Sadi and your other mates! They would probably enjoy it and I have no desire to see your hairy mida after all these years. It would not be as cute as it was then.”

“His mida is many things Feravomir... hairy is not one of them.” Sadi’s voice carried from the open double doors where she stood with Carisia, Lu’ria and Ne’Veha. This statement caused more laughter to ensue.

Andro laughed gently as even Devra, Arduri and Naesta began to laugh. He pulled her into an embrace and her arms went around his shoulders. [I will keep my promise to you Feravomir.] He spoke to her within Mindvoice.

Devra leaned close to Bren reaching up to put her hand on his arm. “Is it... is it always like this?” She asked softly.

Bren turned his eyes on her. “Like what?” He asked noticing that her daughters were listening intently.

“The... the emotion.” Devra asked softly. “The passion in their words? The commitment to each other. You can almost feel the loyalty and dedication in the air.”

Bren nodded. “This is what King Leonidas brought back to our people when he returned. And this is what his children continue without even knowing it. Yes... it is always like this. It cannot be any different than the Protectorate. We are all Lycavorians and it is very hard for us to keep our emotions contained for very long. We are passionate about everything we believe.”

Devra blinked her sea green eyes and looked away shyly. “It is... it is not something we ever thought to discover. We always... many of my people consider Lycavorians to be...” Devra couldn’t finish the statement and Bren smiled.

“Too much like the animals we can become?” He said softly.

“Forgive me.” Devra said.

Bren shook his head. “Nothing to forgive.” He said. “Perhaps your time among us will show you that what you may believe could not be further from the truth. Especially if you spend much time around the Leonidas family.”

Helen reveled in the embrace for a long moment and then kissed Andro’s cheek. [I know you will.] Helen answered as she patted his shoulders. [Now put me down and let us work to discovering why your uncle and these fool Kavalians have done these things, and how we will get your mother back.] Andro did as she told him and looked at her. “When will you contact your father?” She asked.

“In the morning.” He answered. “I want to have as much information as possible for he will surely fly into a rage as you said. I need to talk with Resumar first and possibly try and raise Denali.”

“You must keep him where he is Andro.” Helen said. “If he reveals that he is alive, that could very well get your mother killed.”

Andro nodded. “I know. But how do you control a building storm Feravomir?”

Wayonn stepped up to them now. “You don’t.” He spoke. “You can only attempt to guide it in the direction you want.”

Andro grinned. “Have you ever tried to guide my father Wayonn? Moving a mountain has better odds.”

“We need to try.” Wayonn spoke. “And I need to see him soon.”

Helen looked at him. “Xaxon?” She asked.

Wayonn nodded. “The darkness is still within him... and in order for me to help him remove it I must be in physical contact with him. As passionate as he is about things, when he discovers this it would be a perfect opportunity for the darkness to reemerge. I’m not saying it will... just that it is a possibility.”

Andro nodded. “Then we will make it happen sooner rather than later.”

NORMYA’S LIGHT THIRTY MINUTES FROM BELID

Admiral Thodius stood on the bridge, his dark eyes staring at the main view windows as Belid became easy enough to see with the naked eye. Twenty-six years he had served as the commander of Queen Dysea’s Strike Wing and not once in all that time had his Queen ever been in such danger. Even during the height of the Evolli War, when she stood beside him on this very bridge, had she been in such peril. Three times in the past two decades he had turned down promotion to command a Fleet Group and remain here. Not out of any secret agenda or hopes, he had been married to the same Lycavorian female for over a thousand years and there was not a day that went by when he did not talk to her. Six months out of every year when they resided on Apo Prime, his wife and mate would stay with him here on NORMYA’S LIGHT and they would dine with not only Dysea and Queen Isabella, but so many different members of her family and different species. No one had ever hurt his elven Queen before... no one had dared do such a thing. Until now.

And now Admiral Thodius was just plain pissed off. The damage to NORMYA’S LIGHT was now repaired, her fighter wings full for she had taken on many of the SCIMITAR’S fighter to complete her complement, and as he had heard Queen Anja state on so many occasions, now it was time to get low down and dirty mean.

“Report!” Thodius barked.

“Detecting one BLOOD REVERENCE-Class Dreadnought! Two REVERENCE-Class Dreadnoughts, six BLOODLETTERS and four DARKBROOD-Class Heavy frigates!” His sensor operator called out.

“How many ZMF missiles do we have left?” Thodius asked.

“Twelve sir!”

“That’s it then! Four per Dreadnought! Maximum yield! The first one should take down their shields and the other three will do their job! Disperse the rest of the Strike Wing to engage the remaining ships at will. Have Captain Drdanu cut away and come in from coreward of Belid. We’ll catch them between us!”

“Transmitting orders now!”

“Get me Denali and Cha’talla!” Thodius snapped. He turned to one of the two main holodiscs on the floor of his bridge and he saw the figures of Denali Leonidas and Cha’talla come into focus. He had to blink for a moment at Cha’talla’s new look, but while the gray skin was gone and replaced with the natural bronze and tanned skin of the Akruvian people, there was no mistaking those eyes. They burned with intelligence and new found power and ability as he saw Vollenth and Aradace in the background on the STRIKER DT. Whatever doubts Thodius or anyone might have had about Cha’talla and his Immortal tribe vanished when they watched him kill the vampire Gerald for taking part in the kidnapping of Dysea. His impassioned speech right after washed away thousands of years of distrust and hate in one fell swoop and put their two peoples on the road to a deep and abiding friendship that the marriage of Normya and Tir’ut had only cemented for all time. That Esther had discovered and been able to reverse the millennia long curse inflicted on the Akruvians by the High Coven, returning them to their natural physical state and not the deformed and fearsome one they had been forced to carry for so long only added to the new mystique that surrounded the Akruxian people. That and the fact that Cha'talla of the Immortals was now bonded to a dragon.

“Admiral?” Cha'talla spoke quickly.

“We’re twenty-six minutes out.” Thodius spoke. “I’m going to hit their big ships with our Strike Wing and have Captain Drdanu move in from coreward. Denali, you and the rest of the STRIKERS launch in nine minutes! Go in under full Shroud and don’t release until you are at less than five thousand feet. If what Tir’ut and Lynom have told us is accurate, they don’t have any ground based sensors that can scan below five thousand feet. Their contact inside the base is suppose to disable their exterior sensors anyways, as well as all automated defenses.”

“Nothing more from Tir’ut or Normya?” Denali asked.

“Not since they contacted us once we entered the system.” Thodius said.

Cha'talla nodded. “Then our plan is intact. They would let us know if something had changed. Colonel Danarla... Major Ta’lon... Narice... you are monitoring?”

“No changes!” As'hia’s mother answered crisply. “Got it!”

“VIPER Command acknowledges.” As'hia’s father answered from the VIPER-Class Heavy Troop ship currently docked on NORMYA’s LIGHT’s port side.

“Toria and I acknowledge Cha'talla.” Narice’s voice was calm as she answered.

“Watch your asses you two.” Arrarn’s voice filled the COM.

Thodius and everyone who heard Arrarn’s comment to his wives chuckled and felt the pre-combat jitters lessen just that little bit.

“We would much prefer if you watched our asses.” Toria’s voice broke in causing more soft chuckles.

“However we do understand if you are too occupied at the moment.” Narice finished. “So we will watch each other.”

Thodius saw both Denali and Cha'talla shake their heads and smile. Cha'talla finally turned to him once more. “Admiral... we will keep an open COM.”

Thodius nodded. “Eight minutes and we start!”

“And we don’t stop until we have my mother back!” Denali growled.

CHAPTER FIFTY-EIGHT

CABELIR

KFI MILITARY HEADQUARTERS

“...did this happen?” Keleru roared as he threw the data pad across the conference room and let it shatter against the far wall. None of the twelve senior Pride leaders presently in the room wanted to speak for fear of being on the receiving end of Keleru’Puat’s legendary temper. “Will none of my Military Council answer me and make me understand?”

The darker furred Kavalian near the end of the table looked around and finally stood up. As with all Kavalians he was tall and heavily built, but the years were beginning to show on his body in the gray hair that dotted his fur and the slight paunch of his midsection underneath his uniform.

“I... I believe several of us in this room voiced this very concern Prefect.” He stammered softly. “Including Marshall Pusintin and Admiral Menot himself.” The man spoke motioning to the holographic figure of Admiral Menot who was speaking from Hadaria and did not appear happy in the least.

Keleru glared at the older man for a long moment before finally taking a deep breath and getting his anger under control. He nodded his head slowly as he returned to the table. “You are correct Admiral Nykow. You are correct.” Keleru pulled up the chair he had shoved aside and thrown to the floor and righted it in his usual spot. “Our plans have gone almost perfectly and I have no one to blame but myself and the decisions I have made for the two failures that we have sustained.” He settled into the chair and took a deep breath. “Very well gentlemen...many did we lose?” Keleru asked keeping his voice calm.

“Six million three hundred thousand clones Prefect.” Another Pride leader spoke from across the table immediately. He was one of the youngest men in the room and one of the most inexperienced. “The majority of them were in their final stage of life and were no longer counted within the active forces.” He tried to put the spin on it.

“I counted them!” Menot barked angrily from the holodisc transmission that was active along the wall. “I needed those men and ships!”

Keleru held up his hand quieting Menot from within the transmission. “And how many ships?”

“The last group we were sending Prefect. Two Heavy Fleet Groups. Almost four hundred and fifty ships. Over half of them were front line warships Prefect, among them some forty-one GREATSOUL Dreadnoughts.” The Pride leader answered.

Keleru looked at the man intently. “Do we know who gave this order Admiral Kama?” He asked.

“There are only a handful of Union officers that would have the ultimate authorization to order the destruction of the Gates Prefect.” Kama answered him. “Fleet Admiral Riall of course. General/Colonel Simpson... perhaps one of the Elven Generals on Earth... this Tareif or Vengal.”

“I checked with our Intelligence Division before coming here Prefect.” Nykow spoke once more as he remained standing and took the lead again. “They believe it was the son we failed to kill. Androcles Leonidas.”

“He would never order such a thing!” Another Pride leader hissed. “The Hadarian wench is one who he regards as mother and we know she escaped and is still alive somewhere. Over seventy percent of those killed on the civilian ships were no doubt Hadarians attempting to escape the blockade we were putting in place subtly. He would not order the deaths of so many of his mother’s people!”

Nykow nodded his head. “That is true Ugant, however in many respects Prefect he is a near duplicate to his father. There are many who were alive in the time of his grandfather some three thousand years ago that still live in Sparta and they believe he is closer to that King Leonidas in his overall demeanor. He would not hesitate to give such an order, he may weep while doing so, but he would give the order prefect. I concur with our Intelligence people. It had to be the son.”

“And risk his mother’s wrath?” The same man spoke again.

“Through all the contacts we have had with the Hadarians in the last eighteen months, helping them to plan their little coup, we have learned a great deal about this Anja Leonidas who spit so happily in our faces be refusing us access to their Healers.” Nykow continued. “The most diminutive of his Queens she may be... but she is the most like Leonidas. Even more so than the child Queen Aricia was, who we all know was extraordinarily vicious in battle with the Evolli. The Hadarian witch’s own history lays out quite a list of events where she chose the greater good of the Union over her own people, which upset many on her homeworld. The Queen of the Hadarians she may have been, but like all of his Queens, she thinks like a Spartan before and above all else.”

“Taking Hadaria back from the High Coven cost them over a hundred and fifty million lives three millennia ago Nykow.” Kama spoke now. “If the history of the Union is accurate, the High Coven had only a third of the numbers we had planned to put on that planet. Half of what we now have there. Do any of you in this room think they have the stomach to lose so much again?”

“Given that the son ordered this when we did not expect him too...” Nykow spoke. “I suggest we do not underestimate what he is capable of. His father would never have gone after Matuarr at the embassy as he did. We must remember this one important fact... he is not his father and he is responsible for more Evolli deaths during that war than any other.”

“Evolli?” Kama declared. “We are not Evolli Nykow!”

“We supported them, supplied them and trained them.” Nykow spoke calmly. “No matter where he fought them, in the stars or on the ground, he slaughtered them. Even with some of our most advanced weapons at their disposal.”

“No... Nykow is right and he is not his father. And we didn’t kill him when we had the opportunity!” Another Pride Leader spoke now as the others began to relax knowing Keleru was not going to execute them all. He turned and looked at Keleru. “We recommended that we deploy more experienced forces to Kranek and Hadaria Prefect. Instead we sent what were essentially second level ships and troops and they were obliterated.”

“The new batches of clones will replace those we lost within weeks.” Kama spoke again dismissing the man’s comment.

“How do you propose we get those new batches of clones to Admiral Menot on Hadaria Kama?” Another older Pride Leader called Kaomi spoke from down the table. “Hadarian space may be ours but the Union is not going to just let us transport hundreds of thousands of troops openly across their territory to reach Hadarian space. The nearest gate to Hadarian space now is only hours from Apo Prime. Without the use of their Hadarian Jump Gate corridors we would have to send them on a near three day trip across Union territory... and that is from our nearest border with them. They would never allow this.”

“After what we have done they wouldn’t dare challenge us.” Kama snarled in reply.

“Do not underestimate them Kama.” Nykow spoke again. “The Lycavorian Union is not the High Coven and they will challenge us no matter what we do.”

“They have grown weak since his return and now that he is dead they will be confused and unable to act quickly enough to counter our moves!” Kama continued to press the issue.

“Perhaps now... but that will rapidly not be the case.” Another Pride Leader chimed in now. “They will begin mobilizing their forces as soon as the boy King regains his focus. Yes... Matuarr has given them a warning that will hold them in check right now. But not for very long I fear once the truth is revealed.”

Nykow looked at Keleru who had remained silent so far. “Prefect... do we have anything further on what this Phy’iad reported? He spoke of some sort of ships that jumped directly into the planetary system at Kranek.”

“That’s not possible!” Kama exclaimed. “No ship has the engine power to jump directly into a planet’s system let alone within its gravitational well. Phy’iad is an Immortal and a scum mercenary! He is wrong!”

“An Immortal he may be... but he has decades of experience fighting both the Union and us.” Nykow spoke even handedly. “How do you explain that they were able to annihilate two complete Fleet Groups Kama? Older ships they may have been... but they were battle tested and experienced men.”

“We can not see past their Shrouds!” Kama snapped. “They must have had more ships hiding around Kranek than we thought. It’s the only explanation!”

“And the Coven ships Phy’iad says jumped into the system? Do we just dismiss them as well Kama?” Nykow asked. “After what the vampire witch Aikiro perpetrated against them, attacking his daughter as they did, why would they allow upwards of sixty High Coven ships to provide assistance to them? No... something else entirely happened there and we do not know what it is.”

“Do you have an idea Admiral?” Keleru asked interested now in what his leaders thought.

“No Prefect.” Nykow answered. “I have never heard of ships that could do what Phy’iad says in his report. The most any of our GREATSOUL Dreadnoughts could carry in the way of fighters is far less than what Phy’iad said these two ships emptied into the space around Kranek. Their size alone would indicate some sort of heavy cruiser but to carry this many fighters and be as well armed as his report states... I find it hard to believe. Without having seen it myself I can only speculate and that would do us no good.”

“Then speculate Nykow.” Keleru asked leaning forward. “You have my attention.”

“If you must know Prefect... this could only mean they have developed some new type ship that we have not seen before.” Nykow answered.

“A ship that can jump directly into the gravity well of a planet and begin fighting instantly and launch so many fighters?” Kama complained. “That is beyond anyone’s ability to do.”

“How do we know that?” Nykow asked.

“Laustinos and this Lycavorian Rinard on Hadaria did what they told us they could do Nykow!” Kama snapped angrily. “Hadaria is ours and it cost us naught except information and logistical support that means nothing to us. That dog Leonidas is dead! Many of his children are dead as well? We have hurt them Nykow! Hurt them badly! So the son lives... so what? Once Marshall Pusintin completes his plan the Union will become a non-factor and the son will not matter! We have eliminated the Union as a threat!”

“We may have hurt them badly, but they are by no means toothless Kama.” Nykow spoke calmly. “You seem to forget the High Coven could never conquer them. And Martin Leonidas was only King for twenty-five of the last three thousand plus years while that war raged!”

Kama turned to Keleru. “Prefect... the Marshall’s plan will work won’t it?”

Keleru nodded confidently. “The beginning of the plan is almost near completion, a few more hours at most... but yes. The Ascension Laws within the Union constitution are very clear and have never wavered in any way.”

Kama nodded his head. "And the fools love their laws!" He hissed. "You have seen it yourself Nykow. The Union Senate and Galactic Court did not allow Leonidas to exterminate the Evolli. And even the elven Queen Dysea was approving of that plan! With Hadaria under our control, we already have one judge in our favor."

"That judge went against our attempt to get the Marshall's daughter declared a Kavalian citizen." Nykow spoke.

"That is not a battle we expected to win given the circumstances." Keleru said. "Menot... what does this Buonau bitch say?"

Menot nodded. "The Hadarian judge will follow her directives or she will be replaced." Menot said. "She has already warned her of such a decision."

"You see Nykow! With the information that Laustinos has given us we can prod and intimidate enough others to see things our way even if they are already part of the Union. And once the Marshall makes his claim to the throne the Union will ultimately fall under our control and save us the effort!" Kama said.

Nykow shook his head slowly and looked directly at Keleru. "Our military plans are not something I doubt Prefect." He stated confidently. "I am only concerned that we are putting too much faith in what this Laustinos has told us about how they will react. His information is based on what they would do without Leonidas or the oldest son. In truth, with the exception of his time in the Evolli War, nothing is known of the son. Where he lies along the political and military spectrum of things. This is what I believe we should discover... for if he is the one who ordered the destruction of the Gates then that gives us our first insight into his mentality. I am only concerned that perhaps we are moving too fast too soon."

Keleru nodded now. "These are concerns for me as well Nykow." He stated. "We will know more once Pusintin contacts us when it is done... however what do you suggest we do now?"

"The son... Androcles... he is the largest unknown and he must be removed. In a military sense alone, he will be all the spark that is needed to keep the Union willing to fight. Politically he will not have as much influence as his father, that much we can reasonably be accurate on and he will be weaker there, but militarily he could rally them easily. He is a proven motivator and superior tactician as well as a savage warrior." Nykow shook his head slowly. "Ordering the destruction of the Jump Gates was his doing Prefect. I'm sure of it. Only he would make such a radical decision." Nykow spoke.

"That is nonsense!" Kama declared.

Keleru shook his head. "No... Nykow may be right." He said slowly.

"Prefect you can't believe that?" Kama rasped.

"What I believe is irrelevant." Keleru stated. "I'm only judging these events on fact. You all know that Pusintin's youngest son with Jalersi graduated the Puma Bane training last year. Leruk was one of the finest trained Puma Bane Warriors we have ever turned out along with his brother Kalis. All of the instructors said as much. Many of you were there the day he graduated. He was... he was butchered on Iraruzu and all the information we have indicates it was this Androcles. Leruk died violently and missions reports from a follow on team state that it was not even much of a fight."

"Then the rumors are true?" Kaomi asked softly as other heads turned and eyes grew wider.

Keleru nodded. "Pusintin does not know yet... for you all know how he will react. That information does not leave this room on pain of death. If the son was able to defeat Leruk so easily then he is a threat to any future plans we may have."

Nykow nodded. "I do not believe we will succeed in manipulating him Prefect. Based on what we now know if we can not directly go after him ourselves, then let us use our contacts in The Wilds and turn them loose Prefect." Nykow offered hurriedly. "Fleet Admiral Riall and the others we can predict what they will do Prefect... but the son... he is a viable threat to us and our plans. Our organization has the ability and the means to get within the Union and even on Earth, we trained most of them. Sanction them through third parties to eliminate Androcles Leonidas Prefect. Let them go after him, after his wives since they seem to covert their females so. With him dead or mourning the loss of one or more of his precious mates, not only does it make the Union more predictable, it will make what you and the Marshall have devised proceed much easier."

"And what of the support for Admiral Menot?" Keleru asked.

“We may be able to infiltrate large numbers of our clones into Hadarian space via civilian cargo ships.” Kama interrupted. “We have several dozen Limian transports with all sorts of exquisitely forged documents that we had planned to use in an assault if needed. Let’s use them now!”

“That is a very risky option.” Nykow said calmly. “But it may be the only option open to us right now.”

“Nothing is without risk!” Kama snapped.

Keleru turned to the transmission. “Menot... are the spaceports still open?” He asked the man who had remained silent so far.

Menot nodded. “Yes Prefect. The Union forces were only concerned with getting off the planet, not with destroying anything. The thirteen main cities are now under our complete control. The fool woman Buonau is drunk with the power she perceives she now has. This other woman Wiktor, she is more reserved but they continue to pass the most ridiculous edicts to their people. We are spreading out into the surrounding communities but that is what I needed those troops for! To do it more quickly. I can not send them too far for fear of leaving the cities without enough troops.”

“How many Healers can you send to us?” Keleru asked. Menot didn’t answer right away and Keleru looked at him intently. “Admiral?”

Menot shook his head. “Barely a handful Prefect.” He replied. “None of the Hadarian Healers off world have returned as Buonau ordered them too. Indeed... many of those currently involved in their training courses have refused to continue them. They have been arrested and confined but it will take time for Buonau and the others to gather enough support to force others into service.”

“You have none?” Keleru asked.

“A hundred that are two weeks from completing their schooling Prefect.” He answered him. “I have not learned much of this ability that they possess, but I do know that it is not something all of them have Prefect. It takes time and effort to learn the skills needed to become a Healer Prefect. And then the individual must be able to what they call Ascend every six months.”

“Then learn what you must and make it happen sooner.” Keleru demanded. “Without those Healers we will have to delay our planned invasion of the Coven by several months at least. That is not something I want to do. Not now.”

Menot looked at his Prefect. “That may require I resort to... other means Prefect.” He spoke. “Methods you told me to avoid.”

Keleru shook his head. “Use them now.” He stated firmly. “We did not foresee that the active healers would disregard the orders of Buonau and this other wench and follow the witch Queen’s directives instead.”

“Will you question my methods Prefect?” He asked.

“Not if you succeed.” Keleru answered.

Menot nodded. “Then I will get Healers for you Prefect and I will leave the logistics of getting me more troops to others.”

They all watched as the transmission ended and Keleru turned back to them. “I think we are in agreement then for right now.” He stated. “I will send word to our contacts and do as Admiral Nykow has suggested. Admiral Kama... you will see to getting the Limian transports ready and getting Menot the troops he needs.”

Kama smiled. “As you order Prefect.” He barked happily.

Keleru looked at Nykow as he returned to his seat. “You don’t approve Admiral?” He asked.

“Of killing the son yes Prefect! Wholeheartedly!” Nykow answered. “Of the means to provide more troops to Menot... no.”

“Nykow why do you...” Kama began to berate the older Pride Leader.

“Mind your place Kama!” Nykow snarled at the younger man now as he lost his patience. “I was fighting the Vampire High Coven with your father before you were a dark spot on his balls! I know your father well and he would cuff you in your head for speaking in a such a way to your seniors!”

Kama opened his mouth to retort but Keleru stepped in then. “You are young Admiral Kama.” Keleru spoke. “Young and very bright, but do not overstep your bounds at this table as the leader of your Pride as Nykow has said. Your father may have passed leadership to you, but that does not mean you will disrespect those who are your seniors. And your betters.”

Kama bowed his head. “Forgive me Prefect.” He stammered.

“Nykow... what is it that bothers you about this plan of Kama’s?” Keleru asked sifting in his chair.

“Prefect... you have always asked... you and Marshall Pusintin both... you have always asked us, demanded from us honesty above all else in this room.” Nykow said.

Keleru nodded. “Yes.” He spoke. “If we can not trust and rely upon our military leaders we are nothing. With very little exception there is nothing I nor Pusintin have not shared with you.”

“My apologies Prefect... my statement was not directed at you or the Marshall.” Nykow spoke. “While Kama’s plan is a good one... I do not debate that and I have already said it is the only option open to us right now. I feel the better course of action long term is to find another way to tap into their Gate Corridors again. Sending Limian transports across their borders with no support for three days will take too long and is far too precarious. Yes they are in turmoil... yes they are confused... but this will not last! I have studied the Union and their tactics Prefect and if they discover we are shuttling troops across their borders it will be all the excuse they need to declare immediate war given what we have done. They are holding back now... holding back because we have the elf Queen and their chain of command is shaken. If we give them a reason to unite... well... we all know what will happen.”

“Finding another way to tap into their Gate system would take too long and they will be expecting a move like that!” Kama declared.

“I don’t think they will be.” Nykow spoke shaking his head. “They will be expecting to catch us trying to move men and equipment to Hadaria in whatever way we can and the only thing working in our favor is the openness of their travel corridors. They would not expect us to continue to use deceit and subterfuge.”

“Admiral Menot needs the men!” Kama protested.

“Yes he does.” Nykow spoke. “But Menot is an old soldier like me. Like you Prefect. He will make do with what he has until reinforcements arrive. Ambassador Matuarr has told the son Androcles that we will kill his mother and invade if he retaliates against us. For now that threat will hold. But what about after Prefect, when the full scope of the plan with his elven mother becomes known. He already has shown he will not wholly cling to the sayings of this Galactic Court they so honor. If we provoke him in any way... he will attack Prefect. Without hesitation.”

“Then let him!” Kama spat.

“And fight a war on two fronts against the Coven and the Union?” Another older Pride Leader gasped. “That would be suicide!”

“We must move quickly and divisively!” Kama snapped.

“That does not mean we should abandon caution to the wind!” The same Pride Leader spoke again.

Keleru shook his head. “No... for the moment we will go with Kama’s plan.” He spoke confidently ending further debate about the issue. “I don’t believe they are as organized and unified as you may think Nykow. Not with what Laustinos has told us about those who oppose the Leonidas family.” He got to his feet. “We will stick with the current plan that we have and proceed from there but I will direct our people to begin actively searching for another way to tap into their Gate system Nykow. As you say... that could be invaluable. Now... if you will excuse me.”

All of the men came to their feet as Keleru left, and then they began to file out of the room slowly talking amongst themselves. Nykow looked at the two other Pride Leaders that were close to his age and had voiced caution as they moved close to him. They had seen the same battles and horrors as he had.

“Nykow?” The oldest one asked.

“This does not feel right Latteo.” Nykow spoke softly. “We are moving too fast. Things are happening almost faster than we can keep track of them. Ever since they hatched this plan months ago we have charged ahead heedless of the cost it could mean for us. For our Prides and for the KFI.”

“You have said it was a good plan Nykow.” The second man spoke.

“I do not question the plan itself Kaomi. It is an excellent plan.” Nykow said. “Only the means and speed with which it is being implemented make me question it. We are overlooking too much as we grow closer to the moment we think it will all come together. We are trusting too much to chance.”

“What do you mean?” Latteo asked.

“Qurot is trapped at the embassy on Earth now. The Union will never let him leave.” Nykow said. “Pian’Nruarani has betrayed us and his entire Pride has just vanished. Two of our finest leaders of troops and one of our largest Prides and they are out of the overall equation instantly.”

“Pian is a traitor to his people! To us!” Latteo spoke harshly and loudly. “As are all his Pride members.”

“And I agree.” Nykow spoke. “That does not mean he was not one of our finest leaders and tacticians.”

“The Nruarani are a nomadic Pride Nykow.” Kaomi spoke evenly. “They always have been.”

“So nomadic that they strip everything bare as they leave?” Nykow spoke. “So nomadic that we can find no sign of them at all? None! We have scoured the outer edges of our borders and we find nothing! Where did they go? How did they just up and disappear? No... they have gone somewhere and we don’t know where. In another incident; on the edge of our space with the Union near Ritaah, one of our science vessels reports an unknown explosion on Ritaah and then goes to scrutinize this. That ship has not been heard from since. A squadron of destroyers sent to investigate can find no trace of the ship anywhere in the system or the outlying sector! It too has just vanished! I fear there is much going on that we do not see or do not know enough about to just dismiss it as unimportant. And Kama’s thirst for battle with the Lycavorians is becoming boorish.”

Latteo looked back towards the door then back to his friends. “He will not be so brash when a Lycavorian commander hands him his ass in battle. He has grown too used to fighting the Coven.”

Kaomi looked at him evenly. “You have something on your mind Nykow my friend... say it.”

Nykow looked at him. “We are hurtling towards a finish that we believe we have shaped irrevocably in our favor my friends. What we have not taken into account is how others might alter that finish. And not to our benefit.”

“Do you fear the Lycavorians Nykow?” Latteo asked.

“Don’t you my friend?” Nykow asked in reply. “They are not the High Coven and you know this. They will not throw aside their weapons and run like cowardly dogs in the face of overwhelming odds as the High Coven did. They will stand and fight and they will die, kicking and screaming out their rage as they kill as many of our men as they can before they go. We faced them once before millennia ago, and they sent us scurrying back to our planet with our tails between our legs. We have grown since then and learned and prospered. But so have they. I do not dismiss this Immortal’s reports as Kama does. An Immortal he may be, but he is also an experienced commander of men and ships or the High Coven would have disposed of him long before he deserted them. These ships he speaks of... they give me pause and concern. Why have we heard nothing about them? If they exist, and I’m not saying they do, but if they exist it means there are things that Laustinos did not tell us or does not know. I believe it is the latter, and if it is... then what else have the Lycavorians been up to that we are not aware of? If we... if we continue on this path of recklessness... I fear we invite the same outcome if not something far more terrible. And that is what I fear most of all.”

KAVALIAN GREATSOUL-CLASS DREADNOUGHT PUSINTIN’S COMMAND SHIP PRIDE OF PUMAS

Her head hurt so badly.

She could feel the coolness of the pillow beneath her head, and the military style stiffness of the mattress. She deduced that she was most definitely not in their bed in Sparta. The scents were so very different, and she could not detect the minty smell of her beloved Martin Leonidas nor the honey, lilac or wildflower scents of Anja, Bella or Dysea and not a trace of the lavender and coco scent of her lovely Aricia. Her head throbbed deeply; the ache feeling like someone was inside her skull with a hammer and bashing away incessantly. For'mya was face down on the mattress so that ruled out any hospital that she knew of. Her keen wolf nose could detect a multitude of heavy male scents, none of which she could place or quantify as even being Lycavorian though the strange and pungent peppermint like scent seemed somehow familiar. She moved her head only slightly and For'mya groaned in agony as pain shot through all of her senses. Her hands came up and she gripped the pillow until the wave of pain passed and then her dark brown eyes began to flutter as she tried to open them. The light was not bright which was a definite plus but it hampered her vision. Slowly For'mya blinked several times trying to bring things into focus and just as slowly her vision cleared. She began to make out the sterile furniture of whatever room she was in. Two gunmetal gray dressers built into the obvious ship bulkhead, one just below the view window which showed her nothing but stars. So she wasn’t on Earth anymore which meant Deia and the Senate Durcunusaan Detail had evacuated them. For'mya Leonidas then did the one thing she always did when waking from sleep and she reached out within Mindvoice for those she loved.

And she felt nothing.

For'mya's eyes grew slightly wider as the memories came rushing back to her. Deia's office and watching the monitor as the running battle from Tarifa's home was broadcast live on the Netnews. And then... then she remembered everything and she sat up quickly, the pain in her head now nothing as she remembered she had watched the death of the only man she had ever loved in her entire life.

"MARTIN!!" For'mya Leonidas screamed louder than she had ever screamed in her entire life. She reached out once more in Mindvoice hoping beyond hope it was all a lie but she felt nothing but blackness. She could feel nothing and she staggered from the bed, all her balance and equilibrium shattered. Nothing. Aricia's musical resonance; Anja's constant drumbeat of confidence; Dysea's ripples of balance and Bella's calm and collected whispers. She could feel none of it. For'mya banged into the bulkhead, shaking her head and the combination of pain and lack of balance made her whole body throb in agony. "MARTIN!!" She screamed again. "NO! MARTIN MY LOVE!"

"They are gone! Almost all of them!" The deep male voice spoke. "And you need to stop screaming like a stupid elf bitch!"

For'mya's head snapped around which caused her enough pain to begin with and her brown eyes found him and went wide. He was sitting in the chair, his legs stretched out in front of him casually as he held the mug of liquid in his hand. His dirty blond hair was cut very short, his dark blue eyes cruel, but there was no mistaking his tall, muscular body or that scent now. She had smelled it on Martin faintly as they all laid together in Sparta for a week after the battle in the streets between the two brothers. It was the powerful and pungent scent of his brother.

"Pusintin!" For'mya snarled as viciously as any she wolf could and her first reaction was unfortunately the most painful one. She willed the change on herself just as she leaped into the air towards him.

In mid jump For'mya's eyes went wide as she didn't change and instead crashed painfully into the chair beneath her. Her jaw hit the back of the chair as she fell and it went spinning away as she tumbled to the deck in utter torture. The pain in her head was misery and now the added sharpness of the pain lancing through her jaw and neck from the impact. Her eyes had changed, her fangs had extended, but that was the extent of her transformation and she pushed herself to her feet heedless of the shrieks of anguish her body was sending through her nerves. She staggered back from him, waving her hands in front of her almost as if she was blind.

"NO!" She screamed. "NO! MURDERER!"

Pusintin chuckled at her words even as he admired the way she filled out her clothes. She still wore the simple jumpsuit she had worn when they took her from Sparta, blood from her head injury dried into the fabric of her shoulder. Her golden blond hair was stained with blood as well, but with the exception of the cut along her hairline, she was uninjured. Pusintin got to his feet slowly his eyes taking her in. He had never cared for female elves, he found them too haughty and arrogant, and the two that he had raped through the years were simply dead fucks as far as he was concerned. He didn't understand what his brother had seen in them enough to have two of them as mates. For'mya was not as full figured as Jalersi, her five foot seven height lean and muscular. She did not have much in the way of breasts Pusintin saw, but the jumpsuit she wore conformed to an ass that looked delicious even on an elf and was far tighter and tauter than Jalersi's.

"I told you to stop screaming bitch! You are hurting my ears!" Pusintin snapped.

"AARRGGHHH!" The sound that came from her throat was anything but a refined elven female. Pusintin saw the black ringed brown eyes and the flash of white fangs before For'mya fell upon him.

For'mya dashed at him surprising Pusintin with her incredible speed until he remembered that she was an elf and a wolf and would have the speed of both. He was unable to stop her hand from whipping out and landing a solid heel strike to his cheek. The pain he felt was real and he glared at her while holding his jaw even as she staggered and began to bring her hand back for another blow. Had she not been so disoriented Pusintin didn't doubt the blow would have been much more painful. She had surprising strength and the force of the poorly throw strike would have been severe if she had connected fully. At least his brother hadn't chosen weak females to fuck.

Pusintin's left hand lashed out and caught her square in the jaw, turning For'mya around as stars burst into her head and she fell once more to the deck holding her face as more pain wracked her tortured head. "Stupid wench!" He growled. "You ever raise your hand to me again and I'll break your fucking arms!"

For'mya held the side of her face, tears streaming from her eyes and blood leaking from between her lips as she lifted her head and stared at him. "Are you mad?" She gasped. "Why have you done this? What have you done to me?"

Pusintin grinned. "Oh... you mean your little problem within Mindvoice?" He asked her sarcastically as he moved back to the chair. "Wonderful little tool don't you think?"

For'mya snapped her left arm up and called for her Shi Viska, her eyes going wide when nothing happened and she heard Pusintin laughing. "You can't call your toy either elf bitch!" He growled twirling his finger around the room. "Power dampeners set up in this room to just the right frequency that it blocks whatever powers your toy. It's too bad it doesn't work in open areas and is only focused enough to be used within individual rooms. That technology is very interesting and I'm sure we'll find out how it works so that we can use it."

"I'll tell you nothing murderer!" For'mya shrieked at him.

Pusintin laughed. "Oh we'll see." He stated confidently. "My brother is dead... my Aunt is dead. Almost all of your pathetic children too! It's a wonderful thing you know."

"Liar!" For'mya screamed.

Pusintin laughed at her. "You saw your precious Martin die before your eyes wench! It was shown on every Netnews channel across the Union. That isn't something we had planned on, but it was such a nice touch!"

For'mya threw herself at him again uncaring. She surged with strength that blocked the pain from her mind intending to shred his face to ribbons with her nails as she bared her fangs. He moved fast for such a large man and came to his feet, his hand clamping around her throat in mid air as he caught her and began squeezing.

"I told you about trying to strike me bitch!" Pusintin barked. "I thought you elf females were supposed to be smart. You are acting just as dim witted as any female I have ever come across." For'mya clawed at his fingers around her throat, her air slowly being cut off as he leaned his face closer. "I'll give you one more chance bitch! Don't make me kill you." Pusintin heaved her across the room and watched as she sailed several meters through the air and impacted the bulkhead hard enough to hear the rush of air leave her lungs. "I got plans for you elf Queen."

For'mya crashed to the deck gagging as she sucked in air to her lungs. Once more pain washed through her and this time she could not block it out and she pulled her legs in tightly as she laid in the deck. "I... I will never help you!" She rasped out the words. "They... they will come for you!" She hissed. "They will come for you and you will die for what you have done."

Pusintin laughed. "I doubt that." He laughed at her. "My brother is dead. The child Queen is dead. The Hadarian witch is dead. No one knows where the pieces of the vampire whore ended up. Almost all of his children are dead..."

"No! No!" For'mya sobbed out the words.

"I have no reason to lie to you now woman!" Pusintin declared. "I have won! The Union is in disarray and our troops and ships stand ready to pour across your borders and slaughter your people. I've cut you off from your abilities in Mindvoice... taken away your ability to use your Shi Viska." He stated as he moved back to his chair. "I've won!"

"The Union... the Union will... they will never surrender!" She cried.

"Probably not!" Pusintin agreed. "And they will die by the millions because they won't." He said with a grin.

"They are... they are your people!" For'mya screamed out. "You... you betray your own people!"

Pusintin turned on her now, his face angry as he crossed the room in three strides and slapped her once more, rocking her head back and dropping her to the deck again. "They are not my people! They were never my people! They left me to die bitch!"

For'mya held her cheek where he had slapped her and lifted her head from the floor to glare at him. "That... that is a lie!" She hissed. "You know it is!"

Pusintin glared at her for a long moment before shaking his head. “You just go right on and believe that.” He stated.

“I will tell you nothing forn ronnus!” For'mya snarled. “Nothing!”

Pusintin chuckled as he turned and moved away from her. He picked up the glass where it had fallen and went to the counter along the wall and refilled the glass from the pitcher there. “It isn't information I want from you For'mya.” He stated calmly as he sipped the liquid and turned back to look at her. “Whatever information you have between those pointed ears is not what I want from you. What could you possibly know that could help me... you are a female. My brother and the Union puts far too much effort into treating females as more than what they are. Inferior in every way.”

“You are a sick, demented man!” For'mya spat. “This is how... this is how you view your own mate Jalersi?”

Pusintin met her eyes with an angry glare but kept his temper in check. As much as he wanted to beat her for the way she was speaking to him he knew he could not. He inhaled deeply and could smell her sweet orchid scent filling the room and recognizing it for what it was. “Jalersi... Jalersi was an excellent fuck with big tits! She's a whore though, just like the rest of them. I hope Pian enjoys her while he can. When I find them... I'll hang his hide on my wall and send her to the brothels on Nefoa to join our daughter and be fucked to death.” He finally said with a shrug. “She gave me two sons at least who are worth the effort and know their place among our people. Karun... he was always different. I had hoped the trip to Earth would change him but it only made him weaker. Ah well... I have two other sons that have the strength to be men among our people.”

For'mya gazed at him in shock at his callousness. She knew Pusintin to be a heartless man; she had seen it enough times while floating within Martin's thoughts even months after their fight in Sparta. And now she understood what Martin had told her that night and why. And now she could do nothing but agree.

“Why have... why have you done this?” For'mya asked once more. “I will... I will tell you nothing you know that! You may... you may torture me all you want... you may rape me all you want... but I will tell you nothing! Ever!”

Pusintin laughed again at her words. “Rape you? Torture you?” He chortled. “You think too highly of yourself she-elf. I'm not going to rape you bitch; and I'm not going to waste my time torturing you. You are going to help me claim the throne of the Lycavorian Union. And your ridiculous inbred elven sensibilities will make you to do it willingly.”

For'mya's eyes went wide in disbelief. “You must be joking?” She gasped staring at him. “You can't be serious!”

Pusintin nodded. “Oh... I'm very serious.” He stated.

“You can not sit on the throne of the Union!” For'mya barked. “You know that!”

Pusintin took the data pad that was sitting on the counter and he looked at it with a grin before beginning to speak. “You are going to order the Elven Parliament to renounce that elf bitch Dysea as queen and install you as the only Queen. You are the only pureblood elven female with the blood of the elven King in her veins. Dysea is no Queen of the elves... she's a fucking clone! A good looking clone... but a fucking clone regardless. You will order the elven parliament to renounce her and give full power and authority to you as is your birthright.”

For'mya couldn't believe what she was hearing. “You... you are insane!” She declared.

Pusintin laughed. “So I've been told.” He stated. “Once the Elven Parliament does that, they will immediately open negotiations with the KFI for Exclusive Trade Rights and total and unrestricted access to what you call Dragon Mountain for the purpose of scientific research on any and all dragons there. They will then sever all diplomatic ties with the Lycavorian Union and declare them as a hostile government. They will then recognize me as rightful heir to the throne of the Union based on the fact I am the oldest son of Leonidas.”

“You... you are mad!” She exclaimed in shock. “They would never do that! The Elves are... they are founding members of the Union! They would never turn their back on the Union! Never!”

“You'll make them do that.” Pusintin spoke evenly.

“Son vada carians! Forn wen malda!” For'mya gasped. “I... I am wolf now you igord! My blood is mixed now! I will not do this!”

Pusintin laughed again. "Your elven blood is still pure For'mya; please don't take me for a fool." He stated evenly. "It still carries the pure strands of the elven King within them even though my brother has polluted you with his defective blood. I am the first son and I should be King of the Union!"

"You deserted them!" For'mya screamed. "You deserted them and left them to fend for themselves! They thought you dead! When it was discovered you had given your allegiance to the Kavalians and killed your own people in The First Kavalian War, your name was stricken and cursed. No one will allow you to take the throne! No one! And certainly not me! Not after what you have done! I will not help you!"

Pusintin continued unimpeded. "Once they have recognized me as the rightful heir to the throne of the Union they will have no choice but to support me." He stated. He tossed the data pad to her on the floor as he settled back into his chair. "You see... we have spent a lot of time researching this little problem. The Union Ascension Laws haven't been changed since the time of The First Oracle's Declaration. An oversight on Deia's part no doubt... but then again she is dead now and she was never very bright to begin with. I suggest you read that last paragraph for it concerns your part in all this."

"Nubou forn!" For'mya snarled. "I will help you do nothing! You have... you have killed my mate! My children! Those I love! I will never help you! You can rot for eternity in the pits of hell for all I care!"

Pusintin released another of his infuriating and condescending chuckles. "Ah... For'mya you stupid elf bitch!" He stated calmly. "You must be a really good fuck in order for my brother to keep you around because you are one brainless wench!"

For'mya snatched up the data pad in her hand and threw it back at him in the chair with all her strength. "And you are nothing more than a butcher of innocents and an egotistical weasel! Martin Leonidas should have killed you that day! He should have torn your throat open and let the insects feed on your putrid remains!"

Pusintin caught the data pad in one hand while he got to his feet with a cruel smile. He crossed over to where she sat on the floor and savagely grabbed her by her golden hair causing For'mya to cry out in pain. He shoved the data pad in her face. "Read it you arrogant elf whore! Read it" He roared. "Take it now and read it!"

Tears sprang to her eyes as his grip on her long golden hair sent seething pain through her already throbbing head and caused her to try and lift off the floor to give herself reprieve from the lances of pain shooting through her. She grasped for the data pad, anything to stop the pain and the moment she took it he released her hair. She slumped back to the floor, tears streaming down her cheeks now. "I will... I will never help you!" She stammered. "Just... just kill me now and get it over with!"

Pusintin stood back up to his full height. "You'll help me." He stated confidently. "You'll help me if you ever want to see Dysea and your son again." For'mya's head came up at this and she watched him return to the chair and sit down. "I told you almost all of the wretched brats you called children were dead. That little device we implanted in your thick head makes it so you can't reach out to them or feel them." He touched the control on the arm of the chair and the monitor over the counter came alive and he watched For'mya's head turn towards it. "Maybe you should watch this..."

"...is Channel 36 Anchor Arida outside the remains of the home of Lieutenant Governor Tarifa and Star Colonel Isra, where only days ago the battle began that has tragically seen the devastating loss of nearly the entire Royal family." For'mya could clearly see and recognize the smoking and shattered remains of Tarifa, Aihola and Isra's house in the background for they had been there enough times in the last years for family gatherings or parties. "Information is still coming in from Prime Minister Selene of Earth in her daily briefings, but what we know so far is catastrophic. King Leonidas was killed by Kavalian assassins nearly four days ago now, not four kilometers from this location. Queen Aricia died a few hours later during emergency surgery at King Yelu Memorial Hospital. Queen Anja's personal ship, The SPIRIT OF HADARIA, is now confirmed lost with all hands after being attacked by Kavalian warships hiding within Union space as they were enroute back to Earth. Crown Prince Androcles, his four wives and mates, Princess Eliani, Prince Denali... all of the King's children who left with Prince Androcles have been confirmed killed on Kranek along with Queen Isabella. Their bodies and those of their dragons... they..."

For'mya watched as the woman choked up and tears began to roll down her cheeks. She shook her head and wiped the tears with the sleeve of her shirt and looked once more at the video drone that was filming her.

“They were killed attempting to protect civilians at the Immortal settlement. Queen Dysea is confirmed as MIA right now but she is also presumed lost, killed in the destruction of the Immortal settlement there. None of the Immortal settlement on Kranek remains as Kavalian ships subjected it to an intense two day orbital bombardment. There were almost no survivors among the civilian Immortal people there according to the reports that we are getting. Prime Minister Deia is confirmed dead, her body removed from the rubble of the Senate Office Building only late yesterday and the status of Queen For'mya is unknown at this time. The Durcunusaan believed she was either forced from the bunker before the building was destroyed or left freely.”

For'mya could not contain the tears that poured down her cheeks as her entire life, the most joyous part of her over one thousand years of life, had been washed away in a matter of hours and days. The ache she felt was too much to describe in words, her chest hollow and empty now as her heart was shred to pieces by every word this reporter spoke and continued to speak.

“As we have learned this morning there are confirmed reports that even King Leonidas’s young children were not spared. The bodies of Nara and Deion Leonidas were pulled from the remains of an underground bunker outside of Sparta where they had retreated with both of their grandmothers.” Arida continued. “It has been confirmed by the ranking Durcunusaan officer that the bunker was attacked by Kavalian assassins as well. Retta, Calyb and Bryon Leonidas were removed from the Bunker according to the Durcunusaan and taken by unknown ship off of Earth. It is not known how the location of the secret bunker was leaked or discovered by the Kavalians though we are getting reports that Deputy Prime Minister Laustinos is somehow involved in this plot against the Royal family. Traces of his blood were found in the Senate Bunker with Prime Minister Deia’s body when it was discovered that Queen For'mya was and still is missing. We do not know at this time if...”

The transmission went dark and For'mya’s head snapped around to glare at Pusintin with nearly uncontrollable rage. “You bastard!” She hissed through her tears. “Forn nubous ronnus! They... they were children! My children!”

Pusintin nodded. “They were a threat.” He stated plainly. “You should actually be happy bitch! We didn’t kill your son!”

For'mya’s eyes grew wider. “What?”

“The two half breed Hadarian brats were given to that Hadarian witch Buonau.” Pusintin spoke as he leaned forward in his chair. “We still have your son however.”

“Bry... Bryon?” For'mya gasped. “Where... where is he? What have you done with him?” She snarled as she pulled herself to her feet now, the mother in her surging forth even through all the pain and agony that racked her body.

Pusintin looked at her and smiled. “Don’t do anything stupid For'mya.” He spoke using her name for the first time. “If you do... your precious brat will end up with his throat cut and being fed to Sheol Blood Rats in the sewers of Cabelir. And your fellow Queen and sex partner will end up being a whore for Immortals.” His words brought For'mya up short.

“Dysea?” She gasped. “She’s... she lives?”

Pusintin nodded his head. “She’s alive. For now.” He spoke arrogantly. “We hired an Immortal mercenary group to kidnap her from Kranek during the assault there. I figured we would need something to prod you into going along with us. Her life and that of your son now reside in your hands. You’d better read that last paragraph now For'mya.”

For'mya lifted the pad in her hand and began to read. Pusintin saw her eyes grow large with disbelief as she did and he smiled as he admired how she looked standing there. She finally looked up at him. “You... you can’t be serious?” She stammered the words. “I would never do this you sick bastard! You... you must think I am a fool!” She threw the pad onto the floor at his feet.

Pusintin leaned over and picked the pad up. “If you don’t... I will make sure your son never sees another sunrise. If you don’t... your fellow whore Queen will be fucking Immortals the rest of her life and loving every second of it! You do realize that elf females who become addicted to Immortal semen will do anything to get it? They'll fuck ten or twenty Immortals just so that they get their fix!"

"Liar!" For'mya snarled. "Dysea is wolf! This could not happen to her!"

"See now... that is where you are wrong." Pusintin spoke as he got to his feet. "We are not as stupid as my brother thought For'mya. We've been making clones for decades and Dysea is the child of clones... that is common knowledge you know." Pusintin told her as he walked around her slowly. "When that backstabber Dymas made the elves he forgot to include one little chromosome that elves like yourself have. A chromosome that is only indigenous to elves born on Elear of pure elven blood because of something in the atmosphere of the planet. That simple chromosome is what allows the healing factor of a turned female elf to make her immune to Immortal semen once she is exposed to it the first time. Why do you think I made sure Phy'iad and his group kidnapped a turned female elf? So I could test this theory. Once the Lycavorian healing cells destroy the chemicals in an Immortal's semen it makes them immune to further addiction. Your precious Dysea doesn't have that particular chromosome in her body." He spoke as he ended up in front of her now and sneered into her face. For'mya turned her face to the side to keep from having to look at him. Pusintin chuckled at this.

"The moment an Immortal unloads into her tight elven body she'll be just like any other elf female and she'll be begging her Immortal Master to fuck her every day." Pusintin shrugged. "Who knows... she might even like it! I hear those Immortals are hung pretty well and from what I understand your Dysea is a screamer! I don't think you can live with the fact you turned Dysea into a whore for whatever Immortal wants to fuck her and I surely don't think you will let your son die!"

"You... you are a vile excuse for a man!" For'mya hissed viciously. "Why... why would you do this? You have... you have killed your own blood! Your brother! What could you possibly hope to obtain from such madness?"

"I want what is mine." Pusintin spoke. "My brother had it... and now you are going to help me get it back."

For'mya turned back to look at him with determination in her jaw. "I will never do what you want!" She exclaimed. "You disgust me!"

"Last chance to put your thumbprint on that pad and we do things in a civil manner." He spoke sarcastically.

"Nubou forn!" For'mya snarled viciously. "I will never do what you ask! Never!"

Pusintin nodded. "See I figured you would say that." He spoke calmly. "So I've arranged a little show for you." His hand snapped up quickly and he grabbed her hair viciously yanking her head to the side as she cried out in pain and reached for his arms. "You won't do what I want now... but I'm guessing that after you see your precious Dysea broken to the will of an Immortal and shrieking for him to fuck her senseless you'll change your tune! I've seen this process you know and it is quite entertaining. Phy'iad and I have it all arranged for you. And if that doesn't work... then you can watch while my men carve up your son in front of you and feed him to the rats! I'm guessing that your ridiculous elven sensibilities, the sacredness of life and family and those you love, I'm guessing those will kick in before that. If not... then after you watch them break Dysea and your son is killed in front of you, I'll make sure that you witness every single battle as we crush your dear Union under our heels. You'll be responsible for the death of millions For'mya. Millions!"

Pusintin dragged For'mya towards the wall by her long hair and she had no choice but to follow to keep the pain from making her pass out. He stabbed the console on the bulkhead. The face of the Kavalian appeared. "Captain!"

"Marshall?"

"We are in range correct?" Pusintin asked.

"Standing by sir!"

"Establish the communication Captain. And broadcast it all over the ship." Pusintin sneered. "There's no reason why our men can't enjoy the show as well. How often will they see the debasing of a Union Queen?"

The Kavalian grinned. "Stand by Marshall Pusintin."

Pusintin turned his head and looked at For'mya who had tears in her eyes but was trying very hard not to cry out. He saw hate in those brown eyes as she glared at him, but he didn't care. If what Laustinos had told him was true and the feelings between all of them ran as deep as he said they did, For'mya would break before Phy'iad finished his task.

EARTH
GYTHEIO
CRANAE ISLAND

It was one of the biggest reasons he had purchased this island and the villa on it, and as he stood on the warm sand and watched as the sun began to just break the horizon of the mountains in the east, he remembered why. Not only did Greek legend say this is where Paris of Troy brought Helen of Sparta to profess his love for her, it is where they consummated that love. He bought this island and villa because that is how he wanted to profess his love for Sadi. And he had done it. That first night with Sadi had been beyond anything he had ever imagined it could be. He knew that night on the island twenty-six years ago as an eight month old infant that she was meant for him and they would be together one day. Her sugarplum and spice scent was like a drug to him from that day forward. When she came back into his life it was as if the one place inside his mind and heart that had been dimmed as he grew became illuminated to brilliance. Her body was like a temple that he had explored so intimately that he knew where every curve and supple line ended and the next began. Her scent, the taste of her passion and her lips, these were things that he could no longer live without and that was why they were now Anomes. As with his father and mother, they would never doubt each other, never question one another and always desire each other. They would have their disagreements as his parents did, but there was no power that existed that could part them now.

It was only after Sadi came back into his life that the dreams began to make sense. As his father was meant to love more than one, Androcles now realized he was as well, though he had tried for years to break the shadow of his father that always seemed to surround him. While Sadi could and always would elicit the most telling reaction from him, there was no denying that Carisia, Lu'ria and Ne'Veha each held a part of him within their grasp. They were in his blood just as he was now in theirs and this only added to the power and connection all of them had. That they were meant to love each other as well as him was also something that, as with his father and those he called mother, made them so very unique. It was not something he had thought about as he was growing, something he knew Sadi did not think about, but once they had come together it was too powerful an urge for either of them to deny. He did not know when they would discover that last piece that would make them complete as his father and mothers were complete, but Androcles knew it would happen sooner rather than later. The draw was too strong now and he could no longer deny it. Sadi and the others had already accepted it completely and he knew better than to argue with them. Laying in their bed last night, Carisia stroking Lu'ria's flesh and Ne'Veha pressed close to Sadi as their passions cooled; Sadi had told him she felt that this person was close now. Androcles also knew that in order to be as strong as possible he could hold nothing back from Lu'ria and Ne'Veha. It was something that his father had not done at first and Androcles knew that had been one of his weaknesses at the beginning. That would change for his father would know as he knew that they had to know all of him, feel all of him, and from the outset Andro had held nothing of his aura back from either of his turned elven wives.

So much was happening now, it was very nearly overwhelming. Amazingly... though he barely knew him... Dutkne's powerful presence within Mindvoice soothed him and gave him focus. These men and women that had come with him, their scents were so pungent and wild, as if they had never let go of the instincts of their people. He knew many believed that his father had returned the instinctual nature to their people with his return, and in many respects Andro didn't question that. Perhaps not so much returned them, as freed them once more. Instinctual and savage they could be yes, but Lycavorians were a passionate species. Passionate about life and love and so many things, and Andro knew that is why the decisions he had made weighed so heavily on his mind. He knew his role and one day he knew he would be King, but he never expected to have to make such decisions now. Decisions that would end lives on such a massive scale. Decisions that would...

Andro turned when her scent drifted to him on the slight wind and he felt the soft tremors of her gait through the sand. Her huge bulk moved with confident grace as she came from the shadows that still resided on the island and her near crimson red scales glimmered slightly in the dawn that was rising. Arzoal's flame colored eyes were always bright and those eyes were fixed on him as she moved within a few meters and settled to the warm sand beneath her.

[You are awake very early young Androcles.] Arzoal spoke in the shielded conversation. This fact alone told Andro that this was not to be an open discussion. When it came to MV shields there were few on the level of Arzoal and Helen. He and his father among only three or four who could project shields like theirs. Though he did feel this ability within Wayonn and Dutkne, even more really, they had not exercised it yet.

[As are you Elder Mother.] He answered.

If a dragon could smile then Arzoal's expression would have been it. Her lips drew apart slightly exposing her razor like teeth and her flame colored eyes did an excellent impression of rolling in her head. [Helen has not been able to sleep well since she discovered her past with Wayonn. She is too excited and filled with wonder to sleep for very long. She just drifted off.] Arzoal answered. [I felt you out here and I came to see if everything was alright.]

Andro nodded and looked back towards the mountains across the gulf. [I have not been able to sleep well since all this began.] He answered. [There is much I can not understand or see. It is disturbing.]

[The gift of foresight is not one that is often given Talon Guardian Androcles.] Arzoal said.

Andro nodded. [I know... but I could certainly use it right now.]

[Do you know why we as Dragon Elders chose you and your father to be our Talon Guardians Androcles?] Arzoal asked as she settled her massive body to the sand.

[You said it was for our actions on Alba Tau.] Andro answered turning to look at her.

Arzoal nodded her massive head. [That was a large part of it yes. But the deciding factor for all of us on the council was not what you did there.] She said evenly. [It was for what you showed every day before and every day since... and that is your potential for compassion and trust. You and your father... from the two of you we felt limitless potential for compassion. From the two of you we sensed not one iota of greed or jealousy or arrogance. That was the deciding factor Androcles. Our total trust you had already earned because first your father and then you... you have never broken a promise you have made to our kind. What your father and I started has evolved into something far more than we had ever foreseen Andro... and even now it continues to grow. You and your father are the reason for that.]

[I don't follow you.] Andro said.

[Faith Androcles.] Arzoal answered. [No matter the odds or the task before you, you and your father never lose faith. Faith in yourselves... faith in others... faith in what is right and just. It is what you taught the dragons and riders from the High Coven. A task that many of us on the council did not think you could do. We did not have the faith in you and Elynth that it could be done. Yet you did it. And in only a little more than three months. You spared Vollenh when it was within your right to take his life as a Talon Guardian for what he had done. Why did you spare him Andro?]

Andro met her eyes. [There was something... there was something burning within his heart that had not been corrupted by Yuri and the blackness. A spark of bright light. It felt so... it felt familiar somehow. Elynth and I reached for that spark.]

Arzoal nodded her huge head slowly. [Look at what has become of that faith now. He has discovered the one he was truly meant for in Cha'talla of the Akruasian people. He worships Viera and his sons and he has grown stronger for it. His sons will grow stronger now as well, for they have a path that has already been predetermined. Just as the path you and Elynth follow is predetermined. It is a path that Elynth and you insured without even knowing why.]

Andro looked at her. [They are meant for Sadi and Ne'Veha.] He said thoughtfully after a long moment. [Aren't they Elder Mother?]

Arzoal nodded once more. [I felt it from them the moment they came into this world. And there is reason behind that as well. They will not feel the pull for at least another year but yes. That decision you and Elynth made... that decision will now echo among the stars for millennia. And because of it... they will grow stronger and we are now that much stronger as well.]

[What are you trying to tell me Elder Mother?] Andro asked.

[That you must let go of this hate you feel for yourself... for the decision that you had to make. The decision only you could have made.] Arzoal said softly. [It has no place within you Androcles Leonidas. It was the only conclusion you could have made... the only decision any one of us could have made. That you feel dishonor and hatred towards yourself for having to make this choice speaks volumes to others of the man you are but you had to choose between the few and the many. It may not seem like it now... but you made the right choice.]

[Then why do I not feel that way Elder Mother?] Androcles asked her.

[For the very same reasons your father still carries the burden of a similar decision he had to make many years ago. Long before you were born. He had to choose to save a few or save many. He made the same decision as you. He chose to save many.] Arzoal spoke again. [Compassion is a very vacillating thing Androcles. There is a balance that must be kept in order for someone to truly be compassionate. It is a balance that you and your father maintain almost without thinking... but it does not mean you will not feel regret or question the decisions you make. What you must do now is learn to accept it as your father has learned to do... as I have learned to do.]

Andro looked at her. [You?]

[Androcles... Androcles I am responsible for far more misery and death than you and your father could ever imagine to obtain.] Arzoal spoke softly. [There are scores of things that have occurred within my many years that I have only shared with Helen for she is now my Bonded One and I can not keep these things inside me any longer. There are also many things that I still have yet to learn. I know what you are...]

[Elder Mother... are you referring to the fact that you are... or were a Pralor?] Andro asked softly tilting his head as he looked at her. [The Pralor that Shiria now thinks she protects with her silence?]

Arzoal's head came up, her flame colored eyes wide in disbelief. [What? How... how is it possible that you know that? I have... I have told no one but Helen in all my years! How...] She moved her head closer to him extending her neck out and her eyes grew even wider. [Your... your father?] She gasped.

Andro nodded his head with a smile. [Yes.]

[But... but how?] Arzoal gasped. [When? I was so careful!]

[Part of it is because you were so careful Elder Mother. He put it together completely about ten years ago. I did not fully believe it until just now.] Andro answered her with a smile. [Mostly from discussions he's had with you and your innate ability to speak but not really reveal anything of substance unless you truly wanted too. The Feravomir does it all the time, and Dutkne tells me Wayonn is even worse. It must be a Pralor trait of some sort.] Andro said with a smile. [And then there was Avi helping him.]

[Avi?] Arzoal exclaimed loudly shaking her massive head back and forth. [But he is... he was... he was Sumar's avatar! Of course! Oh why did I not think of that? How could I forget that?]

[My father may act like he can't stand computers and machines Elder Mother, but in truth he is just as gifted with them as my sister's Normya and Zarah. More than likely you did not notice the interaction that he has had with Avi over the years.] Andro told her with another smile. [He suspected there was something you were not telling him many years ago, even back as far as when I was newly born. I think he began to believe there was something about you that did not add up a few years after Avi brought CS41 here to Earth. Even as the other dragons scurried about in wonder among its decks, you were reserved and calm, almost as if you had been on a ship like this before. During their time together Avi told him that once Sumar was changed he could detect other Pralors just by the scent of their blood. There was always a pull between Pralors. There would always be a pull among them. It is why I can feel it with Wayonn and Dutkne and even in small part Shiria over the distance. It is what Shiria meant when we spoke to her on the SCIMITAR. He never came to you with it because he could never truly prove it and he concluded that when you felt the time was right for us to know you would tell us. I read Resumar's report fully Elder Mother. You are the Pralor Shiria is protecting aren't you? And I think I know why my father, me, none of us could detect this scent of Pralor blood within you.]

Andro stepped closer to her and reached up to put his hands on her snout. Arzoal didn't budge when he did this for outside of Helen, Andro and his father were the only ones to ever really touch her in such a way. No one outside of the immediate Royal family would ever dare touch her because of who she was. As Andro's hands went flat against her scales, she closed her eyes slightly and allowed the warmth of his hands on her cool scales to filter and run through her wonderfully and as it was with Helen, it felt so very soothing.

[You have been able to hide this from us, from others for so long because you did as Canth did.] Andro spoke softly. [Only you didn't just separate your mind from your body, you actually transferred your entire consciousness to a dragon didn't you? I will not tell my father if that is your wish Elder Mother but you do not need to hide this from us anymore.]

Arzoal shook her head. [I have... I have wanted to reveal it for so long. Ever since your father came to Enurrua and I realized for myself who he was. It has been so long since I have felt the call of my Pralor blood as strongly as I feel it within me now, even if it is just within Mindvoice and not a physical thing as it is with others. With Wayonn and Dutkne and now Shiria so close and aware... I did not want to hide it any longer.]

[Then do not hide it grandmother. Not anymore. Share it with us.] Elynth's voice entered their connection and they both turned to see Elynth move from behind Andro and settle to the sand almost touching her Bonded Brother.

Arzoal looked at Andro. [You called her?]

Andro smiled and stepped back between Elynth's front legs. [She has always been there Elder Mother. She will know all that I know... I will know all that she knows. This is how you and my father wanted it to be with those of us bonded to dragons.] Andro stated. [You more than anyone should know that.]

Arzoal nodded her head as Andro settled to the sand between Elynth's front talons and leaned against her foreleg. [It is time.] She said softly. [I can not hold it in any longer. I do not want to.] She looked at them blinking her flame colored eyes. [My ship came into this quadrant in 37,467 in search of the others that had been lost. Sumar's ship among them. I was the senior medical and science officer on board. It was not a large ship as you know CS41 to be. A crew of only seven hundred and perhaps two kilometers long. We were passing through the Orion Spur when our ship struck a subspace anomaly that our sensors did not detect. It destroyed our main Quantum Drive and we had to set down on Elear to attempt to make repairs.]

[Elear?] Andro spoke.

Arzoal nodded her huge head. [Cretvore Draconius was the dominant species there when we arrived. They had been for millennia. They were benevolent and beautiful creatures for the most part and so very inquisitive and intelligent. We discovered that they Mindvoiced almost immediately upon landing and they offered to help us just as quickly. It would end up being for naught. Whatever the anomaly was, it had succeeded in destabilizing our Quantum Drive to the point it could not be repaired. We were stranded there on Elear.] Arzoal lifted her head and looked up into the few stars that could still be seen in the brightening sky. [Our Commander decided that we would attempt to rebuild the drive core and we established a settlement to do this very thing. Dragons were our constant companions and we taught each other so much. We shared so much. They showed us the other two dominant lifeforms on Elear in the sixth year of our stay. One was humanoid in description, bipedal in nature and covered in a simple coat of hair. As with Cretvore Draconius, we knew of their existence for it was within our databanks from the many probes we had sent through this quadrant of space. These probes were like Avi in many respects... avatars that could transmit data and images back to us.] Arzoal noticed that both Andro and Elynth's eyes grew wider.

[Kavalian?] Andro gasped.

Arzoal shook her head slowly. [Not... not as you know the Kavalian species now no. The Kavalian species as you know them are the abomination that I created.]

[Created?] Andro exclaimed.

Arzoal nodded. [I told you I was the senior medical and science officer of this ship.] She stated. [My specialty field was genetics. Now the second dominant species on Elear was also bipedal in nature but reptilian in their makeup. They were much more primitive than the first and also much more species oriented. They lived in large pods where male and female worked together in harmony, but their level of intelligence was not very high. At least not then. In some ways it is much like the lives of Lycavorians and other species who work together toward a common goal, shelter their young and simply relate better in larger groups. The dragons had no issues with the second group but many with the first. The feline like species had begun raiding caves and lairs of dragons and stealing their eggs. They would use them as food and also as trophies. Up until we arrived this species had limited itself to small raids and such, but that changed when our ship landed.]

[Changed how grandmother?] Elynth asked completely enraptured and fixated on Arzoal equally as much as her Bonded Brother.

[This species saw our ship land and...]

With all of the men and women who were now staying or working out of their villa, Sadi had dispensed with not wearing undergarments beneath her near see through robe that she wore in the mornings. Now the plain white brassier covered her firm breasts while the plain white semi thong panties were also plainly visible. It was at these moments when Sadi loved being a female Lycavorian. While their people were exceptionally open in regards to their sexuality, once a female had been claimed by a male, she could parade around naked in the streets and only a man who was not wolf would be stupid enough to stare or gawk at her. And that would normally get them slapped in the head by the nearest male or female wolf who took notice of it. Any Lycavorian would be able to smell Andro's powerful Alpha wolf scent all over her body and so deeply imbedded within her blood that they would know instantly that she was mated to perhaps the second most powerful alpha wolf in the Union. That sanctity of being mated was not a dignity or dishonor that any Lycavorian would ignore or violate, and it was far truer here in Sparta and Gytheio Sadi had discovered after Andro had claimed her. As she walked calmly into the main kitchen area of the villa sipping the large mug of Aricia's coffee she saw three Durcunusaan troops leaving the area, two of them turning to look back at where the Vanari female Arduri sat at the counter. None of them gave her a second glance when they bowed their heads and continued past her.

Sadi glanced over quickly to the double doors leading on to the patio when she scented Helen and she saw her leaning up against the doorframe dressed in a floor length solid crimson robe. Sadi looked back and saw Arduri's green eyes watching her intently as she walked up and she smiled at her. Blue skinned they may have been, but Sadi could certainly not deny the very exotic and exceptional sex appeal that the Vanari women exuded outward. It was almost as if they did it naturally without even knowing it. She had not seen much of them since they had arrived; they had spent most of their time in the guest wing with Bren and Dutkne's friend Nirilo. This was really the first time that Sadi had an opportunity to speak with one of them or be close enough to truly gaze at one. Sadi drew in a deep breath as she grew close and the sweet scent of apricots floated to her. Arduri now wore a form fitting dark gray jumpsuit that showed off her obvious female assets, including her large and very firm breasts. It was one of the sets of clothes delivered to the Vanari when they first arrived so they did not have to walk about in their version of the Mark IV ArmorPly.

"Good morning...?" Sadi spoke as she stepped up into the kitchen area.

"Arduri. Arduri Re Mydala."

"Well then... good morning Arduri Re Mydala." Sadi spoke as she went to the counter taking notice that her mug wasn't filled with anything. "Would you care for something?" Sadi asked.

Arduri played with her empty mug and smiled. "I did not know... I did not know where to look or what to choose." She answered with an embarrassed look.

"Do you care for coffee or juice?" Sadi asked.

"We have... we have something similar to coffee on my homeworld I believe." Arduri said. "I had some of this coffee on your ship and it was excellent! Do you have any of that?"

Sadi smiled and pulled the large mugs from within the dispenser. "You were on the SCIMITAR." She said. "Then you had Androcles's mother's coffee. She made it with a very unique blend of coffee beans and it is all he will drink now." Sadi handed her the mug and Arduri took it from her with a smile. She sipped it quickly and her face lit up.

"Yes! This is it." She spoke quickly. "His... his mother made this?"

Sadi nodded as she sat across from her at the counter and sipped her own mug of coffee. "All of his mothers are fantastic cooks. They gave love of this skill to their children. I'm very lucky really... I can not cook to save my life." She held out her hand. "I'm Sadi."

Arduri didn't hesitate and she took the offered hand. As their fingers closed around each other's, two sets of dazzling green eyes met and connected. Sadi's face took on an expression of deep contemplation as she gazed at the silver blond hair and the full, almost violet colored lips. Arduri Re Mydala was just as affected, but she felt her skin become warm and flushed and the pleasure receptors along the back of her shoulders and down her spine were beginning to sing out. The erogenous zones on Vanari females extended across the backs of both shoulders and down the center of their backs, essentially tracing their spines. The most sensitive areas were just on the outside curve of their breasts and under the elegant bend of their jaws. Arduri pulled her hand back reluctantly, but if she had held on too long, she would have instinctively released the oil in her pores that acted as an aphrodisiac and influencer to other species, because she found herself drawn to this female Lycavorian. Not in an overtly sexual way, but drawn to her nonetheless.

It was this oil that Vanari females could release from their pores when they became very interested and aroused in a male of their species for possible marriage. Since Vanari men were immune to the influencing affects of the oil, to them it was a similar sign that they were being tasked to please the female who had released this oil and possibly make her choose him as a long term partner. The only time that it was not viewed in this way was during the Celebration of the Hundreds when every Vanari female would secrete this oil through their pores while engaged in sexual activity with whoever occupied their attention at the time, male or female.

“You... you are his ano... anome.” Arduri stammered.

Sadi nodded slowly as she pulled her hand back reluctantly as well. There was something about this Vanari female that struck her as different, and very interesting. “Yes.” She answered as she wrapped her hands around the mug and sipped her coffee.

“When did you... when did you know this?” Arduri asked. “That you would be with him like this?”

“When did I know it... or when did I finally accept it?” Sadi asked with a smile.

“Both.”

“I knew it when he was eight months old. I accepted it about six months ago when he came back into my life as a man.” Sadi answered.

“You are older than him then?” Arduri asked.

Sadi shrugged. “That depends on what you mean by older. If you are referring to years, yes, I’m twenty-three years older than him. If your definition takes into account wisdom and experience and knowledge, then no... Andro is far older than me.”

“How so?”

“He shares the memories of his father and his grandfather before him. He shares the memories of his mother and her parents. Their lives. It is very hard to explain really.” Sadi said. “Lycavorians can imprint certain things on their children before they are born. Images and such. With Andro however, because of the emotional state of his parents when he was conceived, it went much deeper than normal. He became aware of all around him even while still in Aricia’s womb. He bonded with Elynth while still in the womb. He spoke to me through her when I first met him. Much of it is because of his blood and the potential of his Mindvoice abilities and those of his parents, but he knew what he wanted when he was only eight months old.”

“And he wanted you?” Arduri asked.

Sadi blushed slightly. “Yes.”

“That... that is fascinating.” Arduri said with wide eyes. “It is so unlike how my people make these decisions. It is really only physical with us.”

“And how do you?” Sadi asked. “Choose a husband and mate I mean?”

“Vanari have... we as females have an oil we can secrete through our skin when we are physically attracted to a man or very aroused.” Arduri explained. “My people are very... we are very open about ourselves. If we feel the man is attractive and we could be compatible together we secrete this oil to signal to him that we are ready. If we are compatible then the oil will be absorbed into his skin and affect him as it does males of other species and we will couple for hours. If we are not compatible then the oil will not be absorbed and after we couple we will go our separate ways.”

Sadi tilted her head slightly confused. “There is no... there is no emotion involved then? No feelings of love before you decide to marry?” She asked with a neutral voice.

Arduri nodded her head. “Oh yes... but that usually comes later in the relationship.” She said. “The emotions come after you have decided you are compatible with each other. That is when the courtship begins and you begin to know one another before you are joined. I know it sounds strange to you but it has been this way for my people for millennia.”

Sadi shook her head. “It doesn’t sound strange at all.” She spoke. “It is different... but then we are all different. That does not mean we can not be friends and allies.”

Arduri canted her head as she gazed at her. “I take it that you know of the distrust that exists between the Vanari people and Lycavorians.”

“I am Andro’s Anome.” She stated proudly. “His mate and wife. As are Carisia, Lu’ria and Ne’Veha. We alone have free reign within his thoughts and he in ours. He shares almost everything with us and us with him.”

“Almost?” Arduri asked and she saw Sadi smile brightly.

“Well... there is no fun if you know everything about a person.” She stated. “Lycavorians crave physical contact with those we love and care for... it is part of our nature as wolves. But that does not mean we are not playful and adventurous in our relationships.”

“Then you... you and his other wives...?” Arduri asked shyly.

Sadi nodded without shame. “Oh yes... quite happily in fact. But Androcles is the only man any of us will ever crave or want to touch us now. He is in our blood, just as we are in his.”

Sadi scooted closer on the stool. “I understand we are helping you and your mother to find your sister.”

Arduri nodded quickly thoroughly enjoying the company of this woman. “My older sister Caliria. She was taken by slavers and we believe brought to this quadrant of space. At least that is where we tracked them too before we joined with Wayonn and Dutkne.”

“Is this prevalent where you come from?” Sadi asked. “Slavery?”

“As disturbing as many of the younger generation find it... yes.” Arduri said with a touch of sadness in her voice. “My species began as mono-gendered individuals. We could choose to become male or female in the early days of my species. That is what our history archives tell us. Through the centuries we began to be born as either male or female but the chemical compound in our bodies that decides our sex is still present. It is part of the oil we secrete through our pores. The Orionis Syndicate discovered a way to use that chemical against us. They have... they have a weapon... a gas that they can introduce into the atmospheres of our planets that will cause a reaction within those who have chosen to be female. It will cause the chemical in our bodies that determines sex to short circuit so to speak. It will... if it is breathed into our bodies it will cause our bodies to suddenly think we are not female any longer. It will change the makeup of our bodies internally and essentially make all females sterile. Our species would die out within perhaps a few dozen generations.” Arduri took a deep breath. “It is a vile weapon but one that the Orionis Syndicate has said they will employ if they are not allowed to take a certain number of Vanari females prisoner each year. They are sold into slavery and used by others as tools.”

“Tools?” Sadi asked.

Arduri nodded. “The oil we secrete has very powerful compounds mixed in with the ones that are considered an aphrodisiac. These compounds can make someone very susceptible to suggestion.”

“Mind control?” Sadi asked.

Arduri shook her head quickly. “No... not in the true sense of the term. Just very willing to act in ways suggested to them. The pirate scum use it as a means to extort more credits from customers or get information from politicians that they deem important. It allows them to have a certain power within the Beta Quadrant. The Orionis Syndicate is extremely large and ruled by a group of six individuals. In a technical sense they could be considered a government unto themselves and many of us believe that is their ultimate goal. To be recognized as a legitimate entity. The Vanari Board of Regents has nearly a thousand members and many of them are much older than my mother. She is considered one of the more progressive Regents, but they are almost always overruled by the senior Regents in large decisions. The younger Regents, many like my mother, wish to fight the Syndicate. They wish to discover a way to counter this threat by the Syndicate but the older Regents are too cautious and do not want to give the Syndicate a reason to unleash their weapon on us. There are eleven other governments within the Beta Quadrant besides the Vanari and the Protectorate. Five of them do not care for my people in the least because we will not help them to make more advanced weapons and ships. They take great pleasure in purchasing our females who are taken and then debasing them in any number of ways.”

“Yet your mother, you and your sister came after Caliria because she was taken?” Sadi asked.

“The majority of Vanari male and females are born with hair like mine and Naesta’s, silver blond or like my mother’s silver golden. That is a status thing among my people as ridiculous as it sounds; it is something within our DNA. Black or dark brown in hair color in a male is considered distinguished and honorable but in a female it is not. Caliria has lush dark brown hair.” Arduri said softly. “My people... my people consider this a genetic defect for some ridiculous and ancient reason. Vanari females with dark hair are treated as second class citizens. They can join the military, hold jobs and such, but none of them will ever be allowed to hold positions within the government on any level. Many of them are never even able to have children of their own because Vanari males avoid them like the plague. Caliria was a leading proponent of trying to make things different. Our name... Re Mydala... it is a lineage among the Vanari that dates back to the very beginnings of our people. We are a powerful and wealthy family among the Vanari. Caliria was using our name as a means to draw attention to the fact that they are not inferior in any way. The vast majority of the Vanari females that the Syndicate takes have dark hair. There have been some with hair like my mother but even then..." Arduri stopped talking and took along sip of her coffee.

"Even then... once a Vanari female has been broken... it is very rare for them to return to the person they were before they were taken." Devra's voice spoke from the side as she came up beside Arduri and pulled her daughter's head to her chest.

"Why?" Sadi asked before thinking.

"The chemicals that the Syndicate uses to break them results in the slow breakdown of neural brainwave patterns. If it is caught early it can be reversed with minimal damage but if their captivity goes on for any length of time the damage done is permanent. It takes many years, but eventually the synaptic patterns degrade to the point where the person becomes a mindless husk." Devra explained.

"Surely... surely with the medical knowledge available today something can be done?" Sadi gasped in horror.

Devra shook her head slowly as Naesta appeared and stepped up beside her sister. Arduri met her eyes and Naesta leaned over to kiss her softly on the lips. "None of our scientists or medical people have been successful and believe me we have tried in the past. That stopped two thousand years ago when the Syndicate discovered that we were attempting this and destroyed one of our small colonies and sterilizing the nine hundred and thirty-seven Vanari females that lived there in the process. Any further attempts were outlawed by the Vanari Board of Regents. They did this to save our people I know... but as centuries pass and more of our young women are taken, people are beginning to want to fight back no matter the cost." Devra told her.

"I asked Wayonn many years ago if there was something perhaps he or the Protectorate could do, but he has no knowledge in medicines and genetics. The Lycavorian Protectorate's medical knowledge is very similar to ours but unfortunately it does not extend to what we truly need." Devra said. "I was hoping... one of my hopes was to perhaps speak to these Hadarians that Wayonn told me of as we traveled here. He says that they are Healers, with medical knowledge that is vast and far outreaches our own in many respects. When we arrived and discovered what was happening that hope was dashed. These Kavalians... the ones who have attacked your people... they now control this world do they not?"

Sadi nodded. "They helped to assist some fanatics in usurping the rightful Queen yes. But Anja and the others with her made it off the planet safely." She answered.

"They live?" Devra gasped.

Sadi nodded. "Eliani is here at the villa. She is nearly as powerful as her mother and Aunt. Some say she will exceed her in skill one day."

"Would she... would she be willing to look at our data?" Devra asked.

"I don't see why not. I'm sure of it." Sadi answered. "Do you have an image of Caliria to give to her?" Sadi asked softly.

Devra nodded. "Yes. Naesta do you have..."

"Yes." Naesta answered instantly reaching up to the silver chain that dangled from her neck. She pulled it up from under the jumpsuit that was similar to her sister but only dark blue in color to reveal a small credit chip size medallion which she instantly touched and activated.

The small holoimage was very clear and Sadi contained her gasp at the beauty of this Caliria Re Mydala. Her dark hair flowed around her shoulders, highlighting her flawless facial features and incredibly bright dark green eyes. Her majorelle blue lips contrasted greatly with her supple cornflower blue skin which nearly matched the azure color of Andro's eyes. Sadi looked at them for a moment and then reached for the medallion. It was her. It had to be her. Sadi and Carisia had talked extensively of the flashes they had received within Mindvoice. The color of the hair and skin. Soft, sensuous lips that were exploring their flesh as they explored her unique blue skin and then the gentle tone of the laughter in the images. Lu'ria and then Ne'Veha had only confirmed it for them when they returned, saying they had seen the same things in the few hours of sleep they had gotten after Andro had turned Ne'Veha.

"May I borrow this for a moment?" She asked. "I will be right back."

Naesta looked at her mother and Devra nodded. "It is alright Naesta." She spoke running several options through her mind on what it could mean to the Vanari if these Hadarians could solve this age old riddle.

Naesta released the chain and Sadi stood up and began walking towards the double doors. "Wait right here." She said as she past them, all of them with confused looks in their eyes. Sadi walked right up to where Helen was standing her eyes staring out onto the beach. "Feravomir?"

Helen held up her hand. "Look at them?" She said softly.

Sadi followed her gaze and saw them on the beach. Andro was sitting between Elynth's front forelegs and they appeared as if they were enraptured by whatever Arzoal was telling them.

"Watch them now." Helen said softly her face smiling. "Her right talon will lift and come to rest on his thigh and she will turn her left over and Andro will begin stroking the inside of her fore claw."

Sadi continued to watch and her eyes grew wider as she watched Elynth shift her position on the sand so that her right leg lifted and came to rest with her massive and wickedly curved talons draped over Androcles's upper right thigh. As soon as that was done she lifted her left talon and turned it over to rest in the sand just as Andro lifted his hand and began to use his fingers to stroke the inside of her clawed foot.

"Now that is something I have not seen in many years." Helen continued. "They would do that all the time when listening to me or their fathers as they grew. It began right after they met you on the island. It was automatic when they were enthralled by what we were saying and teaching and it never failed to happen. It told us we had their complete and undivided attention. That right there tells me that they know the learning never ends and that my lessons to them were well received and now remembered." Helen said with a smile as she turned to look at Sadi. "Whatever Arzoal is telling them, a bomb could go off next to them now and they would barely notice. It makes me warm inside to see this after all these years." She lifted her mug of coffee and looked at Sadi who was still watching them. Helen chuckled and shook her head. She could see the passion and desire in Sadi's eyes as she looked at the half dressed Andro on the beach. "Close your mouth Sadi my child... you are drooling over your mate. It is unbecoming a Crown Princess."

Sadi blinked quickly and turned to look at her blushing as she smiled. "I'm sorry." She said.

Helen smiled. "Never be sorry for wanting your husband and mate. What did you need child?"

Sadi turned to face her fully her thoughts once more focused. "Feravomir... remember when you told me those months ago to follow what our instincts told Androcles and I in regards to Enylarcopri?"

Helen nodded. "I remember them well. You followed them as you should have and look what doors it opened for you. You found the others that were meant for you. I do so love it when I am right."

"Feravomir... your words are what allowed us to find Lu'ria and Ne'Veha yes... but also one more." Sadi said. "As each of them came into our lives we only grew stronger and another piece fell into place within our lives and hearts and our minds."

"Yes... many have commented on that." Helen spoke.

"Feravomir... there is still one more piece. All of us have felt her... and when Lu'ria finally joined us we saw images of her. Brief images... her hair... her skin." Sadi said. She lifted the small holoimager and activated it in the palm of her hand. Helen's eyes grew a little wider as she looked at the image.

"A dark haired Vanari female. Interesting. I did not think there were any of them. She's very beautiful." Helen said looking into Sadi's face. "What does she...?" Her words died in her throat when she saw the look on Sadi's face and she instantly threw up exceptionally powerful Mindvoice shields which she felt Sadi reinforcing with her own.

[This is Caliria Re Mydala Feravomir.] Sadi continued. [This is who Devra and her children came here for. This is the one that has been taken by mercenary scum! She is the one who will complete us!] Sadi snarled angrily. [And she has been taken by scum... no matter what part of space they come from.]

[Sadi are you certain?] Helen gasped.

[There is no question Feravomir. Enylarcopri, SirsanGai and Ilythiiri Tessai are right now scrambling to put clothes on and join me out here if you need more confirmation.] Sadi told her.

Helen gripped her arm tightly as she shook her head. [That is not necessary. You are far more attuned to Mindvoice than they are right now.] She spoke and turned inward back towards where Devra, Arduri and Naesta were watching them with odd expressions of wonder on their faces. [Androcles has not seen this?] Helen asked.

Sadi shook her head quickly. [No. He knows there is another that will be part of our lives and he has accepted that but he has been so busy and so worried about what is going on that we have kept the images to ourselves. I do not think he has relaxed his thoughts or his MV shields enough to see images of her yet. Even when he sleeps.]

[Oh thank the gods!] Helen exclaimed.

[Feravomir... you know what he will do if he discovers this.] Sadi said.

Helen nodded. [All too well.] She stated. Sadi felt her open their MV connection a small fraction and reach for the others. [Carisia... none of you must reveal this when you come out here! Act as if nothing is wrong.]

[Feravomir! This is her!] Ne'Veha was the first to declare.

[I am Drow Feravomir. This is... we cannot let this stand.] Lu'ria spoke.

[I understand that Ne'Veha!] Helen spoke. [And you also know Androcles far better than I do now Lu'ria and you know what he will do if he discovers this! We can not allow this... not yet! It could destroy everything!]

There was a moment of silence and then Carisia's voice answered. [Sadi?]

[We must do what the Feravomir says Enylarcopri. We must! All of us! At least for right now. Too much resides on Androcles staying focused until we discover what the true purpose of the Kavalians are.] Sadi answered her. [That does not mean we need to be idle.]

[No it does not.] Helen told them instantly. [And we will not be.] All of them felt Helen expand their connection even more and search for and find one other mind. [Wayonn?]

The response was immediate and concerned. [Helen... what it is? Your tremors... they are frantic.]

[We need your help grandfather.] Helen spoke.

[Anything?] Wayonn answered. [You know that.]

[I need you to meet me on the other side of the island Wayonn, at Paris's Point. Grab Bren when you leave the villa. He will know exactly where I mean.] Helen spoke. [Ten minutes Wayonn.]

[We shall be there.] Wayonn answered.

Helen turned back quickly and looked at where her bonded sister was still holding the total attention of Andro and Elynth. She nodded and turned back to Sadi as they moved further back into the villa and up to where Devra, Arduri and Naesta stood now.

Devra stepped away from the counter now a concerned look on her face. "What is going on?" She asked softly.

"They will be occupied for a time longer." Helen spoke to Sadi. "Arzoal is... she is telling them her history as she told me when we became bonded."

"Her history?" Sadi gasped. "But I thought..."

Helen nodded and squeezed her arm. "It is time now. She has waited for millennia for this moment and she can no longer hold it in. We must deal with this now however."

"Deal with what?" Arduri asked getting to her feet as well.

Helen looked at them. "Devra Re Mydala... do you trust me?" She asked.

"I trust Wayonn." She stated immediately. "You are his granddaughter and you carry his blood within you so yes. Everything Androcles Leonidas has told us he would do he has done so far. If what Bren has told me in the last thirty-six hours is the truth, then I believe he will do everything within his power and we will find Caliria. I believe that more now than I ever did."

"Then come with Sadi and I." Helen spoke reaching for and taking her hand. "Your daughters as well."

"Where are we going?" Devra asked.

"To keep everything from spiraling insanely out of control. Trust me Devra Re Mydala... you do not want to see the extent of Androcles Leonidas or the power he could wield. If Andro discovers what Sadi has just told me... let me just say one Leonidas storm we may be able to weather, albeit barely. Both of them? Never." Helen answered. "Come."

BELID

"Father?" Tir'ut gasped in complete shock even as he watched the enormous form of the green and yellow scaled dragon move into the cave behind him.

“Uncle T’lolt?” Lynom gasped just as loudly looking at the bronze and tanned skin of his father and uncle.

Cha’talla was not by nature an emotional man but he crushed Lynom into his powerful arms for a rib cracking embrace. It was an embrace that Lynom returned for it had been two long years since he had seen his father and it appeared many things had changed. “Lynom my son.” Cha’talla rasped as Volleneth settled to the cool dirt of the cave and watched with twinkling eyes.

Tir’ut held his uncle’s arms tightly while gazing at him with wide eyes. “Uncle... Uncle what has happened?” He asked reaching up to touch his uncle’s tanned cheek.

“A miracle has happened boy.” T’lolt spoke softly. “The miracle that is your mother and the Lycavorians we now call family.” T’lolt released Tir’ut and turned to Normya who had a similar look in her emerald eyes. He opened his arms for her and Normya didn’t hesitate to step into his embrace with a brilliant smile. “Now we are certain you will not confuse us with the enemy we have come to fight!” T’lolt laughed as he pushed Normya away from him and stared at her. “You are unhurt?”

Normya nodded quickly still holding his arms in wonderment. “T’lolt... how...?”

T’lolt chuckled, his brown eyes bright. “I know... it has improved my looks a hundred fold and now you question your decision to marry my nephew don’t you?”

Normya couldn’t help but laugh and then both she and Tir’ut were embracing him once more. Cha’talla grabbed Lynom’s shoulders as they drew apart and he looked at his second son with Esther. “Lynom... I have... I have worried for you every day since you have been gone. We all have.” Cha’talla said. “Forgive... forgive me for risking you in this way my son. I... I am ashamed for my actions.”

Lynom shook his head quickly. “I chose this father.” He stated confidently. “I came of my choosing and you have no shame to bear. None!” He reached up and touched his father’s face, now so much like his own. “Father... this... how?”

“Your uncle speaks the truth.” Cha’talla said. “It is a long story and we can discuss it later my son. Right now we need to begin getting our men into position. Your mother and Denali are right behind me and...”

Lynom gripped his arm tightly and turned. “Father... father this is As’hia.” He stated with a touch of pride in his voice Cha’talla saw. Pride and devotion. He watched Lynom pull the petite half elven female forward and he watched how her body molded to Lynom’s perfectly without a moment’s pause as she looked at him. Silently Cha’talla could only feel pride that his oldest sons had the same taste in females that he did. This As’hia was a stunning young woman and that could be denied by no one.

Cha’talla stepped up to her and saw she did not back away even though he towered over her. He held out his large hands and took her more delicate ones in his palms. “Greetings to you As’hia.” He stated.

“Ilharn... il zhah vel’uss Usstan daewl ulu morfeth ussta Du’ased ’ranndi. Ka il orn inbal uns’aa.” Lynom told him. (Father she is who I wish to make my Blessed Wife. If she will have me.)

“Usstan’bal jal’yur inbalus dos. Lu’Usstan hass’l ulu inbal mzilt mzild ich!” As’hia spoke. (I’ve already had you. I mean to have a lot more too.)

Cha’talla looked at the way As’hia clung to Lynom possessively as she spoke the ancient vampire language and he smiled. “I believe she has already made that decision my son.” He stated taking note of Lynom and his embarrassed expression.

“Leave it to my nephews to pick the two most obstinate and outspoken half elf females in the universe.” T’lolt spoke as he watched from where he stood. He grunted as Normya punched him lightly in the gut.

Cha’talla smiled once more and turned back to look at As’hia. He looked behind her and saw Danarla and Ta’lon moving quickly towards them with Esther and Denali right behind them. “I believe you should probably make your desires known to your parents.” Cha’talla said as he motioned with his head.

As’hia spun around instantly and her dark eyes went wide. “Medwaw! Medwan!” She almost screamed.

Danarla did scream. “As’hia!” She exclaimed as she gathered her youngest child into her arms and burst into tears as Ta’lon gathered them both into his arms, his own eyes moist with tears.

“Lynom!” Esther shouted as she blurred the last few meters to her son and practically leaped into his arms just as Normya passed her and darted to her brother.

Denali crushed his elven sister into his arms, nuzzling her cheek and neck furiously in a brotherly fashion as she did the same to him back. He grabbed her head and looked into her face. “Normya... father is...”

Normya burst into tears. “I know! He’s alive! We were with mother when she felt him!”

Denali's eyes grew a little wider. "Then she is... I could feel her once more Lisisa and I, the others, but she would not answer our calls."

Normya nodded quickly. "She is shielding heavily to keep anyone from discovering that she can MV again. They were using some sort of device to block her resonance. Our family Deni? Why can we not feel our mother For'mya? She isn't..."

Denali pulled her close. "Zarah and Eliani have returned to Earth. Andro needed them. Carina and Moneus are with mother on Kranek. Lisisa, Arram, Narice and Toria are with us." He told her feeling her relax slightly in his arms. "I did not want to risk a long transmission to Andro once we entered the system so I only sent a three second burst. Once we have mother I will contact him directly. Right now we take things one step at a time and we free our first elven mother. Then we return home and go from there."

Normya nodded her head quickly and pushed back away from him. "You are right." She stated. They turned and watched as Esther ran her hands down Lynom's dreadlocks and her face was bright and happy as her son held her suspended off the ground a good eight inches.

"You... you have grown." Esther gasped.

Lynom chuckled. "I have not grown mother." He spoke. "I stopped growing when I was fourteen."

Esther laughed and kissed his cheek. "We will need to get you a haircut when we return." She said.

Danarla wiped the tears from her eyes as she held As'hia at arms length. "You are... you are unhurt?" She asked.

As'hia nodded her head quickly as she wiped her own eyes. "Yes Medwaw." She spoke with a smile.

"As'hia..." Ta'lon began to speak.

"I am fine Medwan." As'hia told him as she squeezed his hand. "I am... I am not the person I was when I came here. I am different and I have embraced that because it gives me such happiness."

"Where is he?" Danarla asked.

"Medwaw please... you must..." As'hia began to speak.

Danarla looked over her and saw Lynom just putting Esther down. She took in the immense physical proportions of him that matched his father and brother in every way. The long dark hair was pulled into dreadlocks and gave him a fierce visage to those who did not know him, but his tanned skin was no different than Cha'talla's was now. Danarla could detect the heavy scent of sweet verbena wafting from her youngest daughter and it was coming from him. Danarla didn't hesitate and stepped around her daughter and marched right up to stand in front of him. Esther's face went neutral as she looked at Danarla but she kept her arm around Lynom's waist as the others looked on.

"Lynom... this is Danarla." Esther said softly. "She is..."

"Ssin'urn 'anon's mother... yes I know." Lynom spoke confidently. "I wish to..."

Danarla surprised everyone but Ta'lon when she reached up and took his face in her soft hands and pulled him down. Ta'lon and his wolf wife had talked for many hours through these past weeks and months, perhaps more than they had ever talked in all their married life and it had brought them infinitely closer to each other. After what they had seen on Kranek, after what they had heard of this son of Cha'talla and all he had done to safeguard their daughter, neither of them could deny the fact that this half Akruixian Immortal worshiped As'hia as only a wolf or an elf could worship their mate.

"Lynom... son of Cha'talla... you have returned to my mate and I something that is more precious than our own lives and we can never repay that debt to you." Danarla spoke softly as she gazed into his face.

"There is no debt that is owed to me kal'daka ilhar." Lynom answered immediately. "I followed my heart and my soul... nothing more."

"You love... you love our daughter?" Danarla asked softly.

"Medwan... could we talk about this another time?" As'hia spoke as she stepped between them and pressed up close to Lynom in the protective manner of a female wolf shielding her mate.

"With my every waking breath." Lynom answered Danarla's question as his arm curled around As'hia's waist.

Ta'lon saw how his daughter pressed back against Lynom without indecision or an instant of doubt. He was an elf who was married to a wolf and he knew well the signs his youngest daughter was now displaying. He stepped up beside Danarla. "There will be courting rules you must conduct... meetings of our family..."

"Papa!" As'hia gasped.

Danarla looked at her mate and smiled. “And they will be just as honored as we are to have you as a member of our family. And we of yours.” She stated.

“This is not the...” As'hia began to speak but stopped as what her mother had just said hit her. “You... you are giving us your blessing?” She gasped.

“Isn't that what you wish?” Danarla asked her with a smile knowing the answer before it came because of how deeply Lynom's scent wafted from her daughter's blood.

As'hia's smile seemed to light up the dimly lit cave and she could not nod her head fast enough. “Oh... oh yes mother! So very much!”

Ta'lon looked at Lynom and held out his hand. “Then let us do what we came here to do and you will have it.”

Lynom gripped his hand. “Yes.”

Tir'ut was the one who got everyone's attention then. “Everyone here!” He barked seeing them all turn to him. He and Normya stood near a makeshift model of items made up from their equipment packs. “This is what we have.” They all crowded around quickly. “Father, Denali... Cirith and Lancy are already inside the base with their team of three. Cirith is remaining very close to elf mother Dysea, she is a woman and she has developed an affinity and friendship with her. Once her MV powers returned, she and Cirith have been talking endlessly, more to keep Dysea calm I believe, but trust has built between them now.” Tir'ut spoke.

Denali looked at Normya. “Sister?” He asked.

Normya nodded her head immediately. “We have spoken Deni... but we become too emotional and it risks mother. There may be Immortals who could pick up the tremors however faint they may be. Cirith gives her balance and they speak of other things.”

“This is Valin's daughter?” Deni asked.

Normya nodded. “Yes... how did you know?”

“Admiral Valin and his forces helped us to pound the Kavalians and then he ordered a dozen Blood Vats removed from his ships and brought to the settlement to treat any injured Immortal.”

Cha'talla nodded. “It saved many lives.” He said.

“He returned with Zarah and Eliani to Earth. I think Andro wants to pick his brain. It has something to do with the bloodlines of our people.” He said.

Normya nodded. “Cirith spoke of that as well while we were coming here.” She stated. “Do you know what they mean?”

Denali shook his head. “No clue... but Andro does.” He stated. “We'll discover it soon enough I'm sure.” He turned back to Tir'ut. “Forgive me Tir'ut... please continue.”

Tir'ut nodded without annoyance at the interruption. He had learned in the last months that this was common in their family, going off on odd tangents at odd times. They all did it according to Normya, for some reason it allowed them to focus more clearly which Tir'ut did not understand. “Normya and I have laid out the interior as best we can based on what Kr'nak has told us and the plans he delivered.” Tir'ut pointed to one section on the dirt. “Mother... Kr'nak's four men and two of Cirith's commandos will be here to secure and protect the female elf prisoners once the battle begins. We will need you to make your way there immediately and begin treating them so they don't react in a way that will bring more harm than good. Osiri will be with them but the sooner you get there the better.”

Esther nodded her head. “I have half a dozen medics with me from both the settlement and Dysea's ship. Once we have injected all the elves we will set up a triage center in the same room.”

“I will lead her in.” T'lolt said leaning forward. “I will break from our main thrust once we are inside and take her there. We'll leave additional security and then converge on this main communications room from the west to cover Denali and Cha'talla.”

Tir'ut nodded. “I understand you and Denali will be going straight in father?”

Cha'talla nodded. “Direct line to this room. I will not allow Phy'iad to debase Dysea at any costs. Two hundred Lycavorians and Akruvian will be directly behind Denali and myself. We will not fail.”

“The base has over three thousand in it father.” Lynom spoke. “And this main corridor to the communications room is wide and defensible from many locations. Most of the secondary tunnels branch off it.”

Cha'talla nodded. “I know.”

This Kr'nak has given us the code to the main entrance Lynom...yes? Aradace asked from where she stood behind Denali and Normya.

Lynom looked up surprised when her voice sounded in his head. He nodded slowly. "Yes."

Then we will not need to burn through it. Vollenth spoke. It will save us time and the main corridor is high enough and wide enough for Aradace and I to move through with relative ease.

Which means Lisi and Jeth can remain with Narice and the other Coven dragons while they assault the south entrance. Aradace continued. Their psychic shields are stronger than ours and they can withstand more concentrated fire. And they will think the main attack is coming from the south.

"Why... why would they think that?" As'hia asked for she had heard every word within Mindvoice as well. The moment Lynom had first taken her blood and talked to her within Mindvoice her own skills had begun to increase because he had touched her. Now she was able to talk easily on the same level as dragons, something she was not able to do before all this had begun.

"Because that is what we will make them believe, and in truth that is where the main attack will come from. Just not in the form they think." Her mother answered with a sly grin. She leaned forward now. "We have a phalanx of heavy weapons setting up now all along this lower ridge that parallels the southern entrance. The dragons and riders will suck them out since they are not Kavalians and they will have no fear of dragons and they will be secure in the knowledge that they have T19 missiles."

Lynom nodded his head now. "And when they do... you will hit them while they are massed together."

Danarla nodded her head as she once more fell into the role of Lycavorian troop leader and warrior. "I intend to make it a mass grave is what I intend."

Cha'talla nodded. "And then you will lead our main force directly into the south tunnel and fight your way to the communications room Lynom. You know the inside of this base and you can direct them quickly."

Lynom nodded without question. "Of course." He stated.

"We will lead the assault." As'hia spoke looking over her shoulder at him.

Danarla looked at her daughter as she sat on the ground between Lynom's legs and spoke with confidence. She felt immense pride in her daughter at her words but the natural worry of a parent. She opened her mouth to speak but Cha'talla beat her to it.

"You are part of the reason we have come here As'hia." He stated. "To risk you in this..."

"I may have been part of it in the beginning but no more." As'hia stated confidently. "Our Queen is more important than me and I will not leave my husband to be fight alone. I will be at his side for I have much to make up for." Lynom said nothing as she spoke but she could feel his arm tighten around her waist in support.

"As'hia... there is no room for revenge now." Ta'lon spoke.

"This is not about revenge medwan." As'hia answered quickly turning to look at him. "I do not remember what was done to me papa! None of it! This is about justice for our Queen! For what you have told us they have done! Whatever was done to me was washed away the first time Lynom made me his!" Several sets of eyes grew wider at her statement and Lynom could do nothing but try to hide his face behind her two toned hair.

"Ssin'urn 'anon... perhaps now is not a good time to inform everyone of what we were doing before they informed us they were coming." Lynom said softly.

"No... please continue." Tir'ut spoke now. That comment earned him a half power slap from both Normya and his mother.

Ta'lon looked at his wife. "Perhaps we will forgo the courting rights and meetings." He said softly.

As'hia couldn't help but smile now. "This is not about revenge." She said finally. "This is about getting our Queen back from them and I am perfectly capable of fighting. I do not need to be protected."

Cha'talla looked at Danarla who met his eyes and nodded. He turned back to As'hia. "So be it." He stated. "Let us make our final preparations and then move to our kick off points. Admiral Thodius will begin his attack in forty-one minutes."

[I am frightened Cirith.]

Dysea spoke softly in the heavily shielded connection. It was a connection she now shared with only one person and it was this connection that was giving her the strength and confidence she usually had. It had been Dysea's idea to establish this MV bond because it would be Cirith that remained in the shadows wherever she went now. It was a type of MV connection she had either made or been involved in with others before but, the moment it was initiated, Dysea knew it was far more than what they had intended it to be. Dysea knew it was the wolf blood within Cirith that reached out instantly, just as her wolf blood did, and the tendrils of Mindvoice came together and wrapped within one another in a fashion similar to the MV bonds she had with Melyanna, For'mya and Aricia. The strength of the connection was nearly as deep as with them, deeper even than the one she shared with Bella for Isabella was not wolf, and this confused Dysea to some degree.

In order to hide that Dysea had her MV abilities back, they had to establish the connection on a much higher level so that no Immortal would be able to detect it. To do that they had to open themselves to each other completely, and this had been far easier than either of them had expected. Almost too easy, though within a few moments they both knew why, and then they both embraced it without hesitation. The wolf blood within Cirith was refined and so very pure. This blood she got from her father was easy for the blood within Dysea to detect and recognize as one of the five ruling packs of Lycavorians that had been heavily infiltrated so many thousands of years ago by the Pralors. It reacted instantly with her blood which was Nauta Melme's pure blood and the blood of Kings. They had talked for many hours about many things, mostly having to do how both their lives had been altered because of the blood they now had in their veins. Blood both of them had fully embraced and could now not do without.

She sat on the small metal bunk with thin mattress, her knees draw up to her chest and her arms wrapped around her shins as she tried to conserve her body heat. They had not given her any clothing after bringing her here and Dysea knew it was a way for them to try and break her down. Without clothes they assumed she would feel naked and vulnerable, though they did not know her very well. Dysea Leonidas had never been uncomfortable without clothes, even before her Nauta Melme had come into her life and turned her. Once she became wolf it came even easier to her. Of all his Queens, Dysea was usually the one with the fewest clothes on whenever they were in their home. Only Anja could challenge her for that, and often times they both just walked around naked when they knew the young ones were finally asleep. It had led to many intimate moments initiated by one or both of them at the same time, and it usually flowed over to the others as well. The cool dampness of the cell however, that was beginning to sift through her and make her cold even with her wolf blood.

[As am I Dysea.] Cirith answered instantly. [I will not allow anything to happen to you Dysea. I give you my word.]

Cirith stood in the corner of the room close to the door watching her, the shadows wrapped around her body expertly. Her father and many of those within the Intelligence arm of the High Coven were supreme experts at using the shadows and she had learned from the very best. It helped that she had Aikiro's blood within her veins as well for her half sisters Yuri and Narice were superior shadow walkers, as were Yuri's children. Those that still lived that is. Her dark eyes had been unable to pull away from Dysea for very long. Cirith had never felt such a surreal attraction to another woman in such an openly sexual manner. She wanted Dysea Leonidas, she wanted all of them, for she could smell their blood in Dysea's as well. She wanted to explore their bodies and taste their blood and immerse herself in the emotion and pleasure of it all. And it pained her because she knew it would probably never happen.

[Cirith... I have never... I have never been taken against my will.] Dysea told her.

[And that will not happen now!] Cirith spoke forcefully. [I won't let it. I will free you first and we will die fighting before I allow that to happen!]

[In all the years since Martin came into my life, I have never desired another man. Never! How could I... he is all I have ever dreamed of and so much more. He leaves me shivering in his arms no matter how many times he takes me. I scream his name until I am hoarse. He makes me laugh and we can discuss philosophy or education without missing a beat.] Dysea said. [Yet... I keep having these dreams or visions or whatever you want to call them.]

[Dysea...]

[No... listen to me.] Dysea stated insistently. [They are the same all the time Cirith. The same Immortal who broke me in these dreams is in all of them. With others or by himself. I... I do whatever he asks of me Cirith. Anything! He is vile and disgusting in his actions but I do what he wants in these dreams. No matter what it is! And I love it! I scream for him to take me! Whether it is just him... or another as well. I act depraved and... and I act like a whore for his Immortal cock and I love it! Everything he does to me I love it! I can... it feels so real when they... when they fill me!]

[Dysea... Osiri told you that it is a reaction to the combination of drugs they gave you and your level of Mindvoice powers.] Cirith said. [It is not you Dysea. You do not wish these things. You have not fully recovered your sense of balance and clarity because of the drugs.]

[How can you be so sure?] Dysea asked. [How can I be so sure? How do I know that this is not some kind of sick secret fantasy of mine? How do I know that this is not what I want?]

[Have you ever had these thoughts before?] Cirith asked.

[Certainly not!] Dysea exclaimed.

[You have no fantasies Dysea?] Cirith asked.

[Of course I do... but... we have never been afraid to do these things with each other Cirith. And none of these fantasies ever include a male other than Martin.] Dysea spoke. [He is... he is not as unimaginative in our bed as you might think because of who he is.]

[Dysea... you are also in phase.] Cirith said. [Osiri might not have been able to tell this but I can smell it plainly. You are in phase... you have been drugged and beaten... you are weak and they blocked your MV powers for a time. You desire your mate and husband Dysea. There is no woman alive who could withstand all this and not be affected in some manner.]

[But why dreams like this?] Dysea asked.

[Because you have spent the last months building a friendship and bond with Cha'talla and his people. A friendship and relationship that goes against everything you have ever been taught about them.] Cirith spoke. [Now you have been captured by Immortals who are exactly like those you have been taught about. Combine this altogether and it would be too much for anyone to comprehend, especially given the circumstances and what they have done to you.]

[You sound so sure.] Dysea spoke. She looked up quickly when Cirith unwrapped the shadows from around her body and leaned over to kiss Dysea. A powerful kiss of passion and want and need. A kiss that set both their bodies afire with desire. And just as quickly it was over and Cirith wrapped the shadows around herself once more.

[I am sure of who you are.] Cirith stated. [I am sure of the pureness of the blood that runs in both our veins. And mostly I am sure because we are not alone.]

Dysea could have switched to grayscale vision and possibly detected where Cirith was in the room but she chose not to. The heat of Cirith's lips ran deep and sent incredibly delicious shivers throughout her. Shivers that Dysea should not have felt, but shivers that she felt none the less. She lifted her hand and touched her fingers to her lips softly. [Why... why did you do that?] She asked.

[Because I wanted too.] Cirith answered gently. [I've wanted too since I first met you and I don't know why. And... and because I know it will never happen again.]

[Cirith we... I...] Dysea began to speak but the sound of the door unlocking made her head turn. Dysea watched as the door to her cell opened and Kr'nak's huge form filled the doorway easily. He looked no different than he had a few hours ago but Dysea could smell the anxiousness in him now.

Kr'nak walked right up to her holding the magnetic restrainers. "The drugs are still at work." He called over his shoulder. "Tell Phy'iad I will have her there in moments and as docile as a lamb."

Dysea saw the second Immortal nod his head and turn to move away. She looked back to Kr'nak; saw his eyes and suddenly fear gripped her that she was being betrayed. Kr'nak's words then stopped this fear in its tracks and whatever fear Dysea may have still been feeling were shred.

"Everyone is ready." Kr'nak whispered to her. "Your Admiral will launch his attack in seventeen minutes. Osiri is with the other elf females in the main slave chamber. I received the signal from Tir'ut that they have infiltrated the base in the same manner as Cirith and the others. Cha'talla and your children wait for the attack. Dysea if anything... if anything should happen to me..." He stared at her intently. "Tell Osiri that she has been and always will be the light in the darkness for me. I will die knowing what love is. Tell her... tell her to love our son for both of us."

Dysea shook her head as she came to her feet, heedless of the fact she was completely naked. Kr'nak's eyes never left her face however, and she knew they never would. "You will tell her yourself Kr'nak." She spoke just as softly. "You can not die... for it would destroy all that you have given back to her. Fight if you must... and fight savagely and well... but do not die for now you have something to truly fight for. A future."

Kr'nak took her hands in his and brought her knuckles to his lips and he kissed them softly. "Cirith is nearby?" He asked.

Dysea nodded. "Yes."

"Then know that I will act with her and allow nothing to harm you ever Queen Dysea of the Lycavorian Union." Kr'nak said. "As I was forced to swear my allegiance to others in the past, I now swear my allegiance to you willingly."

"That is not something you need to do Kr'nak." Dysea spoke. "You will be free."

"And that is why I do so." He answered. "Because I will be free."

"Let us... let us talk about that later." Dysea spoke.

Kr'nak nodded and held up the restrainers. "I must put these on you." He spoke. "Mag Restraints. Contact has already been made with the Kavalian ship that this Pusintin is on and he wants to proceed immediately and Phy'iad grows concerned that he was followed. I so wanted to tell him that death resides at his doorstep even now."

Dysea felt a surge of confidence return to her and she smiled. "He has no idea." She spoke softly.

Kr'nak secured the restrainers around her wrists and then pressed a small cylinder into her right hand. "The key." He said. "If... if things begin to move too quickly then press the button. You will hear a faint beep and the restrainers will release three seconds after that. That is how much time Cirith will have to move and put your blades in your hands."

[It is more than enough.] Cirith spoke.

Dysea nodded. "She will be ready."

"Strike quickly and without remorse Dysea Leonidas. Just as your mate and husband would strike." Kr'nak spoke. "One behind the ear and the other wherever it suits you. Just make it a killing blow. Once Phy'iad is down... there will be six others in the room with us including myself... once Phy'iad is down we will eliminate them and wait for your son and Cha'talla to reach us."

"And you still have no idea why he is doing this?" Dysea asked.

Kr'nak shook his head. "None. The communication that was initiated is only one way. Whoever is on that Kavalian ship can see and hear everything but only Phy'iad can hear them through his implant."

"Can we trace it?" She asked.

Kr'nak shrugged his broad shoulders. "Probably... but the priority is insuring you are safe and then destroying this base. Are you... are you frightened?"

Dysea met his eyes and nodded her head honestly. "Terrified."

Kr'nak nodded. "Good. It will make your acting that much better." He said. "He will taunt you and... and touch you... but you must not act until your Admiral begins his attack. And insure that you do nothing that gives away that you have your MV abilities back."

Dysea nodded. "I understand." She spoke.

Kr'nak nodded. "Then let us begin."

EARTH CRANAE ISLAND

[... nothing left for us to do but help our dragon friends.] Arzoal spoke as she had spoken for the last thirty minutes. [Within five hundred years of our arrival this species... their official name in our databanks was Kavgart... they had grown in number and their attacks against our settlement as well as the dragon lairs was becoming almost weekly. Even with our superior technology their numbers were too great. In just over nine hundred years they almost equaled the dragons in population size. All attempts at repairing our drive system quickly fell to the wayside as we tried to develop ways to counter their aggressive attacks.]

[You did not... you did not make weapons?] Androcles asked.

Arzoal shook her head. [Our people... Pralors... we were seeders of life Androcles. We wanted nothing to do with war. The scars from the war Xaxon had brought upon us were still fresh in our minds. We had destroyed all our ships of war by that time and all that remained were the City Ships and scout vessels like mine. We went back to our normal way of life. Even CS41 and the others were only equipped with defensive lasers and nothing more. In part I am glad that was the case. Our commander forbade us to make weapons even though we could have easily and the dragons understood this. We provided them with advanced Mindvoice skills, knowledge and training and they did the fighting even though it went against their benevolent nature. They were protecting their young.]

[So what changed?] Elynth asked.

Arzoal looked at her. [Artre happened. I happened.]

[Artre?] Andro questioned. [The First Elven King?]

Arzoal snorted loudly. [Artre was no King and he was no elf.] She stated with some disgust. [He was a Pralor. One of the legion that followed Xaxon we discovered some time later. How he ever got through the screening process is something we never discovered but he was a geneticist like myself, however he had a dark streak within him. No doubt fermented by Xaxon and his crazed ideals.] Arzoal shifted on the sand. [Artre convinced our Commander that he had discovered a way to make the Kavgart more docile by altering their genetic makeup. He... he even had me fooled and I should have known better. I helped him to make a compound that when injected into Kavgart females, would bring out their nurturing instincts. He told our Commander that all he needed was his own lab on the far side of the planet away from the main Kavgart settlements and a hundred dragons to help him collect enough Kavgart females so that he could do his testing and then reintroduce them into the Kavgart population. I was the one who reviewed all his work and told our Commander that it would do what he said it would, even though I knew...] Arzoal looked at him. [Even though I knew it would not. I... I wanted to believe him because... because I was in love with him. I should have known better.] Arzoal said shaking her head.

Andro looked up at Elynth and saw her golden eyes blink in shock at what she was telling them. He turned back to Arzoal. [What happened Elder Mother?]

Arzoal lifted her head once more and looked at him with sad eyes. [It took us nearly ninety years before we came up with a compound that worked. I loved him for all that time and I was blinded to what his true goal was. That was domination. We even discovered that the second species on Elear, the less developed one, they were they result of the natural course of dragon evolution. They were the result of the embryonic cells on the interior of hatched dragon eggs mixing with the residual dragon seed from the mating process, and over the course of thousands, perhaps millions of years, these cells eventually became viable lifeforms. The ones we saw when we arrived on Elear. This first cycle of Elven evolution ended eleven hundred years after we arrived. During this time I also discovered that the next cycle of evolution for this new species would take place within the next five thousand years. All of my data models indicated that when this took place they would become the dominant species on Elear within a millennia. Artre did not care about any of this. He got his own lab and he got his hundred dragons. All of them volunteered without question because it would save their lairs and their eggs. Artre took them to the other side of Elear, deep into a mountainous jungle and it is there that he conducted his vile experiments.]

[But you knew the truth! Why... if this compound could not do what he said it could and you finally realized all this why did you do nothing?] Elynth asked.

Arzoal looked at her. [Oh the compound would work. It would alter their genetic makeup yes... but not in the way he told everyone. When I finally came to my senses and I realized he held no love for me I could not allow him to do this. Ninety years we spent developing this compound and right in front of me he twisted it into something dark and sinister. I confronted him in a secret dragon cave that we had set up years before to hide our technology from the Kavgart. On the night before he was given everything he wanted I confronted him alone in this cave.]

[Wait... if you exposed him... how was he able to complete his work?] Andro asked.

[I was never able to expose him Androcles.] Arzoal said. [He killed me.]

[Grandmother!] Elynth exclaimed as her wings snapped out to the sides in disbelief.

[He stabbed me through the chest and nicked my heart, leaving me for dead.] Arzoal told them softly. [As I laid there dying, I contemplated my actions and all the misery that I knew he would now unleash. I couldn't allow it to happen for it would also be my fault since I helped him create it. This cave had all of the machinery and technology that we had taken from our ship and either built through the years or which we had carried. Among the items there was what we called a Psionic Transferal Chamber. We called them PTCs. This is what allowed us to transfer the conscious minds of Pralors who were critically injured or near death to Psionic Pods until they could be returned to our homeworld and their bodies healed or their consciousness was released into the Rift of Time.]

[Rift of Time?] Andro asked.

Arzoal nodded. [A nebula that surrounded our homeworld was made up totally of Psionic energy and when our people died, many would chose to have their conscious minds removed from their bodies and set adrift in this nebula so that they could live on for many thousands of years more as energy. It was a great honor and gift that our people had.]

[But... but you are here.] Elynth said softly.

[Yes... I am here.] Arzoal spoke. [I am here because in the next chamber were seven thousand dragons eggs. I was able to take one of those unborn eggs... eggs with the embryos of dragons that were in their first stage of development and not yet aware. I took one of those eggs and I placed it in the PTC. I activated the machine and used it to transfer my conscious mind to the embryo before my body died.] Arzoal looked out to the ocean now which was beginning to sparkle with beauty because of the rising sun. [To my knowledge something like this had never been attempted before and never since. It worked...] She told them turning back to face them. [The only problem was the dragon embryo, the body I now occupy, was only three weeks old. It would not hatch for another hundred and fourteen years because of what I had done. The massive influx of Psionic energy caused the embryo to remain in a state of growth flux and it took that long before it had settled enough to continue its natural growth potential. A fellow worker found my body four days later and based on all of the blood she deduced what I had done. Our Commander and the Dragon Elder Council immediately hid me away until such time as I hatched. By that time Artre was gone and it was another two years before they saw him again. By then it was too late.]

[Too late for what?] Andro asked.

[Too late to stop his diabolical scheme.] Arzoal answered. [He had what he had wanted all along. He altered the compound he and I created even more than it was. He combined it with samples of Kavgart DNA and the nearest sample of Kavgart DNA that we had in our data banks and specimen cores. Lycavorian. He injected it into the dragons that went with him. It changed them.]

[Lycavorian!] Andro gasped.

[The Pralors were seeders of life Androcles Leonidas. We would take life forms from other worlds and introduce them into the reforming systems of worlds that had once been dead to all life.] Arzoal spoke. [Your species... Lycavorians... they were one of the most adaptable and hearty species we had ever come across. We have used your species to repopulate many worlds.]

[Wait a minute!] Andro came to his feet. [Are you telling me you took others from Lycavore? That there are other Lycavorians out there among the stars?]

[Five planets.] Arzoal spoke. [Each several million light years apart so that the chances of discovering each other were miniscule. None of them were as advanced as the Lycavorians on your homeworld at that time but the last information I had then was nearly thirty thousand years old.]

[Grandmother... you said this compound changed the dragons Artre took. Changed them how?] Elynth asked.

[Not only did it alter their physical nature, it destroyed their minds and turned them into mindless machines of death.] Arzoal spoke. [The pain of the transformation was too much for their minds to tolerate and they became monsters. Monsters that Artre controlled.]

[What transformation?] Andro asked leaning forward now.

[It made them humanoid in appearance Androcles.] Arzoal answered. [Over a period of six weeks their dragon bodies shrunk to the equivalent size of a very large Lycavorian. Have you never wondered why the genetic code of Kavalians and Lycavorians is so close in so many ways? He used your genetic sequencer codes for part of his experiments because of the massive healing properties naturally in your bodies. These monsters he created still had scales and claws and teeth, but they were no longer completely Cretvore Draconius. They were something else.]

[Son vada carians.] Andro muttered.

[These dragon/humanoids that Artre created... these abominations... they became the distant ancestors of the Kavalian species as we know them now.] Arzoal spoke softly. [Artre conducted his experiments but he went well beyond what he had originally intended. He had these sadistic monstrosities take Kavgart females and mate with them so he could twist the gene pool even more. More often than not it killed the Kavgart female for they birthed babies that were more monster than anything else, but that did not deter Artre in his goals. Eventually... and I don't know how and I do not care... eventually he was able to alter their genetic structure enough where the Kavgart females began giving birth to relatively normal children and it did not kill them. This next generation were the fathers of the Kavalian people now. All this happened in the span of the years before I hatched. When I finally did hatch... our Commander and perhaps three dozen out of our crew remained. Artre and his minions had either killed or taken the others. We never saw any of them again.]

Andro got to his feet then and shook his head as he began to pace back and forth in front of her. [So the Kavalians... they share similar patterns of DNA with us?]

Arzoal nodded. [It is why Athani Leonidas and so many others were able to alter their natural appearances with the biogenic process Keleru's scientists developed. In truth... the biogenic process worked on them because of the Lycavorian cells in their bodies. The biogenic treatments only awakened these cells from dormancy.]

[Why would the Kavalian scientists not detect this?] Androcles asked.

[I do not know the answer to that... but I can make an educated assumption and say they were not interested in dormant cells that would not show up on any medical scans they did. Only in those cells that were active and they could manipulate.] Arzoal answered. [Just as I had with Artre.]

Andro stopped pacing and looked at her once more. [What happened after you hatched Elder Mother? How did the... how did the Kavalians get from Elear to Cabelir?]

[Our ship.] Arzoal answered. [Once my egg hatched I was fully aware of all around me. I already had nine thousand three hundred years of life behind me when the egg hatched and I am actually older than Wayonn by roughly four thousand years I believe. Please sit Andro... I know what you must feel towards me knowing all this but...]

[Feel towards you?] Androcles spoke looking at her and meeting her flame colored eyes.

[You... you have every right to hate me.] Arzoal said softly. [If not for me... if not for me what is happening right now would not be taking place.]

Andro reached up without hesitation and placed his hands on the side of her muzzle. [Yes it would.] He stated. [Are you not the one who has told Elynth and I that fate will always find a way? That nothing happens without cause and affect. What is happening now is not your fault... you were only trying to do what was best at the time.]

[How can you say that when I am responsible for the loss of so many lives?] Arzoal asked softly. [Twice now... twice my actions have directly resulted in pain for your family and yet...]

[No!] Andro and Elynth echoed together but Andro continued. [What is happening now is not your doing! We... we all have choice Elder Mother! We all have the freedom to choose the paths we take in this life! You may have had a hand in creating the Kavalian people... but you are in no way responsible for their actions some thirty thousand years later! I don't accept that! I don't accept that and neither will my father!]

Elynth moved closer. [Grandmother... what took place after you hatched?] She asked wanting to hear it all.

Arzoal met her eyes. [War happened.] She stated simply. [We could no longer sit by and just react to what Artre was doing. Too many dragons were dying. Too many Kavgart were dying. My physical body was only nine years old when they chose me to be a member of the Council of Dragon Elders. I protested vehemently because I did not feel I deserved such a position and in my mind I was still a Pralor. They did not see it that way. Two years after this I told them the only way to stop Artre and what he was doing was to take the fight to him. To go after the bases he had established. To show no mercy. The Kavgart... even the new Kavalians were beginning to target the first generation elves. Essentially even more of dragon children since they were directly descended from us by way of natural evolution. The Kavgart were breeding so fast, something within the DNA Artre created caused their offspring to be fully grown within five years, and I would... I could not let Artre corrupt and destroy another species. So we went to war. We went to war and we held nothing back.]

Andro tilted his head to the side and looked at her. [This is why the Kavalians have such an inbred fear of dragons!] He gasped.

Arzoal nodded. [Yes. I told them we needed to be the most fearsome creatures we could be and we were.] She answered. [We burned their settlements, we slaughtered their people. We spared no one. Not even their children. It got to the point that the older Kavgart and the new Kavalian species were so terrified of us that they would not even come out into the open if there was any sign that a dragon had passed through the area recently. This fear and the fear of the abominations that Artre had created was so deeply imbedded within their psyche that it became part of them. In the eighty-second year of the war we found where Artre and his remaining original dragons had taken refuge. It... it is where Dragon Mountain now resides on Elear.]

Elynth gasped within Mindvoice. [That is why mother told me you refused when the Elven Prime Minister first told you of it.]

Arzoal nodded. [Yes. There... there were too many memories there. But... it was your father Elynth who told me that no matter the past it was up to us now to change the future. Just as he was doing with Andro's father. And your mother with Aricia. And now you with Andro.]

[And when you discovered the mountain?] Andro asked her.

[We... we attacked.] Arzoal answered solemnly. [Forty thousand of us attacked... and at the end of three days we breached the inner defense perimeter. Artre was inside with the nine remaining abominations that he had created. They fought... and they died until it was only Artre. He was... he was mad by then. Insane with power and the need for more and more. It was a pitiful sight really. He didn't believe it was me at first... until...]

[Until what?] Andro asked.

[Until I impaled him on my talons and stared into his eyes until the life left them.] Arzoal answered. [We left the bodies within the mountain and burned it. We burned everything. For two weeks the mountain burned until all that was left was nothing more than ash. That is why I told your mother Artre could not be alive Andro, when she came to me on Elear during the time of that fool cult. They had no idea what they worshiped and I was not about to let it continue for one moment longer after she told me.]

[And the survivors grandmother?] Elynth said.

[Our ship.] She answered. [Our Quantum Drive was inoperable but our sublight engines were still operating. We gathered the Kavgart and the new Kavalians and we removed them from Elear. It took several years... for we had to strip our ship even further to allow dragons to accompany the remaining Pralors and protect them... but once it was done it was as if a huge collective sigh of peace released from the planet herself.]

[You took them to Cabelir?] Andro said.

Arzoal nodded. [It was sufficiently far enough away where we knew they could not return and it allowed us to insure they did not have the opportunity or the means. For the next four thousand four hundred years we returned every half century to insure that they had not developed the means to leave Cabelir. We lived in blissful peace with the new species on Elear which we called Elves. In the dragon language Elf meant Reborn. We were being reborn as evolution was allowed to take its natural course. Forty-one years after that, my prediction came true and the first of the elves that we know today was born. A boy. Two years after that I was chosen as Elder Mother to the Dragon species and placed in charge of the Elder Council. I made the decision to use our ship with a newly built partial Quantum Drive, to take the remaining Pralors, four of them, and as many dragons that wanted to leave Elear and find a habitable world to settle on. We needed to leave Elear to the elves to find their own way as evolution demanded. Five years after the first group left he contacted me via a communications beacon and told me he was sending the ship back on remote for the rest. They had found a planet some ninety thousand light years from Elear in a new system and it was perfect. Our ship arrived on schedule two years later and I sent another thousand adults and all of our remaining eggs. It was scheduled to return in three additional years but it did not keep to that schedule.]

[What do you mean?] Elynth asked.

[It did not return for nine thousand years.] Arzoal spoke. [By this time... the elves had grown so much and we were so proud of them. Their expansion had pushed us deeper into the mountains and jungles, but we did not care. When our ship returned it looked battered and beaten, but all of its systems were still very much working. We never did come to find out why so much time passed before it returned, but once it did we had already chosen a place to go ourselves. A planet that looked so promising from the data cores that we had kept hidden.]

[Enurrua.] Andro said.

Arzoal nodded. [I could not bring myself to leave this quadrant. To leave the elves. After I had caused so much death and pain I wanted to see them grow into something great. I was with the last group that left Elear in 20,943 B.C. as we relate time now. Almost six thousand years we lived on Enurrua in peace. I... I became the mate of your grandfather... and believe me... after so many years as a Pralor and then all we had done on Elear I had forgotten what it was like to be a female.] Arzoal looked at Andro. [You wish to know why Vollenth's sons now walk the path they do and why they will become bonded to KertaGai and SirsanGai. It is because Vollenth's father is my grandson. He is of my dragon blood Androcles.] She spoke seeing both of their eyes widen. [Our first clutch of eggs as mates had four eggs in it. An earthquake took one of them from us before it ever hatched. Our oldest was a male, a beautiful flame red dragon like me. He mated young as we did back then before the war with Chetak began. The second clutch of eggs with his mates was one of the first taken by Chetak after they arrived on Enurrua. Vollenth's father was the only egg to be saved. Our... our son died. He and his mate killed by Chetak and his men, just as my mate was a thousand years later. Just as so many of my people were. I often wondered why the gods had left me alive after all I had done. They had taken so much from me as a Pralor and then a dragon. I often wondered why they continued to torment me through the years having to endure what I did. Watching my kind die all around me. Those I loved and cared for.] Arzoal reached out her head and put it within inches of Andro's face. [It was to see the streaks in the stars above as your father gave me my redemption. It was so that I could see the gods when they finally forgave me. That forgiveness was the hand of your father when he came to Enurrua and reclaimed what was always his in Aricia, but also set us finally and truly free.]

[I was a Pralor... and though I now occupied the body and mind of a dragon... I would know the blood of Sumar the moment I met him.] Arzoal said. [Destiny guided my hand and my decisions all of those years because those decisions led me to your father. And that is why our blood... our minds... will always be drawn to each other and connected in a way no others can explain. As I forgave myself for my decisions Androcles... decisions made just as your father's were... to save more than those that were lost... now you too must forgive yourself. I will never know love again and I have accepted that. But I will not accept it for those who I consider my family.]

Andro looked at Elynth then and her golden eyes met his for a long moment. Andro turned back to Arzoal as he tried to absorb the enormity of what he had just been told. He reached up and put his hand on her snout.

[Love is never lost to you Elder Mother.] He spoke. [It is never lost to any of us and for you... it is closer than you think. At times we just don't see it.]

Arzoal's eyes grew a little wider at this pronouncement but she said nothing. She blinked after a moment. [Perhaps... but my position now... it precludes me discovering love again.]

[So you may think. I will... I will tell no one of what you have spoken to us this day Elder Mother.] Andro spoke. [On that I give you my word as a Talon Guardian.]

[As do I grandmother.] Elynth spoke.

Arzoal laughed softly within Mindvoice and shook her head. [I knew it would someday need to be told. The next time I see your father I will pull him aside and I will share with him all I should have told him so long ago.]

[And now?] Elynth asked.

[Now?] Arzoal spoke. [Now... now we have to deal with the true followers of Artre and his vile creations though they don't know or understand it. I had hoped that without someone to dominate and oppress they would eventually outgrow this lust Artre bred into them. I was very wrong it seems and once more one of my sins returns.]

[No... this is not your sin Elder Mother.] Andro said firmly. [This is Artre's sin. And not all of the Kavalian follow the instincts he bred into them. And that is how we will stop him. Together.]

Arzoal nodded her head. [Always together.]

CRANAE ISLAND PARIS'S POINT

“... Found so far Bren?” Helen asked.

Paris's Point was on the extreme eastern tip of Cranae Island, a large finger of soft white sand that extended out into the Gulf of Laconia. On this tip was a massive open air pavilion with comfortable chairs and tables underneath. According to legend it was where Paris of Troy proposed marriage to Helen of Sparta and where they plotted their escape. It was also a lookout point of sorts and had the hundred foot high lighthouse on the very tip of the stretch of land. It no longer worked of course, but Andro had the structure redone and repaired to match what he had done with the villa itself and to keep that little bit of history from tumbling into the Gulf.

Bren was very confused but he lifted a single data pad from the table, one of half a dozen he had grabbed before leaving the villa. “There is not much information to go on Feravomir.” He spoke. “I have taken what Lady Devra gave to us, combined it with what Nirilo, Arduri and Naesta all gave to me from personal knowledge on things they have heard and then meshed it with our own intelligence from several different areas of The Wilds and what the Drow have submitted from different outposts over the years.”

“And?” Sadi asked.

“Using different key words, I had the computer search for reports that have come from the Drow, the Krypteria and even Elven Intelligence since they are active in The Wilds.” Bren said. “The scan was still running when you called for me but it has kicked out three possible connections so far. Devra and I were going through them last night before she retired.” He held out the data pad to Sadi and both she and Helen began to read it. “There was mention in several intercepts out of the Icarlo Alliance of a blue skinned female and two different instances of the word Syndicate that were mentioned in a Drow report two years ago from Talbor Seven.”

Devra stepped closer to Bren. “Bren has said this Talbor Seven is a resort moon of sorts?” She asked.

Sadi lifted her eyes and looked at her. “In a manner of speaking.” She replied. “It caters to many different people, many of them not the most respectable if you get my meaning. It is very plush, over indulgent and disgustingly opulent.”

Devra nodded. “The Syndicate and its members are very vain.” She spoke quickly. “This is exactly the place they would go.”

“It's also very close to Nefoa.” Bren spoke. “If we go there and start poking around about a group we believe may or may not be involved with them there's a good chance the Kavalians will find out and come to Talbor Seven to find out what is going on if they are in fact working with this Orionis Syndicate. Which could also endanger the life of Queen For'mya if they have told us not to retaliate in any way or they will kill her. They will see it as a threat and they will act.”

“Talbor Seven is too public. The only way they would act on something there is if was from the shadows. Sadi is right and many of their clientele are not the most respectable of people, but there are many who are. And they are citizens of the Union.” Helen spoke softly.

“I can contact someone there.” Sadi said softly turning to Helen. “I know... I know someone who may be able to help us. There will be a price but I will take care of it.”

“Why has this suddenly become... why has finding Caliria become so urgent for you?” Arduri asked softly as she looked at Sadi. “It is disconcerting all of a sudden.”

“Yes it is.” Devra echoed.

“I would like to know as well.” Wayonn asked. “And what it has to do with me?”

Helen looked at Sadi and then back to Devra. “Regent Re Mydala...”

Devra held up her hand. “Please... I think... I think given what is growing between our people and what you are doing for us that there is no need to maintain such formal tones First Oracle. Devra... please call me Devra.”

Helen smiled. “Devra.” She said nodding her head. “You have some sense of Mindvoice and what it allows us to do.”

Devra nodded slowly after looking at Wayonn. “Yes... I believe so.” She answered her. “You are able to speak with your minds... like telepathy. It allows you to do things that we... that others cannot. The more powerful of your people, and those bonded to these dragon beasts, they can manifest these psychic powers into the physical realm in some manner.”

Helen nodded her head. “Simply put... but essentially accurate.” She stated seeing the look on Devra’s face of distaste. She continued quickly. “Do not take that as a statement of insult Devra for it was not meant as such. What you just described is completely accurate and for someone with your lack of knowledge and exposure to those who can Mindvoice it was very well spoken. The scientific name for what we can do is something I myself almost never use. It sounds like some sort of disease if you ask me.” Devra relaxed and smiled as she read the sincerity of Helen’s words. “Much of it depends on the pureness of our Lycavorian blood... our Pralor blood.”

Devra nodded now. “Wayonn has explained some of it to me as we traveled here.” She said. “Many of those Pralors who survived the crash of this ship on Lycavore merged with the largest and strongest packs of your people as he described.”

Helen nodded. “There is much that even I still have yet to learn of those days as I was born well after the first merging began. There are those of us... the strongest Mindvoicers because of the pureness of our blood as you said... we are able to sense things. See images and feel emotions from others who we... who for lack of a better term will be part of our lives in very intimate manners. This is not something we can control or predict, it is more instinctual, the same as how our people discover Anomes.”

Devra nodded her head very interested. “I understand.”

“It grows stronger as two individuals who are gifted within Mindvoice to begin with, are drawn to one another and then finally come together as one.” Helen said. “As they become one within Mindvoice it increases their own abilities because they feed off of each other. We... our people believe destiny and fate play a large role in our lives Devra.”

“That is something we strongly believe in as well.” Devra stated. “Perhaps not on as large a scale as Lycavorians, but we believe in it and do not dismiss it.”

Helen nodded. “Androcles and Sadi... they were meant for each other in ways even our own people have yet to understand fully. They both knew this when he was but an infant and even though many years have past since they first discovered this, when enough time had gone by that they both were ready, fate and destiny brought them back together as one. When this happened and they were finally together it allowed them to make sense and discover what the images of Carisia they both were having meant. She was meant to be with them and share in their lives in every way. When Carisia became one with them, this allowed them to then see Ne’Veha, and in turn then Lu’ria. Are you following me?”

Naesta stepped up next to her mother. “I do. As they have come together they have grown more powerful within this Mindvoice and it has allowed them to see each of his wives before they actually join with them.”

“Not more powerful in the true meaning of the word Naesta but you are very right.” Sadi spoke now in reply. “Carisia, Ne’Veha, and then Lu’ria. As each one has come into our lives it has expanded our awareness of ourselves and other things around us. It has made us far more focused and able to see things with better clarity whereas before the images and emotions that we sensed were fleeting and we could not understand them.”

“What does this have to do with us?” Devra asked.

“Since Androcles and I came together we have been able to sense that four others would share our lives... four others that we would love and who would love us in turn.” Sadi said. “He has denied it at times; he thinks he betrays us in some way by having these feelings...” Sadi motioned to the others. “But we... we have embraced it as what fate has planned for us.”

“Sadi is his Anome.” Ne’Veha spoke softly. “She will always be the one who has more pull over him simply because she is wolf. A pureblood wolf, unlike Lu’ria and I. But each of us love Androcles just as deeply as Sadi does... we love each other just as deeply as we love him. And all of us know Andro loves us with every fiber of his being.”

“I still do not see what this...” Devra began.

Sadi stepped closer to her. “We have known there would be four others who shared our lives. As we found each other we grew more aware within Mindvoice, able to see more and understand. When Andro finally turned Ne’Veha and made her what she is now... the four of us saw the last who would be part of our lives. We had seen fleeting images and emotions up until then, but now we can see her clearly within our minds. We can even feel her in a way. She has dark brown hair and beautiful dark green eyes... and..."

Lu'ria moved up next to Sadi now. "She has cornflower blue skin Devra Re Mydala." Lu'ria stated bluntly.

"Caliria!" Arduri gasped in shock. "You are talking of Caliria!"

Devra's eyes flew open and she looked at them. "How... how can that be possible?" She stammered. "You have... you did not know our people even existed until we arrived here with Wayonn."

"We did not know of Lu'ria or Ne'Veha until the time was right." Sadi said quickly. "This is not some sort of joke or false hope Devra Re Mydala. This is fate and destiny telling us what we feel and guiding us to each other. We can sense Caliria within us. She belongs to us... and we to her. We can sense the confusion and the sadness and the humiliation... almost all she has endured recently. She misses you and her sisters... her brother Nirilo... she curses that she was born the way she is... and she cries because her father does not love her as he does Arduri and Naesta."

Devra's hands went to her face in horror as tears erupted from Naesta's eyes and she buried her face in Arduri's neck and sobbed as Arduri let the tears pour from her own eyes. Devra stepped forward quickly and took Sadi's hands, tears rolling down her cheeks. "These... these were her words to me... almost exactly; these were her words to me four months ago. Just before she was taken! Can... can she feel you? Talk to you?"

Sadi shook her head. "No. Not this far away... not without Andro within the connection. He is the one who is the focus point for all of us, the most powerful of us and we all emanate off of him as our center. He has not dropped his Mindvoice shields low enough to feel her because of everything that is happening around us. Not even during sleep... which he has had too little of to begin with."

Helen stepped forward. "And that is something we can't do. At least not yet." She said gently.

Naesta turned her head quickly, her green eyes angry. "Why not!" She demanded. "If our sister means to him what you say... why... why would you not tell him?"

Devra's eyes never left Helen's and realization began to wash over her face. She looked at Wayonn as he stepped closer to Helen. "Because if he does... if he does detect her..."

Helen nodded her head slowly. "Then he will kill everything in his path to get to her and forsake everything else. He will abandon his duties here, just as his father may well do when he discovers that his For'mya has been taken, and he will carve a path of destruction across The Wilds until he saves her. Or avenges her."

"That is what you meant about the storms earlier?" Devra asked.

Helen nodded her head. "When I chose and then recommended the Spartan people on Earth to Canth as the ideal place to send Martin's father and the Ten Thousand, it was because they were the closest to the Lycavorian people that I had ever come across. Strong and proud and steeped in honor and tradition. Among that honor and tradition was the almost sacrosanct way that wives were regarded within Spartan culture. They were regarded as the mothers of future generations and unlike many others on this planet when I arrived, the Spartan females were granted far more in the way of freedoms and voice in the community. Wars had been fought over insults to Spartan wives Devra. Martin knew the call of his blood before he came here, he did not understand it, but he knew the call of his blood. When he finally discovered the Spartan history that was his heritage, he embraced it completely. As all of his sons have wholly embraced it, none more completely than Androcles. It is within their blood now."

Sadi moved closer to them. "He will discover it Devra. He will probably discover it very soon. Sooner than we want him too. The moment he lowers his shields far enough he will sense her. Myself and Carisia, Ne'Veha and Lu'ria, we will not try to hide it from him then as we do now, for we want her among us as much as he will want her among us." She said.

"That is why we must do as much as we are able now." Helen spoke insistently. "Before he discovers that he can feel her and what she is going through."

"What... what must we do?" Devra gasped. "Tell us!"

"Mother they could..." Arduri began to speak but stopped.

Devra shook her head slowly. "No. I understand what they mean Arduri. Naesta. If we are to find your sister alive, if we are to have a chance at this then Androcles Leonidas must be focused and clear minded." She turned back to Helen and Sadi. "What must we do? Anything you need that I can give you is yours."

“You must remain here with Bren.” Helen told her. “Send Naesta or Arduri with Wayonn and Martin’s brother to him on Curila 6. If only to show you that this distrust for our people that is so rampant among the Vanari is not true. With either Naesta or Arduri there with Martin and the others, there is a link between father and son. They are the only two people in the universe who can control the other. Wayonn needs to see Martin anyway and I can not go. I must remain here to assist Andro, Deia and Panos as we continue to discover what is happening and why the Kavalians have acted in this way.”

“I will go!” Naesta spoke immediately.

Nirilo stepped up beside her now and spoke for the first time. He had remained silent throughout the exchange for he alone knew what the Lycavorians were capable of and while discovering that his sister would one day be the wife of Androcles Leonidas shook him down to his boots, he did not doubt that they would find her. “Naesta that...”

“No.” She stated looking at her brother. “I am the only one among you who did not trust them when we arrived here Nirilo.” She said. “I am the only one who has clung to father’s fool ideals for so long. After what I have seen and witnessed... what they have done for us... this is my way of returning the trust they have shown in us.”

“You must keep him from telling his father until after we arrive Helen.” Wayonn spoke. “If he goes off and...”

Helen nodded. “I know grandfather. I will send Andro to find Daniel Simpson. He still believes Martin dead for he will not lower his MV shields far enough for anyone to tell him any different. Behind Andro... he is the only one who has any chance of controlling Martin once he discovers what has happened. They are brothers in every sense of the word except blood. And even blood could not bring them any closer than they already are. Then Andro must begin making his “appointments” to make it appear as if he is establishing control over the Union as the new King.”

Sadi turned to Bren. “Bren... Ne'Veha and I will return to the villa with you, Devra and Arduri. We will make contact with this person I know on Talbor Seven and discover if there is anything he can tell us.”

“Carisia and I will go with my mother to see Queen Aihola.” Lu'ria stated. “She will have access to any reports from Drow outposts that were not destroyed or that Bren could not acquire through normal channels.”

“We must move quickly and efficiently.” Helen spoke. “Androcles is no different than his father and I fear both of them have many plans and operations up their sleeves that none of us know about. We must discover all we can before they begin setting these things in motion for I fear much will burn when they begin. In more ways than one.”

Sadi took Devra’s hands once more. “We will find her Devra... for she means just as much to us now as she does to you and your family.”

Eliani walked out of the room she normally stayed at when she was here at Cranae Island. Thankfully the scents of Malic and Nyla within the room were very faint and did not keep her from sleeping at least somewhat easily. She wore a simple dark blue robe that fell to just below her knees around her body, tied tightly at the waist, so as not to reveal that she wore nothing underneath. She had returned from the hospital late, not wanting to have to deal with other people in her mood. Eliani knew she could be a complete bitch when she was in a foul mood, and even little things could set her off. Being back on Earth and able to feel Andro so close by helped to sooth her to a large degree, and the love and calmness she felt from Thaura always seemed to keep her volatile temper in check. She had immersed herself in work at the hospital and this served to make her not think about what had happened between her and Malic, or what was said. What it did do was increase her awareness of what else was happening and cause her worry for her mother For'mya to increase more and more as she treated men and women who had been injured in the battles on the streets of Sparta as well as those injured in the destruction of the Senate Building. Eliani knew without question that she was passionate about things; it was a trait she had inherited from her mother. She also knew she could snap at people with relative ease if she was upset and confused.

Right now... Eliani Leonidas was so very confused.

How could all this be happening now? She thought all she had ever wanted had come to her when she and Nyla found Malic. He had bitten her, made her his, yet if that was the case how could he love Nyla more than he loved her. Neither of them had been shielding at the time and Eliani had felt and heard everything they said to each other. What she could not understand was why a part of her rejoiced at this knowledge and yet a part of her felt saddened but not as saddened as she should feel. And then there was her reaction when she found herself perched on the body of Andro's Captain Jomann. Not only had his delicious jasmine coffee scent ignited her body, for the moment that she rested atop his powerful frame and looked into those stunning ocean blue eyes, she had forgotten all about Malic and Nyla. And that is what confused her the most for that should not have happened if she and Malic were anomes. Seeing him later in the hospital and remembering what he had made her feel caused her to act defensively around him and treat him badly, shocking not only Andro but herself with her reaction to him. After turning the corner in the hospital she had stopped and took deep breaths not understanding why she had acted as she did. By the time she worked up the nerve to turn around and go back so that she could apologize, he and Andro were already gone.

The Battle on Kranek, what happen between Malic, Nyla and her, thinking that her father was dead, having one of her elven mothers taken by Immortals and learning that her second elven mother was now the prisoner of the Kavalians and they did not know why, it had all taken its toll on her. The six hours of sleep she had gotten last night were the longest stretch she had been able to sleep since leaving Kranek. She was still so very confused, but at least she was not dead tired. Now she needed to get some coffee into her and then talk with Andro. He was the only one outside of Thaura who would understand what she was feeling.

Eliani came around the corner into the main foyer of the house and saw Zarah and Lucia sitting close together at the large counter in the kitchen area. Their shoulders were touching and Lucia's head was leaning against Zarah's arm. Zarah looked up when she saw her and her face took on a large smile. She left her coffee on the counter, kissed Lucia delicately on her lips, the kiss of two lovers Eliani saw with happiness, and she got up to come greet her.

"You look better than you did when you got back last night." Zarah spoke as she hugged her tightly.

Eliani nodded her head as they kissed each other's cheek. "I haven't... I haven't slept very well since we left Kranek." She said. "I worked myself to death last night and my body didn't give me much choice."

"Eli... what is wrong?" Zarah asked softly.

"I need... I need to think some things through." Eliani answered. "I will be fine."

"Talk to Andro Eli." Zarah spoke. "He has always been able to help us put things in perspective."

Eliani nodded. "I intend too." She stated confidently. "I've been so wrapped up inside myself I haven't checked on you Zar." She said lifting her hand to stroke her younger sister's cheek.

Zarah smiled. "I am... I am doing better than most people think." She stated. "Better than I thought I would be doing."

"Zarah?" Eliani prompted her.

"No really." Zarah said. "I won't... I won't lie that I don't feel different Eli. I do. I feel violated and dirty... but when I start to get like that I draw from Lucia. I... I love her Eli. I truly love her."

"Have you...?"

Zarah shook her head. "No. We sleep in each others arms, we cuddle and we talk. I don't know if I am ready for that yet and to be honest, I don't know if Lucia is either. She was raised in a society where it was taboo Eli, and we both have to come to terms with what happened and with the attraction we have for each other. It is almost overwhelming at times, but usually if we hold each other, it is enough to calm down. It will happen I know... but it will happen on our terms when we both are ready. We have only just gotten comfortable when it comes to kissing each other."

Eliani kissed her cheek once more. "Just the fact that you can feel what you feel for her. The desire and the trust... that is..."

Zarah nodded. "I know." She said with a smile.

"Where is Andro?" Eliani asked.

"He was out on the beach with Elynth and Arzoal when we came out here. Whatever they are talking about... it must be very important for I don't think father could breach the shields they have up." Zarah answered.

Talon Guardian business more than likely. Thaura's voice filled their heads. I have felt similar shields from Sylrith and the other Elders when they talk.

Good morning sister. Eliani stated happily as she felt Thaura's essence fill her.

I will be ready when you wish to depart Eliani. There is much we need to talk of. Thaura said.

I know. And we will.

Let me get some coffee in her first Thaura. Zarah spoke with a small laugh as she took Eliani's hand and pulled her towards the counter.

Yes... please do. Thaura answered with a snicker. She is a bear without her morning coffee.

"Sadi and the others left for Paris Point rather quickly earlier. The Feravomir was with them. And that Wayonn." Zarah spoke as Eliani settled at the counter and kissed Lucia softly on the cheek.

"Lucia." She spoke.

"You look better this morning Eliani." She stated.

This caused Eliani to laugh and shake her head. "I was that bad?" She asked.

Zarah turned from the opposite counter and came over sliding the mug in front of her. "What do you think?" She said.

Eliani sipped the coffee gratefully, allowing the strong pleasant smell of her mother Aricia's coffee to sift through her nostrils and the liquid to warm her as she swallowed. Zarah settled back to her seat next to Lucia. "Sorry." Eliani said sheepishly. "You don't like Wayonn?" She asked.

Zarah sipped her coffee as she shook her head. "It's not that." She said. "He is... he was a Pralor Eli. He knew grandfather Resumar's father! All of them... their scents are so pure and powerful. Almost like those in Sparta who were born here."

"I only met them very briefly on the SCIMITAR." Eliani said. "They seemed..."

Eliani stopped talking when she caught the distinct scent of jasmine coffee and her head turned very quickly to the side as she heard the main double doors to Andro's villa open. Given what was happening all around them, Eliani Leonidas knew just anyone would not be able to come through those doors without a Durcunusaan escort. Her eyes confirmed what her nose was telling her as she watched Jomann enter through the doors holding a data pad and talking with the man Andro had introduced to her as Dutkne and Jomann's scent filled her head even more. She felt her body become flush and the nipples of her breasts hardened as she looked at him. He wore a two toned black and dark blue shirt with black pants and combat boots. His shirt was not overly tight, but it certainly did not hide the incredible definition of his chest, abdomen and arms. His Nehtes was strapped to his right thigh, the K12 KM to his left. As her eyes lifted to his face they grew a little wider as she saw him for the first time not covered in dirt and grime and blood. The two by two bandage covered his cheek, but his skin was deeply tanned and his face relaxed. She saw his nose twitch slightly and his head came up and those incredible eyes came to rest on her for a brief moment and then dropped back to the pad. Eliani Leonidas was not shy by any stretch of the imagination, not with parents such as hers. The Hadarian in her said to let it drop at that, but the wolf in her felt snubbed in an odd way as he and Dutkne continued into the main sitting room of the villa. Eliani tightened her grip on her mug and turned back to her sister and Lucia.

"Excuse me for a moment." She said as she got up and headed towards where they had stopped.

Lucia looked at Zarah confused. "I thought... Zarah I thought she was mated to Malic and Nyla." She spoke.

Zarah nodded her head slowly as she watched Eliani walk away. "Something happened on Kranek." She stated. "Something she discovered about Malic and Nyla. That is why she has been so distracted and not like herself."

"What do you mean?" Lucia asked.

"When a male wolf takes an anome... a soulmate... his scent will stay within her blood no matter how long they are apart." Zarah said. "And hers will remain in his. Just like my father and mother... just like Andro and Sadi. You will always be able to smell them on each other no matter if they are apart a day... or a year. Malic and Eliani thought they were anomes because he bit her."

Lucia's eyes grew a little wider. "That... that is not the case?" She gasped.

Zarah shook her head. "My sense of smell is not as developed as say Andro or Deni or our father... but it is strong enough to know that Malic's scent is no longer in her blood. On her body maybe... but not within her blood. The more time she spends away from him, the more his scent will dissipate until it is gone completely."

"What does that mean exactly?" Lucia asked her.

“It means I know why my sister is acting so strange.” Zarah answered. “She is trying to figure out why that is. And she is trying to figure out why Andro’s new Captain makes her blood churn.”

“What?” Lucia asked.

Zarah nodded. “Just now... when she saw him.” Zarah looked at her. “Her scent spiked more pungent and pure than anything I ever smelled when she was with Malic and Nyla. She is attracted to him something fierce and she is fighting it.”

“...have assigned two Durcunusaan that will accompany you with Princess Zarah and Princess Lucia to this Janae’s home.” Jomann spoke. “There will be a Heavy Lifter arriving in an hour to take you and the others by ground while the princesses will no doubt fly on Seyra, Princess Lucia’s bonded one.”

“The others?” Dutkne asked.

“They are Anton and Cihera Simpson and an elven female named Las'elh.” Jomann told him. “I believe she is... I believe she is the lover and wife to both of them. She is a member of Elven Intelligence who is on loan to the Krypteria. They have been working together for several months now. It appears their separate missions ended up being the same one and they have been together ever since. Anton’s scent is deeply imbedded within this Las'elh’s blood and Cihera is half Drow, half vampire and this Las'elh’s scent is in her blood as well. I can only assume that they have mated with her and taken her as their wife. It isn’t uncommon... especially among the Drow here on Earth.”

“Will there be...” Dutkne began to ask before the female voice cut him off.

“I thought I told you to get your injuries treated last night Captain.” Eliani spoke causing Dutkne to turn around and look at her.

Dutkne was a pureblood Lycavorian and he was also no fool. He detected the sparks between Andro’s sister and Jomann the moment he looked up when they entered and he saw her. He could detect the faint smell of a strong alpha on her but it would fade within the next day or so by his estimation, and he doubted even at its strongest it couldn’t match the pureness of Jomann’s blood and scent in any way. He had learned quite a bit from the data banks on the SCIMITAR when he wasn't sitting with Androcles and simply talking of whatever came to mind. They hadn’t had much time to do this... but it seemed like hours to Dutkne... which only served to confirm what his grandfather had been trying to tell him. No matter how much he tried to run from what his blood was telling him, he was not going to escape it. He felt more comfortable around Androcles than he did anyone but his grandfather and within a few hours they had been conversing as if they had known each other for decades. Androcles Leonidas was a voracious seeker of knowledge he had learned in that time and Dutkne found himself in the role of teacher without even knowing it. They spoke in serious tones and moods, punctuated by small bouts of laughter when either of them discovered how close their lives and experiences had paralleled each others. Those who were always around Androcles accepted him almost from the outset Dutkne realized this morning when a Durcunusaan officer had arrived to escort him to the villa. Not out of the need to protect him, but because of the position all of them had seen him assuming even before he did.

Dutkne discovered that those who had been born and raised in this city of Sparta had a much stronger and pungent scents than those who had been born on Apo Prime. That told him the Lycavorian Spartans accepted their nature from birth, following their instincts for the most part without question, where those born on Apo Prime had only just begun to return to their instincts. Dutkne also knew from the way Eliani Leonidas stood and her body language that she had quite a bit more than a passing interest in Jomann. Her willow and peach scent spiked the closer she came to them and her fern green eyes were entirely focused on Jomann and ignoring him completely.

“I... I think I’ll go get some coffee. We’ll talk later Jomann.” Dutkne stammered just as Eliani came up and stopped. He bowed his head to her before moving off rather quickly wanting to avoid the confrontation he felt coming.

“Princess Eliani.” Jomann spoke bowing his head slightly as well and trying very hard to keep his own emotions and scent in check. “Can I help you with something?”

Eliani looked up into his face and couldn’t help but inhale deeply, drawing his jasmine and coffee scent deeply into her lungs and feeling her body call out for his scent as it never had for Malic. “I thought I told you to get your injuries treated last night at the hospital Captain.” Eliani finally was able to get the words out.

“I did Princess.” Jomann spoke.

“Then why are you wearing a bandage?” Eliani asked.

Jomann took a deep breath. “All of the Hadarian Healers present in the hospital were rather busy treating those who actually needed treatment. Men and women that were far more injured than me. I had an elf medic clean and bandage my injury and then I left to conduct my duties.”

Eliani reached up quickly and snatched the corner of the bandage, pulling it off his face swiftly before he could stop her and dropping it to the floor. His eyes flared for a moment in anger but he simply glared at her. It was a glare that bounced off Eliani for he knew she could smell the adrenalin dump into his system from the lie. The wound was still puffy and red, but it had been cleaned and three strips of tape held the edges together. It was going to leave a nasty scar perhaps three inches long and there was something else that Eliani knew right away as well.

“No medic my mother or Aunt Anuk trained treated this wound Captain.” She stated firmly. “You did this yourself didn’t you?”

Jomann took the bandage from where she had tossed it to the floor and lifted it back to his face pressing it over the wound once more and tracing the edges so it sealed. He looked at her then, her fern green eyes causing his stomach to do flips. “It has been treated.” He said. “I did not feel the need to bother anyone with something so insignificant.”

“You lied to me.” Eliani spoke.

“And you smelled it.” Jomann spoke adjusting the data pads in his hand. “Does that make you feel better Princess? I have duties to perform... so if there is nothing else I need to see Androcles.” He began turning away but her next words stopped him.

“You lied to me Captain!” Eliani snapped.

Jomann turned back around and stepped closer to her, his immensely powerful six foot three body truly dwarfing her diminutive frame. Three inches taller than her mother she may have been, but Eliani was still only five foot six and she had to look up into his angry ocean blue eyes. “If you were so concerned about my injury Princess Eliani, you would have treated it last night!” Jomann hissed angrily.

“I didn’t treat you last night because you acted stupidly in following Androcles to the Kavalian Embassy!” Eliani snapped. “Your job is to protect him! Not go along with him when he does something insane like that!”

“Your brother’s protection is my responsibility now! Do not tell me how to do my job for I don’t tell you how to do yours!” Jomann snapped.

“If you were doing your job my mother would not be a prisoner of the Kavalians Captain Jomann!” Eliani snarled. “She would...”

[Eliani Leonidas!] Thaura’s voice bellowed in her head loudly. [Sister! That is wrong my sister!]

Eliani’s mouth snapped shut as she realized what she was doing and she looked at Jomann. She could see the hurt that her words caused even though it wasn’t evident in his expression and she could smell the anger in him as well.

Jomann glared at her as he stepped closer, her peach and willow scent threatening to overwhelm him. “Do not take whatever anger you have building inside you towards someone else or something that happened to you... do not take it out on me Princess! I answer to your brother now! Not you! I would die to protect him! Just as I would have died to protect Queen For'mya and Prime Minister Deia! Seventeen of my men died in that bombing Princess Eliani! Seventeen! They died doing their jobs! Unless you have something constructive to say to me, and not some snide comment or derogatory statement, I will take my leave of you and get back to my duties!” Jomann began to walk away but stopped and turned back to her again. “My duty is to protect your brother as his Captain. Part of that duty is acting just as insanely as he does because it protects him in the end. And... and because I feel the same thing beating in my chest as he does his. I do not know why that is... but Deia told me I was put there with her for a reason. That reason I have found... is your brother. What you think of me it doesn’t matter to me. I have found my calling and that is to be beside your brother in whatever he decides to do. You can accept that... or you can get the hell out of my way!”

Eliani Leonidas stood there dumbfounded as Jomann turned and headed out the double doors. She didn’t know what to say or do and she blinked several times before turning back and moving to the counter where Zarah and Lucia sat just as astonished as she was.

“Eli?” Zarah asked softly. “What... what was that all about?”

Eliani looked up and met her sister’s eyes. “I... I don’t... I don’t know Zar.” She gasped as tears began to roll down her cheeks.

Zarah stood up without question and moved to her sister where she wrapped her arms around her and pulled her tight.

CHAPTER FIFTY-NINE

KAVALIAN GREATSOUL-CLASS DREADNOUGHT PUSINTIN’S COMMAND SHIP PRIDE OF PUMAS

“...syncing the transmission Marshall Pusintin.” The COM officer said. “It should be coming up on your monitor now.”

Pusintin held For'mya by her hair tightly, her hands grasping at his wrists while she was up on her tip toes to try and alleviate the pain that throbbed in her head. Her eyes were tightly shut as she tried to channel the savage pain into anger but it was a losing battle. The left side of her face and jaw where she had struck the chair was beginning to swell and no doubt would be badly bruised if she could not shift to heal the injury. His slap to her face had been like a punch and it had succeeded in causing her wolf fangs to cut the inside of her cheek. Blood leaked from between her lips and her eyes were tear filled. For'mya heard Pusintin laughed heartily and her eyes fluttered open to stare at his cruel face.

“Now that is quite the picture!” Pusintin snarled happily as he looked at the monitor in front of them. “That almost makes me wish I was there to help him.” He yanked her face closer and looked at her. “You should watch this For'mya. You might get turned on.”

Another burst of anger surged through her and she spit blood mixed with spittle into his face with a hiss and snarl. “You fucking pig!” She growled at him.

Pusintin reached up quickly with his hand and wiped the spittle away and then slapped her viciously. She could not move her head back with the blow because he held her in the iron grip and the slap sent twinges of intense pain shooting through her neck and face bringing more tears to her eyes. “You don’t listen very well do you bitch!” He snarled at her. “Look at the monitor For'mya! I want you to see your elf Queen lover about to get her Immortal cherry popped!”

“NO!” For'mya snapped trying to yank her head away from his grip. “You fucking ranne saric ronnus!”

Pusintin laughed at her then. “Such language! Look at the monitor For'mya or I will pin your eyelids open with needles!” Pusintin growled at her. “Look at the monitor upae!” His other hand grabbed her jaw and more pain cascaded through her body as he viciously turned her head toward the monitor. She closed her eyes tightly. “Open your eyes or so help me I will carve your son into tiny pieces right in front of you wench! And I will make sure you hear every fucking wail he makes! Open your fucking eyes!”

For'mya’s eyes sprang open then and she looked at the monitor. What she saw made her eyes go wide in horror and shame. “Dysea!” She whimpered loudly upon seeing her.

There was no mistaking the platinum blond hair of her fellow Queen and elf lover. There was no mistaking the exquisite and exotic tattoos that adored her powerful body. Tattoos that only added to the passion and desire when they shared each other for For'mya loved to trace those tattoos with her tongue. For'mya could almost smell the sweet wildflower scent, the curve of her wonderfully tight ass and the firmness of her breasts. The memories of their last morning together were so vivid and special. They had ended up feasting on each other while Anja and Aricia devoured Isabella next to them. They knew the right spots to touch and lick and nibble and within moments both of them were screaming out their pleasure. Pleasure they had not stopped giving to each other for two more hours. For'mya could not breathe right now, she could not think straight as she saw her beautiful dear friend, one of only four who were so close to her, her elven lover and fellow elven Queen bent over some strange table completely naked. She was struggling against the bonds that held her, struggling terribly for sweat adorned her body from the effort. She could see four Immortals in the transmission, all of them with sadistic looks of demented torture on their faces, and then the largest of them standing behind her using his large hands to stroke her skin and areas of her supple body that only Martin or they had ever touched.

“You fucking bastard!” For'mya screamed when she saw this. “You sick fucking bastard! I will... I will kill you!” She felt the anger surge forth once more, but even as she struggled against Pusintin’s grip on her she knew she was too weak to fight him.

Pusintin cluck clucked and shook his head. “Such language from a refined elven Queen!” He hissed mockingly. “She looks pretty good don’t you think! Want to put your thumb on that contract now?” He asked.

“May you... may you rot for all eternity in the fires of Dori!” For'mya screamed as her face became a mask of barbaric hate and anger.

“Wrong answer For'mya!” Pusintin snarled. He reached over and stabbed the control panel. “Phy'iad... you may proceed! And take your time! I’ll leave the channel open so we can enjoy the show!”

“NO!” For'mya screamed even as he took his hand away and grabbed her jaw once more holding her head in place in front of the monitor.

“I wonder how loud she will scream!” Pusintin asked as the Immortal on the screen took a position behind Dysea and unbuckled his pants. For'mya could see Dysea’s head whipping back and forth and then her voice filled the COM.

“STOP! DON’T! NO! AARRGGHHH!!!! NAUTA MELME!!”

For'mya tried to close her eyes but his fingers came up and roughly pried her eyelids open. “Open your eyes For'mya you whore! I want you to watch the pain and humiliation that you are putting her through! Here it comes!!”

For'mya’s eyes were tear stained and red but she could not help but watch as the huge Immortal stepped behind Dysea, paced his hands on her smooth hips and rammed himself forward. She watched Dysea’s body jerked brutally and her head came up as her scream of shame ripped For'mya’s heart and will to shreds.

“NNN0000000!!!!”

“Shit!” Pusintin shouted. “I think he just sank his whole cock into her in one stroke! How about that!”

“You... will die!” For'mya sobbed. “You will die such a horrible death!”

“I don’t think so bitch!” Pusintin barked. “Let’s watch for a bit shall we!”

BELID

“NNN0000000!!!!”

Dysea’s emerald green eyes were wide in pain and utter shock as Phy'iad buried almost his entire cock into her in one plunge. Tears filled her eyes as the pain of the sudden intrusion caused her fingers to open and drop the key that Kr'nak had given to her to open her restraints. She heard him grunt uncontrollably as he leaned over her muscular back and ground his thick cock into her causing stars to explode behind her eyes as the pain grew.

“Fuck... fuck Elf Queen!” Phy'iad grunted in her left ear. “I’ve... I’ve never had... had anything so tight! Scream for me elf bitch! Scream for me!”

Dysea shook her head back and forth, her hair whipping wildly from side to side as she tried to fight the pain and humiliation of this rape. “NO! Ahhh! Bastard!” She screamed. “It... it hurts!!”

Phy'iad laughed in her ear. “Get used to it elf Queen!” She growled. “You are going to be mine forever!” He grabbed her hips painfully and began to stroke into her without regard.

Dysea Leonidas was recognized as a consummate politician and through the years under Deia’s expert tutelage she had learned all there was to learn of the many species within the Lycavorian Union and the differences between them. She had even learned to speak a total of eight different languages fluently so that she could communicate better with those she was supposed to rule. She was considered the most politically active of Martin Leonidas’s Queens especially when it came to education. Dysea could not stand a poorly educated individual who desired to learn and could not due to lack of funding or materials or teachers. Within two years of becoming not only the First Elven Queen and a Queen of the Union she had begun to reform the educational system within the Union with her mother Normya and Isabella at her side. They had traveled to dozens of planets inside the Union and outside their borders in The Wilds, and her mother continued to still do this as mother to the Queen. Dysea's mother was well known and she had powerful friends throughout the Union not because of who her daughter was, but because she was just as beautiful and equally active as her daughter. They had procured funding and materials and teachers for those people who wished to learn but could not. They had helped half a dozen fledging planetary governments to set up standards of education for all their people and then donated their time and credits to the efforts as they got their systems up and running. Dysea was revered on the elven homeworld of Elear as the Queen who had willingly given up half her power so that For'mya could be named co-Queen because of the royal elven blood that ran in her veins. For the first time in millennia an elf of royal blood once more sat on the throne of Elear and it was due to Dysea's actions.

Dysea and her mother were in the forefront of elven females on Elear not shying from any attraction or course that their lives took them down. It was commonplace to see Dysea out walking the streets with Bella most of all, but with any of her fellow Queens really, and be unashamed in any way to stop and share a blistering kiss of love with them for all to see. Her physical beauty was also the topic of stories and countless conversations in the cafés on Elear. Not only was she just as exquisitely beautiful as any elven female, her mother matching her in every way and everyone seeing where she inherited that beauty from, the muscular definition of her lithe body was now famous. Dysea Leonidas made it a point to keep herself in peak physical condition. She trained every day rain or shine, she ran in her wolf form three times a week for fifty miles at a time, more often than not with Martin at her side. It was common to see her sparring with Bella in the courtyard of the palace on Elear or going through the rigid training regiment with Iriral that all Bonded Pairs went through.

Dysea Leonidas was also known for something else throughout the Lycavorian Union. It was not her physical beauty, nor her political savvy; it was because she was widely considered the most indomitable of Martin Leonidas's Queens. She was afraid of nothing and intimidated by no one. Not long after For'mya had become the official concubine to Martin and the rest of them, Dysea had caught wind of a snide comment made by a junior parliament member in regards to For'mya's status among them. Against the advice of nearly all of her advisors except her mother, Deia and Melyanna, who went through the same things with the Hadarian Arch Ministry almost monthly, Dysea had marched into the Elven Parliament that day and let them have it with both barrels. When she was done dressing down parliamentary members who were three and four times her age and making them feel no bigger than worms, the junior member found himself assigned to the most remote outpost the Union had, and from that day forward no one had ever questioned the strength of her will and determination.

Dysea drew on that indomitable spirit and strength of will now.

She clenched her fists and filled her mind with thoughts of her beloved Nauta Melme. The man who could make her wolf blood sing with just a simple caress. A man who had never loved her or any of them any less even though Aricia was his anome. A man who would often times when they were on Elear alone together or with any of their lovers, simply wrap her within the embrace of his powerful arms and overwhelming aura and they would simply talk. Of their children. The past. The future. Not only could her Nauta Melme stimulate her body to the point of blissful abandon and beyond, he could arouse her mind to new heights. As she shut her eyes tightly, she quickly slammed supremely powerful Mindvoice shields around herself to keep her Nauta Melme from discovering what she was enduring. Even as she did this she could feel equally as powerful shields reinforcing her own and she knew it was Cirith. Shields that mingled and blended with hers so effortlessly, so smoothly. It was something she would not even come to realize until later, but Dysea would be the first to notice that this should not have happened for one they had only just met. Cirith should not have been able to so completely blend her shields with Dysea's own, yet she did.

[Dysea!] Cirith cried out in anguish. [I will kill him! I will slit his foul throat right now!] She snarled as she began to move and came close to unwrapping the shadows from around her body.

Dysea's high pitched scream of terror pierced her soul to the core and even wrapped in the shadows as she was Cirith began to sob openly. She cried for what was happening to Dysea and she cried for what she had found. Her father had been wrong. She had been wrong. All these years they had been wrong. Cirith was not meant for the first King Leonidas and his wife Gorgo, destiny was not that accommodating. No... it all came home in this moment of brutal violence. Cirith Esavorna was meant for Martin Leonidas and his Queens.

[No!] Dysea screamed out. [How... how long?]

[Dysea... he is... he is raping you!] Cirith cried.

[He... he may use my body... but he will never have my mind! Never my... never my mind or will!]
Dysea echoed loudly. [Tell... tell them to hurry Cirith! Tell them to hurry!]

“Uuughhhhhhh!!” Dysea screamed out loudly as Phy'iad speeded up his crushing strokes into her supple body.

KAVALIAN GREATSOUL-CLASS DREADNOUGHT PUSINTIN'S COMMAND SHIP PRIDE OF PUMAS

“Uuughhhhhhh!!” Dysea's loud scream of shame and anguish coming from the large monitor shattered any further resistance that For'mya may have had.

“Damn...” Pusintin gasped. “He's pounding the shit out of her! Look at that For'mya! I think she's beginning to like it! You think he already blew inside her? This is great stuff!”

“Stop!” For'mya gasped in defeat.

Pusintin turned his head and looked at her. Her face was a mask of horror and pain, tears streaking her cheeks and mixing with the blood that leaked from between her lips. “What did you say?”

“Stop this.” For'mya rasped out.

“What was that?” Pusintin grunted.

“Stop this I beg you!” For'mya screamed now. “I... I will... I will do what you wish! Just stop this and leave her be!”

Pusintin reached out and touched the panel. “Phy'iad! Step back!” He barked.

For'mya saw the Immortal's head come up slightly and then he obediently withdrew his cock from Dysea and turned to face a hidden video drone somewhere in the room he was in. His cock dripped with juices and he had a feral look on his face, his vampiric fangs showing clearly beneath his upper lip.

Pusintin turned back to For'mya and loosened his grip on her hair so that she could drop to the deck flat footed. “Don't play games with me elf bitch!” He growled. “I'll make sure Phy'iad fucks her in every hole while you watch! And then you'll watch as his men have their way with her!”

“Stop this!! I... I told you!” For'mya screamed. “I told you... I would do as you say, damn you to hell!” She stammered. “You... you must let her go! You must let... you must let my son go!”

“No deal!” Pusintin snapped.

“I will do as you want forn ronnus!” She screamed hatefully. “I will... I will do these things! Let Dysea go! If you have... if you have any shred of decency in you... you will not shame her in this way! Let Bryon go! He is... he is all I have left! You have no need of them! You have... you have taken everything from me that I have ever loved!”

“I'm no fool For'mya.” Pusintin snapped.

“What do you want damn you!” She screamed.

Pusintin held up the data pad to her face. “Read it!” He growled.

“I... I already read it!” She barked.

“Not all of it!” Pusintin said. “Now read it! The last paragraph! And then put your thumb there to make it official! Do it!”

For'mya looked down at the pad once more and read it, the dread and shame filling her even as all hope disappeared as the words flashed in front of her eyes. She glanced up at him with horror in her dark brown eyes and saw only the sneer of contempt and hate staring back at her.

“You... you putrid excuse for a man!” For'mya snarled at him with vicious hate. “Your... your father would... he would disembowel you where you stand for...”

Pusintin yanked on her hair savagely causing her to yelp once more in pain. “I don't care what you think of me you stupid wench! You are a whore to me! Nothing more! And do not attempt to tell me what my father would do! You didn't know my father! My brother didn't know our father elf bitch!” He put his face inches from hers, his eyes filled with savage anger. “Now what will it be upae! I grow tired of these games!”

For'mya glared at him with equal savageness. “How... how do I know you will keep... keep your word?”

“I’m not giving you my word you dumb bitch!” Pusintin snapped. “You will do it... or you will watch the only two things left in your pathetic life that you care about die slow and painful deaths! And it will be your fault! All of it! Now what is it going to be? No more games For'mya!”

For'mya Leonidas looked at the monitor as more tears streamed from her eyes now. It was all gone now. Martin Leonidas. Her beloved fellow Queens and their children with him. She had nothing left of herself, nothing left except the chance to save all that remained of their family. She shuddered in shame and disgust even as she spoke the word. To save Dysea... to save her son... her words to Resumar only a few months before filled her head.

“There is nothing I would not do to safeguard those I love Resumar. Just as your father and any of your mothers would do. I would endure a life of solitude and pain to insure that those I love were safe. We all would and that is where our power as a family lays my son. We have our disagreements and arguments, no family is without them, but in the end... what has your father instilled in all of you... in all of us?”

“Blood before all else.” Resumar stated softly.

For'mya nodded slowly. “Blood before all else. No matter the pain that may be caused, no matter the reasons behind it, it is never intentional and must always be forgiven.”

There would be no forgiveness for what she was about to do. No forgiveness and nothing would remain but the pain, shame and misery.

“Yes.” She whispered.

“Say it louder wench!” Pusintin shouted in her face.

“Yes! Yes damn you to hell! Yes!” For'mya bellowed even as the tears erupted from her eyes.

Pusintin held up the pad. “Sign it!” He snarled.

No... there would be no forgiveness For'mya knew as she pressed her thumb to the pad and effectively altered her remaining years forever. There would be no forgiveness... but perhaps there would be revenge for all that this foul man had taken from her. Vengeance for what he had done and what he was forcing her to do to save those that remained of her once beautiful family.

Pusintin pulled the pad back and shoved her to the floor where she curled into a ball and let the tears flow even more freely. He reached out and touched the control panel with a sneer of contempt.

“Phy'iad?” He barked.

“Yes.” The voice filled the COM.

“I have what I want.” Pusintin spoke. “Do as we agreed and then release her to Laustinos when he arrives.”

“My credits?” Phy'iad demanded.

“Already transferred.” Pusintin told him. “Spend them well Immortal scum. And pray I never see you again.”

Pusintin touched the panel once more and it went dark before Phy'iad could reply. He looked at For'mya on the floor as she gazed up at him. “You bastard! Laustinos! You... you gave her to that traitorous dog! You were to set her free!”

“And she will be free!” Pusintin growled. “She’ll be alive and she’ll be Laustinos’s mate! With my brother dead... once he knocks her up she’ll be bound to him forever just as our old laws say it should be. At least until she kills him.” Pusintin laughed. “If you think I’m stupid enough to allow her to go free and begin to plot against me you are sorely mistaken.”

“And my... and my son?” For'mya barked.

“I’ll hang on to him until you complete your end of our bargain!” Pusintin spoke. “Don’t worry... he won’t be harmed. It’s not his fault his parents are too fucking weak to die with a little honor.”

“Honor! What do you know of honor?” For'mya screamed. “You strike against children and innocents! And you call yourself a man?”

Pusintin sneered at her. “We’ll see how much a man I am when I’m sitting on the throne of the Union!” He spat.

“How... how do you... how do you live with yourself? After all... all the innocent men, women and children you have butchered?” For'mya sobbed.

Pusintin laughed. "Quite well actually." He stated. "You have an hour before I return. I'll have everything else you need to sign and then we'll complete our agreement. Clean yourself up while you're at it. You're bleeding all over my deck! One hour For'mya."

For'mya Leonidas watched as he turned from her and exited out the door of the quarters without so much as looking back at her. That is when For'mya Leonidas, the Second Elven Queen of the Lycavorian Union and Elear broke down completely. Her wails of anguish could be heard by Pusintin as he walked smugly down the corridor. He had half of what he wanted and needed and when he returned she would give him the other half.

Pusintin grinned. It might even be fun.

BELID

Phy'iad turned back as the transmission ended and he looked hungrily at Dysea's naked and sweaty body and ass. She was by far the finest elf female he had ever fucked and he grinned savagely as he stepped closer. Perhaps he would keep her and just kill this Laustinos fool when he arrived. The image of Dysea and Osiri on their knees begging for his Immortal cock made him even harder. Dysea's body heaved with effort, her ass and back covered in sweat, most of it his from having to force himself into her depths. He stepped closer to her and placed his hands on her hips once more.

"Now that my business dealings are done... it's time to enjoy myself Elf Queen!" He spat loudly. "I'm am going to enjoy breaking you Dysea. I think I will just kill this Laustinos when he arrives! I will enjoy listening to you beg for my cock everyday for the rest of your life far more than any credits I could spend! How often do you have a Queen begging you to fuck her everyday?"

Dysea's head came up now, her face a visage of rage even as her lips trembled in fear and doubt. "I... I will kill you!" She screamed.

Phy'iad laughed heartily as he positioned himself to slam into her once more. "You will beg for my Immortal cock is what you will do Elf Queen!" This brought laughter from the other six Immortals in the room as they looked at each other and enjoyed the show their commander was giving them. "You are so tight Dysea... and I was close elf bitch! This time... this time Pusintin isn't barking in my ears for me to stop! This time I'm going to dump my seed into you and watch you beg for more!"

Cirith Esavorna had waited long enough watching as this putrid Immortal slob defiled her beautiful Dysea. She could no longer stand by and watch. She took a step forward, beginning to will away the shadows when someone beat her to the punch.

"Phy'iad!" Kr'nak bellowed stepping forward almost too fast for an Immortal and stopped in front of Dysea's head.

Phy'iad looked at his most senior commander as he readied himself to shove his cock into Dysea once more. "Kr'nak my friend!" He laughed. "I will share her with you for your loyalty to me! As soon as I have broken her you can have her!"

"Before you break her Commander... I wish to look into her eyes and watch as her will dwindles away!" Kr'nak barked. "If you will allow me!"

Phy'iad laughed. "So be it!"

Kr'nak dropped to one knee in front of Dysea, her wide emerald eyes staring at him in shock and the beginnings of betrayal. She watched him as he bent over and quickly retrieved something from the floor and pressed it into her palm. "Strike well Dysea Leonidas." He softly whispered to her. "Strike well."

Dysea looked down into her hand and saw the restraint key and a powerful surge of hate and anger and glee rushed through her. Never again would Dysea Leonidas doubt the honor or fortitude of the Akruxian people. Cha'talla had made her see that nothing is out of reach with what he had built on Kranek. Cha'talla taught her that even the most hated of enemies could become the very closest of friends and family. Cha'talla had taught her all this, made her see that it was all possible, and Kr'nak's actions had just reaffirmed all that Dysea had come to believe and honor these last months. She didn't hesitate in her actions and pressed the blunt end of the key to the small indent in the restraints. She heard the soft beep and looked up instantly and saw Kr'nak smile.

“CIRITH! NOW!” Kr'nak screamed as he rose to his feet, pivoted toward the door while bringing up his SA80, and he pulled back on the trigger with unrestrained glee.

Phy'iad looked up with wide eyes from where he had been staring at Dysea's ass and saw a flash of shadow movement directly to his front. His eyes took in his most trusted commander as he sent a blistering barrage of concentrated fire at the three guards nearest the door, watching as their unsuspecting bodies began to do a macabre dance of death as they absorbed the full force of an entire two hundred round magazine of heavy caliber kinetic projectiles. As his head twisted around to follow the flashes of shadows his eyes grew even wider when the tall vampire female unwrapped the shadows from around her taut body, the distinct flashes of steel easy enough to discern as she set upon his other three men. Phy'iad had always prided himself on his ability to prepare and never be caught off guard. He was always one step ahead of those who either wanted him dead or whom he wanted dead. He had never been defeated in single combat by anyone he had faced, Lycavorian, Kavalian or even fellow Immortals, though he would never admit that he had never fought fair. He had grown to incorrectly consider himself totally indestructible. As he watched with wide eyes, the first lethal downward slash of those dual blades that purebloods so favored, Phy'iad saw the throats of two of his men begin to fountain blood high into the air in arcs so lofty they reached a full meter across the floor. As weapons clattered to the ground and dull like sounds of explosions and alarms began to sound in his base Phy'iad turned back to push himself away from the restrained elf Queen.

What he found however, that was something completely different.

What he found was the image he would take to the grave, for it would be the last thing he saw in this lifetime and it was fitting in an ironic sort of way for all he had done. What he found was not a restrained Dysea, but a fearsome she-elf wolf with evil black ringed emerald eyes glaring at him with a crazed lunacy he had never witnessed before.

The pain was almost non-existent his brain told him as he turned and saw those black ringed emerald eyes of fire staring back at him. He saw a wild mane of platinum blond hair that curved elegantly around four inch high elven ears and flawless facial features. He saw soft lips now curled back to reveal the most vicious set of wolf fangs he had ever seen on a female. Long, wolf thick, flesh piercing fangs with smaller but no less sharp and lethal fangs on the inside of those larger ones. His wide eyes saw that mask of undeniable savagery and for the first time in his thousands of years of life Phy'iad of the Immortals felt fear. It would be all he felt except pain before death took him.

“I told you... I told you I would kill you!” Dysea's voice sounded strange even to her as she spoke those words with evil glee and twisted her right hand with all of her combined elf and wolf strength.

Phy'iad of the Immortals felt the sharp tug on his body and his wide eyes looked down as his large cock separated his from body and dropped to the metal floor covered in blood. He watched as blood spurted out of the newly created opening in his body and it was then that the horrific pain reached his brain and he opened his mouth to scream. The sound never came out as Dysea lifted the second of the blades Cha'talla had crafted just for her. They were perfectly balanced and weighted just for her, and over the last few weeks Dysea had quickly discarded the dual Shakur fighting knives she had carried for years in favor of these exquisitely forged blades. She lifted the second of these blades and drove it through the bottom of Phy'iad's jaw and deeply into his twisted brain.

“No man touches me but Martin Leonidas!” Dysea screamed into the dying Phy'iad's face, spraying spittle across his cheeks and open eyes. “No man!”

The first plunge of the blade into his chest severed his Immortal heart in two cleanly, but Dysea did not stop there as she leaped upon him in the grips of a berserker rage, using all of her strength to plunge that blade into his chest and abdomen over and over again even as his body fell over backwards to the floor beneath him and she rode him down.

Cirith turned towards the sound even as she twisted the jaw of the third Immortal brutally to the right and drove her blade into the back of his head behind his ear. As she twisted the shaft of her knife cruelly his body went limp instantly, the expert knife thrust completely severing his brain stem and then the blade mangling the entire rear portion of his brain. Cirith stepped back as he joined his comrades on the floor of the room, his blood mingling with theirs as it spread rapidly across the ground from the mortal wounds that no amount of blood they could ever ingest would heal. Her cobalt blue eyes fell on Dysea and she watched for a few seconds as Dysea plunged her blade into Phy'iad's body over and over, blood gushing from his chest in half a dozen locations and showering her naked flesh.

"Dysea!" She sobbed as she began to move for her.

Kr'nak grabbed her arm however and held her back. "No Cirith Esavorna." He spoke firmly. "Let her... let her be!"

"Kr'nak she..."

"She is exercising the demons inside her Cirith... for what he was able to do!" Kr'nak spoke softly, his own face splashed with blood from the wounds of the men he had killed. "Orthagyrrh Cirith. Natha k'olahin d'ilta quortek lu'ilta shar." (Redemption. A cleansing of her soul and mind.)

Cirith tore her eyes from Dysea and looked at him. "Orn il tlu...?" (Will she be...?)

Kr'nak nodded. "In time." He stated as another explosion sounded, this one shaking the interior of the base. "Come. We must secure the door to this room before they make their way here and discover Phy'iad is dead!"

Whatever thoughts were running through the minds of Phy'iad's men, not one of them was concerned with finding out why their commander was not storming out of the main control room and fighting with them.

They were far more concerned with staying alive in the face of a concentrated attack by individuals who not only knew war... but were masters at it. The twenty-seven Immortals that were occupying the area near the reinforced steel doors at the main entrance to their base and laughing as they watched their commander fuck the elf queen were confused. Confused by the sudden loss of the feed from the main communications room and the sounds of explosions and weapons fire. They turned from the monitors to watch as the massive doors opened without a command from them. The main entrance to the Immortal base opened into a wide expanse of flat prairie like grounds. There were an even dozen defensive positions from which they could get behind and hold off an attacking force three or four times their number for hours.

Of course, those positions had to be manned in order for them to actually work.

With over half their number of three thousand six hundred Immortals actively loading equipment and supplies aboard the many smaller shuttles within the three hanger bays of the base and shuttling that equipment to their ships in orbit, none of the exterior defensive positions were occupied. As the main doors swung to the sides and completely opened the twenty-seven Immortals saw two things.

The first thing they saw caused whatever smiles they had on their faces to vanish in an instant. They saw a single Lycavorian Spartan in full armor standing proudly beside a strange looking but easily identifiable Immortal because of the bone spurs, but this one had a head covered with dark hair. An Immortal that had deeply tanned skin and not the normal grayish pallor of death color. A Immortal that wore similar body armor as the Spartan but no helmet. That Immortal held only two swords and the Spartan a single Nehtes. Behind them stood two massive dragons, one with scales that were deep blue in color and the other with greenish scales and yellow wings. Behind those first four figures the Immortals saw the second thing and this made their blood go cold in fear. What could only be described as two hundred pairs of eyes that burned with determination and bearing no mercy or pity in them in the least. A combination of Lycavorian Spartans and these odd looking Immortals. All of them staring at Phy'iad's men as if they were the main course of a fine meal.

"Knock... knock motherfuckers!" Denali Leonidas called out loudly, echoing the words of a game his mothers Anja and Aricia would play with them as children.

Denali Leonidas had changed over these last days. The second of Martin and Aricia's pureblooded Lycavorian sons had always been the one to make the others express amusement with some comment or joke. His bravery and skill were without question, but he was also the most playful of them. The easiest going and the one who could make everyone laugh with their brother Arrarn. That still remained inside him, but Denali had grown through the horrors of the last few days. He had grown and it was because Androcles had given him command without question. He realized this not only because he was his brother, but because Androcles knew that Denali Leonidas was capable of so much more. As Cha'talla and the Immortals had discovered so much about themselves in the last days, so had Denali. He had discovered what his father had already known, what Andro had already known. Denali was a natural leader. One of those leaders that was born and not made. Denali would never take anything for granted ever again. He would not waste one moment of life and he intended to live and to lead just as his father did. With all that he was. He had shown this to Lisisa his beautiful cousin, now his precious mate and wife just the night before. He had taken her with more passion and desire and instinctual nature than he ever had before and it had her howling out his name in heavenly abandon. Now he would rescue his first elven mother and then they would return and he would stand beside his brother and father as they exacted Spartan justice on those who had done these evil things to their family.

The Immortals sensed that Denali's words must have been a cue of some sort, for both the Spartan and the strange looking Immortal stepped to the side and the eyes of the Immortals went wide in horror as all of them realized what was coming next. Aradace and Vollenth each inhaled deeply and unleashed their own version of Spartan and true Akruvian justice. A single stream of superheated breath and one of pure flame erupted from their maws with impeccable control and merciless power. Nearly three thousand degree heat combined with fifteen hundred degree flames caught the twenty-seven Immortals in the heart of the conflagration and twenty-seven Immortals died within six seconds. Skin peeled from bone, flesh melted from the pure incinerating heat, internal organs burst and this was followed and dwarfed by the roar of two hundred men and women as they lifted their weapons and roared out their combined anger and battle cry. Denali Leonidas and Cha'talla were the first to sprint forward without pause, Aradace and Vollenth following without a moment's hesitation and then the rest surged forward after them.

“NO MERCY!” Lisisa screamed as she ran an Immortal through his thick chest with her Nehtes, her voice reverberating among the valley walls and rising above the sounds of steel and weapons fire. That a shout could come out of such a diminutive figure was amazing in and of itself, but it was unmistakable and utterly clear.

“WE STAND HERE!” Narice's voice echoed equally as loud, blood already staining her helmet and uniform as she twirled around next to Lisisa, her dual blades already saturated with Immortal blood.

It would have been almost comical to look at and witness had the blood and body parts not been flying. Jeth and Deneth plunged directly into the mass of bodies right behind their Bonded Sisters, their psychic shields flaring brightly as projectile rounds bounced harmlessly in all directions. Jeth's massive body crushing several Immortals beneath his nearly eight tons of muscle and power. Jeth looked nothing like his mother Isheeni, growing to be almost identical to his father in every way. What he had inherited from his beloved mother were the wickedly curved and savagely sharp talons so common to Firespitter dragons. It was these talons that he used with utter devastation. And while Deneth lacked Jeth's years of training, he did not lack for bravery or skill. He simply used his talons to cripple and his wings as armored battering rams that crushed bone instantly. He also had no problem with snatching Immortals up within his powerful jaws and crushing their bodies before flinging them through the air. One he even used to batter two of his comrades into pulp using his TK power before flinging the lifeless body nearly a hundred meters away into the trees.

Four hundred pounds of high explosives had rendered the rear southern entrance to the Immortal base nothing but a gaping hole. The combined team of Lycavorian and Akruvian engineers had worked feverishly to set the explosives and then they had intentionally triggered the proximity alarms to warn the Immortals inside the base that there was someone outside their base that wanted in. Just as the doors began to open, the Lycavorian Chief Engineer triggered the explosives with a glint of evil madness in his eyes as he turned and looked at his six fellow Spartans and four Immortal warriors who had been part of his team. Denali and Cha'talla had insured that all the units were integrated so that they could build cohesion and further the bond that they had already begun to form. Six Lycavorians and four Immortals had carried four hundred pounds of explosives between them with nary a problem and they now watched with pride as their work paid off.

The southern entrance was closest to the three hangers in the base and as the alarms began to sound, nearly a thousand Immortals under Phy'iad's command had massed near the doors. The ensuing explosion killed nearly a hundred outright, crushing or shredding their bodies and injuring just as many. The remaining seven hundred plus Immortals, assuming they were under attack by Lycavorian forces, rushed from the base into the newly created cloud of dust and dirt to do battle. And that is when Lisisa and Narice brought them screaming out of the sky with the rising sun at their back. Jeth and Deneth were the only ones to get blasts of their breath and flame off before the two very petite but highly skilled women plowed into the first ranks of the Immortals without pause and twenty additional High Coven dragons followed suit with piercing trumpets of anger and pride less than ten seconds later. They had their baptism under fire on Kranek, led by a pureblood vampire Princess they all knew and respected and a half breed Union Princess who had helped to forge them into what they were now and fought with ferocity unmatched. As they traveled here they talked among each other, plotting and planning, merging what they had learned about each other and their success and mistakes on Kranek with what Androcles Leonidas and his siblings had taught them. They were no longer untested or unsure of themselves and as they roared out of the sky and fell upon the Immortals without hesitation behind the two petite females who led them, they unleashed that knowledge and skill now.

Talons ripped open flesh, wings snapped forward and crushed bones, psychic shields flared but did not fail and the slaughter was on from there. This fight was not about survival anymore. This fight was about the criminal Immortals and their actions. These male and female vampires had gone to Earth unfocused and without purpose. Yes... they had bonded with their dragons, but had no idea what they could accomplish together. Androcles and his siblings had taught them that. They taught them they could be so much more than what the Empress had planned for them to be. This battle was about the Immortals attempting to take the elven mother of the man they all revered now. This battle was about choice and how they had all chosen to live the lives that first Androcles and then his brothers and sisters showed them they could have. This battle was about retribution for what the Immortals had a hand in perpetrating. Now they would learn the folly of their actions and it would forever seal the paths of almost eighty souls moving into the future.

Danarla stood on the ridge to the west of the small valley watching impatiently as the battle waged below them. She had three hundred Spartans and Immortals manning nearly a hundred and twenty heavy weapons emplacements on the ridge she physically stood on, and on the opposite ridge across the small valley from where she stood. Heavy weapons that they had muscled to their locations together without complaint and with practiced ease. She had Chain Cannons which fired 40mm projectile shells from belt felt drums that rested on the ground. She had Plasma Pulse turrets that were powered by the cumbersome battery cell packs that rested next to them, and she had automatic Plasma Grenade launcher turrets which were a newer weapon only now making its way into the Union inventory. In truth Danarla had never seen so many heavy weapons emplacements lined up in the lethal manner they were right now. Decades of fighting the High Coven and Immortals and now she found herself commanding Immortals who followed her orders without question. Immortals that looked to her for leadership. How sardonic were the gods of fate and war she thought. Danarla knew the difference however, and these were Immortals that no longer looked or even thought like those she had fought or seen. These Immortals were led by a man many had thought long dead and who now followed a path of honor, pride and deed she could not deny. A man whose two oldest sons were now married or about to be married to half elf females that they worshiped more than their own lives. One of whom was her very own daughter.

Whatever doubt that may have resided in her body, whatever worry she may have had for As'hia, it quickly evaporated the instant she held her youngest child in her arms once more. Whatever discord or doubt she may have had about As'hia's future was irrevocably erased when she saw the way Lynom gazed at her, the way his scent spiked with her next to him and the way As'hia, her youngest, most reckless but the most skilled of her three daughters cooed out her eternal delight in his powerful arms. As'hia had not been a very powerful Mindvoicer before all of this had occurred, certainly not on the same level as her mother who was considered a high level Tier Five Mindvoicer. What As'hia had shown her within her mind and the simple ease with which she now projected her thoughts was shocking to say the least. As'hia was now easily a Tier Six if Danarla was any judge. As'hia had shown her all that had happened to her and the way Lynom had protected her and saved her and then finally surrendered to her all that he was. Seeing this and then As'hia doing the same, that was something Danarla could not, something she would not deny. Danarla had watched as her daughter sat between his legs, leaning back against him intimately as they finished making their plans. She saw the way Lynom absently nuzzled her elven ears without thought, the way her hands stroked his forearm or thigh. Danarla had glanced at her elven husband who she so loved and knew he could see the same things. She knew her husband was stubborn and as obstinate as any elf, but he had pursued her with a single minded determination that had finally won her over. Her elven mate was not the largest man who had ever shared her bed, but he was the one that had burned her senses more than any other in her life and that included Lycavorians. He was larger physically than most elves, tall and powerfully built, and Danarla had burned his wonderful scent into her brain within the first hour of meeting him. In the time on Kranek, dealing with everything and worrying for their youngest daughter, it had brought them far closer than they had ever been before and they had rekindled the passionate lovemaking that their duties had caused to slip in these last years. A new day was being born all around them on this foul planet, but a new era had already been well underway with first Tir'ut and Princess Normya and now Lynom and her daughter. It was an era that Danarla and Ta'lon had every intention of embracing completely.

The flash of movement from the dust shrouded entrance brought her attention fully back to the present and she watched as dozens of Immortal teams began pouring from the entrance carrying what could only be T19 Dragon Killer missiles. Right behind them were hundreds more Immortals preparing to fall upon the survivors of the missile barrage they thought they were about to unleash. Danarla had other plans however.

“All placements!” She barked into her implant. “Targets acquired! Prepare to engage!”

Danarla felt a sense of pride as she heard both Immortal and Lycavorian respond to her orders and weapons were charged and locked. She was about to become the first Lycavorian to ever lead Immortals in battle and that simply made her flush with pride. Danarla saw the first missile team stop and bring their missile launchers up.

“FIRE! FIRE! FIRE!” Danarla screamed. “KILL THEM ALL!”

The first rank of missile toting Immortals had dropped to their knees in preparation of targeting and then firing the T19 missiles they had. The missile team commander was barking out orders at the top of his lungs as some five hundred more charged their weapons behind them and waited to throw themselves into battle and kill the survivors of what they knew would be a slaughter with so many T19 missiles. No dragon would be able to survive the barrage they were about to unleash. As his head turned to check on all of his teams he thought he heard a female's voice in the distance to the side rising above the din of dragon trumpets and the screams of the dying. His eyes darted to one side of the valley entrance and grew wide when he saw dozens of figures moving about within the treeline above them. He could almost hear the clatter of heavy weapons as they were locked into place. His eyes cut to the opposite side of the valley and he saw her then. Some four hundred meters away, dressed in Spartan armor and standing beside what could only be a plasma turret. He saw her mouth move, heard her words carried on the wind and he swore he could see her look right at him as the entrance to hell opened and reached for him and his men.

One hundred and twenty heavy weapons opened up at the same time, large chain cannon turrets, plasma turrets, even plasma grenade launchers and the cacophony of sound drowned out even the dragons as they trumpeted out their glee. The hundreds of Immortals had made the mistake of massing their troops together tightly as they exited the base. They had forgotten their training in the years since leaving the Coven and becoming mercenaries and slavers, and that simple fact would spell their eternal doom today. The plasma turrets and 40mm chain turrets did not discriminate in the least and in seconds that small valley was running red with bright red blood as Immortals were literally chopped into grisly bits of flesh and bone. They were mowed down as if some great invisible hand swept down and crushed them into oblivion. T19 missiles exploded from direct hits and added their own explosive force to the conflagration, not one of them leaving the launchers. It wasn't really fair by any standard of warfare, but then again war was never about being fair, and the pirate Immortals of Phy'iad's group learned a harsh lesson that would be taught many times in the future when it came to the Lycavorian Union and those men and women who led their troops.

A fair fight was only fair in the eye of the victor.

To the Immortals behind the weapons emplacements, it was about the future. All of them had been present for Cha'talla's speech after they had won on Kranek. All of them had willingly embraced the path Cha'talla had set them on more than two decades ago. On Kranek they had been free to chose their own paths and lives and they all had done just that. They witnessed the acceptance they received from the elves and others they had rescued or helped once these men and women realized that their Immortal tribe was very different. Many had Akruxian Immortal wives and based on what their Matriarch Mother Esther had done for them, many were inspired to return and see their wives. To show them the true Akruxian people. The younger Immortals, those that were not married, were now stirred to discover all they could about their people of old. They would no longer be afraid to go out into the stars and interact with others without fear and hate in the eyes of those they wanted to befriend. Now they knew they would no longer be looked down upon by others. Cha'talla had given this back to them, this sense of duty and pride and history. Now they were being led by a Lycavorian female with excellent experience whose own half elf daughter would soon be the Blessed Wife of another of Cha'talla's sons. Her elven husband had moved among them without fear as they traveled here, talking with many of them as an equal and with respect and even sharing laughter despite the circumstances they found themselves in. These Immortal scum before them had chosen the wrong path in life and now they would extinguish that blight upon their species and their history forever. Word had already gone out among all of them from both Cha'talla and Denali Leonidas. They would take no prisoners this day. Any among the millions of their people still within the High Coven who chose to stand against the future would fall before them. That is what they all swore this day.

Danarla kept careful watch on the valley before them, listening to her implant as well and waiting. That single word sounded over her COM implant and every single COM implant worn by Lycavorian or Akruxian in the valley.

“EXECUTE!”

One hundred and twenty heavy weapons shifted fire just as some twenty dragons soared skyward, many lifting their Bonded ones directly out of the mass of bodies with TK power and depositing them in their saddles as they screamed skyward.

Lisisa felt the dragon armor close around her legs and she looked behind her as Jeth's massive wings propelled them skyward. She saw Narice and Deneth on her right, and even from the distance between them she could see Narice's cobalt blue eyes alive and bright. They watched as those heavy weapons altered their fields of fire with unerring accuracy and as they cleared the tree tops of the mountains around them, leaving battered and broken bodies of hundreds of Immortals on the ground below, that single-minded wave of death obliterated whatever remained.

It was here that Lynom, Tir'ut, Normya and As'hia and the nearly eight hundred Spartans and Immortals came charging over the top of the ridge they had been hiding behind and plunged through the gore and blood. Danarla caught a quick picture of her youngest daughter as she stood beside Lynom and then they led that combined force into the Immortal base without hesitation.

EARTH EDEN GROUND COMMAND SOUTHERN UTAH

It was truly abandoned now.

From the looks of it, no one had been here since Ben and his tech heads had striped it bare almost twenty-six years ago. Most of the buildings still stood and that is where Daniel Simpson now sat. On top of the administration building looking out over what had once been the base they called home so many years ago. Scrub brush and dust now covered most of what had once been a thriving Air Force Base with a hidden secret beneath it. Danny couldn't bring himself to enter that portion of the base, there were far too many memories and it was painful enough as it was. Danny caught his scent on the wind even as the soft flutter of Elynth's wings disturbed the still air. He heard the soft scraping of two sets of boots on the sand blasted tarmac below and then the shift of air as Andro used his TK power to lift himself to the roof where he sat. Danny didn't want to turn because his son looked so much like his father that it would make the pain of loss return even harder. Danny reached out across the space in front of him, holding the neck of the beer bottle in his hand.

“This is where... this is where it all started for us.” He spoke softly. “This is where we discovered what we could do. It sure as shit scared the hell out of us!” Danny spoke before he downed the last of the warm bottle of beer and then tossed it to the side to join the nearly six cases of others in the pile. He turned and reached inside the case that was beside him and pulled out two more, using his strength to twist off the tops. He held one out behind him. “Beer?”

Andro walked up behind the man he called Uncle Danny. The man who had taught him almost as much as his father. About being a Spartan, a wolf, a warrior and a man. He squatted down next to him, taking the beer without question, his eyes drifting to the pile of empty bottles and then to his uncle who took a long pull of the tall bottle. The beer was cold surprisingly and Andro lifted it to his lips and took a long drink as well. It had been a long time since he had tasted beer, they only pulled it out for very special occasions, and it felt immensely refreshing as it went down. He glanced over at the pile of empties once more and then out over the tops of the buildings as his uncle was doing.

“How much have you had?” He asked. “You’ve been out here for almost four days.”

Danny chuckled. “You know... Anja says it would take nearly three hundred bottles of beer before a Lycavorian got really drunk.” Danny lifted the one in his hand. “Three hundred and nine and all I got is a fucking buzz. Ain’t that a bitch?”

“Aunt Anuk and Aunt Nayeca are worried about you. You won’t answer them.” Andro said softly. “You won’t answer anyone... and you are not known for using the full power of your shields Uncle. You have been working with the Feravomir I see.”

“Yeah... well... I ain’t real good company for anyone right now.” Danny answered. “No sense in them having to deal with that.” He looked at his nephew. “How’d you find this place?”

He asked and then held up his hand quickly. “Never mind. You knew where I’d come... you have his memories.”

“Yes.” Andro said softly again. “The Kavalians have... they have taken my mother For'mya Uncle Danny.”

Danny cut his head sharply and looked at him. “What do you mean taken? She was in the Senate Building with Deia!”

Andro shook his head. “We pulled Tenna from the rubble nearly thirty-six hours ago. She’s badly injured but alive. They... they took my mother before they brought the building down. Laustinos was helping them.”

“Laustinos! That nubous pencil dick creeper!” Danny snarled.

“I went to the Kavalian embassy... they told me they would kill her if we attempted to retaliate against them for what they think they have done.” Andro continued evenly. There was nothing he would keep from this man who had a part in raising him. “What was I supposed to do? Denali, Lisisa and Cha'talla are going after the Immortals who took my first elven mother and Resumar is so deep in Kavalian space with his ass hanging out it isn’t even funny. Janae is missing and...”

“Janae?” Danny rasped out.

Andro looked at him and nodded. “I brought Anton and Cihera back to help Zarah find her.” He said. “I don’t believe she is off world. She was either taken by another Kavalian team which I strongly suspect, or she has gone into hiding.”

Danny shook his head. “If she went into hiding she would have contacted you by now. That was the plan. Seventy-two hours and she reports in.”

Andro nodded. “Which leads me to believe that she has been taken and they have done the same thing to her that they did to my mothers. They have blocked her Mindvoice abilities.” He said. “Quite a bit has happened since you have been here Uncle Danny and now I need you to help me.”

Danny looked at him for a long moment and then turned back to the horizon. “I... I let your father down. He should be here... not me. He... I have other brothers... blood brothers... but he was...”

“The brother of your heart?” Andro said softly.

“I let him down Androcles.” Danny spoke nodding his head. “I let him down and now he is... now he is gone. I wouldn’t be any good to you or to anyone. What you and Elynth did that night... that was fitting. He would have... he would have liked that.”

Andro took another long pull from the beer and smiled. “Actually... he chewed my ass for destroying the clinic like that.” Andro saw Danny’s eyes whip around once more to look at him wide eyed. “What did you nubous do that for? Do you know how much it cost to build that clinic? How many people it served? Your mother will have your mida for that!” He said trying his best to imitate his father’s deep voice. He met his uncle’s eyes. “My father isn’t dead Uncle Danny. And neither is my mother.”

“Ah... don’t you start with that sibfla about how they will always be with us!” Danny spat looking away once more. “I got that from my mother and sisters before I left Sparta! It drives me nuts!”

“No Uncle Danny... they aren’t dead.” Andro insisted seeing his uncle turn to him once more. “They are on Curila 6. He... he was hurt... but he’s recovered now. He... you know him as well as I do Uncle. He always has plans within plans in his head... faking his own death was one of them. He had discussed it with my mothers, but the plan was not even close to being complete. When he saw what was happening... he made a split second decision and had Yuriko use the SGT system to teleport him and Torma off Earth.” Andro got to his feet as Danny rose to his full height of six foot four and stared at him with wide eyes. “He was injured badly... but Filrian healed him. He did not expect the enormity of what my bastard uncle Pleistarchus and the Kavalians would do. He was locked in a Mindvoice loop for two and a half days because he could not feel my elven mothers. Yuriko called for help.”

Danny’s eyes were wide as a litany of emotions smashed through him. “Not... not dead?” He finally was able to stammer.

Andro shook his head. “Yuriko called my mother Anja and she went there. I... Elynth and I discovered this when we entered the clinic. For lack of a better description it was some sort of delayed Mindvoice recording from our fathers. That is why I destroyed the clinic. To protect this knowledge. What you saw that day... it was a clone of my father and the remains of Javier Moran’s dragon made to look like Torma. It came as... it came as quite the shock to us as well.”

“Why... why didn’t he tell me? Why didn’t you tell me?” Danny growled angrily.

“He couldn’t... he was locked in this loop within Mindvoice as I said. It took my mothers to bring him out of it. Perhaps thirty-six hours ago.” Andro said evenly not taking offense at the tone of Danny’s voice. “And I have been dealing with far more than you know Uncle. While you may not consider yourself a very good Mindvoicer and you do not use the skill as much as you should, penetrating your shields would require that I concentrate and focus intently. I haven’t had time to shit let alone concentrate on anything except what the Kavalians have done. I’m sorry.”

“Arrgghhh!” Danny screamed as he turned and heaved his beer bottle far out into open space watching as it curved downward and shattered on the ground some three hundred feet away. “What a fucking idiot I am!” He swore loudly now. “I should have known! I should have known Pusintin couldn’t kill him no matter how good a plan he had! I’ve been around your father since we were knee high to god! I should have known he’d have some slick plan up his sleeve! Fuck!”

“If it makes you feel any better... he had us all fooled initially.” Andro spoke. “It’s not the way he planned it... and it got away from him for a time.”

Danny whirled around. “Curila 6? He’s on Curila 6?” He gasped.

Andro nodded. “Yes. With my mothers and Yuriko... and all those who made it off Hadaria before the Kavalians took it.”

Danny’s eyes grew wide. “Kavalians? Hadaria?” Danny stammered. “Andro... does he know about...?”

Andro shook his head slowly. “Not yet. I haven’t told him yet for fear of what he will do Uncle Danny. We only found out early yesterday. He can’t feel her within Mindvoice but he refuses to believe she is dead. I must be the one to tell him she is not and that the Kavalians have taken her.”

“Fuck Andro! He’ll go nuclear!” Danny hissed. “Jesus... it will be just like it was with your mother twenty-six years ago! He’ll start killing shit... and he won’t stop until he gets her back!”

Andro nodded. “I know... and that is why I need you to go to Curila 6 and make sure he doesn’t do this.”

“What?”

“The entire scope of the Kavalian plans have not been made known.” Andro said. “They wanted my elven mothers for a reason and we don’t yet know what Laustinos has told them or what information he has given to them. We are still trying to determine how badly he betrayed us. Marci has nearly half her people working on that. You need to go there and make sure he stays dead. If the Kavalians discover he is alive, they will undoubtedly kill my mother and then come after him again. They may even launch a full scale invasion. There will be no stopping him then. He will lay waste to everything and there will be nothing we can do. I can’t let him do that. Too much is at risk right now.”

Danny reached out and grasped Andro’s shoulders. “I need a ship! I need... shit... I need my gear! I...”

“Uncle Danny... there are others going with you.” Andro spoke. “You know of the Pralor people and what... how our history intertwines?”

Danny looked at him oddly. “Yes. Your father and I talked about it several times. What does that have to do with what is happening?”

“Well... the Pralor that my father has been talking too... his name is Wayonn and he is here now.” Andro said.

“Here? On Earth?” Danny stammered. “Wait a minute! I thought the Pralors were all dead and gone.”

Andro shook his head. “Ummm... no.” He stated slowly. “He was... he was my great grandfather’s Oracle Uncle Danny... this Wayonn. He is a Pralor who is wolf... just as our ancestor Sumar was and he is here now with about a dozen representatives of the Lycavorian Protectorate.”

“Lycavorian who?” Danny gasped.

“The Lost Ones that Canth told my father he would need to find.” Andro said.

“The Lost Ones?” Danny said shaking his head trying to process all this information. “I thought... I thought we got them off Lycavore a long time ago.”

“They were only a small part of what Canth meant.” Andro spoke with a small smile on his face. “A very small part. No... the Protectorate is... well they are pretty fucking big for lack of a better description. This Wayonn... he needs to see my father... talk with him. There are some others that are going as well that need to speak with my mother Anja and Aunt Sivana. They are... they are different but they are our friends. At least I do not sense anything nefarious from them. I do not know if they speak for all of their people however. I need you to take them. You and I... we are the only ones who are capable of holding him in check Uncle Danny. You know that.”

“No one holds your father in check boy!” Danny said quickly. “You of all people should know that.”

Andro smiled. “You have more influence over him than you think Uncle and that is why you have to go. I have one of the new TAUR’OHTAR-Class Escorts in orbit waiting for you. There’s a MENKLA on the other side of the base waiting to take you up to her.”

“Shit!” Danny spoke looking around. He bent over quickly and picked up the half empty case of beer and practically tossed it into a surprised Andro’s arms. “Take this.” He snapped as he turned back around and squatted next to where there was a pile of equipment. “I know... I know your father.” Danny was saying as he pulled something from the small belt pouch. “He’ll want someone’s ass Andro!” Andro turned and dropped the case of beer back to the roof as Danny stood back up. “Hey... that’s the good stuff! You know how long it took me to gather those cases from across the country?” He complained.

“No.” Andro replied. “And you have drunk too much. You won’t need it where you are going. None of you will.”

Danny met his eyes. “None of us?”

“Leave your gear here Uncle Danny.” Andro spoke. “I’ll have someone collect it. Ben has sent some new equipment and the others are waiting.”

“Others?” Danny asked as he saw Elynth’s huge form swoop down out of the blue sky and settle lightly to the roof of the building.

Andro nodded. “Yes... others.” He spoke as he leaped up into the saddle. “Time for you to meet them.”

The MENKLA transport and STRIKER DT sat quietly on the worn landing pad, nearly twenty men and women gathered near the lowered ramp of the MENKLA and talking amongst themselves and with Anuk and Nayeca. Wayonn stood with Dutkne, Naesta, Jomann and three of the Vanari security detail about fifty meters away from the MENKLA. Wayonn turned from watching those men and women interacting and looked at Jomann.

“Jomann... do you know these individuals?” He asked.

Jomann nodded his head. “Indeed I do Val’istar.” He answered. “But only from history books that I studied as in school as I was growing.”

Naesta looked at him. “History books?” She asked.

Jomann nodded. “They were the original members of the King’s Guard when he returned to Earth.” He spoke. “They were part of what was once called SEAL Team Twelve. It was an abbreviation for Sea Air and Land. They were the premier Special Operations forces of the time on old Earth, before the Passing of the Comet as it is called. That unit of the King’s, it was the most successful and decorated unit of old Earth time. And the most feared. Those men and women you see there had a hand in training the first hundred or so Durcunusaan with General Vengal. They are... they are perhaps some of the most lethal men and women anywhere in the universe if the history is accurate.”

Wayonn looked at Dutkne quickly. “Why is Androcles sending them to be with his father Dutkne?” He asked.

Dutkne met his eyes. “I do not know grandfather.” He replied. “Company perhaps?”

“Company?” Wayonn gasped. “Company my...” Wayonn began to stammer as Dutkne smiled. The sound of Elynth’s trumpet silenced him as she swooped in low and flared her wings only a few meters away. They watched as she settled to the ground and Andro leaped casually from her back followed by the huge black skinned Spartan. He landed just as gracefully as did Andro and it was obvious he had flown and been around dragons for some time.

Danny stood wide eyed as he looked at the men and women gathered around the rear of the MENKLA transport. “Well dip me in sibfla and call me fucking stinky!” He gasped as he saw them and didn’t hesitate in his actions. Androcles smiled as his uncle broke into a run and was met halfway across the distance separating them by Anuk and Nayeca. He stepped up next to Jomann and Dutkne as Danny laid a blistering kiss on first Anuk and then Nayeca, crushing both of them in his arms.

“Androcles... these men and women that you are sending with us?” Wayonn spoke to Andro as he walked up with the small pouch in his hand that held three data pads. “Why are they going?”

“They are my father’s friends Val’istar.” Andro answered. “What more reason should there be?”

“Your father has many friends... the majority of them not as lethal as Jomann tells us these men and women are.” Wayonn answered.

Andro looked at Dutkne and Jomann quickly and then back to Wayonn. “Perhaps.” He said softly.

“You know something you are not telling me young man.” Wayonn spoke sternly. He looked at Dutkne and Jomann. “All three of you do.”

“Do you not wish to go now Val’istar?” Andro asked.

Wayonn looked at him. “Helen told me that you and your father could be infuriating at times. She said you both could be incredibly deceitful and utterly ruthless.” He stated. “I see she was correct.”

“My father does not know about my mother yet Wayonn.” Andro spoke. “When I do tell him, the more people around him who know him and that he trusts the better. We can’t have him going off on a killing spree to get her back.”

Wayonn met his eyes. “Why do your words fill me with a sense of dread and not relief young Androcles?”

Andro shrugged his broad shoulders. “It must be my charming personality.” He stated nonchalantly.

“Rensibfla!” Wayonn spat. “What are you going to do?”

“After we see you off, Dutkne is going to meet my sister Zarah and Lucia and help them to find Janae. You know who she is and the importance of her to our family and our history.” Andro answered.

Wayonn nodded. “Helen has shown me within her thoughts yes.”

“While Dutkne is doing that Jomann and I are going to meet with Marci, she is in charge of the Krypteria for the time being, our Intelligence organization and some others and we will try to determine how much damage Laustinos has done and what he may have told the Kavalians. There is also the burial arrangements for those that were killed. The Feravomir wants me to be visible for the next few days so that we can further the façade that my father is dead.”

“Your elven mother Dysea?” Wayonn asked.

“I haven’t spoken to my brother Denali yet... but if something had gone terribly wrong I would have felt it by now.” Andro said confidently. “Their attack was to begin two hours ago and I expect to hear from him soon.”

“Resumar must complete his mission Androcles.” Wayonn spoke stepping closer. “That ship can not fall into the hands of the Kavalians.”

Andro nodded. “I agree Val’istar... and now that Shiria is with him I have complete confidence in my brother to complete his mission. They will be delayed for a few days until my Aunt and Uncle reach them, and then all of them can return here.”

Wayonn nodded. “Good.” He stated. “I will feel much better knowing Shiria is safely out of Kavalian space.”

Andro stepped closer to him. "Can you rid my father of this Xaxon's presence Wayonn?" He asked softly.

Wayonn nodded confidently. "Yes. His darkness is not part of your father's foundation Androcles. His experiences and memories and his blood have allowed him to grow without a corrupt bone in his body. No matter what he has had to do in the past... no matter the greed and temptation that he has been confronted with... he has always remained true to who he is. Just as you have. I will grab onto that and use his own pureness to purge Xaxon's essence from within him."

Andro nodded slowly. "Good." Andro turned to Naesta and held out the pouch with the three data pads to her. "Naesta... this is from your mother. You left before she was able to finish them."

Naesta looked at him as she took the three data pad pouch. "What is it?" She asked.

"I believe that one pad has your mother's official request to open diplomatic relations with the Lycavorian Union on behalf of the Vanari Empire and the Board of Regents. She wanted you to present it to my father. It is just a formality really, since I have already done this very thing." Andro said with a smile. "The second pad has my personal command Com channel on it, as well as that of Jomann here. I have assigned official designations to you, your mother, brother and sister, as well as their own COM channels so that you can speak with them privately whenever you wish. Just enter your code into any COM panel and it will automatically encrypt the transmission between you and whoever you are trying to reach."

Naesta glanced at him and gazed into his eyes intently. "Why would you do that?" She asked softly.

"It is a sign of trust Naesta." He spoke. "I believe for you to begin to truly trust me and my people, despite all you may or may not have heard and been told about us, then we need to establish trust. This is how I will begin building that trust. You seem to be the only one who still wavers in indecision and while I understand that, it is up to me to prove to you otherwise. This is the beginning."

Naesta looked down at the pouch in her hand and then back up to his eyes. "They... they say you and your father... they say that you have never broken a vow or promise that you have made to someone."

Andro's lips curled up slightly and he tilted his head to the side. "That depends on who you ask." He answered.

"Promise me you will find and rescue my sister." Naesta spoke.

"Naesta that..." Wayonn began to speak but Andro's words stopped him.

Andro took her hand in his and brought it up to his lips. Naesta saw the intensity of his eyes, how they burned with intelligence and wisdom and determination unlike any she had ever seen. "That Naesta Re Mydala... that is a promise I will gladly make... for I intend to keep it."

Naesta saw the spark and twinkle in those azure eyes and something inside her... some small little voice told her that Androcles Leonidas already knew who her sister was even if Sadi and the others did not think he knew. "What... what is on the third pad?" She stammered finally.

Andro released her hand and smiled. "Reading material for the trip and when you are not busy with other things. Your mother told Sadi that you like to read and she asked me to give it to you. It is a non-fiction audio and holonovel of some historical significance to the Lycavorian people, written by one of our most renowned playwrights. He was alive during the years after The Black Day and has chronicled historical events throughout our history. He teaches now at the University and updates this particular novel every few years and releases a new edition. Sadi had this from his classes at the University and she thought it might give you a perspective you have not had before."

"Have you read it?" Naesta asked him.

Andro chuckled and shook his head. "Oh no." He replied with a smile. "It is not first among my reading preferences. Not since I got out of school."

"What is it called?" Naesta asked.

"Pascius izou shyron for bara alee." He told her in the ancient language. "Peace unto Death and Back Again." Andro spoke.

Danny held Anuk in one arm, Nayeca in the other and he stared at the men and women in front of him as a rush of feelings and emotions swept through him. Some of them he hadn't seen in more years than he cared to remember. He watched the tall Hispanic looking man step up to him.

“Jesus XO... you damn sure ain’t got any better looking through the years.” Pablo spat playfully. “I’m better looking than you now and that ain’t no joke!”

Danny burst out laughing and the two men embraced as the others crowded around quickly. Danny felt an overwhelming feeling of brotherhood wash over him as he grabbed hands and embraced those men and women who had survived with them through those first years and went on to build their own lives here on Earth once they had discovered their true nature and who Martin was. Kenneth, Cody, Pablo... all of them that had returned to Earth and survived that High Coven attack outside Mountain City. It was as if he was swept back twenty-six years and it felt so right. Those men and women who had survived had gone about building their own lives, the majority of them right here on Earth. They had maintained contact through the years, but as with the natural course of things, they had drawn apart as events and their lives went in different directions.

Danny held Cody at arm’s length and looked at all of them. “How... how did Andro find all you guys?” Danny asked.

Kenny chuckled. “He didn’t.” He answered. “She did.” He stepped to the side and Danny followed his gaze to see the vampire clone that was Julie Collins rise from a squatting position on the ramp of the MENKLA transport, Colin Walsh next to her. She had a sheepish look on her face and held up the small transmitter.

“I got... I got back early last night and my... my parents gave me my old gear back.” She stammered. “I found our Team Transmitter in the stuff and since I knew what Androcles was going to do I activated it. Seems it still worked... even after all these years.”

Danny looked down as Anuk held up the identical transmitter in her hand. “We heard it going off in our closet. It woke little Melancton.”

Danny took the transmitter and turned back to Julie. He moved up closer to her and noticed she didn’t back down and nor did Colin.

Julie Collins. That was her name and those were the memories she carried within her. She had fought emotions and feelings all of her life, knowing that she was a clone and not really understanding why she felt she should be something else. She had felt the call of the wolf even though she was now a vampire, for those were the memories she carried. This is where she had come to find out who she was, and before she had left with Resumar Leonidas, that is the vow she had made to herself and to the man and woman who were her parents. When she returned early last night, they had been waiting for her, without question or pause. They had stayed with her while she talked with Androcles at his villa and then they had gone back to their home in Sparta. Her home now they had told her. They had not slept at all, refusing to let one moment slip by since they had rediscovered her. The warmth of their home and their arms was a feeling that Julie had found she could not live without and it was these sensations she had been lacking all of these years. These sensations and emotions that had finally been the catalyst for all of the memories she held within her head to come rushing back. They knew what she had to do, but knowing that she would be among men and women who she had regarded as family so long ago made it easier for them to accept for they knew she would be safe and among those who would protect her.

Julie stared at the man she had once considered a dear brother, a man she had once had a scorching physical relationship with. “I... I may be a vampire now after what that foul bitch did to me... but I am me. I am Julie Collins. I have my parents back... my family and I will get my life back eventually too. I don’t intend on losing that ever again.” She looked at Colin and then back to Danny. “We... we are still the same people inside Danny. We... we were part of this team... this pack once and we want to be again. It will... it will finally bring us back home because you... Martin... all of you... you are our family.”

Danny didn’t hesitate and drew her into a bear hug of an embrace, pulling her head to his chest and reaching out to grab Colin by the shoulder. “Then... then welcome home Jules.” His growl sounded suspiciously like a sigh of happiness as Julie let the tears flow at the name they had called her so long ago.

Anuk and Nayeca held each other close their eyes moist as they watched. Both of them knew Danny had taken Julie’s death hard, feeling as if somehow he had not been there for her. They also knew this was a second chance he would not let slip by.

“So what’s the OP Danny?” Kenny asked as Danny pushed Julie away from him and he used his fingers to wipe away the tears on her cheek. “We know the Skipper ain’t dead. All of us can feel it despite what everyone is saying. He’s too ornery to die so easily. What the hell is going on?”

Danny held Julie tight as he turned to look at them. “No... Marty ain’t dead.” He stated. “Your mates know you are going to be gone for a time?”

Kenny laughed. “Ah... Ti’ara couldn’t kick me in the ass fast enough!”

“Kind of hard to miss that fat ass too!” Cody declared with a snort.

“You’re one to talk Cody.” Julie blurted out almost without thinking. “We had to carry your lard ass out of Pakistan. Or did you forget that?” Her eyes were wide after she said it but it brought a round of laughter from all of them.

Cody nodded his head. “Sure enough!” He stated. “If I recall... you pampered me so well too. Told me I was shit sorry for getting shot in the ass.”

“It was the only thing sticking out!” Colin popped. “They couldn’t miss it!”

Danny roared with genuine laughter now, feeling better than he had in days and shook his head as the others joined in and first Cody and then Kenny gave Julie long heartfelt embraces while the others crowded around. He looked around quickly. “Where’s the Master Chief?” He asked.

“Watching all you pansies swapping spit like it’s old home week!” The gruff deep voice sounded and they all turned to see the ebony skinned man come walking through the group and right up to Danny. His head was still as bald as ever, but he hadn’t changed in years, nearly the equal in size to Danny in every way.

“Jesus!” Kenny muttered. “Twenty-six years and he’s still a fucking prick!”

Tony laughed as he held out his hand and Danny grasped it. “The Skipper’s boy gave us all new goodies to learn about on our way to Curila 6. He ain’t no shit Danny... that boy is too dangerous.” Tony said motioning to where Andro stood. “Take’s after the skipper.”

Danny nodded. “That he does.” He said.

“Well... it’s all loaded no thanks to these slack asses!” Tony said. “We’re ready to go... just give the word.”

Danny turned to Anuk and Nayeca. He drew his elven anome tightly against his right side while pulling their Drow Mistress just as close to his opposite side. “I... I have to do this.” He stated softly.

Anuk lifted her hand and placed a finger to his lips. “You do not need to explain anything to us Daniel.” She spoke.

“Without Martin and what he did that day on Lycavore... we would not have you today.” Nayeca spoke softly. “He is your brother... if not by blood then by everything you have shared through the years. He needs you now.”

“Until Anja returns I am the senior medical officer on Earth.” Anuk spoke. “I need to meet with Eliani and begin planning Asset and Recovery Operations. There... there are still many we have not recovered from the Senate Building and some may still be alive.”

“Just promise us that you will not do anything stupid Daniel.” Nayeca said. “We need you and so do your children.”

Danny nodded. “I promise.”

Anuk snorted very unladylike and reached up on her tip toes to kiss him hard. She gripped his face tightly and nibbled on his bottom lip as they parted. “Like we believe that.” She stated with a smile. “Just come back to us.”

Danny leaned over and nuzzled her elven ear and jaw seeing her eyes close in bliss. He repeated this action with Nayeca as well, drawing both of them even tighter against his body. “That is not something you ever have to worry about.” He said softly.

“Good.” Anuk spoke. “Now go.”

Danny nodded and turned as Andro walked up with several men and one women he didn’t know. A young woman with medium blue skin and stunning green eyes. Danny detected the scents of Wayonn and Dutkne and he could smell the pureness of their wolf blood and something else that was equally as strong. It was... it was vaguely familiar to what he smelled in Andro and Martin and he realized this must be the Pralor blood that ran in their veins. Danny looked at Andro.

“This... this is Wayonn I take it? The Pralor.” He said.

Andro nodded. “And Dutkne.”

Danny looked at Dutkne. “What was that?”

“Dutkne.” Dutkne told him.

“Du... dutk...” Danny struggled with pronouncing the name, or made it seem so as Andro was smiling.

“Dutkne!” Dutkne told him again.

“Ah fuck it... I’ll just call you Duke.” Danny snapped holding out his hand while Kenny and the others laughed gently in the background.

Andro chuckled softly and Dutkne smiled. He instinctively knew that this man Andro called Uncle was not being disrespectful in any way. It was how he was and in fact he was trying to break the tension during their first meeting. He gripped the offered hand and shook it firmly. “Close enough.” Dutkne answered.

Danny looked at Wayonn then and held out his hand respectfully. “Sir?” He stated.

Wayonn looked surprised as he took the offered hand. “Daniel Simpson.” He spoke. “The man who Martin deems his one and only true brother. A sincere pleasure to finally meet you in person.”

“Yeah... well... when I catch his skinny ass I’m going to knock him upside his corroded Spartan brain for pulling a stunt like this without telling me!” Danny snapped.

Andro motioned to Naesta now. “Uncle this is Naesta Re Mydala. She is a member of the Vanari Empire from the Beta Quadrant. Naesta carries her mother Devra’s offer to open official diplomatic relations with the Union and some important questions for my mother Anja. Take good care of her.”

Danny bowed his head to her slightly. “Count on it. Master Chief!” He barked.

“Yo!” Tony echoed from near the ramp where he was sharing a handshake with Colin Walsh. He covered the distance to where Danny stood in a short sprint.

“Get our guests settled into their seats will ya.” Danny spoke. “I want to get gone.”

Tony motioned to the ramp and stepped to the side. “Right this way.” He spoke.

Danny turned to Andro as the master chief led the others towards the MENKLA. He saw Jomann step up behind Andro and looked at the three of them standing there. “You’re sure about For’mya?” He asked.

Andro nodded. “The Kavalian Ambassador admitted it to me. It hasn’t yet become public knowledge... but it will I’m sure.”

“Why Andro?” Danny asked. “Why would they do this? They have to know how we will respond.”

“They will use every advantage they can to insure we don’t respond in that way. The Ambassador said taking my mother was to insure this but I don’t believe him. He tried to tell me all of this was because we were training the High Coven dragons and they wanted us to remain out of their war against them. Personally I think it’s all a bunch of rensibfla... but my hands were tied. I won’t risk mother’s life.” Androcles said. “They are planning something else but I don’t wish to do anything until Denali contacts me and Resumar tells me his mission is complete.” He said in reply.

Danny nodded. “I’ll tell your father when I get there.” Danny spoke softly. “You need to focus on keeping things together here, finding Janae and keeping our people on their toes. You know what he will want to do Andro?”

Androcles nodded. “And you must keep him from doing it Uncle. You know that.” Andro answered. “At least for a time. He will know that he must remain dead for now or they will surely kill my mother and he will not risk that either. I don’t know fully what it is they plan but I’m reasonably sure that it has something to do with my bastard uncle trying to claim leadership of the Lycavorian Union in some way.”

Danny looked at him with wide eyes. “You have got to be kidding me?” He gasped. “He can’t do that! The Union and Spartan Senate would never allow that after what he has done. He can’t be that vain and stupid Andro. Can he?”

Dutkne chuckled now. “I have found that those who crave power are perhaps the most vain and stupid individuals in the universe.” He stated. “And it seems our species has our fair share of them.”

Danny looked at him and nodded his head. “True enough.” He stated. “These new toys are for us to use when the time comes I take it?”

Andro nodded. “You know Uncle Ben would not send you into the void without new toys to play with. We have them too and I intend for Sadi and the others to become very proficient in their use as well.” Andro stepped closer to him. “They have hurt us Uncle Danny and as much as it burns my ass to admit, they caught us flatfooted and unprepared. Now we have to react to what they do... at least for a time anyway. Tell my father he needs to give me time, the time I need to discover what it is they are after before he goes off the deep end.”

“And then?” Danny asked.

Andro met Danny's dark eyes with azure orbs that burned with deep anger and revenge. "Then? Then Uncle... we are going to erase even the memory of the Kavalian Empire and my traitorous, cockbreath, sorry excuse of an uncle Pleistarchus from existence forever."

Danny smiled savagely. "Yep! Like father... like son."

BELID

It was certainly a sight that would forever be remembered, at least by those who were present to witness it. A tall and muscular Spartan Prince standing beside an even taller and muscular Akruian Immortal. Where once stood enemies now stood allies, fellow warriors and family. And a sight to see it was. What lay behind Denali and Cha'talla and the men and women who had followed them was nothing short of total devastation. Scorched walls and corridors, blood stained floors and countless bodies heaped upon one another like stacked wood. As if some unseen hand had guided them, the two hundred Spartans and Immortals had formed a phalanx around Aradace and Vollenth in the main corridor. The outer row of the phalanx was comprised of Lycavorians with Shi Viskas extended and forming the impenetrable shield. The inner row was comprised of Akruian Immortals who used their superior height to extend their SA80 rifles over the top of the shields and rip out one lethal burst after another. When an enemy got too close he was impaled upon a Nehtes or had body parts hacked off by the powerful swings of the Immortals wielding swords. In the center of this phalanx Aradace and Vollenth moved with measured steps, using their TK power to fling attacking Immortals about like broken rag dolls or send a searing blast of flame or superheated breath down a corridor they moved past, usually succeeding in killing dozens of Immortals who thought themselves safe. There were no orders tossed out, no question about what they would do, Cha'talla and Denali at the point of the phalanx and leading them relentlessly down the corridor at a fast but even pace. To some of the older Immortals among Phy'iad's band of mercenary thugs who had fought on Earth with him three thousand plus years ago as well as a quarter century ago, the horrors of those times came rushing back when they saw that phalanx relentlessly moving down the corridor and massacring everything that came at it. Many of them remembered the vicious bite of the Spartan blades and spears and how they had died in droves flinging themselves against such an daunting and unyielding force. They remembered watching a quarter century ago as those same Shi Viskas lopped off heads and limbs of their fellow Immortals without as much as a pause. It was even more of a slaughter this time around as Aradace and Vollenth gave them a devastating force that the Spartans of old did not have.

And now, as then, they died.

T'lolt was the only one paying attention to where they were in the main corridor and as soon as he came to the corridor that would take him where he needed to go, he reached down, grabbed Esther's arm and barked the order that would send them forward.

"Break now!"

Fully half the Phalanx turned instantly and as if once more they were guided by some higher power, Aradace broke with them and she became the center of the smaller Phalanx once more. Esther Saira was completely out of her realm here and she knew it as she clung to T'lolt's belt as they moved. She had fought before; she had killed before, but never on such an colossal and concerted scale. Her Blessed husband knew he would not keep her from this battle and he had insured that short of a bomb dropping on her she would be protected. She wore a complete Mark IV ArmorPly black body armor suit with full Spartan helmet. The helmet was almost too large for her head and she found the Mark IV suit to be cumbersome and uncomfortable. She had never worn more than the lightweight Coven Scout armor into battle and she felt very much out of place. She had never seen death on such a scale as this now and every meter they advanced down the corridor, the complete awe she felt towards her husband, his brother and every one of the men and women surrounding her grew by leaps and bounds. She had been talking with many of them only hours before this battle, and now she saw nothing but resolute determination in their eyes and a deadly killing rage.

They moved much faster now, almost a sprint really, Aradace's nearly four tons making the metal floor shudder under her weight. The phalanx was much looser in shape, but still very deadly as the dozen or so Immortals who rushed from an adjoining corridor discovered all too quickly. They fell against the tidal wave of anger and pride surging forward. As they rounded the corner and saw four Immortals and three vampires firing their weapons down either side of the corridor from the short hallway and door they were guarding T'lolt sounded off once more.

“Left and right! Secure!”

The Immortals and vampires guarding the doors turned quickly as the rush of nearly forty bodies and one very large dragon came at them. As they reached the corridor intersection, six Lycavorians slammed their shields into the floor and six Immortals squatted behind them and unleashed blistering rates of fire down either corridor at any who were fool enough to show their heads. A third wall formed behind them covering them from the way they had come as T'lolt practically dragged Esther up to the large door and glared at the Immortal soldier who stood there wide eyed.

“What is your name boy?” T'lolt snarled.

“R... R'vorl.” The young Immortal gasped in shock when he looked upon what was very obviously an Immortal, but one with deeply tanned skin and even hair.

“Well R'vorl... I am T'lolt... brother to Cha'talla and Second Commander of the Tribe of Cha'talla.” T'lolt shouted. “I have brought the Blessed Wife of Cha'talla and Matriarch of our Tribe to work her magic on the female elves that srow s'xor go'h of an Immortal Phy'iad has been holding. They are inside?” (Scum sucking pig)

“Yes... yes Second Commander.” The young Immortal stammered.

“Then open the door young AkruXian!” T'lolt snapped. “I do not wish to let my brother destroy this entire base by himself! Between him and his sons there will be nothing left for us honest AkruXians!”

The young soldier turned quickly and punched in a code on the control console. The door began to lift quickly and Esther removed her helmet as she began to see female body parts huddled together wearing very skimpy clothing. As the door rose completely, her dark eyes narrowed in anger at what she saw. She saw many of the younger elf females crowded around the older blond one who was talking to them. Esther could see the anxiousness on some of their faces and she knew immediately what it was. The sounds of the battle no doubt was carrying to them inside this room and their only thought would be that if the Immortal that had broken them died, they would die as well. The scientist and doctor in Esther surged forward and she lifted the helmet from her head tossing it to the floor as she strode into the room.

“Who is Osiri?” She snapped out.

Osiri scrambled to her feet quickly as the pureblood female vampire walked confidently into the room, three very large Immortals and only slightly less larger Lycavorians slightly behind her and carrying large packs. At least Osiri thought they were Immortals. They had the bone spurs of the Immortal people, and the somewhat sunken eye sockets, but their skin was tanned almost bronze in color and two of them had dark hair while the third had dark blond hair.

“I... I am Osiri.” She stuttered.

Esther marched right up to her. “I am Esther Suira... Blessed Wife to Cha'talla.” She stated. “I have brought the medicine. Which ones are the most affected?”

Osiri couldn't help but gasp in relief as tears came to her eyes. She motioned quickly to the seven females who she had pulled close to her. “These seven here.” She stated confidently. “They have been prisoners almost as long as myself. This... you can cure them Esther Suira?”

Esther nodded her head. “Yes I can.” She motioned to the six men assigned to her. “Spread out and begin injecting the others. Be patient and soothing as I told you. If you have difficulty call for me or Osiri.”

The three young Immortals and three Lycavorians nodded without hesitation and began spreading out. Esther turned her pouch around in front of her and drew out the hypoinjector. “Roll up your sleeve Osiri.” She stated.

Osiri hesitated and her hands went to her abdomen. “It will not... it will not hurt my baby?” She asked.

Esther looked at her wide eyed. “You are with child?” She gasped.

Osiri nodded. “Almost sixteen weeks.” She answered immediately.

“Phy'iad's...” Esther began to ask angrily.

Osiri shook her head quickly. “Never!” She hissed in revulsion. “I would not bear that monster a Gangorian slug to call his own!” She brought both hands up closer and held her abdomen as only a loving mother could. “No... this is the strong AkruXian son of Kr'nak. My... my own Blessed husband.”

Esther looked at her in shock for a moment and then she stepped closer. “That is a story I would very much like to hear one day.” She said as she held up the injector. “And no... this will not harm your child.”

“Esther?” T'lolt called from the doorway. She turned quickly and looked at him. “The serum Esther!”

Esther did not hesitate and drew out the second injector tossing it to him. She turned back to Osiri as T'lolt caught it. “Let’s get you and the others taken care of.” She stated. “The battle is not yet over and we may have to move quickly.”

T'lolt looked at R'vorl and held up the injector. “Hold out your arm Immortal.” He spoke gruffly.

R'vorl looked at him hesitantly. “Second Commander I... I am not sick.”

T'lolt reached up quickly and slapped him. Not hard, but with enough force to get his attention and that of the others who were watching. “This skin is not Akruvian boy!” He barked. “This... this twisted skin is what the Coven cursed us with!” He rubbed his palm on his cheek and held it out. “This is who we are! Now hold out your arm so that you can fully leave the past behind and grab onto our future! All of you do it now! Besides... before this day is done... any who look like you will be executed and we wouldn’t want that to happen to you by accident now would we?” The four Immortals stepped right up to T'lolt then and he grinned. “Welcome to the future of the Akruvian people!”

T'lolt pressed the injector to their arms and as he finished the third one he looked up and saw Aradace watching intently. He saw her nod her massive head in what he could only ascertain was approval and then she moved back towards the three protective walls of bodies they had formed.

As with Denali Leonidas and Cha'talla, the scene at the southern entrance to the base was different but no less awe inspiring. Two huge brothers, both half vampire and half Immortal, leading a charge of nearly eight hundred Spartan and Immortal soldiers that would have caused Spartan warriors of old to smile in unrestrained glee. Beside them were two half wolf and half elf females that they called their Blessed Wives, clearly half their physical size but no less lethal it seemed. Normya was a pilot by nature and by choice, but she was also a Leonidas and as such she was as lethal a fighter as any Spartan ground soldier.

Lynom and Tir'ut split their forces upon entering the Immortal base, the brothers taking prearranged routes and the brutal rout was on. Those Immortals who were still scrambling for weapons or to discover what was happening outside their base were fell upon with no mercy and no hesitation. Even those that were not armed in any way were struck down without pause or compassion. For As'hia it was a revelation really. She had seen Lynom angry before, and she had seen what he could do, but this day As'hia discovered just what the man who had stolen her heart and soul could truly do. She and the others were hard pressed to keep up with Lynom, for he was a whirlwind of death unlike anything they had ever seen. Using both his ability to blur and his precise use of wrapping the shadows around himself, Lynom was devastation to all who stood or attempted to stand against him. Already he had chopped down nearly forty Immortals, his cobalt blue eyes filled with killing rage and the moment As'hia spied that look she knew why. He was making them pay for her pain and humiliation. He had held it in for so long, held that burning brutality back by force of will alone and now given the free reign that he had, Lynom was intent on making them pay for the perceived crimes against his soon to be Blessed Wife that As'hia did not even remember. It must have been the Lycavorian blood within her, but coming to discover this made As'hia want him more intensely than she had in their short time together. Even splashed with blood as they all were, her wolf blood had begun a slow burn for the man who had made her his, and she promised herself that the moment they were alone together again she would show her handsome mate just where he stood in the corridors of her heart and soul.

The twin columns of death had swept along either side of the Immortal base like a cleansing wave. In their wake they left broken and shattered bodies. No Immortal who followed Phy'iad was spared the wrath of the tribe of Cha'talla. All of them knew this was to be their coming out party as it was called. This is where they would make their path known to all, and their Lycavorian Spartan brothers and sisters would stand with them to the end. They fought as one entity, meting out death and injury to those who stood against them.

Though they would not know it for many years, Veldruk had known what he was doing when he released the toxin into the air of the Akruvian homeworld. Even then he had been plotting to take the Lycavorian homeworld as well, yet he knew that at all cost he could not let these two peoples form an alliance. They were two species too entrenched in a code of honor and tradition. They were far more alike than anyone knew except Veldruk. He knew that he could not allow them to come together for it would mean the end of the High Coven. No matter their ability to blur and wrap the shadows around themselves, if the Akruvian and Lycavorian people had ever come together, the High Coven would never have been able to stand against them. The combined force of will and determination and the honor with which the two species lived their lives would have made them unconquerable by the Coven if they had ever joined forces. Veldruk knew this and he acted in such a way to insure that this never happened.

Yet destiny and fate could only be denied for so long before two irresistible forces of the known universe finally collided. This day on Belid would see that collision and it would witness the birth of something that had been delayed for nearly twenty-three millennia. An event that had been barreling toward its culmination for that entire time unseen and unknown. This day it would no longer be unknown or unseen. This day that collision would scream out its birth as any newborn leaving the womb of its mother and that scream would send chilling shockwaves throughout all of known space, nowhere more loudly than within High Coven space.

Yes... that day of reckoning was finally and irrevocably upon them.

The two brothers came together as they sprinted around the corners of the large main junction in the corridor and skidded to stops. As Immortals and Lycavorians took up positions all up and down the corridors Tir'ut and Lynom moved close to one another with the women who were their lives.

"This is the main corridor!" Lynom announced with wide cobalt blue eyes. "The main command and control center is a hundred and fifty meters that way." He spoke pointing down the corridor.

"Why are we not meeting more resistance?" Tir'ut almost shouted.

Lynom shook his head. "The east landing bay was almost empty." He stated. "If they were already beginning to shuttle up to their ships..."

Tir'ut nodded. "We found only three transports in the west bay."

"They were closer to leaving than we thought brother." Lynom declared.

Tir'ut turned and motioned for the burly Lycavorian to come forward. Though over a thousand years old, the Lycavorian had volunteered to be Tir'ut's second in command. He had smelled something in this half breed that made him trust Tir'ut. "Garna... have we heard from Admiral Thodius?"

The Lycavorian shook his head. "Not since he reported that he had taken down the two BLOOD REVERENCE Dreadnoughts and was blowing the sibfla out of the rest of their ships. He sounded pretty pleased with himself." The man answered with a grin.

"Have him break a ship away to low orbit and scan the surrounding terrain of the base." Tir'ut ordered. "We must be sure they will not come in behind us if they are outside."

Normya took his arm. "Wait Tir'ut." She declared squeezing his arm and closing her eyes. Lisisa? She reached out within Mindvoice.

Sister! Lisisa's voice filled their minds as Normya expanded the connection to those of them gathered together. Normya... have you gotten to mother yet?

We are close Lisi. Normya answered not bothering to shield anymore. It didn't matter anymore with the attack underway. We have not met as much resistance as we thought. Are you circling the base? Can you see anything?

Narice and I are circling above the others. Denali contacted me and he and Cha'talla are almost to the door to the command center and T'lolt has secured the prisoners. We have been burning those who attempt to escape through what appear to be hidden tunnels and Arrarn has made three ground support passes into the valley, but not many have attempted this. Danarla is beginning to move her heavy weapons to the actual entrance to keep anyone from coming in behind you! Lisisa answered instantly.

Lynom looked at Tir'ut when he heard this and he nodded. "We caught them as they were moving their troops up to the ships." He stated. "It is the only explanation."

Tir'ut looked at Garna. "Break off three platoons Garna. Have them begin sweeping back to gather any of our people who may be wounded or have fallen. Get them away from these scum."

"Done." Garna spoke before moving back and barking orders.

As'hia nodded. "I will tell those following us." She stated getting to her feet clutching the Nehtes in one hand and the K12 in the other.

Lisisa... can you and the others burn an area large enough for our STRIKERS, G9s and MENKLA transports to land at or near the southern entrance and begin taking off wounded? Normya asked.

Give us ten minutes and we will make it so. Lisisa spoke. Then Narice and I will join you.

Tir'ut and Lynom looked up when they heard the nearby trumpet of a dragon. "That was either Vollenth or Aradace." Tir'ut snapped.

"Close too." Lynom echoed. "They must have reached the main door."

Tir'ut nodded. "Then let us join them brother."

Cirith came up behind Dysea cautiously as she saw her wiping blood from her face and neck with the remains of Phy'iad's shirt that she had torn off. She was still completely nude, blood saturating her entire upper as she knelt next to the now very dead and mangled body of the once formidable Immortal Commander. Cirith knelt just behind her and quickly stripped out of the body armor she wore and nearly tore the separate fatigue top off herself.

"Dysea?" She spoke softly watching as her black ringed emerald green eyes turn to focus on her. She held out the top to her and watched as Dysea took it with a nod. "Dysea are you...?"

Dysea tossed aside the blood stained rag and pulled the top on over her nakedness. As she turned to look at Cirith once more she nodded her head. "I am... I am ok." She spoke softly.

Cirith reached out and placed her hand on Dysea's shoulder. The wolf blood in Cirith did surge a little as she touched Dysea's skin, but she controlled it easily for she had never allowed that part of her to fully come out for fear of being discovered. Cirith watched as Dysea reached up and took her hand, squeezing it tightly.

"I... I told him not to touch me Cirith." She stammered.

Cirith glanced over to Phy'iad's body and then back to her. "Yes... yes you did."

Dysea squeezed her fingers tighter and took a deep breath. "I will be fine." She stated quickly reaching up to caress her cheek. "Are... are you injured?" She asked spying the blood on Cirith's cheek and neck.

Cirith shook her head quickly. "No... no it's not my blood." She answered. "I am..."

The sound of the main doors beginning to open caused both of them to turn. They watched Kr'nak begin to back up towards them in a hurry, keeping his SA80 leveled at the door. "I did not open it!" He exclaimed.

Dysea snatched up the blades that Cha'talla had forged for her and watched as Kr'nak got down in one knee in front of her. "Stay behind me, both of you, as long as possible!" He barked over his shoulder. "I will draw their fire and then..."

Dysea gasped loudly over the sound of the door opening and they looked at her as a warm smile began to spread across her face. "No." She whispered.

"Lady Dysea it could be..." Kr'nak began to say.

Dysea felt the warmth of family and love wash over her, first from Denali and then Normya and finally Lisisa. She almost broke into tears as her children reached for her without pause and she reached up to put her hand on Kr'nak's shoulder as soon she could feel Cha'talla's now powerful presence within Mindvoice. "No Kr'nak... it is my family." She said slowly.

They turned back to watch as the main door rose about halfway up and continued to rise even as two large bodies rolled under the door and they could see the massive, talon equipped feet of the dragon just beyond. Denali was the first one to his feet, his senses causing him to center and focus on his first elven mother instantly. He didn't hesitate and sprinted across the short distance as she stood up to her full height of five foot nine and allowed him to sweep her into his arms. The tears flowed freely for Dysea now and she cried out in joy as her son's arms crushed her to him and lifted her off the floor heedless of the blood that still stained her arms and small parts of her neck. Denali instinctively shifted his body around, putting himself between any threat that could still be present and his first elven mother. There was commotion outside the room once more as the door fully rose and locked into place and then Normya burst into the room with Tir'ut on her heels.

"MEDWAH!" Normya screamed as she darted forward and both Deni and Dysea helped to lift her up into their embrace.

Cirith stood beside the trio with a smile of happiness on her face as Cha'talla came up to her. She turned to face the huge and famous former Immortal Captain to Veldruk of the High Coven with wide eyes as she gazed at him. Gone was the warped gray skin that all Immortals had and in its place was the smooth bronze colored skin of a deep and healthy tan. Her eyes darted to those Immortals she could see setting up positions just by the door and they were all the same. That they were Akruxian was easy enough to discern with the prominent bone spurs along their jaws and the edges of their hands and wrists, but Cirith had never seen an Immortal without the grayish and sometimes deathly pallor of skin. She turned back to look at Cha'talla as he gazed at her with a smile.

“It seems much is not as you left it Cirith Esavorna.” Cha'talla said.

“You... you are Cha'talla!” Cirith gasped.

Cha'talla nodded as he saw the single Immortal who stood just behind her stiffen and his eyes grow wide. “That would be me.” He said gently. “Of course... I no longer look as I once did. None of my people do.”

“How... how is that possible?” Cirith stammered.

“A tale for another time perhaps.” Cha'talla spoke. “You have stood with Dysea Leonidas who is considered a precious member of my tribe Cirith Esavorna. In our eyes that makes you a member of our tribe as well.” Cha'talla took her hand in his. “I ask that you remain at her side for now. Normya tells me that you have a connection to her and no doubt she will need that.”

Cirith looked quickly to where Dysea and her children were still entangled in the embrace and she nodded her head. “That is not something you need to ask of me.” She stated looking back to him.

Cha'talla nodded. “Good.” His dark eyes cut to where the body of Phy'iad was on the floor nearby and he winced slightly when he saw the injuries he had suffered. His eyes took in the part of Phy'iad that was no longer attached to his body and he turned back to Cirith with narrow eyes. “He did not...?”

Cirith shook her head. “He tried... but he did not listen to her when she said not to touch her.” She answered. “It made her upset.”

“So it would seem.” Cha'talla said with wide eyes. “She is herself though?”

Cirith nodded knowing what question he wanted answered. “As much as she can be herself after someone tried to brutality rape her.” She answered. “I know what you are asking Cha'talla and the answer is no. Kr'nak made sure that did not take place. He is the one who released her restraints so that she could take action.”

Cha'talla looked at Kr'nak once more and nodded as he turned back to her. “I must see to our defenses but our medics will be along shortly to see to any injuries you might have.” He stepped up to Kr'nak as Cirith turned back to where Dysea was and moved closer to her and Cha'talla took notice that Kr'nak stood firm and did not back down from him. “And what do I do with you Immortal?” Cha'talla asked.

“I will not... I will not beg for forgiveness of my past sins!” Kr'nak spoke firmly. “Nor will I espouse my actions this day! I would dishonor myself if I did and I will no longer do that for anyone's sake.”

Cha'talla nodded his head. “Good.” He spoke. “We cannot however live in the past and let our sins dictate to us how we live our future Kr'nak. We can only change and attempt to make things right in the eyes of the powers that look down upon us.”

Kr'nak looked at him for a long moment. “Are there... are there higher powers that look down on us Cha'talla? As our people used to believe.” He asked softly. “Or have they forsaken us because of the choices we have made?”

Cha'talla reached around and removed the injector from the belt pouch at the small of his back. He held out the injector to Kr'nak. “They were not our choices Kr'nak.” He stated holding the injector up. “They were choices forced upon us by others. This is our choice. This is our choice to throw off everything of the last millennia and begin again. As our people once were. As... as Dysea and her family have shown we can be again. You have already started down that path with an elven female you have taken as your Blessed Wife. Would you kill for her? Would you protect her with every ounce of blood in your body?”

Kr'nak's chest puffed out at the mention of Osiri. “Without a second's thought.” He spoke firmly.

“Then take this Kr'nak and once and for all throw off this foul skin that the High Coven infected us with. Throw it off as so many of us have thrown it off and begin your life again as a true Akruxian Immortal.” Cha'talla stated.

Kr'nak didn't hesitate and brought the injector to his neck and held it there. He triggered the hyposyringe, felt it pierce his skin and Cha'talla smiled as another of his people was saved. He turned back to see Dysea watching him. He felt a surge of intense anger when he saw the blood on her body and the state of dress she was in, but a quick glance at where Phy'iad's cooling body lay reminded him that Dysea had made him pay for his crimes. Cha'talla stepped closer to her and then she was hugging him tightly in happiness. He returned the embrace as modestly as he could for Cirith's top did not cover a whole lot and then held her at arm's length.

"You... you should not have come!" She scolded him gripping his arms tightly. "But I bless the gods that you did."

Cha'talla smiled. "I do not abandon my tribe members in need." He stated softly. "Just as you would never abandon any of your pack. Is that not true?"

Dysea nodded her head. "Yes."

"Then we must get a ship down here and get you off this foul planet." He snapped.

"NO!" Dysea exclaimed.

"Mother we must!" Denali agreed. "We must get you off this planet now!"

Dysea looked at her third oldest son and once more even she could do nothing but marvel at how they had raised their children. Not one of them had ever considered her or For'mya or Anja or Bella anything but a mother to them. It was not something that any of them had ever questioned or thought about and it was strictly taboo to even mention something of that nature in a joking matter. Dysea had never heard any of her children talk in such a disparaging way to one another for it would be an insult of the highest order to any of the Leonidas children. Dysea doubted she ever would hear of such a thing.

"I was fighting beside your father and mothers before you were a spark in anyone's eyes Denali my son." Dysea spoke gently. "I can take care of myself. That ronnus Phy'iad mentioned something of Laustinos coming here to claim me as his prize for helping Pusintin." She looked at Cha'talla. "We know the Kavalians began all that has happened?"

Cha'talla nodded. "We have not spoken to Andro since just after entering the system but that is what he told us. He also said..." Cha'talla stopped and Dysea's eyes narrowed.

"What? What did he say Cha'talla?" Dysea looked at Denali. "Deni?"

"They have taken our mother For'mya." Denali answered. "They are holding her prisoner as we speak and we don't know where or why. They still believe that father and our mother Aricia are dead and they believe Phy'iad has you still. I was going to contact Androcles as soon as I knew you were safely off this world."

Dysea shook her head. "No." She stated. "Taking... taking For'mya makes no sense in the least. Even if all of us were dead she would never betray the Union or our values. It is not in her nature. If she believed us all dead she would never help the Kavalians."

"Andro believes our uncle is making a play for the throne of the Union and he is going to use our mother as some sort of launching point." Normya told her.

Dysea looked at her daughter. "That does not make any sense either." She stated.

Cha'talla took her hands. "What is it you want to do Dysea?" He asked her.

Scathing emerald eyes met his. "I want to be here when Laustinos shows up. I want to be here to question him in the most painful way I can imagine while I look into his eyes, for then I am going to lay him next to Phy'iad."

Cha'talla nodded his head. "Then so be it." He stated.

CHAPTER SIXTY

BETA QUADRANT

AUSTROVA

VANARI HOMEWORLD

CAPITAL CITY OF MYDALA

Coren Re Mydala stared out the large window of his expansive Regent's office over the Uparn Waterway and watched as the water skiffs navigated the river far below and the planetary transports skirted about in the skies above. The Vanari Regent's Hall was a massive building that extended across the Uparn River and was held up by four colossal columns, two each on either side of the river, with ten meter wide anti-grav platforms spread along the underside of the structure. Every member of the Vanari Board of Regents had an office in this building, though only a few dozen of the twelve hundred member Board had offices as large and plush as his. He held the long thin pipe in his right hand, the small curls of smoke lifting around his head and putting of a pleasant floral aroma. At nearly fifteen hundred years of age, Coren was one of the members of the Vanari Senior Board of Regents, the Re Mydala family having been the one to found and help begin to build this city of Mydala into the metropolis that it now was. Due to that fact the Re Mydala family would always be one of the thirty-one permanent seats on the SBR, yet though he held a seat on the Senior Board of Regents, he was technically still a junior member of this elite group. The thirty men and women senior to him had served on the Senior Board of Regents for at least a millennia while he had only been part of the SBR for a rather measly three hundred and nineteen years, taking his father's place when he had retired.

The Senior Board of Regents, or SBR as it was called by many, would decide the issues that were brought to its attention by the full Board of Regents. There were thirty-one members of the SBR so that whatever issue came to be before them would have a decision on it. There would be no ties in voting on the SBR. Coren had never been the deciding vote for an issue, always making sure to throw his vote behind the majority and following the most senior of board members in their views. The members of the SBR who were not grandfathered in were chosen for lifetime appointments, while the many normal Regent seats were voted on every fifty years. Coren was a very traditional Vanari, and he was well liked and respected among his fellow Regents. He was also the only Vanari male serving on the SBR that was unmarried. His marriage to Devra had been extremely well publicized in the Vanari media, her dazzling beauty and sharp wit highly popular among the populace. Unfortunately this fact also made their subsequent annulment thirty-four years earlier even more of a media event. While the parting had been amicable in many respects, Devra's decision to remain in politics had been seen by some of the much older Regents as a slap in the face to her former husband when they had ended their marriage. She had won her election by a virtual landslide when she first ran for the open seat on the Board, and then each subsequent election over the past three hundred years she had won with almost universal support among those districts that she represented. Coren had gotten her into politics, and a part of him wanted to be happy for her popularity and the respect she garnered even from many on the SBR, but he resented the strong recognition she held and continued to hold. She almost never voted with him on the issues and while he was proud of her for holding to her convictions, it was a slight that many of the older Regents would not forget. Her reputation was growing as well, since Devra was more attuned to the younger generation of Vanari due to her own relatively young age when compared to other Regents. She was often considered a spokesperson for many of the three hundred and nine Regents who were under a thousand years of age and who believed in maintaining tradition but not at the cost of change that could only help their people moving into the future.

Coren had no doubts that they would still be married had his appointment to the SRB not driven a final wedge into their relationship, though it had taken three hundred years for the end to come. Devra was beyond beautiful even by Vanari standards, and she was adventurous and open minded in their bed. Her beauty is what first captured his attention and her intelligence and quick wit is what made him marry her. Devra had bore him four children, three daughters and a son. He often bragged about Arduri and Naesta to others, as well as Nirilo though not as much lately because he had chosen to remain on the Lycavorian Protectorate homeworld. He could not bring himself to talk of or even acknowledge Caliria in public. Her dark hair had set her apart from others the day she was born and while he loved her as his daughter, the ancient taboo and gene defect that caused dark hair in Vanari females kept him from treating her in the same fashion as Arduri and Naesta. A large part of Coren knew this was stupid and wrong, but the politician in him had always won out in regards to publicly acknowledging her which had been cause for great anger from Devra and his other children. At least until the last three years when Caliria had begun using her name as a means to rally support and people to her cause of equal rights for dark haired Vanari females. She had several dozen other Cadre Officers had been pressing hard and pushing openly for a dark haired Vanari to at least be elected to the Lower Board of Vanari Magistrates. Just because they had dark hair did not make them any different was the rallying cry they used. They were not cursed or infected by this supposed defective gene, and even studies done by doctors and scientists among their growing following had produced many reports that indicated the gene was completely random in their people. Caliria had begun using her name and the power her family name could generate to bring attention to the fact that they were no different, yet they were almost without question always the ones taken by Syndicate slavers. She was fighting for equal rights for all of them and demanding that the Board of Regents take action against the Syndicate for their deeds. Caliria had become a vocal opponent to the policy of the Board of Regents that allowed several hundred Vanari females to be taken each year during raids by the Orionis Syndicate on Vanari colonies or planets. Coren Re Mydala found the practice distasteful himself but he had always gone with the majority who did not want to anger the Syndicate enough that they would use their terrible weapons again. Now Coren Re Mydala was torn.

He was torn because his own daughter was now one of those who had been taken and it left a foul taste in his mouth.

“How many were taken with her?” The male voice he knew as Eyon Ahn Vernalo asked from behind him and Coren turned to look at the four men who occupied the chairs around the knee high table on the opposite side of his huge desk. All of them had long stemmed glasses of Vanari Brandy in their hands.

“Seventeen.” Ardan Vu Lamurrion replied. “They were returning from a student trip to Uyama One. Their transport was captured as they were transitioning from Quantum travel in Sector Twelve if their data cores are accurate.”

“So close?” Cruor Ahn Vernalo gasped.

Ardan nodded. “They are becoming bolder, moving deeper into Vanari space each time they take prisoners. Devra brought a petition to the Lower Board to go after them but they would not even bring it to vote.”

“How many stood with her?” Eyon asked.

Ardan met his eyes. “Nearly every Regent under the age of five hundred.” He answered. “I believe they were showing their solidarity with her.”

“The Syndicate is doing this because our females are traveling less among the outer rim planets now.” Alrerin Sha Harael spoke softly. “Especially so close to the next Celebration of the Hundreds.”

“That makes four mass kidnappings this year alone.” Ardan spoke. “Nearly eighty of our young females.”

“All but two were dark haired.” Eyon spoke once more sipping his brandy. “It is the agreement we have kept to for millennia now. They have already made reparations for those two who were not with dark hair.”

“How do make reparations for having a child taken Eyon?” Ardan snapped. “You know what they do to our females!”

“Yes I know!” Eyon responded just as bitterly. “What would you have us do Ardan... forfeit all that we are to them? They could unleash their weapons on us and then where would we be?”

“It is the way of things.” Alrerin spoke now as he got to his feet and placed his empty glass of brandy on the table. He looked at Coren. “You have my condolences Coren, but you know there is nothing we can do. We risk too much if we try.”

Coren met his eyes and nodded. “I know First Regent.” He stated softly. “She is still my daughter however.”

Alrerin nodded. “When the SBR meets again next week I will introduce a motion to the Syndicate Ambassador to provide compensation to you and Devra for taking Caliria. I have been told she has retreated to her cottage on Semina Three.”

Coren nodded. “That is what I was told as well yes.”

“Compensation will not bring Caliria back Alrerin!” Ardan spoke.

“It has been this way for millennia Ardan... you know this as well as I.” Alrerin told him. “We can not respond for they will unleash their weapons upon us as Eyon has said.”

Eyon Ahn Vernalo got to his feet as well. “I will direct my company to begin using more highly traveled corridors. I... I feel responsible in some fashion for it was my company’s ship and our pilots.”

Coren looked at him and shook his head. “It is no one’s fault Eyon.” He spoke softly. “It is the way of things. Do not berate yourself or your pilots for this.”

Cruor Ahn Vernalo stood up as well. “How is Arduri taking it?” He asked.

“She and Naesta have joined their mother on Semina Three. It is the Semina family estate and a place she will always go to for comfort.” Coren answered him. “Nirilo is aware and I have spoken with him briefly. He will be returning here in a matter of days as soon as his duties with the Lycavorian Protectorate allow him.”

“Does he still insist on laying with that Lycavorian female?” Alrerin asked now trying to change the subject tactfully. “He is well past the age to marry and I know many young females who would throw themselves at his feet.”

Coren nodded. “I... I believe it is just a phase Alrerin. He will return home in a year and we will appoint another to take his place.”

Alrerin nodded his head. “Good. We will need to appoint a more conservative officer to replace him this time. I feel he has been among them for too long as it is. And I hope he takes the proper precautions when he shares her bed. We do not need blue skinned animals running around our cities as the Protectorate allows their children to do. It would be embarrassing.”

“The color of our skin is not something that would be transferred in such a union Alrerin. You know this.” Ardan said. “All of our doctors and scientists agree.”

“Yes well... better to be safe than regretful.” Alrerin spoke.

Coren nodded in agreement at his words and looked at Cruor. “It might be advisable to postpone your Joining Ceremony for a few weeks Cruor Ahn Vernalo, at least until Arduri is finished mourning.”

“But everything is planned and all of the...” Cruor began to speak but his father took his arm.

“A few more weeks is acceptable Coren.” Eyon spoke cutting off his son’s reply. “Say... the day after the Celebration of the Hundreds six weeks from now?”

Coren nodded. “That is satisfactory.” He stated.

Eyon nodded. “Then so it shall be.” He replied. “I have a meeting and Cruor and I must return to our offices. If you need anything Coren... you have but to ask. Our families will be one soon and we must pool our resources and look out for each other.”

Coren nodded. “I will speak with you tomorrow or the next day in regards to the financial contracts we must finish before the Joining takes place.”

Eyon nodded. “Whenever you feel you are ready.” He replied. “There is no rush now.” He looked at his son. “Cruor... we must go.”

Coren moved around his desk and up to Eyon and they shook hands. “Thank you for your support my friend.”

“Always Coren.” Eyon told him.

Coren watched him turn and lead his son out of the office and then Alrerin stepped up to him. The First Regent was the senior member of the SBR and his words carried more weight than others among the Regents. He was a powerful force in Vanari politics. He grasped Coren’s hand as well.

“Take as much time as you need Coren.” Alrerin said. “I will inform my assistant to leave an open channel for you alone if you need anything.”

“Thank you First Regent.” Coren said. “I will endure.”

Alrerin nodded his head. “As must we all for the good of our people.” He stated softly. He turned to leave and Coren waited until the door had slid shut behind him before turning back to the older Ardan Vu Lamurrian.

The one man Coren considered a mentor outside of his father and who had directed him to politics and also had been a friend of the Vanari family for centuries. His youngest daughter had married Coren’s oldest brother nearly two thousand years ago, tying their families together forever in Vanari fashion, combining the wealth and power of two influential families into a single entity as the Joining Ceremony always did. It would be the same when Cruor took Arduri as his bride, for it would combine the assets of the Re Mydala and the Ahn Vernalo families together and give Eyon a say in what they invested in and where they directed their wealth. The Ahn Vernalo family led by Eyon was very well off, not on the same level of Coren’s family in political stature by any means, but they held majority assets in the three largest ship building companies within the Vanari Empire as well as majority stock in the largest Research and Development Company within Vanari space. Eyon was a very influential man on Austrova, and while he was not a member of the Board of Regents, he was very active in helping to write and establish policy. Many of the older members of the Board respected and trusted him. It had surprised Coren somewhat when Arduri had agreed to marry Cruor, but they must have been more sexually compatible than anyone realized. He looked at Ardan as the door closed behind the men who had left.

Ardan rose to his feet looking at Coren as he did. "I know that look Coren Re Mydala." Ardan spoke. "I have known you for too long to not recognize that look."

Coren turned and moved back to his desk where he touched the control console. "Jokros you may bring him in now."

Ardan turned when the section of wall to Coren's office parted and two men entered. The first was Jokros Aht Tulyk, Coren's most senior, secretive and trusted non-political aide. A man whose family had been tied to the fortunes of the Re Mydala family since the beginning and had served beside and followed them for millennia. Jokros was a man in his late forties, tall for a Vanari at six foot three and his many years within the Vanari Commando Cadres had honed his body to a finely tuned machine of physical perfection. Ardan knew immediately that something was amiss when they entered through the escape tunnel that all of the SBR offices had installed in them. Each tunnel was private and led to and from a private and heavily secure landing pad. The second man wore a cape and cowl over his tall form and that he quickly drew back as he entered the office. Ardan's blue eyes opened wider in surprise when he recognized the long haired but well groomed Lycavorian Ambassador from the Protectorate.

Coren stepped in front of Jokros and gripped the outside of the man's arms. "Thank you my friend." He spoke. "You have the other information?"

Jokros nodded his head. "Everything you wanted me to gather... as much as I was able to find anyway. No one saw us enter or leave." He spoke in reply. "I have someone watching her apartment just in case."

Coren looked at the impassive face of the Protectorate Ambassador and stepped closer to him but not quite too close. Coren had never cared for the Lycavorian people as a whole. He considered them to be barbaric in many respects, extremely violent and quick to anger, and not exactly on a level as the Vanari. It was an attitude that most of the Board of regents shared as well, with the exceptions being the younger generations of Vanari. While the embassy here in Mydala had several hundred employees, the Lycavorians among them were limited in where they could go and what they could do. The Ambassador was a young Lycavorian; far younger than Coren himself and the other senior members of the SBR and Coren had no doubt that he was appointed by the young Director General simply to slight the Vanari Board of Regents for they preferred to deal with some of the older Lycavorians they had come in contact with. Coren knew the leader of the Protectorate was young himself, barely five hundred years old according to his son's reports, and he himself had only met with Coren once when he had traveled to see Nirilo. Their visit had been cordial, but this Dutkne appeared not at all intimidated or interested in speaking at length with Coren. Coren kept his distance and did not hold out his hand in greeting.

"Ambassador Lilonus." He spoke.

"Regent Re Mydala." The man answered. Lilonus was three hundred and fourteen years old and took great pleasure in the fact that his age pissed off the Vanari regents. He found quite a number of their politicians, both junior and senior to be exceptionally arrogant and pompous, while many of the normal Vanari like those who worked in their embassy were quite friendly and open.

"Thank... thank you for coming." Coren stated.

Lilonus nodded his head noncommittally. "It is not often I get a summons from a member of the SBR, especially one that intentionally avoids the normal means of communication that your people insist on using, and brings me into their offices via a secret entrance."

Coren motioned with his hand to the comfortable chairs that had been occupied by others only moments ago. "Please... take a seat." He spoke.

Lilonus turned and saw Ardan standing by the chairs still somewhat surprised and he bowed his head slightly. "Regent Ardan." He spoke as he moved to one of the chairs.

Ardan ignored him and looked at Coren. "Coren what is this about?" He demanded.

Coren stepped up to him. "Ardan... perhaps now would be a good time for you to depart these offices." Coren told him. "I do not want to involve you in these affairs."

"What affairs?" Ardan snapped indignantly. "If it concerns your family it concerns mine as well. You know this Coren. You have brought the Protectorate ambassador into a secure area of this building secretly Coren. My interest is peaked." He saw the look in Coren's eyes. "This is about Caliria isn't it?"

“Ardan... you are my closest friend and my mentor... but now I must ask that...” Coren began to say.

Ardan shook his head. “Not going to happen Coren. I helped your father bring you into politics and we share many of the same values just as your father and I did and still do. The marriage of your brother to my daughter has forged a unity together of our families and I will not forsake that now after over two thousand years. I am just as angry about Caliria as I know you are whether you will admit it or not. She is still your daughter Coren.”

Coren nodded. “Yes she is. Very well...” He said. He turned to his aide. “Jokros you may begin.”

The former Vanari Commando went to the console on Coren’s desk and inserted the data scroll he took from his sleeve. “As you know Regent, Caliria has been enrolled at the Austrova Advanced Physics University for the last four years. It is from within the ranks of students here that she has been garnering much support and backers for her cause. I have been working at the University since we knew Calira was taken and I have quietly questioned those that we know are in the group she helps to lead and support. All of them have dark hair themselves or they have lost dark haired sisters. All of them are students with degrees that...”

“Jokros please tell me...” Coren asked.

Jokros nodded his head. “Your fear was well founded Coren.” He spoke softly. “Caliria was taking advanced Physics classes as we all knew during the day however, at night and in secret, she and a dozen others were studying Advanced Genetic Engineering. It took me several hours to pry it out of her friends and then find the lone instructor that was teaching them. His younger sister was taken a hundred and seven years ago. They have been working on different ways to counter the chemical imbalance in our people and take away the advantage the Orionis Syndicate has held over our heads for millennia.”

Coren swore under his breath and turned away from them as Ardan moved to a chair and settled into it slowly. “They... they were violating the law!” He gasped. “No one has... no one has violated that law in over two thousand years!”

Jokros nodded. “Until now.”

“Coren... we must shut down this illicit action quickly!” Ardan exclaimed. “If the Orionis Syndicate finds out what they are doing...”

“I believe... I believe they already have.” Jokros spoke. “At least to a point.”

Coren turned back to look at him. “What do you mean?”

“We have suspected for many years that there are Orionis Syndicate agents among those who regularly travel here Coren. Men and women that we live and work with on a daily basis.” Jokros told him but directing his words to all of them. “We welcome many from the Empryeon people as well as the Antares Alliance and Darboli Republic. If you add their number with the high amount of Terran Eridiani from the EPG that come here to be educated at our schools, there are nearly a hundred thousand non-Vanari students enrolled at the University just here in Mydala alone. We know for certain that a large portion of the Syndicate is made up of Terran Eridiani and we have also suspected that at least one of their Grand Masters is Terran Eridiani and there could possibly be more than one. We have no real proof to back up this information and the Eridiani Provincial Government continues to insist they have no knowledge or contact with the Syndicate or their leaders.”

Coren nodded. “Yes. I’ve read those intelligence reports.”

“That is rubbish as we all know!” Ardan exclaimed. “The EPG is rife with corruption and the Orionis Syndicate has many of their government’s top people in their pocket! The EPG is essentially the political arm of the Syndicate.”

Coren nodded. “But their size gives them clout and we have many trade agreements with them and our borders touch along several thousand light years as well. I agree that the EPG is a front for the Syndicate, but publicly they do nothing to garner our distrust.”

Lilonus leaned forward in his chair. “Are you saying that one or more of the Syndicates Grand Masters is human?” He asked clearly surprised.

Jokros nodded his head and turned to the man. Unlike Coren and many others he had a healthy respect for the Lycavorians as a whole. “That is the old term to refer to their species, from before they left Earth but essentially yes. Our intelligence points us in that direction. The humans here in the Beta Quadrant are far more advanced mentally and physically than those who stayed behind.”

“Yes... but their live under a dictatorship.” Lilonus said. “That is what the Eridiani Wars were about. Those that wanted to break away.”

“True... but those that left only made those that remained far stronger. A few thousand returned to Earth, the planet of their birth, but many more remained here.” Jokros said.

“How does all of this relate to Caliria?” Coren asked insistently.

“Two of her friends remember seeing her with one of these humans from the EPG just days before she was taken.” Jokros spoke. “They knew him as Adam and they were having what appeared to be a pleasant lunch together on the Quad according to her friends. He had been showing quite a bit of interest in Caliria recently it seems.”

“That could be coincidence.” Ardan spoke. “Terran Eridiani are very susceptible to our females. They always lean towards our females with dark hair because they know no Vanari female with normal colored hair would have anything to do with them.”

Jokros shook his head. “It was no coincidence Ardan. According to her friends Caliria was very adamant about not being interested in him or any other male. She told her friends she was meant for something much more, whatever that means.” He stated confidently.

Coren nodded slowly. “She always was very spiritual.” He stated.

“This... human Adam...” Jokros continued. “He has disappeared from the University and when I checked with admissions every Terran Eridiani enrolled at the University is accounted for. I had my men confirm that.”

“They... they set her up?” Coren asked in astonishment. “But... why?”

Jokros typed on the console of his desk and pointed to the monitor as it rose from the side. “This is why.” He stated. The men saw a mass of numerical formulas and medical terms on the screen.

“What is this?” Ardan asked.

Lilonus shocked them both when he answered. “They are Genetic Sequencing Equations and DNA base code modules.” He answered.

“How do you know this?” Coren gasped.

Lilonus looked at him. “My first degree was in Biomechanical Genetics.” He replied. “We were trying to make certain plant life hardier so that it would grow on other planets.”

Jokros nodded his head impressed. “He is right.” He spoke. “Two of the other females I questioned said that Caliria felt they were close to developing some form of counter to the Syndicate’s chemical weapon.” Jokros told them. “When I escorted them to their apartments in order to obtain this information we found both of them broken into and ransacked. All the data they had been compiling and keeping secretly was gone. I now have anyone who worked with Caliria in protective custody. We conducted a complete sweep of Caliria’s apartment on the city limits Coren... it too had been ransacked. We found nothing.”

Ardan looked at him. “Why does that make a difference?”

“You misinterpret the context of my words Regent Vu Lamurrion...” Jokros spoke. “When I say we found nothing... I mean we found nothing. Her apartment had been cleansed and stripped bare of anything that might have told us what she had been doing or who she had been associating with. The same with those who worked with her. Her co-workers told me they shared the locations of this information only with those in their inner circle. It means they got the information from Caliria.”

Coren met his eyes. “She... she found a cure?” He gasped.

Jokros shrugged his shoulders. “Whatever she found... it apparently made others sit up and take notice. I ran a Flight Log Check on the transport from Uyama One. The ship missed its last two COM checks and the flight data cores suggest that these were missed before the ship was taken. The company impounded the ship yesterday morning and I was no longer able to access it without someone taking notice.”

Ardan came to his feet now. “Jokros are you implying that Vanari had a hand in helping whoever took Caliria and the others?”

“I’m implying nothing Regent Ardan. I’m merely stating facts.” Jokros replied calmly. “It seems rather convenient that those on the transport with her were half of those working closely with her on whatever project it is they were secretly conducting at the University don’t you think?”

Coren looked at him. “Devra and my daughters?” He asked.

Jokros nodded. “It appears they may have put it all together much sooner than I did, if they did not already know what she was doing, which I find more plausible.” He stated. “They are not on Semina as everyone thinks either.” Jokros turned to look at Lilonus his eyes neutral but filled with knowing. “Are they Ambassador?”

Lilonus met his eyes without fear. “What do you mean?” He asked casually.

“Jokros... what are you trying to say? If they are not on Semina then...” Coren began to speak but Jokros held up his hand.

“My men and I tracked their V9 Interceptor Ambassador Lilonus!” Jokros spoke evenly in a very neutral tone. “We followed them all the way to the edge of the Orion Spur! They were using Devra’s V9 transport so it was easy to track when you have the right transponder codes and they were chasing a Syndicate ship it appears. The Orionis ship jumped coreward from there!”

“Coreward?” Coren gasped. “They made a blind jump coreward?”

“I don’t think it was a blind jump Coren.” Jokros spoke looking at him. “We detected the trace elements of an advanced design Protectorate Fusion Drive Core. A drive core that we did not know that your people possessed Ambassador. A drive core that also jumped coreward of the Spur. And a drive core that swallowed up the trace elements from the Vanari V9 Interceptor before that took place. Your ship took our V9 aboard and then conducted a jump coreward of the Orion Spur didn’t they?”

Lilonus met his eyes without regard. “Yes... I believe that is what took place. I only spoke briefly with General Director Dutkne mind you.”

“On one of your ships?” Jokros pressed him.

Lilonus nodded his head. “The TALON OF JUSTICE. One of our newest ships actually and the General Director’s personal command ship.”

“You have developed new engines?” Ardan asked now.

Lilonus nodded again. “Yes.”

“Why were we not informed?” Coren demanded.

Lilonus looked at him. “I do not believe our Mutual Non-Aggression Pact dictates we must tell you when we develop new technology Regent Re Mydala. In fact I know it doesn’t since I have read it four times.”

“Nirilo did not report this!” Coren spat.

Lilonus nodded. “I believe the General Director asked him not to.” He replied. “Your son is friends with General Director Dutkne and he did this because of that friendship. If he had chosen not to abide by that, he would have been asked to leave Protectorate space. Your people have a rather boorish habit of overreacting to things because of your ingrained feelings towards my people Regent. All you need do is look at how those who live here on Austrova are treated and it becomes obvious to even the dullest individual. We are not allowed to enter certain areas of your cities; we are not allowed to travel to certain merchant markets; I could go on but you already know this. There is no logical reason for us to inform you of anything since you do not reciprocate the same. We are not allies and we are not enemies, and that is the choosing of the Board of Regents and not the Protectorate. We have made it very clear we would like nothing more than to be allies and friends and be prosperous together. The Vanari are the ones who are not willing to do this for reasons which I can not fathom. The Protectorate has never done anything to the Vanari people to earn such distain and harsh treatment, and in fact we get along famously with those Vanari who we are allowed to mingle with at our embassy. You have only to ask them to discover that.”

“We were at war!” Ardan roared.

Lilonus came to his feet now. “That war took place over ten thousand years ago Regent Vu Lamurrion!” He barked angrily. “And it was a war that your people started with us, not the other way around as is so often believed among your people and even taught to some degree in your schools! Is that not true? I am a keen student of our history Regent Vu Lamurrion and we are far more intelligent than you believe my species to be! The events behind First Contact are very well documented Regent! Talks were proceeding very well until your ship’s captain chose to use his six Vanari Cadre Commando officers as intelligence gatherers. They used their considerable influence over the males of any species with the oil they secret from their skin to attempt to gain information that was not theirs to have! When it was discovered by our females what you were doing and your actions were exposed, that same captain chose to attack our delegation ship and kill three hundred of our people instead of allowing his actions to be revealed. When we attempted to present this information to you along with the evidence and proof of what he had done, you chose to dismiss it and take the word of your captain. That is what started the war Regent! Your people's insistence that you are somehow better than my species simply because we can alter our forms to that of which you consider to be nothing more than savage animals!"

"That is not true!" Coren snapped.

Lilonus stared at him. "Isn't it?" He barked right back. "That man is still serving in your military if my memory serves me right! Is that not true?"

"We did not..."

"Is that true?" Lilonus growled.

"Yes! The Board of Regents... they did not deem he had done anything wrong." Coren said in reply.

Lilonus nodded his head. "And there you have it. We have accepted the Vanari as they are Regent, it is simply who you are as a species... but do not stand there and demand from me, accuse me, when your Board of Regents has treated us as no more than animals for centuries." Lilonus looked at Jokros. "Do I go out the front or will you escort me back the way we came so that I am not seen since I am considered beneath you? I am done here."

"Where has your ship taken my wife and daughters?" Coren roared.

Lilonus looked at him. "She is not your wife anymore Regent Re Mydala and she has not been for thirty-three years. I believe you have even moved on with your life have you not? You are courting a female several hundred years your junior."

"This is not about me!" Coren snapped stepping closer to him. Jokros moved closer, more to keep Coren from doing something stupid. He was not like many of his people. He had a healthy respect for the Lycavorian people and what they could do. In a one on one fight, Jokros doubted he could stand toe to toe with a Lycavorian soldier. Their healing factor and ability to take huge amounts of punishment made them very durable opponents and when combined with the skills that many of them possessed, they were a very lethal species. Jokros had no doubts Lilonus could kill Coren without breaking a sweat, ambassador and politician though he may have been. "You have taken Vanari citizens and equipment aboard one of your warships and then conducted a blind jump coreward! We do not go coreward of the Orion Spur Ambassador! It is unexplored territory that is inhabited by other Lycavorians and species far more violent and uncompromising than the Protectorate! And it is forbidden by Vanari law!"

"Forbidden to you perhaps..." Lilonus told him. "And there was nothing blind about the jump the TALON executed. They knew exactly where they were going for they are on a mission of their own. Regent Devra and your daughters accompanied them willingly because if they had followed the Syndicate ship on their own they would most likely be dead or enslaved in the Alpha Quadrant by now!" He said with a small smile.

Ardan saw this look on his face and his eyes grew a little wider. "They went... they went to the Lycavorian Union?" He gasped.

Coren looked at Ardan quickly, his own eyes wide in disbelief and then he turned back to Lilonus. "Is this true?" He gasped.

Lilonus met his gaze. "Have you never wondered why the Orionis Syndicate seems to be gathering strength, getting bolder and becoming larger?" He asked softly. "Do you think we do not know that they are coming further into Vanari space to take the females you so willingly allow them to?"

"We have no choice in this matter!" Ardan almost shouted.

"There is always choice Regent Vu Lamurrion. You have simply made the wrong one for many thousands of years now." Lilonus told him gently. "I surmise that your vaunted Vanari Intelligence Agency has not discovered that the Orionis Syndicate has expanded their many elicit operations and contacts to a considerably larger area than what you believe they have in just the last half century alone. Including coreward of the Orion Spur."

"What are you talking about?" Coren demanded.

Lilonus shook his head. "Your people are so insular and inflexible Regent Re Mydala." He said. "The Orionis Syndicate has expanded their operations into the Alpha Quadrant. Into what is known as The Wilds. Not very much at present, but they have several groups that they do business with it seems. Your ex-wife and daughters were following the same ship that was carrying your daughter Caliria. It seems they are not as inflexible as you and the other members of the Board of Regents for they were able to discover this all on their own. Our purpose for going to the Alpha Quadrant had nothing to do with their mission, but there is always strength in numbers, and they were much safer with the General Director on our ship as opposed to going alone.”

“The Alpha Quadrant has been strife with war and death for millennia!” Ardan exclaimed loudly. “That faction of your people and the vampires have been battling for all of that time with no end in sight! Ever since the Vampires crushed your homeworld and enslaved your people! That is why your faction of Lycavorians settled in the Beta Quadrant! To escape that!”

Lilonus shook his head. “If only that were true.” He said.

“Instead you bring your violence and savageness towards others here! This is part of the reason we view you as we do!” Ardan continued. “Your Protectorate annihilated an entire planet and every living thing on it!”

Lilonus looked at him. “It was a Syndicate planet and they were using it as a staging area to launch raids against our ships coming here to trade within Vanari borders.” He spoke calmly. “We advised the Eridiani Alliance, since they are the only government it seems that has a close relationship with them, and we advised them that we would take actions if this did not stop. We asked them twice. Then we acted.”

“Your ships destroyed a colony of nearly nine thousand!” Coren shouted.

“All of whom were part of the Syndicate in some fashion and they have not attacked one of our ships or any Protectorate outpost since.” Lilonus said in reply. “Sometimes... sometimes you must use brute force to get your message across.”

“Where was your ship going?” Coren demanded now. “Where have they taken my son and daughters?”

“Regent Vu Lamurrion was correct in his statement.” Lilonus said. “They have gone to the Lycavorian Union. Recent events have... recent events have revealed that what we once believed about our brothers and sisters in the Union was in fact wrong. You see, we can admit when we are wrong Regent Re Mydala, something your people seem to have a large problem with. General Director Dutkne and Val'istar Wayonn are leading an expedition there to finally bring our people back together.”

“Wayonn?” Jokros spoke with wide eyes. “You allowed... you allowed the Pralor to go on this mission?”

Lilonus looked at him and smiled. “I see that at least some of you have studied the history we provided to you when we signed the MNAP two thousand years ago.” He stated. “Yes... the Val'istar went with General Director Dutkne. It was essential that he go and no one dictates to him what he will do and not do. He may have been a Pralor, but he has been wolf for longer and he is even more obstinate and stubborn than the General Director. They are of the same blood so it makes sense they would have some of the same traits.”

“Why have you gone there?” Coren asked. “I was under the impression that the General Director and your people made it a point to distance yourselves from the faction of your people that remained in the Alpha Quadrant because of their violent tendencies and disregard for the order of law and agreements.”

Lilonus laughed now as he shook his head and returned to his chair. “You don't actually believe that drivel the Board of Regents has been stating for thousands of years do you?” He said.

“It is what your former leaders told us!” Ardan snapped.

Lilonus shook his head slowly. “No... it is not what they told you, it is what you chose to take and believe of what they told you. Dutkne's father told you we had decided not to reunite with our brothers and sisters within the Lycavorian Union because their years of slavery and oppression took them away from the instincts and traditions that Sumar and then King Resumar his son began to instill in them. He told you when the day came that they returned to the core of what our species is, than we would unite with them without a second's hesitation. When they lost the father of us all, Sumar, and then his son King Resumar we thought all was lost, but with Wayonn's help we discovered that this is not the case. The day my people have waited and hoped for is rapidly approaching.”

“What are you saying?” Jokros asked softly.

Lilonus met his eyes. “The grandson of King Resumar returned to the Lycavorian Union nearly twenty-seven years ago and took his place as King. He returned to our people within the Lycavorian Union what they had lost through the years of slavery and rebellion. And now, he and his children and those within the Union have once more embraced everything that Sumar and then King Resumar began to teach us. Everything that they forgot during their struggles to escape the oppression of the High Coven. That day has come gentlemen and now it is time for us to reunite as a species and our people within the Protectorate will be overjoyed when this information becomes known to them. That is why they have gone there, because the General Director is only a caretaker of sorts. The King of the Lycavorian Union, the blood grandson of King Resumar, he is our leader and he always has been. It has just taken this long for them to realize that. These are all things you would have known Regent Re Mydala, had you and so many others let go of your ingrained premise that my people are nothing more than animals in the shape of a men. You would have known this if you had read the history we willing provided to you. Unlike you our Intelligence Agency... and Wayonn... have kept a close watch on events in the Alpha Quadrant for many years. The United Lycavorian Union is not as backwards as you have been led to believe by your own people. They were very advanced even before they found City Ship 41 on Lycavore..."

"They discovered the ship?" Coren gasped in horror.

Lilonus nodded his head with another smile. "Yes... and now they are almost on a level with the Protectorate and the Vanari Empire in terms of technology. You would have known all this had you taken the time to fully come to know us a species and you would have known that those species who call the Union home have much to offer in the way of rich culture. They have different and diverse species aligned with the Union because they saw their future in them. The Hadarian species for one, they are the foremost healers and medical minds in the entire universe bar none, in some ways even more inventive and knowledgeable than Vanari physicians."

"Nonsense!" Ardan exclaimed.

Lilonus smiled. "And that is the attitude that permeates the vast majority of the Vanari people thanks to your Board of Regents. Apparently... your ex-wife is far more open minded and intelligent than you give her credit for and at least she has the nor to act when others will not."

"Where are they going?" Coren demanded moving closer to him. "Where has your ship taken them?"

"I imagine they have gone to Earth." Lilonus answered seeing their eyes grow wide.

"The Terran Eridiani's old homeworld?" Coren gasped.

Lilonus nodded. "The city of Sparta on Earth to be exact. That has become the unofficial seat of power it seems since the King's return. Something to do with the King's father and the people he was raised among, Spartans I think they were called. The General Director told me that they would be meeting with the King's son... the Crown Prince of the Lycavorian Union. Androcles Leonidas I believe his name is."

"Leonidas?" Jokros hissed softly looking at him. "Your King Resumar... the son he sent to Earth... that was his name."

Lilonus met his eyes. "It appears you have studied more than the Regents here Jokros." He said. "I commend you."

"Jokros... send word to prepare my Frigate." Coren snapped.

Ardan looked at him. "Coren... you are going after them?" He gasped.

"I will not leave my children in the hands of the Lycavorians!" Coren snarled angrily. "Especially ones we have been led to believe are nothing more than savages by their own kind." He snapped motioning to Lilonus.

Lilonus shook his head again becoming bored with the atmosphere that these men kept projecting. "That is not something we have ever led you to believe Regent Re Mydala... but you will believe what you will."

"Coren... the Board will never approve this!" Arden rasped.

"I'm not going to ask them!" Coren snapped. "I'm going to go there and get my children and my ex-wife back before they do something entirely foolish! They risk our entire species with their actions!"

Ardan thought quickly and nodded his head as options and scenarios ran through his keen mind. "I will inform the SBR that we are taking a few days to mourn and we will be using my ship to do so. They will not question me and they know how close our families are."

"Ardan I can not ask this of you." Coren said quickly.

"You aren't asking me... I'm offering it to you. You can not go coreward in a Heavy Frigate and we do not know what we will find on the other side." Ardan told him. "We will take my Command Cruiser."

"Ardan..." Coren began to speak.

"Do not say anything!" Ardan barked. "You are as much a son to me as my own children and I told your father I would look out for you. We will do this together!"

Coren nodded and turned to his longtime friend. "Jokros... use your contacts within the Intelligence community to get as much information as possible in regards to the Alpha Quadrant and do so quietly. We..."

“This is inadvisable.” Lilonus spoke getting back to his feet.

“I did not ask you!” Coren snarled at him.

“What do you think you are going to do Regent Re Mydala... jump directly into Union space, travel to Earth and take back Devra and your children?” Lilonus asked.

“That is exactly what I intend to do!” Coren barked.

“What if they do not wish to return?” Lilonus asked.

“They will do as I tell them!” Coren shouted.

“And you think entering Lycavorian Union space in a Vanari warship will somehow allow you to accomplish this?” Lilonus said. “The Union has ships as well you know. Ships that are far more capable than you give them credit for. Given what is currently happening there... you could trigger an incident and unlike the response you received from the Protectorate all those years ago, you will not like the response you get should you arrive in Union space and begin to make demands.”

“I do not fear this Lycavorian Union and I will do what is necessary to get my children back!” Coren growled at him. “And hopefully do so before the rest of the Board of Regents realizes what they have done!”

Lilonus shrugged. “Very well. It is your sorwyk.” He said. “I will be returning to our embassy then?”
(Funeral)

Coren shook his head. “No Ambassador... you are coming with us!” Coren said. “To make sure these Lycavorians know I am not playing games with them.”

Lilonus laughed now. “You have no idea what you are going to attempt Regent Coren Re Mydala.” He stated with a smile. “But I will accompany you... if only to see what your attitude and the reaction it gets will result in. That will be most entertaining I believe.”

EARTH
SPARTA
EASTERN DISTRICT
APARTMENT OF COMMANDER JANAЕ

Zarah looked slowly around the interior of the apartment. It appeared as if there had been a fight inside, with overturned furniture and several smashed lights. Zarah had been here before on several occasions. While Janae and her father did not want her to become publicly known just yet, all of the Leonidas children had been to her apartment before at some point through the years. She was very close in age to all of them, and this interaction had not been questioned because she was a senior aide to Governor Panos of Sparta who all of them considered to be a surrogate grandfather. They all knew they reality however, and Janae had always been close to their hearts and minds because she was blood. While she had elf blood in her, because her father had married a Lycavorian woman, she did not have the tell tale pointed ears of elves and was never mistaken for anything but pure Lycavorian. This had worked to her advantage and theirs more often than not, but now it was a blessing in disguise. While her presence within the fabric of Mindvoice could not be detected like it was with her elven mother For'mya, like her mother she still left an imprint within Mindvoice wherever she went because of her abilities. Zarah's unique skill, one of two that manifested itself after she had fed on Andro's blood, was that she could track and follow this imprint. It wasn't a trail so to speak, but more a feeling and sense of balance that Zarah could follow. The only issue anyone had with this skill was that it allowed her to see many private thoughts that were not normally touched during normal Mindvoice communication because they were shielded and this is why her father did not want her using the skill. He considered it a breach of a person's sacred privacy and he frowned heavily on it.

“There was a battle here ussta libh'iahin.” Lucia spoke softly from the doorway into the next room causing Zarah to turn and look at the ravishing vampire beauty who had saved her life and stolen her heart. Lucia's lightweight Mark IV ArmorPly conformed to her supple body like a second skin as her keen vampire eyes looked over the area. It was a body that Zarah had spent every night lying next to since she had saved her.
(My joy)

As Zarah gazed at her she felt a flush of sexual passion and delight surge gently through her at the name Lucia had begun calling her. She had thought after what had happened to her that she would never be able to feel the desire for any type of sexual relations. Having fed as deeply as she did on Lucia's blood had the added affect of essentially minimizing the emotional damage that had been done to her during her ordeal. They had talked to no one but Andro and the Feravomir about this fact, and both of them had told them to not rush anything but to let their new feelings for each other and the relationship both of them now wanted to develop and grow on its own. Her Aunts Tarifa and Aihola had also been huge influences on them both since they had shared a similar beginning to their now legendary love for each other. Lucia would never leave Zarah now, and nor would Zarah ever forsake her. As each day passed and they slept within each other's arms their bond only grew, and the more time they slept naked beside each other, the desire to taste and explore grew harder to resist and almost without conscious thought Zarah had coined a name for Lucia as well. It would happen Zarah knew and as each day moved forward she found herself looking forward to that moment.

"Vel'bol xun dos kyorl 'Chev?" Zarah asked as she stepped closer to her. (What do you see Beloved)

Lucia shook her head slowly. "It is not so much what I see, but what I smell." She stated looking at her.

Zarah nodded for she too could smell it. While her father's wolf genes were the dominant ones within her body, she had still inherited the ability to smell and track blood just as any pureblood vampire could from her mother Isabella. "She marked two of them at least." Zarah said.

Lucia nodded as she moved into the next room. It was a medium sized living area off the apartment's main room and held a desk and comfortable chair as well as a fireplace and low back couch. The desk had been ransacked and overturned, the couch tossed to the side. Lucia moved to the mass of paper that had been strewn on the floor near the couch and squatted down, using her fingertips to pull aside several groups of paper to discover the large pool of dried dark red blood. "This one she marked good ussta lilbh'iahin." Lucia spoke thoughtfully as she stared at the blood soaked rug. "The scent of the blood tells me it came from an artery."

Zarah turned back to the open door to the outside and looked at the Durcunusaan soldier that stood there. "No one has been inside correct?" She asked.

The Durcunusaan troop shook his head. "Not since we first came here Princess." He answered her. "It was roughly twelve hours before a detail arrived however, before we first realized the Commander had been targeted as well as the Governor."

Zarah turned back and looked at Lucia. "How old is it?" She asked.

Lucia shook her head. "It is no longer moist... the rug soaked up much of it... but I would say no more than five days."

Zarah nodded. "Just about the same time as when they attacked the rest of my family, give or take a few hours."

Lucia stood back up and faced her. "Can you... can you sense anything?" She asked.

Zarah met her eyes. "I haven't tried yet." She answered sheepishly. "I'm so used to father telling me it is wrong to use this particular skill."

"Difficult times sometimes require difficult choices." The male voice spoke causing both of them to turn and watch as Dutkne entered the door of the apartment, the Durcunusaan troop not even bothering to question him. They watched as his dark eyes swept across the interior of the apartment and then finally settled on them. "Androcles thought... he thought I might be of use to you. My name is Dutkne and..."

Dutkne looked at them staring at him and stopped talking. He knew all about what had happened to Zarah Leonidas and the role Lucia Moran had played in saving Andro's sister. There was not much that Andro and he had not talked off over the last hours, and what they didn't talk about Andro allowed him to see within his mind, just as he had done the same. He had not really taken notice of Zarah Leonidas or Lucia Moran at the villa, but standing there now looking at them he could not help it. He knew Zarah was the daughter of Martin and Isabella and that she was half vampire, but he was not prepared for her very pungent scent that filtered to his keen wolf nose. A sweet apple and sage scent that was very potent and pure and while until just recently he had never thought vampires had their own unique scents; he could detect Lucia Moran's soft basil spice scent filtering to him mixed in heavily with Zarah's. Looking at them standing close to one another Dutkne also felt something he had not felt in all his near five hundred years of life for any female. He felt intensely drawn to them, both of them for as Andro had told him, there was not one without the other any longer. He found himself measuring how they filled their clothes, for both of them had supple and lithe bodies and he marveled at how their unique scents mingled so completely. He shook these strange thoughts from his mind as he moved deeper into the apartment towards them.

“He sent you to watch over us?” Zarah asked defensively.

Dutkne shook his head quickly. “On the contrary... I offered to come. This ability that he tells me you possess is something I have never come across even having my grandfather around to question. Being able to track or sense someone else’s imprint within Mindvoice and not their resonance is very unique.”

“It’s also very wrong.” Zarah answered. “At least that is what I have been raised to think. It... it allows me to see things you would not normally see and my father considers it a breach of that person’s privacy.”

Dutkne stepped closer to them. “Perhaps it is... but coming to know your brother as I have... I get the sense he is willing to use almost any means to protect and safeguard those he loves and cares for.”

Zarah looked at Lucia quickly and then back to him. “Yes.” She answered softly.

Dutkne nodded. “He does not question your abilities Zarah... if I may call you both by your given names?”

“Everyone else does.” Zarah quipped taking Lucia’s hand in hers.

Dutkne nodded to her, the sarcastic answer lost on him. “He does not question that you can do this... especially now that you and Lucia have...” Dutkne paused for a moment and then bowed his head slightly to them. “Discovered each other.” He told them diplomatically. “He tells me that both of you have the ability to draw on one another now for strength and support as well as Seyra your bonded dragon sister. Your Mindvoice abilities have nearly tripled and...”

[Oh please my sisters...] Seyra’s voice filled their minds. [His rattling on is beginning to hurt my ears!]

Dutkne didn’t understand why Zarah and Lucia both began to smile as if they had heard a joke of some kind and he looked at them oddly as he stopped talking quickly. He had felt the Mindvoice tremors readily and knew Lucia Moran’s dragon had spoken to them, but he could not hear the words. As he had discovered with Androcles, the potential for shielding was there, enormous potential... but it was just not as focused as it was among the high level Mindvoice users within the Protectorate. That was something Dutkne had already begun working on with Androcles and it was paying off quickly. It was also something that Andro wanted him to show Zarah and Lucia as well. “Did... did I say something funny?” He asked.

“No.” Zarah answered quickly.

“You... you heard her? My Bonded sister?” Lucia asked also shocked.

“Not what she said no... only that she did say something that made you both smile in the fashion you reacted. I must have said something funny.” Dutkne said. He saw their looks of surprise and now he was the one to smile. “Both of you have beautiful smiles by the way, but part of the reason Andro sent me here was to assist you in any way I could as well as shield whatever it is that you will do. So no one else can sense it and think that this action is now acceptable.”

Dutkne turned when he saw Seyra’s light green scaled head push open a side window and extend into the apartment several feet. She was just barely able to squeeze her huge head into the window and she gazed at him intently.

How will you do this? Seyra asked him.

“It’s simple really. When Zarah is ready... I’m going to skirt along the edges of hers and Lucia’s shields and provide a smoke screen.” Dutkne answered Seyra without any hesitation. He had been talking with Elynth since they first arrived on the SCIMITAR and he found all of the dragons he had come in contact with fascinating. “Random thoughts spinning around the outer edges of a person’s MV shields does wonders to confuse and hide what someone is really doing. It is a distraction of sorts. Only someone as powerful as they or myself would be able to focus enough to actually sort through all the distortions.”

“We... we are not that strong within MV.” Lucia spoke softly.

Dutkne stepped closer to them. “On the contrary Lucia... now that you and Zarah have shared blood... both of you have Androcles’s blood within you. I know what he did when you were younger Zarah... and I know it is because of this that you are able to do what you can. He loves you both very much and coupled with your bond with Seyra here, now you both can begin to realize your full potential together.”

“You... you sound like the Feravomir.” Zarah stated softly.

Dutkne chuckled and nodded his head. “Yes... so he has told me. It is a disturbing habit I seemed to have picked up since coming here and meeting your brother. Androcles wanted me to instruct all of you in advanced shielding techniques as I have started with him. Apparently it is in my blood to assume the role of teacher among other things. Something that I’m not entirely comfortable with I assure you.”

“Can you fight?” Zarah asked.

Dutkne looked at her. “I would prefer to avoid conflict if necessary.” Dutkne stated. “So no... it is not my first choice of actions.”

Zarah looked at Lucia who met her eyes for a brief moment at his words. [He is powerful ussta lilbh'iahin, you can sense this just as well as Seyra and I can. We could learn much from him.]

[That also means we will have to protect him.] Zarah said with some distaste in her voice. She was not used to having to protect Lycavorian men though there were plenty of politicians and scholars among their people who were not fighters. Having grown up among her father and brothers, none of whom needed protecting, had given her a stereotype of Lycavorian men that she would have to shake now.

[I've never had to protect a man.] Seyra stated from her place in the window. [That might be fun.]

Zarah and Lucia looked at her and watched her blink rapidly and they both smiled. She turned back to Dutkne. “I will need to move into the main room. That is where we usually gathered when we came here.” She said.

Dutkne nodded his head feeling the tremors of their conversation within Mindvoice but not questioning them on what they said. Looking at the two of them he felt somewhat strange to be honest. There was definitely interest from him as a male wolf that much he knew. They were both dreamlike in the beauty they possessed, more so than any female he had ever been around and that gave him pause. He didn't know what to make of it... at least not yet. He would talk to Andro when they returned. He watched carefully as Zarah turned and moved fully into the main room with Lucia right behind her. Seyra's head disappeared from the window with one last look at Dutkne and then he followed them.

Zarah walked slowly around the center of the main room, quietly taking in everything the way the first Durcunusaan troops found it. Dutkne watched as Lucia settled to the floor lotus style and kept her eyes on Zarah as she moved slowly around the room. Androcles had told her it was a gift that she had received for being so strong after the events that had bound her to him to completely. Her ability to wrap psychic power around her hands and arms during a fight was the active and most noticeable gift, but her ability to read the imprints of others was the true gift. It was a gift that she had experimented on with her brothers and sisters when she was younger, trying to determine the extent of what she could do. When her father and mothers discovered what they were doing they scolded all of their children in the strongest language they knew. All of them felt it was a deep invasion of a person's privacy to do this even though they were allowing Zarah to experiment. She hadn't used this skill since except to track and detect her own imprint of places she had been just to keep her ability from waning. Now she reached out within Mindvoice slowly, expanding her awareness and almost without thinking she drew Lucia's bright essence with her, wrapping her around her essence and drawing from her own considerable power. As she did this, Zarah could feel the staggering presence of her brother's new friend Dutkne. He was like a burning star within Mindvoice, pulsing with power and control. His raw essence did not equal her brother or her father, but his control was exacting and precise and extremely focused. There was no outward strain on his face or his abilities as Zarah felt him raising Mindvoice shields that expanded outward and encompassed the entire apartment until they shut off everything on the outside and allowed her to concentrate solely on within the residence. There were no distractions, no surface thoughts from the Durcunusaan that surrounded the apartment and no distant echoing voices from those civilians who were still surrounding the area that was cordoned off. This amazed Zarah to some extent and she could feel Lucia's surprise at this as well. She shook her head quickly and returned her concentration to what she needed to do.

As she concentrated more, the light blue psychic power burst into existence around her hands, surrounding her forearms all the way up to her elbows. As Dutkne watched this with intense fascination he also saw Lucia's hands flared softly and while her psychic whips did not extend fully, he could see where this power she could wield came from. He could see it and he could feel it. It was a darkness within both of them, a darkness that they shared so completely it was as if it was the same darkness. It was also the same darkness that Dutkne could feel deep down within Androcles. Dutkne knew that Lucia's darkness came from Xaxon and the small sliver of him that had touched her when he engulfed her mother. The darkness within Zarah came from her brother, and like her brother, it was buried deep down and tightly controlled. It was a darkness that the earliest of the Lycavorian people had. A savage and horrific darkness that each Lycavorian had buried deep within them, but it was only detectable in those who were close to their instincts and embraced that darkness as part of whom they were. Andro, his father, those close to them, they were close to this darkness inside them just as Dutkne and those within the Protectorate were. It was part of the reason that they were so indomitable when it came to so many things. It was this darkness that many species feared about the Lycavorian people here and within the Beta Quadrant, for if that darkness was ever truly set free upon others, the devastation that could be wrought would be immeasurable and Dutkne knew that only what Sumar, his grandfather Wayonn and the other Pralors had bestowed and taught on and too the Lycavorian people kept that power within check. Zarah now shared that small part of her brother deep within her because of the bond they had after that day and she had learned quite well how to manipulate it to her favor. Dutkne was also able to sense something else within her consciousness, something that was not her, something that was foreign but also mingled within her deep down within her psyche. He quickly forgot to concentrate on that to discover more when she began to speak softly.

“She was reading...” Zarah spoke as she circled the room slowly her dark eyes far off and her hands and fingers touching the different pieces of furniture. “She is... she is seeing a wolf but she is... she was annoyed with him when he left. His imprint is faint but angry. There were... there were five of them that entered.” Zarah looked around the room and turned her head towards where they had found the pool of dried blood just inside the next room. “She made it into the next room and that is where she shifted and attacked.”

“They knew who she is.” Lucia said softly canting her head to the side slightly and looking up at Zarah.

Zarah nodded. “I can feel their restraint.” She said. “They... they wanted to kill her for what she did but something held them back.” Zarah turned into the next room and stood completely still as her mind formed shadow figures and placed them in different locations. Janae on the floor unconscious and two Kavalians frantically treating wounds she had inflicted on them.

Dutkne stood there not quite in awe, but very impressed. For a skill that her father did not want her to use she showed remarkable talent manipulating it. Detecting someone’s imprint within Mindvoice was far harder and much more personable than sensing their Mindvoice resonance. Anyone who could Mindvoice left a resonance within the fabric of Mindvoice, a unique scent if you will. Unfortunately... unlike a normal scent which a skilled wolf could follow and track even days later, a Mindvoice resonance did not leave such a trail when it was cut off. Zarah had learned how to influence the many threads of Mindvoice and instead detect the imprint of a person. This was different than their resonance for it was the part of a person that was underneath their MV shields. A part of a person that they did not reveal with just the surface thoughts and emotions that skittered along the outside of their shields. An imprint could be tracked and followed, for it allowed the tracker access to a person’s mind that they normally would not have. As with the Union, this type of action was deeply frowned upon by those within the Protectorate. Not many had shown the ability to do this, but it was not something they would willingly use because it was such a violation of a person’s inner thoughts and feelings.

Zarah turned and headed for the rear of the apartment Lucia and Dutkne following without question. “They took her this way.” Zarah spoke as she walked through the small kitchen area and to the rear door of the apartment which opened into a small courtyard area which held outdoor tables and chairs situated around a flower garden and immaculately kept grounds. Zarah stood still once more, her eyes still far off but seeing where she was going. The courtyard had three Durcumusaan troops stationed in it at different points keeping others from the apartment complex from coming into the courtyard. They all turned to watch Zarah move into the center of the sitting area around a small water fountain and stop. She turned and looked at Lucia with that far off gaze. “Two... two others joined them here.”

Lucia looked surprised. “Kavalian?” She asked.

Zarah shook her head. “Lycavorian.” She answered softly. “Not very... not very strong within Mindvoice but enough for me to detect a small imprint. It ends here...” Zarah looked around. Lucia and Dutkne both began to look around the area as Seyra’s huge form settled lightly onto the edge of the three story apartment building above them. “It can’t end here... it is like tracking a scent... it doesn’t just go away!” Zarah said beginning to get excited.

Lucia reached out without hesitation and took her hand and arm squeezing them. “Stay calm ussta libh'iahin.” She spoke.

Dutkne looked skyward and allowed his eyes to take in the edges of the roof of the apartment building. Seyra do you detect anything on the roof that could have held a transport? He asked her openly. Using a shielded conversation with a dragon that was not your Bonded One was something that was just not done.

Seyra’s head shifted to look at him quickly surprised that he would somehow know this and then lifted her eyes to scan the top of the building from her location. Her keen dragon eyes could detect no scuff marks of landing struts showing where a transport might have landed. There is nothing to indicate a transport landed on the roof. She answered.

“We don’t have anything that small.” Zarah spoke looking at him. “The smallest personal transport we have is a two person MENKLA Light Lifter. And even that would not be able to land on the roof. It weighs too much.”

Even if they had a transport of some kind... how did they get out of the courtyard without moving through one of the other apartments? Seyra asked. The courtyard is not open to the public and has no entrances to the outside ring.

“They went somewhere!” Zarah spoke confidently. “Her imprint fades to almost nothing right here and...” She spun around and looked at the ground around where they stood. She stepped up to the large table, gripped its edge and heaved. Her combined wolf and vampire strength tossed the metal and marble outdoor table aside easily while Lucia and Dutkne pushed aside the four chairs. Beneath the base of where the table had been was a one meter wide sewer tunnel cover made to look exactly like the carved granite floor of the courtyard. Zarah’s action had caused the three Durcunusaan troops to move closer until they too were standing around the sewer cover.

Dutkne knelt next to the cover and studied it intently. “It has been used recently.” He said as he dragged his finger along the top seam where it fit in with the surrounding carved granite patio. “It’s vacuum sealed from the inside.”

Dutkne looked up as Zarah’s hands flared with bluish psychic power and she knelt next to him. She lifted her hand and drove it down with immense force, the combination of her vampire/wolf and Mindvoice fueled strength punching a fist size hole in the one inch thick steel cover. There was the sound of escaping gas and Dutkne grabbed the edges of the cover as she drew her hand back and lifted with his own strength tearing it away from the vacuum seals along the edge with little difficulty. The escaping air brought to them the scent of death and all of them groaned and moved back from the edge of the sewer cover covering their noses.

“L'gow d'streea!” Lucia hissed. (The smell of death)

Zarah turned to one of the Durcunusaan troops. “Do you have a thermal scanner?” She hissed.

The soldier nodded. “In our lifter!” He answered as he began to turn. “I’ll be back in three minutes!”

Dutkne nodded. “The thermal scanner will give us an excellent map to go by.” He stated just as the implant he now wore cackled softly in his ear and he saw Zarah turn slightly and lift her head.

“Zarah?” The male voice echoed in the implant.

“Anton... what have you discovered?” Zarah asked.

Dutkne looked up at her. Anton Simpson. He had met him very briefly before leaving the villa, as well as his two mates, one of whom was a Drow. The oldest child of General Simpson and his two mates, Anton’s mother being Anuk Simpson. Dutkne was still rather hesitant around these dark skinned elves known as Drow. Even Lu’ria gave him pause in his actions and words because of her eyes. Those amber orbs were very disarming and they concealed the potential for great violence and anger. Dutkne knew that the Drow had been created by the Guardian of the Line to be most like Lycavorians, and just from what he had discovered in the last few days, that was very true.

“We just got done reviewing the logs for both EDEN Base and the PROMETHUS Zarah. No ship, whether authorized or not, left Earth from the beginning of the attack until three days later. Those that have left in the last two days have been thoroughly searched and cleared by Durcunusaan and there have only been nineteen of them.” Anton’s calm voice spoke. “She is still on Earth Zar! She has to be!”

“Anton... we found sewers beneath her apartment complex that appear to have been used recently. And not by normal workers.” Zarah spoke. “Where do the sewers for this district of Sparta empty?”

“Stand by... Cihera?”

“I’m on it!” The female voice chimed in.

Dutkne saw the Durcunusaan troop sprinting back from wherever their vehicle had been parked just as the female voice came back through the implants. “Zarah according to the plans I am looking at, all of the sewer channels end half a kilometer outside the city limits at the Eastern Sanitation Control Center.” Cihera told her. “But it employs nearly a thousand workers around the clock, there is no way someone would not have seen them if this is where they exited.”

“There are no dead ends tunnels or open entrances between here and there?” Zarah asked.

“No... everything was sealed when the new plant went online nine years ago.” Cihera answered her. “I can’t... wait...”

“What is it Cihera?” Zarah asked.

“The Sanitation plant is only nine years old!” Cihera answered her again. “It must have gone somewhere before that. Here! Zarah... the old plant is still functioning as a back up! It is in standby mode and is operated by remote drones. The sewers were rerouted to the new plant when it opened, but the old tunnels still exist! It rests almost at the base of the Taygete Mountains, completely out of the way!”

Zarah looked at Lucia. “A sewage plant.” She hissed. “Who goes to an old sewage plant ‘Chev?’”

“No one if they value their sense of smell.” Lucia replied.

“Cihera... Anton... grab a Durcunusaan detail.” Zarah ordered. “No more than a dozen for we don’t want to raise suspicions. Come in from the other side of the mountains. We will follow the tunnels from here.”

“We’re moving.” Anton’s voice answered.

Zarah turned back to Dutkne who was standing beside the Durcunusaan troop and looking at the portable thermal scanner over his right shoulder. “The tunnels are four meters wide and three meters high. More than enough room to move about freely. The images are clear and precise.”

Lucia turned her head and looked at Seyra sitting on top of the roof. Sister... fly high above this facility and tell us what your eyes see. Do not make it appear you are looking for anything though.

Seyra didn’t hesitate and launched herself skyward. I will let you know. She answered as she climbed into the cloudless sky.

Zarah looked at them now as she stepped closer to the hole and looked down into it. “Are we ready? Normal people don’t do these things you know.” She asked.

Dutkne looked at her eyes and couldn’t help the surge of passion that coursed through him. He watched Lucia step up and take her hand. “When has anything we have done since discovering each other been normal ussta libh’iahin? Should we consider this our first date then ussta libh’iahin?” She asked with a smile.

Dutkne shook his head. “My grandfather told me that my life would become so very interesting when we came here.” He stated slowly. “We are about to leap into a sewage tunnel with little or no light which could possibly be crawling with these Kavalian assassins that would like nothing more than to kill us in the most horrible of ways. You can’t get much more interesting than that.”

Zarah and Lucia looked at him. “That’s about the size of it.” Zarah said. “These things are normal for my family.”

Dutkne met her eyes. “Normal. Of course... this is normal. How much more normal can you get?”

Zarah and Lucia watched him take the scanner from the Durcunusaan troop and then step off over the tunnel entrance and drop out of sight without hesitation. Zarah looked at Lucia with wide eyes then quickly followed him. Lucia was next, followed by the single Durcunusaan troop who was muttering under his breath about how crazy the royal family was as he stepped off into nothing.

CRANAE ISLAND

Devra Re Mydala stood beside Bren as they used the data pads she had brought with her and those they had obtained from Lycavorian Intelligence to plot different information on the Star Chart. Every preconceived notion or bit of intelligence the Vanari people had gathered over the years on the Lycavorian people was rapidly being tossed onto a very large garbage pile. These Lycavorians were not the unintelligent animals so many on the Board of Regents thought them to be. There were very few who had read the history of the Lycavorian people as given to them by the Protectorate and Devra counted herself among that handful, yet nothing she had read had prepared her for what she had seen in the last few days. She had never considered the Protectorate arrogant or aloof, they were simply acting out in a way that matched the way they were treated by members of the Vanari people. There was never anger or distaste, only a sad acceptance that things would never change. Things were now changing before Devra’s eyes and she knew that the history between Vanari and Lycavorian was now irrevocably altered and a new path was being chartered even as she stood here. Devra had come here for help in finding her daughter and what she had discovered was far more than she had ever dreamed. She glanced over to the side of the room where two of the four women who claimed her daughter was to be part of their lives stood with Arduri. Sadi and Ne'Veha Leonidas.

Devra knew a little of the Lycavorian history behind that name. The Protectorate had been able to provide a great deal of information on their brothers and sisters within the Union. She now knew Wayonn had been coming into this quadrant of space for far longer than Devra had been alive, keeping an eye on what was happening. The name of Leonidas was synonymous with hope and courage she knew. She read about the ten thousand and what the Lycavorian named Leonidas had done to finally set his people on the path to freedom from the High Coven. His sacrifice here on Earth had sent ripples among those that remained out among the stars and was the final catalyst for bringing all of them together to form the Lycavorian Union. She had learned quickly the significance of that name within hours of arriving here on Earth, and as each hour passed by Devra could feel her confidence growing. Sadi's long golden blond hair was long and silky, her green eyes stunning in their own right and holding great power within them. It was a power Devra would never know, but one she was rapidly learning of the longer she stayed here. Ne'Veha's dark brown hair shone equally with health and softness and her dark eyes spoke of playful exuberance and exceptional intelligence. They stood close to one another, and it was obvious to the dullest individual that these two women were far more than friends to each other. This was not something Devra was concerned with, for female relationships among the Vanari were very common and any of them were just as powerful as those that had a man and woman in them. What stunned her was that they were only two of four, and all four of them were bound to one man and loved that same man as well as each other. A man who loved them all just as intently in return. A man who she now understood loved her daughter as well, even though he had never met her, just as these four women had told her they loved her.

And then there was this man Bren.

Devra glanced back and looked at him as he plotted different points on the chart intently. He was taller than her five foot nine by almost five inches and his body appeared to have been chiseled from a mountain. Though she had only seen small portions of his arms and hands, Devra did not doubt that he was equally as defined everywhere else on his body, and he moved with the confident grace of a ballet dancer. Bren was exceedingly intelligent and gifted. He was one of those who was able to use that incredible ability the Lycavorians called Mindvoice, a Tier Six individual as Helen had told them. The highest you could obtain within the ranks of Mindvoice and he was a senior commander within the ranks of these Durcunusaan that Devra had seen all over the villa they now stayed at. Wolves of the Blood they were called, men and women with some of the purest blood known to exist and all of them able to trace their lineage back to the original Lycavorians according to Wayonn. She knew he was roughly a hundred and fifty years older than her nine hundred and twenty-nine years, and Devra could not deny what she felt coursing through her being so close to him. Devra had never denied or suppressed the sexuality that was normal for Vanari, especially the females. She had only taken part in one Celebration of the Hundreds and that is where she had met and coupled with Coren Re Mydala and been smitten right away. He had been the first Vanari male to reach her and he was the only man who had shared her bed in all these years. She had been very adventurous in their married bed, and their love making had been fulfilling, yet it did not have what Devra thought it should. She had had to release the oil within her skin far more times than she felt was needed in order to stir Coren to passion and make him respond to her. Towards the end, she had to do this just so that she could enjoy herself for it had become boring and tedious. He was more concerned with politics and advancing his influence among the SBR, not to mention the fact that he had all but disowned Caliria because of her lush dark hair. Looking at Bren now however, Devra Re Mydala felt her body tingle at what she imagined it would be like in his arms. Something she had never done with Coren in all the years they had been married. Nirilo had confided in her the last time he had been home on Austrova; confided to her about how the passion and feeling and the pleasure that he had with Lycavorian woman that shared his bed. He also confided in her that he was very much in love with her and that was the main reason he chose not to return home as often. He did not want the way the Vanari people treated Lycavorians to affect her in any way for she had accepted him completely as had her family.

"Devra..." Bren's voice jolted her out of her thoughts and she looked at him blinking rapidly.

"Huh... what?" She stammered like a besotted schoolgirl as she looked at him. "Forgive me... I was... I was distracted."

Bren nodded. "You are worried for your daughter." He said. "That is very understandable to say the least."

Devra looked at him. “Do you have children Bren?” She asked softly.

Bren nodded. “Two sons.” He stated. “They are both fully grown. One serves as a ship’s captain and the other is an artist.”

Devra couldn’t hide the surprise on her face. “An artist?” She asked with a small smile. “Then you are... you are married.” Devra felt the tug on her own heart, a tug of disappointment and that surprised her.

Bren shook his head. “His work is on display in several prestigious galleries across the Union.” He said proudly. “Mostly paintings done in the old way with oils and brushes. I have three of his pieces on display in my quarters aboard the SCIMITAR. His mother was very proud of him. Of both of them.”

Devra tilted her head slightly and looked at him intently. “Was?” She asked.

Bren nodded. “She joined our ancestors forty-three years ago.” He answered her. “She was captain of one of our AUTUMN MOON-Class Attack Frigates.”

“She... she died in battle?” Devra asked hesitantly.

Bren shook his head with a smile. “We have not always been at war, though at times it does seem like that to others. Her ship was caught in an Ion Storm as they were evacuating a small mining colony struck by seismic instabilities. She got most of her crew and civilians off before the storm overwhelmed them and caused her ship to tumble into the upper atmosphere of the planet. The hull had been compromised by then and those that remained died very quickly due to decompression and heat.”

Devra’s hand went to her throat in sadness. “I’m... I’m sorry Bren. I didn’t mean too...”

Bren shook his head again and stood up fully and looked at her. “Do not be sorry Devra Re Mydala. We were mated for four hundred and nineteen years and she lived a full life and blessed us with her presence in ours. She died doing what she loved and my sons and I do not mourn her anymore. We rejoice in what she gave to us.”

While saddened by what he told her, Devra was very happy that he was not married, for the more time she spent with him the more attracted to him she became and it was a powerful attraction indeed. “No... there has been no one since then?” She stammered the question.

Bren shook his head. “No.” He stated flatly.

“I thought... I thought your people craved physical contact with others.” Devra spoke. “I mean... Wayonn told me that Lycavorians as a whole are a very passionate species and that you need physical contact.”

Bren nodded his head. “We are a passionate people.” He stated. “And we do crave and need physical contact with those we love.” He told her. “Unlike what your people believe about us Devra Re Mydala... we do not take mates simply to fulfill this desire we have. We are an emotional people who have strong faith in a higher power. Many of us have seen things that only reinforce this to us. Marriage is something we regard as one of the most sacred of things Devra and while there are some among my people who do not put as much respect on this as others, the vast majority of us do not simply run around from partner to partner.”

“Bren... I didn’t mean to imply that...” Devra began to speak.

Bren reached out and his strong fingers encircled her arm gently as he shook his head. “I know this.” He stated with a smile. “I’m only giving you a window into the passions and desires of my people so that you may view us as we are.” He nodded his head. “It is true that we crave physical contact with those we love... but I get that with my sons and my grandchildren. I also get it from within the Leonidas family. If ever there was a family that is closer together I have never seen them. It is part of what makes them so strong. The King and Queens, and now Androcles and his mates... the others within their family feed off of that passion and love they have and it strengthens them as a whole. If you are within the small circle of those they call family and friends... then you will never lack for the feeling of family... for essentially you become part of their family. All of the Durcunusaan that protect them... or try to protect them anyway...” He said with a smile. “Those of us within the immediate Royal Details... our families... we come together with Andro and the King and their family several times a year and have huge gatherings. This is one of the many reasons that they are so loved throughout the Union. They do not consider themselves better than anyone... and I have seen the King and Queens toss protocol to the side and roll up their sleeves to help build a clinic or a store or a home here on Earth or Apo Prime. They garner this love and respect because of who they are. If you step back a ways and allow your eyes to expand into a different horizon, in many cases you will see that they consider every member of this Union as part of their family and that is why they are revered.”

Devra looked at him for a long moment. “You are trying to tell me something aren’t you Bren.” She said.

Bren smiled. “What would that be?” He asked.

“I don’t know... but I think it has something to do with my daughter.” Devra answered.

“Does your daughter... does Caliria have anyone back on your world?” Bren asked.

Devra shook her head immediately. “No. The vast majority of Vanari males will not even attempt to enter into any sort of relationship with her. Dark hair in Vanari females is not seen as realistically conducive to long term unions. Our males fear that their children will be somehow tainted by the gene for dark hair even though the male is usually the one who carries the gene. I know she believes in the tradition of our Celebration of the Hundreds, but she refuses to attend any of the ceremonies and just be an object of pleasure in a mass of bodies. This is another point of contention between Caliria and her father. Coren believes if she is to find a husband she needs to attend the Celebrations. Caliria does not.”

“What do you believe?” Bren asked her.

“I believe there is more to her decision to stay away but I have never questioned her beyond what she has told me.” Devra said. “She has been even more insistent about not going this last decade now and it has angered her father greatly. She even told him if he wanted her to attend so bad that he could go in her place.”

Bren chuckled. “Strong willed I see.” He said.

Devra nodded. “Very much so.”

“Let me ask you a question Devra Re Mydala.” Bren said meeting her dazzling green eyes. “Do you believe in predetermination?”

“In what sense?” She asked him.

“Do you believe one person could be meant for another before they are even born and because of that predetermination they will not acquiesce to what others feel they should do?” Bren said.

Devra smiled a little. “I don’t know if my faith in a higher power extends to something like that Bren.” She stated. “That seems a little far fetched.”

Bren nodded. “Indeed it does.” He said. “But you have seen it yourself this very morning by virtue of what Sadi told you in regards to Caliria. A woman she has never met. Now I ask you to apply that train of thought to everything you know about your daughter and her history. Her decisions and the path her life has taken... and see if there is not some correlation there.”

“Why?” Devra asked tentatively knowing what he was trying to say and not really believing it could be true, yet she could not come up with any other explanation.

“I have protected, or tried to protect Androcles Leonidas since he was only nine years old.” Bren spoke. “I have watched him grow into the man he is today. I have watched him turn aside many beautiful females who have vied for his attention and those few who have shared his life before Sadi, they were exceptionally brief. I have seen him working towards one goal in his life and that was to rediscover Sadi.” Bren motioned with his head to where she was standing with Ne’Veha and Arduri. “Nothing else mattered to him. Not wealth, not power, not control. Everything he had done up until the point she came back into his life was to move on a singular path that would see that day materialize. He knew they were meant for each other and nothing was going to keep him from achieving that. Now... I was not here the night of their marriage but some of my men have told me Sadi’s howls of pleasure whispered across the gulf like the sounds of musical charms in the heavens. As Sadi told you earlier, when he and Sadi came together it allowed them to discover each of those in turn who would share their lives as their power grew. It is my guess that Caliria is only the last because of the distance involved. It is also my belief that she has not accepted another in her life because some part of her, something within her inner being knew that she was meant to be with Andro and the others just as Carisia knew, just as Lu’ria and Ne’Veha knew and could feel it. She may not have truly known what it was, or even understood it. That they have been able to see images of her, no matter how brief since they are all together now, only lends creditability to what I am telling you. I can see it in your eyes as well. You want to believe... but whatever you were raised to understand and believe is keeping you from making that last jump.”

Devra blinked rapidly and looked at him in shock. Everything he had just said made perfect sense and as realization washed over her she knew it was true. “How... how do you know that?” She asked.

“What I know is not more than you Devra... I simply do not constrain myself to think along one particular path.” Bren answered. “As Queen Anja is fond of saying, more often than not, our people tend to think outside of the box. If we believe something could not be true, we don't simply accept that, we try to find something that proves that we are wrong. We usually end up proving to ourselves that what we thought could not be true is in fact very possible and true."

"Bren... why are you telling me this?" Devra asked.

Devra didn't back away when he stepped closer to her, so near in fact that she welcomed the closeness and warmth she could feel projecting from his body and she could feel her own body tingle profoundly with delight. Devra was a worldly woman, and she did not shy from anything, yet the intensity with which she found herself wanting this tall Lycavorian man stunned even her.

Bren smiled. "I am telling you for two reasons." He said softly. "I am telling you because in all the years I have known and served the King and then his son, I have discovered there is one thing that the two of them share completely. They are the two most devious and cunning minds I have ever known. It would not surprise me in the least if, unlike what Sadi and his other mates think, Androcles already knows all about Caliria and is at this moment plotting to rescue her. Even while we do the same thing in the belief he does not know."

Devra's eyes grew a little wider. "If... if that is the case... why... why has he not acted?" She spoke the question.

"How do we know he is not already acting?" Bren told her. "There is a reason he and his father are the foremost tactical minds in the galaxy. They are always three or four steps ahead of their enemies. Do not worry Devra Re Mydala, we will bring your daughter back to you... and as I stand here before you now, I can tell you with the utmost certainty that every vile scum who has laid hands on your daughter will suffer beneath the wrath of the Spartan Prince who loves her."

Devra did not back down from his piercing eyes and for some reason his words filled her with renewed hope for the future. She blinked and continued to stare at him before speaking again. "You said... you said there were two reasons." She said softly.

Bren nodded. "Yes."

"What is the second?" She asked.

Bren reached up and touched his nose. "The Lycavorian sense of smell is perhaps our most powerful asset. We use it for many things... yet there is one thing we can always smell in others no matter their species."

"I... I don't follow." Devra said with a raspy voice.

Bren smiled again and his dark eyes glittered in the light causing Devra to shiver in delight. "You have come here now... at this point in both our lives for a reason Devra. It was only months ago that my sons told me I needed to start searching for another mate. To get out and begin to experience life beyond the Durcunusaan once more. I have been out with three females since they told me this... two Lycavorians and an elf female. When you arrived here I knew my search was over. When I saw you... when I detected your scent on the SCIMITAR... I knew it was you that I wanted. I will make you mine Devra Re Mydala and I will pursue you until you see this for yourself for your scent tells me you want me as well, but your mind is still fighting with that knowledge. You will come to understand and know what you want soon..." He stated confidently. "And then I will love you as you have never been loved before Devra Re Mydala."

Devra's soft intake of breath caused his smile to widen ever so slightly. Never in all her years had she had a man state he was going to have her with such firm confidence and resolve. His words caused her heart to skip a beat and she almost became wet at her center. She opened her soft lips to reply but the beeping of the COM unit saved her from making an utter fool of herself. She watched him turn quickly at the sound and Devra realized her hands were shaking. They were shaking not in fear or anger, they were shaking in anticipation of the moment he did as he stated he would. She took several deep breaths before turning and watching as Sadi stepped towards the COM unit and the figure of the Durcunusaan soldier appeared.

"Yes?" Her voice said.

"Milady... we are receiving the transmission that you ordered us to be monitoring for." The figure of the officer in the holoid image spoke.

Sadi turned from Ne'Veha and Arduri. "Is it secure?" She asked.

"Very much so Milady."

Where is it originating from?" Sadi asked.

“That is the surprising thing Princess...” The man answered. “It is originating from within the Icalro Alliance Traverse.”

“The Icalro Traverse?” Sadi asked surprised.

“Yes ma’am.”

“It is secure though. No repeaters or traces detected?” Sadi asked.

“Nothing that our instruments can detect and no one has communications equipment such as we do Milady. You know this.” The officer said.

“Then patch it through here.” Sadi spoke moving closer to the chart table.

“Transferring now.”

As everyone moved closer to the table they watched the image of the officer disappear only to be replaced by the image of the much older Kochab male. His hairless face was natural for his people, the dark brown skin moist. His lamprey like mouth was filled with small sharp teeth and his large eyes were yellow in color.

“My dear Sadi... or should I call you Crown Princess of the Lycavorian Union Sadi now? This is quite the surprise to say the least.” The Kochab spoke. “How long has it been? Ten years now.”

“More like twelve Uache.” Sadi answered.

“Imagine my surprise when my people told me they had a encrypted transmission from within the Union.” He continued. “They thought it was a joke of some kind considering what is now happening where you are. Distasteful business what these Kavalians are doing.”

“And how much of what has happened did you know?” Bren snarled from his spot.

“Bren!” Sadi growled.

“Tsk. Tsk.” Uache shook his head. “I am many things Durcunusaan Commander... stupid is not one of them. Events within your Union have thrown those loosely acquainted business partners here in The Wilds into disarray. None of them want to be seen as helping the Kavalians in their actions for they know well what will happen now that word is reaching us that Sadi’s young mate is very much alive. The smarting that Androcles Leonidas gave to many of them eight years ago still stings, and he was just coming into his own then. There are quite a few of us who refuse to do business with the Kavalians because it is bad for our health in more ways than one. What has befallen your Union is not something we predicted or wished to see happen Commander.”

“Uache... that is not why I contacted you.” Sadi spoke again regaining his attention.

“Yes I gathered that.” Uache answered with a smile. “A tight beam, highly encrypted transmission that only I would know the decryption algorithms for? I see not everything I taught you went to waste, though from what I have heard you are making quite the name for yourself now. Crown Princess of the Union who is being compared to the King’s mother, a woman who holds respect and awe even here in The Wilds. I must commend you Sadi, you have come a long way and surprisingly I find myself happy for you.”

“I... I need your help Uache.” Sadi said softly.

The Kochab tilted his head slightly. “Help that your vaunted Krypteria could not give to you? Now that is surprising... and somewhat troubling.”

“The Krypteria does not have the contacts you do.” Sadi told him.

Uache smiled. “Well... there is truth to that statement.”

“Uache... why are you within the Icalro Alliance Traverse?” Sadi asked.

Uache looked at her for a moment and then smiled again, exposing more of those small, sharp teeth. “I should have known you would have determined where I was transmitting from. This is the only place left to me that is safe. When I refused to do business with the Kavalians they ran me off of Nefoa and put a bounty on my head. That spineless government in place there capitulated to those animals without so much as a whimper. It was pitiful.”

“And you went to the Icalro?” Sadi asked.

“I had no where else to go.” Uache told her. “At least here they allow me to do some business though they take a very generous cut, and I am allowed to keep my estate and servants out of the hands of others.”

“Your slaves you mean?” Ne’Veha hissed.

Uache chuckled and shook his head. “Hardly. Slavery is a despicable business and one I will not participate in no matter the profit. It also has the predisposition for those involved in such activity to have very short life spans thanks to your former King. I have a dozen servants and I pay them very well Princess Ne’Veha.

I provide for them all that they need and they remain in my employ willingly.” Ne’Veha looked surprised that he knew who she was and it showed on her face. Uache grinned and it was a frightening visage to see. “We do get your Netnews out here, and the Crown Prince’s actions are very well followed, as well as those who he taken as mates. Unlike his father, he has the inclination to come into The Wilds and disrupt what he deems as unsightly businesses on a whim. He has yet to learn the delicate intricacies of how criminal organizations work and the vacuum of power it leaves every time he destroys one group or the other. Those in my line of work tend to be very wary of Androcles Leonidas. He is even more unforgiving than his father and his father is a bastard.”

“Uache... I am looking for someone.” Sadi spoke now.

“Indeed? And who might this person be?” Uache answered.

“A woman.” Sadi answered. “A woman who is not from this quadrant of space and who would have been brought here by those who are also not from this quadrant. Our information tells us that they are from a criminal organization within the Beta Quadrant and they have been making inroads into The Wilds for at least a decade now and possibly longer. They are called the Orionis Syndicate.”

“Finding a single female within The Wilds is next to impossible Sadi... you know this.” Uache told her. “What makes you think I would know?”

“Because you are an information broker and you have ears everywhere Uache. If it is happening in The Wilds then you know about it.” Sadi answered him confidently. “Any new contacts made from outside The Wilds would find their way back to your ears, especially ones that come from the Beta Quadrant.”

“The Beta Quadrant you say?” Uache spoke in a tone of voice that caused Sadi to look at him intently. The interest that he showed in this new knowledge was less than what she had expected. “If they have come from the Beta Quadrant then that would suggest these individuals have much more advanced engine designs than those of us here in The Wilds, and we have been trying for years to steal the plans for Union or Coven engines. No one seems to want to help us in that regard. There are many groups who would jump at the opportunity this provided.”

“And you would not?” Bren asked in a much more subdued voice.

“I am not stupid Commander and I am also not greedy.” Uache answered. “I have built my network on principles of trust and reliability. King Leonidas knows all about me, and I operate with his knowledge because I do not dabble in such practices that are repugnant to him. If I did... do you think for a moment your Crown Princess would be talking to me? We have a history together that I doubt you are aware of Commander, a history and a debt I owe to her, so please... remain out of this conversation from now on.”

“Uache... this is important.” Sadi told him.

“Yes I am sure it is.” Uache spoke. “Sadi... you have been out here... you know how hard it is to find groups of people let alone a single individual. The Wilds is a huge area and I am not as well connected as I used to be.”

“She would be unique Uache. And there are probably more of her species with her as well. Unless she and the others were being sold in private auctions there is no possible way word would not begin to filter out.” Sadi said. “She...”

Arduri stepped up next to Sadi now and well into the viewing cone of the transmission. “She would look like me except with dark hair!” Arduri blurted out.

“Arduri!” Devra exclaimed beginning to move forward to pull her out of the transmission quickly. Bren’s hand on her arm stopped her.

“She is my sister!” Arduri snapped softly. “She is my sister and she is to be...” Arduri looked at Sadi. “She is to be wife to Androcles! She was taken by slavers in the Beta Quadrant and brought here! We want her back!”

All of them saw Uache’s yellow eyes grow slightly wider at this knowledge as he came to his feet staring at Arduri. His eyes went to Sadi now. “Indeed.” He spoke as calmly as he could. “Sadi?”

Sadi nodded her head as she wrapped her arm around Arduri’s waist. “Arduri is correct Uache.” She spoke. “They are called Vanari... and in the Beta Quadrant their females are considered prize slaves when they are captured. As the elves were for so long here. We have reason to believe that Arduri’s sister Caliria and several others were brought here to the Alpha Quadrant to be sold as slaves by this new organization. You owe me a debt Uache... and if you can discover where she is I will forgive this debt to you forever and I will even offer you freedom to live out your years here within the Union.”

“Princess!” Bren gasped. “You cannot!”

Sadi ignored Bren’s words and continued to stare at Uache in the transmission her gaze unwavering. “Uache? You do not break any of our laws with your actions now... and I know that. You deal only in information. You can settle here within the Union or on the border if you wish and you can still conduct your business as it is, but I want this knowledge Uache.”

Uache looked at her evenly. “And can you insure I am not tormented by your Union authorities?” He asked her.

“As long as your business dealings are in information only... yes.” Sadi answered. “And as long as you break no Union laws.”

Uache looked as if he was contemplating what she was telling him. “And how do you foresee getting me and my people out of Icalro space Sadi? I have no ships anymore... and the Alliance and the Union are not exactly on speaking terms. In fact... they hate you and I imagine the feeling is mutual. Not to mention that my species is not very well liked within Union space either.”

“You cannot get yourself out?” Sadi asked.

Uache shook his head. “I could... but my people are loyal to me for a reason and I will not abandon them to their fates.”

“Then... then you can get this information?” Ne’Veha asked.

Uache looked at her and then turned his eyes back to Sadi and nodded slowly. “I already have this information Sadi. I was able to procure it for someone else who was very interested. So interested in fact that he offered much more than you do now.”

“Another?” Sadi demanded harshly. “Who is this person? I will...”

“Perhaps you should speak to your young mate Sadi.” Uache said.

Sadi stood straight up her eyes wide. “Andro?” She gasped.

Uache nodded his head. “Androcles Leonidas contacted me three days ago while he was still on the SCIMITAR returning to Earth. Your husband is quite the frightening young man when he wants to be Sadi and he is viciously protective of you and his other mates. He explained to me in very simple terms why it was in my best interests to cooperate with him. I would have gotten the information for half of what he offered to me Sadi and he is also very trustworthy. I transmitted the data to him yesterday morning and I am even now preparing for the ship he is sending to pick up myself and my employees.”

“Why didn’t you tell me this right away?” Sadi snapped.

Uache smiled. “You did not ask.” He stated.

“Then I suppose I will see you soon.” Sadi barked angrily. She stabbed her finger down on the control panel and the transmission died. She looked at Ne’Veha first and then at Bren. “Bren... where is Andro now?” She asked with a touch of concern in her voice.

“He and Jomann should be meeting with Marci and Deia at the hospital.” Bren answered. “You don’t think he would...?”

“No. He knows there is too much going on for him to leave right now... but we must go there anyway to insure this.” Sadi said quickly.

Bren nodded. “He is no fool and he would insure a thorough check of any information this Uache gave to him before moving. And then he will have a recon done if he has a target.” He said.

“I know.” Sadi said. “I’m more concerned about his mental state though. If he contacted Uache then he knows of Caliria and what she means to us. If he knows this then he will already have reached out to touch her for he does not need us within the connection as we need him. He can simply draw off Elynth. If he has talked to her then he will know what she is enduring and he will...”

“He will act as he did on Iraruzu.” Ne’Veha spoke softly as she took Sadi’s hand.

Devra looked at them and stepped closer to them. “What do you mean?” She asked them softly. “What did he do?”

Sadi turned and met her eyes. “Iraruzu is where our Drow Mistress Lu’ria was.” Sadi told her. “She was being hunted by the Kavalians and she had... she had been shot and was gravely injured by Andro’s cousin. He... Andro killed his cousin for what he had done to Lu’ria. If he has been able to touch Caliria and he knows where she is, then the only reason we have not left to get her is because he intends to be very methodic and obliterate everyone that had a hand in her capture and her imprisonment.” Devra glanced quickly to Bren as his own words to her filled her mind. She turned back and watched as Sadi tilted her head and reached out within Mindvoice. Lu'ria my Mistress?

Sadi... what is wrong?

Will you and Enylarcopri meet us at the hospital? We have discovered some information that is very useful. Sadi told her.

As have we. Lu'ria answered. We will see you there soon.

Sadi turned to Bren. "Have a Lifter meet us on the bridge to the villa Bren." She ordered. Devra and Arduri will be coming with us."

SPARTA

KING YELU HOSPITAL

"...Zarah, Lucia and Dutkne are very close to finding Janae, within the next few hours at least."

Androcles was sitting in the chair next to Deia's bed holding her hand in both of his. Marci sat at the foot of the bed quietly while Jomann sat in a chair near the door with his back to the wall and facing the door into the room. Panos sat near the window, several data pads in his hand, the heavy curtains drawn shut.

Deia had most of her color back and she looked better than she had in almost a week. Eliani had performed two surgeries in two days on her back injury to insure her spine was repaired and she was strong enough to make a full recovery. Her husband and mate had been beside her from the moment she had come into the hospital and he had only left so that they could talk. Deia took a sip of the tea she held in her other hand and looked at him. "You have not leaked word of my condition then?" She asked.

Andro shook his head. "The Durcunusaan have the floor above and below this one sealed completely. The only medical people allowed on this floor are Eliani, Aunt Anuk and those Durcunusaan medical people treating you and several Senators that were pulled from the rubble. The other patients were moved to different floors. We do not need to give the Kavalians any more information than they already have."

"Hold nothing back from me now Mandri. Nothing! You are certain they have For'mya Andro?" Deia told him. "The Ambassador, this Matuarr, he didn't just say this to keep you from killing him?"

Andro shook his head. "Everything we have discovered points to the truth of his words Tenna." He said. "And it is not good. I... I need your guidance Aunt Deia. I am out of... I am out of my realm here and nothing father and I went over through the years covered this exact possibility. I'm... I'm lost."

"We are lost." Panos spoke from his chair in support of his now dead son's namesake. "You are not alone boy. Never."

Deia shifted her body slightly on the bed and nodded her head. "You are not lost... we just can not plan for everything Mandri... you know that. It is a fault that your father has as well. Events like these... they have not happened since the Black Day. Tell me everything Androcles. This is Laustinos's doing isn't it? Does your father know about For'mya?" She spoke.

Andro nodded. "Uncle Daniel will tell him when he arrives on Curila 6. I fear only Uncle Danny will be able to control him once he discovers this." Andro said. "Denali, Lisisa and Cha'talla have rescued my first elven mother." Andro spoke evenly looking up to meet her eyes. "They wiped out the Immortal mercenaries that had taken her at the behest of my uncle and the Kavalians. Denali and mother did not know for certain, but they are reasonably sure that she was to be Laustinos's payment for helping the Kavalians do what they have done."

"That nubous temorvana saric!" Deia swore heaving the mug of tea against the far wall and watching it shatter loudly.

Andro nodded. "My sentiments exactly. They believed he was making his way to Belid to collect his reward and they are going to try and capture or kill him. This Immortal mercenary Phy'iad he..."

They all turned when the door to the room opened and Eliani rushed in with large eyes. "Tenna!" She exclaimed as she looked at her Aunt.

Deia shook her head and held out her other hand for Eliani. "I'm sorry Eli." She spoke quickly. "I let my anger get away from me."

Eliani went to the bed and took her hand without question as Panos got to his feet and moved his chair forward for her to sit down. Eliani settled into the chair without question and held Deia's hand to her cheek. "I told you not to get excited Tenna. It will not help your healing if you insist on throwing things across the room."

Deia chuckled and felt a surge of warmth through her as Eliani settled into the chair holding her hand. Eliani Leonidas may not have looked like her older sister in any way though she bore her name, but she certainly had her manner and soft spoken voice when she wanted too. When Martin told her they were naming Eliani after Deia's sister and his grandmother, it had brought her to tears and try as she might not too, she had always held Eliani a little closer to her heart because of this.

"Andro... please tell me he did not..." Deia spoke turning back to him.

"He... he began to rape her yes." Andro answered seeing her eyes close in sadness. "Apparently Deni and the others had help on the inside from several Immortals that were not part of Cha'talla's tribe. One of them managed to free her and she killed Phy'iad before it went further while this Immortal and Cirith disposed of the rest. My mothers are strong..." Andro told her softly. "Killing Phy'iad made her feel better, but she will not be completely healed until she is back within my father's arms."

"Then you must make that happen." Deia said quickly.

Andro nodded. "She refuses to leave Belid without at least trying to capture Laustinos but one way or the other they will be leaving within twelve hours and returning to Kranek. I have already told Cha'talla to put her and my mother Isabella on a ship and send them to Curila 6 to be with father."

Deia shook her head. "In all my years, never did I believe we would discover what we have about the Akruxian people." She said softly. "What Eliani has told me is true then?"

Andro nodded. "All of it." He stated. "Cha'talla's wife Esther has already injected the Immortals who took part in the rescue of mother and returned them to the true outward appearance of their species. Deni was not able to go into great detail but apparently Veldruk introduced some sort of toxin into the atmosphere of their planet before he attacked it. This is what caused them to look as they did. When Esther discovered this she was able to fashion a serum that was able to eliminate the toxins in their bodies and return them to normal. She will finish this when they return to Kranek. I have not seen them... but Deni and Lisisa said it is a wondrous thing to behold."

"Much has happened it seems." Deia spoke as she looked at him. "These High Coven deserters? We can trust them?"

Andro nodded his head. "Yes." He stated confidently. "Valin and his daughter carry the blood of the fifth Lycavorian Bloodline within them Tenna. You have... you have kept the knowledge of the five Bloodlines secret for too long Tenna. And now it is time for everyone to know exactly who you are and how old you are."

Deia nodded her head. "Perhaps. But it was with good reason I did these things Andro and your father understood. And it was even more important when we discovered Janae." She answered looking at him.

Andro met her eyes. "Father knew?" He asked with some surprise.

Deia smiled. "There is far more knowledge hidden within your father's thoughts than many people expect or know. He has shared some of it with me." She said. "And I suspect there is far more hidden within yours. That is why the two of you are so much alike."

"No more." Andro said shaking his head. "Canth's father Wayonn is among us now as are those Lost Ones that Canth told father about on Ukwav. He did not mean just those left on Lycavore Tenna, and now that we know that, it needs to come out. Our people... we are finally reunited Tenna."

"As it should be." Deia spoke softly. "Canth spoke of his father often. We knew that they lived but never where. He wouldn't tell us." Deia said thoughtfully. "We can speak of that later. Right now you need to tell me what is happening. Resumar?"

Andro nodded. "They are ready to act. I sent Uncle Isra and Aunt Tarifa to Ritaah to assist him as well as help Jalersi and Pian find her daughter." Andro answered her. "Karun is... father welcomed him into our family before all this began Tenna and he has shown where his true heart of hearts is. It burns with the blood of a Leonidas. Grandfather Riall and General Vengal have our entire military on full alert. War Master Tareif and General Lynwe have Earth locked down tight and Colonel Nestor is sweeping from continent to continent looking for any Kavalians that may still be hiding. All of our Fleet Groups and ground divisions are standing too and holding their positions."

Deia shook her head and brought her hand up to stroked his cheek. “The military I will leave to you without question. There is a reason your father trusts Tareif and Lynwe as he does and a reason they rely so heavily on Nestor. I will not question or intrude upon that.” She spoke. “How... how badly did they hurt us Mandri?”

“As best as we can determine there were one thousand four hundred and twelve in the Senate Building when it came down.” Andro said softly. “The crews are still digging and trying to find survivors but the chances now are remote.” He looked at her. “Aside from you... only two hundred and twelve have been pulled from the rubble alive.” He watched Deia’s eyes close in pain and she shook her head slowly. “Of the four hundred and nineteen Senators who were in the building, four hundred have been accounted for. Nineteen are still missing. None of them made it. One of the explosive charges was set in the center of their offices on the fifth floor and it vaporized everything within two hundred meters in all directions. The respective districts on Apo Prime that they represent or their homeworld governments have already held special elections and nearly all those seats are now being filled by appointees until new elections can be held. Many are already on their way here.”

“I will greet them when they begin arriving.” Panos spoke now as he moved up to the bed and held out the data pad. “Here is a preliminary list of replacements.”

Deia took the pad. “And they believe your father to be dead?”

Andro nodded. “And our mother Aricia. I have had nothing released on our mother Anja other than she is at a secure location with my younger brothers and sisters and our grandmothers Gorgo and Dasha. Aunt Selene has been handling all the Netnews conferences with Aunt Aihola and President Taylor. We have not released much information and the Netnews people are becoming more persistent.”

Deia nodded. “Understandably so.” She stated. “If we are to maintain this façade you will need to begin appointing people to positions Androcles. The Kavalians may be animals, but they are not stupid. Our government is set up in a such a way as to quickly recover from losing your father. He pressed this issue even more after you were born. Laustinos will know this.”

“I was not suppose to survive their attack.” Andro said.

“But you did.” Deia corrected him. “And they will expect us to act politically to fill the vacuum.”

Andro nodded. “I have chosen Dilaen Roan as my Netnews Representative. Tomorrow she will begin taking over the briefings and such though she doesn’t know it yet.” He finished with a small smile.

Deia nodded. “The one who discovered Carisia? She impressed me with her strength and wit.” Deia looked at him. “Roan? She married the human?”

Andro nodded. “They were married on the SCIMITAR by Sa'sur as they were returning to Earth.” He answered. “They didn’t want to wait.”

Deia nodded. “Gorgo and I could smell that on both of them. Good.” She stated. “Since you have not released reports of my condition I assume that is also part of the plan you and your father devised.”

Andro nodded. “I will appoint grandfather Panos as interim Prime Minister. When Zarah and Dutkne find Janae, she will be appointed as his deputy. To cover her absence I will say Aunt Tarifa has been named Governor of Sparta and I will say she has gone to Apo Prime for her protection and to complete all of the legal requirements.”

Deia nodded. “That will suffice for now.” She said. “What do you intend for me?”

“Dilaen will report that you are in a medically induced coma to better facilitate your healing. Your condition will be critical.” Andro replied. “I let it slip out that you had survived when I visited the Kavalian embassy, but not to what extent. My anger got the better of me. I do not need them coming after you again however so you will be moved in two days to my villa on Cranæ Island. The Durcunusaan have turned it into a fortress and they would need an orbital bombardment to breach the defenses set up. This will also allow you to better assist grandfather Panos in his role since it will not look odd if he spends the majority of his time there now. Jomann has already assigned a full Durcunusaan detail to you since your original detail was among the casualties in the Senate Building. I... I would like it if... if you would advise me from the shadows for now Tenna. I know this is not your way... but I need to know you are safe and that the Kavalians believe you are no threat. If Laustinos is still working with them he will undoubtedly inform them to target you if it is discovered you are still active.”

Deia looked at Jomann and nodded her head. “I will do as you ask me... yes. I see you took my advice.” She said. She turned back to Andro. “Though from what Eliani has told me, your first act together was rather ill-advised. You and Jomann must not act as your father and Andreus act when they are together Androcles Leonidas.”

“I will act however I need to act to discover information.” Andro replied glancing at his sister sternly. “And it is better that I have someone like Jomann watching my back along with Elynth. He can go places she can not and we make a good team.”

“A riadcon is what you are! Both of you! I did not mean for you to follow him blindly in his craziness Jomann.” Deia hissed softly turning to look at him now. “You are there to protect him!”

Jomann looked at her from his chair and rose slowly to his feet. “I was protecting him Deia.” He stated. “I was pummeling everything that got close to him.” This got a snort of small laughter and approval from Panos in the corner.

“Son vada carians!” Deia exclaimed. “Benee piegn igords! Both of you!”

Eliani met Andro’s eyes and stuck her tongue out at him. “And that is being pleasant in her choice of words from earlier!” She snapped.

“I have already been scolded by the Feravomir in the strongest of terms.” Andro said now turning back to Deia. “Both of us have. We will not act as rashly as we did going into the future.”

It was Deia’s turn to snort. “I’ll believe that when I see it.” She snapped. Her face became serious and she squeezed Andro’s hand. “Tell me.” She said softly. “Tell me how badly he hurt us Andro.”

Androcles turned to Marci. “I should let Marci explain that.” He answered. “She has spent the better part of two days discovering just what he has done.”

Marci stood up slowly and nodded her head to him. “None of it is good and I don’t think we have discovered all of it either.” She stated moving up next to Andro and holding out the pad for Deia to take. “Armetus is still sedated and will remain so for the foreseeable future according to Eliani.”

Deia looked at her favorite niece. “Eli?”

“He will recover Tenna... but the Kavalians injected him with Morphic Tellurite to keep him from shifting while they were torturing him. It also served to minimize the ability of our healing factor to treat the wounds they inflicted. It is why he was in such horrible shape when Marci finally reached him.” She spoke. “I have consulted with my mother and Eurin on Curila 6. They both agree with me that keeping him sedated until his healing factor is back to full strength is the best thing to do. Foreign Substance Intrusion was my best class in medical school Tenna, and even my mother doesn’t question me in that regard.”

Deia nodded slowly and squeezed her hand. “I will trust in your judgment Eli. How can I not when your mother and Eurin agree with you.” She said.

Eliani smiled and squeezed her hand back. “He will survive Tenna. I know how much you rely on him but he will survive. It will just take time.”

Deia nodded and looked back to Marci. “Continue Marci please.”

“Well... for starters... part of this is our fault.” Marci said.

Deia looked at her. “What?” She gasped in shock.

“It’s our fault in the sense that when he was appointed to be your deputy we were still involved in the Purge.” Marci said. “No one... and I do mean no one... none of us remembered to remove his Krypteria status and codes. He had First Tier access as a senior analyst Prime Minister... and when he discovered this access had not been revoked six months later he made sure it could not be revoked. Ever. He used several encrypted programs to bury his access so deeply that no one would look past his clearance as Deputy Prime Minister. He set up a Ghost Account and has been getting status reports on nearly every operation the Krypteria has been running for the past twenty-five years. This allowed him to stay two or three steps ahead of us and always insure he was safe from discovery. He built several backdoors into the Intelligence Database Core Drives, ones that only a full coded entry check would discover, and then only if the person checking was looking for something odd. We have been able to read many of his files, they were only partially secure really, he was not very careful in his personal files once we were past the many layers of security he built around them.”

“But... but why?” Deia asked. “He was Deputy Prime Minister... he could have been involved first hand on almost anything he wanted.”

Marci held up the data pad. “Queen Dysea.” She stated.

Deia looked at Andro quickly and then back to her. “Dysea?”

“It appears Laustinos has a very sick obsession with her.” She stated. “We discovered chronological entries for the last twenty-three years on pretty much everything she has done or places she has gone. Thousands of entries on everything from diplomatic trips she has taken to...”

“To what?” Deia demanded.

Andro looked at her. “He was watching her Tenna.” He said softly. “On NORMYA’S LIGHT... at the royal estate on Apo Prime. The only place he does not have holo entries for is the villa here in Sparta. He was never allowed access into the Durcunusaan Command Center on the Villa Estate thanks to Fache. And he tried several times. He must have tapped into the Durcunusaan security feeds from those other locations for he even has entries for the times she was alone with father or one of my mothers in their room on Apo Prime. He has entries for...”

“Enough!” Deia barked. “That is... that is...”

“Disgusting.” Eliani finished her sentence for her.

“I had Chief Mage Thr’won do a psyche profile on him quickly, given what we have discovered.” Marci said now. “She says it is the most severe case of obsessive perversion that she has ever seen or read about in all her years. And that was only a cursory evaluation. She says this is how he discovered her likes and dislikes about nearly everything. This is how he was able to get away with his open interest for her for so long. We are still going through the entries for there are thousands as I said, but in many respects, as vile as it sounds, Laustinos knows Dysea almost as well as Martin.”

Deia shivered in unmitigated revulsion. “By the gods.” She muttered.

Marci nodded her head in agreement. “It appears he has been leading a dual life for close to two decades now and we have only gone through the entries for the last two years. He is the one that has been feeding information and support to Rinard on Hadaria in regards to Queen Anja, he is the one that arranged for the attempt on Normya’s life and he has amassed quite a fortune in Black Market dealings for elven slaves and any number of things, to include the sale and purchase of T19 Dragon Killers.”

Deia looked at her. “The Evolli War?”

Marci met her eyes and nodded slowly. “He is the one that gave the Evolli bastards the intelligence about Alba Tau.” She stated softly. “He mentions his failure there to kill Martin Leonidas by Evolli proxy several times. He had been working occasionally with the Kavalians up to that point, providing them intelligence about the High Coven at different times but nothing directly related to the Union until after Alba Tau. That is when he began working with them exclusively.”

“Why?” Deia rasped out the words.

“In his twisted view of things he determined that if the King died on Alba Tau he could step in and fill Queen Dysea’s life. It is one of the reason he had all of the holo footage of her. To learn as much about her as possible so when he approached her a suitable time after Martin’s death it would appear to her as if he was somehow a perfect match for her. When he failed to accomplish that apparently he decided to help the Kavalians in their plans.” Marci answered. “That is what Thr’won believes anyway... and I concur with her.”

“That is just too perverted!” Eliani hissed from her spot next to Deia.

Marci nodded. “I agree.” She stated.

“You found... you found these entries in his logs?” Deia asked. “How?”

“That is the scary part.” Marci answered. “I believe he expected us to find them at some point, but his reasoning was that by the time we did, he would already have Dysea in his grasp and it would not matter.”

“That... that is crazy!” Eliani said. “Even if it all happened as he had planned, he had to have known we would tell mother all of this when we discovered it.”

Marci nodded. “Yes... but...”

“But what?” Deia asked.

“It is my belief and Thr’won agrees with me, that he assumed Dysea would already be his mate by the time we discovered these logs and would have already produced a child for him or at the very least be pregnant with his child. He mentions this several times in his entries in fact. If she gave him a child she would be bound to him no matter what... and even if she found out while she was pregnant, he knew that as an elven female she would never terminate the pregnancy. It goes against their every sensibility and inherent instinct to protect the lives of children. Even during the time of the Morlari Conflict millennia ago, when the elves were first building their society, elven females that were captured and raped by Morlari pirates refused to abort any pregnancy that resulted. They began to issue contraceptives to their pilots and soldiers in case any of them were taken prisoner for just this reason.”

Eliani looked at her stunned. “You’re kidding?” She stammered.

Marci shook her head. “No I’m not. In the few years I worked directly for Dysea and Isabella on Elear, I had the opportunity to speak with Arzoal many times about their connection and history. She was still on Elear when the elves were dealing with the Morlari and this was being done and it was she who helped them in a manner of speaking to develop Sirtin.” She looked at Eliani. “At the time elves were still few in number and they knew that each and every life was sacred to their growth and strength as a species. In the first few thousand years after their birth as a species the ingrained instinct to protect and nurture children was pounded into their heads. They would sacrifice all that they were to protect their children, and though it is not spoken of now, it is still imbedded deeply in their psyche. How many elven females have you treated coming to you to abort a fetus Eliani? Your mother? Anuk?”

Eliani’s eyes grew wide. “I’ve... I’ve never heard of any.” She gasped.

Marci nodded her head. “Because there never has been.” She answered softly. “I checked before coming here. In over nine millennia, ever since records of this sort were kept, there has not been one elven female who has requested to abort a pregnancy that was unwanted. As Lycavorians consider the rite and union of marriage sacred above all else, elves consider the life of a child sacrosanct. It is not spoken of openly because of the many differences in cultures within the Union. Dysea, For’mya and the elven Parliament ratified this very mindset thirteen years ago when they unanimously voted to keep the verbiage in the Elven Declaration of Rights, and in every poll conducted on Elear since then, this mindset is vastly followed though not spoken of openly as I said.”

“That is neither here nor there now.” Andro finally broke in. “It will not happen, and if he escapes the trap she has laid for him by some chance his only options are to run or return to the Kavalians.”

Deia shook her head finally. “He won’t run.” She stated. “If he has carried this arrogance within him all of this time he will not run.”

Andro nodded. “That is what Jomann and I predict as well.”

Deia looked at Marci intently. “Ok... now tell me why this is important?” she asked. “He is gone... why can we not simply void his command codes and be done with it?”

“For the same reason that we could not shut down the four Gates surrounding Hadaria.” Marci stated. “Laustinos installed a trap program into every Union system that he had access too. As with the Gate Control Center, the moment they attempted to shut the Jump Gates down, this program activated in the system and locked everyone out completely. The program he apparently designed and installed is a three thousand character, mutating computer algorithm. Every time we try to shut down a system, the program mutates, making it harder to hit the correct series of characters. We found this program buried in the programming code of PDP control, many of the main Apo Prime Planetary Defensive Systems, as well as several dozen other major Union planets. If we attempt to shut the systems down, the program activates and we lose complete control of them.”

“Laustinos did this?” Deia gasped.

“Not entirely alone no.” Marci said. “You know of the Utopian Movement?”

Deia looked at her. “The group that professes peace and love for all and that we should destroy all of our weapons and arms and reach our hands out in friendship to everyone? I know of those idiots yes. They have tried to enter the Senate Building on different occasions through the years. They are all malda if you ask me.”

“I agree.” Marci said. “However... they do have many brilliant minds either working with them directly or advising them privately. Laustinos used them to create this program but did not tell them the entire reason behind it. They only knew what he told them, which that at the right time it would be used to disarm the entire Union. He catered to their arrogant peace loving sermons and they did not see past his smooth exterior.”

“So we have no control over our own military?” Deia gasped in horror.

Andro shook his head quickly. “No Tenna... nothing so terrible as that.” He stated without hesitation. “All of our Fleet Groups and ships and ground forces operate with the command codes of whichever individual is in command. He either did not have or never bothered to obtain those command codes. We are by no means defenseless, but our Command and Control will be severely curtailed until Marci’s people develop a new algorithm to either bypass or shut his program out completely.”

“We are working on it now.” Marci said. “But our people will not be able to complete anything and install it for at least another two to three weeks.”

“In the meantime we will use local sector control routed through our secure Repeater Stations.” Andro said.

“And if the Kavalians attack in a particular sector or cross our borders somewhere we will not know about it for several hours at least, or until that local commander can contact us.” Deia said.

Andro nodded. “It’s the only way to be safe.” He told her.

“What about other systems?” Deia asked. “Non-military systems. Government systems? Transportation? Manifesting? Maintenance? Communications?”

“As far as we can tell communications is clear.” Marci said. “We’ve shifted all military traffic to backup channels that only command officers know about. All civilian communications is still on the main hubs, but it is being monitored closely.”

“How did we find out about all this?” Panos asked now as he stepped closer.

Marci looked at him. “We picked up the three individuals from this Utopian Movement that have met with Laustinos most in the last two years and questioned them. We got lucky with one of them as he was part of the group that designed the computer program.”

“Where are these traitors now?” Panos growled.

“When we were finished wringing them for information they were put against a wall and executed.” Marci replied.

“Who ordered that?” Deia hissed.

“I did Tenna.” Andro spoke coming to his feet. “Marci is doing exactly what I told her to do and she will continue to do this until I say otherwise. This Utopian Group have conspired with Laustinos and that makes them traitors!”

“Androcles they should be tried in our courts!” Deia said. “You know this!”

“And have the Kavalians discover what we now know about them?” He said shaking his head. “No. That could very well put mother at risk even more than she already is and I will not do that. The nine individuals who were named as leaders are being watched now by Drow. We will take no more for the moment and accidents were arranged for the other two to make it appear as they passed into the next life randomly. It is no different than what you ordered with Brean just before the purge isn’t it?”

Deia met his eyes and said nothing for he was right. She shook her head. “Why... they have given you no idea as to why they hold your mother?” She asked finally.

Andro shook his head as he returned to his chair. “No. Matuarr was very vague in what he told me. Only that it was in retaliation for us training the Coven dragons. He said they did this out of a need to protect themselves.”

“Rensibfla!” Deia snarled. “This is an act of war and they know it! Specifically targeting the Royal family and removing the Drow outposts in The Wilds was not done to protect the KFI! It was done to hide something... something that has to do with your mother!”

“Whatever that may be it still escapes me.” Andro said. “If they wanted my second elven mother, then why order an Immortal mercenary group to capture and hold my first elven mother. It makes no sense!”

“For’mya would never betray anything to the Kavalians!” Deia spoke. “Never!”

“We know that Tenna.” Eliani said.

“Up until five days ago Laustinos would have been able to give them plenty.” Marci said evenly. “We have confirmed that it was he who gave the Kavalian dogs Dysea’s location. No one outside of your family and Armetus knew that.”

“Mother is keeping her shields very high.” Andro spoke. “More than likely to keep father from finding out what she has gone through before she has an opportunity to gather herself. I do not want to contact her just yet. I will wait until they return to Kranek before communicating directly with her. Valin Esavorna is working with the Krypteria in trying to find some way to bypass these negative resonance implants that the Kavalian stole from them.”

“That is how they are keeping her from using Mindvoice?” Deia asked.

Eliani nodded now. “I studied the specs he gave to us. Injected directly into the base of her skull near her cerebral cortex it would effectively neutralize her Mindvoice skills. This is why we can’t feel her even a little.

The inside of the Negative Resonance Chambers is nothing more than a large void within Mindvoice. Aikiro and her scientists discovered how to use these chambers to create these implants. We suspect it is why we could not feel our first elven mother for a time. Somehow... somehow she must have removed it.”

“Or someone did it for her.” Andro said. He shook his head. “We have no idea where mother might be. They would be fools to remain within Kavalian space, and no matter where they take her they would need some potent power dampeners to keep her from calling her Shi Viska. We are essentially at their mercy for the moment. Any attempt by us to find her would result in them killing her outright... Matuarr made that very clear to me. He...” Andro stopped talking and turned away from them memories racing back through his head. He turned quickly to look at Jomann.

“Andro?” Eliani asked softly as she looked at her brother and slowly came to her feet looking between him and Jomann.

“Jomann... do you remember what that fool Matuarr said to us?” Andro asked.

“Of course. He said your father was dead and she was no longer a Queen of the Union.” Jomann answered. “He said they would deal with the elves when it came to her release. He said she was not your mother and that...” Jomann’s eyes grew a little wider and he stared at Andro.

“He said you...”

Andro nodded. “Yes. He said I would not be King for very long.” Andro stated.

Marci’s dark eyes grew a little wider now and she stepped closer to him. “He... he told you that?” She asked.

“Yes.” Andro said turning to look at her. “I found it odd at the time and didn’t think anything of it.”

Marci moved to the wall and typed in several commands before stabbed her finger down on the panel. “Praylro?” She snapped.

“Go Marci!” The male voice answered immediately. “I am here with Nesa. Armetus is...?”

“Armetus will be out of it for some time but he will survive.” Marci said. “Nesa?”

“Yes.” The older woman spoke from Krypteria Headquarters within the mountain base to the west. Nesa had been with Armetus for over four thousand years and was the senior most analyst within the entire Krypteria. Only the most important items went across her desk.

“Nesa... Armetus gave me a data pad when we got to his home. Just before he lost consciousness. I put it into my uniform and forgot all about it. It is in the closet... get it right now!” Marci said.

“Hold on.” Nesa spoke as Andro moved up next to her.

“Marci?” He asked.

“Armetus said something to me before he passed out Andro.” Marci said looking at him. “I was so angry and worried seeing him like that I forgot all about it until just now. He said to warn the others, that the Kavalians... it was part of their plan. I thought he was talking about the assassination attempt on your father and the others. I vithin forgot all about it!”

“What plan?” Andro asked.

“Marci...” Nesa’s voice echoed. “I have it. Gods child... it still has his blood on it!”

“Nesa... is it encrypted?” Marci asked. They heard a soft intake of breath. “Nesa?”

“No... no... it is not encrypted.” Nesa answered quickly. “It’s not even a standard Union data pad Marci! It’s Kavalian! By the gods... where did you get this?”

“Armetus gave it to me!” Marci snapped. “What is on it Nesa?”

“Dates. Times. Names. Places. How they got here. How they were going to get off.” Nesa answered slowly. “Carians Marci... this is a gold mine of information! All of it unencrypted! Wait... son vada carians!” Marci looked at Andro once more. “Nesa... what is it?” She asked urgently.

“I have... we are looking at what appears to be one part of some plan they were working on.” Nesa spoke. “Praylro... plug it in and send it to her pad! Do it now!”

“Transmitting!” The voice spoke.

Marci pulled her personal data pad from her belt and looked at the small screen as Andro stood next to her and looked over her shoulder. Andro pointed to the small screen. “Sparta Reborn?” He said. “What the hell?”

“Andro it lists... you... Eliani... Resumar... Denali... all of you in order by age.” Marci said looking at him oddly. “It even has Sadi’s name next to yours as your mate. The same with Lisisa and Denali.”

Andro's eyes grew a little wider as he took the pad from her hand. "Not... this is not by age!" He gasped aloud.

Eliani moved closer to her brother when she saw the look on his face. "Andro?"

"Andro what is it?" Deia demanded as she sat up further in the bed.

Andro turned to the wall panel now. "Nesa?" He barked.

"We are here Milord." Nesa answered.

"Cease what you are doing for the moment and go to the archives at the University here in Sparta. Then have someone do the same on Apo Prime." Andro said.

"What are we looking for Milord?" Nesa asked.

"Find whatever we have on the Ascension Laws of Sparta and the Lycavorian Union." Andro stated.

"The Ascension Laws sire?" Nesa asked.

"Yes Nesa. I'm moving my Aunt to my home in Gytheio today. When you have the records from Sparta bring them there." Andro told her. "Once they have the records from the University on Apo Prime put them on a ship and get them here to Earth as fast as possible. Tell no one what you are doing!"

"As... as you order Milord." Nesa said.

Eliani moved closer to him. "Andro... what is going through that head of yours?" She asked softly.

Andro looked at Deia. "My uncle is making a play for the throne of the Union Tenna." He stated.

"What?" Deia gasped. "Impossible! There is no way he could ever assume the throne of the Union! Or Sparta for that matter!"

"Deia is right Andro." Panos spoke moving forward next to the bed. "I was alive back then remember. He was first labeled as killed in 458 B.C. When it was discovered that he was alive and working for the Kavalians his name was stricken from the roles of Spartiates. He..." Panos stopped in mid-sentence and his eyes grew wider. "Nubou!" He growled savagely.

Andro nodded. "Yes. Father reinstated him and even had a statue of him built among the others on King's row. He is officially listed as killed in 458 B.C., but he has been reinstated to the Spartan Roles thanks to my father and his love of a brother. His words to me the day he did that were... 'He may be a backstabbing bastard, but he was a Leonidas and a King'. And since he is not dead..."

Deia shook her head. "Androcles that is not possible." Deia spoke firmly. "He could not possibly hope to claim the throne of Sparta. He may have been reinstated to the roles of the Spartan Peers but he is regarded as a traitor to his people!"

Andro moved to the bed and held out the data pad. "Then why is there a list with all of our names on it Tenna? Look at it! This is not a list of my brothers and sisters by age! This is a list of us by order of Ascension to the Throne of Sparta, and by virtue of that to the Throne of the Lycavorian Union!"

CHAPTER SIXTY-ONE

BELID

"... many survive?" Cha'talla asked Denali as he stood in the Command Center looking at the star chart table.

"Sixty-nine." Denali answered from the chair he sat in with his arms across his broad chest. "They all surrendered Cha'talla."

Cha'talla turned from the chart and looked at him. Tir'ut and Lynom also sat in chairs they had procured from the shattered remains of the base somewhere, his brother T'lolt standing directly between them, his hands on their shoulders. Arrarn Leonidas stood against the far wall, Narice and Toria leaning up against his powerful body. As'hia stood with her mother and father off to the side, relishing in the attention they were showing her and filling them in on everything that had happened. That she was completely and utterly in love with Lynom was easily seen as she kept looking back at where he sat next to his brother. Danarla could barely keep her hands off her youngest child as happy as she was. Ta'lon looked at Lynom with increasing respect as As'hia told them of all he had done at considerable risk to himself. Even as an elf he could not deny what he saw in his daughter's dark eyes when she looked at him. Ta'lon was used to being different in his life; he was much taller and more muscular than most elves, and he was also among a very few hundred elven men throughout the entire Union who had Lycavorian wives. It was very common now for elf females to enter into long term relationships and marriage with Lycavorian men; it was part of the elf female nature to seek out strong males so that they could reproduce. It had become much more common with the King's return and his well known love for both his elven wives, but elven men who had married Lycavorian females was very rare and to Ta'lon's knowledge all of the two hundred and sixty-three marriages like his and Danarla's throughout the Union were dedicated and loving. All of them turned at Cha'talla's next words.

"Does this... does this grant them some sort of reprieve from us after what they have done Denali?" He asked softly. "After what they have taken part in... what your mother has had to endure at their hands? What Phy'iad did to your mother is a blight upon my people and I..." Cha'talla shook his head. "The suffering they have put others through is unforgivable? They only surrendered because they knew they were beaten and were too cowardly to die with honor." He turned his head and looked at Kr'nak who was still marveling over the complete transformation that had come over him. He kept staring at his hands. "Kr'nak... you know these men... what do you say?"

Kr'nak looked at Cha'talla with wide eyes. His gray skin, once the pallor of death, was now a lightly tanned bronze color. His once bald head was now covered in short dark hair and while the bone spurs along his jaw clearly marked him as an Immortal; his skin was free of blemishes and the mottled look from only two hours ago. The transformation had not been pain free, expunging the toxins in his body had taken its toll on his energy reserves, but seeing the result was beyond miraculous in his mind and he only wished for one thing now. He blinked several times and Cha'talla's question finally registered in his mind. He looked at Cha'talla then. "Most of them... most of them have known only one thing in their lives and that is the way of life Phy'iad gave to them. Those five who followed me... all of us have over three thousand years of life... we have seen and experienced things they have not. Phy'iad... he twisted them Cha'talla... he made them just like him, for he was no better than the High Coven masters we once served. I know what is in the hearts of my men... I know what they feel and what they want for themselves going into the future. It is the same thing as what I want. I can not speak for the others."

Cha'talla turned back to Denali. "You spoke with your brother Denali. What does he wish done with them?"

"I spoke with him only briefly. I told him we had several dozen prisoners but he was more concerned with mother and how badly we were hurt." Denali said.

"What would he do Deni?" Tir'ut asked now.

Denali turned and looked at him for a long moment. He turned back to Cha'talla and took a deep breath as he stood up. "Andro is very much like my father, but he is also much darker in many ways. I believe... I believe my father would speak with them... perhaps offer them a choice at making a new life for themselves or die here. Androcles... for what they have done today and in the past... for what Phy'iad did to our mother, Andro would have already executed them. If he had even accepted their surrender at all to be honest."

"As it should be." T'lolt spoke with a nod.

"My Spartan blood... my Spartan blood tells me there is no redemption for them." Denali said. "Yet there are many within the Union who have been redeemed and atoned for their past actions." Denali shook his head slowly. "My father and the Feravomir have always told us that our first instinct is usually the correct one." He looked at Cha'talla. "My first instinct is to insure they never hurt another being again."

Cha'talla looked at Narice next. "Princess?" He asked.

Narice met his eyes with a shocked look. "Cha'talla... I am... I am no longer a Princess of the High Coven." She stammered.

"No... but you are a Princess of the Lycavorian Union." Cha'talla spoke softly. "Unlike Denali and the others, you have lived among my people. Served with them."

"That fact does not qualify me to make a decision on whether the prisoners live or die Cha'talla." Narice told him. She looked at Toria and Arrarn for a long moment and then back to him. "I have found more than I had ever dreamed I would Cha'talla. I have started a new life. It would be unfair for me to weigh in on such a decision."

"Execute them father." Lynom spoke now looking up at his father. "I have been among them, for two years and I have seen what they are capable of. They do not deserve to live... not after what they..."

As'hia stepped away from her parents quickly and moved to his side. He looked up at her face and she reached up to stroke his cheek. "You can not make a proper judgment Lynom my love. It would be unfair." She said softly. "You... I know you found those who...?"

"I did." Lynom told her as he pulled her close to him.

"Then your vow to me is fulfilled." As'hia said softly as she wrapped her arms around his head. "Now we move into the future, whatever it may bring."

"Execute them!" The female voice spoke from behind them.

Kr'nak recognized that voice immediately and spun around to look at Osiri as she came in and stood beside Esther. Her beautiful eyes fell on him when he moved and they grew wide in disbelief. "Osiri... you..."

Osiri stepped away from Esther and moved closer to him with wide eyes. She had feared the worse, for Esther would not tell her what had become of Kr'nak. That her heart ached for him and any word of him even now that she was free of Phy'iad's vile possession, this told Osiri that she had no doubts what her future held. She had been rubbing her pregnant abdomen as they moved down the corridor, hoping beyond hope that he was alive and she would not have to go forward without him now he stood in front of her. So tall and so powerful and so utterly handsome. She had fallen in love with an Immortal regardless of what he looked like, for he had treated her as a precious object to be worshiped and adored, and he had shown her that his heart was pure. All the times he had made love to her flooded back to Osiri as she stepped up to him, her hands shaking horribly. He had been so tender and gentle, exploring every portion of her body with meticulous attention. Even with his size he had never hurt her in any way, always mindful of her body within his powerful arms, and to think she would never feel his fangs pierce her skin at the peak of their pleasure made her ache for him even more. Looking at him now Osiri knew that miracles indeed did exist.

"Kr'nak?" She gasped softly reaching up to touch his cheek and seeing his eyes close as she did.

His hand came up and covered her smaller one on his cheek. "I... you are free Osiri?" He asked softly.

Osiri nodded her head quickly as she moved closer to him. "Yes. Oh... I worried for you Kr'nak! Why didn't you..." She pressed her other hand to his face as tears rolled down her cheeks. "Look at... look at you my..."

Kr'nak opened his eyes and stared into her beautiful face. "You are free now Osiri. I did not know if... if you would still feel the same for me."

Osiri stepped up against him then and pressed her lush body to his while wrapping her arms around his waist. "I am... I am your Blessed Wife." She sobbed. "I... I carry our child! I love you with all that I am."

Kr'nak choked back his own tears as his arms encircled her petite elven body and he held her tightly. He looked up as Esther moved up next to Cha'talla and slipped her arm around his waist with a smile. Kr'nak bent his head and inhaled deeply of Osiri's hair as happiness filled him. "Our... our son?" He asked softly as he lowered his lips to her elven ear and brushed them ever so gently across the outer ridge of her ear. He felt her shudder in delight at his touch as she always had and this more than anything told him he was still the center of her love, just as she was his.

Osiri smiled blissfully as he brushed her ear with his lips. "I think... I think all the loud noises disturbed him my husband. He made himself known this day by kicking rather strongly for the first time."

Kr'nak smiled and pulled her even tighter to him. "He will be a strong boy." He said in a soft whisper. "Just like his mother."

"Osiri?" Cha'talla's voice broke their moment up and she turned her head to look at him without releasing her arms from Kr'nak's waist. She did not want to let go of him for fear that this was all still a dream and she would lose him forever.

"Yes?" She stammered.

"Do you speak... do you speak for the other elf females that we have rescued?" Cha'talla asked.

Osiri blinked several times, clearing the tears from her stunning eyes and she looked at the legendary Cha'talla standing only a few meters away. "They... it will take them a long time to recover from what they have experienced here." She said in reply. "They have not had Kr'nak to be their anchor and their lifeline Cha'talla as I have. Your people..."

"They are not our people!" T'lolt hissed softly seeing her eyes turn to look at him. "They have betray all that our people were raised to embrace so many thousands of years ago. We have returned to this way of life and they have not!"

“For... for what they have done... my first reaction is to kill them all.” Osiri said turning back to Cha'talla. “I... I do not know anymore.” She looked up into Kr'nak's face. “I... I have my freedom now and I have a new life with one that I love.” She cut her eyes back to Cha'talla. “I just... I just don't know.”

“They will be held and tried.” The voice all of them recognized spoke from the rear of the large room. All of them turned and those who were sitting came to their feet when they saw her walk slowly into the Command Center.

Dysea Leonidas had spent an hour under a shower of water as scorching hot as she could make it to wash her body of the blood and the vile touch of Phy'iad. While Normya and Lisisa waited with a new set of Mark IV ArmorPly and clothes for her in the room, Cirith had actually gotten into the shower with her and helped Dysea to wash the matted blood from her hair and shoulders. Normya and Lisisa knew this was something that their mother needed to do and it was something they could not do as her daughters. They had quietly exited the small bathroom and allowed Cirith to comfort her. While under the spray of that water Dysea had finally broken down and let the tears come, pulling Cirith's naked body to hers and sobbing in her arms under the spray of water. Cirith had held Dysea's head tightly to her chest during this whole process as she purged the vileness of what had happened from her with her wracking tears. There had never been a question in Cirith's mind that she would do this, for what she now felt for Dysea was beyond anything she had ever felt before. Even having her supple, tattooed body pressing against hers under the spray of water, Cirith felt only love and passion for her. There was nothing sexual about her feelings and this only proved beyond a doubt that she belonged to Dysea and the others. When they exited the shower and Normya and Lisisa saw them together, holding one another, neither of them said a word. Even half wolf as they both were, both of them could smell the desire for their mother that Cirith held and even more surprising was the desire that their mother held for Cirith. Whatever had occurred between them, it had brought them far closer than Normya and Lisisa could truly understand, and it was obvious to them that their mother was not going to let that go. In some strange way, seeing them together like that, it seemed so natural and right. Normya had shared a look with her sister, a look that both of them understood. No matter what happened in the future, Cirith Esavorna had just become a large portion of that future they both knew.

Dysea stood now with Cirith on one side and Normya and Lisisa on the other. She held tightly to Cirith's hand and also Normya's. Her platinum blond hair flowed down around her face and her bright emerald eyes, the ArmorPly conforming to every curve of her body. She carried her Nehtes once more, as well as the dual blades that Cha'talla had gifted her with that first day on Kranek. Her face was calm but her eyes were not as bright as Cha'talla remembered. He suspected they would not be the same until she could once more hold her mate and husband in her arms and have him remove whatever taint she still felt remained on her. Dysea stepped away from Cirith and her daughters and moved up in front of Cha'talla. She held her hands out for him which he took without question and then she was hugging him tightly.

“I will... I will never forget what you have done here today Cha'talla. For me... for all of those held here.” She spoke softly as she pulled away slightly and looked up into his dark eyes. She could feel his commanding presence within Mindvoice now, and the touch of a dragon. A strong and proud dragon. This surprised her but it was something she would investigate further at a later time.

Cha'talla shook his head immediately. “We... we are family now Dysea.” He said softly. “There was never a question of what we would do.”

Dysea smiled and reached up on her tip toes to place a soft kiss on his cheek. “Yes we are... and that fact fills me with hope and joy.”

“As it does all of us.” Cha'talla said.

Dysea nodded her head and turned back to Cirith and Normya returning to stand between them and taking their hands once more. “We will take them prisoner and put them on trial. Any of them who took part in the rape of those elves we have freed will be executed according to Spartan law. Those who have not will be given a choice... imprisonment for life in a Union prison or a chance to redeem the honor they have forsaken.”

“That will... that will not be an easy task Dysea.” T'lolt told her softly.

Dysea looked at him and shook her head. “No it will not be an easy task T'lolt.” She stated. “But it is a chance we must give them.”

“Why mother?” Arrarn asked from where he stood against the far wall. “After what they have done, why do we owe them anything?”

“Because it is what your father would do Arrarn.” Dysea told him immediately. “Those who choose to regain their honor will have a long road ahead to do such a thing, but in doing so they will prove that redemption is possible for everyone. That is my decision...” She looked at Cha'talla. “If you will abide by that Cha'talla?”

Cha'talla nodded without hesitation. “You are now just as much our Queen as you are a Queen of the Elves and the Lycavorian Union.” He stated. “That is not a question you need ever ask.”

Dysea nodded. “Then that is what we will do.” She stated calmly. “Now tell me if we have learned anything of Laustinos?”

Denali moved closer to her. “Admiral Thodius has gone dark with our wing and those ships from Admiral Valin’s command that accompanied us.” He reported to her. “None of Phy’iad’s ships survived his attack... in truth... he didn’t give any of them the chance too. We have two AUTUMN MOON’S on the edges of the system monitoring any ship traffic, but so far no unknown ships have come close.”

Dysea turned to look at Kr'nak now, smiling as she saw the gleeful look on Osiri’s face and the way he held her tightly to him. “Do you know how long it was to be before Laustinos was supposed to arrive Kr'nak?” She asked.

Kr'nak lifted his weathered face from Osiri's hair and met her eyes and Dysea could see the happiness and new resolve in those dark eyes. “Phy’iad... he wanted to leave within twelve hours of competing his plan. I can only assume it would have been before that.”

“Mother... Andro was very insistent that we get you off of this planet and back to Kranek and then on to Curila 6 to be with father.” Denali spoke. “He made me promise him that is what we would do.”

Dysea nodded. “We will wait for six more hours and then we will leave.” She stated in a firm voice. “If Laustinos comes here I want him... and I intend to extract every single bit of information in his traitorous head before he suffers the same fate as Phy’iad. He has... he has betrayed his people and helped the Kavalians to do what they have done. I can not sense your mother For'mya within Mindvoice and I can only assume she has been taken and had a similar device implanted within her so she can not use Mindvoice.” She looked at Cirith. “Cirith?”

Cirith nodded. “If you are unable to sense her then more than likely yes.” She stated. “My father knows more about these devices than I do... how they work and such... but I do know they were made from salvage from the Mindvoice ship on Nuwaroa.”

“The Kavalians have taken her!” Arrarn snarled viciously. “Andro... he says they have threatened to kill her if we do anything in retaliation! What more proof do we need? We should invade Kavalian space and go after her!”

Dysea moved quickly to where her son stood and she took his hands in hers and pulled him close. “Kinsoargai is strong Arrarn... you know this.”

Arrarn nodded his head. “I know mother... but that does not give me much peace right now.” He said softly meeting her eyes. “I don’t know... I don’t know why Andro doesn’t go after her!”

“You must trust in your brother Arrarn. If he has not already gone after her than there must be reasons for this. There must be far more going on than we know here. We don’t know why they have taken her Denali?” Dysea asked turning to look at Denali once more as he moved up next to her. She felt sudden warmth wash over her as the pulsing auras of both her sons filtered around and through her as they always had and she felt herself relax even more. As with all of the Leonidas men, whether they be purebloods like Denali and Andro or half elf like Arrarn and Resumar, all of them had powerful auras. Dysea was safe once more, safe and back with family and dear friends.

Denali shook his head slowly. “Only that they have admitted to having her and they would kill her if Andro attempted anything to retrieve her.”

“She can’t feel us!” Arrarn snapped. “She can’t sense any of us within Mindvoice and she will not know that we are all alive! They could be telling her anything! She could already be dead!”

Dysea squeezed his hands and drew him closer. “Listen to me Arrarn.” She said softly. “We will retrieve her. You know your father and Androcles will never abandon her! You know this! None of us would! Just as she would never abandon us!”

Arrarn nodded his head after a long moment and he took a deep breath. “I know mother.” He stated finally as Narice and Toria placed their hands on his arms and stepped closer to him to provide him comfort.

“When we leave this place Arrarn I want you to return to Earth with Narice and Toria.” Dysea said as she stroked his hair. “Your skills will be better suited to helping your father and brother to get her back.”

Arrarn nodded. “Thank you mother.” He said softly squeezing her in his arms.

“Does... does your father know?” Dysea asked drawing him into a tighter embrace as she looked at Denali once more.

Denali shook his head. “No... not yet.” He answered. “Uncle Daniel should be arriving on Curila 6 soon and he will tell him.”

Dysea nodded as she loosened her grip on Arrarn. “Daniel may be the only one who can control him when he discovers this.” She said. “The Kavalians do not know your father still lives I take it?”

“No.” Denali answered once more. “Andro... Andro believes it is the only reason they have not already killed our mother or invaded the Union in mass numbers. He was not able to tell me a whole lot for they don’t know a whole lot... but the Kavalians wanted her for a reason. He suspects it has something to do with her elven royal blood but he has nothing to back up that theory.”

“Her elven royal blood?” Dysea said softly in a confused voice.

Denali nodded. “He thinks it is also part of the reason they wanted you out of the way.” He said. “Like I said... he doesn’t know much mother. They are still trying to make sense of everything on Earth. Marci and the Krypteria are working on it, but with the attacks on the Drow outposts and Armetus severely injured, even the Krypteria is dazed and confused. Zarah and Lucia are moving as we speak to find Janae with Anton and Cihera and he is attempting to keep the façade of father being dead as believable as possible.”

“They took Janae as well?” Dysea gasped. “But how... how did they discover the...” She fell silent as her eyes grew a little wider. “Laustinos?”

Deni nodded. “If what Andro told me is accurate, Laustinos has been working with the Kavalians for quite some time. They are certain Janae is on Earth and that is why Andro wanted Zarah to return. He needed her unique ability to track Mindvoice imprints to find her. We can not sense or feel Janae, but that doesn’t impede Zarah’s skill since it allows her to follow their unique imprint and not an active Mindvoice resonance. Quite a bit has happened in the last ten days it seems mother. We have made contact with what appears to be a very large segment of our people from the Beta Quadrant led by Canth’s father Wayonn.”

Dysea’s eyes grew wider. “Canth’s father?” She gasped.

Denali nodded. “That is what Andro told me. One of the Pralors that first discovered and then merged with our people on Lycavore almost forty thousand years ago. He helps to lead a government of our people in the Beta Quadrant... the Protectorate they are called.”

“The... the Lost Ones.” Dysea gasped softly. “The ones Canth told your father about on Ukwav?”

Deni smiled slightly and nodded his head. “That is what Andro said. A large group of them have come into Union space, among them this Wayonn and they have brought others as well. A blue skinned species called the Vanari. Andro didn’t go into great detail but I’m sure we’ll find out more later. Father remains on Curila 6 with our mothers and the rest of our family. Though once he discovers what the Kavalians have done I don’t know how long that will last.”

Dysea turned to look at Cha’talla. “Cha’talla... we must...”

The panel behind Cha’talla began to chirp madly and he turned quickly and stabbed down on the console. “Yes.”

“We are detecting an incoming transmission on the Immortal’s secure channel General Cha’talla.” The female voice spoke. “It appears to be coming from a Union issue COM array on an older KADEN-Class Military Fast Attack Transport.”

“Nothing on sensors?” Cha’talla asked.

“Negative sir. They must be using a Shroud. Our picket is not detecting anything either.” The voice answered.

“It has to be Laustinos!” Dysea exclaimed loudly turning to face him. “Get one of the prisoners up here! Now! Hurry!”

.05 LIGHT YEARS AWAY FROM BELID'S SYSTEM

Laustinos stood on the small bridge of his ship staring at the view window full of stars. The KADEN-Class FAT was an older model ship, well before the time of the STRIKER AT, but it was still widely used within the Union and Laustinos had upgraded his personal ship much more than any other that still was active. The PROGENITOR had an advanced sensor array as well as a military grade Shroud Shield that he had obtained legally through different shipping contacts. He was the Deputy Prime Minister of the Union and no one questioned why he wanted a Shroud for his personal ship. Most believed he was just a political coward and would use the Shroud to escape danger if it ever came to that. Laustinos looked at the man who commanded his ship. All of the crew had been hand picked by him and all of them had shown some degree of loathing of the royal family for whatever reason. He paid them very well and their loyalty was to him now and not the oath they had sworn to the Lycavorian Union.

“Anything yet?” He asked.

The Lycavorian captain shook his head from his chair and looked at him. “No. We’ve been hailing the Immortal base for the last nineteen minutes and no response. I don’t like this Laustinos. By now... every ship in the Union will know what we have done and they will be looking for us. This obsession you have with the elf Queen could very well get us all killed.”

Laustinos looked at him. “I am paying you well Captain Diclo.” He spoke.

“Yes you are... but I want to be alive to spend what you are paying me.” He answered.

“There are no Union ships this far out into The Wilds Captain.” Laustinos said in a very confident voice. “Not now... not with everything that has happened.”

“So you say.” Diclo spoke. “I’ll feel better when we have the bitch and we can make it to Icalro Alliance space.”

“You are worrying for...” Laustinos began.

“Captain... our hail to the Immortal base is being answered!” The young woman barked from her COM station.

Diclo perked up. “It’s about time.” He snarled. “Put it up on the holodisc!”

They watched as the image burst into existence and cackled for a moment before clearing and focusing on the hollow face of the Immortal soldier. It was a narrow beam transmission and showed nothing but the soldier himself. Laustinos straightened up and met his stern gaze. “We have been trying to contact you for nineteen minutes.” He spoke quickly. “Where is Phy’iad?”

“The Commander is seeing to our evacuation from this base Lycavorian dog.” He spat viciously. “What do you want?”

“I’m enroute to collect my payment for services rendered.” Laustinos spoke firmly. “Is Queen Dysea unharmed? Is she ready for transport?”

“What is your location?” The Immortal asked. “We do not have you on sensors! The Commander does not like unwanted quests showing up out of nowhere!”

“My location is nearby.” Laustinos answered. “Is Dysea ready for transport?”

“She is. How soon before you arrive?” The Immortal pressed. “The Commander wishes to be gone from this place as soon as the transfer is complete.”

Laustinos stepped forward slightly. “I would like to speak with Phy’iad to finalize the details of the transfer.” He spoke causing Diclo to look at him oddly.

“As I said... he is overseeing the transfer of our personnel and our equipment to our ships above.” The Immortal spat. “He is too busy to come and speak with you! Tell me how far away you are and I will insure she is ready.”

“That is the third time you have asked for our location in some way.” Laustinos spoke slowly. “Why does this concern you so?”

The Immortal paused for a moment, his eyes darting to someone or something outside the cone of the transmission. He turned back to Laustinos. “I have just been informed that Phy’iad has ordered that you tell me where you are or the deal is off! He... he does not want you to bring any Union or Kavalian forces down upon him as some sort of trick!”

Laustinos looked at Diclo. “He’s lying.” He spoke softly. “Something isn’t right.”

Diclo turned to the side. “Do a wide sweep passive scan and tell me what is in orbit of Belid!” He hissed. “Quickly!”

Laustinos moved closer to the transmission. “I have a message for Phy'iad from Marshall Pusintin. It concerns his payment and I was to deliver it to him directly.”

“Nothing!” A man rasped from the sensor station. “There is nothing in orbit!”

Diclo turned to Laustinos. “They wouldn't transfer equipment under Shroud.” He stated. “Too much chance of shorting out the Shroud itself with the power surges from transports.”

Laustinos's eyes narrowed. “I am tired of playing games Immortal scum!” He snarled. “You will tell Phy'iad I wish to speak with him now! I am coming to collect Dysea and I want to insure she is there and he has not betrayed Pusintin!”

The Immortal's eyes narrowed as well and he took a deep breath. “Phy'iad is dead fool!” He barked. “And you will be soon as well! You had better...”

There was a deafening echo from within the transmission and the Immortal's head blew apart right in front of them, blood and matter spraying out of the transmission cone as his body fell from view and they heard the loud thump of it hitting the ground. Laustinos felt a sinking feeling in his gut. “Phy'iad! Who is there? Phy'iad!”

The transmission cone widened suddenly to encompass six individuals, three towering men that were Immortals but unlike any Immortal he had ever seen. All of them with short dark hair and deeply tanned skin, but the bone spurs equally prominent. He watched one of them lower the K12 KM and turn to look at him with angry dark eyes.

“Hello Laustinos... you vile excuse for a Lycavorian male.” The female voice Laustinos recognized immediately came through the ship's speakers causing his eyes to grow wide in shock and disbelief. Laustinos watched with those wide eyes as Dysea Leonidas stepped into the cone of the transmission, flanked on one side by a strange, dark haired vampire female and her son Denali on the other.

“Dysea!” He gasped.

“I sincerely doubt you have been properly introduced Laustinos.” Dysea spoke calmly, but her voice fairly trembled in unrestrained savagery. “Behind me is Cha'talla of the Akruixian people, Immortals as they are more commonly known. With him are his brother T'lolt and his oldest son Tir'ut. You of course know my son Denali Leonidas... and this...” Dysea took Cirith's hand in hers. “This is Cirith Esavorna. They are my family and my dear friends and they have succeeded in removing the affliction upon the Akruixian people that Phy'iad represented. In doing so they have also freed me and put a slight crimp in your ridiculous plans to somehow claim me for yourself.”

“Dysea...” Laustinos began to speak.

“Do not speak to me you putrid man!” Dysea screamed out. “You slink in the shadows doing your vile, traitorous deeds and now hundreds of our people lie dead! My mate lies dead!” Dysea stepped closer to the transmission now causing Laustinos to involuntarily step back on his ship. “I would never allow you to look upon me let alone touch me in person! I should have killed you long ago Laustinos! You have taken from me the man I will love until the day I pass into the next life and for that I will kill you in the same manner as I killed that animal Phy'iad! Only with you... I will cut off your cock and stuff it into your mouth before I feed you to the Bontawillian Fire Mites! You could never hope to compare to Martin Leonidas in any way Laustinos! You may run now coward... but know this! I will find you one day... I will find you and you will pay for everything you have done to my family and friends! On that you have my vow as a Spartan woman!”

Diclo turned quickly. “Cut it!” He screamed. “Cut it before they trace it!”

Laustinos turned in shock as the woman brought her finger down on the console and severed the transmission.

BELID

Toria brought her hands down on the communications console. “Damn!” She swore. “Ten more seconds and we would have had them!”

Dysea took a deep breath where she stood and turned to place her hand on Toria's slim shoulder. "You... you did you best Toria. Do not worry."

"Mother he..." Lisisa began to speak.

Dysea shook her head. "He may escape now..." She said turning to look at her. "But he will not be able to hide forever. When he raises his rat face once more I will be there. Now..." Dysea turned and took Cirith's hand. "Now I wish to return to Kranek and hold Bella in my arms again. And then I wish to go to your father and feel his embrace. Only then will I be whole once more." She looked at Cirith with those emerald green eyes. "And we can share with the others what I have discovered in these last few days."

Cirith smiled warmly at her words and nodded. "... I look forward to that." She said softly.

Cha'talla nodded his head from the side. "Lynom... the charges are set?" He asked.

Lynom stood next to As'hia's father Ta'lon, both of them working in the last few minutes to finish.

"They are set father. Nothing will remain."

Cha'talla nodded once more. "Then let us leave this place and insure the horrors that took place here are buried for all time."

"Avoi." Dysea whispered gently.

EARTH

SPARTA

KING YELU MEMORIAL HOSPITAL

Devra Re Mydala watched as Sadi and Ne'Veha greeted Lu'ria and Carisia just outside the elevator lift that had brought them to this floor of the hospital, and she watched carefully. These were the women who had told her that Caliria was meant to be with them. These were the women who said they had seen her in their minds, felt her emotions and what she was going through. These were the women who all shared a single man, and from what Devra had seen so far, they shared him and each other without a single ounce of jealousy contained by any of them. Devra knew Bren had tried to explain it to her only recently, but even still watching them together or with him, it made her shake his head. She had come out of her room the night before in the early morning hours, her guest room opening onto an elegant patio that overlooked the ocean water that surrounded the island on all sides. She had seen them because of the soft white/blue flashes that signified they were shifting. As her keen eyes looked out across the beach she could see them in the sand, and she could do nothing but marvel at the size of the raven black wolf she saw. Androcles Leonidas dwarfed any Lycavorian she had ever seen in wolf form by at least half. It was easy enough to tell them apart really, the golden blond fur of Sadi, the shimmering white coat that was Lu'ria and the lush dark brown hair that was Ne'Veha. It appeared as if Androcles and Sadi were instructing Lu'ria and Ne'Veha in the art of being a wolf for it appeared as if they were putting them through certain exercises of some sort. She could hear Carisia's soft laughter once when Lu'ria couldn't stop her movement fast enough and she tumbled into the larger and muscular form of Androcles as a result. This went on for over an hour as she watched, finally the three female wolves pouncing on Carisia in a playful fashion as they shifted back to their normal forms while Androcles looked towards the stars in the night sky. He too soon shifted back and all of them were naked then. They crowded around him as he settled to the white sand, their bodies touching in a most intimate manner and their many limbs entwining, but there was nothing sexual to it. They simply laid back on the sand, content to have their bodies in physical contact, as they stroked each other's skin and were silent listening to the soft wind in the air. No doubt they were speaking in this Mindvoice that they used, but it was a sight that Devra would never forget. And this is what her daughter Caliria would take part in willingly.

Devra had started by not understanding how four women could all love the same man so completely, or how that same man could love them all back. She did not think it was possible to feel for so many what they obviously did feel for each other. It happened quite naturally really, without any of them even thinking about it from what she could tell by watching them. Sadi was always to Andro's right and next to him, while any of the others could be on his opposite side while the other two pressed close to all of them. Devra did not witness any jostling for position on his left side, every movement seemed just as natural as breathing. More often than not it was Lu'ria who took his left side with Carisia beside her and Ne'Veha beside Sadi, but no matter who was where, there was no hesitation or doubt in their mannerisms. She had seen them kiss each other in a way only very intimate lovers would do, and Androcles would kiss them all in the same fashion, though she could detect the slight difference when he kissed or held Sadi. They were the kisses of those who were deeply in love, just as she had once kissed Coren her husband before he allowed his role as politician to override his position as husband. Devra realized the slight difference in Androcles's actions and reactions to Sadi were because she was his anome, and to a Lycavorian this was a most sacred thing. Lu'ria's and Ne'Veha's words to her just this morning about how they felt were now beginning to make so much sense. This is what her daughter would experience. This is what Caliria would become part of according to them.

As she watched them once more, Devra did not know if she believed Caliria would be willing to accept such an arrangement, but she finally began to understand what had perplexed Vanari historians and researchers about the Lycavorians for centuries. They had always looked at what the Lycavorians in the here and now did; never spiritually, never instinctually, and they almost always viewed them in the same fashion as they viewed their own people. They failed to fully comprehend that the Lycavorians were so much more, and it was this very conspicuous thing that drew others to them, that made others want to follow them. Their belief in faith was unflinching, their belief in destiny unwavering, and while much of it had only returned to those within the Union because of the King's Spartan heritage, these different things are what defined the Lycavorian people and it was this that fueled the indomitable spirit that powered them. As Devra truly grasped this knowledge for the first time, she realized that it was what Caliria had grabbed hold of so many years ago, and her green eyes filled with the sudden knowledge that yes, her daughter would embrace this.

Lu'ria's words brought Devra out of her thoughts as she, Arduri and Bren stepped closer to them.

"We came as soon as we talked to you." Lu'ria spoke softly leaning over to plant a tender kiss on Sadi's lips. "He is still upstairs with Deia and Eliani. What have you found out?" Lu'ria asked.

Sadi shook her head. "You first Mistress. Perhaps then it will all make some sense." She stated.

Carisia held up the data pad. "Queen Aihola and Lu'ria's mother have given us access to every Drow report from The Wilds for the last decade. We ran it through a filter made by one of her aides and there have been nine instances where a blue skinned female was mentioned. Two of them in the last six months alone... and one only four days ago!"

"Caliria!" Arduri gasped looking at Sadi. "It has to be!"

"I made contact with a former associate I worked with in The Wilds!" Sadi stammered. "An information broker if you will. I wanted him to obtain any and all information on just this very thing. He contacted us back only an hour ago and..."

"What?" Carisia asked.

"He told me he had already obtained the information for someone else." Sadi told them with a knowing glint in her jungle green eyes.

"Andro?" Lu'ria gasped.

Sadi nodded her head quickly. "I know all that he knows Mistress, and he knows all that I know. We shared our memories, our experiences when we became anomes. All that we were... everything about our lives up until we came back together entwined." She said swiftly. "He must have seen it somewhere within my thoughts and it appears he remembered and is just better at shielding what he is doing." She finished sheepishly.

Lu'ria took her hands. "Sadi... three days ago... three days ago a senior Drow Scout Team was released from Aihola's operational control on Beklan Two and then sent into The Wilds with sealed orders that were given to them by Durcunusaan courier. These orders... they were not issued in the standard manner."

Sadi looked at her with wide eyes. "How do you know this?" She asked her.

"It was my brother Am'uur's Team Sadi." Lu'ria answered with bright eyes. "They are part of the Drow Queen's Elite Guardforce, the same ones who now shadow me wherever I... wherever we go. Only the Drow Queen can release them from her operational control. It was an organizational measure that King Leonidas put in place so that no matter what happened Aihola would always be protected. Who but your father or Androcles would Aihola release control of a Drow Scout Team from her Elite Guardforce too?"

"Are you sure?" Sadi asked.

Lu'ria nodded. "I am positive." She stated confidently.

"Do you... do you know where they went?" Ne'Veha asked.

“They went to the Kepler Traverse.” Andro’s voice spoke from behind them causing all of them to whirl around. Androcles stood behind them with his arms folded across his broad chest and looking at them sternly with those bright azure eyes. “How many times must I tell all of you that even in a secure area you must never let your guard drop? You should have smelled me coming from three floors up.”

They stared at him for a long moment before Sadi stepped forward and slid her arms around his waist. Though he attempted to keep a stern look on his face, Sadi’s touch caused that to fail miserably as they others pressed close to him as well now. “When... when did you know Androcles?” She asked.

“The moment I met Devra and her daughters.” Andro replied as he moved closer to them dropping one arm to pull Sadi tighter and the other to curl around Ne’Veha’s waist. “I saw her almost immediately upon meeting Devra but I was unable to focus clearly enough until Dutkne taught me several techniques that first night on the SCIMITAR. Having him... having him around KertaGai, he has shown me things that have increased my focus and concentration to the point where... it would be like putting rockets on Elynth and increasing her speed ten fold.”

Something you will certainly not do! Elynth’s voice exploded into his head and theirs from her spot on top of the hospital with Anthar and Majeir.

Andro smiled. “No sister...” He answered as if speaking to thin air. “That is not my intention, do not worry.” He reached out and took Sadi’s hands. “These techniques he showed me... I will show all of you... but it allowed me to reach across the stars from where we were at the time and touch her. It is similar in a way to how Wayonn was able to touch the Feravomir and Arzoal through the years without actually using a Mark II Neural Booster.”

“You... you spoke to her!” Devra gasped moving closer as she held Arduri’s arm in shock.

“Not in a direct sense no.” Andro said looking at her. “Mindvoicing does not allow such a thing over so great a distance. If Sadi or one of the others were on Apo Prime for instance... I could probably concentrate enough where we could actually carry on a conversation for a short time without the need for a Neural Booster. The distance between Caliria and I was too great to do this however. I had to rely on other things.”

“Other things?” Arduri asked confused.

Andro nodded. “Images. Emotions. It is much easier to project these over great distances. I was able to connect with her this way.”

“Andro... how?” Carisia asked looking at Devra. “The Vanari... they do not have the ability to Mindvoice. Do they?”

Devra shook her head. “No. Never in our recorded history has something even remotely like this come up or been seen.” Devra answered.

Andro looked at Devra intently now. “How much contact have you had with Wayonn or Dutkne through the many years that you have been a Regent Devra?” He asked.

Devra looked at him oddly before shrugging her slim shoulders. “Since I became a junior Regent.” She answered. “He was on Austrova for a conference when I was appointed and he came to the acceptance ceremony with the First Regent. Many know what he is and this gives him a certain status among our people. We spoke for quite a long time and this was noticed by others. Since that time... I have been the sole contact on the Board of Regents for Wayonn to pass information or conduct business through.”

“This was before Caliria was born?” Andro asked.

Devra nodded. “Yes... several years. Why?”

“I have no information to reinforce my thinking because I can’t ask my father or Dutkne right now. I can’t ask Wayonn because I don’t think he will give me a straight answer and I certainly can’t ask the Feravomir without her wanting to know why... and I can’t tell her why I want that information, not without risking that she will turn me over her knee in her anger.” Andro stated.

Bren stepped forward. “Anger?” He spoke. “What is it that you are planning Andro?”

Andro looked at Devra. “I believe that somehow... being in such close proximity to Wayonn through the years altered your ability somewhat Devra Re Mydala. Not so much that you would notice, but enough that you would pass on these changes within you to the children you had after being around Wayonn so much.”

“I don’t understand.” Devra said defensively. “I was under the impression this ability to Mindvoice was passed along to ongoing generations within the blood of their birth parents. I certainly have never bedded with Wayonn!”

“Did you ever allow him to touch your mind?” Androcles asked. “Perhaps show you things in the history of our people or the Pralors that...” He saw Devra’s eyes go wide and he moved closer. “What?”

“It was so very brief.” Devra answered in shock. “I was pregnant with Caliria ... Nirilo had just been assigned to the Protectorate homeworld. Wayonn... he was giving me a tour of a museum of some sort in their capital. I asked him... I asked if he was able to show me of their flight from Lycavore so that I could understand your people better. He smiled and asked if he could touch me so that I could see... it was so brief... I saw images and people but then Dutkne came in and they were gone.”

Andro nodded his head thoughtfully. “Then that is where the door was opened.” He stated. “And I suspect that is also why you look at my people in a different light than the others of your species. Just that one fleeting touch left a sensitivity on you that became part of you. It was this sensitivity that you passed on to Caliria. It is why I Elynth and I were able to touch her from such a distance once Dutkne showed us how to focus.” He looked at Sadi and the others. “It is also why we could not sense her until all of us were together. We were not strong enough yet.”

Bren shook his head and took Devra’s arm gently. A motion that did not go unnoticed by Andro, especially when she did not look at him or even attempt to pull away. “This is all... this is all way beyond me Andro. I’m still not past the part about you making the Feravomir angry. What exactly did you mean about that part?”

Andro looked at him. “It is why I sent Lu’ria’s brother into The Wilds.” He answered. “I gave him the information that Uache gave to me and told him to find out if there was any truth to it.”

“The Kepler Traverse is within Icalro Alliance space Andro.” Bren spoke.

“Yes... I know.” Andro answered.

“We have a standing agreement with them not to enter their space for any reason. They don’t exactly care for us if you recall.” Bren said. “You in particular after what you did. It took your father two years to hammer out that deal.”

“Yes... I know that too.” Andro stated calmly. “And the only reason they accepted it was because my father threatened to obliterate their entire planetary defense network if they so much as targeted any of our ships or citizens again. Even by accident. They agreed to operate only within their space.”

“And if that is where Caliria is... then they have kept to their word.” Bren stated.

Andro nodded. “The only problem with that is that they also agreed not to transport any kind of slaves through any part of Union space or that of our allies.”

“And they haven’t.” Bren said. “Have they?”

“If the coordinates that Naesta plotted before moving to the TALON are accurate...” Andro began.

“Which they weren’t.” Bren stated.

“They were not accurate enough to follow the Syndicate ship into Union space.” Andro corrected him. “However, the Syndicate ship was not coming into Union space and Naesta’s original star coordinates were very accurate on following them 1.2 light years into Bontawillian space, which is exactly where this Orionis ship exited from their jump. Naesta’s charts did not reflect the shift of borders when the Bontawillian finally joined the Union as full members fifteen years ago. Since the Syndicate ship did have updated star charts and Naesta did not, that means they knew exactly where they were jumping and the Icalro Alliance has been sticking it to us for at least a decade and probably longer.”

Bren’s eyes grew wider. “Sibfla!” Bren gasped. “You’re sure?”

Andro looked at Devra. “Yes... I’m sure. If Am’uur confirms this... and he discovers a Black Market slave operation that involves Vanari females, then the Icalro Alliance brought them into this quadrant through Bontawillian space and the agreement they had with my father becomes null and void.”

“What... what does that mean?” Arduri asked.

Andro’s eyes narrowed somewhat and all of them saw them change to black ringed azure points and his vicious dual looking wolf fangs protruded from under his top lip. “That means I will be entering Icalro Alliance space to retrieve something that belongs to us. And to you.” He spoke looking at Devra.

Devra glanced at Sadi and the others and saw that their eyes had changed as well, their fangs extended slightly beneath their upper lips. Carisia’s vampiric fangs were not as long or as thick, but they were no less menacing to gaze upon with her cobalt blue eyes. She shivered and turned back to Andro. “If they are in league with the Orionis Syndicate, they will... they will not just admit all this and return my daughter Androcles Leonidas. The Orionis Syndicate will fight you. Though many of them are what you call human... there are far more races within the Syndicate than even we know. The Eridiani are simply the intelligence behind it all. And many of them are very skilled and physically enhanced as well. The Eridiani are advanced enough to use enhancement drugs on their soldiers. It makes them very hard to defeat.”

Andro smiled, baring his fangs even further. “Yes they will admit it.” He stated. “If they wish to continue to exist they will.” He looked at Sadi. “Jomann is bringing Deia down and I want all of you to go with her as he takes her to Cranae Island. She will...”

Devra and Arduri stood there as Andro turned and with Sadi on one arm and Lu'ria on the other, Ne'Veha and Carisia wrapping their arms around their waists, they began to walk back down the corridor. Devra turned to look at Bren.

“What does he mean Bren?” She asked.

Bren met her green eyes. “Remember what I told you he would do Devra?” He told her softly. “How badly do you want your daughter back? What are you willing to do? I can tell you what he will do if you have the stomach for it.”

“He... he would do this Bren?” Devra gasped in surprise. “He would start a war? With everything happening around him he would start a war for Caliria?”

Bren snorted. “It would not be much of a war I'll tell you that. It may last several hours if they are lucky.”

“Why does this Icalro Alliance hate him so?” Arduri asked.

“Four years ago the Icalro Alliance leaders thought they would make a profit off of the T19 missiles that the Evolli created during our war with them. They like to fancy themselves a government. They were buying up these missiles by the hundreds towards the end of the war.” Bren told them. “They sold a batch to a group of Kochab pirates that were raiding colonies along the edge of the Limian border with the Union. A member of Andro's section of Mjolnir's Hand was dispatched to discover where the missiles were coming from. That Bonded Pair flew into an ambush by the Kochab pirates and both of them were killed. They made the mistake of taunting us by putting their bodies on display and sending images out across The Wilds. At the end of the Evolli war, Andro and Elynth disappeared for nearly six months. No one with them, no Durcunusaan, no security, nothing. Only his father and Armetus knew where they were. During that entire six month period the Netnews kept reporting about the destruction of Icalro Alliance bases along the border of The Wilds. Not just destroyed either... but wiped out totally. Taken right down to ashes. It had the Icalro Alliance screaming in outrage and finally it took the Icalro Alliance to practically bribe three Union Ambassadors before the King gave them an audience and it was only after that meeting that the King called Andro off.”

“He discovered... he discovered that this Icalro Alliance supplied the pirates with these missiles?” Devra asked.

Bren nodded. “He tracked down each and every one of the Kochab bastards who took part in the raid, discovered where they got the missiles and then he went there to fulfill a promise he made.”

“A promise?” Arduri asked.

Bren nodded. “A promise he made to that young woman's mother and father the day they buried her and her dragon together. A promise to find out who had done it and make them feel the same pain they were in.”

Bren looked at Devra. “At the end of that six month period Andro had taken out a third of their organization. And he was just winding up when his father called him off. That is when they made the deal with the King.”

“And if they have broken this deal?” Devra asked softly.

“He made you a promise didn't he?” Bren asked her.

“Yes.” Devra answered.

“Then if Lu'ria's brother finds what Andro thinks they will find... then I expect we'll be taking a small trip.” He said.

“And this trip will be to keep the promise he made to me?” Devra asked.

“Your daughter is meant for him Devra. Meant for Sadi and the others.” Bren said. “If she is within Icalro space, then not only will his promise to you be fulfilled, but there will be precious little of the Icalro Alliance left after he is through, that much I can guarantee you without question.”

CURILA 6

“Motherfucker! That is for not telling me!”

The first punch sent Martin Leonidas staggering back down the ramp of the transport trying to maintain his balance. Anja stood at the bottom of the ramp off to the side with Aricia and Gorgo next to her. Their arms were folded across their chests and they viewed what was happening with some humor. It actually felt good to smile in the light of what was happening all around them, and witnessing this was indeed humorous for they had seen it several times in the past. They looked up and saw Wayonn standing with wide eyes next to the blue skinned female with looks of utter disbelief on their faces, while the remaining members of Martin’s old SEAL Team stood looking on at the top of the ramp with shit eating grins.

Naesta glanced at Wayonn quickly. “Wayonn?” She questioned.

Wayonn turned to one of those that had come with them. “You have to stop this!” He declared.

Kenny and Pablo looked at him and snorted. “Stop it! They been doing this for years and the last person who tried to stop them ended up in the Med Clinic for a week because he got in the way of one of those punches. No thanks!”

“Not healthy!” Pablo agreed.

Wayonn turned back to watch just as Danny connected with another haymaker right cross that staggered Martin even more and sent him crashing down to the bottom of the ramp. “That is for making us think you were dead cockbreath!”

Martin looked up at Danny, blood leaking from his between his lips now, and Wayonn and Naesta were stunned to see a smile on his face. A smile that was quickly erased as Danny hit him once more. A punch that struck his jaw square and snapped his head back and dropped him to the green grass of the landing field. Danny yanked his right hand back as if in pain and shook it back and forth as if trying to get the feeling back into it.

“And that is for making me cry like a baby and drink nine cases of beer!” Danny barked. “Fuck!” He swore shaking his hand more. “You insensitive rock head sonofabitch! I think I broke my knuckles on that thing you call a fucking brain!”

Wayonn turned now to two Durcunusaan soldiers that were standing along the edge of the ramp and watching as well. “Make them stop!” He barked.

The two men looked at him. “Ah... not me... no.” One replied.

The second man agreed. “Not the smartest thing a person could do. Getting between the King and his brother when they are arguing is not a recommended course of action if you wish to remain healthy.”

“Arguing?” Naesta exclaimed. “This is what you call arguing?”

The two men looked at each other and then back to her. “What would you call it?”

“He... he is beating your King!” Naesta stammered.

“Beating the...” One Durcunusaan spoke with a smile. “Forgive me for laughing Miss... but those are love taps. The King and General Simpson have done this probably six times in the last twenty-five years. The last time was a Gallais’s Retreat. They tore the place up too. Gallais just stood by until they were finished and then she made them fix the entire building. Took them three days. No one... not even the Queens... no one gets between them when they have to clear the air so to speak.”

Naesta looked at Wayonn then and they both turned back to watch as Martin slowly got to his feet, wiping the back of his hand across his mouth. He spit blood on the ground and looked at Danny as he continued to shake his hand.

“Are... are you done?” Martin asked.

“Fuck yes I’m done!” Danny barked loudly. “I think I broke my hand! Shit!”

Martin stepped up to him slowly then. “You... you don’t know how much it means to me that you are here brother.” He spoke in a whisper so that Danny was the only one who could hear him.

Daniel lifted his eyes and stared at the man who he had been through hell and back with on more occasions than they cared to recall. He reached up and snatched Martin’s head in his hands as Martin had done so many times before. “You are my brother!” Danny hissed. “And you... you are never alone!”

Wayonn and Naesta watched with wide eyes as the two men embraced and then everyone around them began to move again. Kenny nudged Wayonn in the arm with a knowing grin. “See... it doesn’t usually last very long. It’s safe now.”

Danny drew Martin's head back, his hands still holding his head and he stared into his brother's eyes. "Marty... I need... I need to tell you something." He spoke softly as men and women moved around them still giving them a wide area. "Andro... he..."

Martin nodded his head slowly and gripped Danny's shoulders. "They... they have taken For'mya haven't they?"

Danny stared at him for a long moment. "You... you know?" He gasped.

"We've been monitoring the Netnews too Dan." Martin told him. "When they pulled Deia out of the rubble and not For'mya I knew. I... I felt Andro's emotions spike clear off the charts before he slammed his shields down. She's not dead Danny... we would feel that... and that means the only other option is that they took her."

Danny took a deep breath and nodded his head, hearing the trembling anger in Martin's quivering voice. He could feel the anger wafting from him just as he had on Ukwav all those years ago, only this time it was different. This time that anger was being channeled and directed and harnessed and exceedingly more deadly. This time when Martin unleashed that anger, it would not be unfocused and wild and nearly out of control as it was then. This time it would be methodic and concentrated and it would sweep aside any who stood before him. "Andro... he almost killed the Kavalian bastard when he told him. He said they would kill her if he tried anything... he... do Anja and Aricia know?"

Martin shook his head slowly. "I think they suspect... they saw the same reports as me." He answered.

Danny stared at him for a long moment, looking deep into his brother's dark brown eyes. "You are scaring me Marty." He said softly. "You aren't acting like... like I thought you would act. Like everyone thought you would act. Now... now you are acting like your son... and he is one scary sonofabitch when he gets like this."

"The old me is dead and gone Danny." Martin said softly in reply. "For too long I have tried to be someone I am not. Ever since... ever since Alba Tau. I allowed everything that has happened to take place because I changed then. I became... I became frightened Danny. I was scared. I began to think too hard and..."

"Martin you..."

Martin shook his head. "Don't sugarcoat it for me brother." He spoke. "You of all people I know had to see it. I... let the Aikiro and the Coven get too close and look what they did to my daughter! I let my brother live that day and look what it has wrought? I almost killed my own son Danny! My firstborn!"

"That wasn't you and you know it." Danny snapped.

"Maybe not... but part of it was." Martin said. "No more. I'm not going to try and be something I'm not anymore Danny. I taught my son... all of my children... I taught them to be low down, evil and dirty mean when they had to be. The old me is dead and gone brother... now it's just me... just like I taught them. Like I used to be before all this shit. I'm going back to being the man I raised my son to be."

Danny grinned. "You are planning to go get her." He said.

"As soon as Andro tells me where she is." Martin answered softly. "She is my mate... my wife... and the Kavalians have gone too far this time. I intend to make them pay dearly for this. All of this... it is my brother's doing, I know it is. Though why they want For'mya is beyond me for the moment. I'll find out why though... and I'll find her. I will never abandon her Danny you know that. Never!"

"I thought... I thought that might be what you would plan." He said. "So I brought some help. A few people who sort of excel at making trouble and kicking ass."

Martin grinned as he looked over his shoulder. "So I see." He said turning back to look at him. "We... we drew too far apart brother. All of us did. I became complacent and now my Kinsoaurgai is paying for my mistakes."

"We began this wild ride together Marty. We were always strongest when we were all together." Danny said. "Maybe it's time for us to let the Durcunusaan take care of everyone else for a change. Maybe it's time for the old team to get back together like it used to be. And this time stay together."

Martin met his eyes and nodded. "I believe you are right brother. I believe you are right." He turned back to where the others were standing... waiting. His eyes fell on the clone of Julie Collins. "She's Julie isn't she?" He whispered.

Danny nodded. "Minus a few years of memories... but yes. Right down to her many little quirks. She's actually the one who triggered our old Team Transmitter."

Martin looked at him. “We have been given a second chance brother. An opportunity to atone for letting her die that day. So many of the others. The... the big man or woman upstairs has given us a second chance Danny.”

Danny nodded. “I don’t intend on letting it go. Not this time.”

Martin smiled. “Neither do I. Team Twelve back in action huh?”

Danny chuckled. “Wait till you see the shit Ben sent us. They ain’t going to know what hit them when we start rolling. Then we go get For’mya and get her back!”

Martin nodded slowly and his eyes cut to where Wayonn was standing with the blue skinned female. “What’s he like?” Martin asked. “You talk with him at all?”

“As little as possible.” Danny replied with a smile. “He’s worse than Helen and you know how she gives me headaches.”

“Helen didn’t come with you?” Martin asked.

Danny shook his head. “She is staying on Earth to help Andro. If I understand correctly, Zarah and Lucia are damn close to finding Janae and she felt it would be better if she remained with the new King if you get my drift.”

“I can feel Andro... something is bothering him.” Martin said thoughtfully. “He’s working very hard to stay in control.” Martin looked at Danny intently. “Are there other things I don’t know about happening Danny?”

“Shit... we don’t have enough happening now?” Danny gasped shaking his head. “Not that... nothing that he told me about before we left, but he’s like you and he keeps everything hidden inside.”

“Something is bothering him.” Martin said. “Something personal.”

“Can’t you contact him?” Danny asked. “Find out what you think is wrong.”

Martin shook his head. “We’re trying to keep contact to a minimum in case there are others on Earth trying to listen in. I’ll speak with him again in twelve hours and find out what is wrong. Put the team up in the west barracks. The Durcunusaan cleaned out a floor for you guys. I’ll be over in a bit.”

Danny nodded. “Will do.” He stated.

Anja and Aricia looked at Wayonn as he stopped in front of them. Wayonn had to admit they were far more beautiful in person than from Martin’s visions and thoughts and he could smell the wolf blood and Pralor blood pulsing through both of them heavily. He could smell the heavy scent of mint wafting from them and Wayonn smiled inwardly. Their essences called for only one man and did so in quite the dominating way. This could only mean that Martin hadn’t held back in the least and Anja had now felt his unshielded aura, and she had come away that much the stronger for it. Aricia pulsed with potential and power, the pureness of her blood very similar to many of those he had smelled shortly after being changed himself so long ago. He turned his head and watched as Martin came up to him slowly. As Wayonn shifted his body to face Martin he couldn’t help the sensation that he was once more beside his dear friend Sumar. The resonance within Mindvoice felt so staggeringly similar, throbbing with life and power and knowledge. He met Martin’s eyes and he recognized the same things he had seen when looking into Androcles’s eyes; wisdom and compassion and love. But as it was with Androcles, he also saw what he now knew was the Spartan sense of values and morals and the potential for sheer, unmitigated violence against those who stood in opposition to him. A way of life that had become part of the Lycavorian people the moment Martin’s father had been born among those proud people on Earth over three thousand years ago.

When Sumar had made the decision to become part of the Lycavorian people so many millennia ago, he knew of their capacity for violence, but Sumar also saw within them a great potential for good. Wayonn had not recognized this until after he had been turned and his mind had been opened to the possibilities of what could be. Within the first hundred years of the survivors of CS41 beginning to merge with the Lycavorian people, the oftentimes brutal and unforgiving way of their lives had begun to change. Until that moment, Wayonn had never really held out much hope that they could become as they were now. Until those first years after he had been changed he could never see what the other Elder Pralors had seen in the Lycavorian people that made them choose their species to repopulate worlds across the stars. Once he was fully wolf he had understood why, and from that moment on he had embraced his new life with everything that he was.

Wayonn held out his hands to Martin and he smiled when Martin didn't hesitate in the least and took them. It told Wayonn that Martin Leonidas had finally and irrevocably accepted all that he was, just as his son Androcles had from the moment of his birth.

"I can not tell you the happiness that courses through me to stand beside the descendant of my dear friend Sumar. I honestly never thought this day would come." Wayonn spoke softly. "Through all that has happened Martin, you have renewed my faith in the reasons we did what we did all those years ago."

Martin looked quickly and Anja and Aricia confused and then back to Wayonn. "Ok. I think."

Wayonn laughed and nodded his head. "One day in the future I will share with you what I mean. And then you will know why I said that. Discovering my own blood and finally being able to see Helen in these last days has restored my hope for the future. My family... my blood is finally whole again and I have you to thank for that."

Martin continued to look at him. "If... if you say so." He said sheepishly.

Wayonn looked at Aricia and Anja. "The descendant of the Endelme Line, Third of the Five Ruling Bloodlines." He stepped up to her slowly and embraced a very surprised Aricia, holding her tightly for several seconds and then releasing her. "You and your son have brought the Ruling Bloodlines back together in a way Sumar didn't see you know."

Aricia and Anja looked at Martin. "Ruling bloodlines?" Aricia asked. "What does he mean Beloved?"

Wayonn smiled. "It is a very long story, but I will give you the very short version if you don't mind Martin?"

Martin nodded. "Be my guest." He answered. "I sure don't understand it."

Wayonn smiled. "When Sumar made the decision to merge with the Lycavorian people, all of the Pralors that remained on City Ship 41 chose the six largest packs to merge with. The six packs that commanded the most respect and were the largest on Lycavore. Martin is the product of two of those packs because of his grandparents and his parents. Resumar and Eliani were from the two largest packs and the ones that held the most power and influence if you will. Resumar of the Bloodline of Sumar and Eliani of the Bloodline of Ormvor. Martin's father had the blood of those two packs within him when he came to Earth. Martin's mother Gorgo was also a member of the Ormvor bloodline and she and Leonidas continued this pairing without even knowing it." Wayonn looked at him. "Though I doubt your mother knows that part of our history."

Martin shook his head. "No bet here." He stated.

Wayonn turned back to Aricia, his face animated and happy. That he was thrilled to be able to relate this history was obvious to anyone who looked at him. "There were three other Bloodlines that were among the Ruling Quorum. You Aricia... you and your ancestors are of the Endelme Bloodline. In Androcles, Denali and Deion you and Martin have given your sons the blood of three of the Ruling Bloodlines. When Androcles took Sadi as his mate it became four since Sadi's mother was of the Sayid Bloodline, the fourth bloodline. Their son will have four Bloodlines within him."

"Son?" Aricia gasped. "Sadi... Sadi is with child?"

"No way!" Anja snapped. "I'm too young to be a grandma!"

Wayonn shook his head quickly with a small laugh. "Oh... no! Forgive me. No. Their first born will be a son however, when they do decide to have children."

"How... how do you know that?" Aricia asked quickly.

"Let's just say I have a hunch." Wayonn answered with a grin. "The fifth bloodline is... it is slightly more difficult to explain, but they have returned to the Union and the Lycavorian people."

"Why is it more difficult?" Anja asked.

"The Esavorna Bloodline is now half vampire." Wayonn nodded. "The last surviving descendant of that bloodline as near as I can tell was a daughter. At some point during the latter years of slavery to the Coven she met and fell in love with a vampire officer. He kept her safe when the rebellion began, refusing to allow anyone to discover her true nature. Their first born was a son."

"Valin?" Martin asked.

Wayonn looked at him and nodded. "Androcles filled you in to some extent I see." He said.

Martin nodded. "As much as he was able."

"To the best of my knowledge Valin's only child is now with Dysea." Wayonn spoke. "A daughter by the name of Cirith. She is unique in many ways."

“Unique how?” Aricia asked.

Wayonn looked at her. “Not only does she carry the blood of the Fifth Ruling pack in her veins, but also the blood of Aikiro.” He saw their eyes go wide at this knowledge and he held up his hand. “Do not judge her based on what I alone have said. Valin has raised her on his own without Aikiro’s input.”

“Aikiro... she knew?” Anja gasped.

Wayonn nodded. “It is my understanding that Valin plotted very carefully to accomplish this. It is something that he worked out with his parents during the fledging years of the rebellion. Valin is not a man to have standing against you. I do not know all the details to how he accomplished what he did, only that if Aikiro did not have the child she conceived with him, she would not be able to control the ramifications. She has had no contact with Cirith, and now that she is dead it no longer matters. Valin, Cirith and all those who follow them have defected to the Union.”

Anja and Aricia looked at Martin and saw him nod his head slowly. “According to the reports from Andro and Deni, they were instrumental in defeating the Kavalians on Kranek and it was Valin who told us of the implants Aikiro had built from City Ship 19. He’s working with Marci and our teams of researchers to try and find a way to defeat them.” He told them.

“And this is what blocked our Melda Min from us before?” Aricia asked. “This is what is blocking our Kinsoaurgai now?”

Martin nodded his head slowly and shifted his feet as he looked down. “Yes.” He said softly.

They had been together for far too long to not notice the Mindvoice tremble that washed through the man they both loved so much. They felt the anger and the hate surge through him even as controlled as it was. Anja and Aricia stepped closer to him.

“What aren’t you telling us Martin?” Anja asked gently.

“Beloved?” Aricia echoed her words. “You promised to never hold back from us again. Do not do so now. What is going on? This has to do with For’mya; we can feel it pulsing from you as surly as we stand here. You can hide much from us, but not your love for her or any of us.”

Martin took a deep breath and looked at them. He glanced quickly at Wayonn and then back to them. He reached out and took their hands in his. “Kinsoaurgai wasn’t pulled from the rubble of the Senate Building with Deia because she was kidnapped and taken prisoner by the Kavalian strike team that hit the building.” He told them seeing their eyes go wide. “I... I had an inkling that something like this had happened when the Netnews reported Deia was pulled from the rubble but the search for For’mya was continuing. Danny... Danny confirmed it a few minutes ago.”

“NO!” Aricia screamed pushing away from him. “No!” Wayonn watched with wide eyes as her psychic shields flared up around her and suddenly there was a psychic diamond formed in the palm of her hand glowing in its intensity.

Martin and Anja acted quickly and both of them stepped closer to her, Martin wrapping his arms around her lithe body while Anja pressed close to her, her arms sliding around her slim waist. Aricia and For’mya shared a closeness that was unmatched by any of the others. While it was true that Martin’s Queens loved each other unequivocally, Aricia and For’mya shared a bond that had been forged during those trying months twenty-seven years ago. The emotional state of Aricia and Martin and For’mya had brought them so close with one another, and once those events had passed, it had been For’mya and Aricia who had bonded in a manner similar to what Dysea shared with Isabella.

“Where is she?” Aricia snapped. “We must... we must go to her! Find her!”

Martin pulled both of them closer, inhaling deeply of Aricia’s lavender coca scent mixed with Anja’s sweet honey scent. He pulled her head to his chest even as the tears began to come. “We don’t know where she is.” He whispered softly as Anja began to cry softly as well. “Our son... Andro confronted the Kavalian ambassador when he discovered this and they threatened to kill her if he did anything.”

“Why?” Anja sobbed. “Why would they take her?”

Wayonn moved closer to them, Naesta standing beside him with wide eyes as she looked on. Androcles was correct in that she was a voracious reader, and during the five and a half hour flight here Naesta had done nothing but read. She could normally finish a good data novel in a few hours with her ability to read and process information swiftly, yet this book had held her attention like no other. She looked down quickly at the data book she held in her hand.

Peace Unto Death and Back Again.

If ever there was a book that had totally changed Naesta's outlook on something, this would be the one. Some of it was written from a first person perspective and in many ways it told the story of how the Lycavorian people had first risen to prominence here in the Alpha Quadrant and then been enslaved by the vampires of the High Coven. She had read about heart gripping events that had altered who and what these men and women valued most. Their time as slaves to the Coven was not pleasant by any stretch of the imagination, forced labor camps, the almost daily rape and beating of their women, the executions. It had made her shudder in horror as she read, yet she could not bring herself to stop. This man's words flowed across her small screen with an elegant and cohesive message. He did not put his people and their history up on a pedestal as if they could do no wrong, instead he often times went into depth about mistakes they had made as a species and was very critical of things their leaders had done once they were free of the Coven oppression. He had written extensively about what was known as the Flight of The Ten Thousand to the Lycavorian people. The taking of ten thousand babies from their mother's wombs and sent to Earth in a last ditch effort to insure their species did not die if their rebellion failed.

Once more the man had been outspoken in his writings, stating that most of his abundant information came from speaking with Lady Gorgo as he referred to her, since until he had been able to travel to Sparta and Earth himself, she was his only source of information. Naesta found that from his words and writings, he held a great deal of respect for Lady Gorgo, and working at the University together had given him opportunity to truly be accurate in everything. He had combined the information given to him by Gorgo as well as several trips he had made to Earth once the planet had been discovered and joined the Union, to release a widely anticipated and popular revised version of his book three years after the grandson of King Resumar had taken the throne. All that information was in the copy she now held and it was here that Naesta truly learned about the Lycavorian people.

The Spartans had been a ruthless and unforgiving people, but a people deeply steeped in honor and tradition and culture, traits that brought out the true instincts of the Lycavorian people within their population. Though those ten thousand could have quickly gained control of Sparta when they were grown, under the leadership of King Leonidas, they became a staple of Greek and Earth history. Often times through those years they sacrificed so that humans could grow and their secret remained hidden. The Lycavorian Spartans became prominent members of Sparta and their society and as time passed here on Earth they were widely recognized as not only warriors unequalled, but forward thinkers and believers. They clung to their deep history and culture yet adapted easily to the future, blending it all together to make themselves stronger as a people. The Lycavorians in Sparta remained closer to their base instincts than those who now lived off Earth and were building the Union. While their lives were harsh and brutal in the beginning, they changed as time went by, yet they also remained the same. They considered their females to be the holders of their future and they were honored and respected, even though a good number of them were just as equally deadly as the men. Marriage and relationships were sacrosanct, rape of any kind was considered a high crime, and the true concept of honor only became part of their instinct and psyche even more. In many ways, a verbal commitment to another was a binding agreement that Lycavorian Spartans honored without fail. Though the first King Leonidas died in a battle that even now, some three thousand plus years later, was considered a revered day in Sparta, his son carried on all that he had begun.

This latest edition that Androcles had given her was only a year old and whether he knew it or not, it contained much about him and his father both. Naesta had seen the look on his face when she asked if he had read it and he had told her no, his face twisted distastefully in a mock grimace. Naesta fully believed he did not know what he had given her and he struck her as the type of man that would answer any question asked of him no matter the reaction it elicited. A sentence from the writer came back to her as she stood there.

"He would probably be angry at what I have written about him given how unassuming he is..." The writer had said. "The King equally so, but a decision made long before either of their times has blessed us as a people now. Blessed us with two men who have within them the very best of our of species and all our potential could be. Two men who follow the words of the first King Leonidas without fail; eight words whose meaning can not be measured in any way... Fight with your head, lead with your heart."

Naesta stood there and watched as Martin Leonidas held two of his five wives and mates and she saw the love and devotion to them in those dark brown eyes. The same love and utter devotion that she had seen in Androcles's eyes when he mentioned her sister. These were part of the emotions that her father and so many of her people said the Lycavorians did not possess. A week she had spent among them now, a week to tear down everything her father had taught her about these men and women and to show her that not everything was as she was raised to believe. Wayonn's soothing voice broke her out of her own thoughts and she watched as he moved closer to them.

"Helen and your son believe he will attempt to use her to regain the throne of Sparta and the Union." Wayonn spoke softly. "After discovering what I have about many things since I came here to be among you and our people, I believe they may be correct."

Naesta watched as the three of them turned slowly to look at Wayonn and she saw in their eyes what she now believed her people lacked. She saw faith and trust and the Queen with Androcles's eyes, her next words confirmed that for her.

"You... you are Wayonn... the Val'istar." Aricia stammered as she wiped the tears from her eyes.

Wayonn nodded. "That is one of the names I have been called in the past yes... but I much prefer Wayonn."

"You're the one that... that helped Martin?" Anja asked now. "The Pralor?"

Wayonn looked at Martin for a long moment and then back to her. "I see he does not keep anything from his Queens..." Wayonn said nodding his head. "Yes... I am that Wayonn... though now I am far more Lycavorian than I am Pralor, and I have been for more than thirty thousand years. Something I am thankful for every day."

"There is... there is no way my brother could hope to regain the throne." Martin said. "He... the Senate would never allow him too."

Wayonn nodded. "Nevertheless... that is what they believe. It has something to do with your For'mya and this Janae that they keep talking about."

"Janae?" Anja gasped looking at Martin. "Marty... they took Janae?"

Martin looked at Wayonn sternly before nodding his head and looking back at her. Of all of them, Anja and Eliani had developed a closer relationship with Janae through the years and were able to use her position as Panos's aide to go out into public and shop and do things that Janae would not have been able to do otherwise. Her identity was a closely guarded secret and only a few Durcunusaan knew her true bloodline. Eliani and Janae were close in age and it was not uncommon to see them together with Nyla in the stores and shops of Gytheio or Sparta.

"If Andro's last report is accurate... she is still on Earth and he brought Zarah back from Kranek to find her." Martin said. "They are using the same type of device to block her as they are For'mya."

"Then how..." Aricia looked at him quickly. "Zarah is going to track her imprint isn't she?"

Martin nodded. "Yes."

Wayonn looked at them with interested eyes. "Track her imprint?" He asked. "I have never heard of this."

"It's a long story and I'll fill you in later... but Zarah has the ability to track someone using their passive Mindvoice imprint." Martin explained. "Andro taught her... and when we discovered it, we forbid them to ever use it because..."

"A person's most private thoughts would be exposed." Wayonn spoke. "Fascinating. I never suspected this."

"Yeah... well I suspect my son has a lot of things up his sleeves that he hasn't filled me in on." Martin said with gruffness in his voice. "Something I'll make sure I discuss with him when I see him again."

Wayonn met his eyes. "Your son Martin... he is dealing with far more than someone his age should have to deal with. In many ways he is you... but in more ways he is not. His goals... his two main goals, he wears them on his sleeve and they are the goals you instilled in him as a boy while he was growing. Protect his family. Protect the Union. At all costs... even of his own life. Do not fault him for how he does things... just know that he will do what is necessary to fully accomplish these goals while adhering to the values and morals you and your mates gave to him."

"I see he's got you on his side too huh?" Martin said.

Wayonn grinned. “No... I am on your side... it just so happens that when I look at him, I see you.” He answered. He turned then and held out his hand for Naesta pulling her closer to them. “Allow me to introduce someone who is probably very confused.” He said drawing her closer still. “This is Naesta Re Mydala, the youngest daughter to Coren and Devra Re Mydala and a member of the Vanari Empire. She has come as a liaison of her mother who is a member of the Vanari Board of Regents. Their ruling body so to speak. Her mother, sister and brother accompanied us from the Beta Quadrant in the hopes of recovering their sister who has been taken by some rather surly individuals that call the Beta Quadrant home and delve into slavery and things of the like.”

Naesta saw Martin’s jaw twitch at the mention of that word and this only confirmed what Wayonn had told them as they were coming here. She bowed her head slightly.

“It is... it is an honor to meet you King Leonidas.” Naesta spoke with heartfelt sincerity.

Martin looked at Wayonn. “Exactly how much is Andro not telling me?” He asked.

Wayonn met his eyes and smiled. “Probably quite a bit given your propensity for doing things in an unorthodox manner.” He stated. “Remember my boy... I have touched your mind and I have seen some of the things you have done. What I do know for sure and I agree with them completely on, is that you and Aricia must remain dead for now. While I understand the anger you have within you over this knowledge that they have taken For'mya and the need to go to your mate, we all agree that if it becomes known that you are still alive, your Kinsoaurgai becomes expendable. You know from Andro’s reports that we still do not know how deeply entrenched the Kavalians are within Earth, who is helping them, or what they ultimately hope to accomplish. If you were to suddenly come back to life, we will never know and it very well may cost For'mya her life.”

Aricia looked up at Martin. “Beloved... we can not risk...”

Martin nodded. “I know.” He said softly. “And I won’t.”

Wayonn reached out and took Martin’s arm. “With our presence here our people are once and for all finally reunited Martin. Dutkne and I... we are but the Vanguard to a much larger force of pure Lycavorians that will follow your orders as their King without question or pause. We have waited for this day for millennia and now that it is here... we will not let it slip away. Dutkne is already falling into the role destiny and fate has meant for him with your son. Naesta and her family, the Vanari, they are part of that future and I believe she is beginning to see that now.”

Naesta nodded. “More than I ever dreamed.”

“She is a liaison for her mother as I said, and she brings a request for you Anja.” Wayonn spoke.

“Me?” Anja gasped.

Wayonn nodded. “You are Queen of the Hadarians and the medical skill and knowledge of your people surpasses in many ways even the Vanari. There is much that we need to discuss and explore...” Wayonn looked at Martin. “And things we must purge...”

“Avoi.” Martin whispered.

“Is there someplace where we can talk?” Wayonn asked. “Someplace quiet where we won’t be disturbed. I have much I need to tell you and I wish to meet your mother.”

“My mother?” Martin asked. “Why?”

Wayonn nodded with a smile. “Why? Your mother is a figure that is revered among the Lycavorians of the Protectorate Martin.” He saw his eyes go a little wider. “Yes... we know all about Gorgo and all she has done in her life as well as what she has endured. You might be surprised how much of our brothers and sisters here in the Union that we know of. As much as I have tried through the years to keep us separate... for reasons which I will explain later... one of the things that I found I could not suppress is the role your mother has played in our history. For right now I urge you to have faith in your son and what he is doing. Allow him to tackle the problems we face from one side, while we address them from another.”

Martin nodded his head after only a moment. “This way.” He stated gripping Aricia’s and Anja’s hands tightly.

UNDERGROUND SEWAGE TUNNELS SOUTHEAST OF SPARTA

It amazes me that with all of our technology and knowledge we still can not remove the foul stench of the waste we produce. I am simply overjoyed to be walking through eighteen inches of things I can't begin to imagine and do not want to think of. Dutkne's calm voice filled their heads as they moved slowly down the sides of the sewage tunnel.

Zarah and Lucia looked at each other and could not help but grin. The Durcunusaan troop was leading them down the tunnel with confident talent, his 190A3 leading his movements with measured skill. Zarah and Lucia were next, Dutkne behind them and the last Durcunusaan troop bringing up the rear. By Zarah's estimate they had traveled nearly three kilometers so far, the stench nearly unbearable to their wolf senses. While Lucia also attempted to hold her breath as often as possible, it wasn't nearly as bad as what Zarah and the other Lycavorians were smelling she knew.

[So not only can he not fight, he complains too ussta libh'iahin.] Lucia said with a grin.

Zarah shook her head. [My brother is testing us.] She spoke in reply. [I can't believe he sent him here. We could do this without him and Andro knows that.]

[I have found in a short time that everything your brother does has purpose Zarah.] Lucia told her.

[Maybe... but I'm not seeing it right now. I...]

Zarah stopped talking when she saw the Durcunusaan troop in front of them hold up his hand quickly clenched in a fist. She held her breath until she saw that fist explode open into five fingers and Zarah snatched her K12 from the thigh holster and scampered soundlessly up beside the man as he lowered himself to one knee. Lucia remained at her side as Dutkne dropped into a crouch and the Durcunusaan behind him turned to their rear.

"Haeis?" Zarah whispered softly.

The Durcunusaan soldier motioned with his head to their front about ten meters and their eyes followed his gaze. Lying face down and half in and half out of the rancid water that ran down the center of the tunnel was a Kavalian soldier. Lucia's K12 came up now as well and Zarah tapped Haeis on the shoulder. He nodded and motioned them forward once more. They made they small ten meter dash to where the body lay, quickly taking up positions around it as Dutkne dropped to one knee beside the inert figure. Zarah and Lucia watched as he knelt on one knee in the vile water and carefully inspected the body for any kind of booby trap. Once he was certain there was none he rolled the body over. The Kavalian must have been one of their biogenic clones, for he looked no different than any human or Lycavorian from a difference. He wore civilian clothes with a combat harness secured to his upper body, most of the pockets now empty. Dutkne's keen eyes detected the decay beginning to set in from lying in the foul water for an extended amount of time and he also noticed the savage tear in his thigh. A hasty attempt had been made to treat the injury, given to him by a wolf claw it appeared, and Dutkne quickly ascertained this was the Kavalian that Lucia had said was seriously injured within Janae's apartment. He looked up at where both Zarah and Lucia were looking at him.

Haeis touched Zarah's arm. "I'm going to scout ahead Princess." He whispered. "We should be close to the old plant."

Zarah nodded towards him. "Tur kalamma Haeis." She told him.

"Innyne Princess." He stated before moving off like a ghost.

"This must be the one you said had an arterial injury." Dutkne stated softly. "This Janae caught him good. From the size and depth of the tear in his flesh, I surmise she struck him with her front paw while in the middle of a leap. The injury was treated quickly, but he must have bled out before they reached their destination or shortly after. I estimate he's been dead for at least five to six days. It's hard to tell with the amount of bacteria and decay that has already set in because of this diseased water."

"How do you know that?" Lucia asked.

Dutkne smiled at them, flashing white teeth and they could see that his wolf fangs were extended about a quarter of an inch. This caused Zarah to blink in surprise for being able to see a Lycavorian's fangs without his eyes actually having changed was usually the sign of a large wolf when that person shifted. "I read quite a bit." Dutkne answered her. "I have done little else for almost the last half century. I may be the General Director of the Protectorate, but things run so smoothly that I don't usually have anything to do."

“The General Director?” Lucia asked.

Dutkne nodded. “A position similar to your tenna Deia.”

Zarah’s eyes grew even wider. “Wait a minute... are you saying that you are the leader of this Protectorate?” She asked.

Dutkne nodded. “Yes.”

“How big... how big is this Protectorate that you come from?” She asked.

Dutkne looked as if he was doing some fast figuring in his head and then he met her gaze. “If I’m not mistaken... at last count the Lycavorian Protectorate encompassed one hundred and forty-seven worlds with a population of just under six hundred billion. Compared to the Union in size we are but a drop in the proverbial bucket.”

“Hold on...” Lucia spoke now. “You are the Prime Minister of almost six hundred billion Lycavorians?”

Dutkne shook his head quickly. “The Lycavorian population is roughly three quarters of that total. The rest is made up of those who have become friends and allies and live within the Protectorate.” He saw the looks of astonishment on their faces and he grinned again. “Well... we have had over twenty millennia to grow to that size.”

“How... how old are you exactly?” Lucia asked now.

“Five hundred and forty-two healthy years.” Dutkne asked. “Of course... the healthy part will be determined by how long we remain in this putrid tunnel sloshing through rancid water in our quest to find your Janae.”

Zarah opened her mouth to snap back at him about what they were doing when Haeis reappeared and settled next to her on one knee causing her to turn.

“I have found where they exited Princess.” He spoke in a soft whisper. “There is a small view window in the actual door and I can see into a small maintenance hallway. It is empty. If I had to guess... I would say we are beneath the old sewage plant even now.”

Zarah looked up at the ceiling. “That would account for the distance between the ceiling vents becoming shorter.” She stated. She turned to Lucia. “Does Seyra see anything?” She asked, forgetting that with the unique bond that she and Lucia now shared Seyra could hear her just as easily as she could hear and speak to her Bonded Sister Lucia.

They heard Seyra’s soft chuckle in their minds in acknowledgement of this fact and Lucia grinned. I swept over the old plant twice Zarah my second sister, the second time with a large stag in my claws to make it appear as if I was hunting. There is nothing obvious to indicate activity outside the plant, but I did see several sets of footprints leading to and from the main facility which is deserted. My dragon eyes also detected heat signatures from inside the second floor of the main processing plant if that is what it’s called. Six of them to be exact.

Lucia looked at Haeis. “Seyra has detected six heat signatures inside the main facility. Nothing between us and them.”

It is becoming dark outside sister. Seyra continued. It would be a good time to exit the tunnels you are in. They can not see your exit point from the facility.

“Dusk is coming...” Zarah said. “We can’t contact Anton and the others from inside this tunnel and I truly want to get out of this foul stench.”

Dutkne nodded quickly. “I whole heartily agree.” He stated.

Haeis pulled the small portable data screen from his small pack and looked at it quickly. He nodded his head. “If they are all in the main facility as Seyra says then we can exit where they did and make contact with Anton. Six heat signatures... and taking into account that Janae is one of them... we have them outnumbered.”

Zarah grinned at him. “Yes we do.” She stated.

Dutkne held up his hand. “Just to remind everyone... we have just spent the last two and a half hours trudging through the remains of several hundred metric tons of excrement and waste from Sparta. Even a person with the dullest sense of smell in the known universe will be able to detect us coming from quite a ways away. Unless of course... you are planning to force them into submission with our stench.”

“Yutri et'zarreth!” Zarah hissed softly.

Dutkne smiled. “I have yet to master the delicacies of the ancient vampire tongue as your brother has not shared that with me yet. May I take for granted that is a derogatory comment?”

Lucia snarled at him. "Yes you may!" She spat.

Dutkne nodded. "Yes... I assumed as much."

Lucia turned to Haeis. "Take us out into this maintenance tunnel. Once outside we can contact Anton, find their position and request that he conduct the assault while we provide cover from another location."

Haeis nodded. "This way."

"...hit them in six minutes Zar." Anton's calm voice filled her internal ear implant. It had to be a combination of his Drow and Spartan blood and to someone who did not know him; his voice was a nonchalant as if he was discussing the weather.

"We've moved into what appears to be some sort of offices across from the main facility. We are on the third floor and have a clear view of both entrances to where they are. It looks like the main control room."

Zarah spoke as her dark eyes scanned the control room in the growing darkness, easily picking up the metal catwalk leading off in both directions from the doors on either end.

"I've split us into two teams." Anton told her. "Cihera and Las'elh have one and I'm leading the other."

"There appear to be only five Kavalians." Zarah said. "But the venting system of the plant is still active and throwing off large heat pockets that foul up Seyra's infra red vision as well as Lucia's and mine. There is no way to be sure they don't have more helping them Anton so you need to be careful. For some reason I can't believe they would hope to take and hold her with only six individuals."

"You think there are more?" Anton questioned.

"It... it feels wrong Anton. If you were the Kavalians and you thought you had taken out the King and who knows how many of his family... if you apparently knew who Janae was as these bastards seem too... would you attempt to hold her and hide with only six men?" Zarah asked softly.

Dutkne heard Zarah's question and looked at her intently. Yes... Andro had shared with him what he had done in order to save the life of his sister, but even he did not realize just how much it had affected her. While this bonding of sorts had given Zarah the gifts she now had, it also had given her a cerebral view of things in a tactical military fashion, something that Andro exhibited quite frequently. Watching her and Lucia next to her, Dutkne felt another surge of attraction. Lucia was on her back propped up against the wall next to Zarah, watching her face intently and holding the K12 in her hands. The windows in the office area were large and still intact, though most of the furniture had been removed and the rest piled against the far wall leaving them in a fairly large open area.

"I see your point." Anton's voice replied.

"This plant may no longer be in use Anton, but they had to have gotten the plans for it somewhere." Zarah continued. "And you can't just walk into the Office of Zoning and Planning and request them."

"No they couldn't." Anton spoke. "We'll watch our corners. I'll signal you thirty seconds before we enter."

Lucia stared at Zarah. "What is it ussta libh'iahin?" She asked.

Zarah met her gaze. "Andro is right Lucia... they have Lycavorians helping them. There is no way they could have gotten the location of this facility let alone gained access without help from the inside. It may be a decommissioned facility, but it is still part of the reserve core and not accessible to unauthorized individuals."

"We have detected no other infra red signatures in the area." Lucia said. "Unless they are hiding within the excess heat fields put off by the venting systems."

Zarah met her eyes. "In which case we wouldn't detect them." She said matter-of-factly. She turned her head quickly. Seyra... how many different locations where the excess venting preventing you from seeing through the heat?

Three. Seyra answered immediately from the small ridge she waited on only a quarter mile away. Two just north of the control room where they are holding Janae and another directly above the building you are in.

How big are they?

Large enough to hide several bodies as long as they stood within the affected area of the vent. Seyra answered. What is it my Second Sister?

Too easy. Zarah hissed. It's too easy.

Dutkne moved closer to them soundlessly. It may be they just did not believe anyone would follow them Zarah. He stated.

Zarah shook her head. My father and brother do not believe in chance Dutkne. Not when it comes to military operations. Three locations where the venting system is active. If these Kavalians were good enough to do what they have done then it stands to reason that they are not stupid and they would know they could hide within the cone of these vents. Neither dragon or Lycavorian could see through the excess heat generated by the venting system in order to detect individual bodies.

Kavalian eyes are similar in many ways to ours Princess. Haeis spoke. They have fine night vision. They will detect us if we attempt to move outside this room along the catwalks.

Detect you yes. Zarah said.

But not us. Lucia echoed as she realized what Zarah was saying. Your HE grenades... give them to us. We can wrap the shadows around us and get close enough to see if there any Kavalians there. If there are, we can throw grenades at them just as Anton conducts his attack to retrieve Janae.

Haeis was pulling several oval shaped grenades from his harness before she had even stopped talking. Dutkne watched as Zarah and Lucia took one grenade apiece and began to get to their feet. Dutkne did not understand why such thoughts raced through his mind at that exact moment, but as Zarah leaned over and helped Lucia to her feet, Dutkne's eyes fell upon her extremely shapely ass. A single instant was all it took for his mind to register that Zarah had the most divinely sculpted backside on any female he had ever seen and Lucia was not that far from perfection. Dutkne shook his head quickly as they turned to look at him, almost as if they were sensing his eyes upon them.

You should remain here. Zarah told him. I don't wish to explain to my brother how you were injured or killed.

Dutkne grinned and nodded his head. Of course. We wouldn't want that would we?

Zarah snorted softly at his sarcastic reply and turned to Lucia. "I will take the North catwalk 'chev.'" She whispered.

Lucia nodded. "I will take the south and we will meet on the opposite end." She spoke.

As Dutkne watched, they leaned close to one another and shared a soft kiss before wrapping the shadows around their bodies and disappearing completely into the gathering darkness. He turned to look at Haeis.

"That particular skill is very unnerving." He stated softly.

Haeis grinned. "You get used to it." He stated. "Let us get ready in case they discover something we do not want them to discover."

All of what they had taught her came to the forefront now.

Zarah Leonidas was the youngest of her father's children that were of fighting age, yet there was no question she was the most lethal behind her brother Androcles. Between what her father, mothers and uncles had taught her through the years and the skills that Andro had trained her in when it was just the two of them, she possessed a combination of grace and power that was unmatched among her other siblings. Even her mother and uncle Vonis had commented on how smoothly and effortlessly she could wrap the shadows around her and blur in motion. Her mother had told her that one day she would surpass her in skill and that was stating a lot since her mother Isabella was widely regarded as the most lethal and skilled pureblood vampire in all of the Union. Zarah knew her mother trained almost everyday with her first elven mother Dysea and her father whenever she could. She also accepted training and knowledge from any who she thought could make her better, and for several years she had trained under the tutelage of her Aunt Aihola and General Lynwe, two Drow warriors who were feared for their skill.

Zarah Leonidas loved her brother without question or thought for he had given to her a part of himself that day on the mountain in order to save her life. Andro had done this without hesitation or pause even when the unwritten laws within the Union would have condemned her to death. Zarah more than anyone but Sadi and their father understood the way her brother thought, how his mind worked and what he could do. He never doubted her as they grew; he always was there to give her as much support and encouragement as she needed. He did it with all of them, but more so with her than their other siblings. That day on the mountain had created a bond between them that would never go away now. They had learned through the years how to tightly shield their private thoughts from each other, but no matter how much they shielded they could always detect a simple mood or ambiance from each other that they could not from their other siblings. Andro had pushed her, supported her and been her best friend outside of Normya. Bringing her back here to Earth and turning her loose to find Janae was the ultimate show of confidence and support for her that he could have ever made and that unequivocal decision had done more for her than anyone but Lucia knew.

What Dante and Javier Moran had done to her she would never forget. It still made her shudder in revulsion and at times cower in fear inside her mind when she saw someone that looked like them and those memories came rushing back. Yet now... with the realization of what Lucia meant to her and her intense and growing love for the breathtaking vampire female that had captured her heart... Zarah was irrevocably moving forward one step at a time and putting that moment of her life far behind her. With each kiss from Lucia, each touch, she restored a little bit of Zarah Leonidas as she once was. She had taken so much of Lucia's blood to heal herself that now she was now and forever tied to Lucia in a way that only served to give her strength and purpose. Waking up in each other's arms was the most soothing and healing balm that Zarah could ever have. Destiny and fate may have brought them together from across the stars, but their rapidly growing love for each other was driving them forward. And her brother only encouraged and embraced this for her and for Lucia. He had accepted it completely for what it was even though Zarah knew that her other siblings were still skeptical of Lucia. Neither of them cared about that for they had the support of the one man who mattered right most to them right now. None of her brothers and sisters would go against Androcles, for they all trusted him completely. He had done more for each of them as they had grown and it was impossible for them not to trust in Andro's decisions. He had protected all of them at one point or another in their lives and did so without question and that is why they loved him so. He had done things without others knowledge that shielded his sisters mainly, things that only Zarah knew of because of what they shared, and she knew it was why none of them would hesitate to go to him with any problem no matter what it was or how personal it could be.

Zarah stopped moving along the catwalk as she grew nearer to the location that Seyra had pointed out. Her cobalt blue vampire eyes were alert and focused. Wrapped within the shadows as she was, Zarah was completely invisible to the naked eye and even most portable sensor arrays. Moving with the shadows wrapped around her had taken some training to master; being able to manipulate even the smallest amount of darkness in a room was a skill that took training and time. She had an advantage that many did not because of who her parents were but she had worked hard to be able to do this. It was like moving with a swirling cloud of black around your body, being able to shift it to hide yourself and draw it in tighter to your body or expand it outward to encompass another person. She had inherited the Spartan will to master something from her father, and combined with her own confidence, it had served her well so far. Zarah looked up along the catwalk above her head and froze as she saw the tip of the combat boot from behind the mass of pipes and channels. She saw the boot shift and then the thigh came into view between the pipes. Zarah leaped the four meters to the top of the building with little effort and no sound and then she was level with the mass of pipes. She moved three feet to the side along the edge of the building and then she saw them.

Three Kavalians in civilian clothes and carrying heavy assault rifles. Lucia had been right. The three of them were standing directly in front of the vent as Zarah shifted to her infra red vision with a blink. Their body heat was lost within the larger concentration being expelled from the vent. As she shifted her eyes back to normal vision she could see them easily. One was sitting in a chair they must have brought up to this location, the other two standing. All of them were heavily armed and in perfect position to ambush any teams that tried to assault the control center.

Anton! Cihera! HOLD! Zarah rasped out within Mindvoice.

Holding! Cihera responded instantly.

Zarah what do you have? Anton asked.

Zarah shifted her eyes and stared across the wide expanse of open air between this long catwalk she was on and the one where Lucia was. 'Chev? She spoke. You were right.

Yes... unfortunately. Lucia replied instantly. I am looking at four Kavalians in civilian clothes and obviously biogenic clones. They are in perfect position to ambush Anton's team as he approached from the east.

I would guess that this confirms the imprint you followed is in fact this Janae and this is where they are holding her. Dutkne's voice filled their minds.

I would say that. Zarah answered.

Then there is quite likely more of these Kavalians near the vent above the building we are in. Dutkne continued.

I would say that is a safe bet as well. Lucia answered. I can't tell from here, too many pipes and it's too dark. Ussta libh'iahin?

I am not in a position to see. Zarah answered. Haeis... can you move into a position to take them out if you exit the way we came in?

Give me two minutes. Haeis answered immediately.

Zarah pulled the grenade from her belt and thumbed the small button magnetizing the grenade so that it stuck to any metal surface. She heard several grunts over her implant COM and her head whirled towards the office they had come from when Haeis's voice barked out not within Mindvoice but for all to hear.

"Fuck! Do it now Princess! Do it now!"

Zarah heard a smashing sound coming from that building and she whirled back and heaved her grenade. "Lucia, Anton, Cihera! NOW!! Execute now!!" She screamed out seeing the three Kavalians turn towards the sound of her voice confused because they saw nothing. Just as their eyes shifted to the soft thump of the grenade landing and magnetizing to the pipe just above their heads a muffled explosion sounded from the building Zarah and the others had come from. Zarah was leaping from the top of the building just as the grenade exploded, cutting off the warning they were about to shout and announcing to everyone else that the game had begun.

Then all hell broke loose.

Janae had been sheltered for most of her life. Living on Elear with her mother and father had been anything but interesting. Though her father was half elf, her mother was Lycavorian and her father's genes were dominant. She possessed all the natural beauty of the elven species, their incredible speed and reflexes and natural strength, but her ears were only slightly pointed and not the normal two inch high pointed ears that half elf children normally had. Her ears were almost normal in size, but still elegantly pointed allowing her elven heritage to show outwardly. Her childhood was filled with lessons and training, but her father steadfastly refused to allow her to enter into her own Agoge, even though it was what she most wanted to do. It wasn't until he had showed up at their home one day that the reasons and purpose to everything her parents had done rang true. Janae knew something was going to happen the moment the King of the Lycavorian Union and his two Elven Queens came to their door. She had only been eleven years old at the time, but somehow his presence resounded within her like a fog horn. She stood next to her mother holding tightly to her hand as her father stood before the King and shook his head. She remembered his words vividly that day.

"I knew it was only a matter of time before you discovered me." He had said. "I'm surprised you waited this long."

"I... I didn't know how to approach you." The King had said. "I..."

Janae had watched as her father, always so stern and Spartan like, how he lifted his hand and placed it on the shoulder of the King that day. How his dark eyes were moist with tears that Janae had never seen her father shed.

"I believe... I believe fate decided it was time Mandri." He had spoken causing Janae's eyes to go wide. It was the first language besides the normal Basic tongue that she had learned to speak fluently, followed quickly by the Elven language and then the ancient Vampire Language. By age ten she was the only one among the two hundred plus students in her class that could speak all three languages fluently. "You have led well these last years and you have made my father and your grandfather very proud in your actions."

"Do you... do you speak to him?" The King had asked.

Janae's father smiled wistfully. "Only in my dreams now. Only in my dreams."

Janae had watched then as her father and the King embraced tightly, more tightly than she had ever seen her father embrace another man and as the next days and weeks and years passed, Janae discovered the wonderful answers as to why.

That day had unlocked the history and blood that her father had hidden so completely from so many people, including his beautiful Lycavorian wife. She was the granddaughter of King Resumar and his beloved Elf Concubine Sar'ia. She was a first cousin to the King of the Lycavorian Union and they were not just any cousins, but the only grandchildren to King Resumar that still survived. That day had begun a wondrous life of discovery and exploration that Janae had willingly embraced with all that she was. She understood that her true heritage had to be kept secret at the time, but Martin had done all that he could to insure that she was part of the future going forward. Even against her father's wishes, he brought her to Earth to live among the many people of Sparta so that she could learn everything there was to know about her past and hopefully shape her future. Her parents had moved here to Earth as well, living in a large villa not far from the Royal Estate. The Durcunusaan knew at least in some part what she was, and they would never question their King or Queens. She was present with her parents for the majority of the family functions that were kept private from the prying eyes of the Netnews, playing with Androcles, Resumar and Eliani and all of her cousins as they grew.

She was granted her wish to take part in her own Agoge, primarily in part because of Martin and the agreement he had made with her father about her safety. Her cousin knew the attention she would garner if it was known who she was, and in many ways he was just as protective of her as her own father. All of her cousins were. Yet when she expressed the desire to Martin to conduct her own Agoge, to take a more active role in a destiny that was hers as well, he didn't hesitate as she thought he might. She had commanded an elite company of Durcunusaan Scouts for three years, earning the position on her own merits, and then had shifted to her current role as senior aide to Sparta's Governor Panos. This was a man who considered Martin a son and who they all referred to as grandfather. He was a man who had taught her the intricacies of politics in Sparta and exposed her to so much more. The last five years of her life had been filled with knowledge and exciting events that she had played a role in. She was highly respected as his senior aide and was also known as a woman not to be trifled with even at only twenty-four years of age. She was steadfastly loyal to Panos and would shield him from everyone if she deemed it necessary. Janae and the Union Netnews had an erratic and sometimes rocky relationship for she was blunt talking and brutally honest.

Janae had been devastated when she learned of what had happened to Martin for she had grown so close to her cousin and like him had embraced the legacy that their blood gave them. It was this fact alone that had allowed the Kavalian bastards to take her by surprise, though she had severely wounded one of them during the raid. A man that was now dead she thought with some satisfaction. She had heard them speaking amongst themselves as she was kept secured to the chair in this old refuse plant, some of them taking different opportunities to paw her supple body and make crude comments about what they would do to her. Only their senior officer kept them in check where that was concerned Janae knew, as he kept the remaining four men from raping and beating her for what she had done to their comrade she had no doubts. They must have done something to her while she was unconscious for she could not reach out within Mindvoice to touch anyone. It was as if a large black void had been erected around her mind and no matter what she did she could not penetrate it. She had grown in her Mindvoice abilities and skill since coming to Earth, working with her cousin and the Feravomir on a regular basis and always able to sense her cousins and marking their many scents within her mind. Janae was of medium height at five foot seven, but she had taken after her Lycavorian mother in the shape and numerous curves of her body. She had svelte legs that ended with a perfectly shaped ass and a small waist. She inherited her amply endowed chest from her mother as well as the regal cheekbones and full lips. Her hazel/green eyes were bright and alert, and her skin was naturally flawless thanks in part to her elven genes. She was a stunningly beautiful female; one who had smaller pointed ears due to the fact that three quarters of her blood was Lycavorian, but they were elven ears nonetheless and only added to her beauty. Janae had drawn the attention of many young handsome wolves and elves who wanted to court her through the years, until they found out how headstrong and intelligent she was and the fact that she was far too close to the Leonidas children to just be a simple aide. She could trade one-liners with the best of them, having spent far too much time around her cousin Eliani and her mother Anja to not pick up their quick wit and sharp tongues.

Janae's head snapped up when the first muffled explosion sounded and her eyes darted to where the Kavalian commandos reacted as the well trained troops that they were. Once more she tried to reach out within Mindvoice but was stifled by that black wall, and then she inhaled deeply trying to catch any scent on the wind that she recognized. It was there, though so very faint, and a slow smile began to play across her lips. Two more explosions sounded, louder and much closer than the last and obviously outside, the screams of horribly injured

Kavalians now filling the air. Janae snarled and silently hoped that they died horrible deaths for what they had taken part in. It was readily apparent that Kavalian biogenic clones did not possess the same sense of smell that their pureblood comrades did with their feline genes. Kavalians had a very good sense of smell, just not on the same level of a Lycavorian. None of the five men in the room with her paid her any mind now, their complete attention focused on looking on the front row of windows and trying to determine what was going on and they did not smell the distinct scents approaching. One of them Janae recognized instantly and her head whipped back and forth trying to find cover to drop her chair behind. Finally she gave up and simply leaned over to the side and toppled herself over drawing the attention of the Kavalians in the room just as the doors on either side of the office they were in blew inward and her adopted cousin Anton Simpson led a charge of Durcunusaan Commandos into the room.

Janae grunted in pain as she tried to make herself as small as possible on the floor tied to the chair as she was. It wouldn't have mattered she knew, not with the skill Anton possessed, but better to be safe than sorry. Anton and the six Durcunusaan that followed him into the room all carried chopped down versions of the P190A3, the P191K, with integral silencers built into them. They fired an immensely powerful 12 mm kinetic shell called a Hammerhead round that was tipped with a single eye drop of liquid C9 explosive. As she watched, Anton's weapon cut loose first, a short five round burst taking the Kavalian commander dead center in his chest as he was turning to face the door. Janae watched as five small popping explosions dotted his chest and blood and flesh sprayed into the air as his body was flung back. The second entrance blew inward and Janae watched as the shimmering white hair of a Drow elf led a blond haired elf and three more Durcunusaan into the room, their weapons singing out death without pause. Janae had learned many things upon coming here to Earth to live among her newly discovered family. One of the most important things she discovered was that the Durcunusaan were broken down in to three different sections. There was the Protection Detail, those Durcunusaan who were tasked with actually shadowing the Royal family wherever they went and securing their safety. These were the men and women who guarded those the King and Queens considered high value targets. The Protection Detail was the largest of the Durcunusaan, numbering nearly eight thousand across the Union in various jobs. After them came the much smaller Analyst Detail; men and women who were perhaps the most unassuming group of men and women she had ever met. Talking to one of them on the street, you would never know that they were probably the most intelligent and introverted of the three sections. All of them had been trained by the Krypteria and were experts at discovering details about people and places that the Royal Family might encounter. All of them were analysts yes, but all of them had served in the normal Durcunusaan first, and every single one of them had combat experience. The third section of the Durcunusaan was the smallest of the organization at only two hundred and fifty strong but they were without the doubt the most lethal group of men and women that Janae had ever met.

The Reactionary Detail were the ones who conducted operations of just this nature. All of them had been trained by General Vengal or General Vistr personally, who in turn had trained under Martin Leonidas and several others who were the most superb small unit operators in the entire Union. This is what they trained for every day, and they had no intention of allowing any of the Kavalians in the room to survive or any harm to come to her. She felt a huge weight of relief being lifted from her shoulders as two of the Durcunusaan RD moved instantly to where she lay on the floor and shielded her body with their own. It was really an unnecessary move on their part; the Durcunusaan Reactionary Detail had conducted twenty-seven operations like this since their inception nineteen years ago, and not one of them had ever failed. No one knew they even existed Janae was sure for they often worked tightly with the Krypteria, and it was not surprising to see Anton leading them in.

It was over in nine seconds; only three blinks of her eyes really, and the smell of death and relaxed bladders filled the room. She watched as Anton moved to her side quickly as the two RD troops finished cutting her bindings.

"Zarah... we have her! She's unhurt!" Anton announced as he dropped to one knee and allowed his P191K to dangle on the quick release straps. He turned his head. "Secure the room and report!" He barked before turning back to Janae. "Long time no see cuz." He told her with that trademark grin that his father always sported and he continued.

Janae almost broke into tears and hugged him tightly as she laughed in relief. "It's about time you got here." She spat loudly. "I don't know how much longer I could have tolerated their foul stench."

“Janae... cousin!” Zarah’s voice echoed in the room and suddenly she was unwrapping the shadows from around her body.

Janae came to her feet quickly and the two women embraced without question as Lucia appeared next to her, the K12 clutched in her fist. Anton got to his feet and looked at her. “What happen?” He asked. “Why the last minute change and order?”

“We discovered additional Kavalians hiding in the heat vents where our infra red vision would not pick them out.” Lucia explained quickly. “Haeis was moving to dispatch a third group when he ordered the assault. Ussta libh'iahin and I threw our grenades and moved here!”

Zarah was holding Janae’s face in her hands, stroking her hair and smiling. “You are unhurt?” She asked.

“Nothing a hot shower won’t cure.” Janae answered as she squeezed Zarah’s arms tightly and pulled her close. “Zarah... they did something to me. They... I can’t Mindvoice or sense... I can’t feel anyone!”

Zarah nodded. “They implanted a device into you Janae. Most likely just under the skin of your scalp somewhere. It is something we have never seen before, developed by the High Coven. It completely blocks a Mindvoice resonance. They did this to my mother Dysea as well until it was removed.”

“Then... then how...”

Zarah smiled. “I tracked your imprint.” She answered.

Janae gazed at her. “But Martin... he forbid you to ever...”

Zarah nodded. “Well... my brother has made it a habit of disobeying our father through the years. You know that.” She said.

“Andro... Andro sent you?” She gasped.

“You did not think we would leave you?” Zarah spoke. “Never!” She turned quickly to Anton. “We must move back the way we came quickly Anton. Haeis and the others are not responding to our calls over COMS or within Mindvoice. Not since that muffled explosion. Get the transport in here to take Janae back to Andro’s villa and you, Cihera and Las'elh go with her. Send for a tech team to sweep this scene and the bodies for any intelligence.”

Anton didn’t hesitate and turned to where Cihera and Las'elh watched him expectantly. “Cihera... you and Las'elh are with me! We’ll take half the RD Squad and get Janae back to Gytheio, the other half will remain here with Zarah and Lucia.”

Zarah turned back to look at Janae who watched her with wide eyes and the way she so effortlessly had given the orders. “Go Janae. We will see you back on Cranæ Island soon. It is where we have all gathered.”

“Zarah... Martin... I...”

Zarah leaned over quickly and kissed her on the cheek. “My father lives Janae.” She whispered softly into her ear. “My father lives. The Feravomir and others can fill you in, but now let Anton get you out of here. Lucia and I have to collect someone that we have lost.”

“Thank... thank you cousin.” Janae said gently hugging her.

“Thank Andro.” Zarah replied quickly. “It was his sense that something was not right almost immediately and he had me return home to find you. Go now! Before the shooting and explosions bring the Netnews swarming here like ants!”

Lucia moved up next to Zarah as Anton wrapped his arm around Janae’s shoulders and he led her out. “We must hurry Ussta libh'iahin; I do not sense Dutkne any longer. He is not a fighter and if something has happened to him your brother will be very upset with us.”

Zarah nodded her head and turned to the second half of the RD team. “All of you on us!” She barked.

Lucia and Zarah did not sense Dutkne any longer because he had raised Mindvoice shields that were nearly impenetrable the moment the early explosion above them had sounded. He and the second Durcunusaan soldier had looked up to the roof above them just as Haeis’s voice sounded over their COMS and then the entire roof blew downward from the force of the grenade. One of the reasons this sewage plant had been phased out was because of its age. It had seen better years and was now over a hundred and fifty years old, many of the buildings not retaining the solidness of years past. The force of the grenade Haeis tossed had shattered the roof supports instantly and Haeis joined the four Kavalian soldiers as they were swallowed up and their footing disappeared. The second Durcunusaan troop wasn't as lucky as Dutkne or Haeis and he caught the full force of the downward explosion directly into his face and upper body killing him instantly. As Haeis and four Kavalians fell into the room, the floor beneath Dutkne shuddered and then the added weight of the five additional bodies and the force of the explosion caused the floor to fracture and give way. In the split second before his feet fell out from under him Dutkne caught a glimpse of Haeis and the injuries he had sustained. He attempted to reach for him as the floor gave way and closed his fingers around his limp arm, pulling him close as they plummeted down. It was a three story drop to the bottom of the building, and during that fall Dutkne was able to draw Haeis close and twist his body in such a way that they slammed into the floor with him providing some semblance of a cushion. His entire body screamed out in pain as Haeis's added weight caused several of his ribs to crack and a sliver of metal stabbed upward through the body armor he wore to impale his side.

Dutkne was no stranger to pain, and while this was not the most pain he had ever felt, it surely ranked up there with the top. The impact had stunned him, Haeis's added weight driving the air from his lungs, but without question saving the unconscious man's life. Dutkne blinked several times, shutting out the pain as best he was able, ignoring the pounding against his shields of both Lucia and Zarah because they could no longer sense them. The much larger and stronger pounding was coming from Androcles in Sparta, for he had felt the sudden spike of emotions from him and outside of Wayonn was now the only one who could sense him when he slammed his shields closed so tightly. Their rapidly growing friendship was not something he could explain fully, but as his grandfather had often stated and Dutkne was coming to believe more and more each day, it was preordained somehow. He knew Andro would not attempt to breach his shields for fear of putting him at greater risk so he simply sent an image pulse out that let him know he was alive and would contact him as soon as he was able. This seemed to satisfy Androcles for the insistent pounding against his shields stopped immediately and allowed him to concentrate more. Zarah and Lucia were fast approaching and hammering his shields as well, but this he could ignore for the moment. Dutkne groaned loudly as he shifted Haeis's inert body off of his own and he clenched his teeth against the searing pain in his side as he gently laid the limp Durcunusaan soldier to the side. He sat up quickly and looked down to see the point and about three inches of the metal sliver protruding from his side perhaps two inches from the edge of his waist. It had stabbed fully through the muscles of his side and hit no vital organs, that he could feel right away and without thinking he reached down and gripped the slick part of the shaft that was sticking out of his body. He clenched his teeth and yanked quickly, his dark eyes going wide as a wave of hot pain lanced across his senses and then he tossed aside the thin and bloodstained sliver of metal, cursing himself for doing something so stupid.

Dutkne's head whipped around when he heard the other groans and through the thinning dust in the air he watched as two Kavalians began to stir. He could see the grotesquely twisted body of a third Kavalian, now fully impaled upon a half meter thick steel rod that had once been part of the floor. Another Kavalian's upper body was protruding from under a massive slab of concrete, his eyes open in death and his upper body utterly crushed. Dutkne's hand dropped to where he was wearing the K12 KM and he yanked up the weapon only to see the barrel of the sidearm bent upward by perhaps half an inch. He pulled the gun back and looked at it.

"Of course... why make this easy on me." He snarled as he tossed the gun away and watched as the two Kavalians staggered to their feet and turned to look at him. Dutkne gathered his feet under him, ignoring the screams of protest from his body as one Kavalian bent to pick up the assault rifle that laid near him. He snatched it around and lifted it towards him, quickly realizing that the firing mechanism was shattered beyond repair. The second Kavalian reached for a sidearm that was no longer there, and then they both were staring at him with murder in their eyes. Dutkne's hand dropped to the slim quarterstaff holster he wore on his right thigh that held his weapon of choice all these years. "Surrender... surrender is still an option." He barked out. "Enough of your comrades have died this day."

"Lycavorian pig!" The Kavalian screamed madly. "I will kill you!" He broke into a sprint towards him followed quickly by his partner.

Nearly three hundred years of constant practice had made his quarterstaff an extension of his mind and body. In a single blink the weapon was in his hand and extended fully to its seven foot length. Forged and carved from Carnubian Oak that had been aged for a thousand years, Dutkne's quarterstaff had been hand crafted especially for him by the Lycavorian Protectorate's ageless weapons maker. Carnubian Oaks were the oldest and sturdiest trees on Cantra, the largest planet and population center of the Protectorate. They grew to three hundred meters in height in some locations on the planet and they surrounded the Parliamentary Building in the capital of Lorent. It was an amazingly supple wood when first harvested, completely resistant to heat and impossible to set on fire, and as hard as any metal known to exist. When harvested and dried properly it was used in the construction of many buildings on Canetra due to its resistance to all forms of heat and its immense strength. It could be shaped by a forger during many hours of tireless work, just as his quarterstaff had been. Dried, smoothed and then coated with the same Carnubian sap that the tree excreted when alive. It returned the color to the wood almost instantly and also served to harden it to the density of metal. Each end of the staff was then layered with very thin metal plates that gave it a total weight of two point two kilograms. This particular quarterstaff was unique in that Dutkne could separate the complete shaft into two equal lengths and imbue it with his psychic power, making it a supremely lethal weapon while looking very innocent indeed.

At the moment however, Dutkne extended his Ishon and jammed one end into the ground in front of him and leaped upwards, using the balance of the Ishon and his MV ability to propel himself over the top of the two charging Kavalians to land lightly three meters behind them. The Kavalians skidded to a halt when he lifted himself from in front of them and whirled around to see him land and twirl the Ishon expertly until its length was folded along his side, one hand extended towards them.

“We can end this peacefully.” Dutkne spoke once more. “I have no desire to kill you. I give you my word you will not be executed.”

“Arrgghhh! Bastard!” The Kavalian who had spoken rushed at him once more.

Dutkne snapped the end of his Ishon up with a simple twist of his wrist. The tip of the Ishon slammed viciously into the jaw of the Kavalian, snapping his head back and bringing him to an abrupt halt as Dutkne spun away to the side and the Ishon extended out along the length of his arm. The Kavalian spit a huge gob of blood and saliva from his mouth, his teeth having bit completely through his tongue, and the tip joining that pile of blood on the dirt at his feet.

“This is not necessary!” Dutkne barked. “You need not die today! Surrender!”

“We are Puma Bane!” The Kavalian screamed as spittle mixed with blood was sent flying across the distance between them. “We do not surrender! We conquer!”

Dutkne tilted his head to the side slightly. “That has not worked out well for you today has it?” He asked calmly surprising himself with the serenity that filled him.

Dutkne had faced men in battle before, and no matter the number of times he had faced an opponent he had always felt a sense of trepidation that he would not succeed and be killed. This time however he did not feel this coursing through him. He felt confident and powerful and Dutkne realized that it was the influence of Androcles filling him now. Not in a physical or controlling sense, but the total confidence in his skills and complete knowledge that he was right and would not fail. Another item that only confirmed what his path was to be in this life now.

The second Kavalian stepped up next to his partner and held out the jagged metal rebar section he had yanked from the debris in the room. Dutkne watched as the man took it and they faced him now just as armed as he was.

“We will... we will kill you before we are brought down Lycavorian scum!” The first Kavalian snarled.

Dutkne’s persona changed then and he blinked, his wolf fangs extended, a black ring extending around the pupils of his eyes and he snarled back. “I will not ask again.” He growled menacingly.

“Die Lycavorian pig!” The Kavalian screamed before launching himself at Dutkne, followed instantly by his fellow Puma Bane warrior.

“So be it! It is your funeral!” Dutkne answered, not really knowing where that statement came from but knowing it sounded surprisingly accurate at the moment.

Two things happened in that moment.

Dutkne shifted the Ishon closer to his body and twisted the center of the staff breaking it into two equal lengths in a single blink. As he did this, the ends of the Ishon began to glow with an almost white/blue like light, tightly wrapped around the ends where the metal was encasing the ends of the two staffs now.

And then Dutkne attacked.

Zarah and Lucia came skidding to a halt just inside the now destroyed doorway of the building Dutkne and Haeis had been in. Their eyes grew wide as they saw the massive hole in the floor of the room and the Durcunusaan RD troops that had remained with them spread out covering what was left of the room. The darkness did not hamper their vampire or wolf eyes and all of them could see the bottom of the newly created shaft and the light from several fires that were now burning.

“Dalharuk d'natha elg'caress!” Lucia muttered the curse as they gazed into the pit.

“Andro is going to be so pissed off at me.” Zarah echoed Lucia’s words.

“We must...”

“Die Lycavorian pig!”

Zarah and Lucia looked at each other with wide eyes. It took only a split second before they both registered the same thing in their minds and they took hands as they stepped off into the large crater and pit.

The senior Durcunusaan RD officer left reacted by trying to reach for them but failing. “Sibfla!” He cursed loudly. “Now I know how our comrades in the Protection Detail feel! Follow them!”

Zarah and Lucia landed on the balls of their feet still holding hands. The fifteen meter drop was something they could both do in their sleep. They saw Haeis’s inert form first and moved quickly to his side as the Durcunusaan RD troops began landing behind them.

“So be it! It is your funeral!” They heard Dutkne’s deep voice and whirled around, their K12s lifting by second nature. They saw three figures moving through the tangle of shattered steel and concrete and instantly they blurred into the fire lit area that opened into the large area that Dutkne had purposely led the Puma Bane troops. They were on the bottom floor of the building, the entire side of the structure now opened to the outside. Fires were burning in three locations within the facility and providing an eerie backdrop to the battle they had just stumbled into. Both of them saw Seyra’s massive form landing outside the now destroyed building, but neither Zarah nor Lucia could tear their eyes from Dutkne. He held some sort of short staff weapon in either hand, the end of the weapon glowing faintly with a white blue light just as Zarah’s fists and arms did, just as Lucia’s whips did when she called them. Their eyes were wide and they were both frozen in their spots as they witnessed Dutkne moving with a combination of speed and power that could only be described as beautiful.

Dutkne did not take notice of Zarah and Lucia, focused entirely as he was on the two very large and angry Kavalians attempting to kill him. His wolf eyes were calculating and cold as he stepped to the side of the Kavalian on the right, the Ishon in his left hand snapping up with wicked power. The MV imbued end of the Ishon smashed into the side of the Kavalian’s head with staggering power, causing the man to lose his balance and tumble into his partner as he shifted to turn toward Dutkne. Dutkne was not built like a Spartan, his six foot tall body lean and muscular in the fashion of a world class athlete. Indeed, he had taken part in many of the entertaining sports events while on Cantra that were held every year. He was Lycavorian however, and their people were always more muscular and defined than most. He had trained for years with Drey and even recently with Nirilo, always looking to hone his skills. His wise cracking style and attitude almost always fooled the people he met for the first time. While it was true he would always look for a non-violent solution to a problem first, Dutkne was more than capable of defending himself in a very brutal fashion. Once he reached that point in a situation, Dutkne became like Androcles Leonidas and fought only for one purpose, and that was to win.

As Dutkne spun once more to his right, the first Kavalian staggering to the side from the wicked blow from the Ishon, Dutkne whipped his left hand over the top of his body and sent the Ishon in his left hand crashing into the second Kavalian’s face with tremendous force. The second Kavalian screamed in pain as his nose and cheekbone shattered in that instant, blood blossoming into the air and down his face as he fell backwards, the rebar section falling from his grip. Dutkne turned to face them, the Ishons held in his hands in a cross pattern in front of his head and shoulders, his wolf eyes ablaze and his fangs fully extended and looking quite ferocious.

“End this now!” He barked. “You need not die!”

The first Kavalian had regained his balance and shook his head while he raised the section of rebar in his hand and screamed out his rage. "Die!" He screamed.

Dutkne shifted his weight to his right foot and shook his head. "Not today Kavalian!" He snarled in return as the Kavalian attacked.

The Puma Bane soldier brought the rebar down with tremendous strength, intending to smash it right through the flimsy looking sticks that Dutkne held in his hands. He had a savage smile of glee on his face, his face contorted into a mask of hate. Dutkne brought the Ishon together in front of his face just as the rebar connected with the twin staffs and came to a surprising stop in mid-motion. The Kavalian's eyes grew wide at this but he was a Puma Bane Commando after all and he reacted quickly. He lashed out with his left hand intending to smash it into the side of Dutkne's head. The blow never connected, and in truth it never really got past the halfway point of motion. Dutkne twisted the Ishons in his hands, trapping the section of rebar with the indestructible short staffs and wrenching downward. The Kavalian's eyes bugged out of his head in agony as his entire shoulder shattered and was yanked out of joint. The tendons and joints could be heard popping like twigs and tearing like paper. As the rebar section fell from suddenly limp fingers the Puma Bane soldier looked back at Dutkne, tears of horrible pain filling his eyes and that is when the Ishon in Dutkne's right hand cracked viciously into his unprotected throat. The sounds of his larynx shattering was grotesquely loud in the air, as was the sudden gagging sound and blood bubbling from the Kavalian's mouth. Dutkne didn't pause and swept the Ishons behind the Puma Bane soldier's legs in the same motion and ripped his legs out from under him. As the first Kavalian fell heavily to his back, his large hands holding his destroyed throat as he began to choke to death, Dutkne turned to the second Kavalian who was just pulling himself to his feet and attacked without hesitation.

The first Ishon blow struck just below his left ear, followed almost instantly by the Ishon in Dutkne's right hand that punched into the center of his chest. As his mouth opened to try and take a breath, Dutkne brought both Ishons down on his arm just above the wrist. The bones snapped like dry sticks, and in the same motion Dutkne reversed the direction and sent the Ishons battering into his face. The sound was sickening as the Kavalian's jaw and other cheek shattered in the same instant, his face taking on the look of loose jelly. Dutkne took one step back and then snapped out with a front side kick that struck the Kavalian dead center of his thigh and his femur bone was instantly broken. Still unable to draw breath to scream at the terrible pain ripping through his body, he reached for his leg with his good hand only to lower his face unintentionally. He lowered it directly in Dutkne's knee as it was coming up in a knee strike. His head snapped back with such force that the sound of his neck breaking in four places was like four rapid fire gunshots. It didn't matter regardless; the moment Dutkne's knee struck his already crushed nose it sent splinters of cartilage hurtling deeply into the Kavalian's brain, shredding the organ completely. The Kavalian was dead before his pulverized brain could transmit the message to his body, and he dropped immediately to the floor, his left foot twitching madly in death.

Dutkne stepped back quickly, sweeping the Ishons to the side until they were tucked along his forearms and he was in a defensive stance. This is when his focus on the battle relented and he detected the delightful scents of Zarah and Lucia. He turned his head quickly and saw them standing to the side gazing at him with awe struck eyes and complete shock. The RD commander reacted first, motioning his men forward to secure the area as he looked at Dutkne with a respect he reserved for men and women he considered his betters. And there were few of them.

Lucia and Zarah moved forward, their eyes moving from the two dead Kavalians back to him. Zarah was the first to speak as she watched him reattach the ends of the Ishon together and them collapse the staff.

"You... you said you could not fight." She stammered.

Dutkne looked at her, his wolf eyes prominent and his fangs bared as he smiled. "If I am not mistaken I said I preferred to avoid conflict. I never said I could not fight."

"You... you lied to us." Lucia gasped.

Dutkne looked at her as he replaced the Ishon in its sheath on his leg and turned to go to where Haeis lay. "I didn't lie to you." He stated with a one-sided grin. "You did not asked the right question."

Seyra's huge head extended out and through what remained of the wall of the building. It was a magnificent display Dutkne. She spoke with some awe. Truly magnificent!

Seyra! Lucia and Zarah exclaimed simultaneously.

Her eyes lifted to them and if a dragon could smile, Seyra was doing that very thing. What? He is right... and it was a brilliant display of close combat!

Dutkne smiled as he knelt next to Haeis. Thank you Seyra. He stated.

“Sibfla!” Zarah snarled. “Call the transport Commander! We’re leaving!”

The man looked at Zarah as she snatched Lucia’s hand and they marched through the opening in the building and out into the darkness right past Seyra. He turned back to Dutkne who was lifting Haeis over his shoulder as gently as he could and met his eyes. “You told them you couldn’t fight?” He asked softly.

Dutkne looked at him and smiled once more. “Well... my answer may have implied that I was unskilled.” He answered him.

“So you did lie to them.” The Commander stated.

“In a manner of speaking perhaps.” Dutkne answered.

“A manner of speaking?” The Commander asked.

“Many things can be inferred from the context of words in a sentence Commander.” Dutkne told him. “I may not have used the right words.”

“No kidding.” The Commander said shaking his head. “Haeis?”

“He will live.” Dutkne spoke quickly. “I suggest we move right to the medical center in Sparta so that he can receive treatment.”

The Commander nodded and motioned to his men. “Let’s move! We don’t want to be here when the Netnews assholes show up!”

Dutkne grinned and shifted Haeis’s weight on his shoulder before moving through the decimated side of the building and into the darkness. The Commander watched him move and turned as his last man darted past him.

“Context my ass.” He muttered.

CHAPTER SIXTY-TWO

VANGUARD MARK III-CLASS INTERDICTION CRUISER

RAGE OF ACHILLES

SEVENTEEN HOURS FROM RITAAH

Commander Dayiu Fang sat in her Ready Room and listened once more to the report Captain Lorian had sent to her via secure COM. While she had no prior connections to the royal family like Miranda, she and the others under Miranda’s command would always understand what was going on, for that was what Miranda had promised. Dayiu and her senior officers had viewed the report within hours of Miranda transmitting it to them. The outcome of the Battle of Kranek were just the results they had been trained to expect and many of them were just a tad bit upset that they had not been part of that battle. It wasn’t until the end of Miranda’s report that she reinforced their part in what was happening. Dayiu and her senior officers, many of them human, were utterly loyal to Miranda, Ben and the Lycavorian Union. They had worked hard to prove to all who witnessed what they did that humans could and did provide a vital part within the Union’s massive defense network, and the once prominent arrogance was long gone from human culture. They were all handpicked by Captain Lorian to become part of the Union’s secret Fleet, most were veterans of the Evolli War, and a few were even selected right out of the academy on Apo Prime.

The crew of the ULU RAGE OF ACHILLES had been training since their ship slipped its moorings at the Nodon shipyards after receiving the upgrade to the MARK III variant, and their dedication and training had won them the privilege of becoming the new lead escort for the ARIZONA. The VANGUARD-Class Mark III ships were slotted to replace the older LEONIDAS I Attack Cruisers going into the future. Dayiu knew all of the other commanders chosen by Miranda and Ben to command these ships, and together they had practiced both picket defense and wolf pack tactics for months before the ARIZONA finally slipped its moorings and was commissioned in a private ceremony at Dreamland. A defective power coupling in their LSD Drive Core had kept the RAGE OF ACHILLES from deploying with the ARIZONA just days ago, and then their orders were changed at the last minute. None of them had been happy to discover what their new mission was; at least not until after Miranda's personal After Action Report and short comments directed to them arrived via secure COM. It was a testament to the woman they had all come to respect and hold in the same light as Admiral O'Connor and the King himself. Miranda Lorian cared about the men and women under her command, no matter their role or position within the fleet, and she made it a point to insure they were fully in the loop on all intelligence.

“...know you all expected to be here with us and that you are upset that you weren't. I don't like splitting my command and you all know that, but rest assured the mission you are on now is of the greatest importance. I'm sure by now you have all read the reports about what is going on and what you are doing is now paramount to Androcles being able to formulate and execute a plan.” Miranda's holoimage spoke. Dayiu had watched this three times already, but as they grew closer to Ritaah, she felt the urge to view it one more time.

“The RAGE OF ACHILLES is the first of a new class of ship that will eventually become a mainstay within the Union Fleet, you all know this. Once the Dragon Brigade is fully formed and deployed the ACHILLES and others like her will be carrying the teeth of our Combined Fleet Forces, and I mean that literally. This is your first test, and I assure you, this will not be a gravy mission. All of you know me, you know how I regard you, and if there are doubts in your heads as to why you pulled this mission put them aside now. When you arrive in the Ritaah system, not only will you become the overall command ship for Resumar Leonidas, but orders have already been transmitted to the PILLAR OF FAITH that she is to return to Earth after transferring her STRIKER's to your bays. Half of the Insurgent Coven ships will remain under your command while Colonel Vonis and the Coven Commander return with the FAITH. Androcles feels having the FAITH remain in Kavalian space is a risk that we can not take, and the information that the Coven insurgents may have has now become invaluable. Andro wants our best out there with his brother and that is why you are going. Most of what you will be doing is perfectly suited to all you have trained for and this is the time to get the experience all of us need. Dayiu... by Androcles's order and with my recommendation you are hereby promoted to Star Commander. I expect you to adjust your personnel accordingly and promote by rank as you see fit. Document your promotions and they will be filed as soon as you return. You carry the future and a vital part of the new Lycavorian Union's military potential and now is the time to be at your finest.

Dayiu... this is the time to show what the VANGUARD can do and I can think of no one better suited to display that. Good luck all of you and we will see you all soon.”

Dayiu flicked off the holoimager and leaned back in her chair further. Like most of those officers Miranda pulled for the Dreamland positions, she was a former fighter pilot. She shared a similar cultural background as Miranda; many of the female officers Miranda had chosen did as well. They carried what used to be known as Chinese blood within their veins and all of them had come from traditional families that had survived on Earth after The Great Fire. Though different countries no longer existed on Earth, all of them considered themselves Earthers first, as they had come to be called. A name they wore proudly. Men and women, some humans and some elves, that saw themselves as citizens of Earth and the Lycavorian Union, not the often times ridiculous cultural divisions of ancient times on Earth. Dayiu had many humans on her ship, but she also had many elves as well and perhaps a hundred Lycavorians and vampires. Dayiu Fang did not harbor the misgivings that Miranda appeared to show in regards to elves, Lycavorians and vampires. She was guarded around others if they were not part of her crew because she did not know them, but unlike Miranda, Dayiu had also not lost her entire family twice to the High Coven vampires. Dayiu also had a hunch that Captain Lorian's tune may have been changing. The scuttlebutt beginning to seep out among the ARIZONA's Strike Wing was that there was something very powerful and telling going on between Captain Lorian and the ARIZONA's Drow Tactical Officer E'dira. The rumors had started when they had first arrived at Dreamland several months ago and it was only growing in popularity. Dayiu nodded and smiled to herself as she sipped her tea. She knew of Miranda's history, they all did, and if anyone ever finally deserved to find love and happiness it was her. That it was with a female was of no consequence in the least. That age old stigma about same sex relationships had long been tossed to the wayside by nearly everyone on Earth. Dayiu knew there were some who still clung to the idea that it was wrong, but now they were few and far between. The Queens of the Union made it that way with their intense and very public love of each other as well as the King.

The chime on her door sounded pulling her out of her thoughts and she glanced at the timer on her wall. They were here right on time. Dayiu reached forward and pressed the console on her desk as she stood up.

“Enter.”

The door opened immediately and two men and two women entered. Dayiu knew who Star Colonel Isra and Lieutenant Governor Tarifa were instantly as there were not many citizens of the Union who did not know who they were. Tarifa held tightly to Colonel Isra’s hand and arm as they entered and the affection and need for physical contact between mates was very obvious to Dayiu. The story of the love they both shared with the Queen of the Drow was well documented and always a best selling romantic holonovel no matter where you went within the Union. Their story was one of heartbreak and discovery and then total love when Isra finally claimed both Tarifa and Queen Aihola as his mates. They made a striking couple she decided as her eyes went to the towering Kavalian male and the stunning blond female Kavalian who entered just behind them.

Dayiu had been introduced to them before when they first came on board and even sat with them in the mess lounge the previous evening, but the knowledge that the Kavalians had caused all that was going on right now still stuck in her mind. The dinner last night had begun to change that mindset as she found both Pian and Jalersi extremely intelligent and passionate about their beliefs. The Kavalian Pian’Nruarani was a giant of a man, the soft dark blond fur covering his body meticulously well groomed. That he was powerfully built under that coat of fur was easy enough to see, and even with his size he moved with confident feline like grace which Dayiu knew was a hallmark of the superbly trained Kavalian troops they had dozens of reports on. Jalersi’Nruarani she knew was a biogenically altered Kavalian female and the oldest daughter to the Kavalian Prefect. Her white blond hair was very long, fully extending almost to the top of her sculpted ass cheeks and surrounded a flawless set of facial features highlighted by her incredible blue eyes. Her simple fleet gray jumpsuit appeared as if she had been poured into it and looking at her standing beside Pian was almost comical in nature due to the difference in their height. Jalersi’Nruarani apparently had begun to take on somewhat of a more free nature in her time among the men and women of the Union and her choice of how to dress was starting to become revealing and exotic in nature. This attitude had also begun to rub off on Pian it seemed for she had seen him cuddling with her on several occasions which was something Dayiu knew Kavalian males just did not do. Jalersi’s ample breasts were large and very firm and they were the most noticeable physical attribute on her lush figure. Dayiu knew this had turned the heads of many of her male crew members over the course of the last three days, but Jalersi’Nruarani only had eyes for the man whose arm she held. Word had spread quickly that she was off the market so to speak, and while she was not always in the company of Pian, it was quite obvious that she had found in him what she desired most of all and she would brook no unwanted advances.

Dayiu had sat with Isra and Tarifa for nearly three hours just after leaving Earth and they had told her of what these two Kavalians had done during the battle there. It appeared that the KFI had a much larger problem than they realized if the daughter of the harsh Kavalian Prefect would simply forsake all she had been raised to believe and follow for the love of one man. And it was a powerful love Dayiu knew, one that was easy to see just by looking at them. Pian did not treat her as Dayiu knew Kavalian females were treated according to all of their intelligence reports. He treated her with respect, admiration and unrequited love and Dayiu thought she also could detect a small sense of pride in his eyes when he looked at her and knew that her beauty was turning heads of other men but that she only cared about him.

“Good morning everyone.” She spoke easily as she motioned to the chairs situated around the small table. “Please... sit down.” She moved to the dispenser and quickly ordered three mugs of the Queen’s coffee and one mug of spicy green tea. These were given over to her guests, Pian passing Jalersi the tea before taking his mug of coffee. By all accounts, Pian drank gallons of the coffee and he had also been seen smoking from a sweet smelling pipe while in the lounge, the cinnamon tobacco scent filtering pleasantly in the area around him. While tobacco smoking had almost disappeared among citizens within the Union, it was still popular among other species and she had heard her crew talking of how this Kavalian seemed to relish the pipe he carried with him and the small pouch of tobacco.

Dayiu returned to her desk, but pulled her chair around to the front and next to where Jalersi sat by the table. “I just received an updated reported from Prince Androcles via Admiral Ceneu.”

“Please don’t tell us it’s more bad news.” Tarifa spoke softly. “We’ve had far too much of that in the last few days.”

Dayiu met her sapphire blue eyes evenly. “Unfortunately... it’s not all good.” She stated. “Denali, Lisisa and this Immortal Cha’talla have rescued Queen Dysea. She is... she is battered but still herself.”

“Thank the gods!” Tarifa gasped.

Isra nodded. “Avoi.”

“Unfortunately, it is now confirmed that Queen For'mya has been taken by your father’s forces Jalersi.” Dayiu spoke turning to look at her and seeing those ice blue eyes go wide in surprise. “It appears that Deputy Prime Minister Laustinos assisted them in taking her from the Senate Building before they destroyed it. We have no idea where she is being held, they can not contact her via Mindvoice and any attempt to find out where she is and retrieve her will result in her death according to the statement the Kavalian ambassador Matuarr gave to Prince Androcles when he visited the embassy after discovering this.” Dayiu watched the angry snarl pass over Pian’s face in an instant, his feline eyes narrowing slightly.

“Matuarr!! I should have killed him when I had the chance!” Pian growled.

Jalersi looked at him and placed her small hand on his thick arm. Dayiu watched as that inner rage was quickly channeled away at her touch. “That would have left Qurot in charge Pian. Who would be worse?” She spoke softly.

“Every gain I...we make...” Pian protested gently. “Every time I think we have moved into the future we could have even a little bit, Pusintin or your father send us hurtling back to the beginning! They will be the downfall of our people Jalersi!”

Jalersi nodded. “That is why we can not stop what we have begun.” She stated. “What my sister has begun.” She turned back to Dayiu. “I... I assume Prince Androcles has ordered that we be confined.”

Dayiu sipped her tea as she saw Tarifa and Isra look at her quickly. She shook her head with some confidence. “Quite the contrary...” She stated. “His order to me through the Admiral was quite clear and I intend to follow it for I believe it. Pian and yourself... Princess Athani... all of you have now become a central part in what is taking place. He has unofficially declared that there is a Kavalian resistance and he wants you to devise a plan to mark whatever ships and people that are part of this resistance. That includes the members of your Pride Pian... that is how you refer to your family and such correct?”

Pian nodded. “Yes. Much the same as Lycavorians call their families packs.”

Dayiu nodded. “We will understand more when we arrive on Ritaah from what I have been told, but it has to do with your brother Jalersi.”

Jalersi’s head snapped up and she looked at her with wide eyes. “Brother!” She gasped. “I... I have no brother.” She stammered quickly. “The last of my father’s male children, his last son was killed in a training accident when I was twenty-seven, a year before Athani was even born.”

“You never met him?” Isra asked surprised.

Jalersi shook her head quickly. “No.”

Pian looked at him and saw the questions in their eyes. “It is not uncommon for the older Prides to keep the male and female children separate from birth. Pride Puat, Pride Nruarani, this was done for many of the original and larger Prides. My father was the first to change this, and that was only because we were consider a nomadic Pride despite our size.”

Dayiu nodded. “Well... apparently he is very much alive and has been commanding a small rebel force of Kavalians made up of mainly biogenic clones that have discovered a way to extend their lives naturally and not die after the ten year period your scientists put on them. They made contact with Resumar and your sister shortly after they arrived on Ritaah.”

Jalersi’s eyes grew larger. “Extend their lives?” She spoke. “I... I had heard rumors of such a thing but I did not think it was possible.”

Dayiu nodded. “Well it seems it is.”

“How?” Pian asked keenly interested now.

“I wasn’t given that information.” Dayiu replied to the question honestly. “Only that an one of our Krypteria Intelligence Operations was investigating the mysterious disappearance of female elves over the course of the last few years. Most of them researchers of some kind. It appears this was your brother’s doing Jalersi, and those elves are the ones who were able to finally discover this information. According to the information submitted by Prince Resumar and passed to me, your brother has taken an elven female as his wife and they have a child together as well. A daughter if the report is right.”

“Daughter?” Jalersi gasped. Her eyes were wide now and she looked back and forth between Pian and Dayiu. “I don’t even... I don’t even remember his name.” She said softly. “It was a strong name... Mi... Mic... Mican! His name was Mican!”

Dayiu smiled and nodded. “That would be him.” She turned back to her desk behind her and took the data pads from the surface, spinning back around and handing one to her. “This is what Prince Resumar and your sister have sent back... and I’ve also been informed that the second part of your mission has been canceled.”

“Canceled?” Pian came to his feet now. “Androcles promised us! He promised Karun! He said we would be able to search for Nikkei!”

“Commander this is unacceptable!” Isra stated coming to the defense of Pian and Jalersi. The last few days had seen him and Tarifa become very close with Pian and Jalersi. Much of it had to do with Karun and Ardis now being mates, but surprisingly they had quite a bit in common with Pian and Jalersi that they would not have discovered had they not come on this mission. Karun and Ardis were keeping a very low profile, spending as much time together as they could, as any new mates would and Isra found this did not bother him as much as he thought. He was very protective of his daughters simply because of the way he had seen his own mother and sisters treated, but he knew that his daughters also inherited the toughness and smarts of their elven and Drow mothers, but Karun treated Ardis in much the same way he treated Tarifa and Aihola and put him at ease. “Andro made it very clear that...”

Dayiu held up her hand to stop any further protesting. “Let me rephrase that statement.” She spoke quickly. “That part of the mission has been suspended because your daughter Nikkei is on Ritaah right now with Athani and your mother Pian.”

Jalersi came to her feet then with shocked eyes. She dropped the data pad she had been reading and her hands went to her mouth. “She... she is on Ritaah?” She stammered.

Dayiu nodded. “She arrived several days ago with the Pralor Shiria. Prince Resumar’s last report was thirty-six hours ago and he stated that she and Athani were hardly ever apart and they were discovering all that they could about each other and Mican.”

Jalersi turned to look at Pian, her eyes wide. “She... she is safe Pian!” She gasped. “She is safe!”

Pian nodded and pulled her into his arms as tears began to roll down her cheeks in relief. As he held Jalersi he looked at Dayiu. “This information... it is confirmed Commander?” He asked.

Dayiu nodded. “Yes. The PILLAR OF FAITH is returning to Union space and the RAGE OF ACHILLES is going to become the Command Ship for Prince Resumar. At least on a very temporary basis. Prince Andro feels we are better suited to be operating within enemy space than the FAITH. At least for the time being. Plus... since much of the ACHILLES technology is based on designs from CS41, my people will be better suited to help Prince Resumar’s techs and Avi in making sure we got everything we can get from this MV ship before we blow it into pieces.”

“Nikkei!” Jalersi stated pulling her face from Pian’s chest. “She is unhurt?”

Dayiu nodded quickly. “Yes. She was with Pian’s mother when they apparently met up with this female Pralor. I don’t know what drew them to Ritaah, but something happened on the MV ship that brought them from where they were on Rizon Four.” She held out the data pads to Isra and Pian and watched as they took them and Pian and Jalersi settled back into their chairs to read. “This is everything from Prince Resumar’s last report thirty-six hours ago and some of what Prince Androcles wants us to do when we arrive.”

Tarifa was reading over Isra’s arm, her sapphire eyes going a little wider as she read. “This... Commander... this is accurate?” She gasped looking up at her.

Dayiu nodded. “It is Prince Resumar’s idea but Androcles wants us to insure it is feasible and then report back to him with objectivity as he put it.”

Isra looked at her. “Why us?” He asked.

“It is my understanding that Lieutenant Governor Tarifa is Zaala Randall’s sister and because of that fact, Avi thinks very highly of her. The ARIZONA’s Attack Wing is back within the Sol System and remaining hidden, so if needed we can initiate a highly secure tight beam transmission to your sister and others if needed.”

“To Zaala?” Tarifa asked. “I haven’t seen Zaala in over six months. She only told us that she and Steven were going on an extended deployment that he was asked to do.”

Dayiu smiled. “Your sister is a member of the ARIZONA’s crew ma’am. And Colonel Randall is now the Air Wing Commander for the 1st Arizona Attack Wing.” She told them seeing Tarifa’s eyes grow wide. “She is the foremost mind in the Union when it comes to the technology we have developed because of CS41. She worked very closely with Avi and others in developing most of the systems currently in use on the ARIZONA.” Dayiu spoke.

Tarifa looked at her in shock. “We... we never knew what she was doing.” She spoke softly. “Only that it was classified and she would never tell us. It drove our father crazy.”

Dayiu nodded. “Well now you know.” She stated. “Once we arrive on Ritaah I believe Avi is going to initiate a transmission with her regardless to cover areas that we may improve with the information we have obtained from this VORTEX Cruiser 341. I wish I could allow you to speak with them now...” Dayiu said looking at Jalersi and then back to Tarifa. “But we don’t want to risk our transmission being detected even by accident. When we arrive over Ritaah it will be much easier to mask our transmissions using this new MV ship.” Dayiu came to her feet. “Please... allow me to refresh your coffee and tea and then there are some things that we need to go over.”

“Like what?” Isra asked.

Dayiu smiled. “How we will deploy the detachment from the Dragon Brigade that we are now carrying for one.” She answered. “This is all very new to us Colonel Isra. I have never carried dragons on my ship, nor have I ever deployed them from said ship. It will be interesting to hear how you intend to do this.”

VANARI ELITE HEAVY COMMAND CRUISER

CITADEL ONE

EDGE OF THE ORION SPUR

Two thousand four hundred meters long and the pride of the Vanari Fleet, The Vanari Elite Heavy Command Cruiser was the most powerful ship within the Vanari Military. It’s official designation was VEHCC-Class Heavy Cruiser, though everyone simply called them Command Cruisers. Each member of the SBR had a Command Cruiser at their disposal that was not part of the regular fleet, allowing them to go where they wished, and crewed almost entirely by Vanari who were selected by that particular SBR member. Ardan Vu Lamurrion had left the choosing of his crew to his nephew who was also the ship’s commander. The VEHCC-Class was the most advanced and powerful warship that Austrova Engineering had produced in centuries. Crewed by nearly eight thousand five hundred men and women and home to three squadrons of G1 Stiletto Fighters, the VEHCC-Class also sported an assortment of heavy and light Phased Energy Turrets and a dozen Fusion Torpedo Launchers divided fore and aft. The ship was sleek and built for speed and maneuverability, its shielding allowing it to remain in battle for an extended period of time and still be able to fight. The VEHCC-Class was designed along the Vanari mentality of quick surgical strikes and overwhelming power, similar to how the Vanari Cadre Commandos were trained.

Ardan and Coren stood on the bridge of CITADEL ONE gazing at the multiple colors that made up the clouds of the Orion Spur. The bridge was in a self contained section that rose above the main hull and was designed in an almost oval shape. Along either side of the bridge were all the stations that allowed for ship control, the captain’s command chair situated to the right side near several consoles and within easy access to the small office he maintained directly off the bridge. The sectioned view windows that surrounded them were open, allowing them to see the majestic sight of the Orion Spur to their front, but armored hull plates could be dropped in place in milliseconds. The crew was at their stations and doing their duty with little fanfare. Ardan’s nephew had been very careful in choosing those that would serve aboard his Uncle’s ship, many of them coming right out of the two largest Fleet Academies. It was a great honor to serve on the personal ship of an SBR member, and many chose to remain on board the ship instead of joining the regular Fleet. This often caused strife with the regular military officers who deemed the crews of the SBR VEHCC-Class ships as nothing more than private citizens with little or no military training in tactics and fleet operations. While this was true for the most part, CITADEL ONE was crewed by many ex-fleet officers that Ardan’s nephew had recruited. Men and women who had chosen to retire for whatever reason and then shifted to the SBR Fleet to continue to serve.

Ardan looked at Coren as they stood there now, both of them having changed into more relaxing clothes as opposed to their standard Regent clothing and robes. Unlike many of the ships within the small SBR fleet, Ardan's nephew maintained a uniform code of sorts when on duty which consisted of a light gray jumpsuit for those technicians and operators and a dark red jacket over the jumpsuit for those who were considered command officers and those in charge of departments on the ship.

"You do realize Coren that we could lose both our seats on the SBR for this." Ardan spoke softly.

Coren met his eyes. "Given what Devra and my children seem to be attempting to do, I doubt that. Going against the order of things when it comes to the Syndicate is not something the SBR views as acceptable. There are reasons our laws are in place Ardan. Devra and my children know that and should accept that."

"Oh... I agree." Ardan said. "So you will not try and rescue Caliria if they have somehow been able to discover where she is?"

Coren shook his head slowly. "I can not. We can not. We are doing this to stop them from trying to rescue Caliria and perhaps cause the Syndicate to take action against our colonies and people. I can not allow them to put our people in danger over one person. Even my... even my daughter." He turned back to the view window. "I believe Alrerin would acknowledge this and be on our side. We..."

"It's beautiful isn't it?" The female voice spoke from behind them causing them to turn and look at the stunning young Vanari female who stepped up behind them.

Tastia Dal Vesch was a hundred and twenty-three years old and a recent graduate of the Vanari Cadre Commando ranks. The gray jumpsuit encased a five foot six frame that looked as if it had been sculpted to fit the uniform. Long lean legs, high firm breasts and a small waist were the traits of every Dal Vesch female, including her mother, and Tastia had the perfect proportions in every area. Her silky white blond hair contrasted incredibly with her sky blue skin and stunning sea green eyes, her facial features flawless in nature, her lips a soft pink in color instead of the darker blue of many Vanari females. Tastia Dal Vesch was from a less prominent Vanari family, but one that was well known for their stunning daughters and their incredible intelligence. Tastia had two advanced degrees to go with her Cadre Commando status among the Vanari, one in Astrometrics and the other in Advanced Propulsion Design, so not only could she fight with the best of them, she could talk circles around most of the senior eggheads as well.

Tastia looked at Coren with those sultry eyes and he remembered why he had chosen her during the last Celebration of the Hundreds. Those eyes had captured him completely; much like Devra's had so many years ago. Tastia was full of energy and excitement, and even before he had begun coupling with her, she was secreting oil and inflaming his passion. She knew who he was of course, he was well known among the Vanari people, and he was also very available. Tastia had released the oil from her pores almost before he was positioned, desiring to know if they were compatible, and to her great joy they had been. They had coupled for several hours after that, ignoring all those around them and even several other females who tried to join them. It was Tastia's hope that he would soon ask for her hand in Union as they had been together for nearly four years now. Their coupling had diminished over the years and was not as vigorous and exciting after the first year as the demands on his time as a member of the SBR were great, but Tastia still hoped for the best even though a small part of her knew that he was still in love with Devra and cared more for his position on the SBR than anything.

Coren smiled and leaned over to kiss her cheek as he drew her close. This act perturbed Tastia to some extent as it was well known they were together and why he would not kiss her in a more intimate way in public in front of others was something she did not understand. She let it slide once more, attributing it to the pressure of what was going on around them and what they were about to do.

"Tastia... you look dazzling as always." Ardan spoke.

"Thank you Regent Ardan." She spoke with a smile before looking into Coren's face. He nodded his head and squeezed her hand.

"You do look dazzling." He stated half heartedly.

Tastia kept her face neutral and smiling and she reached up on her tip toes to kiss his cheek. "Thank you Coren." She said softly as her heart sank just a little bit. She had many of her clothes tailored recently to accent her many curves in a way to draw his interest more than normal, but it seemed no matter what she did he never really took notice.

They turned as the middle aged Vanari man moved up beside them. “Lyrew... are we ready?” Ardan asked his nephew.

The man nodded his head. “Our course is plotted and our Quantum Fusion Drive is standing by.”

“Good.” Coren spoke turning away from Tastia. “Where will our jump take us Captain?” He asked.

“I have plotted a jump that will...” He began to speak but stopped as the doors to the bridge opened and Jokros exited the elevator with the Lycavorian Ambassador Lilonus. He waited until they had moved up beside them before continuing. “As I was saying... our jump will terminate point three light years inside the Sol System using the coordinates and charts that you supplied Regent Re Mydala and...”

“Excuse me... wait a moment!” Lilonus interrupted him with a stunned expression. “You plan on jumping directly into Earth’s home system without contacting anyone?”

“Our engines are more than capable of this Ambassador. As it appears yours are as well now. Engines you failed to inform us you had built.” Lyrew answered.

Lilonus rolled his eyes. “I see the Vanari arrogance so prevalent on the Board of Regents extends to its military officers as well. You have no idea what you are doing Captain. Jumping directly into the Sol system so close to Earth is a mistake.”

“It is my understanding we want to be as quick as possible.” Lyrew spoke. “This is the fastest way. We jump into the Sol System, move to Earth, collect Regent Re Mydala and her children and jump back home. It is quite simple Ambassador.”

Lilonus looked at Coren. “You haven’t told him?” He gasped.

“Told me what?” Lyrew asked.

Coren shook his head quickly. “Nothing of importance that you need to know Lyrew. The simplistic mannerisms of the political realities within this Lycavorian Union are of no concern to me Ambassador.” He stated turning back to Lilonus. “We are on board a Vanari Command Cruiser and we will get what we want. By force if necessary.”

“Force?” Lilonus stated. “Oh that’s brilliant.”

“Coren... I have been speaking to the Ambassador...” Jokros spoke now. “Perhaps we should be more cautious and approach this differently.”

Coren shook his head quickly. “I have no fear of this Lycavorian Union or any other of the inferior and violent species within the Alpha Quadrant. They could not stand against us in this ship regardless. I wish only to retrieve Devra and my children. What they do amongst themselves is not my concern. Let them kill each other for all I care. It is what your people are so good at isn’t it Ambassador?”

Jokros thought for sure that snide comment would invoke a response from Lilonus, but once more he saw nothing but restraint from the tall Lycavorian. In fact he was surprised when he saw the small smile split the ambassador’s lips.

Lilonus folded his hands behind his back. “Oh... by all means Regent Re Mydala... I will allow your unsurpassed knowledge and experience with my people take the lead on this matter. If you will excuse me... I will just sit here out of everyone’s way and watch as your arrogance becomes your downfall.”

Tastia looked from the man back to Coren. “What does he mean Coren?” She asked.

“It is of no concern Tastia.” Coren answered. “Captain... you may conduct the jump with Ardan’s approval.”

Ardan glanced at Coren quickly before looking at Lyrew. He nodded. “Begin Lyrew.” He said. “Coren is right... this Lycavorian Union does not have the technology to stand against us in CITADEL ONE. And we need to move quickly.”

Lyrew nodded his head confident in his uncle’s answer and turned to face his bridge crew as he moved to his chair. “Helm? Jump coordinates plotted?”

“Helm answers affirmative!”

“Very well! Spool up the Quantum Drive! Sensors at full radiation and bring shields to full power. Stand by all weapons! Just in case!” Lyrew called out watching with pride as his crew sprang into action. “Helm on my mark execute preprogrammed jump!”

“Standing by sir!”

“Mark!”

The stars flashed out of focus, the multicolored clouds of the Orion Spur blurred and the Vanari ship CITADEL ONE leaped into the pre-plotted Trans Light Jump Corridor. And very nearly started a war.

EARTH CRANAE ISLAND

Janae relished in the feel of Andro’s arms around her and she squeezed him back just as hard as she could as they stood in the center of the main living area of the villa. His aura surrounded her as only the aura of family could and Janae felt the fear and anxiousness of the last few days finally bleeding away completely. She leaned back without releasing him and stared into his azure eyes.

“Took you long enough cousin!” She snapped playfully. “I thought I was going to have to spend the rest of my life with those smelly fools.”

Andro laughed and leaned over to nuzzle her cheek and ear in affection and Janae’s eyes closed in happiness. “Forgive me.” He said with a grin. “After wading through the sewage like you did, it took Zarah longer to fix your imprint because of the stench.”

“It was ripe too!” Zarah exclaimed from the side where she stood with Lucia and Dutkne. Devra, Arduri and Bren occupied one couch, Sadi standing just behind Andro, while Carisia, Lu'ria and Ne'Veha sat together on another couch. Helen stood next to Eliani to the side with Anton, Cihera and Las'elh.

Janae laughed now and nodded her head. Her face became serious quickly and she squeezed his arms. “My parents Andro?” She asked.

“Already on a ship moving to Curila 6.” Andro answered her. “Uncle Jo’lant had some choice words for me when the Durcunusaan plucked them from their beds on Apo Prime, but he apologized when I informed him why and again when I told him that Zarah and Lucia had found you safe.”

“I can’t... Andro I can’t feel anyone in...” Janae began.

“Rest easy child.” Helen spoke quickly as she came up next to her. “We will fix that soon enough.”

“Eli?” Andro said looking at Eliani.

Eliani stepped up to her rapidly and hugged her tightly. “Shopping is much more fun isn’t it?” Eliani asked as she lifted the small device and began scanning her cousin.

Janae laughed and nodded. “Yes it is. What did they put inside me Andro?” She asked looking at him again.

“It is something that the Coven developed from the remains of the City Ship on Nuwaroa. They call it a Static Inhibitor... built from the interior of the Void chambers like on CS41. They are Negative Resonance Chambers in reality and are able to block all Mindvoice abilities and make it impossible to track or detect someone within Mindvoice.”

The device in Eliani’s hand beeped softly as she passed it over Janae’s left arm. “Here.” She called. “Janae... take off your shirt and lift your arm.”

Janae did so and Eliani brought the sensor module closer as the beeping quickened. Eliani nodded her head as Janae made no effort to hide her half nakedness. She was among those who were family to her, and there would be no lewd stares or comments. Devra glanced at Arduri when Janae did this without hesitation and both of them could not help but think how these men and women were so much like the Vanari in so many ways.

Eliani lifted another tool, a thin tubular device with tweezers like ends and two distinct buttons on the thin casing. “This will sting for about three seconds Janae but Valin says it will deactivate the device and remove it completely.”

Janae nodded her head. “Just take it out Eli.” She spoke.

Eliani pressed the end to Janae’s flesh and depressed the button. Everyone saw her face winch slightly for several seconds and then Eliani pulled the tool away and lifted her hand to Janae’s skin. There was a brief flash of soft white light and then Janae’s grimace vanished and her face relaxed. Devra watched amazed as Janae’s face lit up brightly as if she was suddenly filled with euphoric bliss and she realized that whatever was blocking this connection she had to Mindvoice was now gone and it was all flooding back to her. She watched as Helen took her hands and steadied her so that it did not overwhelm her and then her face relaxed once more and she looked joyous and at peace. Janae looked at Eliani as she lifted the tubular device and they all saw the tiny casing with microfilaments dangling from one end of the tool.

“Ugly nubous buggers.” Eliani grumbled as she gazed at it holding it up higher as Andro drew closer to her and they both stared at it.

[Eli?] He asked within the shielded conversation which caused everyone who could Mindvoice to look at them. It was not often that Androcles shielded a conversation from family, and the fact that he was doing so with Eliani was even more puzzling.

[I'll get with Valin now that we have one.] She stated.

[You will have two once Arrarn returns with Narice and Toria.] Andro told her. [Find out all you can about them and then find out how to defeat them Eli. Valin did not work on developing them but he has studied them extensively and he is very knowledgeable of such things.]

Eliani looked at him. [We might not be able to Andro.] She said.

[I have faith in you sister.] He spoke. [And we have a date tonight as well.]

Eliani looked confused. [What?]

[Meet me tonight at the Point. We need to discuss some things.] Andro told her.

[Andro... it isn't...]

Andro leaned over and nuzzled her cheek, Eliani's eyes closing as his aura washed over her like only a brother's could. [We need to talk sister. You can't hold it in any longer or it will end up hurting you.] Eliani opened her eyes and looked at him as he drew his face back. She nodded her head slowly.

[You are right.] She said.

[Good. Ten tonight. And you bring mother's coffee.] He said pulling back completely. As he stepped back he saw Helen nod her head minutely in approval. She could not hear what they had said, but she too had detected Eliani's demeanor since returning and knew that something needed to be done.

Andro turned back to Janae and smiled. “I will send you to Curila 6 if you want Janae.” He said. “I know...”

Janae shook her head quickly. “Zarah and Anton have told me what has happened.” She stated confidently. “No... you need me here doing what I should be doing as Panos's senior aide. Especially now that you have made me deputy to the new Prime Minister. Did you have a short circuit in your brain when you made that decision?”

Andro grinned. “Some would say yes.” He told her.

“Me included!” Janae popped. “I'm no politician Andro!”

“You are a Leonidas!” Helen quipped. “All of you are politicians in some form. You are just one of the Leonidas's who do not shoot first and worry about consequences later!” She finished looking at Andro.

“Thank you for the vote of confidence Feravomir.” Andro said.

Janae looked at Sadi and broke away from Andro to stand in front of her with a huge smile on her face. “You are KertaGai I take it?” She asked holding out her hands which Sadi took without hesitation.

Sadi nodded. “That would be me.” She said.

“Wow cousin...” Janae spoke with a smile. “How exactly did you manage to confuse this woman enough to become your mate? She is too beautiful to settle for someone like you.” Janae drew deeply of Sadi's scent, her eyes going a little wider as she detected the three other scents and she turned to see Carisia, Lu'ria and Ne'Veha on the couch with beaming smiles of their own. She turned back to Sadi and then looked at Andro once more, who crossed his arms over his chest. “Ok... I sense brainwashing techniques somewhere along the lines here. What could possibly possess four beautiful women to let you claim them?”

“My charming personality probably.” Andro replied with a snort.

Janae made a fake gagging sound. “Carians... you don't honestly think anyone will believe that load of gibberish do you cousin?” Janae turned back to Sadi and pulled her closer. “You can tell me Sadi. How did he trick you?” She said.

Sadi chuckled as she played the game. It was a welcome distraction for all of them after the last few days and she leaned over and whispered in Janae's ear. Andro saw Janae's eyes go wider and she looked at where Carisia and the others were sitting. They all nodded and Devra could not help but laugh quietly at the look on Andro's face when Janae turned back to stare at him with wide eyes. "Well... in that case... I guess it's ok." Janae finally said.

Eliani took her arm and grasped Sadi's as well. "Come on Janae." She spoke as Carisia and the others came to their feet. Arduri was surprised when Ne'Veha reached out and took her hand. "Your room is ready and I brought some of your clothes from the Royal villa. Let's get you out of here before Andro swallows any more of his pride and then sticks his foot in his mouth."

"Come Arduri." Ne'Veha said. "What follows will most certainly be quite boorish and you have not seen the family wing of our home."

Arduri looked at her mother as she stood up and Devra nodded her head. "Go on Arduri, I will remain here with Bren and the others."

Arduri glanced at the huge Lycavorian man who had not been away from her mother's side since they had arrived. His interest in her mother was obvious to Arduri, but what was very surprising to Arduri was that her mother was equally as interested from what she could tell. It was easy enough for one Vanari female to see that another was excited about the prospect of being in a man's company, for they could detect the flush in their blue skin that was invisible to others, but the look in her mother's eyes when she gazed at Bren was different and much more involved. Arduri smiled as she allowed Ne'Veha to begin leading her away, Lu'ria and Carisia holding hands as they followed. Arduri knew that her mother had not taken any lovers into her bed since the union to their father had ended over three decades ago. Perhaps with everything that was happening it was a good diversion for her mother and the more time Arduri spent in the company of these people, the more she wanted to learn and know about them. It appeared her mother was well on the way to discovering much more than she had thought when they first arrived.

Helen watched as Eliani, Sadi, Lu'ria, Carisia and Ne'Veha led Janae away with Arduri in tow and she stepped up to Androcles just before they went through the doors, taking his hand in hers. Andro turned to look at her. "She was putting on a brave front." Helen said softly. "But you could feel the relief she was at being here and how happy she is."

Andro nodded. "I know." He spoke. "And you of all people should know that I will never forsake my family."

Helen nodded. "I know you won't." She said. "Just as I know you won't forsake your mates... or those meant to be your mate." She finished raising her eyebrows at him.

Andro's azure eyes turned to stare at her for a long moment. "Feravomir..." He began to speak finally.

Helen shook her head and took his face in her hands. "No... you listen to me now young Androcles. I was with Sadi when she realized that Caliria was the one from your mind and your dreams. I know what she means to you, to all of you. I believe even Devra is beginning to see it as well."

"Far more than I ever imagined when we first came here." Devra said softly from the couch.

"I will not tell you to not go and retrieve her Andro... in all honesty I would be angry if you dismissed your instincts and you did not do this. All that I ask is that you make sure you have a plan and you stick to it and return with her and not get yourself killed. You are too valuable right now." Helen said.

"I intend too Feravomir." Andro said firmly. "And what of the Icalro Alliance?"

"Nubou them!" Helen hissed harshly causing his eyes to go wide as he looked at her. "They witnessed once before what you and Elynth could do. If they are too stupid to realize that your father meant what he said when he gave them their agreement, then they deserve whatever it is you do to them!"

"Feravomir... it is... it is not often you use such language." Andro said still surprised.

Helen smiled and leaned up to kiss his cheek. "Arzoal told me the same thing just this morning." Helen gazed at the son of the man she had chosen and vowed to never hold back her council and love. "I am tired of reacting to things." She said finally. "We want only to live in peace and be happy and so many want to take from us what does not belong to them. I'm tired of reacting to events done to us and soon... soon I will demand that we make events happen to others! The Empress Aikiro learned this the hard way and if I have too, I will show others as well."

Andro gazed at her with wide eyes for a long moment shocked at her words. There had been many rumors circulating about what had happen to Aikiro in Dragon Mountain. Arzoal and the dragons that were there and witnessed the events said nothing to anyone and would never break that trust, and Helen had all but admitted she was the one responsible for Aikiro's death as was widely being reported. "You... you need not show me Feravomir. I believe I have some sense of it already." He said softly.

Helen nodded. "Good. Then soon you will have to explain to Arzoal and I just what this Dragon Brigade that you have kept hidden from us for so long is." Andro's face remained impassive but Helen saw the sudden glint in his azure eyes before it too quickly vanished. "I can see how easy it was to keep from your father, sometimes he is as dense as granite but you didn't possibly think you could keep it from the Dragon Elder Mother did you? We know they left with Isra and Tarifa. Twenty-five dragons that you, Elynth, Isra and Aelnala have trained to fight as a cohesive force? Androcles Leonidas... you of all people should know you could not keep that from us."

Andro blinked several times and then focused his eyes on her. "Perhaps... perhaps it is time to tell you everything Feravomir. There is... there is slightly more to it."

Helen nodded. "Yes... it would be. But first, Deia and Panos are arriving and we need to cover quite a bit of other information and then make decisions. Dilaen is about to give her first Netnews Conference I understand?"

Andro nodded. "Yes."

Helen smiled and patted his cheek. "Then when we are finished with that we can go over things with Deia and Panos. Then you can tell Arzoal and I about this Dragon Brigade that you have come up with."

"It... it would probably be better if I showed you." Andro said.

"That is fine as well." Helen said. "We look forward to it." She turned as the double doors opened and Panos skillfully guided Deia's lifter chair into the room and she moved toward Deia.

Andro watched her and reached out to his bonded sister within their heavily shielded bond. [Elynth?]

[We knew this day would come Andro my brother.] Elynth's voice answered him.

[I know... I was just hoping Uncle Isra and Aelnala would be here to help break the knowledge to them.] Andro explained.

[It was our creation Androcles. We were the ones who devised it and then brought Isra and Aelnala into the fold. As well as Elder Durago.] Elynth spoke her voice sounding as if she was exerting herself. [Only we can bear the burdens and consequences of those decisions my Bonded Brother.]

Andro tilted his head slightly to the side as he felt her excitement and desire through their bond.

[Sister... are you talking to me when Anthar is cleaning your scales?]

[You did interrupt me remember!] Elynth exclaimed. [I am enjoying quality time with my dragon mate and husband!]

[You could have told him to stop for a moment!] Andro protested.

[Why? It feels so good!]

Andro shook his head. [I will see you after all of these meetings sister. I think we need to fly high for a time.]

Andro could feel her excitement about that through their bond and he smiled. [Oh yes we do. It has been too long Andro my brother.]

[Come with me tonight.] Andro said quickly. [It may be a good thing to fly with Eliani and Thaura as we did when we were younger. For all of us.]

[Just call when you are ready. You know I will never refuse that freedom we have together.] She answered.

[Enjoy yourself sister.] Andro said.

[I intend too.] Elynth answered while projecting her love and support to him through their bond.

Andro turned to greet Deia and Panos.

KING YELU MEMORIAL HOSPITAL

There were nearly five hundred of them jammed into the large cafeteria, all of them with their own Vid/Drones hovering above their heads and dozens of light poles along the wall. There were a total of four hundred and eighty-seven Netnews Channels within the Union, some of them strictly concerned with political themes, some reserved for sporting events and such across the Union and others that dealt only with the news from around the Union. These larger Netnews channels had reporters and journalists in every corner of the Union doing different things, and Dilaen Roan had been among their number only a few short months ago. Gazing at them now as they began to settle into their chairs and she waited patiently she realized that the events of the past month had forever altered her life and how she viewed things.

The first and most telling event was her marriage to Thomas. In all her years of growing up Dilaen Roan had never imagined she would fall so completely and utterly in love with a human. Thomas was everything she had ever dreamed for in a man, more so than even she had contemplated. She had been attracted to him from the outset, his rugged good looks and the dedication to his work and to his son. She had returned home to her apartment on many nights and wondered what he would be like in bed or how he would treat her. Their first night together after they had been married had surpassed everything she had ever imagined. Within moments of pressing his naked body to hers, Dilaen was experiencing what would be the beginning of an incredible night of total rapture. He did things to her that had her quivering in his arms, every caress, and every butterfly kiss he lavished her body with. He knew just how to nuzzle her elven ears in a way that caused ripples and waves of pleasure to surge through her, and these were just the things he did while he made love to her. His body was lean and muscular in an athletic way, his cock slightly above average in size for a human she knew and while he was not the first man she had ever slept with he was the first human male and he was the first who fit inside her body like the fingers of a form fitting glove. His size was enough that she was experiencing powerful orgasms almost from the start, while not having to worry about being pummeled into the bed. He made love to her with gentle grace or urgent need depending on what they both were feeling at the time, and each time was better than the last. They had spent nearly six hours that first night pleasuring each other and Dilaen yearned for him in a way she could not really put into words. He had been beside her from the start of her career and as she looked out the corner of her eye and saw him conversing with several Netnews people looking for exclusive interviews she knew he would always protect her. Her leap in position and title also jumped Thomas into a position of importance as he was still her lead Tech and the man everyone would now have to go through to get to her.

As for her new position... it was the culmination of a dream that had come almost too quickly for her.

The Chief Netnews contact for anything and everything having to do with Androcles Leonidas. She was his voice among the Netnews and the people of the Union, and it would be up to her to finally give people an insight into the Crown Prince of the Union who people knew so little about. Dilaen turned and looked quickly at Selene and saw her nod her head in support. The vampire half elf Prime Minister of Earth had been a godsend to her when they had returned, and Dilaen had spent almost as much time with her and Lynwe as she had Thomas. Selene was highly thought of and respected by everyone associated with the Netnews for she was blunt and honest and genuinely willing to assist them in their need to report the news despite her position as the second most powerful political person on Earth. She was also perhaps in the top dozen or so politicians across the Union that garnered respect and trust across the political spectrum. She was one of the King's most trusted friends and considered part of the extended Leonidas family due to their long association and what they had accomplished together over two decades before right here on Earth in throwing off the High Coven's oppressive rule. No one took anything Selene said to them lightly if they knew what was good for them. Turning back to the gathered members of the Netnews, Dilaen quickly took count of who she knew and whom she did not know. Many she had worked with before, and she knew what kinds of questions they would ask and in what way. Though she would not figure it out for many years, Andro had appointed her to this position not only for her obvious abilities, but also because she was very good at reading people and their tone.

Dilaen saw Thomas's discrete hand signal and she nodded and lifted the small gavel, banging it on the top of the podium. Not only was she going to be answering questions, but she was also going to be selling a product as Selene put it, and she needed to be on top of her game in order to sell that product to those who were watching and who were not their friends.

It didn't start off well and Dilaen glared at the dozen or so Netnews reporters who were chatting among themselves as they took their seats at their own pace and did not care they were disrupting her carefully crafted schedule. Dilaen remembered then what Andro had told her during their last communication as they were returning to Earth.

“You are my voice now Dilaen. Our voice.” He told her from the holoimage. She could see Sadi and the others sitting in the background and talking quietly amongst themselves. “When you speak I want everyone to know that you are speaking for me and with my authority. With Sadi, Carisia, Ne'Veha and Lu'ria's sole authority. The Feravomir and my father have told me I need to have a public persona and I want you to shape that persona. To give people an idea of whom I am. My private life is just that... and as I will not ask you to expose your private life I want you to make it clear I will not bend on that issue either. If I or Sadi or Lu'ria, any of us, if we feel we want to answer a question we will. If we do not... we won't. I need you to make what we are doing believable Dilaen. To all those who are no doubt watching."

"Why me?" Dilaen asked him.

"You had an opportunity to expose Carisia at a time when she could have been taken from us and you did not." Andro answered honestly.

"That information... the information Thomas and I gathered... it still made it to the public Androcles." She stated.

"Not by anything you did." He corrected her. "And by acting with your conscious you earned a friend for life for what you did. I am not good at this Dilaen, none of us are and I will need people who can help me in that regard. You will be one of the most important pieces if you accept."

"I'd be a fool not too accept." Dilaen said and she saw Andro laugh and shake his head.

"I would call you a fool for accepting." He spoke.

Dilaen looked off to the side where Thomas was sitting and listening as he munched on a biscuit. She saw him nod his head slowly and she turned back to Andro. "Then I accept." She said. "I have fallen in love and married a human who was right in front of me for years and I didn't see him. You can't get anymore foolish than that."

Andro smiled and nodded his head. "I will forward to you some sensitive information and leave it to you how you wish to present it. We will meet when you return to Earth. Since most everyone close to me has now become a target, I took the liberty of moving Thomas's son here to my island. The Durcunusaan have been quite busy building a new wing in only a few days. So much for my privacy I guess. You will be staying there for the time being. I hope that is ok?"

Thomas moved closer and came up next to her. "Is he safer there with you?" Roan asked.

"The moment I believe he is not I will move him offworld myself to where my father is." Andro answered instantly. "I will not put him or anyone who is close to me at risk unnecessarily Thomas."

Thomas nodded. "That works for me." He stated flatly kissing Dilaen's cheek before going back to his chair and his breakfast.

Dilaen looked at Andro in the transmission. "How much will you tell me Androcles?" She asked.

Andro's eyes narrowed slightly. "As much as I feel I am able. But know that when I do... it could possibly make you a very tempting target for those who don't like me as well."

"We'll cross that bridge when we come to it." Dilaen stated. "I'm in. We are in. One hundred percent."

Dilaen's blue eyes narrowed now as she watched her fellow reporters bustle about and intentionally disrupt her very first Netnews Conference. She turned her head to the severe looking Durcunusaan Commander who had been assigned to her and Thomas and had been their shadow for the last four days. She motioned with her head at the Netnews reporters, a signal that was seen by half the gathered men and women in the room and they all turned to watch as the Durcunusaan Commander stepped up to the row of seats where the dozen reporters were fussing about.

"Park your nubous Netnews asses or get out of here!" The man barked loud enough to echo across the room drawing the attention of nearly every set of eyes in the cafeteria and it became deathly quiet in the large room.

The twelve Netnews reporters who were the focus of his wrath turned quickly to stare at him in utter shock, their eyes huge. The three human men and two human females were just as equally stunned as the two elf men and two Lycavorian females and the single Limian male. The Durcunusaan Commander Andro had assigned to her and Thomas was a giant of a man, and standing there in his black ArmorPly Mark IV body armor, the P190A3 dangling from a quick release strap, he was not a man who looked as if he would tolerate his order being disobeyed. He waited as they plopped their butts in the chairs and let the embarrassment of the moment sweep through them. When he was satisfied they would no longer be a distraction he turned back to Dilaen and nodded. Everyone in the room saw the return nod of thanks from her and she gently banged the gavel once more and the Durcunusaan soldier stepped back to stand against the wall.

“I call this Conference to order.” Dilaen spoke quickly her eyes lifting to look at the men and women gathered in the rows before her. “As you have just seen I will not tolerate what many of you are used to doing so consider this your first and only warning in that regard. I will make several important announcements that relate to recent events and then I will give a short prepared statement and try to cover everything that I have been asked to cover. Once that is completed I will open the floor to questions from you.” Dilaen looked out over the gathered men and women representing nearly a quarter of the species that called the Union home. “Let me be very clear on something right now before I begin. I have only recently been chosen for this position and since I have been where you are sitting now I will make every effort to answer all of your questions in regards to anything you may want to ask. Make no mistake however, Androcles Leonidas chose me for this position and I will not barter or be cajoled by men and women I once called associates because some of you may think I will give you the inside scoop on him or any of those he calls mate and wife. It will not happen and I will take it personally if it is even suggested to me, and then I will have your Netnews credentials seized from you and you will never attend another briefing of the Royal family ever again. Andro... Andro put his trust in me and I will not betray that trust. Ever!” Dilaen saw the looks of many of her former comrades when she mentioned his name with such informal rhetoric and she smiled inwardly. It would keep them on their toes and guessing. She knew there would be those who would challenge what she had just said, and then she would make an example of them.

“Very well... I have five announcements to make. Four of them pertain to appointments that the Crown Prince has made in the wake of what has happened. Prime Minister Deia, as you all are no doubt aware, was pulled from the rubble of the Senate Building three days ago and brought here immediately. As of right now and as a result of her injuries, she is in a medically induced coma and will remain that way until her doctors deem her fit to be brought out of it. Because of this fact, Androcles has appointed Panos, Governor of Sparta as Interim Prime Minister until either Prime Minister Deia recovers or a new election will be held. If an election is deemed necessary, I will inform all of you in regards to that decision. Right now Panos will assume all duties of the Prime Minister and execute them as such.” Dilaen allowed them the shock of this announcement and the murmuring that she knew would come with it. “In harmony with this appointment is also the appointment of Colonel Janae as his Deputy Prime Minister in an Interim status. This may shock some of you I know, but Janae has been Panos’s aide for nearly five years and separating them now is not conducive to a smooth transition. The rumors that are running rampant in regards to former Deputy Laustinos are true. The overwhelming evidence that has been gathered up until now indicates that the Kavalian attack was partly planned and assisted by Laustinos. He is therefore declared a traitor to the Lycavorian Union and military arrest warrants for him and any who helped him are now in force. Any individual who is found to have helped him in any way will be subsequently charged with not only High Treason, but also seven hundred and nineteen deaths, all those who were lost in the Senate Building. That does not include the charges that will be brought forth at a later time in the matter of the death of a sitting King of the Lycavorian Union.” Dilaen shifted her three data pads and looked up.

“The second announcement is in regards to the Union Senate. Four hundred and six Union Senators were among those lost in the destruction of the Senate Building and currently all but twenty-three of those seats have been filled by Interim appointees chosen by either Emergency District Elections or the governing body of the world they were representatives of. Most of them are already enroute here to Sparta in order to establish a working order of business with Prime Minister Panos.”

“The third announcement in regards to appointments concerns the Krypteria. Director Armetus was captured and tortured horribly by Kavalian assassins as their brethren conducted their heinous attacks against our King and the Royal family. He is currently recovering, but as with Prime Minister Deia, he can not return to his duties. Colonel Marci, his second officer, has been appointed to head the Krypteria until such time as Armetus returns to his position or a new Director is appointed by Androcles.”

“The fourth announcement concerns Lieutenant Governor Tarifa. Androcles has decided to appoint her as acting Governor of Sparta since Panos will be filling his new role. Tarifa has been Lieutenant Governor of Sparta for over a decade now and she holds the respect and trust of everyone she has dealt with. Governor Panos sanctioned this decision wholeheartedly. On the basis of this appointment, Androcles has put Governor Tarifa and her mate Colonel Isra on a ship to Apo Prime under heavy Durcunusaan guard to be kept at an undisclosed location where she will be sworn in and then remain to keep the leadership apart in case of additional attacks. Queen Aihola, their mate, will remain here on Earth as Drow Queen and assist President Taylor and Prime Minister Selene as she has for the last six years.”

Dilaen looked up for a long moment and let her blue eyes sweep across the gathered men and women, many of whom were typing furiously on their data pads and taking notes. “Now let me address the fifth and final announcement I need to make as it has several issues involved so please bear with me. It is also the most painful to make by far. It concerns an ongoing operation on the planet Kranek and involving the majority of the Leonidas children. As you are all aware by now, Kranek has been the home of the former Immortal Captain to the Coven High Lord Veldruk for the last twenty plus years. Cha'talla is very much alive contrary to every military and intelligence report we have had in that same time span and it is my understanding his entire Akruxian Tribe is also with him, as well as several hundred non-Akruxian species, including elves. Queen Dysea and Princess Normya have been on Kranek for the better part of six months now, establishing a firm and bountiful relationship with the Akruxian people there. At the same time as the attacks began here, a coordinated and vicious attack also began on the Immortal settlement on Kranek and Queen Dysea was taken prisoner by mercenaries in the employ of the Kavalians. Mercenaries who were also Immortals that had defected from the High Coven many years ago. We received word roughly thirty hours ago that Queen Dysea has been rescued by a combined Lycavorian, Akruxian Immortal and Insurgent High Coven Strike Force. She is currently enroute back to Kranek with this Joint Task Force and will remain there with Queen Isabella until such time as Androcles deems it safe for them to return here to Sparta. Also... Queen Anja is alive, also contrary to some other rumors and she is in an undisclosed location pending Androcles’s decision to bring her home as well. The younger Leonidas children, Lady Gorgo and Lady Dasha have joined with Queen Anja for their own safety.” Dilaen took a deep breath and looked up. “This brings me to the painful part of my announcements... it has now been officially confirmed that Queen For'mya has been taken prisoner by the Kavalian forces that attacked here in Sparta, on Kranek, and those Drow outposts we have established in The Wilds. Deputy Prime Minister Laustinos had a large role in this evil and traitorous action, the extent of which we are still learning. Prince Androcles has confronted the Kavalian Ambassador as I’m sure was reported only a few days ago, and he was told any action with the intent of discovering the whereabouts or the rescuing of his mother would result in her immediate execution. In essence she is being held hostage.

“The Kavalian Ambassador informed Androcles that his people took these actions because we chose to train forty High Coven dragons that had arrived here on Earth with the High Coven Empress Aikiro. They are accusing us of training the High Coven dragons to fight the KFI and to them this was an act of war. In retaliation for our actions they conducted these vile attacks against the Royal family and Union outposts within The Wilds and they have also demanded a session with the Galactic Court to present evidence that allegedly supports their claims. With the death of King Leonidas, they no longer recognize Queen For'mya as Queen of the Union, and therefore they have told us they will communicate with no one but the Elven parliament in order to obtain her release.”

Dilaen set aside the data pads and looked at the gathered men and women, all of them stunned into silence, which was saying quite a bit since they were reporters and they never shut up.

“The statement I have is on behalf of Androcles Leonidas and I will play it for you now.” Dilaen turned and motioned to Thomas who quickly tapped on the control pad he held in his hands. The holo image of Androcles appeared in front of the podium wearing his standard Mark IV ArmorPly, the crimson cape draped over his shoulders.

“Good day to you all.” Andro’s image began. “I am neither a politician nor a very good public speaker so I will be very brief. By now, Dilaen Roan has given you everything that we have currently discovered in regards to the actions by the Kavalian Federation Imperium, and she will answer your questions to the best of her ability when I am finished. I will address only one issue and that concerns the Union’s actions in regards to the High Coven dragons. Empress Aikiro and her daughter came to Earth with a completely different plan in their heads than the one they came to my father with; they only used the guise of us training their dragons to get close to us. These dragons they brought with them were taken from a Union Dragon Transport that crashed nearly twenty-four years ago in The Wilds. I’m sure many of you remember this as it generated quite a bit of attention while we searched where this ship had crashed. Many of these dragons were not even hatched. They were forced to hatch by Coven scientists well before they were ready and many years before the Dragon Elder Council would allow within Union space they were bonded with riders. The Empress made a mistake however, and she failed to take into account what those of us here in the Union know of our Dragon brothers and sisters. Once bonded to each other, they begin to take on certain traits of their bonded one, and in this the Coven riders took on an air of benevolence no matter what they were being asked to do.

Aikiro thought this to be a defect in how they were training them and she brought them here to us thinking we could change that. She was wrong again, for everyone knows that while we train intensely with our bonded ones, we do not train for conquering or oppression. We stress in our training that two become one and begin to see what they can do together. My siblings and I did just that with the Coven riders. We opened their minds to all they could be as a Bonded Pair, to what they could experience and do together. Had Empress Aikiro and her daughter not conducted their vile attack against my sister and Dragon Mountain, they would have found that not one of those riders or dragons they had brought here would be returning with them. Whatever goal they had hoped to accomplish was destroyed the moment they chose to depart Earth with me and continue their training free of the Empress's influence and eyes. My father... my father and I... we are... we were Talon Guardians of the Dragon species. I will not go into the importance of this role but I'm sure you will discover what it is. As Talon Guardians it was... it was our solemn duty to protect all dragons, no matter where they came from. It is what Talon Guardians were tasked with many thousands of years ago within dragon culture, and it is what the Dragon Elder Council bestowed upon us after Alba Tau."

They watched Andro pace several steps in front of the desk that appeared to be in his father's office where the King had given many statements through the years from. "To dismiss the Coven request, no matter that it was secondary to what Aikiro was truly after, that would have been paramount to condemning those dragons and riders to death. That is not something we could do. Yes... we trained them... we trained them just as we trained our own Bonded Pairs, but it was never intended or designed to be directed at the Kavalian Federation no matter what they accuse us of. What they have done in supposed retaliation and defense of their people is unconscionable. They have killed almost a thousand citizens of the Union, including my father. They have forced me to allow my mother to take her own life for she would never have been the same without her Anome even had she recovered. Whether any of you believe as strongly as Lycavorians in regards to what Anomes mean to each other within our culture I could care less. I did what my instincts told me to do. What my mother would have begged me to do. Now they hold my second elven mother hostage and threaten to kill her should we do anything. In response to this threat I have frozen all Union Fleets in location and suspended all training exercises. When we have repaired the Union Senate, when we have had a memorial for my father and those lost, there will be official Crowning ceremonies and we will go forward. I will not risk our Union, not even for one who I call mother. I can not. Dilaen Roan will be my voice to you and as events move forward she will continue to keep you informed so that the citizens of the Union are informed as well. Thank you for you time and patience in these trying times."

The image faded and it was deathly quiet in the room for several long minutes. Dilaen looked at Thomas once more and saw him nod his head again. Dilaen lifted the small gavel and tapped it twice on the podium.

"I ask for a moment of silence for us to remember those we have lost in these last few days and then I will begin taking questions." Dilaen said as she lowered her head.

KAVALIAN GREATSOUL-CLASS DREADNOUGHT
PUSINTIN'S COMMAND SHIP PRIDE OF PUMAS
TWELVE HOURS FROM CALIBER

"I ask for a moment of silence for us to remember those we have lost in these last few days and then I will begin taking questions."

Pusintin laughed as the elf female lowered her head and he stabbed the control panel ending the transmission. He looked up at his aide who stood beside the large conference room table.

“Weaklings!” He barked. “You see Ngundo... they are weaklings! A moment of silence! A memorial to honor the dead criminals! Bah!”

“Things will change when you have assumed the throne Marshall Pusintin.” The older Kavalian spoke confidently.

“Yes they will!” Pusintin snapped happily. He had been full of himself for the last few hours and Ngundo detected this.

“I take it the plan goes well Marshall?” He asked. “You were successful in getting what we needed from the elf Queen?”

Pusintin looked at him. “Indeed it does! Indeed it does! And yes, I was very successful. I may just keep the elf wench around after she has fulfilled her part of the contract. She is very... entertaining!”

Ngundo grinned as well and held out the data pad. “The Prefect wished you to contact him when we were within twelve hours. That fool idiot Laustinos contacted us as well while you were preoccupied and demanded to speak with you. Something about his payment not being received and how Phy'iad failed.”

Pusintin looked at him as he took the pad. “Phy'iad didn't fail Ngundo. He did exactly as we planned for him to do. That he could not properly safeguard himself and his assets from a rag tag bunch of children and outcast Immortals is not our problem. I'm more concerned with the forces we sent to Kranek. It appears they were defeated if what this Union elf bitch says is true.” He spoke.

Ngundo nodded his head. “According to the intelligence reports that we have received Marshall, the forces there were obliterated.”

Pusintin nodded. “That is a matter of some concern.” He stated. “The Prefect and I will need to address that. What else did Laustinos want?”

“He did not elaborate Marshall... but he seemed very irritated and to be honest, very frightened. He is probably inside Icalro Alliance space by now, but he said he would be monitoring the COM channel and he expected you to contact him or he would contact Union authorities and tell them everything.” Ngundo spoke.

“That traitorous fucking weasel!” Pusintin growled as he sat back in the chair. “Very well Ngundo... set up the link with him first. Then I'll contact Keleru and make sure all is ready. Tight beam transmission Ngundo... no sense in allowing him to see more than he needs to and I don't want the transmission traced back to us easily.” He watched as his aide moved to the control console sunk into the large table and activated a secure communications link. It beeped softly for several moments before syncing up with another COM signal and then Laustinos's face and shoulders appeared in the holimage.

“Pusintin!” He gasped.

“Speak quickly Laustinos!” Pusintin snarled. “Our dealings are done and I have no desire to talk with you any longer than necessary!”

“Our dealings are not done!” Laustinos exclaimed. “Phy'iad failed Pusintin! He failed! Dysea is not his prisoner and I barely escaped Kranek's system with my life! You have not kept your part of the bargain!”

“We most certainly have!” Pusintin barked.

“Do not play with me Pusintin!” Laustinos snapped right back. “Phy'iad is dead! His forces here on Belid are destroyed and Dysea is free! You guaranteed to me that Dysea would be mine for what I have done!”

“I do not control the Union military yet Laustinos!” Pusintin snarled once more. “It is not my concern that Phy'iad was such a fool to allow them to track him back to Belid and then kill him. We kept our end of the bargain, it was Phy'iad that did not!”

“Phy'iad worked for you!” Laustinos shouted. “They know it was me who helped you to do all that you have done! My life is worth nothing now! They will hunt for me until they find me!”

“And this is my problem why?” Pusintin asked. “You chose the path you took Laustinos, we did not force you to help us!”

“I have given you years worth of information and intelligence!” Laustinos continued. “I have helped you to gain things you did not have! Without me... without me you would never have accomplished what you have done! You owe me Pusintin!”

“We owe you nothing!” Pusintin roared.

Laustinos glared at him from within the image and finally nodded his head. "Then you will not care when I transmit every bit of information I have given to you through the years to Union Fleet Command? You will not care when I transmit every conversation we have had? Every deal I have helped you to broker and every bit of information I have on how you got your Puma Bane assassination teams onto Earth."

"Do not threaten me Laustinos!" Pusintin growled at him.

"It is not a threat Pusintin... it is a fact." He answered. "I'm quite sure, since you failed to kill Androcles Leonidas, that once he discovers what you intend for one he calls mother, you will not live more than a few weeks. Not to mention that the ridiculous notion that you did all of this in order to protect the Kavalian Empire will be believed by no one since they will know the truth. You do not know him as I do Pusintin. He is like his father in many ways, your nephew is, but he is far more unforgiving and violent than your brother Pusintin."

Pusintin snorted in disgust. "It is already done!" He snapped. "There is nothing any of them can do about it now! It would go against the precious laws they hold so dear, as you have said yourself so many times before!"

"I will also spread the word that the Kavalian Empire does not keep its word to those they do business with." Laustinos stated quickly. "How do you think your new business partners will react to that information Marshall Pusintin? And since I am now within Icalro Alliance space, I am much closer to them than you!"

"You think to threaten us?" Pusintin roared in anger.

"Do you take me for a fool? You... you owe me Pusintin." Laustinos barked. "You owe me for what I have done for you! What I can continue to do! My only requirement in order to help you was that I get Dysea. You have not kept your end of our bargain and now it will never happen! In essence you have broken our agreement! This will not sit well with the organizations that you do business with Pusintin! And whatever funds you get from your dealings with them will dry up and go away!"

"You are playing a dangerous game Laustinos!" Pusintin hissed. "I could just as easily order that you be killed. I could make you disappear and no one would be the wiser."

"The information I have would still reach the eyes and hands of those within the Union Marshall Pusintin." Laustinos answered. "I am not so inexperienced as to not have contingency plans should my death come about unexpectedly as you say. Dysea was to be mine! Mine!" He screamed. "You have failed in keeping your end of our agreement, if you ever intended to keep it to begin with and I will insure everyone knows it! I may be a wanted man now... but before I am done... every citizen in the Lycavorian Union will be screaming for your blood and the blood of your Prefect!"

"What do you want?" Pusintin snarled.

"I can not remain in Icalro Alliance space... you know this." Laustinos stated. "I will be discovered here eventually, and the Icalro Alliance is not on good terms with the Union to begin with. Allow me to enter into Kavalian space. I can still help you Pusintin and you know this. With your failure to kill Androcles and his siblings, it will be harder for you to convince others that your claim to the throne is correct. I have contacts... people who will help me... politicians and others... in ways that your Puma Bane soldiers can not."

Pusintin sat back in the chair and was silent for a long moment staring at Laustinos's image in the transmission. Finally he leaned forward again. "Remain where you are!" He snapped. "I will contact Prefect Keleru and discuss what you say. I will get back to you."

Laustinos stared at him for a moment. "Do not take too long Marshall Pusintin. You may find that it is too late if you do."

"Do not threaten me Laustinos." Pusintin barked.

"It is not a threat Marshall... it is a promise." Laustinos hissed right back before reaching out and ending the transmission from his end.

"Fucking coward!" Pusintin almost shouted.

"But an intelligent coward nonetheless my friend." Keleru's voice echoed. Pusintin turned to where Keleru's full image appeared from the disc in the floor of the conference room. He didn't look surprised in the least and moved right into a conversation with him as if he had been there the whole time.

"Yes." Pusintin agreed. "Ngundo contacted you I see."

Keleru shook his head. "I contacted you. I asked to be connected into your conversation with Laustinos in order to learn what I could."

Pusintin nodded his head. "I have nothing to hide from you Keleru, you know this." He spoke.

“I know my friend. You and I have far too much invested in this plan and others.” Keleru answered. “My trust in you has not and never will waver Pusintin, of that you can be assured. As for Laustinos, as much as I know it pains you, based on events of the last few hours, he has become somewhat of a rather rare commodity. A person with intimate knowledge of the Union and their leadership who is willing to sell this information.”

“Events have not gone well?” He asked.

Keleru shook his head slowly. “In some areas no... in others they are still very much salvageable.” He replied. “The control officer for our team on Earth that took this Janae female sent a coded message only three hours ago. Your brother’s son must have figured out that we had taken her and unleashed his Durcunusaan upon them. They discovered where our team was holding her and then conducted a commando raid that freed her and eliminated our entire team. I assume you have this live report up and were monitoring it?”

Pusintin nodded as he glanced at the muted monitor and saw the female elf still talking with the several hundred Netnews reporters. “Yes... but they made no mention of the fact she was being held. We are sure of this Keleru? She was to be an integral part of our plan down the road.”

Keleru nodded. “Yes... I am certain. This really only confirms the information Laustinos gave to us about her status and bloodline Pusintin. As far as Laustinos is concerned... give him what he wants for now. He could be an invaluable piece of intelligence over the coming weeks simply for the knowledge he holds in his head. As for our future plans concerning this female, we will have to think of something else over the next few weeks. This position she has been appointed to by your nephew does allow us some options but it does not hinder our immediate concerns or degrade the foundation of our overall objectives however. And besides... it will be at least a year before our original plan for her would have played out. The added time may be what we need. Tell me... you have succeeded?”

Pusintin leaned back in his chair once more and grinned broadly like a man pleased with himself. “It took me several attempts but yes... I was successful.”

“Her condition now?” Keleru asked.

“The drugs administered to her before she woke will do their job Keleru. By the time we return things will be well on their way.” Pusintin spoke. “She was not happy about it I can tell you that, nor have I ever seen a woman weep so much. The contracts are signed however, and she is bound to me now. I may just keep her around after all is said and done Keleru.”

Keleru’s eyes narrowed slightly and he tilted his head. “For what purpose?”

“She was very entertaining as I told Ngundo.” Pusintin answered.

“If that is your decision.” Keleru spoke. “If you go down that road however, insure the weapon she carries on her arm is surgically removed. I would rather she did not use it to remove your head at some future point.”

Pusintin chuckled. “Yes... of that you can be confident.”

“I have more news Pusintin.” Keleru said quietly. “You... you will not be happy my friend.”

Pusintin sat forward when he detected the seriousness of his voice. “Bad news I take it?” He spoke.

Keleru nodded slowly. “I’m afraid so.” He looked at Pusintin intently. “Leruk has been lost to us old friend. The entire Puma Bane Section that was tasked with eliminating the Drow outpost on Iraruzu was destroyed.”

“Leruk...” Pusintin said softly as he rose to his feet from the table. “But... how? Their last report said they had eliminated the outpost and all of the Drow there. They were only chasing some stragglers. Keleru... how...?”

Keleru nodded. “The team I sent to discover why we lost communications interrogated some of the scum from the settlement there. It appears as if one of the stragglers that they were chasing was a young Drow female whose mother is a member of their Senate. She arrived with their Senior Polemarch...”

“Dymas?” Pusintin gasped.

“You... you know him?” Keleru asked.

Pusintin nodded as he began to move around the table his anger bubbling just beneath the surface. “I know him. He was one of those tasked with helping to raise me after my fool father went and got himself killed. After my mother abandoned me.” He looked at the transmission. “He is the one who did this?”

Keleru shook his head. “No. Though it appears as if they were able to somehow call for help even with the Deutrino field surrounding the planet.”

“Who killed my son Keleru?” Pusintin asked.

“It was... it was your nephew Pusintin.” Keleru answered. “Leruk was killed by your brother’s son Androcles. His... his wounds matched those of many Evolli that our intelligence reports say he killed during the war. It... from what I understand from our intelligence and the statements from the scum we interrogated one of the Drow... the Drow female they were chasing is your nephew’s mate.”

“Androcles’s mate?” Pusintin growled softly. “He... he killed my son because of a woman?”

“Pusintin... Pusintin my friend I need you to control your anger.” Keleru spoke. “I swear to you that you will have your vengeance, but now is not the time. There is too much at stake. I must...”

Pusintin looked at him in the transmission, trembling in savage hatred but his mind as clear as it had ever been. He shook his head slowly drawing in deep breaths. “Does Kalis know?” He asked the question causing Keleru to stop talking in mid-sentence.

Keleru shook his head. “He has not returned with his team from their patrol to Chofen in search of Nikkei. He is due back a day after you return. Pusintin you...”

Pusintin held up his hand and silenced Keleru’s words. He shook his head slowly and turned finally to look at him in the transmission. “We... we knew there could be casualties in this operation. We knew there would be danger involved. Leruk and Kalis knew... they knew the risks. They knew what was at stake.”

“We did not expect to lose Leruk my friend.” Keleru spoke softly. “He was my favorite as well Pusintin. Kalis is a superior warrior but Leruk... he was a superior warrior and he was going to be a fine leader of our men.”

Pusintin nodded slowly. “Not... not good enough it seems.” Pusintin declared gently. He moved closer to the transmission. “My... my nephew is that good Keleru? Good enough to beat a fully trained Puma Bane soldier?”

Keleru shook his head slowly. “I did not think so... but it seems I was wrong.” He took a deep breath and exhaled heavily. “I fear we pushed Leruk too soon Pusintin. We... we pushed him too hard and he paid the price for it. We did not know about the Drow elf bitch and...”

“Kalis will want blood.” Pusintin said. “He will want blood for Androcles killing Leruk Keleru. You know this.”

Keleru nodded. “And we must channel that anger Pusintin. Kalis may very well be able to defeat him in battle... but we must bide our time now.”

Pusintin looked at him. “I want blood.” He stated plainly.

“Which would satisfy you more Pusintin my friend... killing Androcles and forfeiting all that we have planned to happen in the future or taking heart in the fact that you have killed your brother?” Keleru moved closer on his end of the transmission. “Killed your brother and stolen his elven Queen, fucked her senseless and will now use her to propel yourself to the throne he stole from you? Then you can dismantle all that he built piece by piece Pusintin and savor in this knowledge as you watch all that he was burn.”

CABELIR

Keleru stood in his office and stared at the transmission in front of him. He was waiting for Pusintin’s answer to his question and from that he would decide what to do. As he stared at Pusintin within the transmission he thought for a moment that he would not give the answer Keleru was looking for. He thought for a moment that he would surrender to that Lycavorian blood within him and sacrifice everything on his lust for revenge. Keleru truly hoped not for he genuinely cared for Pusintin and trusted him completely. The man had become like a surrogate son to him and he silently prayed he did not throw it all away. Pusintin could be utterly ruthless and barbaric when he wanted to be, displaying that same trait when he ordered his own daughter captured and taken to Nefoa to be used as a whore in the brothels there for what her mother had done. As the seconds ticked by Keleru began to lose hope that he would respond and he began to lift his hand to signal his nephew when he saw Pusintin nod his head.

“No Keleru... I will not forsake everything we have worked for.” Pusintin said. “You know I won’t. There is far too much at stake.”

Keleru exhaled slowly, tremendous relief filling him and he nodded his head. Pusintin had come a long way from that young Spartan man they had captured all those years ago and this decision renewed the faith he had first put in the man. He nodded his head slowly. "You will have your blood Pusintin my friend. I promise you... you will have your blood."

Pusintin shook his head. "No. The blood I wanted, I got that when my brother was blown to pieces before the eyes of the Union and his precious Queens. I will let Kalis deal with my dear nephew Androcles. Kalis is far better trained physically than Leruk was, and he has a mean streak in him. He will take great pleasure in taking everything from Androcles before he skins him alive for killing his brother."

Keleru nodded. "And so he shall." He stated. "The compound is secure and her cell is ready. I have appointed one of the female whores that we use as technicians to maintain the systems. My personal physician will tend to her as time passes."

"The technician?" Pusintin asked.

"A biogenic female... one of the ones that works within the compound. Poysha I believe her name is. She has been fully vetted and cleared and she learned the technical aspects that we taught her very quickly." Keleru answered. "I questioned the officers who have had contact with her and all of them say she is obedient and insightful, but that she knows her place. They also say she is quite good in bed."

"Her Pride?" Pusintin said.

Keleru nodded. "Her father gave her and her sister to us many years ago. The sister is dead now; she was killed in a transport accident nearly a decade ago. You need not worry about her Pusintin my friend; I will personally vouch for Poysha. She has a particular dislike of the Lycavorian people and that is why we have allowed her such access."

Pusintin looked at him in the transmission. "Why?" He asked.

Keleru grinned. "Her father instilled a hatred for them after his parents were lost in our war with the Union a millennia ago. She does not care for them in the least."

Pusintin nodded. "I will trust your judgment Keleru. You know those who work within the compound far better than I."

"You will transfer her to the compound when you return I take it?" Keleru asked.

Pusintin nodded. "Yes. I imagine she will be very surprised at the speed of what will now take place and the compound is the best place for her until she acclimates to it."

Keleru nodded. "Your arrival will put you here at 0230 hours. Place her in the compound and then get some rest Pusintin. You need it my friend and I want you to be fresh when we meet with the Pride Leaders tomorrow morning. After our meeting with them we will gather to... to honor Leruk."

Pusintin nodded slowly. "Everything else is proceeding as planned?"

Keleru nodded. "With the exception of the loss of this woman Janae yes. I have several of our people monitoring the Union Netnews continuously now to try and determine if it will be possible to take her at a later date considering the position she will now hold."

"Is it still advisable to try and take her now?" Pusintin asked.

"We shall see." Keleru spoke. "I have heard back from our contacts in The Wilds as well. I have given them authorization to attempt what we discussed before you left. They will use their own contacts and contract out to other sources. Our usual source says he has a new group that is perfect for the job and getting them onto Earth will be child's play."

"How so?" Pusintin asked. "All points of entry will be under heavy surveillance now."

Keleru nodded. "Yes. Apparently however, these individuals have been coming and going to Earth for many years now."

Pusintin's eyes went a little wider. "Really?"

Keleru nodded once more. "I will tell you more when you arrive and I see you in the morning. Pusintin..." He waited until he looked at him evenly. "We have had some setbacks and some losses my friend but we are well on the way to accomplishing our goals. Have someone contact that fool Laustinos and tell him we agree to his terms. We will set up a plan when you return and advise him of it, but for now he remains within Icalro Alliance space. Having him discovered anywhere within Kavalian space within the next few weeks would be disastrous."

Pusintin nodded his head. "I'll have Ngundo advise him. I will see you in a few hours Keleru."

EARTH
SPARTA
KING YELU MEMORIAL HOSPITAL

“...any idea why they are holding Queen For'mya?” The reporter asked above the sounds of his fellow reporters, nearly all of them with their hands in the air and waiting to get selected.

Dilaen shook her head. “At this time we do not know why they are holding her or what they hope to accomplish by doing so. As I said earlier... they have stated that they no longer consider her a Queen of the Union with the death of King Leonidas and they will deal only with the Elven Parliament in regards to her return.”

“What about their request for a Special Session of the Galactic Court?” Another reporter in the front blurted out.

“Acting Prime Minister Panos will be meeting with the Chief Justice in order to address this demand of the Kavalian government.” Dilaen answered the question. “It does not however excuse their actions or the fact they are holding a Queen of the Union against her will. Whether they recognize her as such does not matter to us, she is a Queen of the Union and is therefore being held prisoner under threat of execution. If they wished to have friendly negotiations, I dare say this is not the way to conduct them.”

“If they are granted a Special session... will they be allowed to attend it with those from their embassy or will others be allowed to enter Union space and represent them?” Another asked.

Dilaen shook her head. “That is a decision for Androcles and I believe everyone here knows how difficult it is to predict what he will do.”

“Is there any truth to the rumors that we have not gone after her because the military is in disarray and no one knows who is in charge?” Another human reporter in the front row shouted out.

Dilaen looked intently at the man for a long moment. “What would give you that false perception Paul?” She asked the human.

The room became much quieter just before he answered. “There have been rumors within the military that no one knows who is in charge.”

Dilaen turned to look over her shoulder at General Vengal who had entered the hall very quietly after the press conference had begun. She knew who he was immediately for he was one of the three officers that Andro told her she could go to for answers to any questions she might have.

“General Vengal... would you care to address that?” She asked seeing the grizzled elven General’s jaw twitching in response to the question.

Vengal met her eyes quickly and confidently and he took three steps forward from where he stood beside Selene. “Any rumors that you may or may not hear that are supposedly coming from within the Union Fleet or Ground forces are false.” He stated. “The Union military is far from in disarray... and each and every officer and soldier knows exactly who is in charge. Our readiness has not been altered from what it was before these events.”

“So no one within the military questions that Prince Androcles is now in command?” Paul asked.

“Our chain of command is established in such a manner that should anything happen to the King, overall command of all Union forces resorts immediately to Androcles. All of you know this.” Vengal answered. “From the moment he... from the moment he learned of his father’s death Androcles Leonidas assumed full command and control of all Union forces. There has never been a moment where we did not know who was in charge as you say. Admiral Riall, myself, Admiral Ceneu, War Master Tareif, we all get our orders from him and that has never been in doubt.” Vengal stepped back beside Selene as Dilaen pointed to a Limian reporter in the third row of seats and he stood up.

“Dilaen... broadcasts from Hadarian controlled networks have been reporting that Prince Androcles ordered the destruction of all four Jump Gates in the Hadarian home system resulting in the deaths of over three million men, women and children, most of them civilian. Is this accurate? And a follow up... this also has effectively isolated the entire Hadarian system and they are reporting Union ships are keeping any civilian traffic away from the area right now. Would you care to comment on why this was done if the Hadarian system is now independent of the Union with the dissolution of Queen Anja's rule and the election of a new government and did Prince Androcles in fact order this blockade as well?"

Dilaen took a deep breath. "First off the new Hadarian government was not elected by the people of Hadaria. It came to power unlawfully by creating and manufacturing false charges and statements in regards to acts that they say Queen Anja committed while in power. These acts were subsequently proven false as seen pretty much across the Union in a live broadcast and when their scheme was exposed the Arch Ministry and Hadarian Elder Council acted unilaterally without the approval of the majority of their citizens." She replied evenly. "They consequently attempted to engineer the murder of Queen Anja before she was able to leave the planet peacefully and endorsed an operation right here in Sparta that attempted to kidnap Retta and Calyb Leonidas. They tried to take them from their parents and return them to Hadaria against their will. Hadarian Elder Council Militia troops assaulted the school that the children attend in an effort to kidnap them as you are all aware. This was not some random thing, this was an operation planned and approved by Elder Buonau and Minister Wiktor."

"Those very same broadcasts state that Queen Anja was given several opportunities to surrender Retta and Calyb without violence." The reporter continued without missing a beat. "These attempts were reported as actions that would insure that the Hadarian Royal Bloodline remained safe."

"I'm sorry... but when did children become assets to be bartered and traded?" Dilaen admonished the man. "Retta and Calyb are the children of King Leonidas and Queen Anja. They are not property of the Hadarian Arch Ministry or the Elder Council or anyone for that matter. They certainly did not want to leave their parents, and now they will have to deal with the loss of their father. Who are the victims here?"

"The new Hadarian government did not have anything to do with what the Kavalian Federation has perpetrated." The Limian reporter continued. "Did Prince Androcles order the destruction of the Gates and if so why?"

"We have not found any information to date that implicates them in knowledge of what the Kavalians have done." Dilaen corrected him. "And believe me we are looking. The four Jump Gates into the Hadarian system were compromised by Deputy Laustinos among his many other crimes. A unique and very powerful computer virus he had made and installed essentially took all control of these four Gates from the JGC. With these four Gates intact the Kavalian Federation was illegally pouring troops and ships into the system through a separate Jump Gate that they had built within Kavalian space somewhere. They were doing this and circumventing known Lycavorian Union space and also bypassing all of our defensive measures. That act can not be construed as a friendly action by even the dullest individual that I am aware of." Dilaen spoke calmly.

"The Kavalian Federation has sent out several broadcasts from Hadarian space as well and they say they were only moving personnel and equipment to Hadaria at the request of the new Hadarian government." The Limian continued even as his face and name were being taken down by several Krypteria agents secretly in the room exactly where Dilaen had placed them expressly for this purpose.

"If they wish to do that, then they can do so just as everyone else does. They can ask permission to transit Union space legally and not use an illegal Jump Gate that they built to tap into our system to bypass our space and all of our security measures, which is exactly what they were doing, let's not forget that." Dilaen answered.

"So Prince Androcles did order the destruction of the Gates?" The Limian asked.

Dilaen nodded. "To protect the sovereignty of the Lycavorian Union and to eliminate free and unhindered access to any potential future Kavalian military operations into Union space... yes." She answered.

"Do we know if any operations like those you speak of were planned?" The Limian asked her.

"I will not go into any particular details of Intelligence Operations at this time." Dilaen answered.

"Isn't that very mindset what caused the events of the last weeks?" The Limian asked.

Dilaen tilted her head as she looked at him. "No... the Kavalians caused the events of the last three weeks not Union policies... and to imply or give credence to this notion is not only wrong, but completely inappropriate sir. If you wish to report on the news I am giving to you, then report the facts and not your suppositions and twisted realities of the facts I present!"

"Does the Lycavorian Union recognize the new Hadarian government?" The Limian asked more timidly this time.

“At the moment... the Lycavorian Union is focused on recovering from a vicious and devastating attack against our people by the Kavalian Federation that has been very costly in terms of life.” Dilaen answered.

“Will the Union Senate recognize the new Hadarian government when it has reformed?” The Limian pressed.

Dilaen shook her head. “I don’t know. That will be up to the Union Senate once those that have been murdered by the Kavalians have been replaced and our new King and they have time to meet and discuss outside events. At this time I can not speak to that other than to say it may be several months before they have an opportunity to address it.”

“So the Union will not abide by the new Hadarian government’s official request to return Retta and Calyb Leonidas to their custody and open free travel corridors between the Hadarian system and other governments?” He continued.

Dilaen met his eyes. “You seem to have been monitoring the broadcasts from within the Hadarian system much more closely than we have.” She stated quickly.

“I’m... I’m only doing my job.” The Limian answered.

“Indeed.” Dilaen answered. “So am I. As I said before I can not speak to what the Union Senate will do when they are reorganized and reformed. My guess would be no to opening free travel corridors based on recent Kavalians actions. As for returning Retta and Calyb to Hadarian custody and taking them from their family... that will not happen ever... even on a very good day for them.” Dilaen turned to another reporter in one of the rows further back. It was an elven female. “Yes?”

“As spokesperson for Prince Androcles... can you comment on how these events would not have happened if we had open borders and open communications with all beings within the universe?” She asked.

Dilaen blinked. “Excuse me?”

“The Free Utopian movement has stated for decades that actions such as this would not take place if we simply communicated more openly with our brothers and sisters from different species and worlds and did not have so many secrets.” The female said. Dilaen could see a great deal of eye rolling and the shaking of heads going on among the reporters near where the woman stood.

“Can I infer from the “we” in your statement that you are part of this particular Utopian movement?” Dilaen asked.

“Yes. Proudly.” The female answered.

“Well... then let me say this.” Dilaen spoke firmly. “The Free Utopian Movement is nothing more than a congregation of individuals who are so far out of touch with reality that it is not even funny.” She said seeing the woman’s eyes go wide in shock and anger. “Now... I won’t address the obviously ignorant question you just asked, but if you have another question that is grounded in reality I would be happy to answer that.” Dilaen pointed to another human male. “Victor from Channel 43.”

“Dilaen... can you comment on the operation that took place on Kranek and the now public knowledge that the Immortal Cha’talla is still alive?” He asked.

“The operations on Kranek and within The Wilds are still ongoing to the best of my knowledge and I can’t comment on them at this time.” Dilaen replied. “What I can tell you is that Queen Dysea has been rescued and is currently being transported back to Kranek where she will then return to Earth.”

“Does she have any comment on the Kavalian insistence that they will only deal with the Elven Parliament to release Queen For’miya?” Victor continued quickly before Dilaen moved on. “Do you have any idea why they are requesting this and what her reaction will be as Queen of the Elves?”

“To the best of my knowledge, Queen Dysea is currently being briefed on everything that has happened by her aides and I’m sure she will have some statement when she returns.” Dilaen said honestly. “Beyond that I can not speculate Victor.”

“What about Cha’talla?” Victor asked.

“What do you mean?”

“Will he be detained by our government and charged with crimes against the Lycavorian Union for his actions while Captain to the High Lord Veldruk?” Victor asked with a neutral voice.

“While I’m sure there are probably people who would like to see this happen... it will not.” Dilaen replied confidently. “The Cha’talla that Queen Dysea and Princess Normya have been forming a relationship with is not the same Cha’talla that we knew as the Immortal Captain to Veldruk. He is very different, as is his entire tribe of Akruvians, and if the recent information I have received is any indication we will not even recognize them. Cha'talla's Blessed wife, a vampire pureblood by the name of Esther Saira has apparently discovered a toxin of some sort within the genetic code of the Akruvian people that was put there by Veldruk many thousands of years ago. Using equipment and information she obtained from our ship databases she was able to create a serum of sorts that results in the Akruvian people returning to what they looked like long before Veldruk introduced this vile toxin into the atmosphere of their planet and proceeded to conquer them. I believe there are images and information in the packets you were given when you entered the room that may shed some light on what you are asking, including images of Cha'talla and two of his sons taken two days ago as they were preparing to retrieve Queen Dysea."

"Conquer them?" Victor asked surprised.

Dilaen nodded. "There is much that we do not know about the Akruvian people or what they endured before we fought them in battle as they served the High Coven. Considering what they have done in helping Denali Leonidas and his siblings in freeing Queen Dysea, do we not owe them the benefit of the doubt?" Dilaen smiled brightly. "I have met Cha'talla... and I have seen what he built on Kranek. I think you will be very surprised to discover what I discovered while I was there. Androcles has also informed me that I can announce that his sister Normya is now the Blessed Wife to the first born son of Cha'talla and Esther Saira." This brought a wave of murmurs and questions from the reporters and she raised her hand. "I'm sure they can answer your questions much better than I, and I do believe Cha'talla will be holding a conference like this either from Kranek or when he arrives here."

"He's coming here?" Victor gasped.

Dilaen nodded. "He will return with Queen Dysea I'm sure. She has become very close friends with him and his wife Esther." Dilaen turned and let her eyes scan the crowd and she pointed at a Lycavorian male. "Yes?"

"Donlar, Channel 71." He stated evenly. "Can you shed any light on what exactly Prince Androcles and others were doing training High Coven dragons? Did the King know of this? Did the Senate know and approve of this? Is there any truth to the reports coming out of the new Hadarian government that Queen Anja in fact refused the Kavalians access to Union Healers in their conflict with the High Coven and does not training High Coven dragons breach the Non-Interference clause of the Union Constitution and give some weight to the Kavalian's argument on why they have done this?"

"I don't see how massacring innocent Union civilians, killing our King, kidnapping two of our Queens, destroying nearly a dozen Drow outposts in The Wilds and attempting to kill every child of our King can be construed as anything but a heinous act." Dilaen answered calmly.

"I was... I was not trying to justify their actions in any way Dilaen." The man spoke defensively.

"I know... and that is why you are still in this room." She answered plainly. "I will take each of your points in turn if I may?"

CITADEL ONE

.03 LIGHT YEARS INSIDE SOL SYSTEM

FIFTEEN SECONDS AFTER REVERSION

SIXTY SECONDS FROM ENTERING SOL SYSTEM DEFENSE NETWORK

"Give me a status! All systems!" Lyrew barked as he came out of his command chair.

"Engines go!"

"Sensors and tactical online!"

"Shields and weapons check!"

Lyrew looked at his female XO. "Position!"

"Point zero three inside Sol System! Nominal strain on engines!" She answered with some excitement.

"We just jumped almost seventy thousand light years!"

"Time to recharge on the Q Drive?" Lyrew barked.

The woman's hands flew across her console. "Wow!" She exclaimed. "Q Drive cells are nearly depleted. We won't be able to jump back for nineteen hours six minutes!"

Lyrew looked at her and his eyes narrowed. "What? Why?" He demanded.

"We've never jumped this far before Captain!" She replied as she worked her console. "The Q Drive cells were only at sixty percent capacity when we jumped. We're down to nine point six percent now. We did not know how much this would strain the capacitors sir."

Lyrew did some fast figuring in his head and finally nodded. "So we need at least fifty to jump back." He spoke. "Fair enough! Sensors... full active sweep extending out to one light year! Tell me what we have around us!"

Lilonus stepped forward quickly. "I would not recommend that Captain." He stated. "It could be taken for a sign of hostility considering how jumpy the Lycavorians will be."

Lyrew ignored him and turned to his uncle and Coren. He smiled. "We are here." He stated confidently before turning back to Lilonus. "And perhaps you overestimated your fellow Lycavorians Ambassador. No one is here waiting to greet us and blast us from the stars!"

Ardan smiled. "Excellent work Lyrew! Excellent!"

"How soon before we can arrive at Earth?" Coren asked quickly.

"Sensors?" Lyrew turned his head to where his sensor chief was sitting at his station. "Sensors?"

"Ah... Captain... maybe you should see this sir!" The man stammered.

"How long to Earth damn it!" Coren snapped.

The sensor chief looked up. "I don't think we'll be getting to Earth Regent Re Mydala." He stated.

"What are you talking about?" Lyrew snapped as he moved up behind the man with Ardan and Coren. "Why not?"

"Sir, sensors... sensors are detecting nearly four hundred ships in the system!" The chief told him as he pointed to the screen. "Numerous sizes and some of them are huge! Twice the size of CITADEL ONE Captain!"

"Scan them!" Lyrew snapped.

Lilonus shook his head. "I wouldn't do that." He stated, only Jokros looking at him when he did.

The sensor chief worked his controls. "Energy based weapons! Plasma turrets mostly... but damn big ones! Power output is off the charts at nearly a hundred terra watts!"

"A hundred terra watts?" Lyrew gasped.

"Yes sir! I'm detecting what appear to be Kinetic Missile launchers of some nature, some sort of heavy Photonic torpedo launchers as well! Hull composition is..."

"What?" Ardan asked.

"It's some kind of metal I've never seen before." He stated. "I'm reading Crystanium and this unknown type of metal in some sort of reinforced weave. It's incredible!"

"What about Earth?" Coren asked.

"I'm detecting what look like multiple planetary heavy defense platforms!" He answered Coren quickly. "Close to two hundred of them in an overlapping field surrounding the planet at a range of three million kilometers from the upper atmosphere! There is also some sort of space station in orbit... and by the grace of the prophets it's massive! Detecting nearly a million and a half lifeforms on the station alone! Same types of weapons! Population of Earth is over three billion! Another half a million on what appears to be some sort of station on the moon!"

"So few?" Ardan asked softly.

"The Passing of the Comet depopulated Earth by over half when it passed between the Earth and its moon." Lilonus stated coming forward slightly. "It is a testament to human engineering that more did not die."

"The engineering skills of the Eridiani do not impress me ambassador!" Coren hissed.

"These humans are not the Eridiani Regent Re Mydala, and it would behoove you to take that into account going into the future." Lilonus berated him, causing several sets of eyes to widen at his disrespectful response to a member of the SBR.

"Captain... passive sensors are detecting something." Another officer called out from the other side of the bridge.

Lyrew turned to him across the bridge. "Speak plainly Lieutenant!" He barked. "That is not proper protocol!"

"I don't know what it is sir!" He announced. "I only picked it up by accident because one of the Vector Variance nodes spiked!"

Lyrew turned back to his chief sensor operator. “Rorga?” He asked.

The man shook his head slowly as he transferred his screens to the passive arrays. “He’s right.” He stated. “It’s a Spatial Displacement of some sort! I’ve never seen anything like it before.”

“Explain!” Lyrew demanded.

“It is a Vector Frequency Variance of some sort as he said.” Rorga answered.

“A weapon of some kind?” Coren asked.

“Spatial Displacements are not a weapon regent.” Rorga told him as he worked his controls.

Tastia stepped up next to Coren and took his hand. “Coren... it is similar in many ways to holo technology. It is more closely related to the Flat Space Technology our scientists have been working on. It is the ability to phase items in and out of real...” Tastia eyes grew a little wider as she stopped talking. “By the Grace of the Prophets!”

Coren looked at her. “Tastia... what is... what is wrong?”

Tastia turned to the sensor chief. “These spatial displacements? How large are they?” She demanded.

“Scalar and Vector space variation is up nearly a thousand percent Lady Tastia!” Rorga answered. “Aft quarter and off our port bow!”

Tastia’s eyes were wide now and she turned to Lilonus quickly. “They have Spatial Displacement Shields?” She gasped.

Lilonus shrugged his broad shoulders. “I do not know Lady Dal Vesch.” He answered. “I am just an un-intelligent humble Lycavorian observer!”

Tastia turned back to Lyrew with a snarl of anger. “Captain you must stop the ship!” She exclaimed.

“What? Why?” He demanded.

Tastia pointed to the sensor screens. “Those are not normal spacial anomalies Captain! They are ships!”

“Impossible!” Lyrew hissed. “We know of the High Coven Shroud shields! Our sensors could easily penetrate this technology!”

Lilonus snorted. “You are not dealing with the High Coven.” He spat. “Perhaps you will take my advice now and stand your ship down.”

Tastia turned back to Coren. “Those are ships Coren!” She snapped. “These Lycavorian knew... they knew we were coming!”

Coren looked at Lilonus quickly and he raised his hands. “Don’t look at me.” He stated. “I have no means to contact them. Perhaps they are not as un-intelligent as you seem to think!”

“Captain?” Coren questioned turning to him.

Lyrew shook his head quickly. “Impossible Regent Re Mydala. Our sensors are far more advanced than anything this Lycavorian Union can field. Our intelligence is...”

“Your intelligence is wrong.” Lilonus stated causing everyone to turn and glare at him. He raised his hands once more. “Very well... I will just stand over here and watch you make fools of yourselves.”

Tastia’s eyes narrowed as he stepped to the side and crossed his arms over his chest and looked at them confidently. She turned back to Coren. “Coren... we will... inferior that they may be, we need to proceed cautiously based on what our sensors have picked up. Even we can not fight three hundred plus ships!”

“I will prove it to you that nothing is there!” Lyrew barked. “Weapons! Forward Portside batteries. Turrets one and three. One volley! Fire!”

“NO!” Tastia screamed too late.

They could only watched as CITADEL ONE’S portside weapons turrets swiveled around and unleashed a single barrage into space. Instead of racing off into the stars as it should have, they watched as the nine beams of intense power slammed into something unseen only half a million kilometers from their ship.

Lilonus shook his head. “I told you it was a bad idea.” He said.

STRIKE GROUP TALON

ULU LEONIDAS II-CLASS STRIKE CRUISER

ULU RAVEN’S WINGS

Captain Imror steadied himself as the RAVEN'S WINGS shuddered heavily under the barrage of the new ship. It's powerful shields took the brunt of the volley of energy based turrets but still caused his ship to roll ever so slightly to the side. Sparks flew from a secondary tactical station and Imror looked at his mug of coffee, now on the deck instead of in his hand where it was only seconds ago.

"Rensibfla!" He snarled savagely and pushed himself out of his chair. "Are you nubous kidding me? They just fired on us! Report!"

"Shields down to seventy-three percent but recharging!" The voice sounded off instantly. "Energy based weapons! Eighty Terra Watt range! Comparable to our Type One turrets in power but tighter beams and more focused! Nice spread!"

"Is the Shroud active? Did they see us?" Imror barked.

"Shroud was active Captain!" Another voice echoed. "They must have fired randomly at the spatial distortion the Shroud generates!"

"Fired randomly?" Imror gasped. "Are they idiots! They made me spill my coffee!" He spoke as he bent down to lift his mug. He slammed it down on the arm of his chair and turned his head. "Casualties?"

"A Power conduit overloaded on deck thirteen! Three reported injured... one seriously! Medical team is already enroute!"

"Nubou! The Prince sent us out here to wait... not to get fired upon! Flash a report to Fleet Command! Tell them to let Androcles know what is happening here now! Power up the weapons and drop the nubous Shroud! They want to play tag... fine by me! Bring the BIP to alert and order them into BIP plan Omega Three! How close are they to the SSDN?"

"Already inside the outer perimeter sir!"

Imror smiled savagely. "Fine! Let's introduce ourselves to our Vanari guests! Launch the Ready Flight! And find me their communications channel!"

"Firing solution locked in for starboard Type One Batteries! M22As are loaded in all launchers! Fusion torps at full yield!"

"Their shields?" Imror asked.

"If scans are accurate... same category as the Type 90s. Looks similar to the Refractive Shield schematics that we got last week."

Imror nodded. "Fine! Give them something to think about! Full barrage to port across their bow! Every battery! Wake them up Weapons Officer!"

CITADEL ONE

"What was that?" Lyrew demanded. "What did they hit?"

"Captain! Massive scalar and vector flux particles are being generated in the location we just targeted! All around us! Something is... something is materializing! Many... many things are materializing!"

"Materializing!" Lyrew exclaimed. "What does that mean?"

"The Prophets preserve me... it's a ship! A huge ship! Ships materializing all around us!" The man shouted.

Lyrew spun around. "Shields! Shields!" He screamed. "Lower the bridge hull plating! Let's see what we are facing!"

"Captain Lyrew! One ship off our port quarter! Sir, it's over four thousand meters long!" Rorga shouted. "Another off our aft quarter! Over two thousand meters long! Smaller ships appearing all around us and beginning to maneuver!"

They all looked to the left to see the immense battle gray hull of the monstrous ship. Even at half a million kilometers distance they could easily tell the ship was twice their size and it was built for only one purpose.

"Prepare weapons!" Lyrew barked as he settled into his chair his eyes wide at what he saw. "Damage on that ship?"

Rorga turned in his chair to look at him shaking his head. "Minimal sir! And their shields have already returned to full power!"

“So quickly?” Ardan asked no one in particular.

“Detecting massive power surges all along their hull! Their weapons! Their weapons must be powering!” Another voice shouted.

“Fighters!” A third voice echoed. “Fighters are launching from the largest ship!”

“How many capital ships?” Lyrew barked.

“Twenty-four are maneuvering around us now Captain!” Rorga answered. “They vary in size from that dreadnought to destroyer class. They just appeared out of nowhere!”

“Captain Lyrew... long range sensors show that more than half the ships in the system have turned toward our location and are on intercept courses! Estimate they will arrive in under thirty minutes!”

Tastia clung tightly to Coren’s arm, her eyes wide and anxious. Coren and Ardan also looked very much in shock and Lilonus simply stood to the side shaking his head.

“Targeting sensors!” Rorga screamed. “They are locking us! They’re firing Captain! They’re firing!”

“Evasive! Evasive to starboard!” Lyrew screamed.

They could do nothing but watch as the entire left side of the colossal ship, fully twice their size, flared brilliantly with a combination of red and yellow light as every battery on the port side of the RAVEN’S WINGS opened up at once. None of them had ever seen anything like it so close and they stood transfixed as twenty-five Type One Terra series turrets and fifteen Type Two Terra Series sent forty sizzling beams of destructive power ripping across space to pass so close to CITADEL ONE’s hull that the ship shuddered violently just from the enormous concussive power. Tastia clutched Coren tightly as they held one another to keep from falling while Ardan gripped the side of the station he was next to.

“They missed!” Rorga exclaimed. “They missed!”

“They missed intentionally you fool!” Lilonus spat.

“Captain Lyrew! We are being hailed!” A new voice chimed in. “It’s the Lycavorian ship!”

Lyrew turned to Ardan and Coren quickly. “We can make a run for it.” He stated with more confidence than he felt.

“And go where?” Lilonus barked. “You are inside Lycavorian space! Within the most heavily defended system outside of their capital planet of Apo Prime! Where will you hide? You have no Shroud!”

“Uncle?” Lyrew asked ignoring him. “Regent Re Mydala?”

Coren nodded. “Let us hear what he has to say.” He stated. “Ardan?”

Ardan nodded. “Yes.”

Lyrew turned back to his communications officer. “Put it up on the main monitor.” He stated.

They turned to look at the huge communications monitor on the right side of the bridge as the scene appeared. A large bridge with numerous species on it sitting calmly at their stations and the single Lycavorian in the chair sitting slightly above the others in the center of the bridge.

“I am Captain Imror of the United Lycavorian Union Strike Cruiser RAVEN’S WING!” The Lycavorian spoke harshly, anger clearly visible on his stern face. They knew enough of Lycavorians to know that this one was very upset. “You will identify yourself immediately or my next volley will not be across your bow! And I will leave nothing but pieces of your ship floating as space debris for firing on me unprovoked!”

Coren took the lead now as it was he who had gotten everyone involved in this mission. “I am Coren Re Mydala, a member of the Senior Board of Regents for the Vanari Empire, and I demand passage to Earth so that I may retrieve the members of my family that you are holding against their will!”

“Are you also the nubous eache that ordered your ship to fire on mine?” Imror barked out.

Coren turned to Lilonus swiftly who shook his head, refusing to translate. “What did he say damn it?” Coren snarled.

“He called you a fucking moron Regent Re Mydala.” Lilonus snapped right back causing Coren’s eyes to go wide. “A phrase that fits quite well at this moment.”

Coren turned back to Imror’s image. “We did not know... we did not know your ship was there!” Coren barked. “You were hidden from our sensors!”

“Joa sibfla!” Imror snapped loudly. “I will give you ten seconds to tell me why you have jumped directly into Union space without permission and then fired upon my ship Regent Re Mydala of the Vanari Empire!” Imror spoke sarcastically.

“I told you!” Coren barked back. “I have come to retrieve the members of my family that your government holds!” He answered. “I demand passage to Earth so that I may facilitate that. Then we will be gone and leave your kind to kill each other all you want.”

They watched Imror slowly get to his feet on his bridge, his face showing his surprise at Coren’s word. He could no doubt see Lilonus in the rear of the transmission shaking his head in disbelief. “You demand? Is that so?” Imror finally managed to say. “So you decide to jump from wherever the hell you came from directly into Union space and then you expect to travel all the way to Earth all without being challenged in the least so you can make demands? And you respond in this way when I ask you what it is you want, after you have fired on my ship unprovoked and I did nothing! That’s extremely arrogant and stupid of you don’t you think?”

“You were hidden from our sensors! What do you expect?” Coren snapped.

“This is Union space you nubous ronnus! I can run around hidden from view in my anse underwear if I want!” Imror screamed at them from his ship. “Speak quickly fool before I come to the conclusion that you are hostile and blast you into atoms!”

“Lycavorians from the Protectorate have kidnapped my... they have kidnapped another Regent of our government as well as three of my children!” Coren snapped detecting Tastia looking at him out of the corner of his eye. “We tracked them here! Did you think you could hide them from us? We have come to get them back!”

“I don’t know what you have been told fool...” Imror stated seeing Coren’s eyes go wide at his statement. “But what I do know is that you have entered Lycavorian Union space illegally in an unknown warship; you have fired upon my ship without reason or warning and put three of my crew in the infirmary, one of them in critical condition! That woman has a mate and three children Regent Re Mydala and if she dies, I will blast your ship into so many pieces that even the gods won’t be able to find them all!” Imror roared at him from the transmission monitor. “Now move your monsene mida out of my sight and let me talk to that Lycavorian you have standing behind you or you will regret the day you ever came up with this malda idea to begin with!”

“We will do no such thing!” Ardan chimed in now moving up next to Coren. “He is an Ambassador to the Vanari and not a member of our government!”

“Ah... another country heard from!” Imror popped.

“I am Regent Vu Lamurrion! Also a member of the Senior Board of Regents!” Ardan snapped. “This is my ship and we will remain on our course to Earth in order to conduct our business! I suggest you put us in touch with your commanding officer and then provide us an escort to this planet so that we may conduct our business!”

Imror looked taken aback by the answer and they watched him look off to the side of the monitor for a moment. He turned back to them on the monitor and shook his head. “There is only one reason I do not blow you out of the stars and that is because we have expected you. I may just forgo I ever saw that report considering your arrogant attitude!”

Coren moved closer to the monitor. “Expected us?” He asked in shock.

Lilonus had heard enough and he stepped forward quickly. “Captain Imror... Pen brol Sarnathi Lilonus rie vada Protectorate. Alad forn pera rie Gundal Caoire Dutkne? Vin cedaur sey olynna usiden cayle blon?”

Imror nodded his head slowly. “Jainn.” He answered.

“Bejar forn duetoth tye reyna?” Lilonus asked.

Tastia was the only one who paid close attention to the exchange between the two Lycavorians and she noticed the difference in tone and stance of the Lycavorian officer as he spoke to Lilonus. It was one of respect and confidence even though she knew they had never met before. It was no different than how she had seen Lycavorians from the embassy treat others of their species as well as everyone else. Tastia was the only one onboard who had actually spent any time around those from the embassy on Austrova and she had picked up more than a few words listening to them talk in their native language. She considered herself something of a language expert and could speak seven different languages fluently. It was not an easy language to learn she knew and the number of Vanari who had tried and mastered it she could count on one hand, but those who could speak it fluently she was very impressed by. She tugged on Coren’s arm gently.

“He’s... I think he’s asking to speak with General Director Dutkne of the Protectorate Coren.” She whispered softly.

“Are you sure?” Coren asked just as softly.

“No... not completely... but I think that is what he is saying.” Tastia answered as Lilonus and Imror continued to speak. “We gain more now from corporation Coren. Not conflict. I think we have already seen we do not stand a chance against this one ship let alone the others.”

“We do not know that!” Lyrew spoke.

It was Jokros who came forward now. “Are you blind man?” He hissed softly. “We are surrounded and outnumbered and a full barrage from our forward turrets did not even scratch the shields on that ship!”

Tastia turned her attention back to the monitor when this Captain Imror nodded his head and finished their conversation. “Pen gur atle pen bejar! Indalfrid Androcles gur ter clodoca Sarnathi Lilonus.”

Lilonus nodded his head. “Pen pera.”

Imror settled back into his chair and looked at Coren once more. “Exactly three and a half minutes ago you crossed into what we call the Sol System Defense Network.” Imror stated quite plainly. “It is a little scheme that one of our Fleet Admirals thought up while on vacation. It’s quite ingenious actually. If you adjust your sensors to frequency 456.7 you will find that there are now exactly thirty-five planetary defense platforms locked onto your ship from different locations within this system. In another ninety seconds you will cross the threshold where those PDPs will open fire automatically unless they receive a signal from a Union warship. Each PDP is armed with twenty-five Kinetic Missile Launchers and an assortment of Plasma based turrets and Photonic torpedoes. Each PDP is completely independent of the other and fully automated. In seventeen minutes this entire area will also be swarming with Union ships who are under the impression you are an enemy Regent Re Mydala, or whatever your name is, and they will be coming for blood. Your blood. Our King was taken from us less than two weeks ago and you will forgive us if we are just a tad bit jumpy. RAVEN’S WING is the command ship for this system Regent Re Mydala. If you do not shut your engines down immediately and hold your position I will not send that signal and those PDPs will scatter your ship to the four winds. The decision is yours, make it quickly!”

Lyrew was beside Rorga in an instant as his hands worked his console. They grew even wider when they found that this Lycavorian had told them the truth. Rorga nodded quickly. “He speaks truthfully Regent Re Mydala. Thirty-five automated defense platforms are tracking us even now. We...”

Tastia nudged Coren once more. “Do you wish to die here Coren?” She asked forcefully. “I do not! And we accomplish nothing in regards to Devra and your children if we do.”

Coren looked at Ardan. “Ardan?”

“What choice do we have?” He spoke. “Lyrew... full stop!”

Lyrew nodded and turned to his helm officer. “Helm! Full stop! Station keeping thrusters only!”

“Helm answers full stop!” The voice called. “Station keeping thrusters engaged!”

Coren turned back to look at Imror on the monitor. “You have the Ambassador there to thank for your lives.” Imror stated as he touched the arm of his chair several times. “You will maintain this position while I contact my superiors. The PDPs will remain locked on your ship until further notice. I will get back to you.”

Coren and Ardan turned to Lilonus as the monitor went dark. “What did you tell him?” Coren demanded.

“I asked that he contact the General Director on Earth.” Lilonus replied.

“Ambassador you are a guest on this ship!” Coren spat. “You do not make decisions on behalf of the Vanari people! That is what Ardan and I are here for!”

Lilonus met his gaze evenly. “Then by all means Regent Re Mydala... continue your path to Earth but before you do... please give me a shuttle so that I can remain here. I do not wish to die among people who are too arrogant and unbelievably stupid to not realize just how close to death they came!”

Tastia looked surprised at this. “What do you mean?” She asked.

“It does not matter!” Coren snapped.

Tastia looked at him. “It does to me.” She barked right back unafraid of Coren. “What do you mean Ambassador?” She asked turning back to Lilonus.

“When the General Director left to come here to Earth he told me there were several events happening within Union space that they did not have all the details too.” Lilonus spoke gently with her. “Word is spreading rapidly among the Lycavorians within the Union that the Protectorate exists according to Captain Imror, especially among their military, and it will spread quicker when news reaches the Protectorate itself.

General/Director Dutkne told me they did not know exactly what they were heading into but they would advise me when the first opportunity arose. Captain Imror has just given me the short version.”

“And?” Tastia asked.

“The Kavalian Federation... a very warlike and brutal feline species... they conducted several vicious and horrific attacks against Union targets two weeks ago.” Lilonus told her.

“Lycavorian politics mean nothing to me!” Coren snarled.

Lilonus met his eyes. “The Lycavorian King was killed you nubous igord!” He shouted in anger causing many sets of eyes to grow large at this knowledge and his lost of temper and protocol. The Lycavorian Ambassador was known as a man who remained cool even through the treatment many among the Vanari people knew he received. None of them had ever seen or heard of the man becoming angry. “One of his Queens has been kidnapped! His children were targets as well and several of them nearly lost their lives! Almost a thousand of their people were killed in a terrorist bombing of a government building and nearly half of that number were small children on a field trip! The entire Lycavorian Union is at its highest state of alert and you come blasting in here thinking that you will drive your ship right up to where the majority of the royal family remains and make your ridiculous demands! These Lycavorians are not from the Protectorate and they do not know you or your inbred arrogance! They will swat you and your mighty ship from the stars if you do not do exactly as they say! At least until we can speak with someone from their government!” Lilonus stepped right up to Coren and jammed his finger into his chest causing Jokros to step forward in order to protect his charge.

“You and your fool actions almost got your ship and your entire crew killed Coren Re Mydala. Captain Imror would have blown you into oblivion without so much as blinking an eye had I not stepped in and tried to explain things to him! These Lycavorians are not like those of us in the Protectorate Regent Re Mydala, and they will not abide your superior attitude or your callous dismissive treatment of them. Now... now Imror will at least contact Earth and find out what to do, but he can not guarantee that Prince Androcles does not order your ship obliterated. According to Imror he is not as understanding and forgiving as his father once was!” Lilonus shook his head as he got his anger under control and inhaled deeply.

“Excellent work Regent Re Mydala... excellent work. I just saved your blue skinned Vanari backside and everyone else on this ship and still you smell of the arrogance born of blissful ignorance! You just go right ahead and act in this manner with the Lycavorians and they will not only send you home, they may very well send you home in a box!” Lilonus turned and looked at Tastia quickly and bowed his head in respect. “Lady Del Vesch, if you will excuse me I am going to return to my quarters now. It is becoming increasingly difficult to breath among all the sibfla that permeates the air.”

Tastia’s green eyes were wide as he spun on his heels and left all of them standing there in disbelief after absorbing his verbal tongue lashing as if they were nothing more than children. Tastia turned once more and looked at Coren as Lyrew moved up closer to them as well. Jokros stepped up behind Lyrew, who did not have a very pleasant expression on his face and it was Lyrew who began to demand answers.

“I understand I serve at your behest Uncle...” Lyrew stated calmly. “But you chose me to command this ship and now I have nearly ten thousand men and women who look to me for guidance. I need to know what exactly we have gotten ourselves into and I need to know now.”

CRANAE ISLAND

“Oh... I knew there was a reason I liked her that day in my office!” Deia exclaimed as they watched and listened to the broadcast from Sparta. “She is utterly fearless!”

Helen nodded her head. “Indeed.” She stated. “Andro... you made an excellent choice in Dilaen Roan.” She turned her head to look at him but found him standing up from his spot between Panos and Devra as Jomann stood behind him with a data pad in his hand. The harsh and angry expression on Jomann’s face did not bode well. She began to rise to her feet when Devra spoke.

“I must say... your people... your society is so open.” Devra stated. “Those who work in a similar capacity within Vanari controlled territory would never think to ask such questions.”

Deia turned to look at her. “You don’t allow this?” She asked.

Devra shook her head quickly. “No... it’s not that... I believe our reporters as you call them, I believe they are afraid to ask such questions. Those who have been on the Board of Regents for centuries tend to think of themselves as above those they are supposed to govern. It is an attitude that I have tried to change since being elected... but millennia of tradition and culture is hard to go against.”

Deia nodded her head. “Yes... we know that well.” She said softly. “Millennia of culture and tradition that we took too far guided us away from what Resumar and Canth wanted us to embrace.” She looked at Devra. “Martin’s return is what gave that back to us. In a quarter century he has done more by his own actions and examples to return our people to our instincts than thousands of years of policy and rules.”

“What is he like?” Devra asked softly. “Is Androcles like him?”

Bren chuckled beside her and she looked at him. “If only that was the case.” He said.

Helen nodded her head with a smile. “They are alike in many respects...” She said. “Both of them are far more intelligent than they let on to others. They are closer to their instincts than most of us; they worship the ground their mates wake upon, a trait that has swept through the Union to affect all species to be honest.”

Deia smiled gently. “My mandri is an enigma Devra Re Mydala, and because of when Androcles was conceived, he has become just as big an enigma as his father.” She said softly. “They... they know things that others do not. They feel things others do not. They are deeply entrenched in faith, but you would never know it by how they talk or act in many respects. They...”

“Forgive me... what do you mean when you say when he was conceived?” Devra asked politely.

Deia looked at her for a moment. “He has not told you?” She asked.

Devra shook her head. “It... it never has come up... why?”

“It is not a time that many of us reflect on.” Deia replied. “Perhaps...”

“Tell her Deia.” Panos said softly everyone turning to look at him.

“It is private Panos... you know this.” Deia said.

Panos nodded. “Yes it is.” He answered. “But it also concerns Sadi and Elynth as well and soon her own daughter. I know Martin... he has been like a son to me from that first day of his return and Androcles like a grandson, you know this. Devra has a right to know Andro and his father as well as we do. Her daughter will share the lives of our family going into the future and better she hear it from someone who knows and loves Andro than from random people who will only emboss what they have done and make them appear to be something they are not. He and Elynth would not appreciate that. Nor would Martin.”

Helen nodded her head. “Panos is right Deia and he knows them better than most.” She said looking at Devra. “Whether you believe it or not Devra, Caliria will be a Leonidas one day. Much sooner than you might think if I know Androcles as I do and you, Arduri, Naesta, your son... all of you will be connected to us in a way that can not be broken.”

Devra looked at Bren quickly and then back to Helen. “I have only been among your people for a few days and after what I have seen so far... well my belief in the preordained is increasing more and more each day.” She looked at these two women. “Would he truly start a war with this Icalro Alliance to retrieve her?”

Deia nodded slowly. “To answer that question I will give you some history of his father Devra Re Mydala, for his father destroyed an empire to retrieve Androcles’s mother Aricia. And if nothing else, Androcles is his father’s son.” She saw Devra’s eyes grow a little wider at this knowledge. “It began the day we realized Martin still lived...” She began to speak.

“... Imror’s BIP is covering them now.” Jomann spoke. “But he wants guidance.”

Andro lifted his eyes from the pad. “They actually fired blindly?” He asked in disbelief. “Are they stupid?”

Jomann nodded. “Stupid and arrogant according to Imror. Three injuries... one critical. They have the woman stabilized but the RAVEN’S WINGS Hadarian medical officer is on leave with her husband on Elear. He is requesting a Hadarian to deploy to the ship and treat her and he wants to know what to tell them.”

Andro shook his head slowly. “Imror seems to be the one to always stumble into these situations.” He said. “He is the one who discovered the Coven when they first approached the border.”

“He is seriously pissed off Andro.” Jomann spoke. “He didn’t look happy at all.”

Andro nodded. “I don’t blame him.” He said. “You know him?”

Jomann shook his head. "Only by reputation." He replied.

Andro held out the pad to him. "Well... that will change soon enough. I will get Devra... you get Sadi, Ne'Veha and Eliani and meet me..." Andro looked at him and saw the look on his face. "What?"

Jomann shook his head. "Nothing."

Andro crossed his arms over his chest. "Jomann... don't try to bullshit a bullshitter as my father and mother say. What is wrong?"

"Your sister... she does not care for me Andro and I would prefer to stay away from her as much as possible." Jomann answered.

Andro met his eyes evenly and knew Jomann wasn't telling him the truth. He could also detect the severe attraction to Eliani that Jomann had even though he was doing a very good job of burying that deeply. "I do not wish to make it difficult for you Jomann... but I will never get rid of her. For some reason she has appointed herself my personal caretaker and it has been like that for years. I couldn't change it even if I wanted too. Eli is just very..."

"Short tempered?" Jomann offered. "And linguistically gifted when it comes to cursing someone out?"

Andro chuckled. "That's a nicer description than I would have used... but yes." He said. "Eli is the most passionate of my sisters in many ways Jomann... don't be afraid of her. You are my Captain... so technically if it is not a medically related issue... you are the boss. She'll respect you more if you put her in her place."

Jomann looked at him and his eyes smiled. "How much blood will that cost me?" He asked with a smile.

"Probably more than you are willing to lose... but it will be worth it to see the look on her face." Andro answered.

"Your family will not be angered?" He asked.

Andro laughed. "Angered? Sibfla... they'll get a kick out of it! To this day no one has ever made Eliani back down. She's as tenacious as the Coltarian Measles."

Jomann winced. "I've had the Coltarian Measles Andro." He stated. "It wasn't pretty."

"I know it too." Andro answered with a smile. "Had me in bed for three weeks. I thought I was going to die."

"I think I did die. And then came back to life." Jomann replied with a grin.

Andro slapped his arm. "Get them to the pad in twenty. I'll meet you there." He said.

Jomann nodded and Andro watched him walk off towards the villa. He felt the rush of air behind him but didn't turn as Elynth settled gently to the sand behind him and folded her wings to her body as she moved up behind him.

That man is smitten by Eliani in the worse way. Even I can sense his blood boiling for her. Elynth spoke as she settled to the sand and Andro turned to face her.

Andro reached up as she extended her snout out to him and he placed his hands on either side of her huge head, her golden eyes closing in happiness and love for her bonded brother. Yes he is.

Elynth opened her eyes and pushed against his chest with the tip of her snout. Eliani is confused Andro. And hurt because she does not understand why she is confused or why it does not seem to bother her that she has discovered what Malic and Nyla feel.

Andro looked at her. Zarah told me what happened on Kranek. Have you spoken with her?

Elynth shook her head. Thaura. She is worried for her Bonded Sister. Eliani is almost as good as you at keeping your feelings inside. She does not understand why she does not feel pain at what she now knows, and she does not understand why her wolf blood burns when Jomann is near her.

Andro looked at her surprised. Eli desires Jomann? He asked surprised. She has been... she has been so filled with vitriol when she is around him.

Elynth nodded her head. Desires him far more intensely than she ever did Malic... and she does not know why. She thought Malic and she were anomalies because he bit her, but his scent is all but gone from her blood now. She does not understand it and that is why she treats Jomann as she does. She is... she is frightened of the feelings he brings out in her.

Andro lowered his hands but continued to stare at Elynth. Tenna told me he is descended from one of the original packs on Lycavore. A smaller pack that was left out of the Ruling Hierarchy only because of their size. She said they were given Council seats instead, and they...

Elynth saw his eyes grow larger. What?

Sister... Tenna Deia told me their line was one that my grandfather chose to include in the Ten Thousand because they could not be members of the Ruling packs. She said... she said that grandfather was close friends with the head of this bloodline. Jomann's mother... she was born here in Sparta! Andro said. His father was born on Apo Prime, but his grandparents survived the Black Day and the years of oppression.

Elynth's eyes grew a little wider now as she understood what he was leading up too. You think... you think...

Andro met her eyes once more. What else could it be? Eliani was born after me, but she was still conceived at a time when father was still affected by what happened with my mother.

Elynth nodded. And your mother Anja would have fully become wolf and fertile at the time and it would have been her first phase.

Andro nodded. And the first one is always the strongest one. My mother's Hadarian bloodline is powerful and when combined with my father's bloodline, this would have only augmented both to much larger proportions. Eli is powerful Elynth... far stronger than she lets on to anyone but Thaura.

Elynth nodded. I have felt this and Thaura has told Jeth this as well. What do you think it means?

Sister... what if the sixth ruling pack was not supposed to be of Chetak's bloodline... but Jomann's ancestors? Andro said.

That... that would account for the attraction they both feel. Elynth answered. The blood of a Leonidas would always be drawn to the most powerful of the other packs. If this is true... and the more I think of it the more I believe you are right... if this is true Andro, then that would explain why she feels what she does. Why Jomann feels it as well.

Andro nodded. I believe it is time for Eliani to discover some things of mother's past. He said. It may help her to understand why she feels as she does.

But will she accept it as your mother did? Elynth said softly meeting his eyes. Or fight it as she has.

Andro looked at her. Well... if I continue to keep them together...

You must not tell her what we suspect tonight when you meet with her. Elynth spoke. Tell her of Anja's history and such, but do not push her toward Jomann Andro. If it is meant to be their blood will do it for them when they are ready no matter how much they fight it. Just as it did with you and KertaGai.

Andro nodded. I know. And I won't. I will be back in a few hours sister. I must go and deal with this fool who is Caliria's father.

As long as you don't hurt him brother. Elynth spoke. That would not be the best way to endear yourself to your future mate.

Spoilsport. Andro spoke with a smile.

Elynth laughed within Mindvoice and butted his chest gently. I will see you tonight my Bonded Brother.

“... never did hear clearly what they were talking about.” Janae said as she came out of the shower and into the room. “They always spoke in whispers and that damn inhibitor thing in my head kept me from probing them.”

Arduri stood by the dresser and watched as Janae dropped the towel revealing her lush nakedness while Eliani and Sadi held out different items of clothing. Zarah and Lucia sat at the head of the bed, while Lu'ria and Carisia occupied the chairs near the large patio doors that led onto the white sand of the beach. Ne'Veha was rummaging through several different bags that had been brought for Janae. Arduri couldn't help but think of how it had always been with Caliria and Naesta as they did these very same things. It was obvious that Lycavorians held almost no reservations about their sexuality and while they would dress provocatively in public and private, this was a situation where only the females of their species would gather. They had included her without thinking because she was Caliria's sister and they considered her a friend and a member of their family already. Like her mother, Arduri was learning with every passing hour that all they had been raised and trained to think about the Lycavorians was being swept under the rug as either ridiculous or flat out untrue.

“Well... you certainly got that one ronnus good.” Eliani stated. “Zarah says you opened his leg so badly it severed the artery in two places.”

Janae nodded. “He was the one that copped a feel when he had me on the floor right after they hit me. It pissed me off something fierce. Sick puppy is what he was.”

“These biogenic clones they have made are strong and durable.” Lucia spoke from the bed.

Janae nodded as she pulled the thong panties on over her full hips. “You know... one or two of them were actually quite handsome.”

Eliani looked at her. “Janae!” She exclaimed.

“What... I’m simply stating fact!” She replied quickly. “I didn’t say I was interested Eli! If they weren’t clones and they lived longer than ten years and we saw them walking down the street in Sparta you couldn’t tell they were Kavalian! All I’m saying is they could accomplish so much more if they simply talked to us and stopped trying to conquer the nubous universe!”

“After what they have done... I don’t think Andro and father are going to give them the chance to conquer anything but a grave.” Zarah spat.

Sadi nodded. “Avoi.” She muttered.

Janae looked at Sadi as she pulled on the jumpsuit pants. “So Sadi... you were serious when you said he was that big?”

Sadi looked at her and nodded her head. “Very.”

“And he actually knows how to use it huh?” Janae asked.

“Oh yes... exquisitely.” Sadi answered with a beaming smile.

“Not to mention he can make us sing with his tongue!” Lu’ria spoke with a bright smile of her own. As a Drow female Lu’ria was not afraid to express to others what Andro and her female lovers made her feel in their bed, or how she returned the pleasure with equal if not more enthusiasm.

“Stop Mistress!” Carisia exclaimed now blushing somewhat. While She was completely uninhibited in their bed, Carisia was still becoming comfortable with being so open about what went on behind closed doors.

“What is wrong Enylarcopri my beautiful slave?” Lu’ria said with a loving smile and leaning over to nuzzle her cheek and neck. “You and SirsanGai squeal the loudest you know.”

“Actually... I think that is me.” Sadi spoke with a grin.

“Hey!” Eliani almost shouted. “We are getting into the realm of too much information here!”

“Yes please... he is our brother!” Zarah echoed. “Eewww! Yuck!”

“Well at least we know all the Leonidas men follow in their father’s footsteps in that regard.” Janae said with a smile. “Not only do the Queens walk around with permanent smiles on their faces but so do my cousin’s mates. We...” Janae stopped herself and cursed under her breath at her stupidity.

Eliani reached out and took her arm. “Don’t do that Janae. Don’t berate yourself. We will get her back Janae.” She said softly. “Father will never give up on her. Ever.”

Janae nodded her head. “I know. And neither will we.”

Arduri turned to look at the holoimages arrayed on the dresser and her green eyes blinked several times when she saw the image of the tall, smiling dark haired young man and the exotic looking raven haired female who was leaning up against his side with a beaming smile and bright dark green eyes. He looked a great deal like Andro from what Arduri could tell and the woman was breathtakingly beautiful as she reached out to lift the framed holoimage. She looked up at where Eliani was.

“Is this a relative?” She asked. “He looks like your brother.”

Eliani turned and saw the image she was holding. It was another welcome distraction from the reality they all faced with their second elven mother taken from them. Eliani nodded. “Unfortunately yes.” She quipped trying to push the sadness and worry away. “That is Denali our brother. And a bigger pain in the ass you will never meet!” Eliani moved up next to her and took the framed image. “This is Lisisa our sister. Well... our cousin really, but we have known her as our sister for so long nothing will change there. This was taken a year ago at a conference on Apo Prime...” Eliani shook her head. “I still can’t believe we didn’t see it.”

Arduri looked confused. “See what?”

Zarah moved from the bed now and took the picture. “It’s a very odd but interesting and romantic story really.” Zarah spoke. “If you have several days for us to tell you we will... but the short version is that they are now married and none of us saw it when it was right in front of us.”

“Almost none of us.” Eliani corrected her. “Andro saw it. He was protecting their secret for the last two years.”

Zarah nodded and looked at Arduri. "He and Lisisa were on Kranek with our mothers. If I know Andro like I do... Deni and Lisisa will return with Arrarn and Narice when mother goes to Curila 6. You can meet them then. It should only be another day or so before they return."

"Deni is the comedian among our family." Eliani said. "No matter what he has always been able to get us to laugh."

Zarah gave the picture back to Arduri who dropped her eyes to it once more when Eliani turned back as well to face Janae. No one saw her stare longingly at the photo or lift her fingers to pass them through the images of both their faces.

"You know... you get your very own Durcunusaan detail Janae." Zarah began to speak. "Now that you will..."

The chime on the door sounded and Janae finished zipping up the jumpsuit jacket. She was closest to the door and she turned to move for it. "I know... and I'm not looking forward to it either. I don't need to have four..." She touched the door controls and turned back as it was sliding open to reveal the very tall and extremely wide Lycavorian male in the doorway.

Jomann bowed his head to her. "Lady Janae... forgive me for interrupting." He stated.

Eliani watched Janae turn her head quickly back towards them and her eyes showed her interest right away as they were wide and swooning. Eliani felt a flash of anger and intense jealousy when Janae did this and she stepped forward toward the door and responded in a fashion that caused Sadi and Janae to look at her in puzzlement. "What do you want Captain?" She asked in a stern and uninviting tenor.

Jomann cut his eyes to Eliani and felt heat within his veins when his eyes came to rest on her. He kept his own emotions in check however and answered. "Andro asked that I collect you, Sadi and Ne'Veha. We are needed somewhere immediately."

"And where would that be?" Eliani snapped.

"Andro will tell you when you see him Princess." Jomann answered. "I just came to let you know you are needed by the pad."

Sadi stood up from the end of the bed. "Are we going somewhere Jomann?" She asked moving closer to the door. Sadi realized she was the only one in the room sensitive enough within Mindvoice to notice it. Eliani Leonidas's Mindvoice resonance spiked incredibly high into a realm that only a few women she knew of went, and all of them were Andro's mothers and herself. There was only one reason for that and Sadi moved quickly in order to keep Eliani from saying something that would suddenly end what she felt was building quite powerfully between Jomann and her, whether she realized it or not.

Jomann took his eyes off Eliani and looked at her, his gaze softening quite a bit when he looked at Andro's anome. Sadi had been very accepting and respectful of his position now and she had gone out of her way to make him feel at home here in the villa. "It appears a Vanari ship has entered the system and..."

Arduri's eyes grew wide and she turned to face him. "Vanari?" She gasped.

Jomann nodded. "There was a slight confrontation when the Vanari ship refused to yield and fired on Captain Imror's Strike Cruiser. Three of his crew were injured, one seriously and his Hadarian Medical officer is on leave. Andro wishes to go there now." Jomann looked at Arduri. "He is gathering your mother and Commander Bren as we speak."

"My mother?" Arduri asked moving closer. "Why?"

"It appears your father is the one in command of the Vanari ship." Jomann answered her. "We must go quickly."

Sadi grabbed Ne'Veha's hand and kissed Janae's cheek. "We will speak more when we return." She said as Lu'ria and Carisia were already heading out the door.

Eliani kissed Janae's cheek as well, and then moved for the door stopping in front of Jomann. "You could not tell me that when I asked you Captain?" She hissed softly as his wonderful jasmine coffee scent filled all of her senses and her head and made her body tingle.

Jomann pushed Eliani's delightful maple and wheat scent to the back of his mind as he looked into her burning green eyes. "I could have Princess." He answered.

"Then why didn't you?" Eliani snapped.

Jomann shrugged his broad shoulders. "I chose not to." He stated before turning away from her and heading down the corridor.

CHAPTER SIXTY-THREE

1.4 LY FROM ONTAHE

ONE AU INSIDE ICALRO ALLIANCE SPACE

INTERDICTOR-CLASS DROW GUARDFORCE CORVETTE

VLOS VELVE

They were built by Tareif's order.

Tareif wanted to insure that the Drow he now called daughter could go anywhere unseen and quickly and well protected. Aihola was as much a daughter to him and Palina as Tarifa and Zaala and he would see to it that they were protected. The design of the ship was quickly put to the side as both Tarifa and Aihola now had a single LEONIDAS IIA-Class Strike Cruiser that was dedicated solely to them by the man who called them sister. To insure that the design did not go to waste Tareif conferred with Lynwe and it was decided that they would become the ships that the new Ilythiiri KyorlFashka would use exclusively. True to the nature of the Drow as fighters, the INTERDICTOR-Class Corvette was sleek, extremely deadly and nearly invisible to known sensors. When the Ilythiiri KyorlFashka went somewhere, this is the ship they now used. Two dozen were built and they would remain exclusively under the control of the Drow Queen, seven of them having undergone extensive refit in the last two years and outfitted with City Ship 41 based computers and weapons as well as propulsion systems. In some respects they were nearly as deadly as the AUTUMN MOON Attack Frigates.

He stood to the side of the dimly lit room; his amber color eyes narrowed to slits but absorbing far more light than was being put off as he watched one of his men conduct the interrogation. His arms were crossed over his broad chest, his shimmering white hair shoulder length and tightly braided along the edges of his four inch high elven ears. His name was Am'uur of the Family Antalya, and he was now the older brother to a Drow Elf Princess of the Lycavorian Union who was also now the first pureborn Drow wolf to ever live. Am'uur let his mind wander to his younger sister by a good twenty-two years, but her face and curious nature always made him smile. He alone among their brothers and sisters felt that Lu'ria was meant for far more than the normal life of a Drow warrior, and he had been very right. King Martin Leonidas was revered among the Drow, nearly as much as their Queen Aihola, for it was by his actions and his faith alone that the Drow still continued to exist. He could have destroyed them so many years ago for what a few foolish leaders had done, but no matter what had stayed his hand, he alone was responsible for the resurgence of the Drow as elves and truly a species all their own. They had paid back that faith he had in them in droves and now the Drow had three thriving cities on Earth they called their own, their population was booming and they had fully come into the future with the guidance of Queen Aihola. She had shown them what they could have with her love of the High Elf Queen and now established Governor of Sparta. Aihola had shown them what corporation and trust and respect could bring to them, and the Drow as a people had accepted that with open arms. They were no longer an insular people or faction of elves that so many feared. Now they were well respected members of an immense society with a reputation of tradition and culture that was tremendously respected and admired throughout the entire Union.

They were also held and feared in the same light as the Durcunusaan everywhere within the Union when it came to being warriors. The Guardian of the Line had created them to be most like the Spartans of old, and they continued that mystique even now. Species came to the Drow from all over the Union to train and learn the skills that the Drow were masters of. Many knew that over the course of the last twenty five years the Drow had been at the spearhead of every operation King Leonidas took part in. His faith in them was unwavering, and his sense of Drow culture was unmatched. Perhaps it was because he considered their Queen a Blessed sister as he made so well known, but there was much more that drew the Drow to revere him as they did. And now his son, a young man that was rapidly gaining the same respect and admiration among the ranks of the Drow had taken his sister as his mate. Androcles had changed Lu'ria, saving her life by making her wolf, and in the process forever sealing the connection between the Leonidas family and the Drow. They all knew how Lycavorians viewed their mates and wives, especially those who were born and raised on Earth, and were referred to as Lycavorian Spartans. When his mother Daba had contacted him and advised him of what had taken place, of what she had witnessed and heard Androcles Leonidas say and do in order to save his sister Am'uur knew. That he had three other mates besides Lu'ria and he was out here looking for the fourth woman who would share his and Lu'ria's life mattered not to him. His mother had told him how Sadi, Carisia and Ne'Veha treated Lu'ria, what they called her. She was their Drow Mistress and they made no bones about that to anyone. The question of whether Androcles could love them all never entered his mind, for Am'uur was well aware of how King Leonidas viewed his Queens and the utter devotion and love he showed all of them.

The moment Aihola had come to him with Androcles's request Am'uur hadn't blinked an eye. Within an hour of her request he had loaded his team into VLOS VELVE and they were racing into The Wilds. A two hour long briefing by Androcles himself had told them what they needed them to do. A mission similar to many they had conducted before and that all of them were superbly trained to perform. There was no hesitation on the part of any of his men or women, the love they all carried for King Leonidas was rapidly spilling over to his oldest son for his actions were no different than those any Drow would take. That he had spoken to them personally, in the ancient Drow language, these were the things that instilled trust and loyalty in the Drow. He knew far more of Drow culture and tradition than Am'uur realized as they spoke and this impressed not only himself but his entire team, including the four hundred year old grizzled Drow Master sergeant who was his second in command and had fought beside Andro's father on Earth.

Am'uur watched as that sergeant pushed back the head of the Kochab mercenary that they had captured just inside the Icalro Alliance border, his JAL-14 Limian transport was docked under VLOS VELVE's ventral hull and hidden by the Shroud they operated. They had detected the mercenary ship from outside the border, and knowing that the Kochab were among the most numerous pirates and slave runners, they realized that he must have just off loaded whatever cargo he had been carrying. His slave ship was rigged for just such a mission with a dozen six by six cells secured in his cargo hold and the data pad they had discovered showing his personal account on Talbor Seven now overflowing with twenty-five thousand credits. They had quickly eliminated the four other crew members, two Evolli and two other Kochab, Am'uur knowing they needed only one to get information from and that was the pilot and captain. Am'uur saw his sergeant turn to look at him and he motioned into the corridor with his head. He crossed to the door, punched in the code and then stepped into the corridor, followed by the sergeant with short white hair. Am'uur was at the taller spectrum of elves with his five foot eleven height, his body a solidly built two hundred and ten pounds of Spartan like definition. He wore the Drow scout armor that all of his team wore and preferred and it conformed to his powerful frame as he turned and looked at his sergeant.

"Talk to me Ledok." Am'uur said as he turned and the door closed behind his sergeant and locked.

"We will get no more out of this scum Am'uur." The equally tall Drow warrior stated plainly. "Kochab are notoriously weak minded and this one is no different. He is useless to us now."

"So it's Ontahe?" Am'uur asked.

Ledok nodded. "I asked him the same question six different ways Am'uur." Ledok spoke. "The answer was always the same. Ontahe."

Am'uur nodded. "Makes sense... relatively close to the border and harsh enough to scare most curious individuals off. What exactly did he say?"

"He just delivered twelve Limian females to Ontahe. The southern continent has what he says is a large slave redoubt buried within a mountain." Ledok answered. "It has holding pens, an auction center and even a large resort area for buyers. He didn't know exact numbers, but probably at least three hundred guards and an equal number of slaves either being held for the next auction or who are forced to work within the two brothels this resort area operates. The man who runs the operation is a former Overseer of the Tranicon Criminal Empire Am'uur. One of those that ran The Wilds before King Leonidas laid waste to their organization."

"Did he know which one?" Am'uur asked.

Ledok shook his head. "According to this fool... he rarely makes appearances unless it is for large auctions. And then only briefly."

"Did he see any of these Vanari females that Androcles asked us to find Ledok?" Am'uur asked.

The Drow sergeant nodded his head. "At least four but he has heard rumors of probably a dozen more that are kept in this Overseer's personal stock."

"Vith uns 'aa! That many?" Am'uur exclaimed.

Ledok nodded. "I made sure the number he stated was correct. Like I said... he has seen four but he knows that the Overseer has at least a dozen more kept within his residence that he uses to bribe and extort wealthy visitors. The ones he saw all had dark hair Am'uur and there is no way to confirm if one of them is this Caliria.”

“Still... if there are that many then Androcles was right and they have been using this route through Bontawillian space for some time now.” Am'uur said.

“It would appear so. They are very popular according to him, these Vanari females, and they command six figures for an evening.”

Am'uur looked at him wide eyed. “Six figures?” He gasped.

Ledok nodded. “Only the Overseer owns them right now and he is very careful about whom he allows to use them. According to this Kochab wael the Overseer utilizes them as the entertainment within his personal resort. Forces them to dance and pleasure one another in front of hundreds and he charges preposterous amounts to view this, but people pay. Am'uur... he says there are three Lycavorian Business people there now. They arrived just as he was leaving and he got a good look at their ship. They are part of Acamarian Engineering Corporation.”

“AEC?” Am'uur stated. “Didn't they just sign a new Defense Contract?”

Ledok nodded. “How do you think the Prince will respond when he discovers that bit of information?”

Am'uur nodded. “I do not want to begin to guess.” He said.

He motioned with his head and they began walking down the short corridor to the double doors which slid aside as they approached. They walked into the expanse of what could only be described as a Command and Control area. Two other Drow on his team were standing at a star chart, another one sitting at the computer station. The tall Lycavorian male and female were leaning over the holographic chart of the planet Ontahe. Ancheo and Emulia were his flight team. Since there were still a large number of Lycavorian mercenaries wandering about within The Wilds, Ancheo and Emulia not only flew the VLOS VELVE, but they acted as forward support and observers when Drow operators could not go into a place because there were no elves. They had been his flight team since he had taken command of the VLOS VELVE and they had pulled him and his Drow team out of many tight spots in the past.

Ancheo looked up from the plot board as they came up. “Ontahe is one foul place.” He stated.

Am'uur nodded. “No doubt why these particular scum chose it.” He said. “What do you have Ancheo?”

“The northern continent is almost uninhabitable.” Ancheo began as he pointed to the board. “The temperature averages minus fifty degrees Celsius on a warm day, minus ninety on a bad day. The southern continent is better, between minus 5 and minus 3 during the day. Nights are in the minus ten to minus twenty range. There are a couple of medium sized settlements on the southern continent near the equator according to long range scans, but nothing very big.”

Am'uur nodded. “The better to keep the facility hidden.” He said.

“No one in their right mind would take a vacation here.” Emulia spoke as she reached across the board. “If the Kochab's info is right... the secondary entrance is here inside this supposed tavern inside the southern most settlement...” She stated pointing to the image of the single story building on the end of the desolate looking settlement. “While the main entrance and where they receive their cargo and ships comes in through a massive ice plate that they remove when contact is achieved and payment is made to enter the facility. That is three clicks northwest of the settlement. That is where the base of the mountain begins.”

“How old are these images from our Intelligence probes?” Ledok asked.

“Nine months.” Ancheo answered immediately. “Best we could find. The probes move along Shrouded but they are very slow so there is less chance for them to be detected. Takes one almost two years to do a programmed circuit.”

“Considering the weather conditions I doubt they will have moved much within the settlement.” Am'uur said as he leaned over the board. “There does not appear to be any heavy equipment parked around the settlement buildings.”

“I concur.” Ledok spoke.

“We can't just use this Kochab's codes and ship Am'uur.” Emulia said. “And rolling up in our ship is bound to raise more than a few eyebrows. It's not everyday you get a visit by a Union warship. I'm thinking that wouldn't go over well.”

Am'uur chuckled. “No it would not.” He said. “Did we get anything on thermal mapping sensors?”

Ancheo nodded. "A lot." He stated changing the configuration of the plot board. "The facility itself is huge. Four square kilometers and at least five to seven different levels within the mountain."

Am'uur looked at him with wide amber eyes. "Four square?" He asked. "Ancheo... this is no way station facility then."

Ancheo shook his head. "No... it's a very large and well organized operation. This Kochab midaeus says there are only three hundred guards? No way they could cover the entire place with three hundred. And if what he told Ledok is accurate about resort facilities, it fits with what our sensors have detected."

"He could not lie under the drugs Ancheo." Ledok spoke.

"And he probably didn't." Emulia stated. "Three hundred is more than likely all he saw. If this operation is as big as this facility tells us it is... then there are going to be a whole lot of guards and security. More than we can handle anyway. Ancheo and I could go in as AEC big wigs maybe. Do a recon mission." She offered.

Am'uur shook his head thoughtfully. "Androcles told me not to risk our team no matter what we found. There may be Kavalians here since it appears they have had illicit dealings with some of these groups through the years and he does not want us to endanger Queen For'mya." He said softly. "Besides... if there are already Lycavorians inside this facility who are AEC, and word reaches them that you are present, they will make you immediately. AEC is not that big of a company and very few buyers could afford the initial entrance costs to even get this close."

Emulia looked at him. "Did he... did he tell you anything about the Queen?" She asked.

Am'uur met her eyes and shook his head slowly. "Only that they have made clear they will kill her if any attempt to find her is made."

Ledok shook. "There may be Kavalians here... but they would not bring the Queen here." He said. "Queen For'mya is too well known."

Ancheo looked up now. "Am'uur they wouldn't bring her... they wouldn't sell her to this Overseer would they?" He asked.

Am'uur met his eyes and quickly shook his head. "I know what it is you are thinking my friend... both of you..." He glanced at Emulia. "And you need to put it out of your heads. No one in their right mind would try and turn her into a whore just for profit. They know who she is and it could not be done."

"No one ever said the Kavalians were smart." Emulia snapped softly. "And there are a lot of people out there who would love to get their hands on any of the Queens as their plaything and they would pay anything."

"No... they took her for some other purpose." Am'uur said thoughtfully. "It is the only tactical move that makes any sense. To keep Prince Androcles and others from retaliating for what they have done. I... the Drow... all of us... we adore all the Queens Emulia, but in this circumstance we must stay focused and conduct our mission. It is equally as important. When we find her... then we can get our retribution for the Kavalians believing they can take her."

Emulia nodded. "Avoi." She muttered.

"Why would these AEC people be here?" Ledok asked now. "They could not bring these Vanari females into the Union; slavery ranks right up there with rape as far as Lycavorians and our elven brothers and sisters are concerned. And word would spread quickly if they were within Union space. There are many who dabble in illicit activities in the Union, but even they would not dare attempt slavery. And there are far more citizens of the Union who adore the King and Queens than those who do not. If all they were interested in is finding bed mates, why come here when Talbor Seven is far more inviting and has many beautiful females of every species?"

Emulia snorted. "Then they are involved somehow." She stated with distaste in her voice. "Involved with this Overseer who is in charge."

Am'uur nodded. "That would seem to be the most logical answer." He said. "The next question would be... knowing how the King and we view slavery of any kind as Ledok has said why would they risk discovery and come here all at the same time? That seems rather odd if they are trying to keep a low profile."

Ancheo looked at him. "We know that look Am'uur." He said. "You think they are part of the leadership don't you?"

Am'uur nodded his head. "Or they are here to do more than just dabble in flesh peddling and admire the arctic view of the planet."

“If this Vanari we search for is going to be the mate and wife to Androcles... then she will be a mate and lover to your sister Am'uur.” Ledok said evenly. “You know how he views Lu'ria... I saw it in his eyes when he briefed us Am'uur. He is like his father in that regard and he views all of them as precious gems. His gems! And they see Lu'ria as their Drow Mistress. This Vanari female, this Caliria, if she is to be part of that with them, part of their lives, you know how they will respond?”

Am'uur nodded his head in agreement. “Yes I do Ledok.” He stated evenly as he looked at his team. “I also know he will not allow the other females the Kochab scum referenced to remain there either. The Icalro Alliance have most definitely broken the agreement with the King by bringing these Vanari females into this quadrant through Union space and they will pay. Androcles will also want to know about these AEC people for it appears now as if they are involved somehow.”

“So what's the plan?” Ancheo asked.

“Get VLOS VELVE as close as we can to Ontahe and run every sensor scan that we have the ability to run Ancheo. Right down to Seismic Level and Deep Graphic Thermal sweeps.” Am'uur spoke. “He will not want us to risk trying to enter this base so I will contact him and tell him what we have learned. I imagine within a day or so after that he will be here with more than enough force to destroy this facility and make the Icalro Alliance regret ever having allowed this to happen.”

“Sibfla!” Ancheo blurted. “No bet against that here.”

“What about our Kochab guest?” Ledok asked.

Am'uur looked at him. “You have gotten everything from him yes?”

Ledok nodded. “His brain will be d'naubol now Am'uur.” Ledok replied. “No better than a vegetable.”

“Then execute his pathetic ass and give his remains to the cold of space.” Am'uur stated calmly.

CITADEL ONE

Coren paced back and forth on the bridge of CITADEL ONE angry at himself that they got caught and he was responsible for the position they were now in. Fully a hundred warships were now within five million kilometers of CITADEL ONE and no contact had been received from this Imror person in almost an hour. Arden and Lyrew were standing beside the sensor operator as he tried to get a better picture of the ships that had arrived in the area, one of them a sister ship to the colossal RAVEN'S WINGS that remained in position half a million kilometers above CITADEL ONE. Lilonus sat quietly at an unused engineering station, the look on his face one of amusement on their current situation while Jokros seemed intent on something at the computer station he was monitoring. Coren turned to continue his pacing and found Tastia standing directly in front of him.

“I can't believe you and Ardan actually authorized this mission and then didn't give Captain Lyrew the entire story of what to expect Coren.” She said softly.

“Tastia... now is not the time.” Coren spoke looking at her.

“When is the time Coren!” She snapped at him. “Your actions could have very well cost everyone on this ship their lives!”

Coren glared at her. “Devra and my children went behind my back in coming here! The SBR would never have approved this and you know it!”

“They came here after your daughter Coren!” She hissed at him. “Doesn't that mean anything to you?”

“Our laws have been in place for centuries!” Coren stated. “Any attempt to retrieve a Vanari female taken by the Syndicate will result in the Syndicate taking punitive action against our colonies! My wife knows that! As do my children!”

“Devra is no longer your wife Coren!” Tastia spoke harshly. “And the more I see who you really are... the more I understand why.”

“I know who she is!” Coren hissed back at her angrily. “And do not presume to know me Tastia! We have only been together four years... that is all!”

Tastia looked at him with wide eyes at his statement. “Excuse me?” She gasped. “Those four years together does not grant me some measure of respect and knowledge of you Coren? Perhaps... perhaps my mother has been right all along.”

“There... there is much that you do not know or understand yet Tastia. You are still very young and...” Coren stammered knowing he had slipped in his tone and words. “Please... forgive me my words.”

“What... what if that was me Coren?” She asked quickly. “What if I was the one who had been taken instead of your daughter? Would you come for me or leave me to my fate in order to keep appearances with the SBR?”

“Tastia...”

“Answer me damn it!” Tastia barked.

Coren’s eyes narrowed and he was silent for a moment. “I will not answer that question!” He snapped right back after a moment. “It has no bearing on our current situation!” Tastia’s eyes filled with a sadness that Coren had never seen before and he stepped closer to her. “Tastia you...”

Tastia reached up and placed her small hand on his chest to keep him from getting closer. “No.” She said softly. “I... I knew this side of you existed Coren, even before we joined, I had just never seen it before. Now I am not so sure I want to see anymore.”

“You would never be in this situation Tastia because you do not assume and act without thinking and you don’t act irrationally!” Coren spoke.

“Irrationally?” Tastia said.

Coren nodded his head. “What Devra and my children have done is irrational and the repercussions could be very wide ranging. They have placed our people in great danger Tastia, you know this!”

“Wanting to rescue your child is not irrational Coren. That is what I do know and I am not even a mother.” Tastia said.

“You know what I mean!” He hissed.

“Do I?” Tastia said looking at him. “You just told me I don’t know you Coren. Or was that a different you that spoke those words?”

“Coren... come here!” Ardan spoke urgently from across the bridge.

Coren glanced over at him and then back to Tastia. He reached up and stroked her cheek. “We will talk about this at a later time.” He stated. He leaned over and kissed her cheek and then turned to cross the short distance to where Ardan stood. “What is it Ardan?”

Lyrew looked up. “We have intercepted some sort of briefing going on right now from Earth.” He said quickly. “It is going out all over what they call their Netnews so it is on an open frequency.”

Coren looked at him. “They didn’t jam our communications?” He asked surprised.

Lyrew shook his head. “No. And we have been scanning the ships in the area since they began arriving without hindrance. It’s almost as if they want us to know these things.”

“What is this briefing about?” Coren asked.

Ardan tapped his nephew on the shoulder. “Lyrew... put it up on one of the monitors.” He said.

Lyrew nodded and touched his COM officer on the arm. “Do it. And put it on speakers!”

They all turned as the large monitor towards the front of the bridge came alive with the image of the elf female and what appeared to be hundreds of others, some from species the Vanari had never seen before.

“...under the impression the Cease Fire between the High Coven and the Union was very legitimate.” The elf female spoke eloquently. “As Talon Guardians it was within the prevue of the King and Crown Prince Androcles to accept the Coven request to train their dragons without the knowledge of the Union Senate. While the entire Union Senate was not aware of this, Prime Minister Deia and the members of the Union Senate Security Council were aware of this. As all of you know, our Bonded Pairs are not trained in offensive tactics. This is not something that the Elder Mother or King Leonidas would allow after what took place on Enurrua. Everything they learn is defensive in nature and this is the knowledge we passed on to the High Coven dragons.”

“Dilaen we have seen hours of footage from the Evolli War that clearly shows they were involved in active military operations.” The male spoke evenly. “We have seen Mjolnir’s Hand engaged in fighting as well as countless other Bonded Pairs.”

Dilaen nodded her head. “Yes... their skills and abilities as Bonded Pairs gives them unique support skills to our forces on the ground, and as with any portion of our military, they do not train to conquer others.” She lifted her hand. “I will not debate the details of their training regimes since they are public knowledge. All I will say is that not since they became respected and honored members of our Union have any of them acted in a manner that goes against what the majority of our citizens believe and follow. In many cases they have gone out of their way to uphold what we hold dear. As for the Kavalian claim that we were training the Coven dragons to engage them in combat, they certainly have no proof to support their claims, only conjecture, false rumors and lies.”

“And the reports of Queen Anja’s decision to not grant them healers...”

“Queen Anja made her decision based on the known history and factual intelligence of the Kavalian Empire and their record concerning females of their own species and many others. We have seen reports of what they have done to High Coven females and civilians and we know first hand what they are capable of from their attack on Gamji twenty-five years ago.” Dilaen answered. “The vast majority of Hadarian Healers are all female as you know... and based on how Kavalians view females of any species... she was not willing to put Union citizens at risk given that history.”

“Did she consult with the Hadarian Arch Ministry or Elder Council in this decision?” The man asked. “The Ancient Hadarian Medical Oath, signed after declaring themselves free of the Coven and becoming members of the Union, this clearly states they will not deny treatment to any injured individual no matter the species.”

Dilaen nodded her head. “Yes I’m quite sure she is aware of what it says Donlar. She made this decision as Queen of the Union, not the Queen of Hadaria.”

“So there is truth to the claim of Elder Buonau that she was putting the policies of the Union before the policies of Hadaria.” Donlar spoke.

Dilaen met his eyes sternly. “If you wish to infer that putting the lives and the welfare of Union citizens, namely our Hadarian Healers before a Medical Oath, that this position is somehow wrong Donlar, then I challenge you and Channel 71 to defend that position. As well as anyone who agrees with you.”

“I’m not trying to infer anything Dilaen. I’m only asking a question that many people will want the answer too.” Donlar spoke.

“Then I suggest Donlar... that you and Channel 71 carry your collective asses to the Hadarian Embassy and ask those men and women there these same questions! Ask the Hadarian people who live here on Earth and within the Union how they view Queen Anja’s decisions! I understand that Channel 71 is a Hadarian funded channel Donlar, but you will not use this forum to question the policies of Queen Anja.” Dilaen barked loudly stunning many of the gathered reporters with her burst of anger. “For the last two weeks they have been fielding urgent requests from family and friends to find a way to get other family members off Hadaria and out from under the theocratic rule that the Arch Ministry and Elder Council have instituted. They have been fielding countless offers of support and help from every Hadarian Healer within the ranks of the Union Military as they establish and maintain Queen Anja’s government here on Earth. Why don’t you ask these questions of the over three million Healers within our ranks, none of whom answered the demand and order by the Arch Ministry and Elder Council to return to Hadaria by the way. Why don’t you ask the Hadarians how they view their own Queen and the unlawful actions that have now made her exiled from her own planet!

I am here to give you answers to what is happening within our Union right now. I am not here to give you or anyone a public voice to extol your discontent or disagreement with policies that Queen Anja or anyone within the Royal Family or the Union Senate have instituted for the benefit of our people. And I will certainly not allow you to infer there is truth in something when there is not. Everything I am telling you now is solid fact! It was Androcles’s decision to allow this so that our citizens know what is happening and what their government is doing in response. I will not deal with the hypothetical and I will not allow you to either. If you have a question that is based in fact then ask it and I will answer it, if you wish to deal only in conjecture and rumor then sit your mida down and shut up or I will yank your credentials and have you thrown out of here so fast it will make your head spin!”

Everyone saw the elven female who had caught the initial battle and assassination as it was happening stand up and raise her hand. Dilaen caught the motion and turned to her. “Yes Me’alla?”

“Dilaen... I... I was there in Old Sparta. I noticed that all of these Kavalians assassins were very similar to Princess Athani in appearance.” Me’alla asked. “They did not have the usual physical similarities to Kavalians as we know them. They look... well they look like us! Could you discuss this in detail and as a follow up... do we know if there are any more of them still here on Earth? And will these actions in any way reflect on her status?"

Dilaen shook her head immediately. "I will address the last part of your question first." She stated. "The actions of the KFI in no way reflect on Princess Athani. She is a Princess of the Union now, wife to Prince Resumar. Her life is just as threatened as any among the Royal Family, perhaps more so because she chose to defect and lead a life free of the oppressive treatment of Kavalian females. If this issue came up Androcles was very clear on what my response was to be. Athani is now a Leonidas, a member of the Royal family. She is in no way involved or associated with these actions and anyone who implies this, no matter the manner in which it is done; they will answer directly to Androcles and his family." Dilaen took a deep breath. "Now... as to the other parts of your question, we know that..."

Ardan looked at Coren. "Coren? What do you make of all this?"

Coren met his eyes. "I think it shows us exactly what many of us have believed from the very beginning." He answered. "They are a violent and unpredictable species Ardan... and we need to be extremely cautious in our dealings with them."

"Forgive me Regent Re Mydala..." Lyrew spoke. "But from what I can see they have just been attacked and had thousands of their citizens killed to include their King. Did you know of this before we departed Vanari space?"

"Lyrew?" Ardan snapped.

"No uncle... I need to know now! This is my ship and my crew and I need to know if they are at risk!" Lyrew stated firmly. "Did you and Regent Re Mydala bring us into this situation knowing the current atmosphere?"

"No they did not." Lilonus spoke from behind them watching as they turned to face him. "They knew only that events were precarious within the Union Commander Lyrew. It is all any of us knew... and that is why I was waiting for the Director General to contact me. As I stated earlier, Captain Imror informed me of what has taken place, and this is the only reason that they are reacting to our arrival in this manner."

"Do you know what they were talking about Ambassador?" Tastia asked moving forward to stand next to Lyrew. "The elven female was speaking of dragons and Hadarians and Bonded Pairs. What does all this mean?"

Lilonus shrugged his broad shoulders. "I have no idea... and that is why I have counseled caution every since leaving. Advice that has been ignored I might add and that is why we are in our current situation."

"The Director General... our intelligence..." Lyrew spoke. "All of it has led us to believe that the faction of your species here in the Alpha Quadrant were far less advanced than they are. That they were not as refined as your people within the Protectorate."

Lilonus shook his head. "That is a fallacy that your Board of Regents has embraced and nurtured through the centuries Captain. It is not something we have ever endorsed. And we, those of us within the Protectorate, we are the faction not the other way around."

"What do you mean Ambassador?" Tastia asked.

"Just what I have said." Lilonus spoke. "They have not limited your computers or sensors Captain. Have one of your many technicians tap into their public Network and discover for yourselves." Lilonus said.

"Discover what?" Lyrew asked.

Jokros turned from the station where he sat and stood up holding up the data pad in his hand. "Discovered what I have discovered, by doing exactly what the ambassador suggested we do Coren." He announced as he moved towards them. "The United Lycavorian Union, as it is called, encompasses two thousand three hundred and fourteen very diverse worlds in at least a hundred and eighty-five different planetary systems! Their population at their last census was in excess of thirty-one trillion lifeforms!" He held the data pad out to Coren.

"By the Grace of the Four Prophets!" Tastia exclaimed in stunned shock as Coren took the pad.

Ardan looked at Lilonus who appeared just as astounded as everyone else. "Did you know this?" He demanded.

Lilonus shook his head quickly. "No. We knew... we knew they were large... but this is beyond anything we ever imagined."

“They... they dwarf the Vanari Empire by more than half!” Lyrew stated in shock.

“This King Leonidas that was assassinated...” Jokros continued on looking at Coren and not so sure of their mission anymore. “He is the great grandson of the Pralor Sumar Coren. The man Wayonn has told some of our people about, to include Devra. This is knowledge that we had from Wayonn since he was friends with this Sumar, but knowledge we never thought to discover because of what we have always believed the Lycavorians to be. This King Leonidas is the grandson to King Resumar of the Lycavorian people that we are also familiar with Coren, the one who led their people before and during the time of what they call The Black Day. The one who was their leader during the time of their slavery to this High Coven. This comes from Protectorate history as well as from the history cubes Wayonn first gave to us. This information we have had for millennia and no one ever thought to discover it!”

“I never have read about the history Wayonn gave to us, it didn’t seem important and Wayonn never told us of this! The actions of the Lycavorians within the Protectorate speak for themselves Jokros!” Coren snapped as he looked at Jokros. “Wayonn never told us that this man had come to power!”

“Perhaps he did not know.” Ardan offered. He looked at Lilonus. “Ambassador?”

Lilonus shook his head again. “I did not know this.” He said. “If I had... I would have been more vocal in my attempts to tell you to use caution.”

“He has only been in power for twenty-seven years if this data is correct.” Jokros said. “He has fourteen children from five different Queens... and if everything I have read in the last hour is accurate Coren, all of them are revered by the vast majority of the people in this Union and respected by everyone else.”

Tastia looked at Coren. “This Androcles the elven female referred too several times. He must be the oldest son...” Tastia looked at Lilonus now. “The one you said this Lycavorian Captain would contact?”

Lilonus nodded. “That is my guess.”

“How many of these broadcasts can we monitor?” Coren asked.

“There appear to be several hundred channels that are available.” Jokros answered.

“We should have people monitoring them.” Coren suggested. “Find out as much about them as we can. Everything from how their government is formed to the size of the military. This may be information that is vital to how we act and respond.”

“Respond to what?” Lilonus asked in disgust.

“If they refuse to return Devra and my children!” Coren snapped.

“Are you...”

“Captain! The Lycavorian ship is hailing us!” The COM officer barked as he turned in his chair.

Lyrew turned. “On the main screen! Now!”

They watched as Imror’s face once more appeared on the large monitor. “I have been told to inform you to select eight individuals to accompany you, Ambassador Lilonus among them. You will board a transport and then transit to my ship immediately.” He spoke.

“For what purpose?” Coren asked.

“To discuss your unwelcome incursion into Union space fool!” Imror growled. “You will bring no weapons Regent Re Mydala. None. Is that clear?”

“Are Regent Devra Re Mydala and my children on your ship now?” Coren snapped.

“That is not a concern of yours!” Imror barked.

“And if we refuse?” Ardan asked.

They watched him shrug his broad shoulders. “You can do that if you choose.” He said. “In that event however, your ship will be impounded and your crew detained until such time as we can return you to wherever it is you came from.”

“We will not surrender to you!” Coren hissed.

“That is your choice of course.” Imror stated plainly. “In which case the same scenario as I mentioned before would apply. You should feel lucky Regent Re Mydala, after what has happened I was surprised that the Prince would offer to take you prisoner should you refuse. We do not normally take prisoners.”

“You... you don’t take prisoners?” Tastia asked in shock.

Imror’s face and tone softened considerably when he answered her. “No... we do not Milady. We have found for the most part that they are more trouble than they are worth. It is harsh I know, and perhaps even barbaric by your standards whatever they may be, but it is who we are.”

Jokros stepped forward. "Coren... Regent Ardan... we could gain much by cooperation now." He stated swiftly. "We are no match for them militarily... not with the number of ships that surround us. If you wish to see Regent Devra and your children again Coren I suggest we do as he says."

"They could take us prisoner!" Ardan exclaimed now. "Just as they have Devra and her children!"

"By the Prophets Ardan!" The female voice sounded from the monitor and they turned to see Devra's stunning face and figure step up next to Imror in the transmission. "Stop being such a politician and get on a ship and come over here! We have much to discuss Ardan and we are discovering more every day!"

"Devra!" Coren exclaimed looking at her. "Devra... are you hurt? Have they touched you?"

"Coren Re Mydala you be silent! You have already recklessly risked the lives of the men and women on that ship with your ignorance." Devra snapped harshly. "These people are not our enemies and nor have they ever been. If you would open your eyes even a little you would see that!"

"Devra..." Coren began.

"Ardan Vu Lamurrian... I ask you to utilize the wisdom and demeanor you are known for and come here so that we may talk with Androcles." Devra said. "There is much going on that we are not aware of as I said and it now concerns our people as well as the Lycavorians. Please."

Ardan had always held Devra in high regard and that was something that would not change regardless of the Vanari laws she had broken. She was extremely intelligent and very insightful. "You speak of this man as if you know him Devra?"

"I do. I have seen him every day since we entered Union space. I have sat with him and talked of many things." Devra answered. "Ardan... they are not our enemy and they never have been."

Ardan was silent for a long moment before nodding his head. "Very well Devra." He stated. "We will come over."

"Thank you." Devra said.

Lyrew stepped forward. "Captain... your crewmember who was seriously injured? How is she?"

"Princess Eliani is here now treating her." Imror spoke his tone now more neutral in its demeanor. "She will recover. I thank you for asking about her Captain."

"With your permission I would like to accompany those who transit to your ship Captain. I wish to apologize to her personally for my actions." Lyrew spoke. "They were ill-thought out and we were unaware of the current situation with your Union."

Imror stared at the man for a moment. "That is not necessary." He said finally.

"Perhaps... but I would like to do it regardless." Lyrew stated. "With your permission of course."

Imror looked to the side as if he was talking to someone else and then he turned back and nodded. "Very well." He spoke. "Your ship will be locked the entire time so please do nothing foolish. RAVEN'S WING out!"

Coren looked at Ardan then. "Ardan... what are you doing?" He asked.

"If this is how we must get Devra and your children back then so be it Coren." Ardan said. "It is the only way and you know it."

Coren was silent as he stewed in his own anger before looking up at him again. "Who do we take with us?" He asked.

Ardan looked at Lyrew. "You have Cadre Officers aboard?" He asked.

Lyrew nodded. "Yes."

"They will go with us for security." Ardan stated. "We must hurry! Every moment that passes the chances grow that either the Syndicate or someone from the Board of Regents will discovered that we are gone and where we have come."

RAVEN'S WING

"Thank you Captain Imror." Devra said.

Imror bowed his head to her. "Lady Devra."

Devra turned to Arduri as the transmission ended and Arduri stepped close to her mother. "I've never seen father so angry mother."

Devra nodded. "Neither have I. And I question where that anger is coming from. And why?" She answered as she took Arduri's hand. "Come... we will wait for them with Androcles and the others in the conference room. He said there was a transmission coming in that we should see."

"You saw Tastia mother?" Arduri asked as they began to exit the bridge.

Devra nodded. "Yes I saw her." She stated as they entered the lift that would take them to the lower decks. These ships were easy to navigate in the manner they were laid out and when she and Arduri arrived on the RAVEN'S WINGS they found that they would not need an escort to go places on the ship. It appeared Androcles Leonidas trusted both of them completely now that they had been among them for these past days and seen who they truly were. Devra had no intention of betraying that trust. "Why?"

"It... it is an insult to you for father to bring her." Arduri said quickly with some heat in her voice.

Devra smiled. "Why?" She asked.

"She... she is not any older than me mother!" Arduri announced.

"Your father is a grown man Arduri." Devra said. "Who he chooses to share a bed with is not my concern and it hasn't been for many years. Besides... I have my own prospects."

Arduri looked at her mother. "It is Bren isn't it mother?" She asked.

Devra met her daughter's eyes. "Is it that obvious?" She asked.

Arduri smiled. "Yes... to me."

"I don't know what it is Arduri." Devra said softly shaking her head. "Just being... just being near him is exciting. He exudes power and confidence but also compassion and devotion. He told me..."

"What?" Arduri prodded her.

"Arduri... he told me he was going to make me his Arduri. That he was going to make me his mate. His wife." Devra said with an almost wistful and excited tone in her voice that was easy for Arduri to detect. It was something she had never seen from her mother and it made her very happy. "He told me he would pursue me until I saw for myself that I wanted him just as badly as my scent told him I did."

"Do you mother?" Arduri asked. "Do you want him?"

Devra looked at her. "Arduri... for the first time in my life I have to consciously insure that I do not secrete any Alkay near him. Just being next to him excites me in a way I have never felt before. Even more powerful than when your father and I first married. It is... it is almost frightening."

"You fear him?" Arduri asked surprised.

Devra shook her head. "No... that's just it. I... I fear the emotions and desires he brings out in me."

Arduri met her eyes. "There is something I have heard several times since we came here mother. First on Androcles's ship and then again on Earth. Never fear the unknown, for you don't know what treasures it could bring to you."

Devra leaned over and kissed her daughter's cheek. "Thank you Arduri." She said softly squeezing her hands. "Thank you."

The short range Vanari could carry twenty people easily and was used primarily for ship to ship and ship to surface traveling. All of them had been glued to the side windows as they were guided into the cavernous Starboard landing bay on RAVEN'S WING. They could see dozens of TEMPEST and DEVASTATOR fighters lining the sides of the bay, as well as several extremely capable looking craft that could only be ground support ships. They were all very surprised at the advanced design of the different fighters as well as the completely smooth and efficient operation of duties within the landing bay. Coren and Ardan sat together while Jokros sat with Lilonus. He alone was beginning to see things that the others did not because of his years of experience and he found Lilonus very willing and open to talking with him. Lyrew sat with three of his senior officers, all of them female Vanari and extremely easy on the eyes. They were Vanari Cadre Officers, the best trained and skilled when it came to intelligence operations, but it seemed that Lyrew was giving them orders they did not like. When their ship was finally secured, the side hatchway was opened and the stair ramp lowered and they saw the dozen or so armed Lycavorians in matte black body armor the likes of which they had never seen before. The body armor was like a uniform and conformed to their bodies almost like a second skin. Their weapons were not pointing at them, but you could tell by their stern expressions that they would not tolerate any problems. As they all stepped down onto the deck they saw Director General Dutkne step between two of the soldiers as they moved aside for him without pause, bowing their head slightly as he passed.

“Director General Dutkne!” Lilonus almost shouted as he stepped forward cautiously.

Dutkne greeted him with a smile and an extended hand which grasped Lilonus’s forearm. “Ambassador Lilonus... I should have expected they would involve you in this.” Dutkne spoke. “Welcome to the Lycavorian Union.”

“Sir... I... we had no idea you were on this ship!” Lilonus spoke.

“I wasn’t until about thirty minutes ago.” Dutkne answered. “This is a little side trip that we did not intend to make.”

Lilonus looked at him. “We?” He asked softly. “Wayonn? The others? They are not with you?”

Dutkne shook his head. “We all have a purpose to serve.” Dutkne spoke. “As much as it burns my mida to say that. My grandfather and the others are doing what is intended for them to do. I came with Androcles.”

“The... the Prince?” Lilonus asked softly.

Dutkne nodded as he turned and looked at Coren and Ardan. “Regent Re Mydala. Regent Vu Lamurrion. So very good to see you both. How was your trip?” Dutkne spoke stepping up to them.

“Where are Devra and my children?” Coren demanded.

“Always charming I see Regent Re Mydala.” Dutkne spoke sarcastically.

“You kidnapped a Regent of the Vanari Empire, my daughters and son and several other Vanari citizens Director General Dutkne!” Coren snapped. “Then you brought them half way across the galaxy into an area of space that is forbidden to us! You do nothing for the relations between our governments that you say you so want sir!”

Dutkne nodded. “Yes... I’m quite sure that just breaks your heart. It is almost the same as you firing on a Lycavorian Union warship without provocation Regent Re Mydala! Whose brilliant idea was that might I ask?”

“Enough of this!” Ardan snapped. “Where is this Captain we are supposed to meet so that we can gather what we came for and leave?”

Dutkne ignored him and looked at Lyrew now. “You are the Commander of CITADEL ONE?” He asked.

Lyrew nodded his head. He had other ideas moving through his brain and none of them concerned what Coren and Ardan were here for. Like Jokros, he was beginning to see that perhaps if they opened their eyes a little more they would discover that these Lycavorians could be powerful allies and friends. “Yes. It was my order that was followed and caused us to fire on this ship and I am sorry. I am Captain Lyrew.” Lyrew said.

Dutkne nodded and turned his head to the young Durcunusaan soldier directly behind him. “Lieutenant Peus will you escort Captain Lyrew here to the medical bay. I believe Captain Imror is already waiting there for him.”

The Durcunusaan nodded his head without hesitation. “As you order Ephor Dutkne.” The soldier stepped forward and motioned with his hand towards the starboard doors that lined the bulkhead.

Lyrew looked at Coren and Ardan for a moment before Dutkne stepped in once more. “Captain Lyrew... if we had wanted any of you dead you would already be dead and your ship a smoking hole in space.” Dutkne spoke. “You asked to see the woman your actions injured and the Lieutenant will take you there.”

Ardan nodded his head finally and Lyrew turned to follow the Durcunusaan officer. “I will hold you personally responsible for my nephew’s safety Director General Dutkne!” He snapped.

“I’m sure.” Dutkne spoke rolling his eyes.

Lilonus looked at him. “What is it that he called you Director? Ephor?”

Dutkne nodded slowly. “I don’t know exactly how it started but the Durcunusaan began calling me that several days ago. It is the name of ancient Greek advisors from the time of Andro’s Spartan ancestors.”

“Durcunusaan?” Lilonus said softly. “Wolves of the Blood.”

“The Royal Guard.” Dutkne answered nodding his head. “Some of the finest trained and experienced men and women I have ever seen. This way please and be quiet when you enter the briefing room... there is a communication already in progress.”

Dutkne waited for them to start across the deck and then moved in front of them leading them to a large Pilot’s Briefing Room on the bottom level of the bay just off to the side of two rows of TEMPEST fighters.

There was a brief moment of adjustment as their eyes focused in the dimmer light of the briefing room and then Dutkne directed them to a row of comfortable seats behind where several women already sat. As Coren got closer to the front row of seats he saw Devra and Arduri easily by their hair and the color of their skin and he came up short. They were sitting between an unknown blond woman and a dark skinned female with long white hair and long pointed ears that marked her as an elf of some sort.

“Devra! Arduri!” He exclaimed loudly moving past Ardan and Tastia without thinking and pushing both of them slightly to the side. Ardan did not take offense at this motion, but the look on Tastia’s face said she did.

Andro had been sitting on the edge of the large table closest to the holographic image of Lu’ria’s brother Am’uur and he turned his head at the interruption of their conversation and Am’uur’s report.

“Stand by Am’uur.” Andro said as he got to his feet and watched Coren push his way past two Durcunusaan soldiers and come around to the front row of seats as Devra and Arduri stood up. Coren looked at them oddly, seeing them dressed in the same type body armor uniform that all of the guards and Dutkne seemed to be wearing. He embraced Arduri quickly, squeezing her in his arms even though she did not seem particularly happy about his embrace.

“Are you hurt?” Coren exclaimed holding her at arm’s length. “Have they injured you?”

“Injured us?” Arduri exclaimed. “No father... they have not injured us! Why would you ask such a thing?”

Coren pushed Arduri fully to arm’s length and let his eyes fall to Devra. “This was an insanely foolish act Devra! What were you thinking when you did this? Do you realize what I have had to go through to come here?”

“No one asked you to come here Coren. I certainly did not need you to come here... I’m doing quite well on my own thank you.” Devra told him. “And I tried to discourage Arduri and Naesta from coming but they would not hear of it. They care about their sister.”

“Arduri and Naesta are too young to make that sort of decision and you know it!” Coren snapped.

“I came of my own free will father.” Arduri spoke up quickly as she pushed away from her father’s embrace and brushed his hands away. “Naesta did too. And I do not like that you imply we are not intelligent enough to make that decision for ourselves.”

“I said you were too young to make that decision!” Coren barked. He glared at Devra. “Do you realize what you have done? You have put our entire species at risk with this foolhardy action Devra!”

“I know exactly what I have done.” Devra snapped right back as Bren began to rise to his feet from where he sat directly behind her.

No Bren. Andro reached for him within Mindvoice. Let her handle this... she is more than capable. Bren met his eyes and nodded his head slowly returning to his seat.

“I came in search of our daughter Coren Re Mydala! Something you were obviously not willing to do! And I do not intend to leave without her.” Devra snapped at him.

Coren shook his head. “It is too late for Caliria and you know it! The... the drugs they use to break our females will have already begun to work their hideous side effects! We can do nothing to save her Devra.”

“We do not know that!” Devra exclaimed passionately. “There are people here who can help us! They are called Hadarians and they are almost magical in what they can do medically! They can heal her and so many others!”

“It is not possible Devra!” Ardan spoke coming forward now. “And we risk too much in order to try!”

“Ardan and I came to retrieve you and our children Devra! We must leave now and return to Vanari space before it is discovered by others on the SBR or the regular Board of Regents where you have gone and why.” Coren said.

“I have no intention of leaving Coren! Not until Caliria is safe and back with those that love her. Not until she is back with us!” Devra answered firmly standing her ground. “I will not abandon my daughter to her fate as you so easily do! I refuse too!”

“Devra... you risk your seat on the Board of Regents!” Ardan stated. “Your son and your daughters risk their careers and their futures with these actions. Nirilo may be forgiven... he can say he was forced to accompany the Lycavorians here because of his position as liaison. You and your daughters were not. You came with them willingly.”

“I care nothing for my seat on the Board of Regents!” Devra growled. “I wish only to retrieve my daughter and I will do just that regardless of the consequences! Our people have been insular and distrustful of others for too long, and this is why the Syndicate knows they can get away with their hideous actions. They know we will do nothing! I am done doing nothing Coren!”

“This is no time for games Devra!” Coren growled. “We have already risked more than we should have by coming here! We can force you to return! We...” Coren stopped and looked around quickly. “Where are Naesta and Nirilo?” He asked. “They are not with you?”

“No they are not.” Devra answered calmly. “They are doing whatever it is they can to help in getting their sister back! And you can not force us Coren... remember that!”

“Where are they?” Coren demanded. “Are they being held prisoner?”

Devra looked at him and shook her head. “You are such a fool Coren.” She stated plainly. “You dismiss your own daughter for most of her life for some supposed defect in her genes because of her dark hair and when she is captured and then broken by Syndicate scum and sold into slavery, your first thought is not for her life but your status on the Board of Regents! You make me sick Coren! What I ever saw in you is beyond me.”

“You are breaking our laws!” Coren almost screamed. “By coming here you could very well set the Syndicate upon our colony worlds and they will unleash their poison missiles on them. They will...”

“Perhaps you should be more concerned with how this syndicate has found its way into this quadrant of space sir!” Sadi spoke now as she got to her feet. “They seem to be far more wide ranging than you first thought.”

Coren looked at her. “I do not need political advice from a Lycavorian female! Sit back down whoever you are!” He barked.

“Coren... how dare you?” Devra exclaimed as she reached up and slapped him squarely in the face rocking his head back with the suddenness of the blow and the force it carried. “Sadi is a Princess of the United Lycavorian Union. How dare you speak to her in such a manner of disrespect? She is the anome, the wife and mate to Androcles Leonidas!”

“I will speak to her however I deem necessary to get my children back so that we can leave them to their wars and violence!” Coren snarled as he rubbed his cheek and looked at Sadi. “You know nothing of my people or what we endure!” He snapped at her again causing Sadi to raise her hand and stop the three Durcunusaan soldiers standing along the back wall from shutting Coren up in their own way while shaking her head sadly.

“Your arrogance is unbecoming sir.” Sadi spoke evenly unfazed by his outburst. “And very insulting towards your daughter and Lady Devra. As for me... I have been called much worse by far better men than you.”

“I do not care what you or your kind think of me young lady!” Coren growled. “Where is this Captain Imror? I wish to find out where my children are and leave this area of space as soon as possible!”

“Captain Imror is in the Medical Bay with the woman your fool actions injured Coren.” Devra snapped at him, her green eyes blazing with anger.

Coren ignored her and turned around looking for someone else to shout at and his eyes fell on Andro where he stood beside the table watching everything that was happening with a slightly annoyed expression on his face. “You there boy!” He barked out. “Find me the Captain of this ship or someone in authority who will act on my demands.”

“Father stop this!” Arduri shouted as her eyes went wide. “You do not know who you are...”

Coren ignored her and moved closer to the tall Lycavorian with oddly colored blue eyes. “Did you hear me?” He snapped when Andro didn’t move.

“Oh... I heard you.” Andro spoke now his voice calm. “It’s kind of hard not to hear you sir! You sound like a Folcani mud hog with a broken limb bellowing like a baby. You don’t honestly believe all this screaming and shouting is accomplishing anything do you? Aside from giving me a growing case of vada readur mida that is.”

Coren’s head whipped around when he heard the Lycavorians within the room chuckle at this young man’s words. He turned back to Andro and glared at him, the look bouncing off him with little effort. “I demand that you put me in contact with someone in a position of authority!” He barked. “I will not abide citizens of the Vanari Empire being held against their will by people with whom we have a non-aggression pact with.”

Andro turned his head and looked at Dutkne as he moved towards him. "Forn intus regovar." He said.

Dutkne shrugged his shoulders as he stepped up beside him. "Don't say I never warned you about anything Androcles." He stated as he looked at Coren. "Excellent job Regent Re Mydala, insult the Crown Prince of the Lycavorian Union and his anome all within minutes of each other! That type of arrogance takes a lot of practice you know."

Coren's eyes grew wide in disbelief when Dutkne mentioned the name and he looked quickly between Dutkne and Andro before his eyes remained on Andro. "You are... you are Prince Androcles?" He stammered.

Andro smiled at him though his smile held no humor to it. "Last time I checked." He stated. He leaned over to Dutkne. "How long ago was that?"

"Ten seconds maybe." Dutkne answered. "Twelve if you really stretch it."

"Is this humorous to you in some form young man?" Coren demanded as his eyes grew wider.

"The events of my life in the past few weeks have been anything but humorous Regent Re Mydala." Androcles stated crossing his arms over his chest. "However, your petty arrogance and blowhard skills are providing an exceptional distraction right now."

Devra could barely hold back the yelp of laughter she wanted to release, while Tastia, Ardan and Jokros looked on in disbelief at his statement, all of them for different reasons of their own. Lilonus simply shook his head and moved to one of the pilot's chairs and settled into it happy to watch the show and filled with pride that he was here among their people who they had thought lost so long ago.

"You dare disrespect me?" Coren gasped.

"You will find sir, that I will treat you exactly as you treat me and others. Among my people Coren Re Mydala... for what you said to my anome, it would be very acceptable for me to stomp you into the deck of this ship." Androcles said stepping closer to him now. "That is something I won't do right now however. Perhaps several lessons in manners from your former wife are in order."

"You do nothing right now with your threats of violence but reinforce the knowledge my people have of yours Prince Androcles." Coren snarled.

"I don't particularly care what you or your people think of me or my species Regent Re Mydala." Androcles stated. "I have many people a lot more fearsome than you who don't like me very much... and trust me when I tell you that list is going to get much bigger in the coming months. You can take a number and get to the end of that line if you like, or you can start acting like the even minded politician and diplomat that Devra and your daughters have said that you are! Or were they wrong when they said that about you?"

Coren's coarse reply never came out as his eyes grew a little wider and he stared at Andro. "What?" He finally asked.

"I do not care what history you have with the Protectorate Regent Re Mydala." Androcles said evenly as he looked at him without blinking. "If what Dutkne has told me is accurate, then it was a mistake of monumental proportions on the side of the Vanari that started the war you had with them. And it is my understanding that the man who started this war still serves among your military. I can overlook that however, for that war took place over ten thousand years ago, long before you or Dutkne or I were ever born. Long before any of us in this room were born I believe. It is not our history and it does not have to be our future moving forward. Unless you wish it to be."

Ardan moved up beside Coren now, his eyes on Andro. "What are you saying?" He asked softly.

"I'm saying that you and the Vanari can cling to the preconceived notions that you have obviously made and adhere to of my people, most of them formed long before our time... and in many cases very wrong..." Androcles dropped his arms and folded his hands behind his back casually. "You can cling to these notions sir, in which case I will do two things. Dutkne has informed me that as soon as the Protectorate Parliament discovers that the Lycavorian Union has returned to the way my grandfather intended us to be, they will dissolve their government within a week and they will be absorbed into the Union."

Coren and Ardan looked at Dutkne. "This is true?" Ardan gasped.

Dutkne nodded. "The Protectorate was never the true collection of our people." He stated softly. "We have always been the faction that escaped the Black Day and the oppression that followed. I have tried to make that very clear for many years, and it has been ignored by you and the entire SBR. It is within our constitution that when our brothers and sisters here within the Union had finally returned to the instincts and passions of our past while balancing the future of our people, the Protectorate would be no more and we would be united as a people. So yes... it's very true Regent Vu Lamurrion."

Coren looked back at Andro. "And... and what will you do?" Coren hissed softly.

"It's quite simple really, the Vanari and the Protectorate have upwards of thirty-six major Trade Agreements that are equal to roughly four trillion in profit annually for the Vanari when converted from the Lycavorian Riyal to the Vanari monetary currency of Kanari, is that not correct?"

Coren looked at Dutkne quickly and then back to Andro. "Yes, the figures are somewhere near that." He answered.

"Even with how you regard my people you still conduct trade with them for it benefits the Vanari. A substantial trade I understand. That's very convenient for you Regent Re Mydala since the Protectorate needs your trade goods." Andro asked.

"Yes." Ardan said haltingly.

Andro nodded his head. "If you do not wish to associate with Lycavorians... then we will not associate with you since that is what you seem to want. If you are not willing to look past what you think you know about my people, as wrong as it is, then I have no use for you and nor do my people." He said. "When the Protectorate is fully part of the Union, which will take only weeks from what Dutkne has told me, I will buy out the remainder of these Trade Agreements with the Vanari Empire and I will cancel them. Permanently. You will have what you so want it seems, and we will go forward since the Union can more than adequately replace what you trade with them for."

"You wouldn't dare!" Coren hissed.

Androcles smiled. "Ask anyone you care to Regent Re Mydala... I am not a politician and I will do what is in the best interests of my people and those who call the Union home." He answered. "If that means negating every agreement we have with the Vanari I will do it. And I won't think twice about it. The Vanari will still be able to travel freely within Protectorate space and I will even allow them entry in Lycavorian Union territory, but we will not be trade partners in any way shape or form."

"You... you would end thousands of years of open trading and partnership?" Ardan gasped.

"I will end a one sided friendship sir." Androcles corrected him. "Dutkne has told me how my people are viewed by many on your Board of Regents, and the brief conversations I have had with Wayonn only confirm this. As my father and mothers would not have tolerated it... nor will I."

"You... you threaten us?" Ardan gasped.

Andro shook his head. "Not at all. I'm merely telling you how it will be."

"Unless we bow to you?" Coren growled.

"I only want you to listen to me. Listen and perhaps take the blinders you wear off for a moment and see that we are not like you believe us to be." Androcles said. "That perhaps there is more to my people than what you have always believed."

"And if we choose not too?" Coren snapped. "What will you do? Kill all of us?"

Andro's smile was anything but pleasant. "If I had wanted you dead Regent Re Mydala... you would already be dead as Dutkne has already stated once." He spoke. "If you do not wish to listen to me then I will return you to your ship. You will then be escorted to the border of Union space where you can jump back to the Beta Quadrant or remain within The Wilds. I don't care which. But if you attempt to enter Lycavorian Union space uninvited again for any reason, that will be seen as a hostile action and I will act accordingly. You would not like my response."

"Then you are threatening us?" Ardan spoke.

"You may call it a threat... I call it a choice." Androcles spoke.

"You will return Devra and my children immediately?" Coren asked.

"Lady Devra and your children are welcome guests within the Union and they are under my protection while they are here. They have come to me asking for assistance in a certain task, assistance which I am providing to them. The choice will be theirs, but I promised to give them that assistance and I will do just that." Andro answered.

"I will not leave Coren!" Devra spat. "I will not leave until I have my daughter back and you will not force me too!"

"Nor will I!" Arduri exclaimed.

Coren turned to look at them. "You risk everything you have Devra!" He shouted. "Your seat on the Board... your status among our people!"

"Caliria's life means more to me than any of that Coren!" Devra barked at him. "And if you were any kind of father it would mean more to you as well!"

"I must think of all our people!" Coren shouted back. "Your actions could well mean the Syndicate will retaliate against us! Against our people! Not against these... these Lycavorians! Do you wish that on your head?"

"Why would they retaliate against you Coren?" Dutkne asked now. "We are no longer in the Beta Quadrant. The Orionis Syndicate has expanded their operations here to the Alpha Quadrant and they have enlisted the aide of several Criminal Organizations that already have a long history with the Union. That is a risk they took by coming here and dealing with these organizations, and now the one that holds over a dozen of your females and quite possibly your daughter Caliria, they have violated an agreement with the Union about transporting slaves through Union space. How does this affect the Vanari Empire in any way?"

"They could blame us for any action you take!" Ardan exclaimed now. "They have eyes and ears everywhere within Vanari space! Even on Austrova! And the damn Eridiani protect them religiously."

Andro looked at Dutkne. "Eridiani?"

"Humans." Dutkne told him. "Humans that left Earth long before the Comet ever came. They settled in the Beta Quadrant and have built a considerable empire of their own with dozens of planets and a thriving economy. Protectorate and Vanari Intelligence agree that they are also the true power behind this Orionis Syndicate. Or vice versa."

"Humans Dutkne?" Andro asked surprised by this information. "Humans control this Orionis Syndicate?"

Ardan Vu Lamurrion prided himself on being able to read people and the look on this young Lycavorian's face told him that this Androcles had no idea of what they were talking about, and if he ability was any good it also told him that he did not look pleased at this information. He stepped closer until he was beside Coren, his eyes never leaving Andro's face.

Dutkne nodded his head. "They are technologically very advanced. They have managed to genetically enhance their people to survive and live among the stars. They are no different than those humans here on Earth, they have just adapted themselves better to life off of a single planet. Something the humans within the Union are just discovering. There are probably some here on Earth who are descended from the Eridiani that returned to Earth two hundred years before the Comet came. This Admiral O'Connor and his wife Tina that you have told me of are the mostly likely candidates and after seeing President Taylor on the Netnews I would say he is as well. I was going to brief you about them before we got sidetracked with Janae and rescuing her."

Androcles looked at the deck for a moment. "Interesting." He said finally. He turned back to the holodisc where Am'uur stood waiting patiently, a small smile on his handsome ebony face. "Am'uur can you get close enough to focus your sensors sufficiently and then tell me how many humans are on Ontahe?"

"Stand by!" Am'uur spoke turning to someone off the transmission grid.

Andro turned back to Coren. "The choice is yours Regent Re Mydala." He said softly. "I suggest you make it now."

"Yes." Ardan spoke suddenly causing Coren to look at him as he stepped forward further.

"Ardan... what are you doing?" Coren exclaimed.

"If he can provide us information that we did not have before then it is worth the risk to remain here and discover what we can." Ardan replied thoughtfully. "He is right Coren... this can not be turned back on us. We are not within Vanari space and we have no control over what they do. He will do it anyway." Ardan looked at Androcles. "Won't you?"

Andro nodded. "Yes I will."

"Then we should see what he can discover." Ardan spoke.

"It is too great a risk!" Coren protested.

"We are not within Vanari space and the risk is not ours." Ardan said. "I believe it is acceptable."

"Thank you Ardan." Devra spoke.

“Do not thank me Devra Re Mydala.” Ardan spoke sternly as he looked at her. “Your actions will not be without consequence and neither will your children’s. At the very least you will lose your seat on the Board of Regents and at the worst, you will be imprisoned and your children with you when you return.”

Devra didn’t blink an eye and nodded her head. “Then so be it.” She said softly.

I have no intention of returning regardless. My future is here. She thought to herself and made the decision easily and it filled her with peace. She did not need to turn to look at Bren to know what was going through his mind or feel his powerful presence behind her.

“Ancheo is realigning the sensors Androcles.” Am'uur spoke again. “In the meantime you should know that the Kochab we captured and interrogated was very helpful. He saw four of the Vanari females himself and is certain of at least a dozen more hidden away here. He says the facility is controlled by a former Overseer in The Wilds.”

Andro’s azure blue eyes grew a little wider. “Which one?” He asked.

“That he didn’t know. Apparently he does not appear very often.” Am'uur stated. “They were all cowards to begin with.”

“With the price your father put on their heads my love I’m not surprised.” Sadi spoke as she came up next to him and took his arm in her hands.

Andro nodded as he looked at her. “No doubt.”

Tastia watched as this stunningly beautiful blond haired Lycavorian pressed up to the side of Androcles Leonidas in a very intimate manner regardless of who was in the room watching.

“This place is where my daughter is?” Devra asked coming up beside Sadi now.

“Given the coordinates your daughter Naesta had that you were going to originally jump to Lady Devra... I would say yes.” Am'uur said. “We picked up a faint fusion traces at these coordinates and it could have only been made by a ship with a Fusion Drive of some sort. They appear to be similar to our new Hyper Matter engines Androcles.”

It was Tastia who spoke next causing everyone to turn and look at her. “What sort of fusion trace?” She asked.

Am'uur’s amber eyes lifted to gaze at her and even from within the exceptionally clear image of the holotransmission their amber color caused Tastia’s breath to catch softly. Tastia had never seen eyes like his, nor a man with shimmering white hair that fell past his shoulders, and she found herself staring.

Am'uur tore his own eyes away from the Vanari female and looked at the data pad in his hand. “A Quantum Particle fusion trace Lady...”

“My name is Tastia.” She answered without thinking.

“Tastia!” Coren hissed at her. “Be silent!”

“Then it was a Quantum Particle Fusion Drive Lady Tastia.” Am'uur finished. “And do not tell her to be silent fool! She obviously knows what she is talking about and you dishonor her with your words! Is this the way you treat all of your females? We should send them back now Andro...” Am'uur stated. “They will only end up getting hurt with the arrogance that oozes from their pores.”

Coren turned to the image and opened his mouth to reply looking at Andro. “Who is this man that he thinks he can talk to you in such an informal manner and refer to us as he does? He does not know us!”

“He is the brother to Lu'ria Leonidas Coren Re Mydala.” Dutkne spoke shaking his head and stepping over in front of Lu'ria and Carisia who were rising to their feet in reaction to his words. “Another Princess of the Union and mate to Androcles. You are simply working wonders with your political skills Coren. Perhaps you should quit while you are still standing.”

Lu'ria stared at Coren as she stepped up to Andro. “We are going to the Mess Lounge my love.” She spoke turning to look at him and Sadi. “I do not think I can stand the pompous attitudes any longer.”

“Nor can I.” Carisia snapped.

Andro nodded to both of them and he leaned over to kiss both of them softly, nuzzling their ears. “We’ll see you soon.” He said. Sadi shared a brief kiss with both of them and then Lu'ria and Carisia left the briefing room holding hands, Ardan and Coren watching them with wide eyes. Ne'Veha stood up now and perched her firm bottom on the table closest to them and Sadi smiled and responded to the obvious taunt. She stepped between her legs and felt those legs curl around hers and pull her close as Ne'Veha slid her arms around Sadi’s waist and she leaned against her.

You are so bad SirsanGai. Sadi whispered within Mindvoice.

I know... but ever since my father I thoroughly enjoy acting in this manner around those who think they are better than us. Ne'Veha answered.

Tastia was the one who spoke and brought them all back to the present after witnessing what Ne'Veha had done. "The Orionis Syndicate ships use a Quantum Particle Fusion Drive Coren." She stated calmly looking back at this strange and exotic man in the transmission with new interest. "They either do not have the resources to build a Hyper Matter Phased Quantum Drive like ours or the Protectorate's or they lack certain pieces of required technology. Their technology is not as advanced as ours when it comes to propulsion." She looked at Coren. "If this is what they followed then it is definitely a Syndicate ship."

Coren turned his eyes to Andro then. "Do all your people act like this?" He barked.

Andro shrugged his shoulders. "Within the Union you are treated as you treat others Regent Re Mydala." He said honestly. "If you act like an midaeus to others, that is how you will be treated." He turned to look at Devra. "Devra... this is the ship you were tracking when you came across Dutkne. The one that carried Caliria?"

Devra nodded. "Naesta was certain." She said.

Andro turned back to Am'uur. "It's still there Am'uur?"

Am'uur nodded. "Our sensors can not penetrate the shielding of the docking bay area but there are no trace particles leading away from Ontahe as they were coming in."

"Nine!" The male voice called out and they watched the Lycavorian man come into the transmission. "We're detecting nine human lifeforms Andro!"

"That is the standard crew complement of a Syndicate transport ship." Jokros spoke now moving forward as well.

"Andro we've moved close enough to the planet to intercept common chatter from within the underground facility to the secondary base on the surface. They have been talking about a large slave auction in three days time, which fits with what the Kochab told us."

"Where is this Kochab person now?" Ardan asked. "Can... can we ask him further questions?"

Am'uur shook his head. "I'm afraid not. He had a bit of an accident."

"An accident?" Ardan asked.

"Yes... it seems the drive coils on his ship were not properly aligned and they exploded shortly after he left our dry dock connection." Am'uur answered. "A pity really."

Sadi was the one who could not hold in her snicker. "You have not changed from how our Drow Mistress describes you Am'uur." She spoke.

Am'uur smiled at her and shook his head. "No... it appears not."

"Three days?" Andro said thoughtfully.

"Yes."

"Am'uur... retreat back to the border and formulate a plan." Androcles stated. "I will leave tomorrow night under the cover of darkness. We will meet on the border at twenty-three hundred hours three nights from now."

"Personnel?" Am'uur asked.

Andro turned and looked at Bren. "Bren? One company of RD?"

Bren nodded immediately. "That should be sufficient." He stated. "By then Denali and Arrarn will be back and since we can not take Elynth or Aradace to the surface because of the cold, their skills will be needed. Elynth and Aradace can remain in the STRIKERS that will provide support."

Andro nodded and turned back to Am'uur. "One company of Durcunusaan RD Am'uur." He said. "My brothers Denali and Arrarn, Lu'ria and Carisia with us on the ground, Sadi and Ne'Veha in the air with Arrarn."

Am'uur nodded. "I will have it ready for you. Androcles... there is something else."

Andro met his eyes at the odd tone of his voice. "What?"

"Three senior executives from AEC are here Andro. Lycavorians. They arrived several hours ago." Am'uur spoke. "I do not believe it is a coincidence."

"Why?" Andro asked and both Ardan and Coren watched him move even closer to the transmission with a serious expression on his face.

“Emulia ran them through the database.” Am'uur answered. “Two of them are from the R&D Division of AEC and the other is an Executive VP. Not the types of individuals who would come here.”

Andro nodded his head slowly. “I will have Marci look into it.” He stated. “Be ready Am'uur.”

Am'uur nodded. “Always.”

Androcles turned as the transmission went dead and he looked at square at Coren and Ardan. “Decision time.” He said. “We are going to rescue those Vanari prisoners and I will fulfill a promise to Devra. You are either going to come and observe or you will be sent packing right now.”

“The Syndicate men there?” Ardan asked. “What do you intend for them?”

“I don't care who they are... they broke our laws and they will be punished. Period.” Andro answered. “After some extensive questioning of course.”

Ardan nodded his head. “We will accompany you.” He said.

Andro stepped up to him and Coren then and nodded his head. “Very well... but know this both of you. I am unlike any Lycavorian you have ever come in contact with. If you betray me, there will not be enough left of you for anyone to find. If you endanger this mission I will insure that you are ventilated out of the nearest airlock never to be seen again. If you wish to work together in partnership you will find no more loyal a friend. If you attempt to do to me what you have done to Dutkne and the Protectorate in the past, what you did to his father before him that started a war, you will earn an enemy that you do not want gentlemen.”

“Again you threaten us!” Coren snapped.

Andro shook his head. “No... I'm simply stating fact. We will be returning to Earth in twenty minutes. You are either on my STRIKER or you will stay behind.” They watched him turn and reach for Ne'Veha's hand, Sadi going back to holding his arm. Bren chuckled as he stepped up next to Devra and they all looked at him as Dutkne moved to his right side.

“There is a reason that in many ways he is more feared than his father ever was.” Bren said. “And most were petrified of King Leonidas. Martin Leonidas would have given you a second chance... his son will not.”

“How many... how many wives does he have?” Ardan asked with surprise.

“Four right now.” Bren spoke. “The fifth will become part of their lives in a short time and then they will be complete.”

“Five wives?” Tastia gasped. “Is that not a bit too much? A different form of arrogance?”

Bren did not take offense and looked at her. “In answer to that Lady Tastia I suggest you speak with them. I think you will find that arrogance is not a word that enters into the equation.”

CURILA 6

Wayonn drew his hand away from Martin's chest slowly, breathing deeply and opening his eyes as the ebb of Mindvoice power and influence began to fade from all around them. He lifted his head and saw Martin's dark brown eyes gazing over his shoulder behind them at the door of the empty room, gazing off into some place that Wayonn could never reach. It was something he had seen Sumar do quite often and it appeared that Martin and his son did the same thing as well.

“It is done.” He said softly.

Martin blinked and brought his eyes back into focus and looked at him. “I don't... I don't feel any different.” He said softly.

Wayonn shook his head slowly. “And you will not. With the skills I taught you through the neural booster you managed to shrink the taint to miniscule proportions.” He smiled gently. “You are nearly as powerful as your ancestor Martin Leonidas, as is your son. I haven't felt... I haven't felt such a presence since the day I left Sumar on Lycavore. It is... it is inspiring to say the least.”

Martin looked at him. “Will... Wayonn will I ever act like that again? I... I almost killed my son... I struck two women that I love more than my own life.”

Wayonn nodded. “Yes I know.” He stated. “I don't know how Xaxon is able to transfer parts of his essence back and forth, but he was the equal to Sumar in many respects and he had millennia to discover these things during his entrapment on CS19. No Martin... I do not believe it is possible anymore. You have grown in your focus and ability to concentrate, even in the short time since we last talked, and this only enhances your natural Mindvoice shields. You and Androcles... you have the unique ability to pull from your emotions to enhance your shields. If I tested Aricia... no doubt she would have this same ability. It is why it is so prevalent in all of your children, but more pronounced in Andro, Denali and the twins." Wayonn leaned back fully and got to his feet. "I sense a much more reduced form of this skill within Anja as well, and it is probably why your children with her will have more focused abilities and skills as they grow within Mindvoice. Her Hadarian genes; they must have taken the virus our people transmit and reshaped it in some form within her body. Combined with the blood and genes of her parents it is undoubtedly why Eliani, Retta and Calyb will be closest to your children with Aricia in skill. Though from what I have felt and seen from Helen and Andro all of your children are uniquely gifted. Zarah's skills are a wonder."

"That is because of what Andro did to save her life. Letting her feed on his blood like she did." Martin spoke rising from the chair.

Wayonn nodded. "The majority of the reason yes, but all of your Queens are individually quite gifted within Mindvoice and while these skills may have been dormant somehow until they joined with you, when combined with your blood and genes, you have passed this unique strength to all of your children."

Martin looked at him. "What are you saying?"

"In essence Martin, you and your Queens have created several new species of Lycavorian with the children you have produced." Wayonn said.

"Come again?" Martin asked confused.

Wayonn smiled. "No matter who they take as mates, even of different species, your blood will always be dominant in every way. Anja could probably explain it better for I think she has some inkling already, but it is almost as if they have taken the best of their mothers genes and somehow merged this with their blood and genes from you. No matter who they have children with, this pattern will continue and your blood will never lose its dominance no matter how many generations pass."

"And that's a good thing?" Martin asked.

"Well... to me it is. To others perhaps not." He replied.

"What about... what about Aikiro and Yuri's children?" Martin asked him. "Narice and Lucia? What about them? Can Xaxon influence them as he did me? Will they put my children at risk because of their blood?"

"In Lucia's case I would say no with confidence." Wayonn answered. "Lucia... she was able to harness that part of her that was Xaxon, control it by force of her will alone until she came together with Zarah. Once that happened, once they shared blood as they did, whatever influence Xaxon may have had was washed away." Wayonn stepped closer to him. "They are meant for each other Martin, by some force or higher power beyond our understanding. You don't intend..."

Martin shook his head immediately. "No." He stated with firm resolve. "She... she saved Zarah's life... and almost died doing it. No... that is something I will never try to interfere with now. I don't believe Andro or any of my children would let me now."

Wayonn smiled. "Whether you choose to openly admit it or not, you have always been one to follow a path that embraces the belief in a higher power. Do not dismiss it now." He said. "As for Narice, if Xaxon had held any sway over her, it was lost the moment she tasted Arrarn's blood and realized all she could have and be."

Martin met his eyes. "I still need to kill Yuri Wayonn. None of them will ever be safe as long as she lives." He spoke in a harsh voice.

Wayonn nodded his head in full agreement. "It is my understanding that we have heard nothing from the High Coven since Aikiro's death and Yuri's escape from Earth. I have seen in Andro's mind the injuries he inflicted upon her, and if she has recovered, yes there will come a time when you will need to end her and the threat Xaxon poses forever. Androcles has told me that Intelligence Intercepts from within High Coven space indicate much confusion and power struggles among the senior leadership."

"It won't remain like that." Martin said. "If she is alive... she'll assume control again eventually. Yuri is a hard bitch to kill Wayonn. I've been trying for years."

"Just as she has with you no doubt." Wayonn said. He moved close to him now his face becoming serious. "What malda ideas do you have swirling around in that head of yours Martin Leonidas?"

Martin met his gaze evenly. "It's probably better that you don't know." Martin answered him.

“Martin I... I will not say I know what you are feeling because I don't.” Wayonn spoke. “I do know that you must not act rashly. There is far too much at stake... much of it even I do not understand yet.”

“She is my Kinsoaurgai Wayonn.” Martin said softly. “Part of why I am who I am. There was a time... there was a time when I thought that I could survive if I lost one of them because I have Aricia. Now... they all make up a part of me Wayonn... they all hold a piece of me in their hands. We are all part of a whole and I can't let that go. I will never let that go.”

Wayonn nodded. “That whole is going to get larger Martin.”

“What?” He asked looking at him.

Wayonn shook his head. “You will discover it in time.” He said. “It has already begun really, and those closest to you will accept it fully before you do.”

“What has begun? What are you talking about Wayonn? Don't go all cryptic on me now Wayonn.” Martin said.

Wayonn chuckled. “It does not matter right now.” He said with a smile. “And I will not be cryptic with you. I know that it drives you and your son insane. Just as it does Dutkne. No... now is the time for truth in everything we talk of. What I will tell you is that you can not go off on a rampage to get her back and I believe you know that or you would have already acted in this manner.”

Martin nodded his head slowly. “Anything I do must be carefully planned or my brother will kill her. I know that and I can't take that chance. I won't take that chance. I will not give him reason to make her suffer. If she... if she believes I am dead then she will not try and fight him or try to escape. Pleistarchus would make her suffer before he killed her and I could never forgive myself.”

“Martin... the women you have chosen to share your life with are powerful in their own right.” Wayonn said. “If they were not, they would never have been drawn to you in the first place or you to them. I have seen in your mind and that of your son what you all mean to each other. What you draw from each other. That very same thing is happening with Androcles and his mates as well. It has happened with several others around you. You must put aside the part of you that is wolf and calls for your brother's blood and embrace the man within you. At least for the moment. I know you can do this for you passed this skill to your son. Even now he is holding back the part of himself that wishes to strike out and destroy those who have hurt his family. To annihilate those who have violated his fifth and final wife and mate.” Wayonn saw Martin's eyes grow wider at this knowledge. “He is holding it back and so are you, for it pulses within both of you like a burning sun. I truly do not wish to see it when he releases it. Nor do I wish to see you when you unleash it. Panos was right when he said what he did... you and your son Martin... you are forces of nature when you get rolling and there is very little that can stand before you. For'mya is an essential part of who you are, as all of them are, and you must not do anything to risk that. Not now. No matter how much anger or rage you have seething through you Martin Leonidas; it must be channeled no matter what.”

Martin looked at him. “Wayonn... do you know something?”

Wayonn shook his head quickly. “No... and I would not keep it from you if I did. Not now... now that our people are finally reunited. Something is happening and your brother is behind most of it, driving it, but your brother is not like you and I and your son and others. You know this Martin. He will do things we would never entertain or tolerate or even think of doing for there is too much honor inside us. I believe Androcles is correct in that he is making a play for the throne of the Union and Sparta. Your throne. The one that was intended for you all along this path you have walked. How he intends to achieve this I do not know.”

“What?” Martin said. “What do you mean intended for me all along?”

“Why do you think the events in your life have progressed as they have?” Wayonn spoke. “Everything... all of it... it has been guided and shaped to insure that you sit on the thrones of your grandfather and father and not your brother.”

“Why?” Martin asked softly. “He's my older brother Wayonn. The first of my father's sons. If he hadn't turned traitor he would be leading the Union and Sparta. Not me. Why is it so important that it be me as you say?”

Wayonn turned his head away and stepped away from him to the window that looked out across the green plains. Wayonn could see Torma and Isheeni off in the distance enjoying each other's company as they sat in the lush grass.

“Wayonn?” Martin asked as he stepped closer.

“I believe events are being shaped Martin... have been shaped for millennia... your life, my life, all of it. It’s being shaped for a single purpose Martin. Androcles bonding with Elynth while still in Aricia’s womb. You finding Canth on Ukwav... me discovering Helen still lived. Finding Avi and City Ship 41 on Lycavore. What happened to both you and Andro on Alba Tau? Now the discovery of this ship on Ritaah? The Vanari becoming part of events now at a pivotal time. It’s all part of a larger cycle Martin. A much larger cycle that is coming to a close soon.” Wayonn said softly. “I can’t fully explain it to you for I don’t truly understand it all myself. What I do know... what I feel with all of my being...” He turned and looked at him. “I am still alive for a reason. My mate... my children... they are all gone, yet I remain to guide those who are my descendants. The descendants of Sumar. Shiria is with your son for a reason Martin. It may seem like it to you, that you made a tactical decision to send Resumar to seek out this new ship and take Athani because of whom she was, but something else drove you to send him and not another.”

Martin looked at him. “You’re saying that somehow I knew they would discover what they have. The ship... the rebels?”

Wayonn nodded. “Of all your sons, Resumar is the one who is more politically sensitive yet still tactically sound Martin, an insight passed to him by Dysea. When you combine his gifts with the skills of Athani, which are driven by everything she has discovered since becoming his wife, you have a tandem that can seal any deal but still be strong enough to defeat all but the largest threat. Shiria knew this; she could feel it in him and regardless of what happened on that ship, she would have revealed herself to him no matter what.” Wayonn faced him and moved closer. “The throne of your grandfather Resumar and the throne of your father’s in Sparta... they were always meant for you Martin. Not for your brother. I also believe your father knew this when he appeared to you that day at Thermopylae. There is a reason for all of it Martin. A reason Androcles is almost as loved as you by our people, but feared by so many more. A reason that so many consider Sadi a reincarnation of your mother in many ways, just as Helen has told her. A reason that we have discovered Arzoal is a Pralor... so many different things.” He looked at him. “And there is a reason that the ruling bloodlines of our people from long ago are all returning to be as one now.”

“Wayonn... you are beginning to scare the sibfla out of me.” Martin said.

“Then you are not alone Martin Leonidas.” He said. “For I am scared as well. Something is coming Martin and everything that has happened in the past and everything that is happening now plays a part in all of it. Whether it be to discover new allies... whether it is your son coming out from under your shadow or you finally being free to see all around you as you should, it is all happening for a reason.”

“What reason?” Martin asked.

Wayonn shook his head slowly. “That I don’t know and believe me I would tell you if I did.”

“What do you think it all means?” Martin asked.

“I truly don’t know.” Wayonn said.

“Then indulge me with your feelings Wayonn, because you of all people must have some idea.” Martin said.

Wayonn looked at him and took a deep breath. “I believe a war is coming Martin.” He said softly. “A war that will shape the very foundation of whatever future we will have. The pieces are beginning to fall into place Martin... all of them... and soon they will all be in place and a war unlike any of us have ever seen will be upon us. That is what I believe as terrible as it sounds.”

“Ok... now I’m really scared shitless.” Martin said softly.

Wayonn nodded his head. “I as well. You are the only one I have told this too Martin. I believe... I believe Androcles may have some sense of what I tell you now. He is incredibly perceptive and he hides his thoughts better than anyone I have ever known. His bond with Elynth gives him an edge that even you do not have.”

Martin moved closer to him. “I take it... I take it there is no way to avoid this? This war that is coming.”

Wayonn shook his head. “No matter what we do... no matter how we do it... I don’t believe it will matter in the end. That is why everything we do now... we must return to the true instincts of our people Martin... as your son has. All of your children really. We must be very methodical and cunning and not take anything for granted. We must discover what your brother plans with his Kavalian allies, and then we must stop it. No matter the pain it may bring you... For'mya is meant to be with you. She is part of who you are just as you have said.”

Martin's head tilted to the side and his eyes narrowed. "Why do I not like the way you say that Wayonn?"

"Just remember what you and your Queens have instilled in your children since they day they were born. What you will continue to instill in them." Wayonn spoke. "Even those children you have yet to father." He said seeing Martin's eyes widen. "No matter the pain... no matter the reasons... you will always do what is necessary to safeguard those you love. Blood before all else Martin. Blood before all else. Remember that in the days and weeks ahead." He reached out and placed his hand on Martin's shoulder. "You have no idea how it makes me feel to stand here now. With you. With family. I once thought all was lost and now I see that for everything that was lost during the Black Day and after, so much more was gained. Now... we have much to do."

Martin looked at him intently for a long moment and then nodded his head. "You know... what you just said... it is eerily similar to what Canth told me on Ukwav." He said softly. "That kind of gives me the creeps."

Wayonn nodded his head. "Who do you think taught him what he knew?"

"And Helen?" Martin asked.

"Helen was to be your father's Oracle if you will." Wayonn said. "Events took that away from her... took your father away from her because it was you she was supposed to serve and guide all along and not him. Why do you think it just happened to be Helen that you were returned too as a child? At least that is what I believe. Just as it is my grandson Dutkne who will now serve and guide Androcles. He has already begun that and as each day passes he grows into the role more and more, though I doubt Dutkne and Andro will allow themselves to act in a similar manner as you and Helen. As a pair they are... they are quite unorthodox. You see... everything is coming together Martin. Everything."

Martin took a deep breath and shrugged his shoulders. "Well fuck it! I'll do what I have always done and take it as it comes. Never fear the unknown." He said laconically.

Wayonn smiled and nodded. "Never fear the unknown."

Naesta sat quietly in the chair and watched fascinated as Anja, Ceuma and Sivana worked at the three computer consoles within the spacious infirmary of the Leonidas Retreat on Curila 6. Her eyes kept returning to the long dark blond hair that the clone of Queen Anja had and then kept darting between the three of them. The computers were arranged in a large circular pattern around what appeared to be some sort of receiving station. Naesta had been frightened and very intimidated at first of Martin Leonidas and what she had seen when they had first arrived. She had never had much interaction with any of the many Lycavorians at the embassy on Austrova and in reality the actual physical size of many of them was very imposing to her. It did not help that her father's arrogant and superior attitude and teachings in regards to them had also permeated her mind and she never went out of her way to talk to any of them. Now however, Naesta saw them in a completely different light because of the book Androcles had given her and she had read while coming here and it was eye opening to say the least.

When she had discovered Caliria had been captured, Naesta was beside herself for hours, unable to act or to think rationally. She had looked up to her older sister for her inner strength and courage. Caliria may have had dark hair, but she never once considered it to be a defect of any kind and she fought for the rights of all dark haired females. It was not until her mother and Arduri had arrived that she found her center once more. As she looked at Anja, she remembered her reaction at realizing that her fellow Queen and lover was a captive. She had watched her and the raven-haired mother of Androcles together. They had held each other tightly, wrapped in his arms and they nuzzled Martin Leonidas and each other and then they had set about other tasks. Tasks that would keep them focused and prepare for what Wayonn had told her would take place. They would go after her of that he had no doubt. The wolf within them would never forsake her no matter the reason. While Aricia had gone with their children and her mother to another portion of the massive compound, Anja had come here with Sivana and Ceuma to work on what Naesta had brought from her mother in regards to Vanari physiology and finding a way to cure the Vanari of their curse from the Syndicate.

It was here that Naesta learned that, while Ceuma may have been a clone of the fiery Persian red haired Queen, she was most definitely her own person with her own personality and her own likes and dislikes. She also discovered that Queen Anja and her sister Princess Sivana considered Ceuma their sister by blood. There was no question in either of their minds about whom she was. It amazed Naesta that a clone could be so utterly perfect in every way and she found herself looking upon Ceuma in a fashion that she had never looked upon another woman. Naesta had bedded with other Vanari females during her lone Celebration of the Hundreds and she found it very pleasurable, but since that time she had never even entertained the thought of being with another female. Whatever the reasons for that, Naesta found she could not push the thoughts of being with this clone from her mind.

“Naesta?” Anja’s voice pulled her out of her thoughts.

Naesta blinked several times and shook her head. “I’m... I’m sorry. Yes?” She asked as she came to her feet quickly.

Anja looked at her and smiled. “I’d like Ceuma to give you an examine if that is alright. The information your mother gave to us is an excellent base source, but it would be even more helpful if we could examine you.”

Naesta nodded her head. “Of course... anything I can do to help.” She answered quickly.

Anja pointed to a nearby bed as Ceuma got off her chair. “If you could disrobe and lay on the bed.”

Naesta moved to the side of the bed and quickly began to strip out of her Cadre uniform as Ceuma came over holding a small data pad. Her jade green eyes were focused on the pad and she typed into it quickly as she stopped next to Naesta.

“This is actually my first examine and I...” Ceuma looked up and stopped talking as a heated flush surged across her skin while looking at Naesta standing completely nude in front of her. Ceuma blinked several times as her eyes caressed Naesta’s body. Her denim blue skin was totally flawless without a mark on it. Her breasts were high and firm with small areolas and nipples that protruded upward proudly as if they were begging for attention. Her five foot seven frame was lean and muscular, with a tattoo of a strange blue flower on her right hip, very close to her heated center. A center that was at the moment puffy and fully exposed and was giving off a very enticing banana kiwi scent. Ceuma dragged her eyes back up Naesta’s body quickly. “I... I might take a little longer than Anja or Sivana.” She stammered the last words and part of her sentence. It was Anja who noticed it and she lifted her head to look over at her cloned sister. “If you could... if you could get on the bed.”

Whatever the events surrounding Ceuma’s creation, there was no denying the pull both she and Sivana had toward her and the protectiveness that came from a connection only sisters could have. A clone she may have been, but she was certainly her own person in every aspect. Her healing skills were rapidly increasing with the amount of time they spent with her and Eurin’s prediction that she would not be as strong in her abilities was falling to the wayside quickly. Ceuma was turning out to be a very strong healer and she absorbed information like a sponge. While the amount of healing power she could generate right now was limited because she had not actually ascended like Sivana and herself, Ceuma was definitely showing the signs of being able to do what only Anja, Sivana, Eliani and Retta showed right now. That was to draw from the very life all around her to power her healing ability. Anja Leonidas had also been sharing the bed of four other women for the last twenty-six years of her life and thoroughly relishing in every moment she spent with her fellow Queens and lovers. She was also easily able to detect the spike in Ceuma’s scent. While clone’s did not have natural scent glands when they were created, it appeared because Rinard had turned her so soon after waking her from the chamber she was created within, she was developing scent glands within her body in all the usual spots. Whatever had happened, the fertilization of her clone genes had not fully matured when Rinard bit her and this had caused the more advanced Lycavorian cells like her scent glands to develop at a much slower rate. Since Joci had claimed her with his own bite, his purer blood was speeding up the growth of these glands and Ceuma was developing her very own Basil and lime scent which Anja and Sivana had already committed to memory. Anja knew it was also a scent that was able to drive Joci insane with the sweetness of it because he knew Ceuma was his mate and loved only him. Since Sivana had never been with another woman, she did not notice the spike of arousal in Ceuma’s scent that Anja did. Ceuma had experienced another woman before when Rinard forced Duewa upon her, but it was not by choice and in one of their hours of speaking Ceuma had told Anja she did not enjoy it in the least. That is why Anja’s jade green eyes filled with interest.

Naesta complied with Ceuma’s direction and stretched her lithe frame out on the medical bed as Ceuma stepped closer. Naesta’s green eyes watched her carefully, filled with interest she had never had before, and she found herself having to consciously keep from excreting her oil. She watched Ceuma stretch her hand out over her abdomen and it began to glow with a soft white color and dropped to within an inch of her skin. Naesta watched this with incredible fascination.

“Ready sister...” Sivana called out.

“Yes.” Ceuma answered.

“Call off your findings as you process the information.” Anja stated turning back to her screen.

“Female... categorized as Vanari.” Ceuma spoke as she got control of her own feelings and set the pad on the bed beside Naesta and began to type with her left hand initiating the bed’s medical sensor into operation beneath where Naesta lay. “Internal organ structure 99.3% comparable to bipedal humanoid species. 1.7 meters in height, 58.9 kilograms. RHR is 55, calculating MHR as 225. Blood flow is 98.2 percent of maximum efficiency. Lung to blood Oxygen Saturation is 103%. Bone density is eighty-three percent of the established Lycavorian and Hadarian standards. There appears to be an extra Parotid Salivary Gland that resides beneath the 10th thoracic rib structure approximately 3.3 centimeters in length and 75 grams.”

“Focus on that Ceuma.” Anja called out.

“Enhancing the spectral ratio.” Sivana spoke. “Wow!”

Anja nodded. “Yes.”

Ceuma turned from the bed back to Anja. “Did you find something?” She asked.

“Yes we did.” Anja spoke as she adjusted the imaging on her monitor. “Come see.”

Ceuma turned back and looked at Naesta. “Would you care to see?” She asked.

Naesta nodded. “Very much so.” She answered.

Ceuma motioned with her head and without bothering to reach for her clothes Naesta got off the bed and padded across the cool floor to stand beside Ceuma as Anja adjusted the monitor. Ceuma leaned closer and her eyes narrowed somewhat. “Those are Vibramal cellular compounds!” She said finally.

“Very good sister!” Anja exclaimed. “Yes they are... Level Five Vibramal cells to be exact.”

Naesta looked between them quickly. She was learning that Lycavorians, or those turned by Lycavorians were very open minded and because of how their culture was, they were not as intensely modest as many societies. The females dressed to accent the curves and figures of their bodies and were not worried about having how they dress dictate a reaction from a man. In her short time in Gytheio and at Androcles’s villa she was well aware of his mates and sisters wearing little in clothing, or simple robes with nothing underneath them. They were open about their sexuality because their culture did not tolerate lewd remarks or inappropriate action by males of any kind. Naesta had always hated being stared at by the Eridiani men who frequented Austrova for they would often gawk at the Vanari females and make vulgar comments or gestures towards them. Standing completely naked among these other women did not make Naesta feel uncomfortable in the least.

“I have heard my sister refer to these cells before.” Naesta spoke watching as they looked at her. “My medical knowledge is not as extensive as it should be.”

Anja looked at her. “Vibramal Cellular Compounds are very rare in Union space. Only one species has them, the Sulfar, and they are used in a similar manner as the Vanari. This extra Parotid Gland that you have... this is what regulates the oil you secrete through your pores isn’t it?”

Naesta nodded in the affirmative. “Yes... we... my people call it our Alkay.” She said somewhat sheepishly. “Our level of attraction to someone.”

“And you can regulate what you secrete correct?” Sivana asked.

“It would depend on...” Naesta stopped suddenly feeling embarrassed speaking about this with them.

Ceuma detected this in her and reached down to take her hand causing Naesta to meet her eyes. “You are among friends now Naesta Re Mydala and you are considered a friend or you would never have been allowed to come here.” She said softly. “You do not need to be embarrassed or afraid among my sisters and I.”

Anja watched Naesta stare at her sister and then saw her face relax as she stepped closer to Ceuma. She turned back to Anja. “It depends on how attracted we are to a person.” She said more confidently now. “The more attracted we are to an individual, the more potent the Alkay we secrete. It is more pronounced and persuasive in Vanari females than males, but they can secrete Alkay as well.”

Sivana nodded. “That makes sense; this extra PSG is larger in the females than the males according to the anatomy charts your mother sent to us.”

Naesta nodded. “That is why the Orionis Syndicate holds the sway over my people that they do!” She said quickly. “Our scientists and doctors can not determine what it is about our bodies that this chemical the Syndicate threatens to use can alter in such a way! We tried many centuries ago but were never able to find out. When the Syndicate discovered what we were doing they attacked one of our colonies. They... they sterilized over a thousand Vanari females! Caused their bodies to somehow tell them they were now male, altering their internal chemical balance in some way and essentially sterilizing them! After that we stopped trying to discover a way to cure ourselves! Our leaders... the Regents are too frightened to take action. The Eridiani are very well connected and they have spies everywhere. The Regents fear angering them and they will not allow us to do anymore research!"

"Eridiani?" Sivana asked.

"Humans." Anja answered for Naesta. "Humans who have evolved much more than those who live here on Earth. Higher brain function, heightened physical endurance and abilities. I read all of that part of your mother's report."

Naesta nodded. "Yes. Many of them seem harmless... but they are not. Caliria was... she was seeing one of them before she was taken. She had been seeing him for several months and seemed taken with him for some reason but Arduri and I never trusted him. Eridiani males target dark haired Vanari because they know those of us with features like me will have nothing to do with them. I think Caliria was drawn to him because he paid attention to her, but Arduri and I saw right through it. He was... he has disappeared as well and we do not know if he is the cause or if he was simply killed for being in the way."

"And you believe your sister was close to discovering a cure?" Anja asked gently.

Naesta nodded slowly. "Caliria is three hundred and twenty-six years old and for the last hundred years she has dedicated her life to discovering a way to counter the Syndicate's hold over my people and gain equal rights for those Vanari females like her. With dark hair. She has spent the last decade going back to school for different things to try and learn all she could. My mother believes that the Syndicate... she believes somehow the Syndicate discovered Caliria was doing this work and they took her because she was close to finding a cure."

Sivana moved up beside Anja. "We're not even going to touch that little tidbit." She stated. "The color of someone's hair does not make them who they are. We saw that in the information from your mother. That is simply disgusting."

Naesta looked at them, her eyes finally going to Ceuma. "You can help us can't you?" She asked turning to Anja. "Wayonn... he said your people are almost magical when it comes to medical science and research. Androcles... your son... he promised us he would find my sister."

Anja's jade green eyes grew a little wider. "Androcles promised you that?" She asked softly.

Naesta nodded quickly. "Yes..." She saw the look on Anja's face. "He... he was not telling us the truth was he? I think I would understand... it must be very hard for him right now and he told us what we wanted to hear didn't he? He will not be able to find her will he, even if she is meant to be with them as they say?"

"Meant to be with them?" Anja asked gently.

Naesta nodded. "Sadi and the others that are his wives. They told us... they told us that they could feel my sister and that she was meant to be with them."

Anja's jade green eyes grew a little wider and she shook her head and reached out to take Naesta's hand. "Then if what you say is true young lady..." She replied. "If Androcles Leonidas promised you he would find and rescue your sister then you can rest assured he will do just that. Androcles is like his father in that regard. He has never broken a promise he has made. To anyone."

"That... that is impossible isn't it?" Naesta asked. "To never break a promise?"

Anja chuckled. "I don't think he or his father know how to spell the word impossible." She answered. "No... if that is what he told you then that is what he will do. And if he sent you here then he meant for us to help you and we will."

Naesta felt a great weight beginning to lift from her shoulders and she squeezed Ceuma's hand tightly without even realizing it. "Can you?" She asked. "The chemicals that the Syndicate uses to break Vanari females, it degrades the Neural Synaptic patterns of our brains with extended use. If we do not find her soon... find a cure soon... my sister will become nothing more than a shell and then... then she will die."

"We won't let that happen!" Ceuma exclaimed now catching Anja and Sivana by surprise with the passion in her words. "I promise you we won't let that happen!"

Anja smiled and looked at Ceuma and then to Naesta. "My sister speaks for all of us." She said. "We are stuck here for the time being and working on this will keep my mind off other things. We'll need you to remain with us so that we can run tests and such if that is alright with you."

"To save my sister I will do anything." Naesta said.

"Good... then so will we." Anja said. "We should probably..." Anja's words were cut off by the sound of the doors to the examination rooms opening and they all turned to see Joci moving into the large room his eyes focused on the pad in his hands.

"Lady Anja... Atropos wanted me to insure that you know what the new codes are for..." Joci looked up and his dark eyes went wide at what he saw and he came to an abrupt halt spinning around in a blink so that he faced the other direction.

"Joci my mate... stop!" Ceuma exclaimed as she instinctively moved in front of the very naked Naesta and held her against her back with one hand on her naked hip.

"Sibfla!" Joci barked. "Forgive me! I didn't know... the doors were..."

Naesta found herself incredibly aroused with just Ceuma's hand on her naked flesh and she had to concentrate very hard to keep from releasing her Alkay. As she shyly looked around Ceuma's shoulder at the Lycavorian's back she could not help but take in the powerful ripples of his muscles under the thin shirt, or the incredible dark dreadlock hair that he sported. He was very tall, easily almost two meters in height. Ceuma grabbed the sheet from the nearby bed and wrapped it around Naesta before moving to stand beside her husband and mate. Naesta watched as Ceuma curled her arm around his waist and she looked ridiculously small compared to him.

"Ceuma... the door wasn't locked!" He hissed softly. "I'm so sorry!"

Ceuma smiled up at him and the horror filled look on his face and she leaned up on her tip toes to nuzzle his shoulder and chest. "You didn't know and I forgot to lock the door." She stated softly feeling his aura reach for and wrap around her and relishing in the feelings that gave to her.

He held out the data pad to her. "The new codes for the Command Center." He said sheepishly.

Ceuma took the pad and pulled his face down to hers. "Kiss me." She said seductively, staring up into his handsome face.

"Ceuma... there are..." He protested.

"Better do what she says Joci." Sivana spoke from behind them with a smile as Anja was grinning. "She's really coming into her own lately!"

Joci looked at his mate's jade green eyes and smiled at her beauty. He leaned over further and kissed her deeply, savoring the taste of her full lips and inhaling deeply of her newly discovered and increasingly powerful scent. Ceuma closed her eyes in bliss and squeezed his powerful arms until he drew back slowly. He leaned over even more and nuzzled her cheek and ears. "I will see you tonight my beautiful mate." He whispered.

Ceuma grinned. "Yes you will." She stated confidently. "And I intent to feast on you my handsome mate."

Joci grinned. "Promise?"

Ceuma nodded. "Yes I do."

"Since you are all here... then I no longer need to find you. The codes for you and Sivana are included with the pad. As well as codes for Naesta so that she may move around freely. Her biometric signature has already been entered into the database." Joci stated. "I will leave you to continue your work. Until tonight."

Ceuma nodded and pulsed him with her aura as he was leaving and she waited until the doors had slid shut before she walked over and locked them. She turned back to look at Anja and Sivana who were smiling at her knowingly.

"What?" She asked as she came back over to them.

"So much for the reserved and controlled sister we thought we had uh Anja?" Sivana spoke.

"Really Ceuma... you must control yourself when Joci is around. Your desire for him makes you breath too fast. We are afraid you might hyperventilate or go into shock!" Anja added.

"As if Martin and Belen don't affect you in the same fashion!" She stated defensively. "You and Aricia practically wet yourselves when you are next to Martin Anja! And your heart rate doubles because of your desire for Belen Sivana. You have no right to comment on how I act when my husband and mate comes into the room.” She said tossing the data pad at Anja and moving back to stand next to Naesta who was looking at her with wide eyes because of what she had felt when Ceuma touched her naked flesh.

“He... he is your husband?” Naesta stammered keeping a tight lid on her emotions as she asked. Ceuma’s touch had ignited something within her and then seeing her powerfully built husband and his long dreadlocks had only made it stronger.

Ceuma nodded. “Yes.”

“He is... he is very large.” Naesta commented.

Ceuma looked at her almost dreamily. “You have no idea.” She said playfully.

EARTH CRANAE ISLAND

The Durcunusaan had pushed the Netnews teams surrounding Gytheio and Cranae Island several kilometers back by now and the nearest Netnews crews had to set up their equipment on mountain plateaus above Gytheio. These perches afforded them little more than very long distance images which were grainy and practically unusable due to heavy interference being put off by surveillance inhibitors that now surrounded the entire area. Netnews drones were not allowed in the air within five kilometers of Cranae Island and after the first one to violate the order had been shot down, no one else dared disobey it.

While the outer shell of the villa had always been there, Andro had never renovated the entire structure for he never intended to use it all. It had taken Durcunusaan engineers only two and a half days to not only renovate the two huge, remaining wings of the villa, but also install furniture, decorations taken from Andro’s apartment on the Royal Villa Estate and items that Sadi and the others had picked out but not gotten around to purchasing just yet. There was also a high level Command Center that Andro could use to talk with any ship or planet or military unit within the Union easily, as well as many that were not inside the Union since the exact range of the facility was classified. Now the villa was broken into five different wings, one used exclusively for Andro and his mates with five additional rooms to accommodate any of his siblings when they were there, two that were being used for the ever growing number of men and women who were staying at the villa for security purposes, and one that held a barracks type structure.

The main circular section of the villa, which housed the kitchen and living space and greeting area, was where Coren now stood with Ardan and Tastia staring with wide eyes as Andro, his sister and his mates greeted the four massive dragons on the outdoor patio. The sheer size and enormity of the creatures was hard to take in, but watching as they interacted as if they had nothing to fear from them was unbelievable. The sun was getting low in the sky as they had landed on the new pad near the beach and made the short walk to the villa. Coren and Ardan could see the extremely heavy security that surrounded the island as they circled, counting well over fifty heavily armed men and women who made up this Durcunusaan as Androcles called them. There were half a dozen large water going craft anchored around the island on three sides and Coren could not guess what they were for since he saw no personnel on them as they landed.

Coren turned when he heard voices behind them and he saw the large Lycavorian he now knew was called Bren standing very close to Devra as they talked softly near the counter by the large kitchen and appeared to be pouring drinks. He was standing far too close to Devra for Coren’s taste and he was going to move and say something when his daughter’s voice stopped him.

“Amazing isn’t it?”

Coren turned back around and looked at his daughter, seeing where she was looking on the patio at Andro, the others and the dragons.

“These... these creatures are pets Arduri?” Ardan asked.

“Pets?” Arduri asked turning to face him. “No Regent... and please don’t let them hear you call them pets. Elynth is particularly sensitive.”

“Elynth?” Tastia asked.

Arduri didn’t look at her on purpose and motioned with her head outside. “The obsidian colored dragon.” She told them.

“Dragon?” Ardan gasped. “They... they are dragons? They breath fire and fly and...”

Arduri nodded with a smile at his reaction. “Yes Regent... just as we read as children. They are very real however. Elynth is Androcles’s Bonded Sister. They became connected while he was still in his mother’s womb.”

“Connected?” Coren asked. “What do you mean?”

Arduri turned back to face him. “You have heard of this skill that Lycavorians possess? They call it Mindvoicing.”

Ardan nodded his head. “Yes... of course. It is one of the reasons the SBR and many of the other Regents do not trust them. This skill allows them to read the thoughts and minds of others.”

“That is a falsehood that has been perpetrated with rumors started by our people who did not know any better Regent Vu Lamurrion.” Arduri answered quickly.

“Arduri you will watch your tone of voice!” Coren snapped. “Ardan is correct and our own Intelligence confirmed this knowledge.”

Tastia saw Arduri’s greenish blue eyes darken at her father’s order and her own green eyes grew a little wider when Arduri answered forcefully.

“Our intelligence is wrong father!” She hissed softly. “It has always been wrong because we chose not to investigate fully. While Mindvoicing does give them this ability, it is strictly forbidden in their culture to do such a thing. It is considered an enormous breach of honor within the Protectorate and a high crime here in the Union.” Arduri told them. “And there are only a handful of Lycavorians who even possess the necessary skill to do it. Androcles is bonded within Mindvoice to Elynth... they can speak to one another, do amazing things when they are flying...”

“They... they ride on these cre... on these... dragons?” Tastia gasped.

Arduri finally looked at her but it was a look of contempt. “Androcles and almost all of his brothers and sisters, they are all bonded to dragons. His mothers as well... and his father was too. There are almost a thousand of them within the Union... Bonded Pairs they are called. And the dragon population increases every year. Where they once stood on the brink of extinction, they now number well over ten thousand. Dragons are a member of the Union and their Elder Mother even holds on seat on the Union Senate.”

“Then they... they are intelligent?” Coren asked softly.

“Very much so.” Bren’s voice carried to them now and they turned as he walked up with Devra beside them carrying glasses. “More intelligent than many who walk on two legs Regent Re Mydala.” He held out the sterling silver glass to Tastia first as Spartan custom dictated the woman was served first. “Spartan wine... very strong but aged to perfection. Sip it slowly.”

Tastia took the glass slowly and looked into the deep cup to see it was only half full with a light reddish color liquid. Her green eyes glanced up and she watched as Devra took a sip of the glass she held, looking at her over the rim of her glass. Bren held out another glass to Coren, who took it much more slowly. Devra handed Ardian the second glass she held just as Coren turned and saw Tastia lifting the glass and sipping.

“Tastia!” He rasped.

Tastia’s eyes grew a little wider as the flavor of the wine spilled across her tongue and set her taste buds to screaming for more. She lowered the glass and looked at it. “Oh my... it’s delicious.” She said.

“You should not have drunk it Tastia!” Coren hissed.

Arduri and Devra watched as Tastia intentionally lifted the glass and took another sip and they looked at each other and shared a surprised glance at her obvious defiance of what Coren wanted her not to do.

“You know Regent Re Mydala, sooner or later; you are going to have to discard this idea you have that we are enemies to you and take a leap of faith.” Bren spoke calmly. “We do not invite our enemies to our homes.”

Ardan looked at him as he held the glass. “Your homes?” He asked.

“Where do you think you are?” Bren asked. “This is Androcles’s home. He bought this island when he was much younger and has spent his spare time rebuilding the building we now stand in. This area and his personal wing he restored and rebuilt himself, the events of the last few weeks have caused the Durcunusaan to fully complete the other wings.”

“If this is his home... where are his servants?” Coren asked.

Bren blinked several times in surprise. “Excuse me... servants?”

“He is royalty isn’t he? The Crown Prince and now the King of your Union. Surely he has servants to tend to his wants.” Coren spoke. “Isn’t that how your form of government works Commander Bren?” Only Tastia and Arduri saw Devra roll her eyes and shake her head at his comment.

“Do you... do you have some sort of manual that you have been reading that tells you these things in regards to my people Regent?” Bren asked. “There are no servants in the Union. None of the Royal family has servants. Anyone who works for them is very well paid and they do so because of who the Leonidas family is. The men and women who have tended the gardens at the Royal villa in Sparta have done so for nearly three hundred years. They live on the villa estate, and they move about freely within the many buildings there. The King and Queens know the names of all their worker’s children and when they reside in Sparta, once a month they sit down to dinner with those that work there. I would suggest that you begin to take in all around you Regent Re Mydala and learn quickly for if you continue to conduct yourself following this intelligence that you supposedly have of my people you will undoubtedly end up insulting someone. In Sparta that could be a painful venture.”

“What are your duties?” Ardan asked as he sipped the wine now and like Tastia was very surprised at how smooth and delicious it was.

“I was the Commander of Androcles’s Durcunusaan Detachment until just recently.” Bren answered the question. “When he choose Jomann as his Durcunusaan Captain, he then assumed that duty. Androcles asked me to assist Devra in combining our intelligence on these Syndicate fools since my knowledge of The Wilds is extensive.”

“So you are a foot soldier.” Coren asked with a touch of arrogance as he looked at Devra quickly.

Bren chuckled and lowered his glass of wine to the table they stood next to. “Yes... I am a soldier Regent Re Mydala.” He said softly. “If you will excuse me... I have duties to attend to. Your demeanor is beginning to grate against my self control.”

“Bren...” Devra spoke reaching for his arm as he turned and headed across the room towards the Guest Wing. Her fingers brushed his exposed arm before he was gone and she turned back to Coren, considerable heat in her stunning green eyes. “I swear by the Prophets Coren Re Mydala, if you continue to open your mouth and insult these people I will shoot you myself!”

“Perhaps you will now see that they can not help us!” Coren snapped as he put the wine down. “These Lycavorians are nothing more than brutes with manners! They can not help you find Caliria and more than likely they are only using you to either steal technology from us or simply sell you and our children into slavery!”

“Coren that is enough!” Ardan snapped.

Devra Re Mydala stepped up to Coren after placing her wine on the table. She reached up and stabbed her finger into his chest quite forcefully causing his eyes to widen. “Commander Bren has an Advanced Degree in Mechanical Sub-Atomical Theory Coren! He is a qualified pilot on six different types of ships within the Union and he speaks five different languages!” Devra snarled at her ex-husband. “And that man we spoke to today on that ship Coren? He is following orders from Androcles to find my daughter! Our daughter! It appears Androcles has already kept part of the promise he made to me and he has found Caliria!” Devra stepped closer to him her eyes burning. “You know... I offered him anything he wanted Coren. Technology! Weapons! Engine designs! I didn’t care!”

“Devra how could you?” Ardan gasped with wide eyes. “You... you have given them our most valued secrets!”

“To get my daughter back... I would have given him anything.” Devra stated calmly.

“Devra... you will be imprisoned for this!” Coren exclaimed. “Do you realize what you have done?”

“What I have done is open my eyes!” Devra snapped. She motioned with her head onto the patio. “He refused you know.”

Ardan stepped closer. “What is this?”

“Androcles... he refused all that I offered him.” Devra stated. “His price... his price was far more than you are willing to give Coren. Far more than many of our people are willing to give.”

“Devra what have you done? What did you give him for this help? What did he want?” Ardan pressed.

“An open mind.” Devra said.

“An open... what?” Ardan questioned.

Devra nodded and looked at him. “That was his price Ardan. That is all he wanted. An open mind and a chance to prove to me that what we have believed about Lycavorians is so very wrong and has been for centuries.”

“Impossible!” Coren said. “I don’t believe that.”

Devra looked at him. “No... you aren’t capable of believing Coren. You aren’t capable of stepping outside the tiny little world you have created and seeing things for what they are. You should return to CITADEL ONE Coren. If you remain on this world for any length of time you will offend a Lycavorian who does not have the self control that Bren does.”

“I am not leaving without you and our children!” Coren snapped at her.

Devra drew back from him then. “Then you will be waiting for a very long time Coren. I have no intention of returning to Austrova. With you or with anyone.” Devra turned sharply and moved off quickly in the same direction that Bren had gone.

“Devra Re Mydala you will...” Coren began to follow her but Arduri’s words stopped him.

“Do not follow father.” She said. “You will not be allowed where she is going. You, Tastia and Regent Vu Lamurrion will be staying in the new guest wing that was just recently finished. You do not have access to the wing we are staying in.”

“I will not lose your mother!” Coren barked.

Arduri shook her head slowly. “You lost mother a long time ago father.” She said softly. “You will never get her back. Not now. It’s far too late for that. She has discovered something far more important to her here.” Arduri turned and walked away from her father just as Andro and the others were moving back inside.

“Bren!” Devra called as she burst into the corridor that held their sleeping quarters and the large room they had been using as a planning center. The corridor was empty and Devra moved to where Bren’s door was and stabbed her finger on the panel. “Bren... answer me damn it!” She barked slamming her hand down on the panel.

“Devra?”

Devra whirled around catlike as her heart leaped from her chest and she saw him standing behind her. “Bren! Damn you... I asked you not to do that!”

Bren grinned and stepped closer to her. “But you smell so very inviting when your heart is racing Devra.” He stated.

Devra looked up into his eyes and could barely contain the intake of breath that almost escaped. His eyes were blazing with desire and want and she clenched her fists trying to fight down the rising desire in herself.

“Bren... Bren I want to apologize for Coren. He is... he is a fool and...” Devra couldn’t help but stammer as fast as her heart was racing.

“Do you honestly believe what he said bothered me in any way?” Bren asked moving even closer and reaching up to run a finger across her cheek. A move that caused exquisite shivers to race along her nerves and ignite parts of her body that she had never known were so sensitive.

“Well... I... it wasn't... it wasn't proper and...” Devra’s words were stolen away as Bren lowered his soft lips to hers and kissed her. Her stunning green eyes went wide as her entire body exploded with new and wonderful sensations that she had never felt before and then he was lifting her into his arms like a feather and pressing her against the door as he deepened the kiss, his tongue probing and searching and demanding entrance. His kiss was stealing her breath away and there was nothing she could do to fight it.

And then Devra Re Mydala, Regent to the Vanari people, surrendered to the staggering emotions that were surging through her like a rising storm and she wrapped her arms around his broad shoulders and granted him what he so desired. What she so desired as well. The whimper that escaped her lips as she accepted and returned his kiss was a sound unlike any she had ever made as he pulled her tall, lithe body against his and molded her frame to his. She returned his kiss with every iota of passion and pent up desire she had been holding in for so many years. The emotions and feelings that only Bren had been able to get to come bubbling to the surface. Not even Coren had set her body ablaze as it was now, but she was not frightened about what she felt. She would never be frightened again. Devra clutched his head as he kissed her more passionately than she had ever been kissed before and she could no longer keep her Alkay from seeping through her pores as her body became so aroused she momentarily lost her senses. The oil seeped lightly through her fingertips first as she brought her hands to his face and she felt him flinch ever so slightly as the Alkay soaked into his own skin immediately. She gasped loudly when he pulled his face from hers quickly, Devra feeling suddenly very empty as his lips drew away from hers and she tried to capture them once more. Her green eyes lifted and she panted like a schoolgirl when she saw his black ringed wolf eyes staring back at her and the tips of his fangs protruding from beneath his upper lip. The look was almost feral but to Devra it was the most beautiful thing she had ever seen before. He kept her pinned to the door as he slowly brought his hand up and took her fingers from his face, turning it to look at her palm and fingertips, her skin moist with her Alkay. He looked at her then and the wild, smoldering look in his eyes nearly caused Devra to have an orgasm right there. His hard, powerful body was molded to hers and it was driving her insane with need.

“Do you think... do you think you need this to make me desire you Devra Re Mydala?” He asked softly.

“No!” Devra gasped loudly. “But our Alkay... it is also a sign of how much we desire someone as well Bren! How much... how much I desire you!” She cooed as she looked at him her own eyes burning with hunger.

Bren took one of her fingers into his mouth and suckled on it, the Alkay tasting almost as good as she smelled. Devra watched him do this and her passion jumped several levels into the realm of dangerous need. He kissed her fingertip and smiled. “What do you think we should do about this desire we both share Devra?” He asked her in a husky voice.

Devra’s eyes narrowed and she pulled her hand free of his grasp and returned it to his handsome face. “Don’t you dare tease me Bren... you Lycavorian beast,” She stuttered nearly out of control. “Make me... make me yours Bren! Love me as I have never been loved before! I don’t... I don’t want to wait any longer!”

The growl that escaped his throat should have frightened her immensely but as his lips came back down on hers Devra felt nothing but happiness and wanton desire. She slapped her hand down on the control panel on the wall and the door to his quarters slid aside. As she wrapped her arms around his head once more, Bren stepped into his quarters and the old Devra Re Mydala vanished forever.

In a few hours, the new Devra Re Mydala would emerge like a butterfly from a cocoon and a whole new world and future would be open to her. A future she had every intention of grasping onto and never letting go.

Eliani leaped from Thaura’s back with a smile of happiness and contentment. She moved quickly around to the front as Thaura lowered her head down and Eliani placed her palms flat against her smooth copper colored scales.

Thank you sister. Eliani whispered. Thank you so very much!

Thaura’s eyes blinked several times and she let loose a small puff of hair through her nostrils that scattered the hair in Eliani’s face. We have not done this enough in the last months and it was long overdue my beautiful Eliani. It is something we both need.

Yes it is. Thaura I...

Thaura shook her huge head slowly. He is your brother Eliani. You have never held back from him and to start now would be foolish. In many ways you have become a fixture in his life that gives him balance.

Eliani looked at her. What?

Why do you think he keeps you so close? You and he share something that even Zarah does not share with him sister. Thaura spoke softly. All of us have seen it at one time or another Eliani.

What do you mean?

Thaura blinked and gently butted her head into Eliani’s shoulder as they heard Elynth swoop down and land a few meters away. Share with him everything my Bonded Sister. He will know what to do.

Eliani turned and saw Andro jumping from Elynth’s back. “You cheated!” He exclaimed as he walked towards her.

Eliani crossed her arms over her chest. “We did not cheat!” She stated proudly. “I’m just not as fat as you! We can turn tighter around the clouds!”

“Fat!” Andro barked. “I am not fat!”

They heard Elynth laugh softly within Mindvoice as she came up closer to them. You do love everything KertaGai cooks Andro my brother. And she feeds you very well.

Andro stopped in front of his sister and turned to look at Elynth. Well thank you for being on my side sister! He snapped.

Elynth brought her wing forward and tapped him gently in the back of his shoulder. It was heaven flying high again. She said. Next time we'll go higher.

Elynth... we can't go as high as you and Andro. Eliani protested.

Yes I know... that is what allows us to cheat! She replied with another soft laugh. Come Thaura... let us return to the villa. Anthar calls for me and we promised to clean your scales for Jeth's return tomorrow.

Thaura flapped her wings lightly. Not soon enough if you ask me. She stated. I have missed by mate, even if he is rather clumsy at times.

Elynth chuckled. But he is your clumsy one.

Yes he is.

Andro... we will see you in the morning. Elynth said as Thaura leaned over and butted Eliani softly.

[Remember what I told you sister.] She said just before cocking her powerful legs and propelling herself into the night sky. Elynth followed quickly and they watched for a moment before Andro turned back to Eliani.

"Let's walk Eli." Andro said bending down to remove his boots. Eliani followed suit and soon both of them were barefoot in the cool white sand. Leaving his boots where they were on the sand Andro reached out and took her hand and started them along the shore towards the point. "So... would you care to tell me what is happening inside you sister."

"Do I have too?" Eliani asked as his brotherly aura filled her senses and put her at peace.

"Well... I think perhaps you have outgrown me putting you over my knee and spanking it out of you."

Andro said. "That might draw unwanted attention as well. They will think we are malda."

Eliani laughed and squeezed his hand. "I... I can handle it Andro... really." She said.

"You aren't doing so stellar a job up to now Eli." He said. "You are moody... snapping at people for no reason... and you have nearly bitten Jomann's head off three times that I can remember in only the last four days. Now... tell me what has gotten you torn up inside or I will spank it out of you." He looked at her as they walked along the beach and the ocean water swept across their feet. "It's Malic and Nyla isn't it? What happen on Kranek?"

Eliani looked at him with wide eyes. "You know?"

Andro shook his head. "I am guessing." He stated. "But I am relatively certain it has to do with why his scent is nearly gone from you. Now what happened?"

"Andro... am I so terrible?" She asked softly.

"Terrible? I don't follow." He said.

"Nyla... Nyla was injured on Kranek." Eliani started. "She was injured and Malic... he thought he was going to lose her and he said... he said something that I heard within Mindvoice and I don't think any of us really wanted to admit it."

"He loves Nyla." Andro said softly. "You heard him tell her he couldn't lose her. That he loved her more than you."

Eliani stopped walking as they got to the water line and she watched the ocean tide wash across the sand gently. "How... how could you know that?" She asked.

"Eliani... you are perhaps one of the strongest woman I know. There is very little that will put you in such a foul mood as you have been in. I know you sister... I know what makes you tick and it is the only thing that would make you react as you have. Especially towards Jomann." Andro said softly. "Am I wrong?"

"He bit me Andro... our first night together." She told him quietly. "I... we... we thought it made us anomes like you and Sadi. Like Father and mother. It just seems that whenever I find... whenever I think I find love... something happens to end that." Eliani turned to look at him. "He loves Nyla more than me Andro." She sobbed now as the tears finally came bursting forth. "He loves Nyla more than me and I don't know what to do because... because I think I still love him but then something happens that makes me question that with all that I am!"

Andro pulled her to him quickly as her tears came and he held her head tightly to his chest as her pain and sadness filled him through Mindvoice. He lowered his cheek to the top of her head and stroked her hair as the sobs wracked her small frame and her arms crushed around his waist. He knew exactly what she was talking about when she said something made her question her feelings, and it had to do with one six foot three Spartan that was now his Captain.

“I want to tell you something Eliani Leonidas.” He said softly as he pulled her head away from his chest and looked into her eyes. “I want to tell you something that I hope will help you to understand.”

“Understand? Understand what? That I’m destined to be the only Leonidas child to never find love?” She gasped.

Andro smiled gently. “You will be the only Leonidas child to find the same kind of love our mother Anja found with our father.”

Eliani blinked several times. “What... what do you mean?”

“Mother never told you did she?” Andro asked.

“Told me what?”

“Told you of her and Uncle Daniel?” He said.

Eliani reached up and wiped away the tears from her eyes. “What the hell are you talking about?”

“She never told you that when she and father first came back together here on Earth she was in a relationship with Uncle Danny and Julie Collins.” Androcles explained seeing her eyes go wide in disbelief. “That she was just as confused and torn up inside as you are now. She loved father, loved him just as brightly as she loves him now, but she cared deeply for Uncle Daniel and Julie as well.”

“Andro is this... is this a joke?” Eliani snapped. “You are saying mother and Uncle Danny were lovers?”

Andro smiled. “No... it’s no joke.” He stated. “I would not do that to you now sister. Yes they were, for several months at least. You know that I have father’s memories because of the time I was conceived. The turmoil and huge emotional stress that they were both under at the time?”

“Yes.” Eliani answered.

Andro nodded his head. “I have seen this in father’s memories Eli. You are so much like our mother Anja that at times it is frightening. You are an enigma, just as she was back then. The more time she spent with father as they built Eden Center, the more she came to realize she was a catalyst for something very different. Her relationship with Uncle Danny and this Julie Collins ended but she was also the method for Uncle Danny finding Aunt Anuk because all of them had found paths of their own that they needed to follow. Their relationship ended because it was mother who made them all see what they could have going into the future. Once that was done, mother and father came back together as it was always meant to be.”

“Andro... I don’t... I don’t understand.” Eliani said.

“Have you ever stopped to consider for a moment that perhaps you were never meant for Malic and Nyla and that is why events have occurred as they have? That Nyla and then Malic... that they too were only avenues for you to discover what you really wanted?” Andro asked her. “Just as they occurred with mother.”

“Wait... you are saying that I was just a vehicle so that Malic and Nyla could come together?” She asked.

Andro nodded. “Because you are meant for someone else.” He said softly. “Someone who...”

[Do not tell her Andro my brother. Allow her to discover and accept for herself what it is she feels for Jomann. It will only help her, help them both going into the future, because they both are fighting it.] Elynth’s voice popped into his head.

“Someone who is just as intensely passionate as you sister.” Andro continued without missing a beat. “Someone who will worship you and love you until it takes your breath away. Someone who even now is out there searching for you.”

“What... what about how I feel in here now Andro?” She asked touching her hand to her chest over her heart. “How do I get over that?”

Andro placed his hand over the top of hers. “Is what you feel in here, in your heart, is it because of what you truly feel inside Eli... or is it simply the desire you have within you to feel it. To experience what you so desperately want to experience.”

“That’s... that’s a stupid question.” She spat defensively.

“Is it? Or is it an honest one.” Andro told her. “This is me you are talking too Eliani Leonidas. Have we ever held back from each other about anything? You knew how I felt about Sadi before everyone else. You told me what Nyla made you feel long before anyone else in our family knew.”

“But you... you made it happen so Malic was there Andro. So that he could become a member of Mjolnir's Hand. So that he would be in my life!” Eliani said.

Andro nodded. “Yes I did. Malic is walking the path meant for him sister, and while I did not know this would happen, I knew you were to be part of that path in some fashion. I thought it was as his wife and mate like Nyla, but it appears that your true destiny lies along another avenue now and I sincerely apologize for being responsible for the pain and turmoil you feel inside you now.”

Eliani shook her head slowly and squeezed his arms. “It’s not your fault. You were only doing what you thought was best.” She said. “What you sensed we all wanted.”

“You are meant for a different path Eli. One that does not include Malic and Nyla and one that seems to mirror what our mother Anja experienced. Just because our brothers and sisters have found those that they will go into the future with now... it does not mean all of us will.” Andro told her.

“You have.” Eliani said softly meeting his eyes.

Andro smiled and lowered his forehead to hers. “I will tell you a secret Eli... something that only Elynth knows. I am so nubous overwhelmed right now I don’t know which way to turn. Finding all of them so soon after Sadi came back into my life, it scares me too death. And I’m still trying to come to grips with the fact that my life has played out so much like father’s life and that isn’t what I wanted.”

Eliani looked at him with wide eyes. “You’re serious.” She gasped softly.

Andro nodded. “In regards to this... yes I am. I am learning as I go here and Sadi is the only one that provides me focus and clarity so that I don’t go insane.”

Eliani wrapped her arms around his waist again and buried her face in his chest. “Carians Andro... why does everything have to be so difficult for you and I? Why can’t it be easy like it was for Deni and Lisisa? For Arrarn and Normya?”

“Because of who we are and when we were born.” He answered softly. “Remember, even though you were conceived almost a year later, father was still in the grips of discovering who he was and recovering from what happened on Enurrua. Our mother Anja had just come into her first Phase, and it is usually the strongest as you can no doubt attest too. That combination of emotion within them... it affected you in the same fashion it affected me in her womb, albeit not on as large a scale. It is why we have always been able to talk to one another about anything and everything, no matter how personal it may be.”

“I just want someone who will love me for me Andro! Someone who won’t try to change me! Someone who will hold me and make me feel wanted and desired and blissfully happy. Someone who will take my breath away.” Eliani inhaled deeply of her brother’s scent and took from that scent and his aura the strength and support he was projecting to her. “I thought it was Malic Andro, it felt like it was. But it wasn’t real.” She looked up into his face. “That’s not so much to ask right?”

Andro shook his head. “No it’s not.” He told her. “It’s out there Eli... it’s out there and it may be closer than even you think.”

“I know... I just hate being lonely. And I hate not knowing.” She said softly. “It’s just so depressing.”

Andro smiled and draped his arm over her shoulders as they began to walk again her arms around his waist. “C’mon Eli... you want depressing... let me tell you some stories of father. There are several advantages to having his memories you know. There was this time when he was in a place call Bangkok and...”

Jomann stood within the dimly lit Control Center that was now the heart of Cranae Island and the surrounding area, not to mention the entire Lycavorian Union and sipped the steaming mug of Queen Aricia’s coffee as he watched Androcles and Eliani on one of the two dozen monitors that filled the main room and the wall in front of him. They were walking on the beach a kilometer and a half away on the other side of the island, Andro’s arm draped over his much shorter sister’s shoulders and her arms around his waist. It had happened so very quickly, and it wasn’t until the last day or so that it was catching up to him that he was now the Durcunusaan Captain to the Crown Prince of the Lycavorian Union. His small team of Durcunusaan troops, to include Lysandra and the others, were now bunked in a fortified villa overlooking Cranae Island. This would be their base of operations and where he would stay when he wasn't here. It also allowed him to be able to see his mother and father more often as they had moved lock stock and barrel to Gytheio many years ago. They owned a small café on the main street of the shopping strip in Gytheio and did quite well in fact. His father ran his command from the space station PROMETHEUS in orbit and was home almost every night to be with his mate when he wasn't in the field with his men. The love his parents felt was a powerful thing and it influenced all of his siblings as well as himself. They were always touching at home, nuzzling and kissing each other. They had preached to their children to always be open and willing to speak with them about anything and it was the reason he had gone to their home before returning here to Cranae Island and insuring everything was set for the night. He needed advice that only his father could give to him.

"So tell me why you sat through your mother's dinner like a Potarian Sloth boy." Josoric spoke as he leaned against the granite beam on the front patio of the villa. "You are going to hurt her feelings if you don't compliment her cooking."

Jomann looked up at his father from where he sat on the steps. "Father... did you have any doubts at all when you first saw mother that she was the one?"

"Uh oh..." Josoric spoke moving to sit beside his oldest son. "Female troubles. I had better sit down for this." He looked at his son and saw the seriousness on his face. "No." He stated. "From the moment I saw her, the very first moment I caught her scent on the wind I knew."

Jomann nodded. "Then that is what I am experiencing right now."

"Then why aren't you out there pursuing her right now instead of sitting here with your father?" Josoric asked. "She doesn't feel the same way?"

Jomann shrugged. "I don't know." He answered. "Her scent drives me mad! When I look at her eyes I just want to lose myself within them. Her hair is the color of burgundy... her body is perfection... everything about her is perfect."

Josoric grinned. "So what is the problem then?" He asked. "Announce your intentions and then caress her with your aura."

Jomann looked at him. "That would probably not go over very well." He stated.

"Why is that?" Josoric asked. "Our females are independent and strong, but that does not mean they do not like it when a man makes his interest and intentions known to them. Your mother thought I was malda when I did it."

"Father... you are malda." Jomann said.

Josoric waved his hand dismissively. "That's beside the point." He stated.

"Father... it is Androcles's sister Eliani." Jomann said softly. "And she is mated... I think."

Josoric became quiet and looked at his son. "You think?" He said. "She either is or she is not boy. And if she is... then there is nothing to pursue."

"Father I would never dishonor you or mother or our family by violating that sacred law of our people. You know that." Jomann said. "The man who is her mate... who I think is her mate. His scent is nearly gone from her blood father." Jomann looked at him. "What does that mean?"

"Gone?" Josoric asked. "Once mated... his scent would never leave her blood Jomann. Not unless she purges it intentionally if they part ways or he dies."

"I know father." Jomann said.

"Do not pursue this son." Josoric said softly. "She is a Princess of the Union and it could never be. You are Prince Androcles's Captain Jomann and it is your duty to be at his side and protect him. Not to covet his sister."

"Even if every part of me screams out for her father?" Jomann asked.

Josoric nodded his head. "Especially if every part of you screams out for her. She is mated Jomann and a Princess of the Union. It could never be."

Jomann nodded slowly. "She hates me anyway." He said softly. "She thinks I am too reckless and that I should not follow Andro wherever he goes and do as he does."

"Your duty is to your Prince." Josoric said. "He will be King in a matter of weeks now and your duty is to him."

Jomann nodded as he got to his feet. "I should probably get back and check the positions before everyone retires for the night."

"I will get your mother." Josoric said as he moved back into the villa. Jomann gathered his equipment from the chair beside the door and turned to see his mother already outside holding the container in her hand.

"Mother!" He said.

Herolia moved up next to her first born and looked him in his ocean blue eyes. He had inherited his father's physical stature, but he had gotten her eyes and she smiled as she held out the container. "Some food for your team." She said.

Jomann smiled and took it. "Thank you mother."

Herolia reached up and took his face in her hands suddenly and she saw his surprised eyes look at her. "You follow your heart Jomann my son... you follow your heart no matter where it takes you do you hear me?" She said softly.

"Yes... yes mother." He answered looking at her oddly.

"Promise me Jomann."

"I promise you mother." He said.

Herolia smiled. "Good. Now go before the Prince begins to wonder where his Captain has gone! That would not do."

"I will see you soon mother." He said kissing her cheek and then nuzzling her skin with his own.

Jomann's eyes scanned the huge wall of monitors from the perimeter cameras and motion sensors. The island's defenses were now state of the art, the most advanced monitoring systems that the Durcunusaan and the Krypteria could come up with. Many of the cameras did not even look like cameras, some of them twigs on the sand, or fruit hanging from the trees. The myriad of sensors could detect body heat, motion, heartbeats and in some cases even breathing. The five sleek looking water craft anchored around the island were actually automated sensor and defense platforms, their sophisticated systems continuously sweeping the sky and area around the island for any threats. Jomann knew all this and that is why his eyes stopped and came to rest on the five camera slots at the bottom of the huge wall that were blank with no picture.

"Phicia... why is the bottom row of cameras not on line yet?" He asked.

The Durcunusaan female turned in her chair and faced him. "Those are to be the lowlight L79 underwater cameras that cover the inlet closest to the pier Captain."

"We asked for those cameras three days ago Phicia." Jomann spoke.

Phicia nodded. "The procurement officer said it would be another day before they came in on his normal shipment from Apo Prime."

"It was a special request Phicia." Jomann told her. "He should not have waited for his normal shipment. That should have been conducted on a Durcunusaan ticket... not a normal one. How much of the inlet is not covered by surveillance?"

She turned back to her console and typed quickly. "Only a two hundred meter section that extends out on either side of the pier until the western sensor net kicks in. We have a dozen Durcunusaan stationed on the pier itself Captain and that doesn't include the team at the Gate entrance."

Jomann came up behind her. "These Kavalian dogs have proven to be quite resourceful Phicia and we do not yet know how far that pig Laustinos was able to infiltrate and pilfer our intelligence. The remainder of the sensor and camera nets are fully operational?"

"Yes... everything is online. Elynth and the dragons are in their outdoor pen; our new Vanari guests have settled in for the night it appears, Arduri Re Mydala is in her room studying more history cubes and Zarah, Lucia and Janae are staying on the SCIMITAR for the night with Prime Minister Deia and the Feravomir. They left just before you returned. Sadi and the others are in their master bedroom and Dutkne went to stay with Nirilo and Drey in Gytheio." Phicia answered.

"Where are Androcles and Eliani?" Jomann asked quickly.

"North end of the island just walking along the beach." Phicia answered. "Everyone is accounted for Captain and all of our teams have reported in on schedule."

Jomann let out the breath he had been holding and placed his hand on her shoulder. "I am sorry Phicia." He said evenly. "I am still... I am still new to this."

"I think we all are sir." She answered honestly. "I've never been this close to so many of the royal family before."

"Well... as Androcles likes to say... it's on the job training." Jomann spoke.

"Sir?"

Jomann smiled. "A phrase he said his father speaks all the time. It means we are learning as we go. And since we are on the same team now, my name is Jomann, not Captain. If we are going to be together most of the time, there is no need to stand on formality."

Phicia looked up into his handsome face and nodded. "Yes sir." She said. "I mean... yes sir Jomann."

"The surveillance and listening devices in the Vanari quarters are deactivated yes?" Jomann asked.

"Just as the Prince ordered." She replied with a nod.

"You did not mention Lady Devra before... why?" Jomann asked as his eyes scanned the bank of cameras and sensors.

"She... she and..." Phicia stammered and Jomann looked at her.

"What?"

"She entered Commander Bren's quarters about three hours ago. Just after everyone arrived for the night. She hasn't come out since." Phicia answered. "Something tells me they were not sharing intelligence."

"Truly?" He spoke.

"Forgive me... but I could feel the heat of the kiss they were sharing outside his quarters from in here." She answered with a grin.

Jomann smiled. "Yes... I'm sure. Bren has been fawning over her since she arrived. I thought there might be something there."

Phicia smiled as well. "Oh boy was there something there." She stated. "Ephor Dutkne says the Vanari are even more open than Lycavorians and Elves when it comes to what they wear and what they want. And she definitely wanted him by what I saw."

Jomann nodded. "Yes... so I hear that about them." He said.

Phicia looked at him. "You don't find Arduri attractive Jomann?" She asked. "I know she's looked at you a few times with a lot more than causal interest."

Jomann chuckled softly. "Yes... she is attractive... but I have no interest in her in that way." He replied.

"Maybe it's just me then." Phicia said. "I'm a woman and I find myself wanting to eat her up!"

Jomann laughed softly again. "Yes... I understand they are like us in that regard as well and do not draw a distinction between sexes when it comes to relationships. It is a pity their leadership is not as open as the rest of their culture seems to be."

Phicia nodded. "No arguments here." She said. "You know... maybe it's the island itself and it's history." She spoke.

"What do you mean?" Jomann asked.

"Well Cranae Island is a part of romantic Greek history." Phicia answered. "A lot of the Durcunusaan agree that Prince Androcles bought this island for Princess Sadi and that he had planned everything just as Paris of Troy did when he brought and seduced Helen of Sparta here on this very island."

"Really... did this Paris accomplish his task as the Prince did?" Jomann asked with a smile.

Phicia nodded. "He sure did... right before they escaped through the underground sea tunnels and returned to Troy. If the history is right they..."

"Tunnels?" Jomann asked turning to look at her. "What tunnels?"

"Legend has it that the entire island is honeycombed with tunnels that exit to the ocean." She answered. "Some of them even within Gytheio itself. They..." Phicia stopped talking as her eyes grew wide. "Oh... sibfla!" She exclaimed.

"What?" Jomann demanded.

Phicia turned back to her console and began typing madly. "The tunnels! It is said they are how Paris and Helen escaped the island when her husband showed up!"

"So?" Jomann hissed as a feeling of dread began to fill him.

“Jomann... if the legend is true then the tunnels will be part of historical fact!” Phicia spat. “If they are part of historical fact... there will be maps! Public maps! The island was a tourist attraction in the 20th century!”

“Nubou lae!” Jomann exclaimed. “And they are not within our security preparations!”

“ANSE!” Phicia barked slamming her hands down on the console. “They are listed in Sparta’s main library!”

“Has anyone accessed these files?” Jomann asked moving closer to her. “Has anyone accessed these files in the last month?”

“Checking!” Phicia spoke urgently. “Aur carian! Two days ago!” She gasped. “It was a written book with maps Jomann! It was accessed two days ago and it has not been returned yet according to library records!”

“Who Phicia?” Jomann spat. “Who accessed it?”

Phicia looked up at him. “Tarren! A Captain Tarren from the 57th Division!” She gasped.

Jomann looked at her. “The 57th is based out of Eden City!” He spoke. “The library in Eden Center is five times larger than the one in Sparta... why would he come here to get this book?”

“I can pull his file...” Phicia barked.

“Forget it right now! Is there a computer map?” Jomann asked.

“Stand by...” She asked as she punched keys on the computer. “Got it! Bringing it up on the big board!”

Jomann turned to the table in the center of the room and watched as the holoimage layout of Cranae Island appeared and then changed several times. Phicia appeared next to him quickly, touching the table and the holographic screens. “Is this is?” He gasped.

Phicia nodded. “Yes.”

Jomann’s eyes studied the large map, taking in the dark lines that made up the myriad of tunnels under the island. Two that went all the way to the mainland and one that stretched up into the mountains themselves. “Phicia... eliminate the ones that are too small for people to move through. The sewage tunnels and drainage canals!” She was typing before he finished speaking and the image shifted again leaving five thicker lines that crisscrossed under the island and came together in what looked to be a large center ring. “What part of the island is this circular cavern under?”

Phicia looked at him with wide eyes. “The main villa.” She answered.

“Fuck! Where do these exits come out?” He asked pointing to the four tunnels leading straight up.

“One exit appears to be directly under the new dragon pen. The Prince must have laid the patio foundation directly over the entrance.” Phicia spoke quickly. “Another exits within the treeline on the northern section of the island near the beach! One is under the floor in the kitchen area and the last...”

“What?” Jomann demanded.

“Son vada carians Jomann. It comes out in Princess Eliani’s room in the family wing! The stone fireplace!” She gasped.

“Phicia is there any way to detect movement or lifeforms in these tunnels?” He demanded of her.

Phicia shook her head. “No... none of the sensors we have in place cover these tunnels Jomann!”

“Then we must do it the hard way!” He spat.

“Wait!” Phicia exclaimed. “The biometric motion sensors within the villa itself!”

Jomann looked at her. “How are they of any use?” He snarled. “They are designed as interior sensors! They will not pick up anything moving under the villa!”

Phicia looked at him. “Not with main power activated! If I shut down the villa’s power grid, I can realign the sensors to eliminate any know biometric signatures and set them for wide subsurface dispersal movement.”

“You can do that?” Jomann asked.

“Yes... but it takes the entire defensive grid off line Jomann! The power grid has its own internal moving parts! The main conduits fluctuating the power through the system. If I don’t shut it down, the sensors will not give back accurate readings!” Phicia told him. “Jomann... we’ll be completely blind except for the villa’s internal sensors and they only have a range of fifty meters!”

Jomann tapped the implant on his jaw. “Anicetus!” He barked.

The response was immediate as Jomann knew it would be. His senior Enomotarch would not rest until he knew his Captain was settled for the night.

“Jomann?”

“Anicetus... Phicia and I have discovered tunnels beneath the villa and the island. She is uploading the map to your DP! Stand the detachment to... I want them in these tunnels from every entrance you see like yesterday!” Jomann ordered.

“Hostile contacts?” Anicetus asked his voice wavering, which told Jomann that he was already moving to comply.

“I don’t know!” Jomann declared. “We did not know about these tunnels until moments ago, and because of the historical facts on this island they were listed in the library in Sparta! They were accessed two days ago by a Union Captain from Eden City Anicetus!”

“Eden City?” Anicetus questioned. “For what?”

“I don’t know!” Jomann spat. “Anicetus... the only way we can detect anything in these tunnels is if we shut down the main power grid and realign the villa’s internal sensors! Phicia is setting that up now! You need to move quickly Enomotarch!”

“How much time?”

Phicia looked up. “I’m shutting the grid down now Anicetus!” Phicia barked out.

“If you kill the grid we’ll be blind!” Anicetus yelled.

“If we don’t kill it... we’re blind to the tunnels!” Phicia declared. “Anicetus... there could be bad guys in those tunnels right now!”

“Nubou!” Anicetus swore. “Do it Captain! I have the maps! I’m moving the men now!”

Jomann turned to Phicia. “Do it!” He snapped.

Phicia nodded and typed in several commands. As she touched the last sequence, Jomann heard the main power core shut down and power was lost across the entire villa and the grounds except for the Command Center. “Realigning the sensors!” She hissed.

“Quickly Phicia!” Jomann urged her moving closer to the table and the image it was projecting.

“Got it!” She announced looking up. “I reversed the annular confinement beam! The villa’s internal sensors should begin... oh fuck me!” She declared.

“What?” Jomann almost screamed.

“Movement! Movement in the tunnels! I can’t detect any individual heat signatures but there is definitely movement in the tunnels!” She barked.

That was all Jomann needed to hear. “Anicetus we have intruders in the tunnels beneath the villa! We have intruders in the tunnels! Set General Alarm! All stations to posts! This is no drill! Soul Slayer! Soul Slayer!”

Those were two words that Jomann had chosen. It was the name the Evolli had given to Androcles and Elynth during their war because of their actions at Alba Tau and the number of Evolli that had fallen before them during the war. It was a curse in the Evolli language, but when translated to any other language it was a name that many had come to fear. It was the name that Jomann had chosen to alert the Durcunusaan all across the planet that there was a threat to their Crown Prince.

Two words that would cause every Durcunusaan within a hundred kilometers to drop what they were doing and converge on Cranae Island. Considering how soon it was after the supposed ‘death’ of their King and the other attacks against the Royal family, exactly twenty-three seconds after those two words hit the Durcunusaan channel in the open, four hundred and nineteen Durcunusaan were moving south.

Cranae Island was about to become a warzone.

CHAPTER SIXTY-FOUR

NORMYA’S LIGHT

THREE HOURS FROM EARTH

To say that it was not awkward at first would have been an understatement, but Isabella Leonidas was not the same person she was more than two decades ago. She had grown far more mature than even she had ever thought she could, as a person and in her beliefs. The moment Dysea stepped off the STRIKER DT on Kranek and was in her arms Isabella knew something was different about her. It was different because of the stunning female who exited just after she did and the events that had taken place on Belid which Dysea shared with her in only a few seconds of Mindvoice connection. Isabella could also sense Cirith within Mindvoice, and not just in a general sense, but tied together with her ussta she-elf in a way very similar to how she herself was. The old Isabella, before motherhood and Martin and discovering her true self; long before her love for Martin Leonidas and Dysea and Aricia and Anja and For'mya and all that it had brought to her; that Isabella would have reacted almost insanely possessive of Dysea in every way. She would have been horrified and savagely angry at the feelings she could feel pulsing from her Dysea for this Cirith. Powerful feelings that Dysea was trying to understand within herself, but in no way dampened the undeniable love and happiness that she felt for her Bella.

That was not the Isabella Leonidas that greeted her ussta she-elf.

Though nearly seven months pregnant now, Isabella was still a powerful woman not only in a physical sense, but in the demeanor she projected. The son she had wanted to give Martin was growing within her womb and if his kicking within her womb and his clear presence within Mindvoice was any indication he would be a strong and proud addition to their beautiful family. With Moneus and Carina beside her always, not to mention the two Immortals that Cha'talla had ordered shadow her wherever she went, Isabella led Dysea to the home that had been hers for several months before all of this had begun. Once the happy greetings were all finished, once everyone had departed for their own homes to prepare to leave once more the next day, that is when Isabella sat down with Dysea and Cirith and learned it all. She learned what her ussta she-elf had endured, the part Cirith had played in everything and even the sizzling kiss they had shared, they held nothing back from her. Even then Isabella knew, as Dysea knew deep within herself, that Cirith was meant to play a huge and faithful role in their lives. Her years with Martin and her fellow Queens and lovers had bestowed upon her a great belief in faith and destiny, and this was not something Isabella would turn away from now. If Cirith was here, among them now, then it was because she was meant to be, and Isabella embraced that just as completely as she embraced her ussta she-elf. A testament to this is when the three women fell asleep on the couch together, their bodies touching and both Cirith and Isabella with their faces buried in Dysea's platinum hair. As the next two days progressed slowly and they returned to NORMYA'S LIGHT for the trip to Earth and then on to Curila 6, they were never apart for a moment and they learned all there was to learn of Cirith Esavorna, just as she learned of them and the life she would now have.

Now Cirith stood beside them as they greeted Cha'talla and T'lolt in the private lounge on NORMYA'S LIGHT, for that is where she belonged as far as Isabella was concerned. Esther had remained on Kranek to institute the distribution of the serum that would return all the Akruxian people to their original appearance and forever cement them on a path into the future. Cha'talla would remain on Earth for one or two days with Tir'ut, Normya, Lynom and As'hia and then return to Kranek with them to assist his wife and to begin solidify their planet and home with the Union ships and troops that were arriving nearly every day.

Dysea hugged Cha'talla tightly, relishing in the unlikely friendship she had cultivated with him and Esther and all those on Kranek. It was a place she would return to soon with her Nauta Melme to show him what Cha'talla had built.

"Return to him Dysea..." Cha'talla whispered in her ear so that only she could hear him. "Return to him and find your center again. Then you will be whole once more."

Dysea nodded her head as she squeezed his thick arms. "He is what I need now Cha'talla ... I know."

Cha'talla drew back while holding her hands. "I will meet with Androcles and establish the perimeters for Kranek's inclusion in to the Union. It is what my people want and it is what I shall give them." He reached to his side and removed the small data cube from his belt and held it out to her. "This is what you asked for Dysea. I did as you wanted, but I don't know why. I do not hold out much hope."

Dysea took the cube from him and looked at it. "There is always hope Cha'talla." Dysea told him still holding one of his hands. "And if this..." She held up the cube. "If this brings hope to even one of your people, is that not worth it?"

"Perhaps... but a large part of me does not believe it possible." He replied. "I made it regardless with Esther at my side as you suggested. Tir'ut and Normya as well. I am not much... I am not a skilled speaker."

Dysea nodded and tucked it into the pocket of her flight suit. "Then leave it to me." She said. "As long as I have your permission to try."

Cha'talla nodded. "As you say... there is always hope."

Dysea looked at T'lolt. "Are you ready T'lolt?" She asked.

"Lady Dysea... I have been ready for this moment since the day he saved my life on Lycavore." T'lolt replied proudly.

Dysea flipped her hand to the side. "Enough T'lolt! We are family now... all of us... and I expect you to leave the formality behind." Dysea took Cha'talla's hands once more. "I will walk with you to the bay... Iriral is returning and I want to be the first to see her."

Cha'talla nodded and looked at Isabella and Cirith. "Until a future time Isabella, Lady Esavorna."

Isabella and Cirith smiled and nodded their heads before they watched Dysea walk out with them. Isabella looked at Cirith then. "I should probably give you an extended tour of NORMYA'S LIGHT." She spoke with a smile. "You will need to know where everything is and Dysea will be with Iriral for several hours at least."

"Isabella..." Cirith spoke turning to face her. "I... I know this is very awkward but I... I don't want to be known... I don't want you to think I am trying to replace you in Dysea's life. I can't do that. I could never do that! I..."

Isabella stepped closer to her and took her hands. "Stop Cirith." She stated. "If there is one thing that I have learned more than anything since I met Dysea and married Martin is that everything happens for a reason." She smiled. "You were sent here to be with us for a reason Cirith Esavorna. You carry the blood of a Ruling Lycavorian family in your veins for a reason. These answers will come over time you know. They will come eventually."

"I do not want them to come at the expense of friendships and..." Cirith began.

"Lovers?" Isabella said lifting her eyebrow.

"Isabella... I am not Dysea's lover." Cirith said quickly. "I remained in the shadows almost the entire time I was with her you know this. I..."

"But you wish to be don't you?" Isabella said softly.

"If you expect me to lie I will not." Cirith said. "I will not live a lie any longer. It kept me safe all these years I know... but not anymore."

"I expect you to be truthful." Isabella answered with a smile. "I've tried that lie bit in the past as well. Long ago in the past and it didn't work out then either. Before I met Dysea... a relationship of the kind she pursued, the kind I have now with her and the others, it was not something I ever dreamed of. Something I had never imagined. Now Look at me. I relish the taste of her, her blood, her passion. I relish the taste of all of them just as much. As strange as it sounds Cirith we love each other almost as much as we do Martin Leonidas."

"That does not sound strange to me." Cirith stated.

Bella smiled. "Dysea and I... all of us, we worry every moment that someone will come to us and tell us For'mya is gone forever from our lives. We support each other totally and without question, out of our bed as well as in."

"My... my father has said as much about your family." She said softly.

"You are meant to be part of our family Cirith. With us." Isabella said.

"You sound so sure." Cirith stated.

Isabella nodded. "I am sure. We are sure. Dysea, myself, Aricia, Anja, For'mya... we are far more accepting of things that are meant to be than Martin. He can be very obstinate at times. You want to taste her Cirith; I can see it in the way you look at her for it is how I look at her. How we all look at her, and each other. It is also how she looks at you."

Cirith gazed at her with wide eyes. "What?"

Isabella laughed softly. "You mean to tell me that you are half Lycavorian and you can not smell her desire for you?"

Cirith shook her head quickly. "My father... there were never any Lycavorians around to teach me how to use my wolf skills Isabella. My father would only teach me so much to keep me safe from discovery."

"Well... that will change very quickly." She said with a warm smile. "You were meant to be part of our lives Cirith Esavorna, in every way possible, including in our bed. I do not fear that... nor does Dysea and nor will Anja or Aricia or For'mya when we get her back. Then you will have to taste all of us."

Cirith met her eyes boldly. "That prospect does not frighten me in the least." She said softly.

"Then why do you hold back?" Isabella asked her.

“He frightens me Isabella. What he will do? What he will say? And I... I have never been with a man before Isabella. All these years and I... I always thought I was meant for his father and mother. Ever since I first knew he lived and I saw images of him I imagined what it would be like and that frightens me.” Cirith answered.

Isabella stepped closer to her and pulled her tight against her pregnant body. It was a move that Cirith did not shrink from as she slid her arm around Isabella’s waist for she did find her just as delicious looking as Dysea. “He frightens everyone who first meets him.” Isabella said with a smile. “He absolutely terrified me when I first met him on Earth all those years ago and up until then; I thought I could never be scared by anyone having fought Immortals, and my father’s High Coven assassins. It will be harder for him to accept, not because he does not want too for he will see and feel it much quicker than you think, but because he is too honorable a man. Don’t worry Cirith... you have come home. And here is where you belong... with Dysea, with me, with our lovers and fellow Queens and our children. As it happened with me, it will now happen with you.”

“What will happen?” Cirith asked as her fears about coming here began to slowly drift into the mist of the past.

“You will be reborn.” Isabella said. “And you will not regret one moment of it in the least.”

RITAAH VORTEX CRUISER 341

Shiria entered the large room that they were using as a mess lounge of sorts and found them leaning up against the far wall. Athani sat between Resumar’s legs, her long tail flipping absently against his arm as she leaned against his chest, her lengthy blond hair splayed out to the side. He was holding a half eaten fruit in one hand, while stroking her arm with the other. Shiria simply stood there for a moment watching them, though she was sure at least Resumar and the other Lycavorians in the room could and did smell her easily. Athani Leonidas was unaware of her presence as she leaned over and took a bite out of the fruit they were sharing and then leaned back against him once more. She grabbed Resumar’s free arm and pulled it across her chest, holding it tightly as she got comfortable. Seeing her like this made Shiria very happy. She had been the one to set Athani to thinking about her future and what it held. How she could have so much more than what her father and others could offer to her. When she got word that Athani’Puat had defected to the Union it made her toast with Ckaoa and when they discovered the reasons she had done this, because she had actually fallen in love and then married Resumar Leonidas, Shiria had almost decided to throw a party. Athani Leonidas may have been close to thirty years older than Resumar but you wouldn’t know by looking at them. She could tell just from the way they intimately sat on the floor together that they were highly possessive of each other, Athani even more so of Resumar, though Athani knew she had no need to be.

Shiria was a Pralor after all and just from the simple surface tremors within Mindvoice that Resumar generated she knew he would never need anything more than what Athani gave to him. Unlike his father and brothers, Shiria didn’t sense that another was meant to share their lives. Their devotion to each other was almost a palpable thing and she doubted very much that their devotion to each other could be directed to another woman or man no matter how much they tried. Athani had found in Resumar all she had ever dreamed of in a man she would never need anything more, and she would guard that with typical Kavalian ferocity. Resumar was part Lycavorian and part Elf, and the combination of these two genes meant he would be devoted to her as long as they both lived. It was simply in the genes he carried.

Jalersi’Puat... or Jalersi’Nruarani now Shiria corrected herself; she had come as quite the surprise to her for Shiria always took Jalersi to be a traditional Kavalian woman no matter her altered appearance; a woman who would never go against what her father told her. She was wrong of course and as she saw Jalersi sitting lotus style next to Pian’Nruarani on the bench, her slim hand absently stroking the fur of Pian’s exposed neck, Shiria realized that Jalersi too had found something that meant more to her than her father’s words and false deeds. Shiria had seen how Pian’Nruarani had thrown his traditional Kavalian upbringing to the wind in the way he treated Jalersi as something to be worshiped and cared for. In only the few short hours since they had arrived here and had their reunion, she saw happiness in Jalersi’s eyes that had never been there before and the reason for that was Pian. Nikkei sat between her mother and Karun on the bench, her face bright and full of youth.

Pian's mother had already begun to make Nikkei see things in a different light and being as young as she was; Nikkei had no trouble accepting it in the least for the truth of what they were saying was right in front of her.

Mican sat on the floor as well, Na'lia sitting behind him on a portable chair with her arm draped over his shoulder. There had been many tears on the part of Jalersi when she greeted the brother she never knew she had, and they hadn't been more than a few feet apart since she had arrived. Colonel Isra and Tarifa she knew only from transmissions and reports, but there was no denying the love for each other they had. Their oldest daughter sat in a similar fashion to Athani across Karun's lap next to Tarifa.

Shiria took a deep breath and reflected on the role she would now play. All the pieces of her future were finally in place and once more she was back among those with Pralor blood in their veins. Through the threads of Mindvoice she could almost touch and feel all of Martin Leonidas's children and know that the foundation for their futures was being laid right now as the hours drifted by. Arram Leonidas had found the two women who he would go into the future with, an uncertain future when it came to the High Coven for Shiria felt their roles for dealing with the High Coven were still being shaped. Denali and Lisisa she felt would find one more before being complete, and that discovery would open their minds to many things that neither had contemplated before and make their relationship and love all powerful. The most troubled of Resumar's siblings at the moment was Eliani, for Shiria could feel her doubt and self pity within the many threads of Mindvoice. She too would find her center soon; first in the form of a man who would be her eternal anome, something that she coveted more than anything else. It would also mark a first in history for the Lycavorians, for no half breed Lycavorian had ever found an anome to the best of her knowledge, and this was only another of the things the Leonidas family was truly discovering about themselves. Their ability to set precedent in almost everything they did and not even realize it. Eliani and her anome would then would find love in the form of a woman who would mean the world to both of them. For now however, Eliani Leonidas was taking comfort and strength from the source that had always been there for her in her brother Androcles. Zarah was the one that Shiria no longer held any concern for. The young woman Lucia Moran, who would be Zarah's pure and total strength, she was already with her and the man who would become both their anchors and give them total completeness had also become a fixture in their lives though they did not know it just yet. Nor did he for that matter she felt.

Shiria smiled to herself for she very much enjoyed this new burden she now carried as a spiritual figure to all of them. It was a burden that she carried willingly for it meant she would always be with her people and the Pralor memory would never die. She took a deep breath then and moved forward into the room so that Athani and the others could see her as she walked towards them. It was Pian who saw her first and in another sign he had shed the old ways of the Kavalian males he immediately came to his feet and motioned for her to sit down. Shiria looked up at him and squeezed his arm.

"Thank you Pian." She said softly as she settled onto the bench next to Jalersi.

"Of course Scribe Mother." He stated.

Shiria watched him move around to sit on the floor in front of Jalersi, and in a move that surprised her somewhat for it was very un-Kavalian like nature, Jalersi draped her long left leg over Pian's shoulder and continued to stroke the fur on the side of his neck with the tips of her fingers without missing a beat. Shiria looked over to where Resumar sat. Considering the way everyone was sitting around him, it was obvious they considered him the leader. Another trait that the name and blood of Leonidas instilled in those around them, and a trait that would forever be their calling.

They were natural born leaders.

"I hope I am not interrupting." Shiria said.

"That is not possible Scribe Mother." Athani told her from her spot.

Shiria smiled. "I must say... Androcles does not crimp when he says he will send aide does he?"

Resumar chuckled gently. "My brother does not crimp when he says anything."

"Why did he send so much if your mission is to destroy this ship Resumar?" Shiria asked the question she had most wanted to ask since everyone had arrived. "An experimental ship based off Pralor technology from CS41, twenty-five of those wondrous armored dragons, three hundred of your famed Durcunusaan and enough supplies to last several months if I am any judge of weight and tonnage."

"Andro wants us to establish a Kavalian resistance." Resumar told her. "Pian's Pride and as many biogenic clones that Mican tells us we can rescue with the forces we have now. The more we gather, the more supplies Andro will send."

“A resistance?” Shiria stated nodding her head with approval. “An excellent idea indeed. I suggest Rizon Four as our base. It is not well known, it is well outside normal Kavalian travel corridors and...”

“Our base?” Isra said. “Forgive me... if I may call you Shiria?”

Shiria nodded her head. “That is my name and Helen already rightfully carries the title of Feravomir of our people. As she should. And yes... I may be a Pralor, but the Lycavorians and the Kavalians both are my people.”

“May I suggest Ephor?” Resumar offered from where he sat. “The senior Durcunusaan officer has told me that is what many were going to begin to call Dutkne, Wayonn’s grandson. It is my understanding he is becoming somewhat of a sounding board to Andro.”

“Ephor... as in those advisors from ancient Greece?” Shiria asked.

Resumar nodded. “Not all of them turned into corrupt men and if the Durcunusaan feel a person merits that title, who am I to debate them.”

Shiria smiled and nodded her head. “Very well... Ephor Shiria. I like it.”

Isra looked at Resumar. “I’ll let you tell her then.” He stated.

“Tell me what?” Shiria asked.

“Androcles’s orders were clear Ephor Shiria...” Resumar stated. “We are to put you on a STRIKER DT and return you to Union space tomorrow morning. You are too valuable to too many people now to be lost.”

Shiria lost her smile and looked at him. “For what purpose?” She demanded.

“Your life is too valuable to lose so soon after finding you Scribe Mother. Just as Resumar has said.” Jalersi spoke from beside her. “If we are to do this... having you as our spiritual support and guidance is going to be very important.”

“Which I can do far better from right here!” Shiria snapped. “I will not be coddled or kept safe! This is my fight just as much as it is yours and I have been doing it for far longer than any of you!”

“It is Andro’s order Shiria.” Tarifa spoke calmly.

Shiria looked at her with large dark eyes. “He allowed you to come here and I know you are one Martin considers a dear sister!”

“We came because we would not allow Karun and Ardis to search for his sister alone.” Isra spoke. “And Jalersi and Pian have become not only family but friends.”

Resumar leaned forward, nuzzled Athani’s neck and cheek and looked at her. “Shiria... you may think you know my brother and my father, and I’m very sure that you can feel them even now within Mindvoice to some degree and you believe this gives you an insight to how they think.”

“Yes.” Shiria agreed.

Resumar shook his head slowly. “Everyone in this room... with the exception of Nikkei because of her age thankfully, all of us have seen war up close and personal Shiria. You have on the other hand have not.”

“That isn’t true!” Shiria protested. “I... I have seen...”

“You have seen it from afar Shiria.” Resumar continued. “You are far wiser than any of us in this room, except when it comes to war. I know my brother better than you Shiria, at least when it comes to the realms outside of Mindvoice. The realms of war. I know how he thinks, how he fights, he has taken everything my father has taught him, everything my grandfather knew as the King of Sparta and he has molded it into himself. Andro is utterly relentless, almost a machine really. You have not seen the images of Alba Tau after we got there Shiria. It was... it was horrific. The Evolli blood ran like a river all around them. He will attack until nothing lives, he will defend to the last man and woman if necessary, he will not take prisoners, and if Keleru or my uncle have in any way hurt our mother he will not rest until all of them lay dead at his feet after suffering the same agony and pain she may have endured. And that is just Andro... for I can not predict what my father will do.”

Shiria was silent for a moment and then she met his eyes again. “I know all this Resumar Leonidas. No... I have not seen these images but I have seen flashes from his mind. From your father’s mind. I may not know all they are capable of but I know enough to be very frightened of them.” She replied. “I know all this and I am still willing to take the risk.”

“And if we are not Scribe Mother?” Athani asked.

“You will have to accept it then!” Shiria snapped loudly and with considerable passion. “I have not lived for over ten thousand years and learned nothing! The only way you will put me on a ship to Union space is if you drug me somehow! I refuse to leave you! All of you! I will not... and you will not find it so easy to force me young man!"

Resumar stared at her for several moments and then looked at Isra. "I told you Uncle." He said. Isra nodded. "Yes... yes you did." He said.

Shiria looked back and forth between them. "What do you mean? What are you talking about?"

Resumar returned his eyes to her. "Androcles knew you would refuse Shiria." He said.

"What?" Shiria gasped. "Then why... why this charade?"

"To make sure you knew how valuable you are to us. Just as Wayonn now is." Resumar answered. "And to make you understand we will not risk you in any way. No one in this room will. We have already decided that among us here."

Shiria looked around the room slowly touching each set of eyes and seeing the truth of Resumar's declaration. "I... I am just a small portion of whatever the future holds for us and so many Resumar Leonidas." Shiria said looking back to him. "I do not wish to be thought of as such."

"Perhaps not Shiria." Resumar stated calmly. "But you are thought of as such. You are the only remaining pureblood Pralor that still exists. A guiding hand now to all of us just as the Feravomir is. If any point comes during what we are going to do where you are at risk I want your promise you will put yourself on a ship and retreat to Earth as quickly as you are able to move."

Shiria could not help the warmth that spread through her at his words and she nodded her head slowly. "I promise this to you Resumar. To you and your brother."

Resumar nodded. "Good. Then we will speak of it no more." He said. "Pian has already suggested using Rizon Four as our base by the way."

Shiria nodded. "It is an excellent location." She agreed. "My... castle... for lack of a better word is state of the art. It is built directly into a mountain and..."

They all turned when Avi's heavy footsteps entered through the doorway, a data pad in his hand. Resumar got to his feet as he approached and stopped in front of him.

"Well?" Resumar asked.

-It can be done Resumar- Avi spoke handing him the data pad. -It will take time... but this is not our mission Resumar. You know this-

"How much time?" Res asked as he looked at the pad.

-Resumar... this is not why your father sent us here- Avi said again.

"I know that Avi." Resumar told him. "Now... how much time?"

-Avatar 341 estimates three weeks four days and sixteen hours. Give or take an hour- Avi answered.

"Why so long?"

-It is not the same as downloading all this information to portable drives Resumar. We must catalog it and then upload it to the proper ship's systems. If we can use some of Captain Fang's technicians we may be able to decrease that by three or four days. They will have some knowledge of how we will proceed- Avi answered.

"Then do it." Resumar said. "You and 341 begin immediately and I will have Dayiu send down as many tech heads as she can spare."

-Resumar, while I do agree with the assessment that this is a sound tactical move... this is not the mission your father sent us on. You know this- Avi stated.

“Avi... when my father is out of the loop... who is in command?” Resumar asked him.

-Androcles of course- Avi answered immediately.

“It is my idea Avi. My plan... but I would not do this without Andro looking at it and weighing the overall risks. I know the risks that this brings with it, but it is not something we can simply dismiss. Andro reviewed my plan and approved this. If you connect with the RAGE OF ACHILLES's computer you will see for yourself.” Resumar told him. He waited while Avi's eyes moved rapidly back and forth as he established a remote connection and then those red orbs grew wider and he looked at Resumar.

-A bold plan indeed Resumar- He said. -Your father would not approve of you and Andro disobeying his orders but Androcles's calculations of the implied risks are only off by 2.7 percent. Impressive. He must have had his KertaGai Sadi helping him. Relative Variable Computations were not his strong point in school or during the lessons you had with me-

Resumar chuckled. “No they weren't.” He said.

Avi met Resumar's eyes for a long moment. -He is preparing for something isn't he Resumar?-

“What do you think?” Res asked.

-I think trying to outthink your father or Androcles uses up too many of my internal processing input nodes. Their decision making processes do not always fall within what many consider normal perimeters- Avi answered as he tried to imitate humor. -I will informed 341 and we will be making the necessary modifications-

Resumar chuckled again. “I'll agree with you there.” He stated. “Thank you Avi.”

Avi nodded his head and then turned gracefully to exit the makeshift mess lounge. Resumar turned back to the others and saw all of them looking at him. It was Shiria who asked the question.

“Resumar... what exactly was that all about?” She asked getting to her feet. “What does Avi mean when he says you are disobeying your father's orders and he would not approve. I certainly hope you are not going to attempt to use VORTEX Cruiser 341 in any way. This ship and everything on it needs to be destroyed Resumar. It's very existence is a threat to every species in the universe if it falls into the wrongs hands somehow. We need to destroy it.”

Resumar nodded. “I know Shiria.” He stated.

“Then what is going on?” She demanded. “What are Avi and Avatar 341 going to do?”

Resumar stepped up to her. “Avi and 341 are going to try and blend a good portion of the information and equipment from this ship into the RAGE OF ACHILLES.” He answered. “It's an idea I came up with a few days ago.”

Shiria looked at him. “Can... can you do that?” She asked.

Resumar nodded. “Avi and 341 say so. At least... at least to a point.” He answered. “I have a feeling that we are going to be out here for quite a while, and having the RAGE OF ACHILLES equipped with systems from this ship would only benefit us and our mission.”

Shiria nodded her head slowly. “The logic is sound.” She said finally. “Why couldn't you have used my ship?”

“I have plans for your ship.” Resumar said. “That is why. And right now... the only people who are fully qualified in flying your ship are you and Ckhoa.”

“What plans?” Shiria asked him.

“A rescue mission.” He stated.

“A rescue mission? Who are we...?”

“Resumar!” Ckhoa’s voice filled the room as she sprinted into the large room. “Resumar! Scribe Mother!”

They turned to face her as she ran up to them. “Ckhoa my child... what is it? What is wrong?” Shiria gasped as she reached for her.

“I just... I just received an encoded burst from Poysha!” Ckhoa exclaimed.

“Poysha? She wasn't due to report again for another ten hours.” Resumar spoke.

Ckhoa looked at him. “Resumar... your mother!”

“What? What about her?” Resumar demanded as his face grew concerned.

“They have... they have brought her to Cabelir! She is on Cabelir right now... within the Command Compound!” Ckhoa gasped. “Poysha saw her! She said... Poysha said she is bruised but... but she’s alive Resumar!”

Athani stepped up to him quickly and took his arm as she pressed close to him. “Breathe my love!” She told him. “Control... control your anger.”

Ckhoa looked confused as she gazed at him. “Anger? I thought you would be happy.”

Shiria reached out and took Ckhoa’s hand. “He is happy Ckhoa... however... having his mother For'mya on Cabelir is not good news.”

“But why?” Ckhoa gasped.

Resumar looked at her. “Because the only way to reach her now is to invade the Kavalian Empire.” He hissed softly. “And my uncle would kill her before we got anywhere near Cabelir.” He turned away from them and looked at the blank wall. “She is out of our reach now... out of our reach and on her own.”

EARTH

CRANAE ISLAND

It had been beyond divine. It had been celestial.

Her mind screamed for more, yet her body trembled in exquisite exhaustion, and no matter what happened in the future she knew what she was feeling now would never end and she would always have it. Six or seven times in just the last three and a half hours Devra Re Mydala had exploded in mindnumbing and totally consuming orgasms. She was not sure which was the correct number for they all seemed to run together and to be honest, she had been his before the first orgasm had ever stolen her breath away. He was every bit like the fearsome animal he could change into, for Devra had looked into his dark eyes and seen the beast within him, yet with every brush of his lips upon her, every caress of his fingers on her skin, he lit the fires of passion within her that only he could quench. Her Alkay was seeping from her pores in copious amounts before they had ever touched the bed, inciting him even more than he already was, and she was not even trying. His hard body must have been sculpted by some masterful artist in its definition and as she tore at her own clothes and watched him disrobe in front of her, a slow burn began deep in her belly. A burning need and passion that she had never experienced with Coren no matter how many times they made love. Devra had had only one lover in her lifetime and that was Coren, and no matter how passionate their first encounters had been, what she was feeling now surpassed those sensations a long time ago. Her Alkay may have incited him further, but Bren in no way needed any additional assistance in wanting her, Devra could see that just by looking into his eyes.

Twelve glorious minutes it had taken him to fully sink into her velvety depths, his lips and hands never idle as he stroked and kissed nearly every portion of her body and she could only gasp in unabashed delight as each delicious inch conquered her body and made her his. She remembered hearing several young Vanari females who worked at the embassy discussing what it might be like to bed with a Lycavorian. It was said many of them were built like bulls but that they were concerned only with their own needs. Devra was discovering just how wrong they were. By the time his searing hot balls had come to rest against her upturned ass cheeks, Devra Re Mydala had already experienced two shattering orgasms, the force of which had robbed her of her senses. He had simply held himself there above her, pleased with himself as he watched her beautiful face contort into divine release. She could not stop from wrapping her arms around his shoulders and washing his handsome face with her tongue as she cooed out her ecstasy in his ear. Those moments were quickly swept aside when he began to make love to her with long, gentle strokes and then Devra’s body truly sang out its eternal glee. She knew from his strokes that he would not last long and she had been right, yet the moment his huge eruption within her depths took place and his scorching hot come filled her womb, Devra Re Mydala's doubts about everything were forever erased from her mind. As they held each other in the grips of their mutual pleasure, Devra knew where her future lay. She knew where the future of her people lay. Devra knew it was a future she had embraced the very moment she stepped aboard Dutkne's ship and came here to this place after her daughter, though she was only just now beginning to realize what else coming here had allowed her to discover. Bren was intent on showing her just that as each minute passed.

Coren had always gone soft quickly after his first explosion and it would be several long minutes before he was ready again, but as Bren drew his face from where it had been tucked into the side of her neck, Devra realized his thick cock had lost none of its steel like hardness buried inside her as it was. When she saw his beautiful wolf eyes staring at her, the tips of his fangs just protruding from beneath his lips, Devra Re Mydala was forever hooked.

She watched him intently now as he crossed the room carrying two large glasses of liquid, watched how the moonlight entering his room struck his delicious body in just the right light. The dim light globes in the corners of the room made for a very romantic setting as well, something she had no doubts that he had been planning since her arrival here. Her green eyes hungrily went to where his flaccid but still immensely impressive cock dangled and she felt the shivers of need flutter across her skin once more. Her long blue legs weren't covered by the thin sheet, only her perfect ass cheeks and a small portion of her lower back, and she pulled it tighter to her waist and he settled to the bed and she sat up. There was no sense in trying to hide her body from this man; he had explored every portion of her tall, lithe frame more intimately in the last three hours than Coren had ever done in centuries of marriage. She saw his eyes take in her full breasts exposed for him as they were, eyes that said she was now his in every way possible, and that single look told her she was now his mate and wife. A prospect that Devra found to be wonderfully fulfilling in every way. She belonged to him now in the Lycavorian fashion, and no matter where she went or who she would interact with, that knowledge filled her with pride and happiness. Physical contact was important to Lycavorians she knew and the moment he settled back to the bed, Devra scooted over next to him and pressed her lush, naked body against his, drawing her long leg over the top of his in a very seductive way as he held out the glass to her.

"What is this Bren?" She asked taking the glass from him with a dazzling smile. "More Spartan wine? You don't need to get me drunk to desire you. I do that now with every waking breath."

Bren chuckled softly. "Spartan wine is not something a male of my species serves to a woman after he has claimed her Devra. It would be considered an insult to her and to what she means to him and their future together."

Devra looked at him with sultry eyes that were filled with an adoring love. "I didn't... I didn't know that." She said softly.

"I would imagine there is much about my people that yours do not know." He said very calmly. "And much about you that we do not know. We will teach each other now." Bren said. "It is called Tangerine juice. A fruit that is abundant in the southern hemisphere of Earth. It is largely considered a fruit of binding love to those Lycavorians here on Earth, something that the Lycavorian Spartans of ancient Earth began and a tradition that continues to this day."

Devra didn't hesitate in the least and she took a large sip of the juice, surprised at the sweet taste and how it made her taste buds tingle in delight. She saw his eyes smile and then he too took a long sip from his glass.

"So... where... where do we go from here Bren?" She asked him.

"What do you mean?"

"I have already broken more Vanari laws than I could possibly imagine and if I... if I do return, no matter the outcome, I will probably be sent to prison for my actions. For a very long time." Devra told him.

"Then you will remain here. You are my mate and wife now and you will stay here and we will build our own future together Devra." Bren answered confidently. "If that is what you want as well."

"I think you know it is Bren." She told him softly. "But Coren and Ardan will demand that I return and face Vanari justice." She stated calmly. "They will not let it rest, especially Coren when he discovers about us and that will only make matters worse between our people. He will no doubt think you forced yourself on me, he will scream and bellow and..."

“He still loves you in a very odd way you know?” Bren said interrupting her.

“What?” She gasped. “You can... you can smell that?”

Bren shook his head with a smile. “No... but I can see it in his eyes. Does him knowing about what we have shared bother you?”

Devra shook her head. “He may still have feelings, but whatever warmth and love I had for him died a very long time ago. And his actions now only serve to remind me why I chose to leave him. I do not care what he thinks about us for I intend to explore and experience many more moments like those we have shared if you are up to the task.” She told him with a husky voice.

Bren chuckled. “I think you will find that I will be quite up to the task.” He told her. “What do you want to do Devra?” He asked.

She looked at him and reached across his powerful abdomen to set her glass on the table by the bed. She pressed closer to him, her large breasts pushing hard against his ribcage and she reached up to stroke his cheek as she gazed at him. Her fingers danced across his jaw and his lips and she smiled. “I want to remain here.” She said confidently. “I want to remain here and discover a new life with you Bren. What I feel... what I feel for you is beyond anything I ever felt for Coren... for anyone. And I don’t just mean what you make me feel in our bed.”

Bren placed his glass on the table next to hers and took her beautiful face in his hands, using his thumbs to caress her flawless blue skin. “Then that is what you will do.”

“It will... it will cause a great deal of strife between our people.” She said. “Especially if Caliria chooses to remain as well.”

“Are you so sure?” Bren asked. “Do you believe after being among us these last days, after seeing the man that Androcles Leonidas is and what your daughter obviously means to him and Sadi and the others, do you believe he will care in the least about what Coren and this Ardan say?”

Devra couldn’t help but grin now. “He is willing to start a war to retrieve her Bren.” She said letting her fingers absently stroke his powerful chest. “No... I don’t think how Coren or Ardan view him will bother him in the least. I think he actually finds it amusing.” She said. “Nor do you care how they view you I think.”

“She is your daughter Devra... what do you think Caliria will do?” Bren asked.

“The more... the more I think back on how she has acted these last years, the more I am coming to believe she knows where she is meant to be, who she is meant to be with and she will not forsake that for anything or anyone to be honest. She is very stubborn and strong willed.” Devra answered.

“Like her mother no doubt.” He said with a smile. “You see... your belief in destiny and fate and the preordained is growing.” He stated.

Devra met his eyes. “Yes... I suppose it is.” She said.

“My king is fond of saying never fear the unknown for you don’t know the treasures that could await you.” Bren said. “We will move forward one day at a time and face each moment as it comes to us Devra. Without fear. Without regret.”

Devra looked at him. “And you are never afraid?” She asked.

Bren smiled. “I am always afraid Devra. There is always fear... my people though... we embrace that fear. We choose not to let that fear keep us from acting. From doing what we feel is right when it feels right.”

Devra smiled and leaned forward to kiss him softly and passionately. A kiss he returned without hesitation. “I will so enjoy spending the next dozen or so centuries of my life exploring that mind of yours Bren. It...” She stopped talking when she saw his eyes move to something behind her. “Bren?”

“The light globes.” He stated softly motioning to them with his head. “They have lost power.”

Devra turned to look at the now dark light globes in the corners of the room. “A power failure?” She asked turning back to him.

Bren shook his head. “Andro designed the villa’s power core in such a way that there is always a backup that would kick in instantly when the main generators fell below a certain level point. No... this is something else. Someone has shutdown main power.”

Devra looked at him now seeing how alert he had become. “I take it that is not a good thing?”

Bren shook his head as he rose from the bed. “The Mindvoice dampeners installed in each room are on a different grid and are still active. I can’t reach anyone outside my room here in this wing.” He was speaking as he reached for his pants on the floor beside the bed. “Quickly Devra my love... put something on. We must discover what is happening.”

Devra didn't hesitate and she glanced around looking for something to put on over her body. The jumpsuit and body armor she had been wearing was scattered over the room, the top of the jumpsuit shredded from Bren's strength. She reached down to the floor and found his shirt among the pile of clothes and pulled it on over her naked form. As she rose to her feet completely and turned, Bren came up to her holding the matte black sidearm. He held it out to her.

“You know how to fire a weapon?” He asked.

Devra nodded and took the K12 KM from him. “Yes.” She answered confidently.

Bren took her hand in his, hefting his Nehtes in the opposite hand. “Come. We must move quickly!”

Speaking with her brother like this had always been able to set her at ease and it was no different now as they walked along the beach. Eliani knew there were many people within the Union who considered her father and Andro to be unintelligent brutes because of their actions and the way they talked bluntly and honestly. Eliani knew, as everyone who knew they also knew, under that guise of brutishness they both cultivated were two of the keenest and most intelligent minds she had ever come across. Andro had always been the one they had gone to when they were growing... whether it was because of his bond with Elynth or just his ability to read people so well... he always knew when something was wrong with one of his brothers or sisters and he always made time for them. Eliani knew Zarah was closer to him than most because of what she now knew he had done to save her, but he had always been there for her as well. And she had never kept anything from him, even when it came to the men in her life, or lack thereof as she often said. His presence alone soothed her in a way that very little could, and this is what she relished. He could make her laugh with the simplest of comments even in one of her fouler moods and it was no different this night as he shared with her stories of their father that she had never heard before. It brought them closer together and that closeness is what Eliani needed now because she could not talk to her one true confidant. Her mother.

Andro's arm was draped over her shoulders, one of her arms around his waist and her opposite hand holding to his fingers on her shoulder as they let their laughter die down from relating the trouble their father had gotten into when he was younger.

“Now I know where Arrarn gets it.” Eliani said with a soft chuckle.

Andro nodded. “Yes indeed.” He said.

Eliani looked up at his face. “You truly believe he is making a play for the throne don't you?” She asked.

Andro nodded. “Pian and Jalersi gave Aunt Tarifa a pad of information before all this happened. A small piece of the much larger puzzle that we are trying to unravel.”

“What was on it?” She asked.

“Union Ascension laws copied directly from the Chronicles of Lycavorian Law and the First Oracle's Declaration.” Andro spoke. “Laustinos must have copied them and given them to the Kavalians. The pad had a Cabelir source code, so we know it came from their homeworld. It's the only way they could have gotten the copy.”

“We've gotten slack through the years Andro.” Eliani said softly.

“Yes we have.” He agreed. “And that needs to change rather quickly. The only problem is how do you change an open society without infringing on the liberty that is the basis for that society?”

“After what has happened... I think our people would understand if changes needed to be made Andro.” Eliani said.

“Probably... but the person who institutes those changes will not be popular for very long.” He told her.

“As if you ever cared about being popular.” She said bumping her hip against his as they walked.

“That is true.” He said with a smile.

“There are far more people within the Union who are enraged over what they have done then there are people who don't care Andro.” Eliani said thoughtfully. “Maybe... maybe you should institute Spartan Law for the time being. Until we get a handle on everything that is happening and find out what our uncle is doing.”

“I’ve thought about it... I won’t lie to you about that.” Andro said. “I’m still not sure I am convinced though.”

“Andro they tried to kill father! As far as everyone outside our inner circle is concerned they did kill father. And our mother Aricia is dead too. They have taken our mother For'mya and tried to enslave our mother Dysea. They tried to kill all of us! The only reason they would do that is to make it easier to support whatever claim our uncle makes. The information we discovered on the Kavalian pad of the assassins who went after Armetus only confirms this.”

Andro nodded. “I agree but what do they accomplish by kidnapping and holding mother? It doesn’t make any sense Eli. Declaring she is no longer a Queen because father is dead and saying they will only deal with the Elven Parliament in order to negotiate her release. What kind of sibfla is that?”

“If the Immortals that took medwaw Dysea had succeeded, medwaw For'mya would be the only Queen of elven blood left Andro.” Eliani said. “You know how the elven parliament views medwaw For'mya. Perhaps the Kavalians believed if that was the case, it would make it easier to turn members of the elven Parliament to their side as they did with the Hadarian Arch Ministry and Elder Council.”

“Perhaps... but with medwaw Dysea still alive then no matter what...” Andro began to speak.

“But she is not of elven royal blood Andro.” Eliani corrected him. “She is the daughter of two clones from Earth. She is Queen of the elves because father is King of the Union. Don’t forget that even grandfather L'tian would not support her as Queen until father rescued medwaw For'mya and she initially became his concubine.”

Andro nodded his head. “I remember... but that line of thinking has long been put aside through the years Eli. Even grandfather does not adhere to that train of thought anymore and he verbally dressed down that aide several years ago who even mentioned it. I find it very hard to believe that Laustinos would not have informed the Kavalians of that. He has given them almost everything else. Besides... with Arram and Bryon you have the same bloodline as grandfather Resumar. A combination of both royal families and...” Andro was jerked to a stop by Eliani pulling almost painfully on his waist. “Eli... what’s wrong?” He asked as he looked into her wide eyes.

“Andro... Andro that’s it?” Eliani exclaimed.

“What’s it?”

“Why he wanted mother! Why he wanted all of us dead!” Eliani almost shouted.

“Eliani... what are you talking about?”

Eliani gripped his arms tightly. “Don’t you see?” She exclaimed. “Removing father from the picture... medwaw Aricia... even you! Most of all you! We’ve been playing right into their hands all along and didn’t know it!”

“I’m not following you Eli.” Andro said.

“It’s his ticket to a legitimate claim to the throne!” Eliani shouted.

“What is? Eliani... you aren’t making any sense!” Andro barked.

Eliani opened her mouth to answer but was interrupted by Jomann’s Mindvoice shout within their heads completely unshielded.

Andro! We have intruders beneath the villa! In tunnels under the villa! Jomann nearly screamed.

Tunnels? Andro barked. There are no tunnels under the villa Jomann!

Andro damn it... historical fact states there are tunnels that run under the villa! Someone named Tarren removed the maps from the library in Sparta and now we have intruders under the villa! I am moving the Durcunusaan to several different locations but one of the exits comes up in Eliani’s room within the family wing!

WHAT? Andro shouted. KertaGai! My... my mates! Andro turned and in a soft burst of silvery white light he had shifted into wolf form and was sprinting off towards the villa.

Andro wait! Eliani screamed just before she too shifted into wolf form and followed her brother.

There were seventeen of them.

The very finest the Orionis Syndicate had to offer in the way of assassins. They had been traveling back and forth to Earth for the last decade, taking advantage of the complete openness of the society on Earth now and taking notes. It was only in the last five years that the Orionis Syndicate Group as they called themselves had begun doing business with the Kavalian Empire and other groups within the Alpha Quadrant when it came to criminal activity. They had come to the Alpha Quadrant to learn and discover the intricacies of doing business here. What they had found was a veritable wealth of windfall opportunities in this place called The Wilds. The opportunity to become very wealthy and to use that wealth to grow their organization back in the Beta Quadrant as well as here. The vast majority of the Orionis Syndicate Group was made up of generations of humans who had once come from Earth, or to be more specific, those who had settled Earth and then returned to the Beta Quadrant. Eridiani was their official species designation, but they were now most often referred to as humans. Something that true Eridiani and those in the Orionis Syndicate Group hated.

The Orionis Syndicate Group was broken into four different divisions that made up their actual organization. The OSG political arm was made up almost entirely of Eridiani Alliance government officials. Men and women who answered to the OSG while maintaining their separation from the actual operations side of the organization to give the Eridiani deniability. There was the transportation arm of the OSG, those that did all of the heavy lifting so to speak. They trafficked in slaves and drugs and anything that could make a profit for the Syndicate and the Eridiani. There was the Intelligence arm of the OSG, men and women whose only purpose was to gain knowledge of potential business partners or rivals in whatever way they could. And then there were the OSG Operators. Those who conducted the actual raids and attacks and the assassinations and whatever dirty operation the OSG Division heads determined needed to be done. These were the physically enhanced men and women, those whose ancestors had been undergoing centuries of gene therapy to improve their physical attributes enough to compete on a galactic scale with many of the species that were either larger or stronger than the Eridiani themselves, just as others had enhanced their brain power and capacity. In reality, the OSG was a political entity all itself, with laws and rules that needed to be followed. The Eridiani Alliance was only their front operation so to speak. While there were billions of Eridiani who had no idea what the OSG did or how they operated, those within the corridors of power on their homeworld were very aware.

The Vanari Empire was only their latest ongoing operation. The Vanari females had unique abilities that the OSG Board determined they could use for profit and power. The oil, or Alkay as it was called, that they secreted from their pores had powerful influencing properties that the OSG wanted to use. That they had been using for centuries. With surgical precision the OSG had utilized their contacts and political will in order to gain the upper hand when it came to knowledge of the Vanari and their medical makeup. Once they determined how to manipulate the Vanari psyche and physical makeup, they were able to essentially control the Vanari. The only fly in the ointment so to speak had been the Lycavorians of the Protectorate. They were infinitely more stubborn than the OSG had first determined, and they had access to technology that not even the Vanari had. Technology that gave them the ability to make ships and weapons that were incredibly efficient and powerful, even more so than the Vanari in some ways. This was technology the OSG wanted. Unlike the Vanari however, the Wolfen bastards had not been so easy to control. They had retaliated savagely against the OSG after several of their trading ships had been captured. The OSG Intelligence arm had hoped to discover something about this technology from within the ship's computers but all they had managed to do was piss the Lycavorians off. They were notoriously unpredictable and not as easily manipulated. After the Protectorate destroyed one of their budding colony worlds, the OSG decided it was not within their best interests to come into direct conflict with the Wolfen bastards of the Protectorate, but they would attempt to get the technology through other means. So far they had been totally unsuccessful, but upon discovering the resurgence of Earth and the humans there, they made the decision to go about their goals differently. The Wolfen bastards that called Earth home and those within the Union itself also had access to this advanced technology somehow, and they had gotten a large part of it recently. The Flatspace technology that allowed them to utilize their shields was something even the Protectorate didn't have, and this was something else the OSG wanted to get their hands on. Considering that only those Lycavorians who were active parts of the military had these weapons, great care had to be taken in order to somehow secure this technology for it was a closely guarded secret along with their sudden development of advanced engine designs and weapons.

Entering into a partnership with the Kavalian animals seemed like a good idea. They were ruthless and powerful, and on the verge of ending the reign of the Vampire High Coven in this part of the galaxy. This fact made working with them a promising venture to say the least. If they worked with the Kavalians, eventually the feline beasts would turn their attention to the Lycavorian Union, and the OSG could get what it ultimately wanted. They were nothing if not patient. So they began working within the Alpha Quadrant, working with the Kavalians and the many different outlaw organizations that operated within The Wilds. When the request had come from the Kavalian leadership that they use their unique abilities to target several different individuals within the Union government the OSG had reviewed the request and what the Kavalian Empire had already accomplished. If they supported this rogue Lycavorian in his bid to return to the throne of the Union, they could get what they wanted and the risks would be very minimal to say the least. They had already been transporting Vanari females through this Union space for several years now with no repercussions. The Union was massive and even they were not able to patrol all of their territory all of the time. It was easy enough to learn the patrol patterns of ships in a certain sector with time and patience, and then begin using this corridor to bring their slaves into The Wilds. When the Kavalian leadership had gotten word to them about this operation it was determined it could only help in the OSG's ultimate goals and they agreed.

This Deep Operator Team was the only group on Earth at the moment. Their small size allowed them to go places and learn things that a larger force could not. They had been on Earth for the better part of ten years now, living among the many human cities and actually holding jobs. While they had been unsuccessful in discovering anything in regards to the technology the OSG wanted, it gave the OSG a pulse on life within the Union. These operators lived, worked and interacted among the many Lycavorians that resided here, enough that they had been able to get the information for this island through one of their many sources.

Their mission had been simple, infiltrate the island of the Lycavorian leader now, and kill as many of his females as they could, most importantly the blond one and any of his sisters that may be on the island. The OSG agreed with the Kavalian leadership that this would cripple the young prince emotionally in a way nothing else could. They knew from their contacts within the Union Netnews that while the barracks on the island was nearly complete, it did not house the sixty or so Lycavorian soldiers tasked with the defense of the island during the day just yet. They stayed within the port city of Gytheio at night and that building was easily watched. The entire team had moved to Gytheio when the order came, more to watch the island from within the city and try to determine patterns. The Durcunusaan as they were called were incredibly well trained and extremely smart. Past experiences with the Lycavorians in the Protectorate had proven violently bad for the OSG and trying to assault them head on was suicide, especially with the dragon beasts that stayed on the island. Once their Netnews contact had gotten the plans for this island from the library however, it was a simple matter to assemble his team and wait for dark. The dragons almost always hunted at night in the mountains inland and it was easy enough to see them leave the island as they so often did. When that moment came, the leader of the Deep Operator Team made the decision to go.

The entrance to this main tunnel been buried beneath the main floor of a trinket shop in Gytheio run by an elderly Lycavorian couple. They were now dead in their bed, both of them shot with silenced weapons while they slept. Wearing uniforms and body armor designed in the OSG's many research labs, whatever scent the assassins put off was absorbed and hidden by network of scent maskers built right into the body armor over the areas of the body that held the most potent scent glands. Those glands behind the ears were neutralized by filters worn within the COM implants that each of his team members wore. He turned to watch as his two men continued to use laser cutters to slice through the granite and concrete at the back of the fireplace in what was supposed to be his sister's room.

"How much longer?" He hissed softly.

"Almost through Major." Came the reply. "Got it!" This followed ten seconds later.

The USG Major watched as his two men muscled the three foot thick circular section of stone out of the way, soft light pouring into the dimly lit tunnel from the room.

"Stay with the plan and stick to the timetable! Main targets only unless someone gets in the way!" He spoke urgently. "We got four minutes max before they realize what is going on and those Wolfen bastards come pouring across the bridge pier! Brendi?"

The deep brown eyes of the slim figure turned to look at him front the rear of their group. The black balaclava hid the facial features, but the uniform and body armor could not hide the very curvy figure it protected. "Major?" The female voice spoke.

"You, Piotr and Tomar cover our rear and advise us if anything comes through the tunnels!" He hissed softly.

The woman nodded. "Major... I am an Intelligence Analyst... not a Commando!" The voice spoke.

“We needed the extra body and that is why you are here! You are not part of the assault; you are only covering our exit!” The major snapped. “Now do as you’re told Lieutenant!”

“Yes sir!” The woman answered.

The major turned to his lead two men and opened his mouth to speak when the lights coming from the room went out suddenly.

“Shit! The power just died!” One of his men spat.

The Major nodded. “Better for us! Go! Go!”

The two OSG assassins ducked through the circular hole they had cut, followed quickly by fifteen others, all of them with deadly intent.

“Is he always the one they turn too Sadi?” Arduri asked from where she sat on the huge bed.

She had joined Sadi, Ne'Veha, Lu'ria and Carisia in their master bedroom after changing in the room she shared with her mother. She had striped down to nothing but her undergarments and wrapped the dark blue robe that had been purchased for her by someone she had never met around her petite but powerfully packed body. She knew Andro's mates would be dressed in a similar manner for she had already seen it. The Lycavorians and Elves that populated the Union were like the Vanari in many respects, and they had no qualms about wearing less clothing. She knew her mother would not be back to their room before the morning, not if what she had sensed from her was nay indication, and that knowledge made Arduri very happy. Arduri sat next to Lu'ria on the bed, Carisia kneeling behind her and using a brush to pass through her long white hair.

Sadi turned from the open double doors onto the patio holding the mug of coffee and nodded as she moved back to the bed to settle next to Ne'Veha who was studying a data pad of information given to her earlier in the day while on the SCIMITAR.

“Yes.” Sadi answered as she leaned over to nuzzle Ne'Veha's four inch high elven ear and Arduri saw Ne'Veha close her eyes in bliss at the attention. “It's been that way ever since he completed his Agoge. He is the one that kept Denali and Lisisa's secret; he kept them on the SCIMITAR together so that they could cultivate their feelings and discover what they have. He encouraged Arrarn to pursue Narice and Toria if that is what his heart dictated... he also was the one who brought Malic into Eliani's life. He feels it is his responsibility to make things right if he can.”

Arduri nodded as she sipped her own mug of coffee, falling in love with the delicious liquid ever since having her first mug of it on the HARBINGER. The flavor was incredible and when she added a little sweetener to the steaming coffee, it never ceased to make her taste buds come alive. “Caliria was like this for Naesta and I.” She said softly. “We could go to her for advice no matter what the topic. It would drive our father crazy.”

“Because she had dark hair and was outcast?” Carisia asked.

Arduri nodded. “I think... I think he loves her in his own way...” Arduri said. “But he could never get past Vanari tradition and culture. He treated her as a second class citizen, just like everyone else, often times not even acknowledging her Birth Ceremony.”

“She is his child...” Lu'ria said softly. “It is wrong to disavow your child no matter the reasons.”

Arduri nodded. “It's even worse to do it because you are more concerned with a political position than anything. It is what ultimately led to him and mother separating and then severing their Union. He could not abide her popularity among the younger generation of Regents and how she almost always voted against him, and he hated when she would visit Caliria all the time and invite her for events and such. I've never seen him so angry as he is now though... at us... at Caliria.”

“He does seem to hold a much more pronounced distrust of our people.” Sadi said softly. “Do you know why?”

Arduri shook her head. “No.” She replied. “It's very strange really... even Regent Ardan is willing to allow Andro to retrieve Caliria and learn what we can about the Syndicate and their agents. Father is not... not to mention that he is incredibly incensed that Naesta is offworld by herself.”

“Naesta does not strike me as a woman who could not handle herself in a situation. Nor yourself Arduri.” Lu'ria said. “You were willing to stand against us on the HARBINGER even though heavily outnumbered. That tells me you are confident in yourselves and your abilities.”

“Many of us... the younger Vanari generations like Naesta and myself... we hate that the Syndicate is allowed to capture our females and we can do nothing once it is done.” Arduri said. “Many of us are willing to fight them and make them stop regardless of the risks involved. In our minds it is better than being fodder. The SBR and most of the older Regents think otherwise and ultimately it is their decision.”

“They only take dark haired Vanari?” Ne'Veha asked looking up.

Arduri nodded her head. “There have been times when they have captured those like me and Naesta, with silver or white blond hair.”

“And what happens then?” Sadi asked.

“If they are not broken within the first few hours by their captors, the Syndicate demands an enormous sum of credits and arranges for them to be returned.” Arduri replied. “Most are returned relatively unhurt, some are not. Those like me are worth far more credits in the Orionis Syndicate’s Slave Markets and their many brothels.”

“We will rescue all of them Arduri.” Sadi told her. “Do not doubt that.”

Arduri shook her head. “I don’t.” She answered. She looked at Sadi. “It is not common among your males to have multiply mates is it?”

Sadi shook her head. “No.” She said quickly. “It is not common, it is very rare actually. Aside from Andro’s father and his Uncle Daniel and Uncle Isra, there are only a handful that I know of within the Union and if I’m not mistaken, all of them are members of Mjolnir’s Hand or are Bonded with dragons.”

“Is that significant?” Arduri asked.

“No... I don’t think so.” Sadi answered. “Those that I know, Andro’s father, his uncles, they are perhaps some of the most powerful and influential Alpha males within our species. I believe a lot of it has to do with their bloodlines, but nothing like that has ever been studied. I do know that all of them are a different breed of man. Andro. His father... all of them.”

“What do you mean?” Arduri said.

Lu'ria laughed softly. “If they are like Andro... all of them are built like bulls and they have the rare ability to actually know how to use it!”

This brought laughter from all of them and Sadi nodded her head. “Well... there is that to consider.” She said. “It is very true.”

“How... how big is he?” Arduri asked shyly.

“Well... I don’t...” Sadi began.

“Thirty-one point one centimeters exactly.” Carisia answered quickly.

“Enylarcopri!” Ne'Veha gasped.

Carisia looked at their stunned expressions. “What?” She exclaimed. “I wanted to know so I measured him while he slept! It didn’t take much effort to...”

Her words were drowned out by the laughter that followed from all of them and then Carisia was laughing as well. That laughter ceased immediately when the light globes in the room went dark.

“A power failure?” Lu'ria asked warily as she turned on the bed and began getting to her feet.

Sadi was already standing, all her wolf senses alert now. “Not here.” She stated firmly. “Not on Cranæ Island.”

Carisia blurred to another part of the room and was pulling open a normal looking cabinet on the wall. “This is not good! Sadi...the Mindvoice dampeners are still active!” She exclaimed loudly.

“What does that mean?” Arduri barked as she scrambled off the bed.

Sadi moved up beside Carisia as she opened the cabinet and revealed several K12 KMs and an assortment of Nehtes and smaller blades. Carisia handed Sadi a Nehtes while she took the dual blades from the pegs. “It means someone killed the internal power intentionally but not the grid that controls the dampeners. They are on separate grids!” She spoke. She turned to see Ne'Veha beginning to step onto the patio to get outside the dampeners that surrounded their room. “SirsanGai no!” Sadi exclaimed reaching for her. “Don’t go outside! Close the doors quickly!”

Lu'ria claimed the dual blades from Carisia as Sadi held out the K12 to Arduri while Ne'Veha closed and secured the large double doors, pulling the drapes closed as she did. When they were locked and the drapes shut she moved back to where Sadi was and took the K12 from her.

“Sadi?” Ne'Veha gasped moving closer to her while clutching the K12. “Why do I suddenly have a very bad feeling?”

“Mistress?” Sadi barked softly to Lu'ria who had moved up to their master bedroom door and was using her elven and wolf hearing to try and detect any noises from outside.

Lu'ria held her hand up as she began to back up quickly, folding her dual blades under her forearms in the traditional Drow attack mode. “Someone is outside the door.” She hissed to them as she stopped and poised herself in a combat crouch next to Carisia.

Sadi depressed the button on the shaft of the Nehtes and it extended to its full length of seven feet three inches. “You can rest assured that it is not our mate coming through that door!” Sadi hissed. “And if it is not our mate... then they die!”

The OSG Major split his team into two groups when they entered Eliani's empty dark room. Seven of them slipped silently out the open window in her room and began making their way around the family wing of the villa like ghosts, the loss of power killing the external lights that were atop the villa. The major stayed with his primary team as his point man connected a small box to the door control on the wall. There was a soft chirp as the secure connection was made and power was fed to the panel and then another chirp that caused the door to slide open.

“Piece of cake.” The man hissed.

“Tom?” The major whispered.

The man with the portable infra red heat and motion scanner looked at him. He held up five fingers indicating targets and pointed down the hall, then held up five fingers twice more indicating ten meters. The major nodded.

“Go.” He whispered.

The seven men broke into the corridor, their weapons at the ready and trained down the corridor towards the double doors that led into the main room of the villa. The hall was dark, and the brick colored walls did not reflect the moonlight from above well, giving them shadows to move within. There were five doors in the hallway, but they were only concerned with one and that is the door they moved to and set up positions. The OSG man Tom looked at his sensor and nodded his head which caused the point man to open his kit again and then pry a plate off the control with the knife in his hand. Once the plate was off he connected the two wires from his kit to the internal panel. He looked at his Major and saw him now his head.

“Do it!” The major hissed.

The OSG Commando Teams were expertly trained and had in some cases hours upon hours of actual experience in such missions. This team was among the most experienced in the entire organization and before the words were fully out of his mouth the door was sliding open and they were rushing into the room, their weapons coming up and beginning to belch flame as the first three men into the room began firing before they were four steps into Andro's master bedroom.

And that is where everything began to fall apart.

The OSG Commando teams were used to being the best at what they did. No matter the mission they undertook, they always seemed to have the upper hand when they struck. Their prey was caught unaware and usually ill-prepared for the speed and ferocity of their attack. Their first mistake was not taking into account who it was they were attacking. These were not untrained men and women, these were Lycavorians and elves and vampires, all of whom had far greater senses and abilities to fall back on besides just their eyes. The first OSG Commando into the room was firing at the bed as he stepped to the left several feet. The movement out of the corner of his eye caused him to begin turning immediately, his enhanced reflexes propelling him with blinding speed. It wasn't fast enough as Carisia unwrapped the shadows from around hers and Lu'ria's body in a single blink, and Carisia buried her dual blades into the man's torso and unprotected neck from the side. His eyes went wide at the intense pain he felt and his finger came off the trigger of his weapon as he instinctively began reaching for where he felt the pain. It wouldn't save him as Carisia kicked his now silent weapon upwards with a powerful front kick, and ripped her blades free of his flesh. He dropped to the floor like a rag doll when the blade in his neck severed his spinal column at the base of his neck and he didn't have to worry about feeling ever again.

The second OSG commando who burst into the room got off died even quicker. He got off ten rounds from his weapon, rounds that were beginning to walk themselves along the left wall when he suddenly lost control of his trigger arm. His brain was telling his hand to pull the trigger, but his eyes grew wide when he looked down and nothing was happening. He had time to look up and see the burning amber colored eyes as Lu'ria drew back her dual blades; both of them now covered in blood, and execute a back flip kick. The top of her foot connected expertly with his jaw, snapping his head back with violent force and the sound of his neck shattering was like a gunshot over the whisper of the silenced weapons. The third, fourth and fifth OSG Commandos actually made it fully into the room and were beginning to track the three women that they saw when the thrown Nehtes entered just above the fourth man's clavicle and burst out his back in a shower of blood and bone, propelling him back into the third man and causing him to stagger directly into a hail of K12 rounds from Ne'Veha and Arduri that perforated his upper body with at least nine holes, each round slamming into him and tossing him back until he slammed into the wall and was still. The fifth man's eyes were wide and they grew wider as he lifted his weapon to fire but saw the blond haired female lift her hand and simply flick her wrist forward.

While the Mindvoice dampeners prevented them from talking or sensing anyone that was outside their room, and vice versa, they did not prevent them from using their skills in their bedroom. It was here that they practiced with each other and Andro, Andro mostly, teaching them to focus hard enough to actually be able to use their new Mindvoice skills as an extension of their will. Sadi had discovered quite by accident what she was capable of at SODRAG, and she had spent the last weeks and months honing that new and deadly skill with both Andro and the Feravomir whenever possible and mostly just learning to focus enough by herself. Her anger and worry fueled her focus now, anger at these men for attacking her and those she loved, and her worry for her beloved Andro who was still out there somewhere. The wave of psychic Mindvoice power caught the fifth OSG Commando in its path, literally lifting him off the floor and shattering every bone in his body as he went careening against the far wall with devastating speed and power. The edges of the Mindvoice wave also served to physically throw the OSG Major and the seventh man back into the corridor outside their room none to gently as they were just beginning to follow the rest of their team into the bedroom.

The OSG major slammed hard to the floor, rolling with the tremendous force of something he had never experienced before. As he began to scramble to his feet he looked up the corridor as the double doors burst inward and his eyes grew wide when he saw the two towering Lycavorians and the silver/blond hair of a Vanari female clad in little more than a large man's shirt and holding a black sidearm.

"Vanari?" He gasped. "Here?"

Jomann and Bren were both seasoned warriors and reacted with lightning like reflexes. Bren extended his Nehtes in a single blink and was launching it down the corridor before the OSG major fully knew what was happening. He saw the belch of flame from the second Lycavorian's weapon and the chest and head of his fellow commando blew apart like an overripe melon showering him in blood and pieces of flesh just as the thrown Nehtes entered just below his right shoulder blade, impaling him clean through and lifting him off the floor to be savagely speared to the granite portion of the wall behind him. He groaned loudly in agony, as the two men and Vanari female moved forward without thought, his vision unfocused as pain wracked his body.

Jomann stuck his head into the door of the bedroom for he knew they would smell him coming. "Sadi! Lu'ria! All of you this way!" He hissed.

Sadi and the others didn't hesitate in the least. "Jomann... who are they?" Sadi exclaimed as he ushered her out in to the corridor.

"I don't know!" Jomann spoke taking her arm along with Ne'Veha's and propelling them forward down the corridor. "It doesn't matter now! I must get you to the panic room!"

"Andro!" Sadi shouted. "Where is Andro?"

"We aren't going without Andro!" Ne'Veha barked loudly.

"Bren?" Jomann called physically moving all of them in front of him whether they wanted to go or not. He was perhaps the only Durcunusaan alive who would be allowed to handle them in this way because of his position as Andro's Captain, and Jomann was taking no chances.

"Go! I will cover you from the rear!" Bren stated as he wrenched his Nehtes from the body of the OSG Major and heard the man groan and then fall unconscious. He turned to Devra whose eyes were wide. "Come Devra!"

“OSG!” Devra exclaimed as she looked at the bodies. “Bren... they are Orionis Syndicate Commandos! Assassins!”

“Are you sure?” Bren asked with wide eyes.

“Yes. Positive!”

Bren looked at the wounded man and drove his Nehtes down once more, directly through the major’s hip and seeing his eyes open in horrible agony and scream. “Stay there fool!” He snarled at the man. “We’ll be back for you!” Bren took Devra’s arm and called forth his Shi Viska as they backed down the corridor, using it to shield them as they followed Jomann. “We will worry about it later!” He snapped. “We must go with Jomann and the others. You and they are the priority now!” Devra’s wide eyes looked at him, his eyes fully changed and his fangs on display for all to see. She should have been horrified at the callousness he had just used but Devra found all she could feel towards him was undying love.

Jomann led them into the main room just as Coren, Ardan and Tastia were exiting the guest wing in sleeping clothes and barely awake.

“What is happening?” Coren shouted seeing the large Lycavorian herding those who he knew were mates of Androcles in front of him. His eyes grew wide when he saw the way Arduri was dressed, and they almost exploded out of his head when Bren and Devra came out of the corridor a second later and he saw what she was wearing and the state of her hair. He knew immediately from the healthy deep blue color of her skin that she had been having sex, her Alkay giving her skin a beautiful sheen to it.

Jomann blinked several times and then pushed Sadi and Ne’Veha towards the kitchen area. “Go! The secondary entrance!” He barked.

“Devra!” Coren hissed. “What... you...”

Devra glared at him as she allowed Bren to pull her gently along. “Now is most definitely not the time Coren!” She snarled at him as she moved past him clinging tightly to Bren’s hand and holding the K12.

They had made it halfway across the expanse of the main floor to the kitchen area when the double doors to the patio area burst open and seven more black clad figures rushed into the room with weapons out. In a single motion, Bren moved up beside Jomann as his Shi Viska exploded into existence, followed a second later by the one Sadi now wore and three shields came down in front of the group for protection.

“Stop!” The OSG Commando roared. “Stop right there or we fire! We’ll kill the Vanari Regents!”

Jomann and Bren looked back to see Ardan and Coren standing in full view, frozen in their spots, Tastia clinging to Coren’s arm with wide eyes. Bren had pulled Devra in behind his body and she huddled with Arduri and the others behind those three shields and Sadi prepared to unleash another wave of Mindvoice power when the OSG commando’s words halted her action and they all turned around to look at Coren and Ardan.

“Nubou!” Jomann cursed in a vile raspy voice.

“Drop your weapons!” The Commando screamed as his seven person team spread out around him, their weapons leveled and ready for instant use. “Do it now!”

Sadi’s eyes grew wider as she looked at Jomann and he saw the same thing happen to Lu’ria and the others, their eyes growing large in disbelief and... and adoring love. Jomann smiled to himself as he realized what they felt and then suddenly he felt it as well because of the connection he now shared with his prince and turned to Bren quickly.

“He’s here!” Jomann hissed to him.

Devra’s wide eyes looked at him. “Who is here?” She gasped.

“Drop your weapons damn you!” The OSG Commando screamed again from across the room. “I’ll shoot those bastards dead and the Vanari whore with them! Drop them now!”

It was Sadi who spoke now... raising her voice enough to be heard by all of them. “You should have come in firing!” She growled at them, her eyes changed and the tips of her wolf fangs fully exposed. Something that gave her an especially ferocious appearance for a female wolf. “Time to die now mercenary scum!”

The moonlight was pouring in through the doors to the side that opened onto the entrance walkway that moved up to the long bridge that connected Cranae Island to the mainland. The manned Durcunusaan guard post at night was on the opposite side of the bridge, four of the five guards now sprinting back across the bridge as fast as their legs would carry them. They did not staff the guard post on the villa side of the island at night because Andro refused to have so many additional men and women underfoot and intruding on his life even in the evening. That policy would change after this evening, as would many. Among the many changes that would come of this night was the number of large glass doors that would no longer exist. They existed now however, and all of the OSG team saw the massive shadow pass in front of the double glass doors and they began turning just as those same glass doors imploded under the three hundred pound weight of a very large and very pissed off raven black wolf. Not since Alba Tau had Androcles felt such raging and savage anger. These men and women, whoever they were, they had come to harm his beautiful Sadi and his other precious mates. They had come to take from him what he had waited all of his life for and from deep within his chest came the full power of a Talon Guardian in wolf form. What everyone witnessed next was something they would take to the graves with them. It was both horribly brutal and savage, but it was also strangely the most beautifully choreographed chain of physical action any of them had ever seen. It was most profound to Devra and Arduri Re Mydala, for Devra realized then just how precious his mates and wives were to this young Prince, and she realized that soon Caliria would be among those that this young man would shatter worlds for. She also understood instantly what it meant for her now as Bren's wife and mate and no matter the blood and gore she witnessed, the feelings of devotion to him knowing he would do the same thing for her nearly tripled within her heart. For Arduri Re Mydala it only increased her belief that like her mother, she was meant to be here among these people, and she could only hope beyond hope that the two others she found herself desiring now more than anything would feel the same thing she did.

Coren, Ardan and Tastia could only stand there and stare in unabashed awe. None of them had ever seen a wolf of such size and majesty before, and all of them had seen dozens of Lycavorian men and women from the embassy in their natural forms before running within the embassy grounds on Austrova

The OSG Commando closest to the door was turned halfway around when three hundred pounds of muscle and flashing teeth landed on him like the force of a boulder, shards of glass peppering the ground all around them. Huge paws drove him to the floor and the incredible weight above him splintered the entire left side of his rib cage. He would not get the opportunity to scream for those huge jaws snapped down on his throat and tore upward with barely any effort. The commando saw his blood and flesh erupt into the air and then that monstrosity leaped upward as he began to die. Andro's right paw ripped out with savage power as he leaped forward through the air, four razor like talons slashing across the face of another OSG Commando and sending him spinning across the room. He snapped his tail to the side and his massive jaws flashed open once more, clamping shut on an OSG commando's shoulder and using his weight and momentum he completed the spin and launched the commando through the air, his screams of agony filling the room as the flesh of his shoulder and neck tore away from his body. Four more commandos.

Andro twisted sideways and intentionally fell to his side and skidded forward, all four of his paws free to strike and strike they did as they shredded the backs of the legs of a female commando into ribbons and she fell screaming out in agony. No matter the circumstances, Andro would not kill a woman unless absolutely necessary and as he righted himself once more he slammed full tilt into another commando, ramming his shoulders into the man with as much speed and force as he had left. He heaved upwards, throwing his head and shoulders back, and tossing the man in to the air as he rose up on his hind paws and suddenly there was a silver/white flash and then he was standing there as a man. His azure eyes burned brightly and his hands flared with psychic power and two Mindvoice diamonds shot from the palms of his hands and impacted two more OSG commandos in their chests, the psychic weapons blowing gaping holes in their upper bodies and tossing them back nearly ten meters out onto the patio. He reached out and snatched the man he had tossed into the air as a wolf and used his body as a club, tossing him with all of his considerable strength at the remaining commando and sending both of them sprawling into the back wall of the kitchen area. Another psychic diamond formed and launched from his left hand, tearing through the neck of the commando he had thrown and then Andro was upon the last man, his right hand clamping around the stunned man's throat and heaving him off the ground a good twelve inches as he began to choke the life from him.

“YOU COME TO MY HOME!” Andro screamed his voice like a foghorn on a quiet night and his dual fangs fully exposed and the most terrifying thing Devra or the other Vanari had ever seen. His next words however, his next words would earn an unlikely friend that he would not discover for several days. “You come to my home ronnus, with the intent to kill MY MATES! MY WIVES! MY VANARI FRIENDS!” Andro leaned closer to the man as he gagged horribly and clawed at the hand that held his throat. Even his enhanced physical strength was no match for this enraged Lycavorian and he slowly felt the life being squeezed from him. “I am Androcles Leonidas of the Lycavorian people...” Andro roared. “And you have chosen to take the side of my uncle with this action tonight. Do you think I can not see who directed you on this mission by the surface thoughts that swirl within your mind! Now you have made an enemy of me for as long as I have years! Now... now you have made your vile conduct with the Vanari people my conflict! And now you join your ancestors scum, and you will die knowing that more of your people will follow you to hell very soon for they hold my Vanari mate and I will get her back no matter how many of your kind I have to send to Vada Lethadori in the process!”

Andro squeezed even tighter and he rammed the commando back into the unyielding wall hard enough to crack the granite exterior. The man’s larynx splintering and his neck snapping was a ghastly sound in the now quiet room, his legs twitching several times before death took him into its embrace. With a final scream of anger Andro whirled around and heaved his body as hard as he could out onto the patio, smashing what remained of his double doors from their frame and he unleashed a howl unlike anything they had ever heard from him. A howl that even Bren shivered from as the sound rippled through him.

Andro turned instantly then. “KertaGai! SirsanGai!” He gasped just as Sadi and the others broke from behind the shields and ran to him. Sadi’s Shi Viska vanished as she was enveloped into his arms and he pulled all of them to him, nuzzling them furiously, his kisses full of devotion and love. Devra rose slowly to her feet, gripping tightly to Bren’s arm and not the least bit worried who saw it. She looked up into his face as he pulled her tighter against him.

“Vada Lethadori Bren?” She asked softly. “What... what is that?”

Bren met her eyes. “The Gates of Hades!” He answered. “The Gates of Hades!”

“...telling you it’s gone bad and we need to move!” Brendi exclaimed as she glanced into the hole once more.

“Shut up Brendi!” Piotr snapped softly. “We wait for the Major to come back!”

“The shooting is over!” Brendi hissed. “The shouting is over! Our team is dead! We need to get out of here now!”

“They are our team... not yours!” Tomar snarled at her whirling to glare at her face. “Now shut the fuck up and wait!”

Brendi reached up and yanked the balaclava from her head, her deep red hair falling all around her face and well past her shoulders. “I told the Major this was a bad idea!” She snarled right back unafraid. “I am the Intelligence Officer here and I told him this was a bad idea! Why wouldn’t he let me contact the Regional Commander?”

“Just watch for him and the others!” Tomar snapped.

“This operation wasn’t sanctioned by the OSG Council was it?” Brendi barked right back.

“Shut up bitch!” Piotr spat.

“It wasn’t!” She gasped with wide eyes. “You did this without authorization from the OSG Home Council?” She gasped. “Are you fucking crazy?”

“The Regional gave authorization!” Tomar snarled at her.

“The Regional Commander can not authorize an operation against a foreign government without approval from the Home Council you moron! The major knows that!” Brendi’s brown eyes were very wide now. “Shit... you took a side job! You stupid idiots! How much were you morons paid for this job?”

“Shut your hole Brendi!” Piotr barked.

“How much damn it? You do realize what you have done don’t you?” Brendi exclaimed. “How much?”

“Ten million.” Tomar answered quickly.

Brendi looked at him incredulous. “You compromised the integrity of the OSG in this quadrant for ten million credits!” She almost screamed. “And you involved me now too! You fucking stupid fools!”

Tomar and Piotr turned to face her now, neither of them friendly. “Listen you arrogant bitch! We’ve been out here for three years now! You just got here six months ago! The Big Alpha Quadrant Expert! Three years we have been operating out here! We know what we are doing!”

“The Home Council will find out about this!” She snapped. “They’ll find out about this and we’ll all be dead!”

“They aren’t going to find out about it.” Tomar hissed. “At least not from you.” He leveled his weapon at her. “The major should never have added you to our team. The only reason he did is because we needed your supposed expert Intel on the Lycavorians. Your job is done! No one is ever going to know on the Home Council... cause you ain’t going to be alive to tell them!”

“Indeed!” The deep voice growled from behind them. “That seems to be your problem now as well!”

Brendi’s eyes went wide when she saw the tall Lycavorian behind them. Tomar and Piotr were turning quickly, bringing up their weapons when she heard the tearing sounds of flesh and saw the wicked looking spearheads erupt from the backs of both men. Her brown eyes were wide and she tossed aside her silenced weapon and began scrambling back through the hole that had been cut into the wall as fast as she could push her legs. She wasn’t aware of how far she had gone until she felt a powerful hand grasp her long lush hair and yank savagely. Brendi howled in pain and reached for the hand that was pulling her out of the hole with strength she had never felt before. As her body cleared the interior hole that hand released her hair and tossed her to the floor with no regard. Brendi rolled several times and came up to her knees only to have two very large guns stuck in her face by two very angry looking men. Her brown eyes darted to the burgundy colored red hair of the female that walked up to her.

“Nice hair!” Eliani spat viciously, her much less pronounced dual fangs fully extended and her fern green eyes outlined with a thick black ring. “Welcome to Earth upae! You aren’t going to enjoy your stay!”

Eliani snapped out with her right hand and a palm strike that connected directly with Brendi’s jaw. Her brown eyes rolled up into her head and her body went limp as a noodle as she collapsed on the floor of Eliani’s room. Eliani looked at the two Durcunusaan troops who had linked up with her outside the open window of her room and entered the villa just as Andro had gone smashing through the front.

“Tie the bitch up and lock her down here!” She snarled. Eliani turned as the head and shoulders of the Durcunusaan senior non-com appeared in the hole at the back of her fireplace.

“The tunnels are clear Princess.” He stated quickly. “Two dead.” He looked at where the woman lay on the floor. “You didn’t kill her?”

Eliani glanced at the unconscious woman and shook her head. “It will be nice to have someone to question who isn’t half dead.” Eliani answered as she watched the man pull himself out of the hole and stand.

“Yes... I imagine Jomann will have some very pointed questions he will want to ask.” He spoke.

Eliani looked at him at the mention of Jomann. “You know my brother’s Captain?” She asked.

“Know him? Milady... we have served with Jomann for seven years now.” Anicetus answered looking at the diminutive Princess. “Since before Alba Tau. If not for him... we would not be here.”

“He was... he was at Alba Tau?” Eliani asked softly.

Anicetus nodded his head. “Eleventh Spartan Shock Division. We were part of the 19th Advanced Scout Legion.”

Eliani’s eyes grew a little larger. “The 19th Scout Legion suffered almost ninety percent casualties.” She stated from memory. “I... I helped to treat most of those survivors. You... you stormed a forward Evolli Command Center and...”

Anicetus nodded. “It needed to be done. They were directing artillery fire on our people and killing our friends.” He replied softly. “I will have my men sweep through the tunnels again and find every entrance Princess. We’ll insure they are sealed permanently.”

Eliani watched as he turned and headed back into the hole in her fireplace. She glanced quickly at the unconscious woman again, briefly admired the way her uniform clung to her curves and then headed out of her quarters towards the main area of her brother’s villa.

RITAAH

“...arrived two hours ago.” Poysha told them from within the image in VORTEX Cruiser 341’s main bridge area. “They had her arms secured in a strange way... wrapped close to her chest and her fists just under her chin but...”

“To keep her from calling her Shi Viska.” Isra spoke softly. “In that position... if she called it from Flat Space she would have probably killed herself.”

“They took her immediately to the room they have been building.” Poysha told them. “She was bruised somewhat as I said... but she appeared unhurt Resumar. Almost... almost listless really.”

“Listless?” Shiria asked gently.

Poysha nodded. “She was not fighting them at all... and they were treating her more gently than they would normally treat prisoners. She looked as if she had been crying. I saw her face close up before they took her into the room. Her eyes... her eyes held no emotion in them.”

“Drugs?” Ckhoa asked.

Tarifa shook her head. “Never.” She gasped.

“She has been wolf for over two decades now.” Na'lia spoke from her spot next to Mican. “The only drugs that would have any affect on her are those used to halt her ability to shift.” She told them. “No mind-altering drug of any kind would work; the Lycavorian healing system would purge them almost instantly.”

“The attack on the Senate Building took place shortly after the Netnews carried Martin’s death on it.” Tarifa spoke. “If this was the last thing For'mya saw... if this is all she remembers and they have one of these Static Inhibitors implanted on her somewhere, that is why she looks and act as she does. She has lost her mate, her husband, and only the gods know what else they have told her. They could tell her whatever lies they wanted and she would have to believe them at least in some fashion, especially if they present false evidence to support these lies.”

“I still do not understand why they have taken her.” Jalersi spoke softly. “What possible help could this be to Pusintin in attempting to gain the throne of the Union? By holding her he only makes people hate him more than they already do. He must see that!”

“There was nothing more on the pad that our father downloaded to you at the embassy Pian?” Athani asked coming up beside him and reaching out to place her hand on his arm. Pian looked down at her and shook his head. Athani was the one who he feared would not believe his transformation. She had escaped the horrors and fear the moment the opportunity presented itself and after becoming wife to Resumar Leonidas and then a Princess of the Union, she was the one he thought would be the most skeptical. As it turned out, this was not the case, and she was absolutely thrilled that her older sister had found what she herself had found.

Pian looked briefly at Jalersi and shook his head. “Jalersi and I spent hours trying to determine what it was they were doing. We wanted to try and stop it because we knew it would only mean death and destruction for our people.”

“All that Keleru allowed Matuarr and the others to see was the part he sent to them. Not their overall plan or how they thought it would succeed.” Jalersi told them.

“What about Jiss?” Athani asked.

Pian looked at Jalersi once more and couldn't help but smile. “Jiss has seen little more than a dark haired Lycavorian female for the last week or more.” He answered. “A female Durcunusaan officer saved his life inside Tarifa's home. Everyone else thought her dead from her injuries but Jiss refused to leave her behind. She was alive, and he carried her for the better part of three hours in a running fight with Puma Bane Commandos. He has sat beside her bed every day since then.”

Athani looked at him surprised. “You are serious?” She asked.

Pian nodded. “Yes.”

Jalersi laughed softly. “It is a sight to see really.” She said. “I think he is smitten by her and what she did for him. And I believe she may be interested in him as well. Time will tell really.”

“They can't possibly hope to influence the Elven Parliament with these actions.” Tarifa stated getting them back to the topic at hand. “The elves are founding members of the Union. There is nothing that would make them turn their back on the Union. Nothing!”

“But there are Elven Ministers who privately do not agree with the policies that Dysea and For'mya have instituted. Nor do they hold the Lycavorians in very high regard anymore.” Isra spoke now. “Androcles's SirsanGai Ne'Veha... her father is among them and he demanded Andro rescind his claim to her after the fact.”

“I take it this is significant?” Shiria asked.

Tarifa looked at her. “Demanding that a pureblood Lycavorian male rescind his claim to a female who has quite willingly become his mate is paramount to calling him several very foul names.” Tarifa said. “Ne'Veha's father would have known this... should have known this... and to demand it of Androcles? Well...

he is lucky he still has lungs to breath from. It is my understanding Ne'Veha herself called him some very choice things and then renounced him as her father right there in front of everyone in the mess lounge.”

“The Elven Delegation to the Senate is the largest behind only the Lycavorians. They hold two more seats than the Hadarian Delegation and three more than the Algolian, all of them permanent members of the Senate.” Isra spoke once more. “Perhaps he wishes to influence them in this way.”

Resumar shook his head now. “No.” He said softly. “Grandfather L'tian would never allow it to happen.” He said.

“Resumar... he is the one who made such a commotion when Dysea first came to the Union with Martin.” Tarifa said.

“His reasons for doing that were well known Tenna.” Resumar answered. “No... even since medwaw For'mya was named a Queen of the Union... even before then back to when father turned her... he has embraced her status and role. The elves role in the bigger picture. He has worked tirelessly through the years to bring us even closer together and now... now he would never do something to undermine that.”

“She is his daughter Res.” Tarifa said.

Resumar nodded. “Yes... but unlike Tenne Tareif who was raised to passionate in all that he did, grandfather L'tian was raised to believe in his station. When mother... when mother fell in love with father all that changed. When she became first concubine and then Queen... it changed even more. He saw there was more to life than just a simple station and title... that all of us serve the greater good in our actions and he has held to that conviction ever since. He will not allow anything to take place that will force the elven people away from the Lycavorians as the Kavalians have done with the Hadarians. And there are far more who believe as he does than do not.”

“Are you so sure Resumar?” Isra asked.

Resumar nodded. “Yes.”

Shiria turned to the image of Poysha. “Poysha... are you able to get close to her? Talk to her perhaps?”

Poysha shook her head quickly. “I have been placed in charge of monitoring all the electronics and devices that are monitoring the room she now occupies, but I just certified the equipment as in peak condition and it would look very odd for me to suddenly have to go and fix something.” She said. “Even if I was able... why would she believe me? Part of my cover here is my inherent hatred for Lycavorians because of what I believe they did to my parents. I must act that part to perfection for it is part of the reason I am in the position I am now Resumar Leonidas.”

Res nodded. “And I don't want you to put yourself at risk.” He stated.

Poysha thought quickly. “Perhaps in a day or so I could insinuate a small power surge or something in one of the systems that would allow me to get close to her. Pass her a message maybe that only she would understand and allow her to believe what I tell her. A few words Resumar... words that only those who know her and love her would know. Something to make her believe me.”

Resumar looked up at her image. “You would do that?”

Poysha looked at him. “You are there now... you call a Kavalian your wife and mate. You and Mican, all of you are going to risk everything to build a resistance that will fight to free my people. Getting a message to your mother is exactly the purpose I have endured what I have up until now. So that a time would come when I could help to set my people free of what Prefect Keleru and Marshall Pusintin have done. You know what I should say?”

Resumar nodded slowly. “It is the name my father gave to her. Kinsoaurgai. Voice of my heart. My mother Aricia is Saaurano. Light of my soul. If you... if you can somehow put these words in the same sentence it will give her pause. It will give her pause enough for you to give her a longer message.”

Poysha nodded. “Then I will come up with something to use these words while you inform your brother and others that she is here and devise your message. It must be short Resumar, for I doubt I will be alone with her for very long. She is somehow important to what Keleru and Pusintin are doing and a lowly tech will not be allowed to remain within this room for long.”

“What makes you think I'm going to tell my brother?” Resumar asked her.

“You will tell your brother to keep him from starting a war Resumar.” Poysha said. “Ckhoa has told me how you and your siblings view your parents... your family. And she has told me that the one person all of you fear more than your father is your brother. I have spoken with you these last days and I feel a trust has built between us. You will tell your brother Resumar... and then you must tell him to not act as many think he will. It could cost both of us more than we are willing to lose.”

“If you know all this Poysha then you know Andro will never put our mother at risk. Not for anything.” Resumar said.

“Then perhaps what I have heard in rumors spoken about him here is wrong.” Poysha said. “I hope so... and I will put my trust in you in that regard.” She looked at something out of the image and then turned back. “I must go now. I will find a way to tell your mother these words Resumar... trust in me. I will contact you back on our normal schedule in two days.”

The image vanished and Resumar looked at Shiria. “Do not judge her too quickly Resumar. Her life there has not been easy and she has taught herself not to trust anyone outside of Ckaoa or myself.”

“I don’t judge her.” He stated quickly. “I don’t intend to judge her! What I intend is to find a way to get her and all those others with her, including my mother, out of that vile place and away from the life my uncle forces upon them if it is the last thing I do!” Resumar snarled angrily. “I... I must speak to Andro alone. If you will excuse me now.”

They watched him stride out of the bridge area, the anger floating around his aura very easy to see even to those who were not wolf. Ckaoa stepped up to Shiria. “What does he mean Scribe Mother?” She asked softly. “How will he get Poysha and the others out of there? There is no way?”

Shiria looked at Athani and smiled before she answered. “I believe there is very little he or his siblings can not do if they put their minds to it.” Shiria spoke taking Ckaoa’s hand in her own. “Just as we need to put our minds to our task now. And that is making sure Mican, Isra and the others know every portion of the castle on Rizon Four before we move there. Come... Ckaoa.”

CRANAE ISLAND

“...did not expect us to be here.” Devra spoke. “I saw that Eridiani’s face. I heard him. He was shocked that we were here.”

The bodies were gone, the glass swept up and the doors removed completely as a swarm of Durcunusaan had descended upon Cranae Island within moments of the battle ending. The Netnews crews were screaming for information and being told that it had all been a drill to see how well they responded to anything that might happen on Cranae Island. That story was not going to wash for very long and they knew it, but they announced it to buy them the time they needed. Neither Devra or Arduri had changed out of the clothes they had been wearing when the attack began, and even Tastia was wearing only a lightweight robe over her undergarments. Coren and Ardan had been speaking within Coren’s room and while they wore clothes that had been brought to them, they had not begun to get ready for bed. Devra had shared a look with Arduri when they saw what Tastia was wearing and that told them that perhaps Tastia was not as wrapped up within Coren as everyone first thought.

Ardan looked at her. “Devra are you sure?” He asked.

Devra nodded. “Yes, absolutely.” She answered. “I was only a few meters away from him Ardan. I heard what he said.”

“What are you doing Devra?” Coren snarled at her as they sat in the main area of the villa now.

“What do you mean Coren?” Devra asked as she sipped the large glass of tangerine juice Bren had gotten for her before moving to the Command Center with Andro and the others.

“You know very well what I am talking about!” Coren snapped. “You were with him weren’t you? We are not fools Devra and we can detect the flush in your skin! You actually laid with that animal!”

Devra’s eyes narrowed and she glared at him. “I don’t particularly care what you can or can not detect Coren Re Mydala! Perhaps you should be less concerned with who I choose to share a bed with and more concerned with the Orionis Syndicate Assassins that just attacked us here!”

“Then you did sleep with him?” Coren asked wide eyed.

“By the grace of the prophets Coren...!” Devra exclaimed. “Yes... alright... are you happy now?” She hissed viciously. “I slept with him... and if you want the details, he fucked my brains clear out of my head for over three hours! My Alkay was pouring from my body so much that it soaked the sheets in seconds! And I adored every pulsating moment of it... and I intend to continue to enjoy it as often as I wish from this night on!”

“What?” Coren almost screamed. “You can’t be serious?” He moved closer to her. “You have compromised your objectivity by doing this!”

“I have compromised nothing!” Devra screamed back at him. Arduri reached across the couch and grasped her mother’s arm.

“Mother.” She said softly.

“No!” Devra stated getting to her feet. “For over ten millennia we have looked upon these men and women as beneath us because they are able to change their forms.” Devra spat. “We have considered them animals, nothing more than the predators they can become and in doing so we have brushed aside a friend and ally. They are more like us than you will ever know Coren, for you refuse to lift the veil of stupidity the SBR has covered your eyes with!”

“How dare you!” Coren barked at her.

“Oh... I dare!” Devra barked right back at him. “I dare because I love my daughter more than you it seems! I dare because I am willing to do whatever it takes to get my child back! I came here and I saw what we had forsaken so long ago! I came here and saw men and women willing to help me no matter what the majority of our people thought of them! I came here and found... I found my future!” Devra snarled. “I found they are no different than us in what they desire! What they worked towards! They are just more open about how they go about getting what they want!”

“What nonsense is this?” Coren snapped.

“You won’t see it because you are blind Coren. Blind to the future we could have for some reason!” Devra spoke. “I don’t understand why you think and act the way you do... but I will no longer be like you.”

“Devra you saw what they did here! You saw what that Prince did! He slaughtered that defenseless man! He killed him in cold blood! How can you even tolerate their presence much less share a bed with one?” Coren exclaimed. “They proved it this very night that they are no better than the animals they can change in to!”

“That man Androcles killed would have executed Sadi and the others father!” Arduri spoke now. “He would have executed all of us. What was he supposed to do? Allow these assassins to kill his mates and all of us?”

“I saw a man protecting those he calls wives.” Tastia said softly.

Coren snapped his head around and glared at her. “This has nothing to do with you Tastia Dal Vesch! I would appreciate it if you kept your council to yourself!” Tastia’s soft green eyes opened wide in shock at his statement to her, her hand lifting to her chest in amazement. Even Ardan’s face showed his shock at Coren’s treatment of her, but only Arduri really noticed the pain and sadness that filled those eyes instantly.

“Tell me Coren... where does this vitriol for a species you don’t even know come from?” Devra asked him, her eyes wide at the way he was treating a woman who shared his bed and his life. “Why do you refuse to see them for who they are?”

“I see them for exactly who they are!” Coren barked. “They are not like us! There is a reason the SBR has kept them at arm’s length Devra! They are violent and irrational! They act without thinking... they take what is not theirs!”

Devra blinked several times. “If you are referring in some offhand way to Bren I will have you know that he did not have to take me as you say Coren Re Mydala. I gave myself to him quite willingly and with far more passion that you could ever elicit from me!” She snarled and taking some perverse pleasure from the astonished look on his face at her words as she stuck the dig to him. “Your issues with the Lycavorians are your issues Coren and it is wrong for you to make others adhere to yours and the SBR’s shallow views of them. They saved our lives tonight Coren. My life! Your daughter’s life! This means nothing to you?”

“The assassins were obviously here for them... not us!” Coren snapped. “Whatever problems this Union might have with the Orionis Syndicate is not our dilemma! Our presence here is a risk our people can not afford. They will not help you Devra... they are using you! You are the one who is blinded... not me! By allowing this Lycavorian... this Bren person... by allowing him to use your body as you have; by doing this you have violated the sanctity of our species! The future of our species! Our forefathers never meant for us to go outside our own race! It is part of the reason we have built what we have!”

Devra looked at him with wide eyes, disbelief written all over her face at his words. “By the Grace of the Prophets Coren Re Mydala... I have never heard you make a more ridiculous statement!” She exclaimed. “The sanctity of our species? The Orionis Syndicate violates the sanctity of our species every day and you do nothing! The SBR does nothing! How can you... how can you even stand there with a straight face and expound these preposterous ideals to me Coren when our daughter, our flesh and blood, is violated every day by the same beasts that attacked us here? Prophets know what else she has had to endure! You and the SBR are so ingrained in your ways, so frightened of what you don’t know or understand that you dismiss anything that does not fit within your little world!”

“Enough of this!” Ardan barked loudly stepping between them. “We are not here to fight amongst ourselves!”

Devra turned to look at him. “No... we are not Ardan.” She stated. “We are also not here for the same things either it appears.” She turned back to Coren. “I have found what I have been looking for all of my life Coren. I have found it here. I will not be returning to Vanari space when you leave. I will be remaining here with my husband to build a new life for myself! My Lycavorian husband Coren! A man who worships the very ground I walk upon... and a man I now view in the same fashion!”

Coren’s eyes nearly exploded out of his head. “Your... your husband!” He screamed. “You can’t... you can’t be serious! You will return to Vanari space with us! You have much to answer for Devra!”

Devra turned and set her glass down on the table before turning to look at him once more. “You have already lost me Coren.” She stated calmly. “And as soon as Androcles Leonidas finds Caliria, you will lose her as well, or are you too dense to not realize who he meant when he spoke the words he did to that assassin before he killed him?”

“What?” Coren snapped.

“You have three other children Coren.” Devra stated calmly. “If I were you... I’d worry less about my seat on the SBR and more about whether you will lose them as well. Your track record up until now has not been very good.” Devra looked at Ardan. “Regent Ardan... if you will excuse me.”

Devra didn’t give him a chance to reply before spinning around and moving towards where the entrance to the Durcunusaan Command Center was now taking up one complete wing of the villa.

“Devra we are not finished!” Coren barked as he began to follow her.

Two Durcunusaan troops stepped out of Devra’s way as one opened the doors for her and she passed through without question. Both of them had entire the entire conversation that had just taken place and both of them could detect Commander Bren’s scent deeply imbedded within Devra’s blood. The doors slid shut just as Coren came up and both men moved back to their original positions directly in his path.

“Get out of my way!” Coren snapped.

There was a clicking sound and then Coren felt the barrel of a K12 placed just under his chin, and the spearhead from a half extended Nehtes pressed to his cheek.

“You will step back now Regent Re Mydala.” One of the Durcunusaan growled. “We are not in the mood for your antics.”

“That is my wife!” Coren snarled.

“Lady Devra was your wife Regent Re Mydala.” The second Durcunusaan spoke. “Was being the operative word here. She is now the wife and mate to Commander Bren... and she is untouchable to you. Untouchable to any male except her mate. Step back sir... we do not wish to hurt you but we will. You have won no friends here with your words this night.”

It was Arduri who stepped up now, taking her father’s arm and moving her body between him and the Durcunusaan, something that Ardan noticed they allowed without question as they lowered their weapons.

“Move back father.” Arduri told him gently. “You have caused enough trouble already.”

“Arduri...”

“Move back father!” Arduri snapped. “Or I will move you!”

Coren looked at her amazed at the tone of voice she had taken with him and he saw her green eyes now alive with anger. “Do not talk to me in such a tone!” He snapped at her.

“I will talk to you just as you deserve father!” Arduri stood her ground. “Mother is right you know! You are blinded by your views father... and all you will accomplish now is to get yourself hurt! Now step back!”

“So now you turn your back on me!” Coren snapped.

“No father... you turned your back on us.” Arduri answered. “You turned your back on all of us when you refused to do nothing to help us recover our sister. You turn your back on us when you refuse to acknowledge Caliria as your daughter. These men and women, they are our friends, and it is they who will help us to retrieve our sister, without your assistance father. My suggestion is to stay out of the way father, this attack by the Orionis Syndicate against Andro’s wives will not go unanswered, and you just may learn something.”

Arduri turned now and the Durcunusaan troop who held the K12 pressed his hand to the panel opening the doors for her. Arduri didn’t look back and followed her mother in the CC wing of the villa. Coren stepped back to where Ardan and Tastia stood, his anger simmering openly and he finally turned to look at Ardan.

“It was a mistake to come here Ardan.” He hissed. “I should have known better.”

Ardan met his eyes, looking at the young man he had nurtured for so long. “He called us his friends.” Ardan said softly.

“What?” Coren asked.

“Did you not hear him Coren?” Ardan asked. “He called us his friends. He told that man his actions had made our conflict with the Orionis Syndicate his conflict now for what they have done.”

“Ardan... you can’t possibly believe anything he said!” Coren gasped. “They tried to killed his women! They tried to kill him!”

Ardan nodded his head. “Yes they did. And if what Devra has told us is true... then he considers Caliria his wife as well.”

“That is nonsense!” Coren growled. “I will not allow it!”

“It would appear we have very little choice in the matter now.” Ardan spoke. “And if I am any judge of character... we are going to discover many things about the Orionis Syndicate that we did not know before this night.” He looked at Tastia. “You said they took prisoners Tastia?”

Tastia nodded her head slowly. “I heard them talking as they were cleaning up the main room here. Two of them, a woman and the man who was apparently the leader of this Syndicate Assassination Squad.”

Ardan looked back to Coren. “Prisoners Coren.” He said. “They have prisoners! Do you know what information we could obtain?”

“They will give us nothing!” Coren snapped. “They will probably use it to manipulate us into doing what they want!”

Ardan looked over to the two Durcunusaan troops by the door. “Perhaps.” He said. “I am not so sure anymore.” He said softly. All of them turned when they saw the group of men and women walk into the villa unchallenged and move right to the door into the villa’s Command Center. There were three men and four women, one of the men being incredibly tall and equally muscled with bronze like skin and what appeared to be white spurs of some sort along the edge of his jaw. Ardan watched as they approached and once more they were not challenged as the Durcunusaan opened to the doors instantly and they disappeared down that corridor. “I’m just not so sure anymore.”

“...are fine Tenna!” Andro told the image of his aunt from the SCIMITAR. “All of us.”

Four of the huge bedrooms originally built into this wing had been refurbished and since combined to establish a sophisticated Command Center along the west side of the wing. Outside the glass enclosed conference room they were in sat dozens of Durcunusaan techs at different stations. In the two hours since the attack, Jomann had ordered the C&C to be fully staffed around the clock and all command operations transferred from the base outside Sparta to here. The sixty Durcunusaan who had been staying in Gytheio until the barracks was complete were now camping out inside the unfurnished wing and would remain so from this day forward. Their bunks and other furniture would come in a matter of days while engineers finished installing different security systems in the barracks style east side of the wing. Jomann was no longer taking chances with the life of his Prince and the man who was rapidly becoming a very close friend, and he had already screamed his way up one side of a procurement officer and down the other in a fit of anger over what he perceived as laziness in obtaining items. The most advanced ground and thermal sensors, similar to those used to protect the Royal Villa Estate and the palace on Apo Prime, were now enroute to Cranae Island and would be installed before the end of the day.

“Who were they Andro?” Panos asked sitting beside Deia in the transmission, with Helen on her other side, Zarah and Lucia to her left.

“According to Devra and Arduri... they are Orionis Syndicate.” Andro answered. “A Hit Team.”

“A Hit Team?” Helen gasped.

Andro nodded his head. “Hired by the Kavalians if the surface thoughts I was able to sense are any indication Feravomir.”

“They are human Andro?” Deia spoke.

“Eridiani actually Prime Minister Deia.” Devra spoke from where she stood next to Bren now. It had amazed her to some degree that she had been ushered into this highly secure area of the villa with barely any question. When Bren had opened the door for her and Arduri, no one already in the room had even bat an eye at this action. An aide had come up and offered her more of the tangerine juice that Bren had given to her only a few hours ago, while another gave Arduri a mug of the coffee she enjoyed so much as she sat next to Carisia and Lu'ria at the huge table they all sat or stood around. Devra would come to learn over the next weeks what being Bren's wife and mate meant, for he was one of the most senior and well respected Durcunusaan officers within the entire Union. It was knowledge that Devra would embrace completely in her new role, a role that would hold far more power and influence in the future than she had ever thought possible.

“Eridiani?” Deia asked.

“They are human yes... but they have evolved much more than those here on Earth as you know them.” Devra explained. “Well... at least the majority of them. I believe there are several you believe are Eridiani and do not know it Androcles?”

Andro nodded. “Yes... but that is a topic for another conversation.” He said.

“You have prisoners I hope.” Deia said.

Andro nodded. “Two of them. A woman that Eliani and Anicetus captured in the tunnels and a man that Bren injured during the attack. The man appears to be the leader of this team.” He explained. “Marci flew in from Eden City with Lynwe and they will conduct the interviews. Eliani will supervise. Jomann is with them.”

“They... they were after you Andro?” Zarah asked softly.

Andro shook his head. “I was not the primary target.” He said his voice trembling with anger. “Sadi was. Carisia, Ne'Veha and Lu'ria. My uncle sent them after my wives Tenna!”

“Son vada carians!” Helen gasped. “Has he fallen so far to resort to such tactics?”

“It would appear so.” Andro growled. He felt Sadi's hand cover his and he turned to look at her where she sat closest to him always.

“We handled ourselves quite well my love.” She stated proudly.

“Xsa ditronw udos xunus!” Lu'ria hissed from her chair. “Udos ph'naut nauxxizz!”

“No... you are not helpless Lu'ria.” Helen spoke with a gentle smile. “Far from it in fact, as your actions have shown. However... like Andro's mothers it seems... you will need to learn you are not invulnerable. Carians... I spent ten years trying to pound it into their heads and now I must do it all over again with your wives and mates Androcles! I swear... do you and your father actually search the stars for the most obstinate females in the universe and make them your mates just to cause me sleepless nights!”

“Do you really want him to answer that question Feravomir?” The new voice spoke.

Androcles turned quickly and felt a small portion of the weight on his shoulders lifting. He stepped up to Denali in two strides and the two brothers embraced as if they hadn't seen each other in decades. The power of their embrace could almost be felt by everyone around them, and when Andro grabbed the back of Arrarn's head and pulled him into the embrace it became very pronounced. Arrarn reacted just as Denali had and they gripped each other with strength that would injure others. Andro brought their foreheads to his and held them there.

[You... you don't know how happy I am to see you both.] He spoke to them. [Mother?]

Deni nodded quickly. [On her way to father.] He answered.

Andro looked at Arrarn and squeezed the back of his neck harder. [You keep the faith fervon. We will find medwaw... and we will bring her home.]

[Promise me Andro.] Arrarn said.

[That is a promise I make with all my heart.] Andro answered without hesitation.

Arrarn nodded his head. [Then I will keep the faith.] He told him. [But when the time comes... do not expect me to show mercy or hesitate.]

[I won't.] Andro said. [For when that day comes neither will I fervon. Neither will I. And nor will our father.]

[Avoi.]

Arrarn took a deep breath hearing these words from his older brother and he nodded his head once more. It was what he needed to hear for he knew his older brother had never broken a promise to anyone, and that was the support he needed now.

“What happen here Andro?” Denali asked then. “We heard that there was a lock down in place when we entered the system.”

Andro nodded. “You arrived just in time to discover everything.” He said. “Grab a chair.” Andro turned and looked at Narice and Toria who stood just behind Arrarn and he leaned over to kiss both their cheeks and nuzzle then in an affectionate manner reserved for family.

“We have much to talk about Narice.” He whispered to her. “I need your counsel on many things.”

Narice squeezed his hand and nodded. “I know... I expected as much. Whenever you are ready.”

Andro nodded. “Thank you for what you both did.” He said.

“This is our family now Androcles.” Toria spoke with a brilliant smile and bright blue eyes. “Never thank us for doing our part.”

Andro nodded and looked up, seeing Lisisa embracing Sadi and Carisia tightly. He shifted his gaze and saw Normya then, hanging back from the others beside the towering young man he now knew as Tir'ut. Andro stepped away from Narice and Toria and moved over in front of Normya while she looked up at him shyly. It became quiet in the room as everyone turned to watch. It was a natural thing within the Leonidas family... for they all knew if Andro approved of something... then more than likely their father would approve. Normya's emerald green eyes were still hesitant as she gazed up into his face and then she saw that smile and those azure orbs glowed as he lifted her into his arm sand buried his face in her platinum colored hair and practically crushed her to him. The tears flowed easily for her then as she hugged him back with every ounce of strength she had, something she hadn't done in nearly half a year since she left Earth. An amount of time that seemed like eternity now.

Andro pulled his face away as he looked at her, holding her off the ground now. “I see that married life agrees with you sister.”

Normya laughed and nuzzled his cheek even harder then, her fingers digging into his shoulders. “You... you are one to talk fervon.” She gasped into his ear happily. Andro set her down and looked at Tir'ut then feeling weeks of pressure and worry being swept away. Normya clung to his hand and arm as she stood next to him. “Andro... this is Tir'ut.” She spoke with conviction and joy in her voice. “He is...”

“Your Blessed Husband.” Andro finished. “Yes... I can smell that quite clearly sister.” Andro stepped closer to Tir'ut, almost eye level with his six foot four frame. “My family... we owe you a debt that can never be repaid Tir'ut. I thank you with all that I am... my father thanks you as well.”

Tir'ut glanced at Normya's beaming face and then back to her brother. The closer they had drawn to Earth, the more nervous he had become. Androcles Leonidas had a reputation nearly as well known as his father, and it was common knowledge he was possessively protective of his siblings, especially his sisters. “There is no debt owed Androcles.” Tir'ut said. “The moment Il Kal'daka Darthirii filled my days with her beauty I was complete. The moment I tasted...”

“Tir'ut!” Normya exclaimed with wide eyes.

Andro laughed now and reached out to place his hand on Tir'ut's shoulder. “The details we can do without... but I do get the picture.” He spoke. “It is an honor to welcome you into our family and call you fervon Tir'ut.”

Tir'ut nodded his head to Andro. “No more than it is for me.” He stated. “And when the time is right... I will abide by your customs and I will present myself to your father Androcles.”

Andro nodded. “Of that I have no doubt.” He said. “Where is your father?”

“He and Vollenth went to Dragon Mountain first Andro.” Lisisa answered as she came up and embraced him tightly. “To fulfill a promise Vollenth made to Arzoal before he left.”

Andro nodded as he squeezed her tightly. “Then we will see him in a while.” He said. “For now... we should get back to what is happening right now.”

Devra had watched the pseudo reunion with wide eyes as she clutched Bren’s arm for the level of trust and love and confidence that permeated the air between the Leonidas children was felt by everyone in the room. To Devra it felt incredible.

For Arduri Re Mydala however, it felt utterly different.

Arduri gripped the sides of her chair when she saw them enter holding hands and her green eyes darted back and forth between the two of them. The images she had seen in no way did them justice, and from the moment she had seen their images and the way they appeared so happy and content, Arduri knew. Like her mother before her, Arduri found herself having to consciously keep from secreting her Alkay as she gazed at them. The height and incredible muscular definition of Denali and the exquisite exotic beauty of Lisisa was almost too much for her. Lisisa was not much taller than Arduri’s five foot one, yet she was built almost exactly like her with large firm breasts, a small waist and firm buttocks and legs that were encased by the ArmorPly as if it was painted on. She tried to control her breathing as Denali settled to the table two chairs away from her, his dark eyes gazing upon her for several seconds. Dark eyes that made her shiver in delight. She watched as Lisisa came up, dragging her fingers along the back of his shoulders as she settled between them at the table. When her forest green eyes turned to look at her, Arduri had to keep from gasping at the sensations that coursed through her.

“I’m Lisisa.” She spoke holding out her hand to Arduri.

Arduri almost didn’t reach for her hand afraid that her touch would cause her to excrete Alkay unwillingly, but she took a deep breath, reined in her raging emotions and gently took Lisisa’s hand.

“Ar... Arduri.” She stammered.

Lisisa was half wolf and half vampire, but her wolf genes were the more dominant of the two and she had worked very hard to master all the skills she had. While she would never have the keen sense of smell of Denali or Andro or their father, she had a very sensitive nose and she caught the scent of vanilla almond in the air easily. A scent that teased her senses in a way that only Denali ever did. She gazed at this blue skinned female for a long moment until Andro’s voice caused her to turn back to see him move to the head of the table near the image of Deia, the Feravomir and their grandfather Panos.

“We can talk more later... all of us.” Andro spoke to his siblings. “But for now we need to continue this briefing.”

“...sure this one is the leader?” Marci asked as she looked at the OSG Major who was now tied to the chair in front of her.

Anicetus nodded from where he stood by the door of the small room, Jomann leaning against the wall. It was meant to be used as a storage room for equipment, but for now held only a table and four chairs. The Major sat in one, his arms secured around the back of the chair with plastic bindings, his ankles also secured to the metal chairs legs. Brendi sat in the other, her ankles also secured to the chair’s legs, but her arms bound at the wrist to the arms of the chair.

“The female mentioned him several times in the tunnel as we approached. He is a major that we know of... and he was directing the others in the assault of the Prince and Princesses Master bedroom according to Bren.” He replied. “They were so intent on arguing in the tunnel that they did not sense our arrival.”

The OSG major blinked several times, surprised that he was even still alive. He glanced down to where that large Lycavorian and stabbed him with that long spear and his eyes grew wider when he realized his wounds were completely healed. He looked up once more and saw the dark haired female standing beside the much taller ebony skinned elf. He knew immediately what she was by her amber colored eyes and the flowing white hair that cascaded all around her shoulders. Another much shorter female with burgundy red hair stood to the side of the table her arms crossed over her ample chest and looking none too happy.

“I don’t think you realize the kind of situation you are in.” The dark haired female began to speak as she settled into the chair on the opposite side of the table. “We have quite a few questions for you, and how you answer the will determine whether you live or die.”

“I will tell you nothing bitch!” He snapped.

His advanced gene therapy treatments granted him the ability to see the blow coming, but whatever they had secured him to the chair with prevented him from moving to avoid it. Lynwe hit him with a straight heel strike to his jaw that rocked his head back and almost tipped him over in the chair. He snapped his head back around and looked at her with evil eyes as he spit blood onto the floor.

“That all you got elf bitch!” He snarled at her.

Lynwe grinned and allowed her vampire fangs to become exposed, watching as his smile vanished quickly when he realized what she was. “Actually... that was rather mild.” Lynwe answered him.

Marci leaned back in her chair and looked at him. “Your gene therapy treatments will not help you here.” She spoke seeing his eyes go a tad wider when she mentioned that. “Yes... we know you have undergone gene therapy to increase your endurance and strength and many of your physical skills.” She tossed the data pad onto the table. “The Princess retrieved it for us as she healed your wounds. Not without some complaining however. You see... you tried to kill her brother’s wives and mates... and that has not put you at the top of her list of good people. And straining and flexing your hands and arms will only cause the restraints to tighten. Your enhanced strength will not allow you to break the bonds sir, I assure you.”

They heard the soft groan from the female and suddenly Brendi’s head came up, her eyes wide as everything came rushing back. She groaned loudly as pain filtered through her head. The left side of her face was badly bruised from where Eliani had hit her, and the pain throbbed along her jaw and the side of her head. Her dark brown eyes focused on Marci and Lynwe and then darted to Eliani. “Oh... shit.” She hissed softly.

Marci smiled. “Oh shit doesn’t begin to cover it.” She spoke. “I’m glad both of you are awake now. It will make this much easier.”

“I demand to be treated as a prisoner of war!” The major barked.

“A prisoner of war?” Marci said. “Why would we treat you as such when we are not at war with anyone? At least not yet.” She answered.

“I know your laws!” The Major shouted. “We don’t have to tell you anything and you can’t torture us! I demand that you extradite us to the Vanari government!”

“The Vanari?” Marci asked. “Why would they accept you I wonder?”

“We are trained to resist torture!” The major spat. “You will get nothing from us so you may as well kill us now!”

Brendi looked at him with wide eyes. “Major!” She exclaimed.

“Shut up!” He snarled. “We wouldn’t be in this mess if it wasn’t for you Brendi, you stupid cunt!”

“I told you not to do this!” Brendi barked at him. “You didn’t listen to me you asshole! This is your fault!” She turned back to Marci about to speak.

“Don’t say a thing bitch!” The major growled.

“Both of you shut up!” Marci shouted at them causing both of them to look at her as she got to her feet and moved around to sit on the table in front of them. “I’m going to explain your situation to you right up front.” She stated calmly. “You are in the Lycavorian Union illegally... you are agents of either some government or organization that gave you the assignment to come here and target the wives and mates of the Crown Prince... and you are also responsible for the deaths of two citizens of the Union.” She saw their eyes widen just a little. “Yes, we have found where you staged out of and the man and women you killed in their sleep in order to access the entrance to the underground tunnels beneath this villa. The rest of your men are dead and my recommendation is that one of you talk and talk quickly or you will be joining them in the most painful way that General Lynwe can imagine. And she is a Drow elf mind you; her imagination truly knows no bounds.”

“Fuck you!” The Major snarled.

Marci smiled at him and it was not a nice smile by anyone’s definition. “Yes... that is what I thought you might say.” She spoke. “General?”

The OSG Major couldn’t stop the knife in Lynwe’s hand from coming down with speed that exceeded even what he was capable of. He couldn’t stop that blade from piercing his right thigh and driving deeply into the flesh until it was buried completely in his leg. He also could not stop the wail of agony that exploded from his lips as molten fire raced up his leg and began to spread throughout his entire lower body within seconds. His eyes glared at Lynwe as she smiled and stood back up.

“The fire in your veins that is racing throughout your body right now... it is a Drow poison.” Lynwe spoke. “Very potent... and very lethal. It also has the remarkable ability to make you answer everything we ask you truthfully. The burning will fade in several moments but enjoy the pain while it lasts for...”

“No!” Brendi screamed trying to struggle against her bonds. “Stop it! Hurry! That’s what he wants! You have to stop it!”

Lynwe looked at her oddly, her amber eyes flashing to Eliani who was suddenly very alert. “What do you mean?” Lynwe barked.

“Look at him! He’s feeding off the pain! Every OSG Team is conditioned to resist any form of torture! They are injected with a serum that accelerates their body’s physical functions to incredible levels when poisoned is introduced!” Brendi shouted.

All of them turned to see the Major’s face turning a bright red, the strain on his face very evident, the veins in his neck and cheeks almost bulging outward as if they were going to explode. Eliani stepped right up to him, reaching out with her hand as it began to flare a soft white.

“NO!” Jomann screamed as he reached for her too late.

The major released a savage growl and wrenched his arms up, the two plastic bindings on his arms snapping even as they tore the skin from his wrists. Eliani’s eyes grew wide as his hand clamped on her wrist with savage pain and he pulled her to him as he ripped the bindings from his ankles and came to his feet. As he pulled Eliani towards him with one hand he lashed out with the other, catching Lynwe across the face and sending her flying across the room to crash against the wall. Jomann had his K12 in his hand and leveled at the major’s head as he stepped up even with both Marci and Anicetus. The major yanked Eliani in front of him, his hand across her throat.

“Go ahead! Shoot me!” He screamed. “I die but I take this bitch with me! I’ll tear her throat out before you shoot me!”

“Release her!” Jomann barked out moving closer to him.

“Fuck you wolfen bastard!” The major snarled.

“You have survived this day... release her and you will live even longer!” Jomann barked at him. “Harm her... harm her and I swear to you... you will spend many long hours in agony which you can not imagine before I allow you to die.”

Eliani’s jade green eyes grew wide as she looked at Jomann and what he had just said. The major laughed almost hysterically as he brought his other hand around and fondled Eliani’s right breast.

“You got the hots for this bitch don’t you?” He snarled. “Does this piss you off wolf boy! Nice... nice and firm!” He tightened his grip on Eliani’s throat when her own anger flared and she started to struggle against his grip. “Don’t move sister... even your healing power won’t help you if I tear out your entire throat before I die!”

“Let her go!” Jomann hissed once more his K12 never wavering from its point of aim on his face.

“Shoot the intelligence cunt first!” The major barked loudly.

“Jomann don’t!” Marci snapped.

“She knows more than me anyway! Kill her and I’ll release the Princess bitch here! It’s a win win for both of us!”

“Jomann no!” Marci screamed far too slow to stop him from altering his aim and sending a single round into Brendi’s upper body in a split second. The chair Brendi was sitting in flew backwards from the force of the round impacting and the legs shattered as she fell, rolling over as blood soaked the front of her shirt.

Jomann shifted his aim back in another blink and looked at the man. “It is done ok.” He said. “Release her now and you will live!”

“Wow... you are either the stupidest motherfucker I have ever met, or you got the serious itch for this little bitch I am holding.” The major snarled. “Which one is it big boy?”

Jomann stared at the man his blue eyes holding nothing but painful death for this pig who held Eliani. “She... she is a Princess of the Union.” He spoke. “It is my duty... it is my duty to protect her!”

“Bullshit!” The major screamed spittle flying away from his lips. “I’m a nobody! You just whacked an OSG Intelligence Agent! She could have told you everything you wanted to know!”

“You will be alive!” Jomann spoke.

“I’m just a soldier!” He laughed. “You got nothing! I know nothing!” He shoved Eliani forward towards Jomann who caught her easily with one arm and pulled her tightly to him. “Take the bitch! You are all the same! All you Lycavorians are stupid as rocks! You killed the real prize here!”

Jomann’s arm curled tighter around Eliani and he felt her hands encircle his waist, his K12 still maintaining its spot on the major’s forehead. “Then it is a very good thing I only shot her in the shoulder!” Jomann snarled at him seeing the major’s eyes go wide. “And this is for laying your filthy hands on the Princess! You can’t feed off of anything if your brain is dead fool! Never touch her! Never!”

Jomann pulled the trigger and the single shot echoed in the soundproof room just as his first shot had. The KM round entered just above the bridge of his nose and blew the upper half of his head open, spraying the wall behind him with blood and brains. The major’s body stood there for several seconds before his legs got the message he was dead and then he appeared to fall over in slow motion. Jomann glared at his body as he fell, his legs quivering as the nerves stopped receiving signals and then were still.

“Now who is the stupid motherfucker midaeus?” Jomann growled angrily. He turned away from the corpse and pushed Eliani away from his body and looked at her. “Eliani?” He gasped. “Are you... are you hurt?”

“I wanted him alive!” Marci barked at Jomann.

“The female still lives!” Jomann snarled back at her as Anicetus helped Lynwe to her feet and looked at him.

“Shit!” Marci spat with wide as she moved to where Brendi lay on the floor unmoving.

Jomann turned his attention back to Eliani and holstered his K12 before taking either side of her head in his hands and turning her face upwards to his. “Eliani... are you...” Jomann’s words died in his throat when he saw those jade green eyes open and focus on him. They were the most exquisite eyes he had ever seen in all his life and their brightness took his breath away.

Until Eliani shoved him away with surprising strength and her eyes changed to an angry glare. “Marci’s right!” She spat as she backed away from him.

“He was... he would have...” Jomann gasped in shock.

Eliani pushed his hands away and stepped away from him fully. “Then you should have shot to wound him!” She growled. “It was stupid and it cost us intelligence!” She whirled away from him and moved quickly to settle next to Marci on the floor beside Brendi.

Jomann stood there for a long moment watching as she began to treat Brendi. Anicetus and Lynwe came up beside him after a few moments.

“You... you did the right thing Jomann.” Anicetus spoke softly.

Lynwe nodded her head. “If what the female said is true then yes you did.” She told him. “I must report to Andro what has happen here.”

“No.” Jomann said looking up. “I will do that.” He blinked several times and turned to Anicetus. “Insure she does not leave the island Anicetus. And post a detail around the prisoner at all times.”

“Done.” Anicetus said.

Jomann looked at Lynwe. “I will report what has happened General. You should remain with Marci and continue when the... when the Princess has healed her.”

Lynwe and Anicetus watched as he turned quickly and moved to the door.

DRAGON MOUNTAIN

“I should... I should not be here brother.” Cha’talla spoke softly as they walked side by side through the massive corridor and into the main center chamber. His eyes lifted and high above him he could see dozens of dragon hatchlings flying in the air in tight circles. “I do not... I do not deserve to be here.”

Oh... but you do. The female voice filled Cha’talla’s head and caused him to turn as the colossal flame red body of the dragon moved deftly from the side towards him and Vollenth. Very few things could frighten Cha’talla for in his years of life there was not much he had not seen. However, seeing Arzoal move towards him made him involuntarily step back, almost as if by instinct seeking the protection and defense of his Bonded Brother.

Arzoal settled to the deck in front of them and allowed her eyes to gaze upon something she never thought she would see in her lifetime. An AkruXian bonded to a dragon. It was a sight to behold really, and Martin's words that they were headed into the unknown when they first formed Mjolnir's Hand came back to her.

All of the newly bonded pairs come here Cha'talla of the AkruXian Immortals. Arzoal told him as she extended her snout closer to him. For this is the place here on Earth where you can come to be at peace and to study and to be safe. When Volleneth left I made him promise me that he would return when he found his true Bonded Brother and I am very happy that he has returned with such news.

"Dysea has told me much about you... Elder Mother." Cha'talla spoke.

Arzoal's musical tones filled his head and she blinked at him. I'm sure she has. It is my understanding that we owe you a great debt Cha'talla. For helping to return Dysea to us. And please... allow me to hear your voice inside my head.

There is no debt owed. Cha'talla spoke. If there was one it would be a debt I owe her. A debt I owe her for believing in my people and I when no one else would.

That is the past now Cha'talla. Arzoal spoke calmly. And you must leave that past behind you.

There is a reason others feel as they do Elder Mother. Cha'talla spoke. My people... we do not have the best of reputations.

Something you have already begun to change if I understand. Arzoal spoke.

I am trying. Cha'talla told her.

And now you will have more of us to help you. Arzoal spoke. You are a Bonded Pair now Cha'talla of the AkruXian people. One of us... and you will always be welcome here. Come... let me show you the world you have entered Cha'talla.

"...all this proves is that the KFI is working with criminal organizations." Panos spoke from the transmission. "Only they would have come after Andro again after failing the first time. And only they would specifically target Sadi and the others."

"This is what we have assumed for quite some time now. The Kavalians have amassed far too much wealth in so short a time to not be involved in some way. Strong arming their allies and controlling criminal traffic does not surprise me." Deia said nodding her head in agreement. "The question remains... how many and to what extent?"

"Does that matter Tenna?" Denali asked.

"It does if we want to discover who we will need to worry about if war breaks out." Deia answered. "Many of the criminal organizations will jump at the chance to sweep in and divide up what they consider to be Union space at the first opportunity."

"Are any of them even large enough to pose a risk?" Lisisa asked.

"Having to protect our space from pirates and mercenaries uses up resources that would be needed in any war." Andro said. "Tenna Deia is right... we have never really attempted to discover anything about them. Not since father scattered the Overseers."

"And not since you and Elynth sort of danced on their heads." Arrarn chimed in.

Andro spun in his chair and looked at Devra who had taken a seat beside Ne'Veha. "Can you tell us anything about this Orionis Syndicate Devra? Anything at all?"

"Not very much I'm afraid." She answered with a shake of her head. "Vanari Intelligence has never been able to get anyone inside their organization for obvious reasons and the Eridiani government protects them almost religiously. We do know they have broken their organization into at least four different parts to better protect themselves. These are the parts that work with the Eridiani government individually and behind the scenes."

"And these Eridiani protect them Devra? But why?" Deia asked.

Devra nodded. "They protect them fervently. And we don't know why. It is also why many Vanari have begun to believe that there is no distinction between the Eridiani and the Orionis Syndicate. And part of the problem is that we continue to trade with them and allow their citizens to come and go to Austrova without any supervision or checks."

“Are all of them involved somehow?” Helen asked now. “Do all of their people agree with how this government runs things?”

Devra shrugged her shoulders. “No one knows.” She stated. “They are very insular and even our trading ships do not go beyond markers set up just inside their borders. All equipment is traded on the outskirts and then they transport it to their planets.”

“Devra... forgive me for asking... but if they treat your people like this, why do you allow them such freedom of movement within Vanari space?” Deia asked. “Why do you trade with them and allow them to come onto your worlds.”

“Trust me Prime Minister, if it was up to me and several other of the younger generation of Regents... things would be different.” Devra answered. “The SBR... the older Regents who reside... they are very anxious about disturbing the flow of things.” Devra looked at Bren who stood behind her. He reached out and put his hand on her shoulder and she lowered her cheek to his knuckles and basked in the touch of his skin. She looked back up at the transmission image of Deia. “It will not matter for me now.” She stated. “I will no longer have any influence within the Board of Regents. I have made my choice and it is here where I wish to be. Once Coren and Ardan return and it is discovered what I have done, the tenuous relationship between the Vanari and the Protectorate will only get worse.”

“And it won’t improve when they receive this.” Dutkne’s voice caused all of the to turn as he entered the room without fanfare.

Andro rose to his feet as Dutkne came around next to him at the table and held out the data pad he was carrying. “What’s this?” Andro asked.

Dutkne smiled. “I have just finished a communication with the Protectorate Council.” He spoke. “I have told them what is happening here... what my grandfather and I have discovered. I have never seen those bunch of political riad aulveds slobber with glee as they were doing.” He looked at Deia in the transmission. “Forgive me Prime Minister.”

Deia shook her head with a small smile. “Trust me Dutkne... we have plenty of our own riad aulveds within the Union. What did they say?”

Dutkne looked at Andro. “I tried to tell them to move things along slowly because events here are fluid. As usual... they did not listen to me. In two weeks time they will issue an edict dissolving the Protectorate and merging it with the Lycavorian Union.”

“Two weeks!” Andro gasped his eyes wide.

“I told you the weight your family name carries even within the Protectorate Andro. We know all the history of your ancestors before you and everyone from the Black Day after. We have always known... grandfather has just not revealed the significance of it. I decided it could no longer be kept from them.” Dutkne said. “It would have been discovered by traders or something of that nature sooner rather than later. Better that it comes from me and then us... that way we can direct and control the wave of Lycavorians who will want nothing more than to come here and see what we have only read about in our history books. I felt it needed to be done and I apologize for not telling you first.”

Andro shook his head. “No... you do not apologize to me.” He said.

Dutkne grinned. “I will hold you to that.” He said.

Andro turned and looked at the transmission. “Tenna Deia... this... this is far outside my realm.”

Deia took a deep breath and looked at Helen briefly before turning back to Andro. “You are your father’s son Androcles Leonidas. There will come a day when you will be King for real mandri. As with your father, better that you learn it now than later. Better that you all learn it now.” Deia spoke looking at all of the Leonidas children. “The yoke of leadership is something all of you will bear for the rest of your lives because of the name you carry. Your mates and wives as well. It is not something you can dismiss any longer.”

“Andro... something is guiding what is happening all around us.” Helen spoke looking at him. “Arzoal and I have spoken of it. We have felt things... fleeting things across our senses. Everything we do now... everything... it will have a direct impact on our future. The future of us all.”

Andro looked at her and rolled his eyes. “Feravomir... if you know something why can’t you just tell us?” He gasped.

Dutkne chortled. “Where would be the lesson in that?” He muttered and saw those closest to him who heard him smirk and hide their smiles.

“If I knew something I would tell you mandri Dutkne!” Helen barked in a stern voice as she looked at Zarah and Lucia who were trying very hard not to laugh. “It is not something we can put into words... it is merely a perception.”

Deia leaned forward. “Androcles... if we are to make this façade work? If we are to hide the fact that your father lives still... then we all need to work together. We need to work to discover what it is your uncle is planning and how he plans to do it. There can be no secrets between us. We must find out what we can so that your father can retrieve your mother as I know that is his intention. No one will deter him from that path now. I am not so old as to not realize why you sent Daniel and the others to Curila 6 Andro. They are and always have been his spear. His fist. And he intends to unleash them very soon I know.”

“What are you saying Tenna?” He asked softly.

“This attack by these Orionis Syndicate people.” Deia said gently. “There... at your home. Targeting those you and those you love dearest of all. It was meant to kill you and Sadi and the others yes... but it was also a message as well.”

“A message?” Andro spoke.

Deia nodded. “A message that they can reach you no matter where you go. Andro... about this mission you are going to conduct? The mission to retrieve Caliria. You must...”

Andro shook his head. “If you are going to ask me to not go Tenna... your request will fall on deaf ears. She is meant to be with us... with me. Part of us... just as my father and mothers are. I have tried... ever since I was a boy I have tried to be unlike my father in almost every way, yet no matter what I did... what I do... I always end up following in his footsteps without even realizing it. I fight it... and still it happens no matter what I do.” Andro turned and looked at Sadi first, then Lu'ria and Ne'Veha and Carisia. His eyes finally went to where Arduri sat next to Lisisa and then to where Devra had come to her feet gripping Bren's hands on her shoulders. He turned back to Deia. “I have seen the pain and humiliation she has endured Tenna Deia. Almost as if it was my own.” Andro shook his head slowly. “No... I made her a promise two nights ago when I touched her...”

“You... you have spoken with her!” Devra gasped loudly, her hands going to her mouth.

Andro turned and looked at her. “I... I was able to make a very brief direct contact using a Neural Booster Devra. It was only seconds... but I made her a promise.” Andro turned back to look at his Aunt. “I told her I would come for her Tenna. I told her I would come for her and bring her home to be with us.”

Deia nodded slowly. “I was not going to tell you not to go mandri.” Deia spoke gently. “I was going to tell you to give them a message mandri. A message that will sound throughout The Wilds. I know what you have planned Androcles. You are too much like your father for me not to know.”

“Then you know I will not be deterred.” Andro said.

Deia nodded again. “Yes. I was going to tell you to retrieve Caliria and leave nothing alive in your wake Androcles. Not for what they have done.” Deia took a deep breath. “That pig Kavalian Ambassador has contacted us through their Zaleisian lap dogs. They have requested... demanded an audience with the Union Galactic Court, the Elven Parliament and an official from the new Hadarian Arch Ministry is also sending a representative.”

“About mother?” Arrarn asked coming to his feet.

Deia nodded. “Yes... and many other things as well.” Her dark eyes bore into Andro. “You have four days mandri. Four days to retrieve her and send a message to everyone else who thinks to manipulate us! I have reached the end of my tolerance Androcles... and like your father I will not sit by any longer.”

Andro looked at her for a long moment. “And what about the Icalro Alliance Aunt Deia?” He asked.

“Jenylar vada nubous ronnus!” Deia snarled savagely. (Bury the fucking bastards!)

CHAPTER SIXTY-FIVE

CRANAE ISLAND

TWO HOURS BEFORE DEPARTURE

“...could have gotten more possibly, but the second female died from some sort of poison before anyone got to her.” Marci spoke as she handed him the data pad across the table of the conference room in the secure wing of the villa and saw him shake his head slowly. Marci knew he did not like killing women and he was one of many Lycavorian men who would avoid it if at all possible. “You didn’t kill her Andro and based on what we saw with this OSG man Andro, it’s probably better that she did die.” She spoke confidently. “Eliani healed this Brendi woman quickly, but with only two hours I wasn’t able to extract much. The drugs did not have time to fully set in and Eliani said her injuries dictated I did not press as hard as we wanted too. Lynwe agreed. I think... I think Jomann acted rashly in killing the man. We may have been able to get something from him.”

Sadi was the only one of Andro’s mates who had come to this meeting with him and she sat directly to his right as she always did, and now she was dressed in a flight version of the Mark IV ArmorPly Body Armor, her long blond hair pulled entirely over to one shoulder and wrapped in the amber and violet colored strips of satin that were the colors of Lu’ria’s Drow family. Lynwe sat beside Marci at the table drinking a mug of Drow tea while Eliani sat on Marci’s opposite side. Jomann stood in the corner of the room, just behind Andro and to the right while Dilaen Roan sat in the corner beside the door into the corridor that led to the main room, taking everything in and remaining quiet. Androcles had told her she would be privy to information very few people would have and he was being true to his word and showing a total faith in her and Thomas. The amount of Durcunusaan that had flooded the area around Cranae Island had allowed for almost all of them to slip out of the villa relatively easily and meet up with several STRIKERS that were parked and hidden some distance away. A TYPE II Dragon Transport now occupied one bay of the SCIMITAR in orbit above them, flown up by Arrarn and Toria. Denali and Lisisa would be accompanying the attack force to the surface and they were now working with the Durcunusaan RD Team as they checked and rechecked their weapons. Bren, Devra and Arduri had accompanied them up to the SCIMITAR on the STRIKER flown by Normya. Helen and Panos had returned to Sparta while Deia had returned to the island and now sat with them in the conference room, Dutkne beside her.

Andro lifted the pad in his hand looking at it briefly before his eyes went to Marci. “If you are expecting me to somehow place blame here Marci... I have no intention of doing so. And I certainly have no intention of reprimanding Jomann in any way for his actions. He saved Eliani’s life. Period.”

Eliani glanced over to where Jomann stood and she squeezed her palms tightly together under the table as she fought to beat down the incredible emotions she felt within her. Even in the midst of her fear about what was happening when the OSG major was holding her, ready to end her life; Eliani somehow knew it wasn’t going to happen. It wasn’t going to happen because Jomann was there and he would not let it happen. When the major had shoved her forward into his arms and Eliani felt his arm pull her tightly against his powerful body, she couldn’t help but slide her arms around his waist. It was almost instinct for her to do this and feeling the warmth of his body against hers, feeling the press of his muscular frame against hers and the force of his aura burning in the room, Eliani Leonidas had experienced a sexual rush unlike anything that had ever surged through her veins before. And that feeling, those sensations that he had caused within her... they had frightened her terribly.

“I think we could have talked him down Andro.” Marci said quickly.

“While he held my sister by her throat, was affected by something that allowed him to snap plastisteel bindings like they were nothing and while Jomann allowed him to feel Eliani up as if she was some sort of brothel whore?” Andro said shaking his head. “If I had been in the room I would have killed them both. There is no blame to place here Marci, with Jomann or with you. He acted as any Durcunusaan would have, even as you were doing your job.”

“I know but...” Marci began to speak and stopped as she leaned forward in her chair and exhaled heavily.

Andro watched her carefully and then set the pad on the desk. “Where is she now?” He asked.

“She’s locked down in the SCIMITAR’s medical bay under 24/7 guard. Leaving her here on Earth is taking too much of a risk. She’ll be out of it for ten to twelve hours according to Eli and then we can question her more.” Marci spoke softly. “Her gene therapy treatments were directed more to increase the efficiency of her brain, that is why she is an Intelligence Agent and not an operator like the others.”

“Increase the efficiency of her brain by nearly fifty percent!” Eliani spoke cutting her eyes back to her brother and getting her raging hormones under control while reverting to the supremely skilled Healer that she was. “It’s incredible really Andro.”

“Her brain is fifty percent larger?” Andro asked looking at her oddly.

“No you dope!” Eliani spoke leaning forward at the table as she spoke animatedly. “She uses fifty percent more of the capacity and ability of her brain than normal humans. She can store more information, and she can process that information much quicker. She is essentially a living and breathing genius! I didn’t want the drugs affecting her adversely and that’s why I had them stop.”

“We should have pressed her harder.” Marci spoke.

“Andro... Andro I don’t think the drugs are necessary.” Eliani spoke softly. “She said some things in the room... and just before I yanked her out of the fireplace in my room. I could hear her arguing with the men that Anicetus killed in the tunnel. She said some things that make me believe she did not want to be here.”

“We can not interrogate a prisoner based on feelings Eliani.” Marci snapped softly.

“How did she get here?” Andro asked before Marci angered Eliani enough that his sister tore into her.

“She’s been here for seven months as near as we could tell from what she gave to us so far.” Marci replied. “She goes by the name Brendi Faith, she owns a small trinket shop in the Old District of Sparta and she migrated here from Edolus. It sits on the edge of the Union’s outer border within Bontawillian space, relatively large sized settlements on the surface that are primarily human. The others have been here even longer, the longest being four years and they come from similar backgrounds. We did traces on them, which were ridiculously easy for some reason and all of them have come into the Union and here to Earth through the different human settlements inside the Union and the two within The Wilds. Primarily through Edolus and Imaneya on the Limian border. The trail on all of them ends there.”

“It doesn’t end.” Dutkne spoke now. “It begins. And it was easy to trace them because they wanted it to be. It lends credence to their background information. If they are an OSG Hit Team, and I have no reason to doubt what Devra says...” Dutkne looked at Andro and he nodded.

“Neither do I.” Andro stated immediately.

“If they are an OSG hit team then there is no way of telling how many more of them there are here on Earth and even on the many human planets you say are out there.” Dutkne finished. “They obviously have connections offworld and that is the information we need from this woman.”

“They did not just arrive in the last few days or weeks Andro.” Jomann spoke. “They knew enough to establish themselves in productive positions. They knew enough to find a way to get the plans of Cranae Island and the tunnels beneath us that even we did not know about. That only comes with months and years of patience and study.”

Andro nodded. “We know how they got the plans to the island.” He stated. “SirsanGai and Famus will take care of that problem.”

“Unfortunately...” Dutkne continued. “It also means that they may have contacts within the Union as well, as much as it burns my mida to admit that.”

“Why would you say that Dutkne?” Deia asked.

“Their number Deia.” Dutkne answered. “I can see them putting three, perhaps four of their agents here on Earth to monitor things, but fifteen men and women? That seems a bit much don’t you think?”

“Four years ago is about the time that Armetus began hearing rumors of the Kavalians working and supporting new criminal organizations within The Wilds Andro.” Marci spoke. “It is how they were able to channel funds to the Evolli and help them to fund their war effort.”

“If they have been working with the Kavalians for as long as we suspect, could they not have learned these things this way Dutkne?” Sadi asked softly. “Since all of this began we have discovered Laustinos has had his hand in many nefarious things, and it would not surprise me if he is the one who got them set up within the Union at the behest of the Kavalians.”

Marci nodded. “She has a point Andro.” Marci said. “We should not jump to conclusions about anything. Or assume anything until we are sure. I’ll have Nesa and Praylro broaden their searches to include the human settlements on Edolus and Imaneya.”

Dutkne nodded slowly. “A sound move. As you no doubt noticed they do not care for our species, and once word reaches back to the Beta Quadrant that we have destroyed one of their Hit Teams, they will not be happy.”

“He called me... us... wolfen bastards.” Jomann said now moving up closer to the table as he spoke.

Dutkne nodded. "That is a result of something my father did before I was even born." He answered. "Two thousand years ago the OSG tried to claim a part of Protectorate space for their own. There was a small moon right on our border with the Vanari and they thought to use this moon as a base of operations for their forays into Vanari space to kidnap females. As expected my father took exception to this boldness and he led a force of three thousand of our fighters to this moon. For the next four months they did nothing but harass and attack the OSG forces there and they did so mainly in our wolf forms. It truly frightened them and that is the name they gave us. Wolfen Bastards."

"This is why we need to press this Brendi woman harder Andro." Marci stated as she met his eyes. "We need what is in her head. If what she gave us in just two hours is any indication, think of what she could give us under a full interrogation."

"It will also more than likely kill her!" Eliani hissed softly. "We don't know what our drugs will do to her! Or how they will affect her because of the gene therapy she has undergone with these OSG assholes."

"You were there Eliani! You heard her answer the questions! They came here to kill Sadi! All of your brother's mates if they could! They came here to kill him! To kill you!" Marci snapped. "That doesn't mean anything to you?"

Her reaction caused Andro to lean forward now. "Marci... how long has it been since you slept?" Andro asked her.

Marci shook her head. "Thirty-six... maybe forty hours." She answered. "I don't have time to sleep Andro. We are trying to discover just how far Laustinos's treachery goes, and the mass of information we are gathering takes time to go over. Everyone is working double hours, sometimes triple. Now with this happening... we..."

Andro got to his feet then. "You need to sleep!" He snapped. "And you will do so if I have to order you too."

Marci looked at him from her chair. "Andro..."

"General Lynwe ... you will insure Marci sleeps for at least a full day once we depart." Andro said. "And that includes all of the people working for her, Nesa most of all."

"You're relieving me?" Marci gasped looking at him with wide eyes and coming to her feet.

Andro shook his head quickly and moved around the table to stand in front of her. "No Marci... never! You know me better than that. I'm keeping you from killing yourselves when I need you the most. Especially with what I'm going to have you do."

Marci looked at Andro. "What... what do you mean?"

Deia inched her hover chair back and reached over to place her hand on Marci's arm. "We want you to implement Storm Shadow Marci." Deia said softly.

Andro watched Lynwe sit up in her chair and Marci's eyes got large as she looked back and forth between Androcles and Deia. "Storm Shadow?" She gasped finally. Her dark eyes settled on Deia. "Prime Minister... you... you have been against that program since Armetus and I put it together. You and the King both."

Deia nodded. "Yes... I have been." She stated. She looked at Andro. "Recent events have brought me to the conclusion however that we need to change how we do things. It is part of why these things have happened and why we did not see them coming."

"What... I don't understand." Marci said.

"I am at fault for this... both Martin and I... but more me than him." Deia said softly as she looked down slowly at her chair and her healing legs. "I have been willing to do almost anything through the years to prove that our people can change. Even after Martin returned and began to give back to our people what I had taken away, I have always counseled him to be accommodating so that we would be seen as something other than what we are. He resisted at times, but in the end he almost always saw things my way, because I believe he wanted the same thing." Deia looked up at Marci again. "After what has happened now... he will no longer be the man he thought he should be. Now he will be the man he is inside, the one he was before he returned and took his place as King. We are Lycavorians! We are wolves in the form of men and women! Your father told me there is so much more that we had to do together and I finally understand what he meant now." Deia said.

“It is why he would not let me retire when I wanted too.” Deia continued. “It is why he drove me forward. He knew this day would come... I know he did. He knew that one day I would need to decide who we are as a people and he knew I would come to the decision I have come too.”

“Tenna?” Eliani asked softly.

Deia smiled and held up her hand. “Oh... I am not going away my sweet Eliani, you who bear the name of my sister.” She said with a smile. “No... I am going to follow the instincts of our people from this day forward. The instincts Resumar and Eliani meant for us to follow. As I always should have from the beginning. No... from this day forward the Lycavorian Union will once more be the Union that Resumar intended at the very start. We will become once more what the Elves and Hadarians and the Algolian people saw when they agreed to form the Union with us in the beginning. We are who we are...” Deia said her face radiant and proud. “We are proud... we are strong and loyal to those who are our friends and we are cunning and brutal to those who would be our enemies. We are wolves... and son vada carians we are going to start acting like it again!”

Dutkne sat there with pride swelling through his chest. This is what his grandfather meant for him to be part of. This is what he knew was coming and Dutkne now thanked every god in the stars that he was here to witness and experience it all first hand.

“This is only the beginning and Panos will be announcing other changes as well at his speech tomorrow afternoon.” Deia spoke as she maneuvered her hover chair away from the table. “We are going to embrace what we are...” She looked up at Andro. “Just as you have always done without question no matter the doubts inside you Androcles.”

“Tenna... you...” Andro began.

“No. You don’t see it do you?” She spoke with a gentle smile. “It was you Androcles; it was Eliani, Denali... Lisisa, it was all of you. You have embraced who and what you are at the core and you do not question it. I am truly ashamed that so many of our people had to die for me to finally see what it is your father truly brought back to our people. What he instilled in all of you. But I intend to make sure they did not die in vain. I will appear with Panos tomorrow, he will do most of the talking, but we spoke at length last night with Helen. To think the man who should have been my deputy all these years has been so close and I did not see it...” Deia shook her head. “No more. He has agreed to help me, to help your father make sure our people achieve what it is we are suppose to achieve. In truth... we were not going to tell you until you returned... but after last night I will no longer hide or cower. We must continue with our façade that Martin is dead... I will not risk For'mya for anything... she is one part of what keeps your father in check. Until we discover what the Kavalians are up too we can not take the risk they will kill her for it will send your father and mothers over the edge. We will discover where she is and we will get her back!”

“And then?” Dutkne asked as he got to his feet.

Deia looked at him and her dark eyes filled with a coldness that reminded Dutkne of the winters on Lorent. “Then Dutkne... then I am going to turn Androcles and his father and every Spartan within the Union loose and make sure that our enemies know that we will tolerate no one that nubous with the Lycavorian Union!”

Deia spun her chair around and left the conference room without another word.

“Oh... I really like her now Andro!” Dutkne exclaimed.

Andro took a deep breath and turned back to Marci. “Rest for a full day. All of you. And then implement Storm Shadow Marci. Deia will inform Grandfather L'tian and he will shuffle the oversight committee around and bring them up to speed.”

“Many of them... the politicians... they will not like it Andro.” Marci said.

Andro nodded. “Probably not... but they will have to live with it.” He stated. “We can no longer be the open society that we have thrived on for so long. There are others who want what we have and they will go to any lengths to achieve that as we have seen. Have Nesa continue with Laustinos... have Praylro shift to this Syndicate thing and you begin pulling files and making choices. The Krypteria is yours to run until Armetus is well enough and then you will need to run it together.”

Marci looked at him. “Storm Shadow was built around three of us Andro.” She spoke. “Three separate branches all reporting to Armetus who then reports to L'tian.”

Andro nodded. "I know." He said. "You have Operations... Nesa has Analysts... and the third has Intel Gathering. I believe I have the perfect choice for that part. Four of them actually if you take into account they are couples."

Marci looked at him oddly. "Who?"

Andro looked at Lynwe whose amber eyes were wide and bright. "Why don't you let Lynwe fill you in since I'm pretty sure by the look on her face she knows exactly who I'm talking about?" He turned back to Marci. "And she can insure you follow my orders as well."

"Andro you..." Marci began.

"No. This is too important and you need to be at your best." Andro said. "There is a MENKLA waiting for you in Gytheio. I will contact you when we are on our way back."

Marci stared at him for a long moment and then nodded her head. "I won't let you down Androcles."

"I know." Andro spoke. "I'm going to keep this Brendi woman on the SCIMITAR for now. I want to try and see if Eli's approach works. If it doesn't..."

Eliani came forward. "If it doesn't... I'll be the one next to you Marci sticking her so that she tells us everything."

Marci nodded as Lynwe came up to her. "We'll be set up in the first stages by the time you get back. I promise."

Andro nodded. "Get going!" He said. "All of you. I want a moment with Sadi before we leave for the SCIMITAR."

Sadi's green eyes grew puzzled as she stood up and everyone headed for the double doors out of the conference room. She moved around the table as Andro went to the door and locked it with a wave of his hand over the panel. "Andro my love what is...?"

Andro spun around, one hand going behind her neck and the other arm encircling her waist as his lips came down on hers and he crushed her body to his. Sadi was momentarily taken aback by the ferocity of his passion, but only for a split second and then she surrendered to the feelings his aura was pulsing through her. She wrapped her arms around his waist and returned his sizzling kiss with equal fervor, basking in the sensations his aura was bathing her in. She lowered all her own shields and poured her female aura at her beloved Androcles and their minds touched as he picked her up and backed up slowly to the large table where he set her firm butt down on the edge without breaking their kiss. Sadi Leonidas was almost beside herself as she clutched at him, trying to pull him closer and draw his probing tongue even deeper into her mouth. He hadn't kissed her like this since their first night together here on Cranae Island and Sadi's blood was beginning to burn like it had when she was in phase only a few months ago and their lovemaking had been plentiful and exquisitely zealous. She could almost feel every pulse of his mind, every beat of his heart against her chest even through the body armor they both wore, and once more Sadi could only revel in the knowledge that he was her anome. Her soulmate, no matter how many others shared their lives. It was almost as if he saw what she was thinking for he pulled his lips away quickly, Sadi trying to grab them once more as his other hand came up to take her face in his hand.

"I am your anome!" He rasped out the words and she opened her eyes with a slight gasp. His dual wolf fangs, so ferocious looking to those who did not know any better and so utterly beautiful to her, were fully extended. His azure orbs were fully changed, with the thick black ring surrounding the striking blue pupils. Sadi's eyes changed in that instant and her own wolf fangs extended fully below her lips as she stared at him. When he had bitten her, it had made her his anome, but it also served to send the virus within his blood racing through her own veins to mix with the virus in hers. This interaction, and all the times they had made love since, all this had altered her fangs somewhat, moving her canine teeth ever so slightly so that a second, much smaller dual set of fangs appeared next to her main ones. Sadi had rejoiced when this had begun and then fully completed and she had made it a point to expose her fangs whenever she could for only the line of Leonidas or those they called wives shared this trait. She stared at his handsome face and wrapped her legs around his waist as he stood there in front of her while she sat on the table. "I... I could not go forward without you Sadi Leonidas. It is you who hold the center of my heart. All that I am. You are my KertaGai."

Sadi drew him closer to her, reaching up with her hands and drawing his face down to hers so that she could nuzzle his cheek and neck. This she did with ardent bliss, his lavender and pines scent filling her every pore. "Why... why do you tell me something that I already know Androcles my love?" She whispered to him.

“You show me this every waking moment of every day simply in the way you gaze upon me. The way your aura caresses me, the way your mind touches mine.” She drew back and looked at his dazzling azure blue eyes.

“What is wrong Androcles?”

“I... I am not my father KertaGai.” He said softly.

Sadi smiled seductively. “I know this and that is good for your father does not make me scream his name to the moon every time he takes me. Your father does not make my blood burn for him with a simple caress. He does not stimulate my mind as I swim within your thoughts. Now tell me... tell me what it is that occupies your mind Androcles.”

“I... I came close to losing you last night.” He spoke softly.

Sadi shook her head quickly. “No... it is me you are talking to now Andro. You know full well that I am very capable of protecting myself and those we love. I have been working diligently at the exercises the Feravomir gave me to focus and refine my control. Those OSG fools would not have harmed me. Or any of us. Now tell me...” Sadi saw his eyes then and she tilted her head to the side and felt her heart swell with love for him. “Oh my love... I can see it in your thoughts. You... you still struggle with all we have found. Carisia... Ne'Veha... Lu'ria and now Caliria. You still carry within you the feeling that you are betraying me because of your feelings for them? Don't you?”

“You... you are my anome.” Andro said softly. “I don't... I don't understand why I feel for them what I do. Why I can not just have you?”

“But you do have me Androcles. You have every part of me.” She told him. “Andro... do you love them?” Sadi asked softly.

“Yes.” He answered softly. “Not... not in the way I love you KertaGai but yes.”

“And so do I my love. But because of who you are... the honor within you... it leaves a bad taste in your mouth that you could feel for them what you do?” She said.

“Yes.” He answered.

“We have had this discussion before my handsome mate and husband.” Sadi spoke. “I am your soulmate Androcles Leonidas... and you are mine. I could never love any man or woman as I love you. But that does not mean we can not love others if that is the plan the gods have for us. I know you feel it my love... just as I do. Do you think Carisia and Ne'Veha care about this? Do you think Lu'ria cares? Do you think Caliria will care? Having even a small part of your heart is more than any of them could have ever dreamed for. For that is how big your heart is. They know you will love them breathless... just as you love me. Just as we love you! And like your mother Aricia loves your other mothers, I love them all as well. And like your mothers... we could never feel for another man what we feel for you. We could never feel from another man what you make each of us feel. And when being in your arms is not possible, we can take solace in our love for each other and the pleasure that brings to us. Now that our Drow Mistress has come into our lives, we have become very inventive and...”

“KertaGai...” Andro began.

“No.” She spoke firmly. “You will listen to me and let these feelings you have go and you will do so now! This is what we are meant for Androcles Leonidas and we have accepted it completely. I do not harbor any feelings of misgivings because I know your love for me knows no bounds. That it never will. Just as my love for you knows no limitations. If we are meant to love others as well then that is the way of things. I will not deny what I feel for them... for all of them... because it is just as much a part of me as my devotion and love to you. It is who we are Androcles Leonidas! You are our Saradasaar Androcles and are we are the points of that beacon. Just as it is on my tattoo.” (Beacon of Light)

Andro blinked several times as what she said struck him. “That is why you got it?” He asked softly.

Sadi nodded with a dazzling smile. “I didn't know it at the time why it struck me so... but I do now. The star is all of us together Andro; the flames are you holding us up as you do so easily.”

“And the word?” Andro asked with a smile.

Sadi leaned up and kissed him hard, their fangs clicking against one another as she did. “The word is how I feel about you fool! How I have always felt about you!” She told him pulling back after a moment. “I am malda in love with you!”

Andro pulled her up into his arms and buried his face in her long hair as she wrapped her arms around his shoulders and clung to him with all of her strength. “This is what we are meant for Saradasaar... this is who we are now. Let go of these foolish feelings of dishonor you have inside you and let us go retrieve our Inamarno. Then we will be complete. All of us.” (Lady Blue)

“Elly for emanur KertaGai.” Andro whispered in her ear as he nuzzled her skin. “As my father will never forsake my mothers, I will never forsake any of you KertaGai. I promise this to you.” (Forever and Eternity)

“And we will never forsake you Androcles my love. Elly for emanur Saradasaar.” Sadi whispered back as a look of pure bliss occupied her face and she nuzzled the side of his head and cheek.

47TH SGD HEADQUARTERS THREE KILOMETERS OUTSIDE EDEN CITY

Ne'Veha stopped in the doorway of the huge mess lounge that was filled with men and women of the 47th Spartan Ground Division. It was the unit of her grandmother Na'rnoas's husband Jonout, and it had taken one transmission to discover where Tarren was. Now Jonout and Famus stood on either side of her as several Durcunusaan troops entered through the other two entrances into the mess lounge.

“There.” Jonout spoke pointing to a large table filled with officers on the other side of the room. “He is sitting there with two others that befriended him when he arrived.”

Ne'Veha looked up at him and her brown eyes shone from under her matte black helmet, now displaying a crested plume of her dark brown hair color that fell to the middle of her back. “Why did you bring him here Jonout?” She asked.

“By all accounts he was a good officer... if somewhat arrogant.” Jonout answered. “He needed to be removed so that you could find your way.”

“Did grandmother Na'rnoas put you up to this?” She asked him.

Jonout shook his head. “Seeing her around you Ne'Veha... it was like a light in a dark room. I love her with all that I am and what you were going through was bringing pain to her.” Jonout stated. “That I could not allow to happen. I am an old wolf and I since I have been here on Earth I have seen how the royal family is with one another. How the King treats his mates and Queens. How they view and treat him and each other. Once you made your decision, Tarren should have stayed away. He did not. I made the correct choice in my actions. You needed to discover yourself and them.”

Ne'Veha reached up on her tip toes and kissed him. “Thank you.”

“Do not thank me Ne'Veha.” Jonout said. “I should have done more if what you say has happened is true. You are certain Ne'Veha?”

“It is true General.” Famus spoke now. “I confirmed the records with the library myself.”

Jonout nodded. “Then let us get this over with.” He hissed. “I can't abide a traitor in my unit or within the Union. We will wait in a room off the kitchen while your men collect Tarren.” He said taking her arm gently.

Tarren laughed as he shoveled another forkful of meat into his mouth and chewed. “You know... maybe we should go to Sparta tonight and hit that place Gallais's Retreat again.”

“Isn't that where you lost that female elf Ne'Veha to Prince Androcles?” The man asked with a grin.

Tarren looked at him. “I didn't lose her.” He snapped. “She was taken from me by the Prince! He didn't act with honor!”

“Better watch what you say Tarren. You didn't scent her... and you can't go around and say stuff like that about Prince Androcles when it isn't true.” The second man spoke. “It will get back to our senior officers and most of them fought with the King here on Earth and it will get back to him. And then the Prince.”

“You are scared of him?” Tarren asked surprised.

“Nubous right I'm scared of him.” The man said. “I've seen him training with his dragon. And I've read the after action reports from Alba Tau. And how many living Spartans wear the Shield of Valor Tarren? That is not an award the Union gives to just anyone! In order to receive that decoration you must have gone through some kind of hell and survived.”

“She was sharing my bed Logit.” Tarren snarled at him. “I was in her blood. Just because I hadn’t scented her yet doesn’t mean she wasn’t mine!” He stopped talking when he looked up and saw his fellow captain staring behind him. “Logit... what is wrong?” He asked.

“Durcunusaan.” The Captain answered softly.

“What? Where? Here?” Tarren gasped.

The man nodded as his eyes grew wide. “Yes... right behind you.”

Tarren sat up straighter and then his eyes grew wide when the face of the man appeared over his shoulder slightly. A man who wore the uniform of a senior Durcunusaan Commander. “Captain Tarren?” Famus asked. “Would you come with me please?”

Tarren turned as Famus stood back up and he saw the two additional Durcunusaan troops standing behind Famus. “What is this about?” He asked.

“We should probably go somewhere else Captain.” Famus said. “We have a room just outside the lounge and...”

“I just asked you a question Commander.” Tarren spoke as he came to his feet. “I expect an answer!”

“And you will have your answer Captain... if you come with us now.” Famus said with calm resolve. “Or do you wish to make a scene in front of your fellow officers? That is not something we wish to do.”

“I don’t have to go anywhere with you Commander.” Tarren spoke. “In case you haven’t noticed I do outrank you.”

Famus’s eyes narrowed ever so slightly and he stepped closer to Tarren. “Perhaps I was not clear in my words Captain Tarren.” Famus spoke softly so that only he could hear. “I am a Commander in the Durcunusaan... and what you think was a request is in fact not a request at all. It is a statement of fact. You have two choices really... do not make a scene in front of your fellow officers and come with us... or choose to make a scene. In which case I will break both your nubous legs and drag you out of here in disgrace! Sir! My patience is very thin at the moment considering recent events so make your decision now please.”

Tarren looked at the man for a long moment before turning to Logit. “I’ll be back Logit. Keep the coffee hot.”

Tarren was steaming by the time they came to the small senior officer’s lounge off the main mess lounge. The Durcunusaan officer hadn’t responded to any of his demands for answers as they walked and he was not used to being ignored. The moment the door to the senior officer’s lounge opened the sweet scent of amaretto filled his nose. He entered quickly and saw Ne’Veha standing next to General Jonout and the fourth Durcunusaan officer. She looked delicious as he always remembered her to look, and now that she was wolf, it brought out the pungency of her scent even more. She looked physically fitter than when he had last seen her, dressed in the matte black Mark IV body armor that appeared as if she had been poured into, and her dark brown hair shiny with health and even longer than he remembered it to be. Then he saw the flowing crimson cape that adorned her shoulders, as well as the gold trim that encompassed the entire outer edge of that cape. The gold clasps that attached the fabric to her shoulders shimmered in the light where the cape was held and signified to all that she was a Princess of the Union and member of the Royal family.

“Ne... Ne’Veha?” He stammered as he moved up closer to her.

“Surprised to see me Tarren?” She asked glaring at him with those large dark eyes.

Tarren looked at General Jonout his commanding officer as well as the Durcunusaan officer quickly before looking back to her and slowing to a stop, his anger bleeding away very quickly. “I... I suppose.” He stated.

“Yes... I’m sure.” Ne’Veha said. “Did you expect me to be dead perhaps?”

“What?” Tarren exclaimed. “Why... why would I expect something like that?”

“Tarren... I am in a hurry here and I have just a few questions to ask before I leave. You checked a book out of the library in Sparta’s Old District several days ago.” Ne’Veha told him moving closer. “A unique history book. A book that has not left the library in Sparta in roughly three thousand years. A book that you conveniently checked out. Why were you in Sparta and why did you check this book out?”

“Ne'Veha... what is going on here?” Tarren asked.

“You will address her as Princess Leonidas or Milady... Captain Tarren!” Jonout hissed. “And you will answer her questions!”

“The library at The Grand Center didn't have the book!” Tarren replied quickly as it began to sink into his mind that there was something very wrong with this visit. “I don't see the problem with requesting it from the library in Sparta.”

“You don't see the problem in flying over three thousand kilometers to check out a book from the Library in Old Sparta. A book that no one has touched in all of this time and a book that had three thousand year old plans for tunnels that ran beneath our home on Cranae Island that even Androcles didn't know about? You don't see a problem with that?” Ne'Veha hissed softly.

“Perhaps the Prince did not study the history of the island before he purchased it.” Tarren said his voice carrying more sarcasm than he realized.

Jonout made to step forward but Ne'Veha beat him to it. She had been fully changed less than a complete week, but the strength of the virus in Andro's blood gave her the abilities and power and speed of a wolf who had been changed for years. Combined with her own natural elven speed and strength, Tarren never saw the slap that rocked his head back and staggered him to the side several feet. The stinging blow split his lower lip and turned his face red as he brought his hand up to cover the spot and turned back to glare at her, his eyes changed and his fangs fully extended. He did not expect what he saw looking back at him in the black ringed brown eyes or the dual wolf fangs that extended beneath her lips. This was not the Ne'Veha he remembered. This was an Alpha female and she was extremely pissed off.

“I will not play with you Tarren?” Ne'Veha snarled. “You will answer my questions or I will turn you over to the Krypteria and let them get the answers in any way they can! And that will take place after I let Famus and his Durcunusaan beat you into submission for what you have done!”

“What... what are you talking about? I haven't done anything” He snarled at her. “I don't have the book!”

“It was you who removed it from the library Tarren!” Ne'Veha barked angrily. “Do not lie to me! I am wolf now... turned by an alpha more powerful than you could ever hope to be... and I will smell if you are lying before the words even leave your foul lips!”

“I don't have it!” Tarren barked right back at her. “Yes... I took it out... but I gave it to her!”

“To who anse you?” Ne'Veha screamed.

“The Netnews woman!” Tarren answered. “The human female from Channel Eighty-three! She wanted me to get it! She said...”

“What?” Ne'Veha demanded.

“She said... she told me they found out about the tunnels and they were going to use the them to install hidden cameras and mics in the villa!” Tarren growled. “So they could get all the good gossip on the Prince and...!”

Ne'Veha looked at him with contempt then. “And his mates!” Ne'Veha growled. “On us! And you went along with it Tarren? This is what you have become now? You are so arrogant and full of yourself that you agree to this because I dismissed you for a wolf who is more man than you will ever be?” She hissed at him.

“You were mine Ne'Veha!” Tarren snapped.

Ne'Veha stepped right up to him then. “I was never yours Tarren!” She growled. “Even on your best day you could not do to me what Androcles does to me! And that was even before he turned me! You are a pathetic excuse for a man compared to him Tarren!” Ne'Veha stepped closer to him still. “They used those tunnels to try and kill us Tarren!” She snarled. “They used those tunnels to infiltrate our home and attempt to kill my mate Tarren! My lovers!” She saw his face go wide in undisguised shock and she knew that was no act. “The only reason you are not lying dead in front of me is because they did not succeed!”

“Ne'Veha I...”

Her hand flashed forward again in anger and she smashed a vicious slap across his face once more. “Do not speak to me Tarren! Never speak to me again! Famus...?”

“Princess?” Famus barked stepping up to her.

“You will take Captain Tarren here and wring every bit of information from him that you can.” Ne'Veha hissed. “And when you think you have it all... question him again!”

Famus nodded. "As you order Princess."

"Don't resist Tarren... and don't try to protect anyone if that is crossing your mind." She told him. "It will only make it worse."

"I did not know!" Tarren shouted as Famus took his arm.

"No... you did not know. You are nothing more than a perverted peeping tom looking for a cheap thrill. Did you think you would be able to see us as we moved about our home? As we made love with him and each other? You make me sick Tarren... and how I ever allowed you to take me to bed is beyond my comprehension. Be very grateful it is me here and not Androcles Tarren. If you had told him what you just told me, he would have you strung up by your entrails for what you have done! Take him out of here through the kitchen!"

Ne'Veha turned away from him as Famus led him out of the room and she looked at Jonout as he stepped up to her. She took a deep breath and looked at the man who had stolen her grandmother's heart so many years ago, and the one who still made Na'rnoas's elven and wolf blood burn even now after so many years as his wife and mate. "Jonout?" Ne'Veha asked softly.

Jonout shook his head. "I have no doubts that your men will get the information you want. Tarren is arrogant... but he is not stupid. The question now... what do you want done with him Ne'Veha?"

Ne'Veha looked at Jonout. "These men and women Jonout... they could have taken all that I have gained since coming here. All the love that I have found. The purpose. A new life as Andro's mate and a female wolf. What do you think I should do?"

Jonout shook his head. "I can not answer that question for you Ne'Veha. You are still adjusting to being turned child... but by now your wolf instincts will have begun to guide your actions. You must now walk the line between the instincts of the wolf inside you and the calm intelligence of the elf inside you. What do your instincts tell you to do?"

Ne'Veha was silent for a long moment and she looked down at the floor taking long, deep breaths. Finally she looked back up and met his eyes evenly. "They... they tell me to kill him horribly."

"And your elven half? What does this tell you?" Jonout asked.

"That he was stupid and vindictive and not aware of what he was doing. That he is an arrogant fool and nothing more! That he only did this as a way to try and embarrass us because Andro took me from him. Not that Andro had to try very hard at that." Ne'Veha told him with an impish grin.

Jonout nodded. "And now you face the same dilemma that every Lycavorian faces daily Ne'Veha. Do you follow your instincts in this situation, or do you follow what your mind tells you? Or do you find some middle ground? You are a Princess of the Union now Ne'Veha... and the decision is yours."

Ne'Veha met his eyes. "Then I want you to observe the questioning of Captain Tarren." She told him. "Find out everything you can... all of it... everything he knows. He is not willful enough to resist drugs. Once that is complete and it appears he is what I think he is, a fool who feels he has been slighted, reduce him two grades in rank and then allow him to start over and try to correct his path in life."

"And if it is determined that he did know what they intended Ne'Veha?" Jonout asked her.

"Then insure Captain Tarren has had a filling meal, a hot shower, dress him in his finest uniform and strip his rank from him. Then execute him for treason against the Union." Ne'Veha growled softly. "Publicly."

Jonout nodded his head slowly. "It will be done." He said impressed by the conviction in her voice. It was exactly what he would have done.

SCIMITAR

SECURE CONFERENCE ROOM

"... is nearly as bad as what your mother has done!" Coren barked at Nirilo as he stood by the large view window. "Your career will be over if you continue down this path Nirilo!"

"Caliria is my sister!" Nirilo barked right back at his father. "Am I just supposed to accept what has happen to her?"

"Yes!" Coren spoke. "It... it has been the way of our people for millennia! We must do this or the Orionis Syndicate will punish us!"

Nirilo shook his head. "No. I will not just accept it." He stated. "Would you just accept it if Arduri or Naesta were taken father? Would you just accept it if Tastia was taken?"

"That... that is not the issue here!" Coren snapped.

"Isn't it?" Nirilo spoke. "No... they have taken my sister. I will do everything I can to find and bring her back home. Her new home here. The SBR and the entire Board of Regents can kiss my ass if they think to stop me!"

"Where is your brother?" Coren demanded as he turned to look at Denali who sat at the table. "He is the one in charge here isn't he? He has done this! He has encouraged this rebellion in my own children."

Denali nodded with a smile. "Yes he is in charge." Deni answered. "He and our brother Arrarn were receiving a report from our brother Resumar. He will be along shortly." He leaned back in the chair. "Perhaps you should consider that your children have come to these decisions based on their own feelings and values."

Denali didn't see Arduri look at him from her seat with something akin to adoration in her eyes at his words. It was something that Lisisa noticed quickly however.

Coren looked back at his son exasperation written all over his face at the offhanded way Denali answered him. "Your time among these... these people has changed you Nirilo. You are not the son I remember."

"It hasn't changed me." Nirilo said. "As with mother... it has opened my eyes!"

Coren cut his eyes to where Devra sat quietly at the large table, Bren beside her on one side and Arduri on the other. Her hand rested atop Bren's arm on the table almost possessively and this only served to fuel Coren's anger, for Devra had made no attempts to hide her new relationship with this Lycavorian. Denali leaned back and folded his arms across his broad chest as he watched Coren. Lisisa sat between him and Arduri, fiddling with the mug of coffee that rested in front of her, amusement showing on her face.

"To what?" Coren snarled as he looked back to Nirilo. "You... you of all my children I thought would have used reason. You willingly share a bed with one of their females Nirilo. Do you know how much gossip and talk that generates in the capital? The questions I have to field nearly everyday because of this?"

"This is not about Jodae!" Nirilo spat. "And you will leave her out of this father for you do not know her in the least!"

Coren turned away from him exasperated. "Arдан... Tastia... please can you help me try to talk some sense into my family!"

"As you have made abundantly clear to me on several occasions since undertaking this journey Coren..." Tastia spoke with a tightly controlled anger in her voice as she looked at him. "I do not know you... therefore I am unqualified to comment either way on what your children or Regent Re Mydala are doing."

Coren hissed softly at what she had said and looked at Arдан. "Arдан... please?"

Arдан looked at him from his seat. "While I do not..." He began to speak but the doors to the conference room opened and Andro strode in carrying a data pad, Arrarn and Sadi right behind him.

Denali and Lisisa knew immediately that something was wrong because both Andro and Arrarn's scents were filled with underlying anger. Lisisa was the one who came to her feet, reaching out to put her hand on Deni's shoulder as she did.

"Andro... Andro what is wrong?" Lisisa asked.

Andro met her eyes across the table. "We... we have just finished a brief report from Res." He told her.

"And?" Lisisa demanded.

Andro looked at Arrarn whose normally handsome face was a mass of confusion and anger. "Resumar has... he has discovered where mother is." Andro said.

Deni got to his feet slowly now. "Why don't I like the way you just said that Andro?" He asked softly.

"She's on Cabelir Deni." Arrarn spoke in barely a whisper. "They took her to Cabelir."

"No!" Lisisa exclaimed gripping Deni's arm her eyes wide.

Devra looked at Bren as she felt his body tense and he turned his head and cursed in the Lycavorian language. She turned back to Androcles quickly and stood up. "What... where is this Cabelir?" She asked turning to Bren. "Bren?"

Andro stepped up to the table. "It is... it is the Kavalian homeworld." He stated. "It is deep within Kavalian Federation space and..." He shook his head. "We were hoping that they... that they were holding her on a ship somewhere and..."

Sadi moved up to the table beside Devra. "In order to reach... in order to reach her Devra we would have to launch a full scale invasion of Kavalian space." She explained gently. "Even if we threw the entire might of the Lycavorian Union at them, it would still take us several days to reach Cabelir."

"They would kill her." Arrarn finished. "They would kill her within hours of us crossing the border."

Lisisa moved around the table swiftly and stepped right up to Arrarn, wrapping her arms around his waist. "Arrarn you..."

Arrarn met her eyes and pulled her close to him as he shook his head. "She is alive Lisi." He said with firm confidence. "That is what matters. We can not do anything to put her at risk, I know this... no matter how much I want to charge across the border and get her back."

"You will not lose hope fervon!" She told him firmly. "I won't let you!"

"I'm not losing hope arande." Arrarn said. "Mother is strong and she will endure. She must endure until we or father can reach her. I know this... and I will endure as well. Until we get her back, we must take things one step at a time."

"Resumar says they may have a way to get her a message." Andro told them. "There is a Kavalian female within the compound she is being held at. She is the sister of one who has been serving Shiria for many years. They both have. She is going to try and get a message to mother. She is under tight security but this woman has the means to reach her. Resumar says... he says this woman, Poysa is her name, she says mother looks tired and mildly bruised. She says she looks lost."

"That has to be the static inhibitor they implanted her with Andro." Lisisa spoke quickly. "Medwaw Dysea said that is how she felt before it was removed. Lost... unable to feel any of us, anything."

Andro nodded. "That is what Shiria said as well." He said. "It also means they could tell her anything and it will only serve to confuse her more since she can not feel the truth."

Arduri looked at him. "What do you mean Andro?" She asked.

Andro looked at her. "Those of my family... we are connected deeply within Mindvoice. While we may not be able to communicate across great distances, there is always a spark of each of us within Mindvoice that the rest of us can sense. This thing that they have put inside our mother, it prevents us her from feeling us. No doubt she still truly believes father is dead, not to mention many of us. If she is unable to feel us within Mindvoice then they could be telling her anything and she would not be able to know they are lying to her, especially if they were doing other things to fool her or make her doubt."

"I thought... I thought your wolf senses could detect if someone was lying?" Devra asked.

Ardan looked up at him from his chair. "This is a trait that our people know you have." He said.

Andro nodded. "And they can for the most part sir." Andro answered him respectfully which did not go unnoticed by Ardan. "But if a person is a skilled liar, one who can control their emotions very well, then it would be next to impossible to tell. And the Kavalians are naturally a very emotional and angry species, and it makes it harder to detect a lie from them in their scent." Andro took a deep breath and looked at his brothers and sisters. "Given this new information I will understand if any of you want to remain on Earth and prepare for this meeting with the Kavalians. I need to go... Inamarno calls for me and KertaGai and the others but none of you need..."

"And what will we do?" Arrarn spoke. "Sit on our hands and wait? We can do nothing and without more information anything we do try could very well put mother at even greater risk. I am not willing to do that... and I will not remain here and do nothing but imagine what horrors they are inflicting upon her. You need us fervon... and we work better together."

Andro looked at Denali and Lisisa. "Deni... Lisisa?"

"Arrarn is right." Deni spoke. "Without something to do we all would be snapping at people for no reason. No... I'm in."

Andro looked at Lisisa. "Lisi?"

"Andro of course... you know that." She replied.

Andro nodded his head. "Zarah and Normya have already told me where to stick my suggestion that they remain if they want too." He exhaled in relief knowing they were stronger as a family. "Then we will go and retrieve Inamarno and the other Vanari the Icalro and these OSG idiots hold."

"This action you are going to undertake puts our people are huge risk!" Coren barked.

“It is a risk to them Coren... not us.” Ardan spoke now and he turned to look at Andro. “And I believe it is something you would do whether we were here or not correct?”

Andro nodded. “Yes.”

“Ardan... you heard what Devra said!” Coren hissed. “The OSG Commando saw her! You know what this could mean if the Orionis Syndicate discovers we are here working against them.”

Ardan nodded. “Yes he did see her. And the man was dead within hours of seeing her with no way to transmit this information to anyone off the island we were on.” Ardan said confidently. He looked at Andro. “Is that not also correct?”

“Unless he was some sort of magician... he did not get any kind of communications off before he was killed no.” Andro answered.

“I demand to know where my daughter Naesta is!” Coren barked now. “Why is she not here?”

“Naesta is with my father and mothers in a very safe location.” Androcles answered him. “She is assisting my mother Anja and my Aunt Sivana in discovering some way to eliminate this hold over the Vanari people that the Syndicate has.”

Coren’s eyes grew wider. “This is madness!” He barked loudly. “You did not even know the OSG was on your planet! In your city! How do we know that they do not know of us being on your backwater world?”

“That is quite enough Coren!” Devra barked at him.

“How do we know that even as we speak a message has not already been sent telling the OSG we are here and what you are doing?” Coren snapped. “How do we know that they are unaware of what you are attempting?”

Andro met Coren’s eyes and moved over slowly to stand in front of him. “You know sir... with all the belly aching you have done since you have been here, I am beginning to wonder if perhaps you are not helping these scum in some way.”

Coren’s eyes grew wide. “What?”

“Since you have gotten here you have done nothing but complain about the Syndicate somehow discovering you are here. What you are doing.” Andro spoke. “As a leader of your people, I would think you would be more concerned about finding a way to break free of the hold the Syndicate has over your people.”

“How dare you insinuate that I am helping them? I am far older and wiser than you boy! I will not be talked down to by an ani...” Coren hissed savagely.

“Coren!” Ardan barked now as he came to his feet. “Enough!”

Andro’s face remained impassive and he smiled at Coren. “By an animal?” He spoke. “Is that what you were going to say Regent Re Mydala?”

Coren glared at him. “Yes.” He stated finally.

Devra came to her feet outraged only to be stunned when Tastia’s voice filled the room from where she had also stood up. “Coren how dare you!” She snarled loudly.

Coren stared at Andro ignoring them both. “You know nothing of the Vanari people! Of our ways and what we have had to endure through the millennia at the hands of the Orionis Syndicate! The decisions we have made insure our people remain strong and continue to thrive through the decades and centuries!”

“I don’t know... but I would think that nearly fifteen thousand years as slaves to the High Coven have given my people a unique insight on freedom and the costs of that freedom in both life and history. The labor camps, the rape of our females, the murders and being used in some cases as a food source for the High Coven. I would think experiences like that would somehow give us a kinship, just as it has with the elves, the Hadarians and the Algolian people. We all have endured these things, yet we worked together through the years to finally throw off the repression of the High Coven to be once more be free.” Andro answered calmly. “But then again... we are not walking around with this chip on our shoulders declaring we are superior to you in every way. And you just might be surprised at what I know of your people sir.”

“You know nothing!” Coren snapped.

“I know of the building of Mydala City by your ancestors.” Andro spoke softly meeting his eyes. “How Ryand Re Mydala laid the first stones of what is now called Regent Center on Austrova.” Andro saw Coren’s eyes go wide. “I know how your ancestors first began to chart the stars and how they formed the Re Mydala Shipping Company. And then how your great great grandfather branched off and built the Mydala Engineering Corporation. You are the largest Engineering Corporation within the Vanari Empire now if I’m not mistaken. A family that many look up to and hold in high regard. And I know of the pride felt by your children for the name they bear.”

“How... how do you know these things?” Coren snapped.

“I know that when your older brother married Ardan’s daughter, your families became tied together forever. Just as it was when you took Devra Lan Semina as your wife. Just as it is with all Vanari who conduct the Joining Ceremony isn’t that right? Semina... that is your family retreat isn’t it Devra?” Andro turned and looked at her. “I understand it is very beautiful there in the spring.”

Even Ardan came to his feet now with wide eyes. “How... how do you know that?” He gasped. “Devra?”

Devra shook her head quickly. “I... I have never spoken of that with him.” She said quietly.

Andro smiled as he looked back at Coren. “Guess I’m not so stupid as you first thought huh?”

“Caliria!” Devra gasped her eyes wide.

Ardan and Coren turned to her. “What? Devra... what are you saying?” Ardan asked. “Caliria is a prisoner of the Syndicate! How could he know these things?”

“These are things... these are things only a Vanari would know Ardan!” Devra told him. “These are things that only our families would know. Androcles has touched her Ardan. He has touched her within Mindvoice. These are things Caliria as shown him! With her mind!”

Andro’s eyes never left Coren’s face. “Our... my Inamarno... she wonders why her own father does not love her. She wonders why the color of her hair makes it so he has forsaken her and why he never looks upon her with pride at all she has accomplished.”

“You... you don’t know these things!” Coren snapped. “You... you are either making them up or you and your kind are working with the Syndicate and that is how you got the information!”

“Coren you fool!” Devra shouted.

Andro chuckled. “Stay tuned Regent Re Mydala... and you will see how closely I am working with the Syndicate!” He began to turn away and stopped. Tastia gasped loudly when she saw his eyes suddenly change and his wolf fangs extended fully. “There is something else you should know Regent Re Mydala.” Andro spoke turning back around.

Coren never saw the head butt coming, and he was in no way prepared for it not that it would have mattered. Andro’s forehead smashed into his cheek with enough power that it sent him reeling back into the bulkhead, savage pain lancing through his face and head and stars crisscrossing in his eyes as he slumped to a sitting position. The natural bones of a pureblood Lycavorian were much denser and harder to break than most species, including the Vanari, and the blow felt as if someone had hit him with a piece of stone or board. Coren’s hand came up to the side of his face immediately and his light blue colored blood seeped between his fingers.

“You will know this Coren Re Mydala!” Andro snarled as he stood over him. “I will go to this planet and I will take my Inamarno from them! And I will love her until it takes her breath away! We will love her until she knows nothing else! And every single individual who has had a hand in defiling her in any way will answer to me! I do not care what species they are or what color their skin is! I will find them... and I will leave them to rot in their own blood in a sewer somewhere, be they Icalro Alliance, Orionis Syndicate or even Vanari if that is what I discover!” Andro reached down and yanked Coren up by the front of his shirt, hauling him up and pinning him to the bulkhead so that he dangled six inches off the deck. “And make no mistake Coren Re Mydala, what I told that fool before I killed him I meant with every ounce of who I am!” Andro glared at him with wolf eyes as Coren tried to pry his fingers from his shirt.

“Release me!” He growled.

“You... you are a poor excuse for a father Coren Re Mydala.” Andro hissed at him. “You dismiss your own blood because of the color of her hair! What parent could dismiss their own child? Devra risks all... Arduri, Naesta and Nirilo risk all that they are to help me and all you are concerned about is yourself and how it will look if you are discovered here.”

“Androcles... please!” Devra spoke moving closer to him. “Release him please!”

Andro turned and looked at her for a short moment before turning back to Coren. “You have no conception of the strength within her Coren Re Mydala. The passion. A strength and passion she got from you! And you dismiss her!”

Devra stepped up next to him and placed her hand on his arm unafraid of him. She would never be afraid of the him, not after what she now knew. Not after falling so hopelessly in love with Bren. She would never fear them again. “Androcles... please.” She said softly. “Release him. This... this accomplishes nothing.”

Andro pulled his hand back and let Coren drop to the floor. “One day Coren Re Mydala, one day you will wake up and discover that your arrogance has robbed you of everything that you care about. And you will have no one to blame but yourself.” Andro stepped back from him and took a deep breath. “A word of advice from a lowly Lycavorian to a superior Vanari like yourself... call me or any of my people animals again Coren Re Mydala and I will show you just how insignificant you truly are.”

Andro turned and moved back to the table, Arrarn holding out the data pad to him. He took it and held it out to Ardan who stared at him with wide eyes. “Regent Vu Lamurriion, you will find all the information we obtained from our interrogation of the OSG prisoner we have on this data pad. Her injuries prevented further questioning at the time, but once she is fully healed we’ll discover more. She is locked down in our medical bay right now and if you wish, you can provide me a list of questions you might have to ask her.” Ardan watched as his eyes returned to normal and his fangs slowly retracted until they were once more normal. He reached out slowly and took the pad. “My intent is to try and take as many of these OSG midaeus that we find alive, but given the actions by the others, that may not be possible. I would advise against questioning her directly since she did not see any of you and keeping your presence here secret for now is the better tactical decision.”

“You... you are just giving this to me?” Ardan asked stunned.

“Regardless of what Regent Re Mydala may believe, we are not your enemy, nor have we ever been.” Andro told him. “Feel free to roam my ship sir. We will arrive at our destination in roughly thirty hours, and I have given you access to all but our sensitive systems. If you have any questions or you would like to talk, feel free to contact me at any time. If you will excuse me now.”

Ardan watched as Andro took Sadi’s hand and they exited the conference room without hesitation. Arrarn followed him, Deni and Lisisa right behind him. Bren had come to his feet now and he waited patiently as Devra stepped up to Coren.

“Your... your incredible stupidity astounds me Coren.” She hissed at him angrily. “It truly astounds me.”

“As if you care about me.” Coren said softly.

“Oh I don’t Coren.” Devra popped right back. “I stopped caring about you many years ago because that is when you stopped caring about me, but if you in some way endanger this mission to get Caliria back and Androcles doesn’t kill you himself... I will!”

Coren watched her with wide eyes as she turned and reached for Bren’s outstretched hand. She grasped it tightly and moved with him out the door of the conference room. Coren watched as Nirilo shook his head and he took his sister’s hand and they followed their mother. Tastia even looked at him with contempt before she too exited the room.

“Coren... perhaps we should talk.” Ardan spoke as he settled back into the chair.

CURILA 6

Naesta entered the research lab holding the mug of tea and feeling more rested than she had in weeks. The nights here were wonderfully quiet and pleasantly warm and comfortable. The quarters she had assigned to her allowed her to open the entire ceiling above her bedroom to the stars in the sky and she had spent the first hours here under those very stars contemplating everything that had taken place so far. She was entering her third day here and already her level of hope had risen higher than it had ever been. Anja, Sivana and Ceuma were nearly tireless in their work, and between the three of them Naesta doubted if any Vanari medical doctor could possibly compare. It helped that they had the skills they did, the metaphysical radiation that surrounded their world enabling them with incredible healing powers that they could call on demand, but their knowledge was superior to any Vanari doctor she had ever witnessed. Naesta had no doubts they were closer to finding a way to remove the hold the Orionis Syndicate had over her people than any scientist had ever been.

At least until Caliria.

Naesta firmly believed that she had been targeted on purpose by the OSG because she was so close to finding the answer. And if that was the case, then Caliria had been betrayed by their own people, for very few Vanari knew what she and the others had been working on and only one of them could have told the OSG. Naesta found she was not as trusting as her mother and sister, and she was far more pessimistic about the manner in which her sister had been taken. Her time here had been eye opening as well to say the least. There was a serious cloud hanging over everyone here because they all now knew that their fellow lover and Queen was being held hostage. Yet even with this cruel knowledge she could not help but be amazed at how they continued forward. She had sat with them for dinner the previous two nights, Wayonn and her listening to them speak of their children and intentionally avoid all talk of their Queen and lover For'mya. The younger children made them laugh at their antics with their dragons as they scampered about the huge dining room. She heard stories of all their children growing up, but the ones that interested her the most were the stories of Androcles and his father. As each hour passed, Naesta came to firmly believe that he would rescue Caliria no matter the cost and she would become his wife and mate. If he was anything like his father, who she had watched constantly nudge Anja and Aricia during all hours of the day and night, Naesta knew her sister would finally know true love. She knew Wayonn was spending a great deal of time with Martin Leonidas, and that he was nearly always with the men and women who had come with them to this planet. While she may have been very young by many standards, Naesta was still a Vanari Cadre Commando and her experience and knowledge told her that these men and women were training for something. And their skill and confidence far outstripped her own. They would disappear for hours on end, returning at odd hours of the night for the last two days, and this was the biggest factor in her suppositions.

After the display they had seen when they first arrived, Naesta was taken aback by the way Martin Leonidas greeted the ebony skinned vampire clone. All the pain the vampires of the High Coven had caused him through the years, yet he greeted this one as if she was a lost sister. Their embrace was heartfelt as she watched the tears fall from the woman's eyes and her once tense face became peaceful and sedate. Naesta knew she had much to learn still about these men and women, but now she actually looked forward to obtaining this knowledge. They gave of themselves without question and asked for nothing in return, just as Androcles had done on his ship when he first brought them to Earth. They were most definitely a different breed as her father had said once, but Naesta Re Mydala found herself coming to realize that was not such a bad thing at all. As she lifted her green eyes, she saw the two reasons why these things were becoming easier to believe every minute.

Ceuma sat at the U shaped work station, medical computers and databanks all around her. She was talking to the tall ebony skinned Spartan who Naesta knew was her mate Joci and he was paying rapt attention to her. Naesta's time these last two days with Ceuma had given her much pause in her thinking, for that single touch when Ceuma had pulled her close and shielded her nakedness from her husband had sent such blissful tremors through her body. She had tried to spend as much time with her as possible over these last two days to see if perhaps it had been nothing more than a fluke, yet no matter how many times Naesta had brushed against her, the same thing had occurred. What was even more startling was the fact that Ceuma's husband only caused these feelings to increase and become stronger. His dominant presence, the confidence and possessive way he treated Ceuma made Naesta even more excited. When she sat with them for dinner, she made sure she sat beside Ceuma, but she found what she really wanted was to be sitting between them. She wanted to be sitting between them and be the focus of their attention. That she was drawn to Ceuma's beauty was without question, and because she was Vanari, this did not bother her even though it was not something she had actively considered before coming here. What surprised her more than anything was the strong attraction she also felt for Joci. His ebony colored skin and powerful muscles were almost too much to gaze upon and just last night Naesta had begun to imagine what it would be like to be in bed with them both, something she had never done before with anyone. As she moved closer they both smelled her as she knew they would and looked up.

"Naesta!" Ceuma called. "Good morning!"

Naesta gripped her tea tightly in her hands to help in keeping her emotions under control as she walked up to them. "Good morning." She spoke with a smile. "You... you are here very early."

Ceuma nodded. "Joci and I went running." She answered. "I am still learning how to do things as a wolf and I practice whenever I can."

"And you are learning very well." Joci told her with a smile.

Ceuma chuckled as she looked at him. "You are bias husband." She said turning back to Naesta. "I lost my footing making a sharp turn this morning and took an unexpected bath in the river." She said sheepishly.

"Drying you off with my tongue was very pleasant though." Joci said leaning over and nuzzling her cheek and neck.

Ceuma's eyes closed briefly as she reveled in his caress and his aura. "Yes... yes it was." She stated blissfully. "Very pleasant indeed."

Naesta couldn't help but smile at their interaction with each other. It was the same with the King and Anja and Aricia, and she saw it as well with Sivana and Belen and they had been together for over two decades she knew. It appeared that no matter how many years passed, it was true that Lycavorians never lost their desire for their mates or the need for physical contact with them. Naesta moved closer to Ceuma and her jade green eyes opened once more to look at her. That is when Joci detected the small spike in his mate's basil and lime scent. His dark eyes glanced quickly at Naesta and realized that she was the cause. Her banana kiwi scent was sweet and it to was spiking as Naesta stood next to Ceuma. He felt Ceuma's hand drop to his thigh and she squeezed tightly to try and center herself as this Vanari female moved close to them. Their combined scents were swirling around him and he had to admit, it was a very intoxicating combination.

"Anja and Sivana are not here yet?" Naesta asked surprised.

Ceuma shook her head. "Anja is with Martin and Aricia and I doubt we'll see her today. Dysea arrived early this morning with Isabella and they went to greet them."

"She is the elven Queen who was captured by those Immortals?" Naesta asked.

Joci nodded his head. "She was rescued by other Immortals and her children yes. They destroyed the base of the pirate scum that were holding her and she came here to be with the King and her fellow Queens. Queen Isabella is nearly eight months pregnant with the King's son and she and Dysea are very close."

"Sivana and Belen are spending the morning with their younger children, but she will return in a few hours." Ceuma told her staring at her with those jade green eyes. She blinked several times and then turned to her instruments. "We had the computers running a Cellular Composition Breakdown program during the night." She answered quickly.

"A breakdown of what?" Naesta asked.

"We are isolating the empirical formula of the different compounds in the Syndicate's weapon." Ceuma replied. "If we can isolate all of them, then we can determine what chemicals are best used to either negate them or destroy them completely. Once we have that, it is just a matter of devising a reverse empirical formula and making our own compound."

Naesta looked at her. "That's it?" She asked surprised.

Ceuma laughed. "Well... it's not as easy as it sounds... but essentially yes. The medical equipment and computers you see here were designed by Hadarian Scientist and Engineers and they used technology from the Mindvoice ship to base their construction. Anja says that Avi, the Avatar of City Ship 41 downloaded billions of data modules into the computer cores that are under this facility. It is the most advanced medical computer anywhere in the universe and..." Ceuma's head turned as the panel in front of her began to chime insistently. Her eyes grew wide at the information that was scrolling over the screen and she began to type furiously. "By the Gods... it did it!" She exclaimed.

Naesta's heart nearly leaped from her chest as she pressed closer. "What?"

"It did it!" Ceuma retorted again. "It found the exact formula!"

"Formula for what?" Joci asked.

Ceuma looked at him. "The formula that we need to manufacture an antidote to counter the Orionis Syndicate weapon!" She gasped. She turned back to Naesta whose eyes were wide in disbelief. "Naesta... this..."

Naesta looked at her. "Please... Ceuma... please tell me this is not a joke."

Ceuma shook her head. "It's no joke!" She exclaimed. "I must get Anja and Sivana down here to confirm the data but I know I'm right! Your sister's calculations on the mutating mitosis isotope structure of the compound is what did it... but it's very real!"

Naesta stared at her for a long moment. "Thousands... thousands of years!" She gasped. "For thousands of years... we have suffered the fear! In... in only three days you do this?"

“Well... your sister did do quite a bit of the work and...” Ceuma’s words were cut off as Naesta stepped forward and covered her lips in a sizzling kiss. Her eyes flew open in surprise, but to Joci’s disbelief she did not pull away. Ceuma’s scent spiked incredibly and she actually felt her body become flush and extremely aroused. As Naesta deepened the kiss Ceuma’s eyes closed almost dreamily and she responded to the kiss with equal fervor. It lasted for several moments before Naesta got control of her emotions and pulled away quickly, her eyes wide in shock at what she had just done.

“Ceuma!” She gasped. “Oh... please... please forgive me!”

Ceuma’s eyes opened slowly and she looked at her while leaning back against Joci for support. She reached up to touch her lips with her fingers as she shook her head slowly. “No... it’s...” Ceuma’s hand dropped once more to Joci’s thigh and she squeezed even harder than the last time. “I should... I should call Sivana so she can... so she can verify the information.” She got up from her seat and moved across the room to the COM panel. As she entered the code for her sister, Ceuma once more reached up to touch her lips and wondered why she was feeling what she was feeling.

By the Gods this is what she had needed for so long.

Their bodies were covered in sweat, their naked flesh glistening in the sunlight that came into their room from the open ceiling. Their bed had no sheets on it; they had lost them in the first minutes of Martin carrying her into their room and stripping her uniform from her. Dysea was in phase yes, but her Nauta Melme knew what she needed, what she wanted without any words passing between them. She hadn’t even gotten completely off the ramp before she could smell him in the early morning air, twilight just beginning to creep away. Even with Anja and Aricia waiting at the end of the ramp, Dysea had shifted and was sprinting into the distance, her nose honing in on his powerful mint scent. She discovered him standing outside the door to their private home waiting for her, and in two final bounds she was in his arms and he carried her here.

It was here that all the horror and humiliation of the pain she had endured was finally washed away. She had thought perhaps he would be different knowing what she had suffered through at Phy’iad’s touch. Dysea she have know better, for the moment his lips came down on hers; he did as he always did and he stole her breath away. Her lithe elven body was on fire for her mate and he did not hesitate for an instant and he never disappointed her. He could make her sing to the heavens with just his exquisite touch, and as his fingers and hands explored her body once more, the memories began to fade away. When he sank his wonderful cock into her completely and just held himself there, all that had happened to her disappeared, leaving only Dysea Leonidas. And then he made love to her as if his very life depended on it. The passion was beyond what she had felt in their twenty plus years together, the desire and adoration more than she could process, and exactly sixteen minutes after she arrived Dysea Leonidas was lost in a realm of pleasure only her Nauta Melme could make her feel.

Their lovemaking in the last four hours had been urgent and demanding as well as soft and so very gentle. Each massive orgasm he caused her to feel restored more and more of who she was. Each sweet kiss he gave to her, each sensual nuzzle of her elven ears; every single caress of his fingers on her skin restored her soul and her being. Cirith had been so right when she said that he was what she needed to fully be herself once more. Even Cha’talla had known this, and while Dysea never questioned it herself, she did not know how he would react. She should have known better. They had been together for too long, all of them; they had been through too much as husband and mates, as lovers and friends. Whatever fears she may have had before returning here were gone before the sensations from his first kiss had waned and the full power of his aura engulfed her in its beautiful warmth.

Dysea breathed deeply of his minty scent, his lips and nose nuzzling the hollow of her throat, his beautiful cock twitching with the final spasms of his own orgasm deeply buried within her depths. Her limbs tingled in delight, her heart and senses raced with desire, and her mind sang with love. His weight above her, her long legs wrapped around his hips, always made her feel blessedly safe and secure and that had not changed. He lifted his handsome face and stared into her emerald eyes, leaning closer to nuzzle the front ridge of her elven ear before he claimed her lips again for a kiss filled with commitment and love. When he finally pulled away he stared at her, reaching up to brush some stray strands of her platinum colored hair from her cheek.

“It has been too long Melda Min.” He spoke softly leaning his face close to nuzzle her cheek again. “Tell me what you want from me Melda Min. What can I do to...?”

Dysea took his face in her hands and kissed him hard. “You... you have already done it Nauta Melme.” She answered him with a bright smile. “Just feeling your arms around me... what you make me experience... that is what I needed.” She rasped out the words to him. “I am myself again my handsome husband and mate.”

“I have missed you Melda Min.” He said. “I have missed your scent and aura swirling around me.”

“Am I... am I still sweet to you Nauta Melme?” She asked him wanting to hear the words that always ignited bliss in her veins.

Martin smiled and used his tongue to trace the hollow of her throat once more, dragging the tip up to her chin. “As sweet as cherries in full bloom Melda Min.” He whispered back and watched her smile in happiness.

“You... you are so good to me Nauta Melme.” Dysea said. “So good to all of us.”

“You are my life Melda Min... you know that. All of you.” He told her. “Nothing could make me forsake any of you. Ever!”

“I know.” She said bringing her hand up and stroking his cheek and the scar that ran vertically over his right eye. “Kinsoargai lives Nauta Melme. She lives and you must never lose hope.”

Martin nodded his head. “I haven’t lost hope Melda Min. It’s troubling not being able to feel her within Mindvoice. I have... I have grown so used to having all of you within my mind and always being able to touch you. I know it’s because of these things they made... these inhibitors they put inside you and her but I...”

“What?” Dysea asked him.

“I blame myself for what has happened.” Martin told her. “I should have taken the High Coven out a long time ago. I should have taken every ship we have and finished them years ago. I should have killed my brother that day in Sparta. All of this... everything that is happening is because of the my indecision Melda Min. Because I did not do what I should have done. What my instincts called for me to do.”

“You can not blame yourself for others actions Nauta Melme.” Dysea told him.

“I can and I do.” Martin said. “Zarah, Andro, you and now For'mya. Everything bad that has taken place is because of what I failed to do even though I knew then I should have. We have... we have raised our children to not do the one thing I have always done. I have held back. I almost killed my son Melda Min and now he alone bears the burden of what I should have done long ago. I didn’t see past the veil of darkness that Aikiro created and look what they did to our daughter. And now... I allowed a traitor to do to me what a traitor did to my father and For'mya is enduring god knows what because I failed.”

Dysea took his face in her hands firmly and stared at his delicious dark brown eyes. “You listen to me Martin Leonidas. Yes... you have made decisions in the past. Decisions that you felt were the correct path to follow. Do not doubt or second guess those decisions for they are what has made you the man you are. All we want... all we have ever wanted is to leave in peace and watch our children grow. To have more children and watch them grow as well. There are others who do not wish to leave us alone Nauta Melme. They want what we have... what we covet. You are not like them... and because you are not like them... because your Spartan blood is honorable and wise and pure, you will never be able to predict what these monsters will do.”

“That doesn’t... that doesn’t bother you Melda Min?” Martin asked.

Dysea shook her head with a smile. “Not in the least.” She answered. “For the man that claimed me so long ago and the man who still makes my elven and wolf blood scream out for him, that man is you Nauta Melme. The man you are now. The man all of us love without pause or regret. You may think you have failed, or that you are responsible in some way, but you are not. What you need to do is acknowledge this my love. Acknowledge that you are not like them and then act as the man you are. I will tell you... the man you are... that man is more cunning and savage than they could ever be, but he is also compassionate and loving and filled with wisdom. That is what gives you your strength Nauta Melme. That is the man we love... and that is the man every Spartan alive would die for.”

Martin stared at her for a long moment in silence, taking in the curve of her four inch high elven ears and the slope of her neck and the outline of her soft lips. “Carian... you are just too beautiful and smart to be my wife and mate.” He said finally.

Dysea laughed then. She laughed and it felt so very good as she wrapped her arms around his head and squeezed him tightly. He drew back after a moment and looked at her. “Who is this woman you brought with you Melda Min. A woman who I can smell quite prominently all over you.”

“Her name is Cirith.” Dysea answered. “And she is meant to be part of our lives as surely as the sun rises in the morning Nauta Melme. She carries the blood of the fifth Ruling Bloodline in her veins Martin. She... she saved me my love. She saved my sanity. Bella and I have spent the last three days discovering all there is to know about her, but we both can feel it strongly. No doubt Anja and Aricia will feel it as well. I didn't... I didn't know how Bella would react at first... but they have become quite close in only three days.”

“Dysea... I...” Martin lowered his forehead to her chest between the valley of her large firm breasts.

“No Nauta Melme... you will discover it in your own time, but we can not dismiss her coming into our lives now.” Dysea told him. “She has believed for so many years that she was to be your father's second mate and wife, but when she came with her father and was finally among us she knew the truth of it. We knew what her place was. That place is with us.”

“Have I no say in this?” Martin asked looking at her.

Dysea's emerald eyes shone back at him and she smiled brilliantly. “No.” She stated confidently.

“That is not...”

The COM panel burst into life then and Anja's voice filled their room. “Martin... Dysea, you had better come to the SECURE conference room in the main living area.”

“What is it Red?” Martin asked.

“It's Andro Lover.” She answered him immediately. “He's contacting us from the Secure Conference Room on the SCIMITAR.”

“The SCIMITAR?” Martin asked looking up.

“Melyanna... it's not Resumar or...” Dysea began.

“No... not directly. Get here as quick as you can both of you. He was going to gather some others and then reestablish the connection before they go dark.”

Martin's combat senses came alive then. “Why are they going dark Red?” He asked.

“Something to do with the Icalro Alliance lover.” Anja answered. “And if the look on his face is any indication, I don't think it's going to be a vacation visit either. Someone associated with the Icalro Alliance tried to kill him and Sadi and the others on Cranae Island last night Marty. And lover... he says he has found out where For'mya is.”

Martin looked at Dysea beneath him and he began to extract himself from her arms. “Red... we'll be there in five minutes!” He spoke quickly.

SCIMITAR EDGE OF EARTH'S SYSTEM

“...talk to me boy! This is a big risk we are taking by talking like this.” Martin spoke from within the transmission image of the holodisc. “Where are they holding your mother?”

Outwardly the Secure Conference Room was nothing more than a smaller version of the main conference room near Andro and Sa'sur's Ready Rooms. There were many differences however, and very few men or women knew of the real differences. The entire room was laced with dragon armor inside the walls, providing an additional layer of reinforced armor combined with the bulkhead armor. There were Mindvoice dampeners set up within the corners of the room, power dampeners in the floor, and the most sophisticated communications network that existed except for on Earth or Apo Prime. Each LEONIDAS IIA-Class Strike Cruiser had such a room, though only those ships that carried the Royal Family were equipped with technology added by Avi himself. Powerful emitters that were beyond most normal means carried by ships for communicating because they were actual Pralor Communications Nodes conformed to act within the holotransmission making them the most secure means of communicating anywhere in the universe. The range of these rooms was somewhat limited due to the dragon armor that encased the bulkheads surrounding it, but speaking from within Earth's system to Curila 6 was relatively easy.

Devra and Ardan were among the people Andro had included in this transmission, much to Ardan's surprise but not to Devra. It could seat twelve people at the table, and among those sitting down with Devra and Ardan on one side were Sadi and all of Andro's mates. On the opposite side of the table, Arduri sat with her brother and Dutkne. She had refused to join her father at his request and instead now sat beside Normya and Tastia, Denali, Arrarn, Jomann, Bren and Tir'ut stood along the back of those sitting, all of them facing the large holo projection of Martin Leonidas and their mothers from Curila 6. They could see all of their mothers in the background, including Wayonn as well as Cirith sitting beside their mother Isabella on the couch.

Andro sat on the edge of the table directly in front of the image of his father. Devra, Ardan and Tastia were struck by how much he looked like his father, and not just the physical proportions which were nearly identical. Martin Leonidas... a man they had heard of before and a man who was supposed to be dead. At least for the moment.

"It's a risk that needed to be taken father. Resumar and Shiria apparently have a deep contact within the Kavalian..." Andro started.

"Don't dance with me son..." Martin said softly. "Just tell us Andro."

Andro looked at his father. "Cabelir." He replied. "Their contact has reported she arrived on Cabelir sometime last night their time. She appeared in good health though mildly bruised and very confused." Andro watched as his mother Anja reached for Aricia on the couch, and his other mothers clutched each other and his grandmother Gorgo. His eyes went back to his father who did not appear to be surprised.

"We figured a ship or something within Kavalian space." Martin said shaking his head. "Not the Kavalian homeworld."

Andro nodded. "It took all of us by surprise as well." He said.

"Your brother and Athani are still secure? Shiria and Dario as well?" Martin asked.

Andro nodded. "Yes. They are proceeding with the orders I gave to them to establish a resistance. Uncle Isra and Aunt Tarifa are with them as well. Jalersi, Pian, Karun and Ardis went with them. Pian's Pride has always been on the outside of the Kavalian government, they are considered nomads and wildcards. His... his love for Jalersi and hers for him now... it has made them enemies of the KFI. His Pride stands behind him and they are ready to help build this resistance."

"Androcles..." Wayonn began as he moved closer. "Shiria... she must be protected at all costs!"

Andro nodded. "I have already made that very clear to Res and Uncle Isra Val'istar. If anything that endangers her becomes too serious they will put her on a ship for Earth. She may not like the way they do it... but it will be done."

"What else?" Martin asked.

"The Galactic Court is convening a special session demanded by the Kavalians." Andro said slowly. "They intend to explain their rensibfla actions and how it is all our fault and they were only protecting themselves because we chose to train the Coven dragons."

"That is their reasoning?" Martin asked him wide eyed.

Andro nodded. "That is part of it father... the other part I believe is so they can officially announce our uncle's claim to the throne of the Union and Sparta now that you are supposedly dead. Eliani had a theory on this but she is currently with a prisoner and I felt that is where she was needed most."

"What's her theory?" Martin asked.

"We didn't get around to discussing it." Andro replied. "We became... preoccupied with other more pressing matters. I will ask her about it soon but Tenna Deia is going to resume her role as Prime Minister and grandfather Panos will be appointed her deputy. They..."

"Andro... that is not what we had agreed upon!" Martin spoke.

"I know... but it is the decision I have made. Given that what has happened is not what we had expected... I'm changing things around so that it better suits us. Having Tenna in her role better suits us now... especially with what she has discovered about herself." Androcles answered his father. "Besides... when have you ever been able to tell Tenna Deia that she can not do something?"

"She'll become a prime target!" Martin protested.

"She knows this father." Andro told him. "As do I."

"You're changing the plan son!" Martin said.

"Isn't you who taught me that contact with the enemy always changes the plan. Even the best laid ones." Andro said. "You can not go after her father. I see it in your eyes, and you can not go after her. Not yet."

"I know that damn it!" Martin snarled. "Don't tell me..." Martin caught himself quickly and shook his head. "Nubou!" He swore.

“Res’s contact is going to get mother a message.” Andro said quickly trying to reassure his father. “She is a tech with access to the area of the facility where she is being held. She will get her a message and give her hope father. To tell her not to do anything to provoke our uncle or this Prefect Keleru. To let her know that things are not as she has been told. If you attempt something now, you know as well as I they will kill her.”

Andro watched as his mother Aricia stepped up to Martin and took his arm. He knew she was pulsing him with her aura, calming him as only she could as his anome. Martin looked at her for a long moment before leaning over and nuzzling the top of her head and her cheek. He pulled her to him then, reaching out to take Anja with his other arm as Dysea and Isabella moved up to them as well and pressed close. Andro gave them a moment to sooth each other and then continued.

“Laustinos has compromised us far more than we ever anticipated being compromised father.” Andro spoke softly. “Nesa and the others of her team are working diligently to find out how deep his treachery goes... but I have... I have instituted Storm Shadow as a result.”

Martin looked up then. “Storm Shadow? Androcles Leonidas... I gave Armetus strict orders about that plan. He was to destroy it and insure it never came to light!”

“Yes... I know. However... Armetus is still recovering and Marci is in command of the Krypteria now.” Andro answered.

“It is wrong Andro!” Martin spoke.

“No father... it is not wrong. What is wrong is us believing that others will not want to take from us what is ours.” Andro spoke. “What is wrong is us doing nothing to protect all we have come to care about. Storm Shadow will take the steps towards what we should have done a long time ago and even Tenna Deia agrees with me now. Our people... the Union... they will not bat an eye because they know it is what we need to do.”

“Andro... there are those in the Netnews who will crucify you.” Martin said.

“Nubou them!” Andro snarled. “They can move to the KFI if they don’t like it that much father!”

“King Leonidas... there are already people within the Senate, even the Netnews, people who are beginning to question how this could have happened.” Sadi spoke from her seat. “I think because it has they are beginning to question how and why. I believe they will demand something be done so that this never occurs again.”

“Sadi damn it... what have I told you about doing that?” Martin snapped. “You are my son’s Anome!”

Sadi looked at Andro with bright jungle green eyes and smiled. “I’m sorry.” She finally said. “But what I speak of is true... Martin. Lu’ria has told us of whispers her mother has heard among men and women on the Senate who question how this could have happened. They all say the same thing.”

“Damn it Andro... this is how it was back then!” Martin exclaimed loudly. “This is why everything went to sibfla back then!”

Androcles nodded. “Perhaps father... but we are not the United States of America and there are far too many species within the Lycavorian Union for that to happen. There are too many checks and balances that are already in place. Besides... I have already spoken to the one person who knows what grandfather would have done in this circumstance and she told me he would do exactly what I am going to do. I did that several years ago.”

“What?” Martin gasped as he turned to where his mother sat on the couch.

Gorgo looked up from where she sat with Retta on her lap. “He’s right Martin. This is what your father would have done and in my opinion it is long overdue.”

“Mother you are talking about...” He began to speak.

“What we are talking about is the safety and future of our Union!” Gorgo spoke. “Had your father not died at Thermopylae he would have done the same thing in Sparta because of the High Coven. We had already talked about it then and Androcles is only doing what needs to be done.”

“Papa... you said it wasn’t nice to use bad language.” Retta spoke from Gorgo’s lap. “You and Andro aren’t being very nice.”

Martin Leonidas looked at his daughter then. Like Eliani she was all Anja in looks, with the exception of her eyes. They had started out as dark green orbs and now they were turning as dark brown as his were. Retta was also showing an aptitude and interest even at ten years of age for everything that went on around her and that is why she and Mara always seemed to be present now.

“I’m sorry Retta.” Martin said finally. “We’ll try to do better.”

“Yes we will sister.” Andro said with a smile. He watched his sister cross her arms in front of her and stare at them. Even from within the transmission the glint in her eyes was very visible.

“Rensibfla!” Retta finally blurted out.

The burst of laughter from both ends of the communication was loud and numerous. It also served to sooth everyone as Gorgo squeezed her granddaughter tightly and whispered in her ear.

Martin turned back to his son and looked at Andro from Curila 6. “If you are going to do it... make sure you do it right boy!” He spoke.

“I intend to father.” Andro answered. “I’m also going to send a courier to you with some other changes I have made or am going to make. Since you are dead, you can’t scream at me about them until you are officially back alive... so save it for then.” He said with a smile.

“Why would I need to scream?” Martin asked.

Andro met his eyes. “Trust me father... you are going to scream to the moon.” He said with all seriousness. “But since I am ‘King’ now, I have already set things in motion... and it will do you no good.”

“Why do I get the feeling I’m not going to like these things you have set in motion?” Martin asked. “I assume it has something to do with your blue skinned guests.” Martin spoke. “The ones like Naesta?”

Ardan’s eyes grew wider. “Is that where Naesta is?” He demanded. “Is she there? Is she safe?”

Ardan watched as Naesta moved into the cone of the transmission. “I am here Regent.” She answered. “And I am perfectly safe.”

“That is part of it yes.” Andro replied to his father.

Martin ignored Ardan and maintained eye contact with Andro. “I’m guessing Wayonn’s report was completely accurate?” He said.

Andro nodded. “Disgustingly so... though more from an unexpected source to be honest with you.” He replied.

“Figures. Expect the unexpected is becoming the norm for us and it sucks!” Martin spat. “And this group... these ISG idiots... the Kavalians hired them?” Martin asked.

Androcles nodded. “That is firm.” He answered. “Marci was able to get some information from the woman we took prisoner and...”

“Wait a minute...” Martin spoke quickly. “The initial report from Famus said you had two prisoners. A man and a woman.”

Andro nodded his head. “We did. The man... well let’s just say he made some rather unsavory comments about Eliani and thought he could feel her up in the process while he was threatening her life.” Andro spoke seeing his mother Anja look at him and press closer to his father.

“Andro she...” Anja began.

“She is fine mother. Jomann showed this man the error of his ways” Andro answered motioning to Jomann.

“How did you do that?” Anja barked at him.

Jomann stepped closer to the transmission. “I asked him politely to release her Queen Anja.” He spoke harshly. “He did. Then I shot him in the face for what he had done.”

Anja’s jade green eyes grew a little wider in the transmission when she heard the force with which he answered the question and the vitriol in his tone for what this man had done to Eliani. “Cyn forn Jomann.” Anja said softly.

“Innyne my Queen.” He replied without thinking and he quickly lowered his eyes when he realized it so he didn’t see Anja’s eyes gaze at him with something more than mere gratitude.

“And these are the same scum who are holding this chemical thing over Naesta’s people? The Vanari?” Martin asked.

Andro nodded. “One and the same.”

“So now these assholes have come here. And they took a contract on you and your mates put in place by the KFI?” Martin said. “They have involved themselves in something they had no right to involve themselves in.”

“This Orionis Syndicate Group is simply a branch of this Eridiani government father.” Andro said. “A shadow branch of their government. We don’t actually know how it all works but we know this is the case.”

“I can understand why the Vanari have never done anything to counter this.” Martin said softly. “I don’t agree with their thinking but I understand it.”

“That is no longer an issue.” Anja continued from beside him. “We... Ceuma actually... she discovered a medical counter for this chemical that they use this morning. I’ll send Eliani a coded sub space transmission with the formula to replicate a viable counter until such time as we can mass produce it Andro. It should be simple enough with the medical equipment you have on the SCIMITAR, but we’ll need to talk to the Sulfar to get an ample amount of what we need.”

Devra and Ardan came to their feet slowly now both of their faces showing disbelief. “Wait... you have found... you have found a cure?” Devra asked.

Anja nodded her head. “Yes. My sister Ceuma discovered it this morning.”

“Naesta... is this true?” Ardan asked looking at her in the transmission.

Naesta nodded from where she stood. “It’s very true Regent.” She answered animatedly. “I witnessed it myself! I have seen it!”

“But how?” Devra asked. “So... so soon!”

“Your daughter Caliria discovered the final component really.” Anja said. “All we did was to bring the compounds together in a viable molecular structure once we determined what the needed ingredient was.”

“Caliria?” Devra said softly. “She discovered it?”

Anja nodded. “Looking at the information you sent me in regards to her work I have to tell you... she is a brilliant researcher Lady Devra. Brilliant! I’d work with her anytime! I’m surprised your people did not discover this much sooner.”

“This... this thing you have developed?” Ardan asked quickly. “You can mass produce it?”

Anja nodded her head. “Once all the needed components are together yes.” She answered confidently.

“How... how is that possible?” Ardan gasped.

“The how doesn’t matter.” Androcles spoke quickly now. “Mother... will Eliani be able to fabricate say two dozen doses of this?”

Anja nodded. “Relatively easily as I said. Why?”

“We’ll need that many.” Andro spoke.

It was Naesta who spoke now as she moved forward. “You... you are going to get her aren’t you Androcles?” She said softly.

Andro nodded his head. “Yes I am Naesta... and everyone else that they hold.” He told her confidently. Naesta’s eyes were bright. “Thank you Androcles.”

Martin looked between the two of them and then settled his eyes back on Andro. “Care to fill me in Andro?”

“It is why... it is the other part of why I needed to speak with you father.” Andro replied. “I’m about to do something else that you probably will not be happy with...”

“Sibfla... that’s nothing new!” Martin popped. He looked quickly at Retta who simply stared back at her father with an impish grin. “Sorry Retta.” He turned back to Androcles. “Hit me with it... I just love bad news.”

“Father... the Icalro Alliance has been bringing Vanari into the Alpha Quadrant through Bontawillian space for at least three years, possibly longer.” Andro told him seeing his father’s eyes narrow and darken. “Naesta’s sister... Devra’s daughter... her name is Caliria father. She is my... our Inamarno.” Andro took a deep breath. “She is... she is meant to be with me... with us. She was captured several weeks ago and they brought her here. It is how the Vanari came to be among us. They arrived with Dutkne. I didn’t... we didn’t see it until they came here father, it was then that I could finally touch her within Mindvoice, albeit only through images because of the distance involved between us.”

“Androcles... the Vanari are not able to use Mindvoice.” Wayonn spoke coming forward again. “There is no known case of a Vanari ever being able to Mindvoice. It is almost as if they are unable to feel the threads of life within Mindvoice.”

“That would be the case Val’istar, had you not touched Devra and shown her what you did of our people while she carried Caliria in her womb.” Andro answered him calmly. “That connection...”

Wayonn’s eyes were wide. “I... I only did that in the hopes that it would allow her to see us for who we were and not who they thought us to be. I never meant... Devra you must believe me I had no idea it would...” He gasped.

Devra shook her head. "I relish that you showed me that Wayonn... without it I would not have found what I have?"

"It... it affected Caliria as well?" Wayonn asked. "While you carried her?"

Andro nodded his head. "However it happened Val'istar, because of your powerful presence within Mindvoice, your connection with Devra stirred and then formed a very strong Mindvoice ability within Caliria. That is how I have been communicating with her these last days."

"And Devra?" Wayonn asked.

Devra looked at him and shook her head. "I don't... I don't have these abilities Wayonn but that touch allowed me to see beyond the surface just as you had hoped." She looked at Bren behind her. "It has also allowed me to find un-requiting love." She turned back to him. "I don't regret it for a single moment!"

Martin held up his hand in the transmission and everyone stopped talking as he looked at his son. "You are sure Andro?" He asked him. "She is to be your wife and mate? All of you are sure?"

Andro nodded his head. "Yes." He answered.

Martin Leonidas finally made that last step into the future. He shoveled that final pile of dirt onto the man he had been and completely embraced who he should have been all along. He met his oldest son's eyes from within the transmission.

"Then why are we having this conversation Androcles Leonidas?" He asked finally.

"Because I am about to do what my blood calls for me to do father." Andro answered. "And I don't intend to hold back father... or let you call me off like you did before. Not this time."

Martin nodded his head. "Then don't." He stated bluntly. "I don't want you to hold back son! Not one nubous iota! You go there Andro and you take back what is yours and you make that sorry collection of oxygen stealing cockbreath ronnus rue the day that they decided to cross me!"

"Martin!" Gorgo exclaimed as she held her hands over Retta's ears.

"Thank... thank you father." Andro said softly.

"Don't thank me boy!" Martin said. "You are going to piss off a whole lot of people and make yourself an even bigger target."

Andro shrugged his broad shoulders. "As if that isn't the case already."

"You know where this special session is going to be Andro?" Martin asked him. "The Galactic Court and I aren't exactly on the best of terms you know. They are the largest bunch of Universe First assholes that I have ever met! Makes me sick! How I ever got talked into letting them get power is beyond me." Martin turned to stare at his mother on the couch and she squeezed Retta tighter but then looked away sheepishly.

Andro shook his head. "Then that makes two of us father and no... we don't know. Not yet." He replied evenly. "I doubt very much the Kavalians will want to come into the Union. I'm guessing they will request it be held on Hadaria with the stipulation that they be allowed to enter Union space unhindered to travel there since I destroyed the Gates around the system. They will undoubtedly demand that Retta and Calyb are there as well, no doubt to show that they and the new Hadarian government are working hand in hand."

"Hand in hand my ass!" Martin snapped. "Wherever it is, I want you hardwired Andro." Martin spoke. "I want to see and hear everything. And they aren't even getting a whiff of your brother and sister so you can tell them to go fuck themselves on that issue."

"Take Duewa with you when you go Andro." Anja spoke now. "I want Buonau to pull her raggedy old hair out of her traitorous head knowing that Duewa has found a new life with Thoti and us."

Andro nodded. "I thought as much mother and I agree. I doubt a supernova could get her away from him now." He said. "Father... we are almost to our Jump Point. I need to go. I will contact you when I return and I have any additional information to pass on to you."

Martin nodded. "Good luck son."

Andro paused for a moment. "Father... I..."

Martin stepped closer within the transmission. "No my son." He said softly. "Don't say it... the blame lies with me and me alone. I can not... I can't put into words the shame I feel Andro... for what I did to you. I can only hope... I can only hope you can forgive me one day."

Andro met his eyes and took a deep breath. "There is nothing to forgive." He stated finally. "There is nothing to forgive because that was not my father. You are my father and you defeated the demon that was controlling you and your actions. You defeated that demon and now it is my place to destroy her and the rest of her vile children. Another loose end that I will attend to shortly as well.”

Martin looked at his son with questions in his eyes but he did not press the issue. “It does not absolve me of my sins son.” Martin said.

Andro moved closer to the transmission as well. “Aren’t you the one who once told me we all have sins father. And it is these sins and mistakes that are part of us and make us who we are as long as we move past them and learn from them?”

“I... I did say that didn’t I?” Martin said.

“Forgiveness is also what you and our mothers taught me and my brothers and sisters and it is time to forgive and move past it father.” Andro said. “Seeing you there... talking to you now, it is time father. It is time.”

Martin nodded his head. “Yes it is.” He stated softly. “Yes it is.” He drew himself up to his full height and looked directly at Androcles. “Molōn Labe son.”

Andro nodded his head. “Molōn Labe father.”

DREAMLAND SHIPYARDS UNION NAVAL SPECIAL PROJECTS DIVISION

Ben O'Connor moved with confident grace down the corridor of the main station facility built into the largest of the asteroids in this system. He had been busy enough the last few days insuring that those Special Projects that they were working on here and they could actually field were being ramped up and transferred to other secure facilities within the fleet to begin mass production. He had kissed Tina and Endith goodbye nearly a week ago as they took the single new STRIKER DT Mark II upgrade to Curila 6. It was Martin’s personal ship and had several features that the standards ones would not. Each STRIKER DT Mark II that went to the Royal Family had these special features and Ben didn’t doubt that the pilots in the Leonidas family would be in their glory. After they had left, Ben threw himself into his work as he always did, while he cared for the two youngest of his children with his two wives. Tatiun was his half elf half vampire five year old son with Endith and the more active of the young ones. Roland was his six year old son with Tina and he was the more cerebral of the two. His boys occupied his time when his wives were gone, and though they hated to be apart, their reunions were always very promising. They love they had nurtured and allowed to grow between the three of them was more powerful now than it had been in the beginning, another side affect of being friends with Martin Leonidas no doubt. No matter the events that had brought them here, no matter the friends they had lost and buried along the way, there was no other place Ben O'Connor would rather be than right where he was.

Ben entered the secure lounge and saw all of his department heads sitting at the table chatting back and forth as they shared coffee and Danishes since it was still very early. Ben did not stand on formality here, they all knew who he was, how close he was to their King and how laid back he was in his command style. Until you screwed up that is.

“Morning people.” Ben spoke as he entered and moved directly to the counter where he poured himself a large mug of coffee. He added cream and turned to look at the men and women. He didn’t add sweetener to his coffee anymore, not after becoming a vampire anyway; it just didn’t sit well with his taste buds. It took a long while to get used to it, but Endith and Tina had commented on how much the cut back in sugar had improved his physical stamina and appearance. After hearing that, it was gravy.

Ben moved back to the table and tossed his data scroll to the polished top. “Sorry to get everyone out of bed so early... but I spoke with Andro last night about an hour after a new group of assholes tried to take him and Sadi and his other wives out in their home. Needless to say he was not a happy camper.”

“They were not hurt I take it?” The elven female asked.

Ben shook his head. “No... but he’s not happy like I said.”

“I wouldn’t be either Ben... not with how his wives look!” A human engineer threw out the comment. “Jeez! Imagine what someone would pay for one night with just one of them. And he gets all four!”

Frank Paulson was the Electrical Engineering Developer and one of the most brilliant minds Ben knew. He had been with them on EDEN BASE, and it had actually been his plan that allowed Admiral Wallace to retake the base in the way they had. He was crude at times, used foul language quite a bit, didn't care who he pissed off and he could get power from a rock if it was truly needed. It was his way of coping with the stress of everything and everyone knew he was fiercely in love with his half Lycavorian and half elven wife and only acted as he did to keep his friends and those he worked with from snapping. He could make anyone laugh.

"I'll make sure I let Itr'aas know you said that." Ben spoke with a grin. "But he does take after his father in that regard no doubt!"

The elven female at the table hissed softly and completely for show. "Frank... you are such a pig!" She spat.

Tanel'ha was the second finest weapons researcher that Ben had on his staff and she could make a kinetic cannon from bamboo reeds. She really came into her own when the person to Ben's right joined their team. Juque was the only Evolli on Ben's inner staff, the designer of the T19 Dragon Killer and countless other weapons. What he thought up in his mind Tanel'ha put into practical application and they made a good pair. The nineteen other Evolli scientists that had defected with Juque also worked in one department or another here in Dreamland and none of them would trade their lives now for anything. The Union had shown them mercy and then provided them a new life and security. A life free of hate and death and they were among the most tireless of designers and workers as well as some of the most fanatically loyal. They had been accepted here in Dreamland for their work and none of the one million men and women of any species who worked within Dreamland's huge borders looked at them in any other way except friend and colleague.

"What did Soul Slayer want Benjamin?" Juque asked softly, his amphibian features slightly damp as they always here. He had taught himself to speak perfect English as well as the ancient Lycavorian language and was a fierce lover of history. Using the name the Evolli had given Androcles during the war was a sign of the ultimate respect and honor he held for Andro and Elynth as far as he was concerned and he steadfastly refused to speak the name in his native language for obvious reasons.

"We aren't going to like this are we Ben?" The Lycavorian that served as Ben's second in command spoke from his seat to Ben's left. Star Colonel Ymus looked at Ben from his chair. He had been Ben's second officer since the birth of Dreamland and it was exactly that to him as an officer and a propulsion expert. A dream.

"Like is such a relative term." Ben said.

"Cut the shit Ben... what's going on?" Frank spoke. "You didn't pull us all out of bed this early to trade war stories."

"No... I didn't." He said. "What is the status of the Block One ARIZONA-Class ships that are still here?" Ben asked.

"BISMARCK and YAMATO have returned from trials and the MISSOURI will be back in two weeks." Ymus answered immediately. "The data will be collected and disseminated and all the quirks in the systems will be worked out. Same as the ARIZONA and the HORNET."

Ben shook his head slowly. "No." He said softly. "Transfer all the data received from the Captain Lorian and align the Block Ones to the exact battle parameters of the ARIZONA and the HORNET during the action at Kranek. Recall the MISSOURI and do the same. Ymus have Captains Carstairs, Lucas, and Navierre prepare to embark on the BISMARCK, YAMATO and MISSOURI respectively when they return. I want all the remaining Fighter Wing selections that are slotted for us pulled from their normal duty rotations and brought here within the next two weeks. The YAMATO will join with ARIZONA's Attack Fleet wherever she is when the time comes while the BISMARCK and MISSOURI will form the 2nd Attack Fleet. I've already done the job of informing docking control at the Nodon shipyards and the LEONIDAS IIA-Class Strike Cruisers REIGN OF FIRE and STAR'S QUEST will be departing with their Strike Wings of Block One ships in two days for Dreamland. I realize that these ships were not slated to be their permanent commands, but things have changed."

"What has changed?" Ymus asked.

"Ben... what is going on?" Juque asked.

Ben leaned back in his chair slowly. "Andro wants the Block One ARIZONA-Class ships ready." He said.

"Ready?" Tanel'ha asked. "Ready for what?"

“Well... knowing his father like I do... and knowing that Androcles is not very different from his old man no matter how much he tries to be. My guess... my guess is that Andro is very close to doing a tap dance on someone’s face and our ships are going to be the ones doing the dancing.” Ben replied. “How long people?”

“Seven weeks at best.” Frank answered immediately. “More like nine even if we push it.”

Ben shook his head. “You have five weeks.” He said sliding the data pad out into the center of the table and tapping it gently.

“That isn’t possible Benjamin!” Tanel’ha told him leaning forward at the table.

“Ben... there are two dozen computer cores of information that need to be uploaded to the other Block One ships just from the Kranek engagement! We have to realign half the power conduits in the starboard landing bays just to bring it into line with the ARIZONA and HORNET specs that Colonel Randall sent to us. And those are the easy tasks. The weapons calibrations and power drain factor equations will take weeks just by themselves. That doesn’t include the fine tuning of the Quantum Drive. Or the LSD coils for intersystem travel!” Frank clamored.

Ben leaned forward in his chair. “Listen to me all of you.” He said gently. “Andro has not made me privy just yet to what he is planning but that boy is like his father in every way when it comes to tactics. Some say he is even more cunning and a whole lot less forgiving. He’ll let me know soon but whatever he is planning it will be completely off the fucking wall, it will come out of left field and you can damn well bet it’s going to kick off a war! The Kavalians bastards have taken his mother, they damn near killed another and they almost got his father. They’ve tried to kill him twice and the last time they went after his wives and mates. Androcles is way pissed folks. He hides it well but when he starts to use cuss words I have never heard of, and he does it in nine different languages, I know he is pissed. I know him people; I’ve watched him grow up! He is like a surgeon folks, and when he starts slicing and dicing I want him to have the very best!”

“Jesus!” Frank hissed softly.

Ben nodded. “His father may have started this program... but Miranda and him are very close. This is going to be Miranda and Andro’s project from now on and I don’t doubt he’s going to turn our toys loose with glee. I’ll do what I need too... I’ll get you whatever you need to do this... but we’ll get this done in five weeks.” Ben got to his feet. “In five weeks Androcles Leonidas is going to let the hammer fall... and it isn’t going to be pretty for whoever gets hit with it. Let’s get this done!”

SCIMITAR

NINETEEN HOURS FROM ONTAHE

Brendi Faith’s dark brown eyes fluttered open slowly, squinting against the bright lights of the room she was in. She didn’t move at first, not wanting to reveal to anyone who could be watching that she had regained consciousness. She flexed her fingers and toes, relieved that they still responded to commands from her brain and then she tried to move her legs and arms. They wouldn’t budge, feeling as if a large weight was on them.

“Don’t try and move.” The female voice said.

Brendi’s head turned to the side on the bed and she groan as pain lanced through the side of her neck. She blinked several times and saw the figure of the woman moved up next to the bed she was lying in.

“I told you not to move.” The voice said again. Brendi saw her hand reach out and then a brief warm sensation touched her neck and the pain vanished. “I have to deactivate the restraints or you will hurt yourself more.”

Brendi remained still as the woman lifted the data pad and typed quickly onto it. Instantly she felt the weight disappear from both her arms and legs and she turned her head quickly to see the long, silky burgundy red hair of the woman who had hit her initially and knocked her out in the bedroom of the villa. Eliani Leonidas stepped back a little and looked at her. Brendi’s mind clicked and the memories of the last few hours came rushing back, this particular woman hitting her incredibly hard and then the tall Lycavorian male shooting her without blinking his large blue eyes. She tried to sit up, groaning softly at the ache that filled her upper body. It felt like she had slept in an uncomfortable position for hours.

“That is the aftereffect of the drugs.” Eliani stated evenly as she leaned against the main computer station behind her. “It will wear off in a few moments now that you are awake.”

“Where... where am I?” Brendi asked as she continued to blink and focus her thoughts.

“The SCIMITAR.” Eliani answered. “My brother’s ship?”

“Ship?” Brendi asked looking at her still lying on her back.

“You can sit up if you want.” Eliani spoke.

Brendi did just that and was going to come off the table bed ready to defend herself. As she swung her legs over the side and sat up she saw the two Lycavorians by the door, both of them watching her with something akin to a predator watching its prey. She turned her head back and watched as Eliani stepped closer to her and lifted the medical sensor probe.

“Don’t move or the readings will be off.” Eliani stated as she lifted the probe sensor and passed it over Brendi’s upper body. The medical gown fit loosely and for some reason made Brendi very self conscious. “Good...” Eliani said. “Damn... I do good work.” She finished as she lowered the probe.

Brendi looked at her. “You’re... you’re Hadarian?” She asked softly.

Eliani met her eyes. “I’m half Hadarian.” Eliani replied to her question. “But you already knew that didn’t you?”

Brendi reached up to her shoulder where she had been shot and pulled aside the off white colored gown. There was not a mark on her from where the kinetic round had punched into her flesh with terrible agony. She turned back to Eliani as she went back to leaning against the computer station. “You healed me?” She said.

“You’re no good to us dead.” Eliani said. “Something your partner didn’t understand too well.”

“He wasn’t my partner!” Brendi snapped. “You drugged me?”

“Yes. You were questioned for several hours before I had them stop.” Eliani answered. “You needed to heal.”

Brendi met her eyes. “I am... I am trained to resist drugs!” She stated.

Eliani shook her head. “Not the drugs we use.” She said.

“Why... why didn’t you kill me?” Brendi hissed then. “Isn’t that what your people do best?”

Eliani chuckled softly. “You come to my brother’s home and try to kill him and the women he loves and you have the gall to stand there and accuse us of being killers? We didn’t even know who you were until you attacked us.”

“That wasn’t me!” Brendi snapped. “The job against your brother was not sanctioned by...”

“By your Home Council?” Eliani asked seeing Brendi’s eyes go a little wider. Dark, sultry eyes that were very appealing. She smiled. “You did tell us quite a bit in the two and a half hours that Marci questioned you.”

“You’re Eliani Leonidas.” Brendi said softly. “Your mother is Queen Anja and you are widely considered to be one of the five strongest Hadarian Healers in the entire Union. You have an attitude, a temper that is almost as famous as your mother’s, and you just recently were mated to a Lycavorian, but you returned to Earth recently without either of them. Before him you were heavily involved with a vampire female and you don’t have a problem going both ways it seems.”

“Both ways?” Eliani asked her eyes narrowing.

“You sleep with both men and women!” Brendi snapped.

“Ahh... both ways.” Eliani said with a smile as she understood the statement. “I see. Well it does have its advantages.”

“It’s disgusting!” Brendi popped.

“Don’t knock it until you have tried it sister.” Eliani quipped right back.

“No thank you.” Brendi spoke seeing Eliani shrug her shoulders. “Why am I here?”

“As I said... you are no good to us dead.” Eliani told her. “And you are safer here on this ship than you would be on Earth.”

“It doesn’t... it doesn’t matter.” Brendi spoke softly. “I am... I am already dead.”

“You don’t look dead to me.” Eliani said.

“Your boyfriend is a lousy shot.” Brendi spoke reaching up to rub her shoulder.

Eliani blinked several times. “He... he isn’t my boyfriend.” She answered watching as Brendi looked at her oddly. “And he hit you exactly where he was aiming.”

“Where... where is the Major?” She asked.

“No one else from your team survived.” Eliani told her.

“They are not my team damn it!” Brendi snarled. “I am not an operator like them!”

Eliani nodded. “Yes... we know. And that is the only reason why you are still alive.” She said moving up to her and reaching out with her hand, the palm beginning to glow with a soft white light. Brendi leaned back quickly, reaching up to snatch Eliani’s wrist. She heard two clicking noises and then was staring down the barrels of two P190A3 assault rifles from ten feet away. The two Lycavorian guards had moved far quicker than she had ever seen anyone move and the look in their eyes was anything but pleasant. “Let go of me.” Eliani stated softly. “I’m going to help you. If we had wanted you dead you would already be dead.”

Brendi met the gaze of her fern green eyes and slowly removed her hand. Eliani placed her palm on Brendi’s shoulder and the throbbing ache that was still there disappeared almost instantly. She watched her step back then and pick up the data pad and she began reading. “You are in excellent physical shape...” Eliani said. “You have a tad too much salt and caffeine in your diet...” She turned looking at her. “But you are in superior health otherwise.”

Brendi looked down at the floor. “I like my bacon and coffee.” She said softly.

“Yes... so do I.” Eliani said. “Would you care to tell me why you and your cohorts tried to kill my brother and his wives?”

“You questioned me!” She snapped. “Don’t you know?”

“I would not allow them to question you for more than they did because you were injured and needed further medical attention.” Eliani explained. “Marci only asked simple questions. Most of them in regards to who you were and how long you have been on Earth. Things of that nature.”

“You wouldn’t allow?” Brendi asked.

“Well... I am a Princess of the Union and the senior Medical Officer when my mother is not on Earth.” Eliani replied. “I do have some pull.”

“And what if I choose to not answer your questions?” Brendi barked. “Are you going to kill me too?”

“No... Marci will pump you full of enough drugs that you will tell us your most intimate secrets. You will tell us everything we want to know... unfortunately when she is finished you will spend the rest of your days in a mental hospital because there will be precious little of your cognizant brain left.” Eliani answered her. “I... I heard what you were arguing about with the others just before I pulled you out of the tunnel. I saw the way you reacted before...”

“Before your boyfriend put a bullet in me?” Brendi said.

“He is my brother’s Durcunusaan Captain!” Eliani snapped. “Not my boyfriend!”

“Whoa! Touchy subject I see!” Brendi popped. “The way he reacted to how the major was feeling you up and I would have guessed he was your boyfriend. He looked like he wanted to skin the major alive.”

“It is not a touchy subject!” Eliani stammered. “He is Durcunusaan and he will act that way with any of my family!”

“If you say so.” Brendi spoke not believing her for a moment. Her training had taught her to read people very well. “So he was Durcunusaan huh? Wolves of the Blood? The most feared troops in the Lycavorian Union. Outside of those members of Mjolnir’s Hand of course.”

Eliani crossed her arms under her ample chest and smiled. “Changing the subject will not work you know.” She said. “We already know that you have been on Earth for close to seven months. We know where you live; we’ve talked to those neighbors who knew you from your apartment building. According to them you were fitting in pretty well considering that you were living in a predominantly older section of Old Sparta and the men and women who choose to live there are usually men and women who were alive when my grandfather was King. Pretty bold of you really.”

Brendi shrugged. “I’m confident in my abilities.” She said.

“But you did not agree with what your team was doing.” Eliani said.

“Jesus Christ!” Brendi snapped. “They were not my team! How many times do I have to say that?”

“You were with them.” The new voice spoke from behind her. A deep male voice and Brendi whirled around quickly gasping in fear as she saw Androcles Leonidas behind her. She hadn’t heard him come into medical bay, or sensed him come up behind her. She staggered back her eyes wide as he drew closer to her.

“Shit!” She gasped in fear as she backed herself against the bulkhead while he stepped right up to her. Brendi heard a sizzling sound and her brown eyes grew wide in terror when he lifted his right hand and she saw the eight inch long psychic knife extended from his closed fist. "Fuck... what is..." Her words died in her throat when his opposite hand snatched her slim throat in its grasp and pressed her back against the bulkhead.

Andro leaned close to her... his azure blue eyes surrounded by a solid black ring and the tips of his dual wolf fangs visible from under his upper lip. He brought the psychic knife within two inches of Brendi's left eye and she froze in his clutches, her hands gripping his left arm which held her throat. "You were with them." Andro said once more. "You came with them to my home to kill my mates! My wives!"

"I didn't know what they... what they were going to do until we got into the tunnels!" Brendi almost screamed. "They pulled me out of my apartment to go with them! They almost compromised my cover! I only provide intelligence! I'm not an operator!"

Andro glared at her. "Do you want to know what will happen if I shove this into your brain?" He growled at her. "I can do one of two things really... I can make it burn as it goes in, melting the surrounding flesh and bone and then fusing a very large hole in your skull. Or... I can make it so it sears the nerve endings in your brain and it will feel as if your blood is on fire. You won't be able to stop it or make it go away and eventually you will go insane while you peel the flesh from your own body trying to get it to stop. Which do you prefer?"

"Jesus! Neither! I'm only an intelligence gatherer and analyst!" She screamed. "I don't do operations! I'm telling you the truth!"

"Why should I believe you?" Andro snarled. "After what you have done... I should just carve you into tiny pieces and listen to you scream."

"I'm telling you the truth!" Brendi screamed. "Please... I don't want to die! You have to believe me!"

Andro stared at her for a single long minute and Brendi thought for sure her life was over. In the seven months she had been living on Earth among the older men and women of the Old Sparta District she had learned many things just listening to them talk among themselves. First and foremost of what she had learned was that King Leonidas and his sons Androcles and Denali had perhaps the most sensitive sense of smell of any Lycavorian living and they could smell a liar from three kilometers away. Brendi assumed that was an exaggeration of some sort, but staring at those azure eyes, she was no longer so sure.

"My sister believes you." Andro spoke finally, his words soft and barely heard. "And I trust my sister." Andro released her slim throat and stepped away from her, the psychic knife disappearing like magic and he watched Brendi reach for her neck and leaned heavily against the bulkhead for support. "You have a choice to make now. Tell us what we want to know freely or I will not hesitate to have you pumped so full of drugs that you will spend the rest of your days believing you are a fairy with wings and a wand."

Brendi looked up at him. "It doesn't matter... I'm dead already." She stated. "As soon as the Home Council of the OSG discovers I have been captured my life will be forfeit."

"Why?" Eliani asked moving closer.

"I'm an Intelligence Gathering. An analyst. We are not suppose to be used for operations! Especially not for ones that aren't sanctioned by the Home Council. We are inserted to a place and all we are supposed to do is report back on what we discover. That is all!"

"You had the weapons." Andro spoke. "The training to make it into the tunnels beneath my home!"

"We get rudimentary assault training!" Brendi barked. "Our real training is how not to get caught! How not to be discovered! How to fit in! I was specifically trained to be able to fit in among Lycavorians! To gather information on the Union."

"Why?" Andro asked.

"Information is power." Brendi spoke. "It can be used in any sort of ways!"

"Yet your Major accepted a contract on me and my mates posted by the Kavalians." Andro spoke. "Why?"

"Because he got greedy!" Brendi barked. "He wasn't satisfied with the money he was being paid to transport and then sell the slaves in The Wilds. The OSG established a working relationship with the Kavalians almost a decade ago. I don't know how they met or began to communicate. I wasn't told any of that. It wasn't in my training. The Kavalians used us because we were unknown and we are efficient!"

Eliani moved up next to him and touched his arm. Brendi watched him look at her and after a few seconds of some conversation she could not hear he nodded his head. Brendi knew then she had said something to him within that realm of ability that all Lycavorians seemed to possess. Androcles stepped back out of the way and Eliani held out her hand to Brendi. “Get back on the table bed Brendi.” She said softly. “Nothing is going to happen to you.”

Brendi looked at her for a long moment before reaching out and taking her hand. Eliani guided her back to the table bed and as she sat down Eliani once more pulsed her neck with a surge of healing power and took away the discomfort from having Andro’s hand on her throat.

“Your life is forfeit right now. It belongs to me. To my mates. Answer every question I or anyone asks you and perhaps you may live.” Andro told her. “As I said... the choice is yours.”

“How... how do I know you won’t kill me anyway?” Brendi snapped.

“You don’t.” Andro told her. “But if you have been on Earth as long as you have then you must know something about me? About my family?” He moved closer to the bed. “Tell me what I want to know and I give you my word that no harm will come to you.”

“You... you can’t protect me. I’m dead anyway.” Brendi said softly.

“You keep saying that.” Eliani spoke. “Why?”

“Once it is discovered that I am alive the OSG will declare me a liability. A contract will be put on my head.” Brendi spoke. “I’ll be dead in days.”

“Nice people you work for.” Eliani said.

“It wasn’t by choice I’ll tell you that!” She snapped.

Andro turned and pulled over a chair which he offered to Eliani. He turned and motioned with his head to the two Durcunusaan at the door and they exited immediately. He turned back to Brendi as Eliani was settling into the chair and saw her eyes on the door as it shut behind the two men. Andro the data pad from the nearby work station and set it on the bed next to her and activated it.

“What makes you think they will find out?” Andro asked.

“They’ll find out... they probably already know.” Brendi said.

“And how would they know that?” He asked her.

Brendi looked at him for what seemed like an eternity without saying a word. “You’re right...” She said. “I do know about you and your family. I know a lot. I know that you and your father have never broken a promise you have made. You promise me that I will be kept secure, that I will be protected and I will tell you whatever you want to know.” She spoke finally.

Andro crossed his arms over his chest. “Why should I believe that?” He asked.

“You can smell when someone is lying... I know you can. All of your people can. We may undergo gene therapy, but even the Eridiani can’t hide the adrenalin dump into our systems when we lie. Am I lying to you?” Brendi asked.

“No.” Andro answered immediately.

“Why would you make this deal?” Eliani asked reaching up to put her hand on Andro’s arm before he continued. “If you are willing to turn traitor to the Eridiani then...”

“I’m not betraying the Eridiani!” Brendi snapped back at her. “I would never betray the Eridiani! But I don’t give two shits about the Orionis Syndicate! How do you think they got to be so large? They come to your home at night... they encourage your mother and father to offer you up for service to the OSG in return for protection and support in the future. Protection and support that never comes! If you refuse they are very polite... but the next week your business or your home might be destroyed by a mysterious explosion... or someone in your family might die in an accident! It’s all very subtle and non-intrusive, but their meaning is clear. Help them or suffer the consequences.”

“And this is how you got involved?” Andro asked.

Brendi nodded. “My older brother and I both.” She said. “He was sixteen and I was ten. They took us the next day... they promised to leave our younger sisters alone if my parents did this. They were only three at the time. They took us the very next day and we went to a training facility to begin our treatments. My brother... Corbin... he embraced the life. I found it harder... I didn’t like being away from my parents. I finally showed an aptitude for Intelligence and that is where I finally ended up. I spent twelve years in training schools and another four years training to come into the Union. Another eighteen months to learn my cover and get my background established.”

“The trinket shop you run in Old Sparta?” Eliani asked.

Brendi nodded. “Yes.”

“That seems like an awful lot of work for the Syndicate.” Andro said. “Why go to so much trouble?”

Brendi looked at him. “Because of your father.” She answered. “The humans on Earth aren’t like the ones before the comet. What happened afterwards... with the High Coven and then your father discovering who he was... it has made them more cautious. And then when they elected Charles Taylor as President...”

“He’s one of the Eridiani that left isn’t he?” Andro asked.

Brendi looked at him with surprise on her face. “You know about that?” She asked.

“Dutkne and Devra told me.” He said.

“Devra? Devra Re Mydala. The Vanari Regent?” Brendi asked him. “Wait... how do you know her? She’s one of the most influential Regents on their Board, at least for the younger generation of Vanari. How do you...?” Brendi stopped quickly talking and looked back and forth between Andro and Eliani. “You’ve met her haven’t you? You’ve made contact with the Vanari haven’t you?”

Andro made a decision that would either hurt them or help them in the long run but his senses told him that it was a good call. He turned and pulled another chair over and settled into it beside his sister. “Devra’s daughter Caliria...?”

“The dark haired one?” Brendi asked.

“You know of her?” Andro asked interested.

Brendi shook her head quickly. “No not really. Just field reports from other Intel people. I know she was becoming very vocal on Austrova in regards to equal rights for the dark haired Vanari and that she had been in school for some sort of Physics research. I stopped getting those reports when I came to Earth. How do you know about her?”

“Devra and Coren Re Mydala and their three children are at this moment eight decks below you.” Androcles told her watching as her eyes grew wide. “Some of your OSG cohorts made the mistake of kidnapping Caliria Re Mydala from Vanari space and they brought her here into the Alpha Quadrant. Caliria Re Mydala is to be my last mate and wife. I’m going to get her as we speak.”

Brendi’s eyes grew even wider. “Those idiots!” She nearly shouted. “I knew there had to be more to it!”

“More to what?” Eliani asked.

Brendi looked up at them. “If you go to get her... wait... you know where she is?”

Andro nodded. “She is within Icalro Alliance space. A slave world within their borders. They violated an agreement they made with my father many years ago about bringing slaves of any kind through Union space. All the Vanari your people have brought into this quadrant have traveled through Bontawillian space. A Union member and ally.”

“If... if you go to get her... the OSG isn’t aware that you have made contact with the Vanari people.” Brendi spoke. “If you show up there to get her... they’ll automatically assume that I am alive and you got the information from me!”

“I told you I would see to it that you are protected.” Andro said. “I will.”

Brendi shook her head. “My mother and father! My sisters! The OSG will kill them! They will automatically assume I was the one who gave you this information and they will kill them!” She spoke heatedly. “The OSG Regional Commander will send a hit team after them, he’ll order them tortured for any information they have! Then he’ll have them killed! I know he will! He’s a bastard!”

“You sound like you know him.” Eliani stated.

“I do! He’s my brother Corbin!” Brendi hissed. “And he’s an evil and cruel bastard who won’t think twice about killing our parents and sisters! Especially if he thinks it was me who gave you the information! You have to pull them out!”

“I’m truly sorry... I don’t have the resources to go into the Beta Quadrant after four individuals. And I will not wait to rescue Caliria. I’ve waited too long as it is.” Andro said. “I’m sorry.”

Brendi shook her head. “They aren’t in the Beta Quadrant!” She exclaimed. “They are on Edolus! They moved there during the last months of my training so that I could spend more time within them before I entered the Union. They are part of my cover... to make it seem real! They don’t know it but it’s true!” She nearly shouted. “I won’t tell you jack shit unless you get them out of there!”

“Miss Faith... you are in no...”

“Shut up!” Brendi barked. “I’ll tell you anything you want to know! I’ll give you names! Places! Events! I’ll even give you Vanari names! Anything that I know will be yours! You just get my family off Edolus before my brother kills them! I won't help you otherwise! You'll have to use your drugs on me because I won't say shit willingly! And I will use every skill I have to get away from you and escape! They are innocent! They have done nothing wrong and I will not let them be the brunt of my brother Corbin's twisted anger!"

Andro sat there for a moment and then got to his feet slowly. Eliani looked up at him. "Andro we could..."

"We won't arrive in Icalro Alliance space for another twenty-six hours." Andro said. "I will let you know what I decide."

"Andro you..." Eliani got to her feet.

"That is my decision Eli!" Andro barked at her. He turned quickly and left the medical bay without another word.

Eliani looked at Brendi and reached out to touch her arm. "I'll be right back." She said. She turned and followed Andro out into the corridor. "Andro?" She shouted as she saw him enter the next room adjacent to the medical bay and she increased her pace. She got there just before the door closed and she saw Devra and Ardan standing in the room he had entered. Eliani ignored them and began speaking to her brother. "Androcles we..."

Andro looked at her. "Eli... you really need to learn to keep your emotions in check." He said with a smile.

"What... what is going on?" She asked coming up beside him.

Andro turned back to Devra and Ardan. "Devra? Regent Ardan?"

"If she is an Intelligence asset like she says... what she knows could be invaluable to our people." Ardan spoke softly. "Can you do this?"

Devra looked at him. "Ardan I thought you were of the same mind as Coren?" She said.

Ardan nodded his head. "I was." He stated. "Not anymore."

"What... what made you shift your feelings so quickly?" She asked.

Ardan met Andro's eyes. "You did." He said softly. "You called us friends just before you killed that man. Even with how Coren has treated you since he arrived... even with how you know the majority of our people view Lycavorians... you called us your friends."

"Yes I did." He stated.

"Did you mean that young man?" Ardan asked him. "Or is it simply because you believe Caliria will be your wife?"

"Yes sir I did mean it. And it has nothing to do with Caliria. You don't believe she feels the same thing sir?" Andro answered.

"I don't know what to believe anymore." Ardan spoke. "With the exception of Devra here, no Vanari female has ever become the wife of a Lycavorian. Vanari females aren't drawn to Lycavorian males."

Devra chuckled softly. "Ardan my friend... you must really get out of the Regent Center more. I hear our younger females talk about it all of the time. And that is just with the Embassy personnel the Protectorate has. It is consider so taboo by the SBR and other Board members that it is only mentioned in whispers. And no one knows why."

Ardan looked at her for a moment. "Perhaps you may be right Devra." He said softly. "But what he speaks of... fate and the preordained? We have a strong faith Androcles... but what you speak of is almost impossible to believe. Caliria has never met you, never seen you. You say that you have somehow touched her within this Mindvoice ability your people have, but I can not bring myself to believe it."

"Let me ask you a question sir?" Andro asked him.

"Yes of course."

"Do you believe that the possibility exists that what I am telling you is the truth." Andro asked him. "That everything happens for a reason."

Ardan nodded his head slowly. "I can not deny that belief with everything I have seen in my life." He said.

Andro nodded. "Then I will open your eyes sir. As long as you have that belief... leave the rest to me. Before we return to Earth, you will acknowledge everything I have said and a new door will open before you. It will be up to you whether you choose to walk through it. Now... back to this Brendi woman."

"What she knows... what she knows could be precious information." Ardan said. "With the knowledge that your mother has discovered a counter, a cure for their vile hold on us... she becomes even more valuable."

And if she has names of Vanari... my people... names of those who are actually helping the OSG in some way I want them!"

"As do I." Devra growled softly.

"You can do this? Get her family off this planet Edolus?" Ardan asked.

Andro nodded. "Yes. Easily."

Ardan nodded. "Then let us make this the official first venture between our peoples Androcles Leonidas. And know that whatever happens I will lend my full weight behind a new beginning and a new relationship between our peoples. I do not know how many minds I can change but perhaps it will be enough."

Andro nodded his head. "Very well." He spoke. He turned to Eliani. "She seems to relate to you better Eli. Tell her I will do what she asks."

Eliani breathed a sigh of relief. "Who goes?" She asked. "We can't make a lot of noise with this Op Andro? And the Durcunusaan are already stretched pretty thin."

"I know." He said. "Get everyone together in Astrometrics and let's have a quick head session. Tell her first."

"Better yet... allow her to come to it." Devra said.

Andro looked at her and nodded. "Good idea." He said.

"That's a big risk brother. She would see some pretty sensitive stuff." Eliani said.

Andro nodded. "Yes... but if she turns out to be leading us on a wild goose chase then the last thing she sees will be my face as I vent her out of an airlock myself. I won't matter what she sees then."

Eliani nodded. "True enough." She said. "I'll get her and meet you in Astrometrics."

Andro looked at Ardan and Devra. "Follow me." He said.

CHAPTER SIXTY-SIX

EARTH

SPARTA

ROYAL ESTATE VILLA

"What do you think of their reactions Deia?" Panos asked as he held out the glass of juice to her.

Deia took the glass from him. "About what I expected from many of them." She replied as she sipped the juice and then pulled her face back with a disgusted look. "What is this?" She demanded looking at him.

Panos chuckled. "Eliani's orders." He spoke. "No Spartan Wine until you are fully back on your feet. I have no desire to anger my adopted granddaughter either... she is worse than her mother at times." Deia shook her head as she sipped the juice again and Panos settled to the couch. "It is... it is strange being here when they are not." He said.

Deia looked around the main room of the Royal Estate Villa and took a deep breath. "It gives me balance and their scents will always fill this place." She spoke softly. "And next to Cranae Island right now this is the most secure position on Earth I imagine. There are over two hundred Durcunusaan just on the grounds alone."

"Not to mention the twenty odd dragons that Arzoal has assigned to patrol the skies day and night." They heard Helen's voice speak as she came through the double doors of the patio. They saw the flash of flame red scales outside and then the small blast of wind that ruffled her clothes as she came in, something that always took place whenever Arzoal took to the skies because of her immense size.

They watched her move to the counter and pour herself a half glass of Spartan wine and then turn to look at them. "I wanted to inquire of Armetus's health so I stopped at the hospital before returning here. Anuk says he is improving rapidly but is still many weeks from being able to fully walk again. He will never have complete use of his arm, but he will be able to shift."

Deia nodded her head slowly. "Thank the gods. I check on his condition nearly every day." She said gently becoming slightly choked up. "We have been through so much he and I. In some ways I feel responsible for bringing him into all this."

“You both have survived Deia... no matter how hard the Kavalian dogs tried to kill you, both of you have survived.” Panos spoke. “Build on the strength and purpose that kept you both alive.”

Deia took a deep breath and nodded. “I intend too.” She stated.

“Getting to know him as much as I have these last years has taught me one thing. You will never get that man to do something he dose not want to do. He was here... beside you Deia because he wanted to be. Because he believes as you do.” Panos continued. “Dismiss these thoughts you have Deia for they are not true.”

She looked at Panos again and nodded with a smile. “You are very correct Panos my friend.” She stated with sincerity. She nodded once more and took a deep breath. “The final group of new Senators arrives shortly. We should meet with them individually before calling the Union and Spartan Senate back into order.”

Panos nodded his head. “I have already arranged meetings with them two hours from now. There are seven of them and they’ll be escorted here.”

“Why didn’t they arrive with the last group?” Helen asked as she settled into the chair facing Deia and Panos.

Panos shook his head. “Apparently their new status is already going to their heads.” He said with no small amount of disgust. “They kept delaying their departure from Apo Prime because of other commitments they said they had. I understand they were having their own private parties in recognition of their victories and elections. It wasn’t until the Durcunusaan officer in charge on Apo Prime told them he would physically force their departure that they finally decided to grace us with their presence.” He looked at Helen. “I believe you and Deia know one of them already?”

“We do?” Helen asked.

Panos held on one of several data pads to her. “Her name is Ulana. Androcles’s former female companion from what I understand.”

Deia’s eyes went a little wider. “That pompous little upae.” She exclaimed.

Helen nodded. “Yes I remember her.” She stated softly. “Her father was an Apo Prime University Scholar when he ran for election to the Senate eight months ago. He won the seat from his district quite handily if I recall.” Helen looked at Panos. “He was among those killed in the Senate Building?”

Panos nodded his head. “Yes. He had just arrived a week before the attack and was in his office. A Special Election was held back on Apo Prime and Ulana was chosen to fill out the rest of his eight year term. I believe more from the grief over her father’s death than from her actual political qualifications for the position.” He said. “Of course that is just my opinion.”

Deia nodded. “The Northern Region Constituency of Tuya City is well known for their eccentric attitudes and arrogance.” She spoke calmly. “It does not surprise me that they elected a University Scholar. Gorgo told me the man was a brilliant teacher, if somewhat overbearing and always trying to get students to see that his point of view was the best. The man he replaced was one of only twenty-nine Senators who voted against the Evolli War. And in the years prior to that he was a consistent voice in calling for a Peace Treaty with the High Coven. He was what Mandri called a Universe First midaeus.”

“That does sound like Martin.” Panos said with a grin.

“Should we be concerned?” Helen asked.

Deia shook her head. “No. While their numbers have grown through the years, those who think and vote like him are still very much in the minority. A very small group of some sixty-three Senators I believe. Out of over three thousand. They have no real power as a group.”

“Yet they have still chosen a young woman with no political background to take his seat on the Union Senate.” Helen said thoughtfully. “A young woman who used to share Andro’s bed and will no doubt believe that this fact gives her some advantage over others when it comes to dealing with him. Ulana is a strong Alpha female, albeit one who is rather full of herself. The few times I have met her she struck me as being willing to do anything to get her way. And the few rumors I have heard said she was very upset when Androcles dismissed her. Angry that he would do such a thing and choose Sadi over her. She believes Sadi to be rather common when compared to her.”

Deia snorted in disgust and shook her head. “Common?” She gasped. “Sadi Leonidas is many things but she will never be common! There are times when I believe I should question the action of our younger Alpha females more than our young Alpha males. Ulana is a child compared to Sadi and if she wishes to foolishly attempt to once more win Andro’s affection let her. She will only make a complete and utter fool of herself.

Androcles worships the ground Sadi walks upon, the ground all of his mates walk upon, just like Martin. If he does not rebuke her publicly, I'm quite sure Sadi will put her in her place very quickly. Have any of you seen the way she looks at him?" Deia shook her head. "Reserved and polite she may be, but try and take Andro from her and I believe you will see a completely different Sadi Leonidas emerge. Ulana does not hold a candle to Sadi in my opinion, either in looks, intelligence or common sense."

Helen's smirk was easily seen and she nodded in agreement. "Or Mindvoice ability for that matter." She stated. "And Sadi grows more powerful by the day. Both of them do. I was speaking with them nearly every day before all this began and they were telling me what they had begun to be able to do. It is utterly amazing."

"What do you mean Helen?" Deia asked.

"Their power within Mindvoice is still within its infancy. Just as it is with Martin and Aricia." Helen said softly. "Wayonn and I spoke of this as we returned to Earth. We have not seen it outwardly, but they have been practicing and refining skills the likes of which I have never seen before, and they are beginning to pass this knowledge on to his siblings. We have not seen Sadi act as an Alpha female in regards to her mate, and I shudder at the anger she could unleash if Ulana decides she wants to play games about Androcles."

Panos nodded his head with another lopsided grin. "While I do not begin to understand the competition between female alpha wolves, there is a reason many in Sparta regard Sadi as the second coming of Gorgo." He said. "You don't think she will actually attempt something do you Deia?"

Deia shrugged her slim shoulders. "As far as everyone is concerned Androcles is the new King. There has been no talk of a coronation because of everything that is happening right now, but most everyone is already beginning to refer to him as such. That is good."

"It also means our façade is holding for the moment." Helen said.

Deia nodded. "It also means Ulana will no doubt try to insinuate herself as closely as she can within his life. Something I sincerely doubt Sadi or the others will allow. Andro will simply ignore her... that is the Alpha way when a female doesn't interest him... but Sadi and the others may very well take offense at her actions and physically put her in her place."

"It would not be much of a conflict." Panos said. "Ne'Veha appears to be the weakest link among them but even I could sense she was growing in both determination and confidence. I doubt Ulana would be able to even defeat her."

Deia shook her head. "No... it will be Sadi. She is the only pureblood... and the only one among them that would have a chance against her in wolf form. Lu'ria and Ne'Veha are too soon from being turned and Carisia is a pureborn vampire. I would not worry about Ulana and let Sadi handle it how she sees fit."

"Agreed." Helen said.

"Has the Krypteria been able to discover just how badly Laustinos's treachery goes?" Panos asked now.

"I spoke briefly with Marci before she complied with Andro's orders." Deia answered. "She will give us a full briefing this evening when the Durcunusaan guarding her allow her to leave her home."

Panos nodded. "He is doing exactly as his father would do." He said softly. "He is pulling to him those he trusts completely and..."

"Do not, for one second, believe he does not trust us Panos!" Helen spoke forcibly.

Panos shook his head quickly. "That is not what I was going to suggest Feravomir. We are part of his family and there is nothing more important to him than his family. Just as his father and mothers taught him. No... I was going to say that there will be very few who could influence him now. He will follow his instincts and what his father and mothers have taught him in regards to safeguarding this Union. And he will not care who he upsets or has to squash to do that."

Deia nodded. "That is where we come in." She said. "Helen and I spent over a decade teaching Martin to be at least diplomatic in his mannerisms. He is a rock head no doubt, it runs in the family for Resumar was no different and Gorgo has told me his father was the same, but we were able to at least teach him to be somewhat subdued. We will not have that time with Andro and that could work to our favor initially."

"What do you mean Deia?" Panos asked.

"Androcles is an unknown entity." Deia said. "He has always been the most private of Martin's children. The Prince that everyone wants to know the most about, but the one about which subsequently the least is known. They know of his actions at Alba Tau... that he won the Union Shield of Valor, they know about his actions after the war but they do not know anything else about him."

“And this is good for us.” Panos agreed sitting back as what she was saying came to him. “They will not be able to predict what he will do. Though I doubt any of us could predict that either.”

Deia nodded her head in agreement. “That is true Panos but it means our enemies will focus more on discovering who he is and what he is doing than trying to discover why we are not pushing for an immediate transfer of power and planning a coronation.”

“And if they are focused completely on Androcles then they will not notice immediately when Martin begins to strike.” Helen spoke. “And if what I saw in regards to what Ben sent to him is anything, who Andro sent to Curila 6 with Daniel to be with him, you can damn well bet Martin will strike very quickly, very hard and completely without mercy.”

Deia nodded at her. “Which keeps the Kavalians off balance because they will be dealing with us. And in that regard I have sent for Thr'won, Dilios and Arete.”

Panos looked at her oddly. “Why?”

“I believe Andro is correct in that Pusintin is going to make a play for the throne now that everyone believes Martin dead.” Deia said evenly. “This latest attack against Cranae Island only confirms it for me. They failed to kill him because he did not go to Kranek with the others, not that they would have succeeded anyway thanks to Cha'talla and his people. Once they realized he was not killed they then decided to sanction another operation against him using these OSG Syndicate fools from the Beta Quadrant. Androcles is Martin's first born son with Aricia. He has the blood of three of the Lycavorian Ruling families within him. If he is alive there is no way that Pusintin can rightfully make a claim to the throne.”

Panos nodded. “Yes... so?”

Deia looked at Helen and then back to Panos. “Unless there is another way.” She said softly.

Panos stared at her for a long moment and then looked at Helen. “What other way could there be Deia?” He gasped.

“That is what we need to find out.” Helen spoke. “That the Kavalians are going ahead with this ridiculous notion of why they have done these things only confirms to me that they believe they can do this even if Andro is still alive. If they did not believe this why are they not pouring across our borders in a full scale invasion? We need to find out why they think this and then we need to find out how.”

“How do we do that?” Panos asked.

“Like you... Dilios and Arete were here in Sparta when the Senate rewrote the Ascension Laws to the throne after Martin's return.” Deia explained.

Panos nodded. “Yes.” He said.

Deia nodded and leaned forward in her hover chair. “I was alive when The Oracle's First Declaration was written Panos and The Chronicles of Lycavorian Law came into being. My sister Eliani consulted me on many things as they were crafting them. Helen has the memories of the First Oracle Canth who also helped Resumar to craft these things. We need to put our heads together and discover what it is the Kavalians dogs think they have discovered in order to combat it.”

“We know they received a copy of all three items from Laustinos many months ago.” Helen told him. “Marci was able to confirm that almost immediately. They obviously found something within those documents they think they can use and we will need to find out what it is in order to fight it.”

“And we need to do it before Androcles and his father go off the deep end.” Deia said softly.

“What? I don't follow you? Off the deep end?” Panos exclaimed. “What is that?”

“It is an expression Anja has said on many occasions through the years and I have taken to using quite frequently myself. While you can not feel it within them because you have never truly developed your Mindvoice skills to their level Panos my friend, Deia and I can feel it very strongly.” Helen spoke.

“Feel what?” Panos asked.

“The all consuming rage.” Deia answered softly. “The vitriol and the anger. It is building slowly within both of them Panos. It is building because of what has been done to their family and to the Union and soon they will unleash it.”

“Why do we want to stop that?” Panos growled. “I for one have no desire to stop them! Not after what the Kavalians have done.”

“We don’t wish to stop it Panos my friend.” Helen spoke once more. “No one can stop it now. As you have said in the past, they are forces of nature. We only wish to make sure they are focused on the correct enemy when it releases.”

Deia looked at him evenly. “We want to make sure all the right people die Panos.” She snarled.

Panos smiled a toothy wolf grin then. “I knew there was a reason I have always liked you Deia. Let’s get to it.” He stated.

SCIMITAR

“...home is here.” Brendi spoke pointing to the structure on the high resolution image of Edolus. “The two story structure at the end of this cul-de-sac. It backs up to the Lifter corridor that runs north and south between the next two settlements.”

Brendi Faith had remained in the medical bay when Eliani left, pacing back and forth like a caged lioness. Unlike her brother Corbin, Brendi didn’t take pleasure in what she did. She was very good at her job, one of the best Intelligence Analysts the OSG had ever turned out in fact, but the driving force behind her actions was the goal to keep her family safe. Her mother and father and her twin nineteen year old sisters were all she had in this universe. Everything she had done up until this point was to keep them safe and keep them from having to suffer. They received extra credits and small perks because she and Corbin were part of the Syndicate, a way the OSG kept their people in check for none of them wanted their families to lose these perks and go back to living in squalor and poverty as most of the Eridiani did on the many worlds they controlled. While the vast majority embraced their new lives, Brendi knew of a few who felt as she did. Some of them had been discovered and now they were dead, their families torn apart and any siblings or parents murdered without regard. Brendi had always maintained her front of loyalty, never speaking of what she felt inside her with anyone for she did not want that happening to her family.

When Eliani had returned Brendi hit her with a barrage of questions and vile statements about what she would do. Eliani Leonidas had simply stood there and listened to her rant for nearly three full minutes before she ran out of steam. Then Eliani had told her what her brother Androcles had decided, and for the first time in her life she felt embarrassment. Which was very quickly followed by shock as Eliani took her hand and began to lead her through the corridors of the ship with the two Durcunusaan troops close on their heels until they ended up here in this large room. A room that appeared to be some sort of unique room sized map. All around them Brendi could see stars and planets and then the close up images of Edolus began filtering across the ceiling and walls around her and she was able to pinpoint places she had been, right down to within a meter or two. It was incredible and upon seeing this, a small doubt began to creep into her gut. A doubt that the OSG would not be able to operate and conduct business within the Union in the same way they did everywhere else once these Lycavorians actually woke up and took notice. Putting agents on Earth and hiding them among the millions of humans was one thing, but actually trying to establish and run a large and ruthless criminal organization within Union borders was not looking so promising.

“How many of your OSG people?” Andro asked.

“Ah... nearly the entire planet.” She answered. “I told you... this is an OSG staging area. Fully half and probably more of the men and women who live here work for the OSG in some way. This is one of the planets they established as a control point when they came to the Alpha quadrant.”

“The local government does nothing?” Lisisa asked from her spot next to Deni.

Brendi shook her head quickly. “As long as no laws are broken, they will remain out of the way and they don’t ask questions.” She answered them. “The OSG won’t violate that silent agreement because Edolus is so close to the Union without actually being inside the Union. Nothing that the Union considers illegal is practiced on Edolus because of its proximity to the border. The local government values their trade with the Union too much. Not to mention the protection that being so close to the border gives them. The OSG has to abide by what they tell them or the local government will not hesitate to call for assistance. It’s mostly the families of the agents who work for the OSG anyway. Like mine.”

“Makes sense fervon.” Denali spoke. “We’ve never got anything from the Bontawillian Intelligence Service. Don’t make waves or draw attention to yourself and no one starts asking questions.”

Andro nodded. "First rule of being a spy. Blend in." He looked at Brendi. "I'm assuming your brother will not adhere to this rule?"

Brendi shook her head without hesitation. "Corbin is a bastard! He's completely loyal to the Orionis Syndicate. If he thinks for an instant that I am alive and I am being interrogated or that I am helping you he'll kill them without thinking. He will try to arrange an accident of some sort I'm sure... but he will want them dead within hours of him discovering that I was captured."

"I still don't understand how they could know you are alive?" Eliani asked. "It's not like we broadcast the attack of your..." Eliani saw Brendi look at her with narrow eyes. "Of the OSG Hit Team." Eliani corrected herself quickly. "Just the opposite. We officially called it a training exercise."

Brendi looked at Andro when Eliani had finished. "There are sixty-five OSG Intelligence Agents on Earth." She spoke quickly. "How long do you think it will be before they put it all together? Half of them work for your Netnews because it provides the best Intelligence and gets them places they would not normally be allowed."

"Sixty-five?" Devra gasped with wide eyes.

Brendi nodded. "I know half of them by name and the rest you can get when you round up the others and question them."

"He could just as easily stick you with enough joy juice that you'd be spilling your guts in minutes." Zarah spat from where she stood next to Lucia. That she didn't care for Brendi was obvious to even the casual observer.

Brendi nodded. "But he won't... because he gave me his word." She stated looking at Andro.

Andro didn't took his eyes off her for a good half a minute and Brendi began to feel very uncomfortable. It was as if he was looking at her like she was lunch or something. "Deni?" He spoke finally.

"Simply enough really." Denali answered immediately. "One team... land a Shrouded STRIKER DT here... two clicks away by the edge of this treeline that extends up the side of the valley. Then we beat feet to the home, extract them the same way we come in. In and out in under thirty minutes as long as nothing goes wrong."

"Tir'ut and I will fly the STRIKER fervon." Normya piped in right away looking at Andro evenly. "You will need Arrarn to fly the TYPE II and Sadi and Ne'Veha to fly the second STRIKER over Ontahe Andro."

Tir'ut nodded his head. "It is a sound plan Androcles." He spoke in agreement. "Put one of your Durcunusaan in the dorsal turret and I can remain in the shadows while securing the ship from the outside. No one will discover us."

Andro nodded. "Ok... who leads the team in?"

"I'll go." Lisisa spoke then.

"I need to go." Brendi spoke quickly.

Androcles looked at her. "Not happening." He said.

"They are my parents! My sisters! They know me and will listen to me! They..." Brendi began to protest.

"Do you honestly take me for that much of a fool?" Andro said looking at her. "You are not going. I will not compromise anyone I send by allowing you to endanger them. You could very well be identified not to mention I don't trust you."

"We are talking about my family here!" Brendi barked.

Andro met her eyes. "Yes... and I will keep my word to you and I will extract them... but you are not accompanying the team."

"I won't help you any further then!" Brendi barked.

Andro stood up fully and nodded his head. "If that is your decision so be it. Deni... escort her back to the medical bay, Eliani will sedate her and then Lu'ria will question her. Once we have gotten all the information we can, take her to the nearest airlock and vent her into space."

Deni nodded and stepped over to Brendi and her taking his arm. "Let's go." He spoke with a harshness in his voice.

Brendi wrenched her arm away from Deni's grasp when she saw no one was going to argue with him. "You would just let everything I know die with me?" She gasped in disbelief. "I don't believe that!"

Andro looked back to her his eyes unforgiving. “Miss Faith... you were part of the team that came to my home and tried to kill me and my wives and mates. I don’t trust you any more than I’d trust a rabid dog. If you think I am going to allow you to go with the team and possibly jeopardize their lives you are sorely mistaken. If you chose not to help me then I have no use for you any longer. And what you believe is of little concern to me.”

“They will think... they will think you are there to kill them!” Brendi hissed. “If I don’t go they won’t believe you!”

Andro shook his head again. “No.” He spoke softly. “It is too much of a tactical risk.” He moved closer to her and saw her back up slightly in fear just as another idea came to him as quickly as he dismissed her ridiculous request and demand. “However... I will allow you to record a message to them.” He spoke seeing her eyes narrow. “If you are truly worried about them then I will allow you to record a holo message to them letting them know why we are there and to cooperate with us in order to get them offworld for their safety.”

Brendi nodded her head instantly and more than anything that told pretty much everyone in the room that she was sincere in her concern. “Yes.” She said without pause. Brendi didn’t really have any intention of trying to double cross the team going to save her family, there was no way she could protect them by herself but deep down she understood Androcles’s stance. “Yes... I will do that.” She spoke.

Andro nodded. “Very well.” He said. “Lisisa?”

“I’ll take Zarah, Lucia and five of the RD Detail. With Jeth and Seyra flying in support we should be pretty much covered.” Lisisa answered.

Andro shook his head as he looked at her. “Not enough.” He answered. “I want you to have at least seven in your team and another two in support.”

“I will go.” Arduri spoke up quickly.

Brendi’s eyes grew wide when the Vanari female spoke up and the surprise showed on her face.

“Arduri no!” Devra spoke.

“Mother... Andro needs the majority of this RD team to rescue Caliria and the others.” Arduri said. “It is a sound decision and I have trained for these types of operations before.” She looked at Andro. “It is part of our Advanced Cadre Training Andro.”

Andro shook his head. “I need you, your mother and Nirilo to go with us so that your people know we are there to help them.” He said. “The more of you there are the better. We do not know what condition they will be in.”

The voice from behind them caused all of them to turn. “I will go with you in Arduri’s place.” Tastia spoke from beside Ardan. “She is right that we can not pull more from the Ontahe mission and I am a fully trained Cadre Commando just as she is.”

“Tastia... Coren will not allow you to do this.” Ardan said softly his eyes wide in stunned shock.

“Coren be damned!” Tastia snapped at him. “He has shown me where I stand in his life and it was not where he led me to believe it was. I am not his wife and I will never be his wife now. I refuse to be! And he will not dictate to me what I will do and not do! I will not stand by and let others risk their lives rescuing our people when it should be us!” She moved closer and looked at Androcles. “I will go with your team and take Arduri’s place. If... if Lady Devra will allow me.”

Devra herself was stunned into silence and it was Nirilo who came forward. “Arduri has more recent practical experience in such operations with Lisisa Andro.” He spoke calmly. “It is better to have Tastia take Arduri’s place with us and send Arduri with Lisisa as she said.”

Andro looked at Devra. “Devra?”

Devra nodded as she turned to meet his eyes. “I agree.” She said finally. “And Tastia is right. We can no longer remain on the fringes of things. We must begin doing for ourselves and making allies with other species.” She looked at Ardan. “Ardan?”

Ardan met her eyes for a long moment and then looked at Androcles. “For the better part of five millennia I have never trusted your people Androcles Leonidas. The last few days have begun to show me the error of my ways. Devra is right... no matter that she is now wife to a Lycavorian. She has always been right. It is time the Vanari stopped being so insular and began to trust others. Arduri and Tastia are extremely well trained... Naesta and Nirilo as well. We have made it a point to train our people in this way and now it is time to start using them in a way that utilizes their skills. I have no protests against this action... though I suggest we do not tell Coren until just before you depart.”

“He won’t stop us Ardan!” Tastia snapped.

Ardan shook his head quickly. “No... I don’t think he will. I do not know where his complete distrust comes from, but there will be less shouting if he does not know until the last moment.”

“You need one more.” Dutkne spoke smiling at the events that were transpiring all around him. “I have a man... you met him Andro... Warem. He has participated in several operations of this type.”

Andro nodded. “Fine.” He said. “Lisisa... pull what you need and get moving. Eliani... take Miss Faith back to the Med Bay, have her record her message and then get it to Lisi. I want your team gone in two hours Lisi.” Andro turned to face her. “No killing unless it is absolutely necessary arande.”

Deni looked at him. “Andro... fervon these people sent assassins after you and Sadi and the others.” He said.

Brendi began to open her mouth to reply but she felt Eliani grab her arm and shake her head slightly. Brendi was intelligent and quick enough to keep her mouth shut for this Eliani knew what her brother’s response would be and she had been the most understanding and calm of everyone she had encountered so far.

Andro shook his head at Denali’s comment. “No... the OSG sent them. I will not retaliate against innocent men and women because of this.”

“She has said most of the planet is OSG Androcles Leonidas.” Ardan spoke now. “You could very well be walking into a trap.”

Andro met his eyes. “Yes sir... but she also said many are the families of those the OSG drafts into their employee. They are using the families and loved ones as a control measure sir. It is something that some of the human governments on Earth have done in the past and it is a vile practice.” Andro said respectfully. “I will not arbitrarily kill civilians to obtain my goal. I am not like them, nor is anyone in this room.”

Lisisa nodded her head and looked at Zarah and Lucia who had moved up next to her with determination in their eyes. “We’ll take care of it fervon.”

Andro nodded his head. “Very well. If everyone will excuse me... I have a transmission to Miranda Lorian that I need to make.”

Lisisa looked at Deni as Andro turned and began to walk out, questions in her eyes. Deni shrugged his broad shoulders indicating he didn’t know what that was all about. Lisisa looked at Zarah as she and Lucia stepped even closer, Arduri moving closer as well. “What... what is that all about?” She asked Zarah softly.

Zarah shook her head. “I have no idea.” She answered. “But if he is contacting Manda it is for a reason.”

“Who is this Miranda Lorian?” Lucia asked now.

Zarah looked at the door Andro had exited and she allowed a small smile to slip across her face as she gripped Lucia’s hand tightly. She knew her brother better than most because of the special bond they shared. She turned back to Lucia. “If I had to guess, I’d say one edge of a very sharp blade that our brother is planning to use.”

Lisisa nodded in agreement. “The question remains... who or what is the other edge and who is he going to stick that blade into.”

“Better that we don’t know.” Denali said. “It is going to hurt whoever it is.”

ULU ARIZONA LOCATION CLASSIFIED

E'dira’s powerful Drow body collapsed back onto the bed, her ebony skin slick with a sheen of sweat and her firm breasts heaving upward as she drew in ragged breaths. Her amber eyes were wide, her shimmering white hair damp with exertion and her long legs still quivering in the exquisite sensations of what her slave had just made her experience. She blinked several times as she felt Miranda’s deliciously talented tongue drag languorously along the outer folds of her hairless pussy and begin a delightful trek up her flat abdomen. It seemed E'dira of the Drow had created a monster and she was basking in the incredible attentions that her new slave was lavishing upon her. It had begun that first night upon returning to Earth’s system, the desire to be together stronger than both of them could resist any longer. Both of them had finished their assigned shifts and then retreated to Miranda's quarters where they shared a small dinner and then began the discovery that had continued nearly unabated since the first hour. E'dira hadn't been back to her own quarters except to change into new uniforms, those uniforms now occupying space in Miranda's quarters.

Lynwe had been so right in her words to E'dira. There were few women anymore who could enter into a relationship with a Drow. They had to be powerful women in their own right, exceptionally confident in themselves and their own abilities, for male and female Drow were not drawn to weakness. E'dira had seen it in Miranda, and this is what had drawn her to the long dark hair and eyes from the very beginning. E'dira had thought she would forever be alone and never find someone to share her life with. She had thought she would never find a woman as Lynwe and Aihola had. A woman who would give of themselves without question; who would plunge themselves into the role of slave to a Drow Mistress and not be turned off; and a woman who would cherish her role and position within her Mistress's life. It had taken time, Lynwe had told her as much, but E'dira had discovered that very thing in Miranda Lorian. Her own life and the events that had made her who she was today had denied Miranda so many of the simple pleasures in life. The loss of her parents, then her adopted parents, and finally her entire Union Squadron during the Evolli War. Men and women she had allowed into her heart and who had been torn away. E'dira knew that if not for Miranda's relationship with King Leonidas and his son Androcles and their own experiences at Alba Tau, Miranda may well have lost herself in the hurt and despair that followed. Thanks to them and their belief in her, Admiral O'Connor's total and unmoving belief in her, thanks to all of these things E'dira of the Drow now had the life and mate she had sought for so long. She would have been simply giddy at the thoughts of her slave as she kissed her way back up her taut body.

Thoughts that Miranda Lorian was rapidly embracing with each passing second.

As she used her tongue to trace her Drow Mistress's ebony skin, she pressed her own naked flesh against E'dira's, making certain to touch their bodies together in the most intimate of ways. Where her tongue departed, Miranda insured she dragged the nipples of her own firm, cone shaped breasts cross that same area. The sensations she had begun to feel the moment she had met E'dira on earth had brought both of them to this culmination. Miranda never had a desire or interest in other women, in truth she never really cared for men either. Yet that had all changed when this stunning Drow warrior had come into her life. The way her amber colored orbs gazed upon Miranda, the way dreams of her would fill the nights, and the way just being in her presence made her feel. She had been tentative at first, until her Drow Mistress had brought her to several shattering orgasms that first hour, orgasms that grew stronger and more fulfilling as the days went by. She may have been Drow and therefore dominant in all that she did, but E'dira was most certainly not afraid to make her slave scream her name in pleasure over and over again. Something that Captain Miranda Lorian did quite often now and something that she was completely unashamed about in the least. E'dira brought out a different Miranda Lorian, a person that she had thought died a long time ago.

E'dira's fingers danced across her naked shoulder as she dropped butterfly kisses across the sensitive area just under E'dira's firm breasts and then used her tongue to tease the dark nipple of her left breast before lifting her face to stare into her gorgeous amber eyes. E'dira wasted no time in pulling Miranda's lips down to hers and kissing her with possessive need and love. A sizzling kiss that surged through both of them with overwhelming love and passion for each other. E'dira rolled them over, easily tucking the more petite form of Miranda under her own body and pressing their flesh together in every place that was possible. She felt Miranda's hands grab tightly to her firm ass cheeks and draw her closer as they deepened their kiss. While she was definitely the more dominant in their bed, E'dira never took it too far. Miranda Lorian was a willful woman in her own right, and while she happily played the role of slave in their bed, E'dira had no intentions of ever allowing that to extend past the privacy of their lives. Miranda could sense that she knew, and it was this emotion that allowed her to drop all of her walls when they were together alone and hold nothing back from E'dira. As E'dira drew back reluctantly from their kiss she decided this would be the night she told her slave of the secret she still kept from her.

E'dira reached up with her hand and traced Miranda's sweet tasting lips with a fingertip as she gazed at her. "You... you are coming quite proficient at causing me to lose control my slave." E'dira rasped huskily.

Miranda grinned and E'dira felt her heart jump yet again at the twinkle in those dark eyes whenever they fell upon her in such a way. "Well... practice makes perfect." She said. "But I don't intend to ever become perfect Mistress. You won't let me practice any longer."

E'dira laughed softly then and closed her eyes as Miranda delicately stroked the outer ridge of her elven ear. "The... the gods have blessed me with you Miranda Lorian." She said in barely a whisper.

"I'm pretty happy about that myself." Miranda answered her. "Never doubt that."

E'dira shook her head. "I do not." She told her. "Not now."

Miranda's hands tightened on her firm ass unwilling to release her. "I have... I have had so much pain in my life Mistress. So much loss." She said softly. "I never believed I would ever be happy again. Not like I am now. Andro and his father, his family, they saved me. I certainly never imagined I would find what I have found with you when I took this job."

E'dira met her gaze. "Lynwe... she always told me that one day I would discover what she has with Selene. The pure love and commitment."

"She has that with Layna and her husband too." Miranda said.

E'dira shook her head slowly. "It is not the same thing. They love each other, all of them, but Lynwe and Selene share something with each other that they do not share with Layna and Joarl. Ultimately I believe this is why they have grown apart physically but remain the very closest of friends." E'dira looked at her. "It is what I have found with you. Nothing could ever come between us now. No person. You feel this as well don't you?"

Miranda nodded without hesitation. "Yes." She answered. "I didn't before I came to know Andro and Martin. All of them. They were the ones who got me past the fact that love drove Ben and Tina to have Isabella turn them. So they would not lose what they found with Endith. They were the ones who helped me to heal after Alba Tau. They were the only ones who could for they experienced it just as I did. Whatever... whatever the course of my life now it was meant to have you in it."

E'dira stared at her for a long moment knowing now was as good a time as any. "Miranda I must tell you something." She said. "There is one thing I have not shared with you and I..."

"I already know Mistress." Miranda said softly seeing E'dira's amber eyes go wide even as Miranda held her ass cheeks tighter. "I don't care."

"But... how... how did you..." E'dira stammered.

"I woke up early the other night and I heard you talking... I heard you speaking in the other room to Lynwe." Miranda answered. "I didn't mean too... but as silly as it sounds I was jealous that you were talking on the Vid COM and not in our bed."

E'dira stared at her for a long moment marveling at the strength of this woman to know what she knew about her and still act as if it made no matter. "This... this does not bother you?" She finally asked.

"E'dira... if I cared in the least do you think I would still be here?" Miranda asked her.

"No." E'dira answered.

"It is part of you Mistress." Miranda said softly. "Part of who you are. I'm not afraid of that. I will never be afraid of that. I will never be afraid again... because too much passed me by while I was afraid."

"It does not... it does not lessen your desire for me?" E'dira asked.

Miranda looked somewhat embarrassed for a moment and she bit her bottom lip. "To be honest Mistress... I think it has made me desire you more." She said. "I don't want you to be afraid to show me this side of yourself E'dira. It is part of you as I said. Does... does the change hurt?"

E'dira shook her head quickly. "It is... it is uncomfortable for a few seconds... but it is not painful. The chemicals that are released in my brain are nearly instantaneous."

"And this is a result of the experiments by the High Coven when they controlled Earth?" Miranda asked.

E'dira nodded. "Lynwe and others were the first generation if you will." She answered. "The first attempt at warping our DNA. I was part of the last generation... what they originally intended to produce."

"There are other Drow like you?" Miranda asked.

E'dira nodded as she slid off her and lowered her body to the bed beside her. Miranda didn't move until she had settled and then they pulled each other close, their limbs entwining as E'dira pulled the sheet up around their lower bodies. "There were sixty of us in the last batch of altered clones if you will. After their failure with Queen Aihola and the others like her, actual babies birthed by Drow, they decided to stick with clones. There are roughly thirty or so of us left. The King's acceptance of Lynwe, that she became the lover to Queen Aihola and Tarifa for a time, these things showed us we could lead normal lives if we chose to. Most of them have taken female wives and mates who know what they are."

"E'dira... why haven't you showed this to me before?" Miranda asked.

“I become... I become much more dominant in my nature Miranda.” E'dira told her. “I am not violent or forceful, but I will take if the individual is willing.”

Miranda chuckled softly. “So you act more like a man in your desires.”

E'dira looked at her for a moment before she too laughed. “Yes... I suppose that would be accurate.” She said. “Unfortunately the pheromone that I release into the air around me will affect any female in the same room with me for as long as I remain stimulated. It is like... it is like a powerful aphrodisiac... and they can not say no. And I become more dominant as I said. More demanding I guess.”

“It sounds as if the Coven experiments only increased the natural draw that any female has towards female Drow elves.” Miranda spoke softly. “It is well known that many female Drow have female lovers even if they are married.”

E'dira nodded. “Yes... I never thought of it like that but I suppose you are correct.”

“But not violent?” Miranda said.

E'dira shook her head quickly. “No... never. The Drow in me would never allow that with one who shares my bed. As with the other generations... this inbred Drow trait caused the Coven to think of us as failures. Relationships are sacred to us... they always have been. It is how the Guardian of the Line wanted us to be when he created the first Drow.”

Miranda looked at her with renewed desire. “So... when do I get to experience this part of you?” She asked with a sexy and sultry voice and smile.

“Have you no shame my slave?” E'dira asked with mock astonishment.

“Nope. My shame went out the door when I found you!” Miranda said. “If I can get the best of both worlds from you... then I never have to worry.”

E'dira couldn't help but laugh and she leaned over to whisper in Miranda's ear. She saw Miranda's eyes grow wider and she looked at her with surprise on her face. “Mistress... you aren't joking are you?” She gasped.

“No. I am reasonably certain that is accurate.” E'dira answered.

Miranda scooted even closer to her, making sure their bodies rubbed against each other deliciously. “Ohhh... what do I have to do?” She asked.

“It's not that simple.” E'dira stated. “I have to start out that way.” She said. “It's easier to transform when my slave does not exhaust me as she has now.”

Miranda blushed now and she smiled. “Well... that would not be the case if my Mistress didn't taste so damn good.”

E'dira stared at her and reached up to brush some raven colored hair from her face. “You are not the same person with me Miranda Lorian.” She said softly. “You are more open and bubbly. More relaxed.”

Miranda smiled. “I've denied myself too much through the years trying to forget those I lost.” She said. “This ship... finding you... I have got to the point in my life where I needed to decide what I wanted. Seeing how Janon interacts with his wife, Steven and Zaala together, I realized I lacked the most important thing. Love.” She pressed closer to E'dira and kissed her soft pink lips with devotion and love. “I've found that now... with you E'dira... and I don't want to lose the way it makes me feel ever again.”

“And you will not.” E'dira told her. “I give you my word you will not.”

“Isn't there some sort of ceremony that the Drow perform when you have... when you chosen a partner?” Miranda asked her.

“Yes there is...” E'dira replied. “And as soon as we return from this operation I intend for us to go through with it if that is acceptable to you.”

Miranda's eyes shone with adoration as she smiled. “It is very acceptable.” She said. “I do not...”

The internal COM chirred once and the OTD's voice filled their bedroom. “Officer of the Deck to Captain Lorian?”

Miranda didn't hesitate and reached behind her on the table next to their bed. “Go ahead Lieutenant.”

“Captain Lorian we are receiving a Priority transmission from Spartan One One on the SCIMITAR.” The voice told her. “Secure Protocol Crimson One Three. Eyes and ears only compartmentalized.”

E'dira was already sitting up as Miranda turned to face the blank vid/monitor and touched the control panel quickly. “Authenticate Lorian, six four nine Beta Gamma. Patch it through to my quarters.” She spoke as she sat up.

“Understood ma’am.”

“Miranda... I am...”

Miranda got to her feet and grabbed her robe from the chair. She looked at her as she pulled it on over her naked body. “You are part of my life now and I guarantee you Androcles will not blink an eye.” She secured the robe and turned back to the panel on the desk, entering in a code.

The holodisc transmission disc built into the floor of her quarters in the corner flared briefly and then cleared to a perfect image of Androcles Leonidas. He appeared to be standing in his Ready Room on the SCIMITAR and he turned to the transmission.

“Manda I was...” He stopped when he saw Miranda’s state of dress and the fact E'dira was in the room and dressed in a similar manner. “Forgive me for interrupting Manda.” He said as a smile formed on his lips. “I have to say though... it’s about damn time!”

“Nubous comedian!” Miranda spat but her eyes told the story as she glanced at E'dira’s wide and very stunned eyes quickly. She was obviously amazed that Androcles hadn’t blinked an eye just as Miranda had told her. “And everybody thinks Denali is the comical one in their family.” She turned back to Andro and crossed her arms over her chest. “You used Crimson One Three Protocols Andro, so I know this is not an official transmission. We are already in position and standing by... so why the secrecy between us?”

“Manda... I have something I want to send to you.” Andro spoke.

“Miranda I will leave you alone now so that...” E'dira began to speak.

“No E'dira.” Andro spoke seeing the surprise in her eyes once more that he even knew her name. “If you are sharing her bed then you are part of Manda’s life now. Since she saw fit to include you in this transmission without a second’s thought neither will I. You stay right where you are.”

Miranda looked at E'dira as he moved to his desk and plugged a data pad into the console on the SCIMITAR. “I told you Mistress.” She said softly.

“You should be receiving this now Manda.” He stated from the transmission.

Miranda moved to her own desk and activated the internal monitor, watching as the information he was sending came over her screen. Her dark eyes grew very wide as it finished and she quickly pulled the data pad out of the slot so she could move around the room. “Holy shit Andro!” She exclaimed loudly. “Holy fucking shit Andro! Where... where did you get this information?”

“It’s included in the transmission, but needless to say it is from sources I have no reason to doubt.”

Andro answered. “Look on the last page.”

Miranda scrolled down and saw the list of five names and lifted her eyes back to him again. “Oh man!” She gasped.

Andro nodded. “You see now why I trust it?”

“Yes.” Miranda spoke.

“Manda... I have sent the beginnings of a plan I began putting together several days ago. I want you to look at it... refine it... change it to fit your likes or dislikes.” Andro went on. “But I need the answer to one question now. Can you do it with five ships?”

“Full load out?” Miranda asked him first.

Andro nodded. “Whatever it is you need yes.”

Miranda looked at the data pad again. “Target one with no problems. It’s pretty straight forward. Three ships should cover it if this information is accurate. They won’t be staying to visit that’s for sure.” She answered. “Target two will require fast acting ground forces and it will leave us exposed for longer than I would like, but yes it’s doable with two ships. We want to move fast with Target two anyway.”

“The ground forces to be involved are already slated to become part of your command anyway.” He told her. “They will just be joining you sooner than you had anticipated, along with the new Type Ones.”

“The Dragon Brigade?” Miranda asked.

Andro nodded. “Yes. They fast enough for you?”

Miranda nodded. “Hell yes.” She stated. She looked at him. “Andro... Andro who else knows about this?”

“Outside of you, me and now E'dira you mean?” Andro asked.

“Yes.” Miranda answered.

“One of the women in that list of names I gave you. That’s it.” He replied. “For right now at least. I have sent the information to my father and he will undoubtedly inform Uncle Danny and Cha'talla’s brother. Cha'talla will get the information as he returns to Kranek this evening since it does include the Immortals in an operational sense. Unless it is absolutely necessary no one else will know until the last moments. I will leave informing Ben up to you, so once all is said and done less than ten. Until we act that is.”

“Why?” Miranda asked.

“How many people can you name that truly think outside the box Manda?” Andro asked her.

“Quite a few actually.” She answered him. “Ben and your father to name two right off the bat.”

“Ok... let me re-phrase my question.” Andro said with a smile. “How many people do you know that think outside of that proverbial box with just a touch of insanity and far more than their share of recklessness?”

Miranda grinned now. “Ok... that narrows it down some.” She answered. “Two come to mind then. Me and you.” She answered.

Andro nodded. “Exactly. No doubt my father will about shit his pants when he sees this, but since he is supposed to be dead, he can’t stop me.” He spoke with a small smile. “Maximum damage... minimal casualties Manda. We’ll need them later.”

“Androcles... you know this will... this will start an all out war.” Miranda said.

“It’s very likely yes.” Andro said nodding his head somberly. “Pretty much a given I’d say. What they have done can not go unanswered Manda, you know that as well as I. They will only continue to push and do these same things until they have insinuated themselves in all the places we do not want them or their influence.”

“Is that what we want to do?” Miranda asked.

“No Manda. I think you know me better than that.” Andro answered her. “I would much prefer to lounge on Cranae Island with Sadi and my other mates and do nothing but nuzzle and devour them all day. That is not something I think my uncle and the Kavalians will allow me to do. They have destroyed nine Drow outposts in The Wilds; they have attacked and nearly killed my father and my mothers. They have helped to usurp one of my mothers from her rightful place and they hold one of my mothers prisoner in the hopes to use her in the future in some way to advance their nefarious goals. They have tried to kill me twice now. This last time they targeted Sadi and the others intentionally.”

“I see your point.” She said.

“My father saw this coming Manda. He saw this coming and he did nothing because he did not want to fight. He wanted peace and prosperity. He wanted to finally lay aside the tools of war. He will not make that same mistake again and neither will I. This operation will at least buy us the time to fully refit our ships and men with Ben’s new toys and deploy them where they need to be. No one knows the technology we have obtained from Avi and CS19. No one knows what we have given to our people except what my father has allowed them to see. He has never endorsed a First Strike mentality Manda, but times are different now.” Andro said as he looked at her in the transmission. “Get together with your people and give me a Pre-Op Briefing when we get back.” Andro said. “We’ll work out the final details then.”

Miranda nodded. “Understood.” She answered. “I’ll give the Icalro Alliance a big kiss for you while I’m out here. They won’t know what hit them.”

Andro smiled at her with a nod. “I know you will. No tongue allowed though.” He stated as he reached for the control panel on his desk. “Oh... and one more thing Manda.” He waited for Miranda to look at him in the transmission. “You are hereby promoted to the rank of Admiral/Lieutenant and placed in overall operational command of the 1st ARIZONA BatDiv. Once the Block Twos begin to come online they will fall under your command as well. Congratulations Admiral. SCIMITAR out!”

Miranda Lorian now stood there as the one in shock.

CONSORTIUM SPACE

VAMSHI

OSG REGIONAL COMMANDER HQ, ALPHA QUADRANT

“We may have a problem Corbin.” The man spoke as he held out the information scroll to his superior officer who sat behind the desk.

Corbin Faith looked up from the information he was reading and looked at his senior aide. As the Regional Commander for all OSG operations within The Wilds and Union space he had obtained a position of incredible importance and weight at only thirty-three years of age. He had a reputation of a man not to be trifled with and one who would quickly drop you into a deep dark hole if you crossed him. The OSG Home Council gave him extraordinary leeway in how he went about things because of his past successes and his ability to get the job done.

Corbin sat back in his chair with a small smirk and shook his head. “That is what I like about you Wendall; you always are the harbinger of doom.”

“With good reason Corbin. You’d better read this?” Wendall spoke continuing to hold out the scroll.

“What is this?” Corbin asked finally taking the scroll.

“The latest report from our senior asset on Earth.” Wendall answered as Corbin waved him to a chair. “It appears the job we sent our team on for the Kavalians was a complete failure Corbin.”

Corbin began to read the scroll, his face becoming hard and emotionless. “Failure?” He gasped.

“The Union is playing it down as some sort of training exercise, but it appears no one from the team survived.” Wendall answered him. “At least that is what the asset is reporting to us.”

Corbin looked at him. “What do you mean?” He asked.

“We’ve managed to infiltrate one of their Netnews Channels pretty heavily and they have been covering this Androcles extensively since his father was killed.” Wendall spoke. “They have people set up everywhere... some of them not even working for this channel... and one of these Netnews teams detected activity at a private Spartan airfield outside Gytheio shortly after the attack was to take place. They stayed out of sight, but they were able to confirm that there were seventeen bodies brought to this airfield and then taken off Earth.”

“Fuck!” Corbin swore as he came to his feet in a rage. “Were... were they blown?”

Wendall shook his head. “Unlikely.” He stated. “If I had to guess I’d say we were led to believe by the Kavalians that they were far less skilled than they are. Especially the females... his wives. They couldn’t hide it if one of them had been killed or injured for all of them have been pretty active lately and we have received nothing to that affect. Quite the opposite in fact since none of them have been seen around Cranae Island for several hours now. That leads me to believe they have either gone to ground or are somewhere else and have been since the attack. Probably the latter since his ship is off the grid now too.”

Corbin looked at him. “Off the grid to where?”

Wendall shrugged his shoulders. “They engaged those Shroud Shields they have before leaving Earth’s system. They could be anywhere by now and we have never been able to get anyone into place in their military.”

“There are human officers who are very high ranking.” Corbin stated.

Wendall nodded. “Yes... hell a quarter of their senior officer core is human now, we both know that, but they are all extremely loyal Corbin and turning one is not a project we want to undertake.”

Corbin nodded. “I know... it puts us at too much risk.” He stated. He looked at Wendall. “Brendi?”

Wendall got to his feet. “That is where I think our problem is.” He stated. “Look further down on the report. Only seventeen bodies were counted. You gave them permission to take Brendi on the OP because of her knowledge of the Lycavorians Corbin and assuming they did, there is still one individual unaccounted for.”

“Why do we think this is Brendi?” Corbin asked.

“Because if she had been among the dead, the Krypteria would have been crawling all over her apartment in Sparta by now.” Wendall answered. “It’s untouched and the proximity sensors she always activates have not tripped.”

“Perhaps they haven’t got around to going there yet?” Corbin spoke.

“The Krypteria?” Wendall spoke. “After an assassination attempt on Leonidas and his wives? Doubtful Corbin.” He moved closer to him and reached out to touch the scroll. “Then there is this.”

Corbin looked at the scroll and his eyes narrowed at the grainy image of half a dozen men and women moving into the rear of one of their STRIKER DT ships, several dragons in the background as well. A hooded figure was sandwiched between the red haired Princess they knew as Eliani Leonidas and another soldier wearing the uniform of a Durcunusaan troop. The individual in the image was hooded and being helped up the ramp of the ship under heavy security.

“I ran the specs on the image and the height and approximate body size match Brendi perfectly.” Wendall spoke. “The Major wouldn’t have used her in the direct assault, and it’s obvious they have a prisoner based on this image.”

“It’s awful hard to tell Wendall.” Corbin spoke staring at the image.

“Yes it is.” Wendall answered in agreement. “But what if it is her Corbin?”

“She could be lying low.” Corbin spoke quickly. “Waiting for the right time.”

Wendall looked at his commanding officer and friend. “Corbin... you know as well as I do that we have strict Operational Procedures that are to be followed. It is why we are able to do what we do so well. Your sister, even with her knowledge and ability, has never been one to adhere to those rules Corbin. Putting her on Earth to freelance was a risk and you know it.”

Corbin looked at him for a long moment before nodding his head slowly and returning to his chair. “She has not fully embraced her place within the OSG and what that means.”

Wendall nodded. “She never has Corbin. If anything... she has purposely rebelled.” He stated. “And she just happens to be one of the best Intel Operatives that the OSG has. How she ever got as far as she has is beyond me.”

Corbin met his eyes. “It was because of me.” He said softly. “I carried her along in the hopes that she would accept her place.”

“If the Lycavorians have taken her Corbin, if they question her, interrogate her, she could hurt us bad with what she knows.” Wendall spoke. “I’ve never held to the fact that our Intel Operatives have as much knowledge as they do Corbin you know that... it’s too much of a risk if they are blown.”

Corbin nodded. “I agree... but the Home Council unfortunately does not.” He stated.

“If they find out about this unsanctioned operation Corbin, both of us will be in a world of hurt. Especially if they have taken Brendi.” Wendall said. “We did this for extra credits and to try and get in deeper with our Kavalian contacts. The Home Council will not be happy about the way we have done this without their approval.”

Corbin shook his head. “I can handle the Home Council.” He stated. “They have allowed me a great deal of discretion in what I do.”

“Authorizing an assassination on a Lycavorian Prince and his wives is not something they would have approved Corbin. You know that.” Wendall spoke.

“Not all of them no.” Corbin stated calmly. “But there are those on the Council who think beyond the barriers of how we normally operate. I have their complete support Wendall. I am not worried about the Home Council. I’m more concerned about Brendi possibly being taken prisoner and then these Kavalian fools. Their intelligence and assets were fucking wrong!”

“That is not as big a surprise to me as it is to you.” Wendall spoke softly. “They are, for the most part, unintelligent brutes who think they are important. There again, that may not be their fault either. This Androcles Leonidas is the best kept secret of the Leonidas family. Sure... we can pull up his military records and such on the Netnews, but when it comes down to it, very little is known about him. It stands to reason that the Kavalians are unable to get solid Intel on him as well. Even with their biogenic cloning processes they can’t get agents into the Union in any serious positions. They have to rely on traitors and outcasts. It’s the biggest reason they reached out to us a decade ago when we first came into the Alpha Quadrant.”

Corbin looked at him. “Could they break her Wendall? If they have captured her, could they break her?” He asked.

Wendall met his eyes. “That depends on how you want me to answer Corbin.” He spoke. “Do you want an honest answer, or one as a fellow OSG officer?”

“Both.” Corbin told him.

“As an OSG officer I will say that anyone can be broken.” Wendall spoke. “It’s only a matter of time and we know the Krypteria uses some very advanced drugs. I doubt she would be able to hold out for very long at all.”

“And as a friend?” Corbin asked.

Wendall leaned forward in his chair. "I don't think they will have to work very hard to make her sing like a bird Corbin." He answered honestly. "Brendi has never been on board with the entire OSG Council thing." He stated. "She isn't like you Corbin... and she's made it very clear that the only reason she remains is to protect your family so that your twin sisters aren't drafted for service."

"She's killed for the OSG before Wendall." Corbin pointed out.

Wendall nodded. "Yes she has... when her own life was in mortal danger." He said. "She has never embraced the OSG mentality however and you know that. Sending her to Earth was a mistake old friend. Not only did you send her into a situation with the assassination team that puts her at huge risk because the Lycavorians aren't as stupid as the Kavalians, they would have figured out who she was eventually, she's in a position of power." He got to his feet now. "She knows far too much Corbin... and if they have her, she needs to be eliminated. I'm sorry."

Corbin leaned back in his chair. "Do not be sorry." He said softly. "Can this senior asset confirm that they have her?"

Wendall shrugged. "The right question should elicit the response we want."

Corbin nodded. "Do it." He stated. "And put another Team on standby." Wendall looked at him. "Why?"

"If she is captured and they offer her a deal... part of that deal will be to get our parents and sisters off Edolus." Corbin said. "I want to make sure that doesn't happen."

"Their targets?" Wendall asked.

Corbin met his gaze. "My parents and sisters." He stated coldly. "If Brendi has been captured, I want them taken into custody. It will be the only thing that will keep her quiet."

"You're sure Corbin?" He asked.

Corbin nodded. "Yes." He replied. "Make it happen Wendall... and inform me instantly when you have found out what we need."

Wendall nodded. "I'll see to it." He stated before turning and leaving the room quickly.

Corbin turned to look out the large window behind his desk. His eyes were dark and brooding and filled with vitriol towards the sister he had done so much for. If he had to kill her to keep their secrets, if he had to kill their parents and siblings, Corbin Faith would do just that.

Without hesitation.

CURILA 6

Cirith stood along the far wall of the command center on Curila 6 and simply watched. She had spoken to her father, who was now on Earth and working diligently to discover a way to render the Static Inhibitors inactive, and she marveled at how he animatedly explained what was happening. His total acceptance by everyone around him had stunned him at first, until he came to realize that his wolf blood gave him a certain status among the Lycavorian people. A status and recognition and trust that would not have come had he been completely vampire. He had scolded her for acting so recklessly in going after Dysea, but Cirith could hear the pride in his voice even as he scolded her. His reaction and demeanor coupled with her own feelings and emotions only brought home the fact to Cirith that they indeed had come to be where they had always belonged.

Cirith had planned to have her own quarters when she arrived, never expecting what had actually taken place. Isabella and Dysea both had told her that she would be accepted by Anja and Aricia immediately. They would smell it in her blood, and sense it within Mindvoice just as they did, and they had not been wrong. The feeling that she had come home and she was where she was always intended to be filled Cirith to overflowing and their acceptance of her only spoke of the truth of these feelings. Even that first night here, when Dysea was off with Martin, Anja and Aricia had brought her into their lives as completely as Isabella and Dysea had. She did not have her own quarters because she stayed with them in theirs and they talked until the early morning hours when sleep finally claimed them all. When Cirith awoke later it was to the feeling of Anja's long Persian red hair against her face, and Aricia's lithe body spooned against her from behind. Isabella lay on her back, Anja's arm draped across her pregnant abdomen and her face content and at peace. Cirith had relished in the sensations as she laid there, and she also marveled at the strength of these women. None of them questioned that For'mya was still alive, or that she would be back among them. Their commitment to each other was a palpable thing, as well as their commitment to Martin. She also learned that his dedication to each of them was without question or hesitation.

He frightened her Cirith realized as she leaned against the wall and watched him from across the room. Though she had been around many Immortals that were taller and much wider than him, Cirith could not remember a man who was more physically imposing than Martin Leonidas. It wasn't just his physical proportions, which were exquisite in every detail she decided, it was the aura he radiated to everyone around him. An aura that she doubted he even realized he exuded. It was an aura of confidence and command. An aura of a man who had done and seen more than most people would ever experience in their lifetimes. A man who had killed in defense of others and a man who was exceptionally skilled at it to say the least. A man who would not hesitate to kill if need be but also one who could be compassionate. A man fiercely devoted to his ideals and a man who would not compromise his values for anyone. He moved like a great predator, stalking and cunning, ready to pounce and end your life in an instant. Then she had seen him with his children just yesterday, how he played with each of them and all of them together. How he sat with them, reading to them before they retired the evening before. He did not question that she was among them later that evening, but she could sense his indecision and questions. Twenty-five years they had been together and never once had another woman joined them in their room, yet now all of his mates had accepted Cirith without question and this more than anything confused him. He could smell her blood her knew, the strands of the fifth Lycavorian Ruling family that flowed in her veins, and Cirith thought she could detect his acceptance that she belonged to him as equally as did his other Queens, but his honor kept him from readily acknowledging this fact even though she knew his blood called for him to.

Cirith turned slightly when she saw Dysea and Isabella enter from behind and to her right and moved up to her silently. Dysea stepped close to her, pressing her tall, lush figure against her without reservation or doubt. An act that sent shivers coursing through Cirith. This was a very different Dysea than had arrived here two days ago. The brightness in her emerald eyes was back, the flush in her skin very noticeable. Cirith knew it was because she was back among those who she loved and who loved her. Cirith watched as Bella came up on her other side and slipped her hand into hers.

[What are you doing Cirith?] Bella asked softly within Mindvoice.

This was another thing that Cirith had not expected, but something that she embraced completely. Her Mindvoice skills were not as powerful as they should have been when she first met Dysea, but they were as strong as she could train them to be considering the control which Aikiro had placed on all Mindvoice users. Since coming here however, her skills and her sense of awareness had grown beyond anything she could have imagined. They had opened their minds to her without hesitation Cirith had basked in the knowledge and emotions coursing within all of them. All the practical skill had been given to her within moments and now it was just a matter of focusing and learning to do the small things that her new abilities granted. The one mind she could not touch however was Martin's.

[I was just watching him.] Cirith answered sheepishly. It was one of the first things they had told her. No Lycavorian or anyone within the Union for that matter would try to intrude on their shielded conversation. While there were very few that could actually make an attempt to breach any shields they had up, it was a matter of honor and purpose that this was not done. [He just... he just accepted him with question.]

Dysea and Isabella glanced over to see who she was referring to and they saw T'lolt standing between Danny and Martin as they pointed to different things on the star chart In front of them.

[Ah yes... T'lolt.] Dysea said. [There is a history there Cirith.]

[History?] Cirith asked her.

Dysea nodded. [When he was on Lycavore rescuing Lisisa and his mother he saved the life of an Immortal. Cha'talla's brother to be exact. They had just killed T'lolt's sons and left him for dead because of Cha'talla's betrayal of the High Lord.]

Cirith looked at her wide eyed. [He spared an Immortal?] She gasped. [After all they are responsible for through the years he spared one?]

Dysea nodded. [It was a matter of honor.] She stated softly. [He gave T'lolt blood and a weapon so that he could bury his sons and take his revenge. The Nehtes that T'lolt has worn all these years is the same weapon that Nauta Melme gave to him then.]

[For every action there is an affect and reaction.] Bella spoke now. [T'lolt was leading the Immortal team that finally rescued Normya, Tir'ut and Esther.]

Cirith looked at them with wide eyes. [You are kidding.] She gasped.

Dysea shook her head. [Even then the gods of fate were laughing hysterically as Nauta Melme spared the man who would save his daughter some quarter century later and be part of the reason the Akruxian people have begun their resurgence.] Dysea squeezed her hand. [He may not often show it, or even address it really, but Nauta Melme is a man who believes deeply in fate and purpose and destiny.]

Isabella took her other hand. [Come Cirith... Anja wanted us to bring you to her office so that she can finish your exam. Then we will gather with Aricia and our children for lunch.]

Cirith nodded as she allowed them to pull her towards the door, taking one last longing glance at where Martin stood.

T'lolt leaned over and stabbed the chart in another spot. "Another small garrison here on Pressha numbering perhaps a hundred."

"Damn, that's twenty-three so far." Danny spoke quickly. "So much for the major powers staying out of The Wilds."

Martin nodded his head, his eyes on the star chart. "We should have guessed it. Seen it coming, but we ignored it. Not anymore." He stated softly. He reached for a pad by his hand and held it up for them to see. "As it stands right now, four people know what I am about to show you. We will make seven. Cha'talla will be eight since this involves the Akruxian people and his input will be needed as well as your own T'lolt." He plugged it into the console and tapped in a coded decrypt command while T'lolt looked at Danny across the table and saw him shrug. "Danny... you always said you wanted to look into Andro's head and see what swirls around in there." Martin motioned to the star chart. "There you go brother."

Danny and T'lolt could do nothing but lean closer and look upon the information with what amounted to disbelief.

"Orthae shu!" T'lolt gasped after several moments.

Danny looked up at him with wide dark eyes. "Jesus Christ Marty... what he said!" He stammered. "Andro devised this?"

Martin nodded his head as he turned and walked along the edge of the chart table slowly. "It began as a means of vengeance in his head, but quickly warped into what you see right now in front of you. A Tactical First Strike on two different fronts."

T'lolt looked at Martin. "You... you can do this?" He asked. "Your forces can do this?"

Martin nodded. "Ten years ago no... but a lot has changed in the last decade and my son and I are the reason it has. You've seen some of it with the new equipment that Ben has sent us."

Danny looked at him. "You... you were working on something similar to this Marty?" He asked.

Martin nodded. "The core principles for this operation I designed six years ago. I shelved the idea after deciding it would be too risky and costly in terms of our people. Andro apparently took it upon himself to resurrect it after what happen to Zarah. He has fine tuned it a great deal and added some things I would never have thought of but it is essentially the same plan."

"Zarah?" Danny asked softly. "No... no offense intended Marty, but we don't need to act with revenge because of what happen to Zarah. It's falling apart all by itself. Our Intelligence reports from within the Coven state that there is a massive amount of in fighting and back room deals for power. Apparently Yuri has not reestablished control and they are bumbling about like a bunch of kids."

Martin nodded. "I agree Danny... and I told him that very thing when he sent this to me brother. Until he showed me what it was he fully intended."

"You two are talking with each other a whole lot more than you are telling everyone else aren't you?" Danny asked.

Martin nodded his head. "Nearly every night whether it be via secure COMS that Avi gave to all of us or using a Mark Two Neural Booster. And no... he is not asking for advice. He is doing exactly what I should have done many years ago. What I raised him to believe and to do. I haven't approved of some of the things he is doing, going after the Icalro Alliance for one, but I taught him to worship those he calls wife and mate and now I have to watch as he does the same thing I did twenty odd years ago when Chetak took Aricia.”

“I’m guessing the Icalro Alliance ain’t going to be too happy.” Danny said.

“When my son is done with them, the Icalro Alliance will cease to exist as an entity for what they have done and what they have endorsed.” Martin stated confidently. “Wayonn’s grandson Dutkne is now Andro’s closest advisor, the leader of this Lycavorian Protectorate that will soon become part of the Union. This Dutkne is following the same path as his grandfather Canth. The same path Wayonn followed with my grandfather and the path Helen follows with me. It is all coming together Danny. Our history is finally and irrevocably catching up to us and becoming part of who we are fervon. And a large part of that history is where Cha’talla and the Immortals that followed the two of you come in T’lolt.”

T’lolt nodded. “So I see.” He stated softly.

“I believe Veldruk knew what he was doing.” Martin said softly. “He was a vile fucker but he was smarter in many ways than that bitch Aikiro. He knew all along he was going to come to Lycavore and he knew all along he had to eliminate the Akruxian people as a threat.”

T’lolt looked at him. “What do you mean?”

“He needed to keep us apart. To pit us against one another.” Martin said. “I think he knew that if we ever joined forces, the inbred honor and dignity that our two species shared would overcome any differences we had. He knew he could never fight both of us and win, so he targeted the Akruxian people first. He turned your people into something he could use against us in the hopes it would keep us apart. He succeeded.”

T’lolt met his dark eyes. “You believe... you believe that we would have been allies?” He asked with some surprise in his voice.

“I believe what my instincts tell me.” Martin said confidently. “The very same instincts that caused me to save your life that day on Lycavore. We were never intended to be enemies in the grand scheme of things. I think Cha’talla knows that now as well. Wayonn told me that all of this, everything, it is happening now for a reason.”

“What reason?” Danny asked.

Martin shook his head. “That I don’t know... and neither does he. At least not that he is letting on. At the moment it doesn’t matter. I raised my son to trust his instincts in nearly all that he did. Just as you raised Anton and Moneus and your children Danny. What he is doing now is what I should have done. He’s covering my ass while I atone for my mistakes. Getting For’mya back is the biggest mistake and the most important. I need her in my life just as I need all of them. My brother won’t kill her... he knows what will happen if he does. But he is not above using her to get what he wants.”

“Control of the Union it seems.” Danny said.

Martin nodded. “I don’t know how he intends that and Deia is working with Helen and others to try and figure out what he thinks he has found that will allow him to do that now that I am dead. My son, my children, your children fervon... I have complete confidence in what they will do. I’m not afraid because just as we have always looked after each other, so will they.”

Danny shook his head as Martin’s words sunk in and he leaned over, tracing his fingers across several different sized symbols of ships on the board as well as the accompanying text and operational plan. “Oh man Marty... this will... this will rip some serious new assholes.” He glanced up at him. “And it will undoubtedly be the opening shot of a war with the Kavalian Federation.”

Martin nodded his head. “Yes.” He stated softly. “But what are we doing here right now brother. We have been standing here for the last three hours marking definitive targets for us to take out. Kavalian targets.”

Danny nodded. “The difference is that you are dead and these are possible locations that they might shift For’mya too once Deia tells them to get fucked.” He said. “And I know that is what she is going to tell them. Plausible deniability for Andro and Deia. They won’t kill her because that will trigger a full scale war just as you are implying and every Union citizen will call for blood. What we are planning are rescue ops.” He tapped the board. “This... this is some scary and risky stuff though fervon. We’ve never conducted offensive operations on this scale Marty! Sibfla... I knew Andro was devious... but this is beyond anything I ever thought.”

Martin smiled gently. “He is not me Danny.” He said with no small amount of pride in his voice.

“No shit! He’s scarier than you fervon... and you are downright terrifying!” Danny snapped.

Martin looked at T'lolt. "T'lolt?"

T'lolt looked up from the board. "I came here... I came here to fulfill an oath and debt I made to thank you for what you did all those years ago."

"A debt that was never owed T'lolt." Martin told him calmly. "Even if it was, you more than reciprocated when you and Cha'talla saved my daughter." Martin said. "I've told you that."

T'lolt nodded. "Yes I know, though Tir'ut actually gets the credit for that." He answered with a small smile. "All that aside Martin Leonidas... what you did that day opened my eyes to many things I would never have considered. Just as finding love with Esther opened Cha'talla's eyes." He turned back to the star chart now and leaned over next to Danny. "This is why Dysea had him put together that transmission isn't it?"

Martin nodded. "Androcles didn't tell her the full scope of what it was meant for, but yes. I imagine once Cha'talla reads this it will come to him as well."

T'lolt nodded. "We will not know the reaction until after it is broadcast." He said. "You and your son would do this? Even after all the history we have of fighting one another in service to the Coven?"

"T'lolt... if you look deeply enough... and I have had nothing but time to do this since being here... if you look beyond the surface of that history you will see that your people, the Akruxian Immortals, they are no different in many ways than my people." Martin said turning slightly to look at the star chart. "We were both enslaved as a species by Veldruk and the High Coven. Twenty-seven years ago when I first discovered who and what I was, no, I would never have believe any of this. My hatred of your people for the death of my father would have prevented me from looking past the surface." Martin turned back to him. "I'm not the same man anymore. The more I thought about it, the more I saw Veldruk's foul hand in what happen to your people and that is why I believe what I told you only a few moments ago. And once... once Cha'talla and you and those of your tribe were free of the Coven you began to look past the surface just as I have done."

T'lolt nodded slowly. "Yes we have." He said softly. He met Martin's eyes. "What about Narice?" He asked.

Martin allowed the smile to split his face. "Narice is a Leonidas now." He spoke with a large measure of joy. "The moment she look past what she had been raised to believe and then fell in love with my son she became a Leonidas. I've seen the way she looks at my son. Aikiro must be rolling over in her grave knowing that Narice shares my son's bed. His life. And that knowledge makes me quiver in joy. I won't even get into how it just tickles me pink that Carisia is a Leonidas as well."

T'lolt couldn't help but chuckle at his appearance now. "It shows in your expression the perverse happiness you get knowing that their daughters love your sons doesn't it?"

Martin smiled. "You have no idea."

"When will Cha'talla see this?" T'lolt asked.

"He has spent the last two days at Dragon Mountain with Vollenth." Martin answered. "He's taking a STRIKER back to Kranek today along with some other equipment that I ordered delivered there. If we are going to pull this off he needs to be there and he needs to be ready. I imagine he will read it as they return. You should be heading back soon as well."

T'lolt shook his head. "No... I will remain here with you." He stated. "Cha'talla and I talked of this before leaving Kranek Martin Leonidas. I will remain here, among you, until we have returned your Queen to your arms and the arms of your mates. What your son did... the equipment he gave to us that allowed us to defend what we have now, your people fighting beside ours against the Kavalians without question or pause. These things have earned the trust and respect of our tribe Martin Leonidas. This is how we shall repay that faith in us."

Danny grinned. "It might be helpful having someone who is larger than Tony around too." He stated. "The Master Chief has lost some of his harder edge. Radama seems to have tempered him somewhat after all these years."

Martin continued to stare at T'lolt and finally he nodded his head. "Then let's get back to work." He stated.

Eliani moved down the corridor confidently, her eyes focused on the data pad she held in her hand. The SCIMITAR was equipped with a similar medical facility to that on the SPIRIT OF HADARIA. It was larger than most medical clinics on the LEONIDAS II-Class ships because of the added research labs and equipment onboard. Essentially they had taken one of the most advanced medical and research labs from the centers on Hadaria and installed them on these two ships. Eliani had everything she would ever need at her disposal, whether it be related to medical issues or research issues. She was reviewing the information sent to her by her mother in regards to the Vanari and the counteragent they had designed. Eliani had not met this Ceuma just yet, but clone or no clone; she apparently had rapidly improving skills that were getting better by the day as she spent time with her mother and Aunt Sivana. If they could consider her a sister without question, then Eliani had no problem referring to her as Aunt. Within an hour of getting the information from her mother on Curila 6, Eliani had pulled the SCIMITAR's stock of Tryptophan from storage and with Devra and Tastia watching in amazement, she fashion thirty-two self injector doses of the counter agent. This also left Devra with far more questions than she had before, especially considering the main ingredient of the counter agent.

Eliani stopped walking when she heard the muffled voices as the door opened and closed near her and she realized she was on deck fourteen where all the Durcunusaan work out gyms were located. She saw two men exit the gym once more talking to themselves and she heard the voices again. She moved to the door and entered the vast gym to see dozens of the RD team on the many mats honing their skills as all Durcunusaan did. They were just hours away from a very dangerous operation and none of them could sleep. That was not only human nature, but the nature of every species before battle. Her fern green eyes quickly found the source of the loudest voices and she came to an abrupt halt even as her wolf blood began a slow simmer.

Jomann was shirtless on the large mat as he spared with another of his team that she now knew as Anicetus. He was the oldest of Jomann's team, following him since the day he was given his officer's title. They were sparing with the wooden staffs that simulated Nehtes, the speed and power with which they were moving a marvel to behold by anyone. Eliani watched as the muscles in Jomann's upper body rippled in effort, his tanned skin glistening with sweat from the exertion. Anicetus was obviously overmatched, but he was putting on a fine display of defensive skills as Jomann attacked again and again. Eliani found herself moving closer without even thinking about it and suddenly she was beside the mat and watching the incredible display with rapt attention. Jomann's movements were so fluid and controlled, as if he was participating in a ballet. There was no wasted motion, no hesitation on his part in any way. Every movement was seamless and blended perfectly into the next. Eliani was considered second only to her father and brother when it came to skill with the Nehtes. Her grandfathers Riall and Panos had often commented and agreed that she could have been born with Nehtes in hand considering the skill she displayed for one so diminutive in nature. It was something that Eliani was very proud of in fact, yet her natural confidence in her abilities was oftentimes taken for arrogance. No one on the SCIMITAR would challenge her anymore because of this though she didn't know that. As Jomann's jasmine coffee scent rushed into her nostrils, and his powerful Alpha male aura filled the air around her Eliani could barely control the desire surging through her for this man.

She had desired Malic yes, desired him badly, but what she felt coursing through her as Jomann's scent filled the air around her was so much more potent and dominating. His scent called to her wolf blood in a way that she had never felt for Malic, any man who had shared her bed for that matter. It was consuming and very nearly overwhelming. These were sensations that Eliani had never felt before and they were so very confusing to her. How could she desire this man so completely when she loved Malic? Andro's words from the beach only a few nights ago came rushing back to her.

“Have you ever stopped to consider for a moment that perhaps you were never meant for Malic and Nyla and that is why events have occurred as they have? That Nyla and then Malic... that they too were only avenues for you to discover what you really wanted?” Andro asked her. “Just as they occurred with mother.”

“Wait... you are saying that I was just a vehicle so that Malic and Nyla could come together?” She asked.

Andro nodded. “Because you are meant for someone else.” He said softly. “Someone who is just as intensely passionate as you sister.” Andro continued without missing a beat. “Someone who will worship you and love you until it takes your breath away. Someone who even now is out there searching for you.”

“What... what about how I feel in here now Andro?” She asked touching her hand to her chest over her heart. “How do I get over that?”

Andro placed his hand over the top of hers. “Is what you feel in here, in your heart, is it because of what you truly feel inside Eli... or is it simply the desire you have within you to feel it. To experience what you so desperately want to experience.”

Eliani Leonidas was nothing if not extremely confident and of all the Leonidas daughters she was perhaps the one most closely tied to the wolf blood within her. Nara had not yet come to the age where her wolf blood would sing for a man, but Eliani had no doubts when she did that they would be very close. Andro had been right Eliani realized. She was conceived while her father and mother were still riding an emotional high from events that had propelled them forward, conceived when her mother had come into her very first phase as a female wolf. A full phase that would always be the strongest she would ever experience and the one that had brought her closer to her father in every way. As Jomann’s delicious jasmine coffee scent surged through her blood and the sparring match came to a close on the other side of the mat she did what she had always done in her life. She acted. She leaned over and picked up the staff that rested on the floor by the mat and spun it expertly in her hand. What Eliani failed to realize was that this attitude and confidence she exuded was often times taken for arrogance. As it was right now.

Eliani quickly pulled off her combat boots and stepped onto the mat moving up behind where Jomann and Anicetus were talking and smiling with the three other members of their team.

“You left your right side open for attack during that last flurry Captain.” Eliani Leonidas announced loudly.

Jomann had smelled her the moment she came into the gym, her willow and peach scent maddening to him in every way, and through force of will alone he had pushed it to the back of his mind as the match with Anicetus came to a close. Jomann had never envisioned himself in the position he was now in, Durcunusaan Captain to the Crown Prince of the Lycavorian Union, but from the moment Androcles had named him to his new position he had embraced all there was about it. It felt like he had reached the defining moment of his life, the pinnacle of all he could be, and as each day passed he grew stronger and wiser. Since that first day he had sat with Androcles religiously for two hours every day, exploring the boundaries of Mindvoice skills he had never known he had. Even when Andro was busy with other things, he always found a way to break away and they would meet. He now knew more about Androcles Leonidas and what made him tick than anyone in the universe save his father and his wives and mates. Andro had expanded his awareness within Mindvoice to proportions that Jomann never imagined he could obtain. The potential was always there Andro had told him, buried within the pureness of his blood just as it was with Andro; Jomann had just never taken the opportunity to explore it. He had learned so much in only two short weeks, yet it felt as if he had served Andro for decades. He learned of his bloodline dating back to long before the Black Day thanks to Deia who had taken a personal interest in him since their time buried in the senate building. And with Deia and Androcles came the Feravomir and all she knew. It came with the vast knowledge that the Elder Mother held within her and the complete and utter faith and loyalty that everyone who knew Androcles now gave to him as his Captain.

Everyone except his sister Eliani.

Jomann turned slowly and looked at her, suppressing the intake of breath that nearly escaped his lungs from looking at her beauty. Her willow and peach scent filtered all around him like a fog and it was the sweetest thing he had ever smelled. Jomann had never demanded the respect that others gave to him, he allowed his skills and actions to speak for themselves, but since that first day Eliani Leonidas had treated him with contempt. It made it that much harder because of the way he felt for her, but he had dealt with pain before and he would deal with it now.

“Thank... thank you for your expert analysis Princess Eliani.” Jomann spoke his voice firm but with an edge to it that Anicetus and the others noticed right away.

Anicetus had been with his young Captain since his joining the ranks of Durcunusaan officers and he knew him very well. He also knew when he saw an Alpha male and an Alpha female of the power and skill of Jomann and Eliani Leonidas square off it could only mean one thing. That they desired each other in the worst possible way was without question for whether they knew it or not, and Anicetus didn’t think they did, both their scents were filling the room with pheromones and their wolf auras were pulsing for each other like living things. He looked at the other members of their team and discretely motioned with his hand for them to back away even as just about every head and set of eyes in the gym turned to watch. Those eyes included a pair of azure blue orbs, maya blue and amber colored eyes as Andro, Carisia and Lu'ria looked on from one of the two private sparing mats situated above the massive gym area. Andro was shirtless and watching with interest as Lu'ria and Carisia pressed up against his sides, all of them sweaty from hard training.

"You should really work on that." Eliani continued. "In a real fight a skilled person will exploit that opening." Eliani felt ridiculous after speaking those words for Jomann was part of a handful of survivors of Alba Tau and telling him about a real fight could just as easily be taken for an insult. She saw the slight narrowing of his eyes at her words but aside from that he did not react to her comment.

Jomann twirled the staff in his hand slamming the end to the mat and he remembered the conversation he had with Andro only a few short days ago.

Andro held out the pad to him. "Well... that will change soon enough. I will get Devra... you get Sadi, Ne'Veha and Eliani and meet me..." Andro looked at him and saw the look on his face. "What?"

Jomann shook his head. "Nothing."

Andro crossed his arms over his chest. "Jomann... don't try to bullshit a bullshitter as my father and mother say. What is wrong?"

"Your sister... she does not care for me Andro and I would prefer to stay away from her as much as possible." Jomann answered.

Andro met his eyes evenly and knew Jomann wasn't telling him the truth. He could also detect the severe attraction to Eliani that Jomann had even though he was doing a very good job of burying that deeply. "I do not wish to make it difficult for you Jomann... but I will never get rid of her. For some reason she has appointed herself my personal caretaker and it has been like that for years. I couldn't change it even if I wanted too. Eli is just very..."

"Short tempered?" Jomann offered. "And linguistically gifted when it comes to cursing someone out?"

Andro chuckled. "That's a nicer description than I would have used... but yes." He said. "Eli is the most passionate of my sisters in many ways Jomann... don't be afraid of her. You are my Captain... so technically if it is not a medically related issue... you are the boss. She'll respect you more if you put her in her place."

Jomann looked at him and his eyes smiled. "How much blood will that cost me?" He asked with a smile.

"Probably more than you are willing to lose... but it will be worth it to see the look on her face." Andro answered.

"Your family will not be angered?" He asked.

Andro laughed. "Angered? Sibfla... they'll get a kick out of it! To this day no one has ever made Eliani back down. She's as tenacious as the Coltarian Measles."

Jomann winced. "I've had the Coltarian Measles Andro." He stated. "It wasn't pretty."

"I know it too." Andro answered with a smile. "Had me in bed for three weeks. I thought I was going to die."

"I think I did die. And then came back to life." Jomann replied with a grin.

"And I suppose you are offering to instruct me or somehow show me that you are correct and that you are the better with a Nehtes?" Jomann spoke as he looked at her.

Eliani grinned as her blood sang with the prospect of sparring with Jomann and putting him on his ass. "Something like that yeah."

Jomann stared at her with those ocean blue eyes and nodded his head. "It is said you are second only to your father and brother with a Nehtes." He spoke.

Eliani grinned once more. "That's what they say."

"Then let us test that theory!" Jomann snarled before he attacked with lightning speed that very nearly caught Eliani flatfooted.

Carisia and Lu'ria looked at Andro as the sounds of two staffs meeting reverberated all across the gym. His eyes were focused on the two below them watching with the eyes of a Nehtes Master.

"Andro my love..." Carisia spoke. "Wouldn't it be less... painful... if they just admit what they both feel for each other instead of fighting it?"

Andro smiled at her words and turned to look down into her maya blue eyes. "Yes... but it wouldn't be nearly as fun to watch." He said.

Carisia slapped his hard abdomen. "Bunjiro!" She cursed at him as Lu'ria chuckled.

Andro unfolded his arms and drew both of them tighter to his body. "Eliani is confident. Perhaps too confident. She has always been the Leonidas sister that has gone after what she wanted. She is fearless in all that she does and her skill with the Nehtes is unmatched. It has also led her to have something of an arrogant attitude. Jomann... Jomann burns for her just as brightly as I do all of you because of the pureness of his blood. Eliani's blood is drawn to that like a moth to a flame. She was never meant to be with Malic and Nyla... though that is what she thought. Her blood... because of when she was conceived... it is more potent than any cross breed Lycavorian and Hadarian. She knows what Jomann makes her feel, but she has to come to accept it and understand it herself."

"This is why Malic's scent is no longer within her blood?" Lu'ria asked thoughtfully.

Andro nodded. "He was a strong Alpha... no Bonded Pair could not be... but he can not compare to the pureness of Eliani's blood and that is why her body rejected his scent. That is why her wolf blood sings for Jomann so intently. Because his blood is far purer than Malic's will ever be. I tried to explain to her why she feels as she does, she understands it, but now she has to accept it on her own."

"And if she doesn't?" Carisia asked softly. "What if she truly does love Malic?"

Andro shook his head slowly. "She was intensely attracted to Malic... but the love she thinks she feels for him I believe is being channeled from Nyla. She is the one who truly loves Malic and because of the connection they share it overwhelmed Eliani's own persona for a while. At least until Jomann came into her life and now her true blood is recognizing it. I think she knows, but she is so terrified of being alone."

"Alone?" Lu'ria asked. "Does she know how many young men are out there that would kill for the opportunity to take her as their wife and mate? Males who will worship her?"

Andro nodded. "She knows... but she doesn't want that. She is a Leonidas. She wants a man to love her, worship her, and be every bit her equal in everything. She has found that in Jomann, only now she needs to let go of everything she believes and go with what her instincts are screaming for her to do."

Carisia looked down onto the floor and could only shake her head at the display of incredible skill taking place. The staffs were moving far faster than even her vampire eyes could follow, and while she knew small blows were connecting, neither of them had given any ground yet. "Will she?"

Andro chuckled and nodded. "Yes... even if Jomann has to beat her stubbornness out of her. At least enough to get her to see what she wants."

Eliani was backpedaling quickly, even as she parried each and every blow that Jomann was raining down upon her. No one had ever taxed her abilities like this, only Andro or her father could and that was because they were even better than her. Jomann was like a whirlwind of power and speed. His six foot three height gave him an added advantage, but one that Eliani knew how to compensate for. She had hit him several times with short, powerful blows, shots that grew grunts of pain and would no doubt leave large welts, but it didn't seem to slow him down. He had caught her several times as well, causing her to yelp in pain which only fueled her anger and strength. Eliani Leonidas did not yelp, and not since she was nineteen had she ever gotten a beating like this. That day she had made the mistake of making fun of Andro and his love for Sadi and he had made her pay for her thoughtless words. She had healed her injuries, but it had taken a week for the ache to go away. They had been going at it for several minutes now, circling each other while she looked for that opening he had shown her in his match with Anicetus. She leaped into a whirling five hit combo that saw the end of her staff snap against his shoulder twice, bringing a loud groan of pain, but the last three blows he deflected with the end of his staff matching her incredible speed and causing her to step back from him eyes wide.

As she stepped back he thrust his staff out between her legs and she tumbled to the mat hard, rolling away from him cat like and coming up to her feet with a snarl of anger on her face at having fallen. She watched him grimace as he stood to his full height and lower the end of his staff to the mat.

“We are done Princess.” He spoke firmly.

“We are not done!” Eliani snapped.

“We are accomplishing nothing.” He spoke looking at her. “And we have a mission to prepare for.”

“I will say when we are done Captain!” Eliani snarled. “You have not beaten me! Are you quitting now because you can’t beat me?”

Jomann looked at her intently, memorizing the contours of her face and the way her breasts rose and fell as she breathed deeply. Her scent was driving him mad and he needed to get away from her. “You will believe what you will Princess, as long as it suits you.” He told her. “I am done however.”

“You can’t just walk away!” Eliani shouted.

“I need to walk away.” Jomann said softly. He turned to his left looking at Anicetus as he did and he never saw the blow. The end of Eliani’s staff slapped against his cheek viciously, causing stars to burst into his eyes and his cheek to split apart, blood splashing onto the mat as he dropped to his knee holding his hand over his cheek.

“You... don’t you dare ignore me!” Eliani screamed.

Anicetus turned quickly and looked up at where he knew Androcles stood. He saw his Prince shake his head quickly and hold up his hand keeping him from intervening. Anicetus turned back as he saw Eliani move closer to Jomann.

“Get up!” Eliani barked. “We are not finished! A Spartan would stand until he could not stand anymore! A Spartan never quits!” She brought her staff up with blinding speed for a short, slashing blow to his shoulder only to have his hand come away from his cheek and grab the end of her staff in its downward motion. Eliani’s fern green eyes grew wide as he turned his body back towards her, and brought his own staff around at knee level. She saw the maneuver too late and as he wrenched her staff from her hands with his superior strength Eliani felt his staff smash into the back of her knees and topple her over onto her back with a resounding thud. She grunted in pain as she banged her head hard on the mat, trying to roll away and come to her feet. She suddenly found herself pinned to the mat by his weight as he pounced on her and jammed the staff down on her shoulder, using the back of her neck as leverage and effectively negating any movement on her part. She turned her face to look at him, her wolf fangs bursting forth in anger and the black ring surrounding her fern green eyes only to find herself staring into the ocean blue eyes surrounded by the thick black ring and the long vicious looking fangs of a pure blood Lycavorian male.

Jomann snapped his jaws together loudly, the click of his fangs loud enough to freeze her in her spot as he lowered his face close to her. “You know nothing of me!” He snarled at her. “Since I became your brother’s Captain you have looked down upon me and I will tolerate it no longer!”

“You will get off me or I will...” Eliani began to growl at him.

Jomann snapped his fangs together once more, even closer to her face this time and Eliani’s eyes went wide and cut her words off. His weight above her kept her firmly beneath him, the training staff keeping her upper body pinned painfully to the mat, both her hands gripping the end to keep it from digging further into her shoulder.

“I do not know why it is you hate me so...” Jomann growled in a low voice. “I would die for your brother in an instant. I would... I would die for you.” Jomann’s heightened anger and the aura flooding off him kept him from detecting Eliani’s aura as it wafted from her. An aura of intense desire and passion, and all of it directed completely at him whether she realized it or not. It was something that every Lycavorian within thirty meters, male and female, could detect. “Never... never question my commitment Princess. I have seen and lived through far worse than you could possibly imagine and I have brought my people home.” His handsome face then softened considerably. “Almost all my people.” He spoke softly. His wolf eyes looked at her. “I am not... I am not your mate Malic and I do not ride a dragon, but I am and always will be a Spartan! For you... for you to question that is an insult to not only me, but to my mother and father as well. Debase me if you wish Princess Eliani... but do not question the honor of my bloodline that you know nothing about.” Jomann lifted the staff from her shoulder and tossed it across the mat until it landed ten meters away. His eyes never left hers as he lifted his body off her to a kneeling position and watched as she placed her hand on her shoulder to rub it and try and return the feeling to it. “My... my blood burns for you like acid in my veins Princess Eliani Leonidas.” He spoke softly seeing her eyes go wide at his words. Words that Eliani knew only she could hear so softly that they were spoken, like a whisper that resounded in her head as loud as any thunderstorm she had ever heard. “It... it burns in my veins because you are all I want. All I will ever want... and I can not have you. That is why I need to leave.”

Jomann got to his feet and without another word he turned and headed for the shower area of the locker rooms. This time it was not the male that Eliani Leonidas left alone gaping in astonishment at her confident words to him. This time it was Eliani who was utterly speechless for even as he spoke those words to her, her wolf blood was singing in unadulterated bliss at their sound and the sensations and emotions that those words caused to ripple through her. They were demanding most prominently that he claim her right there in front of everyone if needed for that is how badly Eliani realized she desired him. A desire that made what she felt for Malic and even for Nyla pale in comparison.

And it was that unmatched desire that frightened her so terribly.

CHAPTER SIXTY-SEVEN

SCIMITAR

THREE HOURS FROM THE ICALRO ALLIANCE BORDER

“...don’t know fervon.” Resumar’s worried voice filled the Secure COM Room causing all of them to fidget in their seats. “Poysha said she almost didn’t react. She looked at her oddly but that was all.”

Andro turned from looking at the wall of the SECOMROM and his azure eyes fell on the crystal clear image of his brother. Eliani, Sadi, Ne’Veha, Carisia and Lu’ria occupied the seats around the large table with Denali, Arrarn, Narice and Toria. Jomann stood quietly to the side of the room by the door, his face still showing the fresh, two-inch long scar from the vicious blow Eliani had landed during their sparring match in her anger. He had shifted when he returned to his quarters and the scar was still pink, but healed completely. He had been standing in the same spot when Eliani entered the SECOMROM and had to force his eyes away from her when she looked at him. She was very subdued it seemed, and kept stealing glances at him even during Resumar’s report until it came to do with their mother. Then her attention was riveted to the holo image of her brother.

“Drugs?” Andro asked.

Resumar shook his head. “Poysha didn’t think so. She seemed to think it was more like she was... disconnected in a way. Lost.”

“Res... can we trust this woman?” Arrarn asked.

Resumar nodded his head instantly. “Shiria and her sister are here with me Arrarn.” He stated. “She has been working within the framework of the Kavalian High Command for several years. Shiria trusts her implicitly and she has been very forthcoming with me when I have spoken with her about odds and such. Yes... we can trust her.”

“Is there any word on whether they intend to bring her to the meeting?” Andro asked.

Resumar shook his head. “No... but you were correct in guessing that Hadaria is where they are going to insist the meeting take place.” He answered quickly. “Poysha was able to get information that confirmed they are planning on leaving tomorrow afternoon. I already passed that to Tenna Deia and she was probably going to contact you at a later time. She would have only just received it.”

“Where did she get this Intel?” Denali asked.

Resumar shifted uncomfortably in the transmission. “She is part... she is...”

All of them saw Athani stepped into the transmission now and grip his arm. “There is a small control group of females Andro. They remain within the confines of the Kavalian High Command Compound. All of them have been biogenically altered like myself and Jalersi. They do the mundane tasks that the Kavalian officers think beneath them. They also serve as...” Even Athani paused for she knew how Lycavorians regarded any kind of forced labor or sexual slaves that were used for that purpose alone. “They also serve as bed partners for those officers who are so inclined because they like the way we look.”

“I take it that is not by choice.” Andro said.

Athani shook her head. “No... in most cases the Pride they come from has given them in service to my father and his officers.”

“Athani that is...” Sadi leaned forward.

Athani nodded her head. “Yes... it’s horrible I know. Even more horrible is that they are implanted with an explosive chip that kills them should they leave the compound.”

“Poysha has been inside this group for the better part of six years now Andro.” Resumar continued. “Shiria trusts her completely.”

“Resumar... can she find out if they intend to bring mother to this meeting? We have enough people in place to pull off a snatch no matter where they are on the planet.” Andro asked.

“What if they keep her on a ship?” Arrarn quipped shaking his head. “It’s too dangerous Andro.”

Resumar shook his head. “Not without putting herself at great risk.” He stated ending the ideas forming in Andro’s head. “She acts as a technician Andro. If she starts to ask questions about mother someone will catch on. She is already planning on doing some modifications to the instruments in her room if they do take her and that is as much as I want to risk her given she is our only connection to mother right now.”

“Instruments?” Eliani asked now.

Resumar nodded. “They room they are holding her in is very spacious and completely surrounded by power inhibitors so she can not call her Shi Viska. The power inhibitors have been installed extensively throughout the building she is in. There are also countless medical monitors as well Eli. Poysha does not know why.”

“Is she injured? Sick?” Arrarn gasped.”

Resumar shook his head. “Not that Poysha can tell outwardly Arrarn no.”

Eliani glanced at Andro quickly but kept her mouth closed as what she was going to tell him on Cranæ Island suddenly stormed back into her mind. She looked back to the image of her brother. “Can she find out what type of medical equipment Res?”

Resumar nodded. “That is what she is going to do next. Her next contact with us is tomorrow evening. Hopefully we’ll know more then.”

Eliani Leonidas kept her silence and wanted to speak with her mother before telling Andro, but she had a sinking feeling inside her gut she knew what the monitors were for. If that was the case, she shuddered at what the outcome would be.

Arrarn turned and looked at him. “We can’t put her at risk Andro.” He stated urgently. “We have to be certain anything we try is one hundred percent going to work!”

Andro nodded his head. “Don’t worry Arrarn. I will not risk her either.” He said as he stepped closer to the table. “Insure this Poysha does not put herself at risk fervon.” He stated evenly to Resumar. “Right now we need her where she is.”

Resumar nodded. “I have Avi and 341 working on a way to deactivate this chip in their heads. Uncle Isra and I have the rudimentary workings of a plan in place that will allow us to extract all of them including mother when the time is right, but we need to be able to deactivate these chips.”

“The status on what we talked about?” Andro asked him.

“Proceeding as planned.” Resumar answered simply causing all of them to look back and forth between the two brothers. “We have begun shuttling Mican’s resistance forces back to Rizon Four and Shiria’s fortress there. It is distant and well hidden and Pian’s tribe has been using it as a staging area. Pian and Mican are working on different plans to free more of the biogenic clones in the last years of their life and bring them into the fold. Na’lia and the other elves here can alter their DNA in such a way as to allow them to lead full lives.”

“Is that wise Resumar?” Eliani asked.

“You have not seen the settlement they have here Eli.” He answered. “Many of these biogenic clones have taken the elf researchers as their wives and husbands and mates. They have children and they are very protective of each other. Knowing that you will only live ten years and then discovering a way to extend that beyond what you were meant for is a strong motivator.” Resumar explained. “The elf researchers here are revered by the biogenic clones and they would die to protect them.”

“You sent your request to Ben like I asked?” Andro spoke.

Resumar nodded. "All of it yes. Na'lia gave me a list of medical supplies and equipment that they could use Eliani. I sent that along to Ben, but most of it is controlled and you will need to approve its release since mother and Tenna Sivana are on Curila 6 and out of the loop so to speak."

Eliani nodded. "I'll burst him a transmission as soon as we are done here." She stated without question.

"The platoon of the Dragon Brigade that you sent as been working daily with the Kavalian people here and with Athani and Jalersi's help they are losing their fear of dragons fervon." Resumar said. "Uncle Isra and Aunt Tarifa are gaining many friends."

Andro nodded his head slowly. "Based on the history of why that fear is there it is good that they are beginning to overcome it." He said causing everyone to look at him once more because he obviously knew something none of them did in regards to the Kavalians and dragons and their history together. "And the more friends we have the stronger we will be."

Arrarn leaned forward. "Res... can you have her... can you..."

Resumar looked at his brother. "She will get her a message from us Arrarn." He stated. "I promise you she will do this."

"Time." Andro said softly. "We need more time to discover what it is they are planning and then we and father can act. How soon before what we discussed is ready?"

"Avi and 341 assure me they can be finished in ten days. Fourteen at the most." Resumar answered him. "Uploading everything to the correct servers is a more tedious process than simply emptying the cores. The ACHILLES will be ready. Captain Fang already has half her engineering crew helping with the upload and the other half are installing Shroud generators on a small force of Pian's Pride ships that arrived two days ago."

Andro looked at him. "You made that call?" He asked.

Resumar nodded. "Yes. You must have noticed the difference in Pian when you spoke with him before he left Andro. I believe it was a wise move on our part and a sign that we are not simply going to abandon them as so often happens to resistance forces."

Andro nodded. "True enough." He spoke. "I won't second guess your actions Res. We are three hours from meeting with Am'uur and finalizing our own plans. Continue with what you are doing and I will contact you before we make our way to Hadaria."

Resumar nodded as he gripped Athani tighter to him. "Go with the gods my family." He spoke softly.

"Cuia fas vada carians." All of them answered immediately as Resumar's image faded away.

Andro looked at his siblings and their wives and mates. "We have final preparations to make. Eli... be quick with mother. I do not want to get close to the Icalro border and be using our most advanced and secret communications array. Whether or not they are smart enough to detect it."

Eliani nodded. "I'll be quick." She answered. "But I need to clarify some things on the counter agent she sent."

"Let's get to it folks." Andro said.

EDOLUS

FIVE HOURS FROM SUNRISE

Lisisa lowered the powerful macrobinoculars from her forest green eyes and handed them to Arduri who lay beside her on the soft grass of the ridge three kilometers from the large town before them. She turned to look at Zarah and Lucia who lay on her opposite side as Arduri lifted the binos to her eyes.

"Looks quiet enough." She stated.

Zarah looked her own field glasses. "Looks can be deceiving." She stated matter-of-factly.

Lisisa nodded. "Tell me about it." She whispered. "Jeth and Seyra are circling at ten thousand feet. The settlement is slightly larger than this Brendi told us, but they were able to pinpoint our target house quickly enough. It's right where she said it would be."

"Very little activity on the streets themselves." Arduri spoke softly and they turned to look at her. "I see no signs of patrols or peace officers. One stretch perhaps a kilometer long that is very well lit to the west, but other than that it seems very quiet. Our approach should be very smooth."

“That will most likely be their entertainment sector.” Lisisa replied. “Clubs. Hotels. Things of that nature. Humans are nothing if not predictable in that regard.”

Arduri lowered the glasses and looked at her. “So if there is security it is probably within this sector?”

Lisisa nodded. “More than likely.” She turned back to Zarah. “You and Lucia take point and do your scout mission.”

Zarah looked at her slightly surprised. “Lisi I...”

Lisisa leaned over and nuzzled her sister’s cheek firmly. “You are behind only father and Andro when it comes to close quarters combat Zarah. Now that you and Lucia have come together it only enhances both your natural strengths. Besides... you and she can use the shadows far better than me. Conduct the sweep and then take up position and contact us.”

Zarah looked at Lucia and then turned back to her and nodded. “Give us fourteen minutes.” She stated just before both she and Lucia wrapped the shadows around themselves and vanished into the night.

Lisisa turned back to look at Arduri who was staring at her. She felt her heart skip a beat at the intense gaze of those beautiful soft green eyes but she quickly got her emotions under wraps.

“She still harbors some doubts of her skills since what happen doesn’t she?” Arduri said softly.

“You know about that?” Lisisa asked surprised.

Arduri nodded her head slowly. “Androcles felt it necessary for us to know in case we saw behavior in her we did not understand. What he told us and the reports we reviewed from your Netnews were very vague, but we understood the implication. She is... she is remarkably strong willed to have come this far so soon.”

Lisisa nodded. “Part of that is her own determination, part of it is Andro and the biggest part is Lucia.” She answered.

Arduri nodded in agreement with her. “My mother and I have noticed how they look at one another. How they act. They are completely devoted to each other. All the Lycavorians that we have seen are extremely...”

“Passionate about their wives and mates?” Lisisa finished. “Their relationships?”

Arduri smiled slightly. “It is not something that our people as a whole have gone out of the way to discover. It is one of the reasons we have been at such odds with the Lycavorians in the Protectorate. My mother told me... she said Bren... just the way he looks at her... it makes her warm inside. To know that she is first in his thoughts always, it makes her shudder in desire for him.”

Lisisa smiled. “That is how it always is.” She stated.

“That is how it is with you and Denali?” Arduri asked looking at her.

Lisisa nodded quickly. “Yes.”

“How long have you been together?” Arduri continued to press her.

“It will be four years soon.” She answered softly. “The four most wonderful years of my entire life. He’s not always a comedian you know.” She said with a smile. “And what he makes me feel is beyond anything I ever thought I would find.”

Arduri looked away and her eyes lifted up into the sky to stare at the stars. “That is something I wish I could find.” She said wistfully.

Lisisa watched her from the darkness, her vampire and wolf eyes easily able to pick up every movement of her face. She admired the cheekbones and the shape of her lips as well as the way her jaw curved elegantly into her neck. The blue color of her skin did not hide the sensual beauty and Lisisa shook her head quickly as carnal thoughts began seeping into her head.

“You are going to be married soon aren’t you?” Lisisa asked quickly to chase away the odd feelings looking at Arduri gave to her.

Arduri gave a mirthless chuckle. “Unfortunately yes.” She answered.

“Unfortunately?” Lisisa asked her.

Arduri turned back to face her. “After seeing what I have seen in just the few weeks we have been among your people Lisisa, Cruor Ahn Vernalo in no way matches up. He is well equipped for a Vanari...” She stated bluntly and she saw Lisisa smile at the reference. “And we are compatible in order to have children, but aside from that... he does not stir me as Denali stirs you. As Sadi and the others stir your brother. Part of me has always asked why I agreed to join with him and I think it was because I was lonely.”

“Lonely?” Lisisa asked. “Somehow I don’t see you as being lonely Arduri. You are the most outspoken and open of your sisters from what I can see.”

Arduri smiled. “You have not met Caliria yet.” She said.

“It just strikes me as odd that you would be lonely.” Lisisa said. “You are... you are very beautiful Arduri. You have a figure that most Lycavorian females would kill for, not to mention our men would worship you for days on end.”

Arduri tilted her head as she looked back at her. “That is the difference between our peoples when it comes to relationships.” She said. “Once joined... the physical portions of Vanari relationships lose the excitement and luster of the Celebration of the Hundreds. It almost becomes machine like. It is the largest reason my mother and father are no longer together. She could no longer tolerate his time away from her, or his lack of interest. It is not done very often mind you, my mother was the first to end a marriage in our family in over a thousand years, but she wanted more than what father gave to her. She has found that with Bren... ten fold more than what she desired to find.”

“You will not find this with...” Lisisa asked.

“With Cruor?” Arduri said. She shook her head sadly. “No. As I said... the physical portion of the Celebration of the Hundreds with him was very pleasant. The rest of it...” She shrugged her shoulders. “I can not back out now however. I am committed.”

“If you don’t love him why go through with it?” Lisisa asked.

“It is not a matter of love now. I do not love him... that much I do know. Not in the way my mother loves Bren.” Arduri said firmly. “I have agreed to become his wife and I did so in a moment of passion thinking, hoping there would be more to come. There was not. When Vanari marry, their families are joined in more ways than you might realize. We combine financial assets as well as material belongings. It makes the families stronger. More influential. I would bring quite a bit of dishonor to my father and our family if I refused to go through with it now. It is just the way of things.”

Lisisa could detect the sadness in her voice easily and she shifted on the ground. There was far more to this Vanari woman that Lisisa had first realized. Not only was she incredibly beautiful and enticingly desirable, which was saying quite a bit since Lisisa rarely ever looked at a woman in such a way, there was far more to her inside busting to get out.

“There is no way for you to bow out of this without losing honor?” Lisisa finally asked. “It seems so unfair. Even among our people... the Lycavorians... we regard honor above all else in many ways yet we would never force someone to become married to save face. It would be considered... carrians... it would be considered a crime.”

Arduri looked at her. “And that is one of the many differences between our peoples.” She said. “And one that in my opinion makes you better than us. Something the vast majority of Vanari would never admit.”

Lisisa watched her again for a long moment. Something about this woman pulled at her and she did not know what it was. She watched her as she lifted the binos to her eyes once more and decided she would discover what it was when they returned from this mission. She turned back to where the rest of the RD team waited patiently at the bottom of the ridge, her eyes falling on the man Dutkne had chosen to come with them. The tall, powerful Lycavorian was alert and his eyes kept scanning the area around them. They had discovered him in the quarters of the elf female who she had heard dropped him in the landing bay for pulsing her with his aura. Whatever he had done to get back into E’yarna’s good graces seemed to have worked, for in all her years on the SCIMITAR Lisisa had never seen E’yarna even allow a Lycavorian to court her. When they had arrived at her quarters on the SCIMITAR to collect Warem, the room smelled heavily of sex. She and Denali had watched as Warem collected his things quickly but then he stopped to draw E’yarna into his embrace and nuzzle her cheek and neck passionately, not to mention her elven ears. She had cooed out her delight in his arms, and both Lisisa and Denali could smell that she had allowed Warem to Cado Forn. It seemed he had turned into a very different man if what Andro and Dutkne told her was true. He had been a ladies man, an Alpha male wolf who enjoyed the company of females. That apparently was no longer the case as he did not even look at another female with so much as a passing interest. Dutkne had softly commented with a smile how it seemed they were discovering far more than any of them had ever hoped for since arriving within the Union. Dutkne had known Warem since they were children, and he had never seen him smitten so intensely by a female that he would scent her. It appeared E’yarna had done just that to him, and as with any Lycavorian alpha wolf, he would happily go into the future with her at his side. And it didn't seem to bother E'yarna in the least either judging by how she gazed at him and clutched his arms.

"Lisisa?" Arduri spoke softly snapping her out of her thoughts. "Look. There is some unusually air activity to the west of our target house."

Lisisa turned back instantly and her combat senses came alive. She settled to the ground next to Arduri, intentionally laying close enough to her that their bodies touched without even realizing she had done this. "Where?"

For her own part, Arduri suppressed the shudder of desire that swept through her at the physical contact and handed her the binos. "One point six kilometers west of the home." She answered.

Lisisa Leonidas lifted the binos to her eyes and didn't even realize she had just made a very clear statement in regards to Arduri Re Mydala. A statement that would become much bolder in the weeks and months ahead and would eventually involve her beloved Denali as well. It was a statement that would alter Arduri Re Mydala's life in a way she had never imagined and it would ultimately bring her what she most desired in all the universe. Only she would find it with two.

"Five hours until the sun comes up." Lisisa said. "Let's get this done and get gone from this place."

SCIMITAR SECOMROM

"...What is this all about Eli?" Anja asked from the transmission. "You don't normally call and question my work."

Eliani looked at her mother from the transmission from Curila 6. She could see that she had thrown on only a lightweight robe that covered her body, and she held a large mug of coffee in her hands, but the huge bed behind her was ruffled and appeared as if had been used recently.

"Momma... I'm not... I'm not questioning your work." Eli answered suddenly unable to put the words together that she wanted too.

"Then I take it this is about Malic and Nyla and... Jomann." Anja spoke with a twinkle in her jade colored eyes.

Eliani looked at her shocked. "You... you know?" She gasped.

"Eli... do you honestly believe that your brother does not talk to your father nearly every day since this all began?" Anja asked. "Do you think your father would not share with all of us what was discussed?"

"Well... no... but..."

"Androcles would do anything for you Eli. He would do anything for all of you. He has appointed himself the guardian of all his siblings for some reason that only he knows." Anja said. "When something bothers one of you... it bothers him."

"So... what he told me?" Eliani asked. "It's true?"

Anja nodded as she sipped her coffee. "Yes it's true."

"Why... why didn't you ever tell me? Tell us?" Eliani asked.

"What was there to tell?" Anja asked her simply. "Your uncle Danny and I shared a few months together with Julie Collins before I came to my senses and realized my blood burned for only your father. It made us closer as friends and now family since Carina and Moneus are mated."

"Does father..."

Anja chuckled. "Yes your father knows Eli. And so do your other mothers." Anja told her. "We don't keep secrets from each other Eli, you know that. It was a very tumultuous time for me Eliani... my life was headed in a direction I did not want to go. When your father came back into my life after so many years it sent me into a tailspin because I loved him so. I treated him badly at first, angry at times, because I fully did not understand what it was I felt for him. Just as you have done with young Jomann I understand." Anja looked keenly at her oldest daughter in the transmission. "Danny and Julie were there as support for me." Anja continued. "I think we all knew it wasn't going to last. They both knew my blood burned for your father alone. And that was even before he changed me completely."

“But... but you were fully Hadarian before this mother.” Eli said. “How could he have such a pull over you?”

“You forget that one night we shared before we came back together. Our first night together ever.” Anja said. “It was that night that initially started to change me Eli. Enough so that my blood would only ever call for your father because that is what I wanted most of all as well. Because I utterly accepted it that night. Even your father did not know that is what he did to me... he was still trying to grasp what he was. He had no idea the effect it had on me, not until after Danny and Julie and I went our different ways.”

“Momma...?”

“Does your blood burn for him Eli?” Anja asked.

Eliani looked up at her. “Like it is lava in my veins.” She answered in a soft sincere voice that even she could barely hear.

“And Malic’s scent no longer permeates your blood?” Anja asked.

Eliani shook her head. “No. It hasn’t for days now.”

“Then you know how I felt after Danny and right up until your father changed me and claimed all that I was.” Anja said. “Took him long enough too.” She quipped playfully.

“It was the same... it was the same for you?” Eliani asked surprised.

“Eli our Hadarian blood may be strong, but your father’s blood will always be dominant.” Anja said. “I was not yet changed and I felt it burning in my veins, the desire for your father. The love I have for him. You are half Lycavorian Eli, but you have the blood of a Leonidas in your veins and because you were conceived during my first Phase, it will always be stronger than it is in your sister Retta. Any of your sisters really. I know what it feels like for you Eli because it is exactly what I feel.”

“So I... I never loved Malic?” She asked.

Anja shook her head. “No... I believe you cared for him deeply. I imagine you still do in some small way... just as I care for Danny. Like me however... you are so compassionate that many times you will mistake what you feel as love when it truly isn’t.”

“Andro... he said the same thing.” Eliani spoke. “He said I want to feel love so badly that I don’t truly know what I feel at times.”

“Your brother is wise beyond his years Eli... you know that. He’s downright frightening at times with the things he can sense. Your father is as well. Malic needed you at the time he came into your life Eli. He needed you to set him on the path he follows now. That path was to discover Nyla and that is why things happened as they did. It also set you on your path. Just as Danny needed me and I needed him at that particular time of our lives. He found Anuk and Nayeca and I rediscovered your father and mothers. Where I was always meant to be from the very beginning.”

“Mother... I... I look at him... I look at him and I want to...” Eliani stammered.

“You want to feel his arms around you.” Anja said almost wistfully and with a knowing smile. “You want to surrender all you are to him. You want to feel his aura pulsing through you unchecked and unabated. To feel his skin against yours and so much more.”

Eliani looked at her. “Yes.”

“How do you think I feel with your father Eli?” She said softly. “And it has grown even stronger since he touched me with his unshielded aura now. My blood burns even hotter for him in so many ways.”

Eliani looked at her with wide eyes. “His unshielded...”

Anja smiled. “It was beyond glorious Eli.” She said wistfully. “And it has brought me that much closer to him. To Aricia. To Dysea. All of us together.” She sipped her coffee again. “Is he... is he handsome?”

Eliani looked at her. “He is... he is beautiful momma.” She stated softly as Jomann’s face appeared in her mind. “So tall and powerful. His eyes are like oceans of blue and he smells like sweet jasmine coffee.”

“Then do not fight what you feel Eli.” Anja said softly. “Do not do what I did and fight the feelings inside you. Do not fight what your blood calls for you to do. As your purpose was to bring Malic and Nyla together... perhaps what happened was also intended for you to find Jomann. Because that is what fate has ordained.”

“I do not want father to be angry with me momma.” Eli said. “I know how he views you and my other mothers. How he views marriage and...”

Eliani stopped talking when she saw her father move into the transmission. He stepped up behind her mother and slipped his hands around her flat abdomen, pulling her back against him and leaning over to nuzzle Anja's cheek and neck. She saw her mother's eyes close in bliss and she knew. His deep brown eyes lifted to look at her in the transmission.

"You are the strongest of your sisters Eliani Leonidas." Martin spoke to her. "Just as Andro is the strongest of your brothers. Never deny what your blood tells you because you may think I do not approve. Never. None of you have ever feared talking to me about anything Eli, and I have always cherished that. If this man calls to you as he does, if he makes your blood burn so, then I expect you to act as you have always acted Eliani Leonidas. You are my oldest and my strongest daughter and you go after what you want. If what Andro has told me is true, this man... this Jomann, he is descended from one of the original packs on Lycavore and he burns just as badly for you as well."

"He... he said what he feels for me... it is like acid in his blood papa." Eli said softly not afraid to tell him. He was right and she had never been afraid to tell him anything no matter what it was. None of them had and she wouldn't start now. That closeness was part of the well known strength and mystique they had as a family.

Martin smiled. "Then I like him already. It tells me he will be devoted to you as no other could be. As I am to your mothers."

"Act as your blood and your instincts call for you to act Eliani." Anja spoke as she dropped a hand to stroke Martin's arm. "You may be Hadarian... but like me... we are also wolf. And that calls to us even more."

"What about Malic and Nyla?" She asked.

"I think you might be surprised." Martin said. "Being bound to dragons as they are will always allow them to see things others can not. Do not worry about them now Eli... you must do what your blood tells you or you will be distracted and confused and it may have results you do not want. There is too much happening around us and whether he will admit it to you or not... Androcles relies on you more than any of your siblings for you are closest to him in age and temperament and what you have experienced."

"He... he told me that." Eliani said. "Because of when I was conceived. So soon after him and what happened during that time."

Martin and Anja nodded together. "Yes." Martin said softly. "I had always thought he would be closer to Denali... but it seems you and Zarah know him in a way that his brothers do not. At least not yet. That will shift in the future somewhat I think... but you will always need each other." Eliani watched him lean over again and firmly nuzzle her mother's neck and cheek, whispering to her before he released her and left the transmission. Anja looked at her after a moment and moved closer.

"Do not deny what you so desire Eli." She stated softly. "That would be a crime."

Eliani Leonidas smiled slightly as she felt her spirits lift higher than they had in several days. "I won't mother." She stated confidently. "I promise you I won't."

"Good. You have a mission to go on, but I want you to contact me when you return." Anja said. "I want all the steamy details. About everything."

Eliani chuckled gently feeling a weight lifting from her shoulders and her heart. "You always want the steamy details mother." She stated.

"Of course! Those are the best kind!" Anja declared. "I love you Eli. We all do."

"I love you too mother. All of you." She answered. "SCIMITAR out." Eliani waited until the transmission had faded before taking a deep breath and feeling acceptance and peace at what she felt. She knew what she had to do now, for Jomann's sake as well as hers. She could not let anything happen to him because of her, because he was distracted.

Eliani Leonidas turned and headed out of the SECOMROM on a mission. And she would not be denied.

She looked miniscule compared to the SCIMITAR, but VLOS VELVE had teeth of her own and everyone knew it. She was tucked under the port side of the much larger ship and many crew members had moved to one of the dual port observation lounges to get a look at her because so few of them had been built and they were known to be a powerful ship for their class and envied by many for their speed and ability to disappear.

Am'uur hugged his younger sister in the other lounge adjacent to the one crowded with crew of the SCIMITAR; admiring the incredible strength she squeezed him with. Something he knew he new wolf blood gave to her. Lu'ria looked far more radiant than he had ever seen her, and he also was quick to notice that Sadi, Ne'Veha and even Carisia had strips of satin in their hair that matched the color of their Drow family. This signified that they were the lovers of their Drow Mistress, but seeing their beauty and how they entered the room had still struck him. He pulled back from Lu'ria and held her at arm's length for a log moment staring at her amber eyes and beautiful face.

"I have... I have never seen you so happy and vibrant sister." He spoke softly.

Lu'ria smiled at him brilliantly. "You have... you have no idea Am'uur." She stated softly as she squeezed him. "I wish to tell you so much... but it needs to wait for now."

Am'uur nodded his head as he looked up and saw Androcles entering the lounge with the two Lycavorians beside him and two blue skinned females behind him with two blue skinned males. These were the Vanari he knew. He watched as Andro came right up to him, leaning over to nuzzle Lu'ria's cheek. He saw his sister's eyes close in delight and he smiled to himself as Andro looked at him.

"Am'uur." He spoke.

"Milord... it is an honor." Am'uur answered.

Andro chuckled. "Please Am'uur... you are Lu'ria's brother and family. We do not stand on formality with family."

Am'uur smiled even wider. "Did you tell our father that sire?"

Andro nodded his head. "I tried too. I don't think I convinced him." He replied with a grin.

Am'uur smiled as well. "Good luck with that." He stated.

"So what do we have?" Andro asked.

Am'uur turned to the large table in the center of the lounge, the bow section of VLOS VELVE just barely visible in the large window. "We have a layout of the base and where we think the prisoners are being held according to the information from the pirate scum that we captured." He spoke as he moved over to the table. A portable holodisc had been set up and the schematics of the mercenary base were slowly rotating in a circular motion. "We have some new information that we received just before we left that may allow us entry into the base unopposed."

"New information?" Andro asked him as he studied the holo image of the base, no one but Jomann paying attention as Eliani came into the room late.

Am'uur waited until they had all gathered around the table and his amber colored eyes shifted quickly when he saw the Vanari female he had defended in the earlier transmission. He kept his face neutral, but Lu'ria and Andro detected the spike in his scent immediately when he looked at Tastia. She was standing beside Devra, her incredible green eyes focused entirely on him.

For her part Tastia Dal Vesch had never seen eyes that were so striking. The amber color was slightly different from his sister, a lighter amber shade, and they glinted in the direct light of the overheads that shone down on them. Tastia had not gotten a good look at this man in the transmission before, knowing only that he had stuck up for her when Coren had snapped at her. Regardless of that, he was an incredibly captivating man in her eyes, the likes of which she had never seen before. His ebony skin was the color of dark umber, and from what she could see it was stretched over a tall and powerfully built lean body. His white hair was long, well past his shoulders, but it looked exquisitely soft and was tied tightly with several strips of the same soft amethyst colored cloth that she saw Sadi and the others wearing. Tastia found she could not tear her eyes from this man, his four-inch high elven ears curved to points and slanted back towards his head, the tips just poking out from under the hair.

Am'uur tore his own eyes away from her and looked at Andro with a nod. "Yes. The three executives from AEC that we reported? It appears they are not there for the reasons we thought."

"Explain?" Andro said.

Am'uur motioned with his hand to the side of the table and they all watched as the Lycavorian plugged a data pad into the control slot on the table and the images of the three came up in separate holoimages. "All of them are AEC internal Security Andro." He stated. "Our mother has done business with AEC in the past and she developed a relationship with the President through their dealings for advanced inertia capacitors for Drow field generators. I thought perhaps she might be able to help, perhaps determine why these men and women were there, so I contacted her on the way here. She in turn made contact with the President of AEC and discovered that they were AEC Internal Security and they are undercover acting as AEC executives willing to sell new technology to the highest bidder. It appears they have been investigating another individual employee for many months and they were coming to meet him or her to discuss terms of a large transaction.”

“How does that help us Am'uur?” Lu'ria asked now.

“Just before we left Icalro space the senior agent sent a coded transmission to my COM unit.” Am'uur answered. “The only way he could have got it is through mother. She would never have given it out unless she trusted the information the President of AEC gave to her.” Am'uur rotated the schematic of the mercenary base around and pointed to the main landing bay. “You have a MENKLA transport correct?”

Andro nodded. “Yes.”

“The AEC agents have set it up that we are an independent mercenary team of former Union soldiers working for them and that we will be bringing in a shipment of experimental weapons and shields for the traitor to use as selling points.” Am'uur said. “Twelve of us total.”

“This Overseer is just going to allow this?” Andro asked.

“When he is getting forty percent of the initial profits... yes Milord.” Am'uur spoke.

“Forty percent?” Lu'ria gasped.

Am'uur nodded. “That was his stipulation. Any future contacts or transactions and he will accept only three percent to cover his overhead. The man who runs this base is not a fool.” Am'uur looked at him. “He’s also an Unsaar.”

Andro’s eyes grew a little wider. “The one that escaped my father’s purge?” He asked. “The one who was responsible for putting the hit on Tenna Sivana?”

Am'uur nodded. “Cyngi is his name. And yes... we believe it is the same individual. If what the AEC operatives are telling us is the truth.”

“How do you know any of this is true?” Coren barked from where he stood next to Ardan. “Everything they told you could be a lie! A trap!”

Am'uur stared at him from across the table, the distaste in his amber eyes obvious. “I do not know how the Vanari treat each other Regent Re Mydala... but for the most part, there are very few Lycavorians or elves that work as mercenaries or that betray the Union. Any of the founding races actually. They simply do not need too since they can achieve whatever it is they want with hard work and patience. A trait that runs very deep in both of our species. Those Lycavorians or elves who do choose to become mercenary scum do so for the love of violence and death and because they do not care. These are traits that the vast majority of us do not possess.”

“Don’t possess?” Coren spoke with wide eyes. “I have seen firsthand the violence you say your people don’t possess!”

“I said a love for violence and death Regent. No species is perfect and we have our bad apples as well as the next species. But Lycavorian and elf mercenaries are very rare, even within The Wilds. If you are referring to the attack on the Prince and Princesses that you were witness too Regent Re Mydala...” Am'uur continued. “Then you saw first hand how we value our lives and the lives of our loved ones. We will do what is necessary to defend those we love and those not able to defend themselves.”

“And what do you propose?” Coren asked. “That we simply waltz right in the front door of this supposed base?”

Am'uur smiled. “That is exactly what we are going to do.” He stated turning back to Andro. “One of the other AEC operatives will meet the RD Team here at the refuse hatch.” He explained pointing to the large vent like structure near the top of the mountain. “He will bring them in through the ventilation system to this point on level four. It is where the majority of the Vanari are being held.”

“The majority?” Tastia asked now. “They are not altogether?”

Am'uur shook his head. “Normally yes... but when high profile clients arrive several of the are chosen to provide...” Am'uur looked at Andro. “Personal attention.”

“Personal attention?” Lu'ria snarled barely able to keep the anger and contempt from her voice.

“It is part of what our young females learn as they grow Lu'ria.” Devra said completely unashamed. “The many arts of pleasure. All of them do so willingly for it leads to better unions when they discover their husbands during the Celebration of the Hundreds. It is not something we shy away from.”

“I can vouch for that.” Bren whispered as he leaned over and nuzzled Devra’s cheek.

Everyone saw her blush a darker blue, but she pushed back against him without any hesitation. "Hush Bren." She whispered back with a wistful smile.

Andro's eyes narrowed somewhat at the expression of disgust on Coren's face at this display of true affection and love from his former wife and Am'uur saw Lu'ria stiffen slightly beside him but he looked back to him and nodded. "Continue Am'uur."

"They are brought to his personal chambers here on level five. Just above the east side of the landing bay." Am'uur spoke. "His chambers take up a large portion of this section of the base and access is severely limited but this is where he entertains the most important clients."

"How did we get all this information Am'uur?" Lu'ria asked moving closer to her brother.

"Some of it came from the pirate scum that we interrogated, but most of it comes from the senior AEC operative." He answered. "This is his third time here in the last four months trying to close this deal with the AEC traitor."

Andro stepped closer to the table. "My mother Isabella knows the AEC president as well Am'uur." He spoke. "Once inside the base we will allow their operatives to secure him and return him for whatever it is they plan? The AEC president will not let his traitorous actions go unpunished."

"We don't know which group she will be among, but these are the only two locations where they will be." Am'uur spoke. "The Unsaar keeps them under very tight control because of their obvious abilities."

"You mean the Alkay we secret from our pores." Devra said.

Am'uur looked almost ashamed but nodded his head. "Yes."

Andro looked at Devra. "I'm still somewhat confused how that helps them if you can control it Devra." He spoke.

"Do not tell them!" Coren spoke quickly looking at his former wife. "It only gives them the advantage over us Devra!"

Devra rolled her eyes and was about to reply when Tastia beat her to it. "The chemical that they use to break Vanari females... it makes us very susceptible to outside stimuli. Any kind of stimuli. Normally we can control it just as other species do... but once this chemical is in our bloodstream we will react to the environment around us. If it is one of a sexual nature... then we will release our Alkay regardless of whether we want to or not."

"Tastia be silent!" Coren snapped.

"It takes away our ability to control how much we release and it will essentially drain our bodies of everything just to produce the Alkay." Devra stated softly looking at him and completely ignoring her former husband. "It is also the reason if the females are not treated quickly the chemical causes them to go insane and lose their minds. They become shells of who they once were."

Andro turned quickly and looked at Eliani. "Eli?" He asked.

"I have thirty-nine doses already prepped." She answered. "Based on everything mother sent to me, as long as there is even a minute amount of Alkay still within their bodies, it will negate the effects of the chemicals the OSG use and begin to allow their bodies to rebuild their immunities." She looked at Devra. "It will begin working almost instantly, those who have been held prisoner longer will take longer to react, but they will eventually return to who they were."

"What of those who have been held for many months or even years?" Ardan asked hopefully.

Eliani turned to him. "My mothers and Aunts are still doing analysis of the compounds Naesta and Lady Devra provided to them. If they have been held for less than a year then I can say with complete accuracy that we can cure them. Longer than that I don't know but they continue to work on it."

Andro looked at Ardan now. "How many Vanari females have been taken in the last year Regent Ardan?" He asked.

"Eighty-nine." Ardan answered instantly.

"How many are here Am'uur?" Andro asked. "Besides Caliria."

"If we are to believe what we have been told, at least thirty." Am'uur answered. "We will not know exactly until we reach them and discover this."

Andro nodded slowly and looked at the holoscreens of the base again. "Very well... I will lead the first team. Jomann and his personal team, Denali, Bren, Carisia, Lu'ria, Narice, Eli and Devra. Sadi will fly the MENKLA with Ne'Veha and one of the RD Team acting as engineer. Arran... you will have the new STRIKER

DT Mark II with Elynth, Anthar, Aradace, Thaura, Majeir and Deneth orbiting the base once you drop the second team. Once I signal you that we have all the prisoners I want you and Toria to blast yourselves an entrance along the west side of the landing bay here. The layers of rock are only two meters thick and the actual doors are thin.”

Arrarn nodded. “Two missiles should do a nice job.” He answered immediately. “The Mark II STRIKERS are six meters longer Andro so once inside I’m going to spin her in midair and set down with our nose facing out. We’ll drop the ramp and that will allow Elynth and the others to provide support if needed.”

Andro nodded. “Works for me. I will have Devra lead the prisoners back from our group with Narice and Bren providing security. Tastia can lead the others back from their objective with Am’uur and his team as security. The rest of us will cover their evac to the ships in the landing bay.” He said. “Dutkne... I want you to lead the second team with Am’uur.”

Dutkne looked at him. “Understood.” He nodded his head unsure as to why.

Andro tapped the side of his head. “Next to my mates and Jomann, you and I have the strongest possible connection within Mindvoice and I don’t want to use radios unless absolutely necessary.” Andro continued explaining his reasoning. “We’ll try and keep all communications between teams via Mindvoice. I know you can fight Dutkne, and very well. Zarah and Lucia told me.”

Dutkne looked at him sheepishly. “They told you about that huh?”

Andro nodded. “Yes.”

Dutkne shrugged and nodded. “It makes sense.” He spoke. “Then they won’t actually know how many teams are assaulting them.”

“Tastia... you and Nirilo will be with Dutkne’s team and you will need to get a handle on any prisoners quickly.” Andro said. “We don’t know what kind of condition they will be in, but if we have to carry them all out we will, I just don’t want you to spend a whole lot of time trying to either console or calm them. We can do that when we are clear.”

Tastia and Nirilo nodded. “I don’t think we will have many issues.” She said confidently. “The OSG chemicals alter the balance of our Alkay... but it doesn’t strip away our senses until much later. I doubt we will have any trouble convincing them it’s best to leave.”

“I agree.” Nirilo said.

“I wish to go on this mission.” Coren stated bluntly looking across the table to where Andro stood. No one spoke as Andro lifted his eyes and looked at him keenly. Androcles Leonidas was very nearly the equal to his father when it came to being able to use his sense of smell, and it was widely known that his father’s sense of smell was unlike any Lycavorian ever born. Andro could detect no adrenalin dump into Coren’s bloodstream from a lie, not even a miniscule one, but his nose told him that Coren was holding back. He knew something that he was not sharing with everyone else, not even his good friend Ardan and that made Coren a wildcard Andro could not predict. A circumstance he did not like.

“Why?” Andro finally asked him. “You have done nothing but berate this mission from the outset. You seem more concerned about political blowback among your fellow Regents even though this has nothing to do with the Vanari Empire. Why the sudden interest Regent Re Mydala?”

“Caliria is my daughter as well!” Coren snapped.

Andro’s azure eyes narrowed slightly and everyone in the room who had even a small portion of Lycavorian blood in them took notice of Andro’s defensive body language. “You will forgive me if that is not a good enough reason to allow this given your actions these last few days and what you obviously feel for our species.” Andro told him. “As early as yesterday you were dead set against us even conducting this mission. Caliria was still your daughter then. I question your motives now.”

Coren’s face looked as if it was about to explode in anger and he stepped closer to the table. “Why you arrogant young...” He began to speak.

“I do as well.” Devra spoke then cutting off his statement and looking at him before he finished his sentence and found himself on the receiving end of Androcles Leonidas’s temper. It was something Bren had told her Coren did not want to be on the receiving end of.

“I am her father!” Coren barked.

Devra took a deep breath and shook her head. “You have never been a father to her Coren Re Mydala.” She stated plainly and completely without fear of reprisal. Coren’s famous temper no longer gave her pause because what she had found here in the Lycavorian Union with Bren surpassed anything she had ever had with Coren. “You have been against this from the very beginning! You were content to just let Caliria become a statistic for the sake of politics and policy! Now you wish us to believe you actually care what happens to her?”

“I have been trying to look out for the best interests of our people Devra!” He popped right back at her. “Something that you and our other children no longer seem to care about.”

“You are wrong Coren.” Tastia spoke now before Devra could reply. “We have suffered under the OSG and their actions for millennia and you and the others on the Board of Regents, specifically the SBR, have done nothing to stop it.” She shook her head. “We have a chance here and now to change all that and you are against it. We have an opportunity to break the hold they have on our people and you resist. The SBR resists...” Tastia looked at Ardan. “Forgive me Regent Ardan... all but you it seems. But that is because you are here and you have seen what Androcles and his people have done for the Vanari. In less than a week... less than a week Coren... they have given us the means to break the chains around our feet! And they have asked for nothing in return! Nothing!”

“He is going to take my daughter!” Coren barked loudly thrusting his hand at Androcles. “What is that Tastia? So instead of her being with slavers... she is with him! What is the damn difference I ask you?”

“The difference is that you do not have faith!” Devra spoke. “The difference is that you do not know your own daughter! She and Androcles were meant to be together! She is meant to be part of his life! Of Sadi’s life! Lu’ria... all of them! You are just too blind to see it!”

“What I see is my daughter going from one life of slavery to the other!” Coren snapped. “All of you speak as if this is somehow preordained! What if she does not want this? What if she does not wish to be the plaything to a Lycavorian and his women? Have you thought of that Devra? Any of you?”

“This is not the time to speak of this Coren.” Ardan spoke now.

“Why not?” Coren snapped looking at him. “I can not believe you actually are going along with this Ardan. I thought we were friends? I thought we were of like minds?”

Ardan nodded. “And we were until I came here and saw what I have seen.” He answered. “All the centuries we have considered them beneath us... inferior to us... look what they have built Coren. A Union twice the size of the Vanari Empire with hundreds of different species who all live in harmony! They advance in leaps and bounds, not only in a technological sense but a morality sense, while we remain stagnant. They are accepting of others without question and...”

“They are extremely violent and have no qualms about unleashing that violence on those who do not agree with them!” Coren barked.

“Why do you fear my people so much Regent Re Mydala?” Andro’s voice broke into the exchange once more. His question caused every head to turn to him. “Dutkne has shown me everything that took place between our peoples all those years ago... and he did so from both perspectives. From your very own history scrolls even. We reached out to you in friendship and your people stabbed us in the back, and then denied it all.”

“We did no...” Coren began to answer.

“Do not think you can change history to suit your views Regent Re Mydala.” Dutkne snapped at him. “The Vanari feared us even then and to this day we do not know why. We trade with you... extend the hand of friendship to you and you turn your noses at us unless it suits the needs of the Vanari people. Or do you wish to deny that is exactly what the SBR does when it comes to the trade agreements. We...”

“Dutkne?” Andro interrupted him, waiting for him to turn and look at him. “Now is not the time as Regent Ardan has said.” He said softly. He turned back to Coren. “I do not know what it is that drives you to hate my people so... and to be honest I don’t really care. You can suffer with your hate as far as I am concerned. We will rescue those Vanari females that these mercenary scum hold. Once they are free... once Caliria is among us... you can see the decision she makes all for yourself Coren Re Mydala. We will certainly not hold her against her will if she does not wish to be with us, regardless of what you may think.” Andro moved around the table slowly until he was standing in front of Coren and looking at him. “Very well sir... I will allow you to accompany us on this mission. You will remain on the STRIKER with Regent Ardan, Arrarn, Toria and the support team. I will not allow you to endanger the mission by being part of one of the ground teams. Once Arrarn has landed and is standing by within the mercenary base, if you do anything that endangers them, those on the STRIKER, or either of the ground teams I will have Elynth burn your body to ash where you stand.”

“Now you threaten me as well?” Coren hissed softly.

Andro shook his head. “Not at all. I’m simply stating fact sir. Elynth will decide if your actions put anyone at risk and then she will act.”

“So you put a beast in judgment of my decisions?” Coren barked.

“Elynth is far wiser and more patient than me Coren Re Mydala.” Andro stated. “Be lucky that is what I’m doing... she will at least pause to consider things before cooking your flesh from your bones. I would simply kill you at the first sign of betrayal.” He turned away from Coren before he could respond and looked at the others.

“We have ninety minutes before we reach orbit. Once our attack begins, Manda will bring the Icalro Alliance to an end. Grab a combat nap or some extra food now. We will not have the opportunity once we arrive in orbit.” Andro finished.

They watched him walk out of the room, Lu’ria following close behind. There was silence among everyone until Devra turned to Denali and Arrarn. “Who is Manda?” She asked softly. “What does he mean that he will bring the Icalro Alliance to an end?”

Denali’s grin looked almost feral in nature and he met her eyes. “Manda is a she... Miranda Lorian... someone who is close to our age and lived with us for a time during a rough period in her life. She is now the commanding officer of the most advanced warships in the Union fleet. And it means just what he said Devra. Once this day is done, the Icalro Alliance will no longer exist as a working entity.”

SCIMITAR

PORT LANDING BAY

Eliani shifted her medical bag on her shoulder as she watched him securing a large crate with Nusa and Anicetus while Lysandra was strapping another to the floor of the MENKLA inside. She could smell him so prominently, her blood burning even now as she watched him, his jasmine coffee scent filtering to every portion of her mind. Her mother had been right of course, Andro had been right. What her body was telling her about what she wanted was far beyond anything that she had ever felt for Malic or Nyla. Her father’s blood within her was far more potent than it was in either Resumar or Arrarn or any of her half breed siblings. It had been like this from the very first day when she had dropped on him in that tunnel. It had taken her mind this long to come to terms with it however, come to terms with the fact that he was the one that she was meant for. It may have seemed odd or wrong to some species, how many Lycavorians chose their mates, but when their wolf blood called for another as Eliani’s did for Jomann there was no resisting it for very long. The desire and passion that coursed through her held more love in it than she had ever felt before and she needed to curb that burning. She needed to make him know she was sorry and that she wanted him just as terribly as she knew he wanted her. She had hurt him Eliani knew and she did not know how he would react now. She had to do this though... she could no longer wait... for she feared she would lose him forever if she did.

Jomann stood up slowly and ran the portable scanner over the crate. “We want to make sure they are heavy enough to make others believe they are full of weapons.” He nodded his head as the scanner chirped several times. “Excellent. Two hundred kilos and the small jammers are working. They won’t be able to see it’s just junk metal.”

Anicetus nodded his head as he too stood up fully. “I wish we could drop these crates on some of those ronnus.” He hissed. “That would be nice.”

Jomann chuckled. “I have noticed since joining my team that your violent nature has become more prominent Anicetus.” He stated.

Anicetus shrugged his broad shoulders. “Perhaps the Vanari Coren is right.” He stated with a smile as he mocked the man’s statement from earlier. “We are all violent creatures after all.” Anicetus turned his head when he saw Jomann’s body stiffen slightly and his eyes came up from the scanner. He saw and smelled the reason why just as quickly as Eliani Leonidas stepped up behind Jomann. Anicetus was an old wolf and he breathed a sigh of relief when he sensed her female aura pulsing madly as she stood behind Jomann. As it was in the gym, the scent of her desire for Jomann was saturating the area around them, only now it was much clearer and pronounced and without any doubts. She had accepted what her body and heart were telling her completely.

Finally. Anicetus thought to himself. Perhaps now we can go forward without all the hormones filling the air.

Jomann finally turned slowly and looked down into her face, her willow and peach scent maddening in every way to him. “What... what can I do for you Princess?” He stammered out the question.

Eliani knew after what she had done and what she had spoken to him she would have to be the one to act. He still believed she was mated to Malic and Nyla even though his scent no longer touched her blood in any way and while that was true, she did still have ties to them as far as property and such. None of that mattered to her right now... all she wanted was to feel his aura wrapped around her, pulsing through her. She tossed her bag to the ground at his feet.

“Would you load my bag for me Captain?” She asked in a voice that carried just a touch of arrogance in it. Enough though that it caused Jomann to react exactly as she hoped he would. Eliani had always been a good actress.

Jomann looked down at her bag as his anger grew. “I am not you personal...” He began speaking as he returned his gaze to her. His words were cut off as at that very moment as Eliani Leonidas unleashed every bit of her powerful female wolf aura right at him. Jomann acted as if he had been slapped in the face and he staggered back a step his eyes wide as Eliani leaped into his arms and covered his lips with her own while wrapping her arms around his shoulders.

The instant her lips touched his Eliani Leonidas lost the battle that had been raging inside her and she surrendered to what she felt so deeply. She had cut loose with every portion of her considerable female aura directing it completely at him and the effect had been so very telling. The instant his body reacted as it did Eliani knew what she had always desired to find, what she had thought she found with Malic, it was standing right in front of her. At the exact moment she felt his male aura respond Eliani jumped into his arms and kissed him. It was completely and utterly instinctive, the first time in her young life where she had ever allowed her instincts to rule her actions so prominently. As she felt his lips against hers and she stabbed her four inch long Hadarian tongue between his lips demanding entry, Eliani knew. Her blood surged with heat and desire unlike anything she had ever felt as his arms closed around her in reaction to her display. She could feel his aura hesitantly, unsure of what was happening, but wanting to wrap around her tightly. She pulled her head back then, realizing that he was holding her off the deck of the ship, still holding back because he was fearful and unsure and she looked into those wide, ocean blue eyes. Eliani whimpered in unrestrained bliss when she saw those eyes. So deeply blue and filled with a burning need and desire. A need and desire for her and for her alone. Eliani brought her hand forward and placed it on his cheek, over the top of the new scar she had given him, and in a single moment her hand flared a soft white and the scar was gone forever.

“For... forgive me Jomann.” She gasped softly.

“Princess... Princess what are you...” Jomann stammered unable to even form coherent sentences it seemed. His own blood was raging out of control now, feeling her body against his, her aura swirling around him.

Eliani shook her head and placed a finger to his lips stopping his words. “I am not... I am not mated Jomann.” She whispered to him so that only he could hear her words. “I know you can smell that. I was never meant for Malic and Nyla. I was... I was meant for you. I know you can smell how my blood burns for you, for I can smell your blood burning for me. I have... I have never felt this way before. My... my blood has never called for a man as it calls for you. I can't stop it... I can't control it.”

“Eliani...” He whispered trying to speak.

She shook her head quickly. “No. Listen to me. I am willful... I am stubborn and I have a sharp tongue! I have never... I have never desired a man as I desire you Jomann. It... it scared me to death! I have treated you... I have berated you and hurt you because I did not know what I felt scorching my veins. I know what it is now and I don't want to ever lose that. I don't want to lose you... I don't...”

The growl that escaped his throat didn't frighten her so much as surprise her. She felt his arms crush her body to his and then his lips came down on hers and silenced her words. When his tongue slipped past her soft lips Eliani Leonidas knew what it meant to be loved. She then tightened her grip on his shoulders and met his kiss with every ounce of fervor in her lithe body and her mind exploded with bright lights and passion. She felt him spin her around, felt them tripping over the crate and falling to the deck of the ship, but she didn't care. He cushioned their fall as she knew instinctively that he would. And then he was rolling over on the deck, pulling her with him until he was above her and then Jomann stole her very essence with the ferocity of his kiss. His aura, so staggering in its intensity to her, wrapped around her entire being like a thick blanket. Her leg curled up along the side of his hip, one arm around his broad shoulders, the other hand pressed tightly to his handsome face. He was tentative for a split second realizing just how long her tongue truly was, but that quickly turned to dominance. His arms pulled her close to him, one hand going under her head to keep from banging her skull against the hard deck, the other dropping to her hip and her firm ass drawing her ever closer to him.

It was a kiss unlike anything Eliani Leonidas had ever experienced and it caused the fire in her blood to burn all the hotter. Every nerve ending in her body had come alive, every single pleasure receptor firing all at the same time. It caused her to become moist at her center, her pungent scent driving Jomann to deepen their kiss even more. No man had ever done this to her, and Eliani's mind was screaming out its delight. He was an alpha wolf, almost on a par with her father and brother as far as Eliani was concerned, and he was making her his. It seemed like hours before he pulled his lips away slowly, Eliani trying to keep them fastened on hers and she felt his nose and soft lips drop to the side of her neck and just behind her ear to nuzzle her skin firmly. The area behind the ear was one of the most prominent scent glands on the body of a Lycavorian or anyone who had been turned and he was inhaling deeply as he burned her scent into his brain. This caused even more sensations of cascading delight to rock her senses and she gasped loudly as he lifted his face once more to stare into her fern green eyes. His fangs were fully extended now, his ocean blue eyes changed and instantly this caused Eliani to change as well, the wolf in her surging forth as her dual fangs extended and her eyes shifted to their wolf nature. His eyes captured her, held her frozen in their gaze and she basked in their beauty as she lifted her hands to either side of his face.

“Wow! Oh... wow!” She gasped softly her eyes wide.

“You... you are a vision to me Eliani Leonidas.” Jomann whispered as he brought a hand up and used his fingers to push some of her red hair from her face. “I will... I will love you as you have never been loved before.”

Eliani's natural born defiance reared forth playfully and she stroked his cheeks with her fingers. “You... you think you can handle me?” She asked him softly with a brilliant smile of adoration on her face.

Jomann growled again in his throat and it sent vibrations of delight through her body as his eyes flared possessively. “I will tame you Eliani. But not completely. I will claim you here and now if that is your wish!” He rasped, leaning over to kiss her softly, their fangs keeping them from fully kissing as they banged together gently, but the sensations and feelings were no less ardent.

Eliani couldn't help but smile as her body hummed in response to his words. “Now that sounds inviting.” She cooed out the words as her arms wrapped around his back and tried to pull him even tighter. “And kinky.”

“Ahem!” The deep voice they both recognized broke into their reverie and Jomann lifted his head quickly as they shifted and turned on the deck looking up and behind them.

Androcles stood behind them, Sadi and Ne'Veha leaning up against his sides, with Carisia and Lu'ria on either side of them. Devra and Bren and all the others were standing around as well looking at them with knowing smiles on their faces.

“Milord!” Jomann gasped.

“While the thought of watching you claim my sister in the landing bay is not one I care to imagine... perhaps you could wait until the mission is over and you two are someplace more private.” Andro stated very calmly as he looked at them trying to hold back the smile that was forcing its way onto his face.

“I don't know fervon.” Denali spoke with a huge smile stepping up next to him. “It might be worth it. He's the only one who has ever gotten her to shut up like that.”

Jomann climbed quickly to his feet, unashamed of his actions as he pulled Eliani up and drew her close to him. Eliani pressed against him very tightly, equally unashamed of their actions and her beautiful face beaming, even as her aura swirled around him announcing to every Lycavorian female in the landing bay that he belonged to her now just as Jomann's aura did the same to any nearby male. They stood there looking at Andro, neither of them allowing their wolf fangs to retract which was a clear sign to Andro of their feelings for each other and their intent.

“Forgive me Milord.” Jomann spoke quickly.

Andro chuckled. “Don’t ask me for forgiveness.” He stated. “As long as I can order you to kiss her whenever she starts to run off at the mouth and annoy everyone.”

“Piss off Andro!” Eliani barked at him.

“See!” Denali barked.

Andro looked at Sadi. “Oh... this is going to interesting.” He said. “Eliani Leonidas has finally met her match.”

Sadi’s green eyes narrowed slightly. “I don’t know Andro my love... on the deck in the landing bay with a crowd watching sounds rather exciting. Perhaps we should...” She told him. Eliani burst out laughing at the look on her brother’s face and it served to relax everyone at least to some degree. Yes they were going on a very dangerous mission, but they were prepared and exceptionally well trained and ready. The laughter simply accomplished removing the last of the butterflies from everyone’s emotions. They watched as Andro chased Sadi up into the MENKLA transport, her voice yelping in surprise as they all followed.

ONTAHE

We are coming Inamarno. Be strong... we are coming for you and you will be with us. Soon Inamarno.

Caliria Re Mydala smiled in her sleep as those beautiful azure eyes blinked and began to fade along with the deep voice. She didn’t want them to go; she didn’t want those sea green orbs, those amber colored eyes or those stunning brown and maya blue sets of eyes to disappear as they always did. She never wanted them to fade away. She found such solace and love in those eyes and every time she dreamed of them she woke feeling just a little better. At least until her reality settle in.

Caliria Re Mydala was three hundred and twenty-two years old and nothing in her life had ever been easy. She was the outcast daughter of a very powerful Vanari politician father and a very popular Vanari politician mother. She had been born with what had been considered a genetic defect among the Vanari people for millennia. She had been born with long, silky raven black hair. This fact alone instantly made her an outcast among her own people in many ways. Vanari females born with black hair were considered second class citizens, unable to hold political office of any kind and in some parts of the Vanari Empire, unable to go into particular shops and even restaurants. Her name at least had made it easier in some ways for her, as well as the love shown to her by her mother and siblings. None of them had ever done anything to adhere to the normal practice among the Vanari when it came to dark haired females, and she knew this angered many of their people as well as her father. Her mother Devra and her siblings didn’t care, and they would often join her for lunch or shopping or just about anything one would do with a daughter or sister. She had even traveled to the Protectorate homeworld to visit her brother and she met the Lycavorian female that held his attention so completely. They had always supported her in any endeavor she chose to undertake, even going so far as to publicly show that support at rallies Caliria had arranged and attended. She was a vocal proponent of fighting to get equal rights for all Vanari females with dark hair, for the medical evidence was very clear that it was not a defect in any way. The only thing she lacked... the one thing she had always wanted more than anything... was the love and support of her father.

She had gone through the Vanari Cadre Commando training and served nearly three decades in their service, finally leaving them with a stellar record and many decorations for outstanding work and loyalty. She had gone back to school three different times now for one degree or another, all in the hopes that her father would recognize her accomplishments and at least show her that he cared for her even a little bit. That support and love never came, even privately, and above all else that is what hurt the most.

Now however, now she would never know that again. She would never see her family again and she would live out the remainder of her days as a whore for aliens who only wanted to use her for their sadistic pleasure. She remembered clearly the day she had been taken, led into a trap by a man she thought actually cared for who she was and not what she looked like. She should have known better the moment the Eridiani male began to show interest in her that it was not real. She had gotten too close with her research to discovering how to counter the Orionis Syndicate’s hold over her people with their chemical agent. She should have known right away he was only there to discover what she had found. Instead, she so desired to be wanted by someone that she let him inside the walls she usually kept around her heart and mind and he betrayed her. He led her right into the trap that got her captured and taken prisoner and then turned into what she was now. Her dreams were all she had left now, and they were such exquisite dreams. A beautiful man, with short black hair and breathtaking azure blue eyes, a stunning blond woman with sea green eyes and a delicious tattoo over her luscious center. An ebony skinned female elf with shimmering white hair and another elf female with long, flowing brown hair and a diminutive raven haired female with maya blue eyes. She had dreamed of them so vividly these last weeks, being with them, sharing in their love and lives. She had seen so many things when she was with them in her dreams, heard their voices and shared so many images from her mind. She didn't know who they were, figments of her imagination most likely, but they were all she wanted to see anymore and she went through each day solely to return to her dreams in the night. She...

"Caliria!" The female voice broke into her thoughts suddenly and Caliria's stunning honeydew green eyes popped open as she came fully awake in an instant. "Caliria wake up!"

Caliria Re Mydala blinked several times as her eyes focused on the blond haired Vanari female in front of her kneeling next to the hard bed. She groaned softly and drew the back of her hand across her face.

"Yssyla?" Caliria spoke softly. "What is it?"

"You were... you were speaking in your sleep." The young woman answered. "I thought maybe something was wrong."

Caliria focused her eyes clearly and shook her head as she slowly sat up. The soft yellow wrap barely covered her supple five foot seven, hundred and twenty pound figure. Her breasts were of above average medium size and exceptionally firm, her nipples small but very rigid. Her long blue legs curved slightly to encompass slender hips and an incredibly firm ass. Her skin was like satin in its texture, the cornflower blue color soft and contrasting greatly with her raven black hair.

Caliria shook her head and smiled slightly as she looked at the young woman. "No." She answered. "They were only... they were only dreams Yssyla. Wonderful dreams... but dreams nonetheless."

"They must have been more than wonderful... you have goosebumps all over your body Caliria." Yssyla told her.

Caliria smiled and looked at her arm seeing the goosebumps as they were beginning to fade. "Yes... they were." She said finally. She looked at her again. "Is something wrong? You are awake earlier than normal."

"I heard the guards talking Caliria." Yssyla spoke. "The ugly ones. They said there are some powerful people coming soon. They said we would be the ones to entertain them and they would be coming to take us to the... to his personal quarters. They were very vulgar. They said they wanted to watch as the daughter of a powerful Vanari Regent was..."

Caliria took her hands and squeezed them. "They have said these things before Yssyla." She stated.

Caliria had fallen into a role of sorts since coming here only weeks ago. She was by far the oldest female to be here, though age really did not matter to the Vanari since they lived for thousands of years, but her name was what garnered the respect the other twenty-nine females showed to her. All of them were dark haired Vanari with the exception of Yssyla and two other young females. Three of the females were very nearly lost to them forever, their minds all but destroyed by continued use of the chemicals that the slavers used to force them to excrete their Alkay. They had been here the longest, two of them over a year, and Caliria was surprised they had lasted this long. She had only been here in this place for just short of two weeks, prior to that on an OSG slaver ship where she had been broken and used by the Eridiani men there. The first day she had arrived here the other females had begun turning to her for comfort and any kind of support. She was well known among the dark haired Vanari females and all of them had seen her face at some point on the Vidnews channels within the Empire. It was almost natural that they turn to her now and Caliria did her best to comfort them as much as she could and to remain positive though she knew their lives would never be the same again. She had lost count of the men who had used her since she had been taken, but she remained strong despite what they did to her and forced her to do. Twice now she and Yssyla had been forced to pleasure each other in front of paying customers, and while the men or sometimes women who witnessed this got their sick gratification from these acts, Caliria and the others also took comfort from how they could make each other feel. Yssyla Bon Tiarr was a stunning young woman of only twenty-one years old, her father a powerful businessman and member of the lower Board of Regents. She had been here for three months now and she was using the sexual favors she had to perform or endure as a means to keep her sanity. Caliria determined this after the first time they were forced to pleasure each other in front of customers. While the other Vanari females had gone out of their way to avoid her, thinking she was just whoring herself out to gain favor, Caliria knew differently and had become very close friends with her.

“It is different this time Caliria.” Yssyla said softly. “They are very nervous about these new people.”

Caliria looked at her. “Nervous? Why?”

“I heard them talking outside the door. The people coming here are Lycavorians from this Union that they so fear.” Yssyla told her.

“If they are coming here Yssyla then they are not like those who are in the majority.” She told her.

“Vanari Intelligence and my brother have told me they do not abide slavery of any kind in this Union. If these Lycavorians are from the Union then they are no better than the others who have forced us to do what they want.”

“We can always hope.” Yssyla said. “I always thought many of those who worked at the embassy on Austrova were very handsome. They would make strong husbands. I have heard they worship their wives like they are goddesses.”

Caliria smiled gently at her. “Yes I have heard that too.” She said reaching up to stroke Yssyla’s long blond hair. “But even if you were not here... you know as well as I your father... your entire family would never approve of that. You know how our people view Lycavorians and your family as well as mine have much political influence. They would never... your father would never allow it.”

Yssyla looked at her evenly. “After... after what we have been made to do here Caliria... if by the grace of the Prophets we ever do return home... I will not care what my family or my father wants. I will do as I wish.” She spoke firmly.

“Then hold onto that hope.” Caliria said.

“At least it will be with you.” Yssyla said softly moving to sit next to her on the bed and pressing close. “Many of the others simply go through the motions. At least with you we can take whatever pleasure we can gain from what we have to do and share it.”

Caliria nodded. “Yes we can. It will help to keep us strong and sane.” She answered.

“Do... do you think we will ever see home again Caliria?” Yssyla asked her as she took her arm and snuggled closer.

Caliria looked at her. “I have spent my life fighting odds...” She replied. “There is always hope Yssyla. There is always hope as long as we keep it alive.”

They both turned as the door to the large room unlocked and the rat faced Bo'yak guard pushed his way into the room with the same feral disgusting look on his face as he always had. Caliria sincerely hoped none of them would ever have to tolerate the attentions of these vile creatures.

“Time to go bitches!” He snarled at them. “You are going to entertain some Lycavorians this night, and all of them are hung like bulls! It will be fun to hear you squeal!”

Caliria rose to her feet and kept hold of Yssyla’s hand. “Be strong.” She whispered. “Be strong.”

They didn’t look at the grinning Bo'yak mercenary as they moved into the hallway and began to follow the second one down the steel gray corridor.

MENKLA TRANSPORT

TWENTY-TWO MINUTES FROM LANDING

“Eli... are you sure?” Andro asked her.

They stood apart from the others on the ship, Jomann standing behind Eliani, his body pressing against her back to provide support to her, and Eliani leaning back against him as if it was the most natural thing in the world to do. Sadi stood next to Andro with a look of horror on her face at what Eliani had just told them. Andro had called her from the cockpit only moments ago when she felt his emotions spike. They were standing towards the front of the transport; away from the others who occupied the passenger section of the MENKLA. The false crates were loaded and secured near the end of the ramp that would drop when they were on the ground.

Eliani nodded her head slowly. "I tried to tell you a few nights ago... just before the OSG assholes attacked." She stated softly. "And then after we talked to Resumar but with everything that was happening I forgot all about it. I'm sorry Andro. It is only a theory... it may very well be nothing at all."

"Do not be sorry arande." Andro told her gently. "You were unfocused and confused for a time as you sorted out your feelings. And you are right, it is only a theory, but it is the most feasible one I have heard or have been able to come up with myself and I have been making them up and tossing them out for over a week now within my head. Son vada carians... if it is true father will fly into an uncontrollable rage! He'll want to kill every Kavalian within the universe."

"It's not the Kavalians who would do it my love." Sadi spoke clutching his arm. "This is... this is your uncle."

Andro looked at her then. "You... you are right KertaGai. They are just a tool he is using to fulfill his perverse desires."

"Andro... could this be what they have been working towards all along?" Eliani asked softly. "If you think about it, and I have, trying to kill all of us... believing that they have killed father? And then sanctioning an attack on you by Brendi's OSG people. Why do that unless this is something like what they were planning all along?"

"Why use your mother Eliani?" Jomann asked now. "He has the blood of a Leonidas in his veins. Why would he need your mother to do this? If it is true."

Andro looked at Eliani, their eyes meeting for a long moment of silence and then she turned her head and looked up into his eyes. "She is the only remaining female heir to the last Elven King. The only remaining blood of original elven royalty." Eliani said finally.

"Yes... but your mother... Anja is also royalty Eli." Sadi spoke quickly.

Andro nodded his head. "But she is capable of insuring that it never happens because of her healing abilities and other skills." He said looking at Sadi. "And she does not harbor the same inbred morality that all female elves do. Since the time they first became a species under the Elder Mother's gaze."

"What... what do you mean Andro?" Jomann asked.

"It is one of the things that the Elder Mother showed me recently that even I did not know at the time." Andro said. "It is part of her history and it goes all the way back to when the elves first came into being on Elear. They were embroiled in a conflict with another species on Elear and that is where it was born in the beginning."

"What was born?" Jomann asked softly.

"The overpowering instinct to never take the life of a child growing within you." Eliani said softly as she leaned back against him even more in sorrow and looked at Andro. "This is when it started Andro?" She asked.

