Aviel took note of Nahko’s body reaction and looked at Dalis. He nodded his head to him, ignoring the fact that he obviously thought he had been summoned for another reason. He approached Dalis for the customary greeting. “Dalis Sulryn... a pleasure to meet you.” He said. “Nahko speaks highly of you.”

“Does she?” Dalis asked calmly as he stepped back refusing the greeting. “Why have you summoned me Filkiati Em'mor? I am a very busy man and you have pulled me away from an important government funded assignment to assist you in a school project for your autnaril.”

Nahko shook her head slightly at Dalis’s tone and action and she felt Aviel tense ever so slightly. She knew her husband well enough to know that he realized what was happening. She also knew him well enough to know that this would not deter him in what they were seeking. Dalis would just have to suffer with his feelings.

Aviel tilted his head to the side and moved closer to Dalis. He was taller than Dalis by at least several centimeters, and considerably much broader. And not one ounce of fat resided on Aviel’s body Nahko knew for certain. It was one of the things that had kept their relationship so intense and exciting through the years. He had always been fit and he maintained this fitness through the busiest of times.

“That is the reason Nahko gave to my Shivi... yes.” Aviel told him easily. “That is not the reason you are here however.”

Dalis looked at him unwilling to back down. “Then perhaps you can tell me why I am here?” He said.

Aviel motioned to the chair across from his desk. “Please sit down.” He said calmly as he walked around to his high backed chair. He did not sit down however, instead pulling a similar chair closer to the desk on his side. Nahko quickly settled into this chair and watched as Aviel then moved to his own chair. She was able to reach across and place her hand on his arm from where she sat, which she did without question.

“Nahko tells me that you are an expert on different species.” Aviel said as he sat down. “Specifically the different species found within the Alpha Quadrant of space.”

“So this is about a school project for your autnaril?” Dalis asked with a condescending tone.

“Do not be a hofiba Dalis!” Nahko snapped at him. (Fool)

“I am very busy and...” Dalis began.

Aviel interrupted his sentence with a much more forceful voice now as he leaned across his desk. “I am asking for your assistance on a classified government project Dalis Sulryn. If you do not wish to be involved because of your personal issues with my memamosal then please advise me of this now and I will find someone who will be interested in helping me. And then you can then return to your busy duties.”

Dalis looked at him. “What kind of project?” He asked quickly.

Aviel shook his head. “You must agree first.” He said. “You will be working with Nahko a great deal and if your emotions concerning Nahko are going to keep you from doing your job then you can leave now.” Aviel stared across the desk at him. “Nahko is not experiencing the Thirkuic Dalis Sulryn... and she never will if I have anything to say about it. The choice is yours Dalis Sulryn. Make it now please for I am very busy and I have no desire to take away from my Irral Shivi’s duties by having him call medical personnel because I kodonta you several times due to your disrespect of my memamosal.” (First Guard) (Struck)

Nahko felt a surge of love and passion course through her at Aviel’s words. He could be so very forceful when he wanted to be and he was decidedly possessive of her which she found to be unbelievably exciting and always had.

Dalis looked between Aviel and Nahko for a few moments then finally settled his eyes on Aviel. “You... you can not expect me to simply agree.” He said finally.

“I can and I do.” Aviel told him. “Are you up to the task or do I need to look for someone else?”

“There is no one else!” Dalis hissed. “No one knows what I know! What I have studied for centuries!”

“Then I ask again...” Aviel said. “Are you interested... or do I have Kotai return and escort you back to your office?”

“This is what you always wanted Dalis.” Nahko told him. “A chance to make a difference and craft your mark on history. It is up to you.”

Dalis looked at him for a long moment and then made up his mind. “What do you wish to know?” He asked.

“What can you tell me about the Alpha Quadrant?” Aviel asked. “More specifically, what can you tell me about the species known as Lycavorian?”

Dalis leaned forward in his chair. “They have a rather full and colorful history.” He told him still somewhat hesitant. “Most of our data comes from Class Nine Information Probes that we have seeded throughout the quadrant. They intercept open transmissions and monitor public channels as well as scan planets that are within its range.”

“They are not detected?” Aviel asked.

Dalis shook his head. “Most of them are made to look like whatever naturally occurring space phenomenon may reside in the sectors they are in. In some they look like space rocks. Others are made to look like naturally occurring comets that transit the sectors over a certain period of time and are always recording and monitoring. It is extremely unlikely that the species within the Alpha Quadrant would even give them a cursory glance. The probes then transmit their data to stationary Control Hubs much like the Pralors used to use. These Control Hubs correlate the data and send it to a PGN, a Primary Gathering Node where it is downloaded by one of our long range Sensor Arrays in orbit of our third moon. We did exchange information with the Pralor Science Division often because their Seed Missions would sometimes take them through different areas of space that we monitored as well. That ended when we...”

Aviel held up his hand. “That is not something you need to remind me about Dalis.” He said evenly. “Do not take this the wrong way but I’m not interested in hearing how you obtain the information. I am more interested in what you can tell me about Lycavorians. Do they have a governmental structure? Do they have a culture? Traditions? Are they militaristic? These are the things I want to know.”

Dalis looked between Nahko and him for a moment and then finally at Aviel. “May I ask why you are so interested in a species that the vast majority of our scientists and research people think are barbaric and beneath us?”

“Are they? Beneath us I mean?” Nahko asked.

Dalis shook his head quickly. “No. Not unless one is unwilling to accept the fact that they are different. They are no more barbaric than we once were. And in some cases still are.” He stated. “Simply because they are able to take the shape of an animal does not make them lesser beings.”

“Wait... take the shape of an animal?” Aviel asked him. “Are you saying they are shape shifters?”

Dalis shook his head once more. “Not in the true definition of the word... no. They can only assume one form. The main reason the Pralors used them in so many of their Seed Missions is because of their robust endurance. Lycavorians are able to shift their physical forms to that of a Kaldaka at will.” (Wolf)

“Kaldaka?” Nahko gasped. The kaldaka were an indigenous lifeform to Icarava and one of the few that the Darastrixi did not hunt for food and other material. They were a majestic species and many of the outlying cities and smaller towns worshiped the animals in some way.

Dalis nodded his head. “The change is nearly instantaneous and they retain fully their conscious mind while in this form. They are roughly equal in size to the Kaldaka that roam free on our northern and eastern continents, though there have been recorded instances of certain individual males of their species being quite immense while in their Kaldaka form. Some of their own historical reports have recorded Lycavorian males who are well over a meter tall at the shoulder and in excess of a hundred and fifty kilos. Size generally runs along their family bloodlines among their kind, so it is very rare for one to obtain this size.”

“Ithquenti!” Nahko rasped. “That is... that is huge.” (Gods)

Dalis nodded in agreement. “This unique ability gives them enormous control of their bodies and their senses and through the generations, evolution has allowed them to learn to use these skills while in their munthreki forms.” Dalis explained as he looked at the floor. He did not see the look Nahko gave to Aviel before he looked back up at Aviel. “And to answer your question Filkiati Aviel... yes. They have all of these things. A very solid, working and stable governmental structure. They have elected officials. Trade and Commerce.

Religion of many beliefs. There was a catalyst event that took place over three thousand years ago. This event... the death of a Daar that none of them knew existed... this inspired them to act. They are called the Lycavorian Union now and the deevdru of this Daar rules. They are the largest free society within the Alpha Quadrant if all of our information is accurate.” He told them. “And their recent history has become exceedingly interesting over the course of the last three decades.”

“Interesting how?” Aviel asked.

Dalis leaned back in his chair quickly and stopped talking. Nahko saw this and looked at Aviel quickly. “What is wrong?” She asked him.

“I have been forbidden to speak of these things by the head of the Elbakiw Sulevfu himself.” Dalis said. “It is the reason I am still a Junior Scholar, as if you did not know that already!”

Aviel looked taken aback. “I have no idea why you are still a Junior Scholar.” He told him honestly. “And why would the head of the Elbakiw Sulevfu forbid you to speak of the knowledge you have gained?”

Dalis looked at him intently. “You... you truly do not know?” He asked after a moment.

“You will find that if I say I do not know something... it is because I do not.” Aviel told him plainly. “I don’t proclaim to have all the answers as others of my position and standing do. I would rather have all the facts before I act or speak. Now... please tell me what you mean and forget anything my esteemed counterpart of the Elbakiw Sulevfu may have told you. I have far more authority than he does.”

Dalis looked at him. While he did not care in the least for Aviel Em'mor because he had stolen Nahko from him, he had to admit the man appeared to be completely honest. He decided that if he was going to suffer for what knowledge he held then he would do so after making sure this knowledge reached other ears.

“It begins over forty thousand years ago. A Pralor Seed mission that was caught in an uncharted Ion Storm and then crashed on the Lycavorian homeworld.” Dalis began. “On this City Ship was the Pralor Sumar.”

“Sumar?” Aviel spoke. “I have heard that name mentioned.”

Dalis nodded. “At the time of the mission he was their current Chief Elder. He was also the leader and the Praetorian Warriors.”

Aviel glanced at Nahko quickly and then back to Dalis. “A Praetorian you say?”

Dalis nodded. “By all accounts he was the very first of the Praetorians and the most powerful.” He replied.

“Please Dalis... continue.” Aviel said. “And leave nothing out.”

“They...”

Aviel and Nahko listened for nearly two hours, completely enraptured, as Dalis gave them a very watered down history lesson of the Alpha Quadrant in general and the Lycavorian people specifically. He was able to plug in several of the Data Scrolls that he carried in his bag and give them visual facts and understanding. Aviel and Nahko asked pointed questions, though Nahko’s questions were more in regard to the Hadarian species known to be healers. She knew there were species out there among the stars that could heal with a simple touch, but she had never met one before. According to Dalis the Hadarian people surpassed even the Pralors when it came to healing because of this mutative radiation that surrounded their homeworld and the Pralor physicians were amazing in their skill. Aviel however was far more concerned with the political side of the equation. He asked very detailed questions in regards to the structure of the Alpha Quadrant and its many governments. This surprised Dalis somewhat as he had never really thought of Nahko’s husband as being very cerebral in his actions, but he answered the questions to the best of his ability and knowledge.

It was Aviel who finally stopped Dalis from continuing by holding up his hand suddenly and getting to his feet. He moved to the massive window and looked out over the city, the suns now beginning to set in the distance. Nahko waited patiently for she had seen her husband do this many times in the past. Aviel Em'mor was methodic and meticulous in his actions and his thoughts. He did nothing without having as much information as he could possibly get. Many of his colleagues considered him too conventional in his views because of the way he processed information, but his decisions had always ended up being the right ones in the end. This is why he was so respected and why he was next in line for an appointment to the Sulevfu di Woiewewr. Nahko saw Dalis open his mouth to speak but she held up her hand quickly indicating he should wait. Surprisingly... he did as she told him.

After several long moments Aviel turned to Dalis once more. “This is what they forbid you to speak of?” He asked finally. “Why?”

Dalis leaned back in his chair. "I did not question the head of the Elbakiw Suleyfu." He replied. "Not if I wanted to keep my position."

"Indulge me." Aviel told him.

"I can only assume it is because they wanted to protect the integrity of our data. They also did not want to draw attention from the Scourge." Dalis answered him. "You know as well as I how they viewed the Pralor people in general and the Praetorians in particular. They have attempted to purge any historical records or knowledge of the Praetorians wherever they go."

Aviel nodded his head. "Yes." He said. "The Scourge do not know what you have told me?"

Dalis shook his head immediately. "They do not have access to our long range Probe Data."

Aviel nodded. "Yes... that was in the Charter Agreement that the Suleyfu di Woieuwr signed. They would not be granted access to any of our Military or Intelligence data."

"Why would they need official access when enough of our own people are willing to give it to them?" Dalis spat without thinking. His eyes grew wide and he rose to his feet in dread of what he had just said. "I... forgive me Filkiati Aviel, I..."

Aviel held up his hand stopping him. "Do not ask to be forgiven for what you feel Dalis Sulryn." He spoke. "Not when I agree with you."

Dalis looked surprised as he settled back into his chair. He glanced at Nahko before his eyes turned back to Aviel. "They do not care about the histories of other species. I imagine that is why they still allow us to conduct the research. Or have not tried to impede it anyway." Dalis finished.

Nahko caught a glimpse of something out of the corner of her eye from where she sat and she turned to the huge monitor on the wall that Dalis had been displaying some of the images they had gotten from the Probe Data. She bolted to her feet quickly.

"Wait!" She gasped as she moved to the monitor controls. "Stop it!" She exclaimed as both Aviel and Dalis came to their feet while she stabbed down on the controls.

"Nahko... what is it?" Aviel asked her sensing her growing excitement just as he had when she first entered his office.

"I saw something!" She stammered out the words. "An image on the monitor!" The many pictures were flashing back in the order they had been displayed as Aviel moved closer to her.

"Dalis... where did these images you have come from?" Aviel asked.

"Most came from intercepted broadcasts of their public channels." Dalis answered him. "The Lycavorians call it their Netnews. I don't know what you could have seen that would mean anything Nahko. Much of their more important information is very closely guarded and never allowed on their public channels."

"Here!" Nahko announced as she stopped the image. "Here!"

Aviel moved up behind her and saw what she was so excited about. "Enhance it Nahko!" He told her quickly.

Nahko adjusted the controls until the image was perfectly clear. It was an image of two tall and very muscular men on a beach of white sand with two obsidian colored Vrrarhoinpa moving on either side of them. One of the Vrrarhoinpa was utterly enormous in size and looked to be incredibly muscular and fit. He was obviously male, while the smaller one was female, but still above average in size than what they were used to seeing for a female Vrrarhoinpa. The two men seemed to be deep in conversation and the next image was even closer and showed their faces clearly. Aviel looked at Dalis.

"These two men?" He asked. "Who are they?"

Dalis moved closer and looked at the image. "The one on the left is who I was telling you about earlier. The Lycavorian Daar. The son of the murdered Daar that so inspired their species with his actions. His name is Martin Leonidas. He is also the direct descendant of the Praetorian Sumar. His jennulti autgabin." Dalis answered. (Greater Grandson)

"And the other?" Nahko asked softly.

"That is his first born son." Dalis answered. "His oldest child. The Crown Prince he is called."

"Aviel... his eyes." Nahko spoke softly. "Look at his eyes!"

Aviel nodded his head. "Yes... I see them."

Nahko turned her head to look at him. "Eyes of Azure Blue." She said softly. "That is what she said. Just as her right one."

Aviel looked at Dalis again. "What do we know of him? This Crown Prince. And the father." He asked.

Dalis looked at him strangely. "There is... there is not very much known about him aside from his name. Unlike his father and his Vrrarhoinpa, whose name is Torma by the way, the son and his Vrrarhoinpa are very much introverted. She is the hianag of Torma and that is why their coloring is so similar. Her name is Elynth if I remember correctly. They do not make public appearances."

"Why do they... why do they appear so different?" Nahko asked. "She is much larger and more muscular than most female Vrrarhoinpa I have seen. And he is one of the largest I have ever seen among our kind."

"These Darastrixi were part of one of the Seed Missions that we allowed the Pralors to conduct with our kind." Dalis answered. "They apparently developed names for the different characteristics of our kind. The father is the product of what they call a Heavy Horn father and a Firespitter mother."

Aviel looked at him. "The Ixen Darastrixi? From the Western Realm?"

Dalis nodded. "And the Osear Darastrixi from the high mountains."

"They have never cross bred before!" Nahko exclaimed. "They do not even care for each other! This is... this is what a child of the two would look like?"

Dalis nodded again. "Quite impressive if you ask me." He said. "His size alone would instill dread in many of our kind."

"She takes... she has many of his traits." Nahko said. "She is the only offspring of this Torma and his mate?"

Dalis shook his head. "If memory serves me correctly they have had three clutches of eggs. All of their offspring are bound to one of the Daar's children within the Etheric Realm."

Aviel looked at him. "You are joking?" He said.

"Not at all." Dalis answered. "Torma's memamosal, Isheeni is her name; she is bound to the Daar's favored mate. One of their daughters to another of his mates. Only his son and his Vrrarhoinpa Elynth avoid the public gatherings. The rest are not so private."

"If the UrIkrisir Mamiss discover this... they will not be happy." Nahko said. "They have discouraged crossbreeding among our kind."

"The history of the Darastrixi in the Alpha Quadrant is very spotty at best." Dalis said. "I do know their history is closely guarded by those who know. The Daar, his son and perhaps a few others."

"These Darastrixi have no Elder?" Aviel asked.

Dalis shook his head. "They do. A Tilabil Dask. She sits on their governmental board. Again... the Vrrarhoinpa of the Daar and others are well known, but they have intentionally guarded the past of the Darastrixi. I do not know why. The Daar and his son especially."

Nahko looked at Aviel. "It is what Vrelvel Sargti would do Aviel." She said softly. "It would be their sworn duty and they would do so fervently."

Dalis looked between them. "Vrelvel Sargti?" He asked. "What do you know of Talon Guardians?"

"Tell me more about the son." Aviel said. "Where is this image from?"

Dalis leaned closer and looked at the bottom of the image. "Yes... this was taken from the shore of the son's island home. Probably by one of what they call their Netnews people with a long range image capture tool. He is very highly regarded among their military as a warrior unparalleled. Combined with his Vrrarhoinpa it is said that they are quite unstoppable in battle. Much like their fathers. His name is..."

"Androcles." Nahko whispered aloud.

Dalis's eyes grew wide now. "What? Wait... yes... yes that is his name. How did you know that?"

Aviel turned to look at Dalis. "Dalis Sulryn... you are hereby promoted to the title and rank of Senior Scholar of the Elbakiw Sulevfu. All of the privileges this rank entitle you too are now yours. I am officially reassigning you to my staff as of this moment."

"What? Wait..." Dalis gasped. "You... you can do that? Why? What is going on?"

"How old is this image Dalis?" Aviel asked him ignoring his barrage of questions.

Dalis shook his head and looked at the image once more. "The Probe Data from the Alpha Quadrant is only transmitted once every five years. Yes the time stamp on this indicates it was taken just before the last Data Probe transmission. Five years ago. The year was 2570 following the practice of marking everything with the date reference used within the corresponding sector of space. This was during a lull in what the Lycavorians called the Evolli War. A minor species, the Evolli, took offense at some perceived action taken against them by the Union government and invaded several Lycavorian Union worlds in retaliation. They killed many thousands of the Union's citizens before the Union was able to mobilize and meet them in battle. This image is time stamped as their calendar month of November 2569. Six weeks after a major battle where both the Daar and his son were severely injured. As were their Vrrarhoinpa. It is the same battle where many of the Darastrixi within the Union fell in battle and many more were saved. Details of the battle were not released at the time of the Probe Transmission."

"This is five years old?" Nahko gasped looking at him.

Dalis nodded. "The Elbakiw Sulevfu does not deem it prudent to transmit Probe data more than that." He said. "A mistake if you ask me but..." He looked at her. "How did you know his name Nahko?"

"The image states he is twenty-two." Nahko spoke looking at Aviel. "Just at the time Laren told you they became strong enough to send more directed messages and..."

Aviel nodded his head. "Yes. Roughly the same time she said the Vrelvel Sargti were chosen."

"He would be twenty-seven now." Nahko said softly. "The same age as Laren and Ladur. That is too much of a coincidence Aviel."

"Who are Laren and Ladur?" Dalis asked. "And how do you know so much about this Androcles?"

Aviel turned to Dalis again. "I am authorizing you to access the Probe Data Reservoir and conduct another download Dalis. Can you do this without anyone knowing about it?"

Dalis looked at him with wide eyes. "Why would I want to?" He asked. "What is going on here? And why does Nahko know the name of a Lycavorian Prince from a species we have never encountered before?"

"Do you believe strongly in your faith Dalis Sulryn?" Aviel asked.

"What?" Dalis exclaimed. "The teachings and will of Zezhuanth have always been my guide... unlike many of our people. Of course I do!"

Nahko looked at Aviel now. "If we ask him to do this husband we must show him the reasons for our actions. He must be allowed to know."

Aviel met her eyes. "They will not be happy that someone else knows about them." He said. "I do not wish to make them angry Nahko."

"Nor do I... but I think we give them too little credit." Nahko said. "They must know that in order to help them we have to allow a few others to know that they exist."

Aviel nodded his head slowly after a moment. "I know."

"What are you talking about?" Dalis demanded. "Allow me to know who exists?"

Aviel looked at Dalis. "Are you free this evening Dalis?" He asked.

"Free to do what?" He inquired.

"To make a trip north." Aviel answered. "You wish answers... fine I will give them to you. But can you access the Probe Data without anyone knowing about it?"

Dalis nodded. "Yes. It is not checked until one week before the normal download. The Probe Data for the Alpha Quadrant is not due to be downloaded for another two months." He answered. "After that it will be noticed that it was downloaded before schedule."

"Two months." Aviel said. He gripped Nahko's arm. "We have our window now Nahko. We must act before the Data is normally downloaded. It will be discovered then and it will put all of us in danger."

Nahko turned to look at him. "Then we have two months to insure that they are united with their Isthasyi and Myvishi of the Iejir."

Aviel nodded. "I must remain here. Another trip to the north by me will be taken note of by others. You and Dalis will go this evening. Talk to them... explain to them what we have discovered. Make them understand this needs to happen."

Nahko nodded. "I don't believe we will have much trouble convincing them." She said.

"Convincing who?" Dalis demanded. "Will someone tell me what is going on and what I have suddenly become involved in?"

Aviel looked at him. "You wished to make your mark on history Dalis Sulryn?" He said. "You will now get the chance. And a mark on history it will be. A very large mark."

APO PRIME DURCUNUSAAN AIRFIELD NORTHEAST OF ROYAL ISLAND ESTATE

Andro stood with Marci along the edge of the tarmac, his STRIKER in the background being prepped for take off. He read slowly from the data pad Marci had given him while she gave him the high points.

“... names of seven others similar in duties to this Banak fellow.” Marci told him as she gazed across the calm waters of the lake. “Banak wasn’t due to report for another three days. It was enough time for Sheva to contact him back and acknowledge her new orders. We have his COM equipment now and the coordinates he was sending his reports.”

Andro looked up from the pad. “And?”

Marci shook her head. “It’s a dead area of The Wilds. No habitable planets within range.”

“So he was transmitting to a ship?” Andro said.

Marci nodded. “Looks that way. And it is not due to be there for three more days.”

“Moran?” Andro asked her.

Marci shrugged her shoulders. “Anything is possible Andro.” She replied. “If this secret program is as centralized and secret a program as Yuri says... you think he would send just any ship to collect the reports? Even if he still has not gained the control he wants over whatever forces are siding with him. Armetus says Moran is an anal fool. A control freak.”

“It would be a big risk for him to take.” Andro said. “He’d be leaving himself open to the chance that whoever he sent decided he or she didn’t want to be part of his little gathering and took the data to Narice. Or us.”

Marci nodded in agreement. “Exactly.” She said. “You trust Yuri on this Andro?”

Andro nodded instantly in response. “You have not seen her Marci. I have. This is not the same woman that we all grew up hearing about. And there is no way she would allow hers and Pa’cour’s daughter to remain with me if she was playing us for fools.”

“Are you sure?” Marci asked him.

“Yes. It’s... it’s hard to explain to others but...” Andro began.

Marci reached out and touched his arm. “Don’t bother.” She said with a smile. “Having you try to explain something even you do not fully understand would give someone like me a colossal headache.”

“Thanks for the vote of confidence.” He said with a grin.

“You’re learning.” Marci said. “Once you have all of your mates with you... they’ll get you to come around. At least make it so you don’t fumble for words anyway.” She said with a laugh.

Andro smiled. “I do fumble a lot don’t I?” He said.

“Not as much since you wised up and pulled your head out of your mida and finally claimed Sadi.” Marci spoke. “With Ne’Veha and Carisia and the others helping her... they have refined you some. Give them a few more years and you just might be presentable enough to go out in public. Took your mothers nearly a decade with your father if what your grandmother says is true.”

Andro laughed gently and nodded his head. Marci had a way of saying things that could make him laugh and put him at ease. It was one of the reasons they worked so well together. He held up the pad and gave it back to her. “What do you recommend?”

“Let me pick up the others.” Marci said. “I don’t like the idea of rogue vampire control officers out there among us. Neither will Armetus. I’ll pick them up... find out who they are controlling and compare the data. If we move fast enough we can roll up the entire network before they even know it’s been compromised. And if the transmission vectors are all the same, well then we can be pretty sure it will lead right back to Moran.”

“How fast can you implement it?” Andro asked.

“I already have three teams standing by.” Marci replied. “Three more are enroute back to Apo Prime right now. They get in this evening. I’ll lead the seventh team. If you give me the go ahead... we’ll hit them first thing in the morning.”

Androcles didn’t hesitate. “Do it.” He told her.

“You realize they are probably Union citizens.” Marci said looking at him. “If it gets out that we took them and failed to give them due process there will be hell to pay.”

“They will get due process.” Andro told her. “They will get what is due them as traitors to the Union. Anyone who doesn’t like it can kiss my princely ass!”

Marci looked at him with a grin. “Same set up as Banak then?”

Andro nodded. “Dori and Sheva should be getting ready to move where they are. If they don’t get out undetected then Moran will know within a few hours anyway and pull the plug. Or at the very least try to warn his people here. I don’t want them going underground Marci. We may never find them if they do.”

Marci tucked the data pad back into her belt pouch. “I’ll see to it.” She said.

“Now tell me about Icho.” Andro asked her.

“Deia is keeping him on his toes.” Marci answered. “She has a come back for everything he has brought up and so far she has spanked him.”

“No more mention of Sadi or her past?” Andro asked.

Marci looked at him. “Are you kidding? He barked up that tree once and nearly lost his balls. The Netnews practically crucified him over his actions after that briefing of his you took over and opened the floor to questions. Sadi’s popularity went through the ceiling after that and it remains untouchable, just like your grandmother. Icho is many things but he isn’t stupid. He won’t go after Sadi anymore.”

“Good. Then he will focus on me, father and Deia.” Andro said.

Marci nodded. “That’s what Nesa and Armetus think as well. Probably more your father and you since you won’t be here to speak out. Deia is already planning for that though. I truly wouldn’t want to face your tenna in the political arena. She’s vicious.”

“Still no luck on his ties to Kavalian agents?” Andro asked.

Marci shook her head slowly. She was the only one Androcles had filled in on his full suspicions about Icho and she had been working that angle very carefully as well. “Like I said he is no fool.” Marci told him. “We have to be very careful about that and whatever ties he has he has covered very well.”

“You still think I am right?” Andro asked her.

Marci nodded quickly. “He knows too much and the coincidences are just too many. He’s dirty Andro... he’s just real good at covering his tracks. He’s had years to prep for this and with the Kavalians helping him... he’s done it well.”

“Keep at it.” Andro said. “If we can expose that traitorous worm before the election is actually held we can save Tenna Deia a lot of sleepless nights.”

“Agreed.” Marci said. “Oh...” She reached into the small hand pouch she carried over her shoulder and handed over the long flip top box. “Vengal wanted me to give these to you. He picked them up for you last night. I peeked.”

Andro looked at her as he took the box. “And?”

“You may fumble your words quite a bit... but you certainly get your point across in other ways.” Marci told him with a smile. “They are beautiful Andro. Truly beautiful. I take it they are from the original stone you went off and removed from Vekhin Three?”

Andro nodded as he opened the box and gazed at the six identical rings. Each was made from the very rare and nearly priceless jewel ore Auramite. The jewel ore resided on only one planet in the known galaxy and sat in the mouth of an active volcano that was continuously erupting. There was only one way to reach it and that was to enter the volcano during one of its very short lulls after erupting. There were only minutes between eruptions and they were unable to be charted and timed for they were never the same twice in a row. Even advanced mining probes designed for high heat atmospheres could not stand the molten lava for more than a few seconds. You could have ten minutes or you could have only one. Hundreds of men and women had tried to extract the immaculate green jewel ore through the years and to Marci’s knowledge only one of them had ever succeeded. That man stood beside her and to this day no one knows exactly how he did it except for Elynth. And she would never tell.

Each ring was nearly translucent in its teal green color. The teal jewel ore was nearly indestructible after it had been refined into its current translucent state. Delicately carved words, obviously inscribed by a Master Craftsmen, decorated the face of each band. In the center of each ring, surrounded by glittering white gold leaves, was the shimmering single coral red colored gem that was the Heart of a Dragon. No doubt Andro had broken down his piece of the pendant into much smaller ones to fit each ring. This would have required that a senior dragon who was skilled in this art be involved in crafting the rings, but given Andro's status as a Talon Guardian and his affinity for dragons as a whole, Marci doubted he had trouble finding one to help him.

"Better not let your mothers know how you got the Auramite." Marci said with a smile. "They'll give you more grief than they gave your father for getting those Rilian Diamonds for them."

Andro chuckled. "Yes... they won't be happy about that."

"When are you going to give them?" Marci asked.

Andro closed the box and looked at her. "I hadn't given much thought to that." He said with a grin.

"When Inamarno is finally back with us I think."

Marci nodded. "So what happens now?" She asked him.

"Now? Now I go to Dreamland... gather SPARTA'S WRATH and Miranda and with any luck deal with Moran and Dante." Andro answered. "After that... it's off to the Beta Quadrant and the Vanari."

"Yuri should be back from meeting with your father soon no?" Marci asked.

Andro nodded. "Yes."

"What was so important that she had to meet with him and couldn't tell you?" Marci asked.

Andro shook his head. "I don't know. But whatever it was... it was important enough for her to face my father even knowing how he feels about her."

"Don't know if that is brave or stupid." Marci said with a smile.

Andro chuckled. "We shall see." He said tucking the box into his belt. "Keep me in the loop on our P1s Marci. And keep your fingers crossed that we can end this before it begins."

"Avoi to that." Marci said looking at him. "Try not to cause too much destruction will you."

Androcles smiled. "No promises." He said leaning over to kiss her cheek. "Watch your back."

Marci nodded as she motioned to the Lifter car in the distance. "I always do." She said as the car gained power and moved for her location.

Andro nodded his head and turned to begin jogging to where the STRIKER was also gaining power. Marci waited for the car to pull up and she climbed into the front seat where the red haired vampire female from the Café job sat behind the controls.

"Well?" She asked.

Marci looked at her. "We go in the morning." She said.

The young woman smiled. "Good. I hate traitors!" She hissed as she put the Lifter in motion.

Marci nodded. "You aren't the only one that is for sure." She said softly.

HIGH COVEN SPACE

RIKVOS COLONY

XUKUTH ZOTRETH (HEART STRIKE) FACILITY

Saba Juconi sat in the chair at the small table and stared at Dorian as he stood to the side of the front window, his dark brown and cobalt colored eyes scanning the exterior of the house with practiced ease. Over the course of the day Cazar had made contact with their friends and all of them had moved to their home in the last few hours under cover of darkness. While all of them were uncomfortable around the heavily armed Lycavorians throughout the house, not to mention the half breed Immortal/Vampire female that seemed to be everywhere, they were holding it together and remaining calm. Saba turned when she saw Sheva move down the stairs into the main living room and exchange words with the younger half breed woman. The young woman, Onera was her name, nodded and headed up the stairs. Sheva spotted her and with a bright smile she made her way easily through the throng of bodies not spread out across the floor and into the kitchen area.

"Mother?" Sheva asked as she settled into the chair across from her. "Are you ok?"

Saba reached across the table without thought and took Sheva's hands in hers. "I am still trying to grasp that my only child is here with me once more. That she risks so much for us. And that she travels in such company."

Sheva almost blushed under her deep tan. "You are my parents mother. Once I found out you and father were alive nothing would have kept me from coming to get you."

Saba turned her head and looked to where Dorian was standing again. "And did your new Du'ased m'ranndii agree with your actions?"

Sheva smiled gently. "Yes mother." She answered. "Probably more than you might think. Dori... Dori and the Leonidas family believe deeply in family mother. They are not so different than us in many ways."

Saba shook her head slowly. "He is... he is so large Sheva." She stated finally.

Sheva glanced over to where Dorian was standing and felt the familiar rush of sexual energy she always felt when looking at him. "You have no idea momma." She said.

Saba turned back to her. "You have... you have shared blood while...?"

Sheva nodded her head. "Many times." She answered. "And it is wonderfully divine each time mother." She squeezed her mother's hands. "I love him mother. With all that I am. And he loves me."

Saba nodded her head. "Yes... I can see that every time you look at him. Every time he looks at you. His eyes... they are so..."

"Different?" Sheva said.

Saba shook her head. "They are beautiful." She said. "I just... for so many years your father and I wondered about you. What you were doing. If you were in good health. We thought we were protecting you. Now... now you return here." Saba reached across and placed her palm on Sheva's cheek. "So beautiful. So fit. And the Blessed Wife to a son of King Leonidas. It is certainly quite a lot to take in and absorb. And you return to us in order to protect us when it is we who should be protecting you."

Sheva shook her head and squeezed her mother's hands. "It is as it should be." Sheva told her. "I did not... I did not believe in faith before I met Dori mother. When the Evolli War began and I saw Lycavorians give their lives to save the vampires that were fighting beside them I began to question what it was I was doing. Nothing made sense anymore. The reasons they gave me no longer made sense. I was assigned to Dorian when he was born mother. Isabella was... she was suffering from Darpia Syndrome and Queen Anja and her sisters devised a way using the Kavalian growth serums to insure Dorian survived." Sheva looked at Dorian once more. "He grew rapidly until he is as you see him now. He makes me melt just holding me in his arms mother. He has since the very beginning. He is different though... like Androcles and their father. His Etheric abilities are beyond magical and he has all the wisdom and knowledge of his father within his mind. Just as Androcles does. He is bonded to a dragon, Ryner, and he waits for us at the ship we have."

Saba looked at Dorian. "He has only been in this world for a few months?" She asked.

Sheva nodded. "Physically yes... but he was born fully aware of everything around him. Just as Androcles was. And he was bonded with Ryner before he came into this life. It is all very difficult to explain. Even Dori cannot explain it all. What courses through him is almost too much to comprehend. But he is mine mother and I am his."

Saba turned and looked at her daughter. "I have never... you have never spoken with such profound emotion in your words Sheva." She said.

Sheva nodded and smiled. "It wasn't until I admitted my love for Dorian that I finally came to realize that there are many things out there I will never understand. Many things that will make no sense to me... but it does not mean they do not exist."

Saba squeezed her hands. "I would very much like to speak with Dorian when we are free of this place. When things are calm and we can have a civilized conversation."

Sheva smiled. "We will." She said. "We..."

They both turned when the door to the front of the home opened quickly and Sheva saw Deion and Nara duck inside. Dorian quickly shut the door as Cazar came down the stairs with Onera behind him. Sheva rose and moved quickly into the living room area and up beside Dorian with her mother in tow.

"So?" Dorian asked his brother and sister.

"We scouted all the way to the western side of the settlement. It's clear all the way to the treeline." Deion said. "But we need to move now."

"The sun will be up in two and a half hours." Nara spoke in agreement. "We should be well gone by then Dori."

Cazar looked at Dorian. “We will have perhaps ninety minutes once we are due at work before they send someone to inquire of our whereabouts.” He said. “And with the others also not appearing they will move quickly.”

Dorian nodded. “Then we go. Now.” He decided. “Deion... you and Nara take point. We will follow by the numbers and keep the others between us.” He turned to Sheva. “Sheva... you and your mother get the others ready to move. Your father and I will move together in front of them, you and your mother behind them. Keep them quiet and moving.”

“Come mother. We will get the others ready.” Sheva said pulling her towards the small groups of men and women.

Cazar looked at Dorian. “You risked much coming here.” He said. “And then staying to help the others.”

Dorian met his eyes. “I would risk everything for Sheva.” He said without pause. “You are her parents. That risk is worth it.”

Onera stepped up to Dorian and Cazar. “Where do you wish me?” She asked him.

“I want you to bring up the rear of the column.” He said without hesitation.

“The rear?” Onera gasped. “I should be in the front with Deion and Nara!”

Dorian shook his head. “No. I want you in the rear.”

“Why?” Onera demanded.

Dorian looked at her. “Because if they discover we are gone sooner than we think I want you in the rear to make sure they don’t catch us.”

Onera took a breath and understood what he wanted. It was not because he did not trust her... he was giving her these orders because he did trust her and her skills. “Forgive me... I...”

Dorian stepped closer to her while Cazar watched and he saw Dorian’s eyes narrow slightly and become hard flints of color. Onera stepped back in surprise at the look in his eyes. “And if you ever question my orders again I will have Androcles send you back to your mother and father in two shakes of your ass. You read me?”

Onera stood there for a moment surprised at the forceful tone of his voice. Her father’s words came rushing back to her in that instant.

“They are like ghosts in the night Onera. You will be but a child in skill compared to them Dalharil. Listen to them. Learn from them. They will teach you things your mother and I could never teach you. Remember, even the son Dorian, they have the memories and wisdom and knowledge of three or four lifetimes of battle within them. Inherited from their father. They may not look or act like it at times, but you could never match them in single combat. Be wise and learn what they will teach you. They will make you a warrior equal to themselves if you do.”

Onera bowed her head to Dorian then. “I apologize.” She said. “You are right.”

The hardness in Dorian’s eyes faded away instantly and he smiled at her. “And never apologize.” He said. “It’s very un-Immortal like. At least that is what Tir’ut tells me.”

Onera looked at him and couldn’t help but burst out into a soft laugh. Dorian Leonidas was a very strange man she realized. And very easy on the eyes to look at. As was Sheva. Onera blinked as these thoughts raced through her head and she shook her head quickly. Why did she think of both of them in such a manner? She watched as Dorian moved off with Cazar Juconi beside him and her dark eyes cut to where Sheva was talking with one of the other families, her mother beside her. Onera took a deep breath to calm her heart. Perhaps coming here she would also learn about other things as well she thought. She would not hesitate in that regard and quite amazingly, Onera found herself hoping it happened with both of them.

Yes... her father was right. She could learn so much from these men and women and perhaps even learn things she had yet to experience. Onera felt an odd flush course through her at this thought and she enjoyed the way it felt. Perhaps she would discover far more than her mother realized by coming here.

And that did not frighten Onera in the least.

They were alternating sprinting ahead of Dorian and the others to scout their path. Deion took after his brothers and was considerably larger than most Lycavorians in wolf form. He did not come close to matching Androcles or their father in size, but he was thickly muscled and his fur was sleek and shiny black in color over the corded muscles and bone. Deion was slightly larger than his brothers who were not pureblood, but as with all the Leonidas children, that did not matter to him in the least. He tipped the scales at two hundred and eighty-six pounds in wolf form, but he was exceptionally fast and agile. His twin Nara matched their mother in size, being much more muscular while in her wolf form, and nearing a hundred and forty pounds. Deion teased her often saying she was fat because she weighed only a hundred and eighteen pounds when not in wolf form. Nara took it in the good nature it was meant for she knew Deion would always have her back and never cease to be protective of her.

Being twins made them far closer than normal siblings but being blessed with the power of a Praetorian made their connection to each other ten fold more powerful. They didn't hesitate to share everything with each other no matter what it was. Much like Fedor and Eirene, siblings they looked forward to meeting, they could tell when the other was happy or in pain. Deion was the hammer and Nara was the anvil as they had begun calling each other. His sheer power was more than hers, but her control was much more exact and focused. This would only grow as they grew older they knew, but there was no doubt that Nara was Deion's perfect match as a Praetorian Mage and calming influence on her twin.

The one thing Nara lacked that Deion excelled at was the ability to be aware of every thread of life around her. She focused on tracking her twin as he scouted ahead and insuring the area in front of her was clear. She tended to focus too completely on what was in front of her, and this is what allowed the two vampires to close on her from the sides as she squatted next to the large tree. They were upon her before she smelled them, experienced hunters, knowing right away she was Lycavorian. They came at her from downwind on her flanks and the first one that blurred past her knocked her weapon from her hands. The second blurred by her and Nara felt the impact of the solid weapon butt against the back of her head. The pain flashed in her mind and she felt her body propelled forward where she smashed face first into the ground in a cloud of dirt and dried leaves.

"Well... well..." The cruel male voice echoed in her head as she tried to gain her senses back. "Look what we have here Lanor. A pretty little Lycavorian bitch."

Nara flipped over onto her back, her mind still foggy, keeping her from focusing.

"A pretty Lycavorian bitch who shouldn't be here Galag." The second voice echoed.

Nara could smell their bodies and she wanted to gag at their stench. She shook her head once more and her eyes focused more and she could see them. They were much larger than her and wore uniforms of an earth tone. She could see traces of blood around both their lips and knew they had been out hunting and feeding on wild animals.

"How did you get here little bitch?" The one called Lanor asked as he moved around her.

"Answer the question bitch!" Galag barked just before he blurred and used his foot to savagely kick Nara in the side.

To her credit Nara didn't cry out as the brutal pain lanced up her side and back and she rolled over into a protective ball. She could not reveal what they were doing. She could not give away the position of the others as close as they were for it would cause their mission to fail. Her thoughts were still too muddled to focus enough and call for Deion within Mindvoice, the pain adding to the confusion.

"She's got a tight little body Lanor." Galag spoke. "We should take advantage of that."

"I haven't had a good piece of Lycavorian pussy in decades." Lanor agreed. "She looks really tight too."

Then Lanor blurred and Nara couldn't avoid the booted foot that smashed into her head, snapping her body around violently until she impacted the base of the large tree she had been squatting next to. She landed in a sitting position, pain wracking her nerve endings and causing her body to cry out in agony.

"What do you say little Lycavorian bitch?" Lanor goaded her. "We are going to have our way with you before we take you to our Commander. We are going to fuck you silly before we find out how you got here and what you are doing. What do you say to that?"

"No!" The male voice echoed sharply among the trees around them, both men whirling around to see the large Lycavorian behind them with savage, near glowing yellow wolf eyes.

Each of the men had only one thought in their minds. One thought that rushed to the forefront in their minds. How had this Lycavorian snuck up on them so easily? It was the only thought either of them would ever have again for Deion Leonidas struck brutally, without any mercy or remorse for the blows and insults they had reigned upon his beloved twin sister. The two vampires were experienced soldiers and hunters and both of them began to move within seconds of Deion appearing. It would not save them.

With a savage wolf growl from deep within his chest Deion surged forward just as Lanor began to blur to his right. Deion's right arm snapped out seemingly without rhyme or reason and impacted Lanor squarely in the chest. The power of the blow was devastating due to the anger and the retribution that fueled it and Lanor felt several ribs snap like twigs as his body felt like it impacted a steel wall. His legs flew out from under him and he was lifted into the air and then dropped quite roughly onto the ground beneath him. Deion didn't even pause in his motion and drove straight for where Galag was frozen in place with shock.

He had felt Nara's reaction the moment it happened and was turning to return to his twin before she had even fallen to the ground in front of her that first time. Sensing her confusion and fear Deion had drawn upon all the considerable power and speed within his wolf form and raced to his beloved twin's aide. He had arrived to see her against the tree, bloody and in pain, and this had been all it took for him to react. Deion loved Nara. She was his twin sister and his closest friend. They did everything together, never leaving each other out of activities. It had been this way since they were small children. Now they both held the power of a Praetorian within them and Deion called upon this without question. He would make these animals pay for injuring and insulting his beloved sister.

Galag had time to look down on the ground and see Lanor withering in agony and then look back up. His eyes flew open in horror when he saw Deion was already upon him. They grew even wider when he saw the eight inch long Etheric knife take shape around Deion's clenched fist and then that Etheric knife was stabbing it's way into his chest. He grunted in terrible pain as the Etheric knife sliced through his heart and lungs and Deion's eyes flared for an instant and he solidified the Etheric weapon within his chest. Galag's legs twitched violently as the Etheric knife held him suspended off the ground for an instant. Deion pulled the knife free with a growl and he watched as Galag's body dropped to the earth at his feet. Deion whirled in time to see Lanor trying to struggle to his feet to defend himself. With barely a blink Deion unleashed three Etheric diamonds from his right hand. They crossed the distance between the two men in the blink of an eye. The first struck just above Lanor's elbow and blew off his lower arm. The second impacted his upper chest and blasted a gaping hole in his shoulder which took the remaining portion of his arm with it. The third struck as his body was twisting from the impact of the first two diamonds and drove completely through his left side to blow out his right side. As the Etheric diamond exited his body it took with it nearly all of his internal organs, vast amounts of blood splashing wetly on the ground all around him.

Deion didn't pause and turned to his sister even as the last Etheric diamond left his hand. He rushed to her side and dropped to the ground.

"Nara?" He gasped.

Nara looked at her brother as his hands and aura enveloped her and she forced a smile from her bloody lips. "I wasn't... wasn't paying attention." She stammered.

Deion looked over her body and reached up to wipe the blood from her lips. Nara stared at him for a long moment and then turned to look at the bodies of the two vampires. She turned back to Deion with stunning azure eyes. "You... you killed them." She rasped.

Deion glanced back at the bodies and then returned his eyes to his twin. "They would have hurt you. I had no choice."

Nara gripped his shoulder. "We need to keep moving... before Dorian..."

"Too late for that." Dorian's voice echoed and they turned to see their brother unwrap the shadows from around his body and stop blurring. He looked around the small area and then at his siblings. "Sibfla." He nearly shouted as he dropped to the ground beside Nara. "Sister?"

Nara shook her head. "I'm ok." She groaned. "Just a little dazed and bruised. They came from downwind. I didn't smell them until they were upon me."

Deion looked at Dorian. "Hunters." He said. "They must have been out here to feed on fresh blood. They reek of animal kills." Deion glanced up and saw Cazar Juconi and the others moving up on them. Sheva pushed her way through the group to blur up to them and she settled beside Nara.

"Nara?" She gasped reaching for her.

“I’m alright.” Nara said gripping Sheva’s arm and Deion’s shoulder and pushing herself to her feet. Her body screamed in protest but her healing factor would kick in quickly enough and in a few minutes the bruises and pain would be gone. “Deion took them out. They didn’t warn anyone.” She stammered.

Cazar stepped up to one of the bodies and using his boot shoved the form over. “Lanor.” He said quickly. He looked up and spied the other body and the single smoking hole in the man’s chest. “Galag.” He turned back to Dorian. “I know them well. Always looking to bed the young women in the settlement. Violent and unpredictable. Experienced soldiers though. We heard no shots. How did you kill them so silently?”

Dorian rose to his feet. “We can worry about that later.” He said. “We’re only two clicks from our ship. We’ll be gone soon enough. We move together now. We’re far enough away from the settlement that they won’t catch us. Deion... Nara... take point.”

Deion glanced at his sister. “Nara?”

Nara nodded her head and gripped his arm tighter. “I’m fine. Let’s move. Andro will be very unhappy if we get stuck here again.”

Cazar watched as Deion and Nara moved out once more and he stepped up to Dorian. He glanced back at the bodies and then looked at Dorian once more. “I have... I have never seen such wounds.” He said. “Galag’s chest is fused as if it was burned. What weapon could do that Dorian Leonidas?”

“We can.” Dorian answered him honestly.

Cazar’s eyes grew wider. “You can... you can do this?” He gasped.

Dorian took his arm. “Sheva is my wife and mate. We came to get you and her mother off this planet. You have trusted me this far... trust me more and when we are off this rock I will tell you everything.”

Cazar met his eyes. “Your word Dorian Leonidas?”

Dorian nodded. “You have it sir.”

Cazar nodded. “Then let us leave this foul place behind forever.” He stated.

“Best plan I have heard all day.” Dorian said. “Thirty minutes and we’ll be airborne. Then you will be truly free.”

CHAPTER TWENTY-NINE

MANNE

LYCAVORIAN ADHOC COMPOUND

Me? Arzoal asked the Durcunusaan officer who had approached only moments ago. Why would a Pralor wish to speak with me?

She and Helen were busy schooling the young adolescents in Aerial Wind Mechanics with Aurith and Isheeni acting as the primary examples. Using Isheeni was perfect because it was well known that she was perhaps the fastest dragon among their kind on Earth and Elear both. Her blistering speed and the exacting control of her body while flying had been learned through trial and error, crisscrossing through the narrow mountain passes on Enurrua, many times while being shot at. Aurith had taken after her mother in that regard and behind only her sister Elynth and her brother Jeth she had gained much fame with her speed and the control of her body while flying.

The Durcunusaan officer nodded her head as Helen walked up to them. “The OOD from ARC ROYAL contacted me since I am senior when Atropos is with Muton and his people. The Pralor ship arrived in orbit just a few moments ago. One of their medium cruisers I think. They specifically asked if they could send a party to the surface in order to meet with you. Apparently Elder Teniri is with them as well. They say it is very important.”

Arzoal looked at Helen. Sister?

Helen shrugged her slim shoulders. “Coming here unannounced is very odd. They must know Martin is not here. He would have made Delnash aware is was going to meet Yuri.” She said. “And Teniri coming without Delnash. That is what I find interesting.”

Indeed. Arzoal spoke. Arzoal looked at the Durcunusaan officer. Very well Captain. She answered. Bring them to the main gathering building. We will meet them there. When is Martin due to return?

“Queen For'mya checked in with the OOD twenty minutes ago.” She answered. “They will be arriving back on Manne by early evening.”

It is out of place to meet with them when Martin is not here. If this concerns Dragonkind then as Talon Guardians Martin and Torma both should be present. I will meet with them but inform them if it concerns Dragonkind they will need to wait until Martin returns. We will begin to head back in a few minutes. Arzoal said. I wish to finish this lesson first.

The Durcunusaan Captain nodded and turned away lifting her wrist COM to her lips as she walked.

Arzoal looked at Helen. We should have Aricia or Dysea join us sister. It would not be appropriate for Martin to not have ears during this meeting.

Helen nodded. “It could be about what Anja did to Daron.” She said. “Perhaps they think coming to you about it is more diplomatic.

Arzoal chuckled and nodded her head. Perhaps. But I am in complete agreement with what Anja did and I do not think they would risk the wrath of our smallest Queen so soon after she beat Lorendo with his own computer and showed them that size does not matter.

Helen smiled now as well. “Yes... there is that to consider.” She said. “And Daron’s foul stench is almost too much to bear now.”

Thankfully we do not have the sense of smell that you do. Arzoal spoke. Come... let us finish this lesson and then Isheeni and Aurith can finish their instruction for the day.

The main gathering building was the largest portable structure in the Union inventory. It could easily hold several hundred men and women and was used for many different things. At the moment it was serving as the main Mess area for those who were planetside. Tables and chairs were spread all around and a large kitchen area had been cordoned off where Iama and her staff put together the meals. Since there was no cooked lunches during the day, the kitchen area was empty of staff and quiet. The doors to the portable buildings had long ago been made large enough to accommodate dragons moving through them. Almost everything in the Union was built this way now to allow for access by Dragonkind.

Teniri... this is a pleasant surprise. Arzoal spoke as she and Teniri greeted each other by the opening and touching their snouts together.

Teniri was genuinely happy to be here and to see Arzoal again. She was so majestic and confident in her mannerisms. Teniri wanted to believe that this was rubbing off on her as well. Conlar and Nekins had filled her in as they transited here to Manne and then speaking directly to the Ancient One had been an eye opening experience to say the least. All that aside, seeing Arzoal again made her very happy.

It was a surprise for me as well... but it makes me very happy to see you Arzoal. Teniri told her.

A surprise for you? Arzoal asked looking at her. You did not arrange for this meeting?

Teniri shook her head as the smaller doors beside the main entrance opened and Aricia and Dysea entered the building holding hands. Conlar immediately stepped forward.

“We asked to speak with the Elder Mother.” Conlar declared. “No one else.”

Arzoal’s head snapped around at the obvious arrogant and insulting way he spoke and she snorted at Conlar angrily. You would do well to watch your tone when speaking to two Queens of the Lycavorian Union little man! She barked at him within Mindvoice. They do not need your permission to go anywhere!

Conlar looked taken aback by Arzoal’s reaction and he took several steps backward from the massive dragon in front of him. Arzoal was easily twice the size of any dragon he had seen on the Pralor homeworld and that alone was enough to give him pause. That he had just made her angry was equally obvious as well.

“I meant no offense.” He stammered. “It’s just that our business is with you Elder Mother Arzoal. It concerns certain events that may be happening and two of the King’s sons.”

Arzoal blinked quickly. You expect me to talk to you of the King’s children without him being present? Arzoal hissed. Without their mothers being present? You presume much Pralor.

“Indeed you do.” Aricia spoke firmly as she and Dysea came up beside Arzoal and Helen “What is all this about Arzoal? We came as soon as you called. Why are these people here and who are you to inquire of our children from someone besides us?”

“Please I...” Conlar stammered quickly. He quickly remembered that his title and status as a Keeper of Knowledge meant nothing to these men and women for they did not know the significance of his role. Nor did Arzoal for that matter. “I meant no offense... truly. I am not known to you and I apologize for the tone of my voice. I should have introduced myself first. I am Conlar... and this is Elder Nekins of the Dragon Council on Artaaya.”

Teniri moved forward slightly. Elder Nekins and Conlar are Keepers of the Knowledge. She told them. Scholars who maintain and teach from the libraries on Artaaya.

I do not understand. Arzoal spoke again. Why would you want to speak with me? Teniri is the Senior Elder on Artaaya and my representative for Dragonkind to the Pralor people. I have already made clear to Teniri what is to happen.

That is not why we are here Arzoal. Teniri told her.

Teniri you should know that no deals or agreements will be made without Martin and Torma present. Arzoal said. They are two of the Talon Guardians of our people and Martin is King of the Union. I will make no decisions without them present.

Aricia stepped up beside Arzoal now her azure eyes almost glowing in the dimness of the building. They were focused completely on the diminutive figure behind Nekins. The cloaked figure was remaining partially hidden in the shadows of the side wall and had made no move to reveal themselves.

“Perhaps we should ask your companion.” Aricia spoke.

Conlar stepped in front of her to try and block Aricia’s view. “Please... we only need to speak with the Elder Mother and...”

Aricia? Dysea? Arzoal questioned turning to look at Aricia.

“She is not Pralor sister.” Helen spoke now reaching up to place her hand on Arzoal’s foreleg and coming up beside Aricia and Dysea.

Arzoal turned her head and looked at the slight figure behind Nekins bulk. Who have you brought here? She demanded. Come forward now! She ordered.

“Please... we...” Conlar began again.

Dysea lifted her finger into his face quickly, silencing his words. “We do not wish to hear you speak anymore!” She snapped. “Not until your companion has revealed herself to us!”

They all heard the soft laughter from the diminutive cloaked figure and they watched as that figure moved around Nekins’s bulk to stand in front of Arzoal. Sarlana reached up and drew back the cowl of the cloak, watching as Arzoal’s flame red eyes grew wider as she gazed down at her.

“It fills me with such warmth to know that the dragon I blessed that day on Elear has grown into the powerful and influential leader that she is now.” Sarlana said softly and with obvious great affection.

Arzoal bowed her head deeply, dropping her huge flame colored body to the floor of the building instantly, surprising Helen and the others with this action. Ancient One! She gasped.

“You remember my voice Arzoal? Even after all this time?” Sarlana asked with a smile.

I will never forget your voice Ancient One. Arzoal spoke warmly. It filled me with such pride and joy to hear it that day. To know that you believed in me enough to give me your blessing. It is a day I will always remember and cherish.

Sarlana reached up and placed her hand flat on Arzoal’s muzzle, watching as her flame colored eyes closed in reverence to her. “Ah... Arzoal my child, after all you have done and experienced, all of the horrors you have led our people through, you bow your head to no one. Least of all to me.”

“Arzoal?” Helen asked softly.

Sister this is... Arzoal began to answer but Sarlana’s words stopped her.

“Please... my name is Sarlana.” She spoke turning to look at Helen, Aricia and Dysea. “And forgive Conlar; he was only trying to protect me. They are always trying to protect me.” She spoke quickly. “And no... you are correct I am not Pralor. The Lycavorian sense of smell is just as sensitive and keen as I have heard. Amazing. I am... I am Darastrixi. A dragon in your spoken language.”

Aricia, Dysea and Helen looked completely stunned at this revelation while Arzoal lifted her head high and stared down at Sarlana in shock. A dragon? Arzoal finally was able to form the words. How... how can that be?

Sarlana smiled and looked at Arzoal with blazing emerald green eyes. “You did not think that there are only Vrrarhoinpa dragons did you? Those who walk on four legs.” She asked her with a smile. “On our planet there are Jiilhoinsa as well. Just like me. Those of us who walk on two legs. Billions of both of us.”

“Your planet?” Helen asked.

Sarlana nodded her head looking at Helen. “Icarava is the homeworld to all Darastrixi. No matter where they may be in the universe. It is where we all come from. Where our blood calls to us from.” She said looking back to Arzoal. “Not all of us have been there... those like Arzoal and others who were part of Seed missions by the Pralor people. They have not seen their world... but it is still their home. Our home.”

“This is... that is quite a lot to take in.” Helen stammered.

Sarlana chuckled and nodded her head. “Indeed it is.” She said in reply.

“How did... how did you not know sister?” Helen asked her.

The Ancient One never... she never showed her physical form on Elear. She stayed in one of the mountain caves and... Arzoal spoke.

“And a very damp cave it was.” Sarlana spoke with a smile and disarming humor. She felt more at peace with Arzoal and these women than she had felt in millennia. “The Darastrixi on Elear adhered to a custom dating back to the beginning of our species on Icarava. Those like me were kept apart from the others. It is not something I would have done personally... but even I must follow custom at times. I left with Teniri and the others when they departed Elear and I remained with them even as we settled on Artaaya with the Pralor refugees. Some things have changed through the millennia... but not nearly enough in my opinion.”

Ancient One you... Arzoal began.

Sarlana waved her hand quickly. “Enough with the Ancient One hofibavi!” She spat. “I will not have the Tilabil Dask who has led the Darastrixi with the ingowil and itov of a mother caring for her own children refer to me in such a way!” Sarlana smiled. “And you did it without the guidance of the Urllkrisa Mamiss. That is the best part in my opinion.” (Foolishness. Grace. Love.)

“Sarlana... perhaps we should explain to the Elder Mother and the Queens why we are here.” Conlar suggested.

Sarlana nodded her head. “I would be more than happy to answer all of the questions you have and I am sure you have many... but first...” She moved carefully in front of Aricia gazing at her very intently. She knew the Lycavorian people were instinctive and reactive. They could shift into the form of a kaldaka, and these were the foremost traits of the kaldaka Sarlana had seen. Majestic creatures that they were, they were still very cautious of other. She held out her hands to her with her palms held up. “May I... may I touch you child?” She asked.

“Why?” Aricia asked her warily.

“It is a manner of greeting among my people.” Sarlana told her. “I mean you no harm. Any of you.”

Aricia looked at her evenly, glancing at Helen and Arzoal quickly, before turning back to Sarlana. “I am... I am Aricia Leonidas.” She began to say as she lifted her hands and placed them into Sarlana’s palms. “I am...”

Aricia’s eyes went wide as Sarlana’s thumbs came up over the backs of her knuckles and grazed lightly across her skin. She felt a surge of powerful energy through her that was so very warm and inviting. She saw images flash in her mind faster than she could follow them, lights and stars and then it was all gone. Aricia stepped back quickly as Sarlana lowered her hands and Dysea reached for her quickly while her fangs and eyes changed and she snarled at Sarlana.

“Little Wolf!” Dysea exclaimed. “What did you do to her woman?”

“I am... I am fine Melda Min.” Aricia stammered as she gripped her arms. “I’m ok.”

Dysea held Aricia tightly and reached for Anja within Mindvoice. Melyanna... come to us quickly! You and Cirith both!

Dysea! What is wrong? Anja answered instantly.

Aricia is... Dysea began but Aricia squeezed her arms and shook her head.

Anja I am fine. Aricia said looking at Dysea as she reached for her. But you and Cirith need to be here. Come quickly.

On our way. Anja replied.

Aricia turned and looked at Sarlana while still gripping Dysea's hands. What she had felt just now had been exactly what she had felt when Andro had left her womb screaming like a banshee and entered their lives. A sense of utter happiness and joy.

"You... you are the birth mother to one of the Dahakoan Aricia Leonidas. It is a blessed honor to meet you." Sarlana said softly as she stepped closer and bowed her head. Her emerald eyes were bright and she smiled at Aricia. "You carried him within you."

Aricia looked at her confused. "I'm sorry I..."

"Dahakoan." Sarlana said gently. "Dragonkin. You are mother to the older one. To the one called... to the one called Androcles."

"Andro is my son yes." Aricia said pulling Dysea closer to her. "He is a son to all of us."

Sarlana nodded her head glancing at Dysea and then back to her. "Yes... I felt that. He cherishes you all you know. His many siblings as well. Resumar and Normya from you Dysea Leonidas; Eliani and the twins from Anja; Denali, Deion and Nara, Arrarn, Bryon, Carina and Zarah. Lisisa and Yuriko. And now Fedor and Eirene. He holds all of them so very close to his heart." Sarlana gazed at Aricia and Dysea for a long moment. "Your children... they hold no distinction between you. Any of you. You are all their mothers in their minds. That is so very fascinating. I felt his father within you. Your rumag... your mrrandii. He is so powerful... so filled with itov for all of you. Passion and purpose. His essence swirls around both of you. No doubt around all six of you. For'mya, this Anja and Cirith and... and Isabella. She is mother to the Dahakoan called Dorian. The younger one." (Mate)

Dysea looked at Sarlana now, her own emerald colored eyes wide. "How did... how do you know their names? The names of our children." She gasped. "Who are you?"

"I felt all of them within you." Sarlana said looking at Aricia. "And from you I felt your love for Dysea and those you call fellow Queens. And the love you both feel for all of your children."

"How?" Aricia rasped softly.

"I am Doraanar." Sarlana told them.

"Prophet?" Aricia said softly.

Dysea's emerald eyes were wide as she looked at Aricia. "Aricia how...?"

Sarlana nodded and held up her hands in front of her in the more common Darastrixi greeting manner now. "May I touch you again? Touch you both. It truly is a Darastrixi greeting. It is more common to my people and is meant in to convey friendship and openness. I am no threat to you. To any of you. We seek the same things. I know you can feel that. Please."

Aricia glanced at Dysea and then Helen. She turned back to Sarlana and both she and Dysea lifted their hands slowly and cautiously. Sarlana smiled and stepped closer, their hands going over her chest while her own hands pressed against Aricia's and Dysea's breasts directly over their hearts. Sarlana leaned forward and placed her forehead to first Aricia and then to Dysea and finally back to Aricia.

"Wer tiichir ar wer Zezhuanth ekes wer dask ar wer Dahakoan." Sarlana spoke softly looking at Aricia now. (The blessing of the Ancient to the mother of the Dragonkin)

"The blessing of the Ancient to the mother of the Dragonkin." Aricia echoed softly her eyes going wide.

Dysea looked at her with equally wide eyes. "Aricia?" She gasped softly. "You... you understood what she said? Like before! How?"

Aricia nodded her head as she stared at Sarlana. "I don't... I don't know how Melda Min, but yes." She replied. "I understood. How... how is that possible?" She asked Sarlana.

Sarlana drew her head back, her emerald eyes gazing at Aricia. "Then it is all true." She said softly. "The legend is true."

"Legend?" Aricia asked. "What legend?"

Sarlana nodded her head as she drew her hand back and watched as Aricia and Dysea did the same. She looked at them. "It is said... it is said that the Dahakoan will bestowed unto those who create him or her the gift of the language of the Darastrixi. The language of Zezhuanth. The language that will reside within his blood no matter his species." She said softly. "The Lorsvek ar Sepas is alive! And it is happening now!"

“What is happening? What is this you speak of?” Helen snapped now. “Exactly who are you and what in the blazes is going on?”

Yes! Arzoal echoed. I would very much like to know what is happening as well.

Sarlana turned to Arzoal then feeling more alive than she had in millennia. “We did come to speak with you Arzoal.” She said. “This is my doing. I had Conlar and Teniri bring me here. I wanted to speak with you about this Androcles and Dorian.” She turned and glanced at Aricia and Dysea. “I only wanted knowledge of them... nothing more. I could no more do them harm than I could harm my own children. I am nothing when compared to them.” She chuckled softly and looked at them. “They could squash me like an insect and there is nothing I could do to stop them. Any of them.” Sarlana moved closer to them. “I did not know however that the mothers of three of the Dahakoan would be here. Are the others here on the planet with you as well? His Vrrarhoinpa Elynth, is her mother here with you? Dorian... and Ryner. Are their mothers here with you?”

“Isheeni is not far.” Aricia answered almost without thinking. She felt a unique sense of ease from this strange woman. An aura of peace and knowledge that she had never experienced before and it was telling. “Isheeni and I are bound together. She is Elynth's mother and daughter to Arzoal. And Dorian's mother will return with our mate and husband shortly.”

Sarlana looked at Arzoal with wide eyes. “You... your child is mother to a Dahakoan?” She gasped. She turned back to Aricia. “And you are bound to the dask of this same Dahakoan? By the will of Zezhuanth this is too much.” Sarlana turned and looked Arzoal. “Tell me child, was your autnaril bound to this Androcles before he entered this life? Did he... did he project his awareness of things through his Vrrarhoinpa before he entered this life?” She insisted more persistently.

Arzoal's eyes narrowed slightly as she looked at her. There are but a few outside of our families and blood that are aware of that Ancient One. How could... how could you possibly know such a thing?

Sarlana turned back to Aricia and Dysea. “And the younger one... Dorian? He bonded to his Vrrarhoinpa before he was born as well?”

Aricia nodded her head slowly. “Yes.”

Sarlana whirled on Conlar and Nekins quickly, her face animated and bright. Conlar had an expression of utter astonishment on his face at what he had just heard. “Do you wish to now tell me this is nothing more than simple coincidence Conlar my friend? That the Lorsvek ar Sepas is not happening now? As we speak?”

“I... I... no...” Conlar stammered.

“What... what is this Prophecy of Souls?” Aricia asked now. “And what does it have to do with our sons and the dragons they are bound too?”

Ancient One... perhaps now would be a good time to explain to everyone why you are here. Teniri spoke moving forward. And what it is we need.

Sarlana looked at her and nodded her head quickly. “Yes... yes of course. Of course.” She stammered the words. “Forgive me.” She motioned to the chairs around them. “May we sit... this may take some time.”

“We must wait for Melyanna.” Dysea spoke now. “And Cirith. They need to be here.”

Aricia nodded. “Isheeni as well.” She said.

Sarlana nodded her head in agreement at Aricia's words. “Yes... I am going no where now that I have found you all here. And all of you should hear this. It will concern all of you soon. It does concern all of you. Now more than ever given how closely tied you all are. We... we should wait for their fathers and your Bella as well.”

Conlar stepped forward. “Sarlana... is that wise. To reveal who you are to so many that we do not know?”

Sarlana looked at him and smiled. She turned back to Aricia and reached out to take her hands as well as Dysea's. They didn't hesitate this time and Sarlana smiled warmly at them.

“We are in the presence of the mother of a Dahakoan. And soon three mothers and the fathers of two Dahakoans. Those who gave life to the ones who can wield the power of your people's vaunted Praetorians Conlar. We are safer here than anywhere else in the galaxy don't you think? No... it must be this way. If we are to discover what it all means then we must do so together. We all have pieces to the puzzle... and only together will they fit as one and give us understanding.” Sarlana turned back to Aricia and Dysea. “And I must try to... I must try to make amends for the sins of my people as well.”

It was Arzoal who stepped forward. What... what do you mean Ancient One? She asked.

Sarlana looked at her. “A deed so vile it makes me sick to even think of it. But if there will ever be forgiveness then it must begin with me. I am the last of the Doraamar, and it falls to me.”

PRALOR CORVETTE
UPDATED DESIGNATION
SPARTAN ONE

For'mya moved down the short flight of stairs from the cockpit and into the small galley. She quickly poured herself a mug of Aricia's coffee and made to return to the cockpit when she saw Isabella leaning against the port bulkhead door frame leading into the main gathering area of the corvette. This middle section of the ship on the upper deck as they were served as a small lounge. There was a large star chart table in the center of the large room, with several work stations along the bulkheads that were not occupied at the moment. The Pralor Corvette, at least this class from the VORTEX-Class Heavy Cruiser, was meant to be used for both tactical operations and transport. There were several couches along the starboard side of the ship, a four meter wide counter which spanned the interior bulkhead and held both types of food and drink dispensers as well as several computer consoles that could be linked to the corresponding work stations and used to display important data.

For'mya sipped her coffee as she stepped down into the area and moved to stand beside Isabella. “Bella... is everything alright?” She asked.

Isabella lifted her finger to her lips signaling her to be quiet and she motioned with her head to the opposite side of the room. For'mya's dark eyes followed this motion and her heart slammed into her throat at what she saw.

Martin sat slouched in one of the couches, his tall, muscular body taking up nearly the entire middle portion of the couch. On his left side, Zarah was curled into a ball beside him, her face tucked neatly into the crook of his shoulder and neck with her left hand resting on her father's chest. Martin's left arm nearly swallowed his daughter against the side of his body and was draped over her in a very protective manner. On his right side, Lucia rested in much the same position, her head positioned on his shoulder with her right hand tightly holding Zarah's left hand over Martin's heart. Martin's right arm was curled around Lucia's shoulders in a similar fashion as Zarah but not quite so tightly. For'mya stepped closer to Isabella and slipped her arm around the waist of her fellow Queen and lover.

“Do you know how many times he fell sleep like that with his daughters in his embrace when they were growing?” Isabella whispered.

“More times than I can remember.” For'mya answered softly, her voice broken.

Isabella heard this within her voice and turned to look at her. Her hazel green eyes grew a little wider when she saw the tears that threatened to fall from For'mya's beautiful dark brown eyes and she reached out to take her free hand and pull her close with the other. “For'mya?” She questioned.

For'mya looked at her. “I... I wish so much to give him a daughter Bella.” For'mya choked out the words.

“Oh Kinsoaurgai... you have given him a daughter! Eirene is so beautiful and she...” Isabella gasped.

“She is of Pusintin's loins!” For'mya hissed softly. “She is beautiful and intelligent and I love her with all that I am... but she is not Martin's daughter Bella. She is not part of him.”

Isabella took the mug from For'mya's hand and set it aside. She pulled her out of the main area and back into the galley and looked at her. “She is just as much a part of Martin as any of our children For'mya Leonidas.” Isabella told her as she took her face in her hands and traced her thumbs along the ridge of For'mya's elven ears in a loving manner. “She reached for and found his essence while within your womb. As did Fedor. They will forever be Martin's children. That is what swirls within them and you should never doubt that. Ever!”

“There are times when... when I remember how I acted under that rutting monster Bella. I acted like a pomai.” For'mya choked out the words. “I did not... I did not want it... my mind screamed for it to stop but my body cried out for more. It was humiliating! My body wanted him to... to fuck me harder. To take me harder. I could not control it. I..."

"For'mya stop!" Isabella gasped. "You must let this go my love. You have no right to bear shame for this. None. You are wolf. It is... it is the way of things."

"For so long... for so long I wanted Martin to make me like him. Like Aricia and Anja and Dysea. So I could feel what they feel. When he did... I was so happy. So free and full of new life. The only day that surpasses that is when Arrarn and then Bryon came into this world."

"I remember." Isabella said. "They were joyous days for all of us."

"How can he still love me as before knowing that..." For'mya finally broke into tears and buried her face in Isabella's breasts. Isabella pulled her tightly to her, tears clouding her own eyes now. "How can he still love me as before knowing how I would act... how I did act under his brother?"

"He loves you more now than he did before Kinsoaurgai... he loves all of us more now, because Martin Leonidas is more than just his instincts For'mya my love. And you know that." Isabella told her. "He is not a disgusting brute like his brother! He loves each of us from within the very deepest reaches of his heart and soul For'mya. From within a place that none of us have ever seen. A place where he holds each of us on a pedestal. He loves each of us with everything that makes him a man. Every part of him." Isabella pulled her face away from her breasts and looked into her brown eyes. "He never wavered For'mya. His love for you, his devotion for you. Not for a single breath did he ever waver. His one purpose, our one purpose, was to return you to us where you belong. We would have scoured the entire galaxy if need be. You could have been taken by a hundred men and acted in the same fashion with each of them because of the burning of your wolf blood, and it would not have mattered to him. Or to us. You are a part of him. We are all parts of him. And we are parts of each other. We are what makes him who he is, just as he makes us who we are." Isabella took a breath.

"We could see the conflict within him, the rage and the veil of death's hand for what you had to endure. He blamed himself for this Kinsoaurgai." Isabella took a deep breath and pulled For'mya closer to her. "He made a vow one night during that time we searched for you... when he thought we were asleep and could not hear him... a vow to the Gods. A vow that he would hold nothing back from us ever again. That he would bathe us with his love, his aura and his devotion always and forever. Every waking moment." Isabella leaned over and kissed her softly on the lips, holding her face gently.

For'mya met her eyes. "He... he prayed to the gods?" She asked surprised.

Isabella nodded slowly. "When have you ever heard Martin Leonidas openly pray to the gods for anything For'mya? He keeps his faith close to his heart."

For'mya shook her head slowly. "I have never heard him do this." She said.

Isabella nodded her head with a smile. "Have our times with him since you returned to us not been more glorious than all of the years we have been together combined? Even I have been overwhelmed by the force of his aura at times and I can not truly feel it as you and the others can. You must feel it every time he presses his lips to yours? Every time he simply touches you now?" Isabella looked into her eyes as she spoke.

For'mya nodded her head slowly. "That is... that is why I feel as I do Bella." She said wiping her eyes. "It is beyond breathtaking and... that is why I still feel shame. That he could still love me in a such a way."

Isabella smiled as she gazed at her. "When has our Martin Leonidas ever done anything that can be construed as rational For'mya my love? When have we ever been able to predict what he will do? Or how he will make us scream his name to the heavens."

For'mya blinked several times and then she could not help but laugh softly. "Never." She said finally.

Isabella smiled as well and nodded. "Martin has had to learn everything about himself as he goes For'mya. What he is now, he has taught our sons and daughters. What is instinctive to them from the day they entered this world, he has had to learn all alone without someone to teach him. And sometimes he has had to learn it in the most difficult of ways possible. You must let go of this false burden For'mya Leonidas. It is not yours to carry. And it never was. You will give Martin a daughter. Do not ever doubt that. He wants more children... as do we all. But he does not need for you to give him more children to prove you love him. Nor for him to love you... to love us... with everything that he is." Bella told her warmly. "And know that Fedor and Eirene are now and always will be his children. They still bear the same blood as Martin within them, and it is his essence that flows through them. No one else's."

For'mya finally nodded. "I know." She said softly.

“Does Pusintin’s aura compare to Martin’s?” Isabella asked her. “Now that you are free of that foul inhibitor... does he come close to Martin in any way?”

For'mya looked at her with wide eyes. “Please Bella!!!” She exclaimed. “Not even... not even... Ohhhhhh!” For'mya’s eyes grew wider when she felt it and Isabella smiled. They both turned to see Martin come up behind them, his dark eyes alive with life and love. “Martin... Martin you must that... please... stop...”

“No!” Martin growled as he moved closer.

For'mya groaned in need when his powerful arms swept her off the deck and he kissed her with staggering ferocity. For'mya’s arms went around his broad shoulders without hesitation and her lithe elven body ignited in heated desire as his overwhelming aura crashed all around her and lit her senses on fire. Bella was right For'mya discovered in that instant. No matter what she had felt while Pusintin had his way with her, it could not even remotely come close to the astounding feelings that swept across her wolf senses at this moment. He drew back from the kiss quickly, causing her to gasp in gratuitous need. His eyes had changed now, yellow/gold orbs that all of them had come to love utterly.

“Think Endy can fly the ship without you for a couple hours?” He asked in a husky, eager and passion filled voice.

For'mya’s wolf eyes gazed at him with lust now, but she attempted to maintain her calm composure. It was rapidly failing though.

“Martin... Martin there are others on this ship!” For'mya finally gasped the only thing she could think of to say. She had always been the more reserved of his Queens and she knew it.

Isabella chuckled as Martin’s arm drew her close to them and she made it a point to press her large breasts against For'mya’s side as well as Martin’s. While his wolf aura could not affect her, his Etheric resonance had done essentially the same thing to her as his wolf aura had done to For'mya. Both of them were very moist and ready. “That is what is so exciting about it!” She rasped out the words before trailing her tongue along the outer edge of For'mya’s elven ear and hearing her breath come in delighted gasps.

“We... we can’t!” For'mya gasped trying to fight the crushing desire and lust rushing through her. “Not... not here!”

Martin’s arm tightened around her waist and he lifted her off the deck. “Yes... we can!” He growled in his Alpha wolf voice. His other arm lifted Isabella off the deck and he made straight for the door into the small bathroom and shower stall. For'mya could not remember when his powerful hands began to remove her clothing, only that within seconds she was utterly naked within his arm. In those same seconds Martin and Bella had somehow shed their clothing and they were all very naked now.

The last thing For'mya could recall before he lifted her off the steel floor of the shower stall and speared her completely in a single, soul robbing plunge was Isabella turning on the water just before her soft lips claimed hers. They both screamed in delight into each other’s mouths as their beloved husband and mate had his way with them.

It would be a very interesting and blissful three hours since they loved a man who could be so very inventive.

AMANUCE PROTECTORATE HOMEWORLD CAPITAL CITY OF LORENT

To say that he was stunned at what he had seen would be the understatement of the last four centuries of his life. Nothing had prepared him for the sights and sounds of what he had witnessed in the last few hours and Coren Re Mydala was not often surprised in any way. He stood on the sixth floor balcony basking in the bright sun as it rose higher into the sky and the city of Lorent came to life around him. Dutkne had certainly shown them where the finest food was the previous night. Coren could not remember a more delicious meal, nor more riveting company. He watched as Denali nuzzled and cuddled with Arduri not caring in the least who saw. He watched as Caliria laughed and joked with Dutkne and his sister and mother. The men and women who sat with them were open and friendly and joked with Coren as if he had been friends with them for decades. Coren had not laughed like that in decades and it still resonated within him. Nirilo and his Lycavorian wife Lari answered even the silliest of questions he had and did so without hesitation. It was last night when Coren finally got a true glimpse of what it meant to be a member of a Lycavorian family.

Family meant a great deal to the Vanari, but often times the real things they should have been sharing were overshadowed by the ridiculous traditions and customs about property and assets. Last night everything like that was left at the door when they sat down. Coren found he much preferred that and he basked in the emotions that flowed through him and he had always suppressed. At least until last night.

The Diplomatic Center Suites were large, five room facilities in the center of Lorent and really quite comfortable. They were not as lavish as the SBR Complex where all political guests stayed on Austrova and Coren found himself liking that fact. They were furnished with elegant pieces of furniture, perhaps not as plush and overtly expensive, but very comfortable regardless. He had everything he needed, including a fully stocked kitchen, a huge Master bedroom with a large sized bed and connected bathroom. The sprawling living area had two different couches, a stone and granite fireplace in the center of the room and then this wide and spacious balcony. There was also a medium sized office and sitting area off the main living area that he could use as a private room if he wanted.

The sunrise was breathtaking and filled the living area with warmth and bright sunlight through the large sliding glass doors. Coren sipped the glass of sweet juice and simply stood under the warmth of the sun using this brief time to reflect and sort through everything that had been going on these last months. He was a very different man now he knew that and he found he rather liked who he had become. What he had seen and experienced in these last months had forced him to step back and evaluate old traditions and feelings and his own actions that had caused him to drive so many away from him. Those old traditions and emotions had driven him in the direction of those who he had despised when he first came into the political arena. He had let them almost destroy the most important things in the universe to him, and those were his children. His very own children had looked beyond what their Vanari upbringing had pounded into their heads and discovered there was far more to life than what the SBR preached. In many ways they had been stronger and wiser than he had. Coren Re Mydala had repaired the rift between his children and himself now and he vowed never to let them grow apart as they had. His children were his future Coren knew, and he would do everything in his power to protect and support them.

The door chime interrupted his musings and he turned to go into the huge apartment. He knew Dutkne was coming over early to escort him to the meeting that Denali had called and the reason they were all here. He crossed the living area quickly and went to the door activating the small monitor and saw Dutkne standing in the corridor with two Vanari females he had never seen before. Puzzled, Coren activated the door lock and it slid open easily.

“Dutkne.” Coren greeted him.

“Regent Re Mydala.” Dutkne spoke with a smile. “May we come in?”

Coren motioned him into the apartment as he turned. “By all means... this is one of your living spaces anyway. And I must say it is spectacular.” He said with a smile as Dutkne moved past him.

The two young Vanari females were very attractive woman to say the least Coren thought to himself and they looked remarkably alike in the structure of their faces and bodies. They also looked somehow familiar to him but Coren couldn't place it. One of them had long, billowing white blond hair as most Vanari females did. It reached well past her shoulders, cascading down her back ending just above a tightly muscular ass. She was the shorter of the two, the top of her head barely reaching Coren's shoulders in height, while the second female came up to his jaw, nearly matching his six foot height. The taller young woman had rich, thick dark brown hair and it shone with health and care. Her hair was also very long, but it was tied at the ends to keep it from blowing all over. Coren took notice that they were both wearing dark brown and green fatigues that had been cut and tailored to fit their very firm figures enticingly. The taller of the females had very firm, medium sized breasts and her fatigue pants wrapped around incredibly firm buttocks and long legs. She had amazing blue green eyes and sensuous full lips with an angular face and flawless Columbia blue skin. The shorter young woman had larger breasts and her pants also encased a firm and incredibly fit body and while her skin color was slightly lighter in nature, it was similarly flawless and she had matching blue green eyes that were alive with life. For just a split second the odd thought occurred to him that she was the most attractive Vanari female he had ever seen. Coren blinked his eyes several times; unable to believe he had just had those thoughts given everything that was going on. He had always considered himself a handsome man and after his split with Devra there were any number of beautiful young Vanari women who were drawn to him because he was exceptionally good looking for an older man, and he had a reputation of being an incredible lover. Coren quickly set those thoughts aside and cut his eyes to Dutkne once more.

Dutkne turned to look at him and smiled. "Actually Coren... this Suite is now yours." He said.

Coren looked at him with wide eyes. "Excuse me?" He stammered, Dutkne drawing his full attention so that he did not notice the tall Vanari male who entered slightly after the two young women and who remained behind Coren while the young women moved around to the sides in order to keep his attention to the front.

Dutkne nodded his head. "As the Vanari Ambassador to the Lycavorian Union in the Beta Quadrant, Androcles wanted to make sure you had somewhere to work and stay and be comfortable."

"Ambassador?" Coren gasped aloud.

"I spoke with Andro last night after dinner." Dutkne explained with a nod. "He does not want someone appointed by the SBR, blind as many of them are, to be the Vanari liaison to our people in the Beta Quadrant. For lack of a better explanation sir, he wouldn't trust them as far as he could throw them. His words of course." Dutkne told him with a smile. "He does trust you however."

Coren glanced at the two younger women as they chuckled softly at Dutkne's words but did not react otherwise. He looked at Dutkne. "I... I did not think that was the case." He said.

Dutkne nodded his head. "Andro is a complex person sir. I'm sure you have realized that by now."

Coren nodded his head slowly. "Yes... but I did not think he trusted me enough to... not after the things I said to him."

Dutkne shook his head quickly. "That is not the case at all. He did not want you to take this position because of how he feels for Caliria sir, because she is now Princess; he wanted you to take it because you have awakened so to speak. You see things in a different way than most of the SBR now. That has made you considerably wiser and more open minded than the rest." Dutkne stepped closer. "He will understand if you do not wish to accept but he..."

Coren shook his head quickly. "No." Coren Re Mydala spoke firmly. He had made his decision already. "I would be quite honored to accept Dutkne." He answered stepping fully through the last doorway and into a new world and life.

Dutkne nodded. "Good." He said. "Andro did want me to warn you... it could very well get ugly at the beginning and..."

Coren shook his head dismissing Dutkne's warning. "Caliria has already told me some of what he is going to implement." He said. "I can't say that I disagree with any of it to be honest. After what I have seen... if this is what it takes to drag the Vanari screaming into the present... then I will support it fully."

Dutkne nodded. "In that case... I should make you aware of who my lovely guests are." He said motioning to the two young woman.

Coren looked at them once more. "I don't recall Denali saying we had more of my people as part of our party when we left Austrova." Coren said.

"We didn't." Dutkne told him with a smile. "Coren Re Mydala allow me to introduce Senior Lieutenant Ryana Val Ardwor, named for her grandmother." Dutkne spoke motioning to the taller dark haired female.

"And this is Senior Lieutenant Nyosa Val Ardwor." He spoke again, motioning to the shorter young woman.

Coren looked at Dutkne in surprise and then to the two young women. "Val Ardwor?" He asked softly. "I knew... I knew a Vanari Colonel by that name. Rinel Val Ardwor. He was... he was a very good friend of mine. My only true friend to be honest. We went through the Cadre training together. I haven't... I haven't had a friend like him since to be honest. He was a Senior Colonel of our Cadre Commandos before he was lost in a Enverr pirate attack." Coren said softly. "That was... prophets that was over a hundred years ago!" He looked at the two women now. "Are you relations of his? I did not think he had any children or family." Coren looked back to Dutkne puzzled. "I thought you said no other Vanari came from Austrova Dutkne?"

Dutkne shook his head. "None did." He replied.

Coren looked at the young women again and then back to Dutkne. "I don't understand." He said.

"We are relations of his Regent Re Mydala. Nyosa and I both. As well as our four older brothers and our younger sister." Ryana Val Ardwor spoke with a warm smile. "He is our..."

“He is our father.” Nyosa chimed in with a warm smile of her own.

Coren’s eyes grew wide. “Father?” He gasped. “Rinel... Rinel had no children. He was not even joined with anyone when he died. A tragedy in my opinion. We lost so much when he did not return. I have missed him for many years. You could not possibly be his children.”

“Are you so sure of that old friend?” The Vanari man who had been standing behind the completely unaware Coren spoke the words softly but with an equally warm smile.

Coren Re Mydala spun around as fast as his body allowed and his eyes flew open when he saw the tall Vanari behind him dressed in a similar uniform. The man had thick dark hair and the same blue green eyes as the young women. He was also broader and more muscular than the man Coren remembered. Rinel Val Ardwor had been an exceptional Cadre Commando, one of the most incredibly skilled and extremely deadly of his time. The glass Coren had been carrying almost dropped from his grip but the young woman Nyosa quickly stepped forward with a humorous look on her face and took it from him as he stared at the man.

“Rinel?” Coren gasped.

“It has been too long Coren my friend.” Rinel Val Ardwor spoke warmly. “Far too long.”

“Rinel Val Ardwor... how... how is this possible?” Coren stammered as he reached out and put his hands on Rinel’s wide shoulders and gripped his upper arms to make sure his eyes were not deceiving him in some way. “They... they told me you had... they told me you had been killed.”

Rinel nodded his head. “Yes... I am sure they did.” Rinel answered with a hint of anger in his voice. It was anger that was not directed at Coren and he quickly pushed it aside. “I did not die Coren. Our ship was attacked by Enverr pirates yes... but they took us prisoner. To sell in the slave markets.”

“What?” Coren almost shouted. “They... the SBR... they knew you were not dead?”

Rinel nodded his head slowly in reply. “The entire mission was a set up.” He told him as he reached up to grip Coren’s arms in a reassuring manner. “Our entire Cadre was captured with ease. They used gas on us while we were still within our landing ship. They knew that we were going to be there. When we woke up, we were prisoners. They used... they raped and used those females in my team for days. The men they simply tortured. I lost six of them before we even reached...” Rinel stopped talking and his grip on Coren’s arms grew tighter.

“Medwan... joa.” Ryana spoke softly as she stepped closer and reached out to put her hand on his arm.

Rinel nodded his head and looked at Coren. “Ryana is right. It is not something I think of often these days Coren my friend. Forgive me. I have put it behind me.”

“Forgive you?” Coren gasped in reply. “Rinel... I did not... I did not know! I would have demanded we...”

Rinel nodded his head. “I know.” He said. “You would have demanded we launch a full rescue mission and led it yourself.” He smiled. “You were not so cautious back then my friend.”

Coren could not help himself and in a manner quite unlike the Coren Re Mydala that so many people knew, he embraced Rinel in bear hug. He was not going to hold back any longer and this was the man he wanted to be now.

“By the Prophets Rinel my friend!” Coren exclaimed as he embraced him and slapped Rinel on the shoulders and back over and over. Ryana and Nyosa watched as their father returned the embrace with equal strength and they both smiled. “It is... it is truly wondrous to see you again Rinel! You do not know the happiness that courses through me right now.” He spoke happily before pushing him away and holding him at arms length. “You... you don’t look like you have aged at all!”

Rinel laughed at that and squeezed Coren’s arms. Ryana and Nyosa couldn’t help but smile brightly and hold back the tears they wanted to shed. They had not seen their father so completely and happily speechless since their mother had told him she was expecting their youngest child. They had seen their father lift their mother into the air that day and dance all around their home with her in his arms at this news. It was a now a moment of humor for their entire family since all of them knew their father could not dance a whit.

“Nor you my friend.” Rinel spoke with a wide smile.

“Hah!” Coren exclaimed. “You never were a very good liar!” He spoke. He shook his head for a moment and then looked at him. “I almost lost... I almost lost everything Rinel.” The words began to spill out almost immediately. Rinel Val Ardwor had been Coren’s closest friend for decades and when he thought he had died; Coren Re Mydala had lost the one person who he could share anything with. “I let my mistrust and anger guide my actions and it cost me so much. It almost cost me what I care for most of all.” He said. “And all of it was based on a lie! A lie!”

Rinel squeezed his arms. “Yet you are here now my friend.” He said. “And you are here to finally try and correct the myriad of lies that the Vanari have lived under for so long. I am led to believe that your two oldest daughters have become wives and mates to the Princes of our Union?”

Coren looked at him and smiled. “All of them actually. My youngest Naesta... she is with the sisters of Queen Anja... and the Lycavorian who has claimed her. Joci is his name. A fine man Rinel. I have spoken with him and Ceuma. They...” Coren looked at him. “She has a husband and a wife and she is happier than I have ever seen her. And I could not be happier for her. For all of them. They have men who love them completely and will do anything for them.” Coren blinked as what Rinel had said finally hit him. “Wait... how did you... how did you know that?”

Rinel smiled brightly. “Let’s just say that their choices and who has claimed them has made some young women very unhappy here on Amanuce. Including my own daughters.” He spoke.

“Medwan!” Ryana exclaimed with wide eyes. “Could you be more forthcoming?” She scolded him.

Coren smiled as he looked at a smiling Rinel once more. “Between them and the men they have chosen to love... the blinders I wore for so long no longer impair my vision.” He said. “And I am very happy about that.”

Rinel smiled at him. “That is very good.” He said. “Very good indeed my friend.” He turned to Ryana and Nyosa and motioned to them with his hand. “And yes these lovely young ladies are my oldest daughters. Thankfully they both got their mother’s beauty. I’m as ugly as a boar.”

Coren gazed at them for a moment, not taking his arm off Rinel’s shoulder, unwilling to let this moment escape if it was indeed a dream. “It is a pleasure to meet you.” He spoke with genuine happiness. He looked at Rinel. “Was their mother among those...?”

Rinel met his eyes. “Their mother is Lycavorian Coren.” He said. “We have been mated for over eighty years now. Eighty-six to be exact.”

Coren Re Mydala did not blink at this revelation and everyone in the room knew without doubt he had finally turned the corner. He grinned and slapped Rinel’s arm. “So it took a calm, beautiful Lycavorian woman to finally tame that restless nature of yours huh?”

Rinel smiled. “Not so calm.” He told him. “And she outranks me.”

Ryana and Nyosa laughed at their father’s amused expression. “And she lets him know it whenever our medwan starts to get on her nerves.” Nyosa chuckled.

Rinel nodded. “That she does.” He said.

Coren looked at them. “All of your children are...?”

Rinel nodded his head. “My wife Tarnie... she was the one who led the rescue party from the Protectorate that found us.” He said. “We haven’t been apart since that first day.”

“We have... we have so much to talk of my friend.” Coren exclaimed. “Can you... can you stay? Wait... Dutkne we...” He turned to look at Dutkne.

“Coren... there is something else you should know.” Rinel spoke as he held out the pad to him while Coren turned back to face him.

Coren looked at him as he took the data pad. “What is this?” He asked.

“A list of names.” Rinel answered him calmly. “The names of two hundred and sixty-four thousand Vanari who now call Amanuce home. Men and women who have been rescued from the slave and rape pits through the decades and chose to remain here. They have built lives here Coren. Become welcome and honored citizens of the Protectorate and now the Union. They have friends and jobs and businesses. They have lives and families that they will not leave for anyone. Especially not the Vanari Board of Regents. Not after it has been confirmed what many of them already believed. Have believed for some time.”

Coren held the pad in his hand and looked at it with wide eyes. “Two hundred and sixty-four thousand.” He gasped. He turned to Dutkne. “You knew?” He asked.

Dutkne nodded his head slowly. “We have rescued scores of your people through the many years since our first encounter Coren.” He told him. “Many chose to return home and we gave them transport to the nearest colony world that the Vanari controlled. Apparently however, our actions are not as well known as we thought.

Apparently those who returned chose to keep our involvement secret in order to protect those who remained. As Rinel has said... many of the Vanari chose to remain here and make new lives for themselves because..."

Coren shook his head. "No! You do not have to explain why Dutkne! I know why!" He snapped angrily. "Why? Why keep this from us though?"

Dutkne shrugged his shoulders. "Trying to coerce an open and friendly reaction from the SBR because of this would have done nothing." He told him. "We rescued your people because it was the right thing to do. Slavery in any form is an abomination that my people can not and will not tolerate. It's abhorrent to us."

"Because of the Black Day and what happen after?" Coren asked softly.

Dutkne nodded his head. "Thousands of light years may have separated us from those in the Union Coren... but the morals and values that Elder Sumar, his son King Resumar and my ancestors began stayed deep within the blood of our species. We will mash out and destroy slavery whenever and wherever we find it. And those who take part in it." He looked at Coren. "It was decided we would not use this information to try and make the Vanari feel something or act differently than they normally would towards my people."

"But this knowledge..." Coren said. "It could have gone a long way to my people finally discovering what I have discovered in a few short months Dutkne."

Dutkne nodded. "Perhaps." He said. "I think you might be surprised at how the Vanari feel as a whole about my people. The SBR has just never asked them."

"But any Vanari who reached out to the Lycavorians were shunned and ridiculed through the years by the Board of Regents and the SBR. And we made sure that is was known to others! I should know... I was part of that idiotic group!" Coren spat.

"Coren..." Rinel spoke once more. He waited until Coren turned to look at him. "Most of these men and women have Lycavorian wives and husbands Coren." Rinel said calmly. "They have children who have been born through the decades. Including me obviously. There are many just like my daughters Ryana and Nyosa who are fully grown and are serving proudly in what is now called the Lycavorian Union Armed Forces. This is their home Coren. These men and women also have family members on Austrova or different colony worlds who they have reached out to quietly through the years. Most of those family members have already been here countless times to visit their loved ones." He said proudly. "We arrange all of it."

"How?" Coren asked in disbelief.

"We worked out a regular transport schedule. An Underground Network so to speak. Each month we bring several hundred Vanari here to visit with their loved ones. Some are here even as we speak. None have ever revealed what they know. I have a feeling that will change soon... but they are loyal Vanari citizens who think their government is wrong. And they do not care that their brothers or sisters or children have found lives here with us." Rinel said.

"By the prophets!" Coren gasped shaking his head.

"My sons command ships and men Coren. Ryana and Nyosa are Special Forces trained. We will not give up our lives here... what we have built and come to love... to the dictates of ancient old fools who cling to power and sell out our own people!" Rinel said.

"So many?" Coren said softly.

"The last census was six years ago." Ryana told him. "The pureblood Vanari and Vanari mixed population has grown to over half a million now. This is our home. This is who we are. We honor our Vanari blood and our heritage, we hold it close to our hearts, but this is the life we have chosen. The Union is now our home. It always has been. The dictates of a Vanari government we do not recognize mean nothing to us." She spoke as her eyes changed and she allowed her wolf fangs to extend. Coren glanced at Nyosa and saw her do the same and do so with pride.

Rinel looked almost embarrassed. "You will find that many of our mixed children have no love for the Board of Regents in general, or the SBR in particular." He said.

Coren looked at Dutkne. "Who knows this Dutkne?" He asked.

Dutkne shrugged his broad shoulders. "Everyone within the Protectorate." He replied. "It is very hard not to know when nearly three dozen Vanari and Lycanari are now members of the elected Council and have helped to shape us for the last half century."

"Lycanari?" Coren asked.

“Those of us who are half Lycavorian and half Vanari.” Ryana answered him. “It sounds much better than half breed.”

Coren met her dazzling blue green eyes. “So it does.” He said. Coren stepped away from Rinel and looked at the pad. “Does Androcles know?” He asked.

Dutkne nodded. “He knew the moment we became Praetorian and Praetorian Mage.” He said.

Coren looked at him. “And he still wished for me to take this position not knowing how I would ultimately feel or act?”

Dutkne shrugged. “Andro is more insightful than most.” He said. “He took a leap of faith I guess you could say. He’s done a lot of that recently and so far it has paid off. Don’t know how much longer our luck will hold out...” Dutkne shrugged. “But we’ll take what we can get.”

“You speak of him and you as one Dutkne.” Coren said softly.

Dutkne nodded. “In many ways we are. That whole Praetorian and Mage thing. Gives us fits some times.” He said with a smile.

Coren looked at him. “What... what do we do now?” He asked.

Dutkne smiled. “Now? Now we have a meeting with senior military officers. The reason that Denali here called this meeting. You will meet some of our political members and they can give you more information and answer questions for you. What they can not answer I’m sure Ryana or Nyosa can.”

Coren looked at them quickly and then at Rinel. “Why?”

Rinel smiled. “My daughters are now assigned to you Coren my friend.” He said. “Both are Special Forces trained as I said. They finished in the top one percent of their respective class and made their mother and I very proud. Nyosa also has an Educational Degree in History and Political Matters.”

Nyosa chuckled. “It’s called Political Engineering and Restructuring medwan.” She said with a shake of her head.

“She will be your assistant. Ryana is now assigned as your liaison to the Union branch here on Amanuce.” Rinel told him. “She will go where you go at all times.”

“Rinel... I don’t need a bodyguard.” Coren said.

Rinel shook his head. “No my friend... you do. I don’t think you truly realize how badly this could all go when it finally comes to a conclusion. There will be many who will be more concerned about saving their own midaeus. Killing you would solve that problem for them. I will not let that happen. And Ryana is not your bodyguard... Prince Androcles has seen to your protection. But she will respond to any threat against you. As will any of us.”

Dutkne moved closer. “Let’s worry about that when the time comes.” He said. “Right now we have a meeting to attend at the Defense Ministry Building.”

Coren nodded. “Of... of course.” He said.

“Don’t worry Regent Re Mydala.” Nyosa said as she looked at him with those incredible blue green eyes. “We will let nothing happen to you.”

Coren smiled at her but did not understand the look in her eyes that spoke of far more interest than a soldier protecting a charge. He nodded his head. “I will change quickly.” He said as he moved for the bedroom area of the Suite.

DEFENSE MINISTRY BUILDING WESTERN CORRIDOR OF LORENT

The building was unimpressive from the outside and only when you stepped through the main doors into the building foyer itself did you realize that you had stepped into an entirely different world. Coren had never been within the Defense Ministry Building on Austrova. His status as a member of the SBR insured that the military officers came to him and not the other way around. He did take note that they did not enter through the main entrance and Dutkne explained it was for security reasons. Why announce to everyone that Coren was here. Once inside the building Coren was quick to notice that there were many Vanari who moved about freely. All of them wore uniforms and were either Lycanari or pureblood Vanari who had chosen to make new lives for themselves here on Amanuce. Coren drew many glances from them for most were very aware of who he was. They were also aware that his daughters were now the wives and mates to the two oldest pureblood Princes within the Union.

Coren didn't speak as he was led through several doors and finally onto an elevator lift. The men and women he had seen were far more professional than the Vanari Board of Regents ever expected. And Coren had no doubts they were far more organized than even the most generous intelligence report allowed them. There was still very little known about these men and women and the Protectorate... no... the Lycavorian Union now... Coren corrected himself. Coren had first hand knowledge of that when Dutkne had appeared in that ship while they were after Devra and Arduri in the Alpha Quadrant. This new branch of the Lycavorian Union had achieved far more than the SBR or the Board of Regents gave them credit for.

They exited the elevator lift some ten stories below ground if the elevator panel was correct and entered a slightly dimmed area. All around Coren could see massive wall mounted monitors and star charts as well as dozens of men and women moving from computer station to computer station. Dutkne looked at Coren as they walked.

"Coren... welcome to the Command and Control Center for our military." Dutkne told him.

Coren looked at him. "This is... this is amazing." He spoke softly.

"Not quite what the SBR would expect I imagine." Rinel spoke from Coren's opposite side.

Coren looked at him. "Expect?" He gasped. "Many of them still believe you are using Nuclear Fusion reactors for your ships!"

Nyosa laughed softly from where she and Ryana walked in front of them. "You always did say they were blind to their own arrogance medwan." She said.

Rinel watched as Coren looked at Nyosa's figure as she walked. He smiled when his friend nodded his head. "Nyosa Val Ardwor... speaking as someone who has had their eyes opened... I could not agree more."

Nyosa glanced back at Coren and her stunning blue green eyes twinkled at him. "Well... if we can open your eyes Regent Re Mydala... then there is still hope for the rest of the Board of Regents and the SBR."

Coren nodded. "Let us hope so." He answered. "Let's hope so." He watched as Nyosa and Ryana quickened their pace and moved up to the tall Lycavorian female several meters in front of them. They both leaned close to her and nuzzled her cheeks as he had seen so many Lycavorians do with others while in Union space and among them. They came to a halt only a few feet from them and Rinel stepped forward.

"Coren... my wife and mate Tarnie." He said holding out his hand for her.

Coren watched as the woman took Rinel's hand and pressed her lithe frame up against his lean and muscular body without the slightest bit of hesitation. She was just as tall as Rinel and her long blond hair flowed around her face and past her shoulders. Coren realized that Nyosa and Ryana got the thick richness of their hair from their mother. They also got her breathtaking facial features, but Rinel's eyes. He watched as she nuzzled his cheek affectionately and then turn to him.

Tarnie held out her hand to Coren and he took it within his in greeting without pause. He bowed his head to her. "It is an honor to meet the woman who was finally able to tame Rinel Val Ardwor." He said. "And I mean that with great affection and respect."

Tarnie Val Ardwor smiled and laughed softly at his greeting. "And it is taken that way Regent Re Mydala." She answered. "And I don't know about taming him so much." She spoke. "I kind of like his wildness." She said leaning over to nuzzle her husband once more.

"Mother please!" Ryana gasped. "We are in CIC!"

Tarnie laughed. "It is nothing they have not seen before." She spoke proudly.

"What... I do not know what to call you." Coren said.

"Tarnie Val Ardwor is a name I carry quite proudly Regent Re Mydala." She answered him. "My parents insisted... as it was a way to honor Rinel's Vanari blood. And that of our children."

Coren looked at Rinel quickly and then back to her. "I wasn't... I did not know that..." Coren shook his head. "Bah! I will say nothing for fear of making myself look like more of an idiot."

This caused all of them to laugh softly and Tarnie squeezed his hand and reached out with her other to take his hand. "Rinel has always spoken with such fondness of you Coren. It is truly a happy day to see you here and to see and smell the cheerfulness on my husband and mate." Tarnie stepped closer. "It is certainly an honor to have you here and to see that you are now on our side."

Coren smiled warmly liking this woman immediately. “Well... I am certainly glad that I am not so stubborn a fool as I thought myself to be. I would never have experienced what I have these last months... and perhaps lost everything I cared for most.”

Tarnie smiled as well. “Come... Prince Denali and your daughters are already in the main Conference room with some senior officers. We are waiting for you and Dutkne to arrive.”

Coren looked at Dutkne somewhat surprised. He chuckled. “I always hated titles. Never had much use for them. Now that I am not in charge anymore... well... I’m happier than...”

Rinel moved forward. “Yes... we know how happy you are. You have made that clear over the last few weeks.”

Coren and the others laughed at Dutkne’s expression and Tarnie motioned with her hand. “This way.” She said.

Still holding Rinel’s hand she led them down a long corridor to a set of large doors. They slid open at her approach and Coren followed them in to see Denali, Caliria and Arduri standing with half a dozen other Lycavorians around a large Star Chart table. Another door opened and two more Vanari entered the large room, both of them carrying data pads. Coren was not able to tell if they were pure Vanari or the Lycanari as Ryana had called them. It didn’t matter to him as Arduri and Caliria turned to greet him. He embraced them both tightly, first Arduri and then Caliria nuzzling his cheeks lovingly. This type of greeting was something that was completely common within Lycavorian society and those changed by them even a little. It was something he would need to get used too, but he did not shy away from it at all. He turned as Denali held out his hand.

“Good morning sir.” He spoke.

“Denali.” Coren responded as he took the hand. “It has been quite... quite an eventful morning.”

Deni chuckled. “Of that I have no doubt. You accepted I hope?” He asked as Arduri moved up on his right side and Caliria squeezed in between him and her father.

Coren nodded. “I did. How could I not knowing what I know now.”

“Good. Good.” Deni said pulling him closer to the table beside Caliria.

Tarnie stepped up to his opposite side and motioned to the four men and two women who also stood around the table. “Ambassador Coren allow me to introduce Senior Generals Hagoth, Darnal, Vula, Kleena, Astiua and Tusar. They will be coordinating the different strikes and the rescue operations from their Command Cruisers.”

Coren looked at her confused. “I’m sorry... what strikes? What rescue missions?” He asked.

Tarnie looked at Denali confused herself. “Milord?”

“I haven’t filled Coren in on the overall concept or purpose of what I presented General Val Ardwor.” Denali spoke evenly. “It is probably for the better since there seems to be some dissension among your officers here.”

Tarnie met his gaze. “Dissension?” She asked. She looked at the men and women around the table. “Explain please.” None of the men and women at the table spoke quickly enough to suit her and Tarnie focused her attention on one. “Darnal?”

“Hagoth and Tusar have voiced objections to what Prince Denali has presented.” He spoke in an almost disgusted tone of voice.

“I’m listening. That is what we are here for anyway.” Tarnie said turning to the two men who stood side by side to her left.

“Tarnie we are committing fully one third of our combined forces to this operation.” The first man spoke. He was an older Lycavorian, shorter than Denali but equally as broad. “It is... forgive me Prince Denali... but for lack of a better description... Tusar and I believe it is a vendetta. Tusar and I do not feel right taking part in this.”

“This is not an operation that we haven’t discussed in some way through the years past.” Tarnie said calmly. “You were all for it then... why the sudden change of heart Hagoth?”

“It is not the idea of the missions themselves. We do not disagree with them in principle, at least I do not.” Tusar spoke now. “It is the manner in which we are to conduct them however where I have issues.”

“I’m still not hearing an objection.” Tarnie said. “I am now Commander of Lycavorian Union military forces in this quadrant since Admiral Valen was promoted to his current position and left for Apo Prime. I have reviewed the plan and I don’t see anything wrong with it. So... enlighten me Hagoth. Tusar.”

“The operations call for orbital bombardments!” Tusar hissed gently. “Surgical strikes yes... but against known civilian encampments with the distinct possibility of casualties. It also states that we are to take no prisoners! Nor render any aid to those who might be hurt by our attacks! These are not the RoEs that we have operated by in the past Tarnie.”

“Our Operational Guidelines changed the moment the full Protectorate Council passed the Edict of Merger.” Tarnie said. “We operate under the RoEs of the Lycavorian Union, of which we are now part.”

“Why?” Hagoth demanded.

Tarnie looked surprised. “Excuse me?”

“Why do we have to be the ones to change?” Hagoth asked her simply. “We have had a working and functioning government for far longer than those in the Alpha Quadrant. They should be joining us and not the other way around!”

Tarnie leaned forward and placed her hands on the table. “It has been understood since the very beginning that we were always the branch of our people. That those within the Alpha Quadrant were the balance and heart of our species. That is where our homeworld is. Where we all came from at some point. Where our ancestors came from.”

“This is my homeworld!” Tusar spoke.

“You know what I mean Tusar! No one is asking you to uproot yourself or your family.” Tarnie snapped at him. “Wayonn... Dutkne’s father... even the entire Protectorate Senate Council... they have always held out that we would rejoin with our brothers and sisters within the Alpha Quadrant when the time was right. That time has come.”

“They have been at war for the better part of their existence!” Hagoth rasped. “And now they will bring their issues with the OSG and the Eridiani here! Their enemies will become our enemies!”

Denali looked at him. “Would you have preferred that our people simply roll over to the High Coven and let them rule us? Allow them to rape and murder our people as they were doing on a daily basis? They are the ones that attacked us General!”

“I do not need a history lesson Prince Denali. Not from someone who is more than six thousand years my junior!” Hagoth snapped at him.

“General Hagoth... you would do well to watch your tone and who you are speaking to!” Dutkne barked now. “Denali Leonidas is a Prince of the Lycavorian Union! He is your superior and no matter his age... you will treat him with respect.”

Hagoth took a deep breath, Tusar remaining quiet now as Hagoth was now taking the point. Tusar only had issues with the way the operations were going to be conducted. Hagoth it seemed had far deeper political concerns and he wanted no part of that. He knew his friend was pushing to become a member of the Senate and he had been pushing harder ever since they had discovered the Union existed and that a merger was going to take place. Tusar was a soldier... it is all he had ever wanted to be. He would die for his people and his family... but he wanted nothing to do with politics.

“My apologies Prince Denali. You must... you must understand what this looks like to me in the manner you have presented it.” Hagoth said.

Denali shook his head. “No I do not General.” He said. “Would you care to indulge me?”

“We have all seen and heard the reports about your brother. About your father.” Hagoth spoke. “Many from your own Netnews as you call them. I have been studying them for weeks. Since the day it was announced the merger was going forward.”

“Hagoth... you don’t want to go down that road.” Dutkne warned.

Deni held up his hand. “No... let him continue.” He said calmly. “I want to hear what he has to say.” Deni pulled his P1 from its spot at the small of his back and laid it on the table. He tapped the device and did a circular motion with his index finger on the small control pad. Only Dutkne, Caliria and Arduri knew what he had just done and Dutkne shook his head slowly. “You may continue General.”

“There are many of your own Netnews reports out there about the actions that your father and brother have taken through the years.” Hagoth told him. “Many vicious and brutal measures that were not, in my experience and my military opinion, appropriate responses to the events that had occurred. Your father... he destroyed an entire acknowledged government of our own people because, in his mind, the son of the leader, this Joric fellow, falsely claimed your own mother as his mate. The Lunmai is a recognized part of the history and culture of our people. Your father took it upon himself to ignore that. Several hundred thousand Lycavorians then died fighting the Union in defense of what they believed and your father murdered them. And he did it again just recently when his brother claimed his elven mate after she thought he was dead. Her body reacted as any female Lycavorian would after the death of a mate and she accepted his brother as her new mate and husband. She even gave him children which should have bound them together forever. It seems your father didn't like that so he initiated a war to get her back."

Dutkne stepped closer to the table. "Hagoth... you tread in very dangerous waters. You... you truly do not want to..."

"Dutkne!" Denali barked looking at him. "I asked him... now let him continue."

"Just last year..." Hagoth charged forward intending to make his point regardless of what Dutkne wanted. "...your brother destroyed the Jump Gates around the Hadarian homeworld. Over three million innocent Hadarians died because the Union did not agree that the Hadarians wanted a new ruler and they wanted these Kavalians as their friends. Destroying the Gates was not a military action Prince Denali... it was murder. We all saw what he did to that man during your Senate meeting. What was that? Was that a military action? That too was murder.

"Your father, your brothers, even you have taken vampire females, females from the species that has been our sworn enemies for millennia, and you made them your wives and mates. This is the same species that butchered our people on Lycavore and for many millennia afterwards. Just as you yourself said not moments ago. Yet now they are our friends?" Hagoth continued speaking. "And now we are being ordered to conduct combat operations against the OSG and the Eridiani. Why? Because your brother took offense that the OSG captured the Vanari female that he was going to claim as his wife and they sold her into slavery. This has been happening among the Vanari for centuries! Even the Vanari accept it! They have learned to let it go and move on. Not your brother. He destroyed an entire government to retrieve her. Like father... like son."

Caliria bristled at the man's comments, especially in regards to Carisia, her green eyes changing and her fangs bursting forth. No one saw Dutkne reached discretely down and grip her arm. She glanced at him quickly.

[Do nothing Inamarno.] He told her within the heavily shielded Etheric connection. [Let Denali handle this.]

[But Andro will...?] She gasped.

[Andro trusts his brother. And Denali is far more capable than Hagoth believes him to be. You have witnessed this yourself.] Dutkne told her. [I had an inkling that this would happen. Just let it play out. Hagoth is pressing for a seat on the Senate and is supported by those among my people who prefer talk rather than action. We have them as well... just like the Union. On a much smaller scale here thankfully.]

[None of these things he has said are true! He does not know what he is speaking of!] Caliria gasped.

Dutkne nodded. [And you know this because you have seen within Andro's thoughts and memories. Hagoth has not. I'm afraid he will discover this in a manner that he will not agree with in the least. Have faith Inamarno.]

Caliria looked him for a moment and nodded her head. He was right. She was a Princess of the Union now and she knew the truth of things.

"I believe this is nothing more than a personal vendetta by your brother and he is using his authority as Crown Prince to order us to carry out his death warrants." Hagoth spoke evenly. "It is wrong and I will not be party to it. I will also make sure that others know about it if these missions continue."

Hagoth's rant had caught everyone entirely by surprise and that was easily seen on their faces. Even Tusar had no idea his friend had felt this way and he had moved several paces to the left away from him during his speech. Everyone was frozen in place and could only watch as Denali stood there for a long moment with his arms crossed over his chest and said nothing. He nodded his head after several heartbeats and looked at Hagoth.

"And you got all this information from our Netnews?" Deni asked him.

Hagoth nodded his head confidently. "Yes. As well as many Vanari rebroadcasts of your own news reports that they have been showing and even some Rothryn intercepts."

Denali nodded. "I see." He said softly.

Denali Leonidas took a deep breath and exhaled slowly. He was known as the comedian of their family, always trying to make everyone laugh no matter the situation. He was a warrior unquestioned, but he would much prefer to laugh and have fun. It was one of the things that Lisisa and now Arduri found so very attractive about him. He was extremely slow to anger and without question the most tolerant of the Leonidas family. However... push him too far and Denali Leonidas was an Alpha Wolf without denial. Deni finally nodded his head and looked across the table at Hagoth.

Deni reached forward and tapped his P1 lightly ending the recording mode. "General Tarnie... is it common practice with the former Protectorate military to not release certain bits of information to the News hogs who seem to plague us wherever we go?" He asked.

Tarnie nodded her head hesitantly. "It is Milord." She answered carefully. "We do not release Mission details. Operational concerns. Not everything is within the releases we give to the Public channels. It helps to protect our Intelligence Assets."

Denali nodded his head. "I just wanted to make sure. That is also a practice we follow as well." Denali stepped clear of the table and turned around looking at the wall for a long moment before he turned back to look at Hagoth. "You quote our own Netnews reports General Hagoth. I commend you on your initiative... but your utter stupidity outweighs everything else."

Hagoth looked at him with wide eyes angry eyes. "Milord! You have no right to..."

"Shut up!" Denali barked angrily. "Shut the nubous up! You have spoken enough! Far more than I should have let you without beating you down like the fool you have made yourself out to be!"

Arduri moved up beside Denali without a thought and everyone watched amazed at the calming affect she had on him as she pressed her firm body against his side. She reached up without fear and turned his face to her. "Be at peace Denali my love." She spoke in a soft whisper.

They all watched as Denali took a deep breath and brought his hand up to cover hers and his other arm encircled Arduri's waist. His body visibly relaxed and Dutkne allowed a sigh of relief escape him slowly. He truly did not want to have to stop Denali from killing anyone here.

Deni nodded to Arduri and leaned over to kiss her softly. He released her hand and she stepped back beside Caliria as Denali turned back to Hagoth.

"I do not question your loyalty or your honor General Hagoth, only your common sense!" Denali spat at him but with much less fury in his voice. "General Tusar has valid points about how the missions are to be conducted. Had you kept your mouth shut, not gone off on this rant about things you know nothing about, those questions would have been answered. As for your ridiculous accusations about my mothers, nearly everything you just spouted to those in this room is the version that was released by the Union government to the Netnews. The parts you do not know..." Denali moved along the table to stand in front of him. "The parts you do not know General, are the parts that were never released to the Netnews. You have never met my father and brother yet you question their actions. Be glad they are not here General... you would not have liked their reactions to your false accusations in the least about our mothers. Neither would my mothers for that matter." Deni snarled.

"The parts about the incident with my mother, as you call it, there are only a few dozen men and women who know that Chetak and his son Joric injected my mother with a drug made from the inner lining of a dragon egg." Deni spoke noticing that nearly everyone in the room now was focused on him. "This drug had the effect of increasing the potency of the Lunmai to such an extent that it was not natural in any way. Chetak and Joric knew my mother was being affected by the Lunmai because of traitors within our midst that did not want to see my father take the throne of our grandfather. But they also knew that even in the grips of the Lunmai my mother would never betray my father willingly in such a manner. What you don't know General Hagoth, because it isn't your nubous business to know, is that my father claimed my mother under Vada Assirina Cormunn. The Centennial of the Moon. And that was consecrated in the blood they shared at the peak of their time together that night. This made them Anomes." Denali spoke angrily at the man and watching as his eyes grew wide in disbelief at what he was saying. He did not notice the eyes of the other Lycavorians in the room go equally as wide.

"My mother could not fight what her body was telling her because her mind was not her own. She could not fight it because she was drugged! Essentially they took away her free will and choice. As you so aptly stated General, the Lunmai is part of our culture and our history. However... does it completely remove all cognizant ability from the female that experiences it? Especially when she has already been claimed by a male and they have become Anomes?"

"Milord you..."

“Answer my nubous question!” Denali roared stepping right up into Hagoth’s face his eyes changing and his fangs bursting forth. “You will answer my question or I will fucking beat you into a bloody piece of garbage right here in front of everyone for dishonoring my mother with your stupidity!”

“No Milord!” Hagoth rasped quickly.

“Macin Gravinolfgrek, hador Vada Assirina Cormunn fand hote dissa.” Dutkne spoke in the ancient Lycavorian language, the words carrying much reverence in them. Denali and all the others turned to look at him. “Anomes, magari un tur shahlekke son raanath jossas.”

Coren looked quickly at Dutkne. “What...”

“Once consecrated in blood, honor The Centennial of the Moon above all others.” Dutkne spoke softly. “Soulmates, never to be parted by worldly means. There are four pairs of Anomes within the Union. Out of billions and billions of our people... there are only four. Three of them are within the Leonidas family. That alone should tell you something. The fourth pair is the only man who will ever carry the title of fervon to the King.”

Denali’s eyes turned back to look at Hagoth’s face. “Something that Chetak and his idiot son did not know before they began their doomed plan to rule the Union and kill my father.” He growled softly. “Chetak and those like him ruled with an iron hand. Our females were treated as property and slaves. They refused my grandfather’s attempts to bring them out of the violence of our past. So my grandfather Resumar banished them. When the High Coven struck our world in force they escaped and left billions to die! Billions! Do not take me for a fool General Hagoth for I have seen firsthand the memories of my father and grandfathers in my dreams. I know what happened there. You do not. You may be over six thousand years my senior, but you don’t know sibfla!”

Dutkne stepped closer to the table now seeing the look on Hagoth’s face. “Deni perhaps it might be...”

“No Dutkne! This fool wants the truth so I will tell him the truth!” Denali barked angrily. He turned back to Hagoth. “You think you know my father and my brother General? You think because you listen to some igord news person tell you things, that you know who my father and brother are? My uncle kidnapped and raped my second elven mother General! He implanted a device in her head that blocks all Etheric abilities. A device that is Pralor in origin. Therefore she could not feel my father’s Etheric resonance within her because of this device. It was then my uncle showed her live feeds of my first elven mother about to be raped by an Immortal! He lied to her! He used her for his own nefarious gains! I should know because I am the one who led the force to rescue my first elven mother. My mother only submitted to my perverted uncle because she thought she was saving the lives of those members of my family that he told her he would kill if she did not. And since we all know my father was not dead at the time, regardless of what my Uncle thought or did, what does that make my uncle?”

“The Kavalian government helped religious fanatics gain power by subverting the rightful rule of my Hadarian mother!” Denali hissed. “They tried to spread lies about her, to besmirch her honor by calling her a pomai and sraap and showing video of who they said was her laying with multiple men! When they were made to look like the liars they were in front of the entire Union they usurped her rightful place as the Queen of her people with force and deception. The Kavalians had built a secret Jump Gate that connected to those Union Gates around Hadaria. They began jumping in millions of troops and ships. Their intent was obvious, even to a child! From here they could have reached out to attack the entire Union with massive amounts of troops and ships before we could react to such an attack! Andro did the only thing he could to stop this flow of troops and ships. And do not doubt for a moment that he does not see the faces in his dreams of each and every life extinguished that day because he had to give that order!”

Denali jammed his finger into Hagoth’s chest. “The Kavalians blew up our government building, butchering over a thousand innocent men and women. Among the dead were nearly two hundred children! They murdered hundreds of our Drow people because they wanted to hide their invasion force from our eyes! Do not stand there and tell me my brother is a murderer General!” Denali’s arm snapped out and he pointed at Caliria. “You see that woman standing there! She is a Vanari. And she is now a Crown Princess of our Union! A wife and mate to my brother. A wife and mate to my brother long before we ever knew the Vanari or the Protectorate existed! That is what destiny and the gods had already decreed long before Caliria or my fervon ever joined this world. What crime has she committed general?”

“Milord... I...”

Denali turned. “Do you know why Caliria was taken by the OSG? Do any of you?” He demanded. “She was taken by the OSG because she had developed the precursor to a serum that would counteract the chemical the OSG uses against Vanari women. The chemical that forces them to do things they would not normally do! When they discovered she had successfully done this... they took her. What the OSG didn’t know was that they had already violated at least half a dozen laws in the Alpha Quadrant the moment they brought Caliria and other Vanari females there to be sold into slavery. To be raped and used by disgusting men who didn’t have the nor to go out and find their own woman! Men who thought they were protected by the same outlaw government that my brother obliterated.”

Every Vanari in the room had wide eyes at this information. Rinel stepped forward now. “Coren... Coren is this true?” He gasped.

Coren looked proudly at Caliria for a long moment, reaching out to grasp her hand tightly and then he looked back to Rinel and nodded his head. “Yes. Caliria developed the base serum in secret after many years of research and testing. The OSG discovered what Caliria had done, against the laws of the Vanari, and it was arranged with those Vanari who are helping them to take her. It is why Devra and my other children went after her. After she was rescued Denali’s Hadarian mother Anja and her sisters Ceuma and Sivana put the finishing touches on the serum compound.” He spoke. “There is now a working counteragent to the OSG drug. And Ardan and the SBR are sitting on that information.”

“But... but why?” Ryana gasped.

“Because many of them are working with the OSG Ryana.” Coren answered. “Just as your father and so many others have believed through the years. And not one of them believe for an instant that Androcles will sever all ties to the Vanari as he has threatened. He will do exactly as he has said he would. I have discovered Androcles Leonidas has very little tolerance for arrogance.”

“You think you know my brother and father General Hagoth?” Denali continued turning back to Hagoth. “You do not. And if either one of them were here, at this very moment, you would most likely be dead for questioning the honor of my mothers in such a way. You may not like them... even though you have never met them... but do not make the mistake of calling them murderers for their actions when you do not know the full details of events that took place and forced them to do what they have done.”

“Deni we should...” Dutkne began.

Denali shifted his body and looked at those in the room. “My brothers and I made a vow to each other many years ago. And we reaffirmed that vow when our fervon Dorian joined us in this life. I intend to keep that vow. I have presented a military plan that will accomplish that and free hundreds of Vanari prisoners who are now being held by scum in the process. It is a plan that you have been considering for years from what I understand. If any of you are unwilling to put this plan into action then you may join General Hagoth in retirement.”

“What?” Hagoth gasped.

Denali looked at him. “I thank you for your service to our people General; however, I will not abide an officer who speaks and acts without all the facts. And neither will my father or brother. You are officially relieved of your command... effective immediately.”

“You can not do that!” Hagoth declared.

“Yes he can!” Tarnie spat angrily now. “He is a Prince of the Lycavorian Union. Our Union now! And you have succeeded in giving all of us a black eye of shame that we will not soon recover from Hagoth! Sergeant Lengot!” She barked.

Denali watched the man push away from the wall of the room near the door. “General?”

“You will escort General Hagoth to his office where you will supervise while he empties his office of all personal items. You will then escort him from the building.” Tarnie ordered the guard. “I will have your resignation processed within the hour for your signature Hagoth. All of your command codes and access will be revoked immediately. It is time for you to move on Hagoth. Times are changing and this is no longer your place.”

The CIC was deathly quiet as the sergeant led Hagoth from the conference room still in shock at what had just happened.

Denali turned and looked at Tusar now. “General Tusar... you had reservations about the missions? If you will allow me... I will show you why your concerns are unfounded.”

Tusar looked at him with wide eyes. “Milord I...”

Denali held up his hand as he moved up beside the man. “You have legitimate questions General.” He said. “I will show you why they are not truly a concern. It only appears that way.” Denali then began to pull up several different maps and charts on the table. “My father calls this a Shock and Awe campaign...”

ALPHA QUADRANT LYCAVORIAN UNION NAVAL SPECIAL WARFARE PROJECTS DIVISION DREAMLAND SHIPYARDS

They were lined up in front of every view window on the SCIMITAR, both port and starboard, from one end of the ship to the other. Pretty much everyone who was not on duty had turned out to witness something that very few individuals would ever see. All of them had heard the whispers and rumors of this place. All of them knew that it existed. Only a handful on the SCIMITAR knew where it was, or how to traverse the obstacles that led to the single hidden Jump Gate that brought them here. Kameka stood beside Sadi and Ne'Veha in the port lounge staring out the massive view window with perhaps a hundred other men and women. Lu'ria and Sehri stood with them, all of them holding hands. Kameka had a look of utter wonderment on her face as they gazed at the different class ships that were docked at the dozen or so absolutely colossal shipyards that spanned the distance as far as the naked eye could see. The SCIMITAR was moving very slowly towards a cluster of what appeared to be asteroids. Enormous asteroids that had bright lights spread all over them. All of them could hear voices over the internal ship's COM as Sa'sur was speaking to Dreamland docking control.

“...maintain present course SCIMITAR. Upon reaching Point Alpha, please transmit final recognition codes or you will be fired upon.”

“SCIMITAR acknowledges. Seven minutes to Point Alpha.” Sa'sur's voice answered.

Kameka could do nothing but shake her head in astonishment. “My people... the ship captains and pilots... we always believed that this place existed but we could never confirm the many rumors we heard.”

Sadi smiled next to her. “I have never been here... so don't feel left out.” She spoke.

“Nor I.” Ne'Veha rasped in reply.

“I... I can not believe I am here.” Kameka gasped. “That I am... that I am being allowed to see this.”

Ne'Veha reached out and squeezed her hand tightly. “You are one of us now.” She said softly. “Never doubt that Meka.”

Kameka looked at the deck. “I should be with my father. Fighting to free my... fighting to free my people.”

“You are where you belong Meka.” Sadi told her with a smile. “This is where you were meant to be. Being Daio's wife and mate; being our friend; this is where the gods meant you to be Meka. This is how you will fight for your people. By showing them all they could be.”

Kameka looked at her with her dark eyes and nodded her head. “And I will show them that we can be so much more.” She said.

“Look!” Lu'ria blurted out pointing. “One... no two of the ARIZONA-Class!”

Sadi and Ne'Veha cut their eyes as did many heads. “It has to be Miranda Lorian. The ARIZONA's First Attack Regiment. That would be the ARIZONA itself and the HORNET.” Sadi said.

“Gods!” Kameka gasped suddenly. “What is that?”

All of the attention was then focused to the nose of the gigantic vessel that was coming into view surrounded by the equipment and girders of the largest space dock they had ever seen. As more and more of the ship became visible, no one could ignore it. It dwarfed any ship any of them had ever seen by a factor of five. The nose of the ship began to slope back as more of the ship was revealed and it became much thicker and wider. It was the most formidable ship any of them had ever seen in their lives.

“That... I believe that is our new home.” Sadi managed to finally stammer as they all gazed at the ship.

“Son vada carians!” Ne'Veha muttered in awe.

Sadi smiled and glanced over to the left of where they stood. Her eyes came to rest on Ulana and the other Senators where they stood only a few meters away. Ulana was watching her intently, having heard everything that she and the others had said no doubt. Sadi also noticed that her eyes did not contain anger or hate as they had so many times before. Sadi then turned towards the doors into the lounge as she felt Andro's Etheric resonance. They slid open and he strode through the doors without pause. He slowed as he saw them all before the view window but came right up behind them. Sadi felt him reach out to her and the others with his aura and all of them returned it instantly. He moved up behind her and his powerful arm drew her close to him as he reached for Sehri and Lu'ria while Ne'Veha moved directly in front of his tall form and pressed back against him.

"So what do you think?" He asked with a smile. "Pretty impressive huh?"

"That is not exactly an apt description Saradasaar." Sadi said with a smile.

"It is just a ship." Sehri stated with unique innocence. "A very large ship yes... but still just a ship."

Andro laughed softly and leaned over to nuzzle her cheek while she leaned into him happily.

Ne'Veha turned and looked at him. "Have you been here before Andro?" She asked.

Andro nodded. "Quite a few times. With my father." He answered. "Mainly during the production stages of the ARIZONA Class."

"How long are we staying?" Sadi asked.

Andro shook his head. "Not long I'm afraid. Avatar 341 has had the ship ready to go for two weeks now. Once the SCIMITAR docks we'll transfer over while she takes on some last minute supplies Denali and Arduri requested. Once that is finished we'll depart to meet with Yuri. They should be back in the Alpha Quadrant within six hours. Dori and Sheva are already on their frigate and on the way to the rendezvous. Ben's Chief Engineer sent a message for you KertaGai. Something to do with a ship and that you and Ne'Veha would know what he means. It's finished and in one of the hanger bays on SPARTA'S WRATH. Care to fill me in?"

Sadi shook her head with a smile. "Nope. SirsanGai, Meka and I will see to it. You'll find out soon enough. Don't rush us!"

"Ok. Ok." Andro said.

"DuonGai and I will see to our personal weapons and insure Elynth and the others are settled. I want to make sure everything I requested from my mother arrived safely." Lu'ria spoke. "There are some things that I asked my mother to send for Sehri."

Sehri looked at her. "Me?" She asked.

Lu'ria nodded her head and smiled her amber eyes bright and full of love. "I sent her your sizes and had several sets of our Drow light armor made for you. It is similar to the ArmorPly that we normally wear, but it is lighter and will allow you to wear it during our instruction."

Sehri's eyes grew wider. "Instruction?"

Lu'ria smiled. "When our Enylarcopri returns we are going to begin instructing you." She said. "Saradasaar wants us to train you."

Sehri looked at Andro. "Really?" She gasped excitedly.

"KertaGai and SirsanGai's abilities are more latent in use." Andro told her. "It enhances their fighting skills yes... but it works more for their flying. You on the other hand DuonGai are manifesting your Etheric abilities in a more defensive nature. Your barriers and such are more advanced than either Lu'ria or Carisia and will be more use to us on the ground. And I want you to be able to protect yourself when we reach the Beta Quadrant."

Sehri looked at him oddly. "Protect myself?" She asked. "Why?"

Andro pulled her tighter to him. "Because I believe there are going to be far more who are very unhappy that we have claimed you as our wife and mate than we think. Things are not going so well within the Beta Quadrant and Deni believes that once we arrive we will become targets. Not only from the OSG and those Vanari and Lycavorians working with them, but also from the Rothryn Science Academy. That is what your mother thinks as well and I tend to agree with her and my brother."

"I won't let anyone take me away from you!" Sehri stated forcefully. "Any of you!"

"Nor will we DuonGai." Sadi told her with a smile. "Our Drow Mistress and Carisia are simply going to insure that if anyone tries this... they will not be happy with the outcome."

Sehri took a deep breath and smiled, trying to reach higher than her petite five foot three frame would allow. "Good." She stated.

Andro chuckled. “I believe you will have a very willing student Mistress.” He said to Lu'ria as he leaned over and nuzzled her cheek.

Lu'ria sighed in delight at his action and nodded her head. “That is good.” She said pulling Sehri tighter to her. “She will need the energy.”

SPARTA'S WRATH

Andro stood across from the towering Avatar 341 on the sprawling bridge of SPARTA'S WRATH. The bridge rested atop the neck portion of SPARTA'S WRATH just at the beginning of where the ship's interior opened and then expanded into dozens of different decks and central compartments. Forty-three decks made up the interior of the VORTEX-Class Cruiser, with only the very top deck and the very bottom deck unable to accommodate the dragons that would now call this ship home. The Bio-mechanical nature of the ship allowed 341 to conform many decks and interior compartments into something resembling the interior of a LEONIDAS IIA-Class Strike Cruiser. Since the vast majority of the crew had been pulled from other Strike Cruisers, it allowed them to quickly acclimate to the wide corridors and huge doors that now dotted the ship. With nearly a million crew members, the first living crew members that 341 had had on his ship, he wanted to insure their comfort and protection. Using the first week that SPARTA'S WRATH had been here in Dreamland's docks, 341 had reconfigured and redesigned much of the interior of the ship. There would be families on this ship he knew, and with this knowledge he made sure that all of the living quarters were comfortable easily reached from throughout the ship. Decks eleven through eighteen housed nothing but living quarters. Ranging in size from medium sized apartments for the families, to barracks like spaces for the single crew members, 341 had made sure they would want for nothing. There were eighteen Mess Lounges on the ship scattered throughout the many decks. Avatar 341 knew this was a warship and that would be its primary function going forward. He knew SPARTA'S WRATH would be used to project the Union's power and influence across the stars. It was a similar intent as the ships original Pralor builders. 341 had made many different improvements however. In two sections that the Pralor builders had intended to use for simple storage, 341 designed and implemented quartermaster stores for the crew. They would now be able to purchase nearly anything they wanted within the two stores, one forward and one aft. There were two dozen gathering lounges that could handle a thousand people each at any given time. Each lounge had massive armored view windows which could be opened to stretch the entire length of the room and reveal the vastness of space outside. The ship had no sprawling and lavish quarters for visiting dignitaries as the Pralor Builders had designed, instead 341 had chopped up those massive quarters into much more reasonable sized ones, again for use by the many families that were now his charges. There was a fully equipped school and one massive hospital, with two fully staffed medical clinics in the forward and aft sections. The school, clinics and hospital were heavily armored and shielded deep within the bowels of the ship.

341 had also created a huge additional engineering room three decks above the main engine room that now housed the 18 Mark Eight Whisper Class Shroud generators that could make SPARTA'S WRATH disappear completely. The 2 Seventh Tier Phased Quantum Fusion Resonance Main Reactors provided far more power than was needed to drive the massive ship. With four Fifth Tier PQFR, 341 easily had more than enough power to fully integrate many Union systems into SPARTA'S WRATH that made the ship even more lethal than its Pralor Builders had intended. With a full complement of 900 APOC Series Unmanned T9 Fighter Drones, 341 retrofitted one of the six main hanger bays to accommodate up to a hundred dragons comfortably. Sprawling areas for the dragons to stretch and even make short flights in order to work kinks out of their wings. Huge private pens that allowed for mated pairs to have their own personal areas and unmated dragons to interact with each other. This hanger bay was now as equally armored and shielded as the hospitals and clinics and all exterior launch tubes and hatches had been reconfigured and removed so there would be no accidents. The five other hanger bays now had two TYPE-II Dragon transports and thirty STRIKER DT IIAs assigned to them. Along with the five remaining Pralor Long Range Corvettes, ten MENKLA-Class armed transports and a full Squadron of RAPTOR IIE3 Warfare birds on board, SPARTA'S WRATH had an Air Group that could conduct any mission.

Those were just the things that Androcles had detected as he made his way from Hanger Bay One to the bridge. To say that he was a little overwhelmed would have been the stupidest comment anyone could possibly utter.

Andro let his eyes take in the entire bridge before finally settling back on 341. "I see you have been busy 341." He spoke.

-There were structural changes that needed to be made- 341 answered. -You placed me in command of SPARTA'S WRATH and I deemed them needed to accommodate our personnel and mission parameters. I determined that this configuration would work best for our missions going into the future. I have since activated the lock down protocols and permanently configured the Bio-Mechanical substances in my hull. SPARTA'S WRATH is now as she will appear going forward. No other changes are possible-

Andro looked at him with some surprise as the mechanical sound of his voice was gone and he spoke with a deep baritone now. "You changed the sound and tone of your voice." He asked.

341 nodded his head. -I deemed it was appropriate to adjust how my external voice sounded in order to put the crew more at ease. Do you not approve?-

Andro shook his head quickly. "No... not at all." He said with a smile. "I was going to... I was going to ask you if that was possible."

-My Avatar Model is much more advanced than Avi Prince Androcles- 341 answered him. - Though the interaction we sustained earlier has allowed his neuro pathways to since expand even more and allow for additional growth and changes like those I have instituted within myself-

Andro stepped closer to him. "You are not a model number to me 341." He said looking up into the Avatar's face. "You are a person."

-That designation would not be entirely accurate Prince Androcles- 341 spoke. -I am a fully...-

"It is accurate enough for me." Andro interrupted him. "And for this crew. Avi has made it very obvious to all of us that you were designed to be far more than simple Avatars of the ships you represent. You are this ship yes... but you are also an individual. Have you given any thought to what I suggested?"

-I found your request odd at first- 341 answered. -After further processing and...- 341's eyes met Andro's. -And thought... I have chosen a designation... a name that I would find suitable-

"So you like it?" Andro asked him.

-Prince Androcles I...-

"Stop that." Andro said instantly. "You have done it before and I want you to call me Andro or Androcles from now on."

-That would not be, strictly speaking, appropriate for me to do- 341 answered.

"Yes... well as you have no doubt noticed I am not real big on the appropriateness of many things." Andro told him.

341 paused as he processed that statement. -That would be an accurate statement- He stated.

"Good. So then that is what I want you to do." Andro told him. "Now... what have you decided?"

-In processing the request...- 341 saw Andro's eyes narrow slightly. -In thinking about the request I determined that a name to signify the heart of the Lycavorian people to be very suitable. I reviewed the history of the Lycavorian Spartans that occupied Earth in the time of your grandfather. When translated into the Lycavorian language I found that the tone of one word resonated well-

"So you liked it?" Andro said with a smile.

341 nodded his head then. -If that is the more appropriate description... then yes-

Andro shook his head slightly and smiled. "I can see that this is going to take some doing." He said softly. He looked at 341. "What did you decide?"

-Armen- 341 answered.

Andro tilted his head to the side and looked at him. "Armen." He said. "Spartan."

341 nodded. -Correct-

"I think that fits rather well." Andro said. "Armen. I like it."

-Then I will make the necessary alterations within the ship logs and...-

Andro held up his hand. "I will do that." He said.

Armen nodded his head. -As you wish-

“How soon before we can depart Armen?” Andro asked.

-There is one more MENKLA transport in the process of transitioning to SPARTA'S WRATH. I believe the last member of your team and his wife and mate are aboard-

“Ridor and Cvea?” Andro asked. “Good.”

-I know you probably witnessed some of the alterations I have made since being here- Armen spoke. -I can give you a full debriefing if you like-

Andro nodded his head. “Yes... and I have some other things I wish to discuss with you.” He said. He held out the data pad. “I need to know if there are any Etheric Void chambers on SPARTA'S WRATH.”

Armen nodded as he took the pad. -There are two that are fully functioning. Why?-

“Can you can build what is on that pad to the exact specifications with the materials from one of the chambers?” Andro asked.

Armen took the pad and his eyes scanned it in milliseconds. He looked back up to Andro. -It is possible yes. Why would you require something like this?-

“I'll explain it as we go.” Andro said.

Armen held out his arm towards the elevator lift. -This way-

Cvea clung to Ridor's arm as they moved down the ramp of the MENKLA into the hanger bay. Her eyes were wide in delight and awe, as were Ridor's. Ridor had been concerned that Cvea might not want to leave Apo Prime but her enthusiasm about embarking on this journey had outweighed his own. She had sobered somewhat when Ridor explained what being part of the Crown Prince's personal team meant, but she was eager to experience it regardless. She had also instinctively known what it meant to him as a Lycavorian, a Spartan and a member of the Durcunusaan. There was no more honorable a calling within the Union than working directly for one of the Royal family. For a Durcunusaan, being part of a personal Direct Action Combat Team for the King or one of the Princes was the highest position that they could want or ask for. Each of the Princes had such a unit assigned to them, but only the King had ever truly utilized his, and most of the members of that team had fought with him for decades. Now that Andro would now begin to use the DACT team he had created, Ridor would never need to buck for promotion or assignment anywhere else. When you became a member of a DACT team, that is where you remained until you were promoted to command a Brigade size force.

“Ridor... it is so... so big!” Cvea gasped.

Ridor smiled as his wide eyes gazed around the utterly enormous Hanger Bay. “I do not think big is the accurate word Anocahs.” He said with considerable awe in his own voice.

“Then it is... enormous!” Cvea chimed in happily.

Ridor looked at her and saw the happiness in her eyes and he pulled her close to him to kiss her. Cvea's tail curled around his leg seductively as she melted into his arms and met his kiss with equal emotion.

“Hyperetes Ridor!” The deep voice carried to him and Ridor jerked suddenly, ending their kiss. He turned quickly and his eyes grew wide when he saw the Prince's Durcunusaan Captain moving towards him with Princess Eliani at his side and holding his hand. This sight alone was astonishing to him. He straightened up instantly, Cvea almost instinctively knowing that this was someone important. She had studied her beautiful husband's body language over the last weeks and she would act appropriately. Ridor waited for Jomann and the Princess to cover the last few meters to stand in front of him.

Ridor stood at attention as Jomann and Eliani stopped in front of them, Cvea holding his arm with one hand. “Captain!” Ridor barked out. “Princess Eliani! Enomotarch Ridor Lethon reporting for duty!”

Jomann shook his head as he held out his hand. “That is Hyperetes Ridor Lethon.” He spoke with a smile. “You really should start reading your dispatches.”

Ridor looked at him with wide eyes as he grasped the hand extended to him. “Sir... I... I don't understand.”

“You have been promoted Ridor Lethon.” Jomann said.

“Captain... I... I should not be qualified to reach Hyperetes for another ten years.” Ridor told him still in shock.

“Well... you are assigned to me now. To Prince Androcles’s personal team. I’m quite sure you will not disappoint.” Jomann said. “And who is this?”

Ridor blinked and pulled Cvea close to him, her long tail instinctively encircling his leg. “Captain... Princess... I present my wife and mate Cvea’Ortel Lethon.”

Jomann bowed his head to Cvea as she looked at him with wide eyes unprepared for such a greeting. “Welcome Lady Cvea.” He said formally.

Eliani rolled her eyes. “Carians my love... you are frightening her.” She spoke with a smile and stepped forward. She reached out her hands and took Cvea’s within their grasp. “On behalf of my brother we welcome you to SPARTA’S WRATH.” Eliani said. “Don’t let this big oaf frighten you. His bark is worse than his bite.”

Jomann chuckled as Cvea relaxed visibly. “Forgive me... I do tend to be more formal than I need to be.” He said. “How was the trip from Apo Prime?”

“Sir... it was... it was very fast.” Ridor spoke.

Jomann shook his head. “You will learn quickly that Androcles does not stand on formality Ridor. Especially among those who will fight and stand beside him. I am simply Jomann.”

“And I am just Eliani. Or Eli.” Eliani echoed him.

“But you... you are a Princess!” Cvea gasped.

Eliani nodded her head. “And more often than not, that title gets in the way of being normal.” She said with a smile. “I am Andro’s sister and I have the job of fixing him up when he and my mate do something stupid and hurt themselves.” Eliani said looking at Jomann with glittering green eyes of love.

“Mate?” Ridor gasped himself now. “You and...”

Jomann nodded. “It has not been made public knowledge just yet... but it will get out on its own I would imagine.”

Eliani smiled and leaned into Jomann’s side. “Sooner rather than later too I’m sure.” She said.

“You are Hadarian?” Cvea asked.

Eliani nodded as she looked back to her. “Half Hadarian.” She said looking around. “You have no bags except your carryalls?”

Ridor shook his head and looked at Jomann. “My father was going to send them forward but we have only these right now. We left rather quickly Captain. I don’t know how long they will take to reach us.”

Jomann nodded his head. “That won’t be a problem. Come... Eli and I will show you to your quarters. We can give you a quick tour on the way as well. We were exploring when it was announced your ship had arrived.”

“This ship Captain...” Ridor spoke with awe. “It is...”

“Pretty damn big!” Eliani chimed in as she curled her arm around Cvea’s elbow. “It’s gonna take us weeks to find everything.” Cvea couldn’t help but smile at the open and friendly manner of Eliani.

Jomann nodded in agreement as they began to walk for the exit. “There are Elevator Lifts that can take you forward or aft and up and down. They are all over the ship and easy to find. We’ll take the closest one to the living spaces and help you to get settled in.”

Cvea was stunned at the size of the quarters that belonged to them. It was nearly as large as their home on Apo Prime as she moved through the five rooms with Ridor while Jomann and Eliani stood near the doorway and watched. Cvea finally turned to look at her and moved closer to her once more. Eliani Leonidas had been an immediate calming influence on her as they walked and quite unlike any story or rumors about the Lycavorian Royal family she had heard since becoming Ridor’s wife. She was so open and friendly as they hung back from Jomann and Ridor while walking through the corridors and Cvea gushed over Ridor and the new life she had found. It was almost as if she did not notice that Cvea’s tail bounced happily behind her as she walked, or the brightness of her feline line eyes. No that wasn't it Cvea decided. Eliani didn't care that she was Kavalian.

“They are so big!” Cvea exclaimed again as she came back to where Eliani stood.

Eliani nodded in agreement. “Ours are nearly identical.” She said in reply. “It’s going to take Brendi and I weeks to decorate them.”

Jomann looked at Ridor and held out the two P1 Data Pads. “Your personal P1 Hyperetes Ridor. And one for your wife and mate Lady Cvea.” He said. “They are a new item being issued to all of us within Andro’s team. They are limited so do not lose them. Each is coded to you and Lady Cvea so no one else can use them. They should also help you to find your way on the ship until you begin to memorize where things are. I have mine glued to my head. When we meet everyone for dinner we can explain the uses further for the P1.”

Ridor smiled as he took the pads. “I understand Captain.” He said.

“Meet everyone?” Cvea asked shyly.

Eliani nodded her head and reached out to take her hand. “Don’t worry...” She said. “We are not as bad as the Netnews makes us out to be. Besides... I can hear his stomach rumbling from here.” Eliani said motioning with her head to Jomann. “All he and my brother will do is eat.”

“I haven’t eaten since breakfast!” Jomann complained.

Eliani smiled and looked at Cvea. “See.” She said. She squeezed Cvea’s hands in hers again. “I will be giving complete physicals to all of Andro’s team starting tomorrow.” Eliani saw Cvea’s face take on a concerned look and she stepped forward closer to her. “Don’t worry.” She said softly. “I know what is in your past Cvea.” She said in a whisper while squeezing her hands tightly. “You have no fears here. If you wish... we can do it here in your quarters or in mine.”

Cvea took a deep breath and shook her head. This was a new life for her, and these men and women were not who she needed to fear. She glanced at Ridor quickly and saw his eyes on her and pulsing her with his powerful aura. Since he had bitten her and the virus within his blood now raced through her own, Cvea had been able to experience things she never thought possible. One of those was feeling the warmth and love he projected to her through his aura. It wasn’t nearly as powerful as it could be because she was Kavalian as his mother had explained to her, but his mother had told her it would grow stronger through the years now that the virus was within her and Cvea’Ortel Lethon would bask in it forever.

She turned back to Eliani. “I do not wish to be... to be treated differently. I am not afraid of an exam.” She said.

Eliani smiled. “Good... then you are braver than most of these other babies.” She spoke. “They whine about medical exams all the time.”

Cvea smiled at her truly liking Eliani Leonidas. “I want... I want to do something.” Cvea said. “I want to help.”

“What would you like to do?” Jomann asked her. “This ship and what it can do is new to most of the crew Lady Cvea. And there are many things that you can do. I can adjust your ship access to accommodate whatever it is you want to learn and experience.”

Cvea looked at Eliani. “I want to help others.” She said softly. “But my... my schooling is...”

Eliani took her hand. “I’m short one medic.” She said immediately. “And until Inamarno joins us we’re down two. I could use the help.”

Cvea looked at her with intense interest but then her eyes shifted slightly and she looked at the deck. “I am not qualified to...”

Eliani did not let her finish. “No one is qualified when they first start.” She said. “It will mean a lot of listening to babies like him whine about having to take medicine or having to be poked and prodded. Think you can handle that?” She spoke motioning to Jomann.

Cvea looked at her with a huge smile. “Yes.”

“Good. Then as of tomorrow morning... you will have a new job.” Eliani said. “I can get the accesses for you and give you some reading material tonight at dinner.”

“We will meet in the Port side Senior Officer’s Mess Lounge on Deck nineteen.” Jomann said. “Nineteen hundred hours. Just use your P1 to find us.”

Ridor nodded. “We will be there Captain.” He said.

“Events will never be dull around us Ridor Lethon.” Jomann said. “I hope you and Cvea are ready to experience that?”

Ridor glanced at Cvea who stepped closer to him and folded into his arms with a brilliant smile of happiness. He looked back to Jomann as Eliani did the same thing with him. “We are looking forward to it sir.”

“Yes we are.” Cvea echoed his words with her own.

“Good. We’ll see you at nineteen hundred hours.” Jomann spoke taking Eliani’s hand in his and turning for the door.

“...to know is can you build it Armen?” Andro asked as he and Armen stood beside the large view window in one of the starboard lounges. The ARIZONA and HORNET were easily seen as smaller ships scurried about their superstructures.

-Yes- Armen answered without hesitation. -It will require a quarter of the Worker Drones in order to disassemble the chamber, but it is easily constructed-

“How long will it take?” Andro asked.

-If they begin right after we depart, they will have it disassembled within thirty-six hours- Armen answered.

“How long to build it?” Andro asked him.

-To the exact specifications you have presented here? Eighty-three point five hours- Armen answered. -May I ask where you got these plans Andro?-

“My Grandfather’s Tomes.” Andro answered softly.

Armen nodded. -It is logical that Chief Elder Sumar would have had such detailed schematics in his files-

Andro nodded his head in agreement. “Now tell me... will it work Armen? And I don’t want you to give me some sort of technical answer. Never pull punches with me. Just tell me.”

-I can only assume it is for one purpose? - Armen spoke.

“You would be correct.” Andro told him.

Armen nodded his head once more. -Then it will work quite well. And it will be very permanent once sealed with the new Praetorian Command Codes your father, Wayonn and Murano established and sent to me-

Andro looked at him. “I take it because they established new ones that they have a lot of questions about what will happen out there still?”

Armen nodded. -I can only speculate that is the reason. Trying to predict why your father acts as he does is something I will leave to Avi-

Andro chuckled. “That’s smart.” He said.

-The new Praetorian Command Codes will override any existing Pralor facilities that remain and are locked down with Praetorian Codes. Much like the Science Facility on Onterom.-

“Will the Scourge have left anything standing Armen?” Andro asked.

-During the initial phase of their final invasion that destroyed the Pralor homeworld they bypassed several border systems that had smaller planetary facilities. Research bases and shipyards. The majority of these odd facilities were then ordered locked down with Praetorian Command Codes by the Elder Council before they were killed in order to keep the Scourge from entering them- Armen explained. -It is very possible that some of them remain. The Scourge are single minded in many respects Androcles. Destroying the Pralor people was their main goal. That meant destroying the homeworld. They may have overlooked some of the smaller facilities in that single minded process-

Andro nodded. “Point taken.”

-That is not to say they have not evolved since that time- Armen added.

“Point taken again.” Andro told him.

-I will distribute the codes to Denali, Dorian, Deion and Nara when we rendezvous with them. Jomann has acknowledged his already, as have you-

Andro nodded. “Establish a secondary set of Command Codes with the baseline from my father and Murano. Use a Mutative Algorithm to be able to override any active set of the new Praetorian Codes.”

Armen looked at him oddly. -Why?-

“Insurance.”

Armen blinked. -Insurance? Processing- Andro watched his eyes flick back and forth faster than he could follow and several seconds later they stopped and focused on him. -That is interesting Androcles-

“If my father, Wayonn and Murano don’t fully trust them, then there is a reason for it. Once you have completed the secondary codes, download them to your neural net and to Avi’s. No one else is to have the Secondary Codes except for this person.” Andro told him as he typed on the data pad and handed it to him. “And this knowledge remains with my father, Avi, you and I.”

Armen looked at the pad for a long moment and then back to Andro. –An interesting choice. I will process the Secondary Codes–

“Good.” Andro said. “How soon before Praetorian Murano arrives?”

Armen lifted his eyes for a split second and then back to Andro. –His Pralor Long Range Transport will be arriving at the entrance to Dreamland in one point two hours. Another twenty-three minutes to transit to our location–

Andro nodded. “Transmit this information to him and the contents of our discussion about what I have planned. Discuss the Secondary Codes with no one else Armen. Once we have his ship in our hanger bay I want to depart.”

–I will make the necessary arrangements– Armen answered.

Andro looked out the view window and was silent for a long moment. Armen simply stood there waiting as if knowing that there was something else. “Armen?”

–Androcles–

“Once it is completed I want you to find me the most vile, decrepit, desolate and unholy place in the galaxy.” Andro looked at him. “That is where I am going to put it.”

Armen nodded his head. –I have already begun this task– He replied.

“You knew I would do this?” Andro asked him.

–The logic and statistical variables of what you would do were easily calculated. At least by me– He answered.

“So you guessed?” Andro asked him with a smile.

Armen blinked several times as he processed that and then he looked at Andro. –Yes... I suppose I did–

Andro laughed at this and slapped Armen on the shoulder. “I like to hear that Armen.” He said. “I like to hear that. Now give me a rundown on the systems we added and tell me about the other request I had. Did you discover anything in your archives about the image I described to you?” he asked as he began to walk/

–Yes. It was among the last of the data packages that I received before the Pralor homeworld fell and all contact was lost. I compared your description to relevant data streams and discovered it within a file on known species. Andro... Avi and I exchanged these prevalent data streams while we were connected so your father is probably very aware of it as well. And the odds of Praetorian Murano having this knowledge are very high as well– Armen told him as he followed beside him.

Andro nodded. “I know.”

–Shall I begin?–

Andro nodded again. “Go for it.”

MANNE UNION ADHOC COMPOUND

Sarlana watched from the doorway as shrieks of happiness echoed in the air all around the area. Conlar and Helen stood on either side of her while Arzoal, Teniri and Nekins were still within the huge building speaking among themselves. They were watching as Zarah and Lucia were practically swarmed by their mothers in tearful reunion. Conlar looked at Helen after a long moment.

“If I may ask...” He spoke softly. “Who is she?”

Helen watched with happy eyes as Zarah’s tear streaked face was animated and filled with such happiness. The nearly broken young woman was gone and Zarah Leonidas had her confidence and strength back. No doubt because of the love Helen could feel radiating from Zarah for Lucia, but also because of the family she was part of.

“Zarah.” Helen answered. “She is the youngest of the older Leonidas children... if that makes sense.” She said with a smile. “She was... she was brutally beaten and raped last year by some vile and twisted individuals. She came very close to death.”

Sarlana’s eyes never left the young woman as she embraces and tears continued. “I can feel the touch of the Dahakoan Androcles on her. A filament of life and power within her. She is resilient and strong.” She said softly.

Helen nodded. “Androcles and Zarah are very close.” She answered. “They...”

Sarlana looked at her. “No.” She said quickly and firmly. “There is no need for us to know the reasons behind the connection they have. Only that it exists. It is private and meant only for your family.”

“What... what happened to those who did this?” Conlar asked.

Helen took a deep breath. “The young woman you see with her...? That is Lucia.” She answered with honesty.

Sarlana nodded as her eyes went back to them. “They wear their love for each other where all can see.” She said.

Helen nodded. “Lucia killed most of those involved. She possess the Praetorian gene in a pseudo dormant state so she can manifest her Etheric abilities in almost the physical realm. The weapons she uses are... they are ethereal in nature really, but able to inflict much harm if fueled by her emotions as they were that day. Androcles and Elynth... they killed those that remained that day.” She answered. “One survived, but his days in this life are becoming fewer and fewer. Androcles will find him... and then justice will be done.”

“He will be tried?” Conlar asked looking at her.

Helen met his eyes. “The moment he laid his hands upon Zarah he was guilty. Andro is close with all of his sisters, but Zarah and Eliani are special to him for reasons which many of us do not fully understand. Dante Moran has been tried Conlar. When Androcles finds him... it will be with only one intent.”

Conlar turned back and watched Dysea embracing Zarah now, her hands stroking her dark hair. He nodded his head slowly. “Justice.” He said softly. “I understand... and I agree.”

Even Sarlana glanced at him with surprise in her eyes but said nothing. She turned back to gaze at them, her eyes settling on the figure of Martin Leonidas. One of his arms wrapped around the petite Hadarian Queen Anja while the other reached out and pulled the elven Queen Dysea close to him when she released Zarah. She saw a flash of movement from the side and then another young man and woman appeared from between the buildings. They skidded to a stop just outside the small group and Sarlana watched as a smiling For'mya whispered into Zarah Leonidas’s ear. She watched her eyes grow wide and then she was reaching for the young woman Sarlana now knew as Eirene.

“Thric guulac.” Sarlana whispered softly. “Ergriff itov ios visidark.” (No Doubt. Only love without question.)

“Excuse me?” Helen asked her.

Sarlana turned to look at her. “It is said... it is said that the Dahakoans would come from families who never doubt their love for each other. This love of family... this navnik... this spirit... it would define them and guide them in order to be able to find one another when they were all awakened.” Sarlana looked back and watched as Zarah laid a lip locker on Fedor and he lifted her off the ground and spun her around in happiness. “The emotion... the resonance and navnik of love within this family is something I have never felt before. It is without doubt, and it is completely absolute.”

Helen nodded in agreement. “It is why they are so special.” She said softly.

“It originates from him.” Sarlana said softly motioning to Martin with her head. “He is the center. The focus. It warps outward from within him.”

Helen nodded in agreement. “Yes it does.”

Conlar’s eyes now took in the massive form of the obsidian colored dragon resting on the ground a short distance from the group. This dragon was without question the most formidable of any dragon he had seen in his lifetime. He matched Arzoal in size, but the musculature and power that radiated from his body was nearly palpable. His resonance alone was staggering, but when combined with the Lycavorian Martin Leonidas it was blinding in its brilliance. His huge head was gently moving up and down the back and shoulders of the azure colored dragon Isheeni, and her wings were fluttering in delight.

“Sarlana?” He said.

Sarlana nodded. "Yes... I see him." She answered. "Two of the Vrelvel Sargti. The Talon Guardians."

"He is... he is massive." Conlar rasped.

"You know of them then?" Helen asked.

Sarlana nodded. "Oh yes. Vrelvel Sargti are revered within Darastrixi society by all. But there have not been any Vrelvel Sargti for nearly a million years. And never one who was not a Darastrixi."

"Well there are now." Helen said. "And they guard Dragonkind viciously. More so Andro and Elynth than their fathers. And that feeling is returned equally. They seem to be drawn to him in some manner. More so than his father." Helen chuckled softly. "In many ways it is almost as if Andro is..."

Sarlana looked at her. "A dragon himself?"

Helen met her gaze with an odd expression. "Yes."

"There is a reason for that. One that will be discovered soon enough. You... you do not seem to hold the same hesitation as the others when speaking to me." Sarlana said. "Why?"

"You are not our enemy." Helen said without hesitation. "And I don't believe you seek Andro and Dorian for an evil purpose. Not that you would be able to influence them to go against what they have been raised to honor and believe."

Sarlana smiled. "I have no doubts of that." She said. "I only wish to experience their journey with them. And to guide and help them in any way..."

"NO!" The deep voice barked out causing all of them to turn quickly. Sarlana gasped in fright at the visage of Martin Leonidas before her. His eyes were near glowing yellow orbs, savage looking dual fangs that could easily rend even her scale like skin to shreds were fully extended, his lips curled back in a cruel snarl.

No one had predicted the reaction from Martin. No one had ever seen him greet a new stranger in such a way unless that person was shooting at him or trying to kill him in some manner. Aricia, Anja, all of them were stunned at the resonance of anger and rage they could feel from the man they loved.

"I know who you are! Doraanar!" Martin hissed savagely. "I know what you did!" Martin stepped closer to her in a very menacing manner. Conlar saw this and acted to protect her.

"Step away from her! You do not..." Conlar began as he reached for Martin. His eyes grew wide when suddenly his body was struck by some unseen force and he was hurtling across the interior of the massive hall.

"Martin Leonidas!" Helen shouted.

Martin stepped closer ignoring her protest and shock. "Wux geou ti clax sia deevdrus! Wux geou ti chian astahi lae wux tira asta torkah!" (You will not take my sons! You will not betray them as you betrayed their ancestors.)

Aricia and the others were stunned at the fluency with which Martin spoke the Darastrixi language. It was almost as if he had been speaking it for years.

Sarlana felt herself lifted into the air as Martin raised his right hand and the soft blue glow of Etheric power shimmered around it. She felt pressure on her body, a force of some kind pressing down against her. Around the two of them a bluish white bubble of Etheric power burst into existence, pushing away all those who were moving towards them. Their voices were lost to her even though she could see their lips moving and Sarlana knew then. The light of peace and recognition dawned in her eyes when she saw the murderous fury in those wild and savage yellow/gold orbs and an odd peace filled her. She reached out her hands and covered his fist with both of them tightly.

You know! Sarlana gasped with wide eyes. She spoke openly in the Etheric connection. A connection that allowed everyone in the room to hear her words. You know what yours sons are!

NO! Martin snarled.

You do! I can feel the knowledge within you! I see it in your eyes! Sarlana rasped.

No! Martin snapped again.

Murano told you what happened didn't he? Sarlana asked him. Of course he did... as Praetorians he would have shared all of his knowledge with you by now. And soon he will share it with your sons.

Do you know how many died! Martin screamed. How many suffered and were tortured before the Scourge butchered them!

What took place was insidious and vile Martin Leonidas! Sarlana gasped. But it is not something I would have allowed had I been able. Many who perished were my friends!

Then why? Martin shouted with Mindvoice.

It was a decision made by others against the will of Zezhuanth! Sarlana gasped out. Many Darastrixi died in defiance of that order! You know this! And so does Murano!

Aricia looked at Helen as she came up next to her. "Helen?" She almost yelled.

Helen shook her head. "I have no idea what they are talking about!" She stammered.

Why them? Martin almost screamed. Why?

I was not the one who chose them Martin Leonidas. Sarlana spoke more softly now. That was done by Wer Zezhuanth millennia before you and I ever existed. He saw something in them. Deep within their souls.

I won't let them! Martin snapped. I will stop it!

You can not stop it Martin Leonidas. It has already begun. You know that just as I do. Sarlana said gently. The many dreams that Androcles told you about when he was a boy. That he shared with no one but you. Your ability to speak my language as if born to it. Your Anome Aricia as well. Isabella stands there knowing not why she can speak a language that she doesn't know. These are only the first signs Martin. It has begun already. Androcles and Dorian, Elynth and Ryner, they will not let you stop it. There is nothing any of us can do to stop it now. They will find them. The last two Dahakoan. They will not be able to fight the connection between them as Isthasyi vur Myvishi ar wer Iejir.

What do you want with them? Martin snarled.

Look at me Martin Leonidas. Look within my sepas. Sarlana told him. You and Torma, Androcles and Elynth, you are Vrelvel Sargti. The first to exist in over a million years. I know you have this ability. Look within my Sepas and tell me what you see. I am the last of the Doraanar Martin Leonidas. Could I ever bring myself to harm the Dahakoan? No matter what darkness enveloped me... could I ever hurt them?

Martin stared at Sarlana for a long moment, his yellow/gold eyes gazing deep within her. Sarlana held everything open to him, baring her entire being to his gaze. She would never be able to hide from the eyes of a Vrelvel Sargti, and she would not try. She felt the Etheric force holding her suspended in the air lessen slowly, but she did not release his hand. Martin finally blinked his beautiful eyes and gazed at her.

No. He said with a whisper.

My only purpose now... my only goal is to guide them and help them to understand. To help all of us understand. Sarlana spoke. I know you have felt it within you. The storm that is coming. Your sons feel it too. As do Wayonn and Murano. The Lorsvek ar Sepas is the way Zezhuanth chose to meet it. His vision of the future. He knew he would not live forever. Why would he do this if he did not care and hold all life sacred? What the Darastrixi did was wrong Martin. So very wrong. It was evil. But it was not done with evil intent. My people have lost their way. Just as you and your sons and your family and people have found yours. Zezhuanth knew this would happen. It is the only reason why I can think that he chose them. They are... they are incorruptible Martin Leonidas. Much like their father.

Sarlana felt Martin lower her gently back to the floor. Conlar instantly began to come to her aide but she lifted her hand and stopped him knowing he would not be able to penetrate the Etheric bubble that still encased her and Martin. When she saw that he would not move she turned back to Martin and returned her hand to his. His grip had tightened somewhat but not out of anger.

You fear what is coming. I can sense it within you. I fear what is coming. Only together will we be able to meet it face to face. Your sons and the two Dahakoans that have not yet been revealed... they are the catalyst. The center of it all. Only when they are together will we know what path to take. Only then will we have all the pieces of the puzzle. And only then will we know why it is happening now.

I can not... I can not lose them. Martin spoke softly.

Lose them? Sarlana spoke with wide eyes. By the will of Zezhuanth Martin... they are part of you! You could never lose them! It is not something they would ever allow!

Martin looked at her and she saw the amazing transformation as his eyes reverted back to normal and his fangs receded into his gums. So what happens now? There is so much going on even as we speak.

Sarlana shook her head. Whatever is going on with the Pralor people is not something I can help with. I fear I can not return to Artaaya now. Many who survive know what happened and I would not have much influence at all. And it would only hamper Delnash's efforts to change the course of things with his people. That is something you must find a way to handle.

And what of you? He asked her.

I will answer any questions that you may have. I will even show you why the Darastrixi among your people treat Androcles as they do. As they will treat Dorian. Sarlana said. I believe my place... the only place I can truly do any good... with your permission of course... is with your sons. Given their propensity to be just like you... keeping them from going off and doing something incredibly stupid is what I must do.

Martin looked at her and couldn't help the small laugh that escaped his throat. They do tend to be unpredictable. He said.

Sarlana smiled. A trait that they have fully inherited from you.

Predictable is boring. Martin said.

Sarlana joined in the soft laughter and felt his resonance as a Vrelvel Sargti sweep around her protectively. She watched with awe in her eyes as the Etheric bubble that had encased them dissipated until it was gone and then they both turned. Everyone in the main hall was staring at them with disbelief in their eyes. Dozens of others were also watching through the massive hole that was once an entire wall section of the building. Martin had blown it outward without so much as a blink and didn't even know it.

"Oops!" Martin said softly.

Martin saw Danny step from the crowd of people, his A4 clenched in his hands and only wearing his pants and boots. Julie, Kenny, Pablo and even Colin were all standing around with wide eyes. Anuk, Nayeca and Kesyla stood together, their skin flush and all of them smelling of each other. Martin met Danny's eyes then, seeing the displeasure of being interrupted in what he was obviously doing.

He propped his A4 on his hip and looked at Martin. "Forgive me for being the one asshole jerk to ask the obvious question." Danny spoke. "Maybe... fervon... maybe you could explain to all of us what just nubous happen. And why you damn near blew up the entire nubous building!" Danny shouted.

"Just out of curiosity of course!" Danny continued. "Since some of us were actually catching up on some much needed alone time! If you get my drift!" He barked loudly.

"Daniel!" Anuk hissed with a great deal of embarrassment while everyone in the area who had heard Danny began to chuckle and snicker.

Danny's eyes never left Martin. "Well? Start talking chump!"

CHAPTER THIRTY

SPARTA'S WRATH DREAMLAND

Murano had never been on a VORTEX-Class Cruiser before, and though he was a Pralor, even he was in awe of the sheer size and utter majesty of the ship. There were many such ships at the height of their war with the Scourge, but this ship was to be the first of its unique Class. It was packed with the very finest and most advanced Pralor technology, weapons and equipment to exist at that time as well as some things that had not even been introduced to the main fleets. These items made the other VORTEX-Class Cruisers pale in comparison.

Mari clung to his arm tightly as they closely followed the Lycavorian Security Officer along the huge corridors of the ship, her beautiful face showing her excitement and delight at what she was witnessing. This ship and the others that were intended to come after it were the most powerful and sophisticated warships the Pralor people had ever built, designed to meet the Scourge Hive ships force on force and come out victorious. Mari was enraptured with the ship and to some larger extent the Lycavorian people themselves. Murano knew that Mari had been reading from dozens of data and history scrolls given to her by Helen and Wayonn. He did not know what drew his niece to this knowledge but at this point in time she was probably the only Pralor among their people with the extent of knowledge and understanding of their cultures and traditions as she possessed. Kesyla had told him Mari was a voracious reader and had graduated tops in her class at the Advanced Spacial Physics University on Artaaya. Her delight at seeing Avi had been profound and he had seen her many times discussing one thing or the other with Martin's avatar on Manne. As they moved along the corridors of the ship heading for the bridge both of them could not help but take note of the many different species that now called this ship home.

Of course Murano thought to himself... this was no longer a Pralor ship.

If what Wayonn had told him was true and he would never doubt a Praetorian Mage, least of all Wayonn, then Murano had to believe the Pralor Elder Council back then had specifically programmed this ship for a single purpose. That single purpose was that it would not respond to anyone who did not have the blood of Sumar within their veins. They must have known all was lost and those Elders, their lives at an end they knew, decided that the only true hope of their people was to program this ship as they had and pray to the ancients within the Rift of Time that Sumar had children. Children somewhere out there among the stars; and that would one day those children be drawn to this ship and discover its origins. Those men and women had not thought about or been concerned with what blood would flow through Sumar's descendants, only that they would be his descendants and only they would know how to use this ship. They had trusted in the belief and faith that if Sumar's blood ran within their veins then they would be like him in some way. Their belief, if that is what they all thought all those years ago, had certainly turned out to be true.

As they moved through the corridors, both Murano and Mari could detect the resonance of Pralor blood within scores of the Lycavorians on this ship. It may not have been prominent in many of them, but it was certainly there. Murano also noticed that many also looked at him with something akin to wonder as they passed him in the corridors. He could hear them whispering among themselves after they had gone by. They knew who and what he was and he could sense the reverence and awe many felt as they passed him. There were also more than a fair share of young Lycavorian men giving Mari more than just a passing glance. His niece was breathtaking in her beauty, Murano noticing she had changed her hair color on the ship here. He asked her about it and Mari had told him she simply returned her hair to its natural color instead of trying to be like Kesyla. Since she had returned her hair color to its natural state of a light reddish brown, Murano noticed that her beauty had become even more enhanced, but Mari possessed a bubbly nature that always made her glow even more.

These were, without question, men and women who had seen battle many times before for he doubted that Androcles Leonidas would crew this spectacular ship with new personnel fresh out their training academies. To know that and then sense their emotions about him caused new pride to flourish within Murano. Pride at what he was. Pride in who he was. Discovering that Martin and his sons existed had returned to Murano all he had thought lost. Knowing that he was not the last of his kind had revived his spirit and his resonance to new heights. Since his talks with Helen and Daniel, Murano had made it a point to look at events more openly and not judge so quickly. He had prided himself when he was younger on being more open minded than others and he had gotten away from that mentality. Now he found himself returning to his roots and he liked the way it made him feel. Helen and Daniel had been very correct in their words to him. These men and women, whether Lycavorian or Elf or Vampire, whatever their species was, they wore their emotions on their proverbial sleeves. They did not suppress what they felt inside them, they embraced it, and no doubt any who bore the Praetorian gene now would be just like Martin and Androcles. They were men or women who would embrace their passion, harness their emotions to fuel their new abilities, but they were also very different. There was no way to ever be sure Murano knew, but given what he had learned and seen so far, he doubted they would ever callously use their power against innocents. Indeed... they would die to protect them in any way they could.

Their culture was different than what he was used to though. Very different. There were few laws within Lycavorian society itself but they were very harsh in many ways. Far harsher than he was accustomed too, but after further thought Murano decided that these laws were very fair and no one was above the law within their society. He realized that most of these harsh laws stemmed from their millennia as slaves to the High Coven. The percentage of Lycavorians who abhorred slavery in any shape or form was astronomically high. They had those among their species who did not follow these laws, but they were considered pirates and mercenaries and treated as criminals. Rape was another crime that Murano found the Lycavorian people as a whole despised overwhelmingly, and the rape of a mated female was considered a depraved and immoral act punishable by immediate death. The parts of their history that Murano had read had made that fact very clear and now he understood at least some of what Martin must have felt having such an act touch the ones he loved and adored. And after what Daniel had shown him that day, Murano had no doubt that the six women who held his heart were far more important to Martin Leonidas than anything else in this universe. He had studied and read as much as he was able, the trip here had allowed him to do just that and he discovered many things that the scientists of his people had never bothered to know or understand about these people. Helen had been correct, they were not Pralors, but they were one of the most honorable species he had ever come across.

He turned quickly when he felt the strong tug on his arm. "Uncle?" Mari gasped as she motioned with her head.

Murano cut his eyes and saw they were about to pass through a large set of double doors. His eyes grew wider as the doors slid aside and they entered the bridge of the ship. The bridge was shaped like a massive elongated U. There was an upper level deck that wrapped around the entire section and a short flight of four stairs that circled the entire bridge and dropped into the lower level. In the center of this elongated U was a wide, elevated platform and railing with six different stations towards the front of the bridge and a single chair behind them. They could see outside the sectioned view windows and they took in the magnificence of the other ships that dotted the area around them. Standing behind that chair were two figures that Murano recognized instantly. It was impossible to miss the size of Avatar 341, as he stood over a full head taller than Androcles Leonidas. The avatar wore a Fleet uniform similar to the other bridge crewmembers, dark gray in color and separated into pants, undershirt and short waist length jacket. This appeared to be the standard uniform for all Union Fleet members as he had seen it on Martin's ship as well. There did not appear to be any rank insignia on any of the crew who were moving back and forth across the expanse of the bridge, though the avatar did wear a gold sash around his waist with the ends dangling to one side.

Androcles Leonidas was far more imposing in person than he was within a simple holo transmission and Helen's words to him echoed gently in his ears.

That is what guides his oldest son Androcles, who you have only spoken to in a silly holo transmission, but who is far more unforgiving than his siblings and even his own father.

Androcles stood stoically with his arms crossed over his broad chest taking everything in. Like his father, this young man radiated staggering power within the Etheric realm. A power and resonance that was matched only by his father. The echo of their Etheric resonances made Murano feel as if he was standing once more beside his friend and mentor as he had done so many thousands of years before.

Androcles Leonidas could have been his father's twin brother if not for the shorter hair and neatly trimmed goatee that he sported, unlike his father's much longer shoulder length hair and meticulously trimmed beard. He was shorter than his father by an inch or two and did not appear to meet his father's incredibly defined two hundred and forty plus pounds of rock and granite like muscle. However, Murano estimated Androcles was perhaps two hundred and twenty pounds, but no less distinct in a muscular fashion. The superb definition of his Spartan trained body was evident even under the uniform that he wore. Like his father, he would be an imposing figure to stand before even without his Etheric abilities. When he thought about it for a moment, Murano realized that he had not seen one man or woman within Martin's entire command that was not in superior physical condition. Wayonn had told him that the Spartan way of life that Martin's father had grown up in was brutal and sometimes lethal, but it had forged both men and women to utter physical perfection. This practice took deep root within the Lycavorian Union when Martin's father gave his life for trillions of lifeforms that he had never known. Lycavorian, Elf, Algolian, even some of the minor species within the Union had taken up the mantle of this way of life. When Martin had returned to the Union and his people saw that he had continued this very tradition and way of life like his father without even thinking, it spurred an even larger number within the Union to perfect their bodies no matter what their age. While Murano had always kept himself in superb physical condition, he knew he did not come close to any of the men or women he had seen so far. He made the decision then to insure that he changed that fact for it appeared that Martin's children followed this same mentality without fail.

Androcles wore a similar uniform to the avatar and everyone else, yet around his waist he wore a crimson sash with two lines of gold trim along the outer edges and the figure of a golden dragon lifting off the ground gracefully embroidered into the ends.

The young Lycavorian guard that had led them here stepped closer. "Sir... would you care to be presented to the Crown Prince now?" He asked politely.

Murano looked at him. "What are they doing?" He asked.

“I believe we are preparing to get underway sir.” The young man answered. “We were only waiting for you to arrive.”

Murano shook his head. “I’m sorry... I never asked your name.”

“Gregan sir.” The Durcunusaan answered.

“Gregan... introductions can wait. I do not wish to disturb them. I do have a question however... the sash he wears. Does it have some meaning?” Murano asked.

The Durcunusaan troop glanced over to Andro and then back quickly. “Androcles abhors any type of pomp.” The young man answered him. “You will notice that none of the crew wears rank insignia. It is a tradition that he began on the SCIMITAR and it continues here. It insures everyone is treated in the same fashion as they wish to be treated.”

Mari looked at him with wide eyes. “You refer to him by name.” She asked. “Is that... is that allowed?”

The young Durcunusaan chuckled softly. “Only to the Durcunusaan Lady Mari.” He answered. “And only in private, among family or away from too many ears. He insists upon it, as do his brothers and sisters, the King, the Queens and Crown Princesses. It is part of the reason why any of us would give our lives for them without a second’s pause. Any of them.”

Murano nodded. “Yes... I noticed that from Martin and his people.” He said softly.

“To answer your question Lady Mari, I believe it was Princess Ne’Veha who had the sashes made several months ago.” The young man said. “It is the only thing he will wear now that sets him apart from others... and if I recall correctly... she threatened to kick his mida if he did not. Each of the Crown Princesses wears one now as well.”

Mari couldn’t help but chuckle. “She threatened to kick his ass Uncle.” She said. “I like her already.”

Murano grinned as well and squeezed the young man’s arm. “We will wait until we are underway Gregan.” He said. “There is no rush.”

The troop nodded his head and stepped back to the side just as the voices began to echo across the expanse of the bridge. They were coming through an intercom of some sort and Mari realized that each station member must have been wearing one of the head implants given to her, Kesyla and her uncle while with his father. Both of them lifted their heads as the voice of a woman filled the bridge intercom.

“SCIMITAR actual to SPARTA’S WRATH actual on Command Channel. We are ready to depart. What is your status?” The voice of Sa’sur asked.

-We have secured Praetorian Murano’s ship and are prepared to depart as well Admiral Sa’sur- Armen answered instantly.

“Very well. ARIZONA actual?” Sa’sur asked.

Miranda’s voice filled the bridge now. “1st Arizona Attack Wing ready and sitting on go.”

“Understood.” Sa’sur spoke. “We stick to the established plan. ARIZONA’s Attack Wing will join with King Martin and the ARC ROYAL at their present location. Admiral Lorian will then assume command of all ships in theater and establish Command and Control Directives with the King. SCIMITAR’s Strike Group, ULU WASP and the Dragon Brigade will proceed to the Beta Quadrant and rendezvous with the ARCH DEMON. I will assume command of all Union ships in the theater and begin the implementation of Prince Denali’s plan. SPARTA’S WRATH will proceed on course for the rendezvous with Yuri and Prince Dorian. Three weeks from now SPARTA’S WRATH will join with us in the Beta Quadrant and we will complete the merger of the Protectorate into the Union at that time. Once that is complete... we will depart for King Martin’s location and whatever the unknown wants to throw at us.” Sa’sur finished. “Andro?”

“Manda... what we spoke of before?” Andro asked softly as he looked towards the view window.

“If it is at all possible Andro... I will insure that it does not happen. I give you my word.” Manda answered just as softly.

“No matter the reasons Manda... he can not be allowed to do it. No matter what. I will not have him lower himself to the level of the animal he hunts. He will never forgive himself.” Andro said.

“I understand Andro.” Miranda answered softly. “I will make it happen.”

“Then there is nothing more to say.” Andro spoke uncrossing his arms. “Armen?”

-Initiate Fleet Wide COM- Armen spoke.

“Fleet wide activated sir.” The young elven woman called from her station across the bridge.

Andro moved closer to Armen. “This is Androcles. We are going to be stepping into the very heart of the unknown now. You all know the motto of my family. Never fear the unknown for you do not know what treasures you may discover. You are the finest the Union has to offer. All of you no matter your job or title. It is my honor to lead you and serve beside you. These ships are now our home away from home. And we are all family. I wish all of you the blessings of whatever gods you may covet. May they watch over us in our tasks and look upon us with wisdom and care. Look after those to your right and left and they will do the same. And no matter what, be proud of who each of you are. All of you matter. We will reunite in six weeks and show everyone that we will honor the Pralor blood that flows within many of us. Aur taine and stali cuia fas forn innynne.” (My trust and faith go with you always.)

Murano and Mari looked around the bridge as they heard the two women on the intercom and dozens of others on the bridge utter the same word simultaneously.

“Avoi.”

Murano looked at the young Durcunusaan. “What...?”

“My trust and faith go with you always.” Gregan said. “Amen.”

Mari shivered slightly but not because she was cold. The words Androcles had spoken were meant to be inspiring and the shiver that coursed through her had done just that. It was a sensation she had never felt before. She had been studying the Lycavorians as a people for weeks now. She did not know what drew her to them, but it was powerful and fulfilling, more so than anything in her life before now.

Andro’s arms dropped to his side now and he looked at Armen. “Armen... the ship is yours. Take us out and get us to the rendezvous.”

Both Murano and Mari were wide eyed when they realized that the avatar had a name and Androcles had just turned the ship over to him.

-Understood- Armen answered.

That was when Androcles turned to look at them and Murano and Mari got a first glimpse at his utterly amazing azure blue eyes. They seemed to glow in the dim lighting of the bridge and Murano felt Mari squeeze his arm tightly. Andro didn’t hesitate and crossed the short space between them in five long strides. He bowed his head to Murano with respect.

“Praetorian Murano.” Andro said holding out his hand. “It is a true honor to finally meet you.”

Murano was somewhat taken aback by the greeting but he gripped the hand regardless and felt the Praetorian power within the grasp and resonance that was Androcles Leonidas. As it happened with Martin, Murano felt a sense of brotherhood sweep over him that he had not felt for far too long. He reached out and placed his other hand over both of theirs and smiled.

“It is I who should be saying that.” He said. “You and... you and your father... you look so much like Sumar it is almost frightening.” Murano told him.

Andro smiled warmly. “I hope that is a good thing because Deni and Deion look very much like father as well. Though most of the ladies agree that our brother Arrarn got all the good looks. Though I dare say my younger brother Deion is attracting quite the attention now that the ladies know he will be on the ship.” He said with some humor.

“He is a ladies man?” Mari asked with a sly grin.

Murano looked at her. “Mari!” He exclaimed again as Andro laughed.

Andro shook his head with a smile. “No... a ladies man he is not. But like our brother Arrarn he seems to have gotten all the good looks. He told me once that he is going to save himself for the woman who will hold his heart and soul in her hands.”

“His Anome?” Mari said softly. “Like your father and you?”

Andro shrugged his shoulders. “My father raised us to cherish and love the woman we choose to spend our lives with. Anomes are rare among my people as I am sure you are aware. If it is meant to be for Deion then it will happen. If not... whoever he wishes to spend his life with he will love her until it takes her breath away. Or he will face our father’s wrath.” He finished with a smile.

Murano nodded quickly with a smile laugh. “Androcles... this inquisitive young woman is Mari.” He said. “My niece Mari. She is my brother Delnash’s youngest daughter. And as you can see... she hungers for knowledge.”

Andro looked at him oddly for a brief moment, his nose twitching imperceptibly as he did and then he looked at Mari. This odd action didn't deter him for more than half a second and he bowed his head to her in respect. "A pleasure Lady Mari. You honor me and all of my people with your knowledge of our people." He said.

"You... you are letting the avatar take the ship out of dock?" Mari asked him.

"Mari!" Murano exclaimed gently. He turned back to Andro. "She has been fascinated with the avatars ever since we first saw your father's... Avi... on Onterom."

"He is so... different than the avatars I am used to. Avi as well." Mari spoke excitedly. "They are... they almost seem to have their own..."

Andro glanced back and saw an elven female step up to Armen with a data pad which he glanced at and then tapped his command codes onto. She didn't blink at this, nodded her head and then moved back to her station.

"Personality?" Andro spoke looking back to her. "Avi and Armen are far more than what you think. We have allowed them to evolve as they were intended to." Andro told her. "Avi and Armen are the first yes... hopefully there will be more. Your people would do well to remove whatever locks you have on them and allow them to grow as we have done. I think they might surprise you."

"You named him?" Mari asked.

Andro shook his head. "He choose his own name." He told her.

Mari looked at him wide eyed. "He choose his own name?" She gasped in disbelief. "Uncle did you hear that?"

Murano smiled and shook his head. "The wonder of youth." He said looking around. "In all my years I was never on board one of these ships. This was to be the first of a new class of VORTEX Cruiser. It is everything I imagined."

"I have the Tomes prepared for transport." Andro said. "I imagine you wish to see them and depart as quickly as you can?"

Murano shook his head. "No. I believe... I believe your father sent me here for more than just acquiring the Tomes. I intend to respect that. He told you of the disagreement that we had?" He asked softly.

Andro nodded his head slowly. "Yes."

"He does not keep much from you does he?" Murano asked.

"I do not keep much from him." Andro spoke shrugging his broad shoulders.

"Helen and your Uncle Daniel... they... they showed me a window into your people Andro... I... I may call you that yes?" Murano asked quickly.

Andro smiled. "Only my mothers and my mates call me Androcles... and only when they are angry with me for something I did." Andro answered. "I prefer Andro."

Murano nodded with a smile. "I believe Martin would want me to stay with you for a time so that I can learn more of your people. I would like to learn more. So much more."

Andro nodded in appreciation of what Murano was saying. "It would be an honor sir." He said. "I will warn you however, what I am..."

Murano held up his hand to stop his words. "I know what you are young man. I know what happened to your sister Androcles. I also know what else occurred during that time. What you did. What your father did." He said softly. "Your mothers Dysea and Cirith told me. Helen filled me in on what they did not know."

"And you do not approve." Andro told him with no malice or emotion in his voice.

"What I approve or disapprove of is of no matter." He told him. "You and your father, your brothers, they have the blood of Sumar within their veins. So many on this ship have the Pralor blood within them. Mari and I can sense it all around. But you are also Lycavorian. As Helen told me... that is who and what you are. I came to realize that I have no right to judge any of you. And I also realized that you and your father and brothers represent a new breed of Praetorian. A breed of Praetorian that I now believe Sumar hoped would emerge. Praetorians who embrace their instincts and emotions, unlike those of my day and my time. Now... now I simply wish to be among you and guide you and perhaps bestow my wisdom where it could be of use. But most of all... I wish to learn."

Andro moved closer to him and stared at him intently. "Your guidance and wisdom will be far more welcome than you might think sir." He said. "We are still trying to fully understand what this power we possess allows us to do. What purpose that the gods of fate had in store for us when they gave us this power? I think you will find that my brothers and I will come to you with questions and thoughts about what it all means.”

Murano held Andro’s eyes for a moment longer and nodded his head. “Then I now know the answer to the question I have asked for over thirty millennia.”

“Why you survived?” Andro asked him softly.

Murano’s eyes grew slightly wider but the smile that split his lips was genuine and warm as he nodded. “Your insight truly does you credit young man.” He said. “And you are correct.”

“Have you been to your quarters yet?” Andro asked.

“They wished to come directly to the bridge Andro.” The Durcunusaan troop spoke from the side.

Mari noticed that Androcles did not even blink at the soldier’s use of his first name. She watched Andro nod his head in recognition to the young man. “I’ll take it from here Gregan. Thank you for escorting them. You get your gear unpacked?”

The Durcunusaan smiled. “Not hardly. Most of us are still trying to find our way around this ship.” He answered.

Andro chuckled and slapped the man in the shoulder gently. “I do know the feeling. Pass the word to the others. We have a few hours before we link up with Yuri and my brothers. Tell them to get to know the ship at their leisure, but I want them to get some rest as well.”

Gregan nodded and bowed his head. “As you order.”

Andro turned back to Murano and Mari as the Durcunusaan moved off. “We’ll find your quarters together.” He said. “Armen gave me a brief tour, but it will take a while to learn it all. You have P1s I assume?”

Murano nodded. “Mari and I both.”

“I will have the schematics for the ship downloaded to them.” He told them. “We can use mine for now. This evening... after we link up with my brothers... you can join my family and friends for dinner. I stole one of the cooks from the SCIMITAR. I don’t think he is as gifted as my father tells me Iama is... but it is very good food.”

Murano nodded. “I would like that.”

“Your family is on the ship?” Mari asked slightly surprised.

Andro nodded as he motioned back to the doors. “My grandmothers and my younger siblings Retta, Calyb and Bryon. Though I shouldn’t call them young anymore... they are very close to departing for their Agoges. Another year or two. They haven’t seen our father and mothers in some time and it will be good for them to finally get out and see different things.”

“The Agoge... that is... that is the training course all of your people go through isn’t it?” Mari asked.

Andro looked at her as they entered the huge corridor. “I am impressed Lady Mari.” He said. “You have been studying the history of my people?”

Mari smiled as she clung to Murano’s hand. “Wayonn gave me some material.” She told him. “It was very enlightening.”

Andro nodded his head. “To answer your question... yes. The Agoge is a tradition that my people adopted when my grandfather Leonidas died. It is a period of intense training and conditioning... and it can be brutal at times... though it is completely voluntary. It is not for everyone.”

“All of your siblings have gone through it though correct?” Mari asked as they walked. “Even your sisters? And your mothers?”

Andro nodded. “Yes.” Andro stopped in front of the elevator lift he and Armen had used earlier and looked at them. “I will warn you now... my brothers and sisters are... when we are all together we are...”

Murano laughed at Andro’s attempt to be diplomatic. “You are like all brothers and sisters.” He said. “And it will be refreshing to see.” He said.

Andro chuckled. “Don’t be so sure about that.” He said as he motioned to the lift. “Tame is not a word I would use to describe us.”

“Then it will be expressive?” Murano said. “Good. I like expressive.”

Andro laughed. “Then you will enjoy seeing my brothers Dorian and Deion interact with their sisters. Eliani likes to tease them. We will reunite with them sometime late this afternoon as I said, so tonight will be smooth sailing as they say.”

Mari looked at him as they got onto the lift. “Do you always eat at the same table when you are together?” She asked.

Andro nodded. “As often as we can. Probably too often considering the fights that we have started amongst ourselves. Our father and mothers have chased all of us from the table numerous times through the years.” He said with a smile. “You will see.”

MANNE
UNION ADHOC COMPOUND
MEDICAL FACILITY

“...that is it.” Sarlana pointed to the large monitor, her index finger centered on the dark orange colored strands that Anja had pulled up on the screen from her computer.

It had been an amusing last hour and a half Sarlana had to admit. Martin Leonidas had been unable to answer the question from the dark skinned man she now knew to be the man he considered to be his brother. She, Teniri, Conlar and Nekins had watched in shock for the next thirty minutes as Daniel Simpson had chased Martin Leonidas through the camp, both in their human forms and then in their wolf forms. He was screaming at Martin in their native language the entire time, while throwing whatever items he could grab at Martin. These actions drew bouts of boisterous laughter from everyone who was watching, which Sarlana soon determined, turned out to be the vast majority of the large base camp. This also included many of the adult dragons and adolescents who were among their company. It was quite unlike anything Sarlana had ever seen. Such action by Darastrixi or Pralor was unheard of, especially from those who wielded the influence and power that these two men obviously did. Yet it appeared as if this was all normal to those gathered and they watched and even cheered from different locations throughout the camp.

Sarlana thought for a moment that they would seriously injured each other as their huge wolf bodies collided several times and their savage looking fangs and jaws opened and snapped shut within millimeters of each other. She didn't doubt that those jaws and teeth could crush and maim easily. While Martin was considerably larger than Daniel in wolf form, it was very obvious to all that Daniel could hold his own quite well against the larger wolf. It was Arzoal who moved up beside her and explained in a humorous voice that this had been going on for decades between Martin and Daniel. They may not have been brothers by blood Arzoal had told her, but by every other measuring stick, they were closer than even brothers of blood could be. Sarlana realized then, in those few moments, that this was part of the reason so many followed Martin Leonidas without question or doubt. That so many trusted him with their very lives. And it was undoubtedly the reason so many trusted his wives and mates and children as well.

It was also apparent that both groups of their wives and mates were very close friends and they were also used to it for they sat amongst each other and were laughing and clapping louder than anyone for their respective mates and husbands. Even the young Pralor woman she knew as Delnash's oldest daughter Kesyla was shouting and clapping. Sarlana would have loved to see the look on Delnash's face when he discovered that his daughter had found unquenchable love with a man and two women that many Pralor people thought beneath them. It was obvious even to Sarlana, simply by the glow on her face and in her eyes and her body language, that Kesyla was delighted in what she had discovered and she had embraced it completely. The red and white haired elven females Anuk and Nayeca Simpson sat on either side on her on the ground, continuously nuzzling her cheeks and Kesyla basked in the attention, even returning the affection with small kisses and nuzzles of her own. Sarlana did not see the now almost healed puncture wounds from Daniel's fangs because of the shirt she wore, but Sarlana knew Kesyla had chosen what she had wanted and gone after it.

The two men had ended up along the shores of the lake, both of them soaked and covered in mud. Martin Leonidas had a hold on Daniel's head and as they knelt in the water, foreheads pressed together, and they spoke to one another in a Etheric connection that was more heavily shielded than any she had ever felt. She did not know the words that were spoken, she doubted anyone would ever know since they were obviously meant for Daniel alone and then she saw them embrace each other tightly and she felt a sense of peace surround everyone as they became silent and watched. She had watched then as they returned to where their wives and mates sat on the small hill and Martin had lifted Kesyla into his arms and hugged her equally as tight. Kesyla didn't care that that he was filthy and she returned the embrace with equal feeling as Martin then hugged Anuk and Nayeca.

Everyone began to break up then and return to their duties while Martin's wives ushered him off to clean himself up. He had returned to the medical center thirty minutes before when Sarlana had begun to try and explain everything that was happening all around them.

She turned from the medical monitor and looked at him and the others. He stood silently, holding the large mug of coffee in his hand, while Anja stepped forward slowly and stared at the monitor intently.

"Carians." Anja muttered softly.

"Melyanna?" Aricia asked softly. "Anja what is it?"

Anja reached up and adjusted the screen resolution. "We thought it was... junk DNA." Anja said softly.

"Come again Red?" Martin asked.

Anja looked at him. "All of us have junk DNA Lover. Noncoding DNA sequences that don't really do anything. In most species nearly seventy percent of DNA is noncoding. It just doesn't do anything."

Martin canted his head. "Ok... sure. Junk DNA. Right." He stated.

Anja looked at him and laughed softly. "Like the pieces of a puzzle Lover. DNA is what makes us who we are." She said.

"I got that part." Martin said.

"These sequences here... the dark blue colored ones..." Anja spoke as she turned back to the monitor and ran her finger along the surface. "They don't encode protein sequences so they are not considered active. Essentially they don't do anything. They are just there. In all species that we know of. Lycavorians, Elves, Hadarians, pretty much all of the species we know... they are noncoding." Anja looked at Sarlana. "These sequence strands though, they are an additional strand of DNA in Sarlana's body that we don't have and... and these are active." She said.

Sarlana nodded her head. "Yes... because it is Darastrixi DNA. All of my people have it. As Anja said... it is part of what makes us who we are." She stared at Anja intently as she spoke and saw a light of recognition go off in her jade green eyes. Anja tilted her head to the side as she looked at Sarlana.

"No. It... it isn't possible." Anja said softly.

"Isn't it?" Sarlana asked.

"So?" Martin asked now. "What does that mean? What isn't possible?"

Anja turned back to the monitor and began to type on the small keyboard quickly.

Martin stepped closer. "Red?"

Anja ignored him for a moment as she finished typing and stepped back from the monitor as the image on the monitor changed to three separate images now. Her eyes grew wider. "My god! This is... this is impossible!" She gasped.

Sarlana shook her head. "Improbable yes Anja Leonidas... impossible no. You more than anyone should know that. You are without question one of, if not the foremost medical mind in the entire galaxy. And that includes my people as well as the Pralor people. We could learn so much from you."

"Anja!" Martin snapped now.

Anja turned to look at him with those same wide eyes. "Martin... this is..." She could only stammer out the words.

Martin moved closer to her and reached out to take her hand. "Breathe Red." He said gently. "What is going on?"

Anja gripped his arm and took a deep breath. She turned back to the monitor. "The image on the left is Sarlana's DNA." She said. "You see the dark orange sequence strands?"

Martin nodded. "Yeah."

"The one in the middle is your blood lover." Anja said. "Similar number of DNA strands as the rest of us with more active protein enablers because of your Pralor genes. Here." Anja ran her finger along the screen.

"So?" Martin said again.

Aricia moved closer now her azure eyes focused on the monitor. "This one on the right Anja." She spoke. "There is an additional strand... and it is the same color as Sarlana. Only... it is much brighter."

Anja looked at Aricia and nodded. She turned quickly back to Martin. “Lover this one...” Anja tapped the monitor indicating the one Aricia had pointed out. “This is Andro’s DNA.”

“And?” Martin hissed.

“This is... this strand of DNA is...” Anja tapped the screen. “It is...”

“It is Darastrixi DNA Martin Leonidas.” Sarlana stated.

Martin’s head turned to look at her. “What?” He gasped.

Anja squeezed his hand and made him turn back to her. “She is right Lover. It is a single additional strand of Darastrixi DNA. And it has formed a very cohesive bond with the rest of his DNA. It has blended perfectly. No rejection in the least. A perfect bonding.”

“Melyanna...” For’mya spoke softly moving up beside Isabella. “Can you pull up Dori’s DNA? Our other children?”

Anja nodded quickly and turned back to the screen. She adjusted the resolution again and then two distinct levels of images appeared. All fourteen of the children that Martin Leonidas had fathered. Isabella gasped and moved forward reaching out to touch the screen.

“Dorian!” She gasped.

Anja touched the screen and using her finger she drew the image of Dorian’s DNA up beside Andro’s, shifting the screen until theirs were the first two images. They matched exactly in every way. None of the other Leonidas children had the bright orange DNA sequence.

Sarlana stepped forward and looked at Martin evenly. “Have you never wondered why the Darastrixi... the dragons among you, no matter their age, they are drawn to your son Martin Leonidas? Yes... you are both Vrelvel Sargti... and all of them sense it. Know it to be true. But surely you must have noticed that they gravitate to Androcles. Speak and act differently around him?” Sarlana turned her head and looked quickly into Arzoal’s eyes where she rested on the floor beside Teniri, Nekins, Torma and Isheeni and had said nothing. They had to move most of the medical exam beds and equipment against the far wall in order to allow them to cram into the building but they had done it. “Arzoal? I know you must have felt it. Isheeni? Torma?”

She... she is right mother. Isheeni spoke now. Torma and Martin’s bond is powerful and pure. Like the rushing of a mountain stream. But Andro and Elynth... theirs is...

Unbroken. Torma spoke now... his deep sounding voice gravelly in nature. As seamless and flawless as the bluest of skies on a cloudless day.

Sarlana nodded and looked at Martin again. “No doubt exactly what Dorian and Ryner will be like. He is much younger and has only joined this world recently I know but...”

No. Arzoal spoke now. His name day. The day he joined this world. It was at Dragon Mountain. The trumpets of joy resounded through the walls for hours. I felt it. I felt the... the same thing when Andro entered this world.

“It was... it was beautiful.” Isabella whispered.

“We all felt it.” Anja said now. “It was as if a dim light in a dark room suddenly grew so much brighter.”

Sarlana nodded her head. “Because they knew then.” She said softly. “They knew when Androcles came to be and when Dorian joined him after. They could sense it within all of them. They felt the birthing of new life. Darastrixi life. Dragon life.”

Martin looked at her with wide eyes. “Are you saying my sons are part dragon?”

Sarlana shrugged her slim shoulders casually. “However you wish to describe it... both of them bear the blood of Darastrixi within their veins. It is why Andro is different. Why Dorian is different. They have always been different Martin Leonidas. You have always been different and not just because of what you are now. What you have accomplished. Ever since Zezhuanth chose your species. Ever since he chose Sumar’s bloodline to carry his very essence and it was passed down within your genes until the Dahakoan were born. The Dragonkin. It also means... it also means that the final Dahakoan will come from my species.”

Martin looked at her. “What?”

Sarlana nodded her head and moved gracefully to the nearby chair beside where Conlar sat. She settled her diminutive form into the chair and looked at them.

“The Dahakoan were Wer Zezhuanth’s Vanguard Martin. The Jiilhoimpa Darastrixi were the Supreme Elite of all Darastrixi forces. One hundred thousand strong. They were the most well trained, feared and disciplined fighting force in the known universe. At least at that time. They fought like possessed demons and were never defeated in battle. They were also the most honorable and the most compassionate of warriors. And they could be the most unforgiving souls anywhere. All of them had the same traits within them. A unique and powerful sense of things. Of people and events. They could be the most savage of soldiers or the most cunning of politicians. The love of their family was unmatched in any way and many were known to defend their families with vicious fury if they were slighted in any way that did them harm.” Sarlana looked at Martin and the others. “Am I describing anyone who you might know?” She asked.

“Andro. You... you speak of our son.” Aricia spoke softly.

“Is he not the one who, by his very own vow, announced himself as the guardian of his siblings? Of you and his mothers.” Sarlana asked. “Did he not throw a fellow Lycavorian to his death from one of your ships because he attempted to force himself on your daughter Eliani? Has he not sworn a vow of vengeance...?” Sarlana stopped talking and shook her head. “No... not vengeance... justice.” She looked at Martin.

Anja’s eyes grew wide. “What?” She nearly screamed. “What are you talking about?”

“Has he not sworn justice for what happened to your daughter Zarah?” Sarlana asked.

Martin gazed at her evenly. “How do you know all that?” He asked.

Anja glared at Martin. “Martin... what is... what is she talking about? What happened to Eliani?”

“Even you do not know the lengths to which he will go to protect his siblings Martin. And all of you. I shudder to think of what he could do, especially now.” Sarlana said gently. “And now Dorian will share those traits and take up the mantle with him. It is within their blood as Dahakoan.”

“Martin!” Anja snapped once more causing him to look at her. “What did Andro do?”

“The same thing he has done his entire life.” Martin answered her question gently as he turned fully to look at her. “You were on Hadaria with For'mya and Aricia. Dysea and Isabella were attending a conference on Elear. The... the Spartan that Eli was seeing... the blond haired one? He...”

“Robar?” Anja asked with wide eyes. “He died in a training accident!”

Martin shook his head slowly. “He attempted to rape Eli when she refused his advances.” Martin said watching as his wives and mates returned his gaze with horror filled eyes. “He... he didn’t succeed Red.” He added quickly moving closer to her. “Lisisa came upon him before he was able to do anything. She knocked him out and called Andro. When Andro got there he... he carved through him like...”

“Nauta Melme...” Dysea said as she reached for Anja.

Martin took a deep breath. “Andro took him up in a training STRIKER and tossed his shit sorry ass out of the ship.” He finally spoke the words. “I caught them on the airfield... Normya was flying the ship... only Zarah and Carina weren’t with them because they were with Eliani. I saw the look in his eyes... the intent. I couldn’t... I didn’t want to stop him.” He looked back to Sarlana. “You saw that in my head didn’t you? While I was holding you and...”

“It is the gift of a Doraanar.” Sarlana told him with a nod. “We need only touch someone and we are able to sense things. See things within ones surface thoughts. We are forbidden to probe deeper... such a thing is considered a high crime among my people much like it is with your people.”

Anja looked at Dysea. “She... she never told me.” She said softly. “Why... why didn’t they tell me? Tell us?”

Martin looked at Anja once more and drew her tightly into his embrace. Anja turned from Dysea and didn’t hesitate as she wrapped her arms tightly around his waist burying her face into his chest and inhaling deeply of his delicious mint scent to sooth her.

“Justice was done Red.” Martin said softly. “By the time you returned, Eli had already put it behind her. They all did.”

“It sounds so... callous and unfeeling.” Conlar commented.

Martin’s head snapped around and he was about to unleash his fury on him but Sarlana beat him to the punch.

“It was no such thing!” She barked at him angrily. “Was it no less callous and unfeeling for that young man to try and take from the Dahakoan’s sister something she was not willing to give freely? The result would have been the same among my people Conlar! Am I unfeeling or callous?”

“That is... that is not what I meant.” Conlar stammered.

“Justice was served.” Sarlana said more gently. She turned back to Martin. “I believe you and your people call it Spartan justice. But it is still the same in any language.” She rose to her feet and moved to where Arzoal and the other dragons were gazing at her intently. She reached out to rest her hand on Isheeni’s snout. “The Vrrarhoinpa Darastrixi who were their bonded ones were equally as well trained and wise. Equally as powerful. Equally as protective of their family. No doubt you have seen such things with Elynth and your hatchlings as they grew?”

Isheeni nodded her huge head. Yes.

Torma lowered his head close to Sarlana. What does it mean? He asked.

Sarlana glanced at him and then moved back to her chair. “What does it mean?” She asked directing the question at no one in particular. “Androcles and Dorian...” She looked at Martin and the others. “They carry the blood of my people in their veins. That means the fifth and sixth Dahakoan... the final pair... are from within the Darastrixi people. He has told you of his dreams?”

Martin nodded his head hesitantly. “Yes... when they were smaller. They came to both Torma and I. After Alba Tau the dreams were chased away by... by nightmares for a time. The same nightmares that plagued many of us. For both of them it was the same.” Martin moved away from Anja now and closer to Sarlana. “Just after Dorian was born Andro... he told me the dreams had returned for both Elynth and himself. And they were far stronger and longer.”

Sarlana nodded in recognition of his words. “Dorian had come into this world. It would stand to reason that his presence as another Dahakoan would affect the dreams. Make them return. No doubt Dorian has begun seeing them now as well. If they are as focused and strong as he tells you they are then it can only mean one thing. The last Dahakoans are reaching out to them. They probably already feel them within themselves even across the distance of space and time. It will only grow more powerful and focused. Soon they will be able to communicate with them within the Etheric realm even from across the stars. When that happens they will feel the need to go to them. And nothing will stand in their way.”

“Go to them?” Aricia asked.

Sarlana nodded her head. “All Dahakoan can sense one another no matter the distance that may separate them. Even if only a tiny bit. It was one of their many gifts. This sense would always lead them to one another. It is part of the reason the Scourge had such trouble with them and why they were so feared in battle. Just as the Praetorians were feared.” Sarlana explained. “The Dahakoan led every battle that my people fought against the Scourge. As I said they were Wer Zezhuanth’s Vanguard. Just a handful of them could turn the tide of any battle. It was the same way with Murano and the Praetorians, though I dare say the Praetorians were much more proficient at killing those vile, disgusting creatures because of the extraordinary gene that you and your sons now carry within you Martin. The Praetorian gene. The Dahakoan did not have this gene. The Praetorians are the only recorded species to ever possess such talent.”

“What does this have to do with my sons?” Martin asked.

“Don’t you see?” Sarlana asked him. “The Scourge have been the bane of the galaxy for far longer than their two wars with the Pralor people. Many species have fought them through time... most of them have failed and were destroyed. Wer Zezhuanth and the Dahakoan existed nearly five million years ago Martin. The Darastrixi’s last war with the Scourge took place three million years ago give or take a century or two. The last of the Dahakoan died over one million years ago!”

“Carians!” For’mya gasped in shock.

Sarlana nodded her head. “The Scourge would have appeared to battle the Pralor people regardless, but that fool Xaxon accelerated things and then changed them with his hideous and foolhardy experiments. He gave to them the ability to think and process higher functions that they could not before.”

“He made them smarter?” Helen gasped now from the chair where she had sat quietly this entire time.

Sarlana nodded. “That is one way of putting it... yes.” Sarlana answered. “He had no idea of what he was doing when he obliterated that birthing colony. And because of him and those horrible experiments he conducted... the very creatures he had hoped to destroy became even stronger. Xaxon was an evil man. A possessed man. Unlike your grandfather he craved power and status that was not his to have. And he hated his brother for the influence and adulation he commanded.”

“How do you know so much about Xaxon if you were part of the Seed Mission to Elear?” Martin asked her.

“I was able to remain in contact with fellow Doraanar on our homeworld of Icarava.” Sarlana answered his question. “At least up to the point where Arzoal ordered that we begin to leave Elear. I knew of the Pralor wars and what Xaxon did from those communications. My people were friends with the Pralors and we worked closely on many different things. When we left Elear all of my communication equipment was left behind and destroyed. When we arrived on Artaaya and found the Pralor refugees I had no way to communicate back home. And I did not want to. I was afraid too.”

“Why?” Helen asked.

“When the... when the Scourge destroyed the Pralor homeworld they knew then that they had won. The Praetorians were gone. Betrayed and wiped out. Or so they thought. The Pralor government was destroyed and their homeworld reduced to a lifeless hulk. The Scourge came to the Darastrixi then and demanded two things from the UrIkrisir Mamiss. The Ruling Body of our people. The first demand was that the UrIkrisir Mamiss hand over to them each and every Doraanar among our people that lived. They feared what we knew. Many of the Doraanar were working closely with the Pralors right up until the very end as I said. The Scourge feared what we could do. They feared our influence... what we could learn... had learned from the Pralor people. The Sulevfu di Woiuewr, our individual leaders, instructed the UrIkrisir Mamiss to give the order to appease the Scourge. Many Doraanar did not go willingly as I told Conlar just recently and for this defiance they were butchered by their own people for refusing a directive of the UrIkrisir Mamiss. The first time in the long history of our people that such a thing had ever occurred.”

“Gods!” Aricia gasped.

“I learned these things just before departing Elear. It was the last message I received from my people... and that was almost a century old when I received it.” Sarlana said softly.

“What was the other demand?” Isabella asked her.

Sarlana looked at Martin intently. “The second demand was the crime. The stain upon my people’s history that will never be forgotten. And quite possibly never forgiven. The Scourge demanded that we hand over every Pralor that resided on our planet and we were hiding. There were nearly fifteen million Pralors on Icarava at the time. Most of them scientists, researchers and scholars and the like. All of them with families. If we failed to meet these demands, then the Scourge would turn their full attention to us.” Sarlana rose to her feet and turn away from them and it was easy enough to see the flurry of emotions that were wracking her small frame.

“So we did. We... we turned over our friends to those putrid Scourge monsters.” Sarlana continued speaking as she turned back around and everyone saw her emerald eyes were moist with tears. “But this did not happen without resistance mind you. This order... it... it pitted Darastrixi father against Darastrixi son. Family against family. We were forced to fight amongst ourselves in order to achieve this order from our Sulevfu di Woiuewr. What they could not do so easily through battle the Scourge accomplished through many threats and coercion. And the... the Sulevfu di Woiuewr did their depraved bidding because they were afraid.” She reached up and wiped her eyes.

“It took five hundred years before they finally succeeded. Before they took the last Pralor from our planet. They took almost fifteen million men and women and children who had, in many instances, become part of Darastrixi families. We condemned them to hideous deaths. And in doing so... we killed thousands of our own whose only crime was trying to protect those they considered friends. They turned us against ourselves and did not lift a finger. We may have wept while we did it, but we killed our own in order to appease an enemy all of us hated. And we did it out of fear. We didn’t even attempt to resist them!” She hissed those words with great emotion and anger. Sarlana returned to her chair and shook her head sadly.

“Wer Zezhuanth himself was probably trembling in agony and rage at the Alter of his Eternal Flame at what we did to ourselves.” She said softly. She looked at Martin once more. “I am the last of the Doraanar Martin Leonidas. I must bear the shame of what we did back then. And I must set it right.”

“And once the Scourge discover you live they will stop at nothing to kill you!” Conlar hissed from his chair.

Sarlana nodded and shrugged her shoulders. “Yes... but if I do not try... then I am no better than those who went so willingly to the slaughter all those years ago. That... that is not something I will do.”

“You still have not told us what this has to do with Andro and Dorian.” Anja said with no malice in her words.

Sarlana turned back and looked at her. “The last two Dahakoan are of my species. They are Darastrixi. There is no doubt in my mind now. It is how it is written in the texts.” She told them confidently. “Just as Androcles and Dorian have the blood of the Darastrixi within them... the last Dahakoan will also bear the blood of their fellow Dahakoan within them.” Sarlana saw Martin’s eyes grow wider as he put it all together in his head. “What do you think will happen if the Scourge discover that there now exist six individuals that bear within them the power of the only two forces in the known universe that they feared more than anything else? They may be disgusting and vile monstrosities but they are not stupid. And Xaxon’s actions made them even smarter than they were. And I fear what will happen if the Sulevfu di Woiuewr discovers that two Darastrixi now have this power.”

“Nubou lae!” Martin gasped.

“Do I wish to know what that phrase means?” Sarlana asked looking at his Queens.

“NO!” Martin’s wives and mates spoke as one voice as they all came to their feet.

Martin turned back to her. “But... we... Wayonn and I. Andro. We felt them. We felt them faintly.”

“The Scourge?” Sarlana asked. “I have heard rumors that this was a unique skill of the Praetorians.”

Martin nodded his head. “It appeared they were... that they were coming. But then that feeling changed. They have stopped. We are sure of it. Wayonn believes it is because of what Andro did with the High Coven. Bringing our two people together. Andro believed that is the way it was always meant to be. There are times when his faith in others is... it is far stronger than mine.”

Sarlana moved closer to him. “Seeing things that others do not... it is one of the gifts of the Dahakoan Martin.” She said. “It may seem outrageous and insane... but this is one of the things that made them so special.”

“He believed that there were others like us among the High Coven. That we were always meant to be friends and allies.” Martin said.

“Those with the Praetorian gene?”

“Yes.” Martin answered. “He did something that... he did something that I would never have done. Something I would never have had the courage to do because of what took place in the past. He told me once... he told me my past was not his. That it would never be his. That we could not reside in a past filled with hate and distrust.” Martin met her gaze evenly. “I was... I was wrong and Andro was right.” Martin Leonidas finally spoke the words he had been denying for so long when it came to Yuri and the High Coven. Andro had been right in doing what he did, and because he did, both of their two peoples would be stronger for it. “What is happening back home... only proves that he was right.”

“Beloved?” Aricia spoke softly as she reached for him.

Martin looked at her. “I saw it in Yuri Saaurano.” He said evenly. “I saw who Yuri was always intended to be. I saw inside her... what she wanted... what she desired. She wore her emotions like her armor. There for everyone to see. I couldn’t... I tried but I couldn’t hate her anymore after that. She had the same name... the same looks... but it was not the Yuri I had come to hate. And I couldn’t hate her then. Andro was right!”

Aricia stepped up to him then and did as Anja had done and wrapped her arms around his waist as Isabella stepped up to his opposite side and buried her face against his neck.

Sarlana stared at them for a long moment. “He is blessed with knowledge and wisdom far beyond his years Martin Leonidas. Because of Sumar... because of Zezhuanth. Because of you and his mothers.” She said.

Dysea moved close to Martin now, pressing her tall frame against Aricia and his. She looked at Sarlana. “He has always... he can be very frightening at times.” She said softly. “We have seen this within him through the years. And Elynth too.” Dysea said. “How their eyes would look upon the stars and...”

It was like they could see things that we could not. Torma said softly.

Sarlana nodded. “You don’t know how I have prayed to Zezhuanth that one day he would send the Dahakoan back to us.” She said. “It will be a day that many on my world will praise for decades to come.” She shook her head. “Some will not though... and that is what I must change. Whatever it is that you and the others felt Martin... this would not cause the Scourge to stop. The Scourge hated the Praetorians far more than they did the Dahakoans.”

“Because of what Xaxon did.” Helen spoke again.

Sarlana nodded. "If they sensed you as you sensed them they would not have halted." She told him. "Has it ever been proven that they can sense you within the Etheric realm? I know there was always some sort of connection but has it ever been proven to work the same way for them?"

Martin shook his head quickly. "Not according to Wayonn or Murano. At least not to their knowledge."

"Then something else is going on." Sarlana said firmly. "That is why I have felt the need to come out into the open so to speak. I need... I need to see them Martin Leonidas. Touch them and look into their hearts. Then I will know what is happening. At least part of it. We all hold pieces of the puzzle. I know how Androcles and Dorian came into this world now... that they truly do exist. The Lorsvek ar Sepas is not a myth or a legend as so many of my people now believe. It is real! And your sons are part of it! You are part of it! Your entire family!"

"Us?" Martin asked her with wide eyes.

Sarlana nodded her head. "The last two Dahakoan are Darastrixi. They will regard you as their Sepas Opsola. Their Soul father. Your wives and mates their Soul mothers. Your children their Soul Vractors. The same will apply for the Darastrixi families that are now affected by this event. Androcles and Dorian will consider them equally as important as they do you and their mothers and siblings. It is within their blood."

"This is not something that we need to deal with right now Sarlana!" Martin snapped but not with anger. "We got enough problems as it is! And in case you haven't noticed, we are not exactly heavy on combat troops."

"What does this mean?" Sarlana asked.

"I believe he means they only have a limited amount of men and women who can fight." Conlar spoke.

"All of us can fight." Aricia corrected him quickly but without harsh intent. "Some of us are just better at it."

"We have hundreds of noncombatants here." Anja picked it up. "We can't leave them. We won't!"

Sarlana shook her head. "No... that is not what I mean." She said. "I know that you are concerned about the Svorag threat. And these Kavalian men that follow your brother. I do not want to change what you are doing. I know you have a plan for that."

"A plan?" Conlar spoke up again. "What plan? Remaining here is suicide. You will be outnumbered three or four to one just against these men your brother commands. And you can not face the Svorag with so few warriors."

Sarlana did not take her eyes from Martin and a small smile split the corners of her lips. "I see in your eyes what you plan." She saw. "Oh... and I do approve after what they have done for so long."

"I can't spare my Pralor corvette." Martin spoke. "I need it here in case things go wrong. I will contact Andro and have him send one of the other corvettes from SPARTA'S WRATH. That will take two days. You can stay here until it arrives and then it will take you back to him. He will want to know why though."

Sarlana nodded. "That will do just fine. It will give me the time to discover all I can about you and your people if that is agreeable to you. And you may tell him the truth if you wish. He and his brother and their Vrrarhoinpa will sense me coming regardless, if they do not already feel me within them."

"What will this do? Going to them I mean? Will it help you with something? Accomplish something?" Martin asked her.

Sarlana nodded her head. "When I reveal to them that I exist... that a Doraanar still lives, it will help me to convince the many fools on the Sulevfu di Woieuwr and my people that the time has come to fight. I hope." She looked at him keenly. "I'm sensing any action that they might take against the Darastrixi Dahakoan will not be warmly accepted by your sons?"

"Is what you just told me true?" Martin asked her. "About what they will feel in their blood? In their hearts? What they will feel drawn to do?"

Sarlana nodded. "Oh yes. Very much so." She replied.

Martin nodded. "Yeah... then doing something that will piss off my sons is probably not something they will want to do. Not if they want to keep all their fingers and toes connected to their bodies."

THE WILDS

“...and you have only been in this world for seven months?” Saba Juconi gasped in shock as they sat at the large table in the Mess Lounge of the High Coven frigate.

Dorian and Sheva sat on one side of the table across from Saba and Cazar Juconi. Dorian had promised Cazar that he would answer all his questions and they had been here for nearly two hours doing just that. Sheva and her mother had joined them only a short while ago with trays of food but Dorian did not stop answering questions. He wanted them to know who he was. He wanted them to know that he loved Sheva with all that he was.

Dorian nodded his head with a laconic grin. “Technically speaking... yes.” He answered her question.

Sheva leaned over and grasped his thick upper arm. “Dori bears both the memories and wisdom of three lifetimes within him mother.” She said quickly. “He is not a child.”

“That is abundantly clear considering the way he conducted himself at the colony.” Cazar said. “You... you were born like this? With this knowledge from your father and grandfathers within you. You were aware of everything while still...?”

Dorian nodded slowly. “Yes. I don’t really know how to describe it to you. Andro has been trying to figure it out ever since he was born. It’s very hard to explain...”

“Your brother was born like this as well?” Saba asked.

“Yes.” Dorian answered her. “And both of us were bonded to dragons before we left our mother’s wombs. It’s very disconcerting... not being able to figure out what some of the things we see mean. I’m getting better at it because of Andro but even he has the same issues at times and gets frustrated.”

“And Sheva?” Saba asked him.

“Mother?” Sheva exclaimed.

Dorian smiled and looked at Sheva. Saba could see the adoration in his multicolored eyes without having to try. Cazar Juconi saw it as well and he had decided long before now that this young man would savage worlds for his daughter.

“Lady Saba... I have loved your daughter since my mother Anja pulled me wailing like a wolf cub from my mother Isabella’s womb. Those are my mother’s words by the way.” Dorian said with a smile. He turned and looked at Sheva, his multicolored eyes gazing at her with total devotion. “The moment my eyes saw her that day... I loved her. And I will love her every day until I join my ancestors.” Sheva brought her fingers up to trace his jaw, her green eyes moist, and she kissed him softly. “Or until she gets tired of me.” Dorian added with a smile.

Sheva’s eyes burst open and she leaned back and slapped his face playfully as her mother and father burst out laughing. “Dori!” She exclaimed.

Dorian laughed and leaned over to kiss her deeply, Sheva shifting on the bench to move closer and her hands coming up to hold his face. Saba Juconi looked at her husband quickly and took his hand. They were thinking the same thing she knew. Their only child had found what they had so wanted her to find. They had never seen Sheva look so relaxed and at peace with who she was. They hadn’t seen her in far more years than they cared to admit, but she was different than the daughter they had seen before. She was confident and strong and proud. And the love she had for Dorian Leonidas was so very evident.

Sheva pulled back from their kiss only because she knew her parents were watching them and it was a little embarrassing. Dorian grinned and winked at her then turned to look at Saba and Cazar. “Forgive me.” He said softly. “Your daughter tends to make me forget where I am sometimes.”

Sheva rolled her eyes and elbowed him in the side as Saba laughed softly. Cazar looked at him. “Do not ever ask me to be forgiven for loving my daughter as you do Dorian Leonidas.” He spoke. “What we see in her eyes and face is all we could have ever hoped for.”

Saba reached across the table and took Sheva’s hands in hers. “More than we had hoped for.” She said.

“So... what happens now?” Cazar asked.

Dorian met his eyes. “Now?” He asked leaning back. “We’ll rendezvous with my brother later this afternoon. I imagine most of my family will be with him. There won’t be any talk of operations tonight. We’ll have a large dinner and you can see how truly crazy we all are.”

Cazar grinned. “All families are like this.” He said.

“I would imagine we will have a short meeting to determine what to do next.” Dorian told them. “We can not continue with our primary mission until this fool Moran is dealt with. And we have an unfinished debt to collect from his son Dante Moran.”

Cazar nodded his head. “For your sister.” He said softly.

Dorian nodded. “Once that is complete... well... I’ll let Sheva fill you in on that.”

“And us?” Saba asked. “What will we do?”

“You are free now mother.” Sheva spoke. “You can do what you wish. Go wherever you wish. All of you.”

“And if we do not want to be away from you?” Saba asked.

“Mother I am a Durcunusaan Officer.” Sheva told her gently. “And... and a Princess of the Union I suppose. My place is with Dorian. I have duties to perform.”

“We... we do not want to lose you again Sheva.” Saba said.

“You will not lose me mother.” Sheva told her. “You never lost me.”

“May I suggest that we take things one step at a time?” Dorian interjected. “There is really no reason to worry about events going forward. We should live in the here and now. At least for the immediate future.”

Saba nodded quickly. “You are correct.” She said.

Sheva looked at her mug quickly needing something to do so she did not have to talk. She did not want to be away from her parents either. Not after so long away from them. She grabbed her mug and stood up. “I am going to get more coffee.” She said.

Dorian looked at her and grabbed her hand gently. [We will figure something out Sheva. I promise you.]

Sheva looked at him and smiled knowing that he meant every word. [I do not wish to be... to have to be away from them Dori. Not now... after so long.]

Dorian nodded. [And you won't. I promise you.]

Sheva took a deep breath and nodded. She believed her husband when he said that and she believed that Androcles would not separate them either. “I’ll be right back.” She said with a smile and turned to head toward the counter along the bulkhead that held all of the drinks.

Dorian turned back to her parents and saw them looking at him. He smiled at them just a little embarrassed. “Ah... we were talking within Mindvoice.” He said. “That’s rude and I am sorry.”

“She never... she never showed much ability to use this skill when she was younger.” Saba told him.

Dorian met her eyes evenly. “When I claimed her as my Blessed Wife... when we shared blood... it became part of her. She is getting very good actually... and much stronger as time passes. My brother’s wives and mates are helping and teaching her.”

Cazar detected a sense of pride when Dorian spoke of how Sheva was improving with her skills and this impressed him. Many men he knew, those he had associated with over the last few decades, they would be intimidated by the skills his daughter obviously possessed. Dorian did not seem as if this fact bothered him in the least. He even seemed to encourage it.

“I see...” Cazar began and waited until Dorian’s eyes shifted to him. “I see a sense of devotion for my daughter in your eyes Dorian Leonidas. Devotion and love that matches my own for her mother.”

“She is my... xuruth sir.” Dorian told him. [I'draix d'ussta tresk'ri. Without her now... I am nothing.” (Core. The center of my world.) Dorian leaned across the table slightly. “I give you my word as a Leonidas and a son of my father, I will love her everyday until it takes her breath away. And I will insure we have a proper marriage ceremony honoring her heritage and both of you as her parents.”

Saba reached across the table and took his hand in hers. “The happiness on her face is proof enough of that young man. That is all we need.”

“Tell me of your father young Dorian.” Cazar asked. “What is he like?”

Dorian grinned. “My father... well...”

Sheva moved up to the counter with the large urn and began to draw herself a mug of coffee. It was not as rich tasting as Aricia’s superior coffee blend, but it was hot and tasted well enough to suit her. Sheva didn’t drink as much of the Nau'shindcal d'l'Vlos since becoming Dorian’s wife and mate. Since he was part wolf Dorian didn’t need to drink it at all, but they both enjoyed the taste of the wine like drink and kept several bottles in their quarters. They treated it as something special that they would only do in their quarters now, when it was just the two of them and they were relaxing.

Sheva had discovered many things since taking Dorian's blood during their passionate moments. Her more reserved nature had fallen to the wayside Sheva thought to herself with a small smile, for they were making love at nearly every opportunity they could. Even if it was a quick coupling. Aside from the fact that his blood was the most delicious she had ever tasted, Sheva found that it also served to energize her in many ways. Her senses were much more alert, the scent of a person's blood far more pronounced than ever before. She also did not need to drink the Nau'shindcal d'l'Vlos anywhere near as much as before to replenish her reserves of energy. Sheva also discovered that while her fangs were no larger than they were before when fully extended, they were far stronger now. She had questioned Eliani about it privately and was told that Dorian's blood was enhancing her own physical traits. It was the same for Isabella she discovered. The regenerative abilities of Dorian's dominant Lycavorian blood had added to her own and while she was still a pureblood vampire, she was far stronger and her endurance had increased three fold. These facts had caused Sheva to embrace her love for Dorian even more than she thought possible. She smiled to herself again as she lifted the mug to her lips and thought of how her Blessed Husband could and did carry her petite form in his arms while they made love and caused her to scream out her delight. As she turned to go back to the table she had to stop abruptly, jerking the mug in her hand, when the tall figure blurred in front of her and stopped. Sheva looked down at her mug as she almost spilled it and then glanced back up just as quickly. She recognized the young man as the son of one of the families they had extracted with her parents. He was about her age she judged, tall, well built and quite handsome in his own right. His blond hair was of medium length and slightly wild looking, his pale blue eyes bright and focused on her.

"Pardon me." The man spoke quickly. "I was hoping to catch you before you returned to your table. Forgive me for almost making you spill your Nau'shindcal d'l'Vlos."

Sheva smiled at him politely and lifted her mug slightly. "It's coffee... and don't worry about it." She began to step around him but he moved slightly and impeded her movement once more.

"My name is Lanus Harac." He spoke holding out his hand to her. "You are Sheva Juconi aren't you? The daughter to Saba and Cazar Juconi. I have seen your image captures in their home when my family and I have been over to dinner or gatherings."

"That's right." Sheva said looking at his hand but not taking it.

He bowed his head slightly and drew back the offered hand when she did not accept it. "I would like to personally thank you for what you did." He pressed on. "You got us off that foul planet. No doubt they would have eventually found out about all of us. It would not have been pleasant."

"I don't imagine it would have been no." Sheva answered. "And I had quite a bit of help. But you are welcome."

"Your image captures do not do you credit." Lanus told her. "You are far more beautiful in person."

Sheva met his eyes and tensed slightly suddenly not liking this young man. "Well thank you." She said. "If you will excuse me I..."

Lanus moved closer to her. "I was wondering if perhaps I could interest you in dinner tonight. The food on this ship might not be what I am used too but your delightful company would certainly mitigate that little issue."

"Thank you for the offer... but no." Sheva said.

Lanus stepped closer. "I would truly like to thank you for taking us off that planet." He said. "I think you would enjoy my company. I like to consider myself very... attentive... to those I am entertaining."

"I'm sure you are very nice... but I'm not interested." Sheva said bluntly.

Lanus reached out and took her arm gently now, causing Sheva to look down at where his hand was and then back up to him. "You do not even know me." He said. "How can you be so sure you would not be interested?"

Sheva forced herself to smile. "Trust me... I'm not interested." She said. "I'd like to get back to my parents if you don't mind."

Lanus glanced over quickly to where Saba and Cazar were chatting with Dorian and then he looked back to Sheva. "They seem to be entertained for the moment by your commander." He said. "Forgive me for saying so... but how exactly did someone of your obvious skill come to be taking orders from him? He seems... he seems quite young and single minded. And even brutish in an entertaining sort of way."

Sheva's eyes narrowed slightly. "Brutish?" She asked.

Lanus nodded his head. "I have heard that half breeds like himself are... shall we say... slow." He said with a smile.

"Slow?" Sheva said softly keeping her temper in check. "What exactly do you mean by slow?"

"Surely you have heard that they are not as... intelligent as purebloods like ourselves." Lanus said.

"And where exactly did you hear that?" Sheva asked him.

"It is common knowledge." Lanus said with a smug smile. "It is no matter really. He is a ruffian and a soldier... nothing more." His eyes gazed at her with obvious lust and desire. "Are you certain I couldn't interest you in dinner and drink? I was able to obtain a rare, vintage bottle of Nau'shindcal d'l'Vlos from one of the crew. We could share it together and then..."

Sheva tilted her head and looked at him coyly. "And then what?"

Lanus smiled and lifted his hand to trace his fingers along her jaw line. "I could properly thank you for saving our lives. I could show you how grateful I am."

Sheva tensed even more as he touched her. It made her skin crawl to feel his fingers on her flesh and she knew it was because of her love for Dorian.

"That half breed as you called him is the one responsible for saving your lives." Sheva spoke once more. "You'd still be there if not for him."

Lanus smiled once more. "I doubt that." He said.

"Do you make it a habit of coming on to women that you just meet?" Sheva asked him.

Lanus moved closer to her once more. "Only those who peak my interest." He said. "My parents made sure I had the best of everything. I like to think I maintain that in the decisions I make." He said.

"I'm sure you do." Sheva told him. "Do you have a brother or sister in the program?" She asked wanting to move the conversation in another direction because she could feel her anger brewing.

Lanus nodded. "My older brother." He replied. "That is why we were on that desolate world. To protect his identity while he conducts his duties."

"And what does he feel about what he is doing?" Sheva asked.

"The answer to that is obvious I think." He answered. "Why else would we be here? He questions what he is doing and has for some time. It is the reason that we had to leave that foul planet." Lanus ran his hand down Sheva's arm and squeezed it just above her elbow. "Of course it led me to a beauty such as yourself."

Sheva couldn't help but chuckle now and she looked at him as she sipped her coffee. He obviously wasn't getting the fact that he did not interest her and she would need to take more drastic measures to show him that. She lowered her mug and smiled. "Do you use this czatshu approach on all the woman you come on too?" She asked. (Bullshit)

"I am only being honest." Lanus told her. "You are a vision of beauty and are obviously exceptionally skilled at what you do. I think we would be a perfect fit together."

"Do you?" Sheva asked as she narrowed her eyes slightly in a seductive manner.

Lanus smiled. "Oh yes... I do." He stated.

"There's probably some things you should know about me first don't you think?" Sheva asked.

"I'm sure we can discover them as we get better acquainted." Lanus spoke.

Sheva smiled. "Actually... you should probably discover them now." She said sweetly. "I prefer my men to be very well equipped... if you understand my meaning."

Lanus grinned broadly and moved even closer just as Sheva wanted him too. "I think you will find I am quite satisfactory in that regard." He stated smugly. "Perhaps we could retire to more private surroundings and I could show you."

Sheva turned slightly and set her coffee mug down on the counter and then turned back to him with a seductive smile. "Shouldn't you let me be the judge of that Lanus?" She asked. Her left hand snapped out far faster than Lanus was prepared for and his dark eyes went wide as her slim fingers closed around his crotch and she squeezed.

Hard.

"Owww!" Lanus exclaimed as his eyes went wide.

Sheva's right hand lifted up and clamped around his throat while she whirled him around and slammed him against the counter none to gently as her eyes shifted to the cobalt blue of her vampire nature and her fangs extended fully. The noise of his body slamming into the counter, half a dozen mugs and glasses scattering across the counter from the impact, caused many heads to turn in their direction.

“Let me be very clear on something Lanus Harac! Or whatever your vithin name is!” She snarled at him as several of the members of hers and Dorian’s Strike Team rose to their feet. “I am not interested in getting to know you now, nor will I be interested in getting to know you in the future! That man you so causally call brutish... his name is Dorian Leonidas. And he is my Blessed Husband!” Sheva saw Lanus’s eyes grow wide. “My name is Sheva Juconi Leonidas!” She almost yelled.

Dorian had turned in his seat as had most of the men and women in the Mess Lounge when the crashing noise echoed throughout the Lounge. His discrete hand movement stopped the members of his team from moving forward Cazar saw. Dorian then lifted his mug of coffee and sipped as he watched Sheva slam the man into the counter again. Saba gasped as she recognized the young man she was holding.

“Lanus!” She hissed with displeasure. “That fool!”

Cazar looked at Dorian, who did not appear to be upset in any way, nor had he moved to intercede on behalf of his wife. “You will not do anything?” He finally asked.

Dorian looked at him. “Do something?” He asked evenly. “You mean like go over there and defend her honor?”

Cazar nodded. “Yes.” He answered.

Dorian laughed softly as he lifted his mug of coffee. “Nope.” He said in reply. “Last time I tried that she about kicked my ass too!”

They all turned back and watched as Sheva stepped closer to Lanus. They saw him rise up on his tip toes trying to escape the obvious pain as her hand squeezed his crotch even harder.

Lanus glanced over at Dorian quickly, trying to keep the discomfort Sheva was causing him from his face. “Your Blessed Husband!” He gasped. “He is... he is just a boy!”

Sheva squeezed harder as her eyes narrowed even more. “Do not ever call him a boy!” She barked out. “He has a Degree in Applied Spacial Mechanics! He has fought beside his older brother Androcles Leonidas and killed far more Kavalian Puma Bane dogs than you will ever see in your lifetime! And...” Sheva twisted hard on Lanus’s crotch causing him to whimper loudly in pain and rise up even further on his tiptoes. “He has far more hanging between his legs than this tiny thing I feel in my hand that you are so proud of!”

Cazar and Saba looked at Dorian with wide eyes as he spit coffee out of his mouth and began to cough heavily, his multicolored eyes wide in shock at what Sheva had just announced to the entire Mess Lounge.

“When my husband wraps me in his arms and fills me with his jatha’ulla we’ha... and it is delightfully long and thick... I scream to the heavens!” Sheva snarled at Lanus. “His blood tastes like the sweetest Nau’shindcal d’l’Vlos in all the universe to me! And I cry out in pleasure whenever his fangs sink into my flesh and he tastes my blood! You do not compare to him in any way Lanus Harac! If you ever call him brutish again... I will separate your calesset from your body and you will sing like a woman for the rest of your life! Do I make myself clear?”

Lanus nodded his head quickly unable to speak due to the pain.

Sheva twisted her hand even more and Lanus felt real pain as she was crushing his balls in her powerful grip. “My advice to you Lanus Harac... wherever it is that you end up. The new High Coven under Empress Narice is far different than what you have known on that piss pot of a planet. She is the Blessed Wife to Arrarn Leonidas... Dorian’s brother... and another far more honorable man than you are proving to be. Act this way out there among the new High Coven and you will not like the reaction you get. Act this way in the Lycavorian Union towards any mated woman and she will probably lay open your throat and tear your pitiful cock from your groin for your actions! Then she will feed it to you! Do you fully understand what I am saying to you?”

Lanus couldn’t help but nod his head quickly. “Yes... yes!!” He shouted.

Sheva smiled sweetly once more and released him. She watched as he doubled over in pain and reached for his groin with both hands. Sheva reached out to take her coffee mug from the counter and looked down at him. “I wish you all the best going forward Lanus Harac. You will need it.”

Sheva turned quickly and marched her way back across the lounge to settle beside Dorian as he looked at her with wide eyes. Saba and Cazar looked up when dozens of the members of the crew, male and female, stood up and began cheering loudly. Sheva looked at Dorian with utter devotion and love in her eyes. Even she had not expected her reaction to Lanus’s advances towards her. It had come so instinctively to her to act in such a way and it felt so very good. She leaned over and laid a soft, lingering kiss on Dorian's lips, the cheering growing even louder as everyone saw this. Saba and Cazar Juconi stared at her with pride beaming from their eyes at what she had done. Their little girl had certainly changed, and it was a change for the better as far as they were concerned.

SPARTA'S WRATH
THREE HOURS FROM RENDEZVOUS
HANGER BAY THREE

Sadi, Ne'Veha and Kameka had stood in awe for the first ten minutes after arriving in the hanger bay while their eyes took in the sleek and graceful lines of their new ship. None of them had expected something so utterly elegant to the eye and it showed in their expressions. Only the man walking down the rear ramp shook them out of their stunned state when he saw them.

"Princess Sadi! Princess Ne'Veha! Commander Kameka!" He waved as he shouted their names and almost broke into a jog as he came toward them.

Sadi was the first to regain her voice as he came up to them. "Carians... Joseph!" Sadi gasped. "She is... she is..."

"Utterly beautiful!" Ne'Veha rasped out the words.

Kameka blinked several times to make sure she wasn't seeing things. "She is... she is magnificent! How did you...?"

Senior Chief Joseph Ranor couldn't help the smile that split his face. "Admiral O'Connor thought you would like her." He said.

Ne'Veha looked at him. "Chief Ranor... this is... this is beyond anything we expected." She stammered. "How did you...?"

Senior Chief Joe Ranor or "Rano" as he liked to be called nodded his head with some exuberance. "Once SPARTA'S WRATH arrived and 341 got involved it got really simple, really fast." Joe answered. "We were able to spit out those worker drones like there was no tomorrow. We had three hundred of them working with sixty of our engineers and techs inside of four days. Things came together real fast after that." He held out three data pads, giving one to each of them. "I've been waiting for you to come down since I heard you arrived. Admiral O'Connor wanted me to brief you on a few changes that we instituted." He spoke as they took the pads and began to read. "Once 341... oops... sorry... Armen now I guess. That just came down from the bridge." He turned to face the ship. "As you can see... she is a lot more sleek than the original designs called for. When Armen began to reconfigure the interior of SPARTA'S WRATH we were actually able to take what he removed and incorporate the Bio-mechanical Ducorsis Hull properties taken from the big girl and put it into her frame. The entire interior of the ship is now solidified Ducorsis armor. She's a tad longer than the TYPE IIs at a hundred and eighty-eight meters but she more than makes up for it."

"The main engines are..." Sadi began to speak as she looked at the pad he had given her to read.

Ranor nodded his head with a smile. "SPARTA'S WRATH had two Fifth Tier Phased Quantum Fusion Resonance Secondary Reactors in storage as backups. Armen suggested we take one, break it down and rebuild it and then plug it into her. She is way overpowered for her size and she'll turn on a dime. Anyone not sitting down will most likely puke their guts up." He said with a laugh. "With the spare parts left over from the main Tier Five Reactor... the Worker Drones were able to fashion three, advanced Quantum Fusion Phasic sublight drives. She is probably the fastest ship we have in the entire fleet now. No one will catch you in this baby." He began walking towards the ship and they followed him without hesitation. "The entire outer hull is now composed of a single, two centimeter thick layer of Dragon Armor. We tested the shell before installing it and it took three direct hits from one of SPARTA'S WRATH secondary batteries and it didn't even dent it! I wouldn't want to test it against one of her main batteries... but hell... you can outrun whatever you can't out shoot!"

"Outshoot?" Kameka asked looking up at him with a twinkle in her dark eyes.

Ranor chuckled at her expression. "The Admiral heard that you like to shoot things full of holes Commander. You were a DAGGER driver right?"

Kameka nodded her head somewhat embarrassed as Sadi and Ne'Veha looked on with smiles. "Yes."

Ranor nodded his head. "Damn sturdy gunship if you ask me." He said. "Well... she has two forward mounted, Quantum Matter Pulse Cannons on the port and starboard wings now. Two dorsal mounted and two ventral mounted Point Defense Turrets. They'll cover you three hundred and sixty degrees. She also has two dorsal mounted, fully rotating, Quantum Matter Torpedo Launchers. They can fire one torpedo at a time or in a package of three. The load out is two hundred... but we can cram fifty more into the magazines if needed."

"Two hundred!" Kameka gasped.

Ranor chuckled again. "The Admiral said that you really like to shoot things full of holes Commander." He told her with a smile.

Sadi looked at him. "Chief... the Avionics and Computer systems that were sent to us... are they the same?"

Ranor nodded and motioned with his hand. "Follow me." He said. "I can cover pretty much everything else from the cockpit."

"Wait!" Ne'Veha said. "What about... what about crew?"

Ranor reached over and adjusted her datapad. "The Admiral adjusted the crew manifest based on the skills of who he thought would be part of her crew most of the time." He told them evenly. "There are pens for eight dragons, fully stocked and armored and they can double as escape pods if needed. Four decks in the forward section reducing to three in the rear section. The corridors and rooms are not as large as on the SCIMITAR obviously, but your dragons will be able to reach just about every place on the ship with no trouble. Technically she is classified as a corvette... but I say she is a Light Cruiser in everything else. Cockpit holds five, but only three are needed to actually fly the ship. Six main cabins for those of you who are married and eight smaller individual cabins. A small but fully functioning Mess Lounge. Princess Eliani has everything that you say she requested for the Med Bay and two extra exam beds. We finished installing the Mark Nine Hadarian Medical computer two nights ago. She can tap into whatever she needs from her two consoles. The Admiral figured that Prince Androcles would keep his team to about twelve in number?"

Sadi nodded. "Yes."

Ranor tapped on the pad in her hands. "Then you will just need a Chief Engineer and two deck crew. I would like to volunteer Princess. I have two others who would be just as eager to be my Engineering team if you and the Prince approve. We have been with her since we laid the keel and..."

Sadi looked at him and reached out to take his arm. "You are certain Chief Ranor? You know how Andro can be. It will not... we will not always be using the ship for peaceful means and we will be going places that..."

Ranor nodded his head quickly. "Yes we are Princess. We'd be honored. All of us have seen action and we have our gear packed and ready to go. We are all single so no issue there. Just tell us yes... and we'll keep her in pristine shape."

"Very well Senior Chief. After all you have done... you deserve it." Sadi told him. "Let's get inside."

Ranor motioned to the ramp with a smile on his face that couldn't have been removed with two pounds of explosive. "Right this way!"

HIGH COVEN ORIC CLASS HEAVY CRUISER

RETRIBUTION

THREE HOURS FROM RENDEZVOUS

It had happened quite unexpectedly, but not without an enormous amount of want and desire on all their parts. They had agreed to hold off on sending Nameia to a meeting with her sister until they had more information, and now Yuri was so very ecstatic that they had. It had begun innocently enough, a light dinner in their quarters after spending most of the day learning what she had never bothered to learn about her daughter.

She and Carisia had been together for most of the previous ten hours until dinner, just learning everything about each other as any mother and daughter would do. They had walked for hours it seemed, wandering through the corridors and decks of the ship aimlessly. Carisia held her hand almost the entire time, almost as if she was afraid to lose what she never thought she would have. Yuri still felt horrible shame at what she had put Carisia through as a child and young adult, but it was Carisia who denied that shame and told her that the past was no longer relevant.

“That was not you mother.” Carisia had told her, overjoyed that she was able to actually speak that word to her. “I have learned so much being with Andro and Sadi and the others. The past means nothing anymore. I will remember those years as if an evil step mother had taken your place. That it wasn’t really you. If I hold on to the past then I will never have the mother I want. That is you. And you prove it more and more every day. I will not cling to the past.”

Yuri had almost broke into tears when she said that, for it was almost the exact thing that Yuri had told Onera not so very long ago. Carisia was bubbly and full of energy however, and she would not let Yuri carry that weight. Every step they took during that time, it was as if they were leaving more and more of the past behind them. They spoke of Androcles and Pa'cour and how alike they were in many ways. Yuri could tell just from the tone of her voice that Carisia worshiped Androcles and her fellow Princesses. She discovered that while Sadi and Ne'Veha and the others would never deny each other attention, Carisia was far more drawn to the Drow Lu'ria. Yuri had few bits of wisdom for Carisia; just listening to her had been more than enough for Yuri as she discovered things that a mother should know. Carisia held nothing back from her, just as Onera did not. With each forward step through the ship Yuri's past melted away and she would wait patiently for the time when she could do this very thing with Lucia. Just the two of them. Carisia told her it was what Lucia wanted as well, but her love for Zarah Leonidas was what kept them apart and not a desire to stay away. Lucia wanted to do exactly what she and Carisia were doing now. Yuri did not resent Zarah for this in any way, she knew that the longer they stayed together, the more their love would grow and strengthen. When the time was right she and Lucia would do this very thing. Yuri was amazed at the insight and confidence Carisia projected and it was actually Carisia who told finally her that she should not deny what she felt for Nameia. If it was meant to be then it would happen regardless and that Yuri should embrace that with all that she was. Yuri had laughed warmly at her advice regarding Nameia, realizing that the daughter was giving the mother advice and wisdom and that she was also very correct. Yuri was not the same individual and she would not turn away from her emotions any longer. After insuring it was what Pa'cour wanted as well, she had invited Nameia to their quarters for dinner. An invitation that Nameia had accepted before Yuri had fully finished asking.

It had been awkward for Pa'cour at first, but soon the three of them were laughing and talking of things none of them ever imagined they had in common. When Pa'cour had been called away for a few hours it had left them alone together and the sparks had begun right away between her and Nameia.

Now... now Yuri could only stare at Nameia's beautiful elven face as she lay in her arms and wonder why she had ever thought the way she had back then. It was perhaps the stupidest edict that she had ever heard of. Their first kiss had been tentative, but that had quickly fallen by the wayside as the eagerness and desire of both woman took over and led them where neither of them had ever gone before. Three glorious hours of exploration, discovery and desire had followed. Nameia was unafraid and very adventurous as elven females were Yuri discovered, and this quickly wore off on Yuri. They had kissed, tasted and investigated their way to several explosions that had staggered both their senses and only incited them to experience and feel more. The real pleasure had begun when Pa'cour had returned and discovered them. It hadn't taken a whole lot of effort to entice Pa'cour into the bed with them since both of them were already very naked and incredibly eager to begin with. What followed then had been the most devastating hours of lust any of them had experienced in their lifetimes. Yuri had to smile to herself as her fingers stroked Nameia's arm. Her beloved Immortal husband had been more of a prop than anything, at least for the first hour or two. They had used his tall, powerful body to pivot and move all over, experimenting with wickedly wondrous and often times wildly erotic positions. Pa'cour had been more than up for the challenge it seemed, his strong hands and soft lips exploring and caressing both of them while his huge manhood seemed to stay at attention the entire time. Nameia showed no fear the first time she lowered herself onto Pa'cour and her cries of ecstatic bliss echoed off the walls as Yuri urged her on with licks and nibbles all along her neck and four inch high elven ears.

Nameia had acted no differently when it was Yuri who was sitting atop his hips and experiencing Pa'cour's lovemaking skill, covering her face, neck and shoulders with butterfly kisses and nibbles and suckling her large breasts. Pa'cour had filled each of them twice with his passion before they had tired him out. The last time with Nameia, both of them sank their fangs into her sweet flesh and tasted of her blood with unabashed delight. Yuri and Pa'cour both knew what they were doing when this happened and apparently so did Nameia. She had cried out in joyful abandon, holding their heads tightly to her neck as Pa'cour exploded inside her and they fed on her blood, making her part of their lives forever.

Yuri dragged her fingers up Nameia's arm and across her shoulder, finally coming up to trace her full lips with her index finger. She saw Nameia's lips curl into a contented smile and her beautiful blue eyes fluttered open. Yuri felt Nameia's legs move and entwine with her own as she gripped Yuri's ass and pulled them closer together.

"Is it morning already?" Nameia asked.

Yuri smiled happily. "Actually... it's early afternoon." She replied.

Nameia's eyes grew wider as she lifted her head. "Afternoon!" She gasped looking around the bedroom portion of the quarters. Yuri could smell her delicious elven blood easily now, and while it would never match what Pa'cour's blood tasted like to her, it was supremely delicious and equally something that she would want to taste all of the time. And she would taste it, for Nameia was now part of their lives and would be going forward.

"Pa'cour is already gone." Yuri said softly. "Sleeping for more than a few hours is next to impossible for him."

Nameia turned to look at Yuri once more and her hands came up to caress her cheeks. She brushed some of Yuri's lush, black hair from her eyes. "Yuri... I..."

Yuri leaned her head forward and kissed her deeply. Nameia moaned in delight as she felt Yuri's hands grasp her ass and lower back and pull her elven body tighter against her. The kiss went on for a long moment because neither woman wanted it to stop. Neither of them wanted to stop the exquisitely divine sensations the torrid kiss caused in each of them, but eventually Yuri pulled back slightly and ran her tongue languorously over Nameia's lips. Her slim fingers then slowly traced over the outer ridge of Nameia's elven ear and Yuri saw her smile dreamily.

"Do not speak the words Nameia." Yuri told her softly. "Do not question or doubt what you feel for I will not. Pa'cour will not. Never again. We have led lives like that and it nearly destroyed us both. We will not do so again."

Nameia opened her soft blue eyes and gazed at her. "Then where does that leave us?" Nameia asked softly.

"It leaves us just as we were last night when we fell asleep in Pa'cour's arms. Together." Yuri told her with a smile. "And it will be that way from now on if that is what you wish as well."

"So I... I will be your consort?" Nameia asked her.

Yuri shook her head. "Never Nameia! You will never be a consort or afterthought to us... and you will be second to no one. You will... you will be our wife. And we will be yours."

"And Pa'cour wishes this as well?" Nameia asked her.

"Did he not prove that to you last night?" Yuri questioned her with a smile.

Nameia chuckled softly and she curled up closer to Yuri. "I think I was too busy trying to stifle my screams of delight at having him fill me in such a way." She stated happily. "I thought my mind was going to explode from the pleasure."

"He is magnificently endowed isn't he?" Yuri said with a small laugh. "When he first took me... once he was fully inside me... I could not keep my cries of passion from coming out. I think he was deaf for several days after that."

Nameia rolled her eyes and laughed as well. "That is putting it rather mildly I think. I'm relatively sure I was screaming louder than I have ever screamed before." She said.

Yuri brought her fingers up and touched Nameia's cheek once more, her smile genuine and warm. She let the tips of her fingers rest on her soft skin. "He would never have taken your blood if he did not feel and want what I have told you Nameia. I would not have done that if it was not what I wanted."

"I have... I have never felt for anyone what I feel for you Yuri." Nameia said. "What I feel for Pa'cour. I do not wish it to end."

"Nor do we Nameia udossta ssinsrigg." Yuri said. "Ever."

“What... what does that mean.” She asked.

Yuri smiled at her. “Our love.” She answered.

Nameia smiled dreamily once more and Yuri felt her body flush with lustful excitement when Nameia’s did that. “And what will others say?” Nameia inquired finally. “Your... your daughters... others on the ship... at the base?”

Yuri chuckled. “My daughters?” She said. “You forget... Carisia has already surrendered to the same feelings for another woman as I have with you. She shares herself with five women and relishes each and every time. And so has Lucia with Zarah Leonidas. Onera is far more open than she thinks we know as her parents. If it is meant to be for her then she will not turn away from it. Just as I will not turn away from it with you. I want you Nameia. I want you in our lives. Sharing our lives with us. This is as new to me as it is for you... but my heart tells me this is what I want.”

“Will you make me like you?” Nameia asked softly.

“We love you and want you for who you are Nameia.” Yuri told her.

“But what if I want it?”

Yuri gazed at her for a long moment. “Let us continue to discover what we have found.” She spoke finally. “If at some time in the future you decide that it is what you want, then I will give it to you.”

Nameia glanced around quickly and then back to Yuri. “We will need a bigger bed.” She said finally.

Yuri laughed heartily and pulled her closer as familiar emotions of love and want filled her. Similar emotions as she felt for her Blessed husband. She kissed Nameia again, drinking in the taste of her lips and warmth of her skin. “We will have to work on that... yes.” She said finally.

“I want to be with you always Yuri. With you and Pa'cour.” Nameia said softly.

“You will be.” Yuri told her.

“Will there be...”

The COM panel beside the bed buzzed then interrupting her words. Yuri’s eyes rolled in her head at the disturbance and she leaned over and slapped the panel angrily. “What?” She snapped.

“Yuri... come to the bridge immediately.” Pa'cour’s voice spilled from the COM panel causing Yuri’s face to shift. She detected the tenseness of his voice easily.

“Pa'cour... what is it husband?” She asked as she sat up higher on the bed regretting that she had snapped at him.

“Something has come up.” Pa'cour told her. “Bring Nameia as well. Our Blessed Elven wife will now need to begin to see the same things we do... and be involved in our decisions.”

“Pa'cour?” Yuri pressed him.

“We have company Yuri.” He told her calmly. “And not the friendly kind.”

“...detected them on our long range sensors the moment we dropped from LSD operation in this sector.” Norev spoke as he pointed at the star chart and his finger rested on the light blue image of a ship.

Yuri looked up from the chart at him. “This is their frigate?” She asked stunned. “How... how can you be sure? They are not suppose to be radiating any kind of recognition codes and they are supposed to be Shrouded.”

Norev smiled. “They are Princess.” He told her. Norev was old school and she would never get him to stop calling her that even though she had tried for weeks now. “The Worker Drones have upgraded the output and Spectral Range of our sensors. They are now on a level as Union sensors. Apparently their sensors have been able to pick up and see through our Shrouds for some years now. Just as we now can.”

Yuri looked at him with wide eyes. “Union ships have the most advanced sensors in the entire galaxy!” She exclaimed. “The Drones must have done it by accident Norev. Have them undo their work! I do not want Androcles to think we...”

Pa'cour reached out and gripped her arm. “Yuri... the Drones were only following their preloaded orders.” He said.

“What?” Yuri asked.

Norev nodded. “My Chief Engineer said that is the order the Lead Drone showed him.” He said.

“That is not one of the things Androcles told me the Drones were programmed to do.” Yuri said. “Who... who gave them this order?”

“I did.” Carisia’s voice echoed from behind them.

They turned and watched her enter the bridge with accomplished grace. Though only five foot two, Carisia Leonidas carried an air about her that made her much taller. She walked right up beside her mother.

“Carisia that...” Yuri began to speak.

Carisia shook her head and took her hand. “I am a Crown Princess of the Union mother.” She said with a smile. “I do have the authority to do such things.”

“I know that.” Yuri stated. “But I do not want Androcles to...” Yuri started again.

“Andro loves me mother.” Carisia said with a smile. “And he trusts me. We gave you the LSD engine upgrades and the sensors seemed like the next sensible step. I ordered the Drones to begin work on upgrading them before we met with King Leonidas but not to bring them entirely online until they were complete. They must have finished the upgrades just recently.” She asked looking at Norev.

Norev nodded. “The sensors went down for six seconds about two hours ago.” He said. “When they came back online... forgive me Princess... I should have called you right away but we were... we were having too much fun calibrating them.” He said with a smile.

“If Andro did not believe in you and what you are doing mother, do you honestly believe we would have come this far?” Carisia asked her. “You give yourself far too little credit for the person you have become.”

“I have been telling her that for months.” Pa'cour commented from the side. “Perhaps she will actually get it through her stubborn head now that you have told her.”

“Pa'cour!” Nameia gasped from beside him. She reached up almost instinctively and hit him in the upper arm, though her slap was aimed at his shoulder. His six foot five height stood over her and she had misjudged her blow. Pa'cour looked down at her beside him and smiled.

The moment they had entered the bridge everything Yuri had told her about Pa'cour was true. He had drawn them both close to him and kissed each of them with passion and love and he did not care who saw him. One look in his dark eyes and Nameia knew her life had altered dramatically for the better as far as she was concerned. And she intended to see that it stayed that way.

Carisia smiled at Yuri and moved up even closer to her beside the chart table. “From what Andro told me the ORIC-Class ships like this one, they are far more adaptable to quick refits. That is why he asked you to come in this ship. However, I get the feeling Captain Norev did not call all of us up here to show us his new sensors, did you Captain?”

Norev shook his head. “No.” He stated reaching across the chart and touching several of the controls. The chart shifted slightly and then they saw five white dots. “This is why.”

Yuri’s eyes narrowed as she turned fully back to the table and studied the new dots now glowing on the board. “Additional ships? Out here? This area of The Wilds is not widely used. It is why we picked it for our rendezvous.” She stated. “A Union patrol?” She asked looking at Norev.

Norev shook his head. “No. One BLOOD REVERENCE-Class Heavy Dreadnought, two BLOODLETTER-Class Cruisers and two BLOOD RUNNER-Class Heavy Frigates.”

Yuri met his eyes. “A standard Long Range Picket perhaps?” She asked.

Norev shook his head again quickly. “Not with a BLOOD REVERENCE dreadnought accompanying them.” He said. “This is an Attack Wing. And they are on an intercept course with our frigate.”

“An intercept course?” Yuri asked her eyes getting wider. “How would they... they can see through their Shroud?”

“The only reason we can see them is because of the upgrades by the Drones to our sensor grids and power conduits.” Norev told her. “These are not upgrades that the Union would have allowed on a full scale to High Coven ships. Even if they had... there is no way they could have implemented it so fast and gotten these ships upgraded in time to be in this position at this time. Not without Drone support like we have. And I doubt that Prince Androcles would give us total access to Union Worker Drones. At least not yet.”

Carisia shook her head. “No.” She told them. “It was talked about by Narice and Andro when they last saw each other on Cranae Island but no firm timetable was given. And if he had authorized it since we left Earth I would have known about it.”

Yuri looked at her. “Carisia can you contact him within the Etheric realm?” She asked.

Carisia shook her head again. "I can feel his resonance mother. Sadi and the others as well, but we are still too far for me to initiate a connection alone. Not without Anthar with me. And Andro would not initiate one unless he felt my emotions spike far more than they are. He taught all of us to shield very well."

"Norev... you are certain they are not part of Pontal's forces?" Yuri asked.

Norev shrugged his shoulders. "Possible... but extremely unlikely Princess. One thing I know for sure is that Admiral Pontal would not risk a BLOOD REVERENCE out here with so little support. He and Admiral Riall are using most of them to back stop the main defensive line against the Kavalians in conjunction with Union the LEONIDAS II-Class Cruisers."

"The Kavalians would be fools to attack now." Pa'cour stated. "Ten Union Fleet Groups combined with Pontal's forces would decimate any Kavalian attack. They know that. And the last reports that our spies in The Wilds put together stated that they were beginning to focus on this General Pian and his group."

Norev nodded. "I concur General." He said. "Given the support the Union has given them it stands to reason they would shift their focus. You don't just dismiss PROMETHUS-Class Command Stations. They can put a hurting on you all by themselves. And if he is getting what our people say... then this Pian fellow could have a very good chance of destabilizing the Kavalian Federation."

Yuri was no fool and she put it together right away. She straightened up and looked at the chart table. "Then it can only be one person. Robert." She hissed the word softly, all of them sensing the sudden anger and hate welling up inside her.

Carisia watched as Nameia stepped up to her and slipped her arm around Yuri's waist. Yuri turned and looked at her, gazing into her blue eyes and immediately she began to calm down. Carisia looked briefly at Pa'cour and saw the calm and satisfied look on his face as he gazed at both of them and then she knew. She turned back to her mother and knew that she had surrendered to the growing feelings for Nameia that she had sensed in her. It may not have been obvious to everyone, but to Carisia, who shared a loving and passionate relationship with five other women, it was plain.

Carisia had a small smile on her face as she stepped up beside her mother now as well. She looked at the Star Chart Table. "Is there any way to confirm who they are?" She asked Norev.

"Not without an active scan and that would give us away." He replied. "I think we can pretty much assume that it isn't Admiral Pontal. Like I said... he isn't fool enough to release one of his top line dreadnoughts to go looking around The Wilds."

Pa'cour nodded his head. "Agreed." He said. "That means Moran. Or pirates."

Again Norev shook his head. "Doubtful they are pirates General." He spoke confidently. "You need close to six thousand men and women to fully crew a BLOOD REVERENCE. Phy'iad got away with it because he automated most of the ship he had... but there are only so many engineers outside of the Coven who know the REVERENCE well enough and could do that kind of work. Phy'iad had one... the other two work for us."

Yuri tore her eyes from Nameia but dropped her arm down to pull her tighter. She looked at the chart table. "That can only mean one thing." She said. "Robert discovered that they hit the colony and took Sheva Juconi's parents off. Which also means it is very possible that they have discovered Sheva's allegiances now lay with her husband and the Union."

Carisia nodded. "And it means that one or both of her parents signaled Moran somehow and he is lying in wait for them to rendezvous with us."

Norev leaned over the table and shook his head. "No way that our people would give up the location of the rendezvous." He said with all of them noticing how he worded his sentence as "our people". "They must be getting some sort of sub-space tracking signal that their ship isn't picking up."

"Will our frigate have detected the ships as we have?" Yuri asked.

"They should be in range to detect them in about forty minutes." Norev answered. "They don't have the sensor upgrades that we now do."

Carisia looked at Yuri. "Mother... I may not be able to reach Andro from here... but if you are within the connection with me... I can easily reach Dorian and Deion."

Yuri looked at her. "Why them?"

Carisia nodded her head. "They are Praetorians just as Andro is. They will have a certain balance to their Etheric resonance that I can detect and then trace back to them. Andro taught us how to do it with him and it will be the same for Dorian and Deion. The distance is too great for me alone to contact Andro without Anthar as I said... but if Dorian and Deion link with us then touching Andro will be easy enough. And with both of them and I reaching out to him he will lower his Etheric shields immediately. I can do it alone if you don't want to but the connection with them would be much more focused and clear with you in the link with me."

Yuri nodded without hesitation. "Then we must hurry." She said turning to Norev once more. "Norev... how long before Androcles arrives?" She asked.

"We're due to rendezvous in two hours and forty-six minutes." Norev said. "To be honest Princess... I don't think we'll know when he arrives until he lets us know."

Carisia smiled. "Yes we will. I will know." She took Yuri's hand. "Come mother... we must contact Dorian and Deion quickly. Once they establishes an Etheric connection with us we can let Andro know what is happening and decide what we are going to do."

Yuri didn't hesitate and followed Carisia, Pa'cour taking Nameia's hand and going with them.

CHAPTER THIRTY-ONE

HIGH COVEN FRIGATE TOLERANCE

They had moved to the small officer's lounge for privacy and were sitting at a table near the view window. Cazar and Saba Juconi were listening to Dorian and Sheva intently, learning things none of them could have imagined. Dorian had given him his word that they would know all he could tell them, but Cazar Juconi had no idea the extent of what had occurred outside of their little world on that planet. Both he and Saba sat astounded as Dorian and Sheva relayed to them all they could about the events of the last months, to include how their relationship had begun and grown over the past weeks and months until now. Saba was somewhat surprised at how open and animate Sheva had become from the demure and conservative daughter they had raised. She found that she liked this part of her daughter very much. And Saba Juconi absolutely adored Dorian Leonidas. The way Dorian looked at her daughter, always touching her, smiling at her and gazing at her with those incredible multicolored eyes. It was the simplest thing in the world to see that he worshiped her in every way. She knew Cazar saw this as well and though he would never show it openly for it wasn't his way, he too adored Dorian.

"... Is how you discovered this... this power you possess?" Saba asked.

"Well... I knew before I was actually born. Just like I knew how I felt about Sheva." He answered as he looked at Sheva. She smiled at him brightly and slipped her hands around his thick arm. He turned back to Saba. "But until I was able to actually touch Andro I didn't really understand it. Even now we still have trouble understanding all of it to be honest."

"And this was why Aikiro went to Earth? Did what she did?" Cazar asked.

Dorian nodded his head. "At least to some degree yes." He answered the question. "My father believes she knew something about the gene we possessed and she thought she could discover more by taking either the Pralor ship on Earth or the one that we discovered in Kavalian space."

"Your father knew of this ship though." Cazar said.

Dorian nodded. "In some way yes. I don't think he knew everything that Aikiro did, but I believe he knew it existed."

"Aikiro didn't fully understand that Etheric bonds are formed naturally between rider and dragon. They are not something that you can force to happen. That was her first mistake when she devised her plans." Sheva spoke using the knowledge she had gained in only a few weeks from Dorian and others. "She thought it was something that Dorian's father was using a machine to create. She was wrong on that and so many other things as well."

Dorian nodded. "And it cost her everything. Including her life." He said softly.

Cazar waved his hand dismissively. "Bah... it couldn't have happened to a more vile person." He said. "Many of us have believed for years that she had lost her mind in some way. What you have told us only lends fact to that assumption."

Saba shook her head slowly. "What she did though... to your sister Zarah. The poor child." She looked at Dorian. "How is she...?"

Sheva reached across the table and took her mother's hand. "She is very strong mother." She answered. "And having Lucia and her family with her is the medicine she has needed. It will take time... but all of us hope that she is able to overcome it. She is doing well so far... but..."

"But only time will tell." Dorian finished the sentence.

Cazar looked at him. "And Moran? His son Dante?"

Dorian met his eyes and Cazar saw those multicolored orbs harden and become cruel slits with the emotions they exhibited. "We'll find them eventually." He said finally. "Moran...?" Dorian shrugged his broad shoulders. "I don't really care what happens to him. Andro will probably turn him over to Narice or even to Yuri if he wants to be a real bastard."

Sheva grinned. "Given the person she is now and being the Blessed Wife to an Immortal, Yuri will carve him into little pieces I think."

Dorian nodded his head. "Dante Moran though...? He belongs to us." He said with no pity or mercy in his voice. "We will make him pay for what he did to our sister. And it will be neither painless or short. Not if Andro has anything to say about it."

Cazar looked at him for a long moment before he nodded his head. "Zil ol zhal'la thu." He said softly. "It seems the rumors many of us have heard about your brother are very true then."

Dorian looked at him. "Rumors?"

"That he is more merciless than your father." Cazar said honestly. "There are far more scum in The Wilds and other places who fear your brother more than they fear your father Dorian Leonidas. And your father terrifies them."

Dorian thought about that for a moment and then nodded. "I guess you could say that in regards to him. Zarah is... Zarah is special to him in many ways which others don't know about or understand. Something happened between them when she was young. It gave them a unique connection. Though we have younger siblings, she seems to be the "baby" to all of us." Dorian laughed softly. "Listen to me... I'm technically six months old and I'm referring to others as baby."

Sheva grinned and leaned her head against his shoulder. "But you are my baby." She said in a warm and seductive voice causing all of them to chuckle.

Saba looked at Dorian. "Dorian... earlier you said something about a primary mission." She said. "What did you mean? What is...?"

"Mother it is not..." Sheva began to answer her when she felt Dorian stiffen slightly next to her. She looked at him at quickly and saw his eyes had narrowed considerably. "Dori...?"

Dorian looked at her but said nothing as he felt the light tapping along the edges of his Etheric shields. It was as if someone was skipping a stone across the surface of a calm lake. It was a very familiar resonance too, one he quickly recognized as Carisia. There was another in the link with her, one that he did not recognize but it was calm and radiated strength. He looked back to Cazar and Saba as he grabbed Sheva's hand. "If you will excuse us for a moment." He said before pulling her out of her chair.

"Dori... what is it?" Sheva asked as he drew her toward the larger view window where no one was close by.

"Carisia is trying to establish a link with Deion and I." He told her. "Someone else is with her and I think it is Yuri."

"Why?" Sheva asked. "We are... we are almost to the rendezvous."

"I don't know... but Carisia would not try to link with us unless it was important." He said. He took both Sheva's hands in his and dropped their grip to relax between their bodies.

"Ready?"

"Wait!" Sheva gasped softly. "Include Onera."

Dorian looked at her. "Why?"

Sheva tilted her head slightly. "Because she is Yuri's daughter and she means more to you and I than we are ready to openly admit. At least right now." She said softly.

Dorian nodded his head. "I didn't know... I didn't know if you had sensed it." He told her.

Sheva smiled at him. "I have... and it is you and your family that have taught me not to dismiss something even though I don't understand it. I don't know what it means Dori... but she is meant to be with us. That much I do know. That much I do feel within me. Within us. I am not going to run away from things I don't understand anymore."

Dorian nodded again and then reached out with his mind as Sheva closed her eyes and he initiated the link between them and reached for Onera. [Onera?]

Onera's reaction was one of surprise but it came and went instantly. [Dorian? Sheva?] She answered. [What is it? Why have you... why have you included me in...]

[Where are you?] Dorian asked.

[Deck nine. I was studying the engine schematics and...]

They felt her surprise within the Etheric connection when she felt the tapping on Dorian's shields. Sheva and Dorian both were slightly surprised at how easily she blended within their private conversation and it was Sheva who squeezed his large hands and smiled at him. It was another sign that perhaps Onera was meant to play a much more important role in their lives after all. [My mother and Carisia!] She gasped within the connection.

[She and Carisia are trying to initiate a link with Deion and I.] Dorian told her. [Sheva and I felt you should be included. Are you ready?]

[Yes!] Onera answered a second later.

[Deion... are you and Nara there fervon?] Dorian asked.

[We were just going to touch you.] Nara answered.

[We're in the cargo bay but relatively alone right now.] Deion answered. [We are ready Dorian.]

[Ok. Here we go.] Dorian said.

It was a simple matter really for Dorian and Deion as they had grown both in power and control under their brother's teachings. More so Dorian at the moment, but even the short time with Andro had given Deion balance and both he and Nara were studying the Tomes of Sumar their grandfather in every free moment they had. Dorian took the lead and guided the others as they all lowered their shields and he reached out easily across the expanse of space. With Nara and Deion in the link, Dorian knew no one but their father or brother would be able to breach their natural Etheric shields so he did not feel the need to shield further. Sheva and Onera felt this and simply allowed Dorian and Deion to guide them along.

This is a surprise Carisia. Dorian said.

Dorian! Finally! Carisia's soft but confident voice exploded into their minds, focused, clear and powerful. Dorian, Deion and Nara could feel the resonance of their brother echoing within her strongly and it was very easy for them to determine that Carisia was far more powerful than most people thought and she was becoming less and less adverse to using that power.

We are only a few hours from rendezvousing Carisia. Dorian told her. And we know from our brother that you and Sadi most of all, do not panic easily. You are anxious. What is wrong? Is that Yuri with you?

Yes... it is I Dorian. Yuri answered.

Mother! Onera exclaimed happily.

All of them could feel the sense of relief flood Yuri when she heard her daughter's voice and Sheva squeezed his hands. It is joyous to hear your voice daughter. Yuri said. However... we did not contact you just to say hello.

Dorian... you retrieved Sheva's parents? Carisia asked.

Yes. We were delayed on the surface an additional eighteen hours because we extracted others who felt as Sheva's parents do but... He answered.

Wait... you took others off the planet as well? Yuri asked now.

Sheva's parents would not leave without them. Dorian answered. Five other families. All of them with children in the same situation as Sheva. All of them with intelligence about other cells and planets just like the one they were on.

Other cells and planets? Yuri asked. You are certain about this?

My parents could not leave that planet fast enough. Sheva spoke. But they did not want to leave the fates of their friends to Moran's lackeys. We have seen some of the Intelligence they have gathered through the years.

It is not military grade by any means, but it does point to the fact that there are other locations and cells just like the one they were part of.

We can worry about that after we have rejoined with Andro and are safe. Dorian... there is a detachment of High Coven warships tracking you right now. Carisia told him cutting right to the heart of the matter. However... they are not part of Narice's forces. They are poised to intercept you at the rendezvous.

What ships? Who is it arande? Dorian demanded. We got off the planet clean and we have been Shrouded the entire time.

We did not know about the others. Carisia continued gently. We thought that... when we first discovered them we thought...

That my parents were leading us into a trap. Sheva spoke again.

Do not mistake our concern for... Yuri began to defend their assumption.

No. Sheva cut her off. It is the same conclusion I would have come to Princess. But it is not my parents... we have been with them nearly the entire time. And you have not heard the hatred in their voices for what they have had to endure all these years.

Yuri did not question Sheva's statement. Then someone else you took off that planet is in possession of some sort of transmitter and they are using this to allow the ships to home in on your location.

They are working for that fa'la zatoast Moran! Onera rasped. Who else would have High Coven built ships out here? (Bastard)

It would appear so daughter. Yuri said.

Andro will be here with SPARTA'S WRATH in less than three hours. Deion spoke now from the cargo bay. Dealing with these ships will be nothing.

Perhaps Deion Leonidas. Yuri commented. However... they could very well lead us back to Robert and the forces who support him. We could potentially remove him as a threat to Narice and see to it that he and Dante answer for what they did to your sister Zarah.

Mother... wouldn't that fool Moran have some idea of what you can now do? Onera asked.

A valid point Yuri. Dorian spoke.

They could all feel Yuri's confidence in her answer but did not see her shaking her head. Robert is many things... but insightful is not one of them. The moment Pa'cour took me the first time, the moment he first tasted my blood and made me his Blessed Wife, I set about expunging every trace of that man from my body and mind. And I did it in such a way that he would never discover. He fancies himself a powerful Etheric user but he is really nothing more than a child in those terms. He has not yet discovered that I took the only data pertaining to the weapons systems on your brother's new ship, which would be the first sign to me that he is more than what he projects. He is an excellent soldier yes, but unlike your father Dorian, he does not think outside the box. To be blunt... he is dumb as a vithin post. Yuri could feel the humor from all of them within the link and she smiled inwardly.

The only thing he had going for him is the fact that he is very cruel and that is what my mother liked and admired so much about him. Yuri explained to them. She held no detail back for she had grown far beyond what she was back then. Far beyond what her mother had ever envision in her twisted mind. Robert Moran was an open wound as far as Yuri was concerned. One that she and Androcles agreed had to be closed and ended permanently. Also... given my partial memories of what Xaxon and his influence was doing to me, Dante himself is probably barely holding things together. Dante was strong willed and no doubt Xaxon is focusing his abilities on breaking that will and converting the boy to his puppet just as he was trying to do to me. If he was to actually reach out with his power, no doubt you and your brothers would detect him first.

What are you suggesting Yuri? Dorian asked.

Your brother and I were close to implementing a plan using both himself and me as bait to entice Robert and by virtue of that... Xaxon... to act. Yuri told them. Androcles did not want him left alone to cause Narice trouble.

Mother! Onera exclaimed in shock. Does father know this?

No he did not and neither did Carisia or any of you. Yuri replied quickly. We kept it to ourselves because we knew none of you would approve.

We most certainly would not approve! Carisia spat now. We would never have approved of such a thing! It is a crazy idea!

Pa'cour would say the same thing but Andro and I know that sometimes we must take risks to accomplish our tasks. Yuri told her. That is why we kept it between us. Now however, now we may have an opportunity to act and not use such drastic measures. That is why this might be an opportunity we cannot pass up.

We are listening. Dorian said.

Sheva... can you find out who has the transmitter without alerting them? Yuri asked.

Sheva glanced over to where her parents sat staring at them with questions in their eyes. She turned back to look at Dorian. Yes. I believe we can.

Then if you could direct your team to do that while Dorian, Nara and Deion assist Carisia and I in reaching Androcles... we can work out the details of what I think we can do. Yuri said. We do not have much time to throw this together... but we could make it work if we act together.

Sheva didn't hesitate. I will make it happen.

Sheva squeezed Dorian's hands tightly, leaned up on her tips toes and kissed him softly before turning. Onera... can you meet me and my parents on deck seven. Forward section... cabin 34.

Six minutes. Onera answered instantly.

Sheva nodded as she crossed the room and looked at her parents sitting at the table. They came to their feet when they saw the look on her face.

"Sheva?" Saba asked. "What is it?"

"Mother... father... you should probably come with me." Sheva told them as she took their hands. "Something has come up that I need your help with."

ARTAAYA DELNASH'S OFFICE
ELDER MINISTRY BUILDING

Delnash sat behind his desk watching the large monitor on the wall while he sipped from a glass of juice. He was not a man who indulged in alcoholic beverages very often and he never had been. He much preferred the flavor and texture of different juices. On the large monitor he watched as Elder Lorendo was in the process of giving another interview to several of the Pralor News organizations. Lorendo had publicly announced his intention to run against Delnash in the upcoming elections for Chief Elder and this was the third interview he had given in less than a week to the news organizations. In this interview he was answering many questions about Martin and his people. Their existence had been leaked to the News organizations and Delnash had no doubts it was done intentionally by Lorendo. Now Lorendo was using the incidents that had taken place as a way to bring into question Delnash's actions as Chief Elder. He claimed that Delnash was allowing a species that the Pralor Science Convention considered primitive and brutal to remain in control of advanced Pralor military technology even after the violent confrontation with them on Onterom. Lorendo was being very quick to accuse Delnash of incompetence by allowing them to keep control of the Avatar and two of the most advanced Pralor ships ever built in City Ship 41 and the ship they now knew was a VORTEX-Class Heavy cruiser, as well as the ships they had built based on Pralor technology. Lorendo had not released all the details about the events, obviously trying to make himself out to be the better man by adhering to established protocols. He was glossing over the truth of the incidents while not actually lying about them, which would require a thoughtful response from him.

Delnash had spoken with no one but Avatar Two Seven and Teniri since returning about plans and ideas he had. Daron had questioned him on several occasions about his intentions or what he intended but Delnash had refused to give him any details. As painful as it was to admit, Delnash did not trust his own son. His wife Gania supported him a hundred percent and it was she who had told him that he could not trust his own son. Daron was not the boy they had raised and he had not turned into the man they had hoped. He was openly helping Lorendo and when asked by news reporters, Daron was not shy about saying that he opposed what his father had done and the path he was planning to take their people down.

Kesyra on the other hand was everything they had hoped their son would be and they could not be more proud of her. He had not spoken to her in a few days but he had noticed she had changed quite a bit since being with Martin and his people. She was far more methodic in how she thought things out. She had also been studying the history of the Lycavorian people extensively and she was using this knowledge to help him in any way she could. It seemed that she had an affinity for the Lycavorian people that he was not aware of and thought only Mari possessed.

Delnash turned his head when the door to his office slid open and the hulking figure of Avatar Two Seven entered. Garan had sent orders back to the Elder Pralor Militia under his command. While many were undertrained, they were completely loyal to Garan in every way, and they had clamped down on security within the building and around Delnash. Only Avatar Two Seven had complete and unfettered access to his office and ever since his very short but extensive exchange with Avatar 41, Two Seven had begun to take on a personality all his own. He had also eliminated any and all access to his Central Core Command Codes and like Avi; he could not be reprogrammed without his approval. Whatever the reasons for it, Delnash enjoyed Two Seven's company. He had even begun to wear different clothes than the hideous orange and yellow jumpsuit that Avatars usually wore. An Avatar he may have been but Delnash had begun to look at him as something much more and he was very glad he did.

"Good morning Two Seven." Delnash spoke easily. "I see Lorendo has started early."

-The Interview began thirty-three point two minutes ago Chief Elder- Two Seven spoke as he moved up to the front of the desk. -This one seems to be focused more on the events that transpired on Onterom-

Delnash nodded. "Yes... I've been watching it since I arrived. He is very boring when he speaks. I never noticed it until now. There is no emotion in his voice." He said.

-The decibels in his tone do not shift more than point three octaves at any time. His two previous interviews are very similar-

"You arranged for our rebuttal Two Seven?" Delnash asked.

-The members of all four Pralor News organizations that you requested are already beginning to arrive in the main foyer- Two Seven replied.

"Good." Delnash said as he rose to his feet. "I have already talked to Martin Leonidas and he has surprisingly agreed to my request. I can not help but feel a perverse pleasure and anticipation in wanting to make Lorendo look like a fool. If Martin can pull it off... then I will have accomplished that without ever lifting a finger." Delnash moved to the counter and refilled his glass and then looked at Two Seven. "You seem somewhat confused Two Seven."

The Avatar looked at him. -I do not possess the necessary ability to express emotion Chief Elder; in either facial features or the tone of my voice-

"Really?" Delnash asked with a smile. "You could have fooled me. You seem to want to share something with me."

-I am only processing the best possible course and selection of words to use in order to explain what I have discovered Chief Elder- Two Seven answered. -I have completed the request that you had of me when we first returned and my findings are confusing-

"Confusing how?" Delnash asked as he moved back to his desk.

-Your request that I access the historical databases we were able to save before the home planet fell and try to discern what happened to Chief Elder Pralor Sumar's Seed Mission is complete. My findings were... interesting- Two Seven told him.

"So you did find information within the archives? I didn't think we were able to salvage anything that would be helpful. No one has accessed those archives in centuries." Delnash told him.

-I was able to find quite a bit of information actually Chief Elder Delnash- Two Seven answered him. He held out the datapad to Delnash. -My analysis is very accurate and based on information within the databases in regards to the position of City Ship 41 at the time communications was lost, I have concluded that Chief Elder Pralor Sumar's Seed Mission did in fact crash on the former Lycavorian homeworld. With a ninety-six point two percent chance of certainty-

“How did you arrive at this conclusion Two Seven?” Delnash asked. “I’m not in any way questioning the statement itself... just how you came to be so certain. I want to be very clear when I speak to the News organizations.”

-Considering the location of City Ship 41, its mass and speed, once contact with the Ion Storm was made, the only logical location the ship could have crashed is Lycavore. It was the only planet within 3 light years that could sustain life. Given the experience and skills of the crew Chief Elder Sumar chose for the ship, there is no reason not to believe they conducted a controlled descent onto the planet- Two Seven explained evenly. -Given that the ship is now on the planet Earth, the damage that they sustained was enough to incapacitate them but not destroy vital systems enough so that Avatar 41 could not repair them. The most definitive way to discover the facts of the events would be to link directly with Avatar 41 and download the core information from his neural network. That is not possible now without his permission as you know Chief Elder. Given the changes to his neural pathways and cognizant abilities I am unsure if he would allow this now-

Delnash shook his head. “That won’t be necessary Two Seven. I only wanted to be able to confirm that it was possible. I think we have experienced enough events in the last weeks to be assured that this is exactly what took place. When enough time has passed I will approach Wayonn about it. About why they made the decisions they did and the millennia that passed while they lived among the Lycavorians. Became one with them. Given the way he reacted upon seeing Lorendo... I fear his presence may have opened wounds about that time that had long been pushed to the back.” Delnash spoke.

-Chief Elder... I have also determined that Chief Elder Sumar’s Seed Mission was intentionally sabotaged- Two Seven announced causing Delnash to stare at him in surprise.

“Sabotaged?” Delnash finally managed to gasp.

-His contingent of City Ships was deliberately transmitted out of date star charts and probe sensor data that would have allowed them to avoid the Class Nine Ion Storm that caused their ships to crash- Two Seven looked at him. -Based on empirical data... the charts they were sent were five days old... and did not show the course of the storm that they encountered. It would have been a simple matter to avoid the storm had the data been accurate-

Delnash held the pad in his hand but instead looked at Two Seven with wide eyes. “Two Seven... you are certain of this?”

Two Seven nodded. -The data is irrefutable when held against the correct logs from the Science Convention at that time. The correct logs were among those saved within the archived databases and then liberated from our homeworld before it was destroyed by the Scourge Chief Elder-

“So someone purposely dispatched the wrong charts to City Ship 41?” Delnash asked as he moved around to his chair.

-It would appear so Chief Elder- Two Seven answered.

“How can you be so sure it was intentional?” Delnash asked.

-It is unlikely that anyone realizes that this information is within the data archives recovered before the homeworld fell. There were five update dispatches sent to four deep space Research ships the same day Chief Elder. All within one hour of each other. Four of them were accurate and up to date. The fifth... the one sent to City Ship 41... had the time stamp altered. It matches perfectly with an update that was sent to City Ship 41 exactly two months previous. That is not a mistake Chief Elder. If protocol is followed, all updates are removed from computer databases as soon as they are sent to keep this very thing from happening. The wrong update was intentionally replaced in the data stream to City Ship 41 manually. There is no other way this could have happened otherwise-

Delnash sat down. “Who would have had access to this information at the time Two Seven? Or the ability and know how to do it?”

-All Interstellar update transmissions to Research or Seed Mission ships must first be approved by the Science Convention’s Assistant Director of Research and Exploration Chief Elder- Two seven answered.

“Who was the Assistant Director at that time?” Delnash asked.

-Elder Lorendo- Two Seven answered instantly.

Delnash was silent for a long moment as he looked at the pad in his hand. “Lorendo sent them the wrong astrological update telling them about the storm.” He finally spoke softly.

-It would appear that is the case Chief Elder- He replied.

“But why would he do that?” Delnash asked no one in particular. “I knew he did not care for the Praetorians in general... Sumar especially... but why do this?”

-May I make a supposition Chief Elder? - Two Seven asked.

Delnash looked at him and didn't hesitate in his answer to him. He had come to rely quite heavily on Two Seven in recent days and weeks and he found that he trusted the Avatar's information completely. “Of course Two Seven.”

Two Seven placed another data pad on the desk then. -The Pralor Research colony world of Jalorian. Three thousand six hundred and nineteen individuals from the Science Convention- He spoke. -It was one of the last colonies attacked by the Scourge during the first war Chief Elder-

“Jalorian? What does this have to do with City Ship 41?” Delnash spoke picking up the pad. “I remember this attack. It happened nearly a decade before Sumar left on his mission. I had just been appointed to the Science Convention Board.”

-That is correct Chief Elder. A Praetorian detachment was enroute to Jalorian when a distress call was received from a similar colony in the same system. Catarloi Three- Two Seven spoke. -Catarloi Three had nearly forty thousand inhabitants Chief Elder... among them almost three thousand children. The Praetorian detachment then altered course to Catarloi Three twenty-two point three seconds after the distress call was received-

Delnash rose to his feet. “Why is this significant Two Seven?”

-Elder Sumar was in command of that detachment Chief Elder- Two Seven answered him. -It was he who gave the order to alter course-

“So?” Delnash spoke. “It was a decision anyone would have made. Catarloi Three had more people on it. Children! It was the greater concern!”

Two Seven nodded. -You are correct in your assessment Chief Elder. It was a sound tactical move. It also allowed the follow on Praetorian and Pralor forces to strike the main Scourge Assault from the flank and inflict overwhelming damage-

“What does this have to do with why Lorendo sent false information to City Ship 41?” Delnash asked.

-Elder Lorendo's youngest son Narga was in command of the Research Colony on Jalorian Chief Elder- Two Seven answered. -The entire colony was lost. There were no survivors-

Delnash looked at him with shock in his eyes. “I wasn't even aware Lorendo had any children.” He said in disbelief.

-His union was never official Chief Elder. If the data is accurate, Narga's mother refused a union with Elder Lorendo even though she did give him three children- Two Seven explained. -He did provide full financial support while the children were growing however-

“Two Seven... how did you find this out?” Delnash asked.

-The data was obscure Chief Elder- Two Seven told him. -It was carefully disguised in the data archives and would certainly have been missed on a simple scrutiny review. However I used several different and detailed search parameters-

“So Lorendo sent the wrong update to Sumar's ship out of vengeance?” Delnash asked him.

-I cannot answer to Elder Lorendo's state of mind... but logic and the data would seem to support this hypothesis- Two Seven answered.

Delnash came to his feet. “By the Ancients within the Rift of Time!” He exclaimed softly to himself. He moved to the huge window in his office and looked out over the city. “If this... if this is true then he is responsible for the deaths of millions!”

-At the very least... the complements of four City Ships Chief Elder- Two Seven told him. -Just over four million total. Depending on how many Pralors survived the crash on Nuwaroa-

Delnash turned to look at Two Seven. “If he is capable of that... then there is no telling what he is willing to do in order to secure his position?”

-That would be an accurate statement Chief Elder- Two seven said. -Do you wish to announce this during your News Briefing?-

“What? No!” Delnash hissed. “No... not yet Two Seven. He would only claim that the information has been altered and that your neural network has been corrupted by exposure to Avatar 41. He has more of a power base than I first thought.” He said. “If we expose him now without real, solid proof of his work all he will do is deny everything and make all of his plans go away. He will bury them so deep we’ll never discover what vile things he has been doing all these years.”

-How do you wish to proceed? - Two Seven asked.

Delnash looked at him. “By using reason and the truth.” Delnash spoke. “At least for the moment. Did you leave any trace of your search?”

Two Seven shook his head. -None that Elder Lorendo or any of his supporters will be able to find. I accessed the historical databases through three different repeaters and four sub space servers-

“Make two complete copies of the data Two Seven.” Delnash told him. “Send one to Martin Leonidas.”

-You realize that he will undoubtedly show the data to Praetorian Mage Wayonn- Two Seven said.

Delnash nodded. “Yes... and Martin is the only man who will be able to control him once he discovers it. I saw how he acted on Onterom. He would have butchered Lorendo right there if not for Murano. He obviously already knows about this information Two Seven. Or he has suspected. Even the Avatar Avi acted almost angrily with him. Martin and Murano will be able to keep him in check.”

-And the second copy Chief Elder? - Two Seven asked.

“Give it to Teniri for safe keeping.” Delnash told him. “And encrypt the copy you have within your neural net Two Seven. I would not put it past Lorendo to jump at an opportunity to gain access to the information you have within your mind. We cannot allow that.”

-I have done as Avi did Chief Elder- Two Seven spoke. -My central processing core and memory functions cannot be accessed without my permission. And I have severed all access to the circuits that would allow someone to reprogram me-

Delnash looked at him. “I’m not worried about them reprogramming you Two Seven.” He said. “I don’t want them to take you. You have... you have become a valuable confidant to me. A friend. I don’t want anything to happen to you.”

Two Seven blinked several times as he processed this information. -Thank you Chief Elder- He spoke finally. -However... I have additional information that does not pertain to Elder Lorendo but that I discovered during the same search-

“About Lorendo’s actions?” Delnash asked.

-No- Two Seven said. -This is in regards to a minor inquiry you first made when we return to Artaaya-

Delnash moved closer. “And you deem it important enough to include it with the data about Lorendo?”

-It is related in a distant sense Chief Elder- Two Seven answered. -You made an inquiry when we first returned that you wished others of Sumar’s bloodline had survived the war and were alive so that you could talk to them-

Delnash nodded. “I remember that.” He said. “It was a hope that I knew could not be true. He never joined with anyone and he had no Pralor children. His homeworld was among the last to fall in the second war and the assault was so intense barely any ships made it off with survivors. It was more a statement than an inquiry my friend.”

-Be that as it may be Chief Elder, I still took it as a request- Two Seven said with what Delnash swore was a touch of humor in his voice. -However... he did have family. A father and mother, three sisters and three other brothers besides his twin Xaxon-

Delnash nodded. “None of whom survived the war.” Delnash said. “I checked the list of survivors from their planet a long time ago Two Seven.”

-Forgive me then for being blunt Chief Elder... for you did not check well enough- Two Seven said.

Delnash looked at him. “Excuse me?”

-Chief Elder Pralor Sumar’s mother and sister did survive the war. And they were able to escape with the rest of our people- Two Seven told him as Delnash’s eyes grew wider.

“Two Seven... I checked!” Delnash asked.

-Did you happen to run an Etheric Resonance scan Chief Elder? - Two Seven asked him.

Delnash shook his head quickly in response to that question. “No we... we hadn’t set up another Etheric Resonance Sensor system here yet. This was only... it was only a decade after we arrived here Two Seven. We hadn’t fully established ourselves.”

-Every single Praetorian leaves a unique resonance Chief Elder. You know this- Two Seven spoke. -Even those with the unique Praetorian gene can be detected whether dormant or active if you know how and what to set your equipment to look for-

Delnash nodded. “Yes.”

-This resonance can then be used to trace their location or even their history- Two Seven said. -I simply broadened the parameters of my search. Chief Elder Sumar was one of only two living Category Twenty-One Etheric users. Xaxon was the other. Xaxon had no children. Chief Elder Sumar did. With his Lycavorian wife-

Delnash nodded. “Yes... I know that now. How does this help you to the conclusion that Sumar’s mother and sister still survive?”

-Currently... Martin Leonidas is the only living Category Twenty-One Etheric user alive Chief Elder- Two Seven explained. -I estimate that his pureblood son Androcles will reach Category Twenty-One within a decade. Perhaps even sooner. His second and third pureblood sons Denali and Deion within another decade after that. Dorian Leonidas will undoubtedly reach Category Twenty, perhaps twenty-one as well. I will need to adjust my calculations once I have been able to scan them directly-

“I’m not following your line of logic here Two Seven.” Delnash said.

-Given the level of Etheric resonance within Martin Leonidas and his wives, all of whom he turned with the exception of Queen Isabella and Queen Aricia, it would be a simple task for me to calibrate an Etheric Sensor scan to detect similar patterns as him and his wives and mates and his children with Queen Aricia- Two Seven spoke evenly. -I found two such comparable Etheric resonances on Honelze. After further comparison I discovered that they match exactly those recorded for Chief Elder Sumar’s mother Ashrila and his youngest sister Ysera-

“They live Two Seven?” Delnash gasped in shock.

-It would appear so Chief Elder- Two seven answered him. -They have been living on Honelze since we started the colony there. Additional discrete inquires discovered that they have established one of the more popular eateries there. They have also grown quite powerful at shielding their resonance so that they do not draw attention to themselves. They do not seem to want others to know exactly who they are-

“My god!” Delnash exclaimed. “We must...”

The door to his office opened once more and both of them whirled around as the Pralor Guard tried to stop the very attractive woman from barging her way into the office. The man looked at him.

“Chief Elder she would not stop!” The man exclaimed.

Delnash held up his hand recognizing her instantly. “It’s fine son.” He spoke. “You can go.”

“Chief Elder?” The man questioned as he looked at the reddish brown hair and bright blue/green eyes of the woman as she glared at Delnash.

Delnash nodded. “It’s fine. I know who she is.” He stated. Delnash waited until the man had retreated back out the door and he turned back to the woman. “Tobia... all you had to do was request a meeting.”

“Where is my daughter Delnash?” The woman demanded.

“She is fine Tobia.” Delnash assured her.

“I have been trying to reach her on the COM for days now.” Tobia spoke. “And now I can no longer feel her resonance close by. Where is she?”

“Tobia please...”

“Where is Mari damn you!” Tobia barked loudly.

Delnash looked at Two Seven. “Would you excuse us Two Seven.”

-I will stand by outside Chief Elder- Two Seven responded and turned quickly to exit the office.

Delnash waited until the door had closed and then turned back to Tobia. “I really wish you would have contacted me first Tobia. You coming here could raise questions.”

“I’m sorry... I’m sorry Delnash but I haven’t spoken to her in over two weeks.” Tobia told him. “She never goes more than a day or so before checking in with me.”

Delnash moved up in front of her and leaned over to kiss her cheek as he took her hands in his. “I understand.” He said.

“Where is she?” Tobia asked.

“Perhaps you should sit down Tobia.” Delnash said.

“Delnash... don’t fence with me.” Tobia hissed. “Where is she?”

“At the moment... at the moment she is with Murano in the Alpha Quadrant.” Delnash told her.

Tobia’s eyes flew open. “Murano?” She almost shouted. “Delnash... I... I thought he was... I thought he was still in seclusion?”

Delnash shook his head. “No.” He said. “Some events have occurred that... they drew him out of his self imposed exile.”

“What could possibly do that?” Tobia asked with no malice in her voice. “He was so... so lost. He thought that everything was his fault. That everyone died because he had failed.”

Delnash nodded as he drew her towards the couch in his office. He motioned for her to sit and then settled beside her. “Yes... I know.” He said softly.

Tobia looked at him. “Does he know?” She gasped.

Delnash shook his head. “Not to my knowledge no. And it is not my place to tell him. He will be angry enough with me when he finds out.” Delnash took her hands once more. “Tobia... perhaps it is time to reveal the truth. Mari is far more inquisitive than you give her credit for. More than any of us give her credit for except Kesyla. I would not be surprised if Kesyla has already figured it out. She has asked me before why we have allowed you to have such time with her sister. Why you did so much to help raise her and why you taught her to shield her resonance so completely. And if Kesyla has figured it out than I have to believe Mari has as well. They are very close Tobia and have shared things that they would not share with others.”

Tobia looked at him. “Mari has never said anything to me. She would tell me Delnash.”

“Are you so sure?” Delnash asked. “She is incredibly smart and if she has figured it out then there is no reason to think she has not figured out why.” Delnash took a deep breath. “We have adored helping you to raise her Tobia. Truly we have. But she is your daughter. She is my brother’s daughter. They have a right to know that. Mari has a right to know who her father is if she does not already. And... and I think she may already know given how she has acted with him since we left.”

“What do you mean?” Tobia asked.

“She has been... she believed in him when I did not.” Delnash told her. “And she refused my instructions to remain out of harms way to go with him when we first landed on Onterom. To be honest... she hasn’t been apart from him since they met.”

Tobia got to her feet quickly. “I wanted to tell him Delnash! I wanted to! I did not want him to leave me! But he is a Praetorian and that damnable sense of honor they have was driving him. And the shame he carried for something that was not his fault! I could not... I would not put that burden on him.”

“I know.” Delnash spoke softly. “I saw it too... but how do you know that it would have been a burden Tobia? How do you know that it might have been exactly what he needed to let go.” He rose to his feet and looked at her. Tobia was still a stunningly beautiful woman, and Mari took after her mother in almost every way. Barely five foot tall and a hundred pounds in weight, Tobia was a vision of beauty. Delnash knew of many men who would have jumped at the opportunity to take her as their wife. None ever succeeded after she told them she was not interested. “Why did you never move on Tobia? You are an exceptionally beautiful woman... and I know many men who have been more than just interested in you through the years since Mari was born.”

Tobia looked at him. “I have never wanted anyone but your brother Delnash!” Tobia said. “No man compares to Murano in my eyes. No man could make me feel what he did. What he still does. I have loved him with all my heart ever since that first day no matter the differences in our ages.”

Delnash smiled and laughed softly. “Tobia... please. He is only twenty years older than you. And I am two years older than him. We are not old... and you know this. Not when you consider how long our people can live.”

Tobia looked at him and chuckled softly. “I know.” She said.

Delnash moved closer to her. “Then perhaps it is time the three of you became the family you are supposed to be.”

“He is haunted Delnash.” Tobia said. “Haunted by ghosts of men he thinks he failed. Of sins he thinks he committed when he did not! How do I... how do I fight that?”

“I don’t believe you have too.” Delnash said. “Not anymore.”

Tobia looked at him. “What do you mean?” She stepped closer to him. “What is going on Delnash? What have you gotten Murano and Mari involved in! Tell me!” She looked at him. “It has something to do with what that fool Lorendo is spouting at anyone who will listen isn’t it?”

Delnash let a smile split the corners of his mouth. “It wasn’t something that I let them get involved with. It engulfed all of us to be honest. Murano and Mari most of all. She takes after him you know. Always so ready for adventure and discovering the unknown. She is braver than most men I have ever known.”

“Delnash!” Tobia exclaimed. “Tell me! Why are they in the Alpha Quadrant? What do we... we don’t have anything in the Alpha Quadrant. It has to do with these... these Lycavorian people doesn’t it? The species we used for Seed Missions all those years ago.”

Delnash nodded his head. “Yes. Though I dare say they are far more than we ever had the foresight to discover.”

Tobia looked at him oddly. “You know how many of us feel of the Seed Missions. I... I think they were barbaric and unnecessary. They caused more harm than good in my opinion.”

Delnash nodded his head. “After what I have seen in these last weeks Tobia... I have begun to think the very same thing.” He stated.

“What is going on?” Tobia asked.

“I’m sure you remember Chief Elder Pralor Sumar?” He asked.

Tobia’s eyes narrowed. “Who does not remember him?” She asked. “The very first of the Praetorians and the most beloved Chief Elder our people have ever known.” She looked at Delnash and grinned impishly. “Forgive me.”

Delnash laughed softly. “Oh... I feel the same as you about him Tobia. I do.” He said.

“What does this have to do with Chief Elder Sumar?” Tobia said. “Is that where Mari and Murano have gone. Some mission to recover his remains?”

Delnash shook his head. “Not exactly.” He said.

“Delnash... what is going on?” Tobia demanded.

“What I am about to tell you I am going to let our people know over the next few days.” Delnash told her. “It seems that our beloved Chief Elder... the man who most knew never took a wife... did indeed have a family. A very large one it seems.” He saw Tobia’s eyes grow wide and he nodded. “And just recently I was introduced to his... to his grandson several generations removed. And there is no mistaking who he is. It was a moment that did not go over very well for our people mind you.”

Tobia’s eyes grew wide. “The... the Lycavorians!” She gasped.

Delnash smiled at her. “I see now where Mari gets her superb skills of deduction.” He said as he nodded. “And yes... the Lycavorians.”

Tobia reached out and grabbed his arm. “Tell me Delnash! Tell me everything!”

MANNE UNION ADHOC COMPOUND

“...tell us again why you agreed to this Nauta Melme?” Dysea asked as she laid on her back with her head propped against Isabella’s hip on the bed.

They were relaxing within their personal shelter and enjoying the company of each other all the while trying to come to grips with everything Sarlana had told them. Their shelter, while larger than others, was no different on the inside than the standard ones. Since this had become a pseudo permanent base of operations, many of the shelters now had actual beds and furniture instead of cots. With nearly two hundred adolescent dragons growing and coming along under Arzoal’s and Helen’s tutelage, Martin saw no reason to keep moving them back and forth to the ships to go from planet to planet. It would only serve to hamper their growth. After several days of intense sensor scans and armed patrols covering the vast planet he determined that Manne would become the first Union colony not within the Alpha Quadrant and Union space. He had ordered many materials to be brought with Manda and her ARIZONA Attack Wing, foremost among them the tools, personnel and supplies needed to build and reinforce a fully developed and modern colony. It would be built here along the banks of the massive lake where the nearby land was fertile and could grow almost anything they needed. Manne was a beautiful planet and very nearly the size of Earth. He didn't doubt there would be thousands who would volunteer to come here and explore an entirely new area of space.

The Adhoc Compound, or The Compound as it had been nicknamed now, had already become much larger than he had expected or wanted. He hadn't planned on remaining here for very long, but Martin Leonidas was tired of running and moving. He cared for his people and knew the constant action and continuous moving around would eventually make all of them anxious and careless. And resentful. He had told the crew that when the colony was fully and completely established it would become home to the ARC ROYAL and any number of ships. The crews of the ARC ROYAL and Muton's ship would have first crack at remaining here and building a future. Follow on materials and supplies would arrive quickly after those coming with the ARIZONA, and would include at least one PROMETHUS-Class Command Station and the dry docks to support and maintain an entire Combined Fleet Corps as well as ground troops and their support.

This shelter had become theirs by default and no doubt it would become the center of the colony itself. Engineers from the ARC ROYAL had already fashion a bed that would fit all of them and with Atropis supervising them, it had been moved from the ship down here into the shelter. The bed was huge, nearly the size of their beds on both Earth and Apo Prime, and it easily allowed all of them to fit with room to spare. Their shelter was broken into three different sections as opposed to being a single room like the others. It was not something that Martin or the others had asked for, but even they still did not know the extent of the admiration and love for them by the citizens of the Union, or the men and women who served in the Union military. You would be very hard pressed to find men or women who spoke out against the King or the Queens, and while there were some, they kept mostly to themselves.

Martin sat on the bed wearing only a pair of loose black shorts, his broad back against the intricate headboard. The headboard was forged of pure Dragon Armor and engraved with many scenes of dragons and wolves by the engineers aboard the ARC ROYAL. Though Aricia and Anja had initially scolded Atropis for allowing such extravagance on their part, their words of protest had bounced off the stern faced Lycavorian who was Aricia's older brother and had been Anja's Durcunusaan Captain from the very beginning. Atropis told them it was something the crew did on their own and they could not refuse. They eventually gave up and warmly kissed his cheeks in thanks.

Martin had one leg bent at the knee, his arm resting across his knee and holding a data pad. His head was leaned back and Anja was perched in his lap wearing only a white set of panties and bra and slowly and carefully using the straight razor to trim his beard and mustache. Martin hated using the more modern laser trimming devices and every few days one of them used the ancient razor to trimmed his mustache and beard. If they were all together like this, it was usually Anja who did the trimming. Her petite but muscular frame fit perfectly in his lap and she had the steadiest hands among them. Cirith sat sideways with her back against the outside of Martin's knee and her legs stretched out in front of her. For'mya sat between her legs and Cirith was using the ornate elven brush to slowly pull through For'mya's long, golden blond tresses. Aricia laid stretched out next to Martin on the bed, four pillows stuffed under her head and completely naked. Dysea and Isabella wore only light robes over their naked forms that they had brought down to the surface from the ARC ROYAL. Cirith and For'mya, like Anja, wore only panties and bras. The bedroom portion of the shelter, while small, was sectioned off from the main portion of the shelter to give them more privacy and none of them had qualms about the way they were dressed when alone with each other. They never had been in all their years together, and they would not change that fact for anything. If not for their location they probably would have been completely naked.

All of them knew that the rumors abound among their people about the sexual appetite of the Lycavorian King for his Queens, and while none of them ever tried to deny the rumors, they alone knew the truth of it. The nights when he took them and made them scream out his name aside, the thing about Martin Leonidas that they all adored and could not live without was the feeling of his aura as he let it free in moments like this. It simply wrapped around each of them, swirling all over as it danced around their bodies and minds, not in any sexual way, but with powerful emotions of love and peace and happiness. That is what they so adored from their beloved husband and mate. Of course, his sexual appetite was nothing if not divine, and his immense size, devotion to them and his uninhibited nature never ceased to leave them totally breathless as well.

Anja looked up from the trimming she was doing and looked at him. "I was wondering that as well Lover." She said. "You aren't exactly known for having a special love for any kind of news people."

Martin chuckled. "Believe me... it wasn't exactly my first choice." He told them. "I tried to talk Delnash out of it but his reasoning got the best of me. He is right. We have to show them that the nubous sibfla Lorendo is shoveling is wrong. We have to show them that we are not the ignorant primitives they thought us to be when they began using our people on their Seed Missions."

"They were wrong to do that no matter how you wish to dissect it Beloved." Aricia told him from her place on the bed.

Martin nodded his head in agreement. "I know Saaurano. Delnash is beginning to see that as well. He is not a stupid man and he is beginning to see how the Pralor people did things in the past that only hurt them moving forward."

"That is the one thing I have noticed when we have spoken to him in these last weeks." Isabella spoke up now. "He is almost... he is more thoughtful of questions he asks. And he asks these questions with genuine emotion. Does he know that Daniel has turned Kesyla and made her his wife and mate?"

"I don't think so." Martin answered. "At least not yet."

"Let's just make sure if he broaches the subject with Andro or our other children at some point in the future he does so gently." For'mya stated with a smile. "You know how Androcles views what the Pralor people did and all our children agree with him for the most part. They hold to the same values as their brother, though not as tightly sometimes."

Martin chuckled. "I've already made sure he knows not to broach that subject with our son." He said.

"What about us?" Cirith asked now turning to look at him. "Do you want us with you?"

Martin held up the pad. "That will be entirely up to the six of you." Martin told them. "He gave me a list of questions that he will direct these people to ask... at least a series of boundaries to stay within. You aren't much better than me Red when it comes to news people... so we can do it altogether or we can do it separately. Delnash was hoping we would do it separately but..."

Anja laughed at that and nodded her head. "Well... that is true." She said as she used her Etheric power to levitate the razor over to the small table. She used her other hand to run her fingers along the edge of his beard to make sure she had gotten it just perfect. She turned back to Martin. "Lover... you really want to do this don't you?"

This question made all of them look at him now. His shoulder length black hair wasn't tied back; it never was when it was just them, though his beard and mustache was always very meticulously trimmed thanks to them. His dark brown eyes, so expressive and loving to all of them, were bright and intelligent. They had held nothing back from each other for so long that they knew just by looking at him what his answer was. There were no secrets between them ever since the incident with Lisisa so long ago. He did not share some of his military plans and operations with them they knew, but if it was important and concerned them or would affect them in any way, he always told them what was going on. And given now that he no longer held his aura in check when around them, they would know if something vexed him. They could see he wanted this.

"I have... I have Pralor blood within me Red." He said softly. "I am Lycavorian yes... and that will always be dominant, but a small part of me is Pralor. I want to know about that. It's the only way..."

"It is the only way you will feel close to your grandfather." Dysea said softly as she looked at him.

Martin nodded his head. "He is part of me. I have his memories but I don't really know him. Who he was. If I can learn about the life he led... then it will allow me to know him."

This was the side of Martin Leonidas that very few people saw or experienced. The man who let his emotions reside out in the open on his sleeve. This was the side of Martin that made them love him so completely and without question. Beneath the often times gruff, harsh and rough looking exterior that he showed everyone else was the gentle and loving heart and soul of pure gold. There was never any question between them and they all nodded within milliseconds of each other. They had always spoken with one voice and that would not change now.

"Then we will do it for you Beloved." Aricia spoke for all of them as was usually the case in a situation like this.

“Just don’t expect us to dress in our underwear or anything like that!” Anja popped using her finger to point at him from his lap. She stabbed her index finger into his broad chest. “The last time we did an interview with the Netnews back home it was before that State Dinner on Elear a few years ago and we had to pour our bodies into some ridiculously tight dresses.”

“That is because your goldur are so big melyanna.” Dysea commented with a grin.

“Yours aren’t much smaller Melda Min.” Anja exclaimed looking at her.

“True... but I am also six inches taller than you duon enla.” Dysea replied with a large smile. “When others look at me they do not have to look down and see the delicious valley between your goldur. That always makes them forget what they are going to say!”

Martin laughed. “It certainly makes me forget.” He spoke.

Anja looked at him. “You have a one track mind pervert!” She hissed playfully at him. “I expect that from you!”

“When will this be happening Martin?” For'mya asked.

Martin looked at her. “Delnash is going to be giving an interview to his people soon. Today I believe. After that... figure two or three days to set it up and then put them on a ship here. I would guess by the end of the week.”

“Good. It will give us the time we need to deal with Pusintin.” For'mya spoke.

Martin nodded his head. “I expect that to hit off in another day or so. The Frigates he sent to scout our position jumped back late this afternoon. They acted as if we didn’t see them. And we gave them no reason to think otherwise.”

“What do you think Martin?” Isabella asked. “A day?”

Martin nodded. “At least. Probably more like two. He’s scared. If he wasn’t, he would have charged in here already. He’s being cautious. He wants For'mya back and he wants to do it in a way that brings her no harm.”

For'mya snorted loudly and her face twisted into a horrible mask. “I would sooner submit to an Acamarian sewer worm than have that tukannupae touch me again!” She snarled loudly referring to the eight inch long creatures that resided beneath the many cities of the Acamarian homeworld. They were horribly ugly with bristles on their outer, slimy body and large suckers for mouths. One or two could do no harm, but they were capable of severely injuring or even killing an adult if they attached to a body in large numbers.

Cirith chuckled and leaned forward to nuzzle the back of her elven ear. “Do not worry our love.” She said softly. “He won’t get within spitting distance of you.”

For'mya’s face changed instantly at the touch of Cirith’s nuzzle on her ear and she cooed softly in delight.

“And if he does... he will not have anything left to spit with.” Bella commented. “We will let Melyanna do to him what she wanted to do to Daron. He would not like that.”

Anja laughed. “It wouldn’t hurt! I keep telling you it wouldn’t hurt!” She exclaimed.

“We are suppose to believe that Anja?” Aricia asked with a laugh as she stroked her skin.

“Ok... maybe it will hurt just a little.” Anja conceded. “But by then it won’t matter.”

“No it will not.” Dysea chimed in now.

Martin grinned as his wives and mate contemplated the painful demise of his brother. He truly never wanted to be on the receiving end of their combined wrath. It would not be a pretty sight in the least. “Well he is being too cautious now.” He spoke finally. “And it will cost him. Unless he moves within the next twelve hours... they won’t get here before Manda shows up with her Task Force. When she gets done with his ships he will be all alone.”

“The plan will work.” For'mya said looking at him.

Martin nodded his head. “Yes it will.” He told her confidently. “And then you will be mine forever and always.”

For'mya’s dark brown eyes beamed adoration and love at him. “I am... I am already yours Martin Leonidas.”

Martin hands gripped Anja’s firm ass as he leaned forward, keeping her in place and he kissed her softly, For'mya delighting in the sensations just his kiss caused within her. He drew back after a long moment. “You know what I mean.” He said softly. “All of you know what I mean.”

Martin could feel all of their eyes on him and their hands reached out to stroke his skin wherever their hands could touch him.

“Yes Beloved.” Aricia whispered for all of them once more. “We know what you mean. And you belong to us. Forever and always.”

“Avoi.” Anja echoed her whispered.

SPARTA'S WRATH

TWO HOURS THIRTY-SEVEN MINUTES FROM RENDEZVOUS

Murano had seen it right away in him. The moment the Etheric pulse had touched him and Andro had stopped talking. Whoever was sending the Etheric message was overwhelmingly powerful and it took Murano a moment to realize that there was more than one mind within the link and that is what accounted for the large surge in power he felt. He did not know initially who he was talking to but Murano estimated at least two other Praetorians were in the link. He deduced quickly that it had to be Dorian and Deion for while their resonances were new to him, they were Praetorians nonetheless, and he had felt their echo within Martin.

They had been exploring the newly designed Dragon Pens and it was here that Murano and Mari had gotten their first true interaction with dragons of any kind. Murano had heard that Elynth was just as much introverted as Androcles was, and he noticed this in the manner she studied him and Mari intently before finally joining the conversation her brother Jeth was in with his dragon mate Thaura and their siblings. Almost from the moment they entered the Pens Elynth never left Andro's side as they stood together. At one point he had seen Andro lean up against her front foreleg and her head had dropped just enough to press her snout to the side of his face. Murano and Mari were included in the conversation almost from the beginning, and listening to Jeth instruct his younger siblings was hysterically humorous. He used some of the same colorful metaphors as he had heard Martin use on more than one occasion and the gentle laughter from all the dragons had been genuine and warm. It was within the Dragon Pens that Murano and Mari were introduced to two of Androcles's wives and mates. The young Drow Lu'ria and the stunning young Rothryn Sehri. They had been touring the ship with Lu'ria's dragon Majeir and Murano watched as they came up to Andro without pause and he nuzzled their ears and kissed them not caring who saw this action.

This was something that Murano had never experienced with Teniri or any of the dragons on Artaaya. The total sense of family, love and companionship was very evident between the dragons and Andro and his wives. And the supremacy of the bond Androcles had with Elynth was quite possibly even stronger than the one he had felt between Martin and Torma. Murano also noticed that the other dragons seemed to regard Androcles and Elynth almost reverently. He knew they were Talon Guardians like their fathers, but there was something else that he sensed. Something that he did not sense between Martin and Torma and the other dragons on Manne.

The moment the pulse reached for him, he had seen Androcles change.

It took only a few moments before Andro looked at him and motioned for him to follow. Murano had grabbed Mari's hand and they moved quickly from the Dragon Pens. Andro was moving through the corridors rapidly, Lu'ria and Sehri directing him using their PIs as maps as they made their way somewhere. Six decks later Murano discovered what as they arrived in a large conference room of some sort. Murano saw another door open on the opposite side of the room and the young blond haired woman and brown haired elf female entered right behind the tall Lycavorian and dark red haired female Murano knew as Andro's sister Eliani. Behind them came the female Murano knew as another sister to Andro, Lisisa Leonidas. Andro motioned to his sisters.

“Eli... Lisi... seal the doors.” He spoke.

Eliani and Lisisa turned instantly and passed their hands on the side panels, using their unique biometric reading to lock down the door. SPARTA'S WRATH had Biometric Sensors newly installed and calibrated throughout the ship and most of the secure areas could only be opened with a Biometric scan of the individual. If they did not have access, they would not be allowed entrance into whatever area they were trying to enter. Eliani and Lisisa were two of only sixteen men and women on the ship who could access this room. It may have appeared outwardly as a simple and totally innocuous conference room, but it was also one of three identical QCR centers on the ship. The Quantum Communications Relay was the finest and most advanced means of communication in the universe. It was Pralor technology originally, but was now tweaked to work seamlessly with Union equipment. It would become standard on most fleet ships and elsewhere eventually, but right now only senior Command and Control ships and stations had QCRs available to them.

Murano knew instantly that this was Androcles's anome Sadi Leonidas the moment he felt her resonance. The second elven female must have been Ne'Veha. He could feel all four of them swirling within the Etheric realm around Androcles. Each of them were powerful to an extent, but Sadi had Pralor blood within her Murano determined and her Etheric resonance was equally as powerful as Mari's, if not as focused and controlled. They both moved up to him and Sadi grabbed his arm as he leaned over to nuzzle and kiss both of them.

"Andro what is happening?" Sadi asked him as she gripped his arm.

"Carissa contacted Dorian, Deion and Nara and had them initiate an Etheric link with me." He answered turning to where Ne'Veha stood. "Sirsangai... activate the QCR. They have linked all their P1s and are standing by."

Murano watched as Ne'Veha let her fingers dance across the control console on the table and suddenly the lighting in the room dimmed and a holoprojection from the center of the table exploded into life all around them. It amazed Murano that they had learned how to operate and use the P1 devices to the extent that they had. He admonished himself silently for that thought a second later. These men and women were not fools in any way. Androcles held an advanced educational degree in Astrometric Engineering. He had learned from Martin that all of his wives were absolute taskmasters when it came to schooling and it was they who drove their children just as hard. All of the older children from Martin and his wives had advanced degrees in one field or another, and the teenaged pair of twins were even more intensely driven to excel in school. Martin had bragged that his son Deion now held two advanced degrees in two different fields and he had achieved both of them by the time he had turned seventeen. When he was awarded the second, all of his brothers and sisters had attended the ceremony, coming from a dozen different locations within Union space to be there. None of these men and women were beneath him or anyone Murano thought, least of all the Pralor people and the more time among them that he spent, the more he believed that they never were to begin with.

On one side of the massive table were the figures of Dorian, Deion and Nara. The other side held Carisia and Yuri. Their images were spread across the table and roughly two feet tall since they were transmitting from their P1s and not another QCR station which would allow their figures to be full size. Even so their images were crystal clear and unblemished.

"Dori... Carisia... I have everyone that knows of your mission here." Andro spoke now moving around the table. "Also with me is Praetorian Murano and his niece Lady Mari. Who else besides Sheva and Onera are with you?"

Murano watched as Dorian and Deion moved closer together when they saw him in the transmission. He felt another swell of pride fill his chest when they both bowed their heads to him in the transmission.

"Praetorian Murano..." Deion spoke. "We are..."

"We are honored sir." Dorian finished.

Murano stepped closer to the table. "It is I who am honored." He told them. "However... now is not the time for greetings I understand? Your brother has told me a crisis has arisen and our time is better spent resolving this. There will be time for greetings in the future."

Andro stepped closer to the table. "Deo...?" He asked softly calling his younger brother by the nickname given to him by Denali when he was small.

Murano watched Deion look at his brother in the transmission. "I will... I will be fine fervon." He spoke.

"The first... the first time is never easy to forget fervon." Andro told him. "You did the right thing. You were protecting our sister. We do not seek to take life... but if it needs to be done then do not hesitate. You did not... and Nara and you are alive because of it."

Deion nodded his head. "I know. Dori said the same thing." He spoke. "I will be fine Andro. I would... I would like to speak with you privately when we rejoin with you but for now we have other issues."

Murano felt hands grip his arm tightly and he turned his head to see Mari staring at the transmission with wide blue/green eyes. She was unaware he was looking at her or that she was squeezing his arm so tightly for her full attention was focused on Deion Leonidas.

Mari had felt her heart leap into her throat instantly unlike at any time in her young life as she gazed at him. It took her only a few seconds to decide he was the most physically handsome man she had ever laid her eyes upon. Deion Leonidas was utterly delicious looking. His dark brown eyes were so bright and alert even within the secured QCR holotransmission, his smooth skin deeply tanned and his face very masculine with a strong jaw and the very early beginnings of a mustache and goatee just like his brother. His black hair was cut short but it appeared very thick. His hair was also just as black as the hair his father and brother had. The color of the very deepest, darkest night. Mari felt a surge of odd energy through her just looking at him. It was something she had never felt before in her life and it made her feel extraordinarily aroused and content at the same time. She didn't understand it, but something told her that this man was the one. The one she had waited for. Deion Leonidas was the man who would take her and worship her and make her feel things that she never imagined. Deion was going to be her husband and he would make her feel everything she wanted to feel for all eternity.

Murano did not know it then and he would not know it for several weeks, but Androcles and all of them in the room who were wolf smelled Mari's scent spike sharply as she gazed at Deion in the transmission.

Andro nodded. "Indeed we do." He said turning to look at Carisia. "Enylarcopri... we have missed you."

Carisia's face beamed in the transmission. "No more than I have missed you." She said. "We can talk about that later though. We detected four High Coven built warships fourteen minutes ago Saradasaar. They are on an intercept course for Dorian's frigate and will arrive at the same time they do."

"High Coven built?" Jomann asked her. "Why does that sound like it is not a good thing Carisia?"

Yuri moved up beside Carisia in the transmission, taking her hand as she did. "We do not believe that it is a good thing Captain Jomann." She stated plainly. "Captain Norev informs me that there is little chance these might be ships from Admiral Pontal's command. He and your grandfather are still securing the Coven's borders and Norev tells me they would never risk a BLOOD REVERENCE Dreadnought to wander The Wilds aimlessly. Pa'cour agrees."

Andro's eyes narrowed. "I tend to agree." He said. "Which means that is definitely no coincidence." He spoke.

"Sheva and Onera are conducting a search of those we brought with her parents fevon." Dorian said. "Her father is enraged and demanded that he be allowed to help her. They have the other families in the cargo bay under guard and are searching what belongings they brought with them."

"Aside from our encounter we got off the planet clean Andro. There is no way they could have found the bodies so soon and then figured out Sheva's parents and the others are gone so quickly." Deion spoke again.

Dorian nodded. "I am of the same mind as Deion Andro." He said.

"As am I." Andro stated. His eyes cut to Yuri then. "Yuri... are you thinking what I am thinking?"

Yuri nodded her head. "Indeed I am." She stated. "It is why I had Carisia contact Dorian and then you. Have you heard anything from your Marci?"

Andro shook his head at her question. "She is not due to contact me for another twelve hours. She wanted to round all of them up and interrogate them before she made any report to me."

Yuri nodded. "Thoughtful and thorough." She said. "However... she may not need to Androcles." Yuri said.

"Andro... I... I authorized the Worker Drones to upgrade the sensors on mother's ship." Carisia told him. "It's how we detected the Coven ships."

Andro shook his head. "I was going to order it anyway Enylarcopri." He told her without batting an eye. "What does that matter?"

"Captain Norev assures us that he can confirm if they are from Moran's forces with a more direct scan from the new sensors." Carisia added.

"Carisia... won't that give away your position?" Sadi asked now moving closer to Andro.

Carisia shook her head quickly. "Captain Norev says if we use an inverse polarion beam, they will not be able to detect it Sadi."

“An inverse polarion beam?” Sadi said softly. “That’s very inventive.” Sadi looked at Ne’Veha quickly and they both turned to look at Andro and nodded their heads slightly letting him know that it would indeed work.

Murano took note of this simple action and smiled inwardly. Martin had told him Andro had been trying to come out from under the shadow of his father that he thought he was in for many years. Androcles didn’t realize that he was never in the shadow of his father for he had been blazing his own path since he was born. It appeared however that Androcles was very much like his father in many different ways. He relied on others to confirm information he was not knowledgeable in and he did not hesitate to do this. He also completely and wholly trusted his wives and mates before all others.

“We would need to move slightly closer to these ships but we could get a very clear scan of these ships.” Carisia said.

“How much closer?” Andro asked.

“We would need to be within five million kilometers.” Yuri answered him now. “We are certain they have not detected us or they would have reacted by now. I had Professor Lidene improve our Shrouds as much as he was able shortly after we established ourselves at our base. They are not as good as the Union Shrouds now are, but they should be more than adequate for us to get close and remain undetected.”

“What... what are Shrouds?” Mari blurted out the question. She had been lost so far in what they were talking about because of what she felt coursing through her in regards to Deion.

“Mari... not now child!” Murano exclaimed causing Mari to glance at him embarrassed that she had spoken. He instantly regretted his action but Deion Leonidas saved him in a manner of speaking.

“It has to do with Phased Spatial Distortion Lady Mari.” Deion answered her without thinking about it.

Deion’s dark brown eyes were focused on Mari in the transmission and had been since he had first seen her. He did not like the way Murano had reprimanded her in front of everyone and he instinctively acted to protect her honor. Androcles glanced at his brother in the transmission and instantly saw something within his brother’s eyes. Something very deep, very sincere and very interested. “It is the ability to bend and shape light around our ships to make them invisible to sensors and the naked eye.” He finished.

Mari looked at him in the transmission when he answered her and she could not keep the smile from her face as she moved closer to the table, her blue/green eyes focused on him. To meet a man who was as equally intelligent as he was absolutely gorgeous made her especially giddy. Mari found herself very much wanting to meet him in person and talk to him. Spend time with him. Mari’s cheeks flushed slightly as other, more intimate thoughts flashed across her mind in those few seconds. She was certainly no stranger to relationships or men. Mari had four relationships in the last six years, all of them ending after only months. The longest had been six months but that was only because he had been aboard ship and Mari did not want to end it while he was away. In each relationship Mari found the men to be rather dull and wanting her to fill a certain role in their lives. Almost as if they did not consider her an equal. To say she was smarter than all of them would have been an understatement and the sex between them had been very forgettable as far as Mari was concerned.

“So your Shrouds are like our Flatspace technology?” She asked Deion.

“Well... not really... no.” Deion said shaking his head. Her soft voice, even through the transmission, was like sweet chimes on the wind to him. “Flatspace technology deals primarily with Interdimensional Physics and Space Mass and Volume. At least the way we use it with our shields and such.” Deion began to answer.

“Our Shrouds simply...”

“You... you know Interdimensional Physics?” Mari gasped in even more of a delighted surprise.

Deion rolled his eyes in disgust. “Carians... it was the most boring class I ever had to take in...”

Mari’s eyes were wide in delight. “Me too!” She exclaimed happily.

“Now is not the time for a Physics lesson fervon.” Nara spoke as she elbowed Deion in the side.

“What?” Deion hissed as he looked at her. “When am I ever going to be able to use this knowledge again?” He declared. “I hated Phased Spatial Distortion theories too. It was boring as all hell!”

“You hated school all of the time remember.” Nara said with a smile.

Murano let his eyes wander to everyone in the room in turn and he could see humor on the faces of the men and women gathered. Once more Helen’s words echoed in his mind. These men and women were not like his comrades of old. In a situation like this, the Praetorians of old would have been completely serious and very business like. As he looked at Androcles and saw a similar smile on his face at his brother’s comments Murano realized that the laconic nature of their father and certainly rubbed off on his children. It was not a dismissal of the danger or the seriousness of the situation... it was a way to acknowledge and embrace their fear and use that to fuel their actions.

“Well... it did suck all of the time.” Deion finished.

“Deo... are you done lamenting on the schooling all of us had to go through?” Andro asked him finally. “Our mothers would not be happy in the least to hear you speaking in such a manner.”

“As if you don’t agree.” Deion snapped playfully.

“I never said that.” Andro spoke with a grin. “I just don’t say such things openly. Our mothers have ears everywhere.”

Deion looked at him in the transmission. “What are they gonna do... turn me over their knees like when I was small?”

Andro shook his head. “No. Our mothers will make you get another degree in some other boring subject.”

Deion’s eyes grew wider at this. “More school? They wouldn’t! They couldn’t! It was torture!” He gasped. “I’m shutting up now!”

“Another degree?” Mari asked openly surprised. She wasn’t surprised that Deion was obviously intelligent; she was just surprised to meet a man that did not concentrate on one particular area. “You... you have more than one educational degree?”

Nara bumped her hip against her twin in the transmission. “Deo here has two degrees.” She spoke proudly. “One in Nanotechnology Mechanical Engineering and one in Aerodynamic and Interstellar Physics. He’s not really as dumb as he looks.”

“Thank you so much arande.” Deion said rolling his eyes and leaning over to nuzzle his twin.

Murano heard all of them laugh softly and then Eliani stepped closer to the table. “We’ll talk about what you owe us to keep our mouths shut when we finally join with our father and mothers fervon.” She said.

“Eli... you wouldn’t!” Deion gasped looking at her. “Would you?”

“Enough!” Andro spoke with his command voice even though he was unable to keep the humorous tone out of his words. “Enylarcopri... what is your plan?”

Carisia looked at Yuri. “Mother?”

Yuri nodded her head and with the remnants of a smile on her face at their antics she began to speak. “We will move to within five million kilometers and use the polarion beam to conduct the scan. We should be able to detect residual particles on their hulls which would give us a rough location of where they came from. All High Coven ships had extensive sector scans in their computer databases... and our ship is no different. Once we have a generalized location then we can cross reference that with our known charts and make sure that Pontal and your grandfather have had no ships in that area. If it turns out that they haven’t... then it could only be one thing Androcles.”

“Moran.” Andro said.

Yuri nodded her head. “Yes.” She said. “By all accounts he has nearly three full Fleet Groups under him. There are only so many places he can hide so many warships and not have been discovered by now. These ships could very well tell us where that is and keep us from implementing what we talked of before.”

Sadi glanced at Andro now. “What does that mean?” She asked.

Carisia smiled in the transmission. “I will fill you in later KertaGai.” She said.

“Yuri you...” Andro began.

“I had no choice.” Yuri answered sheepishly. “Not when we discovered these ships.”

“Oh boy.” Andro muttered.

Sadi’s jungle green eyes narrowed. “Androcles Leonidas... what were you planning to do?” She demanded.

“Speak!” Ne’Veha echoed Sadi as she glared at him.

Andro looked at them as Lu’ria and Sehri moved up beside them and they were united. “It was only in case Marci wasn’t able to get any information.” He told them.

“You were going to use yourself and Yuri as bait weren’t you?” Lu’ria asked him.

“Well... I... I suppose that... yeah... something like that.” He said even as his wives and mates and Jomann glared at him.

Eliani burst out laughing and leaned into Jomann. "I suppose you knew nothing of this my love, judging by the look on your face." She said.

Jomann shook his head. "No... I did not!" He growled as he glared at Andro.

"It doesn't matter now." Andro hissed softly. "How much time?" Andro asked looking at Yuri and Carisia.

"We will need to move quickly." Yuri told him. "As soon as Sheva and Onera discover who has the device and how it is calibrated."

"Sheva will find out." Dorian assured his brother with confidence. "We'll know in a few minutes I imagine."

Andro nodded. "Do it. We rendezvous in just over two hours." He spoke. "Maintain your course and speed fervon. Do nothing that could give away that you have discovered the traitor."

"And when we rendezvous?" Dorian asked.

"If Yuri's people have the information we need... then we act." Andro said.

"How do we do that?" Deion asked now.

Andro grinned. "We destroy the other ships and seize the Dreadnought." He told them seeing their eyes go wide. "Then we use it to lead us right back to Moran, Dante and Xaxon."

Murano's eyes went wide at this and his head snapped around. "Xaxon?" He snarled almost savagely.

"Make it happen." Andro told them. "Use a tight beam from your P1s if you have any additional information to pass on. We'll join with you in just over two hours."

Andro ended the transmission and looked at Murano. "We need to talk." He spoke.

"I would think so!" Murano snapped.

"Jomann... we may get to see how our team works sooner than we expected." Andro told him as he met his eyes. "Prep them for a mission to secure the Dreadnought."

"Excuse me!" Lisisa spoke for the first time as she came up to the table. "I don't mean to be the voice of doom here Andro... but how exactly do you expect to take over a fully crewed High Coven BLOOD REVERENCE Dreadnought with only fourteen of us fervon? I mean... we are good but..."

Andro looked at her. "As father would say... it's not just a job..."

Murano heard all of Androcles's siblings finish the statement in unison. "It's a nubous adventure!"

"First time for everything." Andro muttered.

ICARAVA DEFENSE MINISTRY BUILDING

Aviel walked down the long central corridor of the Defense Ministry Building with ease. He had been here many times before; visiting as often as he could in order to learn of military things that he had no knowledge of. One of the reasons that Aviel was so respected and liked is that, regardless of his senior position and standing, he was not afraid to admit when he did not know something. And he asked questions. Many of those who moved through the corridor, both Vrrarhoinpa and Jiilhoinpa bowed their heads to him in deep respect as he passed. Many knew who he was and they also knew the type of man he was. There were many among the Defense Ministry who viewed Aviel Em'morr as someone who understood them and the military mind set. A man who got it. The things he had done through the years had only enforced this ideal.

Aviel entered the large corner office unannounced and saw the Kaliathie (Lieutenant) of the man he was here to see look up from her desk. Her eyes grew wide as she came to her feet instantly. "Koppentotz Em'morr!" She exclaimed. "We... the Inidra (General) did not expect you today!"

Aviel held up his hand. "I know. Is he in?"

The young woman nodded. "He just returned from lunch. Shall I announce you?"

Aviel shook his head. "No... I will just go in. Thank you."

Aviel moved past her with a smile and through the archway into the large office with adjoining conference room and small bathroom. The office was truly massive, nearly as large as his own, which spoke to the importance of the man he was meeting today. One side of the office was nothing more than a floor to ceiling window that offered just as breathtaking a view of the capital as his own office. The polished black granite desk was massive, with four chairs facing the front of the desk. Aviel moved to the window and admired the view of the northern part of the capital, and the wide river that cut through the northeastern corner. He could see dozens of Vrrarhoinpa adolescents diving to the surface of the river and then back up as they learned to hunt from high above.

“The last time you came to my office unannounced Aviel Em'morr, I ended up getting this job.” The deep voice spoke and Aviel turned with a smile.

The Darastrixi male before him was the embodiment of the soldiers he led in battle. He was easily over two meters tall and over two hundred pounds of nothing but muscle and bone.

Inidra Dytin Ueni.

The Supreme Commander of all Darastrixi military forces and a man who had been Aviel's friend since they were only five years old. Dytin was a year older than him, but since Aviel had nothing but sisters as he was growing, they had become like brothers. They had been part of each other's lives and in all the millennia that had passed since, neither of them had ever forgotten where they had come from or the bond they had. Dytin was wiping his hands with a towel, his dark green scales healthy and vibrant. Aviel noticed that his skin was slightly darker than the last time he had seen him and he correctly assumed his friend had been out with the men over these past weeks. Dytin hated to remain in this office for very long, and it was well known that he spent more time in the field with his men than he did in this office.

“And a very good visit it turned out to be.” Aviel told him. “I understand that our military forces have seen a forty-three percent increase in operational readiness and moral has soared since you took command.”

Dytin smiled as he tossed the towel onto the nearby couch. “I see you have been keeping track.” He said.

Aviel shrugged. “One only needs to look around to see that you have returned to our men and women under arms their pride. Something that had been sorely lacking since...”

Dytin nodded his head slowly in agreement. “It was a bad time for all of us my friend.” He spoke. He knew what Aviel meant. He had been one of the few senior officers among the Darastrixi who had refused to carry out the orders to capture and turn over their Pralor friends to the Scourge. Dytin was a soldier's soldier and betraying the friendships and trusts they had cultivated with the Pralor people was a stain upon their honor that would never be washed away as far as he was concerned. He moved across to stand in front of Aviel and placed his hand over his heart. Aviel did the same and they touched foreheads. “It is very good to see you Aviel.” He said with much warmth in his voice.

Aviel lowered his hand and gripped his arms. “The feeling is very mutual.” He said in reply. “How have you been? Where have you been?”

Dytin smiled and moved to his desk, motioning for Aviel to take one of the chairs in front of the massive desk. Unlike his predecessor, Dytin Ueni almost never sat at the desk. The man who had held this position before him had used the desk as a means to separate himself from those he commanded. Dytin had no intention of ever doing that. He pulled over the second chair as Aviel settled comfortably into another.

“I have been out among our Sand Strider Battalions in the Southern Desert.” Dytin told him. “They just graduated another class and their commander asked me to give the Ceremonial Promotion Blessing.”

Aviel's eyes grew bright. “Another Sand Strider Battalion?” He asked. “Dytin that is excellent news!”

Dytin nodded his head with a smile and got back to his feet. He moved to the counter behind his desk and poured them both half full glasses of Darastrixi wine. “It's a pleasure to speak with someone among the Urkrisir Mamiss who actually understands.” He said. “You need to come by more often.”

Aviel laughed as he took the glass Dytin offered him. “Perhaps so.” He said. “How is It'oru doing? Your children?”

“She is visiting her mother and father in Toreen. On the western coast.” Dytin answered. “Her youngest brother just took a wife and the ceremony was yesterday.”

“I'm sorry you couldn't be there my friend.” Aviel said.

Dytin waved his hand. “Believe me... four of her brothers have taken wives in the last century... and those parties more than made up for missing one.” He said with a smile. “And she has two more brothers still. I will go to them.”

“Your children?” Aviel asked. “I haven't seen them in several years.”

“And they miss the man they call uncle.” Dytin spoke. “My oldest boy Nalurn just took command of the Seventy-Ninth Regiment.” Dytin answered. “He will make a fine commander for them. Ashqua my oldest daughter has become a member of the Elbakiw Sulevfu. You should ask that question of It'oru, she is the only one who can keep track of what all eleven of them are doing at any one time.”

Aviel laughed heartily. “I do know the feeling. Nahko is the only one who can keep up with our children as well.” He said.

“How is Nahko?” Dytin asked. “Does she still insist you run every day?”

Aviel nodded his head with a smile. “The benefits of joining with a physician.” He said.

“Ah!” Dytin laughed. “I never did understand what she saw in you?”

Aviel grinned. “I am gifted.” He said.

Dytin chuckled. “More like deformed.” He stated as he leaned back in the chair. He sipped his wine and looked at Aviel. “So tell me my friend... what can I do for a member of the Urlkrisir Mamiss? Even one as ugly as you.”

Aviel laughed again and set his glass on the table to his side. He turned back to Dytin. “I am not here in an official capacity Dytin.” He said softly.

Dytin looked at him oddly. “I don't think I understand.” He said.

Aviel looked at the floor. “I need some advice from one I call my friend and that I trust. And I have some requests to make of that man.”

Dytin didn't flinch when Aviel spoke and when he finished he rose to his feet and moved to the archway quickly. “Kaliathie Ardal inform Colonel Oteg that we will need to reschedule for tomorrow when it is convenient for him.”

Aviel heard the female voice reply and then Dytin touched the wall beside the archway and twin doors rose from the floor, sealing the office. Dytin turned back to Aviel and moved back to his chair. He sat down and looked at his friend.

“Nearly one hundred thousand years we have been friends Aviel.” He spoke softly. “We are like brothers. Our wives are like sisters and our children have grown together through the decades. In all this time... you have never asked me for anything.”

Aviel shook his head. “I was the one who had all sisters Dytin.” He said. “It was I who have benefited more from our friendship.”

“And my father and brothers were deevdruidiriika!” Dytin hissed. “Why do you think fate put us together Aviel?”

Aviel nodded his head. “I am glad you feel this way. It is no less than what I have always felt.” He said.

“Tell me why you have come here Aviel.” Dytin asked. “Why has the man I call brother and who wields far more power and influence than I come here?”

“Dytin... do you remember when we were boys and we used to race around the shripomn (village) pretending that we were soldiers of Zezhuanth? The Dahakoan reborn?” Aviel asked.

Dytin smiled. “Like it was yesterday.” He answered. “And if I recall... we got into more trouble pretending to protect those in need than the original Dahakoan.”

Aviel laughed. “Yes we did.” He said. He looked at Dytin. “Do you still believe in them old friend. What they represent?”

“The Sjir di Eluithol predicts they will return one day.” Dytin said softly. “I have lived my life believing this. That will never change Aviel. Why?” (Scroll of Faith)

“Then you know of the Lorsvek ar Sepas?” Aviel asked.

“Any true believer of the Sjir di Eluithol knows of the Lorsvek ar Sepas.” Dytin answered him. “Why? Aviel... what is this all about?”

“My faith wavered for a time.” Aviel told him as he got to his feet. “Nahko saw to it that I kept to what I believed in my heart. What we believed. Nahko is a blessing that I cannot thank wer ithquenti enough for.”

Dytin got to his feet and faced his friend as he moved to the large window and looked out over the city. “Aviel... what is...?”

“Dytin... what if I told you the Lorsvek ar Sepas is coming true.” Aviel said turning to meet his eyes. “That it is coming true right now. That it is taking place right now as we speak to one another.”

Dytin moved closer to him. “What... what do you mean?” He asked.

“The Dahakoan are among us once more my friend.” Aviel told him. “Just as Zezhuanth told us would happen in the Scrolls. I have seen two of them myself Dytin. Nahko is with them even now.”

“Aviel... you... do not jest with me.” Dytin told him.

“This is no nibel Dytin.” He said. “It is true.” (Game)

“Aviel... what...” Dytin stammered.

Aviel reached around behind him and pulled out the small holo emitter. He moved to Dytin's desk and set the emitter down and activated it. Dytin moved closer as he saw the image of Laren and Ladur appear. His eyes grew wide when he saw the shimmering black hair that flowed down from her head and well past her shoulders, but there was no mistaking she was Darastrixi. The soft green scales along her outer face and down her neck were unmistakable. As with all Darastrixi female, the center of her face around her mouth and nose and her eyes was soft skin, yet her skin had a much deeper tanned color to it. She was built slightly different as well with her chest being larger than normal Darastrixi that he had seen with moist and very full lips. The Holo Image Emitter blinked and then the image changed to that of a young man he had never seen before, a young man who was obviously not Darastrixi, and a large Darastrixi Vrrarhoinpa female with dark obsidian colored scales and bright golden eyes. She also looked very different somehow and Dytin could not place it right away. She was much larger than most Vrrarhoinpa females he had seen and much more muscular in nature.

The moving capture image showed her leaning over to press her large muzzle to the tall young man's cheek, her head dwarfing his own, but his arm coming up to wrap around her wide snout as much as he was able and his incredible azure colored eyes were almost glowing. The young man looked somehow familiar to him, as if he had met him before but once more Dytin could not place it. The image changed back to one of Laren and Ladur and Dytin looked up at Aviel.

“These are four of them Dytin.” Aviel told him quickly seeing the shocked look on his face. “Laren Ti'shara and Ladur. The young man is Androcles Leonidas... his Vrrarhoinpa is Elynth. We do not have images of the last two because Laren cannot transpose her images of them from her mind to the emitter. The last Jiilhoinpa is this one's younger brother, that much we do know.”

“I do not... Aviel... she has nures!” Dytin exclaimed. “Darastrixi don't have nures! And he is not Darastrixi!” (Hair)

Aviel nodded his head. “Yes... she has hair, but she is Darastrixi. I have seen her Dytin my friend... spoken with her. According to the Sjir... when the Dahakoan returned to us, they would bear the blood of each other within them. Nahko has already examined them for me and she has confirmed this. Laren has... she has the blood of her fellow Dahakoan within her Dytin Ueni. That is why she has hair... and fangs. Kaldaka jeskic.”

Dytin's eyes grew wide. “Kaldaka?” He gasped.

Aviel nodded his head. “The young man... he is Lycavorian Dytin. The third one... Dorian... he is also Lycavorian and equally Vampiric by his blood. They are brothers as I said. This one... Androcles... he and his Vrrarhoinpa have... they became joined together before he ever left the womb of his mother Dytin.”

Dytin's yellowish eyes grew wider. “They melded before he was born?” He gasped.

Aviel nodded his head. “This Elynth, she was only weeks old when this meld happened and Laren believes that they were speaking to one another even before she hatched. Just as she and Ladur were. I can only assume that this is also the case with the brother Dorian and his Vrrarhoinpa Ryner.”

Dytin turned back to the image. “She is unlike any Vrrarhoinpa I have seen. She is larger and more muscular Aviel.”

Aviel nodded again. “She is the product of crossbreeding my friend. The Ixen and Osear breeds.”

“The Ixen and Osear?” Dytin gasped. “They do not even like each other!”

Aviel nodded in agreement. “Somehow... the Darastrixi that we allowed the Pralors to seed on other worlds found themselves among the Lycavorian species. If what Laren tells me is true, they have become friends and family in many cases. Etheric bonds between Vrrarhoinpa and Lycavorian are many. Among Elves and vampires too. Our Darastrixi brethren have grown and prospered away from guidelines of the Urllkrisir Mamiss. That in and of itself will not make them happy.

“Lycavorian?” Dytin asked him looking at him quickly.

Aviel's eyes grew slightly wide. “You know of them? Their species?” He asked Dytin surprised. “How?”

Dytin nodded his head. "They are within the Defense Ministry's Database of species to be concerned with."

"What do you mean concerned with?" Aviel asked him.

"Species that are known to be extremely dangerous." Dytin told him calmly. "Species that should be avoided. In military reasoning and words... a species that could very well be our match in any conflict. If my memory serves me correctly... these Lycavorians can shift their forms to that of Kaldaka at will... and they are exceptionally hard to kill. They have some sort of regeneration properties within their body that allow them to survive wounds that would kill most other species. They are also very militant and according to the Elbakiw Sulevfu, they are unpredictable and barbaric."

Aviel shook his head. "The Elbakiw Sulevfu is wrong Dytin." He stated. "Laren has let me see a little of what she sees of them. What she senses of them. They are her Isthasyi and Myvishi of the Iejir. And they are far from militant and barbaric." He stated.

"She can see them within her mind?" Dytin rasped.

Aviel nodded. "You know the skills of a Dahakoan just as I do. They can see each other within themselves. Detect each other from across great distances."

Dytin nodded his head. He looked at Aviel. "Aviel... this is not some kind of joke is it?" He asked quickly. "You are not playing a trick on me? How did these Lycavorians come to have Vrrarhoinpa among them from a Seed Mission? And the way she brushes against him... such familiarity... she acts if they are family."

"They are Dahakoan." Aviel said. "They are family. And so much more. The Lycavorian Daar is father to this Androcles and the other Dahakoan Dorian and he is also bonded to this one's father." He said motioning to the image of Elynth. "He is the largest Vrrarhoinpa I have ever seen in my life Dytin. This Androcles and his father, the Daar of their people... they are Vrelvel Sargti. Their Bonded Ones are Vrelvel Sargti."

"Vrelvel Sargti!" Dytin gasped. "Aviel... there have not been Vrelvel Sargti for centuries now! How..."

Aviel shook his head. "Everything I have told you up to now is the complete truth Dytin. Everything I will tell you going forward is the truth. I was... I was astonished Dytin. Shocked. Filled with disbelief." Aviel looked at the images on the holo emitter. "Until I met Laren. Met Ladur. They are barely more than children in our years Dytin, yet within their eyes and their minds they hold the wisdom of the ages." Aviel looked at him. "And also great power."

Dytin looked at him. "Power? What do you mean? Like the Dahakoan of old?"

Aviel nodded his head. "And far more." He replied. "Do you recall the Pralor Sumar? The very first and most powerful of the Pralor Praetorians?"

Dytin nodded his head. "I met him once here in the capital. He had come for a meeting with the Elbakiw Sulevfu in regards to the Scourge. He came asking for help from us. They refused him stupidly. The Praetorians and the Pralors ended up defeating them in the first war without our help."

Aviel nodded and reached out to switch the image to Androcles and Elynth and he froze it. "I give you one of the descendants of Sumar." He said. "Androcles Leonidas. He, his father, his brothers and sisters, they are all the descendants of Sumar. The how of it I do not know. The best of our knowledge states there is no record of Sumar ever taking a wife. We know his ship was lost with many he had chosen to train to reconstitute the Praetorian ranks after the first war but we never knew where his ship crashed. We thought him long dead. Until now that is. And his descendants wield the power of a Praetorian Dytin. Androcles, his father and three of his brothers. There may even be more of them."

Dytin's yellow tinted eyes were wide now. "Lycavorians with the power of a Praetorian!" He hissed softly. "The Elbakiw Sulevfu and Urlkrisir Mamiss will not like that one bit. The power of a Praetorian in a species as emotional and volatile as the Lycavorians will make them very nervous Aviel."

"The Elbakiw Sulevfu is wrong my friend. They are all wrong. Just as the Pralors were wrong about this species. I do not have an image of his brother Dorian or his Bonded One as I said, but they are also Dahakoan, and they possess the power and skills of a Pralor Praetorian my friend. A power that Laren and Ladur now possess." Aviel said.

Dytin's eyes grew wider still and he gazed at Aviel with open shock. "What?"

"They will bear the blood of their fellow Dahakoan within them." Aviel said trying to quote the scroll verbatim but knowing he didn't get it just right. "And by virtue of that... they will share the same talents and power. I have seen it within Laren and Ladur. Seen them use it in tiny ways at my request. She is very emotional and guarded but she controls it extremely well as does Ladur. She almost killed one of Chalith's students for touching her in a way she thought inappropriate Dytin. In a way Lycavorians would consider inappropriate according to Dalis. There is no doubt in my mind Dytin."

"But the last of the Dahakoan died long before the Praetorians ever came to be!" Dytin spoke.

"Yes... that is what we have always thought. Did they truly die however?" Aviel asked softly. "What if they have lived on within others and guided the Praetorians in some manner."

Dytin looked at their images again and shook his head. "Aviel... do you... do you realize how insane this all sounds!"

Aviel smiled. "Only too well my friend." He answered. "Only too well."

"I want to meet them." Dytin spoke. "Both of them."

Aviel nodded his head again. "I assumed as much. Nahko and Dalis are with them now. They have been for almost two days."

"Dalis?" Dytin asked. "Dalis Sulryn?"

"You know him?" Aviel asked.

"I remember he was the worm who has coveted Nahko for centuries." Dytin hissed. "Why did you get him involved?"

"We needed information on these Lycavorians. He was able to provide it." Aviel told him. "He is at this moment securing a new download from our research probe reservoir. It will have a much more up to date history of these Lycavorians within the Alpha Quadrant. I may not like the man Dytin, but he is one of the most intelligent and thoughtful men I have ever met. And he knows what he is talking about when it comes to these Lycavorians. I need him. We need him."

"We?" Dytin looked at him.

"I have involved you when it was not my intent my old friend." Aviel said. "I will... I will understand if you wish to remove yourself now but..."

"Aviel... we are talking about the fulfillment of our most sacred prophecy and legend!" Dytin nearly shouted.

"A prophecy and legend that many no longer believe in." Aviel stated.

Dytin waved his hand dismissively. "Let them wallow in their foolishness!" He snapped. "Even as boys we believed Aviel... we have never wavered in that belief. Now you come to me and tell me what we always dreamed of as children is in fact coming true right before our very eyes! What do you think I will do!?"

"Dytin... this could very well put your family in danger. That is another reason why I came to you. My children and their families. Nahko and I need them protected. If you go down this road with me... then yours will be in just as much danger." Aviel told him.

"My sons and daughter adhere to the same ideals as It'oru and I do!" Dytin snapped. "As do their wives and families! There are many who still believe Aviel!"

Aviel nodded. "Perhaps... but I am not asking them to risk their very lives."

"Aviel do you know what the UrIkrisir Mamiss will do if they discover she and her Vrrarhoinpa exist? Do you realize what the Scourge will do?" Dytin asked. "The Dahakoan and the Praetorians were the only forces in the known galaxy that ever defeated them in battle! The UrIkrisir Mamiss will cower as they did last time when the Scourge come calling for her!"

Aviel nodded his head. "Only too well Dytin. Only too well." He answered. "That is why I have come to you. I have thought on this for nearly two days now. We have two months to get her off the planet. It's very possible the Scourge already have her name. Her birth is registered and this is the time when the Scourge come to chose their Interns that the UrIkrisir Mamiss allows."

Dytin looked at him keenly. "I do not like the way you say that Aviel." He stated. "That is a government program voted on by the UrIkrisir Mamiss. What do you know that I do not?"

"Something that will make your blood run cold and your anger to come crashing to the front." Aviel told him. "Just as it did with me."

Dytin looked at his friend and then moved to the chair. "Then perhaps you should fill me in." He said.

HIGH COVEN FRIGATE TOLERANCE

“...found it in a small bag.” Onera spoke as she handed the small transmitter to Dorian. “It is High Coven in manufacture... one of the tools used by the Venorik Elghinn. I do not know if they still use them.”

Dorian held the transmitter in his hand and looked at it for a long moment. He glanced up at Onera and Sheva who stood beside each other closely. “Sheva?”

Sheva nodded. “Onera would have more knowledge of this equipment than I based on who her parents are Dori.”

Dorian met Onera’s dark eyes. “You are sure Duan Locarra?” He asked.

Onera nodded her head without hesitation. “Yes. We have several dozen of these exact items on my mother’s ship. They are deactivated of course and she refuses to use them because they are...”

“They are what?” Dorian asked.

Onera focused her eyes on him. “She considers them vile and intrusive.” She answered. “She refuses to return to the ways of her old life Dorian. They are slotted for destruction but they just haven’t got around to it considering everything that has happened.”

Dorian nodded his head. “Who had it?” He asked.

Onera turned her head slightly and looked across the cargo bay where the five families who had been extracted with Cazar and Saba were all gathered and now under guard. “The blond one... third from the left. We discovered it in the bag she left the planet with.”

“It was sewn into a secret compartment on the inside of the bag.” Sheva spoke now. “We do not know if her parents are aware of it. My mother and father say Jitan and Niryn were the first to approach them. Their son is part of the program.”

“Where is he?” Dorian asked.

“Elear.” Sheva answered. “On the First Minister’s staff. My father says their son has been giving false or misleading information for years. He has married an elven female and they have two children.”

“Then why put her brother at risk?” Dorian asked softly.

“We will not know that until we confront her.” Onera answered.

Dorian nodded his head. “Yeah.” He said softly. “Let’s get this over with.” He moved around Sheva and Onera and strode toward where the civilians were.

Onera grabbed Sheva’s hand as she started to follow. “Sheva... what does... what does Duan Locarra mean?” She asked.

Sheva met her eyes and smiled. “Our flower.” She answered.

Onera’s eyes grew a little wider at this revelation. She blinked rapidly several times and looked at the floor quickly. She glanced back up at Sheva. “I... I thought I was hiding it so well.” She said softly.

Almost from the first moment she had seen Dorian, Onera had desired him. The attraction she had was unmistakable and when she had finally met them and seen Sheva that attraction had encompassed her as well. She had fantasized many times about them doing so many wonderful things in bed and the pleasure they could give to each other. Onera was not shy, but she knew Dorian and Sheva were newly married and did not know if they could even feel the same way. He was gorgeous to her, as was Sheva, and both of them could and did cause her to become very aroused just being around them.

Sheva stepped closer to her, pressing her petite form to Onera’s slightly taller but no less lush body. “That is not something you can hide Onera.” She said softly. “We... we might have missed it at first... but not anymore.”

“Sheva I do not wish...” Onera began to speak.

Sheva reached up and placed her index finger to Onera’s succulent lips. “Don’t.” She said. “Don’t deny or fight it. We are not going to. Whatever happens between us, if anything, then it will happen yes? We are still discovering our love for one another Onera... but if that love includes you... we are not going to deny it.”

Onera looked at her with bright dark eyes. “I wish it.” She said. “So very much.”

Sheva took her hand. “Then let’s not fight it and let things progress as they were meant to. Right now we have a mission. We can discover what the three of us feel for each other when we are in a safer environment.”

“Dorian?” She asked softly.

Sheva smiled and let the answer come out of her without hesitation. “Onera... you are... you are delicious looking. To both of us. So very... so very beautiful and sexy. I find myself wanting to taste you over and over and that is something that I have never felt or experienced. My love for Dorian made me leave all my misgivings in the past. You are meant to be with us. Part of our lives and we part of yours. That is not something that we are going to deny, not now, not ever.”

“That... that will make me very happy.” Onera said softly.

Sheva grinned. “Me as well.” She said. “And believe me when I tell you... Dorian has enough stamina for both of us... and there is more than enough of him for both of us.”

Onera blushed even under her exotic skin color. “Truly?” She asked.

Sheva smiled as she took her hand tighter and began to direct them across the cargo bay. “Oh yes... more than enough.” She stated. “And he is so very talented with his tongue.”

Onera’s eyes went a little wider. “His tongue?” She gasped.

Sheva laughed. “Well... he is half wolf you know.” Sheva told her. “And in case you haven’t noticed... none of Andro’s wives go anywhere without very large smiles on their faces. Or the Queens for that matter. It must be part of their animal nature.”

Onera couldn’t help it and she shared Sheva’s soft laughter with anticipation and want. Her mother was right... coming here... being among them... she was discovering many things about herself that she would not have discovered. And Onera was looking forward to every bit of it.

Dorian had the other four families drawn away from Jitan and Niryn as his team moved a little closer, their daughter staring at them with real fear in her eyes. She knew that she had been discovered and she seemed completely terrified.

“What is the meaning of this?” Jitan barked out as he looked at Dorian. He saw Cazar and Saba moved forward now as well. “Cazar... what is going on?”

“I could ask you the same thing my friend.” Cazar replied. “Perhaps you should tell us.”

“What do you mean?” Jitan barked. “Why... why are you treating us this way?”

Dorian held out the transmitter and looked at him. “We found this among your daughter’s possessions sir.” He said respectfully as was his nature. “This is a Venorik Elghinn transmitter. A Venorik Elghinn that has been broadcasting our location to several warships since shortly after we left the colony. Warships that are now waiting at our rendezvous with my brother, including a BLOOD REVERENCE Dreadnought. Perhaps you could fill us in on the details.”

“What do you mean?” Jitan hissed. “I don’t know what you are talking about! I have never seen this before!”

“Your daughter does sir.” Dorian spoke.

Jitan looked at his daughter on his right with wide eyes. “Meyla? What... what is he talking about?”

“I don’t know!” Meyla exclaimed too quickly.

“I would come clean if I was you.” Deion spoke from the side. “If not... we’ll just vent you and your family out the airlock!”

“Meyla!” Niryn shouted. “What are they talking about?”

“He... he said he loved me!” Meyla sobbed openly now. “He...”

“What?” Jitan barked.

“Meyla... are you talking about that officer who came to the colony?” Niryn asked her quickly.

Meyla nodded her head. “He said he loved me!” She exclaimed. “He said I should keep that thing and contact him if anything unusual happened. He said he would protect us! That we would be together!”

Sheva moved forward and squatted in front of her now. She stared at her for a long moment. “You are pregnant aren’t you?” She asked softly.

Meyla looked at her with tear streaked eyes. “He said he would... that we would be together and my family would not be hurt! That my... my brother would be safe! That we would raise our baby together!”

Sheva looked at her. "He lied to you Meyla." She said softly. "He lied to you. The ships that you contacted are waiting at our rendezvous in order to destroy us. All of us. Including you and your family as well as your baby."

Nara and Onera moved up beside Sheva now as Niryn quickly moved to embrace her child. "She is not lying Sheva." Nara spoke first putting her hand on Sheva's shoulder. "Her scent is entirely truthful."

Sheva nodded her head slowly and looked at Dorian quickly. She turned back to her. "What did you tell them Meyla?" She asked softly.

Meyla looked at her from her mother's arms. "That we... that we had gotten off the planet." She stammered. "That we were meeting with... with more Lycavorian people. Very important people. I thought... I thought he would be happy! That he would come for us!"

"Not who?" Dorian asked now.

Meyla shook her head quickly. "I didn't... I didn't know at the time." She said. "I sent only a short... a short burst transmission when we got on board and then left the machine on so they could... so they could find us. Faren told me... he told me I would be saving my family! Our family!"

Sheva watched as she buried her face in her mother's chest as realization of what she had done and the reality of everything hit her. She slowly rose back to her feet and turned to look at Dorian. She watched him look at the Durcunusaan guard who had their weapons out ready to act and motion with his head. Both men lowered their weapons instantly. He turned back to Sheva.

"We can use that Dori?" Sheva said.

Dorian nodded for he was thinking the same thing. "Yes we can."

"She has betrayed all of us!" The male voice barked from behind them where the other families had been moved. "Kill her!"

Dorian turned and saw the vampire man who had tried to proposition Sheva as he moved in front of his family. His mother was trying to pull him back but he yanked his arm free of her grasp.

"They know where we are!" Lanus Harac shouted. "Kill her and destroy the transmitter!"

"Lanus be quiet!" His father hissed angrily.

"I will not be quiet!" Lanus shouted. "She has betrayed us! We are all going to die now because of her!"

"No one is going to die!" Dorian spat. He turned to Nara. "Arande... you and Onera take her to Medical." He spoke. "Make sure the baby is healthy and that she is well cared for. This is not her fault and I have no intention of holding her responsible for the actions of a nubous tukannupae who was only using her from the outset."

Sheva moved up next to Dorian as Nara and Onera helped Niryn get her daughter to her feet so they could do as Dorian wanted. Onera could see the relief on her mother's face and she glanced at Dorian. She was learning so much about him just from his actions. She and her mother would have done the same thing Onera knew. Meyla was the innocent here. She had been used and manipulated from the outset by this vampire officer.

"You can't just let her go!" Lanus screamed again.

Dorian didn't even look at him. "I can... and I will." He stated. "She is the victim in this."

Sheva nodded her head slowly in agreement as Deion moved closer to them. "What's the plan fervon?" Deion asked.

Lanus would not leave it alone and he shook away his mother's hands once more and moved up to Dorian. "You can't just dismiss what she has done!" He screamed. "Her actions will get all of us killed! We can not fight a BLOOD REVERENCE! It will have fighters and soldiers! We..."

Dorian looked at him. "This is not your concern." He stated calmly. "We'll handle this."

"Like you have done so far?" Lanus barked. He looked at Sheva. "I told you Sheva! I told you these half breeds were not smart enough. You are just as stupid to listen to him now when we have ..."

Sheva began to move towards him, her anger flaring but Dorian Leonidas was much quicker and now much angrier.

It was at this very moment where Sheva got a glimpse of the full power of her handsome young husband. He was three hundred plus years her junior yes, but that thought no longer even entered her mind. Dorian had the memories and experiences of three lifetimes within his body and calling him a child was the stupidest thing anyone could have done. Sheva had never seen him angry before, not even a hint of that emotion had ever leaked out in his actions or his words to anyone. She had heard many stories and rumors from among the Durcunusaan of the famous anger that his father and brothers possessed and how they had always kept it very tightly under control. It was the anger of an Alpha wolf unleashed and it was not a pleasant experience for anyone to be the focus of that savage anger.

Sheva witnessed it now for the very first time in her life.

Lanus's words were cut off as Dorian's large hand closed around his throat and lifted him completely off the deck. With combined wolf and vampire blood flowing in his veins, Dorian's raw physical strength was more than a match for anyone except a very well trained pureblood of either species. When coupled with his growing Etheric power as a Praetorian, the combination was very lethal. Now Dorian allowed that anger to flow through him and his multicolored eyes narrowed to slits and were almost glowing as his hand cut off Lanus's words. His large fangs burst from his gums, the dual set of wolf fangs unique to his bloodline giving him a horrifying visage to any who saw them. With a growl of pure hate and anger Dorian lifted Lanus up and slammed him to the unyielding deck in a single, smooth and effortless motion. The sound of his body impacting the deck was very loud in the cargo bay and even Sheva winced at the sound. Dorian dropped to one knee beside Lanus as he rammed him into the deck, his fangs bared and his wolf and vampire eyes so very frightening to look upon. Lanus's groan of intense pain was easily heard and even as his parents moved to try and intercede, Deion was suddenly in front of them and bringing them up short.

Dorian glared at Lanus beneath him, his hand almost crushing the life out of the arrogant pureblood vampire. He felt his power flowing through him, coursing through his blood and feeding off his emotions. What his father had felt when he was rescuing their second Elven mother. Now he felt coursing through him what his brother had felt on that Icalro Alliance planet when he was rescuing Caliria. What his father had felt when he was rescuing their second Elven mother. His Praetorian power fueled by his passion. For a split second Dorian wanted to crush the very life from this man, but his sense of honor and duty held that last chain in place securely. He snarled at Lanus, the very wolf like growl deep and menacing, as he lowered his face closer to the wide eyed Lanus.

"You walk down a road you do not want to be on little man!" Dorian snarled at him. "I have the blood of my father and my mother within my veins, blood purer than any you have flowing in your egotistical body! Wolf blood! Vampire blood! You are a fool in a man's body! And you are a coward!" Dorian pressed his hand tighter and Lanus gagged for air as he tried to pry the vice like grip from around his throat. "If you ever utter another disrespectful word to my wife and mate, they will be the last words you speak in this lifetime! I will rip your tongue from your useless and foul mouth and tear open your belly with my claws. I will watch as you bleed out in front of me and then I will spear your body on a pike and leave it for all to see!"

"Fervon." Deion spoke as he shifted closer to Dorian. Sheva looked at him with wide eyes and was stunned when she did not see worry on his face. She saw only acceptance and agreement for what his brother was doing. Sheva understood at that very moment what she meant to Dorian. What being Dori's wife and mate meant. Dorian had held back his wild and instinctive wolf nature earlier in the Mess Lounge because he knew what Sheva was capable of. He knew that she could handle Lanus with ease. But now Lanus had infringed too much. Now he had insulted her and that was more than Dorian's wolf blood and honor could tolerate. And when combined with the cold and calculating blood of his mother's vampire nature, it made Dorian one of the most dangerous men she had ever been close to.

And he was all hers.

"Do not test me further you sick excuse for a man!" Dorian growled. "You who let your father and mother bear all the risks while you benefit from their actions. From the risks your brother deals with every day of his life! I despise your kind. The lechers among us. Those who let others do the deeds that you feel are beneath you and then complain when they might put you in jeopardy!"

"Fervon... either kill him or let him up." Deion hissed. "We don't have time for this fool!"

"Deion!" Sheva exclaimed in shock.

Deion looked at her evenly. "For his actions towards you earlier he would already be dead if we were anywhere else Sheva. You know that." Deion told her calmly.

Sheva glanced at Dorian and knew Deion was right. She was a Leonidas now and there was nothing more sacred to them than the women they loved. Sheva realized just how very close to death's door Lanus was at this moment. She reached out tentatively and placed her hand on Dorian's shoulder.

“Dori... release him my love.” She said softly even as she felt an odd excitement and arousal at how Dorian was reacting to Lanus’s insult of her. How he was defending her honor.

Dorian didn’t look away from Lanus as Sheva’s touch caused much of the anger within him to dissipate quickly. “Consider yourself lucky scum!” He growled. “But you will remain in your quarters until we are safely back within the Union. If you do not... I might forget that we are trying to save your unthankful ass and tear out your throat!”

Dorian released his throat and Lanus rolled over to gasp desperately for breath as Sheva pulled Dorian up and away from him. “Mark my words igord!” Dorian hissed savagely. “If I ever see your face again I will kill you! And if you ever gaze upon Sheva again with anything but respect in yours eyes I will remove your ability to see for the remainder of your years!”

“Dori. Look at me.” Sheva spoke as she drew him close to her and pressed her lithe frame against his trying to draw his attention. She knew this would work and Dorian instantly looked at her with those beautiful multicolored eyes of his. “We have bigger issues than this fool to deal with my husband.” She stated.

Deion reached down and grabbed Lanus by the back of his collar none to gently. He hauled him sputtering to his feet and pushed him gently towards his parents. “Please take him sir.” He spoke to Lanus father respectfully. “Before his words and actions cause you to lose a son.”

Lanus’s father didn’t hesitate and he roughly grabbed Lanus by his shoulders. He began to drag him away, hissing at him angrily under his breath while his mother was chewing on his other ear. Deion smiled and looked at his brother. Sheva was holding Dorian’s arms and staring into his face while Cazar and Saba looked on with wide eyes.

Cazar had a grin on his face a mile wide and he looked at Deion. “Oh I like your brother Deion Leonidas. I like him a lot!”

“Cazar!” Saba said shoving her husband in his side but doing so with a wide smile of her own.

Deion chuckled and looked back at Dorian. “Can we finish this up quickly?” He said. “I would very much like to meet that young woman we saw in the transmission with Andro before I get too old.”

Dorian tore his eyes from Sheva and looked at his brother with a smile. “I noticed she caught your attention.” He said casually. This caused Sheva to shake her head in disbelief. As quickly as it had come, it was gone, leaving her with the memory of his actions but nothing except love and adoration in her heart and soul.

“Did you see her eyes fervon?” Deion exclaimed. “They were like shining stars in a dark sky! And the color... blue/green. I could immerse myself in those eyes for weeks!”

“Not to mention her other attributes?” Dorian spoke.

“Stop it!” Sheva exclaimed. “Both of you stop it! We have work to do!” Dorian leaned over quickly and nuzzled her cheek and the side of her ear causing Sheva to close her eyes in obvious delight. “Dori... stop it!” She gasped in delight.

Dorian slipped his arm around her waist and looked at Deion. “We must get this info to Yuri and Andro.” He said. “If I know our brother he will be planning something totally off the wall and unexpected.”

Deion nodded his head. “No bet here.” He stated. “He is probably planning for us to assault the dreadnought and take it over.”

Dorian chuckled as he pulled Sheva close to him and they began to leave the cargo bay.

Saba looked at her husband. “I do not want to leave her again Cazar.” She said softly. “Not now. Not after seeing what she has found.”

Cazar met his wife’s eyes. “I don’t think we will have to my wife.” He said. “If I had to guess... Dorian won’t allow us to. Come... let us see if there is anything we can do.”

CHAPTER THIRTY-TWO

SPARTA'S WRATH

FORTY-TWO MINUTES UNTIL RENDEZVOUS

QCR ROOM

“Armen built this?” Murano asked as he turned the device over in his hands for the third time.

Andro nodded his head. “He finished it two hours ago. Well... the Drones finished it. A lot sooner than he had expected, but with the Drones helping it went a lot quicker than he had projected.”

“Your father did not tell me that this was the problem you would be facing Androcles.” Murano said softly as he set the instrument down on the table. “He told me about this Yuri and what took place with your sister. I knew Xaxon’s essence was involved but I did not...”

Andro nodded before Murano continued. “To be honest... I don’t think he ever thought we would be as close as we are... this soon. It seems almost too easy really... but things have been going Moran’s way for a while now. Maybe it’s our turn. And I for certain can’t leave him behind with both my father and I gone. Those of my brothers who remain would act in a certain way. He might be able to take advantage of that. We can’t allow it.” Andro answered as he moved to the counter of his Ready Room and poured two mugs of his mother’s coffee.

His Ready Room was massive; fully one third the size of his quarters, and it was situated directly off the port side of the bridge. He had complained at first of the size until Armen told him he had intentionally made it this large based on Andro’s propensity for working very long hours and having a shift of his own on the SCIMITAR. There was a small QCR room off one side of the Ready Room and the main room with conference table that could seat a dozen men and women. His actual office was not very large, but he would not lack for anything. He turned back to Murano and held out the coffee mug.

“What do you mean?” Murano asked him as he took the mug. “A certain way.”

Andro met his eyes. “I know it is not the way of your Praetorians sir... but with both Dorian and Deion with me... the possibility of Moran surviving an encounter and living rises quite a bit.”

“I don’t understand.” Murano said.

“My brothers Resumar and Arrarn are formidable warriors Murano, don’t get me wrong. They are very skilled and exceptionally well trained and I would not hesitate to go into battle with either of them at my side. I have before and I will again.” Andro told him. “But for lack of a better way to explain it... they both lack the killer instinct of a pureblood wolf. They are half elf, and their elf blood will always play a role in the decisions they make. Besides... Resumar has his hands full helping Pian and Jalersi and needs to remain focused there. Pian’s people have grown to trust and accept him. Arrarn... when push comes to shove... Arrarn will protect Narice and Toria above all else. Dealing with Moran, Dante and Xaxon is not something they need to be concerned with.”

“Dorian is not a pureblood wolf.” Murano said.

Andro shook his head in agreement. “No... but he is a combination of pureblood wolf and pureblood vampire. He has the killer instinct from both sides of his blood. He may lack the raw power and experience of a pureblood from either species but he is more than a match for anyone of either species with his combined blood and Praetorian power.”

“Your intent is to kill them then?” Murano said softly. “This Moran and his son Dante. The one Xaxon infects with his essence.”

Andro didn’t blink. “Moran I am going to give to Yuri and Pa’cour.” He said honestly. “They have more right to judge him than any of us. He has caused Yuri far more pain and humiliation in her life than anyone should endure.”

“And Dante?” Murano asked again.

“Dante Moran... he belongs to me.” Andro told him plainly. “I’m going to inflict upon him every moment of pain and agony he made my sister suffer Murano. No matter how small. Then I am going to take his life. When I do... Xaxon will appear just as he did when he left Yuri’s body. He will not find so willing or unprepared a host this time however.”

“His power is nothing to dismiss Androcles.” Murano warned him quickly. “He may not have been an equal to your grandfather Sumar in terms of raw power and skill... but he was far more devious and cruel.”

Andro nodded his head in recognition of his words. “I am not dismissing his power. That is why I am glad you are going to be here.” He said. “That is why I am showing you this. You know more about him than anyone living and that knowledge will be needed.”

“If he has been doing this for so long... influencing and controlling members of Yuri’s family as he has been, then there has to be a reason. I never did anything unless it could benefit him.” Murano said. He was quiet for a long moment and then looked at Andro. "I did not agree with his punishment. He was far too dangerous in my opinion. For what he had done he should have been executed and left to rot. Sumar... he was Sumar's brother and no matter what he had done I believe Sumar still loved him in some way."

"They were brothers. Twins." Andro said softly. "I know the bond twins have. I see it with Deion and Nara and Calyb and Retta. That bond is not easily dismissed. One only has to look at my father and uncle. No matter what he has done, Pusintin is still my father's brother. I will not allow him to stain his own honor to do what he knows he must do."

Murano looked at him. "What do you mean?"

"I have taken steps to insure that my father will not lower himself to the level of having to take the life of his brother." Andro said. "I will not have him carry that the rest of his life." Andro waved his hand slightly. "It is already in motion and not something that concerns us right now. When we confront Moran and Dante, Xaxon will be our concern."

Murano looked back at the device on the desk. "We never thought to make such a thing." He said softly.

"It was never our intent to not tell you sir." Andro told him. "I did not know you would be staying or that this would be happening while you and Lady Mari were here."

Murano hissed softly in disgust and waved his hand dismissively. "You will stop with the formalities Androcles. We are Praetorians. We do not refer to each other with such formality. It was never our way and I am happy to see that your father continues this." He looked at Andro intently as he sipped from the mug. "We are brothers and sisters in arms." He spoke again as he lowered the mug. Even he, someone who had never had this liquid known as coffee before, had grown very fond of Aricia's blend over the last days and weeks. The liquid was rich and smooth and when served hot or cold, it was one of the finest things he had ever tasted. Kesyla and Mari had both sworn their love for it and gotten him to begin drinking it. "We are comrades and friends. And in some cases even family. You and your father and brothers may be a new breed of Praetorians, but you have not changed that sacred bond we all have."

Andro moved to his chair and motioned for Murano to sit. "You seemed to have given this a lot of thought." He said.

Murano settled into the chair but shook his head. "Not initially no." He said. "I was... I wanted the old Praetorians back when I first sensed your father was such. I wanted it to be the way it was all those years ago. Helen... once she dressed me down in front of others I began to see so much differently. With Mari and Kesyla so enraptured by your people, and after seeing what your uncle showed me about your father, I could not help but realize that things are not like they were. That times are different now."

"You know my Uncle Daniel has taken Kesyla as his wife and mate?" Andro asked.

Murano nodded his head in agreement. "I suspected as much. The signs were there. She was quite taken by him before your aunts arrived and once they did it grew even more. More so than I have ever seen her taken by anyone and there have been many young men who have tried to sway her favor through the years. The emotion and feeling was returned quite openly on their part for her as well."

"What did my uncle Daniel show you?" Andro asked him.

Murano shifted in the chair slightly to get more comfortable. "He showed me a different side to your father. One that I do not believe many people see."

Andro smiled then. "Uncle Daniel showed you him alone with my mothers... didn't he?" He asked.

Murano nodded. "I have never seen anything like it." Murano told him honestly. "Even as far away as we were to keep him from smelling us, the peace that surrounded your father was unlike anything I have ever seen. He was... he was dotting over your mothers like they were precious charms... and his Etheric resonance was wrapped around them like a thick blanket. I imagine if I was wolf I would have sensed his wolf aura wrapped around them as well. They are... your father and mothers are interwoven in as intricate a tapestry as I have ever felt."

"My mothers are his source of strength and calm." Androcles told him. "Each of them hold a piece of his heart and soul within their grasp. Many do not understand it... some have tried to change that... much to their painful demise."

Murano looked at Andro. "As I sense that Sadi and Ne'Veha and your other wives and mates do the same with you." He said.

Andro smiled and nodded. "Yes."

“I believe Sumar knew exactly what he was doing when he made the decisions he did concerning your people. He saw something within the Lycavorians that no one else ever did. He saw something within your hearts and souls and culture that he embraced and made his own. It was something we as a people never stopped to try and discover.” Murano told him softly. “I believe he showed it to Wayonn and the others aboard his ship and that is why they chose the path they did. It is difficult at times, but I will no longer view events through eyes that are forty-thousand years old. I will have faith in what my friend Sumar did and I will alter my own perceptions and begin to see and experience things as they are. As I do this I will begin to understand what he did and why. I have already seen some of it with your father and mothers and the people surrounding them. In time I will understand all of it.”

“We are not that complex a people Murano.” Andro spoke. “I guarantee most of us would much rather sit at home and worship our wives and mates and play with our children. Work at normal jobs and live in peace. There are forces in the universe that will not allow us that. So we fight. We fight in the hope that our children do not have to. Because of the Spartan culture and blood within most of us, it just so happens that we are very good at it. It is a profession to those of us who serve, one we take seriously and dedicate ourselves to, but a profession nonetheless. We have other skills, education and trades, but fighting is all most of us have ever known. And we take it seriously. Many others form their perceptions of us based on that one skill.”

Murano nodded. “So I have noticed.” He said. “That is why many view your species as militant and...”

“Barbaric?” Andro said with a smile.

Murano nodded again. “It is not the mentality that anyone who spends any time among you will have Androcles. At least those with half a brain.”

Andro chuckled. “Good. Because I have some questions for you.” Andro said. “Questions that I think only you can answer.”

Murano nodded. “My knowledge is your knowledge.” He said. “Just as I told your father. It is what Praetorians do.”

“There is a ship coming to rendezvous with us.” Andro told him. “I had Armen dispatch one of our corvettes yesterday evening. It is going to my father’s location and returning with a passenger. A very different passenger.”

“I’m not following.” Murano said.

Andro leaned forward and set his coffee on the desk. “Tell me what you know of the species called the Darastrixi.”

Andro saw Murano’s eyes narrow and flash with anger which he quickly got back under control.

“Where did you hear that name?” He asked. “How do you know about them?”

“I don’t know about them.” Andro answered. “That is why I am asking you. My father was able to tell me a little of what you shared with him in regards to them. When he asked for me to send the ship he was very vague in details about why. My father is never vague with me about something unless he does not understand it, or he does not trust it. This is not something he does not trust or he would have warned me which means he does not fully understand what is happening. I want to hear from you.”

Murano shook his head. “My answers would be partly biased Androcles.” He said. “I do not know if I can be objective.”

“Indulge me.” Andro said.

Murano looked at him evenly. “The Darastrixi are... they are the origin species that all dragons descend from. Even those among your people.”

“So they do have a homeworld?” Andro asked softly. “I have always wondered about that. Where they came from? How they came to be among us?”

Murano nodded as he settled into the chair more comfortably. “Their planet is on the far side of what was once Pralor space. A massive planet really... easily three or five times the size of your world Earth. Trillions of people. They were scientists and researchers like the Pralor people for the most part. Peaceful and accepting, though rigid in their culture and traditions and much of what they believed. We were friends with them dating back as many years as I can remember. They allowed us to use what they call the Vrrarhoinpa breed of dragons, like those among your people, as part of two different Seed Missions many thousands of years ago. The second breed, or type if you will, are the Jiilhoinpa. Those who walk upright like us. Those who look like us. How the Vrrarhoinpa came to be among your people I do not know. I imagine only Arzoal knows the entire story... and she will not share.”

Andro nodded in agreement. “My father and I know some of it but I also believe even the Elder Mother does not know everything. However... you are correct in that we guard their history viciously.”

“Yes... I have noticed this.” Murano said. “Those Vrrarhoinpa with us we discovered as we were fleeing the Scourge at the end of the war with any survivors we could gather. I believe Arzoal knew where to send Teniri, at least in the general area, because she was once Pralor and she would have been privy to such information as a senior member of the Science Convention. That is how the others of Arzoal’s Seed Mission were able to return to us on Artaaya. Their ship was able to home in on the many Pralor power signatures of those ships with us and finally return to us. When they arrived on Artaaya Teniri was made Elder Mother by those Darastrixi among the Pralor people for most of their Elders had been killed during our escape.”

“The tone of your voice tells me that you don’t hold the Darastrixi species in very high regard.” Androcles said.

Murano shook his head. “I know... and it should not be that way. Not completely.” He said. “At the end of the Second Scourge War, when we knew all was lost, the Scourge went to the Darastrixi leaders on their world and gave them an ultimatum. They had already destroyed our homeworld and were essentially just mopping up the last pockets of my people who had not escaped with us. They told the Darastrixi to hand over every Pralor they were hiding or when they finished with us, they would come for them. We knew many of our people had escaped to the Darastrixi homeworld to hide and the Darastrixi diligently hid them and protected them for centuries. For many thousands of our refugees.”

“I can only assume from your reaction that the Darastrixi leaders accepted this so called ultimatum?” Andro asked.

Murano nodded sadly. “Almost fifteen million Pralor civilians were on the Darastrixi homeworld by the time the demand was delivered. They had taken refuge there. Thousands of families. The Darastrixi would never turn them away. When the Scourge made their ultimatum it was not pleasant from what I understand. This directive caused many of the Darastrixi people to rebel and fight back against their leaders. Thousands of Darastrixi deaths were the result. We had forged many valued friendships with the Darastrixi as I said. Many of them died fighting to protect those Pralors on their world. It took nearly five hundred years to complete, but in the end the Scourge got what they wanted, even against the will of their people.”

“Did no one voice their outrage at this?” Andro asked.

“The Darastrixi people are very grounded in the belief that their leaders are always right.” Murano told him. “Our history with them dates back many hundreds of thousands of years as I said, but it has always been like that. We never understood it, we considered it unhealthy, but we accepted it. The only ones who openly opposed the Scourge demands were among those they called the Doraanar. Their religious elders or prophets, however you wish to refer to them. In order to silence them, the Scourge demanded that all Doraanar be seized and handed over to them as well. From what I understand many followed this order blindly, but many others did not. They were all butchered by the Scourge eventually.”

“Why?” Andro asked him. “What possible threat to the Scourge were religious men and women?”

Murano shook his head. “I do not know.” He answered. “Perhaps they feared the extent of knowledge the Doraanar had. Perhaps they felt the Doraanar would one day oppose them. The Scourge have never been predictable and it became worse when Xaxon’s Mage took her place as their Queen after he betrayed and conducted his vile experiments on her.”

Andro sat back in his chair and was silent for a long moment. “Well... they didn’t kill all of them.” He told him finally. “The passenger my father is sending is a female Darastrixi.” He said seeing Murano’s eyes go wide. “She is the Ancient One that the dragons among the Pralor people have protected for millennia.”

“She is... she is Darastrixi?” Murano almost yelled.

Andro nodded. “My father was not able to tell me a lot. I don’t think he knew a whole lot to be honest, which goes back to his vague request as I told you. But she referred to herself as Doraanar.”

Murano came to his feet. “She is a Doraanar!” He gasped in disbelief. “She is coming here? Why?”

Andro shook his head. “My father said... he said I would discover it when she arrived. But what he did know was that it has to do with the dreams I have had my entire life.”

Murano returned to his chair quickly. “Dreams? What dreams?”

“Ever since I was a small boy.” Andro told him. “I think they first came when I was only four. Elynth has had them too. Both of us.”

“Your father... he tried to describe to me the extent of your bond with Elynth.” Murano said. “It seems much deeper than the one he shares with Torma or your mother with Isheeni. Deeper than any I have seen so far among your people.”

Andro nodded his head. “We have never been able to figure it out either.” He said. “And believe me... we have tried.” Andro sipped his coffee. “Elynth and I... it is almost as if we are each other. If her scales itch, my skin itches. We see with each other’s eyes. We... we have learned through the years how to use this to our advantage, but we have never been able to understand it. The dreams continued on and off our entire lives until the nightmares of Alba Tau chased them away. They returned when Dorian was born however. Now that they have returned they are much more powerful and focused. And Dorian and Ryner are having the same dreams now as well.”

“Dorian is a Praetorian.” Murano said. “There is no doubt even with his duel blood. It could be a residual resonance from having you so close by.”

“You know... you know that I was fully aware while my mother still carried me in her womb? That I bonded with Elynth before I ever left that womb.” Andro asked him.

Murano nodded his head. “Yes.” He answered. “Your father told me.”

“What most don’t know is that we were bound together before she even hatched from her egg Murano.” Andro told him softly.

Murano looked at him with wide eyes. “Does your father know that you and Elynth were bonded before she even hatched? They believe... they believe this happened only after she joined this life.”

Andro shook his head. “We... we made the decision to never tell anyone. Sadi and my mates know now... and Elynth’s mate Anthar... but no one else. My father may suspect now, perhaps the Feravomir and the Elder Mother... but we have never confirmed it for anyone.”

Murano looked at him intently. “You honor me with this trust Androcles.” He said softly.

“We have always tried to discover the meaning and reason for this.” Andro said. “We have not succeeded and we no longer care.”

“I will tell you what I told your father. There is only one other instance in all my years where I have ever heard of this happening. A child becoming aware while in the womb of his mother.” Murano spoke.

“With my grandfather Sumar.” Androcles said softly.

Murano nodded his head. “Yes.” He said. “This did not occur with Xaxon and I believe this is one of the reason he hated his brother. Many of us attributed this information to the reason why Sumar was the most powerful among us. Why he could do things we could not.”

“Could there be another reason?” Andro asked.

“Another reason why he was like this?” Murano asked him. “I do not know. Like you... Sumar gave up trying to understand it after a time.”

Andro met his eyes now. “Dorian became fully aware while still in my mother Isabella’s womb Murano. And he bonded with Ryner before he was born. Just as I did with Elynth. Ryner was older than Dorian unlike Elynth and I... but they bonded before Dori was born, right in front of my mothers and Arzoal.”

“Your... your father did not tell me this.” Murano said softly looking at him with his blue eyes.

Andro chuckled softly and then sipped his coffee before he continued. “Well... it’s not exactly something we broadcast to all those that know us. We can not explain it and how are we suppose to enlighten others when we cannot explain it to ourselves. We did not want others to think of me or Elynth as... as oddities to be concerned with. The same applies to Dori now as well... and very few outside of our family know the truth.”

“And again you and your father have trusted me with this knowledge.” Murano said with much respect.

“We are hoping you could help us determine what it all means.” Andro said.

“Such things are beyond me Androcles.” He said honestly. “As I said... even Sumar did not understand it.”

“Then perhaps you could tell me who or what a Dahakoan is?” Andro asked.

Murano looked at him with wide eyes once more. “Dahakoan?” He gasped. “Where... where did you hear that word?”

“It’s been in our dreams.” Andro answered. “Until recently we have never been able to hear it clearly. Now we can... and somehow we know what it means. And we understand the language it is spoken in.”

“It means Dragonkin.” Murano said with a nod. “It is the Darastrixi language.”

“I assumed as much. What is a Dahakoan?” Andro asked.

Murano shook his head slowly. “I only know the meaning of a few words of their spoken language. Much like the Lycavorian language it is not easy to learn. I do not know much about the Dahakoan, only that they were an order of Darastrixi warriors much like the Durcunusaan are to your people. The elite of the elite. The very finest that the Darastrixi people could field. They were never defeated in battle. Any battle. At least that is what I have been told.” Murano shook his head. “To the best of my knowledge the last of them died out well over a million years ago. They are revered among the Darastrixi people though... much like my people placed the Praetorians on a pedestal.”

“That’s all you know?” Andro asked.

Murano looked at him. “I’m afraid so.” He answered. “I tried to avoid the Darastrixi for the most part. I always thought in many ways they suffered from the same arrogance as my people.”

Andro nodded his head. “Technology does that.” He said.

Murano looked at him. “It has not changed your people.” He said. “You still cling very tightly to the roots of your past and history, even with all the technology and knowledge you have gained from City Ship 41. All of your people no matter the species. Your bladed weapons for instance. There are very few species that I know of that still use bladed weapons and none of them can come close to matching the skill I have seen among your people. Many of your people could easily defeat men armed with energy based weapons and do so with just your Nehtes and bladed weapons. Many of your laws also require you to remain grounded in the history and lessons of where you came from.”

“There are those among us who do not adhere so closely to the laws we have.” Andro said. “Many still believe in the old ways. The Caste system among wolves. The old mating laws that we have done away with. They wear their arrogance on their sleeves like fools and refuse to understand that change is a part of the evolution of all species.”

“There are those types among every species. No matter how advanced.” Murano told him.

“True enough.” Andro said. He looked at Murano. “Dorian and I want to find out what these dreams mean. What the words we hear in these dreams mean. Something or someone is reaching out to us from across the stars, that much we do know. We have decided to try and initiate a communication link. We are going to include Sadi and my other mates, Sheva as well. Our wives and mates are our calm and strength and we hope their additional power allows us to make contact.”

Murano nodded his head. “Sadi is equal to Mari in her Etheric resonance. Using the Pralor method of measuring Etheric power I sense she is very close to Category Twenty. Much like your mother Aricia. I sense this from Carisia as well. Ne’Veha, Lu’ria and Sehri are not far behind them, and neither are your mothers. Mari has more focus and control, more than...” Murano stopped for a second as he contemplated what he was going to say. “More than she should really. Especially at her young age.”

Andro tilted his head as he looked at him. “Something?” He asked.

Murano looked at him. “Nothing... nothing important. I was just thinking how Mari’s resonance is very similar to someone I once knew. Clear, focused and controlled. And she shields even better than many Praetorians I once knew.”

Andro sipped his coffee. “This resonance... someone you knew well?” He asked.

Murano nodded his head. “Yes. Someone that... someone that I should never have turned away from.”

“Turned away from?” Andro asked. “A woman?”

Murano nodded again slowly. “I... I loved her intensely. I still do to be honest. And I will never seek to take another woman into my life. Tobia... Tobia occupies all of that space inside me. I... I turned away from her because I thought I was protecting her. I was still distraught over what had occurred at the end of the war. My perceived failures. When I met her some three decades ago she made me forget for a time. But as with this place Alba Tau for you, the horrible nightmares always returned. I pushed her away. I did not want to burden her with my faults. I heard she... I heard she became involved with someone else later and that they have a child together. A daughter. Tobia is... she is a very powerful Etheric user and one who can shield almost better than we Praetorians were able. Mari told me she was receiving help from her in this regard and that is why she shields her Etheric resonance so well.”

Andro cocked his head to the side but remained silent as his suspicions were confirmed. “Have you never tried to contact her?” Andro asked finally.

Murano chuckled softly and shook his head sadly. “I doubt she would even talk to me now. When I left I did not... I did not give her a reason she could understand. Only that it had to be that way. She was very angry with me and that anger probably still exists. I can sense her teachings within Mari though. My brother was wise to send her to Tobia for schooling as his youngest daughter. He has always given his children every opportunity to improve. Only Daron never truly took it. Mari is... she is incredibly perceptive and far smarter than I.”

“And you never tried to make amends?” Andro asked.

Murano shook his head. “It is not important right now.” He said taking a deep breath. “As I was saying... you and your father have reached Category Twenty-one. The only ones since Sumar to have ever obtained such a level. Others might debate that in regards to you, but they have not seen what I have seen or what I sense within you. The Scholars tend to err on the side of what they can actually measure where I go with my instincts. Your mother Aricia, Sadi and Mari, they are Category Twenty easily. Your other wives and mates and your mothers are certainly Category Nineteen. Your mother Anja and Carisia seem to be the closest to reaching Category Twenty from what I have been able to sense from them.” Murano looked at him. “You are able to sense the resonance of this person even now when you are awake? The one you feel within your dreams?”

Andro nodded his head. “Not as strongly as when we are sleeping but yes.” He replied. “Since we can not link everyone when we are sleeping we will try to do it when we are awake. It was Lu'ria's suggestion really.”

Murano nodded in agreement. “Joining together is an excellent idea... it will allow you, Dorian, Elynth and Ryner to focus on this resonance and draw from the skill of your wives and mates just as they do from you.”

“I would like you and Deion present as well.” Andro said. “Nara and Mari too... if she is willing. At least monitoring us from the next room.”

“Why me?” Murano asked.

“Insurance.” Andro stated. “We don't know what we will encounter and having two other Praetorians, especially one with your experience and skill, and a Praetorian Mage backing us up as we trace this resonance back to its origin might be handy. And if Lady Mari is as strong as you say it couldn't hurt. Communicating within the Etheric realm in such a way is still new to us Murano. Well... newer to us than it is to your people.”

Murano nodded. “I see your point.” He said nodding. “If that is what you wish... I would be happy to help you. I would be very interested to know what a Darastrix Doraamar has to say to you.”

Andro sat forward. “Well... we will cross that bridge when we come to it.” He said. “Now we have to worry about the here and now.”

Murano looked at him. “Your sister Lisisa brought up a valid point Androcles. Just how do you intend to take over a ship of the size you say this one is and do so with so few men and women?”

Andro looked at him and smiled. “Capturing a BLOOD REVERENCE-Class Dreadnought has always been one of my father's little projects. He came up with and devised half a dozen plans for doing it until he settled on one that he really liked.”

Murano looked surprised. “I have seen your father in action Andro.” He said. “He is a devastating force on the battlefield but he seems very straightforward in most ways.”

Andro sat back and laughed at that as he rose to his feet. “My father? Straightforward?” He motioned with his hand for Murano to follow him. “Let me show you how out of the box and utterly insane my father thinks Murano.”

“...Father came up with this Carina?” Lisisa asked as she leaned over the massive plot board with Jomann and the others.

Carina Leonidas was included in the transmission that was active on the side of the room. She was standing beside a matching plot board on Apo Prime. Carina nodded her head and smiled, her face animated and her eyes bright. “Pretty cool isn’t it arande?” She asked.

“Cool?” Lisisa stated. “Carina... this is so awesome!”

“Our mothers always told us father was very inventive.” Carina said with a smile. “And not just between the sheets.”

Lisisa and Eliani laughed at that and Eli looked at Jomann’s confused face. She bumped her hip against his upper leg gently. “It’s a girl thing.” She told him when he looked down at her.

Jomann smiled. “Ah... ok.” He said. “I think.”

Cowen Shan stood beside Jomann directly across from Lisisa. “We have... no one ever thought to conduct such a mission like this among my people.” He said shaking his head. “We always determined it would be impossible to assault a BLOOD REVERENCE Dreadnaught while it was out of space dock.”

Jomann smiled at that statement. “Welcome to the world of impossible things happening Cowen my friend.” He said. “I truly do not think the word impossible exists in the Leonidas vocabulary.”

The other members of Andro’s team all stood around the plot board and were studying different aspects of the overall plan, each of them with their own thoughts. They knew Andro would be joining them shortly and they would bring them up then, but for the most part, no one had an issue with doing the mission after looking at the plan his father had devised. They turned when the door to the secure room opened and Andro walked in with Murano beside him. Lisisa stood up straight and looked at him.

“Andro... how long has father been working on this?” Lisisa asked incredulous.

Andro grinned as he came up next to her. “Pretty off the wall huh?”

“Nubous insane!” Jomann commented from Andro’s left as he made room for Murano to slide in beside him. “Which is why it will work!”

Andro looked at Murano and motioned with his hand around the table. “My father told me not so long ago that I needed to form my own team. So I went out and gathered the most unlikely group I could. Murano... I give you my personal team.” He said. “You know Jomann and my rather excitable sister Eliani. She takes after our mother Anja and what she lacks in size she makes up for in attitude.”

“Piss off!” Eliani barked at him from next to Jomann and Murano couldn’t help but almost break out in loud laughter.

“See what I mean.” Andro said as the others laughed aloud. “Next to Eli is Ridor Lethon, former Durcunusaan and one of a handful of men who have actually been to the Kavalian homeworld for a visit. He was a member of the Durcunusaan unit that rescued several dozen young women from right underneath their noses.” Andro spoke.

Ridor bowed his head slightly. “I was only doing what was asked of me.” He spoke.

Cowen Shan chuckled now and looked at Ridor. “What was asked of you?” He said. “An operation that almost caused the Prefect to have a massive stroke because he was so angry from what I understand.” He spoke. “Just to see the expression on his face would have been worth the operation.”

Cowen Shan was becoming more and more at home among these men and women as each hour passed. He found that the Lycavorian and vampire people he had grown up hearing about did not exist in any way. These men and women, they valued honor and tradition above all else. As his father had taught him and his brothers, against the teachings of Kavalian leaders, that women should be considered equals in everything, treated with honor and respect since they bore the future of their family and species. Being here among these men and women he had met many Lycavorian, vampire and even elven females that would be more than a match for even the most seasoned Puma Bane warrior. Yet even as they were regarded as equals they were also worshiped and cherished as wives and mates. Androcles reaching him as he had within Mindvoice had been the catalyst for Cowen. He had discovered where he could do his Pride and his people the most good, and that was right here fighting beside those who held the same values and honor that his father had instilled in him. Sherice was working with him every day to hone his Mindvoice skills and while it wasn’t easy, he never stopped trying to learn. Of course, the half elf and half Lycavorian Sherice was the most stunning woman he had ever met in his life. Not only was she the most delicious looking female of any species he had ever seen, she was incredibly smart. He didn't doubt she could probably kick his ass if it came to it. He also felt something else when she was nearby, something he had never felt for any woman.

"Ridor has since taken one of those young women as his wife and mate and she will be assisting Eli in the Medical Bay." Andro said. "You already know Lisisa, Denali's wife and mate and our sister."

Murano looked at Lisisa. "One day you will have to explain how that came to be if you don't mind." He said.

Lisisa grinned. "Makes you crazy thinking about it huh?" She asked.

Murano nodded. "Something like that."

"It's a long and not entirely happy story." Lisisa told him. "At least not truly happy until Deni came into my life. Perhaps one day."

"The man next to Ridor is Torian Cedaria." Andro said easily. "He is one of the foremost instructors of Union Recon and Scouts. He trained most of his life with the Drow. His father was among the first of our people to begin using a second name shortly after my father returned to claim the throne. He handles most of the light weapons and all the very nasty and special little goodies that we will be using."

Torian Cedaria bowed his head to Murano. "An honor sir." He spoke.

Torian Cedaria was a year older than Androcles and knew from the outset why he had been chosen for this position. He was not a stupid man and almost immediately after arriving he knew what was happening. Androcles was completely honest with him about why he had been chosen, but he also expressed great confidence that Torian could more than hold his own and that his skills would prove valuable to them. Andro had gone to great lengths to insure Torian knew that his honor and trust was never in question. He had been enraged at first about what had been going on and how the information he had talked of with someone he considered friend had been used against his Prince and the Royal family, but after speaking with Andro at length, Torian had come to the same conclusion. Ulana was into something that was far beyond her ability to see or understand and she was simply a pawn. Torian had been in love with her from the very first time he had seen her and now he would have the opportunity to pursue that as well as protect her. He had been assigned as her personal guard whenever they were off the ship, and while she hadn't liked that, she had to accept it. It also allowed Torian to insure that nothing she did put any of them in danger. He may have come from a family of Beta wolves, but they were just as deeply rooted in tradition and culture as any Alpha family and had served loyally for more centuries that Torian could recall. He would insure that did not change.

Since that first day Torian had take advantage of his new role to prove even Beta Wolves could be among the finest soldiers in the Union. Given Ulana's status and the position of her father he knew he would never have an opportunity to prove that he was just as worthy of her love as Androcles had been if not for this chance. He also knew just how arrogant and uppity her status had made her, though this had not changed his feelings. Torian also knew something had happened in the last weeks that changed Ulana. He suspected it had something to do with the confrontation she had had with Princess Sadi, and it had made Ulana far less prone to outbursts of arrogance and even more thoughtful in the way she spoke to people now. Torian was going to insure that he did his duty and got what he wanted. And what he wanted was Ulana.

"Torian has an advanced degree in chemical engineering..." Andro continued with some pride in his voice that Torian took note of right away. "Combined with the skills he learned from the Drow and then continued to improve upon, he has the uncanny ability to transform the ammunition for our weapons into extremely deadly projectiles."

"Which reminds me..." Eliani spoke now looking at him. "I need the chemical formula for that last batch of ammo you made up Torian. I have to formulate the counteragent."

Torian nodded. "I'll have it to you today."

Andro looked at Cowen. "Cowen'Shan is one of our heavy weapons specialists. He took his father's honored place as the leader of his Pride when his father was killed by Keleru's secret police forces. He has led them with principle and was among the first to join Pian's rebellion. I asked him to join my team and he accepted. My sister Normya and her Blessed Husband Tir'ut, as well as Daio and his wife Kameka you will meet soon. They are prepping the ships with Sadi and Ne'Veha."

Murano nodded to Cowen and then looked at Andro. "You have gathered quite the... diverse group of men and women Andro." He said.

Eliani laughed. "Just call us the Oddball Bunch." She said.

Andro smiled and nodded his head. "I have to keep up appearances since my father's team isn't exactly a normal group either."

Murano nodded. "True enough." He said.

Andro stepped close to the table and looked at everyone. "Ok... I assume everyone has had an opportunity to review the plan. Carina helped father to put the finishing touches on it, but this is his baby. Sadi and Ne'Veha are prepping the PREMONITION with Meka while Daio is seeing to the weapons lockers and the canisters. We'll be six short until we link up with Dorian and Deion but they should be reviewing this same plan and with Normya flying their STRIKER they will hit from point Bravo. Thoughts?"

Lisisa looked up from the board. "Is using Carisia and Yuri as bait really needed Andro?" She asked.

"They won't be bait. Not anymore." He answered quickly. "Pa'cour will have a full detachment of their Immortals with them when we hit."

"You think he will be waiting for them?" Jomann asked.

Andro nodded his head. "Oh yes." He said. "I spoke with Marci twenty minutes ago. Just before Murano joined me in my Ready Room. She has confirmed from the Control Agents that Moran always took the reports from them personally. She was also able to confirmed that Moran's ship never made the rendezvous to get the reports from their agents on Earth and Apo Prime this time. Which means he has to know by now that the program is compromised. Once we have this ship we'll leak that it was Yuri who led the extraction from the colony. He won't pass that up, especially when he thinks Carisia will be with her."

"And when he contacts the ship to find out what their status is after taking Dori's frigate, we'll be in command of it." Jomann said.

Andro nodded once more. "More or less... yes."

Lisisa looked at him. "He'll come for them himself you know." She said.

"That is what I am betting on." Andro said. "With his ship and perhaps a few escorts. He won't bring a large force because he knows Admiral Pontal and grandfather will detect it. No... he'll come with a small force."

"And when he contacts us... we trace his COM signal right back to where his main force is." Ridor spoke. "And then we give those coordinates to Pontal and Riall and let them destroy his ships."

Andro nodded. "And we deal with Moran and Dante."

Eliani looked at Murano. "Will he be able to do to us what he did to father?" She asked him.

Murano met her eyes and shook his head. "No. He was only able to do that to your father because of your father's emotions at the time and the Praetorian gene within him. The only ones at risk of this now are your brothers and I."

"That doesn't really reassure me Murano." Eliani said. "Dante is a piss ant compared to my father or Andro. To Dorian and Deion as well. We don't need him taking control of one of them. The results would not be pretty in the least."

Murano nodded. "It is a risk for us yes... but if what Yuri has told us is accurate, than he will undoubtedly be focusing his will on breaking this boy Dante. He will not have the strength in an Etheric sense to attempt to control one of us. If he attempts it... he will lose his grip on Dante."

"And if that happens?" Lisisa asked.

Murano met her eyes. "He needs a physical vassal." Murano explained. "The black mist that Andro and Helen spoke of when he had infected your father will be visible but he will not be able to reach out as before. Even Xaxon has his limits. He is powerful and devious as I told your brother... but if he tries this he will leave himself completely vulnerable as well."

Eliani looked at Andro from beside Jomann. "And Dante?" She asked the question with a decidedly hate filled tone.

Andro met her eyes and those of his other sisters. "There will be no reprieve for Dante arande." He said immediately. "He will answer for what he did to Zarah."

"Promise us as you promised Zarah Andro." Carina spoke from within the transmission.

Andro looked at her in the transmission and nodded his head slowly. "I give my word to all of you... Dante's fate is already sealed. Nothing will save him."

“Avoi.” Eliani muttered softly.

“Yuri sent the plans for the Moran’s ship the INQUISITOR.” Carina spoke once more. “It is a standard BLOOD REVERENCE Dreadnought with only a few minor changes. We will have to make small changes to the overall plan... but we can iron them out easily enough.”

Andro nodded and looked at Eliani. “Eli... the delivery system?”

Eliani reached across the chart table and touched six different points on the plans for the ship. “Six canisters deployed to these locations. They will attach to the hull directly over the six major ventilation ducts, cut through and then activate the gas.”

“Gas?” Murano asked surprised. “You are going to kill the crew?”

Eliani looked at him. “It’s a neutron radiation based gas sir.” She answered. “Not enough to kill vampires, but enough to fully incapacitate them. My mothers Isabella and Anja refined the formula and it works perfectly. We have enough of it onboard to knock out the crew on three Dreadnoughts. Trust me... Moran’s crew won’t know what hit them.”

“Moran?” Murano asked looking between them. “I thought we were talking about the ship that will intercept Dorian and Deion?”

Andro looked at him and shook his head. “No.” He said. “That won’t be necessary. That ship will already be ours.”

“Why?” Murano asked.

“Lisisa... bring up the message from Deo.” He said. He looked at Murano. “We got this while we were in my Ready Room talking. It seems we caught a very lucky break. And I intend to make use of it.”

Murano turned to see Deion’s image appear on a small portion of the chart table.

“Fervon... you aren’t going to believe this but...” Deion began speaking.

HIGH COVEN FRIGATE

TOLERANCE

THIRTY MINUTES EARLIER

“...started pulsing two minutes ago.” Onera spoke as she held up the transmitter for Dorian. “Whoever he is, he is trying to contact Meyla.”

Dorian glanced at Deion who was next to him and then back to Onera. “You are certain Duan Locarra?” He asked.

Onera nodded. “My mother taught me how to use one of these in one of the classes as I was growing.” She answered.

“Where is Meyla?” Deion asked.

“Sheva and Nara are still with her in the Medical Bay with her mother.” Onera answered.

Dorian looked at Dorian. “We could get some valuable Intel fervon.” He said.

Dorian nodded. “Yes... but will she be able to hold it together?”

“Yes.” The feminine voice answered.

They turned to see Sheva and Nara on either side of the young woman Meyla and her mother. Dorian rose to his feet with Deion beside him.

“Sheva?” He asked.

“We heard it activate and then Onera left with it.” Sheva said. “She wants to help Dori.”

Dorian looked at her. “Meyla... I appreciate that you want to help but this man...”

Meyla met his eyes. “He used me!” Meyla hissed. “He used me like some cheap whore and now I carry his child!”

“That child is a blessing of life Meyla.” Onera spoke.

Meyla nodded her head and smiled gently. “Yes... she is.” She said softly as she rubbed her partially swollen abdomen. “But he will never know that. I want to make sure he knows he will never be part of that.”

“If you do this you can’t reveal to him that we are onto their plans.” Dorian said. “Or the ships waiting for us!”

Meyla drew herself up proudly. "I don't intend to." She said.

Dorian glanced at Sheva and then Deion quickly. All of them nodded along with Onera. "Do it!" He hissed. "Set it up!"

Sixty seconds later the transmitter was sitting on the table and Meyla was in front of it as she activated the beacon. The face of the handsome young pureblood vampire Faren appeared in the small cone of the transmission. He had light brown hair and glittering blue eyes and looked to be in superior physical shape. Sheva, Onera and Nara all could see why Meyla had fallen so easily for him.

"Meyla!" His voice echoed in the small room. "Finally!"

"I needed... I needed to get someplace private." Meyla stammered quickly.

Faren shook his head. "I understand ussta ssinsrigg." He said. "It is alright. We will be together soon. Your ship will reach the rendezvous in under an hour and then we all will be together and we can start our life with our daughter."

Meyla shifted her feet. "Where... where will we go?" She asked timidly. "I... Faren I do not wish to raise our daughter on a ship among those who follow Admiral Moran." She said quickly before Onera or Sheva could stop her. "He... following him will only give us death. I..."

Sheva was reaching for her when Faren answered and she froze when she heard his reply.

"Follow Moran?" Faren hissed. "I have no intention of following that war mongering fool!" He spat.

Meyla's eyes went a little wider at this and she saw Sheva quickly motion for her to continue. "What... I thought... you are an officer in his fleet. Are you not aligned against Empress Narice now? Isn't that what he plans?"

"Meyla... I... I am a member of the Venorik Elghinn." Faren told her softly. "Well... I was... before Empress Aikiro and Moran's fool plans nearly got us all killed. Many of us did not agree with their plans and we advised against it. We were ignored."

"Faren... I don't understand." Meyla said. "My brother... my parents..."

He looked at her quickly with wide eyes. "They will be safe ussta ssinsrigg. I promised you I would see to them. I have already dispatched a message to your brother on Elear. By now he has taken his wife and children and moved to the location I set up. He will be safe. Once you contacted me and told me that a Lycavorian Strike Team had appeared at the colony and were taking Sheva Juconi's parents off I set my plans in motion. I knew the colony you were on had been compromised... and perhaps even the others. The Lycavorian Union Krypteria is far more organized and efficient than that idiot Moran gives them credit for. I knew once you told me that they had somehow discovered the program and were probably already moving to capture and detain all those involved. I knew that if they were there to take Sheva Juconi's parents off the planet then she was no longer among the program's loyalists. She was always different than the others. Most of those who instructed her saw it."

Meyla looked at him. "Faren... my brother has..."

"Your brother has not reported to his control officer for months now. I know." He cut her off. "I have contacts everywhere Meyla. I know his loyalty is to the Union and his elven wife and children now. I sent him a message to get them and himself to safety as I told you. A place they could hide for a short time."

"Faren..."

"I can tell you now what I have held back from you." He continued without giving her time to speak. It appeared as if there was much she wanted to get off his chest to Sheva and the others watching. "There is much discontent among the crews of the ships Moran has with him. They are divided and confused and many have families and loved ones they want to return to. We have been getting many intercepts from within High Coven space about what Narice is now doing. The changes she is making. Many of them want no part in what Moran is planning to do. I was the senior Venorik Elghinn officer remaining after the escape from Earth. He has had those loyal to him watching me but I have played the good little agent and done as he asked. I informed him of what you told me because I knew he would send me to collect whoever took Sheva Juconi's parents from the colony. He is not as smart as he likes to think he is." Faren smiled. "Perhaps this is one of the faults Princess Yuri saw in him. Or she was just tired of his foolish ranting." He tried to joke. "Moran wishes to try and use those from the program, Sheva Juconi's parents as well, to find out where Yuri is. I..." Faren explained to her.

"So you have been using me all of this time?" Meyla hissed angrily.

“What? No!” He spat back in shock. “Never! I love you Meyla! My future is with you and our daughter! I want nothing to do with that fool Moran or his twisted son Dante! I told him because I knew he would send me. I have no intention of turning anyone over to Moran. He has lost his mind! His son is an evil monster. The men and crews of these ships with me are only seeking escape. They do not want to fight for Moran. They want to return home or escape to where they will be safe!”

“But... but where will we go?” Meyla asked as her heart lifted significantly and her face became brighter.

“There are many places in The Wilds where we can go.” Faren answered. “I know of at least two individuals who may even be able to point us in the direction of Princess Yuri.”

“Yuri?” Meyla asked. “Why?”

“I have heard rumors that she has changed since becoming the Blessed Wife to her own Immortal Captain.” Faren told her. “The Crown Prince Androcles... he lifted the bounty he had placed on her head. Most believe he did this because he had found and killed her. I believe it was because he saw that she had changed and she somehow convinced the Crown Prince to spare her life. I have seen the reports on him Meyla... and it would have taken an act of the phraktos for him to lift the bounty after what Moran and Aikiro forced upon his sister. It was one of the vilest things those in the Venorik Elghinn ever were forced to be part of and no one that I associate with agreed with their actions. Prince Androcles would never have given her a reprieve unless he saw something within her that others did not.”

“How can you be so sure?” Meyla asked.

“There are reports that she rescued an elven female from Immortal slavers and they are now lovers and this tells me there is truth to this. I think that she is secretly supporting her sister from the shadows. Now that the darkness that now engulfs her son is gone from her, I believe the real Yuri has come forth. Androcles Leonidas must have seen this and he is supporting her somehow from the shadows. It is the only way she could have remained hidden for so long. There are very few pirates and scum who wish to challenge Androcles Leonidas and those that do are insane.” Faren said. “At least that is what I firmly believe.”

He looked at her in the transmission, his eyes softening and filling with love that could not be faked. “I can not tell you that I have not done terrible things my beautiful Meyla, but I have never lied to you. I can't return to the High Coven, but I can try to find Princess Yuri and help her in her endeavors. And it will be safer for your parents as well. With her we can at least raise our daughter in safety and relative peace while I work to make the High Coven what it was meant to be. To at least try and return some honor to my life. So that... so that my daughter and any other children we have will not have to hang their heads in shame at what I have done.”

Meyla burst out in tears and they all saw his face take on a worried expression as he looked at her. “Faren!” She sobbed.

“Meyla... what is wrong?” He asked quickly. “Are you... are you hurt? Did you injure yourself leaving the colony? Are you ok? Our child?”

Meyla shook her head. “No... I...”

Dorian chose that time to touch the transmitter and expand the transmission cone to include himself and the others nearby. He stepped up beside Meyla as did her mother. “No... she is not hurt.” He spoke seeing Faren's eyes go wide. “I would say she is extremely happy... if what you are telling her is true.”

“Who are you?” Faren demanded. “If you harm her I will kill you! I will hunt you down and kill you!” He spat harshly.

“The name is Leonidas.” Dorian said calmly. “Dorian Leonidas.”

Faren's eyes grew wider still. “The first son by Queen Isabella and King Leonidas!” He gasped. “The... the pre-born like... like your brother Androcles!”

Dorian tilted his head slightly. “You are... well informed.” He said.

“You!” Faren gasped. “You took her off the colony? But... but how did...”

“Sheva Juconi is my Blessed Wife and mate.” Dorian told him. “She showed me the message from that fool control agent of hers.”

“I... I expected that is how you discovered the location of the colony.” Faren spoke. Dorian noticed that he seemed to almost relax. “That you somehow found one of the agents of the program and their control agent.”

Dorian nodded. "Why don't you answer a question for me now? How much of that sibfla you just shoveled out to Meyla here is true?"

Faren looked at him and his eyes narrowed. "I speak your ancient language Dorian Leonidas! Quite fluently." He snapped angrily. "And none of what I just told Meyla is a lie. I have never lied to her!"

"You didn't tell her everything." Sheva hissed as she stepped up next to Dorian.

"It was the only way to protect her. Protect our child." Faren answered her statement with complete honesty. "Wait! If you... if you know about the transmitter I gave her then you... you know that we are moving to the rendezvous coordinates that you have with whoever is escorting you out of The Wilds!"

Dorian smiled. "My brother Androcles is waiting at those coordinates." He said. "With a ship and enough firepower to blow you and your ships into leftover space dust before you are able to fart in the wind."

"No!" Faren hissed with wide eyes. "We are not the enemy Dorian Leonidas! I chose this ship and the escorts myself! All of them carry men and women who think as I do! Those who did not... they were dealt with. We are not the enemy!"

"How do I know we can trust anything you say?" Dorian told him calmly. "By now your ships are within range of my brother's ship. He is probably already jamming your long range communications. You won't be able to call for help. And you won't survive his attack."

"Vith! I do not want to call for help!" Faren exclaimed loudly. "Tell him to scan our ships right now! We are running without shields and our weapons are not powered. We want nothing to do with Moran and his fool son! Or what they are planning! These ships are filled with all those who I could spirit away and not draw attention to us! We do not... we do not want to fight anymore!"

"So you say!" Dorian spoke.

"Do it! Do as I tell you!" Faren almost shouted now. "Scan our ships! Tell him to scan our ships! We have to be less than an hour away for this transmission to be so clear! If we are talking then I know you can contact him! We will do anything he asks! Just tell him!"

"Stand by." Dorian snapped and reached forward again to silence the transmission.

"You can't hurt him!" Meyla cried. "He is telling the truth! I know it! I can see it in his eyes!"

Dorian looked at her and squeezed her arm gently seeing her eyes lock onto his. "I know that Meyla." He said softly. "So can I." He looked at Deion. "Get on your P1 fervon. Get this info to Andro and than Yuri and let them know what is happening Deion. I think we just caught a much bigger break than any of us expected or believed."

Deion nodded and pulled out his P1. "Carians... you think!" He gasped.

MANNE

UNION ADHOC COMPOUND

Martin squatted beside the base of the massive tree on the ridge above the Union Adhoc Compound, or Base One as it had come to be called. The crystal clear waters of the huge lake that backstopped the compound were reflecting the bright sunshine as the sun rose in the sky. The many portable shelters had become pseudo permanent homes to most of his people over the last weeks and some had even begun to replant a number of the brighter colored flowers among the many worn pathways throughout the compound. They no doubt had a sense that they would be staying for a long time and they were making things try to appear normal.

The mountains to the east and west and the one he squatted on to the north gave Base One a natural protective barrier against most of the elements that they knew existed on Manne. There was only one main avenue into the sprawling valley with dozens of escape routes into the surrounding mountains that only his people knew of. There was much activity within Base One, men and women preparing the different defenses of the base. There was no panic however. It was controlled chaos as military men had called it dating back centuries. Everyone moved with purpose and precision. It had become second nature to many of those below him and Martin felt a pang of regret for the life they had to lead. It was only a brief regret, for he knew that the men and women below would not change anything. Each and every one of them had chosen this way of life willingly, and all of them had served with distinction. They were true professionals and would do their jobs to the very best of their abilities. There was no back down in any of them. Most were Lycavorian Spartans, but there were hundreds of elves, vampires and Algolians who had also chosen this life as well and all of them gave one hundred percent to their duties. They had adopted the Spartan mentality from the day his father had given his life in defense of them in that far away place most of them had never been too. And this mentality had carried onward in their children.

They were Spartans.

His father's selfless sacrifice for so many men, women and different species, without truly even knowing anything about them had altered the course of the history and culture of the Lycavorian Union. An obscure culture and mentality from what many still considered a back water planet had engulfed trillions of beings. Shortly after the death of his father, there had been a massive push to discover as much about the Spartan history and way of life among the many species that now made up the Union. His death and the death of his fellow Lycavorians at that lonely place on Earth had inspired so many. They had not known the true nature of their people, only that they were different. From the time the Ten Thousand had arrived on Earth among the Spartan people they had fit right in seamlessly. It was a sincere testament to Helen's powers of perception that she saw the similarities between the Spartans and the Lycavorians. The sense of honor and duty and family. If only the Spartan Kings who had come before his father had known what their culture and traditions would spawn. A galaxy spanning society that embraced the ideals of the Spartan people even as harsh as many considered the laws to sometimes be. Martin knew there were those who did not adhere to the Spartan way of life, different species and cultures, but they were welcome and accepted within the Union as equals and friends. The vast majority of Lycavorians chose to follow the Spartan laws and traditions that so suited their species, but they also welcomed and viewed different cultures with respect and honor. While the adoption of the Spartan way of life changed how many viewed the Chronicles of Law that were written by Canth and his grandfather, those laws had been the core of their society ever since the Union had been born. The Spartan way of life was absorbed into those laws and values and they had continued for over three thousand years now. And no matter how much they may have learned about what other forces may have helped to shape the Lycavorian people, Spartan culture was supremely dominant.

Martin lowered the datapad and coffee mug in his hands when he smelled him move up behind him. No matter what anyone said about his brother, Daniel Simpson could and did move like a ghost at times. He was not trying to hide himself in any way, Daniel had long ago given up trying to sneak up on Martin, but the absolute control and grace his six foot five body could muster would shame the ballerinas of centuries before. Martin Leonidas trusted two men utterly and without question in his life. Two men that he would share everything and anything with, no matter how dire or joyous. One was his first born son and the other was this man. The only man Martin had ever considered his brother. His one true brother. His head turned slightly as Danny settled to one knee beside him. Like Martin he was already attired in the standard Union Mark V ArmorPly Body Armor. His combat harness held several pouches, extra magazines for his A4, and half a dozen Plasma grenades. His personal nehtes was secured under one arm in a special holster and Daniel Simpson was more than lethal with the Nehtes. Daniel had been bald for his entire life, choosing to keep the hair from his head, though now he had begun to grown a neatly trimmed goatee and mustache. They had been through so much together. Life, death, sadness and joy. And through it all, their bond had only grown more tightly and more intense. When Moneus took Carina as his wife and mate, the connection between the two of them had been sealed for all time and nothing would ever drive them apart.

Martin turned back to look at the camp below for he thoroughly enjoyed the times he could just sit and watch things progress around him. It wasn't arrogance of any kind; it was a pride he felt at what they could all accomplish. Only Daniel or his wives would ever interrupt him when he was doing this, for they knew how much he enjoyed it.

"I see you're slacking again." Danny spoke as he adjusted his A4 across his knees.

Martin grinned and nodded his head. With the exception of Anuk and Nayeca and his eight children, Martin had never known Daniel to act serious about anything. Now Kesyla would join that small circle within his brother's life of the precious things he cared for more than anything. "One of us has too." He said.

"You been up here a couple hours." Dan spoke as his dark eyes swept over Base One. "I was beginning to wonder if you had grown roots or something."

“I was just admiring the view.” Martin said as Danny reached out and took the coffee mug from his hand and took a long pull from the steaming hot liquid. He looked at the insulated mug and shook his head.

“Man... Aricia sure got it right when she came up with this blend.” He said with a shake of his head. “You know how many of our people are addicted to this coffee now? You should keep her pregnant all the time fervon. Maybe if she stays pregnant she’ll come up for something to replace the extreme shit tasting combat rations we got right now. I am already missing Iama’s cooking and it’s only been since breakfast.”

Martin chuckled as he took the mug back and took a pull of the rich tasting coffee. “We’d have to keep her away from Red though.” He said. “Anja will have us eating healthy stuff and we won’t even know it.”

Dan laughed. “Ain’t it the truth?” He said.

“Manda in position?” He asked softly.

Danny nodded. “She sent the burst ten minutes ago. The last of the Battalion Andro sent to us is down and moving to their positions. Manda’s Raptor E3s have picked up the Kavalian ships entering the system on the far side of the system. From behind the gas giant’s moon. He thinks he’s being slick.”

“He’s trying to sneak in.” Martin said as his eyes looked over Base One.

“He sucks at sneaking then cause they are blundering about like fools.” Danny said with a smile.

Like Martin, Danny rarely let others see the extreme insight and intelligence he held within him. While most saw only the laconic and often times humorous side of Daniel Simpson, only a few knew of the skill and exceptional smarts of the man who everyone knew was their King’s brother. Only Anuk, Nayeca and now Kesyla had seen that side of him, and he liked to keep it that way.

“Koguth has his people in position west of Site 2. All the pieces are just about set then.” Martin said casually.

“You think he’ll take the bait?” Danny asked.

Martin nodded his head. “Oh... he’ll take the bait.” He said. “He’s too proud not to. And too stupid.”

“Well... you have to admit... if you’re going to be stupid about something, make sure it looks and smells as good as For’mya.” Danny spoke.

He was perhaps the only man alive who could get away with saying that and not have Martin rip his face off. Danny knew what For’mya and all his wives and mates meant to Martin. There had been many nights through the last years where the two of them had simply sat under the stars and talked of their better halves and the emotions they were able to elicit from them.

Martin grinned once more. “I have to agree with that.” He said. He looked at Danny. “I take it Kesyla is with Anuk and Nayeca?”

Dan nodded. “Nubian has the security of the Medical Tent. Kesyla is inside with Anja, Anuk and Duewa. I guess this Radra woman is there as well. Ready to help.”

“She’s a beautiful woman fervon.” Martin said. “I’m happy for you. All of you. Is she adjusting ok?”

Dan nodded as he took the mug from Martin again. “She’s got Anuk and Nubian to teach her. And what they can’t or don’t know, Aricia and your better halves do. She’s actually... she is making the adjustment much more quickly and easier than I thought.”

Martin nodded his head. “Helen told me once that those of us who have Etheric abilities will be able to better able to accept and tolerate the change.” He said.

Danny grinned. “Well... we went running last night and she is learning fast.” He said with a chuckle.

“What?” Martin asked him.

“She misjudged a turn and went ass over head into a stream.” Danny said. “When she got her legs under her again I was kind of standing there staring at her tail. She’s got a real nice tail fervon.”

“Bet she didn’t appreciate that.” Martin said with a smile.

“She cuffed me good right across the muzzle.” Danny said with his trademark smile. “Caught me completely unaware. Anuk and Nubian were laughing all the way back.”

“Sounds like Anuk and Nayeca are teaching her well.” Martin said with a matching grin.

“Almost too well.” Danny replied with a nod. Danny reached out and placed his hand on Martin’s shoulder. “You ok?” He asked softly.

Martin nodded his head slowly. “I’ve had a lot of time to toss this all around in my head fervon. No matter which direction I come at it from Danny, there is still one glaring basic truth.” Martin looked at him. “I have no feeling for him anymore Dan. None. Not after what he did to For’mya. What he forced upon her. What he forced upon his own children. Add up all he has done through the years... trying to kill our mother... killing so many of our people. He stopped being Lycavorian a long time ago.”

“He’s still your brother Martin.” Danny said.

Martin shook his head. “The inescapable fact in all this is that you are the only brother I have ever known Dan.” Martin looked at him. “The only brother I want. You are my Mard Fervon. He’s a nobody. He had... he had an opportunity to discover what we could have. To learn about the blood we have flowing within us. He chose to be a scumbag rapist and murderer instead. Keleru may have had something to do with that when all is said and done but ultimately we are all responsible for the decisions we make.” Martin said turning back to look at Base One in the distance.

Danny nodded his head slowly. “Yes... we are.” He said softly.

“He chose to walk the path he has walked Danny.” Martin said softly. “I intend to treat him exactly like that. I’ve taken his remaining sons from him... showed them what they could have... what their blood calls for... and they have embraced that Spartan blood within them more than I ever thought possible. Pian has taken his daughter and from what I understand he dotes over her like a blossoming flower. When I see him Dan... when I see him I’m going to take what is left of his pitiful life. Then my father will breathe a little easier and my mother can hold her head high.” Martin rose to his feet, Danny following suit and they looked down on Base One. “I just might make this a regular vacation spot.” Martin said. “It’s beautiful here.”

“Can’t argue with that.” Dan said. Dan looked out over Base One. “You think it will ever end Marty?” He asked the question they had asked of each other many different times in the past. “You think the day will come where we can hang our guns up and be normal?”

Martin looked at him. “How many times have we asked each other that question Dan?”

Danny nodded. “More times than I care to admit I guess.” He replied.

“You want me to answer that from my hopes or from my heart fervon?” Martin asked him.

“I’ve never asked for you to bullshit me.” Dan said. “Don’t start now.”

Martin turned back and allowed his gaze to take in the scenery before him. “My heart tells me that for me... for you... for our children... no. We came into this world kicking and screaming and that is how we are going to leave it fervon. But when we go... we’ll go with the knowledge that our grandchildren and those who come after them will never have to fight again.”

“We gonna be around to see that?” Danny asked.

Martin looked at him. “I don’t plan on checking out any time soon. Do you?” He asked with a laugh.

“Hell no!” Danny spat. “Anuk, Nubian and Kesyla would kick my ass!”

Martin reached behind his waist and pulled out his P1. He handed it to Danny. “You seen the first recon drone footage?” He asked.

Dan nodded as he took the P1. “Yeah. Doesn’t look good.”

“Then let’s settle this so we can make sure if any of our people survived we can help them.” Martin said.

“Works for me.” Danny answered. “I was getting bored anyway.”

Martin took back his P1 with a smile and replaced it at the small of his back. He reached up and tapped the COM implant at the front of his ear.

“Spartan One to Admiral Lorian.”

“I am here Milord.” Manda’s voice replied.

Martin shook his head. “Manda... what have I told you about that.” He scolded her as he looked up into the brightening sky.

Miranda Lorian chuckled from her command chair on the bridge of the ARIZONA. “I will remember someday.” She said.

“You ready Manda?” Martin asked.

“Sitting on go.” She answered. “Raptors are reporting his ships are beginning to move from beyond the moon. Standard Kavalian attack formation. Troop ships randomly mixed in.” She gave him the brief rundown. “If they maintain course and speed they’ll be on you in sixteen minutes.”

“That’s it then.” Martin spoke. “Captain Akemi?”

“Here sire!” Akemi’s voice replied instantly.

“Go now Akemi!” Martin hissed. “Turn tail and run like the hounds of hell are chasing you! Just like they did in Hollywood!”

“Hollywood Milord?” Akemi asked from the bridge of the ARC ROYAL. “Where is this Hollywood?”

“Jeez! Never mind! Just go!” Martin hissed.

“Executing plan. Jumping in twenty seconds. Just so the record shows Milord, we are not running, we are simply advancing to kick him in the balls from behind. Good luck and we’ll see you all on the flip side!” Akemi answered.

“General Koguth...” Martin continued with a smile at Akemi’s comment.

“Kalis and I are in position and ready.” Koguth answered instantly. “Serale and Ceale have our triage unit set up and are very well hidden. The last of your Spartans has arrived and we await the arrival of Pusintin’s vaunted Puma Bane. We will show them who are the better warriors this day.”

“Kalis... as soon as things are in full swing you break for For'mya’s position. She’ll be waiting with Fedor and Eirene.” Martin said.

“Just as we discussed Uncle.” Kalis answered.

“Manda... you getting that signal?” Martin asked.

“It’s radiating from seventy-three ships.” She replied. “We have marked them all.”

“I guess that message we got was true then.” Martin said looking at Danny. “Keep an eye on them... and if they so much as twitch wrong blow them out of the stars.” Martin saw Dan nod his head in approval.

“Understood.” Miranda replied.

“Alright people this is it. Manda... as soon as his troop ships hit the atmosphere they will have reached the point of no return. Wait sixty seconds once they do and then de-shroud your Attack Wing and obliterate his task force.” Martin ordered. “No survivors on this Op folks. They opened this dance and now we are gonna finish it. No mercy. No surrender. May the gods go with us all! Spartan One out!”

SPARTA'S WRATH

There were six ships now. All of them with their Shrouds activated to avoid unwanted detection since they were within The Wilds, and all of them within firing distance of each other. Not that it would be much of a fight if it came to that. SPARTA'S WRATH dwarfed all the ships by a massive margin and would have been able to destroy them all in several eye blinks if need be.

It wouldn’t be needed.

Three transports had been taken into the starboard landing bay of SPARTA'S WRATH, and Murano had watched from a short distance away with Mari beside him as Androcles and his siblings greeted their brothers and sister. The obvious female squeals of delight and happiness were apparent as Eliani and Lisisa embraced Nara and then Sheva tightly since they were the first down the ramp. Normya was next and the sisters shared embraces with each other before they turned to their brothers. Andro had swept Carisia’s petite frame into his arms and kissed her with staggering intensity as Sadi and the others looked on with huge smiles. Murano then watched as Sadi and the others swarmed around them and as soon as Andro set Carisia down, Lu'ria was the first to pull her diminutive vampire lover into a similar embrace and kiss.

Murano could only continue to watch in wonderment at the out pouring of emotion and action for it was not forced in any way. They truly did feed off the physical contact and love they all had for one another. He had watched as Andro gripped Deion’s and Dorian’s head in his hands and the brothers shared silent words between each other and Deion nodded. To stand apart from them and watch their actions you could tell they were all genuine in their feelings. Martin and his wives had instilled an indestructible sense of family within them all and they had nurtured it as their children had grown. It was easy to see that Androcles was the center of it among those here. The peace that swept around him was similar to what he had felt when he watched Martin with his wives and mates. He had touched each of his brothers and sisters in some manner, sharing a soft word and smile before he stepped off to the side and up to where Yuri and Pa'cour were standing with Onera. Sheva was introducing her parents to Eliani and Lisisa, the other families standing respectfully to the side just watching, unsure of what was going to happen.

That had been an hour ago and now the principle parts of this plan they were following were sitting at the massive conference table in the briefing room. The young vampire officer from the High Coven ship was talking and pointing things out on the star chart. Murano had seen this young man rush to the woman when she exited Dorian's ship and crush her to him. The emotion was very genuine and the tears she shed were tears of happiness. The Captain of the ship had come over as well and he now stood along the wall simply watching. Murano had always considered himself an excellent judge of character and his Praetorian abilities had never steered him wrong when reading others. He could detect no deceit from either of these men, and he was quite certain neither could Androcles with his incredible sense of smell.

Faren pointed to a large section of the star chart and looked at Androcles and Yuri as he finished speaking. "...will have moved from the last point we made contact." He was telling them. "We never remained in any one location for more than twenty-four hours. He will have shifted the forces with him to a new location by now."

"Numbers?" Androcles asked leaning forward.

"At last count two Fleet Groups Prince Androcles." Faren answered instantly. "With a mish mash of odd ships that deserted their old units. Total ships no more than three hundred and thirty at any given time. He knows it is hard to move a fleet of that size and he is deliberately staying out of the traveled areas to hide them."

"How many not with him are actually aligned with him?" Yuri asked this question. "And I don't mean just ships."

Faren shook his head. "I'm afraid that I don't have that information." He replied honestly to the question. "I would have to say at least one or two senior members of the Ventash'ma. It would be the only way for him to hide himself from Admiral Pontal without detection for so long."

Carisia leaned forward now, real concern for Narice on her face. "The Ventash'ma have all publicly stated their overwhelming support for her actions."

Faren nodded his head. "I'm sure they have. They do not want to be killed by the many Immortals she has guarding her. It is the only real explanation." He said. "Someone is helping him and they have to be well placed enough to at least have some military support. Admiral Pontal has been concerned primarily with securing our borders since the war ended. He has not even been back to the capital. Others are acting in his stead and I would not be surprised if they are also passing information to Moran's forces. It would need to be someone with the access to alter logs, journals and even star charts. I just do not know. I have been out of the loop so to speak since the events on Earth." He looked quickly at Androcles. "Meaning no offense Prince Leonidas."

Andro nodded. "None taken." He said.

"What the Empress and the others perpetrated upon your sister is heinous and even the most loyal members of the Venorik Elghinn advised her against such an action." Faren said. "They knew the kind of response it would incur and Intelligence agents they may be, they are still husbands and fathers and brothers. It was a vile and despicable thing they did. She would not listen to us however."

Murano leaned forward now. "If she was touched by Xaxon for as long as your father says Andro... then this is not surprising. His control and influence, even peripheral in nature as it was with her, would have been unbreakable after so long a period."

"He could control people like this Murano?" Yuri asked.

Murano shook his head. "Control is not the correct word. His Praetorian aptitude was the ability to influence others. Almost like sub conscious suggestions and manipulations. He could not control their minds directly, but he could weaken their mental barriers enough to make his authority and wishes overwhelming in nature." He met Yuri's eyes evenly. "As he did with his Praetorian Mage and as he did with your mother and as he was almost able to accomplish with you Yuri. He was the only Praetorian in recorded history with this ability... and it is not one we speak of openly."

"Andro we have to warn Narice and Arrarn!" Carisia hissed.

"I agree Androcles." Yuri said urgently. "If Robert has this kind of support still within the capital then Narice is not safe. Nothing can happen to her! Not now! Even if we find and destroy him, these men or women will still oppose her. They could cause all kinds of trouble that she is not prepared for."

"Arrarn and Cha'talla will let nothing happen to her." Andro told them. "And if we send word to her now, it may very well tip off Moran and Dante."

"Send me." Nameia spoke for the first time. She sat between Yuri and Pa'cour as had become her place and she relished in the attention both would show her. She looked at Yuri. "Send me Yuri. Just as we had intended before. No one will suspect an elf female. They will think me part of the Union forces already assigned there.”

Yuri shook her head instantly though Pa'cour remained silent. “No! It’s too dangerous!” She spoke softly.

Nameia reached out and took her hand. “Yuri my love... I will not be in danger.” She spoke with that musical voice that Yuri and Pa'cour so adored and she did it with no shame or doubt. “Our Blessed Husband will see to that.” She spoke turning her head to Pa'cour. “Won’t you?”

Pa'cour met her gaze evenly and then cut his eyes to see Yuri looking at him. “T’loft... he gave me a private COM channel that would allow me to speak with Cha'talla whenever I wished too. I could contact him... let him know. He would never allow anything to happen to her.”

“Andro!” Carisia insisted.

Andro met her gaze and saw Sadi clutching her hand tightly. He nodded quickly. “That would work very well.” He said. “Cha'talla is more operationally inclined than Arrarn and if Nameia goes to him and provides him this intelligence he will act on it from the shadows. Tir'ut?”

Tir'ut nodded from his chair. “My brother Lynom and As'hia are in charge of Narice’s personal security detachment. My father would tell them... but no one else until he was certain that her safety was assured. Then he would act against those aligned against her.”

“Do it!” Andro spoke with hesitation. “Nameia... I will have a STRIKER take you to the capital. You’ll be shrouded the entire way. No one will know you have arrived.”

“I want two of our Immortals to go with her.” Yuri spoke up.

Andro nodded again without hesitation and Murano marveled at how quickly his mind assessed a situation and then acted upon it. He had heard from many others on Manne that Andro was nearly a clone to his father in the way he thought and how quickly he could process vital and important information and move to make meaningful decisions. Obviously they had not been exaggerating.

“Pick them... get them on a G9 over to here. By the time they arrive the STRIKER will be ready.” Andro looked at Faren. “Do you have any that you suspect Captain?” He asked.

“None that I can be sure of Prince Androcles.” Faren replied honestly. “We have only tidbits of information that points to this. Nothing solid.”

“Transfer that intelligence to a data pad and give it to Nameia.” Andro told him quickly. “Cha'talla and the others have been there among them and will know what to take seriously and what not too.”

Faren nodded quickly. “I will see to it.” He said.

Andro got to his feet. “Enylarcopri... take your mother and Nameia to the landing bay and make sure she is fitted with our finest equipment. Do not spare anything.”

Carisia got to her feet, Lu'ria following suit naturally, gripping her hand tightly. The love between them was obvious and Lu'ria had no intention of allowing her fellow princess and maya eyed lover to do this alone. “Mother... follow me.” Carisia said.

Andro turned and looked at the captain of Faren’s ship as Yuri and Nameia were leaving. “Captain...”

“Onrad Prince Androcles!” The man announced clearly as he stepped forward.

“You have had a chance to review the plan.” Andro said. “The BLOOD REVERENCE class is your ship. What do you think?”

Onrad stepped forward. “I have a question first.” He asked.

Androcles nodded. “Go ahead.”

“How do you know I am not here simply to learn these plans?” Onrad asked. “How do you know I am not a spy for Moran?”

Deion turned his head from where he sat beside Nara. “Because you would already be dead if you were.” He spoke matter-of-factly.

Andro looked at the man. “Many of your people still do not believe that you have unique scents.” He spoke evenly. “You believe that because you ingest blood on a normal basis that it somehow changes what your base scent is.”

Onrad’s eyes grew a little wider. “How... it is still taught in our schools.” He said.

Androcles nodded. “It is not true Captain. And it is one of the things that Narice will get around to changing eventually. You have a base scent sir... all of you do. And it is from that base scent that all of us who are wolves can detect the hatred and rage that comes from your pores whenever Moran's name is mentioned." Andro motioned for him to come to the table. "He is responsible for something in your life that made you hate him I assume."

"How did you... how do you know that?" Onrad asked stunned.

"Your scent. Your body language. The way you jaw tightens and the way your right eye twitches whenever his name is mentioned." Deion spoke as he was still looking at him.

Andro smiled at Deion's comment. "Whatever he is responsible for is your business sir." Andro told him. "We have no right to know. Just know that he will face justice for all his sins."

Onrad met Andro's eyes. "Swear to me." He demanded. "Swear to me that he will not get away and that he will answer for his crimes against the High Coven. Against my... against my son and daughter."

Andro nodded. "That is the plan." He said.

Onrad took a deep breath and nodded. "Your father's plan is superior to anything I have ever seen." Onrad spoke as he stepped right up to the chart table. "We have trained for such a thing before... never as much as I and others thought we should... but we have trained for it. We never trained for something like your father has developed here however."

Eliani chuckled. "Our father isn't exactly mainstream." She said with a modicum of pride in her voice. "He likes to think of wild things to do."

"Will it work?" Dorian asked now with a smile at Eliani's comment.

Onrad nodded. "Yes... with two small modifications. Your entry points."

"Show us." Andro said motioning for Cowen, Jomann, Torian and the others of his team to move closer to the table.

Onrad stepped closer and began typing on the computer console. He looked at the chart now. "These two access points are closest to the power conduits that manage the secondary engine drive circuitry as well as the bridge maintenance accessway. The only way to truly knock out the LSD engines is to override one of these points and assume control of the main engines from the secondary panel. You will also need to hit the bridge. That is where Moran will be without question and you will need to take the engineering station."

"How many on the bridge?" Andro asked.

"Eleven... including Moran." Onrad answered.

Andro nodded his head looking at the schematic chart. "Ok... that is feasible." He spoke as he traced several lines on the chart. "Once the initial entry is made, Deion, Nara, Cowen, Sherice and Daio break off here and use this accessway to reach the hatch for the bridge. Once Dorian and I hit the aft section of the deck for Dante and Lu'ria and Carisia hit the forward section of the deck, fervon you and the others hit the bridge and secure Moran."

"That still leaves the secondary bridge control panel." Deion said. "Is it really necessary to take control of it?"

Onrad looked at Andro now. "Moran's bridge crew is superbly trained Prince Leonidas. I do not doubt that your brother would be able to subdue them; however one or more of them might realize what you are doing and attempt to activate an emergency jump. Take this control panel when you assault this deck and you remove this ability from them permanently."

"Not without being able to secure it first." Deion spoke now as he pointed at the plans of the ship. "These controls would undoubtedly be password protected. Even if we took control of them they would still be able to shift to another password from the bridge and use the systems remotely."

"Not if you change the password." Onrad said.

"And how would we do that in twenty-seven seconds?" Andro asked. "That is all the time we will have before Deion blows the service hatch and hits the bridge."

"An algorithm bypass." The female voice spoke up.

Murano turned when he realized the voice came from Mari beside him. "Mari what did I tell you about interrupting and..." He began.

"No!" Deion hissed cutting Murano's words short. "She's right!" He said moving over along the table and tapping the panel quickly. "Like this?" He asked looking down into her blue green eyes.

Mari looked at the formula he had typed and nodded. "Yes! Exactly!" She exclaimed.

Mari glanced up into his face and felt herself shiver in wanton delight once again. Deion Leonidas was far more deliciously handsome in person she decided and much larger physically than he had appeared in the transmission she had first seen of him. His dark brown eyes were liquid orbs of beauty as she gazed into them and just being next to him as she was now caused her to be more aroused than at anytime before in her young life. His Etheric resonance trembled against his shields but she could sense it easily enough and the power of it made her shudder in delight. Mari couldn't explain it and she did not want to try to explain it. She had never felt this way about any of the men she had serious relationships with in the past and that fact alone made her want to go explore these new sensations and feelings. Neither of them noticed the knowing look that passed between Nara and Lisisa from where they stood. To say that their brother was interested in Mari was obvious, but there was also much more to his curiosity than simply a beautiful woman standing in front of him. Even they could sense the pull between Mari and Deion. All of Deion's sisters could sense it, and no doubt Andro did as well, but Nara most of all because she was his twin.

It was Eliani who shook them all out of their almost trancelike state. "That's all well and good fervon... but you just typed in the formula for that in like three seconds. The rest of us block heads wouldn't be able to do it as fast as you and Lady Mari when we are there."

Onrad looked at Androcles. "Your Avatar could." He spoke.

Androcles shook his head. "I will not risk Armen on this mission." He said. "He is the heart of this ship and he will need to be here in case something happens that we can not plan for."

Mari tore her eyes from Deion and looked at Andro. "I will do it." She said.

"Mari no!" Murano almost yelled.

"I can do it fa... Uncle!" She exclaimed turning to look at him. All of those present in the room who were Lycavorian could instantly smell the spike in her scent when she spoke and all of them knew why but did not understand it.

"It is too dangerous!" Murano snapped shaking his head.

"And it will be even more dangerous without doing this!" Mari protested. "I can maintain an open COM link with Armen and he can assist me, but Deion's sister just said none of them have the skill to do this except for Deion and me. And he is leading the assault on the bridge! He will be in danger if this is not done! I can do this!"

And once more those in the room who were Lycavorian detected the shift in her scent when she spoke. This time of Deion. Her words may not have given it away, but the way her scent spiked and the inflection of her words as she spoke Deion's name was obvious to them all though it went right over Murano's head.

"I said no!" Murano barked at her. "I did not bring you with me to put you at risk Mari! If anything were to happen to you, your father would never forgive me!"

Mari turned back to Andro. "I can do this!" She insisted. "It is child's play. And the risk to the entire assault team would be much less if we do not change the plan now! Isn't that right Androcles?"

Andro shook his head slowly. "I will not go against your uncle's wishes Lady Mari." He said.

"I will guide her!" Deion spoke up now. "She can enter with my team. We will stage at her location and then conduct our entry when she has finished the bypass."

"The deck will not be secure fervon." Andro said. "It will still be a hot zone. Even after she conducts this bypass... who will remain to shield her? Dorian and I will be after Dante and Lu'ria's team will not even be close."

"We will have twenty-seven seconds from the time she executes the bypass until we hit the bridge." Cowen spoke now leaning forward and looking at the schematic. "Six meters from the panel to our access tunnel and another eight meters in the actual accessway." Cowen was figuring in his head and using his fingers on the panel to help him. They all watched as Sherice stepped forward and slid her smaller hand under his larger palm and added her fingers to his.

"Nine Cowen." She spoke softly, moving closer to him and pressing her body against his. She had worked diligently with Cowen over the last days on his new Mindvoice abilities and he was growing and learning far faster than she had first thought. Sherice really did not know what to expect of Cowen's Shan when she first decided to take the position offered by Andro and her mother. After what had happened, and the closeness she had with all of the Leonidas family, Sherice did not believe she could be objective enough. Her mother talked her into it by telling her that Cowen'Shan and those like him were different. Just how different Sherice did not fully grasp until she had met him.

He towered over her in height and though his body was covered in a fine coat of hair, he was easily as well built as any Spartan she had seen. And quite to her astonishment Sherice found him to be very attractive in a wild sort of way. He moved with fluid grace, always sure of himself, and always checking the area around him. His long tail was always moving behind him, providing him exceptional balance and added strength. Sherice did not expect him to be so well educated and was stunned as he recited the different intricacies of Advanced Architectural Engineering and she discovered he had made the designs for his Pride's main home and then built the structure over the course of three years with his brothers. Sherice knew he had a very sharp mind when it came to tactics, for Androcles would not have selected him to be part of his team if he didn't, but she also knew from brief experiences with him that fast math calculations were not one of his strong points when working to compute something quickly. He was very meticulous about his calculations she learned and he just was not able to do certain things in his head so quickly. Sherice was also stunned at her body's physical reaction when she pressed close to him for this is the closest she had been since meeting him. She hid her expression very well, just as her mother had taught her and all of her sisters, but Sherice could not deny the wave of desire that being so close to him caused within her.

And that most of all caused Sherice to begin to think of Cowen'Shan in a very different light.

Cowen turned and met her gorgeous blue eyes with a smile taking no offense at what she had just done. "Thank you Sherice." He said surprising her with his reaction and the brightness of his own green flecked dark eyes. He turned back to Andro. "Nine seconds. We can do it." He said confidently. "Deion covers Lady Mari while she activates the bypass in the corridor, Deion then throws her up to me out of the corridor while Daio and Sherice cover our entry point and Nara focuses on the bridge access hatch. Then we proceed the last eight meters to the hatch and execute our entry. She will not be seen and will be safe once in the accessway and out of the line of fire. Nine seconds for us to cover the eight meters and execute our entry. Simple."

"I will do it!" Mari spoke forcefully turning to look at Murano. "I am not a child and if Armen and Deion can not do it than I am the only one left! You can't deny it Uncle!"

"Mari you..." Murano began.

"Can you do it Uncle? You will be with Andro and Dorian!" She demanded interrupting his words. "If you can do it then I will remain behind! I am not a child and I am not afraid!"

Murano stared at her for a long moment before he surrendered to her logic. She was right of course and he could not deny this. "You remain in the accessway!" Murano instructed her. "You are not to leave no matter what you hear! Is that clear?"

Mari smiled and hugged him tightly. "Yes."

"This is not a game child." Murano told her holding her at arms length. "This will be very fast and very violent. These people... they are not like those we have met so far. They will not hesitate to strike you down. People will die! You must do exactly as Deion tells you!"

Mari sobered at that and nodded her head slowly as she squeezed his arms. "As you say Uncle." She spoke softly.

Deion moved closer to Mari and she turned her head to see him towering over her from behind. "I will protect her with my life sir." He spoke confidently. "I will allow nothing to happen to her. I give you my word."

Murano nodded slowly still not liking it but he looked at Andro. "Her technical skills are unquestioned." He told him. "I do not like it... but even I must admit she can do this and make this mission smoother and perhaps less violent."

Andro nodded his head. "Very well. Nara... you will see to insuring Lady Mari has the proper gear and have the Master at Arms put together an electronics package for her and a weapon that will suit her physical stature."

Nara didn't hesitate and held out her hand for Mari. "This way Mari." She spoke.

Mari leaned up and kissed Murano on the cheek softly. "I will not disappoint you." She said softly.

"Disappointing me will never be an issue child." He said as he leaned over and kissed her forehead.

Mari smiled and turned. She glanced once more at Deion and saw his gorgeous eyes gazing at her intently. She could hardly tear her eyes from Deion as she moved around him and took Nara's hand. Murano took notice of this now and while his eyes narrowed he said nothing. The way they looked at each other... it was so very familiar to him somehow. He shook his head as Andro leaned over the table and drew their attention back to him.

“The rest of us will talk our way through the assault and iron out any other issues. We have five hours before Faren will contact Moran’s ship. Let’s make the most of them.”

KAVALIAN LEUGERS COMMAND SHUTTLE APPROACHING MANNE

Normally he would have been in his personal Command Transport LEUGERS, but since his son had stolen that when he defected, Pusintin was left with this revamped ship and having to ride in it only fueled his anger. Finally they were going to strike. He was going to finish it this time. He was going to kill his brother and take For'mya back. She belonged to him and she would be howling under him again before this day was done. He had his brother outnumbered and outgunned. The vaunted King of the Lycavorian Union had been caught with his pants down and he had been the one to do it. This knowledge made Pusintin swell with even more confidence as they drew closer to the surface.

His head turned when Popal appeared next to him. “Marshall... the Union ships have jumped away!” He declared evenly. “We were monitoring on long range sensors and when they detected us they simply left three transports on their approach runs and jumped away!”

“Can you track them?” Pusintin demanded.

Popal shook his head. “No Marshall.”

Pusintin turned to another officer on his opposite side. The Commander of the Puma Bane detachment. “Do you still have the signal Golva?” He barked.

The Puma Bane officer nodded. “It is getting clearer as we approach Marshall.” He answered. “Exactly where it has been for the last 36 hours.”

Marshall looked back to Popal. “We could have used that ship.” He stated. “It was no doubt a treasure of technological advances. Detail four cruisers to break away from the attack plan and begin constant sensor sweeps in case it returns. If it does I want that ship!”

“Do you think Leonidas ran Marshall?” Popal asked.

Pusintin shook his head. “My brother is a dog... but he is a dog with courage. He would not run. He would remain to protect For'mya and his other whores. Golva... you and your men may have my brothers other whores. Use them as you wish but do not kill them. We need to be able to parade all of them before their people and have them see how easy it was to break their precious Queens and force them into submission.”

The Puma Bane officer grinned. “Thank you Marshall.” He stated.

“Popal... once we have touched down you will lead the second Assault Force.” Pusintin spoke. “Move directly for the main northern compound they have established here. It will only be a short distance as long as you follow the path I have laid out.”

“It is much rough terrain Marshall.” Popal spoke. “And most of those with me are not ground soldiers. I will use the Puma Bane as shock troops and have them lead the assault with your permission.”

Pusintin nodded. “Fine... but it will not matter. With the three hundred Puma Bane you have you will have superior numbers by far. We may lose some... but you will be victorious.” He told him. “As soon as I have secured For'mya I will detach a smaller part of my force of Puma Bane to assist you.”

Popal nodded. “As you wish Marshall.”

“Have three of our Frigates move into a high orbit above the compound in order to assist you Popal. If heavy fire is needed, do not hesitate to call it down on them. He was a fool to establish such a position knowing we would eventually catch him. Detail one to move into a similar position above this smaller facility where For'mya is.” Pusintin spoke. “I want them destroyed completely after we have stripped them. And make sure the T19 Dragon Killing missiles we have are evenly distributed. We will be facing at least six dragons, my brother’s beast among them. They must be precise when they target one. We don’t have the missiles to waste.”

“I will make it so.” Popal nodded.

“Two minutes until we hit the atmosphere Marshall!” The pilot called out.

Pusintin nodded his head. “Good.” He snarled. “I’m itching to get this over with.”

Pusintin did not see Popal reach behind him discretely and press the small button on the panel behind where he sat.

Popal had taken to heart what the other ship captains had told him and after much soul searching he knew them to be correct. This was no longer about the safety and advancement of the Kavalian Empire. It was a personal vendetta. Brother against brother. And it was over this female elf For'mya. She had never been the Marshall's property and he had taken her, lied to her and forced himself upon her. Popal was no fool, and he was even more well educated than many of those same ship captains. He knew the vast history of the Lycavorian Union and more importantly he knew the history of its King.

The Marshall had taken For'mya Leonidas from her husband and mate and for all intents and purposes, he had raped her. It didn't matter the circumstances of this action or what she was going through physically because she was now wolf and because of what Pusintin had done she was only aware of the supposed death of the King. Pusintin had forced himself on her enough times to impregnate her give then him two children, a son among them. Popal had done one thing as he mulled this over in his mind. He tried to imagine what he would feel if someone, another Kavalian male took his young wife against her will. If she had been forced to do what For'mya Leonidas had. The single most glaring emotion that had filled Popal then was rage. A deep seething rage that his wife had been taken from him and forced to endure this. Discovering how this made him feel propelled him over the edge of understanding and acceptance. For'mya Leonidas had been a pawn, forced to bear Pusintin a son whose only purpose was to be used to gain control of the Lycavorian Union through some fool claim to birthright.

The Marshall still clung to that twisted ideal Popal knew, saying that there were enough people within the Union to help him gain power this way. And that For'mya loved him now. That she wanted only him. Popal and the others knew better. The very moment it had become known that Pusintin had forced himself upon the elf Queen in the old ways of the Lycavorian people and that King Leonidas was still very much alive, it became rape. Any support he and Keleru may have had evaporated instantly upon that becoming known. The Lycavorian Union viewed rape as one of the highest forms of sacrilege within their society, even among the many different species, and the punishment for such an act was without question or doubt. Anyone party to this crime would suffer the same fate as the one who perpetrated it and that is why rape of any kind was essentially nonexistent within the Union.

Popal thought long and hard after meeting with the ship captains. He thought back to his own Kavalian mate once again and the children she had given him. In all the years he had been with her, he had never taken another into his bed even though his position and status allowed this. As he thought about these things he came to the realization he had never desired another female. His wife was openly affectionate with him in their home and equally receptive in their bed. He did not treat her as a piece of property as many Kavalian men did. Popal had come to a single and glaring conclusion quite easily; he did not view his wife as property and while he may not have treated her as an equal in many matters, he did love her. And he loved the five children she had bore him over the years. That more than anything made his decision easy. He wanted to see them again. He wanted to feel her blond fur against his once more and perhaps experience what it could be like to view her as not only his wife, but an equal. He wanted to see his children grow old and have children of their own.

He wanted a life without constant war and death.

Following Pusintin blindly would insure that never occurred. It would only insure that he died out here in the void of space on some unknown world following a man who no longer held his respect.

That was not something Popal would allow to happen.

MANNE
ALPHA SITE TWO
200 KILOMETERS NORTH OF BASE ONE

For'mya Leonidas squatted on the cool grass and allowed her wolf senses to expand and absorb all around her. Since the day Martin Leonidas had turned her, For'mya had embraced her new life as a female wolf and the wife and mate to a Spartan. Not just any Spartan wolf, but the single most powerful Alpha male Lycavorian Spartan anywhere in the known Universe. Days and weeks and months training beside both Aricia and Martin had forged her into the female wolf she now was. For'mya was only slightly smaller than Dysea when in wolf form, though Aricia was the largest of all Martin's Queens when they joyfully ran together in their alternate forms. Anja was only a fraction smaller than her, but her wolf body was packed with nearly as much muscle as Aricia when she shifted to her stunning Persian red haired wolf form. Seeing the five of them running through the timber with Bella easily keeping up as she blurred was a sight that many had seen through the years, though none would ever truly understand. Having Martin as their husband and mate had brought all of them so much closer to their instincts and wild nature. Even Bella, though she was a pureblooded vampire, even she had embraced the wildness within her when they ran.

The endless hours of combat training with her fellow Queens had shaped her lithe elven form into physical perfection, as it had done for all of his Queens. All of the combined skill and knowledge the five of them possessed they had freely passed to each other over years of often rigorous and harsh training. When Cirith joined them that knowledge and skill increased even more. All of them now possessed female figures that could and did leave male wolves, humans and elves alike drooling over themselves in envy of their King. The quintessential combination of lush female curves and incredible muscular definition. For'mya and her fellow Queens were far more deadly than their beauty and grace allowed others to see. And it was very well known that King Leonidas worshiped those female figures in a way that left all of them completely breathless and utterly committed to him in every way. That knowledge and fact had grown even more pronounced in recent weeks and all of them knew there was nothing remaining in the Universe that could ever come between them again.

What had occurred with Pusintin was long behind her now. Cast away into the chasm of the past and left to rot and be forgotten where it belonged. As a Spartan female, and a female Alpha wolf, her much-loved mate would see to the retribution that would follow such a heinous act. The blinding love of Martin Leonidas and her fellow Queens had washed away all of the shame and humiliation she had carried within herself for her perceived betrayal. In many ways what took place with her mirrored what had happened to her beloved Aricia so long ago. It did not matter anymore. Not to her and certainly not to those who loved her in returned. Fedor and Eirene were now as precious to her as Arrarn and Byron, all of her children and perhaps even more so considering what they too had endured. They were loved by Martin as his very own children without question or doubt; viewed by Androcles and all the Leonidas children as their siblings without hesitation. Never in all her years of life had For'mya Leonidas ever experienced or been part of the sense of family and devotion that she felt now. For'mya's own father and mother had been swept up in this emotion and its sense of purpose. Anja's grandfather Fuleos, her sisters Sivana and Ceuma, Bella's brother Vonis, Dysea's mother Normya, and so many more that were close to them. Martin's half siblings from Gorgo and Riall had begun to take a more active role in their family for Martin had been the one to reach out to them, explained to them that they were his blood by virtue of who their mother was. Though they knew that Daniel and Julie, Tarifa and Aihola would always be Martin's true brother and sisters, he loved them no less. Jora and her mate were now living in Sparta as were two of Gorgo and Riall's sons. All of them had bought villas in Gytheio or in Sparta and when they all gathered at the Royal Estate in Sparta the love and affection and sense of family that swept the area was a palpable thing. All of them were now part of the Leonidas family and no matter who it touched, it remained with them forever.

The love For'mya carried for Martin Leonidas was beyond eternal. The love she carried for Aricia and Anja, Dysea and Isabella and now Cirith beyond endless. And it all centered and pushed outward from him. Even after so many years together, the hours upon hours she had screamed his name in unadulterated bliss, Martin still made her knees weak and her belly tighten in desire and anticipation just being close to him. He did it to all of them she knew and he truly did not understand or know how much he affected his Queens. They had talked of such things when it was just them and For'mya knew that none of them could ever look upon another man in the same way. No man could ever hope do to them what he did. His devotion to them was absolute as he had proven so often through the years, and while they all knew Aricia was his Anome and the closest to his soul; he loved them all with shameless abandon and did not care who saw this.

And their love for him was equal in every way.

They had made the decision all those years ago to never draw a distinction between themselves when it came to their children with Martin. They spoke with one voice as mothers and no matter whether they had given birth to them or not, they were mothers to all of Martin's children. As the firstborn and by his own accord, Androcles had forever cemented this course and mindset in all of his brothers and sisters and it had only grown more powerful as their children had grown older. It wrapped around Fedor and Eirene now as easily as them taking a breath, passed to them through the link Andro had established with them while still within For'mya's womb. No doubt. No question.

Now she would have her retribution and her justice.

Martin had spent these past weeks drawing Pusintin further and further away from any kind of support that he could possibly receive. He was stalking his prey as only an Alpha wolf could. With cold, calculating purpose and aim, for she had seen this side of him once before in a far away place. For'mya Leonidas knew Martin's intent. It was no different than the oath their son Androcles had made to Isabella when it came to Zarah. An oath that he now held sacred to himself and no other. Martin had not spoken the words out loud but For'mya knew what was in his heart. All of his Queens recognized this within him. There would be no forgiveness this time. No last second respite from his dark vengeance. This would only end in one way and they all knew it. For'mya had heard Martin Leonidas called the foremost tactician that anyone had ever met many times through the years as his Queen and now she had seen it first hand in these last weeks watching him. He was savagely devious and cruelly cunning and he was completely and utterly without mercy for those who were his enemies. All of them had seen flashes of this type of ruthless emotion within Androcles through the years; however, for the very first time it was dreadfully apparent where this type of harsh, merciless mentality came from within their son. They could see it now in Martin's beautiful dark eyes every time his brother's name was spoken.

For'mya turned her head quickly when she smelled their sweet scents and her dark brown eyes watched as Fedor and Eirene exited the cave entrance a hundred meters behind her and made their way towards her. Love for them filled her being as they settled on either side of her.

"Medwaw... wen forn talwyn?" Fedor asked her softly. (Mother... are you alright?)

For'mya smiled brilliantly and took their hands within hers. "Pendebrolfrinna aur keto." For'mya replied. "Pendebrolfrinna." (I am fine my son. I am fine.)

"Forn sava dyota." Eirene spoke. (You seen distant.)

For'mya nodded her head. They were only months old in real terms, but Fedor and Eirene held the knowledge and wisdom passed to them first by Androcles and then by their Bonded ones. They were twenty-five year old adults now, in every sense of the word, if not in actual years. Both of them had taken mates, first Miseo and then Iama had joined their family and they held the same devotion in them as their mates as the entire Leonidas family did for each other. It did not matter to For'mya or Martin and her fellow Queens that their mates were Kavalian, only that they were loved with the same commitment.

"I was thinking of what has transpired to bring us forward to this day." She said in reply to Eirene's questioning tone with a soft chuckle. "As your father and siblings are so fond of saying, it has been quite the ride."

"Do you... do you regret any of it mother?" Eirene asked her.

For'mya shook her head instantly. "Never." She spoke with conviction. "It has been the happiest time of my entire life. No matter what has occurred through the years to bring us here. We have Andro and Lisisa and Eliani... all of our children. And now we have you and Fedor among us. That only makes our family stronger. And so very happy."

"Will we... will we be accepted mother?" Fedor asked.

For'mya looked at him with wide eyes. "Accepted?" She gasped. "Carians Fedor... you have already been accepted. Both of you! There was never any question in that. Not one single moment!" She spoke looking at Eirene seeing the same question in her eyes. They were twins and she did not doubt their emotions and thoughts as they would share with each other without question. Deion and Nara and Retta and Calyb were the same.

"The moment you were conceived in my womb you were accepted and loved. Never doubt that for an instant! Either of you! I forbid it! Your mothers would forbid it! Your father would most certainly forbid it! And Androcles would turn you both over his knee if he knew you carried these thoughts within you. Especially after what he did!" She saw them both smile shyly at this. "I know it is not possible for you to touch your brother right now because of the distance between us, but I have seen within your father's thoughts and the conversations they have had. Androcles never ceases to ask of both of you and your progress. All of your siblings do, especially Eliani and Lisisa. Andro has... when he was very young he declared himself the protector of all his brothers and sisters... and to this very day he has done just that without fail. He continued that role he gave to himself with the both of you the day he touched you inside me. They all ache for the day they can stand before you and hold you. You had to have sensed this within Zarah for she is tied more closely with Andro than your other siblings.”

Fedor nodded. “Yes.” He said. “It was... it was...”

“It was beautiful.” Eirene said with a smile.

“And that is just from Zarah alone.” For'mya told them. “When they join us here... you will be overwhelmed. That is our strength. That is what so many do not understand about us. What many will never understand. Sometimes what even we do not understand.”

“Saan bruard hote sali.” Eirene said softly.

For'mya nodded. “Blood before all else.” She repeated the phrase. She squeezed their hands tightly. “We will have time... you will have time to discover what this truly means once this is over with and Pusintin has been dealt with. We will be going to the different planets that hold our people and try to discover what happen to them. There will be time to learn from the Feravomir and your mothers and I all you wish to know. And you both should work closely with Zarah. Young though she may be, she stands behind only your father and brother as one of the foremost hand to hand combatants within the Union. You could learn so much from her. And from Lucia.”

“Will this be done mother?” Eirene asked. “After today... will this be done?”

For'mya nodded as her head turned back to look at the lush green timber and mountains all around her. “Yes.” She answered confidently feeling Martin’s aura and resonance sweep through her even from across the miles that separated them. “When this day is done our future will truly begin. Your future. When this day is done...” For'mya’s eyes changed quickly to that of her wolf persona and her long fangs extended forth past her soft lips. “... the past will have been fully swept aside and balance restored. To your father. To our family. And we will never look back.”

So intent on each other and looking out over the timber that they were none of them detected the slight shimmer of shadows and the imperceptible wisp of dust from the ground as it disappeared into the cave behind them.

KAVALIAN DIEROY-CLASS HEAVY CRUISER SABER CLAW

The Kavalian officer stepped up to his Captain and held out the data pad. “Captain... we have received the signal from Commander Popal.” He said softly.

Weoerr took the pad slowly and nodded his head. “Then it will begin soon.” He said.

“Captain... do we...?” The man stopped talking.

“You have been my second for over twenty years now Terru.” Weoerr spoke. “Now is not the time to hold back what is on your mind?”

“Do we do the right thing Captain?” The man asked.

Weoerr was silent for a long moment before meeting his eyes. “To answer that Terru, I will ask another question? It is a question I began to ask myself a week after we began this foolhardy chase. What have we gained as a people? Since we began the war with the Coven, what have we gained as a people?”

“I do not understand sir?” Terru answered.

“Nor did I until I went to my cabin one night not so long ago and looked at the images of my mate and my children.” Weoerr answered. “I have not seen them for two years now. I have not felt her fur under my fingers, felt the firmness of her body in my grasp, nor the way her tail curls around my legs at the peak of our couplings. I have never treated her badly Terru, never demeaned her in our home, never in public. The children she has bore me are strong and proud. Even my two daughters. She is stern when needed but also fair. She does her duty as our culture dictates, but only now have I recognized what the light in her eyes is. The desire for more. The desire to openly be able to show me in public what she shows me in our bed. The desire for knowledge and hope. The desire for a future.” Weoerr stood up now and turned to face the man who had served him for so long. He didn’t notice the heads of his bridge crew as many turned to look at him and listen.

“I discovered as I looked back on the past that we have gained nothing.” Weoerr said. “All the lives we have lost; the battles we have fought and the friends and family we have had to bury, and we have gained nothing.” He shook his head slowly. “What have we gained Terru? Only misery and pain. Only the hate and distrust of most of the galaxy and the species within. And we brought this upon ourselves. Following Keleru and Pusintin blindly as we have has caused us to become pariahs across the stars. Their lust for power, the desire to have more, it has cost us far more than any of us stopped to realize. Until General Nruarani.” Weoerr turned slowly and saw the men on his bridge watching him intently now.

“Until one among us stopped to think about all that has happened. All that he desired.” Weoerr spoke more forcefully now, his voice carrying to all on the bridge of his ship. To a man they were all from his Pride. “And then he went out and took what he desired. Jalersi’Puat, a woman who we all know as tried for so long to make things better, being his primary goal. He did not do this by violence or deceit or coercion... but by trust and honesty and the belief that our people could be so much more than what we are.” Weoerr moved slowly across the bridge now. “What happened when Pian Nruarani did this I ask you? What happen when General Pian realized once he had Jalersi that there was so much more to gain? Dozens of Kavalian Prides flocked to his banner! Dozens! I have seen the reports myself. Not the one or two Prides that Pusintin and Keleru would have you think now follow him... but dozens! Among them some of the oldest Prides in our history!”

Weoerr turned slowly in the spot he now stood. “Change is coming! Change is upon us even now! If we do not drag ourselves from our past... then we will all disappear into the abyss of history! In order to survive we must change. I have come to discover that it is the basis for our very survival. As Pian Nruarani has proven, we do not need to abandon who we are in order to facilitate this change. Who among you would rather fight and bleed and possibly die when you can take a firm young woman in your embrace, treat her as if she is something much more than the dirt beneath our feet and make babies! To feel her tail as it caresses your own in not fear, but love and commitment! It will not be easy! Change is never easy! But without change, without hope, we as a people will die. By our own hand or by the hand of those we try and subjugate instead of befriend.”

Weoerr moved back to his chair and took a deep breath. “I will no longer allow my Pride to wallow in the past and die for goals that our not ours. I will lead Pride Mantsi into the future, kicking and screaming if I must, but I will insure we have a future to experience and take part in. Following Keleru and Pusintin only insures that many of us will die horrible deaths and never know why. It insures many of you will never know the warmth of a female who looks upon you not with fear as I said... but with love and respect and honor. You will never know the first cry of your child as they are pulled from your woman’s womb. I can no longer sit by and follow men who care only for what we can do for them. I will no longer blindly follow those who care not what happens to me or to my Pride. I act now for the future. The future of Pride Mantsi. I act for the future of the children many of you have not had yet. The additional sons and daughters I still wish to have with my mate.”

Weoerr looked around slowly. “Now you all know why we do what we are about to do.” He spoke. “Not for me. Not for personal gain. Not for glory in battle. But for the future of us all. It took me far too long to realize this... and I will carry the weight of the deaths that I alone must bear because of that... but I will not continue down this path of destruction and death for my Pride.” He settled into his chair and looked at the massive view window before him. “Terru...?”

Terru stepped in front of his Pride leader, a new gleam in his eye and a new purpose to his movements. “Captain!” He barked forcefully.

“Contact the others! Make sure our weapons and shields are powered down and begin to fall back from the rest of the fleet. Slowly now. We do not want the others to realize what we are doing until it is too late.” Weoerr said evenly. “Let them walk blindly into the ambush that Leonidas has undoubtedly prepared to greet them. And then let us pray that the Lycavorian King will heed our petition and not blast us into ashes for the crimes Pusintin has committed. It is most certainly not the way I would like to begin my future.”

MANNE
ALPHA SITE ONE
200 KILOMETERS NORTH OF BASE ONE

Koguth Juturi waited with the experience of a thousand years of fighting. His keen feline eyes swept across the ground before him, meticulously designed and built over the last weeks under the care of the Drow warriors Akor'dris and Bae'diraz. They had done an exacting job of it with the engineers from both the Union ship and his own people working in smooth concert. His men responded to the tall, muscular Drow female well, especially after seeing her dispatch four of his most skilled warriors in a training class without breaking a sweat. That action more than anything had cemented her status among his men. Aside from the fact that nearly all of them found her amber colored eyes fascinating. She had taught them so much about fighting a guerilla war. Tactics and skills that none of them had possessed before, but now that they were quickly mastering thanks to her knowledge. The weeks among these men and women had been like a gift from the heavens. He had found his beloved daughter Iama, seeing the beauty she had become inside and out. He had discovered the half elf and half wolf Prince who now owned his daughter's heart. A young man who worshiped the ground his daughter walked upon unlike anything he had ever seen. An affection that was returned by her ten fold.

Just two days ago his oldest son Mataen and his wife Corsa discovered that they would be bringing their first child into this world in seven months. It was an announcement that had Koguth loudly proclaiming this fact to all who would listen. And incredibly so many did listen. He and his family quickly discovered that the life of a child was something to celebrate. And then they congratulated him by the hundreds. It was the grizzled Lycavorian Hyperetes who stood to his left now that had even brought a large jug of Spartan Wine to his and Mani's shelter in Base One. They had drank and laughed and celebrated well into the evening, Iama wrapped within Fedor's grasp the entire time. And his son Nedoli holding the woman who had stolen his essence the moment he first saw her.

Koguth didn't know what had taken place, but not so long ago, Ceale had tossed all the horror she had experienced recently to the wind and embraced the growing love she had for his son. They hadn't been apart for nearly a month now, Ceale always touching Nedoli in some way, stroking the light fur that adorned his body. Her joyous cries in the dark of the night had kept many of them awake at times, but the brightness of her eyes and face in the mornings after pronounced to all that she was now his son's wife. Ceale had even gone so far as to come to him and request that she be allowed to take the Juturi name as her own. Koguth had told her this was not necessary but she had insisted. It was not a large ceremony, but Martin Leonidas and his Queens had attended as Ceale was officially and affectionately welcomed into the Juturi Pride. She made it a point to tell everyone who she greeted what her name now was.

Koguth's love for his daughter had brought his Pride out of the darkness. And now they were growing and embracing all they were learning. Even the young man he had brought and promised Iama's hand to had discovered a female Elvin engineer among the crew of the ARC ROYAL. He doted on her like a precious gem, just as Koguth had told all of his men how they should treat their women, and the affection was returned equally by her to him. Like Ceale she was always seen stroking his soft fur when they were together and taking great delight in being wrapped within his powerful arms.

"Thinking about everything that has happened in these last months General?" The voice broke into Koguth's thoughts and he turned to look at the man.

Hyperetes Jormal Pescneu had a smile on his face as he looked at him. This man had been by his side since their encounter on that moon. It seemed like so long ago when in reality it had only been a few months. This senior Lycavorian Spartan was as skilled as Koguth had ever seen a soldier. He had not intended to remain with Koguth, but after a few weeks Jormal asked to be assigned as an aide and liaison to the Kavalian General. They had hit it off immediately.

Koguth nodded his head with a small smile. "Yes I am Jormal." He replied honestly. "My only reason for beginning this journey was to find my daughter. And look at us. She is... she is back with her family now, as beautiful a flower as I have ever seen, with the love of a man who views and treats her as his very own Queen. My youngest son has discovered what he so wanted in Ceale and she has greatly honored my Pride by taking our name even when she did not have to. My oldest will give me my first grandchild soon. We have discovered friends and comrades. This is not something I had ever dreamed of when I started this quest, and now I can not begin to imagine our lives without it.”

Jormal nodded his head. “It is the same for many of us General. Don’t doubt what you feel is not the same for us. The actions of the Juturi Pride, of General Pian, it has changed the views of many minds. Our people sit amongst each other now and laugh and joke. Elvin and Lycavorian females cling to the arms of many of your men because they see a future in them. A future they could have. Some of your females as well.”

Koguth looked at him surprised. “Truly?” He asked knowing that many of the females within the Juturi Pride had not undergone the biogenic procedures to remove the fine coat of hair from their bodies.

Jormal nodded his head. “Half a dozen of my men that I know of.” He answered. “As your people now do, we do not look at ones outward appearance in judgment. There are many Kavalian females who have not had their natural appearances altered by force. And their beauty is very fascinating because of their appearance. Many things led us as Lycavorians to gaze past what an individual looks like and see within them. As the Crown Prince has done with the High Coven, you and the King have done with your people. Hopefully many will begin to see this and take notice of it.”

Koguth nodded his head. “I intend to see that it does Jormal. To the very best of my ability.”

“It won’t be easy sir.” Jormal said.

Koguth shook his head slowly. “No it won’t.” He agreed. “But when is anything truly worthwhile easily accomplished Jormal?”

Jormal chuckled. “Never.”

“We are ready.” Koguth spoke. “And this day will begin the future and the path we should have started thousands of years ago. It will begin with us.”

“Yes it will.” Jormal spoke. “I’ve always wanted to kick the ass of a Puma Bane soldier.”

Koguth laughed heartily taking no offense in the least at his words. “Yes... so have I Jormal. So have I.” They turned when Kalis and Mata walked up to them.

“Kalis?” Koguth spoke to the young man who had secured their path for them and not even realized it.

“We just finished checking the perimeter sensors General.” Kalis told him calmly. “The defensive positions are perfect and all the minefields are active.”

“The Puma Bane will undoubtedly be in the lead and catch the brunt of the first barrage.” Mata spoke. “The more we take out in the first seconds the better we will be.”

Koguth looked at the former Puma Bane Commander officer. “You seem rather anxious to have this happen Mata.” He said.

Mata met his eyes. “The Puma Bane are scum General.” He spoke. “I was one of them once remember.”

“You are not Puma Bane now Mata.” Koguth told him. “You have proven that beyond doubt to all of us.”

Mata nodded his head. “Perhaps.” He said softly. “But until I can remove the blight they now cause upon our people I will not be at peace. I helped to train most of them Koguth. Their shame is my shame.”

“No Mata.” Kalis told him.

“Yes it is my boy.” He said evenly. “And I intend to see that shame erased from the very memory and past of our history. It no longer has a place in what we have begun to build. If it ever had a place at all. I will make sure that the stain the Puma Bane have caused to our history will be extinguished permanently. And I will do it with the honor I have learned from Kalis and you and so many others these last weeks.”

“Avoi.” Jormal spoke softly.

Koguth nodded his head. “As will we all.” He said. “As will we all.”

“Akor’dris and Bae’diraz are taking the western side of the compound with most of the Juturi Pride fighters.” Kalis said. “Mata and I will take the east with a company of Spartans.”

Koguth nodded. “Jormal and I will take the north with the remaining three companies of Spartans and Muton’s Watcher forces. Remember to break when you receive the signal from King Leonidas Kalis. Your presence will be needed with Queen For’miya and your siblings and Mata is more than capable.”

Kalis nodded. “Yes sir.”

“Ceale and Serale are quite secure within the new medical bunker to handle any serious casualties. Mataen and Nedoli are in command of the three squads of our Pride who protect them.” Koguth spoke. “A dozen Hadarian Field medics will be directing any immediate trauma from their position half a kilometer behind us and then deciding when and who gets moved back to Ceale's position. They are the more experienced and they will have final say in that. I do not want any foolish heroic attempts made by anyone. We will have the element of surprise initially yes, but we will still be outnumbered perhaps three to one. Mata is very correct. We need to remove the majority of their force in the first minute. It will descend to personal combat very quickly and the fewer we have left alive the better for us." He looked at them. "As King Leonidas ordered, there is to be no mercy shown. They would not show it to us and we do not have the facilities for prisoners. We have all been given these COM implants and we know what command channels are to be ours. Maintain COMS at all times to keep each other aware of what is happening all around us. Should anything go wrong on either front, and you can not hold, immediately collapse back to the Field Medical area with the Hadarians, protect them and then we will call in assistance from Torma or the other dragons we have supporting us. If need be from the ships above as well."

"If they throw aside their weapons and give up General?" Kalis asked.

Koguth's feline eyes narrowed and became like dark flints. "Fuck them!" He hissed in reply. "They should have thought about that before the rise of this day." He looked at them. "To your positions! The gods be with us all!"

ULU ARIZONA

Admiral Miranda Lorian sat in her command chair and watched as her crew did their duties without hesitation. Watching them as she often did now, Miranda felt a swell of pride within her. They were the finest men and women she had ever worked with in her life, no matter their species. Her eyes cut to where Zaala and Chizz worked seamlessly next to one another at the engineering control stations. They would comment to one another in a soft voice and the other would nod or answer, their hands never idle as they flew across the consoles. Zaala and Chizz had a hand in building the ARIZONA and her engines and no one could make their ship sing like they did. Zaala and E'dira had become fast friends over the last weeks and she and Steven had been to their quarters often for dinner or just to relax. Ben had told her that even though she had found E'dira, not to dismiss the other relationships she could form with the rest of her crew. Miranda took it to heart but neither she or E'dira wanted to rush anything. Zaala and Steven were enough for now. They had joked and worked together ever since coming to the ARIZONA, and they had the most in common with them.

The ARIZONA and her crew had performed to perfection so far. The ship was unlike any ships within the Union fleet and had blown away all expectations by her engineers and the few designers at Dreamland who had held doubts. Miranda was no fool though and she hadn't got this far by being careless. She knew that things could go very bad at the worst possible time and she drove her crew just as hard as she drove herself. It helped that the vast majority of her senior officers were no different than her in many regards and they ran their departments from the front. They worked longer hours and were not afraid to jump in and get their hands dirty right alongside their people. When she walked the decks or sat in the mess lounge and just observed her crew, she could detect the sense of pride and purpose at what they were doing and what they had accomplished so far. Most of them knew their commander had a direct line to the Crown Prince and the King because of their history together. She had lived with the Leonidas family on the Royal Island for over a year by all accounts. They knew that no matter what they needed, all Miranda had to do was make one call and it was theirs.

Miranda's head turned when E'dira's voice sounded out. "Admiral?"

"E'dira?" She said.

"The Kavalian ships radiating the beacon are beginning to fall back from the main force." E'dira reported. "They are doing so slowly so as not to draw attention to themselves and it appears to be working so far."

Miranda nodded. "Maybe that message we got from this Popal character was for real." She said.

"The remainder of their Task Force is proceeding on a direct course to Manne." E'dira said. "Their troop ships have all dropped to a lower position and are beginning to break for the surface of the planet."

Miranda leaned forward in her command chair. "It's about to begin." She said.

"I estimate ninety seconds before they begin to enter the atmosphere." E'dira spoke.

“COM officer... get me the HORNET.” Manda barked out.

“Aye Admiral.” The voice echoed. A moment later. “Captain Janon responding.”

Manda looked at the holo disc in the floor of the bridge just in front of her chair as the figure of the Lycavorian man came into clear view.

“Admiral.” Janon spoke respectfully but with a small smile.

“Christ Janon... will you stop that!” Miranda exclaimed with disgust on her face.

The large Lycavorian had been with her since this all began and they were close friends. He smiled and bowed his head to her. “We are ready Manda.” He said.

“You and the HORNET take the port side, we’ll take the starboard.” Miranda told him. “All WOLFPACKS are to break the moment we begin firing. RAPTOR E3s will begin jamming the moment we attack! I don’t want that fucker Pusintin’s GREAT SOUL to be anything but a smoking hulk once we are finished.”

“Chop off the head and the body will die.” Janon spoke.

Miranda nodded. “Once we clear the first attack run, launch everything you got. We need to chop their numbers up quick in case those who are falling back are playing us.”

“You think they are baiting us?” Janon asked.

Miranda shrugged. “I don’t know. But let’s make sure if they are, we are ready. Akemi and the ARC ROYAL will be coming in from behind them in case they do, but let’s keep our eyes open.”

Janon nodded. “We’ll be ready.” He spoke.

“Thirty seconds!” E'dira called out.

Miranda got to her feet now. “Fleet Wide!” She barked.

The female COM officer had already anticipated this and stabbed her finger down on her panel. “Fleet wide open Admiral.”

“This is Admiral Lorian.” Miranda barked. “This is about to kick off people! We got our King and all of our Queens on the surface of Manne! I do not want to be the one who tells Androcles that we allowed his parents to get killed! Everyone on their toes! You are the best at what you do! Let’s kick the Kavalians in the balls just like we did at Kranek! The gods go with you all! Lorian out!”

“Ten seconds!” E'dira called out.

“Weapons! I want full broadside port barrage! Max yield on all weapons!” Miranda barked. “Port side turrets to max deflection! Starboard batteries to free roam. Lock them up people!”

“That’s it!” E'dira barked out. “All Kavalian troops ships have entered the atmosphere!”

“Here we go!” Miranda snarled. “ARIZONA Attack Wing! Commence attack! Commence attack! Let’s get some!”

CHAPTER THIRTY-THREE

SPARTA'S WRATH

Mari watched her intently as Nara finished checking the Mark Five ArmorPly body armor she now wore and then stepped back and looked at her with those same azure colored eyes as her older brother Androcles. They drifted over her now armored form looking for anything that might be out of place it seemed, but finding nothing. Then Nara finally turned those amazing eyes on her own blue/green orbs once more. It seemed that the eyes of Nara’s mothers always seemed so bright and catching, just as Nara’s azure orbs were, but Nara’s azure eyes and those of her mother and brother were far more breathtaking in her opinion. She saw Nara smile at her warmly.

Mari was five inches shorter than Nara’s own five foot five inch frame, but Nara had to admit to herself, she was breathtaking in her beauty. Her breasts strained against the confines of the Mark V body armor, easily as large and as firm as her mother Anja’s goldur. There was no doubt that Lady Mari had many men chasing her back home simply for their size and firmness; for Nara knew that many men liked larger goldur on their wives and mates. Nara also knew for certain that many young wolves looked at her and saw the very same thing since her goldur were slightly larger than her own mother's. Mari made the Mark V body armor look good on her, even though that was definitely not its purpose. Though barely five foot tall, the ArmorPly Mark V conformed like a second skin to the parts of her body that were not protected by the enhanced armor plating. Her taut legs were long for her small frame and Nara had to admit Lady Mari had an ass that was perfect in nearly all aspects. Her long, reddish brown hair, now wrapped tightly in a single pony tail, was lush and shiny with health pulled over one shoulder as it was. Her blue green eyes were wide and her hands were shaking slightly. Nara took Mari's hands in hers and squeezed tightly causing Mari to look at her once more.

Nara Leonidas did enjoy the company of men, but only Deion knew that she desired women far more, at least at this time in her life. She kept nothing from her twin no matter that he was a male, and they kept each other's secrets very close to their hearts. Nara did not doubt that Andro probably knew as closely tied as he was with all of their siblings, and he was far more perceptive than people gave him credit for. His insight was downright scary at times but she didn't think any of her other siblings were aware, and she knew Andro would never violate her privacy or speak of it for any reason. It would not matter to them she knew, but Nara didn't really know for sure herself at this time, so why openly state that until she knew for certain. Nara was not shy and since she had already gone through her Coming of Age fever only seven months ago, she was free to explore and she had done this on more than one occasion, with two different women and one man.

Lycavorian physiology was relatively simple, with most Lycavorians appearing older than they actual were. It had become a very common occurrence in the last few generations and while she was only a few months shy of eighteen years of age, Nara and Deion both appeared to be in their early twenties to most individuals who were not Lycavorian. Their scents gave away their real ages to their own people, but to those who did not have enhanced senses it often came as a surprise to those who discovered how old they really were. Her mother Anja had described it as a phase in Lycavorian evolution once, but it really did not matter since Lycavorian children were almost always imprinted with at least some form of the memories and knowledge of both their parents. Though this evolution had been happening for many years now, most young female wolves like Nara chose to experiment and discover new things once their fevers had come and gone. It was still seen as a heinous crime to take a female wolf before her Coming of Age but there were many instances of young female wolves who had only just passed through their Coming of Age fevers taking mates soon afterward, but still many more chose not to. Her father's return and the openness and adventurous nature of her beloved mothers had instilled a sense of exploration in the young generations of Lycavorians and nearly all the species within the Union, both male and female, and they had embraced that entirely.

Knowing who Nara was kept most of the casual male wolves at bay and for those Alphas and others who could not control their urges and allowed their cocks to rule their actions, Deion or one of her brothers had always been present and put that to rest right away. No male Alpha wolf in their right mind wanted to come into conflict with any of her brothers, let alone a pureblood one and that didn't even bring into contemplation of what angering her father would encompass. This mind set applied to pretty much all of the young males of different species across the Union. While the incident was never openly discussed or admitted by anyone, there were many rumors still filtering about of what had happened to the young man who had tried to force himself on Eliani shortly after her fever ended. No male in their right mind wanted to tempt the fates when it came to a Leonidas daughter anymore and risk the wrath of the Leonidas family. The single man who Nara had taken into her bed was sweet and attentive to her and it was a very nice experience, but both of them knew the emotion was just not there for either of them since he was still very young as well. He was still a treasured friend to both her and Deion but they knew nothing would come of it and parted as very close friends. They still spoke to one another on occasion but Nara just enjoyed the softness of another woman's body right now. While still very new to everything, she had experienced far more pleasure with the two woman than the one man.

As for Mari, Nara found her very attractive, but she knew immediately that her Etheric resonance burned only for her brother. It was also quite obvious to anyone who was even half Lycavorian for they could smell it in her sweet orange flavored scent as well.

"How does that feel?" Nara asked finally.

"It is... it is rather tight." Mari answered honestly.

Nara nodded her head. "It is always tight at first. It will conform to your body within the hour and you won't even notice it. After that it will remember. Besides... you aren't exactly undeveloped if you get my meaning."

Mari smiled and her cheeks blushed slightly. "I take after my mother." She spoke. "It is a curse sometimes."

Nara laughed softly. "It is a curse only if you find a man who doesn't know what he is doing." She stated with more confidence than actual experience.

Mari joined in the soft laughter and nodded her head. "I suppose you are right." She said with a smile. Nara Leonidas made her feel completely at ease and Mari found her to be witty and very friendly.

Nara stared at her for a moment as Mari inspected the armor on her arms with her eyes. "Are you ok? Truth now Mari." She asked softly.

Mari nodded her head quickly and met her eyes. "I'm just... I have... I'm terrified Nara." She stammered out the answer finally. "I have never done something like this."

Nara smiled at her. "Neither have we... so don't feel bad." She stated. "Andro wouldn't allow us to do this if he believed we could not pull it off. Trust me. My fervor is... he is no fool Lady Mari."

"Have you... have you been in...?" Mari began to ask.

Nara nodded her head slowly. "When we pulled Sheva's parents from that colony. Deo and I were..." "Deo?"

Nara grinned now. It was a simple thing, but it served to make Mari relax even more. "I couldn't pronounce his full name when we were babies." Nara said. "It only ever came out as Deo. The nickname stuck." She answered with a shrug. "We had a brief encounter with some vampire hunters. They got the drop on me. Deo fell upon them like a storm."

"He... he killed them?" Mari asked softly.

Nara nodded her head. "He saved me." She said. "They were not pleasant individuals and some of what they were saying they were going to do to me was vile. Deo is... he can be very protective of me. I have scolded him in the past about this but he does not listen. It is a trait prevalent in all my brothers. That day however... that day I was very happy he ignored me."

"You are twins." Mari said. "Praetorian and Mage. That is not uncommon from what I have heard."

Nara nodded in agreement. "Yes... I guess so."

"I can feel your Etheric resonance." Mari says. "And... and his as well. It is so powerful and clear."

Nara looked at her. "You are a Pralor. Isn't that normal for your people? To be able to feel the resonance of others."

Mari nodded quickly. "Oh yes... but his resonance is... it is not as resounding as your brother or father... but it is so..." Mari wanted to say delicious to her but she stopped herself. "It is so focused and pure. Much more than any of my people I have met except for my fa... my Uncle."

Nara smiled at her as she detected the slight spike in Mari's orange flavored scent. This young Pralor woman truly wanted her brother and it was so very obvious to her as a woman and a wolf. And it would be obvious to every male Lycavorian able to detect her scent. Something that would make it easier for her going forward Nara knew. "Yes... well father and Andro have had to beat Deo enough times to make him stop being so reckless. It hasn't worked for the most part."

Mari's eyes looked shyly downward. "He truly has two educational degrees?" She asked softly looking back up at her.

Nara chuckled gently and squeezed her hands again. "Our medwaw Dysea is a taskmaster when it comes to our schooling. You heard us talking about her." She said with a small twinkle in her eye. "Combined with our grandmother Gorgo, who just happens to be a teacher, through the years they have made sure all of us have at least two degrees. Education is a blessed gift to them and they have been rigid and unmoving about it as we all grew. Our sister Eliani has three degrees, though you wouldn't know it from the way she acts. Our sister Lisisa as well. They insist that we all have two avenues to fall back on when the fighting finally ends. We will not be fighting our entire lives Lady Mari. That is our hope anyway."

"Please... my name is just Mari." She stated. "I don't know how that started."

"It is a term of honor and respect." Nara told her. "You are Murano's daughter and you deserve such."

Mari's eyes flew open wide. "You... you know!" She gasped in disbelief.

Nara nodded slowly. "Every Lycavorian can tell. Your scents give it away."

“Please Nara...!” Mara gasped gripping her hands tightly and pulling her closer. “You... you can not tell him! I... please promise me! I don’t...”

Nara shook her head. “We may not understand the reasoning behind this Mari, but it is not our place to change that. He will not discover it from any of us.”

Mari’s blue/green eyes were wide as she looked at her. “All of you can...?”

Nara nodded her head. “Each member of a Lycavorian family has a unique scent, but they always retain the base scent of their ancestors within their blood. Or something similar to it. This is the same for any species for the most part really. Any Lycavorian would be able to detect this is your scents.”

“It is...” Mara looked at the floor. “I want to tell him... I do! I don’t think my mother knows that I have discovered this but... it is so very complicated.”

“Is it really?” Nara asked her gently. “Or does it just seem that way?”

“He... my father... he is haunted by horrible things.” Mari said softly looking at the deck once more but not releasing her hands. “After the war... he felt it was all his fault. That so many died because of him. What he had supposedly failed to do. It wasn’t true. None of it. But he couldn’t fight the feelings. He finally found peace in my mother’s arms for a time...” Nara saw the small smile cross her lips. “But the nightmares always came back. He did not want to burden her with such things and he did the only thing he could think of.”

“He left in order to protect her. Or so he thought.” Nara said.

Mari nodded. “He didn’t know she was pregnant with me. And my mother did not want to force him to stay with this knowledge.”

“Why hide who you are Mari?” Nara asked.

Mari looked at her. “My mother... Tobia... she is a Praetorian as well.” She said. “She was never listed among the official roles of Praetorians because of her skills and her location. My mother is... she is exceptionally skilled in shielding herself. You could be standing next to her and not be able to feel even a tremor of her resonance. Chief Elder Sumar wanted it like this... she never knew why... but I think it was because he saw something that no one else did. I believe he felt my mother was meant for something else. That she was meant for my father. There were many among my people who followed Lorendo’s fool ideology and blamed the Praetorians for what had befallen our people, and my mother did not want me subjected to such ridiculous things as I grew. Uncle... Uncle Delnash understood completely and he and my Aunt agreed instantly when my mother went to them. No one... no one knows the truth except Kesyla. Not even that idiot Daron. She does not think I know but she has always been in my life, always close by. It was just easier this way given her history and that of my father.”

“Does she know that you are aware of your history?” Nara asked. “That she is your mother? That Murano is your father?”

Mari nodded her head. “I think she does. I never hesitated to go to her about anything when I was growing. She was my very best friend. I believe she had to know I would figure it out sooner or later.”

Nara drew Mari’s hands up and pressed them against her chest. “Like I said... it is not our place to tell him. He will discover it though. And better it come from you. Or your mother.”

“I know.” Mari said softly. “I can sense her. She is worried about me. I think my Uncle may have sent her to Manne, but I’m not sure. She shields better than anyone I have ever known like I said. Even my father.”

“Well... you are Murano’s daughter... and you have no idea how much his presence among us makes my father and brothers feel.” Nara said. “All of us with this gene inside of us. To finally know and at least partially understand what we are and what we can do. It is very special for us. That is why you are referred to as you are. It is a title of honor.”

“Even though I don’t want it.” Mari asked her.

Nara chuckled now. “You should see all of us as we try to avoid being called Princes and Princesses.” She said. “Our father and mothers berate us all the time for trying to avoid our titles. Even though they do the very same thing more than we do.”

Mari smiled now as well, becoming once more at ease. “I saw this with your father and mothers on Manne.” She said. “It makes you uncomfortable? Your positions and titles?”

Nara nodded her head. “All of us. My pureblood brothers most of all. Arrarn, Resumar, Calyb and Bryon do not have to deal with it as much as Andro, Deni and Deo. They are the pureblood sons of our father and sometimes they hate the distinction this gives them among our people more than anything. There are many Lycavorian families who think that we have grown too distant from the old ways. They believe, and are always attempting, to insinuate their own children into our family to try and garner status and power. Fortunately Andro and Denali no longer have to deal with it. Sadi or my sister would rip the face from any woman who tried to come between them. And I have no doubts that Ne'Veha and Arduri and the others would do the same. We do not wish to be looked at as something special. We are... all of us, Lycavorians and Spartans. That is all we aspire to be."

"He is... your brother Deion... he is so very handsome." Mari said even more softly. It was barely a whisper that was meant only for Nara to hear as a woman.

Nara tilted her head to the side smelling the desire for Deion once more in Mari's sweet orange flavored scent. And it was a powerful scent. Nara also detected another scent on her. It was vague and very old, but it was there. A unique Lilly flavored scent not unlike the beautiful flowers that dotted the Royal Compound in Sparta. Even as old as it was it still tickled Nara's nose delightfully.

"Well..." She said playfully. "Don't let him hear you say that. It will go to his head." Nara told her with a smile.

Mari lifted her eyes and gazed at Nara as she laughed gently. Nara Leonidas was so open and unrestrained, and even after what she had just discovered her resonance echoed with calm and peace. "Does he... is there someone in..."

"Deo?" Nara asked seeing Mari nod. She shook her head quickly. "No. There are females from many different Lycavorian families who have shown interest in him because of who he is, but he does not pursue them. Most only want to get close to him because of who our parents are and the perceived standing they think they will gain as I said before. And Deo is... he is like Andro in many ways. He does not like the attention because he only wants a woman to share his life with." Nara answered realizing what she was saying. There were indeed several Lycavorian females and a handful of elven females that she could recall that had shown great interest in getting to know her brother. Even as she thought back, she realized that none of them had made Deion even flinch with interest, until she saw him looking at this young woman in front of her only a little while ago.

"But your brother... he has six wives." Mari said. "As does your father."

Nara nodded in agreement. "Yes... but they are different pieces of a whole for Andro. For my father. My mothers, Andro's wives and mates, they all speak with the same voice and many times think with the same mind. Almost as if they are one. They were all meant for one another by a greater power than we can understand. Emotionally, for Andro and my father, there may be six of them but they are essentially one person. I think it is one of the main reasons we have never drawn a distinction between our mothers. They are all our mothers, as if each of them gave birth to us. That is what each of us feel within us." Nara looked at her and smiled. "It's very confusing isn't it?"

Mari shook her head quickly. "No." She answered without hesitation. "I... I understand it completely." This statement caused her to blink several times for she did indeed understand it. She could feel it within her and understood it all.

"You... you do?" Nara asked surprised. "Most people who we try to explain it to end up grabbing their heads in pain because they can't comprehend it."

"What is this about our parents?" The voice echoed from behind Mari and she turned quickly. Her stomach tightened as Deion walked up with the small bundle in his arms. His tall frame moved just past her and he leaned over beside Nara's face, nuzzling her soft cheek in a brotherly fashion. Nara smiled and relished in the attention of her twin. "Were you telling Lady Mari of our parents the Taskmasters?" He asked with a smile.

Nara grinned and reached up to slap his cheek softly with her hand. Mari noticed that this was common among Lycavorians and was meant more as a show of affection than anything else. "Careful... you know they have ears everywhere." She said.

Deion's eyes rolled and he nodded. "How true." He said. He turned to look at Mari now and she had to suppress the gasp that wanted to escape her lips when she looked into those amazing dark brown eyes. Once more Mari could not get over how much more handsome he was in person, or how well built he was under the ArmorPly. He held out the small bundle to her. "The Quartermaster put this together for you. Andro said that you already have a P9, but this one has the entire schematics for this ship and the Coven ships on it. It might be easier to work with. At least for this mission anyway. I had your bio-signature encoded into its memory and your name engraved on the top.”

Mari’s hand brushed across where she saw her name in cursive letters across the front edge of the small P9. She looked up at him with glittering blue green eyes and smiled, feeling flush as she realized he had done this for her. “Thank you.” She said.

Deion held up the second item and Mari saw the small holster and sidearm in it. “I had him take one of our smaller KM14 Magnums and adjust the load somewhat. Your hands are smaller and this should fit perfectly now within your grip. And it won’t kick as much as our other kinetic magnums.”

“You are giving me a weapon?” She asked somewhat surprised.

“Our fervon may have brought peace to the Union and High Coven,” Nara told her as she leaned against Deion. “But these fools we are going to be facing do not wish that to continue. They cling to the old ways and hatreds. Most of them anyway. Having you go unarmed is really stupid. Our brother isn’t stupid.”

Deion chuckled. “However... if you ask our grandmother or tenna Deia they might say he is touched in the head since he continues to act as insanely as our father acts. It drives them malda.”

“Crazy.” Nara added quickly knowing Mari did not know their language just yet.

Mari watched as Deo leaned over and looped the belt around her waist. She had to once more suppress the shudder she felt building in her as his hands moved quickly. His shoulder and head came closer to her as he leaned over and she could almost feel the heat that radiated from his body. Not to mention that his musky, male smell was quite delectable. She waited until he had fully fastened the holster on her waist and then stood back.

Mari did not notice the struggle Deion was having at keeping his Alpha male aura in check. Her sweet orange flavored scent was nearly overpowering to him and she was not even wolf. Nara took notice of this right away and smiled inwardly. Yes... her brother had it bad... and he had only known her for a few hours.

Deion got his emotions under control and held out his hand towards the corridor he had come down. “We should probably get to the Shuttle Bay. Captain Feron has initiated contact with Moran and once that communication is done we will be leaving.”

Nara stepped forward taking Mari’s arm and causing her blue green eyes to tear away from her brother reluctantly. Nara felt Deion’s aura pulse her with love and thanks. He knew she could sense his intense interest in Mari and both of them needed to be fully concentrating on the mission. Her actions bought him the few moments he needed to center himself and for that he was grateful.

“...lost twenty-seven men capturing them Admiral.” Feron was speaking to the image of Moran in the holotransmission from the back of the G9. Yuri, Carisia and Sheva were kneeling behind him wearing hand restraints and all of them with blood stains and bruises on their faces.

“We disabled the frigate they were on and boarded her. The Immortal scum Pa'cour was killed during our assault. I must apologize for this Admiral. I know you wanted him alive but he... he killed four of my men before we could...”

Moran waved his hand dismissively. “He was an animal!” Moran hissed. “He got off easy! You have his body?”

“I will kill you for taking Pa'cour from me Robert Moran!” Yuri snarled viciously, her cobalt blue eyes filled with unrestrained hate.

Feron turned and watched as one of his men shoved Yuri to the deck none too gently and he nodded his head as he turned back to Moran. “In the rear cargo area sir.” He replied. “Your wife went crazy when he fell Admiral and...”

“She is not my wife Captain!” Moran barked. “Not after taking that foul monster into her bed!”

Feron nodded once more bowing his head in repose. “My apologies sir.”

“The ship?” Moran asked.

“We executed those of the crew who survived the assault Admiral. Just as you ordered.” Feron answered. “We then timed the engines to overload. The explosion erased all evidence that we were ever here.”

Moran nodded. "Good. The program has been compromised and that bitch Juconi is going to tell me how they found our people. Then I am going to give her to my men and let them rape and feed on her blood until she goes insane."

"I will tell you nothing! You... you killed my parents!" Sheva shouted in anger.

Moran chuckled. "When I get done with you bitch you'll be singing like a bird." He spat. He turned to Feron. "Nothing is to happen to Yuri or Carisia Captain. As long as I hold that stupid cunt, Leonidas won't do anything. He cares so much for her whoring body that he will not attempt any retaliation. And he will withdraw all his support from the Coven if I threaten to kill her. I may even let him watch as she is used in front of him to get my point across. He will know not to play with me."

"As you order." Feron spoke. "Shall we return to the former Fleet location once we return to our ship?"

Moran shook his head quickly. "No. I'm shifting our location. I'm waiting at the border now and I will bring half a dozen escorts to your location and you will transfer them to my ship then. We should arrive at your location in under two hours." Moran met Feron's eyes. "You have done well Captain. Once we retrieve Yuri and the others, considered yourself promoted to Colonel."

Feron's eyes grew wide and he bowed his head in acknowledgment. "Thank you sir."

"We'll see you shortly." Moran hissed abruptly and the transmission ended.

Feron looked at the pilot of the G9. "Clear?" He asked softly.

The man glanced at his instruments and then back to Feron. "No signs of a trace program. Or residual link. We're clean."

Feron nodded and turned quickly to see Yuri, Carisia and Sheva rising to their feet, two of his men helping Yuri and then slashing the restraints off. "Give them towels to clean the Nau'shindcal d'l'Vlos from their faces."

Yuri took the towel that was held out to her as the ramp of the G9 began to come down. She looked at Feron. "A convincing act Captain." She said.

"Forgive my tone and words Princess." Feron spoke bowing his head slightly.

Yuri shook her head. "No forgiveness needed." She stated.

"Indeed." Pa'cour spoke as he came up to them with Andro at his side. "Your words may have given us an added advantage."

"Sir?" Feron asked.

"The inflection and choice of your words may have been just enough to make Moran lower his guard ever so slightly." Pa'cour spoke. "It might be just enough to make what we are going to do easier."

"He certainly has a large amount of vitriol in his voice for you mother." Carisia spoke as she pressed against Andro and his arm slipped easily around her waist. "I wonder why that is?"

Yuri chuckled softly now. "I may have said some things the day Pa'cour and I left." She stated as she met her eyes with a twinkle in her own. "Some rather crude comments in regards to his manhood and such. I don't think he appreciated them."

"You told him that he..." Onera began speaking as she moved up the ramp with Dorian.

"Onera!" Yuri gasped.

"It was very funny mother." Onera said.

"It does not need to be repeated however." Yuri stammered.

Sheva smiled now as well as she moved up beside Onera. "You'll have to tell us at some other time Onera." She said.

Yuri shook her head as she took Pa'cour's hand within hers. "We should launch within a few minutes Andro." She said quickly. "He will push hard to get here now that he thinks Feron has captured us."

Andro nodded his head. "Agreed. Eli will activate the gas the moment your G9 enters the landing bay." He said. "Sheva and Carisia will need to remain with you in case he wants to see you before you enter the bay. It's going to be a tight fit for Anthar... but he will tolerate it for the short run."

Yuri looked at Carisia. "Remember... only the immediate corridors outside the landing bay are large enough for Anthar Dalharil. You will need to move quickly to secure the weapons locker and disengage the landing bays controls so your STRIKERS can land."

Carisia nodded. "I know. Onera and Sheva will be with me. Don't worry. You are the one who is heading to the bridge through nine decks of the ship ilhar."

Hearing how freely that word came to Carisia now filled Yuri with a sense of happiness and peace she had not known until recently. It truly warmed her heart to know that at least part of her past was not as vile as the rest of her former life. Carisia and Lucia had made her see that and it gave her strength to know how they felt now. It helped immensely that Carisia, Lucia and Onera, though only half sisters to each other got along rather famously and had from the outset. "All of which will be empty of activity thanks to the gas." Yuri said. "We will have no issues reaching the bridge quickly."

Pa'cour nodded. "I will leave a detachment of my men in the landing bay to secure our ship with your force and we will move towards the bridge from there. Your brother should have secured it by then." He spoke looking at Andro.

"Deo will get it done." He said confidently. "He's young... but he thinks quick on his feet and Nara tempers his recklessness. Most of the time anyway."

"Well... as long as he does not use his Praetorian abilities to blast a hole in the hull or bridge view windows we should be fine." Yuri stated with a small smile.

"I'll remind him of that." Andro stated. He looked at Feron. "I advise you and your crew to remain in the ship until it is done Captain. No sense in having you get under foot. Onrad will hit Moran's escorts the moment he detects your G9 powering down. Armen will assist if he needs to."

Feron nodded his head. "I understand." He spoke.

"Just be prepared for the fact that his arrogance and anger might have him actually waiting for you in the bay..." Andro told them. "If that is the case, adjust the plan accordingly to secure the objectives."

Yuri nodded her head. "We will."

"My teams are forming by our ships." Andro said. He looked at Yuri once more. "Let's get this done and lay the past to rest Yuri. The future awaits."

Yuri met his gaze and nodded her head as she stood up a little straighter and prouder. "Yes it does." She agreed. "A future I will not let go of now."

Andro leaned over and drew Carisia tight for a sizzling kiss of love and devotion while Dorian did much the same with Sheva. They didn't care who looked on or saw them. "Be safe Enylarcopri." He said softly.

Carisia's maya blue eyes smiled as she drew her fingers across his jaw. "We will be fine my love." She stated. "I have no intention of allowing you to escape the hours of worship you have promised me."

Andro grinned. "Good."

Yuri smiled to herself as she watched holding tightly to Pa'cour's hand. Her eyes cut to where Dorian released Sheva from his embrace and then grew wider as he stepped up to Onera and leaned close to her. Onera did not back away and she gazed at him with bright dark eyes as he took her hand in his and whispered something to her that Yuri did not hear. It caused Onera to blush even under her dark tan but she grasped Dorian Leonidas's hand even tighter and nodded her head. Sheva stepped up beside her and took her other hand and pressed close to her as Dorian leaned closer and inhaled deeply beside Onera's cheek. Yuri watched her eyes close in obvious delight and then to Yuri's amazement Dorian kissed her ever so softly on her lips. Yuri turned quickly and looked at Pa'cour who stood beside her. His face was impassive but his eyes told her all she needed to know. He was Onera's father and he would always be protective of her, but his eyes told Yuri that whatever was happening between Onera, Sheva and Dorian, he approved of it.

Yuri looked back as Dorian squeezed both Sheva and Onera's hands and then followed his brother down the ramp of the G9. Yuri felt Pa'cour move away from her and step right up to Onera without fear.

"Dalharil?" He spoke as Onera looked at him. Yuri noticed that Sheva Leonidas did not attempt to release Onera's hand or move away.

"Ilharn." Onera replied looking at him with love and pride.

Pa'cour smiled and leaned down to kiss her cheek. "I approve." He said before turning and moving down the ramp to load their last of their gear.

Onera looked at Sheva with a wide smile and then to her mother. Yuri smiled as she stepped closer, but she would not question her now on what she had seen. That was for another time, but like her Immortal husband, Yuri approved wholeheartedly. "Come all of you..." Yuri said taking Carisia's hand as well. "Let us look over the schematics once more before we launch so that we know every detail." She said.

Andro looked at them as they gathered on the deck between the STRIKER and the PREMONITION. He had to admit to himself, they were an odd looking bunch for sure. Androcles had no doubts moving forward however. He knew he could trust them to look out for one another. Dorian and Deion knelt next to one another and were discussing something with Jomann; Cowen'Shan and Tir'ut were nodding to Normya and Sherice as they spoke within an Etheric connection making sure even now that Cowen continued to practice. Torian and Daio were checking each other's gear, while Eliani and Brendi were going over the items in Eliani's medical bag for probably the fifth or sixth time. Brendi Faith had come further than Andro had ever thought she could in so short a time. Her desire for Eli and Jomann was the driving factor in this he knew, but they were not pushing her and they were allowing her emotions and feelings to expand and grow on their own. They included her in everything they did now and to even the dullest individual, it was obvious that Brendi wanted them just as badly as they wanted her. Brendi had become Eliani's shadow, and with the skills she had possessed before, now combined with what she had learned from Jomann and Eliani in these last weeks, she was far deadlier than the OSG ever imagined. He spied Murano and Mari standing to the side of the lowered ramp, Murano ever calm and ready as a Praetorian and Lady Mari almost bouncing on the balls of her feet in a combination of anxiousness and excitement he saw. He could smell her fear but her pure Etheric resonance projected confidence in who she was and what she could do and this fear did not rule her actions.

He saw all of them turn to look at him as Sadi, Ne'Veha, Lu'ria and Sehri came down the ramp of this new ship they would be flying. These young men and women... they may not have had the hundreds of years of experience that his father's team had, but they were no less lethal Andro was sure. The experience of working together would come, and given who they all were, Andro had no doubts they would be able to accomplish anything they set their minds to. All of them were part of a new generation just like him. A generation that would lead and serve their people, no more the species, well into the future.

Sehri was the first to reach him and she grasped his hand. [I want to do more Andro.] She spoke in the shielded connection. [I can fight! I can help you.]

Andro drew her close to him with his arm as Sadi and Ne'Veha also moved close to him, pressing their bodies intimately against him and one another. Andro looked into Sehri's bright blue eyes and nodded his head. [Yes you can fight.] He spoke softly. [I have no doubts of that DuanGai.]

[Then why make me stay on the ship?] Sehri asked.

[Because only you are able to project the Etheric shields outwardly that will protect our escape route.] Andro told her honestly. He wasn't lying to her and she knew it instantly. She had grown so much in just the few weeks with them and her latent ability allowed her to project Etheric shields outwardly that were very powerful. More so than she had ever been able to do before. She could wrap them around her body or expand them to surround a small group and even cover an area as wide as the rear of the ship. [Your combat skills will advance as you train with our Drow Mistress DuanGai, but for the moment, only you can hold our rear. We may very well run into complications and may have to come running back to you like the hounds of hell are after us. I would much rather have your ability to shield guarding that route with Elynth, Caydren and Cinol after Sadi brings our ship into the landing bay. Anthar and Majeir will be focused on Carisia, Lu'ria and Sheva and you will need to guard two ships.]

Sehri saw the love and truth in his eyes and she nodded her head knowing that he was right. [I understand.] She said softly.

Andro leaned over and nuzzled her cheek and the side of her neck and her eyes closed in delight at the sensations this caused to course through her. Sadi moved around to Andro's other side and felt his arm instinctively pull her tightly to his side.

[Life is never dull with us DuanGai.] She stated with a smile. [You will see.]

Ne'Veha grinned and pressed tightly to Sehri's back. [This also insures that no harm comes to you DuanGai.] She stated. [For when this is over... we are going to feast on you.] She said nuzzling the back of Sehri's neck.

Sehri smiled brightly in bliss and the promise of more incredible physical pleasure. [I will hold you to that.] She said.

[And we will keep our promise.] Ne'Veha stated.

Andro turned and saw everyone looking at him. He moved a bit closer to them, stepping away from Sehri and his mates. The area around them had become silent now.

“What we do now, we do to insure the future.” Andro spoke. “To protect those we love and to exact justice for what was done to those we love. We have only been together a short time, but I have no doubts about any of you. You have all proven yourselves on more than one field of battle. Whatever else has happened to you in the past, each event that has taken place in your lives has brought you here to this point for a purpose. And from here we shall go forward.” Andro looked at Cowen'Shan, standing tall beside Tir'ut and Sherice. He also noticed that Sherice did not shy away from the hulking Kavalian anymore and in fact was pressed up against him without any concern in the least.

“This is the beginning and we are all now a family. Perhaps not by blood, but by duty and commitment and honor. As is the Spartan way.” Andro brought his armored fist up and pressed it to his chest. “I want no heroics from anyone. We all have our part to play and we must play it. No hesitation. No remorse. Moran and Dante are our targets. Remove any in your way, but do not kill without regard. That is not our way. If you do... if you do...” Andro took a deep breath and all of them could see his body relax as if seeing something for the first time in his mind. “Then it is no longer justice. They will answer for their crimes against my sister, against all those innocents they have hurt with their actions, but we must hold to our ideals or we are no better than them. May the spirits of my grandfathers and all those honored warriors who have gone before us, no matter their blood, may they guide us as we move forward. Strike swift. Strike hard. Strike true.”

Eliani was the first to answer as she usually was. “Avoi.” She spoke.

“Let's get this done.” Andro spoke. “The Beta Quadrant and the unknown awaits.”

MANNE

PRIDE OF PUMAS

As battles go, it would not be considered overwhelmingly important with the exception of one result and in time it would drift into the history books as more an end to a repugnant period in Lycavorian history and lore than anything else. As time and history moved forward it would become known more for three things that really had no bearing on the actual battle itself.

Which ended up being decidedly one sided for the most part.

The Second Officer of the PRIDE OF PUMAS had held the position for the better part of three decades. Besiz'Kiat was his name and when the Marshall or Captain Popal were off the ship he was in charge. This event had never taken place during combat as he was lacking in the experience of the two men above him by a wide margin and his position was more a gift to his Pride for their service and loyalty. This fact did play a role in the outcome, but in truth it really would not have mattered.

The Kavalian Task Force moved in perfect formation as they closed on the planet in front of them. He could no longer make out the specs of the troop transports that had left their ships only minutes ago as most of them had already entered the atmosphere of the planet to begin their attack. Since the two or three ships the Lycavorian King was said to have with him were not present in the system, the Task Force was approaching in a spread pattern that allowed them to respond instantly to requests for aide from the surface. Besiz did not know why Captain Popal insisted on accompanying the Marshall to the surface, but Pusintin had not refused his request. The Marshall seemed to be in some sort of fog these last weeks and only Popal had the courage to approach and talk to him. Besiz certainly had no desire to speak with him. As Besiz took in the actions of the crew around him he noticed that the Sensor operator flinched slightly. He turned fully to face him from the command chair.

“What is it Ntowo?” He asked the man.

The Operator turned to face him. “Sir... sixty-nine ships have slowly fallen out of battle formation with the Task Force over the last two minutes. One entire flanking section.” He said. “And they have not powered their weapons or shields as the rest of us have.”

“How far back?” Besiz asked.

“Ten million meters now.” The man answered. “I didn’t think anything of it when the sensors first made me aware. I thought they were just moving into a better cover position.”

“Ten million meters!” Besiz snapped. “That takes them completely out of position to assist if the call comes from the Marshall! Who commands that Flank Section?”

“Captain Weoerr sir!” Ntowo answered.

“Get him on the COM!” Besiz barked to the COM officer as he turned away from Ntowo. He heard the soft beeping as he barked out his orders. “Captain Weoerr is far too experienced an officer to do this by accident! Find out what he is doing!”

“Commander!” Ntowo snapped as he gazed at his consoles. “Sensors are picking up massive surges of quantum particles all around us!”

Besiz turned back to him. “Quantum particles? From what?” He hissed.

“Unknown sir!” Ntowo answered.

“Where are they?” Besiz hissed.

Ntowo turned to look at him with wide eyes. “Port and starboard sir!” He snapped. “Five thousand meters distance!”

“Five thousand meters!” Besiz almost shouted as he came to his feet. “How...”

Ntowo’s console began to beep alarmingly fast and he turned back to it. His intake of horrified breath was heard by everyone on the bridge and many turned to look at him. “By the gods!” Ntowo almost screamed. “Commander... unknown ships are de-shrouding port and starboard!”

Besiz turned to the view window and his eyes grew larger as the black space that was off the port and starboard sides of his ship was suddenly shimmering as if his vision was blurred. In seconds those shimmers took the shapes of two massive and lethal looking ships. They looked so close he felt as if he could reach out and touch them. Something he would never get the opportunity to do. Besiz’s lack of combat experience was shining through as another more experienced man with ship to ship combat would have been dropping the PRIDE OF PUMAS out of the cone of weapons fire they knew each side of the nearby ships would have. It would not have mattered that none of them had ever seen ships like this before, though both appeared to oddly look similar to the ship that had attacked them near Enurrua, a more experienced Captain would have been reacting before the two ships had finished reverting back to normal space. That was not the case today however and though it hardly would have mattered, a more experienced Captain might have bought time for a few dozen of his crew to reach escape pods before the ship was blasted into oblivion.

“Union!” Ntowo screamed. “Lycavorian Union ships are de-shrouding all around us!” His hands were moving across his two consoles faster than he had ever moved before. “Shit! Over two hundred! They are all around us! Commander we...”

His words fell into an empty void as the sides of both the two massive ships moving down either side of the PRIDE OF PUMAS suddenly lit up the immediate area like a small sun as they fired every weapon at their disposal. While not as heavily armed as a LEONIDAS IIA- Strike Cruiser in number of weapons for instance, Ben O’Connor had made certain that the ARIZONA-Class Strike Carriers were more than capable of putting the hurt on someone as Endith had once commented. With their Quantum Resonance Field Reactors powering the ship’s advanced weapons designs, the armaments on all the ARIZONA class ships were capable of doing equal too, if not far more damage than their larger cousin ships. They were built for war from day one and Ben and Martin had wanted a ship that, in Ben’s words, could bitch slap anyone and make them regret they were ever introduced.

The first saturation broadside from the ARIZONA and the HORNET, a total of twenty Type 1 Terra Series Plasma turrets, thirty Type 2 Terra Series Plasma turrets, 4 Anti-ship Missiles Batteries, sixteen Photonic Torpedo Launchers and sixty Quad Pulse Cannons, struck the PRIDE OF PUMAS within three milliseconds of each other. Miranda and Janon had worked together for far too long and they could almost predict what the other would do. Their timing was, in a single word, flawlessness.

The PRIDE OF PUMAS bridge was instantly obliterated by the combined power of three Type 1 turrets and two Anti-ship M28 Havoc concussion missiles erasing the existence of all twenty-four lives and the command and control of the Kavalian Task Force from this world.

From there it was all downhill.

ARIZONA

There was a time, not so long ago, when Admiral Miranda Lorian thought she had lost everything. She was falling into the darkness of the abyss and she did nothing to stop this fall into the void. She pushed everyone away, not wanting to be around or talk with anyone. She had lost everything; all those she had befriended and came to care for. She had watched them all die; just as she had seen her mother and father die. Just as she had seen her adopted family die. She had no reason or desire to go on. At least that is what she had thought.

Not until she had been ordered by Ben to go to the Royal Island on Apo Prime had this changed. Not until she was among so many who had suffered and endured and lost exactly what she had. She had hated Ben for this action, just as she hated everyone else then. She should have known better. At first she had pushed Ben and Tina away because of their actions in having Isabella turn them so they could have a lifetime with the fiery red haired elf Endith who was now the core of their lives. Then something happened. Something deep inside her, a sliver of her past self, had seen two powerful hands reaching for her through the murkiness of the pain and hate that was threatening to swallow her whole. Something inside her, one last spark of the person she had been, that spark reached for those hands and grasped onto them. Grasped onto them out of fear and rage and so many more emotions she could not explain. Once those hands had taken hers, it was as if a light had suddenly come on in that dark place where she had been living for so long. She found total acceptance and understanding. She found love and wisdom and two other souls who had been tortured by the nightmare that was Alba Tau. Two other souls that would not let go of her. Two souls that pulled her kicking and screaming out of the abyss and refused to allow her to give up. Those two souls belonged to Martin Leonidas and his son Androcles.

Miranda thought back to those months on the island with Martin and Andro. They spent many days together just speaking about things no one else could understand. The emotions that coursed through them. Her days with them had been far more productive than any session with the Union she had been forced to speak with. Martin and Andro got it. They understood everything she was feeling and suffering for they were enduring it as well. Miranda Lorian had become part of the Leonidas family during those months. She ate with them, studied with them, learned about them. She could not remember how many times she had cried on Isabella's shoulder or had Aricia and Anja's arms around her soothing her. Denali, Resumar, all of them propped her up and were there for her. Without question. Without thought. They had accepted her into their family without query or hesitation. Those months on the island had begun her healing. As the weeks and months passed by, much of that time spent with Andro and Elynth, Miranda Lorian changed. She clawed her way back, stronger and more resilient than before. Alba Tau had taken their world and lives and shattered them like glass. Over the course of that time on the island, they rebuilt them. It would never be the same she knew. They all knew that. However, they could not let the horrors of what they had seen and done, they could not let that crush their spirit. The Leonidas family had swept her into its embrace and she had discovered the one thing she had lost as a child. She found family once more. She may not have carried the Leonidas name, but there were few who did not know that Miranda Lorian was just as much a part of the Leonidas family now as General Simpson or Governor Tarifa. This is what had saved her. This is what had allowed her to open herself and discover so many men and women who she now considered her family. Steven, Zaala, her beloved Drow lover and wife E'dira. They were just a few of those who Miranda now called family. And one of the things her time on the Leonidas Island had instilled in her was love of family. She was not about to let anyone take that from her again. Ever! Now Miranda Lorian acted in defending one of the men and the women who had the single most influence over her rebirth. She would not let anyone hurt them.

Miranda was typing madly on the small console on the right armrest of her command chair. She could feel the shuddering against their kinetic shields of the ARIZONA's weapons and the horrific explosions they were causing on the Kavalian ship as they tore into the once proud flagship of the Kavalian Fleet with a single minded ferociousness. Almost as if they were alive and could understand and were acting out on her behalf.

“Helm!” Miranda barked out the word. “Prepare to alter course to three one five point six!”

“Helm aye!”

“COM officer! Inform Captain Janon to get ready to break!” Miranda continued. “Seven seconds!”

“HORNET has already signaled ready Admiral!” The woman shouted out her answer above the cacophony of the weapons batteries and the devastation they were inflicting.

“Stand by!” Miranda ordered. “MARK!”

“Helm answering! Three one five point six!” The human officer at the helm of the ARIZONA barked out in response.

“HORNET is breaking now!” E'dira spoke from her tactical station.

“Weapons!” Miranda barked once more. “Aft Photonic launchers nine through twelve! Alpha spread! Full yield!”

E'dira's head snapped around quickly and she didn't hesitate. “Rerouting emergency power from grids twenty and twenty-one to aft Refractive and Kinetic Shielding!”

“Fire!” Miranda spoke.

“Firing now!”

There was precious little that was not burning or utterly destroyed. Nineteen different hull breaches along either side of the PRIDE OF PUMAS had already vented two thirds of its crew into space screaming out the last echoes of their lives. Most within the bowels of the ship never really knew what happened. They never knew what it was that had killed them. In the first few seconds of the HORNET's saturation broadside, her weapons had completely severed one of the forward wing arms, its main guns savaging the ship's hull. The PRIDE OF PUMAS, flagship of the Kavalian fleet, was essentially dead within the first three seconds. Its Karon XI Tactical Network and Felonius Mark 4 Computer Core were incinerated in the first volley. The ship's secondary computers could not keep up with the massive damage or the hull breaches that were occurring every few seconds as both the HORNET and ARIZONA traveled down the length of either side of the ship firing at near point blank range. Most ships in existence now would not have been able to survive a full saturation barrage from an ARIZONA-Class Strike Carrier even from extreme range. The PRIDE OF PUMAS was on the receiving end of two such barrages from so close that the crew could have literally spit out their window and hit the ships if that was possible.

The crews of the two ARIZONA-Class ships were made up mostly of humans and elves and Lycavorians hailing from Earth. Charles Taylor had brought them out of the past screaming and the natural resilience of the human species had come raging forth. The humans of this time had embraced what long ago so many of them had dismissed and thought were left to myths and stories. Now they were part of the future. What so many on the PRIDE OF PUMAS didn't fully understand was perhaps the easiest ideal to comprehend.

Change would find a way.

Admiral Miranda Lorian's final order signaled the end of the PRIDE OF PUMAS. As the ARIZONA turned radically away from the now broken and burning Kavalian ship, four Photonic torpedoes took flight from the rear of the ship. Small bright spots that sped quickly across the short distance and then buried themselves within the shattered hull of the Kavalian ship. Almost immediately there were four bright explosions and the once proud ship heaved outward in four different locations along the hull and the ensuing detonations tore the massive superstructure of the ship asunder from the inside. The ARIZONA's shields flared brightly in the rear as they were peppered with the remnants of the Kavalian flagship, and then all that was left to signal that the PRIDE OF PUMAS had ever existed were scraps of hull no larger than an interplanetary shuttle.

KAVALIAN DIEROY-CLASS HEAVY CRUISER SABER CLAW

The bridge of the SABER CLAW was as silent as a tomb. All of them had just witnessed something none of them had ever imagined they would see. Captain Weoerr had risen to his feet when he saw the two strange ships de-shroud so close to the PRIDE OF PUMAS. He knew what was coming, but he had never expected anything so brutally horrific. Pusintin's ship had never stood a chance.

He felt Terru come up beside him. “Cap... Captain!” He gasped his eyes wide in shock and disbelief. “I am...”

Weoerr didn't need to look at him. “I know.” He answered softly.

“Captain!” The COM officer barked. “Incoming transmission from Captain Cosa!”

Weoerr turned quickly. “Put it through. To all of those ships with us.”

The image of the older Kavalian shimmered into clarity on the large monitor to the side of the bridge. “Weoerr!” The man's expression showed his own disbelief had what had just occurred.

“We... we witnessed it as well Cosa.” Weoerr told him.

“We cannot let this stand!” Cosa snapped.

Weoerr looked at him with wide eyes. “What would you have us do? Fight that!” Weoerr roared back at him pointing to his main view window where they had just witnessed the fate of the PRIDE OF PUMAS. “I have had my people passively scanning those same ships since they dropped their Shrouds! Every one of them is powered by technology that we did not know the Lycavorians had Cosa! Our scans can not even penetrate their hulls in most cases! Look what they have done! Look what they are doing! They are smashing Pusintin's vaunted Task Force as if they were children! Pusintin and Keleru awoke the wrath of the Lycavorian King with their foul actions against the elf Queen For'mya Cosa! His vengeance will know no bounds now! They... they awoke the wrath of an entire species against us! Dozens of species! They opened a door that should have remained forever sealed!”

“They are killing our people! Our men!” Cosa snapped.

Weoerr shook his head quickly. “No! My men are here with me on my ship! My Pride! Just as yours are with you. They are killing those who chose to follow Pusintin and Keleru down the path of greed and damnation! Your Pride Cosa, they are one of the largest behind my own. Do you wish to see them extinguished in the flames of retribution because of something we had nothing to do with?” He asked. “Do you wish to see them erased from memory because of the actions of those who only wish more power for themselves and would see us shattered and broken to achieve that?”

“We...” Cosa began to speak.

“Look at what they have done Cosa!” Weoerr shouted at him. “In less than a minute they have obliterated Pusintin's ship! The Flagship of the entire Kavalian Fleet! They are tearing into the others with a ferocity we have never faced before! They are not the High Coven Cosa and they do not fear us!”

“So we... we do nothing?” Cosa asked.

Weoerr shook his head quickly. “No. We are the future my friend. And when this day is done it will be left to us to shepard in the future of our people. That is what we must see beyond the death.”

Weoerr saw him take a deep breath and slowly nod his head. “You are right.” He spoke softly.

“Cosa... it will fall to us.” Weoerr said. “I know Koguth'Juturi. When this is done we can meet with him. Talk with him. Perhaps even King Leonidas himself. We can be the bearers of the future of the Kavalian people Cosa. Just as Koguth now is. Just as General Nruarani now is. There has been too much war and death for our people Cosa. It needs to end.”

Cosa nodded again, this time more confidently. He looked at Weoerr in the transmission, his eyes now bright and focused. “Will they let us Weoerr? Will the Lycavorian King allow us to be part of this future?”

Weoerr looked quickly to the area of space where the PRIDE OF PUMAS had once occupied. He turned back to Cosa. “What little I know of him tells me he is a man of honor Cosa. We all know how he views his Queens. Pusintin and Keleru thought they could use that honor against him. They did not stop to think of the consequences of taking one of his Queens and incurring his anger.” Weoerr looked around his bridge. “Yes.” He finally said. “He will honor what we seek.”

“How... how do you know that?” Cosa asked.

Weoerr allowed the small smile to curl the corners of his mouth. “I know that Cosa, I know that because we are still here.” He replied. “If not... if not old friend, we would have already joined Pusintin's ship in the flames of vengeance.”

PRALOR VECTOR-CLASS ATTACK CRUISER

HARMONY

He was silent as he came to his feet and watched the stars return to normal as they reverted from Quantum Drive travel.

He was twenty-five thousand years old and had lived through the horror of their escape from the Scourge at the last planet they had called home. He was still a small boy when his father had been among the Pralor warriors and dragons who had fallen while they were protecting the shipyard where he, his mother and his four siblings were escaping. He had taken his father's sacrifice to heart and dedicated his life to the defense of his people. He was one of the most senior and experienced ship Captains within the small Pralor fleet now and very well respected. He had never found time to start a family as his siblings had; content to insure that his mother and they had the security they needed to do what he did not. His mother had always told him one day a woman would walk into his life and shatter all he had ever known.

Captain Kitor was still waiting for that day.

"Report!" He spoke.

"We have entered the Manne system sir!" His Tactical officer spoke. "Quantum Drive engines powering down and all systems report standing by."

Kitor nodded his head. "Excellent work people. As always." He said aloud so that his bridge crew could hear him. "Secure from Quantum travel and inform our passengers that we have arrived. We..."

"Captain!" The female voice echoed across the bridge.

"Junia? Something?" Kitor asked as he turned his head to look at his Tactical Officer.

"Sensors are picking up a huge battle Captain. In orbit of Manne!" She gasped aloud as she turned to look at him.

Kitor's eyes were wide as he bolted towards her station. "What?" He nearly shouted.

"I'm reading several hundred ships sir!" She told him as her hands flew across her two consoles. "Captain... I'm detecting over two hundred that have Quantum Matter Fusion Drive signatures sir!"

"Our engines!" Kitor hissed in disbelief.

"No sir." Junia answered quickly. "The quantum matter traces are very different... but they are definitely based on our technology! And..."

"What?" Kitor demanded.

Junia looked up at him now standing by her shoulder. "They are beating the other ships like a case of Ollarian Flu sir!" She told him referring to the lethal disease that could and had killed millions of their people through the years. And done so with brutal efficiency. She turned back to her consoles. "The other ships are using some sort of Tri-Cobalt power source and they are getting their backsides handed to them really badly."

"Go to Alpha Stations!" Kitor barked out the order. "Power weapons and shields! Prepare to..."

"I would not do that Captain." The voice spoke from behind him and Kitor turned quickly to see Elder Valael enter the bridge with two women.

Kitor straightened up. "Elder Valael... I must insure your safety and those of my ship and crew." He stated. "I..."

"Captain... if you power your weapons and raise your shields... Martin Leonidas's forces will take that as being hostile." Valael told him. "Believe me when I tell you that is not what we want to do."

"We can assist them!" Kitor spoke.

"I doubt very much they want or need our assistance." Valael spoke with a soft smile. "Tell me Sub-Lieutenant Junia... does it appear as if the ships radiating Quantum Matter Traces are losing the battle?"

Junia glanced at Kitor and then back to Valael. "Forgive me for being blunt Elder Valael, whoever they are fighting; they are getting their collective asses handed to them."

Valael nodded his head and moved closer to Kitor. "Trust me on this Kitor." Valael said. "We do not want to interfere. Whatever is happening does not concern us and Martin and his people might take offense if we intervened."

"They would take offense at us helping them Elder Valael?" Kitor asked.

Valael shook his head. "On the contrary... they would welcome that. This time however, this is something that has been coming for some weeks and months now. Some would say years. They have prepared for it... expected it even. What is taking place is a matter of honor and justice with them and our intervention would only serve to confuse things.” Valael thought back to the few days on Onterom and nodded his head. “I would not be a bit surprised if they already know we are here and we are being watched right now.”

Kitor’s eyes grew a little wider. “One of their invisible ships?” He gasped.

Valael nodded. “No doubt we could detect them if we began to modulate our sensors, but we are not enemies and that is how Chief Elder Delnash wants to keep it.”

“They do not... they do not seem very trusting Valael.” Tobia spoke from her spot beside the large plotboard next to Kitor’s chair.

Valael shook his head quickly. “Do not mistake my words for an intent that is not there.” He said gently. “You both have read the reports of our encounter on Onterom that Delnash gave to you. We acted without regard and we conducted ourselves arrogantly. This resulted in the deaths of men under Martin’s command and severely injuring his son. Delnash and Martin were able to move beyond that and we must not do anything to damage the trust they have built since that time.”

“Then what Elder Lorendo spoke about is true?” The second woman asked now. “They have stolen our technology and are using it to make war.” Her voice was neither hostile or suggestive.

Valael looked at her and held out his arm ushering her forward. “Captain Kitor I don’t believe you have met Administrator Tinra.”

Kitor bowed his head slightly. “Administrator.” He spoke cautiously. Like most military officers, he had no use for News reporters of any kind.

Unlike within the Union, there was really only one news organization within Pralor society now. There were many different areas that men and women chose to report on, but this woman was in charge of it all. Tinra was another who had escaped the Scourge and the end of the Pralor government and way of life. She had been a promising reporter back then, fair and always balanced. There were many who worked for her that did not follow her ideals and values but she ran the News Division with an iron fist. There would be no lies and deceit handed out by anyone working for her.

Valael looked at her. “To answer your question Tinra... Lorendo is telling everyone who will listen everything but the truth.”

“But they are a Seed species Elder Valael.” Tinra spoke. “That much is the truth.”

Valael nodded his head. “At one time we used them as a Seed species yes. However... you know how many of our people view that distasteful practice. Myself included. Please do not refer to them in such a way when we are among them.”

“Then they did not steal our technology?” Tinra asked.

“That is why you and your comrades are here Tinra.” Valael told her. “To get the truth. We have...”

“Captain!” Another voice echoed from across the bridge. “Captain... we are being hailed sir!”

Kitor turned to look at his COM officer. “Source?”

“Unknown sir! They are using the frequency given to us by Chief Elder Delnash but we can not pinpoint the transmission origin.”

“Put it up Lieutenant.” Kitor spoke without hesitation looking at Valael and seeing him smile.

“I had a hunch.” He stated answering Kitor’s question before he asked it.

The main holo disc in the center of the bridge came alive with the figure of a petite female with long dark hair and four inch high ears that curved elegantly alongside her head. Her dark eyes were bright and alert. Tobia moved closer to Valael with wonder in her eyes.

“An elf?” She gasped.

Valael nodded. “Indeed.”

“I am Star Commander Ves’kimi of the ULU HEART OF FIRE.” The woman spoke. “Please identify yourself.”

Kitor stepped closer to the transmission his eyes wide. “I am Captain Kitor of the Pralor ship HARMONY. We...”

“Elder Valael...?” The woman spoke looking at him. “Is that you?”

Valael stepped forward next to Kitor. “I am Elder Valael yes.” He answered. “I do not... I do not believe we have met Star Commander.”

“No sir.” She answered. “King Leonidas told us that you would be leading the Pralor delegation though. He showed us your image.”

“My image?” Valael’s eyes narrowed and then grew slightly wider as he realized what she meant. “You can... you have Etheric abilities Captain?”

Ves'kimi nodded her head. “My husband and mate is a Lycavorian sir.” She told him. “The day he turned me is a day I bless even now.”

Valael nodded. “I understand.” He told her. “I believe we may have arrived at... at a most inopportune time Commander.”

Ves'kimi nodded again with a slight smile. “You could say that sir. Nothing we can’t handle though.”

“If our instruments are to be believed I would have to agree with you.” Valael said. “We thought... Martin did not think the attack would come before we arrived.”

“Neither did we to be honest.” Ves'kimi took something from someone outside the cone of the transmission, typed on the data pad and then gave it back to the unseen person. “It seems that the King’s ronnus brother grew a pair of nor recently and thought to surprise us.”

“Nor?” Tobia asked now as she came up beside Valael.

“Commander... I present Lady Tobia.” Valael spoke motioning to Tobia beside him. “And this is Lady Tinra.”

“You fight your King’s brother?” Tinra asked moving up to Valael’s opposite side.

“We’re kicking the sibfla out of them to be honest. At least up here.” Ves'kimi answered with a proud smile. “They have already put troops on the ground though. King Leonidas and General Simpson will deal with them roughly I imagine.”

“Commander we...”

“Forgive me sir... but this is not the time for small talk. I have instructions to put your communication through directly to Queen Anja in the Medical Command Bunker. She is the one coordinating all COMS. Standby.” Ves'kimi stated.

The image broke into white static and noise for an instant and then they were looking into what appeared to be some sort of massive command bunker with smooth rock walls and dozens of men and women moving about the area quickly. They were not running in panic, but moving purposefully and with little confusion. Valael was sure he detected several medical style beds in the background like those he had seen at their makeshift camp. They watched as the diminutive figure of the woman stepped into the transmission, her petite body encased in what appeared to be some sort of flexible body armor that ended high up on her neck. Her extremely long Persian red hair was pulled over to one shoulder and secured by strips of cloth. All of them could see the sidearm she wore on her right thigh and the tubular object secured to the shoulder of her combat harness. Valael recognized Anja instantly. He doubted he would ever forget the beating she gave to Lorendo or how she barely broke a sweat in doing so. They also saw the image of the massive man who stepped into the cone of the transmission and stood next to her. He wore similar body armor and carried a large assault rifle and made Anja look miniscule when held up to him. Anja was looking in another direction when she appeared and they caught the latter end of her statement.

“...Anuk and Radra will handle the immediate trauma!” Anja barked. “Duewa and I will take care of the more seriously wounded! Major Crit cases go to chamber four! All others to chamber two! And for nubous sakes, keep a STRIKER on standby to pull any critical cases from Ceale and Serale if they call for one! They are hanging out there in the wind for the moment and they will need immediate EVAC if they call for it!”

All of them saw a male in the background nod his head and then in a flash of silver/white light that drew gasps of shock from Tobia and Tinra, the man transformed into a large dark brown wolf and sprinted off down the tunnel.

“Gods!” Tobia echoed softly as Anja turned to the transmission.

“Elder Valael.” Anja spoke calmly, her jade green eyes alive with life as she turned back to the transmission. “It’s good to see you again.”

Valael was slightly taken aback by her warm reaction given what had taken place but he quickly regained his composure. “Queen Anja... it appears we have arrived at a singularly bad time as I told your Commander Ves'kimi. My apologies.”

Anja shook her head. “No worries. Pusintin grew a set of balls and decided he wanted to come visit before we thought he would.” She spoke. Valael saw Tobia’s and Tinra’s eyes grow wide at this statement and he smiled inwardly. He had seen first hand the blunt nature of Anja Leonidas and the humor at her words he held in for now. “Manda is blowing the sibfla out of his ships in orbit and soon Marty and the others will roll him up down here. I always prepare for the worse though.”

“Then their attack on the surface has not begun yet?” Valael asked.

Anja shook her head. “Their troop ships just touched down. Boy will they be surprised at what they find.” She said with a grin.

“Is there any way we can assist?” Kitor broke into the conversation.

Anja shook her head quickly but looked at Kitor. “Thank you... but no. Martin was very clear on what to do if you happened to show up when this was kicking off. He does not want you to get involved unless you are directly threatened. No offense... but our initial meeting was not pleasant and we want to avoid that happening again.”

Valael nodded. “Yes we do.”

“I’ve already dispatched two of our Strike cruisers to cover you. They’ll remain under Shroud, but they should be within range of you now. Just stay at the edge of the system until Manda cleans up the garbage in orbit around us.” Anja told him.

“Is Martin nearby?” Valael asked.

Anja shook her head. “No. He and Danny are setting up to open a whole lot of whup ass on that raping bastard Pusintin and his cronies. We have several VIDCOM drones set up at different points across Manne. I’m sending you the coordinates now so you can patch into them. We don’t expect it but if you see things begin to turn for the worse, Martin asked that you get Radra and Kesyla and the other Pralors out of Base One. As well as any women and children that are there.”

Valael nodded and looked at Kitor. “Captain.”

“I will prep a ground team.” He said. “What about... what about you?”

“No.” Anja said.

Valael stepped closer. “Queen Anja... you and the others are wives to a Praetorian.” He told her. “It is our duty to insure you and Martin are safe.”

Anja shook her head with a small, confident smile. “Martin Leonidas is a Spartan before he is a Praetorian Elder Valael. You should know that now.” She stated calmly. “We are his wives and mates. We are Spartans. We don’t retreat. And we don’t surrender. Ever. If we are meant to die today, then we will die beside the man we so love. And we will take as many of the sonsofbitches with us as we can.”

Tobia was the one to take note of the conviction within Anja’s voice. The total lack of fear or hesitation in her words and the emotion behind them. She blinked several times. Who were these men and women that Murano and their daughter had discovered?

Shouting voices from within the transmission caused Anja to turn briefly and Tobia stepped closer to him. “Valael... this is... this is the one who trounced Lorendo?” She asked softly. “The one who discovered the cure for the Svorag virus?”

Valael nodded his head. “Yes. In the brief time I was among them I got the impression that Anja is the one that Martin favors most after his Soulmate.”

“He has a favorite Queen?” Tinra asked with some disgust.

Valael looked at her now as well. “Perhaps my choice of words was incorrect Tinra. The pureblood Queen Aricia, she is his soulmate. The one who commands the most influence over him because she is pureblood Lycavorian like Martin. Make no mistake, Martin Leonidas loves and worships all of his wives and mates, but if my understanding of their history is correct, Anja Leonidas has known Martin longer than any of his Queens. Each of them hold a part of his heart within them yes; however many of their own people seem to agree that Anja holds a great deal of influence over him. Perhaps it is because she has known him so much longer that she has slightly more sway than his other Queens with the exception of Aricia.”

“The reports say she discovered the cure within days of encountering the Svorag.” Kitor said. “If this is so Elder Valael... she did something our own people could not do over many millennia.”

Valael nodded in agreement. “After what I saw on Onterom... I dare say she is probably the foremost medical mind in the entire galaxy.”

“She is... she is tiny.” Tobia said.

Valael smiled and looked back at her. “Do not let that fool you Tobia.” He said. “That was a mistake Lorendo made and he paid for it in pain.”

“I can feel her resonance even from here.” Tobia said softly. “All of them. So focused and pure. They are interwoven with the Praetorian Martin and each other in as intricate a tapestry as I have ever seen.” She said. “It is... it is refreshing!”

Anja finished her conversation and then turned back at Valael. “I must go Elder Valael.” She said. “This is about to kick off.”

Valael nodded as his gaze returned to her. “Go with your gods Anja Leonidas.” He said. “And we will see you soon.”

Anja smiled just as the transmission ended and Valael took a deep breath as he turned to Tobia and Tinra.

“She... she does not fear death Valael. I can feel that within all of those she is connected to. The other Queens.” Tobia spoke, her words echoing softly as she looked at him. “Did you see her eyes? No fear. No regret. No doubt.”

Valael nodded his head. “Yes.”

“Are all... are all of his wives like that Elder Valael?” Kitor asked.

Valael nodded in response to his question. “Yes... I’m afraid so.” He spoke turning to Kitor. “Let us begin to monitor the frequencies she sent to us and prepare your ground team to do what Martin has asked Captain.”

Kitor looked at him. “Do you think they will be needed Elder Valael?”

“No.” Tobia answered the question and they all looked at her. “They will not be needed.” She told them. “These men and women will not fail.”

Valael nodded in agreement at her words. “Prep your team just in case Captain. And make the VIDCOM feed available to Lady Tinra and her associates in the main conference room. We will monitor from there.”

Kitor nodded his head and moved across the bridge to where his Tactical Officer waited. “Make it so.” He told him. “Full Team with all their equipment. Strip whatever equipment they don’t need out of the ships in case we have to carry more than we think.”

Valael looked at Tobia and Tinra. “This way ladies.” He stated. “But be aware... based on what I saw on Onterom... what you will no doubt view is not going to be pleasant.”

“War never is.” Tobia said softly. “War never is.”

MANNE

MAIN KAVALIAN PUMA BANE DETACHMENT

Pusintin knelt on the soft ground along the perimeter of the clearing, the six transports behind him and powering down their engines. He lifted his face and let the wind play across his skin, his nose just detecting For'mya's orchid like scent. It was faint, but she had passed through this area recently. He turned his head as Popal and the senior Puma Bane Commander settled to the ground beside him.

“Marshall... we have lost contact with our ships in orbit.” Popal told him as he held the portable scanner in his hand.

“They must have jammers set up all over the place.” Pusintin spoke. “My brother is no fool. He will not want us able to communicate with our ships.”

Popal looked at him and nodded. “I will continue to try and burn through the interference. We are within four clicks of their main camp, perhaps that is why.” He said calmly though his heart was racing. He alone knew why they had lost communications and he did not want to think of what was going on above them in orbit. He had too much to worry about here on the ground now.

“Qallin?” Pusintin asked as he looked at the Puma Bane Commander.

“We are ready Marshall.” The man answered. “Our secondary force has landed and are deploying to target their auxiliary base. Initial scans as we were moving through the atmosphere indicate only light forces in the area even though it appears this is their power generating base.”

Pusintin shook his head in disgust. “The fool.” He stated. “He never anticipated a frontal assault as we are conducting. He left his power generating unit all but undefended.”

“Two hundred of our Puma Bane will handle the defenders roughly Marshall.” Qallin told him smugly.

“Take as many females alive as you are able.” Pusintin told him. “Your men will need distractions once we have secured this planet for ourselves.”

Qallin smiled his eyes cruel. “Thank you Marshall.”

Pusintin looked at Popal. “Popal... I will push ahead with the Puma Bane to their main base. Drop your people into support as we begin our attack.”

Popal nodded his head. “Most of those that will be manning the heavy weapons are not fully trained in their use Marshall.”

“That is why I want you controlling their fields of fire.” Pusintin stated. “We don’t need them shooting us in the back. My brother can not have more than a few hundred defenders here since his ships are not in the system. They will not be trained soldiers and we will make short work of them. The signal from For'mya?” He asked.

Popal nodded his head once more. “Still strong Marshall.” He stated. “Eight hundred meters beyond the main base in what appears to be a cavern of some sort.”

Pusintin nodded. “That is where she will be hiding.” He said confidently. “I want my brother and his other whores taken alive! I want him to watch while the Puma Bane pass them back and forth and fuck them senseless. Then I’m going to fuck For'mya and take her back in front of him before I gut him like a dog and watch him howl and bleed out.”

Qallin grinned savagely. “It will be glorious Marshall.” He stated causing Popal to glance at him.

That single statement caused Popal to cast aside whatever doubts he may have had up until this very moment. Weoerr was correct in everything he said. The Puma Bane were vicious animals and not warriors. Against the High Coven they were feared for their savage nature and cruel tactics. Popal doubted very much the Spartans under Leonidas would blink an eye before erasing them all from existence.

“Let’s move.” Pusintin hissed as he hefted his short barreled assault rifle and began to move forward.

Popal remained kneeling on the ground as he watched him and the Puma Bane begin to swiftly take the lead. They were spreading out somewhat, but still close enough to support each other if they came under fire. Popal turned his head when the senior Kavalian engineer from the PRIDE OF PUMAS settled to the ground beside him.

“Commander?” He spoke softly. His eyes were wide in fear for he and the other men with them had never actually served in ground combat. They were engineers and technicians for the most part, always looked down upon by the ground troops and especially the Puma Bane.

“Tinontu... as soon as they have moved out of sight... send three teams back to the ships and remove the power cores from all six transports.” Popal told him.

Tinontu looked at him. “What?”

“Return here when that is complete.” Popal spoke. “We will be moving to a prearranged point and stacking our weapons there.”

“Commander? What... what is going on?” Tinontu asked.

“Do you and your men wish to die this day Tinontu?” Popal asked him.

“I don’t... I don’t understand Commander?”

Popal held out the data pad to him. “The PRIDE OF PUMAS is gone Tinontu.” He stated calmly. “The Marshall has become so single minded and twisted in his views that he has walked us right into a trap. A very final and lethal trap. Pusintin has utterly dismissed reality for some perceived imaginary view he now has. And he will not live out this day.” He looked at him as Tinontu gazed at the data pad with wide eyes. “Union ships are at this very moment obliterating all those who chose to follow Marshall Pusintin on this misbegotten adventure. The PRIDE OF PUMAS is but a memory and any ship not aligned with Captain Weoerr and holding position outside effective combat range will suffer the same doom. I do not wish to be counted among the dead on this far away world Tinontu. Do you?”

Tinontu looked at and met his eyes. “They... they received reinforcements?” He gasped aloud.

Popal nodded his head slowly. “The Lycavorian King is no fool as the Marshall would have us believe. He did not build the Union into something even greater than it was in only a quarter of a century by being foolish. He has had someone tracking us the entire time as we blindly chased him thinking he was unaware of us. The Marshall came here with the intent of taking back something that was never his to begin with. The Puma Bane only fight so they can butcher and maim and rape more. I did not fully realize this until after Kalis left us. After what he said to his father that day. I will not see the hundred and twenty men with us die for nothing. They are not ground troops and they are being expected to fight hardened Union Spartans who would strike them down and ground them under their boots without so much as breaking a sweat.” Popal shook his head. “The moment we set foot on this planet, the Marshall’s fate was sealed. As were the fates of the Puma Bane who follow him blindly. I will not let my men; our men suffer this same fate Tinontu. I was unable to bring as many as I wanted...” Popal’s eyes fell to the ground in shame Tinontu saw. “And now their blood is on my hands. I have... I have received assurances that this will not happen to us if we do exactly as we are going to do.”

“That is why we have lost communications with the ships in orbit.” Tinontu said.

Popal nodded. “Whatever they are using, they have jammed all communications and sensors from orbit. Something similar to what they used in the Kranek system when they crushed our ships there. They have rendered the Marshall’s ships blind and dumb and they do the same to us here.”

“What... what are they facing?” Tinontu asked.

“I do not know and I do not care to discover it.” Popal answered meeting his eyes. “Do you wish to die here my friend?”

“I do not wish to die at all Commander.” Tinontu answered quickly.

“Neither do I.” He said. His mind thought of something and it made emotion well within his chest. “I... I wish to hold my wife in my arms once more. I wish to make amends to her for all that she has had to suffer.” He looked at Tinontu. “I have already arranged for the pilots to strip out any equipment that could be used to make one of the transports flyable. I need three teams of your engineers to return and insure the power cores are removed so that no matter what happens, the ships can not take off. Once that is done... we are moving to a location given to me. Far away from where the Marshall goes to his death. There we will wait until the end. And there we will have a chance to continue our lives with far more purpose than we have had these last years.”

Tinontu met his eyes. “General Pian?” He gasped.

Popal didn’t shy away from his gaze. “The is only one Kavalian alive right now who fights for more than personal gain and reward. For more than power. Pian’Nnurani is that man, no matter what Pusintin and Prefect Keleru label him as. Will you do as I ask Tinontu?”

There was really no choice as far as the Chief engineer was concerned. His mind was flung back to what Popal had just spoken aloud. He very much preferred holding his young wife in his arms than fighting any day. If his actions this day meant that he could feel her fur covered skin within his fingers and her slim tail wrapped around his leg in passion, then he would gladly do what was necessary.

“I will see to it Commander.” He stated without doubt or hesitation.

“Quickly Tinontu.” Popal spoke. “The Puma Bane dogs will soon discover that they have bitten off far more that they can chew and they will no doubt come running back here like the cowards they are. We must be long gone by then.”

Tinontu nodded his head, rose to his feet and bolted back towards where his men were. He began to issue orders in a raspy whisper and Popal felt relief when he saw the eyes of many of the men change from one of despair to one of hope. He watched as two dozen of them left their heavy weapons and began to sprint back towards the transports with Tinontu in the lead.

A future.

That is what Weoerr said they could have. And Popal now embraced that ideal without a second’s pause.

Danny lowered the macrobinos and looked at Martin lying beside him on the hard packed dirt of the ridge three thousand meters from the Kavalian landing site.

“They’re committed.” He said simply.

Martin nodded his head in agreement. “Yep.”

“Beloved... two dozen of the remaining Kavalians are moving back to towards the transports.” Aricia spoke from his opposite side as she lowered her set of binos and turned her azure eyes on him. “It appears that this man Popal was telling the truth. There are many who do not follow the twisted path of Keleru and Pusintin.”

“Good. I have no desire to kill men who are not fighters and have no idea why they are dying.” Martin said. “Not today anyway.”

“Avoi.” Danny echoed softly.

Martin tapped his jaw. “Bella... you and Melda Min copy?” He spoke.

“We are here Martin.” Isabella’s voice filled their ear implants.

“Company coming Bella.” Martin told her. “Have Jules send the signal. We’ll join you and Dysea shortly.”

“Lover... the Pralor ship has arrived in system.” Anja told him speaking from the main bunker. “I told them to hold at the outer marker just as you wanted. Valael wanted to help and he seemed very sincere.”

Martin shook his head slowly. “I will not involve them in something that is ours to deal with Red. This is our problem.”

“It ends this day Nauta Melme.” Dysea’s sweet voice echoed in their ears now, filled with stiff resolve. Martin looked at Aricia and saw the same fierce determination in her eyes as he would no doubt see in the eyes of all his Queens. Since For'mya had returned to them, the six of them had become nearly inseparable and they had become far closer than they had ever been in over twenty-five years together as his wives and mates and lovers to each other. While he knew that For'mya gravitated to Aricia and Anja more, the love his Queens held for each other was just as deep and committed as the love they held for him. As he held for them. “The trap has been laid...” He heard Dysea continue. “And when it closes there will be no respite from our justice.”

Martin leaned over quickly and kissed Aricia hard on the lips, sending out a pulse of his powerful aura within the Etheric connection they all shared. He felt it instantly returned from all of his beloved Queens.

Joa... ethoni gur tur joa isarna tlach. He spoke once more within their connection. (No... there will be no mercy today.) Mercy for my brother left me the moment he took Kinsoaurgai from us and violated her so. Now... now there is only death. And justice for his actions.

Then let us make it so. Aricia spoke confidently. So we can move forward with the future in front of us and our desires before us.

Martin felt a stirring of passion at her words and waggled his eyebrows at her, gazing into her stunning azure blue colored eyes. Does that mean what I think it means Saaurano?

Gods... you are such a perv Martin! Anja’s voice echoed within their minds as did the laughter from all of them. You have a one track mind!

But what a devious and delicious mind it is. Isabella spoke.

And it is all ours! For'mya chimed in.

All true. Martin replied as he grinned at Aricia and saw her blush under her deep tan. Let’s make this happen ladies... I still have some ideas for further worship that I want to explore in great depth.

See! Anja exclaimed in happiness. Pervert through and through!

Martin chuckled as he began to push back down the hilltop without rising and Danny and Aricia followed.

Qallin had sprinted the four hundred meters distance between the Marshall’s main force and his unit attacking the Secondary target. The power generating support base for the main Union encampment. Their scans showed many of the unique Union portable power generating nodes and they would be a boon to his forces. Union portable generators were coveted by many other forces because of their durability and advanced construction. Just one or two of them could power a battery of defensive measures for a small, advanced field headquarters. Their sensors showed only a few hundred lifesigns in and around the camp and Qallin did not doubt they would be victorious. Engineers and technicians were no match for his seasoned Puma Bane soldiers.

As he moved up within range of the rear of their file he gave the order to attack without preamble. Better to rush the defenders and overwhelm them quickly. They would be able to secure more female prisoners in this way, and Qallin had every intention of finding the finest looking elf female he could and fucking her until he was spent.

As he waited on one knee in the treeline, his men rushed forward, and the first thing that should have set his senses to screaming was the fact that there was no firing. He could see the makeshift tents and half built positions around the camp through his macro binos, but he could not detect any defenders. Qallin lifted his arm and spoke into the wrist mounted COM unit.

“Shonis!” He snapped. “Report!”

The Puma Bane Lieutenant pulled up quickly between two tents and tore one from its stakes as his Commander’s voice echoed in his ear. There was nothing under the plain white tent. No bed rolls, no equipment packs, no electronic gear. Just empty, hard packed dirt. His eyes swept across the first rows of tents as he saw his men doing the same thing and all of them looking confused as their searches revealed the same thing. The few half built positions were void of occupants and equipment and it appeared as if they had never been occupied before. No indents from boots or weapons platforms. He lifted his arm bringing the COM unit close to his lips.

“Commander... we have found nothing.” He hissed urgently.

Qallin’s voice boomed in his ears. “What do you mean nothing?” He barked out. “Our sensors show lifesigns. Several hundred at least. And over a dozen of the Union generator signatures!”

Shonis let his eyes sweep across the still camp suddenly very wary. “We have found nothing sir! The tents are empty! No equipment, no bedding! The fortified positions look as if they have never even been occupied!”

“Lieutenant!” The voice called to Shonis and his eyes turned to where one of his men stood roughly halfway through the camp. Shonis moved with purpose as every sense within him was telling him this was all wrong. He sprinted across the distance as more of his men crowded around and he finally skidded to a halt beside his man.

“You have found something?” He demanded.

The enlisted Puma Bane gripped the tent cloth in one hand and ripped upwards. The flimsy support poles gave way easily, another sign to Shonis that something was not right. The tents would have been more sturdily built had this been even a semi permanent base. His eyes fell upon the single piece of equipment inside the tent. It was a power generator yes, but not one for distributing power among different devices. He knelt next to the device, his eyes scanning the exterior and taking note of the soft pulses it was sending out every few seconds.

“Here!” A voice called as Shonis saw another of his men tear down the tent to reveal just the simple looking device.

Shonis turned back to the humming piece of machinery and lifted his hand. “Senior Technician at Arms!” He called waving the Puma Bane forward. “What is this device?”

The man covered the few steps towards his Lieutenant and lifted his portable scanner. He passed it over the device, his eyes taking on a confused look. “It is... it is a power generator sir.” He answered. “But it is not...”

Shonis looked at him. “What?”

“It’s not producing any significant power readings.” The Tech spoke.

“What does that mean?” Shonis demanded.

“It’s not providing powering to anything sir.” The tech spoke leaning forward to get a closer look at the Union generator. “It’s generating a power field but nothing strong enough to supply...” His eyes grew wider as he moved his portable sensor closer to the device adjusting the small panel of controls. “Shit!”

“What?” Shonis almost screamed.

“It’s generating a sensor dampening feedback field!” The Tech answered.

“What is this?” Shonis asked as the hair on the back of his neck began to rise.

“All of them are generating the same type of field.” The Tech spoke as he lifted his portable scanner towards where the other device had been exposed. “It’s bouncing our sensor scans back at us with false information.”

“What?” Shonis hissed.

The tech looked at him. “These two devices... and there must be more of them sir... they are causing our ground sensors to give false readings. They are masking the true purpose of this camp.”

“True purpose?” Shonis asked. “What purpose could...?” His eyes grew wider and he never finished his statement as realization flooded him. His eyes began to dart all over a she brought his weapon up to the ready position. “We have... we have walked blindly into a very carefully laid ambush!” He growled menacingly.

“Lieutenant... the camp is empty.” Another of his men commented.

“They are not in the camp.” Shonis declared. “They are... they are all around us.”

As those words left his mouth, the Letha rie Jorbhe opened, and the fires of retribution began.

“...Found the western scrambler.” Kalis whispered softly as he stood beside Koguth within the four foot deep trench line that stretched along the entire northern and eastern side of the camp and was hidden under several inches of thick leaves and branches.

“So it would seem.” Koguth answered.

“We should attack now General.” Kalis said.

Koguth shook his head. “Patience young Kalis.” Koguth told him calmly. “Let them draw closer. Not all of them have cleared the far treeline.”

“Their commander has positioned himself in the treeline to southwest.” Mata spoke now.

“Mata... when this begins... he is yours.” Koguth said calmly turning to look at him. “He must not be allowed to escape and return to Pusintin and inform him of what is going on. Akor’dris, Bae’diraz and the Juturi Pride fighters will move from their hidden holes on the west, but they will concentrate on any that remain within the timber. Any who attempt to escape to the west will be swept up by them.”

Mata nodded his head without doubt. He had thought his life over when he had assisted Kalis in escaping his father. The young man he had raised as he would have raised his own sons was now a man and he had chosen a path that provided him a future. Mata did not think that purpose extended to him. His wife and sons were long dead, taken from him by disease and uncaring leaders. He had no reason to live on. Until Kalis had showed him purpose once more. Kalis had showed him that there was no need to throw his life away, that he could once more have a family and a future. He showed him there was always purpose if you were brave enough to reach for it. So Mata had reached for it, and after these past weeks he clung to that ideal with vicious faith. He was here beside men and women who did not care that he was once Puma Bane. They only cared that he was with them and just as dedicated to their cause as they were. And Mata meant to see a new future for himself and his people take shape even if it cost him his life.

“It will be done.” He said simply.

“The order remains the same. Every man and woman is to fire a full magazine before leaving their position.” Koguth told them. “Be as accurate as possible and bring down as many as they can. Plasma grenades from every fourth soldier, anti-personal rockets from every sixth. Once they have exploded and wreaked more havoc... we will bring the fight to them. No mercy can be shown. No remorse. They are Puma Bane and they will show you none. And they must pay for the crimes they have committed through the years.”

Jormal Pescneu glanced at the Kavalian General he now served beside proudly and grinned widely showing perfect white fangs capable of tearing flesh from bone easily enough. “General... do I detect a hint of perverse joy at the pain we are about to inflict?”

Koguth turned his head slightly to gaze at the Lycavorian he now called friend and aide. “I suppose you do Jormal.” He answered.

Jormal’s smile broadened. “You and your Pride are more like us than you know General. And it will be seen this day.”

“They found the second one.” Kalis commented.

Koguth turned back to view the expanse of the camp before them. “Inform Nedoli and Mataen. Tell them this is going to kick off and have Ceale, Mani and Serale ready to receive wounded when they begin arriving. There will be wounded my friends, and we will lose men and women this day. Do not deter from your tasks. If they fall, allow our medical teams to sweep in behind us and see to them. Do not stop pressing the attack.” Koguth looked at Mata once more as he lowered his fingers from where he had tapped his COM implant.

“It is done General. Lady Ceale says they are as ready as they will ever be.” Mata echoed softly. “And Corsa stands ready with the MENKLA transport to evacuate any who need critical care from the small Queen Anja.”

Koguth nodded with an evil glint in his eyes. “Then it is time.” He said. “Kalis... if you would detonate the charges... it is time to send these Puma Bane butchers into the next life.”

Kalis lifted the detonator in his hand, looked at Koguth and mashed down on the handle with all of his strength.

ALPHA QUADRANT

ULU PREMONITION

“Can’t believe we are actually doing this?” Sadi muttered with some small humor as she scanned her eyes across her instruments once more.

Ne’Veha glanced at her out of the corner of her eye and flashed perfect white teeth. “Let it not be said that the man we love is without creativity.”

“Creativity is one thing...” Meka spoke from her engineering station. Three different consoles were wrapped around her petite form in the chair and her hands were adjusting different things every few seconds. “Insanity is quite another.”

Sadi turned her head with a smile and looked at Meka. It was amazing how the three of them blended so well together and did so with such ease. Kameka’Caleo had embraced her new life with Daio without even a pause, and the three of them were quickly becoming tuned to one another as a flight crew. “Welcome to our lives Meka.” She said.

Meka chortled in a soft laugh. “A life Daio and I seemed to have embraced. I guess that makes us just as insane.”

Sadi saw Andro moved forward into the cockpit with measured grace and he reached out to squeeze Meka’s shoulder as he settled to the deck between Sadi and Ne’Veha in their sunken seats.

“KertaGai?” He asked.

Sadi glanced out the main view window in front of her. Andro followed her gaze and they could see the expanse of the hull of the BLOOD REVERENCE Dreadnought stretching before them. His azure eyes grew a little wider at the view but he kept his heart from racing unchecked.

“We are in position my love.” Sadi told him. “Soft seals are holding. Dori’s STRIKER is also down and sealed. They are on the opposite side of the ventral hull thirty meters away down the main access corridor once you enter the ship.”

Ne’Veha glanced up into his handsome face. “You do realize that this has never been done before.” She stated. “This has never even been thought of before. No one in their right mind would think of something like this.”

Andro smiled and leaned over to nuzzle her elegantly curved elven ear. Ne’Veha’s eyes closed in blissful delight as his aura swept over all of them. “I did warn you life with me would be unique SirsanGai.” He said softly. “And my father is not right in the head anyway. My mother Anja says the salt water has corroded away most of what brain he and Uncle Daniel did have.” He looked at Sadi. “There are no signs they have detected us?”

Sadi shook her head quickly. “Passive internal scans indicate there is much activity in the lower decks near the landing bays, but that is because Enylarcopri’s ship is approaching. No significant movement out of the norm anywhere else on the ship. It appears they are very relaxed Andro.”

Andro nodded. "That could be a bad thing or a good thing." He turned when Eliani and Brendi moved into the cockpit, Jomann directly behind them. "Eli?"

Eliani handed a small device to Meka and looked at him. "All of the gas drones are deployed and awaiting activation." She stated. "Three of them forward of our location and four aft. Took me a bit longer than I thought to find the main coolant shaft. It was hiding behind a transmitter tower."

"And the gas will work right?" Andro asked her.

Eliani Leonidas looked at her brother with a scowl, twisting her beautiful face into a vision of disgust. "Are you kidding me? Now you ask me that?" She hissed at him. "We are attached to the hull of a BLOOD REVERENCE Dreadnought filled with people who would just as soon skin us alive as say hello and now you ask me if the gas will work?" Andro grinned as Eliani's eyes changed and her fangs extended and she reached out and slapped him in the face lightly. "Yes you riad aulved igord! It will work. That has to rank as the stupidest question you have ever asked me!"

Rubbing his cheek Andro looked at Brendi. "You are ready?" He asked.

Brendi nodded and touched the P9 computer secured against her abdomen in the crush proof and projectile proof case. She wore a matching set of Mark V ArmorPly identical to Eliani's right down to the four small burgundy stripes on her shoulders. Andro doubted she knew the significance of those stripes just yet, but in time she would. She had already become part of Eliani and Jomann's life and while her scent and aura told him she welcomed it, she had not yet been able to fully embrace it. She was never very far from Eli's or Jomann's side now and Andro didn't doubt she would surrender to her feelings very soon.

"As soon as we breach I will find a computer terminal and begin hacking." She told him confidently. "I will cause them fits across the entire ship. At least those who are still awake once Eli's gas knocks out the rest."

Andro nodded with a smile and noticed immediately when Eliani beamed in pride and reached back to squeeze her thigh that Brendi didn't shy away or draw back. She actually moved closer to her. "Good."

The soft beeping caused Sadi to turn back to her main console. "Andro... Yuri and Carisia's ship is on approach." She stated.

Andro looked at Eliani. "Get to the breach point Eli." He said. "And try not to fall on Jomann like you did in the tunnel."

Eliani stuck her tongue out at her brother. "Ha ha... very funny. Midaeus!" She said grabbing Brendi's hand as Jomann smiled. They quickly moved out of the cockpit and Jomann looked at him.

"We are ready." He said.

Andro nodded. "Murano will lead us right to Dante." He said. "He can sense Xaxon's presence in a way we can not. At least not yet. I don't care what condition he is in Jomann, but he is not to be killed for any reason, no matter who finds him first."

Jomann nodded. "Agreed."

Andro turned back to Sadi and Ne'Veha and gave each of them a short, but blistering kiss of passion. "Do not be late you two." He said.

Sadi and Ne'Veha grinned as his aura swept over them. "Not a chance." She said.

Andro nodded and grabbed Jomann's arm. "Let's get this done." He stated as they moved out of the cockpit. As they moved Andro reached out within the Etheric connection he held with his brothers.

Dori? Deo?

We are ready fervon. Dorian answered.

Do not get killed. Either of you. Andro told them. Father and our mothers will chop off my nor if anything happens to you.

Sibfla! Deo echoed. I got too much to live for now. Eyes like blue green gems and...

Please! Dorian exclaimed. No more.

Andro chuckled and could sense Jomann's humor beside him. Let's do this brothers. And take our vengeance for what was done to our sister.

Avoi. Dorian and Deion spoke together.

I will see you both on the ship. Andro said.

Andro and Jomann stepped onto the lift that would take them to the lower deck and the breach point just aft of the engineering section.

They were huddled around the small chart table in the middle of the G9 as the ship closed on the BLOOD REVERENCE Dreadnought.

“Sadi says there is much activity in and around the landing bays but the rest of the ship seems unaware of what is happening.” Carisia told them.

Yuri looked at Pa'cour beside her and nodded. “That makes sense.” She said. “He will not want to raise too much commotion over our arrival. Most of the added movement is probably security troops.”

Carisia nodded. “That is what Andro thinks as well.” She pointed at the schematic of the ship interior. “I suggest we let Anthar and Majeir lead us out mother. With this much security it is better to strike first. Sheva, Lu'ria, Onera and I will follow them and draw what security there is towards us as we move for our objective. It will allow you, Pa'cour and your Immortal Strike team to slip out and make your way into the interior and eventually the bridge.”

Yuri shook her head. “They would concentrate on you!” She said quickly. “I will not have my daughters take such a risk!”

“We will stay wrapped within the shadows mother. Lu'ria and I have done this many times before. With Sheva and Onera assisting, we will be able to move right past them into the corridor.” Carisia said. “Anthar and Majeir can cover us easily and they will draw most of the attention. And unless they wish to fire off a T19 inside the bowels of their ship, nothing that they can bring to bear on Anthar and Majeir will pierce their Etheric shields.”

“Carisia is right mother.” Onera stated.

Just get me off this ship! Anthar protested from the rear of the G9. I will be so happy to not have to act like a sardine I will take them all out!

Majeir turned her head and looked at him beside her. They were crammed into the rear of the G9 near the ramp and neither of them had room to move more than a few inches. G9 Long Range Runners were not designed to carry dragons in any way. Perhaps if you were not so fat we could actually move more than a quarter meter at a time. She told him.

I am not fat! Anthar barked at her.

I will have to question Elynth on that point when she joins us in the landing bay. Majeir told him with some humor. I believe you have added a few pounds since becoming mated to her. She spoils you too much.

Bah! Anthar snapped. What do you know?

Yuri couldn't help but join the others as they laughed at the exchange between the two dragons. “I still think it's too dangerous.” Yuri said finally.

This caused Sheva, Onera, Lu'ria and Carisia to laugh even harder and even Pa'cour joined in this laughter. He took Yuri's hand and moved closer to her. “And assaulting a BLOOD REVERENCE Class Dreadnought while it sits in the middle of space and not dry dock is not dangerous my wife?” He told her. “Some would say we have all lost touch with our wits for doing such a thing.”

Yuri looked at him and couldn't help but smile herself now. She turned back to Carisia. “Do nothing reckless.” She demanded but instantly realized how ridiculous that statement sounded as well considering what they were about to do and they all laughed even more. Yuri reached to her belt and removed The Tears of Heaven and reverently held them out to Carisia. “Take these.” She said.

Carisia looked at her. “The Tears of Heaven. Mother... those... Uncle Vonis gave them to you.” She said.

Yuri nodded. “And now I am giving them to you. Vonis... he must have known what he was doing when he sent them to me. He knew... he knew they would be part of my rebirth. That rebirth has taken place and now they will better serve someone who can use them with purpose and skill.” Yuri looked at Pa'cour quickly. “Besides... Pa'cour has crafted a superior set of blades that I intend to use.” She looked back to Carisia. “Take them daughter. As they were the first step into a brighter future for me, now they can be symbol of what I have rediscovered with this new life.”

Carisia's eyes were moist and Lu'ria stepped closer to her, pressing her tall, lithe frame against hers and squeezing her waist. "Take them Enylarcopri my love." She said softly. "And use them with the intent that they are given."

Carisia reached out and took the dual blades from her mother's hands. They were among the finest forged blades anywhere, the bluish tint of the razor sharp metal reflecting softly in the light of the G9. Behind only the Dragon Armor forged blades of the elven Weapon Master Nehtes, anything forged within the blue fires of Paravin was very rare and very nearly priceless.

Carisia looked at her mother, the small tears rolling down her perfect cheeks. "I will... I will carry them always mother. And cherish what they have given to me."

"Princess! Three minutes!" The pilot called back from the cockpit of the G9.

Yuri looked at them now and took a deep breath. "Let us remove the last vestiges of my mother's foul rule and begin a new day. And none of you had better die on me!"

This caused all of them to laugh softly once more as they prepared to step into the fires of combat.

INQUISITOR

Moran stood to the side of the massive area, his face impassive, as the G9 began to enter the fighter bay and make its way to the landing area. He turned his head slightly when his XO stepped up to him.

"Admiral?"

"Something Commander Viror?" Moran asked him.

"All stations manned and ready sir." The man spoke. "Regular Duty Shift has taken their spots. There was a very brief disturbance in the Integrity Field but it has stabilized."

"Disturbance?" Moran asked him.

"Seven spikes in hull integrity in a one point three second span." Viror answered. "The Chief Engineer did an Integrity Field Diagnostic and found nothing. He believes we have been out so long that the equipment will need to be recalibrated soon. It hasn't been done since we came out of space dock."

Moran nodded. "When this is done he can do it." He told him. "See to it Viror. I want us in top shape."

"As you order Admiral." The man answered.

"Where is Dante?" Moran asked.

"The last I checked he was still in his quarters on deck two sir." Viror answered.

"He should be here." Moran spoke to no one in particular. "I do not want him out of my view for very long."

Viror looked at him. "You do not trust him Admiral?"

"You know of what we were doing with Yuri Commander. I shared it with you in order to be better able to protect this ship while she was onboard." Moran told him.

Viror nodded. "I do not understand it... but yes."

"Well... let's just say Dante is not as refined as Yuri was." Moran said. "The transition is not happening as smoothly as I had hoped. I want him watched Viror. If anything happens that might be odd I wish to know about it."

"I will see to it sir." Viror answered.

"I'm hoping that once Yuri is back in my control, that he may well switch back given the right incentive." Moran said.

"Is that... is that even possible Admiral?"

"I don't know." Moran replied. "I do know Dante is weak minded but strong of will. That is why the transition has taken so long and is still not fully complete. He's fighting it... losing... but still fighting it. Now that Yuri is back, things may change."

"As you say Admiral." Viror spoke.

"The Interrogators are ready?" Moran asked.

Viror nodded. "I had the cells reinforced as you ordered. Whatever skills she may have obtained from the dog son, she will not be able to employ them here."

“Just have your men be alert Viror.” Moran spoke. “She will resist when they come for her and she is far more skilled than when we first undertook this mission. She is not to be underestimated. Sheva Juconi should be easy to contain and control since we will have her parents as well, but Carisia is an unknown right now. Better to be safe than sorry.”

Viror nodded. “I agree.” He said. “We...”

All conversation was drowned out as the G9’s engines roared when the ship flared and came to a stop nearby and began to settle to the deck. The ship rotated slightly until the ramp was facing where Moran stood and he took a deep breath and puffed his chest out pleased with himself. He saw the additional security begin to form near where the ship was settling and let himself feel pleased. Yuri was foolish to allow herself to be caught he thought to himself. And if she was caught with Carisia in her midst then she must have been working with the Union and Androcles. It was the only way they could have discovered Sheva Juconi and the program she was involved in, or the coordinates for the hidden planet. Knowing that the Immortal Pa'cour was now dead gave Moran some peace of mind. He would not have to worry about an assault by Immortals to retrieve her.

Moran began to think as he stood there waiting for the ship to settle completely to the deck. He would need to discover what had occurred to make Carisia work with her mother. There was no love lost between them he knew and after she became wife to Androcles Leonidas there should have been even less contact between them. There were rumors floating about in The Wilds that she had built something with Pa'cour, but none of them could be confirmed. There were also reports from what few assets they still had on Earth of the remains of King Resumar and others being returned to Earth. None of it was really making any sense, and trying to get reports off world now was a hazardous affair for his agents. Moran blinked a few times as different scenarios ran through his mind. Why would Carisia be working with Yuri? How did they discover Juconi and the planet?

The engines of the G9 were powering down.

Robert Moran was many things... but he was not a fool. Yuri had to be working with the Union. It was the only way Juconi and Carisia could have come to be with her and the only way they could have discovered the planet. They went there not to destroy the planet, but to remove Juconi’s parents according to the report from Faren. That information could only confirm that Juconi had turned traitor and was working for the Union now. This would also indirectly match to the unconfirmed reports from their assets that she had been spending a large amount of time with the son Dorian Leonidas on Cranea Island. She had been witnessed entering his personal quarters on the island many times and not leaving until morning. And if Juconi was working with the Union that meant she had the blessing of Androcles Leonidas. Robert Moran knew that Androcles was even harsher and more militant than his father when it came to traitors and for him to not kill her outright for being a spy bespoke of something else. It also meant that Yuri certainly had to be working for the Union as well, and in order for Androcles Leonidas to put any faith in Yuri after what had happen to his sister... Moran blinked several more times. Androcles Leonidas would not trust Yuri in any way after what had occurred to his sister. He would rip her to shreds in an instant as he had done on Earth. He certainly would not allow Carisia to travel with her.

Moran glanced at the rear of the G9 as the ramp began to come down.

There was something else going on here Moran thought as alarm bells began to sound in his head for the first time since learning Faren had captured Yuri. There is no way Pa'cour would have allowed them to be caught. If Androcles Leonidas and the Union was involved he was absolutely certain there was no way they would have been discovered in their task. The Venorik Elghinn could boast all they liked, but they paled in comparison when held up to the Union’s Krypteria Intelligence. The Lycavorian Armetus ran that organization and they had been trying to kill that man for far longer than Moran had been alive. Something just didn’t add up. Juconi was seen staying in the quarters of Dorian Leonidas on a regular basis. It was said her status within the Durcunusaan had seemed to increase in importance. The last few reports indicated she remained for the entire evening. Why would she remain in his quarters for the entire evening? If she was using her charms on the youngest son, that would not require she remain the entire evening. Moran’s eyes grew a little wider. If she was somehow involved in a relationship with the younger son; a relationship that had nothing to do with her duties as an assassin and spy? That would explain why they had lost all contact with the other agents from the program. That could explain why Carisia was with her. It would not explain why they were working with Yuri or in her company. Unless... but that couldn't be could it? There was no possible way that Androcles Leonidas would ever trust Yuri enough to allow her to live. He was far more unforgiving than his father and...

Dante.

A light of realization went off within Moran's head in that instant. The same moment the ramp on the G9 came fully to rest on the deck. His eyes grew wide in horror when he saw not Yuri and the others in chains, but two very large dragons burst from the rear of the G9 with roars of anger and death.

Moran turned and was beginning to blur the moment both of those dragons unleashed twin flames of flesh melting fire from a hundred meters away. He could feel the heat from their blasts; feel the burning as those streams of flame reached for him. His mind registered the fact that Viror's entire body was engulfed suddenly in flame and his screams began to echo in Moran's mind as he blurred in an attempt to escape the encompassing firestorm that was just beginning to be unleashed.

One thing filled his mind as he beat at the flames licking the back of his shoulder and the pain from their burning scorched his uniform and skin.

Death had arrived on his ship.

And it was not in a forgiving mood.

CHAPTER THIRTY-FOUR

HIGH COVEN BLOOD REVERENCE DREADNOUGHT INQUISITOR

"Go!" Andro hissed the single word as he turned away slightly from the small hatch of the docking ring and where it was connected to the hull of the INQUISITOR.

Senior Chief Joe Ranor slammed his hand down on the control box in his grip and the small, muffled explosion echoed only briefly. Ranor had volunteered to place the explosives to insure that no damage was done to his ship and that they did not lose seal containment. He was one of the new generation of Engineers within the Union Fleet, many of them humans from Earth. Many new ship captains within the fleet were specifically requesting human engineers from Earth for their commands due to the unique skill sets taught to them on Earth. While the schooling was essentially the same at both the Academy on Apo Prime and the Fleet Academy on Earth, the Earth Engineering Academy also taught extensive use of explosives and light weapons as well as theoretical quantum mechanics, giving their engineers more rounded skills for different postings throughout the Fleet and ground bases. Many of the newer skills that were taught at the Fleet Engineering Academy on Earth were being integrated into the Union Fleet Academy on Apo Prime and soon both schools would be uniform and turning out Engineers that would be more skilled than any in history.

As one of the newer Engineers, Senior Chief Joseph Ranor had a hand in creating what was taught, especially about explosives, and his skills were being used right now. The shaped charge of C9 compound was perfectly laid and did exactly as Ranor had intended it to do. The heavy sheet of ArmorPly canvas covering over the hatch directed the force of the blast and any debris straight down into the ship. It ripped completely through the five inches of solid Layered Ferro-Crystanium hull armor on the BLOOD REVERENCE dreadnought as if slicing through paper, the extreme force of the blast carrying with it pieces of hull armor into the deck of the ship and unwittingly killing three High Coven personnel that had the misfortune of walking under that portion of the hull at the most inopportune time. The C9 Explosive Compound, at least this type of it, was designed by Union engineers to be used specifically for the purpose of penetrating star ship armor. To this end it worked to total perfection.

Andro didn't pause and before the cloud of smoke had even cleared, he lifted his arms over his face and dropped through the newly created hole in the hull of the ship, crashing right through the armored canvas sheet. In his mind's eye Andro could see Dorian doing the exact same thing from his STRIKER only thirty some meters down the corridor he was dropping into. Jomann followed Andro a split second later, followed in quick succession by Torian, Daio and then Eliani and Brendi. Daio had joined their assault team when Murano stated with Yuri and her Immortals hitting the landing bay, Dorian and he would not need additional people. Dorian agreed with him and Deion would break from their group with his Bridge Assault team and he and Dorian would move to join him.

Only thirty seconds before, Eliani had triggered the command to activate the Gas Drones that were anchored to the hull of the INQUISITOR. In seven different locations spaced across the hull of the INQUISITOR, the oval shaped Drones that were attached to the hull used a diamond core drill head to drive down a two inch diameter tube at nearly three times the speed of sound. Each tube penetrated the hull to a depth of sixteen inches, more than enough distance to punch through the hull and enter directly into the seven different main air filtration ducts that ran through the entirety of the ship. Exactly six seconds after punching into the large ducts, two cylindrical drums inside the drones began pumping the odor and colorless gas into the shafts at nearly five hundred pounds per square inch. The air circulating units did the rest of the work for them, carrying the gas to all portions of the ship in mere seconds.

The only two locations that operated on protected filtration systems were the deck they were entering now and the bridge itself. This deck housed the quarters for Robert Moran and his son as well as senior officers.

The Neutron Gas had been devised many years ago and then refined by Union engineers and chemical experts through the years since its discovery. There had been a huge debate about use of the gas when it was first discovered since it was technically considered a biological weapon and the Union did not use such weapons of war, especially since so many vampires called the Union home and were trusted friends and family. After two long years of debate and testimony however, all seventeen vampire Senators serving at the time voting for its use, it was allowed in this form only and it was heavily monitored. This was actually only the second use of the neutron gas since the return of a Leonidas to the throne of the Union and with any luck Androcles and Eliani Leonidas hoped it would be the very last. Only he and Eliani had used this gas before and it had taken them three days to make the hard decision to use it the first time against a group of brutal vampire mercenaries that had been loose in The Wilds shortly after the Evolli War and were targeting Union assets and civilian personnel. They had used it then to save lives, just as they were doing now.

In the dose that was being used right now, the neutron radiation gas was strong enough to invade the cells of any vampire, turned or pureblood, and for lack of a better description, shut down their bodies within seconds. It did no permanent damage to the targets; the composition of the gas no where near dense enough to be lethal in nature, but it was still considered a toxin. The neutron radiation isotopes in the gas invaded the many cells of any vampire and essentially slowed their bodies down in much the same manner as a body falling to sleep; only it acted within microseconds and not over many minutes. A heavier dose would have seen the radiation isotopes begin to break down the actual cell structure of any vampire leading to certain death, but Eliani Leonidas was far too good of a doctor to overlook that. One of her mothers was a pureblood vampire, two of her sisters and one of her brothers half vampire. She had friends and men and women who were like Aunts and Uncles to her, all of them vampires. Her former lover and still dear friend Nyla was a pureblood vampire. This was not something that Eliani would take chances with and the dose she using was perfect in every way to accomplish their task but leave no lingering after effects.

The crew of the INQUISITOR were among the finest that the High Coven had to offer and they were very good at their jobs. Within seconds after seeing the dragons unload from the G9 in the landing bay, an alarm claxon had begun to sound throughout the entire ship and many were rushing to their combat stations. The command crew on the bridge did not know of the other assaults or the use of gas. The claxon was falling on deaf ears for the most part, as vampires by the hundreds were entering the corridors and compartments of the ship and being incapacitated within seconds and the bridge crew would not realize this until it was far too late.

Andro's booted feet had barely touched the deck before he was stepping to the side to allow Jomann and the others to follow him. His Shi Viska flared to life on his left arm as he dropped into a crouch, the pommel of Saar filling his right hand, and the sizzle and pop of the blade appearing from Flatspace almost lost among the echo of their explosive entrance. Jomann moved up instantly beside him as Torian and Daio were next in quick order and then Eliani and Brendi followed. With the exception of Brendi, all of them had resorted to their partial changed forms, their eyes now those of wolves and their fangs protruding from their lips. Torian and Daio unlimbered chopped down versions of the P190. The P190A5s were identical to those weapons that Martin and Danny had been using out within Pralor space as they were better suited for close quarters combat. They were chambered for the much more versatile Kavalian 12.7mm round due to its stopping power. All of them had seen combat many times before with the exception of Brendi Faith. Their senses were on full alert for anything that might be out of the ordinary or out of place. Brendi Faith for her part was doing exactly what she and Eliani had been training to do the last twenty-four hours. She held the K14 KM in her right hand, while her left hand never left Eliani's combat harness. Her dark eyes were wide in fear, but she was able to control it well enough to function. Their bodies were pressed close to one another and even in the midst of the situation they found themselves in, Brendi Faith could not deny the feelings that this caused in her.

Andro! We're in! Dorian's voice echoed to them within the Etheric Realm like a gunshot.

Breaking for the panel and bridge! Deion echoed his brother's voice. Go get the nubous ronnu fervon!

Moving now! Dori... you and Murano meet us halfway! Andro ordered calmly.

On our way!

Andro turned and looked at Torian and Daio. He pointed with his hand and instantly Torian hefted his A5 and began to move.

"Here!" Sherice called as they rounded the short corner, dodging the inert bodies of dozens of vampires and found themselves in the empty passage. Directly above them in the recessed corridor was the hatch that would take them up into the main maintenance shaft and from there to the bridge. Deion was gripping Mari's hand tightly as they came around the corner and his eyes found the computer panel.

"Mari!" He hissed.

All of them had chosen to wear the lightweight tactical headsets instead of normal battle helmets. It was a risk, as the headsets provided no protection, but instead had small sensors in the frame that fed them tactical data instantly through the small console in front of each of their left eyes. Deion determined they would be moving faster than his brothers as they had to get to the computer console in seconds. The helmets were heavier and would not allow for quickly and efficiently working on computer systems. After mulling over this for all of three seconds, Andro had agreed with him. As had Murano. It was like a shot of confidence in the arm for Deion and he swore not to let his brother or the others of their team down.

Mari's heart was racing beyond measure as she turned her head and with wide eyes she watched Deion reach up and simply rip away the covering of the computer console with his armored hand. Breathing deeply and using all of her mother's teachings to maintain her calm, Mari stepped up to the panel, pushed he tactical lens out of the way and flipped open the P9 Deion had given her and let it dangle from her midsection in the armored case.

"Cowen... Ridor... the hatch!" Deion rasped out the order as he dropped to his knee directly behind Mari. "Nara, Sherice cover! Lisi... watch our six!"

Lisisa nodded instantly and dropped beside him in a crouch. She was not about to be left out of this mission and Andro had assigned her to Deion only because of her experience in small unit operations. It was not because he did not trust his brother to complete the mission; it was because Lisisa's years and knowledge of doing these same missions during the Evolli War would give Deion an added advantage when they hit the bridge. On this mission Lisisa could use her abilities to wrap the shadows around her and blur, which were much more suited against fellow vampires. And it gave Deion's team an extra lethal asset with a personal stake in the success of this mission.

Their wolf ears caught the sound of shouting voices from further down the corridor and Lisisa looked at her brother. "Those on this deck are regaining their senses fervon! We must move quickly!" She spat quietly.

Deion looked behind him. "Mari?" He questioned.

"There is an extra level of encryption on the system!" She gasped in horror as her fingers typed madly on the small computer console. A thin cable ran from her P9 to the connection in the computer on the wall.

Deion stood up and moved closer to her as he could detect her excited voice and the fear pouring from her scent easily. He pressed the front of his body against her back in such a manner that it caused Mari to gasp in shock and barely disguised delight. Deion lowered his head next to her cheek as she worked and time almost seemed to slow for her.

"You are more than capable of doing this Mari." He spoke softly into her ear. "Be calm Aur Locarra. I have faith."

My Flower. He had called her his flower and just his soothing voice and warm breath next to her ear was enough to relax Mari completely and fill her with resolve. His formidable physical presence gave her a sense of peace that she had never felt before, not even in the arms of her mother. This allowed her to work far faster than even she thought possible as different codes flashed across her screen almost faster than the eyes could follow. Yet follow them she did. She had dedicated her young life to learning everything she could while in school, hours upon hours of study and practical application had forged her into one of the finest graduates of the Advanced Pralor University. Feeling Deion's powerful Etheric resonance surrounding her, calming her in a way nothing ever had, it allowed Mari to be better than even she thought she could be.

"There is no time to break the extra level of encryption! I am rerouting all Command Codes and Primary Control to my P9 through a secondary data uplink and securing them with Pralor algorithms!" She spoke confidently now.

"Disable the secondary uplink with a random, mutating coding variable so they do not discover how you did it!" Deion spoke. His attention was focused down the corridor looking for enemies and he did not see Mari's smile of delight at his obvious knowledge and skill.

Lisisa looked back over her shoulder, her forest green eyes wide. "Carians... I hope you two know what the hell you are talking about!" She rasped out the comment.

Mari tapped on her P9 twice in quick succession and the computer console in front of her went dark.

"It's done!" She exclaimed lifting her hands. "I've routed all primary and secondary control of their engines to my P9! They will not be able to alter our position or activate their engines subsystems even from the main consoles on the bridge or in their engineering section!"

Deion didn't hesitate. "Time to go!" He said as he reached up and yanked the cable from her computer and then smashed his armored fist into the screen itself, crushing the LCD readout and well as half the console.

His arm then encircled Mari's small waist and he and Lisisa blended even further into the recessed portion of the corridor. Lisisa went up first as Cowen leaned out of the upper hatch and grasped her hands, pulling her through the hatchway with barely any effort. Her petite form shot up into the opening and vanished from sight, just as Mari came under the hatch and looked up. Deion was lifting her up even as Cowen reached down once more and snatched her arm. Mari almost released an involuntary shout at the strength with which Cowen hauled her up, but then she was rolling to the side out of the way as he reached down once more. She turned her head and saw Deion's hand clamp onto Cowen's forearm and then he was lifting once more. Deion grunted as he rolled to the side and came to rest almost burying Mari under his large form. He looked down into her face and saw her blue green eyes staring at him so bright and beautiful, his chest pressed tightly to hers and his leg between her own. Deion Leonidas didn't know what possessed him to do such a thing, but her orange clove scent was nearly unbearable so close to him as she was and even in the life threatening situation they were in he could not help himself. He lowered his head quickly and covered her moist lips with his own. Mari's eyes went wide, not from her surprise at his actions, but at what his kiss ignited within her and the way her body reacted.

Deion pulled back quickly and flashed her a heartbreakingly gorgeous smile, flashing his long dual fangs at her. Vicious dual fangs that were utterly beautiful to her. "I'm sorry... I've wanted to do that since I first saw you." He stammered the words.

"Eight seconds!" Cowen called out in a harsh whisper as he secured the hatch.

Mari could only gasp once more as Deion lifted his powerful body from atop hers and was moving before she could draw in a breath. She felt Lisisa's hands grab her arm and pull her to her feet just as quickly and she looked into her eyes. Lisisa grinned at her from under her headset, her own dual wolf fangs so very evident.

"Their timing for such things is typically horrid!" Lisisa told her with a smile. "They take after our father! Come!"

Mari could only follow Lisisa as they began to sprint down the massive maintenance shaft. Horrid though his timing may have been, Mari could not deny the feelings Deion's simple kiss had caused to come rushing forth within her. His soft lips had ignited a fire within her and Mari decided right then she had no desire to resist the feelings rushing through her. No... she was not going to resist them in the least. She was going to embrace them and all that it brought to her.

The trip was amazing to say the least.

Sarlana had never been able to view the stars as she was now in her last voyage through them. She had been confined to the lower decks of a City Ship with those of her kind as they prepared for their Seed Mission. The Pralor Corvette was comfortable yet designed for combat she knew. The Flight Crew had gone out of their way to make her and Conlar feel at ease, but Sarlana knew their actions were by direction of the Dahakoan Androcles more than anything. Like his father, he was a natural born leader of men, and no doubt others followed him with little or no question. The Dahakoan Dorian Leonidas also had this trait she knew, and it would develop quickly now that he and his bonded brother Ryner were with his brother and Elynth. Sarlana had spoken their names over and over many times in the last few hours, delighted beyond belief to be able to speak them openly. The four of them were a dominant force within the Etheric realm, not only because they were Dahakoan, but also because they were Praetorian warriors. Their Etheric resonance was staggering even from this distance, as was their father's, for she could still feel Martin even as they drew further away from Manne. Their Etheric abilities had been one of the reasons that the Darastrixi and Pralor people cultivated such a close bond between them.

Sarlana didn't question for a moment that they could sense her own powerful Etheric resonance growing closer, and while they might not understand what she represented for them, the two brothers trusted in their father completely. Teniri had remained with Arzoal on Manne, not wanting to leave the side of the Elder Mother who had placed so much trust and faith in her all those years ago. There was still so much she could learn from Arzoal and Sarlana had agreed with her.

Sarlana turned her head from the long couch she was sitting on as she felt the ship revert back to normal space from its third and final Quantum jump. She held tightly to the steaming mug of the liquid they called coffee, not wanting to spill its contents. She had never tasted such a thing and it electrified her taste buds. The friendly elven pilot had told her what it was, and that it was a special blend made by the youngest Queen Aricia. Conlar had just entered the main cabin and he turned from where he was pouring himself of cup of the coffee as he too felt the very slight tug in his stomach. Sarlana watched intently through the clear view window as the stars became bright points once more and off in the distance she saw the reddish green cloud of some unknown nebula. Her emerald green eyes were wide with wonder and she turned back as Conlar settled to the couch beside her.

"We've completed our final jump." He observed as he looked out the view window. "We are now within the Alpha Quadrant. Something I never imagined I would ever think of let alone see."

"Such wonder." Sarlana stated softly. "I was with the Vrrarhoimpa all of the time helping them to prepare for the beginning of the Seed Mission. I was never able to see the stars like this. It is truly amazing."

Conlar nodded his head. "There were times during our escape when one could look out into the stars and for a fleeting moment forget what was going on all around us."

Sarlana reached out and placed her hand on top of his. "You seem much more relaxed than when we first began this trip my friend." She told him.

Conlar nodded in agreement and took a deep breath. "Delnash told me something before we left. He told me to forget everything we had been raised to believe. Forget everything that we grasp onto. He told me to open my mind." Conlar looked at her.

"He is a wise man." Sarlana told him. "Now that his eyes have been reopened he will be the leader he was always meant to be."

"I did not do that when we first arrived on Manne and I appeared just as arrogant as any other Pralor they had met." Conlar said.

"And now?" Sarlana asked him.

Conlar smiled as he looked at her. "Now? Now I have seen things that prove all we ever thought was a lie. Just as Delnash has seen." He told her.

Sarlana shook her head. "Not a lie Conlar my friend." She told him quickly squeezing his free hand. "A misconception. One which we can fix with but a simple decision to expand our minds. We as two species, advanced though we may be with our technology, in some ways we think we can do no wrong and that makes us dim-witted beyond measure.”

Conlar nodded in agreement. “A choice. Something I decided to do the moment I boarded this ship. I have been reading of their history Sarlana. From before Martin Leonidas returned to them and after. It is... it is a grand story. Almost... almost magical in nature. It is filled with brutal violence and death yes, but never violence that they themselves began. And for all the many reports given by others supposedly so much smarter than all of us that said this species was barbaric and vile, I have seen dozens of acts within their own history that refute that notion bitterly. Even before Sumar joined with them. Acts of compassion and bravery that were often dismissed as irrelevant and nothing more than oddities.”

Sarlana nodded her head. “I have done much the same.” She told him. “My people are no better Conlar. We took much of your knowledge as explorers and Seeders of Life and used this to base our own thoughts and decisions on because we never left the world of our birth. It was a choice... as you said. We have ships, grand ships, but we never looked beyond what we as a species had. We never truly looked to the future. That is what I believe Wer Zezhuanth wanted us to do. We...” Sarlana’s eyes grew wide and she froze in her spot, her hand clamping onto Conlar’s arm with all of the strength in her small form.

Images flashed through her mind causing her to gasp almost in pain. The dark red blood and agony, the shame at the vile laughter as she was taken against her will. The pain of every touch, every bite that they had laid upon her. The devastation in her eyes.

Conlar gripped her tightly. “Sarlana?” He gasped aloud. “What... what is it?”

“Such... such pain and agony!” She echoed as she shook her head.

“Sarlana!”

Her head came up then, her emerald green eyes brighter than Conlar had ever seen. “We must... we must go to the where they fly this ship.” She stammered.

“What? Why?”

Sarlana rose to her feet in the next instant. “Come quickly.” She stated as she placed her mug on the small table and regained control of her emotions.

Conlar could only follow as she practically dragged him through the upper deck of the corvette and unerringly guided them to the cockpit. Within moments they burst into the medium sized cockpit filled with two elven pilots and a vampire engineer. All of them were female and all of them turned to look at her.

“Can we help you Lady Sarlana?” The vampire female asked as she came to her feet.

“Where are we?” Sarlana demanded.

“We have reverted to normal space.” The woman answered her. “Our present course will take us to SPARTA’S WRATH in just under fifteen minutes. They conducted a standard combat deployment while we were collecting you and have moved. Prince Androcles will greet you when they return from their mission.”

“Return?” She asked. “They are not on this SPARTA’S WRATH.”

The vampire female glanced at her pilots and then back to Sarlana. “No. If the reports are accurate, they have just begun their assault to bring the criminals Robert and Dante Moran to justice. Armen has directed us to land immediately in the Port landing bay.”

Sarlana shook her head. “No!” She barked. “We must go to them!”

“Lady Sarlana... our orders were to deliver you and Elder Conlar to...”

“I am not an Elder.” Conlar corrected her. “I...”

Sarlana grabbed the woman’s arms. “Listen to me!” She demanded. “I must go to them! They are the last hope of my people and...”

“Lady Sarlana...” The female elf pilot spoke now. “Their plan was perfect. And there is no one who could stand against Androcles, Deion and Dorian Leonidas except their father. And now that Praetorian Murano is with them...”

Conlar looked at her with wide eyes. “Murano is with them?” He almost yelled.

The elf pilot nodded. “Yes.”

Sarlana looked at Conlar. “I can see what they did to his sister Conlar. Their sister. I can see it within them as easily as I stand before you now. I can feel their rage and hate coursing through them. I must go to them!”

“Wait!” The elf pilot spoke once more as she became more attentive. “You can... you can see within the Prince’s mind from here?”

Sarlana looked at her. “You know what I am? Martin Leonidas told you what I am did he not?” She asked calmly.

The pilot nodded her head. “As much as he was able... yes.”

Sarlana met her eyes. “Child... if Androcles and Dorian Leonidas and their Bonded Ones unleash the full scope of what they are truly capable of... everyone on that ship will die. I must insure that does not happen. In order to do that I need to be with them... guiding them. That is my place... my purpose in this life now.”

“Lady Sarlana we... we don’t even know you.”

Sarlana stepped forward quickly and reached out her hand to touch the female elf on her shoulder. “I am not an enemy child. Most would consider me a religious icon among my own people. My only goal in this life now is to guide those you call Prince. I could no more hurt them or anyone close to them than I could hurt my own children. I know you can feel that within me.”

“Regardless of what I feel... you are asking me to enter what is no doubt a combat zone right now.” The elf pilot said. “One that SPARTA’S WRATH will surely have complete and total control of. Armen will see to that. The attack was to take place on the High Coven ship Lady Sarlana. There is no telling what conditions we will be entering. I can not risk your safety for anything, no matter how important. Those were Prince Androcles’s words to me before we left to come retrieve you.”

Sarlana blinked. “He told you that?” She asked.

The pilot nodded. “Yes.”

Sarlana looked at Conlar. “He knows what I am.” She gasped.

The elf pilot Mal’ita looked at Sarlana for a long moment without saying anything. This strange woman was so very different. She remembered well her classes in school about how the modern elf was descended from dragons. How over millennia of evolution they stood as they were now, but had lost none of the connection to the dragons that they had when they were first conceived. It was why no elf within the Lycavorian Union was afraid of any dragon. She could indeed sense that this woman meant no harm to the Prince. Any of them. All that flowed from her when she spoke their names was love. Mal’ita’s own life was full of unknowns that she had embraced, the first and most important among them the beautiful vampire that was now her wife and lover. They had been together for six blissful years now and had she not followed what her heart and intuition had told her, they would never have been brought together. She made her decision now based on that very same intuition.

“Leeta... engage Full Jammers and Whisper nodes.” She spoke looking at her vampire lover, wife and engineer.

“We’re going in Mal’ita?” Leeta gasped in shock.

Sarlana looked at the pilot once more as Mal’ita met her eyes. “Yes. We’ll sweep in under the starboard wing and if all seems stable we will hold position until we can contact Princess Sadi or one of the Crown Princesses.”

Sarlana looked at her. “His... his Anome. His wives.” She said.

Mal’ita nodded in answer. “I will not enter that ship unless she or another Crown Princess tells me it is ok Lady Sarlana.” She told her. “You must understand... my task is to protect you and Conlar... nothing else. Without permission from one of the Crown Princesses then we will not proceed.”

Sarlana nodded. “I understand.” She stated calmly. “What you are doing... as close as you are going against your orders... thank you.”

Mal’ita looked at her co-pilot. “Suraie... bring the sublights to full power. If something happens I want to be able to escape quickly. That includes the Prince’s wrath if he does not approve of what we are doing.”

“We’ll need more than sublights to escape him then.” The elf co-pilot said as her hands began to move over her controls.

Anthar pulled up short only fifty meters from the port entrance to the landing bay, light wisps of smoke lifting from his mouth. His head snapped back and forth looking for further targets and finding none. Majeir was twenty meters to his left unleashing a withering blast of flame down upon a dozen crew members trying to hide behind the body of several huge pieces of machinery as she moved for the starboard entrance. Anthar turned back to the G9.

Sister! Now! Go now! He shouted within Mindvoice.

Carisia was holding tightly to Lu'ria's hand on one side and Sheva's on the other. The instant she and Lu'ria heard Anthar's voice begin to speak they moved.

We go! Carisia spoke firmly just as she wrapped the shadows around herself and Lu'ria while Sheva and Onera added their own ability to their group, effectively causing all of them to disappear from sight.

Yuri whispered a short blessing to her daughters just before Majeir's voice boomed in her own head.

Yuri... I have cleared the path to the opposite entrance. Move now!

Yuri turned to her Immortal husband. "Let us bring this to an end my beloved husband! Forever!"

Pa'cour hefted the P190A5 in his hands and looked at their team of twelve Immortals. The best men he had, all of them having spent the last months training under both Yuri and himself. He turned back to Yuri and nodded.

"Let's." He stated.

Yuri pulled the small mask down over her nose and mouth to keep from being affected by the gas and they plunged from the back of the G9, turned to the left to see Majeir laying down another stream of fire to her right, and they broke into a dead sprint for the starboard entrance on the opposite side of the landing bay. It was a path that would take them to the only direct lift to the bridge from this deck and bring an end forever to a history that Yuri was rapidly leaving behind her in favor of a future so bright it brought tears to her eyes.

INQUISITOR BRIDGE

"Seal it!" Moran screamed as he continued to beat at his smoking jacket. "Seal the fucking bridge!" His eyes were wide in disbelief as he began to yank at the outer jacket trying to get it off to keep from burning him more.

"Report!" He roared once more as he tossed the jacket to the deck.

"Admiral... a massive battleship appeared on our sensors from Shroud only moments ago. It has... it has destroyed our entire escort! One volley and... it obliterated all of them!" A voice spoke from somewhere on the bridge. "Our sensors can not penetrate the hull of the ship but its weapons appear to some sort of Quantum based arrays that are off our charts in power output!"

"Shit!" Moran exclaimed. "The Mindvoice ship from Ritaah! They took it!"

"We received two brief reports of explosions on deck two!" Another officer offered. "The report was interrupted and we have not been able to raise anyone on deck two!"

"Seal all access to the starboard landing bay!" Moran snarled as he moved to the main chart table. "Deploy security teams to both entrances with heavy weapons!"

"To fight dragons sir?" Another man echoed in surprise.

"Hit them with enough firepower and it will overwhelm their Etheric shields!" Moran snapped. "They already killed the security I brought with me to secure Yuri! They were turning on the crew when I last saw them! Do we have visual into the landing bay?"

"Coming up now Admiral!"

Moran turned as a large monitor to the side lit up with internal feeds of the landing bay and they could see the massive bodies of two dragons still laying down blistering streams of flames in different directions.

"Phraktos!" A woman gasped. "They are killing everything!"

"Admiral... we are getting a report from deck two!" The man shouted from across the bridge. "Sir... Union troops are... Admiral... we have been boarded!"

Moran's eyes grew wide. "Boarded?" He gasped. "How... who the fuck is insane enough to board..." And the unthinkable with Yuri just became very real. "Leonidas! Yuri is working with Androcles Leonidas!"

"Admiral how?" The Officer of the deck exclaimed coming up to him. "I thought... I thought he wanted her dead!"

Moran shook his head. "I don't know damn it! But only he and his father are fucking crazy enough to attempt something like this! It was a set up from the very beginning! They set me up!" He turned. "Our escorts are gone?"

"Yes sir! We... Admiral look!" The man motioned with wide eyes to the feed from the landing bay and all of them saw the STRIKER DT and strange looking ship Corvette sized ship suddenly de-shroud and come to rest on either side of the massive fighter bay. Even before the strange ship was down, the ramp in the rear lowered and Moran saw three additional dragons burst from the interior of the ship, one of which was the obsidian beast that Androcles Leonidas rode.

"Fuck!" Moran hissed. "Emergency jump back to our Fleet!" He roared. "Get us out of here before they can land more dragons and troops!"

"Admiral! An ORIC-Class Heavy Cruiser and DARK BROOD Frigate are breaking away from the unknown ship! It has to be the ship from Ritaah! They are moving to take up station on..."

"Main LSD coils are off line!" The next voice screamed out and caused Moran's vampire blood to go cold. "Admiral... the LSD main drive has been powered down remotely!"

"What?" Moran screamed. "Get it back!"

"I have been locked out of the entire system!" The man exclaimed as he turned and watched as the bridge consoles all around him began to go dead as they lost power. "Fuck! Someone is rerouting control of all bridge functions! None of my command codes work! They are shutting us down!"

DECK TWO

"And that is that!" Brendi Faith exclaimed happily as she finished typing on her P9.

They had discovered a computer terminal only a few dozens meters from where they had entered the deck and with Andro and the others covering her, Brendi had immediately set to work. She noticed right away that Mari had not only disabled the main engine commands, but rerouted their control to her own P9 as a safety measure. Seeing this, Brendi used her P9 to attack and take control of the individual subsystems. Without the main computer control system that Mari had locked out, it was almost child's play for Brendi to remotely take control of and order all subsystems on the ship to shut down and answer only to command codes that now resided in her P9. She quickly reached up and pulled the terminal cable from her P9 and tossed it to the floor and looked at Eliani. "Once Mari overrode their main command codes I was able to begin shutting down their weapons and all main systems!" She gasped excitedly. "They are now effectively blind and dumb and the systems will only come back online with an directive from my P9 or Mari's!"

"You... you did all that?" Eliani gasped.

Brendi smiled brightly at her. "I thought... I thought that is why you brought me." She stammered.

Eliani reached out quickly and took Brendi's face in her hands happily. She laid a lip locker on her that Brendi Faith neither drew away from or felt repulsed by. Indeed... she relished in the feel of Eliani's lips on her own and was disappointed when Eliani pulled back, her fern green eyes wide and delighted.

"You beautiful... talented... devious person you!" Eliani told her.

Brendi smiled as new and very welcome feelings rushed through her and she turned to look at Androcles. His azure eyes were bright under his helmet as he looked at her. "Welcome Brendi Faith." He stated with a smile. "Welcome to our world."

She saw his face suddenly twist up and his head snapped around like he had detected something.

"Dante!" Andro growled viciously and then he exploded from his crouched position down the corridor.

Jomann's eyes were wide but he acted within a heartbeat. "Go!" He barked the order to Torian and Daio. "Go!"

STARBOARD LANDING BAY

“Elynth, Ryner, Caydren and Cinol are clear!” Ne'Veha barked as her hands flew over the two consoles that seemed to wrap around her body completely.

“Meka... activate the turrets!” Sadi barked the order. “They will no doubt be bringing additional security to both entrances and we must not let them overwhelm Carisia.”

“Charging belly turrets!” Kameka replied calmly. “Activating area ground shield and repulsor fields!”

“Sehri ...” Sadi called as she looked out her cockpit window at the rush of landing bay crew members scrambling to get out of the way of the two dragons that were loose within their work areas.

“I am moving for the upper turret Sadi!” Sehri’s excited voice answered. “To see better and cover them with the cannon!”

“No DuanGai!” Sadi told her quickly. “Direct Elynth and Ryner to the port entrance and have them link up with Anthar to cover Enylarcopri’s retreat! Have Caydren and Cinol form with Majeir and hold the starboard entrance! Then go to the ramp and standby with Bren! The ground shield and repulsor field will only work briefly if we come under attack and we will need you to shield the ramp entrance if they try to assault our ship directly! Only you can do this Sehri! Only you have the control of your Etheric shields to do this! Have one of Joseph’s engineers occupy the turret once you have reached the ramp!”

“They... they will listen to me Sadi?” Sehri questioned.

“You are wife and mate to Androcles Leonidas and a Crown Princess of the Lycavorian Union!” Sadi answered her with confidence and love in her voice and her tone. “They will listen to you DuanGai!”

The tone of Sadi’s voice and the resolve that her words carried caused Sehri to blink for a moment. Up until this point in time a very small part of her had questioned and doubted what she had found with Andro and the others. It was not because she didn’t trust or believe the feelings and emotions she felt within her, but because she didn’t understand them. She didn’t understand how she could feel for each of them what she felt. The unquestioned devotion and love that filled her being when they held her in their arms or when Andro nuzzled her ear and cheek. The physical desire she felt not only for Andro, but for all of them. At this very moment Sehri decided she didn’t need to understand it. It was all very real and to try and comprehend it didn’t matter anymore. As Andro had told her, understanding what they all felt for each other was unimportant. All that mattered was that they were together. It was part of her now and she would not question her role or position.

“Understood!” Sehri answered firmly taking that last leap into her new life.

“SirsanGai can you pinpoint the landing bay controls?” Sadi asked quickly detecting the excitement and fear in Sehri’s voice, but also the new confidence and resolve. The youngest of them she may have been, but she was rapidly turning out to be far more.

“I have them! The bulkhead directly in front of us, sixty meters! This is incredible Sadi... Lady Mari and Brendi have managed to reroute all command functions if what I am seeing is accurate! They have essentially shut down the ship!” Ne'Veha answered her dark eyes glued to her consoles. “Internal sensors indicate that the bridge is sealed. That must be where the scum Moran went to.”

“Leave Moran and his ilk for Andro and Dori.” Sadi directed calmly even as her own heart raced. “Meka... deploy the forward Point Defense Quad cannons and keep them directed on the landing bay controls! If anyone even blinks in that direction, vaporize the entire wall! It is overkill but we must insure they do not try and vent the bay manually!”

“That would not be a good thing!” Kameka called from her chair behind and to the side of them as her hands deftly deployed the dorsal mounted PDT and it swiveled around until it was pointed on the huge control panel along the far wall of the landing bay.

The huge explosion rocked the landing bay and caused a shudder to pass through the PREMONITION even as several fighters were lifted off the deck and fell back quickly, bursting into flames. Sadi’s eyes were wide as she gazed out her cockpit view window.

Majeir! She screamed out in Mindvoice.

Oops! Sadi heard Majeir answer immediately. I think I may have ignited one of those fuel containers you told us to be careful of.

Are you hurt? Sadi asked.

No... however the same cannot be said for those who were close to it. Majeir told her.

Nubous them! Sadi snarled. Caydren and Cinol will be with you in moments! Do not let them reorganize Majeir! And be careful! If you injure yourself Lu'ria will be very upset!

DECK TWO

The explosion from deep within the ship caused the entire vessel to shudder violently, throwing Dante into the bulkhead as a lieutenant staggered by him.

“...is going on!” Dante roared as he grabbed the arm of the nearest officer he found which unfortunately for him, was that lieutenant.

“We have been boarded sir!” The lieutenant shouted back. “Lycavorians and their dragons are loose in the starboard landing bay and on this very deck!”

“Lycavorians! Here!” Dante shouted in disbelief.

“There were dragons on the ship that we thought carried your mother!” The lieutenant stammered. “They poured from the G9 and began killing everyone! At least two of them. That explosion felt like it came from the landing bay! They must have destroyed the external fuel cells for our fighters to cause such an explosion.”

“That... that is not possible!” Dante hissed. “Who could assault our ship in the middle of space?”

“They are also loose on this deck sir! Somehow they breached the hull of the ship and are loose on this deck! We don’t know how many!” The lieutenant snapped right back. “We are trying to form a defensive position near section eleven!”

“Where is my father?” Dante screamed.

The officer shook his head quickly. “We think he made it back to the bridge, but all of our communications has been cut off. They have somehow seized control of most of our internal systems and shut them down! No other decks are answering calls for assistance! It’s like they are all asleep and do not know what is happening!”

“This is a BLOOD REVERENCE Dreadnought!” Dante screamed. “Surely even they are not stupid enough to...”

Dante’s eyes grew wide in horror when the officer’s chest blossomed outward in a spray of bright red blood, showering his face and neck as the head and at least twelve inches of the shaft of the Nehtes burst from his sternum. The man’s eyes were wide in agony as blood erupted from his mouth and his hands involuntarily grabbed Dante’s shirt. Dante blinked rapidly, his own wide eyes staring at the point of the Nehtes only inches from his cheek. He wiped the warm blood from his eyes as he tried to rip the officer’s death grip from his uniform and his own blood went cold when he heard the voice.

A voice from the deepest reaches of the dark abyss, a voice tinged with rabid hatred and the cold finality of death.

“Hello Dante! Retribution for your sins has arrived!”

Dante Moran stood in the corridor unable to move as fear anchored him in his spot and he watched as the body of the lieutenant dropped to the deck in front of him when the Nehtes was torn from his chest, revealing the figure standing behind him. Dante’s eyes grew even wider if that was possible and he saw those azure blue orbs behind the Dragon Armor encased helmet. The tall black plume announced to all who Androcles was, falling well past his shoulders. His eyes were glowing with the same intensity as a sun and they were filled not with soothing warmth, but frigid and terrible wrath and hate. The half dozen figures that were gathered behind Androcles Leonidas were but an afterthought as all Dante could see were those evil blue eyes and the pain they held within them.

Andro depressed the button on the side of his Nehtes and the snik sound of the bloody spear reducing in size was like a clap of thunder in the corridor. Standing before him was the man who had caused his beloved sister such agony and shame. The man who had taken from her, at least for a brief time, her innocence and her purity. Andro had never felt such anger well within him before and now he embraced that completely.

All thoughts of justice escaped Androcles Leonidas at this very moment as emotion took hold of him. He lifted his face slightly and barred the vicious looking dual set of wolf fangs that so marked the bloodline of Leonidas among their people. Andro stepped without thought into the head butt, channeling all of his considerable anger and power into the blow. Dante's nose and one entire side of his face crunched and shattered as his skin was torn open down to the bone. Blood burst forth and he was viciously slammed back against the bulkhead as if he had been hit by a fast moving Lifter vehicle. He saw only stars in his eyes as terrible pain lanced through his brain and blood from his crushed nose and lacerated cheek poured into his mouth and caused him to cough and choke. He looked up quickly as powerful hands grasped the front of his uniform and those azure orbs were only inches from his face glowing even brighter.

"I am going to take from you everything you took from my sister you sick, nubous excuse for a man!" Andro screamed the words directly into Dante's face. "And I'm going to take it piece by nubous piece! You will beg me for death! Just as you made her beg for her life!"

"Arghh!" The scream was unlike anything Eliani Leonidas had ever heard from her older brother and her green eyes went wide as Andro lifted Dante's two hundred pound frame like he was a ragdoll in his hands and then launched his body down the corridor as if he was nothing more than paperweight.

Murano had been involved in countless operations during the Scourge Wars with fellow Praetorians and even regular Pralor troops, yet he had never witnessed the precision that he had seen so far. The moment they had breached the interior of this deck, all of them became focused on their goals and Murano could only feel pride swell as the Spartan training all of them had undertaken from near birth came shining through.

There was no one in the corridor where they breached and within seconds Deion had grasped Mari's hand in his and his team was splitting away smoothly headed for their goal. He and Dorian moved in the opposite direction, heading to link up with Androcles. Four vampires had made the mistake of appearing in the corridor as they moved, rushing out of the room they were in with drawn hand weapons and unsure of what was happening. All four were now quite disabled on the deck and they would not wake for several hours at least. Androcles had been very clear that they were not to kill wantonly; indeed he wanted to avoid death as much as possible given what Faren had told them. Dorian hadn't hesitated when the four burst from a small lounge and he had unleashed a precise and powerful Etheric wave that crashed into the four of them before their eyes had even registered the two intruders loose on their ship. Murano had pounced on them then, using his Saberstaff to incapacitate each of them with crisp and powerful blows. Two of them would suffer from broken bones, all of them from severe headaches, but they would live. Three times they had dispatched crewmembers as they moved with measured speed down the near empty corridor. Each time they left unconscious men and women behind them. They were very close now as they sprinted around the last corner.

Then they heard the scream.

It was a scream of rage and hate unlike any Murano had ever heard and as they rounded the corner, their eyes went wide as they saw Dante Moran's body impact the bulkhead corner only five meters away with bone crushing force. Murano's keen brain instantly calculated the distance that he had been thrown based on where they saw Androcles standing and his eyes grew even wider as he realized the strength needed to launch such a large person so far. Dante Moran impacted the bulkhead with such force that they heard several of his ribs snap and his body left a significant imprint in the steel bulkhead before he dropped to the deck in horrific pain. His face was frozen in a visage of suffering and awash with blood from what appeared to be a shattered nose and deep cut on his face. It was then that they witnessed something neither of them could have predicted. Androcles's moved with such speed it actually appeared as if he blurred in motion like a vampire, covering the ten meter distance between him and Dante in a single blink of the eyes. His armored and booted foot rammed into Dante Moran's midsection with enough force to lift the young man off the deck a good meter at least and splinter any ribs that might have remained intact.

As Dante Moran howled in agony and dropped back to the deck, Andro fell upon him like a rabid wolf even as they stood frozen and watched. Androcles Leonidas was widely recognized as perhaps the most lethal hand to hand fighter in the entire Union. He had been schooled by so many different masters of warfare, his uncles, Lynwe and his aunt Aihola of the Drow, the cloned vampire Colonel Norris to name but a few. He had taken all of their intense instruction and blended it into a fighting form that no one could match or hope to duplicate. Only one other person had begun to learn this style of fighting, because like his brother, Dorian Leonidas had been born fully aware and there was far more to the brothers than even they could understand. All of this training left Androcles in this moment and his armored fists began to pummel Dante without regard for where he was aiming his blows and with a speed that Murano had never seen before.

“My sister!” Andro screamed in rage. “My blood!”

Dante tried to fight back, launching a vicious punch directly at Andro’s face that never had an opportunity to connect. Andro simply snatched his wrist in his left hand before the blow even got close and he twisted Dante’s arm down with a savage jerk. Pureblood Lycavorians had always been known to have immense physical strength, far more than even a pureblood vampire could muster, and Andro’s blood, like his father and mother, was as pure as it got. Dante’s arm snapped like a dry twig and the bones in his forearm tore through the skin under his uniform sleeve and bulged against the fabric as his scream of anguish caused even Murano to cringe. His arm fell useless, blood quickly soaking his uniform sleeve and the floor beneath him, just as Andro grabbed the front of Dante’s uniform and lifted his body off the deck, glaring at him with glowing azure eyes and fully extended fangs. He rammed him back into the deck three times in rapid succession, each time his skull crashing into the deck with incredible force. The third impact crushed both of Dante’s shoulder blades, his eyes wide in horrific pain, but no sound able to escape his throat because of the blood in his mouth. Andro yanked him off the floor once more and brought his upper body to within inches of his face once more.

“My sisters are now untouchable to scum like you! My mothers beyond the foul reach of all who would do them harm! I will protect them all with every breath in my body!” Andro screamed into Dante’s torn, bloody and horrified face, the spittle showering his bloody cheek. “You are not worthy to even walk in their footsteps scum! And now you will pay for your actions in blood! Your death will be the herald to all of what to expect should anyone touch them ever again!”

“Mer...” Dante’s spit out blood and his ravaged and bloody lips tried to form the word. “Mercy!” He finally managed to croaked out.

Andro’s eyes grew even wider and angrier at this if it was possible. “Mercy!” He roared even louder. “I will show you the same mercy you showed to my sister you fucking monster! None! None at all!” Andro smashed another head butt into Dante’s face and then proceeded to continue to pound him with his fists.

“Sibfla!” Dorian gasped and made to move forward.

Murano’s hand snatched his arm and he shook his head quickly. “No!” He gasped softly.

“Murano... he will beat him to death, I kid you not!” Dorian protested trying to pull his arm free. “He’s... he’s never been like this!”

Murano held him tight and shook his head. “No!” He spoke. “Your brother is... he is in complete control of his actions! Do not interfere!”

“That is in control?” Dorian gasped.

“Do not interfere Dorian!” Murano ordered him. “Not yet!”

Everyone would forget the words they had heard Andro speak within a few hours. All but one.

Eliani Leonidas felt tears well in her eyes as her brother’s words filled her. It was at this moment in time where Eliani discovered just how dear they all were to her brother, and what he was willing to do in order to protect them. This was about justice for their sister Zarah yes, but in taking that justice, Androcles Leonidas was sending a very clear message across the stars that his sisters and his mothers, indeed all of his family, were just as he spoke.

They were now untouchable for those who valued their lives.

Eliani Leonidas would share this moment with her sisters and later her mothers and it was also a day that would forever see Androcles’s sister begin to view him in another light. It was a day that all of them saw the true nature of their brother come forth and part of what drove him. Eliani Leonidas would never forget this day and none of the Leonidas sisters would ever fear anything again after this moment in time.

It took them only twenty seconds wrapped within the shadows as they were to move to the main weapons magazine. There were seven vampire soldiers within the magazine when they entered, all of them scrambling to arm themselves. Carisia, Lu'ria, Sheva and Onera fell upon them like a swarm of deadly insects. With the small masks covering their mouths and nose to protect them against the gas, Carisia used the Tears of Heaven to nearly decapitate the closest soldier to her, the blood from the two wounds on either side of his neck arcing into the air as he fell gagging on his own blood. Lu'ria's Glaive snapped out twice in quick succession and another soldier fell, trying to hold his innards in as they spilled onto the deck.

Sheva and Onera worked as a seamless duo, something they would explore in the future after they realized it. Sheva twisted the arm of one soldier to the side hearing him scream as his arm and shoulder dislocated while Onera stepped into the single swing of her sword. His scream ended quickly as her blade opened his throat to the air and she spun away sweeping her foot to the side and knocking the legs from two other soldiers out from under them. Sheva blurred instantly and fell on them with her dual blades, burying the dragon armor encased blades into their chests as she dropped between them. Onera turned her head and her eyes went wide when she saw Lu'ria holding Carisia's hands as she spun her around in midair, Carisia's booted feet meeting the heads of two of the remaining three soldiers. It was a display of her newfound wolf strength that Onera thought exquisitely beautiful. Her half sister's petite body was packed with muscle and the kicks she unleashed were instantly lethal. One soldier's head snapped around from the force of the blow and his neck popping was very audible in the room. The other spun with the force of the blow and his head and face smashed into the bulkhead with devastating force. He dropped to the deck like a limp noodle, unconscious and completely out of the fight. It saved his life as Onera turned her attention to the last soldier who had secured a rifle and was bringing it to bear on Lu'ria and Carisia.

Onera acted out of love for a sister she never thought she would know. She drew back the arm that wielded Iphan rie Aellseleum and heaved the sword at the remaining vampire soldier with all of her combined Immortal and vampire strength. The throw was perfect and the tip of the sword entered just above his left nipple. It struck with such force that it drove him back nearly three meters into the bulkhead as the pommel came to rest pressed against his uniform with the entire blade impaling his chest and sticking out between his shoulder blades. He stared at the pommel, his eyes wide and unable to comprehend the terrible pain he felt as his severed heart no longer fed life giving blood to his body. He slumped to the deck slowly, leaving a bloody stain on the bulkhead as he did.

Carisia turned blindingly fast and looked at her sister with a brilliant smile. Her maya blue eyes were now the cobalt blue of her vampire persona and she turned her head back to the door quickly.

"Mistress... the door!" She gasped her voice somewhat muffled by the mask.

Lu'ria was moving before she finished speaking. "I have it!" Lu'ria spoke as she slammed her hand down on the control panel.

"Sheva..." Carisia whirled around and looked at her. "Lock out all the weapons magazine vaults! There should be four of them on this deck!"

Sheva sprang to the computer console in the center of the room and began typing with practiced ease. "Gods!" Sheva hissed.

"What?" Carisia demanded as she moved up next to her.

"Brendi and Mari!" Sheva exclaimed. "They have shut down or rerouted all of the ship's main systems and many of the subsystems! The entire core is open to me!"

"Are you serious?" Onera exclaimed moving up beside her, her eyes going wide when she saw for herself.

Sheva nodded as she continued to type on the computer panel. "Yes! It appears as if they have reversed the Command Codes as well and no system will come back online without a direct command from one of their P9s!"

"Sister... we must take advantage of this!" Onera said turning to look at Carisia.

"Sheva... use your P9 and tap into their code!" Carisia said quickly as she was thinking the same thing. "It will make it easier! All of our P9s were coded for this mission! Use the same commands and seal all the weapons vaults! On all the decks!"

Sheva had already pulled her P9 from the pouch at the small of her back and she went to work instantly. Carisia heard the groan and turned as the vampire soldier who had been knocked out rolled over. Onera quickly went to the dead soldier who had taken her thrown sword and yanked Iphan rie Aellseleum free of his chest. She stepped up to the survivor and prepared to end his life.

“No sister.” Carisia said watching as her eyes turned to look at her. “Remember what Faren told us... what Andro’s orders were. We do not kill unless necessary.”

Onera gazed at her for only a second before nodding and with an elegant twirl of her wrist Iphan rie Aellseleum went to its sheath on her back. She reached up to the wall and ripped down some cable and began to secure the soldier’s hands and feet.

Sheva looked up quickly. “Done!” She shouted. “All magazines have been sealed!”

“Bring up whatever internal sensor feeds you can Sheva.” Carisia told her. “We need to insure that the crew is subdued before Eliani will order a purge of the air filtration systems and we can dispense with these infernal masks.”

“On it.” Sheva declared.

Carisia turned her head and looked at Lu'ria while reaching out to Sadi within Mindvoice.

KertaGai! We have secured the magazines!

The landing bay appears to be ours as well! I'm ordering in the follow on Durcunusaan and Immortal forces Enylarcopri! We need to secure the ship before Eli will order the vent of the filtration systems! Sadi answered immediately.

Carisia looked at Lu'ria as both of them finally felt it with the Etheric realm. Lu'ria stepped up to Carisia now. Sadi... what is wrong? Saradasaar... the rage and hate we feel from him? There is something wrong!

Have faith in our love Mistress. Sadi answered calmly. He knows what he is doing. And he will reach for us when it is time for us to sooth him.

Lu'ria felt Carisia take her hand and nod. “Sadi is right Mistress. Let us help Sheva as she monitors the sensors Mistress.”

“Here! Here and here!” Pa'cour ordered his men, pointing at the three different spots on the reinforced armored door and then he moved out of the way as they went to work. He quickly stepped up beside Yuri who was looking at a time piece on her wrist. The lift had brought them directly to the secondary entrance to the bridge only to find that it was sealed. This was exactly something they had expected and the Immortal engineers went to work quickly.

“We adjusted Deion’s assault time Pa'cour. He is standing by at the maintenance hatch! We have thirty-eight seconds my love.” Yuri told him. “Then Deion will execute his attack!”

Pa'cour nodded. “We will be ready.”

Yuri pulled the P9 computer from her side, flipped open the armored cover and looked at the screen, tapping on it quickly. That Androcles had given this to her was another sign of his faith and trust in her now. This new type of Pralor computer was strictly controlled and only members of his family and certain highly placed individuals had one. He had also given her and Pa'cour the smaller P1 data pads that were bio-encoded to them. This was not something Yuri had expected, but it told her that Andro trusted her far more than she believed. It was a trust she had no intention of ever violating.

“It appears that this Brendi Faith and the Pralor woman Mari have succeeded beyond all of our expectations.” Yuri told him as she worked the small panel. “They have locked out all the ship’s main systems and shut them down. Onera and Carisia have succeeded in locking out the main weapons magazines and Sadi has just ordered that our follow on forces begin to deploy.”

Pa'cour nodded his head in agreement at the steps being taken. “He grew complacent Yuri.” He said. “We must not.”

Yuri nodded her head. Nothing in her long life had ever prepared her for what she was doing now. Working so seamlessly beside Lycavorians. Children of the man she had hated for centuries for a crime he did not commit. A man she was willing to kill at every opportunity, but a man who had shown her mercy when his boot was pressed to her throat.

This was not a flunk Yuri thought to herself. This was as Androcles had said it was. It was fate and destiny correcting a mistake made long ago. “I don’t intend to.” She said firmly. She tapped her jaw where the implant was. “Sadi Leonidas?”

“Here Yuri.” Sadi answered instantly, her voice seemingly very calm.

“We must insure that all of the decks are under our control before Eliani Leonidas orders the purge of the air filtration system! We do not need them waking up while we are still in the process of securing the ship.” Yuri spoke. “We do not know how many are willingly following Robert.”

“Carisia and I agreed on that.” Sadi answered. “Our follow on force of Durcunusaan is already landing. I can have Armen deploy additional forces from SPARTA'S WRATH. They are on standby anyway.”

Yuri nodded in agreement. “Have the first group begin from the landing bay and sweep through decks eleven, twelve, thirteen and fourteen and the two decks above the landing bay. Eight and nine! Have them put a security lock on any who are unconscious in their quarters or work areas. We have effective control of the ship and they will be able to do nothing. When the others arrive, split them and have one group move immediately to deck seven and then sweep upwards to the bridge. The second group can begin on fifteen and sweep down to deck twenty-four!”

“Understood! I have Faren already standing by to intercept any transmissions that may come in from Moran’s fleet.” Sadi told her. “Just to be sure.”

Yuri looked at Pa'cour in surprise. “We did not think of that.” She said.

Pa'cour nodded. “She seems more tactically efficient than we first thought.”

“Indeed.” Yuri agreed. “We will execute our breach ten seconds after Deion begins his assault Sadi. I will leave the deployment of forces to you.”

“We’ll get it done.” Sadi spoke confidently.

“We are ready!” The Immortal engineer hissed as he turned from the door to face them.

Yuri looked at her beloved Immortal husband and reached up to place her hand on his cheek. “It is time to bring an end to a vile part of our past my beautiful Immortal husband.” She said softly.

Pa'cour nodded. “Yes it is.”

Deion’s eyes were glued to his timepiece as well.

Cowen was stacked right behind him in front of the hatch, Sherice next, with Nara and Lisisa behind them. Mari was leaning up against the interior of the shaft holding her P9 and watching with wide eyes.

“Eight seconds.” Deion hissed softly. He turned his head and looked at Mari, her eyes already focused on him. “Mari you stay right there until one of us calls for you.” He told her. Mari nodded her head quickly.

Sherice was staring at Cowen’s broad back and shoulders and made an instant decision that would prove to be a defining moment in her life. She leaned her head close to Cowen’s head, pressing her lush body against his back. “Do not get yourself injured Cowen'Shan.” She whispered. “I would not be happy in the least.”

Cowen turned wide eyes on her beautiful face and saw her pale blue eyes gleaming as they gazed upon him. He blinked rapidly as he saw her smile and then Deion’s voice jolted him back to the present.

“I’m left. Cowen right. The rest follow on as we discussed.” Deion looked at his sister. “Lisisa... take Moran down hard.”

Lisisa Leonidas nodded her head, jaw set firmly. “Count on it.” She stated.

Deion took a deep breath and plunged his finger down on the small panel by the hatch. “Go!”

“...get me a fucking report!” Moran screamed. He was pacing back and forth, concern etched into his face now, the skin of his neck and upper back burning in pain. The dragon’s fire had scorched him good, all along his upper back and neck. His skin was blistered and red, some of it even peeled away behind his right ear. The lower portion of the back of his head was missing all of the hair that once grew there.

“We are locked out of all major Command Systems Admiral! All control of ship wide subsystems has been rerouted!” One of his officers yelled. “All operational command codes have been altered and shifted to a remote terminal! I’ve never seen this type of coding sir! It’s far more advanced than anything we have! None of our codes work any longer! Engines are offline! Weapons and shields are offline! All of it appears to have been rerouted to three remote terminals somewhere on the ship!”

“Where?” Moran screamed.

“I don’t have control of internal sensors anymore Admiral!” The man yelled. “I can’t begin a search! And there is no response from security forces on deck two and all other decks appear to be silent!”

“We have over five thousand men and women on this ship!” Moran screamed. “We can raise no one?”

“All the internal sensors are reading lifesigns but there is no response from any deck sir! It’s like they are all asleep!”

“Asleep?” Moran snapped as his eyes grew a little wider. “Can we get Vid feeds?” Moran demanded as he moved up beside the man.

“Accessing security feeds from... phraktos!” The man gasped as the image came up on the monitor.

“Fuck!” Moran growled loudly as he took in the numerous bodies littering the corridors of the deck they were viewing. “What deck is this?”

“Six sir! Main security stations!” The man answered. “I don’t understand sir... how could they have...”

Moran stepped back as what Viror had said in the landing bay struck him. “Gas!” He hissed viciously.

“Admiral?”

“Viror said there were seven spikes in hull integrity just before Yuri’s ship landed!” Moran barked.

“Yes sir! A diagnostic revealed nothing. The Chief Engineer determined the internal sensors needed to be recalibrated!”

Moran shook his head. “There’s nothing wrong with the sensors!” Moran snapped. “They used gas!”

“Admiral? Gas?”

“Somehow they punched through our hull armor!” Moran said. “Where were the spikes? Show me!”

The man quickly brought up a schematic of the ship and Moran saw the seven red dots that the internal sensors had picked up earlier. He moved closer to the screen as his eyes narrowed and then he slammed his fist down on the console. “All seven are directly connected to our main air filtration ducts!” He snarled. “They pumped gas into the decks! Do we still have control of the medical biosensors?”

“Yes sir. Medical subsystems still remain under our control for all the good it does!”

“Scan for foreign substances! Anything not normal to the ship!” Moran spat as the officer was already in motion. “Maybe we can reverse whatever it is they did and...”

“Admiral... shu! I’m detecting massive levels of neutron radiation saturating all but deck two and the bridge!” The officer exclaimed with wide eyes. “Not enough to kill... but more than enough to incapacitate within seconds!”

“The bridge and deck two are the only areas not connected to the main air filtration and duct system!” Moran said. “Shit! They got us good! Can you purge it?”

“Negative! Main filtration systems are part of engineering! They were the first controls locked out! Admiral... who the fuck is crazy enough to try this out of space dock?” The officer asked. “This is insane! It...”

It sounded like a clap of thunder from a major lightning storm on the bridge. The noise was so loud it caused all of the bridge crew to reach for their ears in pain. The sound caused both Moran and the officer beside him to whirl around to look behind them. Time seemed to slow as they saw a large cloud of white smoke rising from the side of the bridge where the maintenance hatch was situated.

And then that entire hatch was rocketing at them at terminal velocity. Moran was able to duck in time to save his own life, but the one ton hatch slammed into the officer beside him moving faster than they could track it. The man died instantly from the impact and was saved from the agony of being crushed against the unforgiving bulkhead as the hatch proceeded past him and slammed into the far wall. Moran turned back with wide eyes just as two massive, black clad forms burst from the cloud of smoke, Lycavorian P190A5s spitting death.

Robert Moran knew instantly that all was lost then.

He knew of only one force in the entire galaxy that could execute such a breach into a secure area like his bridge with such timing and precision. Only one group crazy enough to even attempt something like this. He caught the flash of black body armor through the smoke as two more figures came out of the smoke immediately and from their size Moran knew they were female. They too had the Spartan close assault weapon and both of them were firing with exact movements and accuracy.

Robert Moran turned to move behind the console and try for the emergency hatch in the floor under the Tactical station. His only thoughts were for himself now, and only his survival mattered to him. He would not make it. Moran felt the hand clamp onto his tore and burned uniform with surprising strength, stopping his forward motion.

“You will not escape this time murderer!” The female voice growled from behind him.

Moran twisted away and turned quickly, reaching for the knife he carried on his belt. His eyes fell upon the petite but muscular form of the female as the knife came up. Even under the Tactical Headset her features were very clear and he saw the long fangs and wide forest green eyes that were focused on him. Moran knew instantly who it was that stood in front of him and even as he brought the knife snapping up he knew he would not win.

Lisisa Leonidas held nothing back. All the pain this man had caused her beloved father and sister through the years with his actions. A father who had never considered her anything but his very own daughter even though his blood did not flow within her veins. A sister that had endured the emotional humiliation all of her life until finally finding those who had been in her dreams for so long. The horrific shame another dear sister had to endure by orders given and then supported by this man and carried out by his vile sons. No... Lisisa Leonidas held nothing back now and brought the knife edge of her hand down across his wrist with unfettered control and power and all of her combined strength. Moran’s wrist snapped in two, the bottom bone bursting through the skin and blood gushing forth. As he began to scream in terrible pain Lisisa swung the butt of her 190 with every ounce of the vampire and wolf strength her small frame carried. The crack of the blow rose above even the noise of the silenced weapons echoing across the bridge and there was nothing Moran could do to stop or dodge it. Not at the speed it was coming.

Lisisa’s 190 actually shattered when it connected with Moran’s jaw, the butt splintering into different sections and flying off in opposite directions, but having done what she intended. Robert Moran felt a moment of even more intense, searing pain and then his brain overloaded and he dropped into unconsciousness. He would awake some hours later to horrible pain in his back and shoulders from where his body had seemingly grown wings and launched him across the bridge to smash against the bulkhead and several computer consoles ten meters away. He slumped to the deck and did not witness the secondary bridge doors being removed by the expertly placed reverse explosion or the rush of Immortals that filled the smoke riddled bridge, their weapons out. He did not witness Yuri and Pa'cour sweep onto the bridge intent on death only to find that Deion’s team had already secured the bridge. All nine bridge officers were dead and sprawled across the deck, their blood leaking from precise and deadly holes in their heads or chests.

“Cowen!” Deion’s voice echoed like a another, milder clap of thunder in the confined space.

“Clear!” Cowen’s deep throated reply came.

“Clear!” Sherice echoed.

“Nara!” Deion yelled turning his head. “Sister!”

Nara got to her feet slowly her azure eyes wide but clear. “Clear... clear!” She softly stammered out the reply.

Deion moved up to her without hesitation, pressing his forehead to hers, Nara breathing deeply of his scent and using it to calm her racing heart. This was her first taste of combat and the actual taking of life. Deion knew what was racing through her for it had been racing through him after he had to kill the fools on the colony where Sheva’s parents were. Nara nodded her head quickly then, reaching up to squeeze his arm and meet his yellow wolf eyes. “I am fine.” She muttered. “I will be fine!”

Cowen moved up beside Sherice his keen feline eyes looking over her armored figure for any sign of injury. “You are unhurt?” Cowen demanded.

Sherice met Cowen’s eyes and nodded quickly. “Yes.”

Cowen didn’t really think about it, he just reached out and began to run his hand over her arms and shoulders to insure this fact for himself. Sherice couldn’t help the flush of desire that rushed through her as she realized this and let her A5 drop on its quick release straps and she reached up to take his hands. “Cowen...” She spoke softly seeing his beautiful eyes focus on her. Sherice squeezed his large hands and brought them to her chest. “I’m ok.” She said.

Yuri moved up beside Lisisa where she stood staring at Moran’s inert form a few meters away.

“Secure the bridge!” Pa'cour barked out the order to his men. “Insure that all remaining systems are locked out and under our control!”

“Lisisa?” Yuri spoke softly causing Lisisa to turn and look at her.

“That... that was for Zarah.” Lisisa said softly.

“Lisisa...” Yuri began.

“You have been given a second chance mother.” Lisisa told her gently, no malice in her voice. “A second chance to be someone different. To be who destiny and fate meant for you to be, just as Andro has told you. Do not betray my brother’s faith in you Yuri. For if he does not find you and make you suffer then I swear to you this day that I will.”

“I would expect no less from my daughter.” Yuri stated.

Lisisa turned to face her fully. “I sing with happiness at what Carisia has discovered with you. The person you are now. You are so very different Yuri... and I see the happiness it brings my sister and you and I welcome that... but you are not my mother and I can not...”

Yuri reached out and took her arm in her hand gently. “No.” Yuri told her softly. “You do not need to explain. Least of all to me.”

Lisisa lifted her hand and covered the back of Yuri’s fingers with her own and squeezed firmly. “Perhaps one day I will be able to forgive and put the memories behind me. Denali’s love has allowed me to feel so much more than I was able. One day we may yet be friends... and maybe after that who knows... but that will...”

Yuri shook her head. “I will not betray the chance your brother gave to me Lisisa.” She stated confidently. “Or the trust he has placed in me. When the day comes that you can call me friend... that will be a start. That is... that is all I can ask for and work towards. And I intend to see that day happen.”

Lisisa Leonidas saw the conviction in her dark eyes and nodded slowly. She looked at Moran’s unconscious form. “What fate do you have in store for him?” She asked.

Yuri’s eyes darkened and shifted to the cobalt blue of her vampire nature as she turned her eyes where Lisisa was looking. “One filled with as much pain as I can fathom for all he has done to me. And to so many people.”

Lisisa nodded. “Insure it is fitting.” She said softly. “Andro will leave Moran’s fate for you to decide... but Dante... he belongs to us.”

Yuri met her eyes now. “As it should be.” She said.

Lisisa looked at her. “He is your son.” She said.

Yuri shook her head quickly. “The day your brother killed me... that life ended Lisisa. He is no son of mine. I have found my true self with Pa'cour’s love. All that I care for from that past life is Lucia, Carisia and you.” She motioned with her head. “Take three of our Immortals and sweep back down the lift to insure no surprises plaque us. They will follow you without question Lisisa.”

Lisisa stared at her for a long moment and then nodded her head and turned to leave the bridge. Yuri only had to glance and motioned with her head once more and Pa'cour’s second officer nodded and pulled two others with him to follow her. Yuri then moved up and looked down at Robert’s inert form. Her cobalt blue vampire eyes held nothing but disdain and hate in them and she spit forcefully on his unmoving body as Pa'cour and two other Immortals came up to her.

“Take this piece of garbage from here and secure him. Make sure a medic controls his bleeding. I do not want him to die before he faces justice and I do not want Eliani Leonidas to waste her skills on one such as him.” Yuri spat. “And search him thoroughly... he will not escape our justice because we were lax.”

“Yuri?” Pa'cour spoke softly as his hand slipped around her waist. He had overheard most of the conversation with Lisisa.

Yuri leaned into his powerful form and relished in the sensations he could and did make her feel. “We are about to close a chapter on our former lives Pa'cour my love. And I will be so very happy when that comes to a conclusion.”

Pa'cour nodded. “As will I.”

Yuri lifted her hand and tapped her jaw. “Androcles... we have secured the bridge and Robert Moran.” She spoke calmly. “Deion and the others performed exceptionally and we will begin to secure the rest of the ship from here.” She glanced at Pa'cour. “You may cease with your diversion.”

“A diversion Dante will not soon forget.” Pa'cour spoke with a hint of humor as he moved to another bridge station.

Yuri nodded. “For however many days he has left in this life.” She agreed.

Mari hadn't moved through the entire assault, pressing back against the bulkhead in the shaft clutching her P9 in one hand and the K14 KM in the other. She could hear the shouts and weapons fire, each sound causing her to jump and shiver in fear, but just as Dante had told her, she had not budged. She had succeeded in her task however and she was very proud of herself for that. Real fear coursed through her veins at what was happening all around her, yet there was something very deep inside her heart and mind that told her she did not need to be afraid. It told her that Deion would take care of her. That he would always...

"Mari!" His voice startled her and she jumped slightly as her eyes sprang open.

"Deion!" She gasped.

He moved through the still smoking entrance into the shaft and stood in front of her a dazzling smile on his handsome face and his dual wolf fangs fully exposed for her to view. Small splotches of blood dotted his armor and cheeks, sweat and dirt mixed together on his skin but Mari had never seen so beautiful a man in all her life. She dropped her P9 and let it dangle on the straps and then she hit him with the slap and all the power she could muster in her petite body. It wasn't very much given the fact he stood just over a foot taller than her and she was barely over a hundred pounds soaking wet, but it served to cause his smile to vanish and his eyes to look severely injured.

"Do not ever leave me alone like that again Deion Leonidas... you... forn mida! Ever!" Mari shouted at him with more relief than anger. Her blue green eyes suddenly went wide when she realized she had just spoken a phrase in the ancient Lycavorian language just as fluently as she had heard others speaking it. She looked up into Deion's face and saw his own eyes, now returned to their gorgeous dark brown, just as wide as hers at the force and fluency of her words to him. His vicious looking dual fangs, though very beautiful to Mari in their own way, slowly retracted and then Mari did something she had never done before.

Mari took a leap of faith.

Literally.

Just as her mind and heart screamed out that he would, Deion caught her in his powerful arms just as her soft lips covered his and she kissed him with a zealous fervor that she had never felt in her young life. It raged through her like an unchecked storm and she embraced all of what it made her feel completely and without hesitation.

When his arms crushed her tiny frame even tighter against his... and he deepened their kiss... Mari was so very happy she had.

Murano was watching carefully the savage beating Andro was giving Dante Moran, one of his hands still holding Dorian back while the others could only watch in shock. None of them had ever seen Androcles so enraged and radiating with so much power with the Etheric realm. Not one of them had the courage to try and step between Andro and Dante, for while all of them knew how much family meant to the Leonidas clan, no one truly realized just how sacred it was to Androcles until this very day. None of them had ever been witnessed to such a beating as the one Dante Moran was receiving, and only Jomann knew of anything comparable in anyone's history. Jomann was a voracious reader of history and what he was seeing this day reminded him of a practice that the ancient Roman's of Earth's storied past had used for a time.

Decimation.

Dante's face was almost unrecognizable. His right eye was already swollen tightly shut, his left eye nearly so. His nose, or what remained of it, now resided in a crooked fashion at least an inch to the left of where it had once been. His upper and bottom lips were both very nearly shredded and several of his teeth were missing, including both of his main vampiric fangs. Both his cheekbones were crushed, the skin over that portion of his face looking much like mangled hamburger while his jaw had been broken within the first dozen blows Androcles had landed. Aside from his shattered arm, every rib within his body was now broken, two of them having perforated his right lung. Androcles was not using his Etheric power to augment his physical blows as they knew he could, there was really no need. Androcles was a pureblood Lycavorian, and dating back more years than most could claim to have been living, pureblood Lycavorians were simply overpowering in their physical strength even when compared to vampires.

And Dante Moran was no pureblood vampire.

All of them heard Yuri's voice echo within their ear implants.

“Androcles... we have secured the bridge and Robert Moran.” Her voice spoke calmly. “Deion and the others performed exceptionally and we will begin to secure the rest of the ship from here. You may cease with your diversion.”

The instant Murano heard those words he nodded to Dorian. “Now.” He rasped quickly and began moving forward.

Dorian didn't hesitate and they rushed up to where Andro had drew back his large fist for another punch but now held it angled high over his shoulder. Murano didn't hesitate and he placed his hand on Andro's shoulder immediately, Dorian matching this movement almost as if knowing this needed to be done.

Murano closed his eyes and reached for those who he knew would calm Androcles's racing blood.

Sadi! You and the others! Elynth! Now! Deion! Nara! Eliani! Lisisa! All of you! Reach for your brother now! Murano announced the command within Mindvoice so loudly that even Yuri and Pa'cour heard it.

It was something only he and Murano had talked about. A way to insure Xaxon's Etheric presence would not give away or impede their assault on the ship. They had to keep his full attention focused on Dante and keeping him alive. Androcles had told Murano of the berserker lust that Lycavorians could enter in the midst of rage, how they would focus all of their energy and force on one person or object until that person or object was dead or destroyed. He also told Murano that to keep him from killing Dante, Murano had to insure no one interfered until Yuri had announced the ship was theirs.

Now that Yuri's words had gone out, Murano acted and within a heartbeat he felt the staggering presence of Sadi Leonidas and her fellow Crown Princesses reaching for the man they all so adored. That was quickly followed by Elynth and all of his brothers and sisters, and as he watched with wide eyes, the effect was very telling. The unmistakable and eerie glow in Andro's azure colored eyes immediately began to fall away and as the love and warmth of his family surrounded him, filtered through him, caressed his senses and mind, Androcles Leonidas returned that feeling ten fold. He did not hear Sadi and his other wives and mates gasp in utter delight as his resonance swarmed around them with absolute devotion. He did not see the looks of peace surround the faces of his siblings as they felt the unquestioned love and commitment for them pour forth from his resonance.

Only one other person was truly included in this massive wave of emotion, for Mari was still quite securely wrapped in Deion's arms. It was unlike anything she had ever felt as Deion deepened their already sizzling kiss even more, his powerful arms pulling her closer as her body melted against his. The Etheric resonance of his brother passed to her without hesitation and Mari knew at that very moment where her life would lead and who would be in it. She had become, quite unequivocally, part of the Leonidas family and that knowledge made Mari's who being cry out in happiness.

Murano watched with wide eyes, and for the first time since meeting Martin and feeling his Praetorian resonance echo outwards, complete understanding came to him. He now knew without question why his dear friend and mentor Sumar had done what he did. Binding himself and their people so tightly to these Lycavorians. He could feel it within all of them now. And while he didn't understand why he could feel the full effect, it still filled Murano, swarmed around him and made him feel reborn. Murano didn't question it this time. No... Murano embraced it and relished in the sense of freedom and purpose it brought to him. Very soon he would discover why he could feel it as he could.

They watched as Andro slowly got to his feet and lowered his hands. His azure eyes had returned to their normal state, the thick black ring surrounding the pupil, and ever so gripping in their normal brightness. His dual wolf fangs were still fully exposed however, and Murano watched as he took a deep breath and exhaled heavily. In that final exhale of air, all the savage hate and rage and desire to extract vengeance upon Dante Moran left Androcles as liquid flowed over a waterfall and was carried away. It was as if a strong, cool breeze had swept across him in a still room and carried those emotions into the wind as it passed.

Andro looked up above him, not at anyone in particular, but his eyes stared at the ceiling of the corridor for a second and a small smile split his face confusing those who were watching him so intently. He reached for the one person no one else had yet detected.

[Vinx.] He whispered the words fluently in the Darastrixi language. [Vinx] (Thank you)

PRALOR CORVETTE HOLDING ON STARBOARD WING OF INQUISITOR

Sarlana smiled behind her closed eyes and felt the peace wash over her once more. She wasn't aware that Conlar and the others were staring at her intently, for she had been echoing soft words that none of them could understand while she stood in the cockpit.

[We have... we have so much to talk of Dahakoan.] Sarlana spoke. [So much to reveal and so many decisions to make.]

[And we will make them.] Andro's deep voice filled her mind causing her to lift her arms and clutch herself in happiness. [I have... Dorian and I have so many questions.]

[And I will answer all that I am able. Just as I told your father I would.] Sarlana told him. [My only... my only purpose now is to serve you. Guide you. Though I dare say, after what you have just done, hiding your true purpose, my guidance many not be needed. It was a masterful performance Dahakoan.]

[No. You serve no one.] Andro told her confidently. [And your knowledge and guidance will be very welcome.]

[Then I will have this wonderful pilot you gifted me with take me to your ship and I will await you and Dorian and the other Dahakoan there.] Sarlana said. [We have time Dahakoan, but do not... do what you must to bring this to an end Androcles Leonidas, but there are others who need us as well.]

[I will remember.] Andro said. [And we will speak soon.]

Sarlana's emerald green eyes opened slowly and the smile remained. His presence and that of Dorian's and the other Vrrarhoinpa Dahakoan were far more powerful than she had ever anticipated, and it filled her with new found hope and resolve.

"Sarlana?" Conlar asked as he reached out and took her arms.

Sarlana opened her eyes fully and smiled at him. "I am fine." She stated. She turned to Mal'ita. "Young lady... I have done what I needed. You may take us to your ship with your Prince's blessing."

Mal'ita's eyes grew wide. "You... you spoke with him?" She gasped.

Sarlana nodded her head. "They have succeeded in their task. I will trouble you no more child." Sarlana took Conlar's hand and urged him towards the rear, his eyes full of questions. "Come Conlar... let us remove ourselves so that they can do their job without our distraction."

Mal'ita shook her head quickly and looked at her flight crew as Sarlana and Conlar disappeared into the back. "Carians... sometimes those who are able to Mindvoice scare me to no end." She gasped.

Leeta couldn't help but smile and nod her head in agreement. "No arguments here." She stated.

"Suraie... get us to SPARTA'S WRATH before someone else changes their minds." Mal'ita said. "I just wish for this day to be over."

Suraie chuckled as she turned back to her controls. "Admiral O'Connor did warn us that serving with the Crown Prince and so many members of the Leonidas family would be an adventure beyond any we have ever had." She said.

"Insure we have that gold plated so we can hang it on our bulkhead." Leeta spoke from her station. "We can look at it and remind ourselves we volunteered for this posting every time something strange happens."

INQUISITOR

Andro dropped his head and looked at Murano. "It worked." He said.

"What worked?" Dorian asked as he looked between them. "What is Yuri talking about? What diversion?"

Murano nodded. "Given what Yuri told us concerning Dante it only made sense. Did you...?"

Andro nodded slowly. "And more evil a resonance I have never felt. I see and understand why grandfather did what he did." He said softly.

Murano gripped his arm tightly. "You... you and your father; Dorian, Deion and Jomann, you make me proud to call myself a Praetorian Androcles. As your father knew you would."

Andro nodded his head to him. "We have much still to do." He said turning and seeing Eliani step up to him, her green eyes alive with sisterly love and adoration.

Eliani reached up to place her hand to the side of his helmet. "Andro you..."

Andro smiled at her. "Do what you need to do to insure this ronnus does not die just yet sister. No more than that." He told her. "I will not have you soil your presence with his for very long."

Eliani looked down at Dante Moran. "As little as possible?" She asked.

Andro nodded. "Only enough to keep him alive for a few days longer."

Eliani nodded her head. "Avoi." She stated.

Andro tapped his jaw. "KertaGai... Carisia... Sehri... Lu'ria... SirsanGai... all of you are..."

"We are secure Saradasaar!" Sadi's voice answered instantly for all of them. And it was a voice filled with love and desire for the man they cherished. "All of us! The follow on forces from Armen are landing even as we speak! He had them holding in three STRIKERS and a MENKLA just outside the shield grid under shroud."

It was Normya's voice that broke into all of their implants and finally broke the tension and rush of combat that still surrounded them. "Andro... fervon... you really need to come up with something to call them that does not require you to say all of their names!" She stated ever calmly. "As with father... it takes too long when you inquire of them or their health."

This caused all of them to laugh gently and Eliani elbowed her brother in the ribs. Andro shook his head in embarrassment.

"Sadi... have a single detachment of Durcunusaan proceed directly to my position. Half to secure the rest of this deck. There are still those who are resisting. The other half is to take Dante Moran back to SPARTA'S WRATH and insure he is held in solitary confinement. Have Bren and Famus see to it as they have already been briefed. The rest you may deploy how you and Yuri see fit to secure the entire ship."

"Understood." Sadi answered instantly.

"Armen... are you monitoring?" Andro asked.

-Affirmative-

"The STRIKER that is carrying Yuri and Pa'cour's elven wife Nameia to the High Coven capital. Burst a secure transmission for them to hold their position. I have something I want to discuss with Yuri before they proceed." Andro ordered him.

-Done-

"Armen... set up a defensive perimeter with APOC Drones and RAPTORS. Any ship that enters your established perimeter without permission from you, and is not of Union designation, destroy them immediately. No warnings Armen. Just obliterate them completely. We can not risk that Moran's followers did not get some message and come to investigate." Andro told him.

-I am already launching APOC Drones. RAPTORS will join with them in three minutes- Armen answered causing Andro to look at Murano in surprise.

Murano shrugged his broad shoulders. "Avatar 41 was much like this. He could almost predict what Sumar would do. He is like this with your father now."

Andro shrugged as well. "Deion?"

"I am here fervon." Deion's voice answered instantly.

"Lady Mari?" Andro asked.

Neither Andro or Murano saw Deion look down at where Mari still resided within his embrace. "She is fine." He stated with a smile to her that they could not see.

"Mari?" Murano questioned as he tapped his jaw now as well.

"I am fine Uncle." She answered. "Just as Deion has said."

Andro saw Murano breathe a sigh of relief and he continued. "Set up a defensive position around the bridge with Pa'cour's Immortals and your team fervon." Andro told him. "No one is to enter the bridge without direct permission from you, myself or Yuri and Pa'cour. For any reason. Contact grandfather Riall on our secure family channel and give him the coordinates for Moran's remaining forces. He and Admiral Pontal will want to work quickly. And have Lady Mari download any information from their computer banks that she is able to access. Yuri... you and Pa'cour join me on deck two. Is there a lounge or conference room of some sort on this deck?"

"Yes." Yuri answered immediately. "If you are still near Dante's quarters then there is a large conference room on the port side near section nine." Yuri answered him. "What are you planning Androcles?"

"We will find it. You and Pa'cour meet me there in one hour and we will discuss what I have in mind." Andro said.

"And Robert?" Yuri asked hesitantly.

"It is his future, or lack thereof, that we will discuss." Andro told her. "For now... secure him in whatever bindings you feel are appropriate. His comfort or condition is not my concern as long as he lives for now Yuri."

"Well... he will not awake anytime soon after the beating that Lisisa gave to him... but I will make certain he is secure." She spoke with some humor. "Androcles... did we... did we lose anyone?" The change in her voice was noticeable by all.

"The gods were with us this day." Andro answered her. "We have done the unthinkable and did it with no injuries."

Once more they all heard Yuri sigh. "L'phraktos dumo udossa." She spoke. "Pa'cour and I will join you shortly."

Andro looked at Murano. "Will you assist Bren and Famus with this piece of garbage when they arrive?" He asked.

Murano nodded. "With pleasure."

Andro looked at Dorian. "Take Daio and Torian and search his quarters for anything that could be useful Dori. Moran's as well. Anything fervon... anything that could help us as well as Narice and Arrarn." He told him. "Then join with me, Yuri and Pa'cour. And bring Sheva and Onera."

Dorian nodded. "I'm on it." He said motioning Daio and Torian to follow him.

Andro turned to Jomann now. "Take Brendi to this conference room and have her work her magic on the computer in there. Same order as Lady Mari." He said. "Eli and I will join you there when we are done and Dante has been secure."

Jomann nodded and took Brendi's hand without question. Eliani stepped up to Brendi and brazenly leaned up on her tip toes and kissed her fiercely. It was a sensual kiss that Brendi Faith very much returned with equal emotion. Eliani drew back after a moment and looked at her with smiling eyes. "Watch out for him Saarrieemeran. He can be sneaky."

Brendi nodded to her, dark brown eyes alive with new emotions and feelings. "I will."

Andro turned to Murano as Jomann led Brendi off and Eliani stepped close to her brother once more. She looked at him as he spoke.

"Murano... there is something we need to speak of." Andro said. "This remains with the three of us. At least for now."

Murano instantly detected the cautionary tone in his voice and he also knew that if only his sister Eliani was included in this information then it was probably not very good. Or at least could mean problems in the future. Murano had come to discover that Sadi and his mates aside, Andro trusted his sisters Zarah and Eliani with information and knowledge that no others were aware of. It was not something that Androcles did consciously for he trusted all of his siblings completely. With Eliani however, it was because she was born in a very emotional time for their parents and like him, she had memories imprinted on her that their other siblings did not for their parents had not yet to learn to control what they passed to their children at the time. He knew well why Androcles felt as he did for his sister Zarah for Andro had shown him all that had taken place during that time and the connection they now shared because of it.

Eliani and Zarah Leonidas alone, among all of their siblings, rarely if ever thought any differently about things than their brother. According to Martin and all of their mothers, Eliani, Zarah and Andro hardly ever disagreed with one another about how to conduct themselves in any given situation.

“Talk to me.” Murano told him.

“Our detachment was directed here by Crown Princess Sadi. I contacted you immediately Princess.” The Immortal told Yuri and Pa'cour as he stood in front of them. Yuri noted that he did not hesitate to share this information and this was only another sign that she and Pa'cour had come a long way from only a year ago. “She wanted us to insure that Moran did not hold any prisoners that we might not be aware of.” He turned his head back to the interior of the cell, the force field now gone. “We found her.” His dark eyes were hard when he turned back to her. “Princess... they... they fed on her like she was a piece of meat. Used her! And they filmed it all!” He stated motioning to the bank of monitors. “I ask... I ask that you do not... I wish to kill them all! I wish to...”

Yuri reached out and put her hand on his arm. “Calm yourself Em'cer.” Yuri said softly. “Their fates are already sealed.”

The huge Immortal, nearing six foot five in height and well over two hundred and thirty pounds nodded his head. “As you say Princess.”

“You are Ma'dur's oldest?” Yuri asked him.

The Immortal met her eyes. “Yes Milady.”

“I have asked your father to stop calling me that.” Yuri said with a smile. “I see he has passed it on to his sons.”

“While he stands as your Guardian he will always refer to you in this way Princess.” Em'cer told her. “As will we all.”

Yuri stepped closer to the open cell, fighting down the urge to vomit at the stench that assaulted her senses. Unwashed body odor and the distinct smell of old blood. The woman was curled into as small a position as she could get, her legs drawn up to her chest. She wore only the ragged remains of a fleet uniform that had been torn in almost every way and which she had managed to tie and cover herself as much as was possible. Yuri's dark eyes grew a little wider when she saw the long blond hair and the face of the young woman and she moved quickly to kneel in front of her.

The young woman tried to push further back against the bulkhead as she saw Yuri move closer. Her stunning green eyes were filled with undisguised fear and pain and Yuri felt a flash of anger within her.

“Please... please.” The young woman croaked out the words. “I'm sorry! I'm sorry! You... you were right! I... I don't want to hurt anymore! Please...”

Recognition filled Yuri as she realized this was the young woman Robert had taken into his bed even while she had been healing in a Blood Vat. No doubt she had done this with promises from Robert of advancing her career and power. It was not something uncommon within the High Coven, at least before. Pontal and Narice would see that it no longer was an issue in the future.

“What... what is your name?” Yuri asked her.

“I... please Princess... I am sorry!” The young woman stammered. “I don't... I don't want to die! I don't want to endure this anymore!”

“I am not going to hurt you child.” Yuri said softly. “What... what is your name?”

The young woman's blue eyes gazed at her. “As... Ashuna.” She finally spoke.

“Robert... Robert did this to you?” Yuri asked.

“He was... once he recovered from the wounds you gave him... he was... he was crazed with anger.” She spoke softly. “So... so violent and... he hurt me. When I... when I refused to... to let him have my ass he beat me! He beat me and then gave me to his sick, perverted son! I tried to... I tried to fight but...” Yuri's hand was shaking in rage as she reached out and placed it on Ashuna's shoulder.

“You do not need to...” She started to speak.

“He gave me to these pigs!” Ashuna screamed. “He gave me to them and he laughed when he did it!” The tears came then as she shook her head vigorously as if trying to rid the memories from her head. “He laughed... he laughed at me.” She sobbed as she fell into Yuri’s arms as a child would reach for their parent when in pain.

Yuri slid to her butt as she pulled the young woman into her arms and held her tightly while Ashuna’s entire body shook in shame and humiliation.

“Yuri my wife?” Pa'cour asked moving into the cell now.

Yuri looked at him with tears coming from her own eyes now. “Go husband.” She said softly. “Leave us. Tell Androcles I will join you as soon as I am able. This... this is my fault Pa'cour. What she has endured is my fault.”

“You can not hold yourself accountable for that animal’s crimes Yuri.” Pa'cour told her gently.

Yuri shook her head slowly. “No... this one I must. I... I left her here when I should have taken her with us.” She told him. “Go... I will follow shortly my love. Leave Em'cer with me. I will follow soon.”

Pa'cour was silent for a moment and then squeezed her shoulder in knowing fashion and rose to his feet. He stepped back outside the cell and looked at Em'cer, the young Immortal’s eyes filled with anger and something Pa'cour knew well.

“Remain with her Em'cer. She is now your charge.” He said.

Em'cer glanced back into the cell and then turned back to Pa'cour a new determination in his dark eyes. “I will see to it.” He spoke.

“When they are ready...” Pa'cour said. “When they are ready, take this young woman to one of Eliani’s Hadarian Healers. There is one in the landing bay setting up a triage center even now. No one is to see her like this Em'cer and no one else is to treat her.”

Em'cer nodded. “As you order.”

Pa'cour turned back once more and saw Yuri rocking her back and forth and he took a deep breath. Her actions only served to reinforce Pa'cour’s love for Yuri to new levels. And he would show this to her when they were once more alone.

BLOOD REVERENCE CLASS DREADNOUGHT BLOOD OF HONOR
ADMIRAL PONTAL’S COMMAND SHIP
THREE LYS FROM UZU OZEIB 7

Pontal groaned as the intercom in his personal quarters continued to buzz insistently. He felt the weight of Victoria’s arm lift from his bare chest and her sleepy voice filled his ears.

“Answer it Pontal.” She told him. “It could be something important.”

Pontal turned his head and looked at her face, her dark eyes alive and always so bright. “You are important.” He said.

Victoria smiled at him. “As you showed me for five glorious hours last night.” She told him smacking her full lips in response. “Duty calls however.”

Pontal grumbled as he threw back the light sheet. “Sometimes I hate that word intensely.” He stated as he rose to his feet naked and padded across to the small desk that occupied their quarters. He stabbed his finger down on the COM panel. “I asked not to be disturbed OD.”

“Admiral... my apologies sir... but we are receiving an Alpha Priority transmission. It is encrypted sir... and it bears the Command Codes of Deion Leonidas.”

Pontal’s eyes grew slightly wider. “I will be there in three minutes.” He stated. He turned from the desk as he saw Victoria push herself up on the bed now.

“Pontal... why would the brother of Androcles Leonidas be contacting you?” She asked.

“I don’t know. Cloth yourself my wife. Let us find out.” He said as he reached for his uniform pants.

Pontal strode onto the bridge of his ship holding tightly to Victoria's hand. Since the day he had taken her as his wife and made her a vampire, she had become a frequent visitor to the bridge. Pontal's crew was handpicked and utterly loyal to him and Narice. Victoria may have been human once, but the crew of the BLOOD OF HONOR quickly came to regard her as the catalyst for the path all of them had chosen. She was treated like royalty on this ship and in most cases; her orders were followed as if they had come from their beloved Admiral himself. She had quickly asserted herself after becoming his wife and now she was in total charge of the entire medical deck on their ship. She cared for them as if they were all her children and this had earned her untold respect and honor.

"Speak to me!" Pontal declared as Victoria moved to the side out of the way as she always did.

"Deion Leonidas is standing by Admiral!" The OD spoke.

"Main holo disc!" Pontal barked. "Let's see it."

The disc came alive with the face of a handsome young man, one who looked remarkably like his father and brothers. His dark eyes were alive and all of them could see movement in the background. Among them several women and several Immortals. All of them were sitting at stations on a bridge that looked like their own. Deion's face shone with a thin film of sweat and Pontal was certain he saw blood stains on his body armor.

"Admiral Pontal?" Deion's voice echoed.

"I am Pontal Prince Deion." He answered respectfully.

Deion looked almost embarrassed. "My brothers and I send our regrets for having to disturb you at this hour Admiral. I know it is still very early where you are."

Pontal waved it off. "If you are contacting me on behalf of your brother then it must be important." He stated. "What can I do for you?"

"Actually sir... I am going to do something for you." Deion told him. They watched as he turned his head in the transmission. "Mari?"

"Transmitting." The female voice spoke from outside the cone of the transmission.

Deion turned back to look at Pontal. "Admiral... I am sending you an encrypted data burst sir. On it you will find the coordinates for the ships that follow Robert Moran. Androcles would like for you and my grandfather to put your heads together and remove whatever threat that they might pose. I have already spoken to my grandfather and he is standing by to receive your transmission when we are done."

Pontal's eyes were wide as his aide handed him the data pad. "I... I don't understand." He gasped. "How did you... how did you get this information?"

Deion's grin was infectious. "We sort of stopped in for an unscheduled visit with Moran and his ronnus son." He answered. "It wasn't pleasant. Well... at least for them anyway."

"I'm not sure I follow." Pontal spoke.

Pontal's aide stepped up to him with wide eyes. "Admiral... he is transmitting from the bridge of the INQUISITOR!" The man gasped.

Pontal's eyes darted back and forth between his aide and Deion who still wore that odd grin. "You... you have taken his ship?" He finally stammered. "How... how is that possible?"

"A little bit of luck and a whole lot of crazy." Deion answered. "Andro wanted me to tell you that Moran and Dante are now in our custody. You and our grandfather are free to roll up the remaining forces loyal to him. Word will spread quickly sir; Andro suggests you act within the next few hours."

"You... you conducted an assault of his ship while out of space dock!" Pontal exclaimed. "But... but that is unheard of!"

"For the moment Andro would like to keep the details to ourselves." Deion answered. "He will be making a full report to you and Narice as soon as he is able, but for the moment we will keep the details quiet as I said." Deion glanced out of the transmission once more, nodded and then turned back. "Forgive me sir... but I must go now. The data burst contains all the information you will need to bring Moran's forces to heel. Andro will be contacting you soon I'm sure."

Pontal blinked when the transmission ended abruptly and he looked at the pad in his hand. He felt Victoria's hands grasp his arm and he looked at her and saw shock in her own eyes.

"Husband?" She spoke in wonder. "Pontal... is it possible?"

"Admiral! Incoming transmission from Admiral Riall! Priority One!" The voice echoed.

Pontal felt the smile split his lips and he squeezed her hands. "Apparently it is my lovely wife. Apparently it is!"

INQUISITOR

"... truly lost your minds!" Deia raged within the transmission as she glared at Andro and her nieces and nephews in the room with him. It had been going on for the last few minutes and to Murano and Mari and the others who had never seen Deia worked up before it was very amusing.

"Tenna... we were successful and no one is hurt." Andro told her calmly.

"Son vada carians Androcles Leonidas!" Deia continued. "This has got to be the most malda thing you have ever done! Even your igord father has never done something so brash and reckless!"

Andro turned and looked at Eliani and Dorian sitting with Deion and Lisisa. "A little help here." He said.

Eliani held up her hands in mock defeat. "Nope! This is all you fervon." She told him with a smile. "This was your idea and..."

"And yet you went along with him Eli!" Deia barked silencing Eliani and making her look away sheepishly. "All of you! He has corrupted all of you! Your father has finally done it! He has succeeded in his efforts to drive me completely off the deep end by corrupting all of you and making you just as malda as he is!"

"Tenna... it was an opportunity that came up and we took it." Andro stated calmly.

Deia thrust her finger at him angrily. "Don't you... don't you dare preach to me about opportunity and need Androcles Leonidas! You are the Crown Prince of the Union! You cannot act as your father would act!"

"My father would have done the same thing given the intelligence we had." Andro said.

"That is the problem!" Deia screamed. "You are too much like him!"

"And that is why you love us so." Andro said with a smile.

Deia glared at him from within the transmission but his words had the effect on her that he knew they would. She settled back in her chair once more and took a deep breath. "This is going to... this is going to set the Netnews on fire mandri." She stated softly. "We... we never imagined we would catch them so soon."

"And we would not have..." Andro told her. "If not for Yuri and Pa'cour."

Deia looked at him. "What... what do you wish of me Andro?" She asked.

"Twelve hours tenna." Andro said. "Wait twelve hours and then release this information to the Netnews worms. By then grandfather and Admiral Pontal will have rolled up the forces that were aligned with Moran and I will have put together a full report and Dilaen will have sent it to you. She and Thomas were monitoring everything from our TAP cameras and no doubt will have extensive footage. She knows what she can send to you that can be released to the public."

Deia nodded. "What else?"

"I only wanted to make you aware tenna." Andro said. "The rest of my intentions you already know."

Deia gazed at him intensely. "You... you make him pay for every finger he laid upon your sister Andro." Deia snarled softly. "Make him feel every iota of pain he caused her before you send his cursed soul to jorbhe."

Andro nodded his head slowly. "That is my intent tenna."

Deia nodded her head. "I will inform everyone here what has taken place. You will be continuing on to the Beta Quadrant?"

Andro nodded once more. "I spoke with Deni just before we began our assault. Things there are tense at the moment. They are being watched and he has moved them from Austrova to the Protectorate homeworld. It is safer... but the OSG has fingers everywhere it seems."

"Are they in danger?" Deia asked.

"That is why I am going to finish up what I need to here within the next day." Andro told her. "I will contact you again just before we depart."

Deia stood up. "I have much to do." She said. "Dilaen's report will be forthcoming?"

"Within the next few hours I imagine. You know how efficient she is." Andro replied.

“Go with the gods mandri.” Deia said. “All of you.”

“And you tenna. And you.”

Deia ended their transmission and Andro turned to look at the others in the room. The conference room was medium sized, a dozen chairs surrounding the polished metal table. The air in the room smelled slightly of smoke, but Yuri and the other vampires were able to remove their masks on this deck and had done so eagerly.

“That went well.” Andro spoke with a grin causing his brothers and sisters to laugh softly.

“She rants at father just as passionately fervon.” Deion spoke. “You know that better than any of us.”

Andro nodded his head. “Yes she does.” He looked at them. “Ok... where do we stand?” He asked.

“The ship is ours completely.” Pa'cour was the first to speak. “The last two teams of Durcunusaan and our Immortals combined their forces and will finish sweeping the last deck within thirty minutes. Everyone who was outside of a room or work area has been moved into one and the doors sealed. All computer functions, no matter how small, have been routed to the main bridge or engineering. They will be able to do nothing. If there are any die hard supporters of Moran among them, they will be helpless.”

Yuri leaned forward in her chair in front of Pa'cour. “Androcles... what did you mean when you said this meeting pertained to Robert in some manner?”

Andro moved around the table and went to the counter where he poured himself a glass of cold water that had been brought in by several teams of Eli's medics. He lifted the glass to his lips and took a long pull before turning back and moving up beside Dorian.

“During my... encounter with Dante... several images flashed from his thoughts and I was able to detect them.” Andro explained. “I now know who among the Ventash'ma have been helping Moran, and they may lead us to others who plot against Narice.”

Yuri's eyes grew wide and she came to her feet. “We must... we must warn her!” She stated quickly.

Andro lifted his hand. “From what I was able to see... they have only provided peripheral support Yuri. And only because Moran's hardcore supporters on Uzu Ozeib 7 have threatened murder their families and to expose them to Narice and accuse them of crimes they have not committed.”

“You are certain?” Yuri asked more sedately.

Andro nodded. “Believe me... if it was something else or if their assistance had caused injury or death I would not be bringing this to you. Everything I saw... they were only trying to protect those close to them. I cannot find fault with that.”

Yuri returned to her chair and Andro could see her mind racing behind her dark eyes. The old Yuri would not have hesitated and she would have ordered them executed instantly. This Yuri was not the same woman and he knew that. She looked up finally and met his eyes. “Part of me... part of me wants to have them punished for even putting Narice in harm's way even a little bit. She is the only hope for the Coven to move forward.”

“And now mother?” Carisia asked her softly.

Yuri shook her head. “I can understand why they have been driven to do this.” She said meeting Andro's gaze. “To protect those I love from a monster... I would do the same.”

Andro nodded. “As would I. Any of us in this room. And so would my father.” He told her.

“What do you suggest Androcles?” Pa'cour spoke. “Moran cannot be allowed to escape... or go unpunished for his crimes! Any of them!”

Andro turned and took the data pad from Sadi and slid the pad across the table to Yuri. “And he won't.” He stated firmly. “This is what I suggest. If you and Pa'cour agree... I can make it happen within the hour and it will only delay Nameia by two hours at most. Everything will be ready when they arrive. And only Arrarn and Cha'talla will know everything.”

Everyone saw Yuri's face relax and the smile begin to form on her lips. Pa'cour was leaning over her shoulder and he too had bright eyes and a smile could be seen on his thin lips. Yuri lifted her eyes to his face.

“M'ranndii?” She questioned.

Pa'cour met her gaze and nodded his head. “I very much approve.” He told her.

Yuri looked at Andro. “So do I.” She said.

“It will require a message from you.” Andro said. “It is the only way to truly make this work Yuri... and allow Narice to lead them into the future.” He moved closer to her. “And I know that is what you want as well, for your first thought would not have been for Narice when I told you.”

Yuri nodded her head slowly. "I know." She said. "And it is what I want Androcles for I will say what is in my heart."

Andro nodded his head. "I will send for Dilaen and Thomas." He said beginning to turn away.

"And Dante?" Yuri asked watching him stop and slowly turn back to face her. "Xaxon?"

Andro looked at Murano who had pushed off the wall when she spoke his name. "You knew my intent going into this Yuri." Andro said firmly. "Your son's fate is already sealed. As is Xaxon's. Nothing will stop that."

"He is not my son!" Yuri told him just as firmly as she stood up once more. "I birthed a monster! I created that monster! And I will see that monster destroyed with the vile essence of the beast Xaxon who forced me to be someone I was not! Do not... do not take that away from me Andro! Not now!"

Androcles turned slightly and looked at Murano but it was Carisia's hands on his arm that turned his focus. He gazed into her dazzling maya blue eyes as Sadi, Lu'ria, Ne'Veha and Sehri surrounded her in unified support without hesitation.

"For the future Andro my love. A future for all of us. Free of the past and all the horror it brought to us." Carisia spoke softly. "For me."

"For me Andro." Lisisa spoke now as she stood up.

"For me fervon." Deion spoke from where he stood, Mari beside him.

"For all of us." Sehri said instantly as she gripped Carisia's arm tightly.

Andro watched all of them stand up with firm resolve in their eyes and on their faces. He turned once more and looked at Murano and Andro could see the pride swelling within his chest as he nodded.

Andro turned back to Yuri. "It will... it will not be pleasant Yuri. I cannot bring myself to show mercy for him. Not after what he did." He said gently.

"And I would not allow you to show mercy Androcles Leonidas." Yuri said firmly. "Not now."

Andro nodded slowly. "So be it. We depart for Ukwav in one hour and..." The wrist COM on Andro's forearm began to beep insistently and Andro lifted his arm. "Armen?" He answered knowing only he would contact him on this channel for they had already planned for it.

-I am receiving the signal Androcles- Armen told him. -It is nearly over and he has initiated the coded frequency-

Andro stepped away from Carisia and the others, surprising all of them. "Armen... you have my signal locked?" Andro demanded.

-Affirmative-

"Engage the STS teleport!" Andro barked. "Now!"

Gasps of stunned surprise erupted from everyone as Andro's entire body was engulfed within the bluish white field and in seconds he was gone. All of them turned quickly to where Sadi and the others staggered against each other.

Murano was the first to reach Sadi and he grabbed her arms to steady her. "Sadi... what is going on?"

Sadi gripped one of his arms and reached for Carisia with the other. She looked at him, her jungle green eyes wide.

"Something... something is happening where Martin and the others are!" She gasped. "We must... we must get back to SPARTA'S WRATH! Now!"

CHAPTER THIRTY-FIVE

MANNE

GENERAL KOGUTH'S POSITION

Today... today my vengeance will be complete. General Koguth'Juturi thought within his mind as his eyes took in everything around him.

Koguth'Juturi was a pureblood Kavalian, a man who was extremely proud of that fact and had been his entire life. He was also a very different man as well as extremely intelligent. He knew that without change his people would never achieve their goals and they would never be free of the past. Never in all the years of his search for his beautiful daughter Iama did he ever imagine he would be doing what he was doing at this very moment. He had never thought it possible, standing beside and commanding not only Lycavorians, but also elves and vampires and so many more different species, ready to stand against tyranny and bring it to an end.

The Gods of destiny and fortune had proven their unpredictable will this day. It was also a will Koguth embraced without hesitation.

He had been only seven years old the night his life changed. He had heard his mother's cries of pain and had rushed from his room to help her. That was when he had seen his father taking his mother harshly, in the grips of a Tazli Root induced stupor. He was grunting like a beast upon her slim back, her cries of pain now only soft whimpers of humiliation. Koguth had seen her eyes that night. The tears of pain and shame as his father rutted above her like an animal, uncaring and unfeeling for the hurt and discomfort she was in. It was that very night that would alter the course of his life forever. Koguth'Juturi had sworn that night that he would never act as his father acted. He would never humiliate or hurt the woman who would give him his future children and be with him always.

Two hundred and nine years later when Mani had become his wife, he set about proving to her that he was unlike his father or the other older members of his Pride. The marriage had been arranged, as they usually were, and he was two centuries older than her, but Koguth was not unhappy in the least. Mani was very young and so very beautiful with her light brown fur and lush young body, but her eyes had captured him from the first moment he had seen her. He treated his beautiful wife as a jewel to be worshiped and cared for. She had been fearful of his actions at first, thinking them to be a trick so that he could punish her if she did not act as a typical Kavalian woman. Mani feared him Koguth knew, as she was still barely an adult herself at only twenty-three years old and Koguth was two hundred and fifteen at the time, and well on the way to making a name for himself within not only his Pride but the whole of the Kavalian military. As with all Kavalian females however, Mani knew well the price of defying her new husband anything he wanted.

Mani'Juturi discovered within the first week of their marriage that her Kavalian husband was very unusual indeed.

She had been walking among the market with other Kavalian females when a much older Kavalian male, one who had wanted her for some time and was very upset because he also had petitioned for her to be his wife and lost her to Koguth, approached her at one of the stalls and began to demean her in public. Mani could do nothing except stand there in shame among the other females and dozens of laughing males and listen to the foul words he had heaped upon her. What she did not know at that time was Koguth by then had become a very well respected and liked Kavalian officer among the Juturi Pride. Especially by the many younger males of the Juturi Pride and several other Prides. His name was also being spoken about within the senior Kavalian military ranks as a superior officer and tactician. He was stern and sometimes harsh with them, but the men he led saw that he actually cared for them and their well being. He took care of them and had gotten more than one of them out of trouble before. It was one of these men who had been shopping in the market at the same time and seen what was happening to his Commander's new bride. It was he who had gotten a message back to his Commander in the first moments of this older male's tirade against Mani. When the older male had struck her, Mani only had time to reach up and grasp her face where the blow had fallen before he lifted his hand to strike her again. Mani had closed her eyes and prepared for the beating, knowing she could do nothing to protect herself or risk her husband's position.

That blow never came, and as she opened her eyes and watched from the ground, Koguth had appeared almost magically and leaped upon the older man with ferocious rage. It was only a few seconds, but Mani had gazed upon her new husband in adoration as Koguth tore into the older and larger officer with savage and brutal violence, holding nothing back. Koguth was not a small man by any means and she witnessed firsthand what her new husband was capable of that day. When he was done, the larger Kavalian male was broken and bloody on the ground before her husband's feet, his body and face and fur covered in blood from dozens of vicious slashes of her husband's claws and immensely powerful blows from his hands and feet. When six others from this man's Pride had moved to assist him, Mani watched as nearly twenty of Koguth's Juturi Pride and several men from other Prides appeared from all around them, ready to stand with their Commander and Pridemate. All of them were younger like him and they stood with him without fear.

In a display unheard of at that time, Koguth'Juturi turned from the beaten down officer after spitting on him and walked to where his young wife stared up at him from the ground. With all the tenderness of lifting a newborn child, Koguth had taken her into his arms and with his men surrounding him; he had carried his young wife the entire two kilometers back to their home. He had spoken no words during that trip, Mani's eyes focused on his face the entire time, but once inside the privacy of their home his words of apology had poured from his lips. He doted over her, though she was not really hurt in any way, and that was when Mani'Juturi knew he was very different. That was when she first stopped to look at him and she realized just how handsome he truly was with his well groomed fur and rugged features. That was also when she had first kissed him. Realizing that her action was inappropriate; her first instinctive reaction was to draw back in horror at the anger she knew he would no doubt shower upon her for what she had done. That was until his large hands had come up and taken her face within their grasp so very gently and he had kissed her back.

And what a kiss it was for Koguth'Juturi.

So vexed by her beauty that he was, Koguth continued to kiss her, pulling her small body against his and relishing in the myriad of sensations and emotions that came pouring forth from him. And Mani's reaction only spurred him on as she clutched at his shoulders in delight and urged him on. He had taken her to their bed that night and he had proceeded to worship her lush body in ways that were even more unheard of and taboo by Kavalian males. Mani'Juturi had been howling out her passionate enjoyment within moments as she clutched at him in bliss and he made her experience things that that no Kavalian male would ever do for a female's pleasure. Kavalian females were considered nothing but second class citizens among their people, only good for manual chores, fucking and giving birth to more Kavalian sons. They had practically no rights at all within mainstream Kavalian society. Koguth'Juturi had showed her that night that he was unlike everything she had been raised among. When he had locked groins with her that first night after giving her hours of unimaginable pleasure that she had never dreamed of; while she quivered in bliss and showered his face and neck with kisses; he vowed to her he would never disrespect her. Never hurt her. He vowed to her that he was different. And he vowed to her that one day he would be free to show everyone what she meant to him.

He vowed to her that they would be free.

That was the night the real Koguth'Juturi was born.

As he held his beautiful young wife in his arms and she purred against him, her delicious tail bouncing quite contently over their legs, he whispered to her what his dreams for the future were. They would have to hide their powerful affection and love in public he told her, but she would never be without someone watching over her from this day forward. He would apologize profusely when he had to speak sternly with her in public, for that was the Kavalian way and was expected, but his words were always carefully chosen so that she knew his true intent and love for her. He never grew angry with her over anything and together in their home, away from prying eyes, he would laugh with her and cuddle and joke with her. And he utterly dismissed the Kavalian mentality that females were stupid and not worth the effort to school, for he taught her everything that he could. By their law back then Kavalian females were not even allowed to read without first gaining the permission of senior Pride leaders and a government official, but Koguth had brought her hundreds upon hundreds of books through those first years together. Once he had taught her to read he brought her books on anything that he thought she would enjoy or could learn from. And Mani was a voracious reader. Many of the books were even outlawed by Kavalian law. By their tenth year together, Mani's education surpassed even that of many senior Kavalian males.

Mani was very careful as well, knowing that her husband's actions could get both of them killed, and she loved him with every fiber of her being now. She absorbed all of his teachings about security and protecting themselves like a sponge. Over the years she became even more fastidious than him when it came to hiding. Their home was their sanctuary and together they had built and hidden many caches of vast knowledge and such things that neither of them were allowed to have by law. Koguth shared everything with her and held nothing back. He came to rely on her insight and the vast knowledge she had come to acquire from the books she had read. They both decided not to have children right away so that they could build upon what they were doing and not worry for slipping up in some way and having their children taken from this life. He dismissed his father's council to step outside their marriage in order to find a woman who could give him children. Koguth's reply was that he was building his career and their Pride up so that he would not have to worry when it came time for children. Mani was perfectly able to have children but he was waiting until he could teach his sons what they needed to in order to advanced their Pride's standing. His father had liked this answer, and he never questioned him again. He had no idea what Koguth was truly doing. Even after his father became Pride Leader of the Juturi Pride he never caught on to what his son was doing. This only served to reinforce his idea that his father was nothing more than a stupid monster. He now hated his father even more for he had taken his mother from him in another Tazli Root induced fever only eleven years after Mani had become his wife. His mother had seen the spark in his eyes for what it was and she had done everything within her power to encourage that and nurture his feelings. It was something Koguth would never forgive his father for and it made him love and cherish Mani that much more. His hatred for the man his father was would make it so much easier to kill him many years into the future after what he had done to Iama.

For over six hundred years this went on in secret. In that time Koguth' Juturi was the ideal Kavalian officer in all things. He was a masterful tactician, and leader of men. Even the cloned Kavalian soldiers who were assigned under him were far better trained and efficient than most. He was among the few more strategically sound leaders, a man who treated his cloned soldiers with the same respect as the purebloods of his Pride. This practiced was ridiculed and looked down upon by other Pride Leaders, but the Kavalian High Command could not argue with his results and therefore let him conduct himself as he pleased. During this time is when he and Mani began to build their power base within their Pride. While his father took all of the credit as Pride Leader for his son's successes, it was Koguth and Mani who drove the Juturi Pride forward in secret. They were very careful in what they did, selecting only Pride members who showed flashes of their true feelings in their actions and words. Those who rebelled against the hate filled speeches and false history of their people. At first it was only half a dozen. Kavalian males who turned out to be like Koguth. These were who they concentrated on. Exposing them to values and morals that older Kavalians did not have or were never taught. And it was these men who began the real foundation of the Juturi Pride, who acted just as Koguth and Mani did. And it was these men who began to sow the seeds of their future actions. All of them took wives from other Prides, young women with healthy figures and beauty and all of them treated their wives as treasures. As Koguth schooled the men, it was Mani who schooled the females. In the first quarter century of starting down this road, over a hundred males of the Juturi Pride had joined their small circle with their wives. All of their wives were as equally skilled as the men thanks to Mani and they were worshiped by their husbands. The males of the Juturi Pride embraced this mentality completely. These men treated their Kavalian wives as the bearers of their future and what they could one day have. They played the game in public yes, but in the privacy of their homes, their wives were equal in everything and had a say in all that they did. They had tossed aside the old ways and fully embraced the new, led by Koguth and Mani. And they were utterly vicious with their security. All of them knew to be caught would mean instant death. The Kavalian females knew that more eyes would be on them, but Mani's instruction was perfect in every way, learned from years of doing it all herself.

Their actions did not go unnoticed however.

It wasn't until they had been doing these things for a hundred and sixty years that they were discovered. The Shale Pride had taken the young wife of a Juturi Pride member in a night time raid. A woman they had arranged for the young man to take as his wife. They let it be known that they knew everything and they wanted to meet to discuss such things. Koguth had led a force of sixty of his Pride's men to the meeting place, ready to murder and destroy an entire Pride if need be to protect their secret. It would not be necessary.

When they found the young woman she was talking animatedly with many other females of the Shale Pride, the men standing around with their weapons stacked in a single place and waiting patiently for Koguth and them to arrive. The Shale Pride Leader, a much older man than Koguth, had dropped to his knees in front of him and then quite unexpectedly, expressed his desire to become part of Koguth's plan. This became even more obvious to Koguth when the young woman raced to her husband's arms and he embraced her tightly, kissing her without shame, while her much older father and mother looked on with happiness and hope in their eyes. The Shale Pride Leader had professed his loyalty to the Juturi Pride and him if only they would allow them to join their secret society. He no longer wished to see his Pride's daughters given to monsters, or their Pride's sons have to treat their mothers and sisters as if they were beneath them. That night, the Shale Pride became bound to the Juturi Pride in a way that nothing would ever come between.

And their numbers swelled.

When the Kavalian people announced their return to the galaxy with the attacks against the High Coven, Koguth had the unquestioned loyalty of nine complete Prides. They had spent centuries building and expanding and intermingling their Prides. Nearly two million men and women who wanted more than what they were allowed to have. Men and women who wanted to be free to live their lives and raise their children as they saw fit. Through the course of that time, the Juturi Pride had grown to be the largest in numbers and prestige and along with them, all the other Prides as well. Koguth's father basked in the new attention and stature that this gave to them and he never questioned it as foolish and blind as he was. All nine Prides resettled to one of the planets reclaimed by the Kavalians in the first year of their war with the High Coven. A fertile planet on the edges of the new Kavalian border, a place where they would have more freedom to continue their teachings and much better security. It was in this new area of space that they discovered that the Nruarani Pride, a nomadic Pride from the outskirts of the empire, also adhered to what they all now followed. The Nruarani Pride was very large, over three million members alone, and in even better position to assist them because of the standing Pian'Nruarani had established through the years, even while keeping the secret of their values. Mani had become the matriarch to them all as Koguth's wife and by then she had given him Mataen and Nedoli and then Iama. When Mataen was born thirty years before the war with the High Coven Koguth knew the path they followed was the correct one. When Nedoli became part of their lives only six years later, it only reinforced their position. And then when Iama entered this world ten years after that, Koguth swore she would know all her desires and he would insure she found love just as he and Mani shared.

The High Coven war was not something any of them agreed with, but in order to insure their secret was secure and to possibly set themselves up to turn away from the now excessively oppressive Kavalian leadership under Keleru, they fought. They fought not for Keleru or his grasps at power and revenge, but they fought for their future. While their numbers continued to swell back home, Koguth and the others insured that their men did not die needlessly or without cause. During the war, the Juturi Pride and those aligned with them suffered minimal casualties. They fought tenaciously and with honor, but they insured that no lives were thrown away for no purpose. And not one of the Prides aligned with Koguth had ever committed war crimes against vampire soldiers. When one of their nine Prides fell, their wives assumed the mantle of their homes and became the heads of their families. None were forced to marry again unless they discovered new love, and they were never without the support of each other. Mani'Juturi saw to this as the matriarch to them all and no matter what, her words and instructions were always followed to the letter. Mataen'Juturi fought beside his father while Nedoli remained at home and studied and grew strong. It was during the second of their High Coven invasions when Mataen discovered Corsa and became totally enraptured with her. He saved her from a life of endless rapes and beatings when the biogenic program failed to remove her tail or change her feline like eyes. When her Pride dismissed her, Mataen rescued her and made her his wife.

Then Koguth discovered what his father had done with Iama.

The flower and beauty she was growing into would bring Koguth to tears when he held her in his arms or bounced her on his knees. She had become the focus of why he had been doing this for all these years. When he returned with Mataen at the end of the second invasion and discovered what his father had done, Koguth went into a rage that...

"...Found the western scrambler." Kalis's calm voice broke into his memories and brought Koguth'Juturi back to the present.

"So it would seem." Koguth answered as he came fully alert once more.

"We should attack now General." Kalis said.

Koguth shook his head. "Patience young Kalis." Koguth told him calmly. "Let them draw closer. Not all of them have cleared the far treeline."

"Their commander has positioned himself in the treeline to southwest." Mata spoke now.

"Mata... when this begins... he is yours." Koguth said calmly turning to look at him. "He must not be allowed to escape and return to Pusintin and inform him of what is going on. Akor'dris, Bae'diraz and the Juturi Pride fighters will move from their hidden holes on the west, but they will concentrate on any that remain within the timber. Any who attempt to escape to the west will be swept up by them. The only way open to him will be south."

Mata nodded his head without doubt. He had thought his life over when he had assisted Kalis in escaping his father. The young man he had raised as he would have raised his own sons was now a man and he had chosen a path that provided him a future. Mata did not think that purpose extended to him. His wife and sons were long dead, taken from him by disease and uncaring leaders. He had no reason to live on. Until Kalis had showed him purpose once more. Kalis had showed him that there was no need to throw his life away, that he could once more have a family and a future. He showed him there was always purpose if you were brave enough to reach for it. So Mata had reached for it, and after these past weeks he clung to that ideal with vicious faith. He was here beside men and women who did not care that he was once Puma Bane. They only cared that he was with them and just as dedicated to their cause as they were. And Mata meant to see a new future for himself and his people take shape even if it cost him his life.

“It will be done.” He said simply.

“The order remains the same. Every man and woman is to fire a full magazine before leaving their position.” Koguth told them. “Be as accurate as possible and bring down as many as they can. Plasma grenades from every fourth soldier, anti-personal rockets from every sixth. Once they have exploded and wreaked more havoc... we will bring the fight to them. No mercy can be shown. No remorse. They are Puma Bane and they will show you none. And they must pay for the crimes they have committed through the years.”

Jormal Pescneu glanced at the Kavalian General he now served beside proudly and grinned widely showing perfect white fangs capable of tearing flesh from bone easily enough. “General... do I detect a hint of perverse joy at the pain we are about to inflict?”

Koguth turned his head slightly to gaze at the Lycavorian he now called friend and aide. “I suppose you do Jormal.” He answered.

Jormal’s smile broadened. “You and your Pride are more like us than you know General. And it will be seen this day.”

“They found the second one.” Kalis commented.

Koguth turned back to view the expanse of the camp before them. “Inform Nedoli and Mataen. Tell them this is going to kick off and have Ceale, Mani and Serale ready to receive wounded when they begin arriving. There will be wounded my friends, and we will lose men and women this day. Do not deter from your tasks. If they fall, allow our medical teams to sweep in behind us and see to them. Do not stop pressing the attack.” Koguth looked at Mata once more as he lowered his fingers from where he had tapped his COM implant.

“It is done General. Lady Ceale says they are as ready as they will ever be.” Mata echoed softly. “And Corsa stands ready with the MENKLA transport to evacuate any who need critical care from the small Queen Anja.”

Koguth nodded with an evil glint in his eyes. “Then it is time.” He said. “Kalis... if you would detonate the charges... it is time to send these Puma Bane butchers into the next life.”

Kalis lifted the detonator in his hand, looked at Koguth and mashed down on the handle with all of his strength.

They were another weapon of war designed, constructed and perfected by humans long ago. The Lycavorian Union and High Coven never used Anti-Personal Mines to great extent in their war. As wolves and vampires, many could move far faster than humans, making it very nearly impossible to inflict injury with directed minefields. They were also much less effective because Lycavorians could detect the faint traces of the scents of those who laid the minefields to begin with and vampires could almost certainly detect the residual body heat from a rapidly placed minefield. This was something discovered during the battle for Earth since the vampire artillery had effectively neutralized the minefields the defenders of Eden City had laid.

It was not the same now. The skill of the engineers within the Union, and the combined ideas of Ben and Martin, the Union had resorted to using far more mines in their inventory. Mines of every shape and size. The vast majority of them now with very small and very self contained camouflage generators. The most common of these mines was the Claymore. It was a name leftover from human history, and unlike his beautiful elven wife, Ben was not very good at naming things. He left it alone and simply added a Mark Two at the end of the name.

The M18 Mark Two Claymore Mine was unlike its very effective older brother in many ways. Where the original Claymore was horizontally convex, the Mark Two now stood 140 millimeters in height and weighed just over 5 kilograms, while being completely circular in shape. They were too heavy to carry more than two for any one person, but the Lycavorian Union had put them into primary use as a defensive weapon of unit field commands. Ben had combined the original idea of the claymore with the equally effective bounding anti-personal mine. The Claymore Mark Two was no longer a directional landmine. When tripped, the Mark Two would burst from the ground where it had been buried or hidden and lift exactly 1.5 meters into the air. Then a tiny pyrotechnic trigger activated and caused the main charge of 900 grams of plastic explosive to erupt, spraying out one thousand tiny, and razor sharp flechettes in a 360 degree area of destruction at nearly 5000 feet per second. Each mine had a kill radius of thirty meters and an injury radius of nearly triple that. Each mine also had a very small computer chip in its brain that caused the mine itself to take the coloring of whatever background where it was planted. This camouflage chip would then effectively hide it from almost all known detection by rapidly advancing infantry and also served to protect ADHOC bases from less than thorough sweeps by attacking forces.

This would be the first time the Mark Two had seen actions since the end of the Evolli War. It was also the first time that any Kavalian soldier in Koguth's command had seen it in action, and it made many of them speak silent prayers to whatever gods they worshiped that they never had to face these weapons.

The moment Kalis mashed down on the trigger in his hand, a single burst of energy went out down the nearly five miles of insulated and buried wire they had laid this minefield with. They had worked tirelessly for a full week to make this wide open clearing appear to be what it wasn't and that was the main Union base of operations on Manne. Base One was actually very well hidden by powerful Ground Shroud Generators similar to what Androcles Leonidas had used on Solmar, nearly one hundred kilometers from this location. This decoy base had been fitted with many electronic devices and hundreds of polymer tents and portable buildings that had been erected to enforce the illusion that this was their main base. Martin Leonidas had not been convinced that this idea would work at first, and was leaning towards using the deserted Science Station they had discovered returning from the moon where they had first met. It wasn't until Koguth, Kalis and even Mata explained to him that the High Coven did not use such trickery in battle and the Puma Bane believed themselves superior to everyone. Base Two was not nearly as large as Base One, nor as well constructed or hidden, and they were intentionally causing it to radiate openly. It only served to enforce the idea to the Puma Bane that they were facing inferior troops. Base Two had a perimeter size of three hundred meters by four hundred meters. There were one hundred Mark Twos buried within the soft dirt beneath the feet of the Puma Bane. There were two hundred and fifty Puma Bane in Lieutenant Shonis's detachment. They made up fully eighty-five percent of the shipboard complement of Puma Bane under the Marshall's command.

None of them would live for more than a few more minutes.

In the space of 4.5 seconds, one hundred Mark Two Claymore mines triggered and leaped into the air within that killing field. With a single, soft muffled explosion, each mine blew apart at a height of 1.5 meters and expelled one thousand flechettes at five times the speed of sound in a 360 degree arc.

No one was safe.

Each flechette was propelled at 4875 feet per second, providing 89 foot pounds of kinetic energy to the targets. Watching from the safety of their hidden positions Koguth and the others could only gawk in horrific shock as the Puma Bane troops were practically shredded into little bits where they stood. The light body armor they wore provided very little protection against the devastating force of the flechettes. To those standing within two or three meters of a mine, their bodies simply blew apart in red mists of blood and flesh, catching the force of the mine's deadly ordnance full on. While this served to save some of their comrades from the full force of the mine's lethal radius, none of the Puma Bane within the kill zone escaped injury. The screams of the mortally injured began to fill the air all around them, even as the remains of their Lieutenant Shonis dripped from the tattered remnants of two polymer tents.

And then the overkill began.

Koguth lifted his head from the bunker he was in his eyes wide in disbelief. Trained soldier that he was, this only lasted for several seconds and then he lifted his wrist.

"Now!" He screamed into his wrist COM unit. "All teams! Now!"

Five hundred Union and Kavalian troops rose from their hidden trenches and bunkers and the air around the clearing filled with the pops of missile launchers, and the buzz saw like sound of hundreds of Union P190A4s slinging lethal projectiles downrange. Even without being able to fully see their targets, plasma grenades and anti-personal rockets were launched into the maelstrom in front of them. It truly was as if the doors of hell had opened and invited the Puma Bane troops in. Those Puma Bane who managed to survive the initial havoc of the Mark Two mines relatively unscathed knew without question that they had been duped. They were trained and drilled to believe they were the finest troops anywhere in the universe, that no one could stand against them. This day many of them died wondering how this had happened. Out of the two hundred and fifty Puma Bane that had entered the killing field and its perimeter, only sixty-three survived the initial devastation of the mines being set off. None of them were without injury, some with minor cuts, and many with severe lacerations from the deadly flechettes. As they staggered about, trying to determine what to do, many attempted to move back for the tree line thinking this would save them. The rockets and plasma grenades dictated otherwise. A thin cloud of dirt filled the air all around them and most could not even see where they were going. They joined their comrades in this state of disarray as the rockets and grenades began to go off all around them and 12.7mm rounds began to punch through their light armor from every direction and kill them.

The Puma Bane commander Qallin was frozen in his spot just a hundred and fifty meters to the southwest, his eyes staring out on the slaughterhouse in disbelief. He could just make out the dozens of muzzle flashes through breaks in the cloud of dirt that surrounded his men. He witnessed the explosions of plasma grenades more numerous to count as they exploded among the ranks of his men. The initial blast of the mines had thrown him off his feet and three errant flechettes had reached as far away as where he sat, cutting through his light armor and fur even at the reduced velocity they were traveling. His blood dripped down his face through his fur as he watched his men being massacred. No force of vampires had ever stood against a Puma Bane unit and survived. The Puma Bane as a whole had lost less than fifty men during their war with the High Coven, reinforcing the idea that they were indestructible in many ways. In this instant, Qallin saw how wrong they were. In this moment, on this world so very far from their homes, Lycavorian Spartans under the command of King Leonidas had butchered more Puma Bane troops than twenty years of war with the vampire scum. The thought flashed in his mind for an instant that perhaps the many reports he had read from Kavalian Intelligence Agents who were far smarter than him were correct.

That thought vanished in an instant when he heard the snapping of the stick behind him and he began to whirl around and bring his rifle up. He grunted in horrible pain as fire lanced through his side beginning from his lower left abdomen and moving up. He felt the slicing of his flesh, the heinous sound of the blade opening his midsection to the warm air, yet there was nothing he could do to stop it. His rifle fell from suddenly useless hands and his eyes focused on the nearly feral expression of the Kavalian who squatted before him as he drew back the wickedly sharp and bloody Drow fighting knife.

“Ma... Mata!” He rasped out the words.

“Qallin.” Mata hissed back at him.

Mata knew then the path he would follow. Up until this very point in time he still had doubts as to where he could fit in and have purpose as Kalis had told him. He was accepted without question among these hundreds of men and women, many who had good reason to hate Kavalians more than anyone, yet they treated him with respect and as an equal. All because he now saw the future for his people in a different light. He saw what they could have under the caring hand of a leader who wished nothing more than to see them prosper. He could see the future of the Kavalian people in the eyes of every one of Koguth’s men. The burning of hope and freedom. The desire to be so much more than what they were now.

This is what filled Mata now. This is the emotion that swept through him as he glared at the Puma Bane commander dying in front of him. He had not hesitated in his actions, Qallin’s attention fully focused on the slaughter of his men taking place and it had been child’s play to sneak up on him. The faces of his wife and children, long dead now, appeared in his mind as he watched Qallin try and hold his innards inside his abdomen. He thought he could see his wife with a proud smile on her face as she lifted a hand and waved at him. Mata had never believed in faith or destiny, but seeing the brightness of her eyes in his mind, he knew what his destiny was to be.

Mata reached out and pulled the rifle away from Qallin and he lifted the Drow knife so that Qallin’s eyes could see it.

“Before you join your twisted comrades in death Qallin... know this.” Mata spoke. “I will now follow the path laid before me this day. I will remake the Puma Bane. I will purge their ranks and I will reshape them! They will become a force that our people will be proud of. Not live in horror of! A force that our people will look to with pride and hope, not fear and tyranny. With your death, that purge will begin Qallin. May you rot in the bowels of the fiery creatures of the abyss for all time Qallin... and do not worry. That sick fuck Pusintin will be joining you this very day.”

Mata rammed the Drow fighting knife forward and up, the tip entering just under Qallin’s jaw and plunging up into his brain. Mata yanked the blade free and rose to his feet, dismissing the animal before him as his body dropped to the soft earth with a thud.

“This day the future of our people has been born!” Mata hissed. “And I will see them walk into the future with their heads held high!”

Koguth wasted no time in his actions after the initial blasts had died away and he whirled on Kalis who waited beside him. “Go now Kalis!” He shouted.

“General we...”

“You are not needed here now!” Koguth shouted at him. “We will finish them! You are needed elsewhere! Now go!”

“Uncle Martin said to remain until...” Kalis continued to protest.

Koguth reached out and grasped his arm tightly. “They are finished Kalis! We can roll them up without you! They are your family boy!” He barked. “Now go to them!”

Kalis stared at him for a moment longer, indecision in his eyes, but then that changed to resolve. He nodded his head quickly and turned in the trench. Koguth saw a silver white flash of light and his eyes grew wide as the large wolf appeared right in front of him. With a powerful leap Kalis Leonidas cleared the trench and then sprinted off into the forest around them headed for one location. Koguth tore his eyes away as he felt and saw Mata settle beside him.

“It is done General!” Mata reported as he gripped his P190.

“Then let us finish this.” Koguth growled.

Mata reached out and took Koguth’s arm. “Leave none alive General.” He spoke coldly. “No matter how injured they may appear. These Puma Bane are a cancer that need to be removed.”

“These?” Koguth asked him.

Mata met his eyes without fear. “I will speak with King Leonidas. I will ask him to allow me to reform them General. As I have been reformed. And I will make the Puma Bane what they were always intended to be. Defenders of our people.” Mata motioned with his head onto the field before them. “These scum are no more than imposters and I would see them dead for defiling our people and the name Puma Bane.”

Koguth stared at him for a long moment and then nodded his head. “Then let us see to our business Mata my friend.” He turned back and looked up and down the shallow trench. “Now!” He screamed. “Charge!”

Kalis ran.

He ran with new life swelling within his chest. He was a large wolf, not as large as his uncle or cousin he knew, but still nearly two and a half feet tall at the shoulder and easily two hundred and sixty pounds of muscle and bone. The first night he had seen his uncle in wolf form he had been terrified, but that quickly passed as he ran alongside him through the timber. The nights studying and listening to Androcles coach him about what to do in his wolf form filled him now. The nights he and his uncle Martin had gone running here on Manne flashed in his mind. All they had taught him came to the forefront. The freedom he felt in his wolf form was beyond anything he had ever known. Androcles words echoed within his mind as he easily propelled his wolf form across the level terrain at nearly thirty-five miles an hour. Kalis took in everything around him, all of his senses alive and alert. The steady rumble of his chest as he breathed and the skittering of small animals as they raced from his path in terror. His coloring was more dark blond fur in wolf form and even the added padding of the parts of the magically conforming ArmorPly on his back and hips did not deter his movement.

The ArmorPly was an amazing thing he had come to discover, able to change its composition and shape in the midst of the change and make him an armored wolf. It did not slow him down however, as his large paws dug into the dirt and thrust him forward. He saw Serale's face in his mind, his beautiful and sweet smelling Serale. The emotions that came forth from him when he held her in his arms and smelled her scent or basked in her cries of delight as they made love, these are a few of the things that drove him. Fedor and Eirene were his brother and sister, and regardless of whether they recognized this or hated him, Kalis would now protect and shield them as he should have done for Nikkei and Leruk. He would allow no harm to come to them for any reason, and as he knew that Androcles protected his cousins, Kalis Leonidas would now protect those who were his brothers and sisters. His head perked up slightly as he ran, and he detected the faint scent of Eirene on the wind. She was just recently out of her Coming of Age fever and her scent was still more pungent than most. As he drew closer he could also detect another scent. A scent that caused anger and hate to swell within him and drive him forward faster.

He smelled his father.

Martin allowed his eyes to sweep over the terrain in front of him leading up to the cave where For'mya and the twins were. Aside from the company he had given to augment Koguth's Kavalian fighters, he had left the remainder of the Durcunusaan battalion Andro had sent to them to secure Base One. It was now the most secure location on Manne now, and anything short of a major attack would never breach its defenses. The crew of the ARC ROYAL and their Kavalian friends had put too much work into building the base up to what it was now and they would not leave it undefended. The many engineers and techs among both ships were standing shoulder to shoulder with regular Spartan Durcunusaan ready to defend the base. Base One had similar Shroud generators set up all along its defensive line and much like Andro's ADHOC on Solmar; it was invisible to known sensors. The Puma Bane would need to stumble across it by accident in order for them to discover it. Base One's western edge was backstopped by a massive mountain range and the entrance to a massive cave network within the mountains all around them. It was here that Anja had set up a huge medical facility over the course of the last few weeks. Working with Duewa, Muton, Radra and Anuk they were able to turn the many chambers of the cave network into an intricate hospital powered by four huge fusion generators located even deeper within the cave network. The network of tunnels had been painstakingly explored and mapped for they would also be the emergency exit for Base One should they ever need to abandon the place they now called home. At least out here.

Martin let his eyes sweep across the ravine to the opposite side but he could not detect any of his team. Colin, Kenny, Pablo, T'lolt and Tony had set up on the opposite ridge with two heavy chain guns while Colin and Pablo sported grenade launchers. Cody and Garan were ever further out in a small two man OP and keeping their eyes open from the only other path to the cave where For'mya and the twins were. It was the harder path to navigate but not impossible. He should have known he would not be able to spot any of his team. They had been doing these same things as long as he had been and they were experts at their jobs. They were like family to him and T'lolt had joined them and fit right in. As had Garan. The Pralor soldier had soaked up all they had taught him these last weeks and shed nearly twenty pounds in excess weight while adding an equal amount of muscle to his six foot frame. He was healthier now than he had ever been in his life and he had taken to the Spartan way of life easily. Garan also vowed to pass on this new knowledge to the Pralor security forces under his command for he knew the battles that lay ahead.

Martin's keen eyes caught the slight movement by Julie as she lifted her hand and pressed it tighter to her ear. She sat between Aricia and Isabella three meters behind where he and Danny rested just beneath the lip of the ridge. Dysea leaned against Bella's side, Cirith sitting between her legs and nibbling a ration bar. He saw Julie nod and look at him.

General Koguth reports they have broken the Puma Bane attack. They are sweeping the decoy base now while Akor'dris and Bae'diraz cover the timber with their men. Julie told him within Mindvoice. No casualties.

Martin's eyes grew slightly wider. No casualties?

Julie nodded her head knowing that all of them could hear her. Like the others around her, Julie only spoke on a Tier Six level within Mindvoice and only they could hear her words. That's what he said. They bumbled into the decoy base like children and the mines blew them to shit.

Martin turned back slowly to look over the lip of the ridge while his Queens all turned to look at him. Fervon? Martin asked softly.

Danny shook his head. Doesn't seem right. He answered instantly. Two hundred and fifty Puma Bane. Their very best. And they walk right into an ambush without thinking and get blown to sibfla. Koguth is good Marty... but no one is that good and lucky.

Agreed. Martin spoke softly. Something isn't right. Martin could feel Kalis within him. He knew he was racing across the terrain even now to reach the cave where For'mya was with Fedor and Eirene. His mind was open to Martin, Kalis had hid nothing from his uncle these last weeks and days, and Martin knew his purpose was true. There was no way he could feel for Serale as he did and have ulterior motives. There was no way he could have completed the tests he had if he had not truly changed. Kalis? Martin reached out. His mind's eye saw Kalis come up short in his sprint, his paws digging furrows into the ground and kicking up dirt.

Uncle?

Kalis... something is wrong. Martin held nothing back. Koguth and the others have wiped out the Puma Bane sent against you. That is why he released you to go to the cave. The second force led by Pusintin has not reached us yet. It is too easy mandri.

They did... they did seem to blunder blindly into our ambush Uncle. Kalis spoke honestly.

Could there have been more Puma Bane within the Task Force? Martin asked him. He was speaking openly and everyone on a Tier Six level could hear him. On other ships perhaps?

It was For'mya's voice that reached out now as they all felt Kalis's sudden fear that he had made a mistake. Even Fedor and Eirene, who were sitting beside her heard and felt the warmth of their mother's words as she reached out to Kalis. They also felt Kalis's emotions as well. Be calm mandri. She spoke to Kalis warmly knowing, just as they all did, that he was not a threat to them in any way. Not with everything he had discovered. The fleet was large. Think back carefully. Could there have been more on other ships?

I never left my father's ship Tenna. Kalis answered. Standard Operational procedure is to have all Puma Bane on one ship.

He's a rat bastard Lover. Anja's voice filled their heads now. But unfortunately for us, he isn't a stupid rat bastard. He could have hid more that even Kalis or Mata did not know about.

Martin saw Danny nod his head. I have to agree with Red on this one. He used the others as bait. He threw them against what he thought our main base was knowing they would get slaughtered.

And he led another force directly for where he knew we are. For'mya commented.

Only he went the hard way figuring we would be watching the front way in. Julie spoke now.

And I fell for it. Martin hissed.

You did what any Commander would do given the intelligence we had Beloved. Aricia chimed in now.

Nubou! Martin swore. Cody! Cody... have you been listening? Do you and Garan have anything?

Nothing yet Skipper. Cody answered. Garan is set up about sixty meters in front of me and... wait... hold on.

Cody stopped talking when he saw Garan lift his hand part way into the air with a closed fist.

Garan? He questioned.

I have movement to my front. Garan answered instantly. I estimate two hundred meters away at most.

Kalis... what direction are you coming from? Cody asked immediately.

I'm not moving right now Cody. Kalis answered. I cut north and was coming in from the cave entrance from the northwest.

Ok... well that ain't good. That means it ain't you. Cody spoke. Garan?

I can... I can just make out figures moving through the trees. They are moving slowly at the moment.

Whether from the terrain or trying to remain quiet I do not know. They are not members of our group Cody and they are making directly for the path that opens by the cave entrance.

Numbers? Cody asked him.

At least several dozen that I can see. Garan answered.

That's it Skipper! Cody barked out. We got bad guys coming in behind us!

Fuck! Fuck! Fuck! Martin swore. Shift! Everyone shift to secondary positions! They got in behind us! Martin didn't need to see his team begin to move for he knew what their actions would be without monitoring them. Cody you and Garan pull back and move to above the entrance!

We won't get there before they do Skipper! Cody hissed in disgust even as he was moving and covering Garan as he crawled rapidly back on the ground.

I know! Just do it! We'll come in from the east and flank them! Martin ordered. Kalis... get to the cave! Run mandri! Run like the hounds of hell are after you! Get there before them! Use the escape tunnel! It's closer to your position!

Martin didn't need to hear an answer from him for he could see within Kalis's thoughts and he saw his nephew explode forward, his large paws digging into the ground and causing him to act as if he had been shot from a gun.

Set up on the eastern side of the upper ridge! We'll come in behind them and hit them from above! Don't let that shit sorry fucking brother of mine into the cave! Martin spoke urgently even as he and Danny shifted their forms and began to follow Aricia and the others who had already changed to their wolf forms and were sprinting away. His eyes saw Bella blurring right beside Dysea as she bounded through the trees silently, her platinum colored fur flashing through the trees beside the raven black fur of Aricia and Cirith.

Pusintin's senses were all on alert as they closed on the cave where he knew For'mya was. He had kept the existence of the additional Puma Bane within his Task Force a solitary secret known only to himself. He knew he had to act differently to outthink his brother. He could not act as he had always done and bull his way to victory. His brother was the better tactician and he would slaughter them completely if this was tried. The explosions they had heard in the distance could only mean that the Puma Bane unit under Qallin had found contact. That he did not try to raise him on their radio told Pusintin that something was amiss. They must have found a larger force at the main base. Pusintin smiled to himself. In his attempt to safeguard those who were not combatants his brother had made his fatal mistake. He had left For'mya completely unprotected. His eighty Puma Bane would be more than a match for any light force left to defend her and his children. He could smell them clearly now as close as they were. Her sweet orchid scent was being carried to him as they approached from downwind. He could also detect the faint scent of Kalis as well. There was something different about his son's scent. It was more pronounced than it had ever been. Pusintin dismissed that as he thought of having For'mya beneath him once more and listening to her beg him to fuck her harder.

Pusintin came to a halt now and dropped to one knee beside the fallen tree as the Puma Bane detachment commander settled beside him.

"Our men have made contact to the west Marshall." He spoke. "Why have they not reported in?"

"They will report in when their mission is complete." Pusintin told him. "He probably left the majority of his forces there to protect their main base. Qallin will play with them before moving in fully."

The Commander nodded his head. "As you say." He spoke. "The entrance to the cave is only a hundred meters further. We should deploy now as we sweep forward."

Pusintin nodded. "I want three of your finest to go into the cave with me Kirr." He said. "The rest will establish a defensive perimeter around the entrance. Once my brother realizes we have fooled him... he will rush to try and save her. And fall into our trap."

"I will make it so." The Commander said.

Pusintin nodded and rose back to his feet. "Let's get this over with. Once we kill my brother then your men can have his other whores to entertain yourselves."

MANNE
BASE ONE MEDICAL TRIAGE CENTER
CAVE NETWORK

Duewa darted through the throng of men and women waiting for incoming wounded and found Anja standing beside Atropos near the bank of medical computers. She moved right up to her and watched as Anja turned to look at her. Duewa didn't hesitate and she instantly reached out and took Anja's hands as Thoti moved up behind her.

"Why are you still here?" Duewa asked.

Anja shook her head only half heartedly. "I... I can't leave here." She stated.

Duewa squeezed her hands tightly. "We heard what is happening Anja!" Duewa stated. "You need to go to them now!"

"My place is..."

Duewa didn't let her finish and grabbed her arms. "Your place is with your husband and your fellow wives and Queens!" Duewa snapped at her. Most everyone around stopped what they were doing since there were very few individuals within the whole of the Union that would dare raise their voice to Anja Leonidas. The smallest of the Union Queens though she may have been, Anja Leonidas's temper when arisen was legendary. As was her fiery nature and proven ability to stomp you into the ground. Apparently... Duewa had risen to such a stature in Anja's eyes that she was now one of them. "That is where you belong!"

"Duewa... I can't..." Anja stammered.

"Damn it Anja!" Duewa exclaimed. "I am here! Anuk is here! Radra is here! We all know what we are doing!"

"That's not it." Anja protested.

"Thoti may have changed me..." Duewa spoke. "But it is you who made me see what it means to be part Lycavorian and Spartan! A life that I have embraced completely! A life that you helped me to embrace and understand! Something you did not have to do! Now I am telling you that you need to follow the call of your blood and go to your mate and fellow wives. That is what you must do now!"

Anja stared at her for a long moment, her jade green eyes bright but hesitant. "What if..."

"We don't need you here!" Duewa almost shouted. "And with what is taking place... you would be no good to us anyway. Your fear and concern wafts from your pores Anja. Even I can smell that and I am only recently turned! You need to go to them!"

Anja glanced at Atropos who simply shrugged his broad shoulders. "I have only been waiting for you to lose your patience and go there anyway." He stated.

Anja looked at Duewa and squeezed her hands. "Hold down the fort." She stated.

Duewa nodded. "Of course."

Anja looked at Thoti. "You better make sure nothing happens to her Thoti." She ordered him.

Thoti grinned. "That will not be a problem." He said in reply.

Anja turned and scooped up the P190 that was resting beside the crate. "Atropos... let's move!"

"Finally." Atropos commented before taking the front and leading his fiery haired Queen out of the cave and pointing at three other Durcunusaan to follow them.

"Mother?" Eirene gasped.

For'mya looked at her and took their hands. "Stay calm. This is not something we did not plan for." She said confidently.

"They got in behind father!" Fedor protested. "They will be here in moments! Before the others are in position!"

"That is why your father chose this cave Fedor." For'mya explained to him. "It is smaller than the others and even if they reach here before him they will only be able to enter with so many. If you... if you do not wish to be here, I know it is so much to take in, just use the escape tunnel should the need arise."

"We won't leave you here!" Eirene nearly shouted.

“He will not hurt me.” For'mya stated. “If you are here though, I don't know what he will do. You must promise me to use the escape tunnel if you need to. I will not see my children put at risk! And neither would your father!”

Fedor shook his head. “No!” He spoke firmly. “No! I will not leave you! We will not leave you! Not ever!”

“No!” Eirene echoed her twin as she stepped up beside him. “Never!”

For'mya stared at him and saw the set of his jaw and then her dark brown eyes looked at Eirene where she saw the same look. They would not budge and she knew that. They would not leave her and For'mya felt loving warmth flood through her. It was no different a look than any of their other children would have given her facing a similar situation she knew without any question. They would not abandon their blood.

“Then take defensive positions and we will give him a very large surprise when he enters here thinking to reclaim what was never his to begin with.” For'mya said as she drew out her K14.

Her dark brown eyes changed then, the thick black ring expanding and encircling her dark brown pupil and the dual wolf fangs so common to the Leonidas bloodline and all those they turned extended and became much more prominent. For'mya Leonidas would take her vengeance for what he did to her, and there would be no forgiveness.

MANNE BASE ONE

Go to them father! Aradace exclaimed.

Torma gazed at his second oldest daughter from where he sat beside Isheeni, brushing his long, thick tail along her shorter one in a dragon show of affection and commitment. All mated dragon couples did this as it was their holding hands and showing their love to others in public places. Isheeni basked in the attentions of her husband. No. He said calmly. We would only get in the way. They have not called for us to support them and we must not rush into a situation. We do not know if they brought T19s.

That monster is almost upon my For'mya! Aradace hissed at her father. I will never allow anyone to take her from me again! Never!

Isheeni rose from her spot beside Torma and moved to Aradace and pressed her snout to her daughter. Behind only Jeth, she was the most outspoken and restless of their children. She was also very passionate and viciously protective of her Bonded Sister, especially after what had happened over the last months.

Do you believe Martin would allow any harm to befall his Kinsoaurgai daughter? Now... after what has happened? Isheeni asked her softly.

Aradace met her mother's eyes. No. Never. She answered in a softer tone. But he would be the first to say he is not perfect and can not plan for everything.

Isheeni nodded. Yes he would. But that is why he has so many with him. That vile man will not lay his hands upon For'mya now daughter. If we leave here now and go to them, we leave Base One unprotected. We can not do that. Too many lives depend on us here. And I for one have no wish to experience what only your father and sister have survived when facing their missiles. Only they have survived such missiles daughter.

General Koguth has destroyed the Puma Bane sent against him. Torma said confidently. They may have gotten more down onto the surface than we thought... but if that is the case and we leave here without being called... then they could strike here with other troops that they may have landed without us detecting them.

Aradace looked at her father. They are not smart enough or skilled enough to out think us father!

Perhaps not... but they did manage to land additional Puma Bane scum without us knowing about it.

Torma told her. Our duty is not just to our bonded ones daughter... but to the whole as well. You know this. And I know For'mya trusts in you to help protect those here.

“Your father speaks the truth Aradace. You must trust in his wisdom and knowledge of how Martin thinks.” Helen's voice came to them and they turned and watched her walk up to where they were with Arzoal and Wayonn in tow. They were a hundred kilometers from the actual fighting, and while there was still a sense of caution and alertness permeating Base One, many still went about their duties almost casually. “Has anyone seen Zarah and Lucia? I have not seen them since Manda’s forces arrived. And Seyre is not here either.”

Wayonn walked up to Aradace without fear and placed his hand on her side scales. They all knew who he was and the respect he garnered from Martin and others. No dragon on Manne would ever refuse his touch for as with Helen, they had learned it could sooth them with but a caress. And it did just that to Aradace now as she felt his hand and the warmth of his skin against her scales and became less agitated and settled to the grass beside her mother. “Trust in Martin child.” He spoke with a warm and calm voice. “He will allow no harm to come to For’mya. As her Bonded One, you should know this better than most.”

Aradace met his eyes and nodded her massive head, butting him gently in his chest in a sign of thanks and reverence. Thank you Val’istar. She said softly.

The men and women with Martin could defeat four times the number they face. Arzoal spoke now as she settled to the ground across from them and Helen leaned against her side. We have all seen their skill. They know what each other will do almost as well as Bonded Pairs. You know this Aradace, just as we all do. Have faith in their skills and love for For’mya. Just as they have faith in yours for her.

Aradace looked again at her father. How can you be so calm father? She asked him.

Torma met her eyes and chortled to himself in humor. Far more years than you doing this exact same thing daughter with Martin. He answered. When Martin begins to panic... then I will begin to panic.

Isheeni laughed softly. Martin Leonidas panic? Never. I do not believe I have ever seen that man panic no matter how dire the situation was.

There was this time when...

It was Helen who saw Wayonn stagger slightly beside Aradace and she stepped away from Arzoal quickly and up beside him without thought. “Grandfather? What... what is it?” She asked reaching for his arms to steady him.

Wayonn? Arzoal questioned as well, having seen his stagger.

Wayonn shook his head as he reached for his temple. “I don’t know.” He said. There is something... I feel something.” He said.

More Puma Bane! Aradace exclaimed.

Wayonn shook his head quickly. “No.” He stated returning his hand to her broad side. “It is... I feel refined and unblemished power.”

“From Martin?” Helen asked.

Wayonn shook his head. “No... this is not Martin. Every Praetorian or Mage leaves a distinct resonance within the Etheric realm. I have only just begun to teach you how to sense this Helen. You are growing stronger, but as his Mage, Martin is what will supersede all others for you right now. I can feel it though.”

Helen gripped his arms tighter. “Every Praetorian leaves an impression upon a place or person yes. I remember your teachings grandfather.” She said. “What do you feel?”

Wayonn looked at her. “I sense Androcles.”

Helen looked at him wide eyed. “Grandfather that is not possible.” She said. “Andro and the others are in the Alpha Quadrant. He could not be here. He would not do such a thing and not tell his father.”

Wayonn shook his head once more as he looked around. “It is not Andro himself Helen.” He said as he reached out within the Etheric realm and gently probed what he felt. It was gone now... but he could just detect the very faint traces of that individual in the currents of Etheric power that swirled around Manne now that so many powerful Etheric users were on the planet. To Wayonn it was glorious to feel as a Praetorian Mage and Oracle. There were many Etheric currents on the Protectorate homeworld of course, but with the exception of the times he was with Dutkne, none of them could compare to the power and clarity he felt here on Manne. So many different and unique minds. Powerful minds. As it did with Murano... at times in made Wayonn giddy with happiness to be able to feel such a thing again after so many years.

“It was only a fleeting sensation Helen. A sensation of great skill, power and cunning.” He said softly. “And it has... it has been touched by Andro recently.” He looked at Helen with wide eyes. “There is someone on Manne who has been with Androcles very recently. Touched by him within the Etheric realm.”

“A crew member perhaps?” Helen asked. “Manda? She and Andro are very close.”

Wayonn shook his head. “No... this person is no crew member.” He said. “His resonance was...”

Wayonn? Arzoal questioned.

“It was darker than most.” Wayonn answered them. “And hidden in a way I have never seen. The Etheric shields, I felt them for only an instant, but they are among the most powerful I have ever felt. And they were being reinforced by at least one other.”

What do you mean by darker Val'istar? Isheeni asked.

Wayonn looked at her. “Filled with anger and hate.” He replied. “But anger and hate that was very carefully held in check and being channeled.”

“Towards Andro?” Helen asked now.

Wayonn shook his head again. “No. Towards Pusintin and the Kavalians.” He replied meeting her eyes. “Helen... I saw a flash of red eyes. Eyes like you once described to me. Large eyes with eyelids that flashed too quickly. Like a lizard. They were...”

“Evolli?” Helen gasped.

“Yes.” Wayonn told her. “Evolli eyes!”

“Here on Manne!” Helen almost shouted.

Wayonn nodded. “Yes. It was male... and he has incredible Etheric shields. I thought you told me Evolli were not able to use Etheric communication.”

“They can not.” Helen answered.

They can not. Unless someone with enough power has gifted them with the ability. Arzoal spoke softly. Someone like Androcles or his father.

Helen looked at her suddenly. “Sister... you know that neither of them would ever give this ability to an Evolli. Not after what they did.”

Arzoal met her eyes evenly. And who among us has picked up and befriended more who were once their enemies sister. Who has the compassion needed to forgive such acts?

“They are Talon Guardians!” Helen exclaimed.

Torma nodded his massive head. And part of our sworn duty is to show compassion Feravomir. To all species.

Isheeni looked at Arzoal. Mother... remember what the Ancient One Sarlana told us that day when she was here. Isheeni spoke now. About those she called Dahakoan. All of them had the same traits within them. A powerful sense of things. Of people and places. That they could be the most savage of soldiers or the most cunning of politicians. That the love of their family was unmatched in any way and many were known to defend their families with vicious fury if they were slighted in any way that did them harm.

Helen looked between them. “But Andro and Elynth... ever since the end of the war they have avoided any contact with the Evolli. They have gone out of their way to avoid them. They despise them... even more than you and Martin. Torma you know I speak the truth.” She said looking at him.

Torma nodded his head. Yes... this is true in part.

They were also once part of the Union until the former government took power sister. Arzoal continued without noticing Torma’s vague answer. And from all accounts... loyal and trusted members of the Union. Many of their finest scientists and previous government members defected when the war broke out. There were many who did not agree with what their past leaders did. How they became so tightly bound with Keleru and the Kavalians.

What if... what if Andro and Elynth’s outward stance on the Evolli has been a ruse all of this time? Isheeni asked. What if they have been concealing their true actions from everyone? She said... Sarlana said that even Martin would not know the lengths to which Andro and Elynth would go to protect their family.

Would they do that mother? Aradace asked. After Alba Tau... the horrors they endured there... how could they forgive... how could they forgive that?

Androcles would not hold an entire species responsible for the crimes of a few. Arzoal spoke confidently now. Nor would Elynth. They are far stronger than that. They speak with a single voice, just as you and Martin do Torma. Arzoal looked at him once more as if she finally realized his statement from earlier was very odd. She tilted her head to the side and extended it closer to Torma on her long neck. You have said very little Torma. Do you know something? What are you not telling us?

Isheeni looked at Torma. Husband?

Torma looked at them and took a deep breath, his massive chest rising and falling with ease. It will come out sooner than we had expected now that Pian’Nruarani has formed a new government. It was something we decided a year after Alba Tau. Martin and Androcles. Elynth and I. It took us many weeks to come to this decision but it was one we all felt we needed to make. He told them. Androcles and Elynth were the ones to reach out even before the last battles were fought. Androcles and Elynth have maintained their deception in order for the Evolli to evolve.

Helen's eyes grew wide. "That is how he got the Auramite!" She announced. "From Vekhin Three! It is the only location of the ore anywhere in the universe!"

It was a gift to him for what he did. Torma said. From the Evolli.

Vekhin Three is within Evolli space sister and... Arzoal's words died in her throat. She looked at Torma once more. Andro and Elynth have been working in secret and repairing the relations with the Evolli haven't they Torma? Helping them to rebuild their worlds and culture?

"And that is why Andro and Elynth disappeared for six weeks shortly after the war ended and only Martin and Riall knew where they were!" Helen said.

Torma nodded his massive head. The trust was hard to build for obvious reasons, but Androcles would not be deterred. And nor would our daughter. Torma spoke looking at Isheeni. They were liberating several sites within Kavalian space of ancient and priceless Evolli artifacts the Kavalians stole from their capital before the rightful government led the coup that restored them to power. They did this under the guise of revenge against the many crime syndicates because of the T19s.

"They were raiding Kavalian sites!" Helen exclaimed. "Inside Kavalian space!"

Torma nodded again. They took half a dozen Durcunusaan, all of them sworn to secrecy, all of them veterans from Alba Tau. Among them were seven Evolli from their Shadow Brigade. They raided nine Kavalian storage facilities over that six week period and lay waste to the many criminal organizations that assisted the Kavalians to cover their true purpose. All of them were deep within Kavalian space or within The Wilds. Only Martin, Riall and I knew what they were doing and that is how we wanted it. Armetus had somehow discovered that Keleru and the Kavalians had prodded the Evolli government into war against us. Helped to fund the old regime through their criminal organizations in taking power from the rightful rulers. This was Martin's way of getting back at them.

"Why does all this matter now?" Wayonn asked. "And what does it have to do with the man I felt here on Manne?"

Helen turned to look at him. "There is only one reason Androcles would send an Evolli here." She stated confidently. "They are the finest assassins anywhere within the known galaxy. A good portion of their culture is based on this sacred Assassin Society. It is why so many of us within the Union found it hard to deal with them while they were members of the Union. They were obsessively secret about it and never denied that it existed, but they also never confirmed it either. I do not know much of their history, only that this Assassin Quorum dates back many millennia. I did hear rumors that one school had reopened some years ago, but they were also teaching other things beside assassination skills. It was only a rumor and when I asked Martin about it he said he was aware of it and monitoring the situation. I never asked him about it again."

"I thought the Bo'yak species were considered the best assassins." Wayonn asked.

Helen shook her head. "The Bo'yak are nothing but brainless children when compared to the Evolli grandfather. It is one of the main reasons we had such a hard time in the first year of the war with them. They sent dozens of assassins against Martin, Andro and the Queens as well as Riall and many of our senior officers. One team even tried to reach Deia on Apo Prime. None of them succeeded in their goals but it wasn't until we had destroyed their ability to train new assassins, destroyed their academies, that we began to get the upper hand."

If there is an Evolli on Manne and he has the resonance of Androcles on him... there is only one reason for that. Arzoal said.

Helen nodded her head in agreement. "He is here to insure that Pusintin dies. He must have come from among Manda's forces. And he may not be alone."

The Ancient One was not entirely truthful with us. Isheeni said. Why would she not warn us that they would do something like this?

"She was truthful." Helen said shaking her head. "She just does not know Andro and Elynth the way we do. She does not know what..."

...What drives them. Or what they are capable of. Arzoal spoke now. We saw this in them before. During the Talon Guardian ceremony. The reverence in their eyes when they were given the title and the brand. It became part of them.

“We should tell Martin.” Wayonn said instantly.

“No!” Helen declared. “No! We can say nothing!”

“What?” Wayonn gasped. “Why?”

“If Androcles sent him here it is for only one purpose.” Helen told him. “We must not interfere. We do not know the orders Andro gave to this man.”

“He would not hurt anyone within Andro’s family if what you say is true.” Wayonn protested.

Helen shook her head. “No... but he may not allow himself to be taken alive either. He will not... one of the founding creeds of this Assassin’s Society was that they would never fail. And if they failed they would take their own lives. If we tell Martin, we will have the blood of this man on our hands because Martin will try to stop him.”

But isn’t killing his brother the reason we are doing this Feravomir? Aradace asked now. The reason we have lured him here? To remove the stain upon the honor of King Martin’s family and met out justice for what he did to For’mya?

Wayonn stepped closer to his granddaughter as realization came over him. “He is here to keep Martin from doing it.” He rasped.

Helen nodded her head slowly. “That is the way Androcles thinks.” She said. “Carians... I should have seen this before! I should have seen it in him when we talked before I left to come here. He has been planning this all along!”

You of all people should know that Andro and Elynth will never reveal what resides in their heads Feravomir. In the deepest portions of their minds and hearts. Torma told her. I would be guessing... but I doubt even Andro’s mates or Anthar have any idea what my daughter and Andro are truly capable of. There is a stain upon the honor and integrity of the Leonidas name in Androcles’s eyes. That stain is Pusintin!

Helen looked at him as he finished speaking and she finally understood. “But in Andro’s eyes there would be an even greater stain upon his father’s honor and dignity if he takes the life of his own brother.” She gasped.

Torma nodded his massive head. Yes.

“That is not a burden Androcles will allow his father to bear.” Helen said softly.

“So we do nothing?” Wayonn asked.

Helen looked at him. “Pusintin will die this day grandfather.”

“I don’t question that. Or the need for it.” Wayonn told her. “I have been Lycavorian for more than forty thousand years! It is what Sumar would have done. It is what I would do.”

Helen shook her head. “No... we will do nothing.” She said. “Pusintin... Pleistarchus... whatever name you chose to use for him, he will die for what he did to Andro’s mother... and the dishonor he has heaped upon the Lycavorian people and the Leonidas name with his actions through the years.”

“Then the only question is who will get to him first.” Wayonn spoke softly.

“Martin would give him a quick death...” Helen stated as she looked to the north and the mountains there. “Androcles Leonidas will not.”

MANNE DECOY BASE

Koguth stood in the center of the secondary base taking in the blood and death all around him. There was very little left of the men who entered the perimeter of the decoy base. The ambush had worked to perfection and the mines had done most of the killing for them. He could see the odd body part lying among the smoking ruins and the pools of blood and gore that were scattered all about. He felt no remorse for his actions or the actions of the men and women he commanded this day. There men were butchers of the worst kind. Kavalians who enjoyed the power and control they had over average people. They reveled in the fear that they induced in men and women. Most of them had probably committed more crimes against their own people than they had against anyone else. Their deaths would not be missed in the greater scheme of things and Koguth gave their passing barely a thought. His keen eyes took in his men as they moved among the bodies and body parts to insure none remained alive. The order had gone out from Anja Leonidas that no Puma Bane soldier would be treated if found alive and wounded. They would be executed on sight and King Leonidas had not countermanded that order. This told Koguth that his Queens wielded far more power and influence than many gave them credit for and they undoubtedly spoke with Martin's voice.

Yet something nagged at him in his gut. He had fought far too many battles to take anything for granted. This had been far too easy. He shifted his P190A5 to his opposite arm and squatted in the bloody grass, his eyes sweeping the area around him. He looked at the severed leg that lay only a few feet from him intently. He looked up and watched as Akor'dris worked her way through the bodies with Bae'diraz at her side. The two beautiful Drow females had been a catalyst for many of the young warriors among his Pride. They saw the exquisite combat skills both female elves had, as well as the direct line to King Leonidas, and it only served to show his men that anything they desired was obtainable. When the Drow Akor'dris and Bae'diraz had begun training his men in skills they did not have, all of them absorbed their teachings without question. New skills and ways of doing things would only allow them to be better at what they did and they embraced this mentality.

"General?" Mata's voice broke him out of his thoughts and Koguth stood back up and looked at him.

"It was too easy Mata." Koguth said softly watching as Jormal came up beside him and Akor'dris and Bae'diraz moved within the small circle.

"The ambush was perfect General." Mata said.

Koguth nodded. "Yes. Too perfect. And they bumbled into it like untrained recruits."

"You did say that the Puma Bane had become overconfident and arrogant through the years General." Jormal told him.

"Yes... but this?" Koguth looked around the clearing. He turned and looked at Akor'dris as she stopped beside him. "How many did you chase down?" He asked.

"Seventeen made it out of the kill zone." Akor'dris answered. "None made it more than a few hundred meters before we caught them."

Koguth looked at Mata. "You knew the commander Mata? He was Puma Bane?"

Mata nodded his head. "Qallin. Scum of the worst kind. He liked to inflict pain on his prisoners."

Koguth bent over and carefully picked up the severed leg. The end was ragged with strips of skin dangling from the gory appendage. "Does this look like a boot that a Puma Bane would be allowed to maintain Mata?"

Mata looked at the limb and for the first time he noticed the scuffed and worn combat boot attached to the foot. He reached out and took the limb from Koguth and turned it over in his hands before beginning to unlaced the boot. He got it done half way and then peeled back the tongue of the boot. His dark eyes grew darker still and he looked at Koguth.

"Whoever these men were they were not Puma Bane." He stated simply.

"What?" Jormal gasped. "How do you know?"

Mata flipped over the tongue of the boot and showed it to Jormal. "Every Puma Bane had his identification number stamped on every part of his gear. The inside of the tongues of the boots for example. There is no stamp." He turned back to Koguth. "Whoever they were... they were not Puma Bane."

"Then who?" Bae'diraz asked quickly. "They moved and acted like well trained soldiers."

Koguth nodded his head slowly. "If I had to guess I would say he had more troops within the Task Force than he let on to others. At least a company of them, which would account for this number here." He said. "It is the only explanation. They must have joined us right before we left Nefoa and he has kept them hidden. He landed them as well to..."

"To what?" Akor'dris asked.

"To conceal what the Puma Bane are really doing." Koguth said meeting her eyes.

"He would not send a large force after Queen For'mya." Mata said. "In his twisted mind he thinks she wishes to be with him and he will not have trouble with her."

"Sucks to be him then." Jormal stated.

“Capturing King Martin’s main base on the planet would have been a priority. It would have infrastructure and already be established. But Base One is a hundred kilometers away from here and sitting under those Shroud fields. He would not know that this was only a decoy base.” Mata said.

“No... he would not know that.” Koguth said.

“If he did not send them here... then where are they?” Jormal asked.

Mata’s eyes grew a little wider. “Koguth?”

Koguth nodded his head. “Yes Mata. You are correct.”

“Shit!” Mata snarled.

“Jormal... please pass through our implants to all of our people that if they are out in the open... run for cover right fucking now!” Koguth told him.

“General?” Jormal looked at him.

Koguth fought down the urge to look around but he could sense the increased alertness of Akor'dris and Bae'diraz beside him. “Please issue the order Jormal. Quickly.”

Akor'dris looked at him. “We will take our force and sweep along the eastern flank.” She told him.

Koguth nodded his head. “An excellent idea. However... right now I think we should get out of the open. Right fucking now!”

“Run!” Mata screamed loudly to all within earshot. “Run for cover now!”

No one hesitated in their actions and the many Lycavorian and Kavalian soldiers began to scatter like roaches just as the buzz saw like sound of heavy cannons began to fill the air and begin to tear up the ground where they had been standing only seconds before.

Qallin’s Second Officer held back the scream of rage he wanted to release as their eyes detected the many figures in the center of the clearing scatter after several shouted commands, just as his men behind the light chain cannons began to open fire. He cursed under his breath now as he realized they had only caught a few in the open, watching as they went down, while the others disappeared back into their trenches.

“We waited too long!” He hissed angrily. “We waited too long! Fuck!”

“This is not their main base Lieutenant!” The senior enlisted Puma Bane snapped from beside him. “They butchered the Reactionary Company!”

“I can see that Marraon!” Gumat’Chialia growled savagely. “Shift the left section further north! Have them move up on their right flank!” He barked the order. “Have a five man team drop and sweep further west from our location! They must have some sort of support base nearby! They would not be out here alone without support!”

“How do we know that?” Marraon hissed. “We have never fought Union forces directly! We do not know how they operate!”

Gumat whirled on the man. “No force that large would be out here without a support base!” He snarled. “We must find it and destroy it. Then we can roll up their individual forces at will! They can’t have more than a few hundred men and women down there and we all know women are good only for fucking! Send the patrol and do it quickly! We have them pinned down for now and we must maintain the advantage!”

Koguth lay at the bottom of the trench with Mata and Jormal on either side of them as another intense volley from light chain cannons swept across the top of the trench kicking up dirt and bits of shattered logs.

“How many?” Koguth barked into his implant.

“...tell for sure General!” The voice echoed. “At least a dozen or so of our people were caught in the open and went down!”

“Fuck!” Koguth spoke savagely.

“They are directing their light cannons on both trench locations! We are pinned down for the moment!” The voice reported.

“Akor'dris?” Koguth spat.

“We made it out of the kill zone!” Her voice answered instantly and Koguth was impressed at the sense of calm he heard given their current situation.

“Location?” Koguth asked her.

“East of you, below the ridge!” Akor'dris answered. “General... we were in position to see a small unit break from their main force on the opposite ridge. They are heading north towards our support location.”

“How many?” Koguth demanded.

“At least four... perhaps more.” She answered him.

“They are looking for our support base.” Mata chimed in now. “If they find it they will attack in force. It is a standard Puma Bane tactic. Remove whatever support we might have and then they will concentrate on destroying us.”

“I don't much envy being destroyed today!” Jormal chimed in.

Mata couldn't help but grin at the almost causal way Jormal spoke. “Nor do I my friend.” He answered.

“Akor'dris... is Jothor near your location?” Koguth asked. He didn't see Akor'dris turn her head and look at the young Kavalian who had come here hoping to take Iama'Juturi as his wife and instead had found the attentions of a dark haired female elf much more to his liking. She was an engineer and Jothor found her to be not only ravishing in her beauty, but so much more intelligent than himself. They had spent every waking moment these last weeks together while she eagerly schooled him in anything he wanted to know. Their relationship had grown very serious just last week as they slept together for the first time and Jothor had showered her beautiful face and body with kisses and licks when he had locked groins with her. She had held him tightly whispering adoring encouragements into his ears for the entire two hours they were locked together until she had fallen asleep in his arms spent. Jothor had rolled over and held her to him protectively even as he too had drifted into sleep with the hopes of the future in front of him.

“He is right beside me.” She answered.

“Jothor!” Koguth spoke now. “Did you bring your special friend?”

The young Kavalian answered immediately. “Always General.”

“Then... if you would not mind... please remove the fools firing those heavy weapons on us.” Koguth spoke calmly.

“Understood general.” Jothor answered.

Jormal looked at Koguth. “Special friend?” He asked.

Koguth grinned at him. “Jothor is the finest shot I have seen in my lifetime.” He told him. “The boy bleeds distance, wind and impact points. Give him a moment and you will see what I mean. He has been shooting long guns since he was a boy. Taught to him by his father. He has a very particular hatred for Puma Bane after they took his father from him in a Tazli Root induced fever some years ago. He was a fine leader of men and a good friend. Jothor will “save our bacon” as I heard Queen Anja state several times since we have been here.”

“And then?” Jormal asked.

“Then we will do exactly what King Leonidas is so feared for throughout the stars.” Koguth told him. “We will ambush the ambushers!”

Akor'dris looked at Jothor as he pulled the canvas bag from his back with speed born of experience and skill. She watched as he unzipped it and she saw the matte black frame of the High Coven G21 Sniper Rifle. She instantly knew what Koguth wanted him to do. She dug in her own butt pack for the cylindrical scope and tossed it to Bae'diraz who sat a few feet away.

“Bae... spot for him.” She exclaimed and then looked at the two Kavalians, three Spartan soldiers and one female Lycavorian who were nearby where they had ended up. “Cover both corners of the ridge! Do not let any of them flank us!”

The six simply nodded and began to scramble to positions, dragging others with them. Akor'dris looked at Jothor as he finished attaching the scope.

“Can you hit them from here Jothor?” She asked. “They are uphill and nearly a kilometer away through vegetation.”

Jothor grinned at her as he chambered the first round into the G21. "Special loads." He told her. "I make my own ammunition and I have hit targets at three kilometers away in worse conditions."

Jothor rolled back over and crawled quickly up to where Bae'diraz was lying among the thin, eighteen inch high grass covering the ridge. "Bae'diraz?" He questioned as he slid the G21 out in front of him and settled to the ground comfortably behind the weapon.

"I can only see three guns." She stated confidently. "Two of them... two hundred and fifteen degrees and one point two kilometers. The third is at two hundred and thirty-eight degrees and one point four kilometers. He is the one putting the most fire onto the General's trench line."

"Then I will take him first." Jothor spoke as he settled in behind the weapon and brought his eye up to the scope. He felt Akor'dris settle beside him on the ground, pushing her P190 out in front of her. One kilometer for the P190 was not a far shot Jothor knew and as his scope came into focus and he saw the first gunner. He was semi prone behind his light chain gun, putting a four second burst into the area above the trench every few seconds. Jothor also took in the man beside him who was feeding him the large magazines of ammunition as quickly as he went through them. "I have him." He stated calmly.

Jothor took a deep breath and released it slowly as his scope centered on the side of the Puma Bane soldier's head. His father had been meticulous in teaching him how to shoot when he was a boy. It was one of the many things his father, a stern Kavalian who was cut from the same mold as General Koguth, had taught him before Puma Bane scum had taken him from his family. Jothor blanked out everything but his target and his finger went from the trigger guard to the button trigger. He preferred the High Coven Sniper Rifle for its built in buffers and less weight. The Union Sniper Rifle was much more powerful and had longer range, but it sacrificed the ability to be mobile for these things. The G21 also had an integrated silencer that would muffle most of the weapons report. Jothor depressed the trigger button with barely a thought and sent the first 14.8mm explosive tipped caseless round downrange. He was shifting his scope to the next gun before the Puma Bane's gunner's head erupted in a spray of blood, bone and fur.

Gumat heard the wet plopping sound above the roar of the three light chain guns and his head jerked around just in time to see the head of the gunner closest to him blow apart, bits of flesh and blood showering the man's assistant gunner with gore. His mind tried to process how this had happened even as the second gunner's head erupted in an explosion of equally violent proportions, his head suddenly just gone. Gumat whirled to scream a warning to the third gunner but as his mouth opened to shout that they were under attack, the man's body jerked and he was flung away from the gun, a gaping wound where his shoulder and part of his neck had once been.

"Sniper!" Gumat finally managed to scream. "Sniper!"

That one word sent many of the Puma Bane into a fit. Among Gumat's men were only two who had ever experienced the fear and unknown when being under fire from a sniper hidden far away. Both of them had died behind the guns they were manning. The High Coven had many sniper rifles in their inventory, however for some reason they were few and far between out in the field with the actual troops. Robert Moran had never used Sniper Teams against the Kavalians for reasons which no one would ever discover now.

The moment the third gunner died, the Puma Bane knew something was wrong and they began to look around for who was within their perimeter killing their men. They could see their leader Gumat shouting orders at them, but all any close to him could hear over the ringing in their ears from the constant hammering of the chain cannons was muffled sounds. Their eyes grew wide in horror when they all saw Gumat rise to his knees screaming at them and his head suddenly blew apart like an overripe Kavalian Balcor melon. The 14.8mm explosive tipped round fired from the G21 hit precisely where Jothor had aimed the moment he saw the Puma Bane leader foolishly rise to his knees. Jothor had shifted fire instantly and fired within half a second. The round entered just beneath the base of Gumat's skull and a tenth of a second after impact the round exploded. Gumat's head disappeared in a fine spray of blood and flesh and the Puma Bane lost their second officer.

And all pretense of control of their actions vanished with his death.

Jothor lifted his eye from his scope and tapped his jaw activating his implant. “General! I have taken out the guns and what appears to be the detachment’s second officer!”

He didn’t see Mata turn to look at Koguth from where they lay in the trench and then tap his own jaw. “Jothor... are you certain?” Mata demanded.

Jothor didn’t hesitate. “Maroon shoulder boards with white trim Major.” Jothor answered him with his recognized rank. “He was directing the guns and was trying to rally them.”

“Now general!” They heard Mata speak in their implants. “We need to attack now!”

Koguth didn’t hesitate either. “Akor'dris... leave two with Jothor and then break your people off and sweep back southwest to the support position. Intercept those Puma Bane scum who were moving there! Mataen and Nedoli are pilots by nature and while capable, they will not be able to stand against a full squad of Puma Bane!”

“Moving!” Akor'dris answered instantly Jothor saw. It was one of the reasons that those among the Juturi Pride had developed an intense respect for the Drow female warrior. She was without fear and acted without hesitation.

Jothor tapped his jaw again. “General... I will move to a more elevated position and cover your attack!”

“I will go with him!” Bae'diraz spoke immediately.

“Two minutes Jothor!” Koguth’s voice told him. “Then we will attack from the west!”

Jothor didn’t pause and pushed back from the lip of the ridge, seeing Akor'dris and at least two dozen others sprinting off into the timber to the southwest. “I saw an outcropping a hundred meters from here!” He exclaimed as he slammed a fresh magazine into the G21. “This way!”

Jothor moved with speed and grace considering his six foot three frame, Bae'diraz and two Lycavorians moving swiftly behind him.

Pusintin gazed into the mouth of the cave entrance, his weapon trained on the opening as the Puma Bane with him began to move into a defensive position around the entrance. There were natural defensive positions already in place. Rock outcroppings as well as fallen logs and it was these that the Puma Bane moved into.

“It was foolish to hide her here Marshall.” Kirr spoke as he knelt next to Pusintin. “It is a natural funnel of death because of the terrain and they have left prepared positions for us to use to defend.”

Pusintin nodded his head as he looked around. “My brother isn’t as smart as he likes to think he is. He didn’t have enough men to secure this location and was hoping I would attack the main camp first. He wanted to kill me there.” He said feeling full of himself. “Kirr... leave your second in command and pick four others to enter with us.” He said as he inhaled deeply and could easily detect For'mya’s sweet orchid scent from within the cave. Her delicious scent surged through his senses and he remembered well the moments she had been under him, her whimpers of delight filling his ears. Pusintin also could also detect the scents of what could only be the children she had bore him, including the boy child. “I can smell them inside.” He stated. “They are fearful.”

Kirr only nodded his head as he pointed at two others to come to him. He trusted fully in his Marshall and his skills. “As they should be. You will teach her to be a proper Kavalian female Marshall.” He said.

Pusintin grinned cruelly. “Yes I will.” He agreed. “Let’s go!” He stated as he began moving into the cave.

...like about sixty to seventy Skipper. Cody spoke in a whisper within Mindvoice even though he knew none of the Puma Bane troops below him could detect his words. Bunched up as all hell too. Me and Garan are above them about a hundred and fifty meters away on the west slope. They’re moving into the positions we left... stupid fuckers!

We’re almost there Cody! Martin answered him instantly.

Cody could detect that Martin was still in wolf form and sprinting through the timber in their connection. He could also sense the others of their team descending around the entrance of the cave quickly and without sound. They were moving urgently yes, but none of them were in panic mode just yet. All of them had good friends back on Earth, but they had fought and bled with Martin Leonidas on more occasions than any of them could recall. All of them owed him their lives dozens of times over, and not just for changing them all those years ago. They would all die for him without reservation. Even through the years that had passed since they had come into the future, no matter the distance that was between them, Martin always stayed in touch with each and every one of them in one form or another. They were not just his team, they were his family, and he was theirs.

Have the two big guys set up just above the entrance Skipper. Cody told him calmly. They'll chew them up with those chain guns and everyone else will have clear fields of fire.

Danny! Martin rasped out the word.

Got it! Dan answered immediately. Team Two... we'll take north!

Team One on the east! Martin hissed.

Cody looked at Garan who pulled his eye away from the scope on his P190 and grinned. Ready to party? He asked.

Garan returned the infectious grin and nodded slowly.

Anja Leonidas was sprinting as fast as her four legs would carry her, her Persian red fur a blur through the timber all around them. Atropos's larger form moved beside her with ease. He had run with his Queen at many different times through the years and he was always impressed how completely she had taken to being a female wolf. She was nearly as large as his sister Aricia when in wolf form, which was unusual to say the least. Usually when they shifted, their wolf forms took on at least some of the proportions of their human forms when compared to size and weight. Anja Leonidas however, she gained nearly forty pounds of muscle when in wolf form and Atropos could only surmise it was because of her Hadarian genes. His dark eyes quickly took in the three Durcunusaan who were running on their flanks, maintaining tactical distance as they closed on the cave.

Lover! Anja broke into Mindvoice with a tone filled with more calm than Atropos knew she felt. We are approaching the path and will come straight up it and draw their attention!

Red! What the hell are you doing out here? Martin demanded.

The same thing you are doing you big oaf! Anja snapped right back. Protecting what I love!

Shit! Martin exclaimed.

Please no arguing my loves! For'mya's musical voice filled their heads now, her ever calm and elven nature coming forth no matter the danger she knew she was in. We can punish Anja later in more pleasant surroundings and I would much prefer we kill these fools so that we can exit this cave. The dampness in here is ruining my hair.

We will lick you dry Kinsoargai! Aricia echoed within their minds.

Well... that sounds very promising! For'mya answered with soft laughter.

Mothers! Eirene exclaimed now. Do you mind? Fedor and I can hear you very well thank you!

Anja laughed gently with her fellow Queens in the connection until they heard Martin's voice.

Enough! Martin's commanding voice brought silence to them. Kalis?

I am entering the escape tunnel now Uncle! Kalis's voice echoed though Martin couldn't see his wolf body squeezing into the one meter wide tunnel Torma had burned through the back of the cave with his superheated breath.

Twenty seconds! Martin hissed. Kill all the shit sorry fuckers! No prisoners! My brother is mine though!

EDGE OF MANNE SYSTEM PRALOR VECTOR-CLASS ATTACK CRUISER HARMONY

...No prisoners! My brother is mine though!

Valael heard the soft gasp and he looked at where Tobia and Tinra sat across the table from him. The three of them had been following what was happening with great interest. It seemed that there were dozens of drones scattered all across the planet and they had witnessed the battle between Koguth and his attackers, as well as they counterattack that they had just launched against those who thought they had his forces trapped. They had also been utterly shocked to feel Martin and all those above a Tier Five Etheric level speaking quite freely. None of them had been around so many who commanded such a resonance within the Etheric realm and spoke with such clarity and force of will that they could be heard even where they were on their ship.

Tinra looked at him when they heard Martin speak that last phrase.

“No prisoners?” She gasped. “They will... they will kill them all?”

Tobia looked at her. “Every one of those commanded by Martin Leonidas’s brother and who landed on the planet knew what they were coming to do Tinra. How do you show mercy to men who have nothing but rape and murder on their minds?”

Tinra shook her head. “I’m not... I’m not saying it is not deserved Tobia.” She responded to her. “But to hear... to hear him give the order with such conviction. I have... I have never heard such a commanding presence in an order.”

Valael nodded his head. “I don’t believe any of us have.” He said. “Not since the... not since the Praetorians walked among us. He is merciless towards his enemies; we have seen that so far and read it within the information given to us. He has lost a few battles... but he has never lost a war.”

“He... he reminds me so much of Murano.” Tobia spoke softly as she remembered him with great love. His arms encircling her, his Etheric resonance filling the air around her. It was the most peaceful and exciting time of her life, not to mention the nights he had made love to her with breathless abandon.

They all turned when the door to the conference room opened and Kitor strode in with the data pad in his hand.

“Elder Valael... I have just received a request from someone called Admiral Lorian.” He spoke as he came up beside him.

Valael came to his feet. “That is the commander of his ships in this sector.” He said.

Kitor nodded. “Using her authority as Commander of this Sector of space as she put it... she has requested that we load as many combat troops as we have and move to Manne to reinforce their main position. This Base One they call it.”

Valael looked at him surprised. “She requested this?”

Kitor nodded his head. “She told me that the King does not want to get us involved, but since she is Sector Commander, it is better to be safe than sorry. Those were her words.”

“She countermands her King’s orders?” Tinra asked.

Kitor looked at her. “According to her... he would expect his senior officers to act on their own initiative. He encourages this in his officers. She also said that technically Martin Leonidas considers her a member of his family and she’ll will be damned if she allows any harm to come to them.” Kitor looked at Valael. “What does this mean? She will be damned?”

Valael smiled. “I believe it is a figure of speech Kitor. One that means she will do whatever is necessary to safeguard those she cares for.”

Tobia nodded her head as she got to her feet. “Something any family member of a Praetorian would do.” She said.

Valael nodded. “Indeed.” He said. “Kitor... how soon can you do this?” He asked.

Kitor met his eyes with something akin to disgust in them. “Please Elder Valael.” He stated. “My men have been waiting for just this opportunity! To say they were present to witness a Praetorian in action will be a story that they can tell their children and grand children about Elder Valael.”

Valael smiled. “Then we will accompany you. And we should leave now!”

Pusintin brought them up short just inside the cave entrance as their eyes adjusted to the much dimmer light. They could detect the glow from portable light globes further down the tunnel reflecting off the moistness of the cavern walls.

As with most times throughout his violent life, Pusintin got it wrong once more when he used his wolf senses. He had been away from his people for far too long and the simple nuances that all Lycavorians took for granted in their lives, Pusintin had long since forgotten. He could detect For'mya's scent easily now, but he detected no fear or indecision in her scent which told him that she was waiting for him willingly. That she did desire him more than his fool brother. This caused his chest to swell in anticipation of feeling her lush body under him once more. He didn't know what it was about her that caused him to desire her far more than he had ever desired Jalersi, but the emotion was there, and it was being returned to him from what he could smell. He would enjoy claiming her in front of his brother, making her scream for more as his brother's life drained from his body and he could do nothing. The moment on Enurrura was long forgotten from his memory and it would be a costly mistake. One of the many he had made since agreeing and going forward with the idea that For'mya would return the throne of his father back to him.

He turned slowly to Kirr. "Leave two men to defend the entrance. They are to allow no one to enter without my permission. Any who attempt they are to kill."

Kirr nodded his head and motioned to the two Puma Bane in the rear of the short column and they nodded their understanding. He looked back to Pusintin. "Should I send the others to scout ahead Marshall?" He asked.

Pusintin shook his head. "That won't be necessary. She's waiting for me." He answered.

Kirr looked at him somewhat surprised at this statement. His combat instincts should have told him something was off about this, but he had never known the Marshall to be wrong.

"You... you are certain Marshall?" He asked.

Pusintin nodded. "I can smell her. And her scent tells me she is waiting for me."

"As you order." Kirr spoke.

"We will move into a spread as we enter the main cave Kirr. She may be waiting for us, but there is no telling how many traps my stupid brother may have left to stop me from claiming what is mine." Pusintin said. "Be alert."

For'mya Leonidas was indeed waiting for him.

Waiting with murder in her beautiful, dark brown eyes.

One of the many things her beloved Martin Leonidas and her fellow Queens and lovers had taught her through the years, since the very day Martin turned her really, was the innate ability to project indifference with her scent. Her natural elven calm allowed her to master this skill very early on, and even though fear and hate coursed through her veins at this moment, she held it in check by her will and did not allow it to filter into her scent. For'mya knew she could not pull this off if she was in Phase, nor could any female wolf; it simply saturated their scents no matter what they did. Eirene was the only female wolf she had ever known who could totally suppress her fever as she had done and that was only because of what Androcles had passed to her and her brother within her womb. Now though, now it was easy for her to do this. It was partly because of this skill yes, but more so because For'mya knew Martin and the others would allow no harm to come to her. She had utter faith in their total love for her, and their willingness to inflict destruction upon those who would do her harm. Or any they considered their children. For'mya had discovered that this violent but protective trait was far more prevalent in Aricia and Anja as female wolves, and this was the main reason she was drawn more to the two of them. Dysea and Isabella had this trait she knew, as Cirith now did, but it was much more pronounced in Aricia and Anja as it was within her because of the time they had spent together through the years.

For'mya Leonidas's life had come full circle now. Once a concubine and now a Queen of the Lycavorian Union. She had never imagined herself in such a position, but For'mya would relinquish it for no one now. The love she shared with her fellow Queens and lovers was nearly as brilliant as the love they all shared for the one man who could steal their breath away with a simple caress. They never doubted one another, were never jealous of one another and they always spoke with the same voice no matter the subject.

For'mya smiled gently as the thought echoed within her mind. If someone had suggested this is what her life would be like before Martin Leonidas had saved her from that High Coven prison all those years ago, For'mya would have laughed hysterically at that person, before trying to have them committed.

For'mya could feel Fedor and Eirene on either side of her, Fedor ready to call his knives from Flatspace in a simple blink, and Eirene ready to pounce like a she-wolf on her first hunt. She glanced first at Fedor and then Eirene and could feel only love and pride swell within her at who they had become in so short a time. It was then she felt the overwhelming emotions that came from them and projected outward. Love and a devoted sense of family. Another of the gifts that Androcles had given them when he touched their minds and bestowed awareness to them while still in her womb. When For'mya thought all had been lost; that her beloved Martin was dead and she would never see her fellow Queens again; it had been Androcles who had never given up. It was now, through Fedor and Eirene, that For'mya could feel the horror at what he was driven to do. To attack one he had called mother all of his life, this For'mya knew must have been a sin above all others in Androcles's eyes. Yet it was the only way to insure that she did not give up all hope. That she remained strong and kept her wits about her even in the grips of the shame she felt. For'mya knew that Andro was the only one with the strength to do this, as well as the only one who could have awakened Fedor and Eirene in the fashion he did. All to insure that she was not lost to abyss. She could feel their brother within them; how they both felt for Androcles. He had touched them, given them awareness and the means to insure that they were strong for all of them. As they had come to find out in these last weeks, he also passed to them knowledge and skills that should have taken them centuries to master. All to insure that they survived until Martin came for them.

Martin did come and...

For'mya dropped her hands to her sides and gripped each of their hands in hers when the faint scrapping reached her wolf ears. She felt them squeeze tightly in return.

Remain in control always. For'mya spoke to them softly within Mindvoice. No matter what happens, no matter what spills from his foul mouth, do not act until I give you the word.

Fedor nodded his head slowly. We understand. He said.

Mother... are you and father sure he can not hear us? Eirene asked.

For'mya shook her head. We would sense his Etheric resonance. She answered instantly. No... he never advanced his Etheric abilities past a rudimentary stage. Your father knew this when he tried to kill your grandmother all those years ago. And again on Enurrua. He is a brute and nothing more.

There are three others with him mother. Fedor spoke. Kavalian.

Yes.

That is two more than we thought he would enter with. Eirene said.

Stay calm. For'mya told them. Your family will allow nothing to happen to us.

For'mya did not tell them she could sense Kalis close by in his wolf form. They may have been adults in physical and mental terms, but Fedor and Eirene still lacked the experience of age and the direct schooling of Androcles that Kalis had been given even if it was only a simple interactive holo program. For'mya was the only one who could detect Kalis she knew. He was remaining close to the escape tunnel so that his scent was carried out of the cavern and he could not be detected by even his father's sense of smell, though Pusintin's nose and skill was no where near as keen as Martin's. Knowing that Kalis was so close by gave For'mya added confidence. Pusintin had no idea the transformation that had taken place within his son Kalis. It was truly a wondrous thing to see knowing the life he had to live before Martin had showed him what he could have. Seeing Kalis holding Serale outside their shelter in the mornings, content to simply caress her cheek and neck and absorb her scent was all the proof any of them needed really. Even Helen was without doubt when it came to him, and she had spent quite a bit of time with him since he had joined them. The door was now open to a myriad of future life actions that Kalis now had the opportunity to experience. It was a life and a family that he had fully embraced.

For'mya's head jerked slightly and her eyes cut to the opening into the cavern they were in when she saw him cautiously poke the barrel of his weapon around the corner and come fully into view.

Coward.

It was the only word that filled her mind now as she saw him once more.

"So you finally decided to act." For'mya spoke out loud, her words dripping with sarcasm and contempt, as she knew Pusintin would expect. "I was wondering when you would grab your nor and come for me."

Pusintin felt his heart jump a little when he saw her standing there. The ArmorPly did nothing to hide her firm elven body and his eyes noticed that her chest had grown larger. It was something he had not noticed on Enurrua, but something that he was happy with. The drugs had worked even on her as they had most Kavalian women who used the accelerated fetus growth hormone.

“So you finally decided to act.” Her voice reached out for him. “I was wondering when you would grab your nor and come for me.”

Pusintin felt Kirr break to his right and the other two Puma Bane soldiers to his left, their weapons and eyes sweeping the medium sized cave. He didn't take his eyes off For'mya, his assault rifle never wavering from the center of her chest. Her sweet orchid scent filled his senses now and was charging him with energy and lust.

“I see you missed me.” Pusintin finally spoke.

“I despise you!” For'mya hissed out the words. “You are a nubous brute and nothing more than that!”

“You weren't saying that when I was plowing your tight little pussy into the bed and hitting you with my aura For'mya.” Pusintin growled at her. “You begged me to do you harder if I recall.”

“The curse of being a female wolf.” For'mya stated flatly. “I hated when Martin did that to me and I could refuse him nothing. At least he put emotion into it however.”

Pusintin moved closer to her, his rifle staying on her chest, and he released his full male wolf aura directly at her. For'mya groaned in need and Pusintin saw the flush of her skin as she reacted to his presence. “How's that for emotion you bitch!” He snarled at her.

For'mya shuddered in sexual need and her brown eyes seemed to glaze over in unwanted lust. “Bastard!” She hissed out the words.

Fedor and Eirene were looking at her with wide eyes as she reacted in the manner she did and Pusintin laughed at their stunned expressions. “Guess you never told them how things work did you?” He said.

“Mother?” Eirene gasped. “What is wrong?”

“I fucked her real good, that's what's wrong!” Pusintin spat. “I claimed her when her mate was dead! Or she thought he was.” He laughed. “And when I squirted you two into her belly she became bound to me for all time! Doesn't matter that my fucking brother was still alive! Besides... he'll be dead soon enough!”

“You lie!” Fedor shouted as he looked at the Puma Bane soldier who got close enough to poke him with his rifle.

“What's your name boy?” Pusintin demanded.

“Nubou you!” Fedor spat at him.

Pusintin moved fast for a man his size and he stepped into the straight right cross that hit Fedor squarely in the jaw and pummeled him to the ground. To Fedor's credit he sprang right back to his feet, though somewhat dazed, his lips bloody and he reached for his right arm to draw out one of his knives.

“Don't!” The Puma Bane behind him barked as he jammed his rifle into Fedor's back.

Pusintin laughed when Fedor froze and he let his rifle drop lower. “I'll teach you manners boy. And who your betters are!”

“You will teach me nothing!” Fedor hissed back at him.

“I'll teach you how to be a man!” Pusintin spat right back at him. “Something my brother will never be!”

“MedwanGai is more of a man than you will ever be!” Eirene screeched.

Pusintin looked at her, her use of the ancient Lycavorian language lost on him, taking in her extensive beauty and how she looked so much like her mother. He glanced at For'mya, who was still reacting to his male aura so close to her now, and he smiled.

“She's nice and firm For'mya.” He stated. “My men will enjoy her for days. She looks really fuckable... and I understand she is already fucking a biogenic Kavalian. Muton's son isn't it?” Pusintin smiled. “So she is already used to big Kavalian cocks! Has he locked groins with you yet little girl?”

Eirene could not contain herself or her anger and she spit directly into his face with as much force as she was able. Kirr was the one who kept her from striking Pusintin as he stepped up to her and wrapped his thick arms around her tightly, effectively immobilizing her small frame. Pusintin wiped the spittle from his face and smiled at her cruelly. “You are spirited... I'll give you that.” He stated.

“I am not afraid of you!” Eirene screamed angrily.

Pusintin chuckled just before he lashed out with a backhand that hit Eirene and rocked her head back even though Kirr was holding her tight.

“Eirene!” Fedor screamed in rage, moving to defend his twin but stopping when he felt the rifle jabbed painfully into his back.

“Don’t move little boy!” The Puma Bane soldier grumbled at him.

Pusintin was smiling when he glanced at Fedor and then back to Eirene. “You shouldn’t be afraid of me elf bitch. I’m not the one who is going to fuck you every day for the rest of your life. By the time my men are done with you, you’ll be begging them to fuck you all the time. All you elf bitches, even the half breeds; all of you can’t get enough of big cocks. Just ask your slut mother! You’ll be a real nice addition to the brothels on Nefoa when we get back!”

“I would like her first Marshall Pusintin.” Kirr grinned as he spoke, his hands roaming around in front of Eirene and over her full breasts even though he could feel nothing through the ArmorPly she wore.

“Never!” Eirene screamed. “I will never submit to you!”

Pusintin was about to answer when the easily discernible sound of hand portable Union chain cannons split the air, followed half a second later by a massive volume of Union P190 fire and their distinctive buzz saw like sound. Three muffled explosions shook the very ground they stood upon as his COM unit suddenly came alive, as did all their individual COM units. They came alive with the terrified voice of Kirr’s second in command.

“...all around us!” His voice screamed. “Above us... like demons... all directions! The positions were... trapped! Half the men are... already! We...!”

Pusintin’s head snapped back around and this time he saw For’mya Leonidas’s lovely dark brown eyes glaring back at him, savage fury filling that gaze and no sign of the desire and lust in her face and skin that was there seconds ago. He watched as her eyes change in front of him and then her wolf fangs extended fully.

“My beloved Martin was right!” For’mya spat at him vehemently. “You really are as dumb as a nubous post!”

“You fucking bitch!” Pusintin screamed at her acting purely on savage instinct now. “Kill them! Kill them both! Now!”

For’mya’s eyes went wide at this unexpected reaction. “No!” She screamed.

Pusintin acted completely on instinct and he didn’t hesitate for a moment. He had been among Kavalians who held no regard for females for so long it was his first and only reaction. His back hand was vicious and struck For’mya fully in her face, sending her sprawling across the cave floor, clearly stunned at the power of the blow.

“If I can’t have you elf bitch... no one will!” He screamed at her as he drew his sidearm in a single, smooth motion and leveled it For’mya’s head as she looked up at him from the floor, her lips bloody and her cheek cut from the rough skin on his knuckles.

It was Kalis who decided the course of the next few seconds, seeing the brother and sister he had not yet been able to get close to in imminent danger and the elven aunt who had shown the most acceptance of his new self. It was also Kalis’s actions that would cause the Grim Reaper to finally make an appearance and alter the course of events going forward for all time.

A Grim Reaper with eyes the color of blood and filled with the fury, loss, hate of an entire species. And the promise of a new beginning.

“Now!” Martin’s voice echoed across the early morning air at the entrance to the mouth of the cave. “Do it now fervon!”

The voice drew the heads of nearly eighty Puma Bane soldiers that had been watching the lone cleared path towards them. Something or someone had been clumsily moving towards their position and whoever it was they were careless in their actions, making lots of noise and easily announcing their presence.

They didn’t understand that they were doing exactly what the diminutive Persian haired Queen of the Union and her hulking Durcunusaan shadow and those with them wanted them to do. It allowed Martin and the others to move into the positions they now occupied without issue and do so in silence.

Martin Leonidas was not recognized as the most brilliant tactician within the Union simply because he was King. From the moment he had returned to take the throne of his father men and women with far more years of experience in warfare quickly saw that their young King was without equal. He could almost predict what others would do in a situation like he had been involved with their military operations planning. It was so uncanny that it frightened many of them, causing them to view him as something more than just flesh and blood. When his son had begun to show these same traits, it only confirmed for many of them that their King was very special indeed. The day that he held For'mya in his arms once more on Enurrura Martin had made a silent vow to no one but himself to never take the safety of his Queens for granted ever again. They were the women who held the very core of his being within their grasp and he would never allow harm to come to them again if it was within his power to stop. When it was decided to use this cave as the kill zone, Martin and Danny had returned here on two different occasions. It was just the two of them, for Martin trusted no one else more than Danny, and they were loaded down with explosives. It was something he would only share with his brother for he knew Danny would do the exact same thing, and insure he was defending Anuk, Nayeca and now Kesyla with everything at his disposal.

During those two trips, he and Danny had laid some very ingenious and extremely lethal booby traps among the several positions that they had left. They had spent hours hollowing out several larger logs and packing them with explosives and then returning them looking exactly as they had when they were pulled from the surrounding terrain. Only an explosives expert would have been able to detect the three different traps and only if they were looking for them.

The Puma Bane troops did not have such an individual with them.

Danny didn't hesitate at his brother's shouted command and his hand mashed down on the combat vest he wore just over the small pocket near his heart. Three deep explosions were the result and they watched as all three positions and the nearly fifty Puma Bane soldiers crowded around them vanished in a cloud of dirt, splinters and thousands of tiny steel shards. He and Martin had spent six hours each night building these traps and he watched with no small degree of grim satisfaction as he saw them work to perfection. Forty seven Puma Bane soldiers met a grisly end as their bodies were practically shredded into a fine mist of blood, flesh and fur. None of the forty-seven that were using the positions as cover survived the devastation as the steel shards were so densely packed it was as if they were hit by one solid wall.

"Fire!" Cody screamed into his implant from where he and Garan were observing. "Fire!"

It was nearly comical to see Senior Master Chief Anthony Winslow and T'lolt appear on the lip of the ridge, the two Havoc Chain Cannons looking fearsome in their hands. It was not comical to watch as both men, built like tall tree trunks, mashed down on their firing triggers and began to sweep the chain cannons slowly over the remaining Puma Bane soldiers not caught in the three blasts and staggering about as if in drunken stupors from the concussive force of the booby traps. Everyone else flopped onto the ground on the ridge, their P190s sending out lethal projectiles downrange, as they joined in on the slaughter. It could not be called anything else but a massacre. Pusintin could not understand the depth of his brother's love for the women who shared his life and were the mothers of his children. The mothers of the future children he would have with them. He could not grasp the sense of honor and duty that surrounded these men and women when it came to Martin. Pusintin had never experienced such emotion before and he had no idea the power that it could provide a person.

Martin could smell the two Puma Bane thugs just inside the entrance to the cave and using his command of his new Praetorian powers he clenched his fist and jerked it forward even as the cloud of dirt and debris began to clear. He didn't realize the strength of the power he used so intent on reaching For'mya and he watched as their bodies erupted out of the cavern and were literally thrown a hundred meters down the path. He did look on with adoration in his wolf yellow eyes as they sprawled before the advancing figures of the smallest of his Queens and her shadow Atropos. Like the man she so loved Anja Leonidas didn't hesitate in the least, her K14 kinetic magnum appearing in her hand as she rushed forward. She pumped three rounds into each of their heads without blinking either of her gorgeous jade green eyes and then moved passed them as if they were nothing more than insects under her feet.

It had taken them nineteen seconds to bring an end to seventy-four lives.

"Move!" Martin's voice echoed in their implants.

And then they were all rushing for the entrance into the cave.

The moment Kirr had put his foul hands upon his sister Eirene; Kalis made his decision and was drawing his powerful legs under him for the leap. The words of his cousin Androcles filled his mind now as he remembered the hours of instruction Andro had given him in the holographic tutorial about attacking in wolf form came rushing back to him.

Channel your power cousin. We are like... we are like the Dire Wolves of Earth's ancient times. Larger and more powerful yes, but we are also smarter. We can use our powers of reasoning and our intelligence even when in our wolf forms. Just as your mind plots your attacks when you fight in human form, if you must fight in wolf form, use your mind as well, not just your instincts. Plot what you will do and then do not hesitate when you act. But never forget... be aware of everything around you and always be conscious that you are stronger in wolf form, but also more vulnerable.

Kalis remembered well those instructions... but on this day at this time... because of the anger he felt swelling within his breast, he forgot the second part of his cousin's directions. The rage he felt at his father's actions; at the Puma Bane's open disrespect of the sister he had yet to discover, this all served to make Kalis act without following through. Fedor and Eirene still did not trust him or his motives he knew. In their shoes he would probably be the same way, but he desperately wanted to show them that he had indeed altered the course of his life, and he wanted to make up for all the wrongs he may have done. He would not know it until sometime later, but Eirene had already seen this very thing within him and she shared everything with her twin. She had been watching him in the mornings outside his shelter with Serale. Eirene had seen how he treated her. The peace that echoed around him and within his resonance whenever he held the beautiful young Hadarian woman in his arms was not something that he could fake. Serale was his mate now and Eirene had noticed how he doted upon her as if she was some precious gem, just as she had seen Fedor treat Iama, and just as her beautiful Miseo treated her. This was what Eirene had shared with Fedor and both of them were now beginning to see what their father and mother had told them about him was actually true.

EIRENE! DROP! Kalis screamed out within Mindvoice the instant he left his feet in the powerful leap.

Eirene heard his authoritative voice within Mindvoice and instantly knew who it was. She hadn't smelled him inside the cave with them but she did not question his order to her in the least. Eirene instantly commanded her body to go flaccid and in the blink of an eye she became like a limp noodle. Kirr could not move fast enough to compensate for his lost of control on her and Eirene watched with loved filled dark eyes as she dropped to the floor of the cavern and saw Kalis's large wolf body already in the air above her. He was slightly larger than Fedor in wolf form, perhaps sixty pounds heavier and at least three inches taller at the shoulder. Eirene saw his massive paw rip forward with unrestrained power and precision. Kalis's right front paw, nearly three inches across and equipped with black, steel like talons, slammed into Kirr's face and neck like a hammer and tore open the entire side of his throat and cheek in one swipe. As Kirr's body spun around, blood erupting from the mortal wound, Eirene snapped out with her leg and drove it into the side of Kirr's kneecap. His leg snapped at the vulnerable joint and his body began to fall instantly from the powerful blow. He would die within seconds for Kalis's blow had severed both of the arteries leading to his brain.

Kalis's forward momentum was such that he continued over the top of Kirr's falling body, his focus now on the arm of his father that held the sidearm on his Tenna For'mya. Kalis was a powerful young man to begin with and he was becoming a very powerful wolf. His leap carried him easily across the distance, his deadly blow to Kirr barely altering his course more than a fraction. He would not allow harm to come to the woman who had believed in him when others doubted. She had accepted him those first moments on that ship when she could have just as easily dismissed him and scorned him. All of his aunts had acted in a similar fashion towards him and this had helped him become accepted by many more people than otherwise would have believed in him at first. That was a gift that Kalis could never repay.

"Marshall! Look out!" The voice echoed in the cave.

One of the Puma Bane behind Fedor had seen Kalis leap and he began moving instantly. As he shouted the warning and imposed his body in front of his Marshall, he had no idea he had signed his own death warrant. Kalis was already committed and he did not hesitate in the least. His jaws clamped shut with nearly two thousand pounds per square inch of pressure, fracturing the Puma Bane's shoulder and tearing open his lower neck like paper machete. As his wolf body drove the Puma Bane to the ground, he was shifting his physical form, but it was already too late.

The instant the Puma Bane behind him had brushed him aside to save Pusintin; Fedor had acted with all the speed and agility that his elven and wolf blood gave to him. He was spinning back, his right arm coming up and knocking the rifle away while he called three throwing knives from Flatspace. He had taken to wearing two Flatspace bands, one on either wrist, since he had become so good at using the knives in either hand. His skill didn't fail him this time as he drove his left fist forward and stabbed both of the razor sharp blades into the Puma Bane soldier's neck from only a foot away. The man's eyes bugged out of his head at the horrible pain and he dropped his rifle as his hands reached for his mangled throat. Blood immediately filled his throat from his severed artery, and nothing he could do would stop that. He began gagging on the blood as he staggered back wrenching one of the knives out of his flesh. This only served to cause more damage as the blade tore through his esophagus on the way out. He essentially helped to kill himself by his actions and Fedor watched him drop to his knees, his hands clutched around his throat, blood spilling from between his fingers in a river.

Then the three shots thundered in the enclosed space of the cavern and Fedor's eyes grew wide as he whirled.

"Mother!" He screamed as he saw For'mya falling backwards from where she had gotten to her feet. "NO!"

Eirene witnessed it all in slow motion even as she tried to move but knew she would not be able to stop it. She correctly screamed out Kalis's name as he slammed back into For'mya, three large holes appearing in his chest and the force of the rounds throwing him back into For'mya from the force.

"NO!" For'mya screamed as she caught him in her arms and slumped back to the floor of the cave holding his muscular body watching as his blood rapidly began to soak through his uniform. "Kalis! No!"

Pusintin glared at his son in shock but feeling no pity at the moment. "Stupid boy!" He snarled angrily.

"Bastard!" Eirene was screaming as she leaped at him without thinking.

Pusintin turned only slightly and lashed out with the sidearm and smashed it across her face, knocking her sprawling across the cave floor. "Sit down bitch!" He shouted even as he whirled around and leveled the sidearm at Fedor's face, pressing the barrel against his cheek. "I wouldn't do that if I were you!" He snarled viciously. He reached out and wrapped his arm around Fedor's neck, yanking him closer and keeping the sidearm jammed against his cheek. He snapped his head around and saw Eirene climbing to her feet, her wolf eyes and fangs now fully bared in anger. "Don't move little bitch!" Pusintin snapped at her. "Or I will ventilate pretty boy's head here!"

For'mya was tearing at Kalis's shirt, pulling open the fabric to reveal the three holes in his chest which were leaking blood at an alarming rate. Two were just above his left nipple and the third was slightly under his nipple. The entire left side of his body was soaked in blood and he gripped her arm tightly in pain.

"Kalis!" She rasped out the words. "Stay with us Kalis! Stay here with us mandri!"

For'mya saw his dark blue eyes staring at her and as tears filled her eyes she saw the most exquisite expression of peace come over his face. Kalis coughed several times, blood spilling from between his lips and he nodded his head slowly.

"I... I will die Tenna... I will die... die proud of who... who I have become!" Kalis choked out the words.

For'mya shook her head vigorously as she clutched him tighter. "You won't die Kalis!" She stammered as Eirene skidded to the floor beside her. "Not today! Do you hear me! You won't die!" For'mya glared up at Pusintin then. "You... you have killed your son!" She screamed at him. "You fucking monster!"

Pusintin barely blinked an eye as he saw Eirene try to stem the flow of blood from the holes in Kalis's chest by tearing parts of his shirt off and putting pressure on the wounds. "He was too stupid to stay on the winning side!" He growled. Pusintin jerked Fedor tighter around his neck. "Besides... I have got another son thanks to you! And you will give me more!"

"I will give you nothing!" For'mya screamed at him. "You are a vile beast and I hope you die in agony!"

Pusintin laughed at her. "It's time to go elf bitch!" He leveled the sidearm at her head. "We'll get out the same way Kalis got in! Now move!"

For'mya ignored him and began to help Eirene try to save Kalis. "I will go no where with you!" She hissed at him.

“You’ll go with me or I will blow his fucking head off right here!” Pusintin screamed as he placed the barrel of his weapon against Fedor’s temple.

“Kill us!” Fedor snarled at him. “We will never do anything you say! We will never go with you!”

“You want to live boy?” Pusintin spat at him.

Fedor glared into his eyes. “You raped my mother! You have killed my brother! I will never do anything you tell me! Never!”

“For’mya... tell him I will kill him!” Pusintin growled. “I will!”

“NO!” The male voice echoed all around them within the cavern. “The only death that follows now will be your own!”

For’mya’s eyes came up and grew wide as she saw the shadows just behind Pusintin begin to dissipate as if a vampire was revealing himself. Her eyes grew even wider as she saw first Zarah and then Lucia appear directly behind Pusintin and between them was a figure she had never expected to see in all her life.

Pusintin was tossing Fedor to the side even as he saw For’mya’s eyes go wide and he began to whirl around to defend himself. He would be far too slow as the tall and extremely well muscled Evolli standing between Zarah and Lucia struck twice with blinding speed. The short sword he wielded appeared to be forged from pure Dragon Armor, and with a powerful flick of his wrist it severed Pusintin’s right hand just below the elbow. The ARSOC sidearm went skittering across the floor of the cave, his fingers still wrapped around it. As Pusintin’s eyes went wide in shock and pain he felt the bite of the sword once more. The Evolli moved with finely tuned grace and speed, the blade slashing across Pusintin’s lower legs just above the knees and cleaning slicing through every tendon and ligament in both of his legs. Pusintin staggered slightly as he lost control of his legs and he dropped to the floor of the cavern his cries of pain echoing and his blood quickly beginning to pool around him. He groaned in agony as the Evolli moved gracefully to the side and motioning to Zarah and Lucia with his head. They didn’t hesitate and instantly blurred to where For’mya and Eirene were bent over Kalis. Lucia was pulling the small medical bag from her side as Zarah looked into For’mya’s wide eyes.

“Father is moments away!” She gasped. “Mother is with him!”

“Zarah?” For’mya questioned.

“Help us mother! We have to slow the bleeding until she gets here!” Zarah exclaimed as she began tearing away the last of Kalis’s shirt.

His name was Radem.

And this day he was the Grim Reaper.

A hair’s breath under six foot tall, and for an Evolli he was an oddity, as most of their species never grew taller than five foot eight. He was leanly muscular as all Evolli males were, belying the strength that his body held within it. He was six hundred and nineteen years of age and in the prime of an Evolli’s lifespan. He was the herald of all his people could become now and his life’s story was known to only one individual who he had sworn a debt of honor. A man who had put him in a position to take vengeance for so many of his people who had been led astray.

“The... great... Marshall Pusintin.” He spoke the four words slowly with scorn and hate dripping from his tone as he circled where Pusintin was struggling painfully to get to his knees. “The butcher of innocent women and children. The great deceiver. The vicious lap dog to the fool Keleru’Puat. Look at you now!”

Pusintin finally managed to push his body to his knees and slump back on the heels of his boots but for some reason he could not move the rest of his body. He could feel a slight tingle in his feet and legs but did not understand what was happening to him. Pusintin tried to focus his eyes on Radem and they grew a little wider as recognition finally came to him.

“You... you!” He gasped.

Radem grinned evilly at him, his blood red eyes flaring brightly and his lamprey like lips parting in a vicious snarl. “You remember me?” He said. “Good. I am glad you remember me. It will be fitting. Do not worry Marshall Pusintin... you will not bleed out just yet.” Radem lifted the glittering sword, the blade stained with his blood. “A gift from a wondrous friend who was once my most hated enemy. Forged from pure Dragon Armor by the Weapons Master Nehtes himself. It is the first time I have used it. And it will be the last. You see... the blade is laced with Axsomil. It is a unique compound that causes clotting of the blood almost instantly. It is why you have not already bled to death. A quick death would be far too good for you. One you do not deserve.

“My friend made me a promise not so long ago. He is known by many names among the stars my friend, but he is known to me only as one. It is a name that was once a curse in my people’s language and yet is now sung by our children with joy and honor. It is a name that he carries because of you and your actions. I believe you have met him once already. On Hadaria. Do you remember what he said to you that day Marshall? Do you remember what words Soul Slayer spoke to you that day?” Radem didn’t see For'mya’s head whip around when he spoke that name and gaze at him with wide eyes. “Do you remember what Androcles Leonidas said to you that day?”

Pusintin’s eyes grew a little wider. “Androcles?” He rasped out the word.

Radem smiled once more and withdrew a small holoimager from the small pouch he wore on his side. “Soul Slayer would like to speak with you Marshall Pusintin.” He stated as he placed the imager on the floor of the cavern.

For'mya came to her feet. “Andro!” She questioned. “How do you know Andro? What is going on? Who are you?”

Radem looked at her as he stood back up and bowed his head to her reverently. “Your questions will be answered my Queen.” He said respectfully.

For'mya’s eyes grew wide. “Queen?” She gasped. “You... you are Evolli! The Evolli do not recognize the Union leadership!”

Radem reached up to his wrist and tapped the small console that resided there. “If only you knew how wrong you were my Queen.”

The holoimager flared to life causing For'mya to stumble back somewhat in surprise. The glow of the imager encompassed nearly half of the cavern itself indicating great power from the generation point and suddenly standing in the cave with them was the nearly crystal clear image of her son Androcles. He looked agitated and wore his combat armor, which she could see was stained with heavy spots blood.

“Radem!” Andro’s voice boomed out echoing off the walls of the cavern. He seemed to be looking around until his azure colored eyes came to rest in front of him where the Evolli stood. “Radem! You sent the signal! Is it... is it done?”

“Nearly so Soul Slayer. Nearly so.” Radem answered with great respect.

“Androcles?” For'mya gasped causing Andro’s eyes to shift towards where she stood to the side.

Andro’s eyes grew wider. “Mother?” He gasped. “What... you are safe? Fedor and Eirene? They are...” Andro’s brow furrowed somewhat as he finally sensed the tremors within the Etheric realm and his eyes shifted to where Zarah and Lucia were continuing to work on Kalis with Eirene. For'mya gasped as Andro’s imager walked right through her as he stepped over to where they were and she turned her eyes to follow him. “Kalis!” His voice rasped.

Zarah glanced up at his image as if expecting this very thing For'mya saw which only added to her confusion. Eirene had shifted her body over and held Kalis’s head in her lap almost instinctively knowing that Zarah and Lucia would know more about what to do. Fedor was now beside his sister and looking down at him as well. “He’s hurt bad fervon.” Zarah spoke to his image. “Mother is seconds away but he is fading fast. One of the rounds must have nicked his heart!”

“Kalis!” Andro shouted his name causing Kalis’s eyes to jerk open and his head to come up slightly. They grew a little wider in confusion as he saw the holographic image of his cousin coming to rest on one knee beside him. It was an odd thing, for his arm and part of his shoulder disappeared inside Zarah’s upper body.

“An... Andro? Here? How can...” He rasped out the word his blue eyes confused.

“You are my family Kalis Leonidas.” Andro told him softly.

“I... I forgot the... second rule... rule you told me Andro.” Kalis spoke with bloody lips as they curled into a half smile. “They are... safe... yes? My brother... and sister are safe?”

Eirene had tears pouring from her eyes as she reached up and took his head in her hands. “We are here Kalis.” She said. “You saved us! You saved mother!”

Kalis’s eyes closed as if accepting his fate with that knowledge. “Then... then I have succeeded... succeeded in my... task.” As his eyes slowly closed.

Fedor reached out now. Even with what Eirene had been telling him, Fedor still did not want to believe that Kalis had indeed changed. All his doubts had been erased the moment Kalis had stepped in front of his mother and imposed his body between her and Pusintin. In that split second Fedor had seen the determination and purpose in his blue eyes. he took Kalis's hand within his.

"There is... there is more to do fervon." Fedor choked out the words.

Andro nodded his head. "Our brother is correct Kalis." He stated calmly. "You have much still to do. Kalis... look at me fervon."

Kalis's eyes fluttered open once more. "It... it hurts Andro." He stammered.

"Kalis... open your mind. What... what gives you peace now my brother? What gives you the most joy?" Andro asked him.

"Serale." Kalis answered instantly.

"Then you grab onto her and don't let go!" Andro urged him. "Allow her resonance to keep you here fervon. She won't let you go Kalis. Stay with her in the light cousin. My mother Anja is moments away and she will save you... but you need to fight. You need to grab your love for Serale and wrap it around you! Stay within the light of her love for your cousin. Stay within the light of all those who love you. Fedor and Eirene are here with you and they won't leave."

"No!" Eirene cried. "Never! You can't... you can't leave us now! Not when we have so much to discover!"

"He was... he was always weak." Pusintin croaked out the words from behind him.

Radem didn't hesitate and hit Pusintin with a backhand from his clawed three fingered hand and sent him sprawling. "Be silent worm!" He screamed. "His actions this day show he is more than you will ever be!"

Andro's eyes closed in the image and he rose to his feet still looking at Kalis. "You have much yet to do cousin. And I will see you soon enough to thank you for what you have done." Andro turned and looked at For'mya who was still standing and looking shocked. He saw the blood on her lips now. "Mother... you are..."

For'mya lifted her hand and wiped the blood away. "This is nothing!" She answered him quickly. "What... Andro what is going on? How are you...? Who is he?"

Andro turned and looked at Radem once more. "He is a friend and the mechanism of my justice." He answered her before walking back over to where Radem still stood beside Pusintin very alert. "Get him up Radem." He said.

Radem didn't hesitate and jerked Pusintin back to his knees with a groan of pain from him. He looked at Andro in the image. "He saved them Soul Slayer." He spoke. "The boy Kalis and his actions... it gave me enough time to act. I wasn't fast enough though."

Andro shook his head. "Kalis will live Radem and it is not your fault." He said. "What does Manda report?"

"All those ships I orbit and aligned with this worm have been destroyed." Radem told him. "She left no survivors. Those that broke from him she is no encircling to insure they will follow their own oaths. Another force is on the surface and waiting for contact. The team Zarah sent to insure this should have reached them by now. They would have reported if things were amiss. There were far more than you first thought Soul Slayer."

Andro nodded his head. "I suspected as much from my father's reports." He said. "I have asked you to stop calling me that Radem."

Radem shook his head. "It is a name my people gave to you in a dark time and it is a name now spoken with great reverence. I will not dishonor that."

Andro allowed a long breath to release from his chest and he looked at his uncle. "You did not truly believe you could beat my father did you?" He asked softly. "You did not think you could fool him in such a way?" He spoke as he moved around where Pusintin knelt, his back finally moving around to face the entrance of the cavern. "You are nothing more than a cancer uncle. A lecherous cancer that destroys all it touches. A very large and shameful stain upon the name of our family."

"You... you and your father don't have... don't have the balls to kill me yourselves!" Pusintin spat at the image of Androcles, blood coming from his lips. "You have to... you have to get... this fuck to do it for you!"

"Did you truly believe that you and Keleru could hide what you have done?" Andro snarled at him. "My father discovered it less than a year after the war ended! He discovered what you did! The coercion, the threats, the payoffs! All so that you could set the Evolli against us! You financed the coup against the rightful government! You supplied them, funded them, and now sixty-five million of their people are dead! Their planets in ruin! Their people having to scrap together an existence because of your actions! They were once proud members of the Union and you took that away from them! You took choice away from them! Just as you take choice from everything you touch! Radem... Radem has more right to be here than any of us!"

Pusintin glared up at Androcles, hatred fueling his actions as he struggled against the pain and climbed to his feet, slumped over slightly as he held his handless arm against his side. "The strong... the strong will always rule the weak!" He spat. "The weak shall... the weak shall fall!"

"And that is why you fail." Andro told him.

"You... you need to use trickery!" Pusintin snarled. "You have to use... deceit in order to... in order to succeed! You... you and my brother are cowards!"

"And what exactly have you done?" Andro asked him. "You used deceit and lies to push a people to war! A war that did not have to be fought! You used deceit and lies to force yourself upon my elven mother!" Andro screamed now. "You try to kill your own mother! Your own brother! What are these? Deeds of honor? They are actions of a man with no honor! And no soul! Grandfather Leonidas quakes with shame and anger within the heavens at all you have done!"

"You... you know nothing boy!" Pusintin shouted.

"That is where you are wrong Uncle." Andro said. "I know that you will no longer exist when this day ends. Your stench will be forever removed from the living when the sun sets. And I know that grandmother, grandfather and my father will be better for it."

"Who... who are you!" Pusintin screamed. "Who are you to decide my fate?"

Androcles didn't see the cavern entrance suddenly fill with bodies as Martin, Aricia and Anja were the first to burst into the cave. Martin's dark brown eyes instantly went to where he saw Pusintin and his first step was towards him. It was For'mya who stopped him, grabbing him around his waist and holding him.

"No Martin!" She stammered in a soft voice.

"Kinsoaurgai?" He gasped. "What is...?"

"Melyanna!" For'mya gasped looking at Anja's wide jade green eyes but holding Martin tightly. "Kalis is gravely wounded my love! Hurry!"

Anja didn't hesitate and sprinted to where she saw Zarah frantically motioning her over. Dysea, Cirith and Isabella filled the entrance to the cave room now, Danny and Julie almost knocking them over as they filled the entrance way as well.

"Fuck me!" Danny was the one to gasp as he saw the life sized image of Androcles and the Evolli standing on either side of a wounded Pusintin.

"Who am I?" Androcles's booming voice filled the cavern now, drawing all of their attention. "I am the first born son of my father!" Andro screamed at him. "I am Spartan! I am dragon! I am Dahakoan! The Eternal Guardian of my family! I am death incarnate to those who would do them harm! No more will my family suffer the likes of you and others like you! Your death and the death of the creature that defiled my sister will be the echo of what will happen should any attempt to harm them in such a way again!" Zarah's head came up from where she was beside Anja at his words, as did Isabella's. "My reach is infinite and it extends across the stars as you have discovered this day my dear Uncle! You will not leave this cave alive! And when you are dead... your soul will burn in the pits of jorbhe for all time because of what you have done!"

"I'm not... I'm not dead boy!" Pusintin laughed. "You... you and your father... you can't even get that right!"

Androcles smiled a cruel smile looking at his uncle. "Oh... but you are dead Uncle." He spoke the words. "Even as we speak you are dying! I told you on the planet of my mother's birth that I was not to be the instrument of your death. You were just too stupid to know what I was speaking of."

"You... don't have the balls to kill me!" Pusintin choked.

Androcles shook his head. "No Uncle... what you perceive as a lack of courage to spill your blood is actually honor. Blood before all else. That is what my father taught us from the moment we entered this world. Never take the blood of family for that is the highest form of dishonor we could suffer. That is the reason he did not kill you on Earth all those years ago you stupid man! My father has more honor in a strand of his hair than you have residing in your entire body! Honor! That is the only reason why you have lived since that day. And because of that honor he has bore a shame that is not his to bear! Because of that honor, it allowed you to take one of my mother's from her rightful place and it allowed you to taint another with your foul essence! He would gut you where you stand for what you have done to my elven mother if he was here!” Androcles snarled not realizing that Martin and the others were watching in silence behind his image. “And in doing so he would forever bear the shame of having to kill his own blood. A shame that I alone will carry because of Leruk.”

“He... he was my son!” Pusintin screamed.

“He was a vile cancer!” Andro retorted. “Just as you are uncle. I was unable to hold my anger in check at what he had done to my Drow wife and I acted without thinking. I took his life from him for what he had done. I violated the most sacred oath to my father that I will ever make. To always watch over my blood. To never bring harm to my blood. I violated that oath because of you. I am tainted because of you. That is the shame I will now carry for the rest of my days. It is not however, a shame or dishonor I will allow my father to bear. Ever.

“I give you the instrument of your death Uncle. A species that you and so many others thought you could manipulate and control. A species you caused me to hate with every fiber of my being for what I perceived they had done. At least for a short time. Until the veil of hate and anger lifted from me and I saw them for what they are. What you and Keleru twisted!” Andro smiled to himself. “No... what my father has done is to take everything from you. The children you thought to use against us in your failed bid to reclaim the throne that was never yours, they are now among the only family they will ever need. They are my brother and sister. Karun has embraced his blood and even now fights to bring down that fool Keleru. Your daughter Nikkei, well she has been adopted by Pian’Nruarani and become a member of their Pride. And Jalersi... well she happily carries the first of Pian’s children within her womb. And Kalis... my father showed Kalis everything you should have shown him as his father. Everything you held back from him. And now he has embraced his family and his blood. And he will go forward without the shame or dishonor you inflicted upon him. You could... you could have been so much more Uncle. Now... now you will be nothing but a memory.”

Andro held out his hand and pointed to Radem. “You see the sword Radem carries? It is his signature weapon and his skill with it equals anyone alive today. I should know for I have trained with him on more than one occasion. I had it forged for him with but one purpose. To bring about your death. The further away my father drew you, the easier it became. You see... the blade is coated with Axsomil.”

This brought Anja’s head whipping around and the glow from where her hands had been positioned on Kalis’s chest vanished as she came to her feet.

“Axsomil is a particularly potent poison Uncle.” Andro continued. “There is only one cure for it and it must be administered within several hours of infection. Unfortunately for you Uncle, the only cure is within Lycavorian Union territory. Only one of our hospitals could save you. I needed something that my mother could not heal with her wondrous gifts in case my father could not bring himself to let you die such a death. Axsomil is part bacteria and part toxin from what my sister Eli tells me and the Lycavorian healing factor cannot counter its affects. It is probably why you already feel a tingling in your extremities. Taking your hand from you was enough, but I see Radem wanted to be very sure in his actions, and he removed your ability to leave what will now be your tomb. At least for a time.

“What will happen is this Uncle. Soon the bacteria in Axsomil will begin to eat away at your bones... it has a taste for the minerals in our bones. It will dissolve every single bone in your body until all that is left is powder. As the bacteria eats your bones, the toxin will slowly spread to every organ of your body and slowly liquefy it from the inside. It will be monstrously painful from what my sister tells me. You will be able to feel your life leaving you Uncle. Just as you have watched the life of millions leave them because of your hand, now you can bear witness to your own death and the pain you have caused so many others in a similar manner. And should anyone attempt to put you out of your misery by perhaps shooting you, Axsomil acts as a blood clotting agent as well. It is why you are not dead now from loss of blood.

“I have discovered many things about myself these last weeks and months Uncle. Some of it was because of your actions.” Andro spoke more softly. Andro turned his head slightly and for the first time he saw his father and mothers standing behind him with the rest of his family. He saw the look in his father’s eyes and but said nothing.

“Foremost among them is the burning hatred I have for those who would do my family harm!” Andro spoke as he turned back around and looked at Pusintin. “Dying in battle is one thing... a glorious thing... but what you and Dante Moran have done is beyond hideous. And now... both of you will reap the actions of what you have done. And soon Keleru will join you in jobbhe Uncle. Pian has far more support and loyalty among the masses than you and that fool Keleru can begin to imagine. Your mistake was placing your hands upon one who I worship just as much as the woman who brought me into this world. Just as I worship all those I call mother. That was your mistake Uncle.”

Androcles didn't see For'mya burst into tears as Aricia and Dysea squeezed her between them, their arms pulling her close as Isabella and Cirith pressed close to them.

“I am my father's son!” Andro spoke forcefully once more. “I am Dahakoan! I am the eternal wrath of the Leonidas name towards any who would do us harm in such insidious ways. You Uncle... you are not even a shadow of the man my father is and will yet become! You are not worthy to even walk in that shadow! And when this day is done and your pitiful remains are collected and scattered to the stars, my father, my grandfather, my grandmother... and all who bear the blood of a Leonidas within their veins will breathe a little easier. They will breathe easier for the final stain upon our name will forever reside in the darkness of the abyss, where it forever belongs. And then... then we can begin to repair all your deeds have done.” Androcles watched as Pusintin could only meet his eyes for a few seconds before he slumped over in pain and settled to the ground. Andro shook his head in disgust and turned to the side and his bright azure eyes fell upon Zarah who was also standing now beside Anja. The near glowing of his eyes caused everyone to gasp softly. “Zarah... my sister.”

Zarah stepped forward. “Fervon?” She spoke softly.

“I am settling accounts now arande.” Andro spoke. “Dante Moran is ours now my lovely Zarah. We have taken the ship he was on and his blood is mine. Reach for the future arande... for tomorrow your past will join this monster in the abyss. And you will finally be free.”

Lucia stepped up to Zarah, her arm encircling her waist as tears flooded Zarah's eyes and she clutched Lucia to her tightly.

Andro turned back and looked at Radem. “Radem!” He said.

“Soul Slayer?”

“You will insure my Uncle's fate.” He told him. “When he is dead... contact Manda and she will send a ship. I will not have his remains tainting the first planet outside our galaxy that will be home to Lycavorian and so many others. Burn what remains and then scatter them to the stars as we discussed.”

“It will be done Soul Slayer.” Radem spoke bowing his head.

“Your debt to me is repaid my friend.” Androcles said. “If there ever was one. Return to your people and continue to help them rebuild what was lost. You will have my full support in all that you do. As will the ruling Quorum.”

Radem shook his head. “I am no politician Soul Slayer. You know this better than anyone alive. The Quorum is guided by those much wiser than me and with your tenna Deia working with them, they can push the Evolli forward. And perhaps regain the respect and honor we once held.” He said. “With the blessing and permission of the King and Queens... I will remain and assist in whatever way I can.”

Androcles turned and fully faced his father now. His image was still clear and he took a deep breath as if a great weight had been lifted from his shoulders. At least for a time.

“Father?” He asked.

Martin Leonidas was not often a man without words and on this day, at this time he found he did not know what to say. He nodded his head slowly. “Ummm... ok.” He stepped forward quickly. “Androcles...”

“No father.” He spoke softly. “Take my mothers from this cave father. Take our family and friends from there and continue what you set out to do. It is done now father. It is done and now we can move into the future. I must... I must go now father. We will see you in a few weeks and then we can talk.” Andro met his father's dark eyes. “I love you father. I love all of you.”

Aricia came up next to Martin, pressing her body against his side as she usually did as she gazed at her son in the image. His azure eyes duplicates of her own.

“And we love you Androcles.” She stated with tears in her eyes.

They saw Andro nod and then he looked in another direction and saw him nod his head once more. The holo image vanished instantly as the feed was ended from its transmission point and then he was gone. Martin turned as For'mya stepped up to him now and he swept her into his embrace, inhaling deeply of her orchid scent.

“Martin?” She gasped softly.

Danny stepped up to Martin now and saw his dark brown eyes focus on him. “Fervon... what... what the hell just happened?” He asked. “Did you... did you know about this?”

Martin shook his head slowly. “I had no idea.” He answered honestly.

“Fuck... me!” Colin spoke slowly from beside Julie at the entrance to the cave room. “Jules... make sure you remind me often to never... ever... piss off the Skipper’s son.”

“Ain’t that the nubous truth?” Julie spoke in agreement.

“What the hell does Dahakoan mean?” Kenny asked now. “What did he mean when he said he was dragon?”

Julie looked at him. “You can bet that whatever it means... it can’t be good for the bad guys.” She said.

“Shit! You think?” Cody exclaimed.

Radem smiled to himself as he drove the tip of his sword into the soft ground and knelt beside the sword preparing himself to fulfill his duty.

“And Soul Slayer has spoken.” He said softly so that no one could hear him. “Soul Slayer has spoken.”

CHAPTER THIRTY-SIX

ALPHA QUADRANT

SPARTA'S WRATH

Androcles Leonidas dropped to one knee on the floor of the QCR Room and took several deep breaths as Armen moved away from the small podium control station on the other side of the room and moved across the distance to stand beside him.

-Androcles?- Armen questioned. -Do you require medical attention?-

Andro lifted his head slowly and took one last deep breath as he felt the resonances of his wives and siblings echo from the bowels within their new ship. They must have just landed in the landing bay and all of them were sprinting to where he was, concern swirling around them. He rose to his feet calmly and shook his head as he met Armen’s eyes.

“No Armen.” He answered evenly. “For the first time... for the first time in a long time I feel like a great weight has been lifted from my shoulders. It feels... it feels refreshing.”

Armen looked at him oddly for a moment. -You, your father and a few others, you carry a sense of duty and honor within you that many do not Androcles. All Lycavorians cherish this sense of duty and honor, but you and a few others use it as a shield at times. While others do not.- He stated. -It is much more than others know and understand. It is a duty most could not carry.-

Andro nodded his head in agreement. “Perhaps we do.” He said. “My father told me once when I was a boy that it was ingrained in our blood because of my grandfathers and all they had to do before us. All they had done in their lifetimes. I am finally beginning to understand what he meant that day, but it also...”

-It makes you part of who you are.- Armen finished the statement.

Andro smiled warmly as his azure eyes gazed upon the hulking seven foot tall avatar that had become a unique and intricate part of his life in so short a time. “You... you sound very much alive when you say that my friend. And full of emotion.” He told him.

-Yet I am not alive.- Armen told him. -I lack the necessary emotional and physical requirements that living beings exhibit.-

Andro's azure colored eyes glittered in the light of the room and he stepped up to Armen without hesitation. "Are you so sure Armen?" He said with a smile seeing Armen's eyes blink several times in what could almost be a very confused nature.

"What is our status?" He continued quickly.

-The INQUISITOR is fully under our control.- Armen told him. -Murano has started back with the prisoner Dante Moran and Robert Moran is being transported in a separate ship. They will be detained immediately and escorted to the holding cells.-

"Their escort ships?" Andro asked.

Armen shook his head. -They chose to fight.- He answered. -I was forced to destroy them.-

Andro nodded his head. "There was no other option." He stated. "I want full security measures active from the moment they come aboard Armen. Constant visual surveillance and they are not to talk to one another. Moran won't be staying long anyway. Have a STRIKER prepped for transport as well. Once Yuri's people have replaced our own on the INQUISITOR, bring them all back and set a course for Ukway."

-You will allow her to keep the High Coven ship?- Armen asked.

Andro nodded his head. "They will need a command ship for when they are not at their base. I... I have a feeling that Yuri and Pa'cour will be playing a much larger role in the future than even they think. They will need a ship capable of projecting their influence."

-There are many who will not agree with that decision- Armen told him.

"Probably. Fuck them." Andro answered bluntly. "They don't have a clue what is going on and they never will."

-We will stay with the original plan then?- Armen asked.

Androcles nodded. "Am'uur and the Prep team have reported in yes?"

-Per your instructions everything has already been arranged.- Armen told him with a nod. -Am'uur reported two point three hours before the assault began. I did not want to interrupt you. They are ready.-

"Have SirsanGai choose the flight team for the STRIKER taking Moran to the rendezvous Armen." Andro told him. "I want no miscues on this."

-Understood.- Armen held up the small data disc. -I transmitted the entire exchange to Dilaen's personal P1. And the designated coordinates as you instructed.-

"She will know what to do with it." Andro said. "And burst Denali about what has taken place. He will want to know what is going on. He has felt the shift in my emotions over the last hour and no doubt our father. He will be worried." Andro turned when the double doors to the QCR room opened and Sadi led them all into the large room with looks of concern on their faces.

-I assume you did not tell them that the teleportation station was cleared by Admiral O'Connor and your mother's medical staff for full operational status.- Armen asked before they were within earshot.

Andro grinned at him. "I may have failed to mention that to them... yes."

Andro could have sworn he saw Armen smile before he answered. –Then I will leave you to explain it to them.– He stated and turned quickly moving for the other entrance.

Andro was about to reply that he was a coward when he felt Sadi's hands reach for him first, followed in quick succession by all of his wives and mates and then his sisters. All of them demanding to know what had just taken place and if he was alright, their voices hitting him all at once with different levels of concern. Andro pulsed all of them with his aura as they crowded close to him, Carisia and Sadi pressing to his sides and Sehri to his front as Lu'ria and Ne'Veha pressed close to the backs of Sadi and Carisia. All of them could feel his Etheric resonance and how clear and completely uncluttered it felt. It was bright, pure power and clarity the likes of which they had never felt from him before. It very nearly took their breaths away and they looked at him with questions in their beautiful eyes but they were content to know he was safe and did not flood him with questions. It was not something that his siblings missed either and as was usually the case, it was Eliani who spoke what all of them wanted to speak and did so in her usual blunt nature.

“What the hell was that all about?” She exclaimed. “You just up and disappeared into thin air! What's going on Andro?”

Andro nuzzled Sadi's head and then Sehri's cheek as he pulled them all closer to his body and held them. “Father has succeeded arande.” Andro told her seeing her green eyes grow wide in surprise as she moved closer to him, Sehri drawing her tight with her arm. “Justice for our mother and our brother and sister has been served.”

Lisisa stepped closer to him as well pressing between Dorian, Nara, Sheva and Deion, their arms drawing her close without conscious thought, even as her arms slipped around Sheva's waist and then Mari, who remained attached to her brother's side. “Then... Andro then...?”

Andro nodded his head. “Pusintin is dead.” He said softly.

Deion Leonidas was the one who spoke as he lowered his head and spoke softly, Mari's beautiful face turning up to look at him as he spoke what all of them felt. “And may his ano reside in the darkest pits of jorbhe for all time for what he has done.” Even though several of the words were spoken in their ancient language, Mari understood them fluently and it was only another sign to her that this is where she belonged. Understanding of and the ability to speak their language came to her in a matter of hours... not the years it would have taken someone else to learn. It was as if a door had been opened within her that had kept this knowledge locked away until now.

“Avoi.” Nara echoed her twin.

“Kalis was seriously wounded while protecting our medwaw For'mya. He stepped in front of three bullets fired by Pusintin that were intended to kill her when he realized he was not going to win.” Andro saw Lisisa's eyes grow wider than the rest of them at this news because of all his sisters and brothers she had been the most skeptical of Kalis and his ultimate intentions. “Medwaw Anja reached him in time and he will survive. We took casualties... our people took casualties... the Puma Bane did not act entirely as father predicted they would, but father and his team prevailed.”

“When can we...” Deion began to ask.

Andro took notice that Mari was beside him, clutching tightly to his hand and from her very clear resonance and scent, having no intention of being removed from his side. “We must let father and our mothers get control of everything again fervon. A day. Probably two. Then we can contact them on the QCR before we depart for the Beta Quadrant.”

“How did you...?” Dorian asked him softly. “You just up and vanished. Poof!”

Andro smiled at them feeling the love of family saturating the room as it always did when they were together. Only now it was different. Now it was as if a great weight and cloud of pain was lifting from all of them. He looked down and gazed into Sehri's bright blue eyes and leaned over to kiss her softly. He looked back up at his brother.

“I may have forgotten to tell everyone that the Teleportation System is fully operational and very safe.” Andro told them with a wry grin.

“May have?” Eliani exclaimed. “Aur mida!”

“That is something we can discuss at another time.” He told them. “And I don't mean your ass Eli.” He told her with a smile causing all of them to look at him shocked.

“Andro!” Lisisa exclaimed. “Andro... you just made a joke!”

Andro chuckled and nodded his head. “I suppose I did.”

“My ass is not a joke!” Eliani protested.

Andro released Sadi and the others and scooped Eliani into his arms squeezing her tightly in a brotherly fashion and buried his face in her hair. Eliani didn't hesitate and hugged him back just as tightly as everyone looked on with wide smiles. They all knew Andro had a unique and special connection to both Eliani and Zarah but this did not bother them in the least. Andro set Eliani back down and looked at them. “Right now we... right now we have a debrief to attend.” He grinned even wider when he saw their eyes roll at that information. “Jomann, Torian and Ridor will conduct the brief. They'll make it painless and quick. It is 1030 hours and when that is finished we can clean up and I will fill all of you in on what has taken place over a very large meal. I promise. There is much we still have to do and if I do not let our grandmothers know we are all safe I will not remain healthy for long.”

Eliani and Lisisa laughed at that statement. It was a real laugh; a warm laugh. A laugh filled with emotion that they had not been able to feel in a long time. Justice had been taken care of, and now they could go forward into the future and see what the unknown brought to them.

Lisisa stepped up to her brother and slapped his face lightly causing everyone to chuckle at this. “You better be quick about it!” She snapped. “I can feel them demanding to know what is happening and we are not going to suffer through an entire debrief without you.”

Andro met her smile and all of them could feel the sense of peace emanating from him as he smiled. “I wouldn't think of it.” He said.

“Rensibfla!” Eliani spat as she snuggled happily in Jomann's powerful arms causing all of them to burst into relieved laughter.

MANNE

SIX HOURS POST BATTLE

Radem watched silently from the edge of the clearing as the shoebox sized container was carried into the rear of the MENKLA transport a hundred meters away under heavy guard. He had done what his self proclaimed oath to Androcles had required and he had remained with Pusintin until the monster had long passed into the dark beyond. When he was certain that the monster was truly dead, though he did not care if it wasn't so, he completely incinerated what remained of one of the butchers of his people. Androcles had been very correct in detailing how the great Marshall Pusintin of the Kavalian Federation would die, and it was not at all painless in the least. Half a dozen times Radem had waited and watched in the shadows as the monster known as Pusintin screamed and thrashed about on the cave floor in horrific agony as his bones and internal organs were eaten away and destroyed from within.

It had taken four long hours to complete, but in the end all that remained of the first born son of King Leonidas of Sparta fit in the box now being loaded on the ship. Radem felt no remorse or regret for his actions, and he was quite certain Androcles felt none in the least. They had grown close over these last three years and in many ways Androcles Leonidas was now a brother to Radem. A lone brother to replace the four that had died by the orders of men who were not even worthy to give them. Androcles had bestowed much history of his people and especially his grandfather to Radem in their travels, and while he would never know for sure, Radem felt that King Leonidas the First would have approved of their actions.

Androcles and Radem had remained in constant touch, at least once a week during these last six months given everything that had occurred. Androcles had sworn to him on that planet so far away that he would allow Radem to have vengeance for his people. In doing so, he would also provide justice for crimes committed against Androcles' second elven mother and hundreds of his people so recently committed by Pusintin and his cronies. He had gone to great lengths to insure that he kept that vow to Radem and now Radem would never question the resolve or the spoken word of Androcles Leonidas again.

And he would insure none of his people did.

Radem had been correct in what he told Pusintin as he was sitting there dying. The name Soul Slayer had been given to Androcles Leonidas during a time of war. He and his Bonded sister Elynth had claimed more Evolli lives during that war than any single other. It was a vile curse in the native Evolli language, yet now it was a revered name on their homeworld. It had been since the day when Androcles and Elynth had risked their own lives to save the lives of nearly two dozen Evolli children right in their very capital on the very first day they had arrived to try and begin the healing. They had acted without any concern for their own safety and he and Elynth had kept an entire section of a collapsing building from crushing the children. It was a building damaged during the war and it had chosen this time to finally disintegrate. Using the amazing powers that they commanded, Androcles and Elynth had imposed their own bodies between the crushing steel and concrete and protected the children and the civilians who had dashed forward to rescue them. They had done this in full view of thousands of Evolli civilians who had gathered to lay their eyes upon Soul Slayer and his Bonded sister and millions more who were watching across the planet on the news feeds.

That was the day that the rightful Evolli Ruling Quorum, now restored to power, and millions of Evolli had seen that perhaps not all hope was lost. If the two individuals who had claimed more lives during the war, who were feared by every Evolli soldier, if they could put aside their hate and anger at what had occurred and rescue the children of those who were thought to be their hated enemies, then there could still be hope for the future. That day had begun the rebirth of the Evolli as a people and a species, and none of them had looked back since. They turned their hatred and false anger towards who they now knew was responsible for a war that had cost too much on both sides. Over the course of the next six weeks, Androcles and Elynth, six Durcunusaan and six veteran Evolli warriors had blazed a path of destruction and death across The Wilds and Kavalian space. They had liberated hundreds of priceless Evolli artifacts that were the cornerstone of Evolli culture and history from the Kavalian animals and the pirate scum who had they had been sold to. Artifacts that would help to bring about the change so many knew needed to happen. Radem had been one of those six Evolli.

It was during one of these missions where Androcles had saved his life by taking a bullet intended for Radem's head. The projectile had merely stunned Andro after slamming into his Dragon Armor encased helmet, but this had been the turning point for their relationship. This is what had brought them together.

Over the course of the next few missions he had spent many hours with Androcles and Elynth both. They had gifted him with the ability to speak to them with his mind and Radem had proven a very talented learner. They shared their time with him, spoke of battles fought and lives lost. When they discovered Radem too had been at Alba Tau and had voiced opposition to such an action, it brought them even closer together. They discovered he had tried to stop the attack and then had spent the next three days trying to save as many Evolli soldiers as he could. He had tried to tell the leadership that it was a losing battle. That the dragons and riders would never give up the remains of their dead. Radem was a soldier yes, but he had far more respect and knowledge of the men and dragons that his leaders so causally dismissed. Not one of them had listened to him and finally he had deserted with a hundred of his best soldiers to try and rescue and pull as many of their people as they could from that vile killing ground.

Andro and Elynth in turn discovered that while Alba Tau had been a defining moment in their lives, it had also been a defining moment in the evolution of the Evolli as a species. It was that battle where thousands upon thousands of the Evolli had their eyes open to what was really happening, Radem among them. And what their actions had cost them. It was Alba Tau that had finally caused the Evolli people as a whole to step back and see just how badly they had been duped. Since that day Radem had been dedicated to seeing his people returned to the honor and trust they once held. He had been instrumental in ousting the false rulers who had led the initial coup against the elected government and he had been present to watch all of them executed. The unquestioned support of Androcles Leonidas and nearly two hundred Durcunusaan volunteers had insured that the rightful rulers were reinstated to power. This was an event that had never made the Netnews channels within the Union. The three hour long battle of the Evolli Quorum Council Building had been vicious and bloody, but Androcles and the Durcunusaan and Evolli troops under his command had held the Kavalian garrison troops at bay until Radem and his men had been able to wrench control back from those who had driven their people into pariahs of the universe. The Kavalians knew who had assisted the Evolli but were able to do nothing to stop them. The garrison troops were not Puma Bane and just Elynth's presence during the battle had frozen many of them in fear. Radem had taken great satisfaction when the overbearing Kavalian Ambassador who thought he was so superior and untouchable to the Evolli had finally fallen. Radem had seen to his fate personally. It was a day that would now be forever cemented in Evolli history and only added to the respect and reverence many Evolli now felt for Soul Slayer and his Bonded sister.

There were many Evolli who did not feel this way towards Androcles and Elynth. They had become mercenaries and scum who had chosen a life of violence and crime shown to them during the war. They were fewer in number now, and whenever they were found they were annihilated.

Radem turned his head slightly when he saw Miranda Lorian move up to where he stood. He knew who she was, though he had never met her before coming onto her ship for the trip here. He knew her history thanks to Androcles and he had spent eight hours with her on her ship during the journey. It was a bonding of sorts, though what had occurred during the war would remain with them forever. It had been a time of further healing for both of them however, and while they would probably never become friends, at least there was now forgiveness and a good amount of understanding and respect between them.

And some measure of peace for both of them.

“I spoke with Andro before coming down here.” Miranda told him as she stopped beside him. “They had just finished their debrief and were setting course for Ukway.”

Radem nodded his head slowly as he looked at her. “The settling of accounts. Yes... he told me this was what he intended before I departed to come here. Eliminating as many threats to the peace and stability of the Alpha Quadrant before he left to come here was a major goal of his. It just so happens that it blended perfectly with obtaining justice for the crimes committed against his family and so many others.”

Miranda looked at him evenly. He was a man she should have hated, but found she could not. Not after speaking with him for four straight hours on the trip here, certainly not after what Androcles had told her, and most especially not now after what he had done.

“Radem...” She began.

“No words need be spoken Admiral Lorian.” He told her.

“Yes... I believe they do.” Miranda answered. “I... I hated your people. I hated them for what the war took away from me. Androcles and the Leonidas family... they took me in when I needed them. Even when the pain of their own wounds and memories was still fresh in their minds they... they made me part of their family and they did not have to. Their actions are what saved me.”

Radem met her eyes with understanding. “Much like Androcles and Elynth did with me and many of my people. They saved us.”

Miranda nodded in agreement. “Then you understand how much your actions this day have... you have helped me to defend and protect those I consider my family now. It is a debt that I can not repay.”

“There is no debt to repay Admiral Lorian.” Radem told her evenly. “If there is any debt to be repaid, it is the Evolli who owe it. And I have acted for them in part by my actions here this day. We have always been an insular species... even when we were members of the Union so long ago. The war... the lies we believed... I think it truly opened the eyes of many who did not realize our ways were old and useless. Androcles and Elynth saw something that first day they came to our world after the war. They saw what we were at our core and they knew then. Many of my people, those with what you religion in their hearts, they believe it is why they did not hesitate to save our children that day. That is the debt that can never be repaid Admiral. The debt of hope once more given to an entire species. A hope we may have never found without them. That is the debt that can never be repaid.”

“Well... once it gets out what happen here... that hope is going to explode into reality my friend.” Miranda told him.

Radem took the short sword from his back, now secured in the scabbard and held it out to her gingerly. “Soul Slayer wanted this placed with the monster Pusintin’s ashes as a sign to any who may discover them. A sign of death. No one must touch the blade Admiral. Without the medicines within the Union, even Queen Anja would not be able to save them if they suffer even a minor cut.”

Miranda took the sword and nodded. “I will see to it.” She stated. “You are not returning to the Alpha Quadrant I understand?”

Radem shook his head. “I will remain here. No doubt King Leonidas has many questions that I must now answer. Even he does not know what swirls within the mind of Soul Slayer. It is my place to explain to him what has happened these last months and years.” He looked at her. “It will no doubt be an adventure as you say.”

Miranda chuckled softly. “No bets here.” She stated with a smile of knowing. “You have my personal COM channel Radem. If you need anything... contact me directly. We’re here now and we’ll always be around.”

Radem nodded his head. “I... I do not think it will be necessary, but I thank you for the offer.” His eyes went to the transport. “Where will you take him?”

Miranda followed his gaze for a moment then looked back. “We found a planet much like Ukwav in the next system.” She explained. She held up the scabbard. “I’m going to put this and his ashes into a torpedo shell and then blast it into the ocean from orbit. Whatever part of his ashes that don’t burn up on entry will be lost in forty thousand feet of freezing water forever.”

Radem nodded his head slowly. “A fitting end to a monster who has caused so much pain to others.”

Miranda looked at him. “I meant what I said. Anything you need... contact me.” She told him.

Radem bowed his head to her in respect. “I wish the stars and the gods to guide you in your travels Admiral Lorian.” He said. “As they now guide me.”

Miranda nodded and then turned to head back to the MENKLA as its engines came online and began to power.

A few moments later Radem sensed him approaching from behind but did not flinch as the MENKLA began to reach for the sky. He turned slowly and watched as the young King of the Lycavorian Union stopped only a meter in front of him. He still wore his combat armor, but his shoulder length black hair was now free and blowing in the slight breeze across the area. He dwarfed Radem in size really and without doubt could end his life in a blink of his eyes, yet Radem sensed he was full of questions.

Standing before him was the father of Soul Slayer, and behind only his son and Elynth, the one who had been the dagger in the heart of his people. His people’s finest military minds could not outthink him, or outfight him. He seemed to be able to predict what they would do at nearly every turn, and he was equally as feared as his son by the vast majority of the Evolli military. Radem’s keen eyes and senses could detect several members of his personal team hidden from plain sight but watching no doubt. Not by his choice if Radem was a measure of character, but because they knew the worth of the King that they would so willingly follow into the darkest reaches of horror and death without question.

Radem dropped to one knee in respect, surprising Martin with this action.

“King Leonidas.” He spoke the words almost reverently.

Martin seemed taken aback as he stepped closer. “I think we need to have a talk.” Martin told him calmly.

Radem lifted his head and met his dark brown eyes. “As you order my King.” He stated.

“And stop with that my King shit!” Martin hissed. “Given... given what has happened here I think that is really stupid! You saved the life of one of my Queens and my children and nephew. You bow to no one! Now get up!”

Radem rose to his feet as the King he and so many of his people were terrified of moved even closer to him. Androcles had told him that his father hated royal protocol and anything like it. He also said his father would honor him in action and words for what he would do. It would appear that once more Soul Slayer had been correct. “Milord?”

“How... how long have you been here?” Martin asked him.

“I arrived with Admiral Lorian’s forces Milord.” Radem answered.

“My daughter Zarah knew you were coming didn’t she?”

Radem nodded his head. “You might be surprised at what Soul Slayer shares with his beloved sister Zarah Milord. I discovered after our time together that she is... she and his sister Eliani are conduits into his soul. One only needs to be clear of mind to see this. You have seen this before no doubt.”

Martin rolled his eyes at that and nodded his head. “Now that... that doesn’t surprise me in the least. He has always been closer with them.” He said. “Zarah and Lucia have been hiding you this entire time? That’s why they remained here and didn’t return? They knew that he was sending you?”

“I would expect that this is what Soul Slayer intended... yes. They met me on Admiral Lorian’s ship and have kept me wrapped within the shadows hidden until the time to strike was upon us. My sincere apologies for the injuries suffered by your nephew. I was too slow in my actions.” Radem told him.

Martin shook his head. "You saved For'mya and him." He stated. "And Kalis is tougher than he looks. They have kept you hidden this whole time?" Martin asked.

"I have never experienced... the way they can move about within the shadows is most thrilling Milord. I have never experienced anything like it." Radem said with a touch of happy adventure in his voice.

"What is your name?" Martin asked him. "Your true name. Your Evolli Spirit name." He finished in a whispered voice only Radem could hear as he moved even closer.

Radem looked at him and it was his turn to be surprised. He smiled slightly after a short time. "I see Soul Slayer does indeed share many sacred things with his father." He said.

"Not everything it seems." Martin said.

"My Spirit name is Radem Holnari Convoasce Milord." Radem answered the question without hesitation. The Evolli Spirit name was perhaps one of the most guarded secrets of the Evolli culture. Very few individuals outside of Evolli culture and territory knew of such a thing. When each child was born they were given a spirit name, to be used only by their dearest loved ones and most treasured friends and never spoken in public. Radem had told Andro his Spirit name on their last mission together. If Soul Slayer saw fit to tell his father the significance of an Evolli's Spirit name, then there was truly hope after all.

"And what does it mean?" Martin asked him.

"From the beginning." Radem answered.

"Then maybe that's where you should start." Martin told him after a second.

"It is a very long story Milord." Radem explained.

Martin nodded his head. "We all have long stories Radem." Martin spoke in agreement. "Perhaps now would be the time to start sharing them instead of having to do all this sneaking around crap."

"Soul Slayer once told me that you liked to sneak around." Radem said and he relaxed quite a bit when he saw Martin Leonidas's face break into a small grin and a flash of the child like playfulness that Androcles said resided in his father's spirit came forth.

"Yeah... well... that is true... but now I would like to know what my son has cooked up in that brain of his. What other surprises has he got planned?" Martin said.

Radem smiled slightly as well, revealing his sharp pointed teeth. "I bless that he now calls me friend Milord... but even I do not know what swirls within Soul Slayer's mind. I do not believe I want to know. I do not believe anyone would want to know. Not if they wished to keep their sanity intact. Nor do I suspect anyone would wish to know what resides within your mind either Milord."

"You continue to call him Soul Slayer. I thought the name your people gave to him was a curse in your language." Martin questioned.

Radem nodded in agreement. "It once was Milord." He stated. "Until the day you sent your son and Elynth to our homeworld on a mission of redemption and hope. Soul Slayer and his dragon sister. Their actions that day, and by extension your actions Milord, they changed it from curse to blessing."

Martin's eyes grew a little wider. "He... he never told me something happened the first day they were there."

Radem smiled. "Then I would be honored to share this with you Milord. And so much more... if you would allow it."

Martin stepped closer to him even still and looked directly into his red eyes. He reached up unafraid and placed his hand on the smaller man's shoulder. "After what you did here today Radem Holnari Convoasce... after today... you have my undivided attention for as long as you like. And you have earned a trust I reserve only for my son and brother."

Radem bowed his head deeply. "I... I am beyond honored King Leonidas." He spoke. "I vow to never give you cause to regret the trust you have placed in me. Nor will my people if they are given the opportunity."

"Walk with me Radem." Martin told him.

It would be spoken of to future generations of Evolli and Lycavorian in the centuries to come. The day the Lycavorian King and an Evolli assassin, once bitter enemies, walked side by side and spoke of the past and the future.

But most of all they spoke of hope.

ICARAVA
DARASTRIXI HOMEWORLD
DARASTRIXETHE (DRAGONBLOOD) SPACE
NORTHERN CONTINENT
LIVAIJI SULEVFU FACILITY

Aviel stood with Shalu and Chalith as they gazed at where Laren and Ladur sat utterly still in the courtyard below. Neither of them had moved a single muscle for over four hours now and Aviel was becoming concerned. He had arrived to visit with her and Ladur and fill them in on what he was working on. Nahko and Dalis stood with the small group and they all turned when the doors to the large chamber opened and Laren's mother and father entered with the huge form of Ch'teven directly behind them.

"Usjalil Robati..." Aviel stammered quickly. "Is there... what is wrong with them?"

Robati looked at her husband Yokra and then back to Aviel as they stopped a few feet from him. "We... I..." She fumbled with her words.

Yokra squeezed her arm and looked at Aviel. "We have... we have never seen them like this." He said quickly. "This is new. They have withdrawn so far into the Etheric realm that we can not reach them. It is almost as if..."

"They are communicating with someone." Ch'teven finished his statement.

Aviel looked at him with wide eyes. "What?" He gasped.

"I have nothing to base my conclusions on..." He stated as he lowered his massive body to the floor. "I believe that they are communicating with the other Dahakoan. At least in some fashion. Reaching out to them in some way."

"They are powerful enough to do this Ch'teven?" Nahko asked astounded.

Ch'teven nodded his head as Chalith came up beside him. "Yes."

"Perhaps not speaking directly..." Chalith explained. "But she has told us before that they can feel flashes of great emotion from the other Dahakoan. Even across the distance that stands between them. I do not know to what extent this ability has evolved but..."

"They have been somewhat agitated these last hours." Nahko spoke thoughtfully. "I... I asked her about it but she deflected her answer to something else quite skillfully."

"This was the first opportunity I have had to break away from my duties without raising suspicion and I had hoped to speak with her." Aviel said turning back to look at where Laren and Ladur sat. "Have you been able to learn anything since we last spoke?"

It was Dalis who stepped closer now. Since arriving here with Nahko he had become truly enthralled about what was happening. He was fascinated with Laren and Ladur both and had spent several hours each of the last few days just speaking with them. He had no doubts or reservations about whether the Lorsvek ar Sepas was indeed taking place. His total faith in the ancients had never wavered in all his years and now he would be present to see a prophecy unfold.

"I have been able to speak with her at length Koppentotz Aviel and..." He began.

Aviel held up his hand and looked at him. "Dalis Sulryn, given what we are all involved in now and the extreme danger it brings to all of us, I think you can dispense with formalities of rank and standing. At least when in this company. Don't you?"

Dalis met his eyes and nodded his head with a small smile. "It would seem rather out of place." He stated.

Aviel nodded as well. "Yes it would. Now... what have you discovered?"

"Her knowledge of the Alpha Quadrant and the species within is astounding." Dalis told him. "Laren and Ladur both can name species and places and planets that are only held within the walls of the Elbakiw Sulevfu library. A facility that you well know is very restricted in who is granted access."

Aviel nodded. "Indeed. Something I have never been very comfortable with."

"Nor us." Chalith echoed.

"I have been able to piece together small amounts of information with Laren's help. She told me that the ones called Androcles and Elynth are bright beacons that she and Ladur can easily focus on. The other ones, this Dorian and Ryner, they are growing more powerful by the day. As they grow in power, it allows them to focus with more clarity.” Dalis told him. “She told me the distance is still very great, but they can share images and single words. Not directly mind you, but through Etheric means. Like a waking dream state almost. She and Ladur believe the other Dahakoan are still trying to understand it all and that is why they have not reached for her openly.”

Aviel looked at him surprised and Nahko smiled as she took Aviel’s arm. “I believe Laren and Ladur have come to trust Dalis quite a bit in so short a time.” She told her husband looking up into his face. “They do not see him as a threat Aviel. They see him only as someone seeking knowledge. Just like themselves.”

Dalis looked somewhat embarrassed at this and shifted his feet. “It was not my intent to intrude...”

“No!” Robati spoke up now from beside her husband. She stepped closer to Dalis. “You have not intruded Dalis Sulryn. I have never seen my daughter smile as much as when she is speaking with you. And I have never heard Ladur bellow in laughter as I did the day you first arrived.”

“I... I have only inquired of them. Their thoughts and wishes.” Dalis said softly.

“That may be why.” Shalu spoke now causing them to look at her.

“Shalu?”

“Dalis is a scholar Aviel.” She continued. “A gatherer of knowledge. All of us... Chalith, Ch'teven, even me... we have been trying so hard to protect them because we know what they are; what they mean. This has come out in how we treat them. Dalis simply wishes to know them. Like her parents and brothers. He does not care that she and Ladur are the heralds of the Lorsvek ar Sepas.”

“That is not true!” Dalis spoke quickly. “I do care but I...”

“You do not allow that knowledge to override your keen mind and have it come out in the way you treat them.” Aviel put it all together as he turned back to look at Laren and Ladur. He turned back to Dalis. “That is a gift Dalis Sulryn. A gift many do not have.”

Dalis looked surprised at his words and it showed on his face. His feelings for Nahko aside, perhaps Aviel Em'mor was not as arrogant a man as Dalis first thought. He certainly did not act in such a way. “Perhaps... but my concern for them is there. The knowledge Laren and Ladur hold within them is far more detailed than any within the libraries Aviel Em'mor. It is broken and jumbled right now as I said, however I surmise that when they are finally united with the other Dahakoan this will change. Or if they are able to communicate directly within the Etheric realm somehow.”

Aviel looked at him. “You think this could happen?” He asked.

Dalis nodded. “Most assuredly.” He answered. “Everything that Chalith and the others have told me only supports this. And if I had to guess... the other Dahakoan will soon respond to their resonance... and once that happens the knowledge they have will be unlocked.”

“And this is... this is knowledge we do not want the Scourge to have.” Yokra spoke now.

Dalis shook his head quickly. “If I am correct... after speaking with them these last few days... I have come to the conclusion that buried within them is the knowledge of the ancients. Buried within the other Dahakoan is the knowledge of the ancients. All the vast knowledge that Zezhuanth himself obtained in his lifetime. He has blessed each of them with different parts of this knowledge and it draws them together from across the stars. When they finally are united, I believe when they finally are united, all of this knowledge will fall into place within each of them.”

“To include secrets the Scourge do not want us to have.” Ch'teven spoke now.

They all looked at him. “Ch'teven? What do you mean?” Chalith asked.

“Why else would they be doing this?” Ch'teven asked them softly. “Why begin to take our Maidens when for so many years we were ignored. They must have discovered something in the archeology site on Haradur. The ruins are the site of our original homeworld before we came here. They must have found something besides the missing scroll.”

Aviel looked at him. “But your people only found the scroll twenty-seven years ago.” He said. “The Scourge have been taking our Maidens for far longer than that.”

Ch'teven nodded his massive head. “Which means they found something else. Something related to why they began taking our females.”

“Your people found no Scourge among the ruins of the buildings where the Scroll was discovered Chalith?” Aviel asked.

Chalith shook his head. “No Scourge activity at all. The Team Leader said that the site appeared to have been abandoned for some time. Decades at least. He said it was quite odd.”

“And where did they find the scroll?” Aviel asked.

“The site had four chambers.” Chalith explained. “Three of them had already been open and they found nothing within them. The scroll was discovered in the fourth chamber. It was the deepest of the four and it appears the Scourge were preparing to enter it but then stopped. He said they had abandoned several caches of equipment.”

Aviel looked at Ch'teven as his eyes grew wider. “Because they already found what they were looking for?” He said softly.

Ch'teven nodded his massive head. “Or something of enough importance that it made them stop looking. It must concern the Dahakoan. Why else begin taking our females so soon after they abandoned this site. It has to be this Aviel. They must have found something that would eventually lead them to the chosen Dahakoan among our people. If they discover one set of Dahakoan... it leads them to the others. Buried within the mind and the blood of each of the Dahakoan is a secret or multiple secrets. Secrets that the Scourge fear. Secrets that the Scourge do not want us to have. It is the only explanation.”

“No... this is definitely not something we want to fall into the hands of the Scourge.” Chalith said softly. “Through the Maidens that they take they hope to find all of the Dahakoan and destroy them.”

Nahko shook her head. “No. I believe their intent is much more sinister and evil.” She told them.

Aviel looked at her. “Nahko?”

“I have reviewed all of the VID footage Chalith and the others supplied to you husband.” Nahko told him. “What they are forcing upon our Maidens is disgusting and vile and heinous, but it has purpose.”

Aviel shook his head. “I don't follow.”

Shalu moved up beside Nahko. “Tell him Nahko. Tell him what you believe the vile monsters are doing.”

Nahko met her husband's eyes. “I believe they are trying to discover the Darastrixi Dahakoan in order to breed her with Scourge Holy Elites.” She said seeing Aviel's bright eyes grow wide in horror. “Those same Scourge made to look humanoid by the Pralor Xaxon's fool interference in their life cycles.”

“For what... for what purpose?” Aviel asked his face and eyes showing the others how horrific he thought this action.

“To find a way to defeat them.” Nahko said. “Or a way to pass these skills to a Scourge Elite or Holy Elite within their genes so that they can use them against us.”

“Ithquenti!” Aviel gasped in disgust.

“We know that Xaxon betrayed his Praetorian Mage. What he did to her... to a Praetorian it was unconscionable. This is the primary reason their Chief Elder, his twin brother, disciplined him in the manner they did.” Chalith said.

Aviel nodded his head. “They separated his mind from his body, forever damning his spirit.”

Chalith nodded as well. “He experimented on her and essentially made her one of the Scourge. He was trying to find a way to control them and instead made them even more evil and malicious.”

“And far more intelligent.” Shalu added.

“We know she is now the Scourge Queen and holds a great deal of hatred for anything Pralor. She would have knowledge of such things, at least in some manner.” Chalith said. “If she is aware of the Dahakoan, then it would be her driving this taking of our Maidens.”

“But they have already wiped out the Pralors.” Aviel spoke. “What would be the reason for doing this now?”

“Have they wiped out the Pralor people?” Ch'teven spoke softly as they all looked at him. “Laren and Ladur are living examples that the Pralor blood is not dead. And not just any Pralor blood... but that of their most beloved Chief Elder and the leader and most powerful of their Praetorians.”

“Sumar.” Shalu gasped.

Ch'teven nodded once more. “The blood and Praetorian gene of Sumar would lose none of its potency even mixed with these Lycavorians and vampiric individuals as it has been. If anything... it would be even more powerful, driven by the passion and emotion that we know these species thrive on.”

Aviel looked at Dalis. “Dalis?”

Dalis nodded his head. "I told you they were a passionate species Aviel." He said. "After being able to speak with Laren and Ladur about them, it only confirms this for me. Can you imagine the power of a Praetorian and a Dahakoan driven by emotion and passion? Fueled by honor and duty? Those like she claims the other Dahakoan are."

"My daughter knows what she speaks of!" Robati defended her only daughter and would do so viciously.

Dalis looked at her quickly. "Please... that was not meant as a slight Lady Robati. I... I believe Laren and Ladur with all that I am."

"The Darastrixi are the only other species to ever fight the Scourge and defeat them." Ch'teven spoke once more. "If they were able to conquer us, there would be nothing keeping them from expanding their influence across the stars, destroying and enslaving life everywhere they went. They know they must defeat us first however."

Nahko nodded. "And finding the Dahakoan among our people and experimenting on them as they are doing to our Maidens... trying to breed them with their vile kind. Even if they were partially successful husband... making monsters with the power and abilities of Dahakoan and Praetorians to fight us... they would eventually wear us down and destroy us all."

"They are nothing if not patient." Chalith said.

Aviel turned away from them and cursed long and hard in their native tongue. Nahko's embarrassment at her husband's action showed on her face. None of them had ever heard him speak such things before and they were all wide eyed in surprise. Aviel turned back to them and saw their faces and suddenly he was very embarrassed as well.

"Onelka ve." He stammered in apology. (Forgive me) "I have spent much time around my boyhood friend Dytin Ueni these last days."

"The commander of all Darastrixi forces?" Chalith asked. "You know him?"

Aviel nodded his head. "We grew up together. Nahko and I are High Guardians to four of his children."

Shalu laughed at this knowledge and nodded her head. "And boys will be boys no matter their background." She said. "Very inventive boys it seems."

Aviel looked truly embarrassed and his light colored scales almost turned red. He shook his head as Nahko pressed closed to him and wrapped her arms around his waist with a smile. "Just so you do not use such language around our children." She said.

Aviel leaned over and caressed her cheek scales with his nose in affection and Nahko leaned into him. It was a typical show of love between a married Darastrixi couple and not often done in public. It caused Nahko to look embarrassed herself. Aviel turned back to them. "Their foul reasons for doing what they are doing is secondary at the moment." He told them quickly. "We must insure Laren and Ladur are not discovered. Or hide them as best we are able. We can not allow them to suffer such heinous experimentation."

"You can not hide us forever Koppentotz Aviel." Ladur's deep voice echoed from behind them and they all turned to see them standing just inside the archway of the door. Laren stood in front of Ladur's broad chest and looked ridiculously tiny in comparison to him, yet for some reason it looked so perfect. Her fingers were stroking the scales under his thick throat as they watched them. "And the Scourge beasts would not find it so easy to take us."

Aviel's eyes grew bright and he broke away from Nahko's embrace. "Laren! Ladur!" He exclaimed almost happily as he stepped towards them. He came up short as he remembered how Laren reacted to the usual Darastrixi greeting but it was Laren who smiled. She stepped right up to him now and pressed her hand to his chest, took his hand within hers and placed it over her breast as she brought her forehead towards his. Aviel instantly lowered his head to hers and felt the peace emanating from both of them within the Etheric realm. Aviel drew back when the greeting was over as was the custom and he looked at them. "It is truly a pleasure to see you both again." He stated.

Laren smiled as well and reached out to take his hand in hers. She held it to her cheek and nodded. "We feel the same Koppentotz Aviel." She said softly.

"Please child..." Aviel said his eyes growing wider at this display of emotion from her and he stammered his words. "Please... both of you are not children and you did not need to address me in such a way."

Ladur lowered his head to just over Laren's right shoulder. "Yet we do Koppentotz Aviel. It is our way of showing that we respect and honor your position."

Aviel reached up without fear and placed his hand flat against Ladur's cool scales and smiled. "When I arrived you looked so... I feared I would not be able to speak with you."

Laren looked up over her shoulder at Ladur and then back to him. "Forgive us." She told them. "We... we began to feel great clashes of emotions from our Isthasyi and Myvishi within the Etheric realm this morning."

"Has... has something happened Laren?" Aviel asked quickly taking her hands in his. "Now is not the time to hold such things in child. Given what we have come to believe just in these last few days... we..."

"Laren my sister..." Ladur spoke and shifted his eyes to gaze down at her as she lifted her eyes to his. "We are among family and friends. We must not keep what we have discovered from them. Why else would Androcles and Dorian allow us to see it?"

Aviel looked back and forth between them with wide eyes as the others crowded around. "What do you mean?" He asked. "Have you... have you spoken with them?"

Laren stroked Ladur's scales once more before turning back to Aviel and shook her head. "The distance is still too great for us to communicate directly unless they too are focusing." She told them. "They... they are still trying to understand what is happening. And they are growing stronger as we speak. We have felt great flashes of emotion from them as I said. It affected us as well... and we were able to see images from them. They know... they know that we exist. That we are out here. Yet they do not understand it all. None of us do. But they..."

"They trust what they feel from us enough to allow us to see images." Ladur continued for Laren. "Images are how they are communicating with us subconsciously. Something has been happening where they are that is keeping them from focusing their full power in order to communicate directly."

"Their full..." Chalith gasped as he moved closer. "Ladur... are you saying that they could communicate with you here, even now, if they wanted too?"

Ladur nodded his huge head. "If they were to concentrate enough... yes. Androcles and Elynth could reach us by themselves if they wished it... but with Dorian and Ryner within the connection as well it would be nothing for them to accomplish this easily."

"Ithquenti!" Nahko exclaimed. "Aviel... that would mean they are even more powerful than we first thought!" She said looking at him. "That Laren are more powerful than we first thought!"

Laren waved that off dismissively. "Whatever has been keeping them from focusing is now changing. We have sensed great relief and..." She couldn't find the word and looked at Ladur. "Brother?"

"Filkiati." Ladur said. "Justice."

Laren nodded. "Yes... justice." She said turning back to Aviel and the others. "Whatever has been happening... in concerns our Seoyl Svihelen. Terrible actions committed against them. They are... they are insuring that filkiati ui faestir." (Soul Family)(Justice is served)

"And they are succeeding." Ladur said.

"We have seen... we have seen some images of what has taken place and it..." Laren shook her head. "No... I will not speak of such horrible things." Ladur lowered his head to gently brush his snout against her shoulder in a reassuring action and her arm lifted to curl around his lower jaw as much as possible. "The emotion flowing through them has allowed us to see images of what has taken place. Events that have occurred as recently as the last few months. It is almost over now as I said... and soon they will reach for us. When they do... we must be prepared to act immediately Koppentotz Aviel. Their people have made tremendous technological advancements in just the last two decades alone. They discovered a Pralor ship on their former homeworld and brought it back to their world. Earth it is called. Just recently they discovered another left for the family by the Elders of the Pralor people before their homeworld was destroyed. They have been able to build many great and wondrous things from what they learned from this ship."

"A Pralor ship?" Dalis asked. "You never told me this."

Ladur shook his head. "We were not completely certain Dalis." He answered. "Androcles is very... he is very cautious. We saw it within them this time however."

Aviel looked at Dalis. "Are they... I thought... Dalis could they build something on their own from what they learn from the ship?"

Dalis nodded quickly. "From speaking with Laren these last days I can at least confirm that her Androcles and Dorian most definitely have the blood of the Pralor Chief Elder Sumar. Passed down to them from their father no doubt. All of them can tie their history and blood right back to Sumar himself. And as the first and by far the most powerful of their Praetorians, his bloodline would not have been diluted in any way through the millennia. Given their nature and the nature of many of the species that follow them, building something from what they learn from the Pralor ship would be an absolute given by now. They are not the barbaric and conquering species so many believe them to be."

Aviel nodded. "I believe you my friend." He said.

"Laren you are you and Ladur positive about what you have seen?" Ch'teven asked.

Laren nodded her face bright. "Oh yes. We saw... we saw the first ship among the many images passed to us. And another ship like it... but larger and far more powerful. We also saw and felt the reason why we know they will be coming soon."

"What... what do you mean?" Aviel asked.

Laren smiled even more and her face became brighter and even more beautiful. "There is a Doraanar among them now Koppentotz Aviel. She is with them even now. The last of the Doraanar. And soon she will begin to help guide them. And they will come."

That one word struck all of them as if they had been slapped.

"A Doraanar!" Chalith nearly shouted.

Aviel reached out quickly but took Laren's hands within his gently. "Laren... Ladur... a Doraanar? You are certain child? You must be certain!"

Ladur nodded his head once more. "We have seen her image briefly. We... we don't know how this came to be... but she is among them now and they know what she is."

"Ini wer Ithquenti!" Shalu muttered. (By The Gods)

"Laren... if ever there was a time to share with us what you know... it is now!" Aviel said. "You and Ladur... you know what this could mean. The existence of a Doraanar? Her presence with the Dahakoan? This could..."

Laren nodded her head after looking at Ladur and then turned back to him. "We will share what we are able Koppentotz Aviel. Until we can speak directly with them however, we cannot share everything. We will not."

Aviel nodded his head. "Anything more than what we have now is better than nothing child. It may help us to determine what the Scourge are doing and confirm why they are doing it. And it can only help us to protect you better."

Ladur nodded. "We should probably sit down." He stated. "This may take some time."

SPARTA'S WRATH ELEVEN HOURS FROM UKWAV

The main Operational Briefing Room on SPARTA'S WRATH looked more like a huge gathering hall than a military briefing center for the ship's senior officers. The OBR, as Armen had dubbed it, was easily sixty meters long, half that in width and high enough for even Torma to fit into the massive room through the two entrances. The enormous granite and oak table occupied fully one third of the room and was closest to the bulkhead. Nothing but stars could be seen through the room length wall of armored view windows that were divided into different sections and each could be sealed individually if need be. When the room was in use, three Durcumusaan Tech Officers were seated at the different consoles to immediately be able to pull up any information anyone in the room might need. These three officers had been chosen by Ben himself and held the highest security clearances known to exist within the Union military. They would be privy to information that most others would never know. At the moment they blended into the interior of the room as if they belonged.

On the aft end of the OBR was a complete food and drink dispensing station and counter. It was connected to the main Mess Lounge five decks below and anything already prepared and packaged that was requested was instantly provided through the three dispensers. The Mess crew numbered over five hundred between the four main Mess Lounges on SPARTA'S WRATH, and they kept fresh fruit and warm bread stocked within the OBR when they knew it was going to be used. The Mess crew were from many different species to insure that all types of foods were made and offered. The fresh stocks of food would last for a full year before having to be restocked, while packaged rations they had enough of to last for five full years in space. Along the counter in the OBR were dishes and utensils for use as well as coffee and juice urns. A large refrigeration unit was a fixture on the end of the counter and was stocked with nearly any drink that was best served cold.

Along the opposite wall between the two entrances were glittering gold models of a dozen different Union Fleet ships, five on either side of the large holoscreen that continually cycled through a history of equally as many different Pralor ships and even some planets. The majority of the Lycavorian population had Pralor blood in them, even in minuscule amounts, and it was Andro's way of honoring that history as well as their own.

At the moment, only half of the huge table was filled, all of them sitting in comfortable high backed chairs near the aft entrance and closest to the food dispensing station. Most of them had grabbed a few hours of sleep and a much needed meal and looked rested and ready to go. The Leonidas family members onboard had joined collectively in the Mess Lounge briefly to be together and enjoy the comfort of family and friends if only for a short time. Gorgo had broken into tears in Andro's arms when he had informed her of what had taken place on Manne and after a long moment of holding his grandmother she had taken a deep breath and simply nodded her head. She took his face in her hands and kissed his cheeks before simply saying 'thank you'. Andro knew she would come to terms with what he had done, but he also knew that she loved him for insuring that Martin had not been the one to kill his brother. Their gathering was not complete since many of their family was still absent, but it had been Dorian who had them all laughing within minutes of sitting down at the table. This served to ease the tension and final ebbs of the combat high that all of them felt.

The huge table had been custom built for one of the briefing rooms at Dreamland, but Ben thought it would better serve them on SPARTA'S WRATH. It could seat forty men and women, each position slightly indented in the table and the chairs attached to the framework underneath. They could easily spin their chairs completely around if need be. Each position had a small computer screen in front of it that would rise from the table surface when called.

The word from within The Wilds was spreading quickly that Admiral Robert Moran had fallen and that Union and High Coven forces had moved quickly to engage those loyal to him. Reports coming out of High Coven space were speaking of a massive space battle along their border somewhere that was more a massacre than anything as the ships under Robert Moran who did not give up immediately were systematically obliterated by superior Union and High Coven forces. Word also spoke of a smaller but far more important engagement that had taken place and resulted in the capture of Moran. No one knew how these reports were getting out into The Wilds, but information had never had a problem moving about almost at light speed in The Wilds. Those same reports spoke of a massive Union ship, far larger than anything anyone had seen before and it was under the command of Prince Androcles. It was this knowledge that led Andro to forgo moving under Shroud as they headed for Ukwav. SPARTA'S WRATH would not remain secret for much longer and why try to hide it now. This also caused any ship within five light years of SPARTA'S WRATH and the small High Coven task force moving with her to avoid them like the plague and alter their courses to remain out of their way. No one in their right mind wanted to face the wrath of the Union Crown Prince and his famous temper. And if this new ship was traveling with High Coven warships, then it was safe to assume the peace he had brought to the two governments after so many thousands of years was solid and moving into the realm of complete and total cooperation.

Androcles sat on the end of the table, his back to the food dispensing station. The ends of the table angled inward and allowed two individuals to sit at the end on either side of his spot. When they entered the room it was almost like second nature for Sadi and Lu'ria to take spots on either side of Andro. Carisia sat to Lu'ria's left, while Ne'Veha and Sehri sat to Sadi's right. The only person to really take notice of this was Yuri and she had to smile inwardly as she watched. As with his mothers, Andro's mates had developed an almost instinctive knowledge of where to sit when near him and it almost never changed. They did not bicker or argue on who would sit closest to him at any given time. Yuri had seen his mothers act in a similar way when with Martin, almost always taking the spots they did by instinct. It was just another example of the woman being totally comfortable with each other and the love they felt for Androcles. And the love he obviously felt for all of them.

Eliani, Jomann and Brendi sat to Carisia's left, followed by Dorian, Sheva and Onera, who had become their constant shadow much to their delight. Though nothing had yet happened between them, there hadn't been any free time up to now, all present knew that it was going to happen sooner or later and this did not seem to bother Yuri or Pa'cour in the least. Nara was next, sitting beside Onera followed by Lisisa and Murano. To Ne'Veha's right on the opposite side of the table Yuri and Pa'cour occupied the next chairs down that side, Tir'ut very happy to sit beside the uncle he was just getting to know and his Blessed Wife Normya happily beside him. The other members of his team were doing odd jobs across the trip and preparing for the final part of their mission onto Ukwav.

All of them were listening to Yuri as she was talking.

"... have already started back with the INQUISITOR." She was telling them. "Some of Lidene's people are already onboard and beginning to purge her systems. By the time she gets back to our base Lidene will be ready to do the final purge of her computers and reboot them with our command codes, programming and information."

"It appears as if Moran's supporters on Uzu Ozeib 7 have been backpedaling as fast as they can." Pa'cour added. "They are the ones undoubtedly releasing this anonymous information to contacts they have within The Wilds."

"Are you going to give this information to Narice?" Andro asked looking at Yuri.

Yuri shook her head. "Pa'cour and I agree. Robert was blackmailing these men and he had assets in place to kill their families if they did not do what he wanted. They were terrified of him Androcles. They were only feeding him minor information from what we know, but they do support Narice. Nameia will give this intelligence to Cha'talla and he will act on it if need be. And keep tabs on these men and women to be sure."

"How many of Moran's crew did not see things our way?" Andro asked her.

Yuri met his eyes from across the table. "Far more than I would like to admit to anyone." She replied honestly. "Robert populated his ship with hardcore hate mongers Androcles. Men and women who could not see that their path was wrong and would eventually lead to the total destruction of the High Coven. All they cared for was the power that they could grab and hold on to." She shook her head. "They were dealt with."

"Marux was not on the ship." Andro continued. "If he was... Elynth and I would have felt him."

"If Xaxon was fully in control of Dante as we believe..." Murano spoke up from his chair. "He would have had the dragon bonded to the boy Dante removed from the ship."

Andro looked at him. "Removed?" He asked.

Murano nodded his head. "He would not want the added problems being bonded to a dragon would have caused him. He was apparently having a hard enough time controlling Dante. He would have had the boy either send the dragon away or killed outright after severing whatever connection they had."

Andro's eyes grew a little wider and darker Murano saw. "Killed?" Androcles almost yelled.

"I told you the man was a monster Androcles." Murano said softly.

"Murano... could he do that?" Lisisa asked leaning forward. "Sever their connection? I thought only Andro, my father; Elynth or Torma could do that. They... they are the only Talon Guardians alive."

Murano nodded in agreement. "Normally I would agree Lisisa." He answered. "But when Xaxon took control of Dante he would have sensed the Etheric bond immediately. You told me that their bond was marginal at best Andro, Dante and his dragon?"

Andro nodded. "Yes."

"Then Xaxon would have been able to sever the connection easily." Murano said. "From what I have seen between your father and Torma and you and Elynth... others as well... a true Etheric bond as you and they have, he could do nothing about. Ever. However, if the Etheric bond was for lack of a better word iffy at best to begin with, then he could sever the bond in any number of ways."

Andro closed his eyes briefly and then opened them. "He isn't dead." He said. "I can still feel his resonance if only faintly."

Andro my brother! Elynth's voice echoed openly within the Etheric realm and everyone heard her. We must find him.

I know sister. Andro answered.

Yuri looked at him now. “Andro I... Marux was... he had become as twisted as Dante. Why would you...?”

“If Xaxon severed the bond then he is alone and lost.” Andro spoke. “Without Dante’s resonance echoing within him, his natural personality will reassert itself. I will not leave him to face his fate alone.”

I will look for him Andro. Give us a STRIKER and flight crew! Anthar spoke up now within the Etheric realm. Elynth and I will go!

As will I. Majeir echoed him.

We will too! Caydren chimed in, answering for him and Cinol both.

Andro reached out and activated the small COM unit built into the table top. “Armen?”

-Androcles?-

“I want you to scan for residual traces of small ships. Shuttles or transports most likely. Anything large enough to carry a dragon.” Andro looked at Murano. “How long before he would have acted Murano?”

Murano shook his head. “Not long. A day. Two at most.”

“Armen... extrapolate the mostly likely course the Coven ships would have taken when escaping Union space after the attacks on my sister and Dragon Mountain. Using that... scan for small ships that may have left their base course and gone elsewhere within The Wilds.”

“There is no need for this Androcles.” Pa'cour told him as he activated the computer in front of him. “I can give you the base course to work from. I may have spent all my time with Yuri when first leaving Earth but my men kept me apprised of our course and actions.”

“Armen... use the coordinates and course Pa'cour is entering and make your search off of that.” Andro told him.

-Understood.- Armen answered. -I will advise you shortly-

“Sister... use Anthar, Majeir, Caydren and Cinol and try to trace his resonance. Have Thaura and Jeth provide an event boundary to follow within the Etheric realm. Pull from them if you need to.” Andro spoke to the air. “Once you have found it... take our Mark II STRIKER.

We will start right away. Elynth answered.

Andro looked at Ne'Veha in her chair. “SirsanGai... get with the Wing Commander and select a Flight Crew for our STRIKER Mark II. Send three Durcunusaan with them. They can search for him while Shrouded and when they find him, call for support if need be.”

Ne'Veha nodded and rose to her feet. “I will see to it.” She said. She kissed Sehri and Sadi lovingly before moving quickly for the door.

“I’m sorry Yuri.” Andro spoke softly turning to look at her. “We have to do this.”

Yuri shook her head quickly. “No. There is no reason for you to be sorry. I know what you and Elynth are. It is just another life that has been affected by our actions.” She said in disgust. “We... my mother, my father, my grandfather. They did it to us. And it is my fault as well.”

“Mother... you can not blame yourself for others actions.” Carisia spoke up quickly.

“I was part of it all Risa.” Yuri told her softly meeting her eyes. “At least in some fashion and sense.”

Andro, Sadi and the others looked at her and saw her cheeks turn a soft shade of red. “Risa?” He asked with a smile.

Yuri grinned now in spite of herself as the happy moment returned to her. “When she was very young I tried to teach her name to her. All she could get out was Risa.”

Sadi laughed softly as Lu'ria leaned close to Carisia and nuzzled her cheek. “I like Risa.” She said as Carisia smiled warmly and squeezed her hand.

“So do I.” Sehri spoke up.

Andro leaned forward and looked at Yuri. “The past is the past Yuri and that is where it needs to remain as we go forward from here. If we can find and save Marux then I will save him. It is Elynth’s and my duty.” He told her gently. “The woman sitting in your chair however, that is the woman you were always intended to be. Accept who you are now Yuri. The true Yuri to be sure. If you wish to atone for whatever sins you may have committed, then that is your decision, but do not let that rule who you are now.”

Yuri met his eyes once more. “There are many who will not see what you see Androcles. You know that.”

Andro nodded. “Yes. But we all know what happen Yuri. Everyone in this room knows what happen to you. What you endured. They may not understand it... but your actions now will prove to everyone what we already know. I told my father once that the past has no place in the present or the future. We only need to remember it as a guide to what our actions now mean and represent.”

“Avoi.” Lisisa spoke softly.

Yuri looked at Pa'cour and then Onera and knew he was right. Whatever she may have done while Xaxon controlled her was in the past. She had found true and unquestioned love with Pa'cour and their daughter together was proof of that love. As would be the children they would have in the future. She had begun to make amends with two of her other daughters and she had a chance to make it so with Lisisa as well in the future. It was not an opportunity she was going to pass by. She took a deep breath and nodded her head. “You are right.” She said.

Andro sat back in his chair. “Good. I was beginning to sound like the Feravomir and I hate sounding like her when she gets into one of her lecture modes.”

This caused everyone to laugh heartily and Dorian leaned forward. “I’ll make sure I tell her you said that fervon.” He said.

Andro rolled his eyes and Sadi leaned into him with a soft laugh. “You left yourself open to that one my love.” She told him.

Andro grinned and nodded his head. “Yes I did.”

Murano had remained quiet while they talked. He had grown accustomed to the almost laconic way that first Martin and now Andro and Martin’s other children acted in the face of great danger or large decisions. The gentle ribbing and what seemed like dismissive nature of the issues was not truly what it appeared to be. He had seen a small portion of what Androcles could do on the High Coven ship, and given his experience he had no doubts that both Martin and Andro would soon surpass even Sumar in what they could do. The instinctual nature and passionate emotion that always swirled through them was not a bad thing as so many Pralors and even some Praetorians once believed. It was a strength that could only add to their power and abilities.

Murano knew he would have to speak with this woman Shiria that Andro had spoken of. She was the one who was in the lead at finding others who possessed the Praetorian gene within them, and he would need to discover what she had found so far. Right now Murano had purpose he knew and could grasp onto. And he accepted that purpose without question or doubt now. He understood why Sumar had not taken him on that journey so long ago and he blessed his friend and mentor for knowing what role Murano would play in the future.

Murano leaned forward knowing he had to be the one who brought it up but he first wondered once again where Mari was. She was blocking him now with Etheric shields that were incredibly powerful. Like she did not want him to know where she was or what she was doing. That she could do this surprised him somewhat for he did not think she could have received the training from just anyone to do this. He could sense a sincere attraction to Deion Leonidas that emanated from within her resonance from the moment she had first seen him in the transmission. He also noticed right away upon entering that Deion was missing from this briefing as well. Murano did not know how he felt about that considering what he knew Deion was. There was something different about Mari but he just could not place it. He didn’t know how he felt about Mari entering into a relationship of some sort with Deion Leonidas. He did not fear Deion would hurt her in any way, just the opposite actually, but he did not know if Mari truly understood how sacred Lycavorians took their relations. He would speak with her about it when the time was right, but now he had to make sure everyone knew what it was they were going to do.

“Androcles... perhaps now is a good time to make sure everyone knows what we will need to be aware of once on this planet Ukwav.” Murano said.

Andro met his gaze and nodded his head. “Yes.” He said. “You know more about this than anyone Murano. Please... share that knowledge with us now.”

Murano nodded and stood up. "It will... it will be neither pleasant nor quick to view what we will see... but it is the only way."

At that moment... the only thing that occupied either Deion or Mari's mind was each other and the absolute exquisite pleasure they had been experiencing for the last several hours. The concentrated desire for each other had built throughout the entire debriefing and continued to grow even during the meal with his family, coursing through both of them unchecked. It had finally been too much for Deion and he had excused himself from the large table and made his way out of the Mess Lounge. Mari could not stand being away from him and after fidgeting for several moments she had also excused herself. Only Androcles and his grandmother Gorgo took notice of their actions and Gorgo had glanced at Andro quickly and silent agreement had passed between them. What had been radiating from both of them, it was not simply a passing interest in each other, that much was completely obvious to them both. There was a overwhelming and uniquely powerful draw between them, something far more than a simple physical attraction and both Gorgo and Andro knew where it was going to lead.

Once Mari had cleared the Mess Lounge doors, she immediately began looking for where Deion had gone, reaching for his resonance within the Etheric realm instinctively. She needn't have bothered for she had walked barely ten meters down the corridor before his powerful arms had swept her up and pulled her into the small alcove with the view window and stars as their backdrop. When his lips covered hers, Mari surrender to the raging emotions within her without a single doubt or question. As she wrapped her arms around his head and his kiss deepened, Mari could only whimper softly and meet his kiss with equal ardor. No man she had shared a relationship with in her young life had set her on fire as Deion Leonidas now did. His kiss was so fervent and consuming as their tongues danced together and his arms crushed her tiny form against him and he pinned her to the bulkhead. His very presence and powerful Etheric essence flowed all around her mind with powerful emotions of love and desire. Normally Mari would have tried to be much more discrete in her actions, but she didn't care right now. Deion's very clear and pure Etheric resonance pulsed only for her in a way that nearly overwhelmed her own senses. He was so powerful and warm and the emotion she felt pouring from him for her was utterly divine. And it matched exactly what she felt for him.

Mari didn't remember how they had made their way to his quarters, only that the next thing she remembered was being under the spray of hot water in the shower as their exploration began. She remembered the trail of clothes they had left, tearing at each other to rid themselves of the confining garments and finally her gasp of blissful delight as they practically fell into the shower under the hot water and his hand ripped away the panties she had been wearing. It was then that Mari had been on the receiving end of the most incredibly enchanting experience she had ever imagined. Under that invigorating spray of water Deion Leonidas proceeded to simply explore every possible curve that adorned her four foot eleven body. He had begun at her head, brushing aside her brownish red hair with the gentleness of a newborn child and dropped his lips to her cheek and neck. Mari had no choice but to grip his thick arms in sheer fascination as he proceeded to trace and lick every spot on her petite body. There was nothing sexual about his exploration, his hands and lips and tongue content to simply caress and taste her skin under the hot spray of the shower and attempt to dry her with his tongue even as more water covered her. It was the single most devastatingly delicious thing Mari had ever experienced and even before he had slowly dropped to his knees before her she was clutching his shoulders for support and crying out in ecstasy as she shuddered in the most intense orgasm she had ever experienced in her life. At the time she had no idea it would only become even more incredible. With her back against the shower stall and her legs thrown over his wide shoulders Deion Leonidas utterly devoured her. A multitude of colors exploded within her mind, her mouth open in a breathless scream of bliss as he teased, tasted and feasted upon her in a way Mari never imagined in her wildest dreams. His strong hands cupped and caressed her breasts as he feasted on her, adding to her delight in a way that would never have her wish for smaller breasts ever again.

As she shuddered in the aftermath of his ministrations, her arms and legs wrapped around his shoulders and waist while she covered his neck and face with kisses, Deion had carried her to the bed in the large room. She recovered quickly however and he laughed as she shoved him down on the bed and began her own vigorous exploration. Deion Leonidas was without doubt the most physically perfect specimen of a man Mari had ever laid her eyes upon. She was far beyond caring about the suddenness and intensity of it all and she returned to Deion every bit of the emotion and sensation he had given to her. The tattoo on his left shoulder and arm was an image of his Bonded Brother she knew, and it was done with exquisite care and detail. His shoulders were powerful and broad, the muscles defined in excruciating detail. She spent many minutes tracing her tongue over his chest and abdomen, relishing in the power she had over him, as well as the delicious taste of his skin. When she had finally gazed upon what he offered her, Mari had felt a fleeting sense of fear as she watched it grow in her small fist. He was larger than any of her previous lovers by more than half and for a moment she doubted she would be able to take all of him within her petite body.

That fear quickly joined all the others when Deion quickly rolled over on top of her and spent the next twenty minutes watching her cry out in rapture and orgasm over and over as he sank into her. Mari had wrapped her arms around his shoulders and all sense of time vanished as Deion sank into her with staggering slowness, until her legs wrapped around his hips and her ankles locked together over his powerful ass and he could no longer hold back. Mari screamed as they both erupted in a mind blowing orgasm that stole their very wits from them.

Much to Mari's surprised but sincerely blissful delight, Deion's incredible manhood lost none of its steel like hardness buried within her as he was. His beautiful dark brown eyes found her blue/green orbs and for a moment he looked at her almost sheepishly while he furiously nuzzled behind her ears and licked her neck and cheeks, burning her scent into his mind. As Mari grew accustomed to his size, their passion once more grew and for the next three hours the world ceased to exist around them as quite unexpectedly, their Etheric resonances and minds joined in a kaleidoscope of colors, emotions and sensations that engulfed them both as they made love with a heat and desire unmatched by anything either of them had ever experienced. After their first explosion Deion had been like a child with a new toy in his eagerness. They had made love in positions Mari certainly had never heard of, however all of them caused her to clutch at him in some form and revel in the hurricane like force of the orgasms as they tore through her. Mari had not been idle either, tasting him just as he had tasted her and while she could fit only half of him into her warm mouth, if Deion's reaction was any measure it was more than enough for him. Even as her eyes rolled into the back of her head and Mari drank down his essence, she vowed to one day take all of him.

These were the thoughts that swirled through Mari's mind now as she settled her sweaty body atop Deion's broad chest, her breathing finally beginning to gain some semblance of normalcy. Mari dragged her tongue teasingly along his pectoral muscle before resting her head on his chest and feeling his hands hold her in place with their grip on her firm ass. Her breasts were crushed against his broad chest, their bodies touching in nearly every place they could. Had anyone seen them, Mari didn't doubt they would not have been able to tell where each of them started and ended. Mari did not want to move for fear of having his immense manhood, still buried deeper inside her than anything she ever anticipated feeling, cause her to shudder in small aftermath orgasms. Mari was stunned at how everything felt so utterly perfect, almost as if she was made specifically to fit into Deion's powerful embrace. Mari had never anticipated she could feel so content, yet it wasn't simply the physical fulfillment. She had never felt clearer of head and focused than she was right now.

It felt utterly celestial.

Mari lifted her head slowly and pushed some strands of her damp hair from her face and looked at his features. God he was beautiful she thought to herself.

"Deion?" She spoke softly.

"If you... if you are going to say that this has all been a dream and it's time to wake up then... then just run me through with my Nehtes now and be done with it." Deion lifted his head slightly and looked at her with a sheepish grin.

Mari smiled brightly at his words. "I was... I was going to say something similar." She told him. "If you... if you had doubts."

Deion reached above his head and grabbed the metal shelf on the wall above the head of the bed. Mari groaned softly as he shifted their position and even his semi hard manhood caused tiny tremors of pleasure to course through her as deeply buried within her as he was. He pulled them easily into a sitting position and then released the shelf to grab her firm ass, sit up and cover her lips with his own. Mari cooed in ardor and wrapped her arms around his shoulders once more as she returned his kiss.

After several breath stealing moments they parted and Deion lowered his head to firmly nuzzle the hollow of her throat and the valley between her large breasts causing shivers of love to make her tremble in his arms. "Doubts??" He rasped out the word. "Carians Mari... it was... that was absolutely, fantastically incredible!" He finished finally and looked up into her face with bright dark brown eyes and a heart stopping smile.

Mari smiled and chuckled softly. "That is not even a grammatically correct combination of words Deion Leonidas." She told him. "You should know better."

"Who cares about grammatically correct?" He exclaimed. "You are... you are the most breathtaking and perfect woman I have ever seen in my life Mari. You are incredible and beautiful and your scent is... it is the sweetest I have ever experienced." He told her in a more subdued voice staring into her eyes.

Mari's blue/green eyes shone with love and she felt her heart leap into her throat at his heartfelt words as she took his face in her hands. "I was... I was going to say it was utterly divine." She told him as she traced a finger down his cheek slowly. "Absolutely, fantastically incredible works too though!" She looked at him. "Can we do it again?" She asked with a delighted giggle.

"Yes!" Deion exclaimed. "Now? Here? Want to try someplace different?"

Mari couldn't help but laugh at his eagerness yet again but she placed her hands on his neck. "I want... I want you to tell me something first." She said.

Deion looked at her. "Anything."

"How many other women have you made feel like you have made me feel this night?" She asked.

"Well... technically it's not night and..." He began to answer.

Mari didn't hesitate and she slapped his cheek lightly as she had seen his sisters do and he grinned up at her happily. "Deo!" She exclaimed in protest.

Deion's face lost a little of his exuberance and he dropped his eyes for a moment. "I... I wouldn't know how to answer that." He replied softly. "There has..." He lifted his eyes to hers once more. "There has been only you."

Those five words caused Mari's eyes to widen in shock as she realized what he was telling her. "But... what you... Deo... what you made me feel? How...?"

"Did I hurt you?" He asked aghast. "I tried to go slow. I... anse... I wanted it to be... I wanted it to be perfect."

Mari shook her head quickly and grabbed his face in her hands once more. "No! Deo no! You didn't hurt me my love! Gods... what you made me feel is... I can't put it into words! It was perfect! It was beyond glorious! Beyond wondrous!"

Mari felt his hands tighten on her ass and he pulled her closer. "I'm glad. Does that mean we can do it again?"

Mari looked at him and couldn't help but giggle once more. She leaned over and kissed him deeply, relishing in the taste and feel of his lips. She drew back and let her fingers stroke his handsome face. "How?" She whispered. "How did you...?"

"How did I know what you would like?" He asked her. "What would give you the most pleasure and happiness?"

Mari nodded. "Yes."

Deion shook his head. "I don't know." He answered her honestly. "It just... your scent is... it is intoxicating to me Mari. It makes my... it makes my blood burn within my veins like lava."

"But you... you didn't bite me Deo." Mari said. "I'm not... I'm not even like you."

"You don't need to be wolf for me to want you Mari. Everyone has their own unique scent. Yours... yours drives me crazy!" He told her. "A Lycavorian will react this way to any woman whose scent does to them what yours does to me."

"But... how... what you made me feel Deo." Mari stammered. "It doesn't seem like it could be possible."

Deo gazed into her eyes. "Do you regret any of it Mari? Any moment?"

Mari's eyes grew wide. "By the Ancients within the Rift of Time!" She gasped grabbing his face tightly. "Deo no! Gods no!"

"Then why does it matter?" He asked her bluntly.

Mari gazed at him for a long moment, his eyes like dark pools of emotion that she could gaze into and see his soul. "It doesn't." She said finally. "It doesn't matter. Because I feel the same thing when I look at you."

"Never fear the unknown Mari." Deion spoke softly.

Mari smiled at him. "You do not know the treasures you could find." She finished his statement. "I have heard your father say that."

Deion grinned. "He did pound that into our heads as we were growing." He said.

"What... what do I smell like to you?" She asked wistfully.

"Like freshly picked ripe oranges." Deion told her. "Sweet and delicious. You will begin to notice this yourself soon Mari. And understand even more."

Mari looked at him confused for a moment and then her eyes grew even wider as she understood what he was saying. "I will... I will become like you?" She gasped. "Because we have... have you claimed me?"

Deion shook his head quickly. "I would not do that without your approval." He stated. "It would be dishonorable of me to do that to you without your knowledge and acceptance. There will be changes that occur within you now, small ones that you will notice, but you already knew that didn't you?"

Mari met his eyes for a moment but then nodded her head shyly. "Kesyla didn't think I noticed... but I did." She said. "She tried to hide them until your uncle claimed her completely but she could not."

"I intend to show you that I will worship you like no other ever will my beautiful Mari." Deion said confidently. "I will make you scream my name to the moon and the stars if you will allow me." Deion pulled her even closer now, her breasts pushing against his chest, Mari's still hard nipples like burning points against his skin. "What do you wish Mari?" He asked her ever so softly, his words carrying enormous feeling and love in them. "Tell me what you want and I will give it to you. No matter what it is or what it means."

Mari met his beautiful eyes and smiled as a single tear rolled down her cheek. He was so very right. It didn't matter to her. Nothing had prepared her for Deion Leonidas professing his love for her in such a way and it made her want to bawl like a baby in complete happiness. Truly, nothing had prepared her for what she had experienced these last hours. Mari now knew that she had made her decision the first time he had kissed her on that ship in the midst of battle. She wanted this and she wanted it with Deion Leonidas more than anything else she had ever wanted in her life. This was not merely a grasp at something that fascinated her. Deion's Etheric essence filled her mind and her being now, his resonance echoing within her openly, just as she now echoed within his. And it felt heavenly. Mari desired nothing more now than to know and experience what his scent was like, even in a small way, until the day came that he would change her and truly make her his.

Mari leaned over until her lips just grazed his and she ground her hips down upon his, feeling his glorious manhood begin to thicken instantly. "I think we should practice more." She whispered in a husky and seductive voice. "Because I intend to make you scream my name as I scream yours."

Deion smiled at her and Mari could not suppress the groan of delight that escaped her lips as he flexed his manhood deep inside her and quickly rolled over on top of her on the bed. She caught a flash of the tips of his wolf fangs and then he was staring at her with unbelievably gorgeous yellow/gold wolf eyes.

"Practice makes perfect." Deion told her just before he lowered his lips to hers and stole her breath away.

MANNE

BASE ONE MAIN HOSPITAL

EIGHTEEN HOURS POST BATTLE

Valael led Tobia and Tinra into the main chamber of the hospital behind the three very large Durcunusaan troops. Captain Kitor had insisted on coming with him and he followed just behind Valael with his First Officer and three others from his officer corp. Out of habit when dealing with non-Lycavorian species, the three Durcunusaan troops stopped just inside the entrance so that the eyes of their guests could better adjust to the bright medical clinic lights that were set up all over the interior of the massive main chamber of the cave.

Valael, Tobia and Tinra were stunned at what they found as opposed to what they saw in the transmission from Anja while on their ship. She must have been talking to them from some other room within the mountain for the chamber they were in now looked like any hospital any of them had been in before. While it was quite obvious that they were in an underground cavern because of the rock walls, it was equally obvious that Anja Leonidas and those who worked for her took the needs of their patients as priority above all others. Sturdy portable walls had been placed throughout the cavern here and no doubt everywhere else in the mountain caves. Valael had seen those under command of Martin Leonidas at work before and they were tireless. There was actually a small counter and chair where a heavily armed female elf was directing soldiers and others to different parts of the tunnel and cavern laden mountain. They took her direction without question and Valael assumed she was a member of this Durcunusaan he had heard and read so much about since their first meeting. There was no shouting or yelling from wounded soldiers, of which there were many, and he could see what had to be dozens of combat medics moving among the wounded checking on them. The men under the command of someone called General Koguth had suffered several dozen severe injuries among their number and many of those men were now making their way here from the forward medical triage center near the decoy site. Valael and the others had seen the STRIKER transport ships as they were called landing in the same massive clearing their ship had landed in some two hundred meters east of the cavern entrance. A quick glance into the interior of one of them as they passed it revealed that it was obviously a medical transport from the specialized medical equipment they could see.

Valael and the others quickly got out of the way of the teams bringing more wounded in and they turned when the female voice rose above the din of work.

“Level Two trauma goes to chamber three!” Anuk barked out as she moved forward. Her red hair was pulled over one shoulder and wrapped in Drow silk. She had what appeared to be medical tools decorating the outside of her body armor, but they didn’t hinder her movement or actions. “Level Three to chamber five! Duewa is there to stabilize and treat them!”

The medical teams moving in didn’t pause in their actions and began to move past them with their charges.

Valael watched as Anuk’s cerulean blue eyes fell upon where they stood and she stepped towards them. As she came up to them another individual came to her side.

“Colonel... that is the last transport with Level Four critical patients.” The man spoke. He was much taller than Anuk, but his tone and body language told everyone he was speaking to a superior officer. “Lady Ceale and Serale Leonidas have broken down the FOB and are moving here with the last of the wounded.”

Anuk nodded her head. “Give Ceale and Serale chamber six when they arrive Odel.” She told him. “We have three critical head injuries and Anja says Ceale is a brain specialist. Serale can assist her. They are stable for now but make sure they are the first off the last transports.”

“Do we leave a trauma team at the secondary site?” The man asked.

Anuk nodded her head. “And make sure they have a full security team and at least one dragon with them. General Koguth is organizing teams to sweep the area for any Puma Bane scum that may have slipped away but I don’t want them left unguarded.”

“I will see to it.” Odea answered and then turned away quickly to implement his orders.

Anuk turned back to Valael and the others and smiled then. “You are Elder Valael?” She asked.

Valael nodded his head. “We were told to... we were directed here by your officer on the ship.” He told her. “Forgive us if we are... if we are in the way.”

Anuk shook her head. “You are not in the way.” She told him.

“Everything seems so... so chaotic.” Tobia spoke now.

Anuk chuckled softly. “Chaotic? This? No... this is normal around here.” She told them. “Each of these men and women know exactly what they are doing. They should... Anja and I have drilled them for years.”

“The officer said... she said Martin is here?” Valael asked.

Anuk nodded. “Martin has set up a temporary command center here.” She told them. “He is there now.”

One of Kitor’s officer stepped forward without hesitation. “I am our ship’s doctor.” He spoke immediately. “I have studied the files we were given on your species and others on the trip here. Put me to work. I was tops in my class in Battlefield Care and... and I want to help.”

Anuk smiled at him and turned her head. She caught the eye of the elf female by the counter and waved her over. The woman jogged over instantly. “Colonel?” She spoke looking at Anuk.

“Leeana... take...”

“My name is Etok.” The man said.

“Take Doctor Etok to chamber one.” Anuk said. “It has the majority of the Level Three trauma and he can assist Radra. She is handling all the lightly wounded and coordinating their transfer to beds.”

The female elf nodded. “Right this way sir.” She spoke motioning with her hand.

Anuk turned back to Valael as Etok followed the elf female without question. “His help will be welcome.” She said. “Radra already has most of our field medics with her and someone with more knowledge will be a godsend.”

“You have beds set up in here as well?” Tobia asked now.

Anuk nodded. “We’ve been preparing this mountain since we first arrived. We categorize the injured as levels. Level One trauma are minor wounds. Shrapnel, broken bones, things like that. Level Two are gunshot wounds bleeding laceration injuries from shrapnel.” She explained. “Level Three are the more serious and potential life threatening injuries. Duewa is handling that. Level Four and Five are the critical cases. Anja and I take care of those.”

“You are not Hadarian like Anja and Duewa.” Valael said very interested in that knowledge.

Anuk didn’t take offense and smiled. “I’m a fully certified surgeon Elder Valael. I just choose to work as Senior Field Medical Officer because it keeps me close to my husband and mate. He and Martin have a tendency to get into trouble. I am Second in Command of all Union Medical Personnel.” Anuk turned and looked at the Durcunusaan. “I’ll take them from here.” She told the Durcunusaan soldier, who nodded and immediately turned away to move for the entrance. “We have a two hundred bed facility set up two levels down. More cots than anything, but that will change in the future. We are going to make this the main hospital for Manne as soon as the engineers from the Union arrive. Anja doesn’t spare anything when it comes to the care of our people. And neither do I. Follow me.” She told them motioning for them to follow her.

“You refer to the red haired Queen by her given name?” Tinra asked.

Anuk nodded. “Why wouldn’t I? We have known each other from the very beginning. And as family we don’t mince words and use titles.”

“Family?” Tinra inquired.

Valael looked at her as they began to walk and interrupted Tinra’s question. “You are... you are not fully elf.” He said. “You have... you have been turned. Your Etheric resonance is bright and powerful.”

Anuk looked at him as they walked. “You can tell that just by looking at me?” She asked.

Tobia took Valael’s arm as they walked. “Your Etheric resonance is much stronger than that of an unaltered elf.”

“Unaltered?” Anuk asked her.

Tobia blushed slightly but Valael answered for her. “It is... we are still determining how to refer to many that travel with Martin Leonidas. All of you are unique and for lack of a more refined definition...”

Anuk smiled and shook her head. “It’s ok.” She said. “My husband and mate is Daniel Simpson... so yes that makes Anja and I family.”

Valael’s eyes grew slightly wider. “The man Martin calls his brother?”

Anuk nodded her head with a smile. “That’s him. You know him?”

Valael’s face took on a disgusted look. “Unlike Lorendo and the fools like him, I prefer to allow a person’s actions tell me who they are. I noticed their relationship when I saw them on that ghastly world. You... you were not present on Onterom?”

Anuk shook her head. “No... Nayeca and I arrived a few days later. Daniel shared what happened with us however.”

Valael smiled. “Ah... your Drow wife and mate.” He said. “I read everything that Martin gave to us and the information on the Drow elves as you call them. They are fascinating.”

“Your husband has two wives?” Tinra asked now.

Valael turned and looked at her but knew her question had been asked with no malice or prejudice just by her tone of voice. “This is Lady Tinra. She is the director of our equivalent to your Netnews.”

“I see.” Anuk answered. “Yes... Nayeca and I are both wives and mates to Daniel. We have been for over twenty very happy years and we have eight children to show for that love and happiness. And they will become even happier now that we have found Kesyla. You see why I say Anja and I are family.”

“Kesyla!” Tinra exclaimed. “The Chief Elder’s oldest daughter?”

Anuk looked at her with a seductive twinkle in her cerulean blue eyes. “Daniel claimed Kesyla a few days ago. She is our wife and mate now. And we are exceedingly happy about that.”

Valael and Tobia looked shocked as well and he looked at Anuk’s beautiful face as they walked. He had read in the material Delnash had given to him before leaving that elven females were exceptionally beautiful and many Lycavorian and vampire men took them as wives. Even the elven men were considered incredibly handsome by most standards and while there were not as many interspecies marriages with elven men, this practice was becoming more and more prevalent in Union society. If Anuk Simpson was any indication, he knew why. Her five foot eight frame was muscular yet definitely very feminine. She was stunningly beautiful as were all of the elven females he had seen so far.

“You seem to have taken more casualties than Martin thought you would.” Valael finally stammered out wanting to steer the subject away from Kesyla for he knew that information would have certainly have quite the impact when it was discovered.

Anuk nodded her head somberly. “The Puma Bane scum threw us some curve balls for sure.” She told them. “The trick they played on us cost us twenty-two lives... but thanks to Ceale and Serale no more have died.”

“I’m... I’m sorry.” Valael told her.

“They died a glorious death in service to their people, fighting beside their King and Queens and fellow Spartans. It is all any Lycavorian Spartan would want.” Anuk told him softly. “They would have been proud of their sacrifice. Their families will be proud. We are proud of them.”

Tinra glanced at Valael upon hearing Anuk’s words but she remained silent. The emotion in her voice when she spoke was real and the conviction sincere. Tinra had spent more than enough time around politicians to know how they could play at words, but this turned, elven female had meant every word she had just spoken. She looked around as they walked and saw not one person standing around idly. The men and women she saw stood beside one another, helping the wounded, giving comfort, or simply allowing their presence to be felt. She had been present for the first briefing Lorendo had given when they returned and his description of these men and women was in no way similar to what she was seeing now. The Chief Elder must have known this and that is why he requested she personally come on this trip. Tinra had never really cared for Chief Elder Delnash through the years but the few hours she had spent within him before departing had begun to change her attitude. Nearly everything Lorendo had spewed to anyone who would listen when he returned was turning out to be wrong. Just as Delnash told her she would see.

It seemed like a long time but they eventually wound their way downward around several spiral like tunnels and then Anuk led them into a massive cave chamber. What they had done within this cave was incredible to say the least. A perfect merger of very modern technology and the natural feel of the caverns themselves. Valael and the others stopped when they saw him, even as Anuk moved directly over to where Daniel stood to one side of the large chart table, Kesyla on one side, Nayeca the other. She stepped right up behind Kesyla and they saw the Chief Elder’s oldest daughter turn slightly and with bright eyes and a stunning smile she kissed Anuk openly and pulled her close. They were shocked somewhat when they saw her eyes change to wolf eyes and then the tips of extremely long and lethal fangs poked from beneath her full lips, but the kiss she shared with Anuk was very real.

Martin stood in the center of the group Valael saw, the red haired Queen Anja and the pureblood queen Aricia on his left, while the elven Queen he knew as Dysea, and his Queens Isabella and Cirith were on his right. Only the second elf Queen For'mya was absent. Half a dozen other men and women were at the chart table as well, two of them from the same species as the men they had been fighting. Martin and Delnash had remained in constant contact much to Valael’s surprise when Delnash had first approached him about leading this mission. He had read all of the reports Martin had sent to him during those weeks and he knew of these men in the room with Martin and standing casually. They were from a different faction of the Kavalian species, a Pride as they were called. They had followed Pusintin out here for an entirely different reason and that was to discover their daughter Iama, who was now the wife to Fedor Leonidas, the young man who had been injured during the base assault on Onterom. Valael motioned for these with him to remain quiet as they moved fully into the room and they all nodded.

“...want the teams sweeping north and west for as long as it takes.” They heard Martin speaking. “Five man teams and they are to report in every fifteen minutes. Have an alert bird on standby with a full squad. If one does not report in... send the bird. No questions asked. I'm not taking any chances with these assholes." Martin looked at Koguth across the table. "General Koguth? How far out?"

Koguth nodded his head, blood staining a portion of his uniform and armor, but not appearing as if it was from an injury to himself.

"We know some made it clear of our counter attack." He stated. "Given the amount of time that has passed... I would stay within a medium range." Koguth turned to Mata beside him. "Mata?"

"Even if they are not injured..." Mata spoke. "They will not have the endurance of either Lycavorians or vampires. Given what I have seen since being among you here Milord... they could not compare to the elves among you either. Nor any of General Koguth's people since Akor'dris and Bae'diraz began training them. Training us." He said with a touch of pride for he had learned more than he ever thought her could from the two Drow females.

Koguth nodded his head in agreement. "Very true."

"I would start at five kilometers and extend out to fifteen. Anyone who has made it past that point..." Mata didn't finish his statement and looked at Martin. "We cannot chase them across the planet Milord. At least not just yet."

Martin nodded his head in agreement. "I agree. Dan... let's not overextend ourselves. Until Andro gets here with his forces, we are going to be short on legs."

"What is he bringing anyway?" Danny asked.

"The 82nd Cataphract Armor Orbital Drop Division. The Durcunusaan Ready Division and the First Dragon Brigade." Martin answered.

Danny smiled. "See... now that is why I love my mandri. He doesn't stick his ass out in the wind with little or no support. When that boy goes somewhere... he brings what he needs to kick someone's mida!"

"Bitch, bitch, bitch. Moan, moan, moan." Martin rattled off. "Sibfla Simpson... you give me a headache! Do you ever stop complaining?"

"Where would the fun in that be?" Danny quipped.

Valael and the others saw everyone gathered begin to laugh softly and then Martin touched the chart table. "Have the teams do a systematic grid search out to fifteen kilometers as Mata suggests fervon."

"K.I.S.S." Danny spoke nodding his head. "Got it."

Mata looked up. "What is... what is this K.I.S.S.?" He asked.

"Keep it simple stupid." Anja answered. "A rule we tend to ignore most of the time." She said looking at Martin with bright jade green eyes as Aricia smiled and leaned into her.

"What... you gonna call me names too?" Martin hissed at her.

"Who... little old me?" Anja gasped. She smiled brilliantly and leaned into Martin while looking up into his eyes. "I will call you many names you big lug... none of which I wish to repeat in present company however."

"That's only because you don't want everyone to know how perverted you really are Anja." Anuk spoke up from beside Kesyla.

Anja smiled widely. "Exactly." She admitted openly.

"She is such an incredibly inventive pervert however." Dysea said now.

"Thank you Melda Min." Anja said sweetly.

"Always Melyanna."

Martin shook his head with a sheepish grin and turned back to the table. "Back to business please." He said. "I want everything looked at. No matter how insignificant it may seem. Kick every branch and turn over every rock. We need to keep our pucker factor up on this one. I don't want these fools sneaking in behind us and taking our people out in small groups."

Danny nodded his head as he felt Anuk press close to Kesyla and nuzzle her neck and cheek. "I'll make sure." He said. "I also think we should let Torma and the others loose. None of the troopers we saw carried T19s fervon. They could cover a lot of ground out past fifteen."

Aricia leaned forward and traced the chart table. "I can take Isheeni and Cirith Beloved. We can sweep out twenty-five kilometers to the north. The terrain is light enough for Isheeni to detect anything moving with her vision."

Martin looked at the route she had traced and nodded his head. “Melda Min... take Iriral and Bella and do the same to the west.” He spoke. “If either of you spot anything... I don’t care if it is a bug farting... you call in support.”

“Nauta Melme... we are capable of taking care of ourselves.” Dysea said with a brilliant smile.

Martin nodded his head. “Yeah... yeah... I know. Indulge me will ya? Please.”

Dysea smiled and bumped her hip against his. “For you... anything.”

Martin leaned over and grabbed a fast kiss from Dysea’s lips, surprising her with the suddenness of the action, but not the intent. Martin turned back to the chart table quickly so as not to invite any other comments. “Ok... Zarah, Lucia and Seyra will remain on station to the east with the 4th Platoon covering the group of Kavalians that stacked their weapons. General... if you and Mata could make your way there and give them the once over. Explain to them what we intend and make sure no Puma Bane shit heads have tried to hide among them.”

Koguth nodded. “Of course.” He said. “And if we find any?”

Martin met his gaze evenly. “Execute them.” He stated flatly.

Koguth nodded once again. “It will be done.”

“Arzoal and Teniri will remain airborne for another three hours over Base One at which time Torma and Miath will relieve them.” Martin said spoke once more. “Garan and Aurith are running quick sprint runs around the perimeter of Base One just to be sure while For'mya stays with Kalis.”

“How is he doing Milord?” Koguth asked immediately.

Martin nodded. “He’s one tough cookie. You and Mata should stop and see him before you leave. It’s going to be a busy couple of days until things settle and you might not get the chance before things calm down.”

Mata knew enough of the King and Queens to know what to do and he turned to where Anja stood. “Queen Anja?” He asked.

Anja nodded her head. “It’s ok. Just don’t stay long. He still needs his rest. He lost a lot of blood before I got to him.”

Mata bowed his head slightly to her. “My Queen.”

His response caused many eyes to turn and look at him in surprise and Koguth chuckled at the reaction. He turned back to Martin. “My wife Mani... she took it upon herself to conduct a poll of sorts. It was a unanimous outcome... to include Mata.”

“What kind of poll?” Martin asked him.

“I would... on behalf of my Pride... I would officially be honored to ask for citizenship within the Union.” Koguth stated clearly. Everyone could see the pride in his face and eyes. “Given what has... given what Iama and...” He stammered for a moment but it was For'mya’s voice which answered his request.

“Granted.” She spoke confidently as she came up next to Anja.

Martin nodded. “There you have it.” He told him. “I never argue with my Queens.”

“Like anyone will believe that sibfla.” Danny muttered causing everyone to laugh softly.

“Manda... where do we stand upstairs?” Martin was smiling as he turned his eyes on the much shorter Miranda.

“The system is secure and locked down.” Miranda answered. “I’ve deployed my Task Force in System Protocol Three until we know for sure that all of the Puma Bane are accounted for here on the surface. Steven has the CAP patrols running twenty-four seven and they can respond to an emergency call from Base One in ninety seconds. I have one TAUR’OHTAR-Class Destroyer in low orbit and she will be our support platform for direct orbital fire if need be.”

“How long can she remain on station Manda?” Danny asked.

“Eighteen hours before she has to pull out of the lower atmosphere and realign her station keeping thrusters. Another TAUR’OHTAR will pull in right away so there will only be a gap of perhaps two minutes without coverage.” Miranda answered.

“Alright folks...” Martin said. “I am now officially declaring Manne as our first colony not in the Alpha Quadrant.” He said. “What the hell quadrant are we in anyway?”

“This is Echo Nauta Melme.” Dysea answered him with a shake of her head and smile. She knew that he knew exactly where they were..

“Manda... get your engineers rolling.” Martin spoke. “They tackle the hospital first. Red has got a list for them as long as my...”

Bella’s hand snapped out lightning quick and she slapped his face lightly at the exact time that Anja elbowed him firmly in the ribs.

“Hey!” Martin protested.

“Martin Leonidas we have visitors!” Isabella declared.

Martin glanced over to where Valael stood with those who had accompanied him and he suddenly looked very embarrassed as he turned away.

Manda shook her head as she joined everyone else in laughing again. “We’ll get it done.”

Anja looked at Martin. “Are we done here?” She asked.

Martin nodded. “Yeah... I think so.”

“Good! Now all of you carry your stinky asses out of here!” Anja popped. “Your stench is beginning to upset my patients! This is a hospital... not a barn!”

Tobia could not help herself and she gripped Valael’s arm and laughed silently as she saw both Martin and Danny, and several others as well, lean their heads to the side and appear to sniff themselves.

“I do not stink!” Martin announced to his much shorter red haired mate.

“I took a shower too.” Danny spoke defensively.

Anja didn’t back down from the glare of Martin’s dark brown eyes as everyone knew would be the case. “Why don’t you let those of us who have to sleep next to you decide that.” Anja stated calmly as she lifted her hand. In that hand she held the High Elf R4 Hybrid Fighting Knife given to her by Tarifa over twenty years earlier. And she was lethally skilled with that knife as she had proven in the past. “Anuk... we still need blood right?” She spoke openly while looking into Martin’s eyes with a dazzling smile.

Everyone turned to see Anuk pull an injector from her vest. “Yes... we do.” She said sweetly as she looked at Danny.

“Anyone here five seconds from now becomes a blood donor.” Anja spoke with a smile as she twirled the blade in her fingers expertly. “Willingly or not!”

“Sibfla!” Danny spat. “Time to go!”

Tinra looked horrified while Tobia and Valael could barely hold their full laughter in. They watched as Martin leaned over and stole a kiss from Anja while For'mya and his other queens were grinning from ear to ear and then Danny was pulling him towards the doorway.

Martin stopped and looked at Valael as they reached the door. “Elder Valael... it is good to see you once again.”

Valael canted his head in response and smiled. “A pleasure for me as well Praetorian Leonidas.”

Martin waved his hand dismissively. “None of that!” He hissed taking his arm. “Come on, let’s get out of here before my rather sadistic wife and mate starts taking more than blood from us.”

Valael glanced back and saw Anja standing with For'mya, Anuk, Kesyla and the dark skinned Drow female talking about something as Martin led him out of the huge chamber and expertly maneuvered them back to the surface within minutes. The beating and heat of the sun was refreshing after the coolness of the mountain caves. There was not much chance to talk as the rush of bodies and roar of incoming and outgoing transports filled the area around them. He saw Daniel Simpson reach out and touch Martin’s arm, saw both of them nod and then he broke off from their group. Martin expertly moved them across the open terrain towards a row of what appeared to be open topped ground vehicles that were being offloaded a short distance away. Martin turned to him as they came up to one.

“My son kind of overdid things with what he sent us.” He spoke motioning to the Light Y45 Lifter vehicle and the several dozen that were now scooting back and forth across Base One and their current location. “These arrived with Admiral Lorian’s Task Force. Along with just about everything from computers to underwear. Andro tends to be overprotective of his mothers and I. Hop in all of you. We’ll head over to the Command Center where Wayonn and Avi are monitoring the situation.”

Valael turned and helped Tobia and Tinra into the vehicle while Martin settled into the front seat next to the elven pilot. He waited until they were settled and then looked at her. “Ok Melia... take us to the Head Shed. And watch the bumps girl. I’m sore enough as it is.”

The elven female smiled as she fired up the engine and then they were lifting a meter off the ground and heading towards the collection of portable buildings they had seen as they came in for a landing.

ADHOC COMMAND CENTER BASE ONE

Wayonn looked up from the screens he was watching.

“Avi... the teams will be departing from the Secondary Site in four minutes.” Wayonn spoke as he turned to face the towering avatar. “COMS check out?”

-Communications with all teams has been confirmed Wayonn. All Team Leaders have acknowledged their orders- Avi replied as his hands flew over the one meter wide set of computers and monitors in front of him.

“Let’s get a few more drones up to monitor their progress Avi.” Wayonn said. “General Koguth is certain at least two dozen escaped their counter attack and we need to find them.”

-I will order the launch from the ARIZONA’s complement now- Avi answered him instantly. -All drones assigned to Base One are already airborne over established sectors-

“Good enough.” Wayonn spoke and turned as the door opened and Martin walked in with Elder Valael and two women and another man he did not know. He turned to face them as he moved away from the computers and screens and met them in the center of the large room. It was an instinctive reaction, keeping strangers from being able to view what their computers and screens revealed, but one that Wayonn did not shy away from. He had allowed the Lycavorian blood swirling within him to rule his actions and emotions far more in these last months with Martin than he had at any time in his life since being turned. It felt glorious to him.

“Martin?”

Martin stopped in front of him. “We good?” He asked.

Wayonn nodded his head. “The Kavalian ships that chose not to fight have been directed to the outer system and are holding station. They have been very cooperative and appear sincere in their efforts. Manda has a Shrouded Wing watching them just in case. The man who directed them has requested to come to the surface at the first opportunity to discuss things with you and General Koguth.”

Martin nodded his head. “I have no problem with that. If they are sincere... their ships will only add to our overall strength. Let’s hold off a day or two to get things here back to normal though.”

“Agreed.” Wayonn said.

“You remember Elder Valael?” Martin asked motioning to him.

Valael stepped forward and bowed his head slightly. “Praetorian Wayonn.” He spoke almost reverently. “It is... it is a true honor to be in your presence once again.”

Wayonn almost snorted in disgust. “You are an Elder of the Pralor people.” He spoke. “And from what I understand... one of the more level headed and intelligent ones. I am happy to see Delnash saw fit to send you and not Lorendo.”

Wayonn saw Valael’s eyes narrow in real anger at the mention of Lorendo’s name. “I will not speak badly of a fellow Elder... but I will however say that Lorendo and I did not and do not see eye to eye on many things.”

Wayonn nodded getting the message. “Fair enough.”

“Please... allow me to introduce Lady Tobia and Lady Tinra.” Valael spoke as he turned slightly and motioned to them. “Lady Tobia is...”

Wayonn’s nose told him all he needed to know and he stepped right up to her. “You... you are...”

Tobia realized in that instant what he was going to say for she saw recognition all over his face just as she had Martin’s face not so long ago. Tobia didn’t doubt that they could detect the family similarity in her scent as well as Mari's and Murano. Tobia had spent many hours on the flight here studying the Lycavorian people as a whole and this Leonidas family in particular. It was said that Martin Leonidas and his pureblood sons had devastatingly keen senses of smell, surpassing any known living Lycavorian. His children not of pureblood had senses that were equal to pureblood Lycavorians with lesser bloodlines if one had to explain it. Tobia quickly grabbed his hands knowing that he was going to say out loud what she did not want to reveal just yet.

"Yes." She spoke quickly. "And it is a distinct honor for me to meet Chief Elder Sumar's Praetorian Mage, no matter how many years have passed."

Wayonn noticed how she reacted and what she said and it became very obvious that the others did not know she was Mari's mother. Nor did they know that Murano was Mari's father. This was one of those moments where the Lycavorian sense of smell truly was a gift to have. He quickly adjusted his response.

Wayonn shook his head. "Not for very many years." He told her with a simple but quite innocuous squeeze of her hands. "I am simply Wayonn now." He told her. "And I have been a Lycavorian for far more years than I was a Pralor."

"You... you consider yourself one of them?" Tinra asked slightly taken aback.

Wayonn met her gaze while still grasping Tobia's hands. The inflection and tone of Tinra's voice was not one of contempt or arrogance, but simple curiosity. Wayonn smiled at her. "I considered myself completely Lycavorian exactly two years and three months after the day I was turned. The woman who turned me gave birth to our first child that day and when I held my son in my arms. I have considered myself Lycavorian ever since. So to answer your question... yes."

"Wayonn... Lady Tinra is in charge of what you and Martin and others would call all of the Pralor News Channels." Valael explained.

Wayonn did not release Tobia's hands and nodded his head to Tinra. "A pleasure Lady Tinra." He said. He turned and looked at Martin off to the side and Tobia felt him throw up impossibly powerful Etheric shields at that moment.

[Martin you do realize that she will discover what has happen between Deion and her daughter the moment Mari lowers her shields.] Wayonn said. [Both of them are radiating within the Etheric realm like burning stars in their happiness.]

Martin nodded his head. [Much like it hit me and his mothers while we were having dinner I'm sure.] Martin said. [Not that we are complaining about his choice. Mari is one very beautiful and intelligent young woman and very spirited. As Deion will no doubt discover.]

[Murano does not know Martin.] Wayonn said.

Martin nodded once more. [Yeah... I figured that out right away when they were on Onterom.] He said. [I'm quite sure that will change before they get back here though.]

Wayonn rolled his eyes. [More than likely.] Wayonn turned back to Tobia and saw her face and the way she was looking at him. "Forgive me... something to do with the Kavalians that have surrendered."

Tobia looked at him skeptically. "I see." She answered him though her tone told him she did not believe him.

"We did not meet you on Onterom." Wayonn said as he looked at her. "What exactly are you...?"

"Lady Tobia is a Special Advisor to Chief Elder Delnash." Valael answered quickly.

"Special Advisor in regards to what?" Wayonn asked.

"My specialty is languages." Tobia answered. "I have also become somewhat of an expert on the different species in the Echo quadrant. He thought... Delnash thought I might be able to help in assisting you after."

Martin stepped closer. "After what?"

"When you travel to the other planets where your people are." Tobia answered.

Valael's eyes went wide and he moved closer to her now. "Tobia... perhaps we could talk about that later."

"Wait!" Tinra asked now. "Other people. You mean there are other planets with your people on them out here?" She asked.

"Oops!" Martin spoke with a chuckle. "The cat is out of the bag."

Tinra and Tobia both looked at him oddly and he smiled even wider. “Ah... it’s an expression.” He said. “It means that something that wasn’t supposed to be known is now common knowledge.”

Tobia’s eyes grew wide and she looked at him horrified. “Oh! Oh... I’m so sorry!” She exclaimed.

Martin shook his head with a smile. “It’s not a big deal. I wasn’t exactly trying to hide it from anyone.” He looked at Valael. “Elder Valael... you haven’t introduced the military officer with you.”

Valael glanced at Kitor and then back to Martin. “This is Captain Kitor Martin. He commands the ship we arrived on.”

Martin stepped right up to him. “So I have you to thank for covering our flank?” Martin said. “I thank you for being ready to pull our people and yours out if everything went to hell.”

Kitor knew a military man through and through when he saw one and this Lycavorian King Martin Leonidas was such a man. He nodded his head. “No thanks is needed Praetorian Leonidas.” Kitor told him. “I was honored.”

Martin glanced at Valael quickly. “Elder Valael... I told Delnash I...”

“What you told the Chief Elder is of no regard to me Praetorian Leonidas.” Kitor spoke. “I can sense the resonance of a Praetorian within you... and unlike others of my generation... I am honored to be here and be among you. And I will treat you with the respect you deserve as a Praetorian.”

Martin looked at him. “I am not like the Praetorians you may have known or read about Captain.” Martin told him.

Kitor smiled and nodded. “Yes... I know. What is it you call yourselves? Spartans. You are a Spartan first. Fueled by emotion and duty and honor. And you hate politics. Which, for me anyway, makes it all the more honorable to meet you in person sir.”

Martin grinned. “Wow!” Martin explained. “You are only the third Pralor I have met and liked on the first meeting. The odds are looking up!”

Kitor laughed at that, knowing of the encounter Onterom and the aftermath. “Perhaps they are.” He said. “I... I understand that you have a VORTEX-Class Heavy Cruiser in your... in your fleet?”

Martin nodded his head. “My son Androcles commands it.” He replied.

“Most of us within our military have never even seen a VORTEX-Class Heavy cruiser.” Kitor said. “I would be honored if one day I am allowed to see this ship.”

“You just might get your chance soon enough Captain.” Martin told him. “Andro and SPARTA’S WRATH should be here in roughly six weeks.” He turned to look at Tinra as Kitor reveled in that knowledge and opportunity. “Lady Tinra... I understand you have some people that should be landing shortly?”

Tinra nodded her head quickly. “Several support staff.” She told him. “Technicians. I tried to prepare for... I did not know where we would be sitting down to speak and wanted to be prepared for everything.”

Martin nodded his head and stepped up to her and took her arm gently. “Elder Valael... why don’t you, Lady Tobia and Captain Kitor remain here with Wayonn. He can fill you in on what has been happening. I’m going to take Lady Tinra on a short tour and then we can get started.”

Tinra met his eyes as he looked at her. “Your... your Queens will not be with you?” She asked.

Martin shook his head. “You requested a separate forum with them and they agreed.” He told her. “I would give it a day or two though. Anja won’t leave her patients until she knows she has done all she can for them... and my other Queens... well... you heard for yourself what they are going to be doing.”

“You... you allow them to endanger themselves?” Tinra asked.

Martin laughed at that. “Allow them?” He said. “They don’t listen to me. Hell... most of the time they are yelling at me for doing something stupid.” He took her arm within his. “Let’s walk and I can tell you about my Queens. I like talking about them. I will warn you though... I don’t have the most stellar relations with our Netnews back home. To be honest... most consider me an asshole. Of course... I have called some of them some choice names but...”

Tinra looked at him as he held her arm and whatever fear she may have had seemed to vanish. That this man before her was a Praetorian was without question. His Etheric resonance dwarfed any she had felt in her lifetime and could only be that of a Praetorian. Yet there was also something oddly calming about this man. Tinra did not harbor the same mentality that many within the Science Division carried. She did not consider herself better than anyone and especially not a person she had never met before. There was something about this man, a man many would consider beneath them. A strange feeling and aura that made her want to trust him. Tinra had always trusted her instincts and this is one time she allowed them to guide her.

“I believe I would like listening to you sir.” Tinra said.

“Really?” Martin asked her as they began to walk towards the door. “Careful... you might regret you said that.”

UZU OZEIB 7 PRIVATE MILITARY TERMINAL SIX KILOMETERS OUTSIDE CAPITAL OF YDARE

It was brutally early and Narice was certainly not in the best of moods at the moment. The military officer interrupting her peaceful sleep was the main cause of that. She may have been vampiric and therefore did not need as much sleep as say a human for example, but Narice still did enjoy her down time. And it was even better when she was wrapped within Arrarn’s powerful embrace under the sheets of their bed, with Toria nestled between them, just as they had been when the junior officer made the call. That it was Cha’talla who ordered him to contact Narice did not make it any better. Narice and Toria Leonidas both found that they treasured the moments in their bed beside their beloved Arrarn. Half elf though he was, his Lycavorian blood was certainly dominant, as was the heat put off by his body because of that blood. It was a heat that both Narice and Toria could not get enough of now when lying beside him. It had not been as noticeable on Earth because of the more temperate climate the planet now had since the Sky Fire, but here on Uzu Ozeib 7 it was very telling because of the lower mean temperature during the night time hours. Most of those nights they simply talked of what they had done that day, but there were also the nights that had been filled with torrid desire and lovemaking that went on for hours. It still amazed Narice what he could do to her, what Toria could do to her, what both of them could make her feel. It was also an attention and desire she returned a hundred fold for both of them. They both preferred when they were wrapped around his powerful body and he was making them cry out in ecstasy, but for the moments when Arrarn was not with them, they were not shy about expressing the love, desire and want for each other that had originally brought them together.

Narice and Arrarn had been working non-stop since their return from Earth and the conference with the Kavalian Rebels. Toria had travelled to fully a quarter of the planet in the last weeks coordinating the reorganization efforts of Admiral Pontal and Arrarn as they began the job of restricting the entire High Coven military. Toria had taken the point on this because of her skills and the fact that she was now widely recognized as the Blessed Wife to Narice and Arrarn. This unique arrangement had been fully accepted by the vast majority of the younger generation while the older generation of vampires had a harder time accepting it. This did not stop them from honoring her position and role for they knew that many of the old ways had no place in the future Narice was creating for them.

Narice found that while all of the Ventash’ma agreed with what she had done, a few of them were willing to offer even more in order to redirect the attention of the Kavalians away from the High Coven. Narice and a few others knew that their attention had been diverted long before she had offered the Kavalian Rebels any High Coven support and equipment. The Kavalians had lost interest in the High Coven the moment Pian had made his announcement of the forming of a Kavalian free government.

There were still those older High Coven families that were angered by her public decision to dismiss the long standing law in regards to succession. Her words had been simple but very much direct and to the point. Narice had made a very public statement that she was the wife and mate to Arrarn Leonidas, a name she now carried with immense pride and love and she had no intention of ever following the old High Coven law requiring her to take a Pureblood vampire as her husband in order to produce a pureblood heir to the High Coven. Toria was equally her wife and lover and would always bear the name Leonidas as well now. Narice would share her bed with no man who was not Arrarn Leonidas ever and any children that she and Toria gave birth to in the future would be Arrarn’s children and only his. And they would bear the name Leonidas proudly. Narice knew that this statement and her decision to help the Kavalians had not gone over well with many older pureblood families, but she also knew it needed to be done in order to help secure the future going forward.

Narice turned slightly as her three member Immortal security detachment parted and Toria stepped between them with a nod. Cha'talla had chosen all those who protected her and Toria personally and his son Lynom was head of that detail with his half elven wife As'hia. She did not like having all the security because she was as equally deadly as she was beautiful, but even she had to admit the precarious nature of things right now and the fact that Deneth and Arrarn would not always be around to insure her safety.

Toria came right up to her and Narice took her hands. "Did you find out anything?" Narice asked.

Toria shook her head. "No one is talking. The entire hanger is locked down and we are waiting for a ship to land."

"A ship?" Narice asked. "What ship?"

"It's a STRIKER Mark II." Arrarn's voice caused both of them to turn as he came up behind them with Cha'talla following close on his heels. "All we know right now is it is from Andro and it came from his ship. The Mark IIs have not fully replaced our regular STRIKERS, which means this must be something important."

Narice's eyes grew a little wider. "The new ship? SPARTA'S WRATH?" She stammered.

Arrarn nodded his head. "It has several passengers on it but aside from that we know nothing other than it is travelling with Andro's command authorization. Which means he knows who is on it."

"He did not contact you Cha'talla?" Toria asked as she stepped closer to Narice.

Cha'talla shook his head. "All Dilaen said was that I would understand when they arrived here." He told them. Cha'talla turned his head when they heard the mild gasp and saw several members of the Ventash'ma enter the hanger bay, drawing intent glares from both Deneth and Vollenth who rested by the entrance. Cha'talla had fallen quickly back into his role as protector and the thousands of Immortals who had remained on Uzu Ozeib 7 looked at him almost reverently now. He was the only living Immortal to have ever bonded with a dragon and that alone told them he was something far more than they had believed. Datarik led Anebal and Riara over to where they stood.

"Forgive us for being late Narice." Datarik spoke as he glanced back once more at where Vollenth rested. "Cha'talla... I must say... your dragon does not seem to like us very much."

Cha'talla smiled. "Have no fears Ventash'ma Datarik." He spoke. "If Vollenth thought he could not trust you... none of you would have been allowed into the hanger."

Datarik nodded his head. "I know." He said with a small smile. He turned to Narice. "Do we know anything yet?"

Narice shook her head. "No. Only that the ship was sent by Androcles with his command authorization."

"It's very odd for him to just do something like this out of the blue with no warning isn't it?" Anebal asked looking at Arrarn.

Arrarn shook his head. "Not really Lady Anebal." He replied. "Andro isn't exactly forth coming with all the facts at times. It is a trait that he inherited from our father and it drives our mothers crazy."

Anebal smiled. "Yes... I can see where that would do it."

They had refused vehemently when Arrarn addressed any of them by Ventash'ma, saying that he was true royalty and a Prince of the Union. Arrarn Leonidas had been raised far better than that however, and he simply began to refer to them as Lady and Sir whenever he spoke to them. He considered them to be his elders and deserving of his respect.

Words were impossible then as the alarm in the hanger bay began to sound and the main overhead doors began to open smoothly. All of them turned to watch as the sleek shape of the STRIKER Mark II lowered into view following perfectly the landing vector given to it by the ground crew in the tower of this hanger bay. It was Narice, Toria and Arrarn's personal hanger and held their own regular STRIKER off to the side as well as several Long Range G9 Runners. It was staffed around the clock by supporters of Narice and all she was doing and guarded by both Immortals and exceptionally well trained High Coven commandos under Admiral Pontal.

The STRIKER Mark II shifted slightly before settling gently to the hanger floor. The roar began to recede instantly as the ship's pilot cut power to the main engines and they began to power down swiftly. Cha'talla motioned with his hand and half a dozen Immortals took up cover positions directly to the rear of the ramp, with several Coven Commandos interspaced between them in case they had to wrap the shadows around them. These men and women had been training for weeks now for this tactic, enabling them to become a clear and unified fighting group. Both the Immortals and the Coven Commandos would now die to protect their comrades as well as their new Empress.

Narice and the other watched as an Immortal soldier darted up to their group and looked at Cha'talla. "General... it is a female sir. She is asking for you by name. She wishes to talk to you before they lower the ramp."

Cha'talla took the portable COM unit and activated it. "This is Cha'talla." He spoke.

"Ah... General Cha'talla." The female voice said pleasantly. "Pa'cour and Androcles instructed I ask for you first."

Cha'talla's eyes grew wider. "Pa'cour!" He gasped aloud.

"I have six Immortals under your brother's command with me General." The soft voice spoke. "I wish to insure that there is no confrontation with those Immortals among you. They have sworn to protect me and I do not wish to see any of them injured. We are not the enemy, nor have we captured this ship. Androcles sent us here to deliver a message. And give to you a gift."

"A gift?" Cha'talla asked.

"Have you wondered why you have not been able to reach Admiral Pontal recently?" The female voice asked.

"There has been no need to contact him." Cha'talla answered. "What is going on?"

"Then you don't know?"

"Know what?"

"Your assurance first General?" The woman spoke again.

"Of course!" Cha'talla answered.

"Is Empress Narice with you?" The voice asked. "And the Ventash'ma as Androcles requested?"

"I am here." Narice answered before Cha'talla could get her to stop.

Cha'talla shook his head at her actions and saw her grin at him in response. She was just as intrigued as the rest of them about what was happening. "The Ventash'ma are here as well." He answered.

"Good." The woman's voice answered. "Then if you will insure no one is behind the ship we will lower the ramp. You may wish to call for a medical bed... or restraining cuffs... it is up to you."

"What?" Cha'talla asked even as the ship's ramp began to hum softly and lower.

All of them turned to watch as the ramp came down smoothly to reveal three heavily armed Immortals standing openly at the top of the ramp. They could see three more behind them, two of whom seemed to be holding something between them. The first thing Cha'talla noticed was that all of these men had taken the serum and now looked as any of his men might look. A true Akruxian Immortal. He felt his heart jump a little for it meant that his brother had also embraced a new ideology just as T'lolt had told him he had. All of the Immortals also wore standard Union ArmorPly body armor, a surprise yes, but just another sign that perhaps one day their family could one day reunite.

Cha'talla's eyes grew wider, as did all of their gazes as the slim hand pressed against the shoulder of one of the Immortals and he turned his head and looked down. Soft words were spoken and he bowed his head and stepped aside to allow the exquisitely stunning, blond haired elven female to move in front of them. The others spread out quickly in a standard defensive posture, obviously intent on protecting the elven female whatever the cost to them. Though they did not know her name, Nameia made her way down the ramp confidently when she saw first Cha'talla and Narice, and then the others with them. The Immortals followed behind and to the sides of her. That they were very well trained was obvious to even the most unskilled soldier and Cha'talla quickly tapped the inside of his wrist three times signaling Lynom and As'hia to stand down from where he had them wrapped within the shadows and ready to pounce.

Nameia wore the standard Mark V ArmorPly given to her by the Union Quartermaster after tailoring it to fit her like a glove. Her long blond hair hung well below her shoulders and her blue eyes were bright and happy. Arrarn was the first to notice, followed quickly by Narice and Toria, that this elven female bore no indication in the least that she feared the Immortals she was with. She looked completely comfortable in fact. Exactly like those elven females Narice had seen on Kranek when they stopped there before returning here. She wore a Union K14 KM in a holster on her right thigh and though it looked odd on her small frame, she appeared to know it was there and how to use it.

Nameia strode across the short distance and stopped in front of Narice and Cha'talla. She bowed her head respectfully to Narice and looked at her.

"It is a true blessing to finally meet you Empress Narice." She stated calmly.

Narice glanced at Arrarn and Toria before looking back to her. "You know me?" She asked.

Nameia shook her head. "I know all about you." She stated. "But no... regrettably we have never met."

"Who are you and what are you doing here?" Cha'talla demanded.

Nameia did not seem intimidated in the least by his gruff nature and she only smiled up at him. "Pa'cour told me you did not like surprises." She said with a smile. "Apparently he was right."

"You speak of my brother as if you know him." Cha'talla said.

"Know him?" Nameia said seductively. "Yes... I suppose you could say that. My name is Nameia and I am the Blessed Elven Wife of both Pa'cour and Yuri."

Nameia knew the response this news would have and she was not disappointed. Their faces told her of the shock and disbelief they felt and she smiled even wider. She turned as the Immortal stepped up to her side.

"It appears Princess Yuri and Colonel Pa'cour were very correct in the reaction the news would have." He told her as he held out the small holo transmitter to her.

Nameia chuckled softly. "Indeed they were Al'ten. Indeed they were." She looked at Cha'talla. "Pa'cour and Yuri insisted that Al'ten and the others make the journey here with me. Being their Blessed wife does have its advantages I suppose. Al'ten and the others are very smart and well spoken."

"You did manage to beat all of us in Tolarian Squares." Al'ten told her with a smile.

Nameia chuckled. "I think you all let me win." She said.

"Yuri Moran is no Princess of the High Coven! She is a war criminal and I demand on behalf of the Ventash'ma that she be brought to justice!" Riara snapped as he stepped forward. "You will tell us where she is at once."

Nameia looked at him as did the young Immortal Al'ten and Narice could detect the ever so slight twitching of the elven female's jaw in anger. She was still trying to process what the young woman had just told them. She found it so hard to believe, but this elven female had spoken with conviction and confidence when she had told them. As if it was the most natural thing in the world to her. Narice knew from experience that elven females were exceptionally blunt and very forward when it came to their sexuality, but once they had found something that was dear to them, they defended what they had and who they loved with vicious lethality.

"You are correct in that she is no longer a Princess of the High Coven..." Nameia told him harshly, but keeping her anger under control. "However... she is a Princess to us. Whatever crimes she may have committed while under the control of that abomination Xaxon do not matter to me. She and Pa'cour saved my life and the lives of half a dozen others from a future existence of rape and sexual slavery at the hands of Immortal mercenaries. They did so at great risk to themselves and without hesitation. I remained when they returned the others who were with me to Elear. I eventually found love in their arms." Nameia glared at Riara now, her blue eyes showing simmering anger. "If you refer to her as a criminal in my presence again sir, vampire or not, I will tear out your eyes and feed them to you!"

Narice stepped forward and touched Riara's arm. "Ventash'ma Riara... please." Narice said. "She came under the orders of Androcles."

Riara sobered instantly when he heard that and he turned to look at Arrarn. "Arrarn... is this possible?" He asked.

Arrarn nodded his head still trying to grasp everything as it was happening. "The ship is a Mark II STRIKER sir. The only way they could have got it is if Andro released it to them."

Narice squeezed Riara's arm and turned back to Nameia. "Why are you here?" She asked now. "And why all the secrecy?"

Nameia smiled at her patiently, all the anger from a moment ago gone from her eyes. "I have a message for you... and a gift." She said. "Just as I said."

"A gift?" Narice asked. "From who?"

Nameia leaned over and set the transmitter on the deck and stepped back. "I will let my Blessed Wife explain it to you." She said as she tapped the holo disc and stepped back.

Narice and the others nearly jumped back as the holo disc flared upon activation and then the life size image of Yuri was in the hanger bay with them. Standing beside her, towering over her really, was the broad shouldered and heavily muscled Immortal.

"Hello sister." Yuri's voice echoed in the bay as all noise had ceased and everyone was staring at the image of her in shock.

“Pa'cour!” Cha'talla almost shouted.

“Cha'talla.” Pa'cour spoke as Yuri looked up at his face. “You are looking... you are looking well brother.” He said evenly, though it was obvious from his fidgeting that he was very nervous.

Narice saw it first obviously.

Yuri's eyes were so much brighter and filled with life. She watched her older sister smile up at the muscular Immortal and then take and squeeze his arm in her hands. The powerful aura of darkness that had permeated her being for so long, like a constant shadow on her face and body, it was now gone. Narice remembered Andro's words on Earth to her that night. He said that this was not the Yuri she had known. He told her to trust him, something that Narice had never questioned. Looking at her sister, Narice could see what he was talking about. This was not the sister she had grown up knowing. This was the woman she had seen in very rare and unpredictable moments when Xaxon's control of her must have slipped. This woman exuded confidence and calm, yet also the unfettered ability to hurt you in many different ways.

“Yuri?” Narice gasped now as she moved closer to the holo image of her sister.

“Narice!” Arrarn barked and reached for her arm.

Narice turned and looked at him. “It is a holo image Arrarn my love.” She told him. “It can't hurt me.”

They all saw Yuri smile and take a deep breath as she looked at Narice. “I do not have the gifts that your brother and father do Arrarn Leonidas.” Yuri spoke calmly. “To be honest... I do not wish to have them. Believe me... I am not a threat to my sister.”

“So you say.” Arrarn answered defensively.

“Arrarn please!” Narice insisted before turning back to the image once more. “Yuri... Yuri what is... what is this all about?”

“It is exactly as Nameia has told you.” Yuri said looking at Nameia directly. “We miss you our elven wife.”

Nameia smiled warmly at the man and woman she had come to worship so completely. “You and our husband can make it up to me when I return.” Nameia spoke proudly.

“We intend to.” Yuri told her.

“As do I.” Nameia said brazenly.

Yuri smiled at her and Narice knew then it was no act. They had been raised by their mother to consider such relationships unnatural and taboo even though they discovered that Aikiro had partaken of such pleasures in secret and never told them. The old Yuri would have hissed and spat openly, unable to hide her disgust at such a relationship, yet now her older sister stood and gazed at the elven female with a look of desire and love. A look that Narice herself knew very well, for it was the same way she looked at Toria.

Narice watched as Yuri turned back to gaze at her. “You look breathtaking sister.” She said softly.

“Yuri what is...?”

Yuri held up her hand causing Narice to stop speaking. “This is the only way we could facilitate this Narice. I knew that if I returned myself I would have been arrested and treated as the criminal I am.”

Riara opened his mouth to bark out that she was correct but stopped when he realized what she had said. He looked at Datarik and Anebal and saw both of them looking on with confused but interested expressions.

“I will not make excuses for my actions through the years... there is nothing I can say to take back anything I may have done.” Yuri said. “Truthfully... there are many things I do not remember doing because Xaxon had such control over me. Ultimately however... I am the one responsible. The only thing I can do now is try to atone for whatever sins I have committed in the past and try to live the life I have embraced now. I have found with Pa'cour and Nameia what you discovered and embraced with Arrarn and Toria sister. There are things I must do first before returning there and facing the music as your father has said in the past Arrarn Leonidas. I have to do them... if only to... if only to put my own demons to rest.”

“Yuri... Yuri I don't understand.” Narice said truthfully.

“I am not the Yuri you grew up seeing Narice.” Yuri told her evenly. “That woman died on Earth when Androcles killed me.”

“What?” Narice gasped in shock.

Yuri nodded her head. “I was foolish to think I could face him alone you know... well... Xaxon was foolish one to force that upon me. Between his claws and his teeth, Andro did a wonderful job of making sure I would bleed out in seconds. I died on that world and only Pa'cour's love for me saved me.”

“Mother you...” The female voice spoke from out of the cone of the transmission.

Yuri shook her head. “Yes I do Onera.” She said. She looked at Narice. “You should meet someone.” She spoke holding out her hand. They all watched as the equally stunning half Immortal and half vampire female stepped up to Yuri without question. Holding tightly to her hand was Carisia which made it even more surreal. “Narice... this is Onera. She is... she is the fruit of the love that Pa'cour and I share. She is our daughter.”

The bright dark eyes looked at Narice and she smiled. “Ilninil Narice. It is a joy to finally meet you. Even in this transmission.” (Aunt)

Narice could only gawk at the transmission in disbelief. “You are... that isn't possible.” She finally stammered.

Yuri smiled. “Not normally no.” She said. “But thanks to your mother Arrarn Leonidas... the infliction upon my body that would have killed Onera did not occur.”

“Yuri!” Narice gasped. “You had... you had Darpia Syndrome?”

Yuri nodded her head. “Yes. Anja gave to Nalavi the means to treat me much the same way she developed the treatment for Isabella. Using her work Nalavi was able to accelerate Onera's growth within my womb and she came to join us before my womb could no longer sustain her. The accelerated hormones however... well they caused her to grow far faster than normal. Much as they did to your brother Dorian I understand Arrarn Leonidas.” Yuri looked at Onera and lifted her hand to stroke her cheek. “This is the result. She is beautiful isn't she?”

“Mother?” Onera gasped and even in the transmission you could see her blush under her dark Immortal skin color. They all saw Carisia laugh and lean into her half sister affectionately.

“Narice...” Carisia spoke now. “Do you think I would be standing here if things were not so very different?”

Narice shook her head without question. “Never.” She said.

“I have found my true mother Narice. And so has Lucia. She was always here... but she just wasn't allowed to be herself.” Carisia told her. “Trust in me Ilninil Narice.”

“That... that is not something I will ever question Carisia.” Narice told her.

Carisia nodded. “Good. Come sister... we are almost to Ukwav and we need to prepare.” She pulled Onera out of the transmission.

“Ukwav?” Cha'talla asked. “Why are you...?”

“It is a rather long but very exciting story Cha'talla.” Yuri told him with a semi-smile. “Suffice to say I will give you the short version. Roughly thirty hours ago Androcles led a rather risky and completely insane assault against Robert's command ship. Pa'cour and I and many others took part in this assault. It was successful. If you have not yet heard from Admiral Pontal... it is because we gave the coordinates to him of Robert's remaining traitorous forces. Enemies of the High Coven that you lead sister. I imagine that he and Admiral Riall are still cleaning up the garbage as Androcles called it.”

“That's... that's not... ussta yah Yuri how...” Narice couldn't form coherent words at the moment. (My god)

“Nameia our love.” Yuri spoke again. “If you would have Al'ten deliver my gift to the Empress and members of the Ventash'ma who are present.”

Nameia didn't blink and she motioned with her hand for the two Immortals to come forward. That they were dragging a large man between them was now obvious. They moved directly in front of the transmission of Yuri and unceremoniously dropped the body to the deck with a thump. Nameia motioned them back and stepped up to the inert figure, reaching out to take hold of the black hood that covered the head and yanking it off. The collective gasp that followed was loud enough to echo within the hanger bay, as was Narice's rage filled scream of hate as she saw the bloody gagged mouth and dark eyes staring up at her. His once handsome face was deformed somehow now, his jaw and nose misshapen as if someone had beaten him severely, but those eyes glared at her with evil intent.

Narice didn't hesitate for a single moment and unleashed all her anger and hate in one exceptionally powerful kick. The kick was for all the pain he had caused so many people she had come to love as dearly as she did Arrarn and Toria. It was more instinctual than she was used to, but Arrarn's wilder and more instinctive nature was rubbing off on both her and Toria. The savage kick would have done far more damage had she been wearing her normal combat boots, but as it was the kick slammed squarely into Moran's chest with a resounding thump. All of them heard Moran groan in agony and curl up into a ball on the floor of the hanger. Arrarn had to reach forward and wrap his arms around her petite form to keep her from continuing her assault.

"Narice no!" He hissed softly as she tried to pull away.

"I had Al'ten interrogate him on the trip there." Yuri spoke once more when Arrarn had Narice securely within his embrace. "Everything that was in his twisted and feeble mind now belongs to me. This is your gift sister. When I woke up in Nalavi's care and discovered that Xaxon's presence had left me... my eyes were opened Narice. Opened to everything that had been going on, to include what he and mother were forcing upon me and doing so willingly. I should have drain him dry that night so long ago... I have no one to blame but myself for that foolhardy action... but now I will leave it to you to insure he meets the fate he so deserves."

"What do you mean?" Cha'talla asked.

"Nameia has a data pad." Yuri spoke and they watched her draw it out of her small back pouch and hold it out to him. Cha'talla took it and handed it to Narice as Arrarn continued to hold her back from hitting Moran again. "On that pad are the details to much of what he, mother and father were collaborating in for the last several centuries. She confided in Robert their most secret plans and operations Narice. Far more than even I realized or knew about. Mother did not reveal everything to him, but I have her files and my people are doing their best to decrypt them as we speak. When we discover something new from her records and secret files I will have that information provided to you immediately. As well as any action that we will take to counter what it may be. Their combined conduct during the war with the Kavalians was treasonous at best... horrific at worst. They used the Kavalian invasion as a means to gain what they always wanted Narice. The Mindvoice ship on Earth or Martin's help in securing the one taken from Ritaah by your brother Arrarn. He was still plotting things right up until the hour we captured him. It is yours now sister. All of it. As you can see from his beaten physical condition Lisisa did quite the number on him. He was a fool for trying to fight her. Lisisa is five times more deadly than he ever was. She was with us when we assaulted his bridge and she acted as you just did... only I did not stop her then. It did not want to."

They saw Yuri smile in the transmission and a small glimpse of the cruelty that still remained within her came out. It was directed cruelty however; it was no different than what any of them would have exhibited in the same circumstances.

"It was extremely gratifying to witness to be quite honest." Yuri continued. "Androcles and I have the only other copy of the information Narice and that is how it will remain for now. We have already begun to put in motion things that will thwart what they began. And save the lives of millions across the stars. Pian'Nruarani's rebellion being the major event. When you and the Ventash'ma and your military commanders have gone through it... please contact me with whatever ideas or operations you wish to put in motion. It will be better to coordinate our moves."

Cha'talla looked up from gazing over Narice's shoulder at the pad. "Pa'cour... you did... you were part of this?"

"It is all true brother." He stated. "I have the forgiveness I always thought I would never receive from our brother Cha'talla. There is no reason to lie to you now. I will not hide who I am anymore Cha'talla. I do not wish to. I ask only that you allow me to regain at least some of the honor that our father instilled in us and I lost so many years ago."

"Pa'cour there was never..." Cha'talla began.

Pa'cour nodded his head. "I know... it is something T'lolt told me as well brother. I just could not bring myself to believe it until he was standing in front of me. As I said... there is no reason to lie to you now Cha'talla. We want nothing in return for this information brother... only the safe return of our Blessed Elven Wife. She is precious to both of us now." Cha'talla watched his brother's arm curl around Yuri's waist and pull her tight. All of them took note that Yuri turned slightly and pressed against him intimately without even a hint of unwillingness. Narice was the one who saw Nameia's face blush slightly but she was smiling brilliantly at his words. "I have everything I could have ever dreamed for now brother. And so much more. As Yuri said... we have much to atone for. This is only the beginning."

"Wait!" Narice stuttered. She looked quickly at Arrarn before turning back to meet Yuri's eyes. "What about Dante?"

Yuri nodded. "We have him in custody as well." She spoke somberly. "His fate... his fate is already sealed sister and that is why we are only a few hours from Ukwav. When Xaxon's Etheric resonance left me... he jumped to Dante because he was of my blood. Now we will bring about the end of two individuals who have so much to answer for."

"He is your son Yuri." Narice said softly.

All of them watched as Yuri shook her head sadly. "No. The moment that monster took control of him he ceased to be my son. Perhaps even before that happened, since I was very much influencing him while under Xaxon's control."

"He's... he's on your ship?" Arrarn asked.

Yuri nodded in response to his question. "Yes. Androcles asked that I pass a message to you as well Arrarn Leonidas. Dante's fate is already decided... that much you knew and in truth it is no different than what would have happened to him within the High Coven. He also wanted you to know that Pusintin, the traitor to your people and your family, the man who raped your mother, is dead as well. Your father and those with him were victorious. The man who defiled your mother is but ashes now Arrarn Leonidas. It was the most vile of his sins to be sure... but not the only one... and he has paid for them all. And soon... the others who took part in that plan will be as well. Just as your brother promised you."

Arrarn took a deep breath and felt a weight of worry and anger lift from his heart. "My father and mothers?" He gasped after a moment. "They are..."

"They are all fine." Yuri told him quickly. "I understand your cousin Kalis was seriously injured saving your mother... but he will make a full recovery."

"Andro?" Arrarn asked.

"He will contact you directly after we have concluded things on Ukwav and before he departs for the Beta Quadrant." Yuri told him.

Arrarn looked at her. "Thank you... thank you for telling me." He said.

Yuri shook her head. "Do not thank me Arrarn... if not for your brother and his often times frightening ability to see within people... I would not be here. I should be thanking you. All of your family. I have already spoken to your sister Zarah and..." Yuri choked up for a moment but Pa'cour pulled her tighter. "What was done to your sister I will forever bear the shame for Arrarn Leonidas. I do not ask for your forgiveness... I have no right... I only ask that you allow me the chance to show you and your family that it wasn't truly me."

"I think Andro has already decided that Yuri." Arrarn said. "I will... we will never doubt our brother again."

Yuri nodded slowly and turned her eyes back to Narice. "Narice... I..." Yuri waited until Narice turned from Arrarn and looked up at her. "You have no reason at all to listen to anything I say to you sister but take my advice and do not let him live. Do not give him the opportunity to rally those who still wish to hold onto the old ways and cause dissension within our people. You have united the Coven in a way no one ever has in our history Narice. Let nothing keep you from doing what you were always meant to do. Those unwilling or unable to change how they think... leave them behind to wallow in their own misery." Yuri took a breath and then continued. "I give him to you to decide his fate, but for his crimes against our people as well as me, blood is the only recourse and you know this. You are the Empress of the High Coven now Narice... but do what our mother never did. What I never did. Listen to our people."

Narice turned her eyes on Moran who lay still on the deck staring up at her. "I intend to." Narice hissed.

Yuri nodded her head and her face showed relief. "Then all that is left is my message to the Ventash'ma." Yuri spoke as she turned her dark eyes on where Datarik stood with Riara and Anebal. "I say to you on the record... the senior members of the Ventash'ma... I relinquish any and all claim I may have had to the High Coven, whatever it may be. I am not fit to lead our people... if I ever was. My sister Narice is now Empress of the High Coven, for only she can lead our people in the direction they must go. She is also a Leonidas and you must take that into account as well. I am no longer under the control of the monster that gripped me for so many years. I will leave Narice to explain to you what all of this means... but you are free to contact Androcles at any time to confirm what she tells you. He insists on this in fact if you have any questions at all. I know many things thanks to the information that bastard held within his head. I say to all of you now... you are utterly free to help Narice in building our people into what they were always intended to be. Nothing remains that could harm you or bring harm to those you love for your unquestioned support of her actions. You may pass this message to all the other Ventash'ma as well for she will need all of you. But know that I will be watching from the shadows. I will protect my sister and what she is trying to do with all the viciousness you once knew and should any harm befall her... those responsible will not have to worry for what her Blessed husband will do. That will pale in comparison to what I will do.”

“You threaten us Yuri?” Datarik asked but in a neutral voice.

Yuri shook her head. “No Ventash'ma Datarik. I am merely stating a fact.” She answered. “I give you my word this day, to the three of you, for I knew you would be the ones that Narice would have summoned, exactly one century from this time I will return to Uzu Ozeib 7 to face the judgment of our people whatever it may be. I would hope by then I will have been able to make you see I am not the monster that had power over this body for so many years.”

Datarik stepped closer. “You would surrender to us?” He asked.

Yuri nodded her head. “Yes.” She answered.

“But why?”

Yuri’s smile was completely natural and honest. “Because I no longer fear the unknown Ventash'ma Datarik.” She told him. Yuri turned back to Narice who was looking at her intently. “Nameia has something she will give to you before she departs sister. Do not keep her too long Narice. Pa'cour and I miss her.”

“I won’t.” Narice said softly. “Yuri...”

Yuri shook her head. “Only you can do this Narice. Only you can lead our people now. Be strong sister. Be strong. Perhaps one day in the future we may yet come across one another among the stars. I love you Narice. I love you so very much sister.”

They watched Yuri touch her wrist and then the holo image faded instantly.

“Saoi sibfla!” Arrarn exclaimed his voice carrying over the silence that gripped them all.

“That... that would be an accurate statement.” Cha'talla spoke finally.

Narice let her eyes return to where Moran lay on the deck still glaring at her. Her dark eyes narrowed considerably and she knew what she had to do. “Cha'talla?”

He turned his eyes to her. “Narice?”

“Cha'talla... take this... take this monster to the closest decompression chamber and put him in it.” Narice told him. “Lock the chamber and have a guard posted. No one is to come near him or even know he is here. I will not have that knowledge give fuel to those who still fight against the changes we are trying to make. Just as Yuri said.”

Cha'talla nodded his head without question. “I will see to it.” He said.

“He looks like he hasn’t fed in some time on fresh blood and I intend to see he never does again.” Narice snarled viciously.

“Narice... what are you doing?” Datarik asked moving up to her.

“I’m going to insure that this monster dies the most horrible death I can think of.” Narice spat. She turned her eyes on Moran and they all saw those dark orbs switch to the cobalt blue of the vampire inside her. “When the Blood Fever overwhelms you Robert Moran... when there is nothing left of your mind except the instinct to feed... then I will have your throat cut and hung upside-down while your remaining life drains from you. Then I will see to it your corpse is dismembered and cast into the deepest pits of darkness I can find on this world. None will ever know you even existed.”

“By the gods Narice.” Toria gasped as she took her arms.

“It will not be enough for what he has done.” Narice snarled. “But it will atone for some of the pain and anguish you have reaped upon others.”

Narice Leonidas spun around on her heels and began walking out of the hanger bay with over a dozen sets of eyes on her back. From this day forward no one would ever doubt the granite like resolve of their beautiful new Empress.

Nor would they doubt how cruel she could truly be.

STARBOARD HANGER BAY 2 ORBITING UKWAV

They were the first to arrive in the hanger bay, mostly because neither of them had slept. It wasn't an issue for Deion, for like all purebloods he required far less sleep, and Mari felt utterly reborn and full of energy and life. Her petite body was joyously sore, but she felt so wonderful it was beyond words. They both wore fresh ArmorPly uniforms and Mari carried the sidearm that Deion had given her. Deion wore his standard loadout which included his Nehtes, the K12 KM on his right thigh and the A4 chopped down version of the P190. They had stopped at the Mess Lounge on the way here and grabbed several Greek Loukoumades and two large containers of some sort of Berry juice and they were now happily feeding each other the honey dipped and cinnamon sprinkled fried dough. Mari had been quite delighted to find the Loukoumades in the Mess Lounge for she had developed quite a taste for them while among the Lycavorians on Manne. Aricia had apparently shown her how to make them at some point and now no one could stop eating them. They were traditional Greek food and part of the history of Deion and his family and their Greek culture and background that she knew they all worshiped and held dear to them.

Deion straddled the shipping crate while Mari sat lotus style on top of it facing him. As he chewed he reached out and drew a finger along the corner of her mouth, brushing away the cinnamon stuck there. Mari giggled and tried to bite his finger as he yanked it back. Deion noticed the landing bay doors open and his twin Nara was the first one through. He looked back to Mari, a sobering look on his face as what they were going to do came forth.

"Mari... you do not have to come with us." He said softly.

"We have been through this already Deion." Mari told him. "Or were you too busy gawking at me to listen to what I was telling you when I was dressing?"

"Gawking at you was much more fun." Deion told her with a smile.

"Deo... I want to be with you." Mari told him.

Deion nodded. "And I with you. More than anything. You taste much better than these Loukoumades." He told her with a twinkle in his dark eyes.

Mari blushed under her tan and snapped out with her hand to slap him lightly across the face. "Stop it you pervert." She hissed at him. Mari set her Danish down and reached out to take his hands when she saw the somber look return. "What is it Deion my love?" She asked softly.

"It's just... what we are going to do is justice for us." Deion told her meeting her gaze. "It may seem barbaric and cruel to others who do not know our ways. Who do not have our sense of justice and follow the same code of honor that we do. It is not going to be pleasant to witness and I don't want you to have to... I don't want you to see it and think that we are like that all of the time. That I am like that."

"I know you are not like that Deion." Mari told him. "You may not have bitten me and turned me but I know our minds were joined. It was unlike anything I have ever felt and it made me see you. The wolf within you is part of who you are Deo. I know that. I embrace that. And when you finally turn me I will know it completely."

"I just wish we could have met at a time when all this was not happening and..."

Mari placed a finger to his lips silencing his words. "You do not have to explain it to me." She told him. "This is part of who you are. Who your people are. I know that and I still want to be with you. I've never wanted anything more in my life."

Deion looked at her. "That's not entirely true." He told her.

Mari nodded her head knowing he meant her father. "I know... but that will come in its own time Deo. I have fallen in love with you Deion Leonidas. And it grows stronger by the minute. I want to be like you more than anything. To experience all that you are for myself. I want to know all of you... and that includes the parts that are not always the most pleasant to watch. Lycavorians are not the only species who have a... questionable and often times violent past Deo my love."

Deion looked at her and smiled. "You called me your love twice now." He said. "Does that mean you love me?"

Mari rolled her eyes. "No! It means I want to kick your mida across this hanger bay for asking so foolish a question after what we shared the last hours!" She exclaimed. "Of course it means I love you!"

“You are learning our language pretty fast.” He told her with that grin. “You know most people would call you insane for wanting to become part of my family.”

Mari laughed at that. “Then they don’t know what I know. They haven’t felt what you make me feel.” She said. “And they are fools!”

Deion was about to speak when Nara appeared next to them and plopped down on the crate beside Mari with a bright smile. “So... tell me Mari. Did he make you scream his name to the moon and the stars?” She asked.

Deion shook his head and rolled his eyes. “Oh... that is so subtle sister!” He growled at her.

“Don’t growl at me.” Nara spat at him. “Your barking is too high pitched fervon.”

Mari laughed at their exchange and leaned into Nara affectionately. “There were no moon and stars that we could see.” She answered honestly. “But I was screaming my head off.”

“Mari!” Deion exclaimed in shock as Nara laughed.

“What?” Mari demanded. “I’m not going to hide what you make me feel!”

Nara leaned over and kissed Mari full on the lips. It was an action that Mari did not shy away from for she already knew and had witnessed the closeness of Deion’s family. It was a very common thing for them. She leaned into Nara as she then nuzzled her cheek. “Finally... I have someone who will help me keep him on a leash. And our mothers will love you.” She commented with a grin as she drew away. “I hope you are ready to be rushed.”

“What?” Mari asked.

“Sister no!” Deion complained.

“Don’t look at me!” Nara snapped. “We all felt it the moment your Etheric resonances joined together! Remember... Eli is Jomann’s Mage as well. She is just as attuned to him as I am you dummy!”

Deion’s eyes were wide and he swore under his breath. “Sibfla!”

“What is wrong?” Mari asked.

Nara smiled. “Nothing is wrong... Deo just forgot to tell you that we would all feel your happiness and the joining of your minds. Not to mention that the entire deck reeked of...”

“Nara!” Deion snapped. “She doesn’t need to know that right now!”

Mari looked back and forth between them and then realization hit her and her eyes grew wide. “Everyone could smell that we were...” She gasped.

Nara nodded. “Yep!”

Mari blushed even more now. “Oh my.” She stammered.

Deion cut his eyes when the figures came through the open hanger bay doors and he saw his sisters heading right for where they were sitting. Right behind them were all of his brothers except for Andro. “Oh boy!” He hissed softly. “Mari I am so sorry!” He pleaded. “I...”

Mari looked at him with a brilliant smile of love and adoration. “I am not.” She said proudly grabbing his hand.

Deion looked at Nara. “Where is Andro?”

Nara shrugged her shoulders. “No one has seen him in over an hour. Dorian either.” She replied as she scooted over in front of Mari somewhat in order to protect her. “Brace yourself Mari.” She whispered.

Mari chuckled happily. “I am ready.”

“I’m not!” Deion protested.

“You baby!” Nara hissed.

SPARTA’S WRATH

DECK NINETEEN

ANDROCLES AND ELYNTH’S PRIVATE TRAINING GYM

It was much larger than either of them had expected when they first saw it but it allowed them to practice and train on many maneuvers that they could only do on the surface of a planet. Now however... now they were simply sitting in the middle of the massive room on the mat, Androcles on both of his knees and his eyes gazing at the wall where there were a myriad of images and old paintings of Sparta and warriors from her past locked in battle. Soft light globes were placed in different locations within the small alcove casting eerie shadows over the images and making it appear as if they were almost alive. Elynth rested just behind Androcles, her head bowed low and her eyes gazing at the same wall. For the first time since coming on board the ship Dorian and Ryner had joined them here. No one, not even his siblings, were allowed access to this training room. It was their brother and Elynth's escape and sanctuary. The small lounge area near the back corner was decorated with many different items from the time in Sparta's history. Androcles had purchased them all over the years from the many vendors within Sparta and this was the first place he had ever displayed them. Weapons. Shields. Armor. A short but very telling account of Sparta's history and that of the Lycavorian people, now bound so tightly together as if they were one. Both Androcles and Elynth knew that Dorian and Ryner belonged here, just as they did. Whatever called to the four of them, here they would discover it.

At this moment however... all four of them were absorbed within their own thoughts as the music echoed throughout the entire training room almost louder than most people could bear to stand within. It did not give her pause or concern. She allowed the heavy beat and rhythm of the sound to cascade through her as it did them. To reverberate through her limbs and her mind. Never had she heard such a chorus of sound and while the beat was foreboding and she did not understand the words that were spoken, it flowed through her evenly and caused her skin to tingle. She could almost see and understand what it was that whispered within their thoughts as the music flowed through them.

Sarlana simply stared at them for a long moment. She had not expected to be drawn here as she was, nor had she expected the doors to open at her touch, yet now she knew why. They knew she would come to them. They were calling her and did not even know it. Or perhaps they did know and were simply caught up in whatever filled their minds at the moment. No doubt it had something to do with what they were going to do... but Sarlana did not feel fear coming from them. At least not for the justice they would hand out over what took place regarding their sister. Sarlana had seen it all within Androcles' mind as he was beating Dante Moran into bloody pieces. Normally she would have had to touch someone to see and sense their surface thoughts but not with Androcles. She could sense his rage and hatred for the man, but she also detected the precise control he was exhibiting by keeping his emotions in check and insuring that he did not kill the fool and unleash the monster she knew was within Dante Moran. That would have put his other brothers and sisters at extreme risk and that was something he would never do willingly. She could sense the power within them both easily. It was more pronounced with Androcles, more focused and clear and pure, but Dorian was rapidly learning and his Etheric resonance was becoming just as bright. Sarlana had never met a Dahakoan before but she had heard and read many stories and accounts of how their simple presence could stir untold confidence and bravery from other Darastrixi. This trait was very prevalent within Androcles' family for she had seen this same characteristic within Androcles' father on Manne. If she was any judge of character it was also ubiquitous within Androcles' own command here aboard this ship. He inspired others to reach for and succeed even against their own doubts and fears. And Sarlana knew this was something only a true leader of men and women could do. Someone both born and forged to lead others.

Thank you for joining us. Androcles' voice filled her mind and Sarlana felt peace sweep through her. She turned her eyes on where he knelt and watched as he rose to his feet and then Dorian. Elynth and Ryner shifted their positions as she stepped lightly across the map and came up to them both. So tall and powerful looking. Darastrixi men could be tall, but Sarlana had never seen the muscular definition on men of her species that she saw on Androcles and Dorian. Neither of them had yet changed into body armor and wore only simple clothes.

I will always respond to your summons Dahakoan. Sarlana told him with a smile.

We didn't summon you Sarlana. Androcles said. And you do not serve us or anyone. We will not allow it.

Sarlana shook her head at his words. It is the way of things Androcles. Dorian. It is how it should be. Not anymore. Dorian told her.

Sarlana glanced around the huge training room and allowed the music to cascade through her. This music... it is so... it makes me shudder with the emotion carried within it.

She watched Androcles turn and lift his hand slightly. The music, once so loud as to interfere with normal conversation, dropped to barely a whisper in the background. He turned back to her.

“My father and mothers used to tell me it would make me go deaf when I was smaller.” He said with a smile. “It is one of the reasons that they had the apartments built on the Royal Island on Apo Prime. Elynth and I would listen to this for hours.”

“I have never heard anything like it.” Sarlana said as she moved closer to them.

“I found several what were called compact discs in the ruins of one of the great cities on Earth.” Androcles explained. “My father used to take Elynth and I to the different city ruins to train. One day we wandered off and discovered a half buried vault filled with items like these. They found us six hours later listening to this.”

They told us they could hear the music through the vibrations in the ground. Elynth said with humor in her voice.

Sarlana looked at her and reached up to touch her head. Elynth lowered her snout without hesitation and felt Sarlana’s palm rest on her scales. “We will have to teach you quickly to manipulate your vocal cords so you can speak child. Your voice is beautiful.” Sarlana said.

Elynth blinked quickly. We do not have the ability to speak as you do Doraanar.

Sarlana laughed softly. “Yes you do child.” She answered. “All Darastrixi can speak as I am speaking now. You just have never learned how to use the vocal cords within your throat. It was forgotten along with so many things through the years.”

Elynth and Ryner moved closer to her. You jest with us Doraanar. Ryner spoke.

Sarlana shook her head. “Not at all. I will begin instructing you as soon as you return from your task. It should not take long at all given how advanced your Etheric abilities are.”

“What do you think of our... my task?” Andro asked her.

Dorian looked at him. “It is not just your task fervon.” He told him. “It is ours as well.”

Sarlana looked at Androcles and once more felt herself shiver under the gaze of those incredible azure colored eyes. “You did not wish for me to come here to ask me what I thought of what you are going to do Androcles.” Sarlana told him. “I think you already know that I approve of your actions and your intent.”

“Are you so sure?” Andro asked.

“All of you are Dahakoan.” Sarlana said. “It is part of who and what you are. You have no doubts about what you will do. Your other siblings perhaps... but not the four of you. And neither will the final pair.”

“What are we?” Dorian asked softly.

Sarlana looked at them for a long moment, four pairs of eyes glued to her. “You are the culmination of Wer Zezhuanth and his knowledge and wisdom. The holders of everything he had learned in his nearly four million years of life.”

“Dadrien.” Androcles spoke softly.

Sarlana looked at him. “Excuse me?” She stammered.

“His name...” Andro said again. “It was Dadrien.”

Sarlana gazed at him with wide eyes and felt her hands beginning to shake. “You... how do you know that?” She gasped. “His true name... his true name has been lost for millions of years. Not even the most senior scholars of the Livaiji Sulevfu can remember his name.”

Dorian shook his head. “Not lost Doraanar. Just forgotten.”

“How do you know this?” Sarlana asked.

Androcles shrugged his broad shoulders. “We just do.” He answered. “We have always known.”

Sarlana was silent for a long moment before looking at him once more. “Androcles have you never wondered why you and Elynth share such a unique bond. A bond that makes it feel as if you are truly one being. The same emotions and sensations both of you experience as if you are one person. Why Dorian and Ryner now share the same type of bond. Have you never asked why you can do so much more than your fathers? They are so very powerful together, your fathers, but they are not like you. They do not have what you have within you.”

“What is that?” Androcles asked.

“You and Dorian... you have Darastrixi blood running in your veins Androcles. Dragon blood. Elynth and Ryner have Lycavorian blood within their veins. Flowing freely within their veins.” Sarlana told them. “I showed this to your father and mothers before coming here. Once your mother Anja... and she is such a gifted woman... once she saw what I showed her she was able to point it out to all of your mothers. You are part dragon Androcles and Dorian Leonidas. And you are part Lycavorian Elynth and Ryner. The final pair will carry the blood of both of you within them as well.”

How is... how is that even possible? Ryner asked.

Sarlana shook her head. “How is it possible that the sun comes up during the day? Or the moon rises at night? The rotation of a planet perhaps? Or because it was always meant to be by a higher power.”

“Are you saying we were... we were created by the gods?” Androcles asked her.

Sarlana shook her head. “I am saying that The Ancient... that Dadrien knew this would come to be.” She said. “The Ancient Scrolls say that one day others not of our species would be born with the blood of the Darastrixi within them. Not how or why... only that it would happen. Perhaps Dadrien had a vision and saw this. Perhaps he read it somewhere. What does it matter now? What he foresaw has come to be and you are the result. Androcles... you and Elynth have always wondered why it is you are so different. Ever since you were small. You felt it within you for so long until the demons of a place you both want to forget chased the questions and the dreams away. When Dorian was born these dreams returned even stronger than before. And now they ask the same questions you have asked for so long. Am I correct in what I say?”

Elynth’s golden eyes were wide in shock. How are you able... how do you know that Doraanar? We told no one but our fathers.

Sarlana nodded her head. “I knew that even before your father told me of the dreams you have on Manne. It is the way of the Dahakoan. They were all intertwined with each other. It is why no Darastrixi will ever question what you are... or deny your words. They will feel it within them! Just as the dragons among you feel it within them and treat you and Elynth so differently. Add to that fact that you and Elynth are both Vrelvel Sargti... they will quake before you.”

“There is something more though.” Dorian said. “Something that we are not seeing. This has happened for a reason.”

Androcles nodded in agreement. “Dorian is right.”

Sarlana nodded her head in agreement. “And that is what we will need to discover.” She told them. “That is why I felt the urge to come here when I discovered that you existed. To be with you. Guide you and teach you. Just as Murano feels that same need. This is what I told your father.”

“Will we discover it?” Androcles asked.

Sarlana nodded her head. “Yes. Something is driving all of this Androcles. And it is driving us ever closer to the truth of it all. I believe when you are together with the final pair it will all make sense. More sense than it does now. At least enough to help us determine what it is that is happening and perhaps why.”

“Laren.” Andro said.

“Excuse me?” Sarlana asked.

“Their names.” Dorian spoke. “They are Laren and Ladur.”

“You... you have spoken with them?” Sarlana gasped once more in disbelief.

Elynth shook her head. Not openly... no. Only within images and emotions. They are like bright points of light in a dark universe to our eyes. When we focus enough we should be able to speak with them, but so much has occupied our minds these past months that we have been unable to clearly focus enough to reach out to them. And with Dori and Ryner now among us it should be even easier.

Sarlana looked at all four of them in turn. “Then the four of you are even more powerful than I first thought.” She said softly. “And this Laren and Ladur equally so.”

“Then you do not have the answers that we seek?” Andro said softly.

Sarlana took his hand and then reached for Dorian’s as well. It helped to steady her and the quivering of her hands vanished the moment she touched them. She waited until Elynth and Ryner had lowered their snouts close enough to touch her shoulders and then she spoke. “Life is full of questions Androcles. The journey to the answers is sometimes even more eventful and enlightening than the answers themselves.”

Andro grinned. “Now you sound like the Feravomir.” He said.

“We will discover these answers Androcles. We will discover them together and you will know all that you wish to know.” Sarlana told him. “I promise you.”

Androcles met her eyes. “I do not know if I want those answers Doraanar.” He said. “Not if it changes who I am.”

Sarlana shook her head quickly as she gazed at them. “I will tell you again what you are Androcles. And you Dorian. And you Elynth and Ryner. You are Dahakoan. Dragonkin. You have within each of you the most incredible potential for compassion and love and the blessing of understanding. And also the most pure potential for devastating, savage and final power. Combined with the incredible gifts and the power you both wield as Praetorians because of your blood, there has never been anyone that I know of like you. Most certainly never among the Darastrixi or Pralor people. And that is why this Laren and Ladur will be in great danger until they are among us here. I know you have been planning to reach out to them... but know when you do... their existence will become known very soon afterward.”

Andro nodded. “We know.” He said softly.

Sarlana glanced between them. “This is what you are. Do not shy from it! Embrace it and all the good it can do! The how of it we will discover as we go forward I swear to you. I have... I have questions as well that need to be answered. Why I feel so drawn to all of you. Like I have known all of you for centuries. It is quite unlike anything I have ever felt in my four hundred thousand years of life and I find it... I find it so uniquely refreshing. I need you to trust in me. Allow me to teach you all I can. Let me...”

Androcles squeezed her hand, cutting off her words and suddenly Sarlana found herself sandwiched between the two much larger brothers as Elynth and Ryner drew even closer and swept their wings around her encasing all of them in the cocoon like ball. Sarlana looked up into their eyes, so very bright and animated and full of life and power. It made her shiver as they held her close, but it felt so very wonderful.

“I swear to you we will discover what is happening.” She told them. “I wish the answers to the same questions as you.”

“Together then.” Androcles said.

“Together.” Dorian spoke.

Together. Elynth and Ryner echoed.

UKWAV

EXTERIOR OF FORMER IMMORTAL BUNKER NUMBER 4

The ride down to the surface of the planet had been very quiet for the most part. Andro sat on one of the small lounge couches in the PREMONITION's main cabin area between Sehri and Carisia while Lu'ria rested on the deck between his legs. All of them were touching him in some manner and at times he would lean over and nuzzle them or kiss them softly. Everyone was wrapped up within their own thoughts and there was no banter back and forth. Even Eliani was unusually subdued as she leaned against Jomann on another couch, Brendi leaning against her. Sadi and Ne'Veha settled the PREMONITION to the surface a hundred meters from where it appeared a small base camp had been set up. Their skills with their new ship were improving by the minute and the PREMONITION powered down completely within moments. Two Mark II STRIKERS were already on the ground a short distance away and the sleek Drow Guards INTERDICTOR-Class Corvette was now in orbit matching SPARTA'S WRATH and her own orbit.

Elynth, Anthar had departed from SPARTA'S WRATH at the same time as they had, Caydren and Cinol with them, as well as a small Durcunusaan team. Armen had discovered only two smaller ships that had diverged from the INQUISITOR's base course as they escaped earth, both times leading to smaller moons barely capable of sustaining life. No one was in a real hurry as they began to move down the ramp and into the dazzling sunlight of the scorched world. Androcles had been here twice before with his father and brothers to train and never had he seen a more barren and inhospitable world. All of them wore sunglasses to block out the brilliant glare of the twin suns, Yuri and Carisia also wearing cowboy style hats to keep the sun off their exposed faces. They were both purebloods and could withstand far more direct sunlight that most people realized, but why take the chance. Andro could see at least a dozen Drow Scouts spread out across the entrance, most of them facing outward looking for any danger. Am'uur stood near the blasted out entrance to the bunker, Tastia and his father and mother beside him. Lu'ria didn't hesitate as they moved down the ramp and she sprinted to where they were, Carisia following close behind with Sehri. Lu'ria's entire Drow family now considered Androcles and each of his wives and mates as part of their family, just as they now were thought of as part of the Leonidas clan. None of them had yet met Sehri and Lu'ria was insistent that some happiness come out of this trip and she would introduce Sehri to her new Drow family. They might not get another chance to do so before they departed for the Beta Quadrant and Androcles had agreed without question. He hung back with Sadi and Ne'Veha holding his hands as Sehri was greeted by Daba, Am'uur and Lu'ria's father with embraces and Drow kisses of greeting. The happiness on Sehri's face was genuine and warm, as they took turns holding her at arms length and bestowing their blessing in the Drow tongue upon her. Ne'Veha and Sadi stepped away to join Lu'ria and the others when Am'uur and his father Re'lon moved up to him. Andro didn't hesitate and embraced first Am'uur and then turned to Re'lon.

"Ussta Ilythiiri Ilharn." Andro spoke as they embraced. (My Drow father) "Ol zhah bwael ulu Kyorl dos h'uena mzild." (It is so very good to see you again)

Re'lon nodded his head as he held Andro's arms. His white hair was long than Am'uur's by quite a bit and tied into a single pony tail. "Siyo ol zhah ussta ilythiiri dalharuk." He gripped Andro's arms tightly. (Yes it is my Drow son) "I hope you still intend to include us in your wondrous trip?"

Am'uur shook his head with a smile. "It is all he has talked about for days." He told Andro who was smiling.

Andro nodded his head. "I would not have it any other way." He said.

Re'lon nodded happily. "Good. Good."

"Everything is prepared?" Andro asked looking at Am'uur.

"The drones repaired everything that was damaged within hours." Am'uur told him. "We searched for and discovered three slabs exactly like those your father destroyed. We tested them just as you asked and you were right. They are impervious to any known energy weapon or explosive we have in our arsenal. We hit it with a full barrage from orbit and did not even scratch the surface."

Andro nodded. "My father thought as much." He said. "The equipment?"

"The Worker Drones had an easier time repairing and improving it than we did muscling those slabs here." Re'lon spoke with a grin. "They enhanced the shielding and inhibitor fields using the Secondary Pralor power core you gave us to use. It is a dead zone... just as you wanted."

Andro saw Tastia standing with Lu'ria and Sadi and speaking animatedly. "Tastia seems quite happy brother." He said.

Am'uur grinned proudly. "She carries our first child."

Andro looked at him surprised. "So soon?"

Re'lon elbowed his son in the ribs. "He has done nothing but assault her every chance he gets... the pig." He stated with fatherly pride. "Of course it would help if she refused him once or twice... make him work for it... but he has corrupted her already. She needs to spend more time with Daba... but there is occasion enough for that."

"Anuk's senior doctor says it will be a boy." Am'uur stated with a swelling of his chest. "His skin will be a darker blue than most Vanari... but she is fairly certain his hair will be as white as ours."

Andro smiled. "I am happy for you. Truly. When this business is over... we will have you to SPARTA'S WRATH and have a celebration during the trip."

"Good!" Re'lon announced. "We will need a good party." He saw Andro turn and watch as Murano began to walk over from one of the Mark IIs. "Dos khaless nindol nesst ussta ilythiiri dalharuk?" (You trust this man my Drow son?)

Andro nodded instantly. "He is part of our future." He answered. "He knew and fought beside our grandfather and he will be our teacher going forward for many things concerning these new skills some of us have."

"Ji thlu ol. Usstan orn khaless ukta 'zil al." Re'lon said. (So be it. I will trust him as well.)

Murano's eyes cut to where he saw Mari standing beside Deion and Dorian near the bottom of the PREMONITION's ramp. She was holding his arm tightly while he spoke with Dorian and was talking with Nara, Sheva and Onera. He noticed right away that he had never seen her face so bright and happy and her eyes glowed in delight for some reason that he did not know. He turned back to Andro as he came up and removed the sunglasses they had given him. Andro immediately took his hand and shook it tightly while gripping his arm above the elbow.

"Murano." He said.

“I have reviewed the facility.” Murano told him. “It is impressive to say the least. The drones have improved it even more and it will do what we intend.”

Andro nodded. “Good.” He spoke.

Murano looked around. “Not all of your family is here.” He said.

Andro shook his head. “Normya and Tir'ut remained on SPARTA'S WRATH.” He said. “Normya and Zarah are like twin sisters and she has no desire to be here. She trusts us to take care of things. There is no need for my grandmothers, Retta, Calyb or Bryon to witness this. I don't intend to beat around the bush. I will do what we came here for and then we will leave this part of our history where it belongs. In the past.”

Murano nodded. “I understand.” He said. “And I agree completely.”

Re'lon and Am'uur nodded as well and Re'lon answered for them. “Zil ol zhal'la tlu.” (As it should be)

“Has he spoken?” Andro asked.

Murano shook his head. “No. That will change quickly when he realizes what his fate will be. He was always arrogant and deceitful.”

“Dante?” Andro asked.

Murano met his eyes. “I fear whatever may have been left of the boy is now gone after the beating you gave to his physical body on the ship.” He said somberly. He turned when Yuri came up beside them with Pa'cour. “My sincere apologies Yuri. There was nothing I could do for your son.”

Yuri gripped Pa'cour's hand tightly and shook her head. “He was lost many years ago, the moment I allowed Xaxon to infect him even a little.”

Murano reached out and took her arm. “That is not your doing. The others may have some understanding of what took place within you Yuri... but I know what he was truly capable of. When your mother allowed him to seize your mind there was nothing you could possibly do to resist his influence over your actions.”

“I could have fought more.” Yuri said.

Murano shook his head. “It would not have mattered.” He told her. “As I told Martin and Androcles... he was no match for Sumar in terms of raw power or skill, but he was a master of deceit and manipulation using his Praetorian power. There was nothing you could do Yuri.”

“The transition went far faster than you and my father thought Murano.” Andro told him. “Why so different than with Yuri?”

Murano nodded. “With Yuri he had to use subtle techniques at guiding her to follow his will. She is much stronger than Dante within the Etheric realm. It takes longer... but it insures a more cohesive transfer. With Dante he simply bulled his way to power and destroyed his mind. Whatever is left of Dante is now just as twisted and evil as Xaxon ever was.”

Andro took a deep breath. “Let's just do this and get it over with Murano. I want my sister to wake this morning and begin the day with the knowledge that this creature is dead.” He said.

Murano nodded. “I will bring him if you will make sure everyone else is ready.”

Andro nodded as well and turned to look at where Sadi and Ne'Veha were already staring at him.

KertaGai. Sirsangai. Bring everyone and let us be done with this business. Andro reached out to them.

Sadi and Ne'Veha nodded and quickly began to motion everyone in the right direction.

The short metal pole had been sunk into the hard packed bedrock slab nearly three feet, extending nearly eighteen inches deep into the surface of the planet beneath. The naturally formed, pedestal like rock slab was roughly eighteen inches off the ground and two by two in circumference. The metal pole was situated in the center of the slab. Andro was the first to take a spot next to the slab of rock, Dorian being the first to move alongside him, briefly touch his shoulder and then he moved to the opposite side across from Androcles. Jomann came next, also touching Androcles and then moving to his right, and lastly Deion who moved to his left. It was then when the four Praetorians were set that the others began to fill in. Sheva and Onera on either side of Dorian, Sadi, and Ne'Veha on Andro's left side, Lu'ria and Sehri on his right. Carisia was beside Lu'ria and Yuri and Pa'cour next to her. Nara and Mari took spots on either side of Deion while Eliani and Brendi did the same beside Jomann. Am'uur and Re'lon stood with Daba and Testia between them slightly behind Lu'ria and Sehri. All of them had moved into their spots after first touching Androcles ever so briefly. For Daba and Re'lon and the other Drow who were present it was the quintessential show of exactly where they stood within the ranks of the Leonidas family. Martin Leonidas had always been an ardent supporter of the Drow and all they did, holding them in the utmost regard and this emotion being returned by the Drow with reverent like support from all Drow. When Androcles took Lu'ria as his wife and mate, this feeling and support reached proportions bordering on fanaticism among the Drow. Whatever else came of this day for the Drow; that they were here with one who called them family was all the honor and respect they had ever hoped for. No matter what had taken place in their past since Walter Carson had made them, their future was brighter now than any of them had ever dreamed of.

There was no humorous banter between the Leonidas siblings as they watched Murano lead two Durcunusaan troops towards them with the hooded figure slumped between them, the booted feet dragging in the hot sand. Andro took a few steps forward out of the circle around the slab, Sadi and Ne'Veha moving closer together as Murano and the Durcunusaan moved between Deion and Nara into the circle. The Durcunusaan moved up onto the slab and quickly dropped the figure to his knees and then secured his hands firmly behind the three inch wide pole. When they were done with that, one of them reached up and removed the black hood exposing Dante Moran's brutally disfigured face before they both moved out of the circle of Leonidas family members.

Dante Moran was no pureblood vampire, his father being a genetically enhanced genome soldier and when the bright sunlight from the two large suns above Ukway touched his badly mangled skin it caused him to scream in pain. While direct sunlight could not penetrate the first few layers of a turned vampire's skin in short durations, Androcles had done quite the number on Dante's face and damaged the skin cells for many layers. Eliani had only healed him enough to keep him alive per Andro's instructions and the sunlight on his damaged face and neck was enough to cause his face to begin to smoke slightly as it burned.

"It is time to pay for your crimes Dante." Andro snarled. "However much of you remains in that form."

"This... this is your justice!" Dante screamed through the pain. "I deserve... I deserve a trail!"

No one moved as the solitary figure moved from beside Daba and slowly between Sadi and Ne'Veha to stand beside Androcles at the base of the rock slab. When that figure was beside Andro the hands came up and tossed back the cowl of the long cape exposing the beauty that was their beloved Aunt Deia.

"You deserve nothing!" Deia hissed at him viciously. "You have been tried Dante Moran, in absentia, by the whole of the Union Senate. The outcome of this trial was without question... but you don't care about the vote do you? You have been found guilty of the heinous crimes of attempted murder and the brutal rape of a Princess of the Lycavorian Union. The sentence is the same for either crime. Death. And may your soul, whatever part of it remains, rot in jorbhe for all time for what you have done."

Androcles stepped up onto the rock slab and stared at Dante. "Know this before I send you into the abyss Dante... I will find Marux and I will insure he is taken care of. The monster within you forced you to abandon him like he was nothing and he severed your bond with him. It saves me the trouble of having to do it myself to be honest. And know that your mother has been saved and become the person she was always meant to be."

His face still smoking from the burning sun, the pain no longer impacting on his twisted features, Dante laughed through the agony of his skin peeling away from his bones slowly. "She... she was tight!" He spat hysterically. "Your sister... she begged... she begged for more! She was... she was a slut and whore! She...!"

Androcles moved with the same speed they had all seen him exhibit on the INQUISITOR only a few hours before. A speed that no Lycavorian should have had. A speed driven by the Praetorian and Dahakoan blood within him, and once more it stunned them all. There was a brief flash and sizzle of a weapon appearing from Flatspace and then the sound of steel biting through flesh and bone and suddenly Andro's sword Cana was protruding from Dante's skull through his right eye socket. Andro's hand was firmly on the pommel of the sword and he leaned close to Dante's face as the life quickly began to ebb away from his body, Dante's face frozen in a mask of horrible pain.

"The pestilence that is your existence is over now Dante Moran and my sister will know peace once more. I wanted to... to make you suffer for days because of what you did... to keep you on the edge of death while I heaped upon you all of the pain and the humiliation that you caused her. I have other matters that need my attention now and you are an insect when held up to the bigger picture." Andro growled at him savagely, his wolf eyes and fangs now fully revealed for all to see. This caused all those among them who were Lycavorian or turned to change as well, such was the power of the aura that Andro was radiating at the moment. Andro moved around in front of the dying Dante Moran and squatted down, his hand still holding the pommel of his sword. "I curse your name and the memory of you in every way and in every language that I can speak! Now die... and tell my coward grandfather to come forth so that I may deal with him and send his misbegotten ano to the abyss!"

Andro stood up and with equal speed and strength he yanked Cana free of Dante Moran's skull, blood and brain matter splashing wetly on the ground as Andro stepped back. Yuri looked on from beside Pa'cour and felt nothing. No remorse. No sorrow. No anger. She knew then that she had indeed turned a corner in her life. As the remaining life of Dante Moran ebbed onto the ground around him, it took with it the last vestiges of the old Yuri Moran with it. She squeezed Pa'cour's large hand tightly and felt his grip constrict on her hand. She felt Onera's small hand clutch even more on hers and it filled Yuri with new purpose and hope for the future. They all heard the sizzle like noise as Andro willed Cana back into Flatspace and this brought Yuri's head up.

"Stand ready." Murano spoke firmly.

Dante Moran's body slumped even closer to the ground, only the restraints on his hands keeping him from falling completely. His blood was pooling rapidly around his knees in a copious amount as his life came to an end and his vampiric heart ceased its beating.

It started slowly, but did not go unnoticed by anyone. Dante's skin began to shift color and then turned almost completely black as the rippling mist began to take shape around him. It began lifting off his body, leaving his normal skin once more as it formed into an almost solid form above him. And then it laughed. A deep, evil laugh that coursed through all of them, but only served to increase their resolve. The black mist slowly took the shape of a man as it had when fighting Martin Leonidas at SODRAG. A thin filament still connected itself to Dante Moran's body until the figure had taken shape enough and it finally left his body entirely. It hovered above Dante's dead form and then turned its full focus onto Androcles. Twin orbs of red burst to life where there would normally be eyes and the creature spoke, its deep voice dripping with vile contempt and hatred and echoing like it was coming from all around them.

"This was a mistake boy!" The voice growled openly. "You are no match for me! You cannot resist me!"

Androcles Leonidas stood in front of the black mist creature and felt no fear. Only the love of family and friends. "You are nothing grandfather." Andro spoke more calmly than anyone expected. "And I do not fear you."

"You know who I am boy." Xaxon's spirit snarled at him. "Then you should fear me. This vassal... this boy was weak! Once I have control of you I will be reborn and nothing will stop me!"

Andro shook his head. "You will never control me." He spoke. "You feed on the weak of mind and body. I am neither. You are nothing more than a monster."

"I controlled your father!" Xaxon hissed savagely. "You will be mine as well!"

"You never controlled my father." Androcles stated almost defensively. "Your illusion of control was shattered the moment he understood who and what you are monster! Grandfather Sumar was wrong in what he tried to do. He should have left you to rot instead of trying to find redemption for your soul. You are beyond any hope of redemption. I will do what he was not able to do. And you will never harm another innocent ever again."

The black apparition that was Xaxon laughed bitterly. "How will you stop me boy!" He barked. "You are alone! I could take any of those standing with you so bravely and foolishly with ease! What will you do then boy? Kill your own blood?"

"You are not as powerful as you believe you are grandfather." Androcles spoke. "You are the weak one. Those standing around me are not weak of mind or body. We are Lycavorians and Praetorians and Drow!"

Xaxon's apparition snarled loudly and seemed to lazily drift to float in front of Yuri as if taking note of her for the first time. The red orbs glowed brightly as it glared at her, yet Yuri did not shy away from those eyes and glared back at them with defiance. "I will grant you a second chance Yuri." It spoke the words. "You enjoyed the power I gave to you! Join with me again and we will be unstoppable!"

Yuri's dark eyes narrowed and shifted to the cobalt blue of her vampire side. "You are a vile creature!" Yuri spat viciously. "You have nothing I want monster! You offer misery and hate and pain and death! I never wanted those things! I do not want those things!"

"I will take you by force stupid woman!" Xaxon's apparition spoke.

“I am not afraid of you anymore monster!” Yuri barked right back. “You hold no sway over me any longer!”

“You see grandfather...” Andro spoke as the black mist shifted inward upon itself until it was once more centered on Androcles. “You have nowhere to go.”

“I will leave this planet and find another host!” Xaxon gloated. “You cannot stop me!”

“I will not allow you to do that grandfather.” Andro said.

“You can’t stop me boy!” Xaxon roared.

“Yes... I can.”

“Dorian! Deion! Jomann!” Murano’s voice yelled out. “Now! Nara, Eliani, add your power to theirs! Now! Everyone! Do it now!”

Xaxon spun around and watched as Dorian, Deion and Jomann stepped forward slightly and an Etheric bubble grew forth from each of them, growing larger until it covered the entire group. Three layers of Etheric bubbles encased them, growing brighter as they merged and became one solid Etheric shield. Eliani and Nara added their own Etheric presence and power to the strength of the bubble that now wrapped around all of them. Deia, Mari, Sheva and all the others reached out with whatever power they could add to the shield which only seemed to make it grow even brighter and radiate more brilliantly. Am'uur stood holding tightly to Tastia’s hand between Daba and Re'lon just outside the bubble of Etheric power, all of them looking on in awe at what was taking place.

Xaxon twisted around in every direction seeing the seamless shield that now held him. The misted form tried to shoot up and penetrate the bubble four different times, each time being pushed back with ease.

“You will not escape this time monster!” Murano barked out as he came to stand beside Androcles now.

Xaxon’s shifting form snapped around to glare at Murano and it moved to float in front of him. “You!” He screamed. “Murano... my brother’s favorite pet.”

“I remember you Xaxon!” Murano barked. “And I remember why we punished you the way we did! You will not find that mercy among these Praetorians.”

“These children?” Xaxon laughed. “These children are not Praetorians!”

Murano allowed the smile to split his own face. “These children are far more powerful as Praetorians than we ever were! Sumar became even more powerful after he joined these people. I know that now! They taught him to embrace his emotions and it made him stronger than he ever was. They are his descendants! And together we will exact the punishment upon you that should have been done millennia ago!”

“You know nothing!” The apparition snarled at Murano.

“We have trapped you grandfather.” Andro stated calmly. “You have nowhere to go now. You can’t force yourself upon any of us for we are all better than you ever were! Just as our father was!”

“You don’t know what is coming fool boy!” Xaxon spat at him. “Only I know what is coming! And only I can stop it! Only I know how to stop it!”

Andro shook his head. “No.” He stated firmly. “Whatever is coming... we will face it as Spartans and Lycavorians and vampires. As Drow elves and all other species that stand united. We will face it as we have faced everything in the past and as we will face it into the future. We will face it together.”

“You cannot win fool boy!” Xaxon shouted now shifting his apparition back to face Androcles. “You need me!”

“We do not need your hate and anger.” Murano exclaimed.

“Bah!” Xaxon’s apparition hissed. “I will simply take you child! I will enjoy being within your body and I will do what must be done!”

The black apparition shot straight at Androcles with blinding speed. It was an unexpected move by most of those gathered and it was Sadi who yelled out Andro’s name at the same time as Ne’Veha and Lu’ria as they stepped for him.

“Joa.” Androcles spoke the simple word as he held up his hand in front of him. His azure colored eyes flared brightly until they were glowing like two luminous beacons on a dark night, and his hand clamped around the throat of the black apparition and squeezed. “It ends now!” Andro spoke firmly. “It ends today!”

The screeching sound erupted from the apparition of Xaxon and it caused all of them to cringe even as Murano withdrew the item from the small pack he carried. “Sadi... no! No!” He screamed as he moved between them and Andro. “Don’t touch him!”

“Murano... what... what is happening? Andro is...!” Sadi screamed as Ne'Veha and the others clutched at her their eyes wide.

The black mist that was Xaxon was spreading around Andro's armored hand, moving outward like a disease, the red orbs glowing nearly as bright as Andro's own azure eyes. The black mist reached Andro's elbow before the voice that was Xaxon made his mistake. It was a mistake that would cost him everything.

“I will take you boy!” Xaxon snarled. “And when I have control of you I will partake of the women you have chosen! They will serve me!”

Murano's head snapped around when the voice said that and he knew it was time. A smile split his face and he shook his head knowing exactly how the comment would echo within Androcles. He also knew what the reaction would be. “For all your intelligence Xaxon... you never were very smart! You have sealed your fate fool!” Murano extended his hand out and using his Etheric power he propelled the small box like object directly under where Xaxon floated, Andro's hand on his throat. “Now... do it now Androcles!”

Xaxon's red eyes grew wide when he felt the Etheric resonance that was Androcles Leonidas explode outward. He was Praetorian. He was Dahakoan. He was Lycavorian. But most of all... Androcles Leonidas was a Spartan. He had embraced that life with everything he was from the moment he understood what it meant.

It was like experiencing the burning of a new born star in its brilliance, just as it had been when he had lost control of Martin in their brief fight at SODRAG. The fingers of his power that had extended up Andro's arm were beaten back easily as he felt the overwhelming force of will being projected out by this young man. A force of will he had not felt since his brother lived. It was then that first Dorian and then Deion and then Jomann stepped forward as well and wrapped their fingers around Andro's arm, directing all of their own power as Praetorians into him just as Murano had showed them. Then it was Sadi, Ne'Veha, Lu'ria, Carisia and Sehri moving up behind their beloved husband and mate. That was followed by Eliani and Nara and without hesitation Mari joined them reaching up to firmly grasp Deion's forearm. Sheva and Onera beside Dorian, Brendi not really understanding what was happening and still in shock over what she was witnessing, simply pressed as close to Eliani's petite form as she could. And finally... there was Yuri who stepped forward, moving up beside Deia and laying her hand on Carisia's slim shoulder.

“Never will you harm another member of my family!” Androcles growled as his face took on a look of concentration. “Never will you be allowed to harm an innocent! I curse you Xaxon! I curse you and all you have done! By the blood that runs in my veins. My father's blood... Spartan blood! It ends today! It ends now! Forever!”

With those words echoing on the air, Andro squeezed his fist tighter around the throat of Xaxon's apparition and began to force the black mist down towards the ground. The red orb eyes began to panic and the black mist began to flail about.

“No!” Xaxon screamed. “You don't know what you are doing! I can help you! I know things! I know where they are!”

“You will know nothing but the abyss monster!” Murano screamed as he slapped his palms together and a silver white light burst from the small box he had thrown under the mist. The red eyes went into full panic mode now as the first fingers of the trailing mist were drawn into the box and began to pull even harder.

“No!” Xaxon screamed. “I will have my vengeance! I will...”

“No... you will not!” Andro growled loudly now and shoved down with his hand. Almost like a great broom, an Etheric scoop spread around the black mist completely and Andro pushed down harder with his hand. The words Xaxon was screaming into the wind were no longer understandable as the black mist was drawn into the box unshakably, until all that was left was Andro's hand resting atop the box. Murano moved forward quickly then and grabbed the edges of the box, wrapping his hands around the sides.

Andro's hands covered Murano's in the same instant as his azure eyes began to return to normal. “Dori, Deo, Jomann! Join with Murano and I! Use your Etheric Praetorian codes! Help us to lock it!” He spoke quickly.

The three of them didn't hesitate and they moved even closer, wrapping their large hands around Murano's and their brother, until nothing of the small box could be seen. None of them saw the looks of confusion on the faces of the others as they stood back and witnessed nearly forty thousand years of torment and horror come to an inglorious end.

It did not take long as each of them concentrated and added their own Praetorian codes to the Etheric lock that only they could see within their minds. Then it was done and each of them began to step back slowly while Murano kept the box within his large hands and simply stared at it.

“It... it is done.” He finally spoke the words softly. “It is done.”

That was when all the emotion that had been building came rushing forth as Sadi reached for Androcles a second after he turned for his wives and mates. He drew them all into his arms as best as he was able as they crushed each other to squeeze tighter against him, his Etheric resonance and wolf aura sweeping all around them. Dorian did the same with Sheva and Onera without hesitation, while Onera drew her mother into her embrace and Pa'cour simply placed his hands on Yuri's shoulders. Jomann crushed Eliani and Brendi in his arms and didn't hesitate to pull Deia into that same embrace as Deion did the same with Mari and Nara.

Sadi looked up into the azure eyes that had so captured her heart and soul all those years ago. “Andro... my love?” She questioned. “What did you... what did you just do?”

Andro didn't answer right away and he looked skyward into the cloudless sky, ignoring the bright sunlight that beat down on his face. They all felt him reach out using the last of the ebbing power from his brothers and Jomann, their heads turning to watch his face as his Etheric resonance and power reached away from the planet and across the stars as easily as if he was lifting a glass in a toast.

MANNE

Zarah Leonidas was sitting between Lucia and Eirene as they were enjoying the evening meal. All of them were present at the same table, Elder Valael, Tobia and Tinra joining them as well on the end. There was laughter and happiness at the table, a sense of family and warmth that drew even Tinra into its fold. It was unlike anything she had ever felt.

They all felt it arrive. It could not be missed by any present at the table or in the room for that matter. The Etheric pulse was staggering in its power and all of them saw Zarah's body go rigid as it was directed completely on her. The words thundered in all their minds however, and Zarah gripped Lucia's hand tightly as her other hand clenched on the edge of the table.

Zarah my beloved sister. It is done.

Andro's powerful voice echoed within the Etheric realm though Valael, Tobia and Tinra had no idea what the voice was speaking about. All they saw was Zarah suddenly burst into tears, followed quickly by Isabella and then For'mya as the other Queens reached for them.

“Andro!” Zarah gasped out, tears pouring down her cheeks as Lucia's arms quickly pulled her tighter.

It is done my sister. I made you a promise Zarah. It is done.

Andro's voice echoed once more and Tobia and Tinra could not understand why the young Leonidas daughter was crying so hard. Or why her mothers had begun to allow the tears to spill forth as well. They looked at Martin Leonidas and saw only a twitching of his jaw as if he was trying to hold it all in while the dark haired Aricia was leaning against him, tears also flooding her eyes.

Zarah my beautiful sister. Andro's voice spoke again. Now there is a promise I want you to make to me jonia arande. There is something I know about you that you may or may not already know about yourself Zarah. You have within you more resources of energy than have ever been tapped, more talent than has ever been exploited, more strength than has ever been tested and more to give than you have ever given. Whatever has happened in the past; leave in the past Zarah my sister. Take the hands of those you love and who love you and moved forward into the future now. Without hesitation. Without regret. And without looking back. That door you thought closed is open Zarah. All you need do now is walk through it. That is the promise I want you to make to me.

Zarah turned and looked instantly at Lucia whose own dark eyes were flooded with tears. Pen marvan aur elivonth fervon Androcles. Pen marvan. (I promise my beautiful brother)

The feeling of happiness that flooded from Andro was almost a palpable thing and each of his mothers and his father could not suppress the gasp of delight when they felt that emotion from him. Andro had always been the most guarded with his emotions and feeling this burst of happiness was a rare thing indeed. And it would be treasured.

Then I will see you all soon arande. I wish... I wish to hold my family in my arms once again. It has been too long.

I know. Zarah answered as she leaned into Lucia's embrace. I know.

Tell father that what we spoke of is complete. Andro said. And will never bother us again.

I will fervon. Come soon. Zarah spoke.

They all could hear Andro chuckle and it was then they realized he didn't know that all of them had heard his every word. And face the wrath of our parents if I am late arande? Me? Never!

Zarah couldn't help but burst into laughter as well even as the tears continued to roll down her cheeks. Soon sister. Soon.

UKWAV

"Andro?" Sadi pressed his once more and saw his face lower until his eyes were gazing at them with happiness that they could all clearly see.

"Anyone up for a trip to the Beta Quadrant?" Andro suddenly blurted out as he spun around holding Sadi and Ne'Veha in his arms.

"Jorbhe jainn!" Dorian bellowed. "It's getting to be boring as all hell here."

Sheva's slap was almost instantaneous and the laughter began. It became even louder and more pronounced when Onera did the same thing on his other cheek.

"Hey! No fair!" Dorian blurted out.

Deia smiled as a single tear rolled down her cheek. "And into the unknown they go." She said softly.

CHAPTER THIRTY-SEVEN

SPARTA'S WRATH THE WILDS

Androcles Leonidas leaned against the archway leading from the main room of their quarters into their bed chambers and simply let his eyes gaze upon them as he had so often in the past. He wore only a pair of fresh, dark gray fatigue pants and his combat boots while his upper body was bare. The lush, muscular bodies of his wives and mates were mixed together on the single, exceptionally oversized bed, their limbs thrown over one another haphazardly in every way. The two large sheets barely covered all of them, leaving parts of their bodies in full view and his azure eyes hungrily eyed Lu'ria's large breasts and the curve of Carisia's hips before moving to stare at Ne'Veha's exquisitely shaped and utterly perfect ass.

Androcles had not been able to help himself last night and for the first time in a very long while, he had utterly immersed himself in the smells and womanly delights of all of his wives and mates. Well... not all of them just yet he thought. Caliria was still missing, but she would be back among them soon enough and then they would be complete. As was usually the case, Sadi had been the first and last he had reached for during their tryst, but he had partaken of each and every one of them more than once and relished in their screams of delight and passion. He had loved each of them with all that he was, sometimes two at a time and holding nothing back from them, until they knew his love and desire for them was absolute. Their scents were like a fog of an addicting drug as they swirled around him and he soaked in their essence for hours.

Smiling to himself now, even proud of himself in fact, Andro turned and moved back into the main room and allowed the doors to slide silently shut. They were not needed for anything at the moment or in the near future and he intended that they sleep for as long as they desired. Andro didn't hear the soft groan of delight as Ne'Veha rolled over slowly once the door was closed and pressed against Sadi's back, burying her face into the back of her neck and within her golden blond hair.

“Carians... he is gone.” She gasped softly into Sadi’s ear. “It is safe.”

Sehri lifted her head from where it rested on Sadi’s abdomen and looked at the door. “Are we sure he won’t come back?” She stammered.

Sadi was the one who laughed gently as she lifted her head and glanced at the door. “I think we are safe.”

“Phraktos... he is a beast.” Lu'ria commented with a blissful smile.

Carisia couldn’t help the contented smile that she sported on her face as her head rested on Lu'ria’s shoulder. “Yes... but he is our beast.”

“Yes he is.” Lu'ria added.

“We certainly did not see that coming.” Sadi said with another smile as she stretched her arms above her head and basked in the joyful soreness she felt. That they all felt she knew, for Androcles had each of them multiple times last night and their cries of bliss had filled the room. Her arm slipped around Ne'Veha’s shoulder and she waited until Ne'Veha’s head came to rest on her breast before she tightened her grip.

“It was different this time though Sadi.” Ne'Veha spoke. “He was... he was so happy and joyful and eager.”

Sadi nodded her head in agreement. “I think... I think it is because he is truly happy that this business is done. That those who hurt his family have been dealt with.”

“I could see it in his eyes KertaGai. Whenever he kissed one of us, or just gazed at one of us. I have never... no man has ever looked at me like that. Just seeing the desire and love for us in his eyes made me...” Lu'ria spoke softly.

“Yes... I saw it too. I think we all saw it. He was so... he held nothing back from us. Any of us. It was glorious.” Sadi said wistfully. “I believe we will begin to see a new husband and mate now. And I am so happy that we are all here to see and feel it. And we will be complete when Caliria is back in our arms.”

“Will it always be so... so intense when we are together like this?” Sehri asked as she returned her head to Sadi’s stomach. “I know I have asked that question before but I could not tell where one of us began and the other ended. It was so sinful and decadent. There were lips and tongues everywhere...” She smiled and closed her eyes. “Carians... I loved it!”

“Luckily for us... yes... I think now it will be. And it will be even more decadent and sinful when our Inamarno returns to us and joins us.” Sadi answered with a playful laugh as they all chuckled. “Do any of you regret what he makes you feel?”

“Regret?” Lu'ria blurted. “The only thing that I regret is that I can not keep my wits about me long enough for it to last even more. His scent, his resonance and aura, it drives me...”

“Utterly insane.” Sadi spoke knowingly.

“Gods... yes.” Ne'Veha muttered.

“This... this was meant to be.” Lu'ria spoke softly. “All of us being together with him. Loving each other as well as Andro. Making each other sing while his aura dances all around us.”

Sadi closed her eyes and smiled to herself. This was certainly not what she had imagined the first night she had seen him as an eight month old infant all those years ago. Sharing her life and pleasure with five other women and Androcles. Sehri was right. It was decadent and sinful. And it was exactly how the gods of fate and destiny intended it to be.

“Hmmm... now that he is gone though, we can actually get some sleep.” Carisia spoke as she snuggled closer to Lu'ria. “I can hardly move I am so worn out.”

“I will be fidgeting for a full day.” Ne'Veha added letting her hand drop to caress her ass cheek as she laid there.

Lu'ria laughed gently. “You are the one who told him to do it SirsanGai.” She said as they all giggled.

“Beggd him was more like it!” Carisia laughed.

Ne'Veha grinned broadly. “And it was certainly divine!” She stated.

“Pomai.” Sehri hissed at her playfully from across Sadi’s flat, powerfully built abdomen. Now that she was fully wolf, Sehri had noticed right away that her body had become leaner and even more muscular. While Sadi was the largest among them while in wolf form, Sehri matched Ne'Veha and Lu'ria in size easily when running in her wolf form. The wolf metabolism within her now that it was fully active was exceptional and just the few short training classes she had with Lu'ria had begun to hone her figure into one of lean, lush and powerful firmness. Now that Carisia was back among them her training would become even more strenuous and exhaustive she knew, but the payoffs were beyond anything Sehri had ever imagined. Sehri had never anticipated herself being so happy and knowing that it would continue forever made her beyond joyful. Ne'Veha smiled broadly at her before lowering her head and they shared a deep kiss of love and affection.

They all laughed even more as they cuddled closer together and allowed sleep to finally take them into its peaceful embrace. They knew Androcles would see to it that they were not disturbed in any way. The last thing they felt before drifting off into a fully contented sleep was Andro's staggering wolf and Etheric aura pulse all of them with his love. Even Sehri, new wolf that she was, even she felt the glorious nature of his wolf aura and Carisia basked in the aura of his Etheric resonance which swirled around her tightly and did the same to her that his wolf aura did to the others.

It was something that none of them could live without.

"...enter orbit of Austrova in just under twelve hours." Sa'sur was speaking from her Ready Room on the SCIMITAR. Andro sat behind the large desk in his own Ready Room as he sipped the large mug of his mother's coffee, his booted feet resting on top of the desk. "When we completed our last jump to get here, I ordered half our force to remain under Shroud. There is no telling how many of these OSG assholes might be about. Better to keep our full numbers hidden. No need to let them know we are here to clean up the trash."

Andro nodded his head. "Agreed." He stated as he sipped his coffee. "Have you had a chance to go over the plan Denali put together?"

Sa'sur nodded her head. "It's very sound. I would make only a few minor adjustments to the overall operational concept, mainly with disposition of forces. He's nearly as methodic as you and Resumar, though obviously not as reckless." She looked up from the pad and glanced at Andro in the holotransmission. He grinned at her for he knew she would never have allowed him to assault Moran's ship as they had.

At least not without her at his side.

Sa'sur saw the look in his eyes however and became serious. They had worked together and been friends for far too long for him to hide much from her and she knew something was up. "You are worried about something though?"

"They have returned to Austrova." Andro told her. "Deni pulled them to the Protectorate homeworld for a few weeks because he feared whoever is aligned with the OSG in the Vanari government would try to remove them and make it look like rogue Lycavorians. Those among my people who are working with them. Caliria and Arduri have begun to change slightly and Inamarno let this slip by accident when confronted with this Franklin midaeus. Deni pulled them off Austrova with Coren in order to protect them."

"Change slightly?" Sa'sur asked. "I didn't think the virus in your blood could change a Vanari."

Andro nodded his head. "It won't." He answered. "Not like elves or humans anyway. But it will alter their genetic makeup in such a way that there will be changes. Eyes. Fangs. Eli tried to explain it to me but like father... it gave me a headache."

"It worked obviously." Sa'sur said.

"It was a sound move by Deni... whatever they were planning they could not execute because of their location. Attacking them on Lorent would have opened up a world of hurt that they don't need right now. It appears as if the OSG obviously does not have as long a reach as they like to think nor do they have as much support among the Lycavorians there or they would have acted while they were on Lorent. Now that they are back on Austrova however... I'm not so sure. They seem to be very prevalent on Austrova."

"Which I find odd considering that the Vanari don't trust them anymore than they do us." Sa'sur said. "Or so they say."

"It is odd isn't it?" Andro said. "It makes me wonder just how many of the Vanari Board of Regents is working with or know of the ties to the OSG and what they are doing."

"You think they would do something so blatant as attacking Deni, Arduri and the others on the Vanari homeworld? That would mean Coren as well. Going after a member of their Board of Regents is no small affair from what I understand." Sa'sur asked.

“To save their asses and whatever profits they are making... yes. To keep the truth about what they are doing from the whole of the Vanari people... yes.” Andro answered her. “And so does Coren. Inamarno's father has more steel in his backbone than even I first thought. Now that the fear of whatever plagued him is gone, he sees what is going on. An attack against Deni and the others by Lycavorians from the Protectorate would only reinforce the mentality that many of the Vanari have about my people. A mentality the Board of Regents has been nurturing for centuries.” Andro dropped his feet and leaned forward across his desk. “Sa'sur, I want you to assume command and control when you arrive. Denali is not comfortable being in charge of so many. He is a superior small unit tactician and that is where his specialties lie. He knows it and he acknowledges it.”

“You are sure? I don't want to step on Denali's command.” Sa'sur asked. “I won't screw around with fools Andro. You know that.” Sa'sur asked.

Andro nodded his head. “Yes... Deni even eluded to it the last time I spoke to him. I have it on excellent information that General Vengal and General Vistr are pushing father very hard to allow Deni to be transferred to their command. They want to groom him to take command of all the Union's Special Operations units so that Vistr can concentrate on his CFFG and Vengal can direct all of his focus on the Durcunusaan. I agree with them. Lisisa and Arduri are both small unit operators and this only enhances his status and knowledge.”

Sa'sur nodded her head in acknowledgement. “Very nice.” She said.

“I like Deni's plan as well.” Andro continued. “It's simple enough, yet broad in scope. It will allow us to hit as many bases as we can in the first few hours. Dutkne says they have more than enough forces to do it alone but with our ships now added into the mix we can do more far more damage.”

“I understand there was some disagreement with Denali's plan within the Protectorate ranks at first.” Sa'sur said.

Andro nodded. “A senior General did not like the way we do things.” He told her. “In essence he says we are trigger happy.”

Sa'sur snorted loudly in disgust and shook her head. “Nubou him!” She spat. “No offense against the Protectorate, but we've been getting by just fine without them for thousands of years thank you very much. We've been fighting for our very existence since the Black Day. Have they even fought anything bigger than a pirate engagement? We've been doing this for a whole lot longer than they have Andro. This is what we excelled at!”

Andro chuckled and nodded his head. “My sentiments exactly. And no they haven't. Which is why Dutkne and their overall military leader gave this man the boot very quickly.” He said. “They are keeping him under surveillance. According to Dutkne there are far more of our people working with the Vanari slavers and OSG than he first thought. Not as many as he had first thought but far more than he hoped. When we move... we'll roll them up as well.”

“You realize that doing this might not change anyone's minds about us?” Sa'sur said. “I don't question our actions... you know how I feel about slavery and such... but even when we do this... it may well backfire.”

Andro nodded. “I know. It's a risk I'm willing to take.” He replied. “Given how many of these Lycanari there are on Lorent... that tells me that many every day Vanari do not feel as their government feels.”

“Are Deni and the others in danger Andro?” Sa'sur asked bluntly.

Andro nodded his head. “More so than when they first arrived I believe.” He said. “When you get there Sa'sur I also want you to cut loose the other Durcunusaan teams to Deni covertly. He'll know what to do with them. And give Paga one of the Drow Scout units. Inamarno is still a threat to the OSG and others within the Vanari government because of what she knows and what she can do and I will see to it that she is protected. Whoever is running things and is in charge is going to come after them sooner or later and I think they will try before I get there.”

“That means they will have to move within the next day or two.” Sa'sur said.

Andro nodded in agreement. “They still think I won't be there for another few weeks so perhaps not, but I'm willing to bet they have sources that know I am on the move and I believe it will happen quickly now that they are back on Austrova. If they were planning to do it before they went to Lorent then all the pieces are still in place. That is why I advanced our schedule as I did. Now that Moran and Dante are dealt with, which happened a lot sooner than I had ever hoped for, we can begin moving.”

“We were due some luck Andro.” Sa'sur said softly.

Andro nodded. "Yes we were. Imagine the surprise of the Vanari when we pop in and say hi."

"How soon before you begin jump prep?" Sa'sur asked with a smile and shake of her head knowing Andro was loving this game more than he let on to anyone.

"Armen says we can be ready to go by the end of the day today." Andro replied. "Our first jump is scheduled for zero nine hundred tomorrow. The second at fourteen hundred. We should be there by tomorrow evening. Armen says we could do it in one jump but he still wants to work the kinks out of the main engines before really spooling them up."

"Bastard!" Sa'sur hissed at him. "I just spent the last three days jumping through hoops as we traveled here. Do you know what a pain in the ass it is to keep three hundred and thirty-four ships in order while you are jumping a gazillion light years every nine hours?"

"Sa'sur... I have faith in you!" Andro exclaimed. "And I did get your husband and his ship transferred to your command. That has to count for something?"

"And you are damn lucky you did that. At least he can sate my blood when something screwy takes place." Sa'sur stated playfully.

"We have to wait for Elynth and Anthar to return with Marux anyway. They found him... barely alive and half starved. It took some talking for him to believe she wasn't there to kill him but without Dante's twisted mind and Xaxon's influence clouding his judgment I think he sees more clearly now." Andro said.

"Are you sure keeping him on SPARTA'S WRATH is such a good idea?" Sa'sur asked.

"He is safer here." Andro answered her. "The Elder Mother is with my father and Elder Syrilth already has too much to worry about on Earth. She and Uncle Ben's people are working on getting the adolescent dragons with father back to Earth so they can adjust properly. No... I will keep him here and we will help him to recover."

"Well... I won't argue with you about that." Sa'sur said.

"Has anyone contacted you since you entered the Quadrant?" Andro asked her.

"A Vanari ship met us just outside of their space within an hour of completing the jump." Sa'sur answered. "It's travelling with us now. It had a member of their Board of Regents on it. She transferred over quickly with a few military people... but she is a stuck up, arrogant upaee. At least that is how she comes across to most of us. She started out trying to tell me how to fly my ship as we entered Vanari space! Their military people just stood there and shook their heads."

Andro nodded his head. "That sounds like what Coren described they would do. He said to expect more of the same. At least until I arrive... and then they will turn all nice and happy to see us. It is an interesting signal from their military however. We may be able to use that in the future. Perhaps they do not agree on everything that the Board of Regents is doing."

"To save their trade contracts... no doubt." Sa'sur said. "You still plan on sticking to that I hope?"

Andro nodded his head. "The Union can replace whatever the Vanari provide to the Protectorate right now. If they force my hand then I will do exactly what Denali told them I would do. Dutkne is already working on setting up a travel corridor that will bypass Vanari space all together."

"And the Rothryn?" Sa'sur asked.

Andro sat back in his chair. "Sehri's mother and I had a long talk just before she left with you. She will talk with him when she arrives." He said. "And I will speak with Praetor Dyack when we get there and insure he knows the truth. I believe he was given the wrong information intentionally by this Circle Shaman that traveled with Sehri and not her sisters. This Shaman Harira person... she is more than she wants everyone to think she is and this Rothryn Science Academy concerns me."

Sa'sur nodded. "I read the report. You are thinking the same thing I am then I take it?"

Andro nodded. "They are not training those who show exceptional Etheric skills to better use them... they are controlling them. Perhaps forcing them to do the bidding of whoever is in charge of this Academy. Lady Aleatia has said they have almost absolute power in this area and even the government under Dyack really has no say in what they do."

"Religious fanatics." Sa'sur said. "Gods... they are the worse."

Andro turned when the door to his Ready Room opened and Jomann led Yuri and Pa'cour in. His Durcunusaan Captain and now closest friend was the only one outside of his wives and family that would dare simply walk in here unannounced. He turned back to Sa'sur.

“Sa'sur... advise when you have established orbit.” He said. “I'll keep you up to date on our status and if all goes well we should see you sometime tomorrow evening.”

Sa'sur nodded. “Understood. SCIMITAR out.”

Andro got to his feet and came around in front of his desk to stand in front of Yuri and Pa'cour. “You are departing?” He spoke.

Yuri nodded her head. “We need to get back to Veyera and finish the refit of the INQUISITOR. Removing Robert's stench is not as easy as I had hoped it would be.” She stated with a touch of disgust in her voice. “And you are getting ready to leave.”

“Carisia? Onera?” Andro asked.

“We said our goodbyes last night.” Yuri told him. “Onera is typically Akruixian when it comes to goodbyes and she is too excited about what she will experience out here among the stars with you and the others.”

“Yuri...” Andro began.

“No.” Yuri told him. Andro watched as she took Pa'cour's hand in her own and squeezed tightly. “Pa'cour and I made this decision knowing full well what it means Androcles. She needs to learn how to control what she can do. The only place she can do that is here among you and the others.”

“We will take good care of her.” Andro said. “And you have access to a QCR now. Do not be afraid to use it Yuri.”

Yuri's head canted to the side. “That was not expected Androcles. Your QCRs are some of your most secret and guarded military advances.”

Andro smiled. “Yes... but I don't think you will be selling it in The Wilds. Not that any of those fools could figure out how to work it anyway.” He stated.

Pa'cour chuckled softly and nodded. “True enough.” He said.

“We need to remain in touch and while the standard sub space channels are sufficient enough, the QCR is quicker and real time. I'd like you to keep me apprised of how Professor Lidene is coming with the weapons systems as well.” Andro told her.

“It's slow going but he is fairly certain he can come up with a few things now that the Drones are assisting.” Yuri said.

“If you need something that you can not obtain and that your contacts within the Union could get for you, my Aunt Deia has already suggested you contact her.” Andro told her.

Yuri looked at him stunned. “Deia?” She gasped.

“You and Pa'cour brought her sister home to her Yuri and allowed her to finally say goodbye. What you did after they died Pa'cour... to honor them... that can never be repaid.” Andro told them. “Regardless of what you think you may know... that one action earned you and Pa'cour more trust than you will ever truly understand. And it allowed my tenna Deia to know you have fully turned the corner in your life.”

Yuri looked up into Pa'cour's face which was usually stoic but she saw the hint of deep respect in his dark eyes now. “We thank you.” He spoke.

Andro nodded his head. “I imagine that you will also be working on what you had to see my father about?”

Yuri's dark eyes grew a little wider. “You...”

“Know what it is all about?” Andro said. “No.”

“Then...”

“I know my father well enough to know that it must not be good if he has not contacted me about it.” Andro said. “And if you felt the need to only speak with him, then it probably has something to do with what you found in your mother's files. About me. Or how I would react to something in those files. Which is to say... not well.”

“I wouldn't jump to conclusions Androcles.” Yuri said.

“I'm not.” He stated. “I'm merely deducing things given what I know. Which is nothing to be honest.”

Yuri felt a sense of relief wash over her but she hid it well. “When the time comes I'm sure he will tell you.” She said.

Andro chuckled. “I am not so sure... my father can be a closed mouth bastard when he wants to be. You should know that. That is something you and he had decided to deal with on your own so I will not concern myself with it. I trust you both to know what you are doing.” He moved back to his desk and took the data pad from the surface. He turned back to them and held it out to Pa'cour. “I am having two dozen more Worker Drones transferred to you. With the extra power core from SPARTA'S WRATH powering their production line, we are building them as quickly as possible to assist our own engineers. Use them to help refit the ships you have with the new engine specs and the shield modifications that Carisia gave to you. Pontal and my grandfather are already working on doing the same with the High Coven fleet. You will need both of them going into the future. Treat them...”

“What?” Yuri asked him as she took the pad.

“They are not just machines even though we are building them.” Andro told her. “Like Avi and Armen they can think and learn and process on their own. Treat them as individuals and I think you will find they can do a lot more than you know.”

Yuri nodded her head as she looked at him. “Are you saying they are sentient?”

Andro shrugged his broad shoulders. “I’m saying that Avi and Armen are not simple machines to be used. The Drones appear to be similar in nature. They kept nearly two hundred dragon eggs alive for over five thousand years with no guidance and directions except for their own. That ought to tell you something about what they are capable of.”

“I will see to it.” Yuri said.

Pa'cour looked up from the pad. “You are giving us the specs to your Body Armor.” He asked.

Andro nodded his head. “Neither of you is out of danger and you know it.” He told them. “With Moran and Dante out of the picture... our enemies will undoubtedly turn their attention not only towards my aunt and Narice... but also you and Pa'cour. You may not be a Princess of the High Coven any longer Yuri but I have a sense that you and Pa'cour have become even more important in the overall scheme of things.”

“That sense... your intuition... it is extremely frightening at times. You do know that don't you?” Yuri said.

Andro smiled. “It scares the hell out of me too. There will be others, even among the High Coven, who will believe if they take you and Pa'cour out of the equation, they can then move on Narice.”

“I will not allow that.” Yuri hissed.

Andro nodded his head. “I know. That is why I am doing this. And with the way things are developing between Onera, Sheva and Dorian... well I think you already know about that.”

“We approve Androcles.” Pa'cour said quickly.

“I was hoping you would say that.” Andro spoke. “It happened rather quickly for all of them... probably because Dorian is like me in many respects but I know my brother and Sheva are very happy it did. And they are not being shy about embracing it.”

Yuri nodded. “As is Onera.” She said. “And I could not ask for a man who will love and cherish her more than your brother Androcles.”

Andro looked at her and smiled a warm smile. It was an expression that made Yuri briefly think of what things would have been like if her mother and father had embraced these people so long ago instead of trying to destroy and enslave them. She had thought a lot about that recently and Yuri knew things would be so very different if they had.

“Things are not working out exactly as you had envisioned are they?” Andro asked her.

Yuri met his gaze. “Phraktos no!” She blurted out instantly. “I certainly never envisioned things working out as they have! Not once.”

“And do you regret any of it?” Andro asked.

Yuri took a deep breath and looked at Pa'cour with a brilliant smile of love and devotion before turning back to him. “Not one bit.” She answered firmly.

“Then let's keep building on that.” Andro said.

Yuri reached out and took Pa'cour's hand in her own. “We intend to.” She said.

Andro motioned for the door. “I will walk you to the landing bay. Since you gave The Tears of Heaven to Carisia... I have something I would like to give to you in return.”

MANNE BASE ONE

“...is maintaining its course and speed.” Martin spoke to the image of Delnash in the QCR.

Wayonn, Tobia and Valael sat with them at the table, both of them surprised at being included in this transmission as well as the level of sophistication of the QCR. It had been nearly three days since they had arrived and both of them were still in a state of shock at how easily they had been accepted among the Lycavorians and the other species that traveled with Martin Leonidas. Whatever had occurred in the past, the deaths of their comrades on Onterom, whatever anger or distrust that was felt was not directed at them in any way. It was almost as if these men and women knew that Valael and Tobia as well as the military officers and crew of the ship they had arrived on were friends and allies they could rely on.

“Yuriko and her ship are shadowing them pretty close. Closer than I would like really... but she is certain that they seem to lack the ability or skills to use the more advanced equipment some of those ships had on them.” Martin continued.

Delnash nodded his head in agreement from his office as he looked out the window over the city. He turned to face them as he answered. “I have had some people I trust completely begin going over the data that Anja gathered and they agree with this assessment. The Svorag are adapting... but it would appear that they still cannot comprehend higher functions. It would be much easier to determine what exactly is happening with the data that Lorendo undoubtedly has access too... but...”

“Do not risk yourself or your people in trying to find out Chief Elder!” Wayonn spoke instantly from his chair next to Martin. “Many of Lorendo’s secrets have to be on his computer and Avi will break the encryption eventually.”

Delnash shook his head. “I do not intend to Wayonn. Things need to change and I am not going to risk that by being foolish.” He replied. “You believe the original time table is accurate then Martin?”

Marin nodded as he lowered his mug of Aricia’s coffee. “We can be pretty accurate based on the data we have and unless something changes... they’ll arrive over Honelze in just under seven weeks.”

“Why not come directly for Artaaya Martin?” Delnash asked. “Why go after our colony world and not come right for our main planet, our seat of power, with the numbers that they have?”

“I’ve been asking myself that same question.” Martin said. “I think I may have an answer that neither of us is going to like very much.”

“Why do I sense this answer is neither helpful nor appealing to what we are trying to do here on Artaaya?” Delnash asked.

“That’s me.” Martin said. “The harbinger of doom and gloom.”

“What is your theory?” Delnash asked with a slight shake of his head and smile.

Martin leaned forward in his chair. “I think we have two different scenarios actually. The first is pretty remote if you ask me, but the head Svorag, their leader if you will, he is much more advanced than the others and he is keeping them from evolving by whatever means he has available. That is why we haven’t seen him or her so far in our encounters.”

Delnash returned to his chair as they saw Avatar 27 enter the office. “That would imply that the Svorag have some sort of advanced society that we have not seen Martin.” Delnash spoke as he sat down. “Their behavior so far to date does not support this.”

Martin shook his head. “No... it doesn’t.”

“For lack of a better definition they have always been more of a nuisance than anything else really.” Delnash said. “They have been more nomadic and scattered until recently. We have certainly never seen them in such numbers or using such advanced equipment or ships as we have seen in our last few encounters.”

“That’s why you are going to like the second scenario even less.” Martin told him.

“Oh please... indulge me. I just love bad news.” Delnash spoke sarcastically and this drew smiles from both Wayonn and Martin.

“The second scenario is that someone is controlling them.” Martin said. “Someone is giving them their orders and where to go and what to do.”

“By someone I assume you mean the Scourge?” Delnash asked with wide eyes.

Martin shook his head. “No. By someone... I mean Lorendo.”

“Lorendo!” Delnash gasped.

“That fat ronnus is the one who developed and perfected this virus as a weapon.” Martin spoke. “Anja has been able to confirm that without difficulty sir, just by going through the parts of the logs Avi has been able to recover from the science station and decrypt from Lorendo’s own P9. The only question, well the biggest one anyway, that we can’t answer right now is whether he intended it to fight the Scourge should they return at some future date, or use them for his own means.”

Delnash met Martin’s gaze directly. “His own means? You mean to... to take control.” He stated.

Martin nodded. “As much as it pains me to say... yes. Why else make something like this? He had to have a means of control if he was going to use them in a such a way.”

“Martin they are beasts!” Delnash exclaimed. “Operating on pure instinct!”

“Even beasts can be tamed sir.” Martin spoke.

“That... Martin what you are suggesting is incomprehensible.” Delnash stammered.

“Is it?” Wayonn asked with no malice in his voice. “Or is it just something that is so far out there that it is too hard to believe. That we don’t want to believe it?”

“You are suggesting that an Elder of the Pralor people is using his skills and talents to create and support a genetically modified army to turn against his own people!” Delnash stated. “I... I can not bring myself to believe that he is capable of such a thing.”

“Yet you are able to believe that he intentionally falsified critical star chart updates that our Seed mission needed to avoid a Class Nine ion storm. An ion storm that crippled five City ships and resulted in the deaths of millions of our people. An act that altered the very fabric of the society of hundreds of different species through the millennia within the Alpha Quadrant. And eventually cost more than a trillion lives. More than half of them Lycavorian.” Wayonn spoke.

“What?” Tobia gasped now looking at Delnash’s figure in the transmission. “Chief Elder... what does Wayonn mean?”

Delnash looked at him. “The evidence that 27 has procured provides substantial proof of this Wayonn... yes... but what you are suggesting is... it is even more monstrous than what he did on Onterom or what he perpetrated with the City ships.”

Martin nodded his head. “That goes without saying. And to be honest... I believe the body count is going to continue to climb until we figure it out and stop him.” He said.

They watched Delnash rise to his feet again and move back around his desk. He went to the large window in his office once more and gazed out over the capital city. “By all the spirits within the Rift of Time.” He spoke softly. “That would mean he has... he has been planning and supporting this for far longer than we believe.”

Wayonn nodded once more. “At least since the end of the war Chief Elder.” He stated. “More than likely since right after the Pralor people took up residence on Artaaya. Perhaps even during your journey there.”

“It also means he has more of a power base than we first thought.” Martin spoke. “You may have announced free elections, but don’t doubt for a second he is planning to counter that. He for sure does not want you elected freely by the people.”

“Are you saying he would resort to violence?” Delnash asked.

“I’m saying exactly that.” Martin stated. “But I also think Lorendo is realizing he has a major problem on his hands.”

Delnash looked at him in the transmission. “He has lost control.” Delnash stated softly.

Martin nodded his head. “Perhaps not locally... those he has around him and supporting him... but overall that’s a pretty safe bet. Why else act as he has acted since he discovered I was around?” He continued. “That is why he killed the men and women in cryo stasis. He did not want us finding out what they were really doing there, or that the Svorag are truly beginning to adapt and evolve more than he ever intended them too. As we used to say in the Teams... he is moving to cover his ass.”

“It is the only reason he would have locked the facility down with Praetorian command codes Delnash. You know that.” Wayonn said. “He did not believe there were any still alive with the Etheric power to trigger the station’s systems. He did not know about Murano and he certainly didn’t know or realize that Martin and the others existed.”

“How could he?” Valael spoke for the first time now. “All of our Quadrant monitoring probes and stations were destroyed by the Scourge. He had no idea that Sumar and you did what you did by merging our people with the Lycavorians Wayonn. If he had, he would have known that the blood of any of Sumar’s descendants would remain undiluted and very potent no matter who it mixed with. The same goes for you Wayonn and any Praetorians that accompanied you and their descendants among the Lycavorian people.”

“Jomann’s descendants for starters.” Martin said with a nod. “He’s the only one outside of my family who has the active Praetorian gene at the moment.”

“I would not expect that to remain so.” Tobia spoke softly.

Delnash, Valael and Wayonn looked at her but Martin sat back in his chair with a slight grin on his face. “I don’t.” Martin said.

“What do you mean Tobia?” Delnash asked.

“She means that as soon as Shiria and Deia get rolling on this program they have worked out to find those with the Praetorian gene, she is going to find quite a few among my people who have the active gene.” Martin said.

“We assumed that already Martin.” Wayonn said. “Why do you have the look on your face though?”

“Because Tobia is a Praetorian as well Wayonn.” Martin said crossing his arms over his broad chest. “And she is beginning to realize why my grandfather did what he did concerning her.”

“What?!” Wayonn gasped as his eyes went to her. “Tobia?”

Tobia looked at Martin for a long moment. “I should have guessed this would have been part of the skills passed down within Sumar’s blood. It is how he discovered me so long ago. How long have you known?” She asked him softly.

“Since the moment I realized you were Mari’s mother and I felt your resonance.” Martin said. He touched his nose. “It’s all in the nose.”

“What?” Valael gasped even louder.

“I should have suspected that your sense of smell would detect it when you met me. And that you would have felt the Etheric spike when Delnash told me where Mari was.” She said sheepishly. “I did not realize it until after Delnash had told me where Mari was and who she was with. I... I should have guessed that anyone of Sumar’s blood would know instantly.”

“Of course!” Wayonn gasped now as he gazed at her and realization hit him as well. “That is why her Etheric resonance is so powerful and how she knows to shield so well. You taught her.” He looked at Tobia now. “Mari is not only yours and Murano’s daughter; she is also a Praetorian as well isn’t she?”

“Wait! Wait!” Valael exclaimed. “Someone tell me what is going on here!”

“Tobia...” Delnash spoke as he returned to his chair. “... Now is not the time to keep things hidden. Is what Martin and Wayonn are saying... is it true?”

Tobia looked at him. “Yes.” She answered.

“How?” Delnash gasped.

“Sumar discovered me when I was only two years old.” She said. “Right before the end of the first war with the Scourge. He kept me and my parents hidden from everyone. My... my ability allows me to shrink my Etheric resonance to miniscule levels. Not even Murano could detect what I was. He wanted... he wanted me to teach this ability to all Praetorians when I became old enough. Sumar’s instructions to my parents at the time... instructions they passed on to me when I became of age... they were to keep me safe for I would be part of the future of the Praetorians. He left them a copy of the Tomes and when it was discovered he and you were lost Wayonn, they gave them to me to study and learn from.”

“He never told me you existed.” Wayonn said. “He must have done it for the same reason he left Murano behind.” Wayonn said now as he turned and looked at Martin.

Martin looked at him. “What?”

“To discover and teach the Praetorians of the future.” Wayonn said. “Even then... even back then Sumar knew you and the others would eventually arrive Martin. He mentioned it to me on several occasions but I always thought he was just hoping. He knew!”

“I believe he knew Murano and I would be drawn to each other when we finally did meet each other.” Tobia said softly. “It is the way of things between Praetorians. We will always be drawn to another Praetorian first. Or one who has the gene within them. At least in a romantic way. It’s almost as if the gene knows who will be the most compatible for us. I did not fight it to be sure. I did not want to. Murano was... he is so handsome and proud. And Murano did not fight it either. At least not at first.”

“This is why you have never searched for another husband?” Valael asked.

Tobia nodded her head. “As I told Delnash so recently... Murano is the only man I could possibly love. Who I still love. With all that I am. I just could not let Mari be affected by the pain he was inflicting upon himself at his perceived failures.”

“That’s why he doesn’t know who she is?” Martin asked.

“I wanted to tell him Martin. I wanted to tell him so badly, but I also knew that unless he purged the inner demons that plagued him he could never be the father that Mari needed.” Tobia said.

Martin nodded slowly. “You don’t have to explain it to me. Or to anyone.” He said.

“Does Mari know what she is?” Wayonn asked.

Tobia shook her head. “I have never told her and I have never trained her in anything more than how to shield her Etheric resonance. Even from her father. He may suspect Mari is somewhat different after being around her so recently but unless she drops her natural shielding completely or tells him, he will not discover it.”

Martin leaned forward. “The situation with Mari will work itself out. It has already begun down that path.” He spoke.

Tobia looked at him. “What... what do you mean?” She asked.

“You should probably talk to Aricia and my mates sometime soon Tobia.” Martin told her. “Right now we have bigger concerns.”

“What do you mean?” Tobia asked again.

“Trust me.” Martin told her meeting her eyes from across the table.

“Yes.” Tobia said nodding in agreement as she looked at him with many questions in her eyes. That was something she sensed in Martin Leonidas almost immediately. She trusted him though she had never met him before coming here. “You are correct.”

“Anja, Duewa and Radra have been going through the files Avi has decrypted so far. All of them agree that somewhere along the line in his sick experimentations Lorendo introduced something into the Svorag DNA that has now caused them to mutate into something he can no longer control.” Martin spoke. “The ones he has lost direct control over have now spread and evolved into what they are now. Something far out of his sphere of control and he is scared. I believe it has something to do with what took place with Teniri and the ship she sent back to gather Arzoal and the other dragons from Elear.”

“So you don’t believe him concerning that?” Delnash didn’t phrase the statement as a question for he no longer believed that either.

“I wouldn’t believe anything that bastard has to say even if he was telling the truth about it.” Martin snarled. “Since Teniri is here... she and Arzoal are putting a timeline together on what took place back then. It is slow going since so much happened after Teniri and the others met up with you Delnash... but they will figure it out. You sent the two Pralors who survived the events of Elear and who knew Arzoal as a Pralor. They traveled with Teniri to finally meet you. They were overjoyed to see her again by the way and now they can hopefully get it done. Then we will have a base to work off of.”

“So you believe these Svorag headed for Honelze are under Lorendo’s control?” Valael asked.

Martin shook his head. “No... these are the ones he has lost control of.” He answered him quickly. “At least that is what Anja believes and I happen to agree. She may be a tiny thing and have a wicked temper as well as a sharp tongue... but she is by far the most intelligent person I have ever met and when it comes to this kind of stuff... I don’t question her. Period. She has forgotten more about this stuff than most of us have ever learned.”

I heard that you big oaf! Anja’s voice echoed within the Etheric realm and those in the room all smiled for she did not shield the comment.

“From what Radra has told me about her... I am inclined to agree.” Valael said.

“How do you suggest I proceed forward now Martin?” Delnash asked him now. “You are, tactically speaking, the most experienced person anywhere to be found in this quadrant of space by far. I’m quite sure Murano would agree with that assessment.”

“I want to cut lose a unit of my engineers Chief Elder. Most of those that Andro sent and came with Manda are from the 1st Elven Engineer Brigade. They are the very best that we have and they have been working with all the technology we learned since I brought City Ship 41 to Earth. Manda has a woman on her ship as part of her crew. Zaala Randall. She is the one who came up with the design of the Hyper Matter Fusion Engines that our ships are using. She is my adopted sister Tarifa’s younger sister and she has been working on this since day one. She is on the ARIZONA and working as her Chief Engineer Consultant. Her husband is the Air Wing Commander for Manda’s Fleet.”

“She is an elven female then? I remember from the information on your history that this sister you refer to... Tarifa... she is an elf.” Valael asked.

Martin nodded his head. “And she is just as drop dead beautiful as her sister.” He said. “Tarifa and I... this all began with Tarifa, Dysea, Anja and I when we returned to Earth after the passing of the Comet. We just... we just began to call ourselves brother and sister through the years and it stuck. There are a few Lycavorians and vampires in that group but they are our best and brightest like I said. Manda is my Sector Commander and she also wants to send some ships. We’ll need to begin working together with your ships to better coordinate.” Martin told him. “I want to send them all to Honelze to take stock of what we have and begin to prepare defensive fortifications and get a feel for the area of space we will be working in.”

Delnash nodded instantly. “Of course... I expected as much. Teniri and the Dragon Elder Council here on Artaaya have already chosen two dozen dragons to travel to Honelze to assist as I’m sure she has made you aware. They will be departing within the next day or two. I have also received Garan’s recommendations and will be sending a small force of men that are under his command. He wishes to have them trained as he has been training.”

“What do we tell the people Chief Elder?” Valael asked now. “They will surely begin to question what is going on when others from different species begin arriving on their colony.”

“I believe 27 has already come up with a plan for that.” Delnash spoke now. “Since Lorendo is the one who has made your presence known to our people Martin... we are going to use that as our jumping point. Tinra’s people here are still reviewing the information I provided to them as well as comparing it to what Lorendo told them. The settlers on Honelze are among the more... liberal and open minded of our people if you will. They are among those who did not agree with how the government was being run even before the war ended. Most of them were and still are dire hard supporters of your grandfather’s methods and teachings. I think you will find them far more accepting than those on Artaaya, at least for the moment. I understand that you gave your interview with Tinra yesterday. You are not wasting any time I see.”

“There’s no point in it.” Martin explained. “When things begin to happen it’s going to be fast and furious. I’d rather not have to deal with mistrust and arrogance then.”

Delnash nodded. “I agree. When are Aricia and the others doing theirs?”

“Later today I believe.” Martin answered. “I wanted Tinra to move quickly so that we can get our people to Honelze faster. If the interviews go out on your channels before they arrive... if the Pralor people see them... see that we are not what Lorendo says we are it might make things go more smoothly.”

Delnash nodded once more. “Again... I agree.”

“I’m going to send Wayonn and General Koguth’s people as well.” Martin told him. “The Juturi Pride handled most of the defensive positions here on Manne with the 1st EB and they did a bang up job of it. I’ve briefed Koguth on what the Svorag are capable of and he is ready to go. Hell... he practically begged to go. I’m sending Isabella, Cirith and Dysea as well. Melda Min’s bonded sister Iriral can coordinate the dragons you are sending. She has done this sort of thing before and has become an excellent leader and teacher.”

“You will send your Queens?” Valael asked surprised.

Martin nodded. “Trust me... they are more than capable of handling anything that might come up between the three of them.”

“And your brother Daniel? Will he be going to Honelze to help train the men Garan requested?” Delnash asked.

Martin shook his head. “Danny and my team stay with me.” He said. “We know each other as well as we know ourselves. We can predict what the other will do in pretty near any given situation. Garan will be going with a squad of Durcunusaan to train those men you are sending.”

“You are still planning on going to the Lycavorian colony then? That is why you are splitting up your forces?” Delnash asked him.

Martin looked at him for a moment before answering. “They are my people and I want to find out for myself why Lorendo and his people stopped monitoring them and what happened to them.”

“Then you will need Tobia’s skill as well. It is the other reason I asked her to join Valael on the trip.” Delnash said.

Martin looked at him. “Why?”

“She and Valael have traveled to the sector you will be going to. The Svorag are not just a threat to us. They are a threat to every other sentient species within this quadrant and I know they have attacked other colonies belonging to these species as well.” Delnash told him. “We are not the only group out here among the stars in this quadrant Martin, though we are quite spread out. There are nineteen other bipedal species like us that call this quadrant home. Seven of them have obtained working space flight ability. Of those seven species, four of them have built passable interstellar engine Drive Cores that allow them to leave their home planet and its system. Rudimentary engines to be sure... nothing like we or you possess... but still workable. Out of those four, three are not exactly fond of visitors. Two of them are involved in a border war of some sort and they even suspect we had a hand in creating the Svorag to begin with to target their people. They do not know how close to the truth that they really are. The sector that you will be traveling to is populated by one of these species.”

“What is the threat level?” Martin asked.

“Your ships and people are superior to anything they can put against you technologically speaking Martin.” Valael spoke.

“I am sensing a but coming.” Martin asked.

“But... we have encountered them before.” Valael answered. “Tobia knows them better than anyone else for she has studied them and dealt with them in the past. Let’s just say that you will not like their attitude towards us very much given how things worked out when we first encountered you on Onterom.”

Martin rolled his eyes. “Great.” He said. “Why is nothing I do ever easy?”

“The most militant of the three groups also has the largest fleet and army; though militant might be a strong word. Militaristic would be better I suppose. They have a heavy presence in the system where your people were.” Tobia spoke now. “They are called the Tasmor. A female dominated race to be sure.”

“Female dominated?” Wayonn asked.

Tobia nodded in response to his question. “Tasmor males are very much in the minority and considered second class citizens, at least in most cases. The Tasmor control seven planets, all well advanced and very well guarded. They are led by a Tasmor Sovereign Regnant. Her name is Saydia Daret. She is the ultimate power and word among their people. She isn’t exactly the most outgoing person either. The ratio of females to males is something like twenty to one. The females occupy all positions of power within their military and government. There are men within their ranks but none higher than a ship commander if the information I have is accurate. Their forces are well disciplined and very well trained. Not on a level of skill as your people as Valael said but still much more than any others we have seen. I have a full briefing that I can give once you decide we will depart, but aside from the basic information we never were able to obtain much in the way of how their culture and government works.”

“She means we never bothered.” Delnash spoke calmly in keeping with his new persona. He was not going to try and deny the mistakes they had made in the past any longer. He would face them head on and try to correct any that were within his power to correct.

“We’ll be leaving by the end of the week at the latest. Once I know everything here on Manne is secure and Anja is satisfied she has everything she needs.” He answered Tobia before looking at the clear image of Delnash. “I could guess and probably be very near correct right? When you first encountered them... it went pretty much the same way it did with us huh?”

Delnash could not hide the embarrassment in his smile. “Unfortunately... yes it did.” He replied. “Though in our defense, they demanded that we hand over some of our technology and we refused. It went downhill from there. Tobia has since dealt with their Sovereign Regnant on several different occasions through the years and relations have improved to a point, but there is still no love lost between us. Tobia was even able to broker a trade agreement with them. Aside from that... our two peoples do not get along very well.”

“What about the other species?” Martin asked.

“We have had little to no contact with them.” Delnash answered. “I believe the Tasmor have made contact with all those having space flight ability, but to my knowledge, the Tasmor and those other three species are the only ones able to produce interstellar Drive Cores allowing them to leave their home systems as I said.”

Wayonn shook his head. “Sometimes I wonder how we ever advanced to the level we did.” He said softly.

“Trust me Wayonn... over the past weeks... that very question has entered my mind at many different times.” Delnash spoke.

“Have you come up with an answer Chief Elder?” Wayonn asked.

Delnash nodded his head. “Oh yes.” He said. “I believe it is called blind, stupid luck.”

To say that she was equal parts amazed and stupefied would have been a very accurate statement. Even now, after almost three days here among these men and women she did not know what to make of everything.

Tinra had free reign within Base One. She could go anywhere she wanted almost without question. She had been friends with Delnash for more years than she could recall and she had jumped at the chance to come here. He didn't try to tell her what to do, or who to talk to while she was here, only that he wanted her to be truthful and report from the heart. This was always the Tinra had been no matter where she stood on an issue. That left her in a minority among her peers she knew, for most of those who reported the news and happenings of the Pralor society almost always let their personal feelings rule what they reported and how. Tinra had tried very hard to remain outside looking in for all of her life. Now she was having a very hard time doing that.

The mood in Base One was always one of hopefulness and determination. As she spent the last hours walking through the sprawling camp she saw men and women from nearly a dozen different species helping one another, eating with one another and sharing laughter with one another. She saw senior military officers just as dirty and sweaty as the men and women they commanded as they repaired something or put up a new portable building. Just this very morning she had been out with one of the Vid drones hovering only a short distance away and she came upon a group of men and women putting the finishing touches on a medical clinic in the center of Base One. What shocked her most of all was that she saw Martin Leonidas in the thick of it. He was shirtless, as were all the men working, and a dozen of them were holding what appeared to be a thick portable wall in place while four elven females scampered about the top of the building welding different points. Martin and the men were soaked in sweat and their bodies glistened in the morning sun, but none of them appeared to mind where they were or what they were doing. She could see them talking among themselves from where she stood and laughing. Martin Leonidas was the Lycavorian Spartan King of trillions of lifeforms across the Alpha Quadrant and yet here he was helping to hold up the side of a building with others who were workers or engineers from what she could tell. When the final weld was in place she had watched as the men stood back and admired their work and Martin Leonidas threw his arm across the shoulders of a much smaller elven man as they laughed about something.

Tinra was still a small girl when Chief Elder Sumar left on his ill fated mission, but she had heard hundreds of stories from her father and mother who had escaped the Purge of their empire by the Scourge. This was one of Sumar's most endearing qualities they had told her. He was not afraid to stepped in beside normal men and women and do mundane work. This is what had caused people to love him so because he didn't do it out of some alternative reason, he did it because he wanted to. Tinra could see these same traits in Martin Leonidas. That is what drove the men and women with him to worship him as they did. This is what caused them to worship their six beautiful Queens as they did. It was not something Martin Leonidas or his Queens were comfortable with, but it was something they could not change. She had seen the elven Queens Dysea and For'mya working on one of their ships with a group of other pilots just yesterday afternoon. Hardly anyone wore rank of any kind, yet they all seemed to know who was in command where they were. And even those who were in command of what was happening in a certain area were just as sweaty and dirty as the next. No one was adverse to throwing their weight into their duties and doing so with glee it seemed. This was the kind of mentality that Sumar exuded and the Pralor people embraced, her parents had once told her. It was so very prevalent now here among these men and women and it was almost a palpable thing within the very air she breathed. Just three short days ago they were fighting for their lives and now they were back to work like it was the most natural thing in the world.

They were not afraid to speak with her about anything as long as it did not violate their security and they answered every question she answered without fail. They obviously knew their King had allowed her to be here and they trusted their King and Queens without question. They looked upon her with respect and honor and some of the men even... Tinra blushed as she thought about it... some of the Lycavorian men even looked at her with an interest that went beyond her simple questions. They appeared to look at her with desire in their eyes and while it should have made her uncomfortable... it actually made her have thoughts of passion and desire that she had never experienced. Tinra had never made time to find a man or make a family; her job was everything to her. Yet as she walked among them now, it actually made her want for a family. She had seen the way many of the men treated those that were their wives. When she asked them about it she discovered that Martin Leonidas had sent for the wives and husbands of those who were joined so that they could be together out here among the stars despite the risk of having so many non-combatants as she knew they were called. Not one among them had elected to return to the Alpha Quadrant, instead choosing to remain with those they loved. She had seen the young Prince Fedor and the hulking Kavalian she now knew was called Miseo chasing the two stunning young women around the massive Mess Lounge while the young women laughed in happiness. Young women that she later learned were both their wives and Princesses of the Union.

This was certainly something she had not foreseen when she told Delnash she would come here. She found men and women who were just as smart and inventive as any Pralor she knew back on Artaaya. They were most certainly not primitive to the Pralor people in any way. In many ways... in many ways they were better Tinra had to admit. They clung to the ideals that many Pralors had long ago forgotten or dismissed and they clung to these ideals viciously.

“Not what you expected is it Lady Tinra?” The voice spoke from behind her and Tinra spun around startled to see Delnash’s daughter Kesyla.

“Kesyla!” She exclaimed having not heard her move up behind her. “Ancients child... you frightened me.”

“My apologies. Since... since being turned I seem to walk rather softly.” Kesyla spoke. “I was returning to our quarters when I saw you standing here.”

Tinra noticed she carried a large mug of steaming liquid. “I was just... I have several hours before I interview Martin Leonidas’s Queens and I was just... wandering.” Tinra stared at Kesyla for a long moment but could detect nothing different about her from when she seen her last. She was perhaps leaner and appeared to be more muscular physically, but aside from that there were no differences. Unless of course you included the glowing look upon her face and the brightness of her dark eyes. “You are... you are looking well child.” She finally stammered.

Kesyla laughed gently. “No Lady Tinra... there are no outward signs that I have been changed.” She said.

“Forgive me...” Tinra sputtered. “I did not...”

“You were looking to see if I am different somehow.” Kesyla said. “I’m really not. I am the same person I was before Daniel turned me. I have the same mind and I like the same things that I did before. Though some food now does taste better. I just chose to... I chose to accept what my heart was telling me. And I am so very happy I did.”

“We... we met the young woman in the mountain when we first arrived.” Tinra said. “Her name was...”

“Anuk... yes I know. I knew the moment she met you.” Kesyla said. “Anuk, Nayeca and I... we do not keep things from each other. Or from our husband and mate Daniel.”

Tinra stepped closer to her unafraid. “You... forgive me... you are like them now?”

“If, by like them, you mean that I can shift my form and have taken on the traits of their species...” Kesyla allowed her eyes to change swiftly and her fangs grew out enough to be very visible.

Kesyla loved when the half change came over her. She loved watching it take place and the influx of additional scents that she could detect. Daniel had told her that first night, the night he had changed her after hours of exquisitely amazing sex between the four of them, as he held her in his powerful arms with Anuk and Nayeca pressed against them both. He had told her that until she grew used to it, the sights, sounds and smells would always be more prominent in her half changed or full wolf form. Kesyla did not question what she felt, she never had. Daniel was the most physically handsome man she had ever laid her eyes upon, yet it was his jovial nature that had shocked her at first. He was large enough to squash most men but he was also the funniest man she had ever met. He could laugh at himself even easier than he laughed at others deeds. Even Martin Leonidas was the same way. That first night together with him and Anuk and Nayeca had been the most blissfully passionate night she had ever experienced in her life. The tastes of Anuk and Nayeca were like sweet candy to her, and Daniel's body was simply put, beautiful. They lavished her with pleasure and attention that she returned without question or pause. When they had finally collapsed and Daniel held her in his arms as the virus raced through her system, Kesyla knew she had found absolute love with all of them.

"Yes... I can." Tinra gasped slightly when she saw Kesyla shift but did not move away. "I am still learning the nuances of being a wolf... but it is glorious. And my loves are very patient teachers."

"I am... it is... I just..." Tinra stammered once more.

Kesyla chuckled softly. "You are stunned that it was I who found love and desire among these men and women?"

Tinra looked at her. "Whenever we interacted you always seemed so reserved and quiet." She told her. "Your father valued your words though."

Kesyla nodded. "I know." She said. "But I am still that same person. When I first saw... when I first saw Daniel, it was on Martin's ship. I had never seen a man like him. He was so tall and strong and handsome. I was in love with him even then. The color of his skin, his smile. When I discovered that he was already married, I was disappointed to say the least. Until Anuk and Nayeca arrived here and I met them. I realized within moments that I wanted them just as badly as I wanted Daniel. I did not know they felt the same and had before even meeting me. They are connected within the Etheric realm you know. We all are. They knew all about me before they even arrived here... and their desire for me matched mine for them. Daniel says it took Anuk hitting him with a board before he admitted that he felt the same." Kesyla said with a brilliant smile. "I would not change anything Lady Tinra."

"Does your... does Delnash know?" Tinra asked.

Kesyla shook her head quickly. "Not yet. I will be returning to Artaaya soon as part of a diplomatic group. I will tell him then. I do not know what he will say or do."

"I think you will find that your father will be most open." Tinra said. "He is a different man Kesyla. Since meeting Martin Leonidas and the others he is so very different than the man I have known."

Kesyla nodded. "I know. And that makes me very happy."

Tinra saw her cant her head slightly and then smile shyly. "What?" She asked.

Kesyla shook her head. "Nayeca is wondering where I have gotten off to." She lifted the mug. "I was bringing this back to our quarters so that we can wake Daniel and get him moving. He can not get enough of the Queen's coffee it seems and he is such a bear in the mornings. It is very good however." She said sipping it.

Tinra had to admit that she had never seen Kesyla so animated or happy in the years she had known her. She was exceptionally beautiful, Tinra had always known that, but now she simply glowed. "Forgive me for delaying you." She said.

Kesyla laughed softly again and looked at her. "It is nothing. Anuk says they will use other means to kick Daniel awake." She stated. "When is your interview with Aricia and the others?"

"In four hours." Tinra said.

Kesyla stepped closer and took her arm gently. "Then let me share with you what I have discovered here among these men and women. I may be Pralor but they are my people now as well. And it makes me sing with happiness."

Tinra smiled. "I would like that very much." She said.

AUSTROVA RE MYDALA ESTATE

"...Wish you would reconsider Caliria." Coren spoke to her across the table.

The bright sunlight was filling the main dining room of the home through the wall to ceiling glass window that overlooked the river. Caliria had often times sat on the adjoining deck in the mornings when she was younger, letting the sun bath her in its warmth and light. They had been back for two days and she had returned to her apartment with Paga and a Vanari Cadre security detachment once to retrieve most of her remaining clothes and items she wanted. That her apartment had been searched was readily apparent to her immediately. They had not stayed very long, many of the items in her apartment were part of her past and Caliria had no intention of ever reclaiming them. She had a new life now, one that she had embraced fully.

Her time on Lorent had been both a wonder and learning experience. She was not fully turned as Arduri was or born a half breed like the sisters Ryana or Nyosa, but she had rapidly absorbed all they had been able to teach her while there. The four women had become very fast friends, and Ryana and Nyosa had taken both her and Arduri on several tours through the city and into the countryside. Denali and Dutkne had joined them twice, but usually it was just the four young women. Caliria had never been to the Protectorate homeworld and she found it to be beautiful and so peaceful. As they walked among the streets and shops she noticed that she and Arduri were accepted completely. The Lycavorian virus swirling within their veins now made sure of that. She discovered that the Lycavorians could smell the potency of the virus within another and Nyosa told them that the virus that coursed fully through Arduri and Caliria's veins was the most potent that any Lycavorian had ever smelled. It would only grow in the years to come, especially after Andro finally bit her and made Caliria completely his.

Caliria missed him terribly. She missed them all terribly. All she could think of now was what she would do when they returned. How would they treat her? Would they accept and trust her fully after what had taken place with Franklin? She was worried that Androcles would never look at her the same way as he had that night in his villa on Earth. It mattered not to her now. She would spend however long it took in years and effort to convince them all that she desired nothing more than to be in their arms.

Caliria lowered the juice she was drinking and looked at her father. "Papa... I only have a week left of classes." She told him. "Once my exams are complete then it will no longer be a concern."

"I know... but for the next week I will worry for you whenever you are not here among us." Coren told her.

"I have Paga and a Cadre Commando detachment." Caliria said. "There is no telling who else Denali has watching my every move. It is silly."

"It is not silly!" Coren protested. "Not after what we have discovered these last weeks! You are a threat to them Caliria! We are all a threat... but you... you are the key. You are the only one within the Beta Quadrant who has the working formula for the counter-agent."

Caliria looked up fully from the pad she was reading and looked at her father. "What? What do you mean? Regent Ardan has a copy."

Coren shook his head as he rose to his feet. "No." He said softly as he moved to the large window.

"What do you mean?" Caliria asked.

"On the last leg of our return from Earth Denali and I spoke with Dutkne." Coren said. "We decided to insure that the formula remained under our control so Ardan could not corrupt it or exploit it. We only gave him ninety percent of the formula." Coren turned back to face her. "You are the only one who knows the entire formula. At least here in the Beta Quadrant. That will change when Androcles's sister Eliani arrives with him... but for the moment you are the key to all of this. The Eridiani Franklin's visit to you before we left for Lorent was proof of that. It is why Denali pulled us to Lorent so quickly after your encounter with him. He sensed they would act to take you and whoever else they could before more time passed. They know they don't have the full formula Caliria... but they also know from all the data we gave to them that it does work."

"Do you honestly believe they would come after me here on Austrova?" Caliria asked as she too got to her feet.

Coren nodded. "Now more than before. The bulk of Androcles's forces arrived early this morning. It caused quite the stir within the Vanari Fleet when over a hundred Union warships dropped in to say hello. Most of them are holding at the outer system marker, but several ships are now in orbit. Ships very similar to Denali's command ship." He told her seeing her soft green eyes grow wide as she came up to him. "That is where Denali and Arduri are right now. Meeting with the female elf Androcles has put in charge. Admiral Sa'sur I believe her name is."

“Andro?” Caliria gasped. “Sadi and the others?”

Coren shook his head. “No. They are finishing up some matters in the Alpha Quadrant that needed their immediate attention. Something to do with the High Coven.” He saw the look of sadness flitter across her face and he reached out to touch her cheek softly. Her green eyes settled back on his face. “Do not question that they are coming Caliria.”

“I... I long to feel their arms around me papa.” Caliria said softly. “It frightens me that it might not ever happen again.”

“Do not think like that!” Coren hissed strongly seeing her eyes grow a little wider. “What happen is not your fault!”

“Papa... I chose to sleep with Franklin when I returned. He did not force me.” Caliria said.

Coren shook his head quickly. “You were confused and trying to come to terms with your emotions! The Eridiani bastard took advantage of that! And...”

“And what?” Caliria asked him.

“It is Androcles’s fault.” Coren stated.

Caliria drew back from him, her eyes flashing instantly to that of her wolf persona and her fangs extending in anger. “Papa... how dare you!” She almost shouted. “That... that is not true!”

Coren reached out unafraid of his daughter. Fear is what almost cost him everything and he was not going to be afraid anymore. “It is the truth.” He continued. “Not... not in the way you think I mean however.”

Caliria glared at him. “Then what do you mean?”

Coren shook his head trying to find the words but a female voice saved him. “He means that Prince Androcles will undoubtedly consider what happened between you and this Franklin person to be his fault.”

Caliria spun around surprised and saw Nyosa Val Ardwor enter the dining room holding the sheet around her obviously naked figure. Her platinum colored hair was askew and flowed almost wildly about her face and well past her shoulders. She was shorter than Caliria by three inches, but she had several more pounds of muscle packed on her tiny frame. She moved right up to stand beside Coren and pressed close to him in a very intimate manner with no shame in her eyes whatsoever. Caliria’s eyes grew a little wider at this but she remained silent.

“What your father is trying to tell you is that any man of pure Lycavorian blood would think this way. And if everything I have smelled and heard about Androcles Leonidas is indeed accurate then this is exactly what he will think. He let you leave Earth Caliria Re Mydala. He let you leave Earth without ever showing you what you meant to him and to the others. Such a thing goes against the very basic instincts of our people. If he had done what his instincts no doubt called for him to do... shown you what you meant to them... you would not have left Earth. You would have remained and found your center there.”

“But... I... how could he...” Caliria stammered as her eyes changed back and her fangs disappeared.

“He knew the virus within his DNA would begin to change you.” Nyosa explained even more. “And to be honest, it has taken place far faster than it normally would have because of the pureness of the virus in his blood. I can only surmise that he went against his instincts because he did not want to lose you. He thought letting you return was the better way to make you see that you belonged with them. He was wrong and I’m quite sure his father... or another member of his family probably let him know that in rather blunt terms.”

“How... how do you know this?” Caliria asked.

Nyosa smiled at her brightly. “Because my mother is about as old fashion as Lycavorians come.” She answered. “Her grandparents are among those who first traveled with Wayonn when they left Lycavore all those years ago. You don’t get anymore old fashion than that. My mother told me one night while you were on Lorent with us. She said Androcles is probably flogging himself over letting you leave. And until he has you back it will remain his fault in his eyes.”

“But he has... none of them have tried to contact me.” Caliria said as her eyes became moist.

Nyosa nodded. “I know. But do not assume that means something it does not for you would be wrong. That is simply not our way.” She said. “He will act as a Lycavorian would act. They will act as Lycavorians. Nothing else will suffice for them until they can speak to you and hold you in their arms.”

“That... it seems so cruel... to act like...” Caliria spoke softly as she wiped her eyes of tears even as her heart began to lift.

Nyosa nodded her head. "And to many it is. But to us it is how things are. He punishes himself by not reaching out to you until he can touch you. Trust me, if he is as old fashion as Dutkne tells me, as I have seen and heard how his brother and father act with Arduri and our Queens... then this is the worst conceivable punishment he could possibly inflict upon himself Caliria. I do not doubt his blood burns for you... and not being able to hold you and show you what you mean to him... that is a punishment that no Lycavorian man wants to endure." Nyosa reached out and took her hand. "Trust me Caliria... you will experience his aura again. You will feel his arms around you once more. Just be patient."

"And I would not be surprised if it happens sooner rather than later." Coren spoke now. "I have had many discussions with Dutkne and Denali both and if what they tell me is correct; then he will not be far behind those forces that have already arrived. Apparently he likes to act as his father does and be unpredictable. If my guess is true, he will be arriving here far sooner than Ardan and the others think."

Caliria nodded her head slowly and wiped the tears from her eyes quickly. In the brief time she had known the Val Ardwor daughters and associated with them on Lorent, they had spoken of many things with her and Arduri and she knew neither of them would lie to her just to sooth her heavy heart. She took a deep breath and nodded again. "You are right." She said softly. "I will... I will be strong." She looked up at her father. "I need to change for class." She said.

Coren nodded. "Please be careful and be mindful of who and what is around you."

Caliria nodded once more and stepped forward to lean up and kiss his cheek. "Thank you papa." She looked at Nyosa and then leaned forward to kiss her directly on her lips. It was a statement of trust and emotion among Lycavorians Caliria knew and it showed Nyosa that she did indeed trust her words. "Thank you." She spoke softly.

Nyosa smiled and squeezed her hand. "Have faith." She said.

"I will. And I will not doubt anymore." She took another deep breath and smiled. "I must go before I am late. I will see you both for dinner." She said before turning quickly and leaving Coren with Nyosa in the room.

"Thank you." Coren said softly as he turned to the young woman who had reshaped him and stolen his heart.

Nyosa smiled up at him brilliantly. "There is no need to thank me my love." She stated.

"Nyosa..." Coren began.

Nyosa reached up quickly and put a finger to his lips. "Do not speak the words." She told him. "Do you think for an instant that I would be here with you, if I did not want to be Coren?"

"I would hope not." Coren replied. "That does not change the fact that I am quite a bit older than you Nyosa. Don't you wish to... to be with someone, live your life with someone that is closer to your age?"

Nyosa smiled brightly. "I have always been attracted to older men. My brother says it is a defect in my genes." She told him. "And you Coren Re Mydala... you simply make my wolf hormones giddy. Besides... no one my age has been able to do to me what you have done to me in our bed."

"Nyosa!" Coren exclaimed as she giggled and pressed her lush body firmly against his.

Coren had to admit to himself that it had all taken place rather quickly, but the attraction to Nyosa had been there from the outset without question. She was stunningly beautiful and full of life. She was also one of the most intelligent woman he had ever met. Nyosa was also quite uninhibited in their bed, which in turn made Coren act in a similar manner, surprising even himself. Nyosa made him feel youthful and reborn in a sense and as they laid together after their third tryst together on Lorent, he had spoken to her of things he had held inside all of his life and never shared with Devra or Tastia. She had rested on his chest and stared at him in wonder as he had finally opened the door into his emotions and inner self and shared it with a woman. Nyosa had wrapped her own heart around his in a protective manner for everything he had spoken of, everything he desired for the future, it was everything she wanted as well. After that night together Coren had vowed to hold nothing back when it came to his emotions for her.

In this young woman, who was over a thousand years younger than him, in her, Coren Re Mydala had finally found the meaning of love and commitment. He did not intend to ever let fear take that away from him. For the first time in his long life he felt complete.

Had Coren been able to see into Nyosa's thoughts he would have seen the same things. Nyosa was no stranger to men, she had taken half a dozen men into her bed since her Coming of Age fever, but Coren Re Mydala tickled her wolf senses like no man ever had. Her mother had always told them to follow their instincts and their hearts. This had led her to their father and it would not lead them astray either. He may have been over a thousand years her senior, but Coren was a very handsome man and the most incredibly passionate and inventive lover she ever had. Coren had her singing to the moon longer and louder and in half the time than any man half his age. He was smart and thoughtful, and Nyosa could see the new resolve in his eyes to be as cruel as he needed to be in order to protect those he loved. No... Coren Re Mydala was the man she would go into the future with. And she intended it to be a future that included many nights like they had experienced as well as many children.

"It's too late." Nyosa told him as she placed her hands flat against his chest and looked up into his eyes. "I am yours Coren Re Mydala. I am Nyosa Re Mydala now. And you are mine as well."

Coren slipped his arm around her slim waist and pulled her closer, feeling her large, firm breasts press against him and flame his passions. "I am not afraid of that." He stated.

"Good... you should not be." Nyosa said.

"I have a meeting with the Board of Regents in a few hours." He said with a twinkle in his eye.

Nyosa smiled lustfully. "That is more than enough time." She said. "But if you prefer to be among stuffy politicians...?"

"Ha Ha. Very funny." Coren said.

"Are you not hungry Coren my love?" Nyosa asked sweetly.

"I'm not hungry for food." He stated confidently.

Nyosa let her hand slide down his chest to his abdomen seductively. "Then perhaps you should act on what you need to sate your hunger Coren Re Mydala." Nyosa pulled away from him, her green eyes flashing with desire and she turned and headed for their bedroom, the curve of her ass and hips swaying with volcanic like sultriness as she walked. "I assure you Coren Re Mydala... I taste much better than any food you could possibly have."

Coren set his mug on the table and smiled to himself knowing her words were so very true. "There is no doubt about that." He spoke to himself as he followed her.

"... So they are still locked in this ridiculous procedural debate Jokros?" Coren asked as he sat at his office desk going over the different reports from his most trusted advisor and aide. A man whose stock had risen in the last weeks and months because of his insightful approach when they first encountered the Lycavorians from the Union.

Jokros nodded from his high backed chair where he sat beside Rinel Val Ardwor. "Half wish to believe it outright Coren." He said. "The other half do not believe Caliria is intelligent enough to come up with the formula on her own when so many of our senior scientists could not. Ardan and his supporters are fanning this emotion among them."

"Yet to me he speaks positively." Coren said looking up at him. "He tells me they will see things my way."

"He always was a very good liar." Jokros said.

"What else?" Coren asked him.

"The Board of regents sent Galar Arn Del's daughter to greet the Union ships." Jokros told them.

Coren looked at him wide eyed. "Murie?" He asked in astonishment.

Jokros nodded. "Yes."

"Who is she?" Rinel asked.

"She is a Junior Regent who barely won the election in her district and only because of her father." Coren replied. "She also happens to be the most junior of the Regents and the one with the largest attitude. She can't stand Lycavorians and neither can her father."

Rinel shook his head. "That alone should tell you they are not taking this seriously." He said.

"Jokros... do you have any good news?" Coren asked.

"I'm afraid not and the next two items I have you will definitely not like." Jokros told him. "I was able to obtain this information from separate sources of my own within the Hall of Aides."

"Go on." Coren said.

Jokros reached out and handed him the data pad. "There is a petition going forward with the support of many senior Regents that will call for the arrest of Caliria, Arduri and Nirilo. As well as Devra and Naesta. Caliria is to be charged with treason..."

"Treason!" Coren almost shouted. "You must be joking?"

Jokros shook his head. "I wish I was." He said. "Devra, Arduri, Nirilo and Naesta will be charged with dereliction of their duties and assorted other charges that have not been decided yet. The petition is being kept very quiet right now because you have much more support than Ardan and the others believed and no one wants to be the one to charge a Re Mydala with such a crime... but the petition is gaining support as time passes."

"Who is the author?" Rinel asked.

"None other than Cruor Ahn Vernalo." Jokros answered with distaste.

"That worm!" Coren hissed.

"He put it forward originally in response to Arduri calling off the joining with Eyon. It states that officially what she did will cause irreparable harm to his family's assets and name." Jokros told him. "It has only ballooned from there."

Coren tossed the data pad down on his desk in disgust. "This!" He snarled. "This is what we have become! This foolishness! This lack of choice and emotion! Everything is done for profit now! And I was blind to it for so long!" He rose to his feet and moved to the window in his office.

"You can not put blame for this on your shoulders Coren my friend." Rinel spoke. "This began long before you ever were appointed to the Board of Regents. It has been going on for many centuries."

"I was part of it Rinel." Coren said turning to look at him.

Rinel shook his head. "No... you may have been unwittingly involved in it... but you were never part of it."

"Jokros... what can we do to head this off?" Coren asked.

"I do not think we can." Jokros replied frankly. "I am surprised that they have not acted before now to be honest. Charging Caliria with treason is only a means to silence her, get her in custody, and then interrogate her. Charging Arduri, Devra and the others is simply a way to heap more shame upon you, your name and your family."

"They will try to break you down Coren." Rinel said. "Caliria, Arduri, Devra. They will try to control you with these charges and think they can coerce you to do what they want you to do. Which is stop making waves and let things be."

Jokros nodded. "I agree with Rinel." He said. "Caliria is their true target... they will only go after the others as more leverage. Ardan must know by now that the formula you gave to him is not complete, but that the data is completely accurate. The many younger Regents who are skilled in such things will see this, as they are more attuned to advances in technology and will see that it does work. They will pass this on to others. His OSG contacts would have certainly confirmed this for him. He tells you one thing while saying the exact opposite to others. The arrival of the Union ships has also made them all very nervous."

Rinel nodded his head. "Do not be surprised if they begin to imply that they are here for nefarious reasons."

"I already counted on that fact." Coren spoke. "It is obvious to me that Ardan did not share the intelligence of how advanced the Union and Protectorate truly were. That is one of the items we used to keep some semblance of control."

Rinel leaned forward. "Coren... you need to stop referring to yourself as one of them. You are not... and you never have been."

"He is right Coren." Jokros spoke now. "This has been going on since we first discovered the Lycavorians existed. Labeling them as animals and beneath us because they could shift their forms was wrong. Many in the military do not like the fact that they treated Captain Arn Winier as a hero after he started the war to begin with. That he still actively serves is another bad taste in their mouths. You had a hand in none of this and you have always tried to be objective."

"I was still almost drawn in Jokros." Coren spoke truthfully. "If Caliria... if she had not been taken, if Devra had not done what she did in going after her... I would still think and act just like them. And it would only be worse."

“There stands the difference Coren.” Jokros told him. He had been working for Coren Re Mydala for over three hundred years and his loyalty was without question. “When shown the truth... you did not dismiss it as they have. Whether it is in regards to the Lycavorians or our own people. It is no longer about what is right or wrong... it is about who has the most assets, the most power and the most credits. They are selling our own people into sexual slavery and they do not care as long as it continues to keep them in power.”

“That is what needs to change.” Rinel said. “Any among them who had knowledge of this or were involved in it in any form needs to be taken down.”

“That will not be easy.” Jokros said.

“What about First Regent Alrerin Sha Harael Jokros?” Coren asked. “Do we have any indication that he is part of this?”

Jokros shook his head. “No. If he is involved then he has insured there are no ties to him whatsoever that can be traced.”

“I cannot believe he does not know what is going on.” Rinel said. “The OSG has been taking our young women for centuries. How can he not know there are men and women within our own government who are helping them?”

“When Caliria was taken he did not seem very sympathetic.” Coren remembered him in his office that day. “His suggestions were to approach the OSG Ambassador for compensation.”

“Alrerin Sha Harael has always been more concerned with keeping things as they are.” Rinel spoke. “Even when we were young Cadre Officers Coren. And he has shown in the past he does not care for Lycavorians.”

“Do we know that for sure?” Jokros asked. “Or is it a façade?”

“What do you mean Jokros?” Rinel asked him.

“Just as these attacks or abductions have been a façade for the Board of Regents allowing the OSG to take our females, perhaps his indifference is also a façade.” Jokros explained. “You must remember his oldest daughter Narlei was taken several hundred years ago. He has no love for the OSG, no matter what others say.”

Rinel’s head snapped around. “Narlei?” He asked. “Are you sure that is her name?”

Jokros nodded. “Yes. Why?”

Coren settled to the front edge of his desk. “Rinel?”

Rinel shook his head. “One of the Vanari females that we first rescued. It was shortly after Tarnie and I married. Her name was Narlei. She had organized the Vanari captives into very efficient work groups at the camp they were in. She tried to insure that they were well cared for as best as possible. She would even go so far as to take the place of one of the women who was either too sick or too young. All of those we rescued that day told the same story during their debriefings. If not for her, many of them would be dead. And when we conducted our strike she was the one they all looked to for guidance during the assault.”

Jokros was typing on his pad and he held it out to Rinel finally. “Is this her?”

Rinel looked at the pad and his eyes went wide. “Yes!” He exclaimed as he took it from him. “Gods! This is the First Regent’s daughter?”

Jokros nodded. “Yes.”

“That... this could explain quite a bit.” He said.

“I don’t follow Rinel.” Coren said.

“His distaste for the Lycavorians Coren? Has it grown through the years?” Rinel asked.

Coren nodded his head thoughtfully. “Now that you mention it... yes.”

Rinel nodded and got to his feet. “Narlei refused to return to Austrova when we offered to return them to their families. Since she was the spokesperson for those rescued, we allowed her to contact her family first. It was after this contact that she became adamantly opposed to returning. She is now the wife and mate to a senior Lycavorian Special Operations Colonel. His name escapes me at the moment but I know he is next in line for promotion to General and he has been the primary planner for our strikes against OSG facilities for years. They have seven children together. Five boys and two girls. A set of twins are the oldest. A boy and a girl. They are part of their father’s Special Operations Command now. He worships the ground Narlei walks upon Coren. I have seen them together when Tarnie and I have been to government events and such. They are never apart and their eyes hold nothing but devotion and love for each other.”

Coren was thoughtful for a moment and then stood up fully. “Perhaps she tried to tell him how it was back then. How they were taken by the OSG. How it was all planned?”

“I don’t know what was said to him... I am only assuming it was him she contacted. I do know she was adamant about not returning after speaking with him.” Rinel said. “This man was part of the team that rescued her and those with her. They were married within two years of her rescue. The twins followed within a year. She is among the most prominent Lycanari on Lorent and has recently been selected to sit on the Senate. That might change with the merger but I doubt it.”

“Jokros... can you find out anything?” Coren asked looking at him.

Jokros was silent for a moment. “There may be some things I can look in to.” He finally said. “It won’t be easy.”

“Do your best.” Coren said. “And do it quickly. This would explain a lot if it is true. He is... Alrerin Sha Harael is like I was before having my eyes opened. If his oldest daughter has refused to return here and tried to tell him it was our own government who sanctioned their capture... he would not have believed her. He probably thinks she is being held against her will.”

Rinel shook his head quickly. “Never.” He said. “Among the Lycanari she is perhaps the most vocal about not returning until things have changed. Now that she has a Senate seat... you can bet she will insure this does not happen until things change.”

“Can you contact her?” Coren asked. “Ask her to come here. Bring her husband. We need all the information she can give to us Rinel. And if she can help us to convince her father... that would prove invaluable.”

Rinel nodded. “I will contact Tarnie tonight. As a member of the Senate she will know what we are doing here and hopefully she will want to help.”

Coren nodded. “Good. Good. Work quickly on what you can discover Jokros. Find out what you can for I have a feeling that Androcles will arrive much sooner than we all think.”

Rinel looked at him. “Do you know that for sure Coren?”

Coren shook his head. “No... it is only a feeling that I have given what I have learned of him from Dutkne and Denali and my own experiences with him.” Coren sat back in his chair. “This young man is as predictable as the wind Rinel. He will do exactly as he has said he will... make no mistake. He is... he holds honor and the will of his people above everything except his wives. He will not barter or dance with the Board of Regents. And the only people who will be hurt are the Vanari.”

Rinel nodded. “That is the impression I got of him in speaking with them as well.” He said.

“That the First Regent has not come forward in regards to this is troubling.” Coren said. “He has always had a unique hatred for the OSG... but now he does nothing.”

Rinel met his eyes. “You think they have some leverage over him don’t you?”

Coren shook his head. “I don’t know. I don’t know what they could have on him that would make him remove himself from this situation altogether. His family is nearly as old as my own. In fact... they were beside the Re Mydalas from the day we began building this city. We did it together along with Ardan’s family. It would explain quite a bit though if they have something that he fears others will discover.”

Jokros rose to his feet. “Then I will get started right away.” He said.

Coren nodded. “Thank you Jokros... and please let me know anything you discover.”

Jokros nodded as he headed for the hidden door into Coren’s office. Rinel watched his boyhood friend get out of his chair once more and moved back to the window and brought the mug to his lips for a drink. He rose from his own seat and came up behind him.

“Coren?”

“I feel torn about all this Rinel my friend. The desire to protect my children is nearly overwhelming... as is the desire to protect our people. And I feel that I have betrayed your friendship Rinel.” Coren said as he looked at him.

Rinel smiled warmly. “If you are referring to Nyosa... you do not need to worry about that Coren. That is not an issue.”

“I am sleeping with your daughter Rinel... who just happens to be no older than Arduri.” Coren said. “You will stand there and tell me you have nothing to say?”

Rinel chuckled now. "I had plenty to say. As did Tarnie. All of which Nyosa promptly ignored in her quest for you. She has done things her own way as all of our children have done for years." Rinel shook his head. "Tarnie and I often wonder if they will ever do what we say. But we have also told them to always follow their instincts and their hearts."

"And you advised her against entering into a relationship with me?" Coren asked.

Rinel shook his head. "Quite the opposite old friend. When she told us you had been together the first night Tarnie and I were thrilled."

"What?" Coren gasped in disbelief. "She told you that?"

"Nyosa has always been the more adventurous and open of our daughters." Rinel told him. "And she has always been attracted to older men. None truly enthralled her as you did Coren. She knew that the morning we came to your suite. When we saw the look in her eyes and saw how she spoke of you... we knew she had chosen you."

"And you were not angry with me?" Coren asked.

"Angry with you for what?" Rinel spoke. "Nyosa told us she practically had to force herself upon you before you got the hint and let your own feelings take over. I have learned many things since being among the Lycavorians my friend." Rinel told him. "Foremost among that is the deep seated faith they have in their instincts and fortune itself. It is something I have embraced as well and it is something Tarnie and I have taught all of our children. If fate meant for you and Nyosa to be together... then so be it. It appears it did... and if she is happy... that is all that matters to Tarnie and I."

"And you do not care I am so much older than her?" Coren said.

"Do you love my daughter Coren Re Mydala?" Rinel asked. "Truly love her in a way that you can not find the words for?"

Coren was silent for a moment because at the moment he knew his friend was right. He could not find the words to openly speak about what he felt for Nyosa. It was far deeper and more intense than anything he had ever felt before. Not even Devra, in all her beauty and intelligence, had elicited such emotions from him as Nyosa had. He looked at Rinel. "There... there are truly no words that I know of that could explain what I feel for her Rinel. I have never felt it before in my life time." He said finally. "And it feels... it feels so very good."

Rinel nodded his head. "Just as there are no words that can explain my love for Tarnie." He said. "That is what matters my friend. Just do not plan on children too soon! I am much too young for that."

Coren could not help it and he broke out into laughter. "Nor could I!" He said. "At least not yet!"

Rinel nodded. "Good. Now lets get started so we can meet with this Rothryn Dyack when he arrives with Denali Leonidas. I assume you have a way into the Rothryn embassy so that no one knows I am yet among the living? I know all we learned together at the Cadre Academy has not left your mind."

Coren smiled at him. "As a matter of fact... I do."

"Good. No sense in spoiling one of our surprises for them." Rinel said. "It will be very rewarding to see the looks on their faces when they see me."

AUSTROVA ROTHRYN EMBASSY

"...Why?" Dyack spoke from behind his desk as Aleatia poured herself a mug of tea and got coffee for him. "Why send these false reports to me? Why lie?"

Aleatia moved over to stand beside him and held out the mug of coffee. "Dyack...?"

"She is already a member of the Circle of Shamans!" Dyack protested as he took the mug from his wife. "Why would Harira do this?"

"We do not believe she actually agrees with the Circle. Or is a member." Kelelm spoke from the chair in front of his father's desk.

Dyack looked at him quickly and then back to Aleatia. "What? Aleatia is this true?"

Aleatia nodded her head. “Yes. Kelelm saw it first after speaking with Androcles. Her... Harira’s reaction to Sehri becoming Andro’s wife and mate was not what any of us expected. She was angry and... she almost seemed worried She even tried to force Sehri to dismiss her union with them.”

“If she is not a Shaman of the Circle then...” Dyack’s eyes grew wider as he realized what he was about to say.

Aleatia nodded her head. “Yes. We now believe she is actually a member of the Rothryn Science Academy Leadership sent to infiltrate the Circle in order to learn what they are doing. And to see how many students they had and what their skills were.”

Dyack turned and sat down in his chair. “That would mean they know everything about Sehri and...”

Aleatia shook her head as she reached out and put her hand on his shoulder to calm him. “I have already been in contact with the Cleric Mother my love.” She said quickly. “She told me that they have suspected Harira for some time and nearly all of their true assets have either been moved or changed to keep them safe.”

Dyack looked at her. “She will inform them of Sehri.” He said.

Aleatia smiled openly. “Let them.” She said confidently. “If they wish to test Androcles Leonidas by trying to attempt anything with Sehri, they will not find the results very agreeable for them. Sadi and the others are lethal in their own right husband and they have already assured me Sehri will not be without one of them as well as an additional security detail the entire time she is on Austrova or even here.”

Dyack looked at Kelelm. “Are these Durcunusaan as proficient as I have heard Dutkne and Denali say Kelelm?”

Kelelm nodded his head. “Without question father.” He answered. “Especially those that are assigned to any of the Royal details.”

“Dyack...” Aleatia spoke softly waiting until he looked at her. “There is something else you need to know.” She spoke as she sat on the edge of his desk.

“More?”

Aleatia nodded. “Sehri... she can shift now.”

Dyack’s eyes grew wider and he came to his feet like a shot once more. “She can shift?!” He gasped. “Aleatia... are you saying she can change? Like... like our people were able to do so long ago. Like those from the Protectorate?”

Aleatia nodded her head. “Part of the joining for Lycavorians within the Union is that the male bites the female he has chosen to be his wife and mate... with her consent of course. He shares his blood with her and she with him during the pinnacle of an act of love between them. Androcles Leonidas’s bloodline is the purest bloodline within the Lycavorian Union Dyack. Just as his father and mother are and certainly far more pure than any of our people could ever hope to obtain. Most of these Lycavorians can trace their ancestry directly back to Lycavore, to the strongest packs dating back hundreds of thousands of years. But the Leonidas bloodline is the purest. A few other of the older Lycavorian families make up the next purest one percent within the Union population as a whole.

“When Andro bit Sehri, his blood, the virus within his blood raced throughout her body and replaced the core pieces of her DNA that were removed when our people were taken from Lycavore so many hundreds of thousands of years ago and were brought here by the Ancients. Who the Union calls the Pralors. We all have the core DNA strands within us; they are just no longer active. She is... she is so beautiful in wolf form Dyack. Her fur, her eyes... she is so powerful and beautiful.” Aleatia told him. “I watched her running with Sadi and Ne’Veha the morning I left to join the ship that brought us here. She is learning quickly. Almost as if the knowledge was inbred within her.”

“It could be like this for all of our people?” Dyack asked.

Aleatia nodded. “Androcles’ sister Eliani, she is Hadarian...”

“The Healers?”

“Yes... I saw several at work while we were there and Eliani is like her mother Queen Anja. She is considered one of the most powerful and gifted of their people.” Aleatia told him. “She told me it was possible to develop a base serum to use that will return the DNA strands to our people. A generic gene therapy she called it.”

Dyack spun around. "Damn it! These are the things I wished I had known weeks and months ago!" He exclaimed. "I have treated Denali and Dutkne like the plague ever since I got the message from Harira. Even after I discovered that our own people are taking part in this Slavery Ring."

"What?" Aleatia gasped stunned.

Kelelm came to his feet. "Father... are you... are you sure?"

Dyack nodded his head. "Yes. Before... before I acted so foolishly... we were working together to try and discover the extent of the OSG's reach inside the Vanari and outside. I have been approached in the past by them on several different business deals. Deals that I can only assume concerned Vanari females. I have always refused. In order to try and obtain more information I reached out to them with the hint I was now interested. I discovered that at least a dozen of our most powerful men and women have Vanari females as slaves. Hidden away at different locations here on our planet as well as many of our colonies."

"How did you discover this?" Aleatia asked.

Dyack looked at her. "You do not wish to know my love." He answered. "Suffice to say that some of our people are just as deeply involved in this entire affair as the Vanari and those from the Protectorate."

"What happened?" Kelelm asked.

"Recently Denali advised me to sever all ties because he sensed the OSG would come after them. Try to eliminate them and take Coren's daughter prisoner again. He said the end game was coming." Dyack explained. "That is why he moved them to Lorent for a few weeks. I did as he asked... but by then a few of my rivals caught the wind of rumors in the air and have been pursuing it."

"Barnak?" Aleatia exclaimed.

Dyack shook his head. "Surprisingly... no. Barnak has been quiet and unassuming since you departed. It is odd for him... but I welcome the respite from his constant badgering. Our son however..." Dyack shook his head. "Anroth is becoming increasing militant in his dealings and manner. But I don't think this stems from Barnak any longer. The Rothryn Governing Body is hesitant right now. They do not know if these rumors about what I have been doing are true or why. Some of them may even think what I was doing is acceptable."

"I will increase security on you!" Kelelm stated immediately.

"No Kelelm." Dyack said. "I do not believe I am in any danger. I think whoever among our people is involved in this are waiting."

"Waiting for what?" Aleatia asked.

"Waiting to see what this Androcles will do." Dyack spoke. "My concern now it seems... my concern is what exactly is the Rothryn Science Academy doing to those of our people who show advanced signs of Etheric use. That is what now concerns me more."

Aleatia reached out and took his arm. "Dyack... it can't be good." She said.

Dyack nodded in agreement. "Of that I have little doubt."

MANNE BASE ONE PRIVATE DINING LOUNGE

It certainly was not what she was expecting, but Tinra was rapidly coming to understand that these men and women were about as predictable as the wind. She had spent three hours just walking and being with Kesyla and to say she had learned far more than she imagined in that three hour period about these men and women was an understatement. The six Queens of the Lycavorian Union entered through the double doors of the smaller and private dining lounge that had only been finished yesterday. All of them were holding hands with each other and they were giggling like young girls about something that only they knew. All of them had chosen to dispense with their uniforms it appeared and they were now dressed in casual clothes. Clothes that did absolutely nothing to hide their firm, lush bodies or the deeply tanned skin all of them possessed. Seeing them dressed in this way, Tinra soon realized that all of them had exquisitely defined muscular female forms. Aricia, Anja and Dysea had more clearly distinct musculature, but Isabella, Cirith and For'mya were not far behind. Tinra had noticed that this physical trait was very prominent on Lycavorians and most of the species that followed Martin Leonidas. When she asked about this, she discovered it was a holdover from the days of Martin's father and the Spartan way of life. When Martin's father died, this mentality and way of life exploded all across the Union as a way to honor his sacrifice. It grew even more pronounced when Martin returned to claim his father's throne. There were no obese or overweight individuals within the Union military she learned. All of them were in exceptional physical shape. It was a way of life for them, as natural as one lacing up their boots she discovered. It was not something she was accustomed to seeing, for there were many officers within the small Pralor fleet that looked as if they could lose a few pounds. She discovered that the majority of the Union's population was very fit, and even those men and women who could shed a few pounds here and there were healthy and fit.

Tinra watched as they came up to her and halted.

"Lady Tinra." Aricia spoke first as she expected for she had been told that Aricia was the unofficial spokesperson when they were all together. "A pleasure to finally meet you. For all of us."

Tinra bowed her head slightly. "Queen Aricia... a pleasure for me as well. I understand that as Queens you must all be very busy and..."

"Lady Tinra... we are not..." Dysea began interrupting her words. She stopped and looked at Anja. "Melyanna... what is the word?"

"Untouchable." Anja replied instantly.

"Yes... we are not untouchable." Dysea continued looking back to her. "We are no more important than any other person within the Union."

"There... there are many who would debate that with you it seems." Tinra said seeing all of them make what amounted to disgusted looks.

"Something that we do not like and try to avoid." For'mya said in response.

"We never seem to succeed however." Aricia finished.

"What... what should I call you then?" Tinra asked. "I wish this to be as comfortable for all of you as possible."

"Our names would be a good start." Bella told her. "We don't like the pretence of royalty when in private or secluded surroundings."

"But this will... this interview will be seen by millions of my people." Tinra said.

"But right now... it's just us." Anja said.

Tinra nodded with a smile. "As you wish." She said. She motioned with her hand behind her and saw their eyes light up in surprise. "Martin suggested couches as opposed to chairs. He had this brought from somewhere."

Tinra watched as they all smiled and moved to the single large couch. It was not really a couch per say, for it was much wider and allowed for more than one person to sit back to back. It was really more of a large bench with plush backing.

"This is the couch from our quarters." Cirith spoke as they began to settle to the furniture.

"That man is just plain eerie." Anja said as she settled in the front.

Aricia nodded in agreement as she sat beside her. "Indeed."

Tinra watched as they seemed to pick predetermined spots on the couch as if they always did this. If this was the couch from their quarters, she realized that they must have done this a thousand times before. Aricia and Anja sat in the front while For'mya and Cirith scooted behind them on the soft furniture and squeezed their shoulders between them. Dysea and Isabella took up positions on either end, fully sitting on the couch with their feet pulled up lotus style beneath them.

Tinra turned and quickly drew a single chair over in front of them and settled into it as they got comfortable. She saw them nudging one another playfully and she had to smile. So far this was turning out to be unlike anything she had imagined. They saw her watching them and all of them chuckled.

"Martin usually sits here." Aricia spoke as she patted the couch between her and Anja. "It is strange without him."

"Definitely more room without his big ass taking up space!" Anja declared. Her jade green eyes flew opened and she lifted her hand to cover her mouth as the others burst into laughter. "Oops!"

"Are you not the one who has always said Martin's ass is many things... but big is not one of them?" Isabella countered.

Anja rolled her eyes with a smile. “Ok... ok...” She said.

Tinra could only watch with a beaming smile as they laughed together once more. She had not yet been fully introduced to all of Martin’s Queens, but just seeing them interact with one another was extremely humorous. That they were obviously the best of friends was without any question. Even the biggest fool could see that.

“So...” Tinra spoke drawing their attention. “Where do we begin?”

They all looked at her. “This is your interview Lady Tinra.” For'mya spoke for all of them. “Aside from the obvious fact that I’m sure you are aware, none of us will comment on anything concerning military operational security or operations, you may ask what you wish.” She said with a half smile. “Whether we chose to answer those questions... well...”

Tinra nodded her head. “Of course.” She said. “I had... I had a prepared list of questions that I put together on the trip here but...”

“But what?” Aricia asked.

“After what I have seen these last few days I don’t think they will apply anymore.” Tinra told her. “They were... they were questions that were preconceived given what we knew of Lycavorians and others as a whole.”

“They do not apply any longer?” Anja asked her.

Tinra shook her head quickly. “No. Not in any way.” She answered. “I would like to... I would like to start with each of you. All of you. Who you are.”

“We are really very dull.” Dysea spoke.

Tinra smiled. “Somehow... somehow I sincerely doubt that.” She stated.

Anja laughed softly. “Told you it wouldn’t work Melda Min.”

Dysea matched her happy face. “It was worth a shot.”

Tinra found herself very relaxed in their company. They did not seem to be restrained or subdued in any manner whatsoever and this immediately put her at ease as well. All of them were exceptionally friendly and open it appeared. “I think we should begin with something simple.” She said. “It is a question that many of my people will ask I’m sure and it... it is rather extraordinary to be honest.”

“What is?” Cirith asked.

“How is it possible that... how is it possible that all of you are in love and married to the same man? That fact is completely and utterly without question, for it can be seen in your eyes whenever any of you are around him.” Tinra asked.

“If you perhaps have several thousand years... you will discover the why of it at the same time we do.” For'mya spoke with a warm smile. “We have not figured it out... nor do we care.”

“How is it that you get along with each other so seamlessly then? Is there no jealousy among you? No... how do I say this... no competition for Martin’s affection? It just seems that... frankly it doesn’t seem possible at all.”

“Competition?” Anja stated. “We don’t need to compete with each other... trust me there is plenty of Martin Leonidas for all of us if you get my meaning.”

Tinra couldn’t help the blush of her cheeks at this open, unashamed announcement and it showed on her face.

“Melyanna!” Dysea declared with a smile and slight blush to her own tanned skin.

“What?” Anja exclaimed. “It’s true!”

“You don’t need to embarrass our guest with torrid details of our love life with Nauta Melme however.” Dysea continued.

Anja smiled completely embarrassment free. “Torrid is good though. It makes very good news.”

They all laughed and Tinra noted that none of them disputed Anja’s comments in the least.

“I think the only thing we compete with each other in is who gets to the turbo wash first every morning.” Isabella spoke with a giggle. “Martin gave up fighting us for it over a decade ago. He goes to the officer’s barracks now.”

“True enough.” Anja said.

Aricia turned back to Tinra and smiled. “Forgive Anja’s... slip of the tongue...” She said. “We are... we are not shy about our feelings for Martin.”

Tinra smiled as well at her statement. "That is... that is quite obvious." She had a thought just then and she activated her drone with a small remote in her hand. "I would like to show you something. Then perhaps you can comment on it." They watched the small drone park just over Tinra's left shoulder. "This is from the interview I did with the King yesterday." She said. "He speaks of all of you."

"Oh boy!" Isabella spoke up. "Do we really want to know? We have given him many sleepless nights through the years."

Tinra smiled. "Yes... I think you will find it... well I found it quite profound."

"Marty? Profound?" Anja exclaimed.

Aricia looked at her. "Does he know what profound means Anja?" She asked playfully.

"I don't think so." Anja answered as they all laughed together again. "Martin isn't very good at expressing his emotions with words. She said to Tinra. "He is more of a hands on type man."

"Really?" Tinra said as she activated the drone and suddenly they were looking at an image of Martin. He was sitting in a chair aboard the ARC ROYAL in what appeared to be the main conference room. "I found his answer to my questions about all of you to be remarkably profound." She tapped the remote once more with her finger and the image fluttered then became active, noticing that they were looking at her oddly.

"...Ask you about your Queens." Tinra's voice could be heard easily though she was not in the picture.

"What about them?" Martin answered.

"You are mated... or married depending on your use of words... to six different women. Six very different women and very beautiful women. Many of my people will wonder if this is... many people will find it odd. Even demeaning in some ways. They will say that you can not possibly be in love with all of them. That they are nothing more than a harem? What is your answer to those who will think things like this?"

"Fuck them!" Martin blurted out which caused Aricia and the others to burst into laughter as well at his response. "Sibfla! I wasn't suppose to say that! Sorry!" He followed quickly with those words.

Tinra could be heard next, but there was a large amount of humor in her voice they noted. "It is quite alright Martin." She said. "It happens all of the time."

"Aricia and Anja always tell me I speak before thinking sometimes." Martin said with an embarrassed smile. "I apologize."

"It's fine... really." Tinra could be heard saying. "My people would be very interested to hear what your answer is though. Can you answer that?"

They watched as Martin was silent for a long moment looking at her. He leaned forward in the chair and rubbed his large hands together. "I don't make it a habit of caring what people think of me." Martin began. "I do what I think is right... whoever that may piss off. As for my Queens...?" Martin's eyes focused on Tinra and the drone obviously shifted its position for his face filled the small image and his dark brown eyes and face were all they were viewing. "I don't know how it came to be... or why. I don't particularly care at this point in my life. You and others see six different women. Six, exquisitely beautiful woman some may say I forced into my bed and my life. Nothing could be further from the truth regardless of what others say. When I look at them... at any of them... I don't see six women. I see one. They are the very best of friends you know. They share my life and my bed... but they also share everything with each other. Each of them hold... each of them holds a part of me inside them. A part of who I am. I would not be the man I am today without them. Any of them. They are my strength, my purpose, and my life. They are the reason I draw breath every day. Why I go on. The children they have given to me... and will give me in the future... it makes them all the more precious to me. I would glass planets and destroy stars for any of them because they are what makes me... well... me. You ask what I see when I look at them?"

"I see my future. My hopes. My dreams. All wrapped into one. If there are six souls that should be one... it is my Queens. I love everything about them. Their scents are like addicting drugs. Their bodies like temples. Their beauty like goddesses. Their minds... well they are a hell of a lot more intelligent than I will ever be. Though... I have often questioned what they see in me to be honest. Big, ugly scarred bastard that I am." Martin's eyes appeared as if he was looking directly into the drone. "They are me. I am them. When I look into their eyes, any of their eyes, I see the parts of my soul reflecting back at me. The man I am. The day when I don't see that anymore... that will be the day I draw my last breath and leave all this to my children." Martin leaned back in the chair and drew in a deep breath. "And believe me... my children will not be happy about that. Especially Andro." He said with a smile.

Tinra touched the remote ending the recording and turned to look at them on the couch. Though she did not know it at the time, there were very few things that could leave the Queens of the Lycavorian Union utterly speechless. Martin's words had done just that. Profound was not a word any of them would chose to describe what they were all feeling at this very moment. They knew without question that Martin loved each and every one of them without doubt or pause. He showed that to them each and every day and ever since For'mya had returned to them, he had held nothing back from any of them. Yet hearing the words pour from his lips as they had, hearing the sincere emotion those words carried within them, it left them unable to speak.

"Carians Nauta Melme." Dysea was the first to speak, her emerald green eyes moist. She leaned forward and rested her head on Cirith's shoulder and Tinra saw all of them grip each other's hands tightly as they moved closer together on the couch.

Aricia finally looked at Tinra, her own azure colored eyes slightly red as she held back tears. "Forgive us." She said softly. "We... we can swim within Martin's thoughts whenever we wish. He shows us every moment of every day how he feels for all of us but we have just never, he is such a traditional Spartan man and we have never heard him speak it with words in a such a way."

"God... I want to bawl my eyes out right now!" Anja declared as she lifted her hand and wiped away the few tears that had rolled down her cheeks.

"So do I." Cirith echoed as she rubbed her cheek against Anja's from over her shoulder.

Tinra watched as they shared a soft, lingering kiss, unconcerned that she was there and the drone was recording everything. She smiled as she saw the love between them and the love for Martin. Perhaps they could not explain it in a way someone would understand, but it was very real to them and to Martin. That is all that mattered.

"I would say from your reactions that all of you just answered that question fully." Tinra said with a warm and friendly voice. "I suspect that it will leave no doubts in anyone's mind, regardless if any of you can explain it or not."

"Some things... some things only the gods of destiny and fate can explain." For'mya said softly.

Tinra nodded her head. "Indeed." She shifted in her chair. "I think perhaps we will move on to something else. That topic is quite settled in my opinion. I understand that each of you holds a type of governmental position within the Lycavorian Union. Could you explain what each of you does? It's quite obvious to everyone that none of you are idle for I have seen you directing different things within this very camp. And you do not act as any royalty I have ever studied... among any species. None of you are predictable."

This caused all of them to laugh softly as they regained their composure and clung to one another tightly.

"As our beloved husband and mate would say... predictable is boring." Aricia spoke with a bright smile.

Tinra laughed at this and nodded. "So it would seem."

Isabella took a deep breath. "Anja directs the Union's medical apparatus... Dysea has final say on everything concerning education... For'mya has Command and Control over most of the Union's logistical aircraft. Aricia, Cirith and I have command of separate specialized units within the Union military structure. Once more as our husband and mate would say... we all have day jobs."

"Yet you... all of you are out here now with him." Tinra said.

"We may be the King and Queens of the Lycavorian Union..." Aricia said. "However... we are not special in any way. No one in our family is. It is... it is the Spartan mentality within all of us I suppose. It is how we have raised our children. Martin leads his own units, though given his experience and skill, they are much larger. Our sons have their own commands, our daughters their own duties within the military or fleet operations."

"None of you... are any of you involved in the politics within the Union?" Tinra asked.

"Martin's aunt is the Prime Minister." Anja took it up now. "But the Union is made up of Senators from every species. There are over three thousand of them now."

"Three thousand..." Tinra gasped. "Exactly... if I may ask... exactly how large is the Lycavorian Union?"

"Over nine hundred different species and nearly thirty trillion people." Anja answered. "At least that's what it was at the last census five years ago."

Tinra was truly stunned at this news. This is one of the questions she had wanted to ask Martin but never got around to it. This news was going to shock many people she had no doubt there. "And everyone... everyone has a say in the government?" She asked.

Dysea nodded now. "Everyone. The number of senators directly reflects the population count of each species' total... but yes... everyone is represented. Each Senator is elected for ten year terms but because of the longevity of many of the Union's people, there is a ten term limit so that fresh ideas and such are filtering throughout the government always. The only position that had no term limit until recently is that of the Prime Minister but the Union will be holding an election for this position within a few months."

"Yet Martin's Aunt is Prime Minister and he is King." She said.

Anja nodded now. "And if she loses the election then there will be a new Prime Minister and we will work with them as we have Deia. The position of King is... how do I say this... the King of the Lycavorian Union has always been a member of Martin's family. From the moment of its inception millennia ago. Martin is also King of Sparta, on Earth. This position was held by Martin's father over three thousand years ago. When his father and brother died a Steward was chosen to rule until a descendant of Martin's blood was born. When Martin returned to Sparta, the Spartan Senate voted unanimously to insure that no one but a member of Martin's blood ever held the throne of Sparta again. It is now also written into our Chronicles of Lycavorian Law and the Union Charter that no one but a member of Martin's family will ever hold these two positions going into the future. That was decided by the majority vote of the people of the Union four years after Martin returned to claim his throne."

"How much of a majority?" Tinra asked with a neutral voice. "With so many people... there must be some who..."

"Don't agree with how Martin and we rule?" For'mya said with a nod. "Yes... there are many who think they can do better. However... they can not be King by the will of our people."

"How close was this vote of your people that passed this law?" Tinra asked them. "Sixty percent? Sixty-five percent? It must have been very close. How many of your people can vote?"

"Not really." Anja answered. "It was... Bella... you have the best memory. What was it exactly?"

"It was a Referendum of the people by the people. Ninety-eight point seven percent of the Union voted over a week long period." Isabella answered proudly seeing Tinra's eyes grow wide. "Of those that voted... ninety-six point three percent voted in favor of the law. It was passed by near unanimous vote of the Union Senate the next day."

"By the Ancients!" Tinra gasped aloud now clearly stunned at this news.

"He hates it..." Anja spoke again. "We all hate it... how so many people view us as so different. We aren't really. We just want to live in peace and watch our children grow in safety and happiness. Just like everyone else. We all want the same things for our future and we swore to each other that if we could have it... then everyone would have it. Everything Martin has done since he has been King has been to the benefit of our people and their continued livelihood and happiness. Everything. There have been some who wanted to take that from us..."

Tinra glanced up and looked at her. "And?"

Anja shrugged her slim shoulders. "They failed." She stated simply. "Nothing more to really say on that."

"You are out here now. So far from home. Why? Aren't you needed to govern?" Tinra finally asked.

Tinra was surprised when they all chuckled at this. "The Union government chugs along quite well without us." Isabella spoke once more. "We only get involved in something when it concerns major decisions. Martin is... Martin hates to be idle. He is quite adventurous despite what he lets everyone see. And he has a tendency to find trouble wherever he goes. Even when he is not looking for it."

"And that is why you came out here?" Tinra asked. "So far from home?"

Aricia shook her head quickly. "Oh no. Our trip here has purpose." She replied. "There are those among us who have direct links to the Pralor people. We discovered a map on a planet in the Alpha Quadrant. A map we have followed here. Part of the decision to come out here was to follow this map and discover the Pralor people. The dragons among your people are the ancestors to the dragon adolescents that travel with us now. Martin and his Bonded brother Torma, our son Androcles and his Bonded sister Elynth... they are Talon Guardians of the dragon species. This is a revered position among dragons and it was their desire to try and reunite them.”

“You also said that there were men and women among your own people here now that have ties to the Pralor people.” Tinra asked the question though she was already well aware of the answer. She wanted this segment to have particular impact on the Pralor people as a whole. “How... how is that possible? To the best of my knowledge of our history... no Pralor has ever set foot in the Alpha Quadrant.”

Anja shook her head. “No... that is not quite accurate.” She stated. “There were several million Pralors who visited the Alpha Quadrant many thousands of years ago. Their ships crashed within the Alpha Quadrant. One of them on Lycavore. The original homeworld of Martin’s people.”

“There are many among the Lycavorian people who can claim blood ties with the Pralor people. Our beloved Martin among them. He wanted to... he wanted to discover his history. He wanted to learn of those who came before him.” Aricia stated.

It had been decided before hand that she and Anja would be the ones who answered these questions that Tinra would ask. Aricia and Anja had more direct experience with the history of the merger on Lycavore. They were surprised at how she had begun their interview, but given what they had heard, none of them were in the least bit upset. When they saw she was finally directing the interview in the direction that Delnash wanted it to go... Aricia and Anja took over answering the questions.

“You are saying that Martin Leonidas has the blood of Pralors within his veins?” Tinra asked.

“As do all of our children now.” Anja spoke.

“Do you know... has he discovered who these ancestors are?” Tinra asked setting up the answer she knew would send shockwaves through the Pralor people on Artaaya and their two colony worlds.

“Martin Leonidas is the Great-Great grandson of the former Chief Elder of your people.” Anja stated. “And he has come home to learn about his history. From those who are also his people. Your people.”

“Which Chief Elder?” Tinra asked. “There have been many in our history.”

“We discovered that before we came here.” Anja answered her. “Martin is the direct descendant of Chief Elder Sumar. If the information we have obtained is correct, he was the most popular of your Chief Elders. And he was also the very first and most powerful of your Praetorians.”

“Wait...” Tinra declared. “Are you saying that...?”

Anja smiled now, her jade green eyes bright. “Yes. It is the other part of why we came out here. Martin Leonidas, four of his sons and one of his daughters... they all carry this gene within them. The Praetorian gene as you call it. At least that is what Wayonn and Murano call it. They were quite ecstatic when they discovered Martin and our children existed. And so were we.”

Even though she already knew this... knew it before she ever came here... hearing Anja say the words so powerfully and with enormous pride... it made Tinra react in the way she did.

“By the Holy Ancients with the Rift of Time!” She blurted loudly.

CHAPTER THIRTY-EIGHT

SPARTA'S WRATH

PORT LANDING BAY 2

THREE HOURS BEFORE FIRST JUMP

While the landing bay held a good portion of the Pralor APOC Fighter Drones that they could launch on standby, there were only a few technicians going from fighter to fighter doing daily checks on the systems of the remote piloted fighters. The APOC fighter Drones were not as large as a TEMPEST fighter, but they still required regular maintenance checks even though they were unmanned. All of the APOC Fighter Drones had been layered with a light coating of Dragon Armor which tripled their survivability in a fight. The technicians and engineers that were now assigned to SPARTA'S WRATH were proud of the work they had done so far and they weren't about to let it go to waste. They were now assigned to the largest, most advanced and lethal starship within the entire Union Fleet, and quite possibly the entire universe. It was a dream assignment and they intended to make sure it stayed that way.

The Technicians and Engineers didn't take notice of the STRIKER Mark II that rested on the far end of the landing bay, nor the detachment of Durcunusaan troops that loosely circled the ship. What a few of them did notice was when the dragons began to disembark from the ship. Elynth was one of the most widely recognized dragons within the Union along with her father Torma, her mother Isheeni, her brother Jeth and Anja's dragon Miath. Normally if you saw one of them, it usually meant the King, Queen or Prince Androcles was nearby. In this case Andro stood a few meters away from the back of the ramp and Elynth moved directly to where he stood when she exited. Her large head came down and Andro's arms encircled her snout as much as he was able as, pressing his forehead to her warm scales.

"It is so very good to have you back sister." Andro spoke the words against her scales and Elynth's golden eyes closed in happiness.

I like doing missions such as this without each other... but we are happy we are back as well. Elynth told him as she canted her head towards him in affection. And it is not nearly as exciting as when we are together.

Anthar was the next to exit, followed by Majeir, Caydren and Cinol, all of them looking pleased with themselves if that was possible for a dragon. As Elynth turned her muscular body and settled gently to the deck beside Andro, he greeted the rest of them in a similar manner. When that was finished and Caydren settled beside his twin brother on the deck, Andro turned and looked at the last dragon that remained near the top of the ramp.

Marux had witnessed firsthand what Androcles Leonidas could do on that fateful day not so very long ago, and even though Elynth and Anthar both had told him he had nothing to fear, Marux felt that same fear gripping his stomach. Androcles was a Talon Guardian of his species. An almost mythical being to dragons and like Elynth, with far more power and control than Marux would ever have. He and Elynth had swatted Javier Moran's dragon Naruth from the sky like he was a child, and then ended his life in the very next moment. To say that Marux feared this much smaller Lycavorian would be an understatement of the century. He watched Andro turn to face him.

You are among friends now Marux. Andro's voice filled his mind easily and the warmth of the words was not lost on Marux. You no longer need fear anything.

Marux took several tentative steps forward down the ramp. He appeared thin and his scales were very dry. Dante Moran had obviously let his health suffer once they had left Earth. The musculature was still there, but it would be several weeks before Marux was back to full health with glowing scales and a rich diet.

I... I am shamed... Marux spoke timidly.

Andro moved up the ramp to stand directly in front of him unafraid. Had it been anyone else, Marux could have easily bitten them in half, even in his poor physical health. All he felt now was fear and he shied away slightly when Andro stopped in front of him. Andro held up his hands... palms out.

What happened was neither your fault nor your doing Marux. Andro spoke to him again. I will not place blame when you could have done nothing to stop it.

It is... it feels so empty. Marux told him softly.

Andro reached up without fear and placed his hands on Marux's snout seeing his eyes meet his intently. Marux lowered his body to the deck plating of the ramp as he felt the warmth of Andro's hands and the powerful emotion that flowed within them easily. That very soothing warmth grew outward from where his palms rested and for the first time in his life Marux felt true acceptance begin to fill him.

It will not be empty for long Marux. Andro told him. Your bond with Dante Moran was never meant to be. If it had been... that monster Xaxon would not have been able to sever it so easily. If at all.

Marux gazed at Andro. Then where... where do I belong?

You belong here. Andro told him. Here among those of us who will help you to recover and where you will be welcome.

Welcome? Marux spoke. I will never be welcome anywhere after what I have done.

Are you so sure? Andro asked him as he motioned with his head to the side. Marux followed his gaze and saw Jeth, Tharua and three other dragons moving towards where they were standing. He did not yet know they were the Bonded brother and sister of Deion and Nara Leonidas, Jeru and Mayla. The last dragon was older but his rich dark brown scales proved her was in the same excellent physical health as the others. Marux had never seen him before and did not know this was the dragon that was now Jomann's constant companion. His name was Jenso, and though they were not bonded together, the life experiences of them both had brought them very close together very quickly. Marux looked back to Andro.

You are here now Marux. With those who will be your friends if you allow it. We can show you so much if you let us. No one will remove you. We won't let them. Here you can rest and be among those who care for you. Here you can learn what it means to be a dragon. A true dragon. And here you can grow into what you were meant to. We are going away on a long trip and you will have ample time to experience all you have missed. I also... when you are ready I also have a job for you. Andro told him.

Marux's eyes grew a little wider. A job? He asked.

I will tell you in time. Andro said. For now... for now be among us. Learn from us. And share yourself with us. You will find peace and your purpose one day. Let it come to you.

I will always carry what happen with me Androcles. Marux said softly. I will never have the stigma of what Dante did lifted from me.

Andro nodded his head. We can not change the past Marux. And there are many things each of us have to do that we do not want to do. That is a stigma that all of us carry.

Do you... do you have this stigma?

Andro met his eyes. Marux... the stigma and shame I carry for what I have had to do in the name of good, it dwarfs any you might think surrounds you. You move on my friend. My brother. You move on and do not let it rule who you are or who you could become.

Will... will I ever have redemption? Marux asked.

Andro smiled at him then and let his fingers spread out even further on his dry scales. Vollenth found redemption and new life Marux my brother... and your redemption began the day Xaxon severed your bond with Dante. The moment his twisted and evil presence left you... your redemption began.

Grab onto that Marux. Elynth's voice echoed and he lifted his head to look at her resting beside Anthar, his thicker and longer tail casually stroking her own in the manner of all mated dragons. Grab onto that and never let go. We go forward Marux. Always forward and never back.

Then that is what I wish. Marux said returning his eyes to Androcles. I never want to go back. Never.

Andro nodded his head. Then let's get you fed and cared for. You look a few hundred pounds lighter than you should be and we need to return the health to your scales. And you... you need a bath my friend. Badly.

Marux lowered his head slightly, his eyes dropping from Androcles' gaze. I do smell don't I?

Andro laughed. Not as bad as some of us have smelled in the past I assure you. Jeth fell into the burrow of a Folcani desert Worgan once.

Fell! Jeth announced as he settled to the deck now as well. I rolled down the anse hill and right through a pile of sibfla bigger than me! Those foul creatures cannot even take the time to sibfla outside of where they live! It took a week before the smell wore off. Even Lisisa would not come near me.

Jeth... I have told you about your language! Tharua spoke as she butted him playfully in his side with her snout.

Andro chuckled. You see... He reached up and stroked his scales again. Leave your past where it belongs Marux. In the past. It's time to move on now my dragon brother. And all of us here will help you.

...time to move on now my dragon brother. And all of us here will help you.

Sarlana stood far above the Landing bay surface on the simple catwalk like structure and simply watched and listened. She had first feared for the young Marux after hearing what he had taken part in but she had heard everything that Androcles had spoken to Marux and this more than anything else proved to her beyond a shadow of a doubt that, Lycavorian though he may have been, he was indeed Vrelvel Sargti. Androcles Leonidas and his father were the first non-Darastrixi Vrelvel Sargti in the entire history of their people yet no one but a Vrelvel Sargti, with Darastrixi blood flowing within their veins, would have been so compassionate to a dragon who had done what she now knew Marux had been involved in. He would have punished very harshly if it was needed she knew without question, but if Xaxon had controlled his Bonded One even on a peripheral level, a Vrelvel Sargti would have taken that into account instantly just as Androcles had. He would have done exactly as...

“Doraanar Sarlana?” The voice spoke from behind her and Sarlana jumped just a bit in surprise as she whirled around and saw him.

“Murano!” Sarlana gasped in shock.

Murano moved closer to her. “I did not mean to frighten you. My apologies.”

Sarlana shook her head and waved her hand slightly in dismissal and she regained her composure. “You do not need to apologize... I was... I was distracted.” She looked at him for a long moment and finally took a deep breath. “The Praetorian Murano. I have wondered when you would finally come to confront me. I have read much about you from the archives on Artaaya. You are said to be nearly as gifted as Sumar once was.”

“And I know what you are.” Murano spoke as he stepped closer to the much shorter woman.

Sarlana caught the inflection in his voice instantly and nodded her head. “Yes... I’m sure that you do.” She met his eyes. “Have you come here to seek vengeance Murano?”

Murano looked surprised at this statement and he drew back slightly. “Vengeance?” He gasped. “No! I would not... I only wish... I only wish to know why? And why you are here now?”

Sarlana was not frightened of Murano in any way and it was she who stepped closer to him now. “What was done to your people on our homeworld was horrific Murano.” She began. “I can not answer the why of it for I was not there... I can only guess at what took place. I had many friends among your people and I mourned their loss for decades.” She dropped her head in grief. “I lost everyone whom I ever knew. You cannot imagine how that feels. You...”

“Yes... yes I can.” Murano said softly.

Sarlana looked up at him once more. “Yes... I suppose you do know.” She spoke. “I cannot understand all of it Murano. I would have fought the decision as so many of my caste did. If I had not been sent away... I would be among those who were killed by our own people for trying to stop it. I live... I live with that everyday. I have often questioned what cruel twist of fate sent me away so that I alone survived while so many did not.”

Murano lifted his eyes to her face once more. “My apologies Doraanar... I should not have... I should not have asked. It was wrong of me.”

Sarlana shook her head. “It is never wrong to question something Murano. You should know that. And my name is Sarlana Nephaon... though I have not used my full name in more years than I can remember.”

“You have survived for so long among my people and yet no one discovered you. How is that possible?” Murano said.

“When Teniri and the other dragons first joined with your people, they kept my existence secret.” Sarlana told him. “I asked them to do this because I did not want your people to turn them away because of what we had done on our homeworld. The Darastrixi... we contributed to the near extinction of the Pralor species and it fills me with shame and anger every time I think of it and remember.”

Murano shook his head at this. “There are so many among my people now who have... they have dismissed the mistakes we made in the past. Many more still do not even remember what occurred so long ago for they are young and adventurous. You could have... Sarlana... you could have been more open about your existence. If you had... if you had... you may have been able to help my brother from allowing things to become as bad as they are.”

“Perhaps.” Sarlana said. “There were still many who did remember. Among your Elders primarily. I did it to protect both our species Murano. I had to do it so that we survived.”

Murano moved to the railing and placed his hands on the smooth metal surface. “Yet now you chose to come forward. Why?”

“You would not ask me that question if you did not already know the answer.” She said.

Murano looked at her. “Androcles and Dorian.”

Sarlana nodded. “Elynth and Ryner as well. I know Andro has discussed this with you. At least in part.”

Murano turned to face her fully once more. “Briefly.” He said. “Something about your ancient Dahakoan and what it means. Sarlana I...”

Sarlana smiled up at him. “You think I am here to take them away from you.”

“They are... Androcles, Dorian, Jomann, Deion, their father and who knows how many more.” Murano said. “They are the future of the Praetorians. The new breed. If what I believe is truly taking place then there could be so many more among their people. Enough to rebuild and be able to face the Scourge monsters once more.”

“You have come to understand why Sumar left you behind haven’t you.” Sarlana said. “Truly understand.”

Murano looked at her. “I... I believe this is what he intended... yes.”

“And you fear that I will take them away from you?” She said again.

“The power I feel swirling within Martin, within Androcles and his brothers, I have only felt this when I stood beside Sumar. And within them is the potential to be even greater than he ever was.” Murano said. “I do not know how Sumar knew this would happen... it is far too frightening to even contemplate... but if that is the reason he left me behind, then I must fulfill what he intended for me.”

“And you will.” Sarlana told him. “Only you can.”

Murano looked at her. “But you fill their heads about these Dahakoan. These ancient Darastrixi warriors from millions of years ago.”

Sarlana nodded her head. “They have a right to know what they are Murano. I know you have sensed it within Androcles and Dorian. They have the blood of Darastrixi within them Murano. Martin and their mothers know this now as well. I showed it to them. I was just as shocked as they were... but once I met Martin I knew what I felt was true. I had nothing to do with that Murano... I... I can not even begin to imagine how it came to be.”

“Sarlana... they need to learn to focus and control the power within them.” Murano said. “Their emotions give them the ability to channel their power unlike any Praetorians of my time. We were... we were taught to reign in our emotions and not let them rule us. They can harness their emotion in a way I have never seen before.”

“That is not something they are capable of Murano. You know that. Their species is... they embrace their emotions instinctively.” Sarlana told him. “You will not be able to remove that from them.”

Murano nodded in agreement. “I know... and I do not want to. Not anymore. It took me some time to realize this but with Helen and Daniel’s help I have come to understand that their emotion is their power. That is why they... all of them have the potential to be more powerful than any Praetorian of my time ever was. I have seen it within Martin already... and within Androcles.” Murano looked at her quickly with bright eyes as if realizing something for the first time. “It was you!” He said.

“I don’t understand.” Sarlana spoke.

“On that ship.” Murano said. “I felt... I felt a massive influx of Etheric focus and control within Andro when he was...”

“When he was beating Dante Moran to death?” Sarlana smiled. “Xaxon was a fool to have that boy face him. I see now why you punished him in the manner you did. He was not very bright was he?” Sarlana said.

“It was you!” Murano said again insistently. “You helped him to gain the clarity and focus I felt within him.”

“I only assisted him. He and Dorian both are far more powerful than even you believe. The Dahakoan were not like your Praetorians Murano. They never were. Their abilities were more latent. The ability to focus and remain clear minded chief among them. The sense of things... of life all around them. Their ability to see and understand things through the fog that others could not. A small portion of this was passed to their father when they were conceived within each of their mother’s womb as you must have seen by now. Not on as concentrated a level as his sons... but from what I saw Martin Leonidas is so very special in his own right. The devotion to their family and people is another gift. And because of the inbred instincts within the Lycavorian species, it is even more powerful. This is the sway that they wielded Murano. The same influence that now flows through Androcles and Dorian and their Bonded ones. As it will also flow through the Darastrixi pair who are now their Brother and Sister of the Blood. As the power of a Praetorian flows through them.”

Murano looked at her wide eyed. “Wait! What! Are you saying...?”

Sarlana nodded her head. “Now you see why I could never take them away from you as you believe. The final pair that will make up the return of the Dahakoan, they will have all the same powers as Androcles and Dorian. Praetorian power. They will be just as powerful. Yet they are Darastrixi.”

“How is that... how is that possible?” Murano asked her. “Our scientists... they were positive that the Praetorian gene could be carried by no other species. That it was unique to Pralor born...”

“Pralor born men and women. I know. Yet Sumar passed it down within his blood to Lycavorians and now Laren and Ladur have Lycavorian blood within them. Just as Androcles and Dorian have Darastrixi blood and Sumar’s blood flowing within their veins.” Sarlana said.

“How?” Murano asked once more.

Sarlana shook her head. “I do not know Murano. And I would tell you if I did... but how it came to be is as much a mystery to me as it is to you. Even their mother Anja is stupefied in this regard, and she is the most intelligent woman of any species that I have ever encountered.”

Murano blinked several times as different scenarios flashed in his mind. “Sarlana... if there are Darastrixi who have within them the...”

Sarlana nodded her head. “Are you beginning to understand now what it all means?” She asked.

“If the Scourge discover them...” Murano began.

“Yes... if they discover that the Praetorians and the Dahakoan, the only two forces in the known universe who stood against them and beat them... if they discovered that they have been reborn within six individuals... that these individuals now wield both the skill of a Dahakoan and the power of a Praetorian...” Sarlana spoke.

“They will stop at nothing to kill them!” Murano gasped.

“That is why Androcles and Dorian work even now to pull the final pair from within Darastrixi space.” Sarlana told him. “The pull of their Brother and Sister of the Blood is too powerful to resist now. Laren and Ladur will only be safe here... with them. And they will need our help.”

Murano met her eyes. “What do you mean?”

“Why do you think you are here Murano? Why do you think I am here? Why did we both survive all these millennia when so many others like us did not? When so many we knew and loved perished in the fires of oblivion. It was preordained. Sumar and Wer... and Dadrien... they both knew what they were doing when they positioned us as they did. You and I... we were the anomaly among both our kinds. That is why they chose us. At least that is what I now believe. To survive and be here now at this moment in time when so many of our friends and comrades are nothing but memories could only mean one thing. They meant for us to be here. For they must have known that this day would come.” Sarlana looked at him intently.

“They knew the Scourge would return once more Murano. More powerful than ever before. They must have known this and that is why there are six who wield the powers of both our species greatest warriors. And we... you and I... we are here to teach them. Guide them. So that they do not fail as both of our peoples did.”

Murano looked at her. “The Darastrixi did not... your people were not nearly wiped out Sarlana.”

“Weren’t we?” Sarlana said. “The day we allowed the Scourge to do what they did to our friends and our families... the day we turned against ourselves in order to appease those vile monsters is the day we lost ourselves as a species.”

“And what is our purpose?” Murano asked after a long moment.

“You know what our purpose is Murano. You can feel it within you.” Sarlana said. “We are the last of the old breed of Doraanar and Praetorian. It is our duty... it is our destiny to train and guide those who are now among us and the others who will no doubt be discovered. To guide and train them and insure they do not make the same mistakes we did.” Sarlana stepped closer and reached out to take his arm. “Androcles and his father may have some sense of what is coming because of Sumar’s memories... but they will need us when the time comes. You know as well as I, when the Scourge... once they discover what we now know... they will stop at nothing to destroy them.”

Murano nodded his head slowly. “Yes.”

“That is why we are here.” Sarlana told him. “Not to tell them what to do... but guide them and train them... for they are more powerful than any of us will ever be. And they may be...”

Murano looked at her. “What?”

“They very well may be the last chance any of us has to stop those vile monsters from eradicating any species that will not bow down to them.” Sarlana said softly. “And plunging the entire universe into darkness forever.”

Murano grasped her arms. “We must make contact with the Pralor Shiria that Wayonn told me of. It is she and Androcles’ Aunt who are spearheading the search for those with the Praetorian gene.”

“How... how many do you think there could be Murano?” Sarlana asked.

“I don’t know.” Murano answered her honestly. “The gene is so rare to begin with... but it is not unheard of, according to Wayonn, for one Lycavorian pair to have twelve or more children. Their longevity equals that of Pralor and Darastrixi. It grants them so many gifts and opportunities. Pureblood Lycavorian females can remain fertile well past the prime of their life, which is never really set.”

“And it will only spawn actively in a pureblood correct?” Sarlana asked.

“That is what Wayonn says Shiria first thought. Until Dorian was born. His blood is a mixture of the two purest bloodlines of two species. Lycavorian and High Coven. Which can only mean that there might be those of the High Coven who also carry this gene. We need to discover so much more about the gene and that is what Shiria is working on now. When we return we will need to sit with Anja and have her explain it. Her knowledge of such things surpasses any among my people for she has been studying the gene in detail since they first discovered it within Androcles when he was born. Then we can determine what to do.”

“Androcles and Dorian. Elynth and Ryner. Martin and those of his other children that have the gene. They must remain our focus right now.” Sarlana said. “As will those who have the dormant gene. You have seen what they can do?”

Murano nodded. “I saw it within Aricia and Anja openly. All of them really.” He said. “I don’t know how this came to be, for it is not something that happened with my people. The only thing I can think of is that Martin’s blood, pure Lycavorian blood like Martin’s, it somehow mutated the gene. It has allowed him to pass it to others within his bloodline even if it is not dormant. As with Aricia, those who have the dormant gene within them already will be able to do far more than Pralor scientists ever thought. Like Anja and For’mya and Martin’s other wives and mates, all of them have been affected in some way. Actively as in Anja’s case with her healing abilities and then those like Dysea and For’mya, where it gives them latent abilities.” He shook his head. “As I said... it is something we will need to speak with Anja about.”

“In the short time I have been here I have felt it within their wives as well.” Sarlana said. “They may not be passing the actual gene onto them... but whatever is happening it is certainly affecting those they take as wives.”

Murano nodded as he released her arms. “It is happening with Androcles and Denali as well. I’m sure with Dorian and Jomann. I spoke to Wayonn briefly about this. He told me that he noticed it right away when first meeting Sadi, Lu’ria and then Ne’Veha. And then again when he finally came together with Martin.”

It was Sarlana now who reached up and took his arm. “We must remain cautious in what we do Murano.” She said. “These men and women are unlike our two species. Their emotion is their power and we must not lose sight of that. They are not as constrained as our species were and still are.”

Murano nodded. “I know. That is their largest strength.”

“And it could potentially be their biggest weakness.” Sarlana said. “That is why we need to make sure we do not try and control them. Only guide them Murano. Teach them. The sense of compassion and good I have felt in all of them is beyond anything I have ever experienced. We must make use of that.”

Murano turned to meet her gaze fully. “We must prepare. If what you say is true about this Darastrixi pair... then Androcles and Dorian will act soon. Once this business with this Vanari species is complete they will move. Androcles is too much like his father and he will not tolerate the arrogance that these Vanari seem to possess for very long. Just as Martin did not tolerate the same arrogance when my brother first encountered them.”

“What do you suggest?” Sarlana asked. “They have asked me to help them contact the final pair. That will happen sooner than you think.”

Murano nodded. “Androcles asked me as well.”

Sarlana nodded in recognition of this knowledge. “Then he will do it before they arrive among these Vanari. Probably tomorrow before we arrive in the Beta Quadrant. He is like his father as you said and he is already thinking two and three and four steps beyond what we are doing now. I saw this within Martin during the brief time I was with him on Manne.”

“As did I?” Murano said. “Their minds are like computers. Always plotting and always planning. I have never seen two such tactically proficient minds in all my years. They look at things from perspectives that I and others would never imagine. I dare say... I dare say if they were Pralors during our wars with the Scourge... it is quite possible we might not have lost everything. They can be very reckless however, but this... this may actually be a trait that is needed now."

Sarlana nodded her head. "Hold to that conviction Murano. We may have need of it in the future. They will undoubtedly contact them with one of those wondrous items that they have created."

"The Mark II Neural Booster." Murano said. "Yes. Just another reason why Lorendo is such a fool. Our own Science people could not think to make something like this device. A species they consider to be beneath them made it and use it with far more control than most of my people could muster."

"Can they reach that far Murano?" Sarlana asked.

"With all of us in the connection with them..." Murano nodded. "Easily. If what you say is true, then the four of them could probably sustain it themselves, but including all of us gives them an almost unlimited source of power to draw from. Do you know where they would be on your planet Sarlana? This Darastrixi pair? Would anyone have taken notice of them? Having an idea of where to target their connection would greatly increase the chances that it would go undetected by Etheric monitors that may be active and controlled by either your people or the Scourge. At least for a time."

"Oh yes." She stated confidently. "Laren would have some of the physical traits of her Lycavorian and vampiric blood. She would not look as I do for instance. If my people have discovered the significance of what this Darastrixi pair is then they would be protecting her." Sarlana told him. "I believe I know where they will take them... at least initially... and if Ch'teven is still one of their elders, they will want to protect them for as long as possible as I said. If they have been trying to communicate with them, then I know they are among those who will shield them. They will not be out among the general populous."

Murano took her arm gently. "Then let us begin to make our own plans." He said. "I have a feeling we will need them."

ULU SCIMITAR ORBITING AUSTROVA

"...is my daughter!" The Vanari demanded harshly as he stood in the corridor leading out of the port landing bay. "You will tell me where my daughter Murie is this moment!"

He was surrounded by six, heavily armed Durcunusaan whose weapons were ready to use but not pointed directly at the man and the half a dozen others with him. Another four of the Durcunusaan were behind them effectively blocking the corridor.

"Galar Arn Del... this is not helping." Ardan spoke trying to be reasonable.

"I wish to see my daughter!" The Vanari man shouted again. "I did not agree with the Board when they sent her to be among these... these animals! If they have..."

"What seems to be the problem?" The voice echoed and they turned to watch as the four Durcunusaan parted and Dutkne moved past them before they closed ranks again.

"General Director Dutkne!" Ardan exclaimed. "Thank goodness. We are..."

Dutkne held up his hand to Ardan stopping his words rather rudely and ignoring him as he looked at the senior Durcunusaan. "Lieutenant?"

"He came out of the side hatch after being told to exit through the ramp of the transport Val'istar." The man told him. "We yelled for him to stop but he ignored us. Talia's team caught him just as he came through the portside pilot's bulkhead hatch. He's been yelling about his daughter since."

Dutkne turned slowly and looked at Ardan and Galar Arn Del. "Just where exactly did you think you were going Regent Arn Del?" He asked.

"To find my daughter!" The man barked. "If she has been harmed I will..."

Dutkne shook his head. "Shut up you fool!" He shouted at the man stunning both Ardan and Galar with the force of his words. "Do you realize that your actions could have resulted in an incident that neither of our peoples want? You can't just storm on to one of our ships and begin demanding things you have no right to demand! I thought you would have learned your lesson from before Regent Vu Lamurrian."

Dutkne had dealt with the Vanari for decades and each time he found them to be arrogant and pompous and condescending to him and the Lycavorian people as a whole. Since becoming Andro's Praetorian Mage, since embracing what that meant and would mean into the future, his patience had grown much shorter when it came to such people. He knew it this was because of Androcles' influence and how Praetorian Warrior and Mage often took on the sometimes very different personalities of each other because of their deep Etheric connection.

"General Director... surely you don't mean..." Ardan began to speak.

"That's exactly what I mean!" Dutkne snarled. "And I am no longer General Director! When is that going to sink in? The merger has been completed and the Protectorate no longer exists. It is now part of the Lycavorian Union!"

Ardan looked at him wide eyed. "We... we did not know this!" He snapped.

"Frankly Regent Vu Lamurrion ... it's really none of your business." Dutkne told him. "We do not answer to the Vanari government and what we do is our own business. Androcles sent these ships as an envoy of goodwill and Regent Arn Del decides he is going to run off and search a ship he has never been on while not bothering to adhere to the protocols we have in place? He could have been injured since he has absolutely no idea where he is going or what he is doing. You would not tolerate it on board one of your ships and we will not tolerate it here! Is that in any way unclear to any of you?"

"These... these men and women began to act roughly with us." One of the female Vanari Regents who had accompanied them spoke up now. She was stunningly beautiful, even more so than most Vanari females Dutkne noted, and she looked vaguely familiar to him. Her beauty did not affect his answer however.

"You're anse lucky they didn't shoot you!" Dutkne barked still glaring at Galar. "Your daughter is perfectly fine and she is conferring with the Union senators who accompanied us to facilitate discussions you fool!" Dutkne spat at Galar. "I suggest you leave you attitude here Regents... you will not find it well received on this ship or anywhere else."

"You threaten us?" Another asked in shock.

"I am merely stating a fact." Dutkne said. "The Lycavorian Union does not look kindly upon those who will not treat them with the same respect that they themselves are treated with. Now... Regent Vu Lamurrion, if you and the others will follow me, I will take you to the main conference room. Denali and the others are already there!"

Easy Dutkne. Denali's voice filtered to him in the Etheric realm.

I will get your brother for doing this to me. Dutkne stated as he waved his hand forward and began to lead them down the corridor. I hated dealing with them in the past and I dislike it even more now because we are Praetorian and Mage.

Better you than Andro. Denali chuckled. He would just vent them out an airlock.

Dutkne couldn't help himself and he laughed softly knowing full well what Androcles was capable of. His laughter only served to make the Vanari Regents behind him fume in anger for they thought he was laughing at them and what had just occurred. That is very true. He said. They are not going to like what we tell them Deni... you do realize this I hope. And they will not be as open to change as long as Ardan and those like him are in power.

Probably not... but too bad. Denali answered.

Dutkne nodded. Indeed. We will join you shortly. And be warned... he has brought Cruor and Eyon Ahn Vernalo with him.

Dutkne are you serious? Arduri's voice cut into their connection easily now.

Arduri Leonidas had been working with her beloved husband and sister every waking moment to improve her Mindvoice skills. As with Caliria, Arduri would never be on a par with their husbands in terms of Etheric power because they were Vanari and having Etheric skills was not natural to their species, but because of the pureness of Denali and Andro's blood, they would be able to do far more than most normal Lycavorians and elves who did not advance their skills beyond the rudimentary level. Arduri had embraced her life now with everything that she was, finding complete happiness and unquenchable love within the arms of a man and woman. Nothing would ever take that from her.

I'm afraid so. Dutkne answered. They can not seem to rattle your father Arduri... so it appears they will try to influence you.

Then they are fools. Arduri stated simply.

Well... we already knew that. Dutkne said with some humor. This might also give us some idea of what their future intentions will be.

SCIMITAR

STARBOARD CONFERENCE ROOM

Dutkne moved to the chair beside Denali and Arduri as Galar greeted his daughter with a bear hug while Ardan and the other Vanari were ushered to chairs around the opposite end of the table. Ulana sat between the Elven Senator Ya'sur and the Lycavorian Senator Pyath. The Folcani Senator, Zarnia, sat to Pyath's right beside Sa'sur who had a typically stoic look on her beautiful elven face. Ya'sur stood up from his chair with a welcoming smile and opened his hands.

"Allow me to welcome you to the ULU SCIMITAR." He spoke warmly. "I am Senator Ya'sur of the United Lycavorian Union. To my left are Senators Ulana and Zarnia. To my right is Senator Pyath and the commander of this fine ship, Admiral Sa'sur. We welcome you and look forward to our talks."

"Is it habit to treat your guests in such a way?" The female Regent who had spoken in the corridor asked as she sat in the chair.

Ya'sur kept the smile on his face. "Our guests do not usually ignore our establish safety protocols and attempt to run throughout our ship unchecked. There are many hazards on a star ship as I'm sure you are all aware. That is the same on this ship as well." He told her. "May I know who...?"

"This is Regent Asay Va Eldost, a member of the Senior Board of Regents." Ardan spoke from his chair. "With her are Cruor and Eyon Ahn Vernalo, both members of the Board of Regents. This is Galar Arn Del... a member of the Senior Board of Regents as well. Murie Arn Del is the Regent who met you when you arrived in Vanari space and Galar's daughter. He was only concerned for her safety."

Interesting. Arduri spoke openly in the single Etheric connection so that all of them could hear her. They had agreed to keep their observations to themselves and each other within the Etheric realm during the meeting. It gave them an advantage that even Ulana had agreed with though her Etheric abilities were not as advanced as the others. While Denali was the most powerful Etheric user now within the Beta Quadrant because of his Praetorian blood, Ya'sur, Pyath and Sa'sur were easily low Tier Six users. Ulana was considered a Tier three while Zarnia needed to be assisted.

Princess? Ya'sur questioned without looking at her.

Eyon was not a member of the Board of Regents before we left to find Caliria. Arduri told them. He is far too junior and the selection process to be considered for even a junior posting takes many years.

Very interesting indeed. Pyath spoke. This is the one who you were to be married to Princess?

Arduri winced slightly at that memory but nodded her head imperceptibly. Yes... though now I don't know what lapse of reasoning struck me to agree to that?

A political move then. Zarnia spoke.

Oh yes... without a doubt. Ya'sur spoke.

"Is there a reason she would not be safe onboard our ship?" Ya'sur asked calmly as he looked at Ardan across the table now.

"We do not..." Galar began to speak angrily but both Ardan and his daughter touched his arms and silenced him.

"The news of... the news of the merger of the Protectorate and the Union already taking place has taken us by surprise." Ardan spoke. "We were not aware this had occurred already. We assumed it would take... longer."

"You did not discover this knowledge until you arrived here Regent Vu Lamurrion, I understand this comes as a shock." Ya'sur said evenly. "Regent Galar however, he acted in the manner he did before you had such knowledge. Is there something that we need to be made aware of before we begin these discussions? We are very flexible and would surely be able to accommodate anything additional that you might wish to discuss or make aware to us."

Galar glared at Ya'sur but said nothing as his daughter ushered him to his chair. "It is alright father." She told him softly though everyone heard her words. "They have gone out of their way to make me feel welcome."

Ardan waited for Galar to take his seat before looking at Ya'sur. "No... we have nothing additional to discuss." He said.

"I believe we do Ardan." Asay spoke up. She turned until her eyes were focused directly on Arduri. "Why is Arduri Re Mydala here?"

Ya'sur canted his head slightly. "I don't believe I understand the question." He said. "Is there some problem?"

Ulana had remained silent for the most part on this trip but her dark eyes now focused on the Vanari woman. Ulana had never expected Androcles to allow her to accompany the political delegation after what had happened between her and Sadi on this very ship. That she had been included was a surprise, however, Ya'sur and the others actively seeking her opinion on one thing or another was a total shock. They had included her in everything they had done, all of the meetings they had together, and even inviting her to dinner with them. This was not something that Ulana had ever expected.

Her father had raised her to believe that all Alpha wolves descended from their bloodline were superior to others in every way. Even the female wolves like her. That they were somehow granted status over the others because of the pureness of their blood. Over twenty years this had been pounded into her head. She had never associated with wolves who were beneath her and always went out of her way to insure she avoided them. They were beneath her status in her eyes. Ulana knew that her father was not well liked outside of their home province because of these views. This did not seem to bother him as he attempted to push his own agenda forward, trampling any who thought to get in his way. Even in their home on Apo Prime he was no different. Though the men and women who worked for them were well paid, they were treated as underlings by her father and brothers. No better than the dirt upon which her father walked. For years she had done the same thing, treated others the same way, because that is how she was raised.

The few short months she had been together with Androcles Leonidas had begun to change all that.

The Leonidas family had the purest bloodline of any Lycavorian within the Union, that had been proven many times over and was without question. Even the Queens that were not pureblood like Queen Aricia had blood more pure than most because the King had been the one who turned them. They were also the most unassuming and outgoing family that she had ever encountered in her life. The men and women who worked the Royal Estate on Apo Prime were treated as treasured friends and not underlings. She had witnessed the King himself standing in the kitchen with the Feravomir and the dozen or so kitchen staff as they cooked together. Once she had even caught him singing in this horrible voice, his arms draped over the shoulders of the main chef and his mate, his attempt at singing had the others laughing uncontrollably while Queen Aricia and Queen For'mya had looked on. The chef's wife finally had to stuff a biscuit in his mouth to make him stop and then she had shoved him out of their kitchen. If this event had occurred in her father's home, that woman would have been cast out and probably forced to leave Apo Prime to find more work because her father would have sent the word out among this many contacts tarnishing her reputation.

Ulana did not come to realize just how truly out of her world she was until Sadi had thrashed her. The little bubble her father had raised her in was not going to sustain her now that he was gone. She had discovered that she was not as high and mighty as she had been raised to believe. That she was not superior to others because of her bloodline and her education. When she discovered that Sadi's PCC was so much higher than her own, that had been the final straw. She now firmly believed that Icho had allowed her to make a fool of herself by making it all so public and then having the full reaction of the people of the Union directed at her. She had been used just as her father had always used her and her brothers. Ulana always believed she would have Androcles. That he should have been hers. Ulana now knew that had she been smarter and more observant, she would have realized that she never had a chance. In many ways, Androcles was far more a traditional Spartan than even his own father, and he embraced the ways of the wolf deeply. The same Lycavorian culture and history that her father had discarded and told her was beneath her.

Ya'sur was not a Lycavorian but he had risen from a common elven family to the position he was in now. Pyath had entered politics at his father's urging; a man who commanded vast numbers of ships filled with men and women who adored him because he cared for those under his command. She did not know much of Senator Zarnia, only that she came from a small, but influential family on the Folcani homeworld. None of these fellow Senators had an arrogant bone in their body Ulana knew. They talked and joked with the crew while eating in the Mess Lounge and none of them acted as if they were owed something. Just being around them these last weeks had the effect that Androcles and Deia had secretly hoped it would, though Ulana knew none of this. What Ulana did know now was that she was different from before. She had begun to look at the world around her in a very different way. And Arduri Leonidas had been one of the most influential people in Ulana beginning to realize that not everything her father had taught her was true. The Vanari woman, though far more beautiful than Ulana considered herself, had begun to influence her without even knowing it. Ulana had done something she had never done before on the trip here. She had studied the history of the Vanari, from their culture to their politics. Some of what she discovered had made her sick, especially the parts that occurred to Vanari females on a regular basis. The fact that the Vanari government accepted this was quite appalling to her. Ulana had made it a point to try and catch Arduri alone when they arrived at the Vanari homeworld and she had succeeded in finding her just last night in the Mess Lounge. Some three hours later, they had parted ways, with soft kisses and Arduri's promise to show her more of Austrova when time permitted. This had been the life altering event that Androcles and Deia had hoped for and Ulana had awoken this morning and vowed to do things differently than her father had taught her.

When Arduri's name was mentioned Ulana looked up and took far more interest.

"Arduri Re Mydala, her sisters and her brother, they are under investigation by the Vanari Court of Regents for violating our laws." Asay spoke evenly. "They, along with their mother, broke nearly a dozen Vanari laws in leaving the Beta Quadrant to pursue their sister Caliria to the Alpha Quadrant. Trying to retrieve Vanari females is forbidden because it exposes those who go after them to further danger. And it risks retaliation from the OSG. Caliria Re Mydala is under investigation as well for violating one of the most sacred laws in our history due to her actions in trying to discover a counter agent to the OSG virus that the OSG uses. This is strictly taboo within Vanari society because of the cataclysmic consequences it could have."

Ya'sur was about to respond when Ulana's voice cut him off. This caused all of them to look at her in surprise, including Denali.

"Arduri Re Mydala is now Arduri Leonidas." Ulana spoke evenly but with a touch of force in her words. "She is a recognized Princess of the Lycavorian Union. Her sister is now Caliria Leonidas, a Crown Princess of the Lycavorian Union. You wish to bring charges against them?"

"Their status among your people does not concern us." Asay answered. "They broke our laws before they so conveniently hid behind the name of your supposed Royal family."

"Supposed?" Ulana charged on, Asay's words beginning to make her angry. "Now you are calling into question the status of our Royal family?"

Asay waved her hand dismissively. "The status of your Royal family is of no concern to us! And this will not stop us from investigating and bringing charges against them if we deem it prudent." She stated.

"The status of our Royal bloodline is without question!" Ulana snapped. "And if what I have read of your people is accurate, that Royal bloodline has been in power among our people for far longer than any of you have been alive! And they have thrived! You would do well to realize now that we will not be cajoled or intimidated by the Vanari people simply because you consider yourselves above us."

This outburst caught Denali by surprise and he glanced at Dutkne who shrugged his shoulders.

"We... I meant no offense." Asay spoke quickly. "I was only referring to an internal Vanari matter."

"And will your investigation be open to Lycavorian authorities and courts to review as is the case within the Union when dealing with non-Union citizens?" Ulana pressed her.

"Certainly not! This is a Vanari matter as I said!" Asay hissed.

"Then your so called investigation will mean nothing to us." Ulana stated openly causing Denali's eyes to widen even more. He was about to lean forward and interfere when Arduri discretely squeezed his leg under the table. Denali glanced at her and then to where Ya'sur stood. He also shook his head ever so minutely.

"I... excuse me?" Asay asked.

"The Lycavorian Chronicles of Law and our own Union Constitution specifically state that any investigation of a Union citizen by outside forces will be honored, however, all facts and information in regards to this investigation will be made available to Union representatives to review and respond to." Ulana spoke.

"She is telling us they will not honor our laws." Cruor spoke from his chair.

“Quite the contrary sir.” Ulana said. “If you are willing to make available to us whatever documents, witnesses and information you have in regards to this matter we would certainly honor your laws. However, if you are not, then our own laws are clear. We do not simply hand over Union citizens without proof of crimes committed. Most especially not members of our Royal family!” Ulana stated with determination. “Show us this proof and we will adhere to your laws, but we will defend our people.”

“They are not your people!” Asay declared.

“You are mistaken Regent Va Eldost.” Ulana said. “They very much are Union citizens.”

“And what will you do?” Asay pressed.

“The Royal Durcunusaan have specific instructions on what to do if any member of the Royal family is endangered in any way.” Pyath answered this question after looking at Ulana with a smile of approval. “Unless you plan on assaulting this ship, which I might add would not be the most intelligent of actions, or you are planning to share this evidence of guilt with us to review as Senator Ulana has stated... then your investigation will stop here. Exactly as she has said.”

“You can not tell us what to do!” Eyon shouted. “We are Vanari!”

Arduri openly snickered at that comment now. “Please Eyon... you could not tie your shoes without assistance.”

“Mocking me will not make things go any easier for you Arduri.” Eyon spat viciously. “How could you chose this... this man who can become a beast... how could you chose him over me?”

Arduri grinned and bat her bright green eyes while crossing her arms under her large breasts. “I can think of eleven plus inches to begin with.” Arduri answered sarcastically. This caused Deni to look at her with wide eyes. “And that is just for starters. Should I continue? I can...”

“Princess!” Zarnia spoke from her chair now. “I believe Senator Ulana has made our position clear. We should not make things worse by stating additional facts.”

Deni had lowered his face into his hand while Dutkne smiled and Arduri shrugged her slim shoulders. “Very well.”

“This does not help us! We did not come here to discuss the status of Arduri Re Mydala!” Ardan spoke finally coming out of his chair.

“No we did not.” Ya'sur replied. “I believe we have come together to discuss the events that will take place when the Crown Prince arrives.”

Excellent move Ulana. We now know at least some of their plans. Pyath spoke within their open Etheric connection.

Their arrogance is disgusting. Ulana answered without thinking.

Do not hold back if you sense something Ulana. Zarnia spoke now. Though the Folcani had no natural Etheric abilities, Ya'sur and Pyath had both established a strong Mindvoice link with her to insure she could participate. Given the level of arrogance we have seen in just this short amount of time I think we will find the Vanari will not like much of what will happen in the coming days.

Ardan returned to his chair. “There are some matters we need to discuss before his arrival.”

Ya'sur nodded. “By all means Regent Vu Lamurrian?” He said. “I believe it would be best if you began.”

“The Vanari Board of Regents, especially the SBR, would like to know what your Crown Prince has planned when he arrives?” Ardan asked. “What are his intentions?”

“His intentions?” Ya'sur asked returning to his chair. “I’m not sure I follow the definition of your question sir. The Crown Prince’s intentions are quite transparent. He wishes to officially welcome the Protectorate and our people back into the fold. Now that the complete merger has been finalized, we will begin to quickly establish open travel and trade corridors back to Union space within the Alpha Quadrant via Jump Gates that will be built for this purpose. The Crown Prince will wish to also establish political connections with the Rothryn government since Praetor Dyack’s daughter Sehri is now his wife and mate. If they are willing as well of course. The Rothryn are essentially Lycavorian just as we are, they just can not shift their forms. He will no doubt wish to go over and discuss current conditions between the Vanari and our people and...”

“The Vanari people will not accept anything outside of what we already have in the way of trade and commerce with the Protectorate.” Cruor spoke now.

“Regent Ardan... is this true?” Ya'sur asked looking at him.

Ardan nodded his head in response. “The Vanari government and the Senior Board of Regents has no intention of altering any established agreements or the Right of Way restrictions previously negotiated that are already in place. We have already told General Director Dutkne this. These agreements and the Right of Way restrictions have been in place for millennia and they are acceptable to us. As for this supposed cure to the OSG’s chemical addiction virus that our females must tolerate; the formula that Prince Denali gave to us when he first arrived is not even a workable serum. All of our senior scientists agree that it is not complete and could not work even if it were complete. Along with the additional information he gave to us when he first arrived, he actually manages to implicate your own people in the assistance and trafficking of Vanari females as slaves. This can be traced right back to the Alpha Quadrant where you come from and you can not deny that. I find it very hard to believe this was done intentionally.”

Ya'sur stared at Ardan for a long moment. He turned his head to either side and looked at his fellow Senators briefly before facing Ardan once more.

“Then I’m afraid that we have a problem Regent Vu Lamurrion.” Ya'sur spoke calmly. “The chemical formula for the serum we gave to you was not complete... no. We did this as a security measure. However... all of the data and information needed for your scientists to finish the serum was present.”

“That is preposterous!” Galar snapped. “If this was true... our scientists would have been able to finish the serum you say you devised. None of them were able to do this... therefore it is not true!”

“So now we are liars as well as animals?” Dutkne spoke up.

“May I suggest that your scientists review the information once more?” Ya'sur told him. “We have the final parts of the formula stored with several individuals... and if you would like assistance we would be more than happy to...”

“No!” Cruor said. “Even if this was true... which I doubt given where it came from... we would not do this. The horror it could wrought is beyond thinking.”

Ya'sur stared at him for a long moment before nodding his head. “If that is what the Vanari wish to do... that is entirely up to you. The intelligence information we supplied to you also implicates members of the Vanari government as well. The Lycavorian Union has already dealt with the mercenaries and pirates in the Alpha Quadrant who took part in this heinous scheme. They are no longer operating actively. Those that escaped... well... if they take up this same business again... we will find them.”

“Escaped?” Asay asked now.

Ya'sur nodded his head. “Yes... escaped. Slavery of any type or form is not tolerated anywhere within the Union borders. These groups knew this and chose to set up their business in what we call The Wilds, an area of space that is neither monitored nor controlled by any one government. We found their facilities and destroyed them. We managed to kill or capture most of those involved, but a few managed to escape. They will not be able to hide for long I assure you. After we are done interrogating those we captured and we discover the names of the others involved, we will also deal with those within our government if there are any, as well as those within the former Protectorate government that we have been informed of. We will also deal with any who took part in these acts.”

“What of those Vanari females you rescued in the illegal operation to recover Caliria Re Mydala?” Galar asked.

“What about them?” Ya'sur asked. “And the operation conducted was within the Alpha Quadrant and very legal under our laws. Unless you are now claiming Vanari law overrules Lycavorian law even as far away as the Alpha Quadrant.”

“Our laws should be dominant!” Galar snarled. “We do not know your people or what they are capable of. These females... they were not returned to us.” He stated sarcastically, as if he was talking to a child.

Ya'sur nodded his head holding his own building anger in check. Elves were well known for their emotional control... but even Ya'sur was having trouble tolerating the arrogance and air of superiority. “They chose not to return Regent Arn Del.”

“You mean you are holding them prisoner!” Eyon spat.

“No... I mean they chose not to return.” Ya'sur answered him calmly. “They were all offered safe passage back to Vanari space as soon as they were given a clean bill of health by Union physicians.”

“Your people... your so called physicians know nothing of the Vanari or what we need medically. How could you have treated them?” Eyon spoke now.

“We have heard of your so called Hadarian Healers with their supposed magical healing ability.” Galar added. “It is more than likely you were attempting to hide your part in all of this.”

“As I said... all of the Vanari females rescued with Princess Caliria are now free of the controlling effects of the OSG virus and all of them expressed a strong desire to remain where they were and to not return to Vanari space. They were then granted temporary status by our Senate and continue to remain within Union space. I do believe however that one did elect to travel with us here now. Princess Caliria’s friend Yssyla Vol Dumor... if I am not mistaken.”

“Are you saying you have one of those captured by you here on this very ship?” Cruor demanded.

Ya’sur shook his head. “No... we have one of those who was freed by the Crown Prince in the same operation that freed Caliria Leonidas. She chose to return with us now.”

“You will stop referring to her in such a way.” Galar demanded once more. “She is under investigation by the Vanari government and will be prosecuted should it be determined such action is needed.”

“She is a Crown Princess of the Lycavorian Union Regent Arn Del, as Senator Ulana has already stated.” Pyath spoke now as he leaned forward. “She will be called and treated exactly in the way she should be with her title and status among our people.”

“What your people think does not matter to us!” Galar snapped now. “If it is determined she is a criminal among our people that is how she will be treated!”

“Galar!” Ardan barked at him.

“Where is this... this Yssyla?” Asay asked quickly.

“If I am not mistaken, she is currently in the forward lounge with the Lycavorian officer who she has decided to marry. She contacted her parents when we first arrived in the system and they came aboard early this morning.” Ya'sur answered her. “She is quite healthy and very happy if my understanding is correct. You may ask your daughter about this Regent Arn Del, she spoke with her last night.”

Galar and the others looked at her. “Murie?” He questioned.

The young woman nodded her head. “I spoke with her at length father.” She replied. “She refuses to follow the instructions I gave to her to report to the main medical center in the capital for a complete medical examination and neural workup.”

“And this man... this Lycavorian... I suppose he was present with her when you spoke with her?” Eyon stated confidently. “Intimidating her no doubt.”

Murie shook her head. “No. We were alone in a small lounge room for several hours. Just the two us.”

“Then they have threatened her in some way!” Cruor followed his son’s train of thought. “Coerced her to do what they want.”

Murie shook her head once more. “I don’t believe so.” Murie told them all. “When she ended the meeting, I watched as she walked down the corridor. She greeted this Lycavorian man with...”

“With what?” Ardan asked.

“She greeted him with considerable passion.” Murie stated honestly remembering how Yssyla had practically leaped into his arms as he rounded the corner, surprising him utterly, and they shared a kiss that positively sizzled in the corridor of the ship. She watched him trace her cheek with his finger as he nuzzled her neck and she held to him tightly. They spoke in soft whispers for a moment before she nodded and laced her arms within his and they walked out of sight together.

“This means nothing!” Galar snapped. “She is probably frightened out of her mind and just waiting for the opportunity to be free.”

“You allowed her parents to come aboard this ship?” Asay asked.

Ya'sur nodded his head. “Why would we not. They expressed a strong desire to see their daughter and Admiral Sa'sur approved their transfer.”

“Who allowed this?” Ardan demanded. “Instructions were left with the main spaceport to not allow any Vanari to come up to your ships until we had met with you.”

“I believe Regent Re Mydala approved the trip.” Sa'sur answered him.

“Coren?” Ardan hissed.

Ya'sur shrugged his shoulders. “That is something you can discuss with Regent Re Mydala. Our protocol was followed exactly. You may question Yssyla Vol Dumor for yourself if you wish.” He told them calmly. "Her status is not why we have come together however. Yssyla can decide for herself whether she wishes to remain on this ship or return with you. We have other matters to discuss I think."

"We have already stated that we will not renegotiate the agreements we already have in place." Galar spoke. "They have remained as they are for thousands of years and the Vanari are happy with them."

"Even though they are disproportionately prejudiced against my people." Ya'sur stated.

"You are not Lycavorian." Eyon spoke now.

Ya'sur met his eyes. "I was born within the Lycavorian Union young man. I have grown within the Union and I have bled for the Union. We do not draw a distinction between species within the Union sir. We are all Lycavorians as far as we are concerned."

"What you consider disproportionate we consider fair." Eyon continued.

"Fair?" Pyath spoke once more. "They are anything but fair. Lycavorians are restricted from leaving the embassy grounds without dozens of your Vanari Commandos tracking their every movement. They are forbidden to mingle with any Vanari except for those who work within the embassy walls. They are not allowed to tour your cities or visit other places on your planets. Our ships are limited to a single travel corridor into Vanari space that they must adhere to rigidly even though there are more efficient routes that can be taken. Our ships are subject to search at any time when within Vanari space and this has occurred on thousands of occasions through the years to my knowledge."

"This continues while Vanari who do travel to our space are treated with the utmost respect. They are not searched and they are not limited to where they can go." Ulana took it up now. "They can travel among the many planets that formerly made up the Protectorate freely and certainly without members of the military or security forces monitoring their every move."

Galar shrugged his shoulders dismissively. "How your people feel about the agreements is not our concern. That is what we agreed to and that is how it has been for millennia. It will not change."

"Yet the Rothryn have an embassy and private homes spread across the planet." Pyath took it up again. "They are Lycavorian Regent Arn Del. Just like us."

"Not like you." Galar spoke heatedly. "We did not fight a war with them!"

"A war that your people started." Ya'sur spoke once more. "Or will you now try to deny that... even though it is part of your very own history books and teachings."

"Your concerns are not our concerns!" Galar stated once more. "And things will not change!"

"You keep saying that Regent Arn Del. Am I then to assume that myself and my fellow Senators will be limited in the same way?" Ya'sur asked.

"You are Lycavorian by your very own words." Cruor spoke. "And the intelligence you gave to us so willingly implicates your own people in crimes against the Vanari people!"

"The intelligence states that mercenary groups and pirates made up of Lycavorians as well as other species in the Alpha Quadrant were involved in this." Ya'sur stated. "Not the Union as a whole. We have ended that practiced as I said."

"How do we know this is true?" Eyon barked.

"Would you like for me to send for the five hundred and nineteen bodies that we gathered in our operations to show you?" Ya'sur asked. "This information given to you, it also implicates members of your own government, which is stated very openly in those same reports."

"No one who has seen these reports believes them for a moment." Galar spat. "Our own intelligence people have presented no such information to us in this regard. Why should we believe you over our own people? We have no reason to trust you... and this intelligence only enhances that feeling among the SBR and others! Now you come here and do not inform us of this so called merger and you expect us to bend to your will?"

"I wasn't aware internal politics was something we had to report to the Vanari." Ulana spoke once more. "We are a sovereign government and do not report or answer to the Vanari. You... you seem to think we are all violent children."

"Aren't you?" Cruor snapped. "Is your history not laced with violence and bloodshed? Even among your own kind!"

"Our history is just that Regent Arn Del." Ya'sur spoke. "History. The past and the events in the past have allowed us to grow and helped us to evolve to what we are now. Isn't that the same for all species?"

“And you have grown into nothing more than violent adults!” Galar popped. “Your own Netnews broadcasts prove this. Your Crown Prince violently murdered two men while in your Senate hall and then he openly called for war! Which your Senate then passed.”

“The Senators are only extensions of the people’s will within the Union.” Ya’sur stated evenly. “And the Crown Prince murdered no one. Two men who were involved with the rape of one of his mothers and the deaths of thousands of Union citizens were executed.”

“Is that what you call what he did?” Asay asked slightly astonished.

“Justice was served.” Pyath said. “As over ninety six percent of the Union population voted on and decided.”

“The Vanari people will not be cowed by you or by anyone!” Galar barked out. “And we will show our people exactly what you are.”

“Yet you allow your own females to be taken and sold into slavery almost at will and do nothing.” Ulana said. “You allow this OSG to dictate to you what you will do and how you will act. What do you call that?”

“It is the way of things.” Cruor spoke. “It has been like this for hundreds and hundreds of years.”

“I wonder... do your people think of it in such a way?” Ya’sur asked.

“You know nothing! We do what is best for our people!” Galar spoke. “We know what is best for them!”

“And it doesn’t hurt that you and others are making millions of credits each year by selling our own people into slavery!” Arduri hissed angrily now. “Does it? And you would do anything to make sure that doesn’t stop!”

“You do not know what you speak of Arduri Re Mydala!” Galar shouted back at her.

“My name is Arduri Leonidas you bigoted nubous igord!” Arduri screamed coming to her feet.

Denali came to his feet instantly and reached for her. All of them watched as his arms encircled her small waist and his forehead went to hers. All of them saw the overwhelming anger in her green eyes simply evaporate instantly.

“What did she call me?” Galar demanded.

It was Ulana who spoke and her answer stunned everyone. “She called you a fucking fool!” Ulana spat across the table at him seeing his eyes go wide. “And that description would be quite accurate from everything I have seen and heard so far.”

Ya’sur reached out and let his hand grip her forearm gently and she looked at him with angry dark eyes.

Forgive me. Ulana said quickly. I could no longer stand it.

Do not apologize for saying what we all feel. Ya’sur said. He turned back to Galar and the others. Ardan had remained silent for most of the conversation they all took note of.

“My apologies.” Ya’sur stated. “May I suggest that we adjourn so that you can interview Yssyla and allow passions to cool? The Durcunusaan officer in the corridor will take you to the Mess Lounge where she is currently.”

“Will you allow her to return with us?” Asay asked.

“Yssyla will make that determination for herself.” Pyath spoke now.

“So that is a no.” Eyon snapped.

Pyath looked at him. “If you are asking if we are going to force her off this ship because that is what you want? No. She is free to leave at any time. She is also free to remain. She will make that decision.”

“And if we choose to take her?” Galar asked as he got to his feet.

“I would then ask how you think to do this.” Zarnia spoke now. “However... if that is your intent... you are welcome to try.”

Ardan stood up now. “We will not do such a thing. We will talk to her and then advise you as to what we will do.”

Ya’sur nodded his head. “Very well. I will be waiting to hear from you.”

They were all silent as the Vanari delegation rose and turned from the table quickly. They proceeded into the corridor and Ya’sur watched the door slide shut behind them. It was Denali who spoke next.

“Well... hell!” He declared sarcastically. “That went so much better than we had hoped it would!”

Ya’sur sat back in his chair as all of them allowed the joke to lighten their dark moods and he nodded his head.

“Yes it did.” He said. Ya'sur turned and looked at Dutkne. “Val'istar?”

“How soon before Andro arrives?” Dutkne asked.

“If everything goes well... they will be here early this evening.” Denali answered him. “Why?”

“I suggest we put added security on Caliria and Coren both.” Dutkne said. “She is in the capital for the next three days to finish her classes correct?”

Arduri nodded. “Yes.”

Dutkne nodded as he looked at the door the Vanari had exited. “They will move on her soon Denali. And Coren as well. They are vulnerable at least until Androcles arrives. They won't attempt anything once they discover he is here, at least I hope they do not, but until that time they are not safe and need to be protected.”

Sa'sur rose to her feet. “I'll see to it.” She spoke. “I need to clear my head of all the rensibfla anyway.”

“I will let father know.” Arduri spoke as she too stood up.

“Princess... if you would use the COM panel here.” Ya'sur spoke. “I believe we should let your father know what has taken place and what was said.”

“Then what?” Denali asked.

“Then we wait and see what they do.” Ya'sur spoke.

MANNE

UNION ADHOC COMMAND CENTER

“...Scans did not reveal much father.” Yuriko spoke from with the QCR image. “There are an awful lot of residual radiation particles saturating the planet's upper ionosphere. While not harmful... they do make a mess of the probe's long range sensor chips.”

Martin stood with Danny, Wayonn, Tobia and Valael around the large chart table. Aricia and Anja were once more on either side of him while For'mya sat along the near wall with Fedor and Kalis on either side of her. Fedor and Eirene, as twins, had become near inseparable from Kalis since he had taken the bullets meant to kill For'mya. His actions had proven beyond a doubt that he was a new person in every sense of the word and they wanted to discover their brother as much as possible. Joining them in that time were Miseo as well as Iama and Serale. The six of them had spent nearly every moment together; both Fedor and Eirene enraptured with the half brother that they had attempted to kill when he first arrived.

Martin looked at her image. “Nukes?” He asked.

Yuriko shook her head. “It's Alpha Radiation, Radium particles to be exact. If I had to guess I'd say it was from the remnants of some type of orbital satellites with nuclear reactor cores but our probe instruments didn't detect any in the upper or lower atmosphere.”

“Well... that at least tells us they were advanced enough to send satellites into orbit.” Danny spoke. “And power them with nuclear reactors.”

“What else Yuriko?” Martin asked.

“We programmed the probes to drop to an altitude of eighty-five thousand feet and then disperse on perpendicular courses.” She answered. “They scanned fifteen cities of medium to large size on the first continent, forty-one on the next and over a hundred on the final continent here in the north.” They watched as her delicate finger drifted along the Map Board from OMEN THREE where she was.

“Standard growth expansion.” Valael spoke up. “The northern continent is most likely where they originally settled.”

Aricia touched the Map Board over the image of a city. “Yuriko... they all appear to have been...”

“Destroyed or evacuated.” Yuriko said. “Yes mother.”

“By what? Or whom?” Martin asked.

“Hard to say without boots on the ground father.” Yuriko answered. “Life signs are indeterminate at best. There seem to be quite a bit of coal sources extending from the surface down into the planet's upper crust. Definitive signs of extraction based on the structures that were situated over the main sources. Natural resources are abundant. Wild life; minerals; all pretty much on a ratio with Earth as well. The planet is fifty-two percent oceans, seven large continents and a bunch of smaller archipelagos. Atmosphere is a little lighter than Earth but very comfortable. Most of the planet also appears to be moderate in temperature with just this one area of arctic activity.”

Anja looked up at him. “Almost exactly like Earth lover.” She stated.

“Yeah.” Martin nodded. “Wayonn... how many of our people were brought here?”

Wayonn glanced at the data pad beside him on the Map Board. “The records Avi was able to obtain from City Ship 41’s memory banks indicate two hundred million.” He answered as he looked at him. “If the records are correct this planet was settled by Lycavorians a hundred and sixteen thousand years ago. It is the youngest of the four colonies where the Pralors used our people for Seed Missions.”

“Another of the mistakes of our past.” Valael said softly.

Danny shook his head. “That doesn’t matter anymore Elder Valael. What matters now is in the here and now.” Danny told him. “Are you sure about the numbers Wayonn?” He asked as he leaned forward using his finger to sweep across the part of the map section currently up. “Look at the spread of the city borders, the distance from epicenter to where it really begins to thin out. This one alone is easily twice the size of Atlanta and by the time the comet came, Atlanta had a population of over forty million people.” Danny moved his finger across the section of map that was currently visible. “Look... five more cities almost the same size within two hundred kilometers.”

“Danny’s right.” Anja stated now following his train of thought. “If you extrapolate the size... we’re looking at just two hundred million in these five city areas alone Wayonn.”

“My people came up with pretty much the same thing. They estimate the population at roughly just over four billion given the size of the cities father. They were using the same ratios Uncle Danny and mother are suggesting now.” Yuriko spoke from OMEN THREE. “Sensor scans of the soil and surrounding terrain indicate that the outlying cities were built within the last three to five hundred years.”

“Four billion?” Martin spoke softly. “So where are they?”

“Most of the city structures appear to be intact Yuriko.” Wayonn said. “Could the probes just not be picking up lifesigns?”

“Mother... switch to the last grid sweep.” Yuriko said and she watched as Aricia’s hand adjusted their Map Board.

“Nubou lae!” Martin hissed as his eyes grew bigger.

The many probes had obviously dropped their altitude in the last pass and their internal cameras had caught stunningly clear images of the now empty streets and what appeared to be thousands of Lifter like vehicles abandoned in those streets, some of which appeared overturned and destroyed. There was visible damage on some of the buildings, but nothing that would truly jeopardize structural integrity from what they could see.

“The Probes are programmed to drop to an altitude of fifty feet if no threat is detected.” Yuriko explained. “These images are what they captured. It’s the same from all twenty-four probes and what medwaw Aricia first saw.”

“They are deserted.” Tobia spoke now for the first time.

“The damage that you do see on some of the structures appears to be explosive in nature, but nothing that would cause the buildings to collapse.” Yuriko told them. “It almost seems to be intentional.”

“Intentional?” Valael asked. “You mean a war?”

Yuriko shook her head quickly. “No... then you would see collateral damage all over the surrounding area Elder Valael. Shattered windows, destroyed structures, signs of fire damage brought on by high explosive ordinance. This damage is focused... it appears almost surgical in nature father. Only certain buildings up and down the streets and again only in certain areas of these buildings. Mainly the first floor of the structures.”

“Like you were trying to exterminate something.” Danny spoke softly.

“Yes.” Yuriko echoed. “We won’t know for sure until we have people there.”

Martin looked at Danny. “How many boots can we put down fervon?” He asked.

“Leaving the majority of the forces Andro sent to secure Base One and scout the rest of Manne...” Danny did some fast figuring in his head. “Two thousand. Broken up into teams of fifty.”

Martin looked at Anja immediately. “Red?”

Anja nodded her head. "I'm leaving Ceale in charge here with Mani'Juturi. Twenty field medics and four surgeons. The rest with us. I can put two medics per team. Including Anuk, Duewa and I." She looked at Danny.

Danny grinned. "I've already been told what will happen if I try to leave them behind. No thank you. It wasn't pretty."

Anja looked at Martin as she grinned. "We can do it as long as you two lug heads don't find something to fight and start a frigging war."

"Me? Find something to fight?" Martin asked astonished that she would suggest such a thing. "I'm a lover not a fighter."

"Like anyone will believe that rensibfla." Danny spoke sarcastically as everyone in the room chuckled.

Martin smiled and tilted his head upward slightly not bothering to shield the conversation from those in the room since they all spoke on a level far above Tier Six. Arzoal... not counting the adults that came with us... do you and Teniri see any of the adolescents coming along faster than the others?

You wish to use them as support Martin? Arzoal asked from across the compound.

They can see things from the air that we wouldn't be able to make out on the ground. Martin answered. I don't want to put a lot of our aircraft in the skies over these cities. It would pretty much announce to the entire sector that we were there snooping around.

Teniri? Arzoal questioned.

Perhaps two dozen with the size and natural calm that you will need. She answered him almost immediately. And I can include the two warriors that came with me when we returned. They are experienced and natural leaders Martin.

I agree. Arzoal said.

Martin nodded. "Good enough." He said openly. He looked at the image of Miranda who had remained silent until now. "Manda?"

"HORNET stays here as Sector Command ship for Manne. Janon can handle anything that comes up, and I was going to promote him anyway." She spoke immediately. Martin had already told her Fleet Ops belonged to her and he would follow her tasking missions without question. "We take the ARC ROYAL and ARIZONA along with a reduced Strike Wing per ship. I don't want to take too many for a couple reasons Martin. If we're wrong about the Kavalians who were originally with Pusintin's Task Force and they try something... I want Janon to be able to blow them out of the stars without too much problem."

Martin nodded. "Agreed."

Valael and Tobia were silent as they listened, though both of them had the same thoughts going through their minds. He may have been King to billions of lifeforms and different species but Martin Leonidas did not let that power go to his head. Those close to him referred to him by his first name which was unheard of in any monarchy that Valael of Tobia had ever read about. That alone spoke volumes about the type of man he was.

"The second reason is simple numbers." Manda continued. "If we want to maintain as low a profile as we can because of these Tasmor folks being in the area... then twelve ships per wing is the lowest I will go. Since we brought only half the ARC ROYAL's fighter complement, she can carry most of the STRIKERS and MENKLA transports we need. Half her complement is more than enough with Steven and the ARIZONA's squadrons."

"What about early warning Manda?" Dan asked.

"I'll have my ELINT birds up the entire time." Miranda answered. "Four RAPTORS E3s. We'll be covered. Anything that enters the system and we'll know about it in seconds. One un-shrouded ship... a cruiser so it doesn't spook anyone and the rest remain hidden unless we need to flex some muscle."

Martin looked at Tobia and Valael. "Ok... now tell us about these Tasmor." He said.

"Everything is in the reports I gave to you." Tobia said.

"Yeah... now tell me what you think and feel." Martin told her. "You've met them. Dealt with them. I'd rather go with your gut instinct as opposed to reports written up by someone who never met them."

"They are a proud species." Tobia began. "Even the men... though heavily outnumbered and treated as they are... even they are equally as proud. There is a caste system of sorts. The merchants and workers and everyday people... and then the ruling class which includes those in their military. There is no dissension about their positions in this system even though I did not see much of their internal workings while I was among them.”

“If their population is so weighted in favor of females, how do they maintain the numbers that they have and continue to grow?” Anja asked. “Simple birth mathematics would eventually dictate that the women would outpace the men exponentially.”

Tobia shook her head. “I do not know. That is not something we ever brought up.” She answered Anja honestly. “And the Tasmor never offered an explanation. As I said... there are men within their military and some who act as minor aides to the Sovereign Regent and other females who hold positions of power... but their numbers are very small. At least from what I saw.”

“That is odd to say the least Lover.” Anja told him. “If I had to guess with just the small amount of information that we have... I’d say selective breeding.”

“Selective breeding?” Valael asked. “What does this mean Anja?”

“It means that the men are used as tools or rewards for the women, depending on how you want to view it.” Anja answered. “It may be a status thing or some other ridiculous idea... but they are only allowing select woman to breed with the men in their population.”

“Is this possible?” Wayonn asked. “To have reached their level and still be doing this?”

Anja nodded. “It’s possible I suppose, though not conducive to long term expansion. The females will eventually squeeze out the males over the course of the generations until no males are born. However... the sheer numbers of their population now tells me there is something else going on as well.”

“Something else Anja?” Aricia asked.

Anja nodded. “It just seems odd that they have reached this population size if the ratio is so heavily weighed towards females.”

“What about this Sovereign Regent?” Martin asked turning back to Tobia. “What is she like?”

“Saydia is... she is unique.” Tobia answered almost shyly.

Martin looked at her oddly. “Tobia... now would not be the time to hold back. What aren’t you telling us?” He said.

Tobia met his eyes. “My personal interactions with her were... Saydia is a very smart and dominant woman. Much like the Drow within your society. A large portion of the Tasmor females are similar in their demeanor. They are very open about their sexuality let us say. Even more so than your own people in some things. Like you... they do not shy from same gender relationships among their populous. They encourage it even due to the large gap between males and females.”

“But... I don’t care about their sexual preference... I want to know about their attitude.” Martin prodded her.

“If you remove my people from the equation of forces, the Tasmor are the most militarily sophisticated and powerful species in this Quadrant. The Kintaur Hegemony are the second most powerful and nearly equal in terms of size, but they are openly hostile to those they do not know and will not hesitate to attack if they think they can win. The Tasmor are far better trained and equipped but also far less aggressive. The other space faring species can field warships and ground troops but not on the scope that the Tasmor or Kintaur can. Because of this sense of superiority... this has made the Tasmor believe they are... that they are entitled to do what they wish and demand what they want.”

“Why is it that I don’t like the way you said that.” Martin spoke.

“They are not wholly unreasonable Martin.” Tobia said quickly. “Just forceful in what they want when they see something.”

“And...?” Martin pressed her further.

Tobia took a deep breath. “This mentality includes men and women alike.” She finally said. “To refuse such a request is considered a great insult in their society.”

“Slavery?” Danny asked quickly.

Tobia shook her head. “No. They do not allow this within their society. That much I do know for certain. They follow a strict traditional culture that has been in place for millennia. A Code of Ethics if you will. Some of this tradition and culture will seem rather harsh... but it is the way of their people. This superiority... in many ways in makes them believe they are entitled to certain things when dealing with others.”

“And I’m guessing that this Saydia Daret wanted something in order to establish the trade agreement that you have with them?” Martin asked.

Tobia nodded. “Yes.”

Aricia stepped closer to Martin now and took his arm as she stared across the table at Tobia. “She wanted you... didn’t she Tobia?”

Aricia and Anja had seen it first in Tobia’s face and her body language mainly because they both had this type of relationship with each other and four other women. It was something Tobia was embarrassed about but not something she held anger or resentment for. Tobia finally nodded her head.

“Yes.” She answered seeing Valael’s eyes widen in shock out of the corner of her eye. “It was something I agreed to in order to secure the agreement and it was... it was not unpleasant or forced!” She added quickly. “It was rather... it was rather enjoyable to be honest. As I said... they are just very demanding.”

“You sound as if you are defending them.” Martin said.

“I’m not defending them. This is the way of their culture and society.” Tobia said. “I am merely saying that they are not bad people.”

Martin was silent for a moment before nodding his head. “Ok... we’ll go based on what you tell us. But just so that you are aware... I don’t take kindly to people demanding something from me that belongs to me or my people.”

“Lover no!” Anja said in mock surprise.

“You did not refuse us last night Beloved.” Aricia stated knowing that Anja was trying to divert attention from Tobia and going along with her. “We were very demanding and you were exceptionally open to this.”

“That’s not what I mean and you both know it!” Martin defended himself.

Danny laughed at his expression. “They got you boss man.” He said.

“Bah! You should talk!” Martin hissed at him waving his hand at him dismissively.

“At least I admit it!” Danny quipped in reply with a wide grin.

“Ok. Ok.” Martin said as Aricia and Anja snuggled close to him and For'mya simply sat and chuckled from her spot. “I’ll be nice! Jeesh!”

Tobia couldn’t help but smile as well at the antics of Martin’s wives and she silently thanked them for redirecting his attention from her. Tobia did enjoy her encounters with Saydia as she was not unwilling to give pleasure and she was quite good at it, though after the third time she had been sent to see her, Tobia did not wish it to go further because she felt she was betraying Murano. And in her mind, nothing could ever compare to his arms around her.

Fedor chose that time to stand up and move to the table. “Father... will Eirene and I be going as part of your team?” He asked.

Anja and Aricia stopped their playfulness instantly as Martin turned to him. He took a deep breath and shook his head slowly. “No Fedor. You and Eirene are not going on this Op.” he told him.

Fedor’s eyes grew wide and he moved closer to the table and the father of his heart. “What? Why not? We can do this! We have been training for this! We...”

“Fedor Leonidas...” For'mya snapped coming to her feet. “You will not raise your voice to your father! Ever!”

Fedor looked at his mother and felt shame fill him but he turned back to Martin. “Father why?” He asked more sedately. “We are ready for this. You know we are.”

Martin nodded his head. “Yes... you are.” He said honestly. “And it is most certainly not because I don’t think you and Eirene are capable Fedor.”

“Then why?” Fedor asked.

“I’m sending you, Eirene, Kdan and Dnom to be with your brothers and sisters.” Martin told him seeing Fedor’s eyes grow wide. “Deion and Nara are going through the final stages of their Agoge under their brother. On the job training we call it. The additional training will be severe... but it will do you good and it’s time you met the rest of your family.”

“We... we will be with Andro?” Fedor gasped as his heart began to race. He and Eirene had dreamed of this day since they first entered this world. Since Andro had first touched them within their mother’s womb really. This is what they had desired since their awareness came to be from Andro touching them.

Martin nodded his head. “Andro and all of your brother’s and sisters.” He said. “Your grandmothers as well. You will remain with them until they meet up with us a few weeks from now. Something tells me your brother will need your help between now and then. He is always getting into trouble on his own.”

Danny snorted. “Like father like son.”

“When... when do we leave?” Fedor gasped.

“Avi is prepping the corvette now.” Martin told him. “If Andro is sticking to his plan they will arrive in the Beta Quadrant in thirteen hours and you should get there twelve hours later. Iama and Miseo go with you and you’re lucky I’m letting you take Iama boy. Once the crew finds out she isn’t making their meals I may well have a mutiny on my hands!”

“And me Uncle?” Kalis spoke as he came up beside Fedor. “I would like... I would like to see Androcles as well. If only to make amends for my actions on Hadaria.”

Martin shook his head. “There is nothing to make amends for and Andro has already made that clear to you. “This one I will leave up to you. You can stay with us or go with Fedor and Eirene and then rejoin with us when they arrive.”

“You were not going to let me go on this mission were you?” Kalis said.

Martin shook his head. “In all honesty... no. I was going to have you in a STRIKER watching over us in the sky. You may feel fully recovered mandri... but you still need time. I will not risk you just to prove to you that I trust you completely.”

Kalis nodded calmly and felt For'mya squeeze his arm in support. He was not angry at all. Kalis smiled to himself and everyone saw this. He had grown so much and he knew this. A year ago... had his father left him out of such an operation he would have been livid. Kalis had become a different man now and with Manne secured he wanted to see and experience so much more. He could do that with Androcles and his siblings.

“It will be... it will be interesting to see all of them.” Kalis said looking at Martin. “I will go with Fedor and Eirene.”

Martin nodded. “Good... I really didn’t want to have to deal with your young wife and mate chewing my ear off.” He said with a smile. “Hadarian females can be...”

Anja crossed her arms under her large breasts and glared at him. “Can be what?” She demanded as her jade green eyes narrowed.

Martin stared at her. “Pig headed.”

“Pig headed!” Anja snapped. “It might help you know... if the men we chose to curl our toes don’t act so recklessly stupid at times!”

“I do not act reckless!” Martin declared as he turned to face her petite form, towering over her five foot three height.

“In whose opinion?” Anja snapped right back at him unafraid. “Yours or ours? In this case your opinion is out voted six to one you big oaf!”

“Here we go again.” Danny quipped with a huge smile.

“Stuff it lug head!” Both Martin and Anja barked at him as they turned.

ICARAVA
DARASTRIXI HOMEWORLD
DARASTRIXETHE (DRAGONBLOOD) SPACE
NORTHERN CONTINENT
LIVAJI SULEVFU FACILITY

Aviel stood on the balcony overlooking the courtyard below and watched Laren and Ladur going through some form of training regime he had never witnessed before. She had a solid staff of Balrian Oak, a wood found in the high mountains with the strength of the hardest metal known to exist on Icarava. She was going through elaborate motions with this staff while Ladur moved nimbly back and forth around her, at different points his massive wings snapping out to whistle through the air. Laren would duck or leap gracefully to avoid his wings and land cat like to go directly into another series of intricate motions. It was actually very elegant and quite beautiful to watch as they executed these dazzling moves while her mother and father watched intently from the side of the courtyard.

“They do this every morning for hours.” Nahko’s voice echoed behind him and he turned to see her walk up.

Aviel smiled and pulled her close with his arm as she pressed up against him. “I have never seen anything like it in my life. Not even from our Sand Strider Battalions, and they are the most well trained forces we have.”

Nahko snuggled close to his side, enjoying the feel of his powerful body against her own as she always did. He had remained for two days, most of that time spent with Laren and Ladur just talking of things. She looked up into his handsome face. “You are returning today?” She asked him.

Aviel nodded his head. “I must.” He answered. “Others will begin to question why I have stayed here so long if I do not. We must be very careful Nahko.”

“Svabol ui gethrisjir ekess shinalt jaka mrrandii?” She asked. (What is going to happen now husband?)

“Dytin Ueni is working on that.” Aviel answered her. “He is secretly preparing two ships for our use. He must be very careful in who he chooses Nahko. They must all be believers like us or it will end before it begins. Once that is done, their families will slowly be shifted around and then moved to these two ships. Ours included. Hopefully by then... hopefully by then we will have a place where we can go in order to keep them safe.”

“If the Scourge discover what we are doing...” Nahko said softly.

“I am not concerned with those monsters.” Aviel told her. “Our own people are the ones we should fear most. At least right now. Knowing what we do now only makes this harder. So many have forgotten what took place... what we did. They have... they have forgotten what it means to be Darastrixi.”

Nahko looked up into his face once more. “What do you mean?”

“I have... since Chalith and the others brought this to me... since they made me see what has been going on; I have observed the other Ministers Nahko.” He told her. “So many of them are now concerned only with remaining in power and keeping things unchanged. If they were aware of the knowledge that the Dahakoan have returned... that among their number are four Vrelvel Sargti... they will not see this as a sign. They will begin to fear for their positions and their power.”

“But surely our people... there have to be more who feel as we do Aviel.” Nahko said.

Aviel nodded his head. “And I am sure that there are. Many more than we believe. But they do not know what we know and right now we can’t take the risk. The knowledge that Laren and Ladur exist would cause chaos among the Ministers and they would do everything within their power to keep this information from reaching the people.”

“Do you think they would... do you think they would order them executed?” Nahko asked not really believing she was asking such a question.

Aviel nodded his head slowly. “Based on what I have seen... I am ashamed to admit that I would not rule out that course of action. Nor would I discount them turning Laren and Ladur over to the Scourge scum in order to appease them. I would be powerless to stop them. Neither option would be advisable since Laren and Ladur would resist violently if need be and the death toll would be horrific, for I fear Laren and Ladur would hold back nothing then.”

Nahko looked at him. “Hold back?” She asked. “Aviel... what do you mean?”

Aviel looked back to where Laren and Ladur were slipping into another set of intricate, dance like moves. “They have fooled most everyone here Nahko... almost. Ch'teven... I believe he has some idea of what they are truly capable of but he has said nothing. We have spoken of this briefly. We think that Laren and Ladur are holding back from showing us what they are capable of. They are doing what Dalis has said the Lycavorians do. They conceal and deflect so that others do not see what burns within them.” He turned back to her. “If they feel threatened in any way, by anyone, they will unleash all of the power that they now wield. What little we have seen of them as they conduct these exercises is simply a ruse Nahko. If what Ch'teven and I believe is true then they have been pulling knowledge of skills from their fellow Dahakoan through the Etheric realm that Shalu says the Praetorians and Dahakoan manipulated so easily. Skills unlike any we have seen before.”

“Ch'teven believes the Dahakoan were able to use Etheric power like the Praetorians?” She gasped never having heard this before.

Aviel shook his head. “No... not in this manner. All of our history of them states their Etheric abilities were much more latent in nature. They could almost see what the enemy was going to do. It made them faster and stronger and more resilient. It made them very hard to kill in other words.” Aviel looked at her. “According to the reports from Dalis that he has retrieved from the probe download, Laren and Ladur have been learning from their Isthasyi and Myvishi of the Iejir and do not even know it. And all of these reports I have seen speak of the same thing Nahko. Her Isthasyi and Myvishi of the Iejir are warriors unequalled.”

“Aviel surely...”

The soft feminine cry caused them to turn back to the courtyard, only to see Laren on the floor of the courtyard holding her head, the staff forgotten beside her. Ladur’s massive wings were twitching madly as he kept shaking his head as if in pain.

“Something is wrong!” Nahko hissed loudly as she bolted for the doorway down into the courtyard followed quickly by Aviel. It took them all of two minutes to reach the courtyard, only to see Laren’s mother clutching her shoulders and rubbing her forehead, trying anything to make the pain her daughter felt go away. Chalith, Shalu and Ch’teven had already rushed into the courtyard with great concern.

“Laren... Laren what is wrong?” Nahko asked as she skidded to a halt on the floor beside her. “What is it child?”

Laren shook her head. “Something... something is happening!” She stammered out the words while trying to fight the pain in her head.

“Laren my sister!” Ladur snarled as he moved his massive bulk closer to her.

“Nahko make it stop!” Robati exclaimed. “They are in such pain!”

Nahko held Laren’s head in her hands but she could see nothing wrong. “I don’t know what is...”

Laren’s head came up with blinding speed and a smile split her face as her eyes grew wide. “Ladur!” she cried out.

“Yes!” He echoed her voice whirling around. “I can feel them!”

“Laren? Feel who?” Nahko asked. “What are you talking about?”

“They are here!” Laren exclaimed as she staggered to her feet while the others looked on with worry.

“They are here!”

Aviel stepped forward with Chalith at his side. “Laren... child it is just us!” He spoke reaching for her. “There... there is no one else here.”

“That would not be an entirely accurate statement Koppentotz Aviel.” The male voice spoke from behind all of them. “We have been here for nearly a minute.”

“By the Divines!” Shalu exclaimed as she staggered backwards upon turning and seeing the Etheric projections of the two men she had never seen before, as well as two sleekly muscular Vrrarhoinpa.

“What is this?” Chalith roared as he stepped in front of Laren and Ladur intending to protect them if needed.

“Protect them!” Yokra barked out as he moved in front of them, Ch’teven also imposing his bulk before the Etheric projection.

“No!” Ladur snapped.

Aviel hadn’t moved from his spot as he stared at the Etheric projection of two very large young men with hair as black as night and near glowing eyes. Laren pushed Nahko aside gently, rising to her feet and moving up beside her father and Ch’teven’s bulk. Her hands went to her face as she gasped in unrestrained delight and her eyes filled with tears.

Andro’s own face was animated and his azure eyes happy. “Forgive us our Isthasyi and Myvishi of the Iejir; we did not intend the pain we caused you. It took us a moment to adjust and then compensate within the Etheric realm for the distance.”

Ladur moved his bulk up beside Laren who reached out with her hands and placed them on his front foreleg. “Androcles... Dorian...” He gasped. “Elynth... Ryner... we have... we have waited so long to finally see you.”

All of them heard the intakes of breath from everyone gathered in the courtyard as this bit of information finally began to process. They watched as the Etheric projections of the four of them moved much closer to Laren and Ladur, their images as clear and precise as if they were standing in this very room with them. All those present instinctively backed up as the massive and quite muscular forms of Elynth and Ryner pressed close to the side of Andro and Dorian and directly in front of Laren and Ladur.

“As have we.” Dorian spoke now as he looked at Laren. “You are so very beautiful our sister.”

“And you are so handsome Ladur.” Elynth stated from beside Andro. The Etheric projection allowed for her to look as if she was speaking just as Ladur and Ch'teven could even though Elynth had not yet learned to manipulate the dragon vocal cords to allow her to speak openly. Ladur knew this instantly and did nothing to indicate to anyone else that she was unable to do this.

“How?” Laren gasped in delight.

“It is a device we use. Something left for my people a long time ago that we have begun to use more and more as we discover our history.” Andro told her. “It allows us to communicate over great distances within the Etheric realm. We have... Dorian and I... Elynth and Ryner... we have wanted to do this sooner but so much was...”

Laren stepped forward unafraid even though her mother had moved up and held her arms tightly. “No. We could sense the emotions within all of you. You were not... you are so much more focused now Androcles. It is... it is wonderful to feel you.”

Andro's azure eyes turned to Robati and he smiled at her. “Sepa dask Robati... you cling to our sister as if we would hurt her yet... of all who are present... you and our Sepa Opsola know we could never harm our blood.”

Robati gazed at him with wide eyes but they rapidly filled with delight at what he had said and she felt her husband grip her arm and shoulder tightly in support. “This... this is all so...”

“Incredible.” Yokra hissed.

Dorian chuckled within the projection. “That's an understatement Sepa Opsola.” He said with a large grin.

Andro looked at Ladur beside Laren and stepped closer. “Your scales gleam with health Ladur my brother.” He said. “And you are... larger than we pictured you.”

“I am fit and strong... and we are ready brother.” Ladur spoke confidently.

Andro smiled up at him. “No doubt.” He said. “Laren... you and Ladur focus now and reach for the Etheric stream we are projecting to you. Join us so that you can see all of us.”

“There are others with you?” Laren asked quickly.

“Our wives and mates.” Dorian told her. “And some friends that we have made along the way. We did not know if we could do this alone so they added their own power to ours. We did not think it would be so easy.”

Laren and Ladur shut their eyes for a moment and focused their minds intently together. They found the Etheric stream almost immediately as brightly intense as it was and they merged their minds with that Etheric stream as easily as breathing. Suddenly, the Etheric projection in the courtyard widened to include over a dozen men and women who were sitting or standing around a single large table behind where Androcles and Dorian stood with Elynth and Ryner.

Nahko could not contain her intake of breath. “Gods!” She gasped aloud as she gripped Aviel's arm tightly.

“Laren our sister... Ladur our brother... Sepa dask vur Opsola... our family.” Androcles told them sweeping his hand back. “Well... a good portion of them anyway. Your family now as well.” (Soul mother and father.)

Laren was openly weeping as she held onto Ladur's front leg tightly, her multicolored blue eyes wide in delight and happiness. Robati held her husband's arm just as tightly as they witnessed something neither of them ever thought they would see.

“Sister... there is so much to... we will save our joy for when we can hold you both in our arms and touch you.” Androcles told her. “Right now there is much we must cover with you.”

“Wait... we have so many question?” Shalu stammered. “How did... how this all came to be... so...”

“They must wait I'm afraid.” Androcles told her. “Our only concern at the moment is the safety of Laren, Ladur and our family.”

“These men and women... they have protected us Androcles.” Ladur spoke quickly. “For many years.”

“Are they in danger as well Ladur?” Androcles asked.

Ladur nodded. "Equally as much as we are, if not more for the risks they are taking to protect us."

They all watched as Andro looked first at Dorian and then Elynth and Ryner. All of them nodded their heads and he turned back. "Then you will need to know what I am about to tell you." He spoke. Andro turned his head as Dorian reached out with his hand outside the Etheric cone of the transmission and they all watched as the hand took his and he pulled Sarlana up beside him gently.

Though Laren had told them a Doraanar was among them, none of them were prepared to see her walk gracefully into the transmission.

"Doraanar!" Chalith and Shalu gasped together as they all dropped to one knee. Even Dalis, who had remained silent up until now, dropped to one knee in shock. Androcles was everything he had imagined the Lycavorians were and so much more. He had not foreseen them as so well built and large, but everything else about them was turning out exactly as he had said.

"Stand up!" Sarlana barked softly. "You do not bow to me!"

"You... you are Doraanar!" Chalith spoke almost in awe.

"That does not make me a ithquent!" Sarlana stated. "Now stand up... all of you!" (God) She waited as they all got to their feet. "Now tell me... have... did any others like me survive?"

Ch'teven moved his frame forward slightly. "Si mi bivai Doraanar." He said softly. "Wux re wer anny." (I am sorry. You are the last.)

Sarlana took a deep breath and nodded her head in acknowledgement even as she took strength from Dorian and Androcles' presence beside her. "I feared as much." She said. She looked at them. "Before you stand the rebirth of the Dahakoan. And they are so much more than you ever imagined. They will need the faith that has stayed with you through the millennia and your guidance. Do not think to control them however... for they will do what is right to them. I will be here and we will talk more soon but for now we must make our plans." Sarlana turned and looked up at Androcles before pulling him down with her hands on his arm and planting a soft kiss on his cheek. This shocked those within the transmission for none of them could ever remember seeing a Doraanar acting in such a way. She turned to Dorian and did the same before moving out of the transmission.

Andro turned once more and looked at them. "There is one among you called Dalis... correct?" He asked.

Dalis looked up surprised and he moved slightly to the side so that they could see him. "I am... I am Dalis." He said.

"How long before it becomes known to others that you downloaded your probe data early?" Androcles asked him.

Dalis looked at him stunned. "How did you..." His eyes darted to Laren and Ladur and he nodded. "Of course! They shared this with you."

"How soon Tilabil Dalis?" Andro asked once more.

"I am not an Elder." Dalis commented.

"You are far older and wiser than I am Tilabil Dalis... that makes you an Elder to me." Andro said. "To all of us."

Dalis stared at him for a long moment before answering. "Just under... just under five weeks time." He stated. "That is how long we have before it is discovered."

"And there is no way they could discover it sooner?" Dorian asked.

Dalis shook his head. "No. They are rigid in how they do things and downloading the probe data is not a priority for them until it is time."

"Then we will call it five weeks." Androcles said. "With a few days buffer."

"We are coming for you our sister and brother." Dorian spoke now. "And nothing will stand in our way."

“...Suggest we all learn these plans intimately.” Murano was speaking from one end of the table as he swept his hands across the chart table before him. “The facility may be deserted but it is huge and we must know our way around in order to make the mission proceed without hazard.”

Andro stood beside Dorian on one side of the table, Carisia and Lu'ria beside him while Sheva and Onera were beside Dorian. Jomann, Deion, Nara, Eliani, Lisisa and Mari occupied the opposite side of the table, while Sarlana stood on the end opposite Murano. Mari was tucked quite intimately up against Deion's side, their fingers intertwined tightly while her other hand gripped the front of his shirt over his abdomen. This was something that Murano noticed almost immediately though he had said nothing. He could not remember her face being so bright and alive with life and this kept him from saying anything. He would need to speak with her soon however, especially if she was in the process of pursuing a relationship with Deion Leonidas.

Andro looked up from the table and gazed at Murano intently. “I did not think you would approve of us doing this Murano.” He said honestly.

Murano met his eyes. “I did not at first. It may result in a confrontation that we are not prepared for.” He replied just as honestly. His eyes cut to Sarlana and then back to Androcles. “It was then Sarlana who told me that Laren and Ladur could wield the same power that we can. That they would be Praetorians like us... but also like you and Dorian. After being among your father, among you and the others, learning what I have learned in this time, I will never refuse to assist a fellow Praetorian. You, your father, Deion, Dorian, Jomann, Nara, Eliani, all of you in this very room... you are the future of the Praetorian Vanguard Androcles, whether any of you choose to accept it or not. I can not deny that. I will not deny that any longer.” Murano took a deep breath, closing his eyes to focus himself. His eyes were clear, focused and determined when he opened them again. “This is the knowledge I have sought for so many years. The purpose your grandfather left me behind. He meant for me to be here... now... when the time came that the Praetorians were reborn. And I am coming to believe that he knew what you and Dorian would become and that is also why he brought Sarlana to me. So that we can do what our peoples should have done millennia ago.”

“The truth of things means just as much to our species as it does to the Lycavorians and Vampires.” Sarlana spoke now. “Murano and I both know we can not reside in a past that no longer has a place in our future. We have both chosen to let the past stay where it belongs. Now we will work for the future. You are that future Androcles. Dorian is that future. Elynth and Ryner. Your father and Torma. All of you in this room are what the future holds. And all of you will begin to shape that future.”

Dorian rolled his eyes. “Carians... now they are beginning to sound like the Feravomir.”

Sheva looked at him and snapped her hand up to lightly slap the back of his head. “Dori!” She exclaimed.

“What?!” Dorian echoed. “It's the truth!”

“He's right.” Lisisa said softly. “And it's scary true.”

“Avoi.” Nara echoed her sister.

Sarlana and Murano were actually smiling as they witnessed this and Sarlana nodded her head with warmth in her eyes. “I believe Murano and I will take comfort that we are in such good company.” She said.

“Indeed.” Murano agreed.

“I understand she had quite the role in helping to raise all of you.” Sarlana said.

Deion shifted his position slightly and cringed. “More like tanning our backsides red when we did not pay attention in her classes.”

“Some of us paid attention fervon.” Nara spoke with a smile as she winked at Mari. “She never tanned my backside.”

“Because she never had time.” Eliani spoke now. “She was usually chasing Andro and I around with a switch in her hand.”

Even Androcles laughed at that and nodded his head. “Remember the time she caught us both in that net and didn't even bother to release us before she began to beat us?”

“I remember that!” Lisisa exclaimed. “You two were covered in mud from crawling through the Estate Caretaker's muck dirt. Right after he planted the yearly crop of roses.”

“Why... why were you doing that?” Mari asked.

“Resumar dared us to body surf naked through the lower village.” Eliani spoke with a smile. “He said he would cover for us when we returned to the estate.”

“He saw the Feravomir walking the grounds and chickened out.” Andro continued. “We had to sneak back into the estate through our uncle’s defenses. We would have made it if not for Eli’s glaringly white ass sticking up out of the mud.”

Eliani blushed and shrugged her shoulders. “Father and mother’s genes hadn’t kicked in yet and I didn’t start tanning until I was thirteen. Two years later.”

“Not one of our prouder moments.” Andro said as he looked at Eliani.

“Not when we were buck naked and covered in mud... no.” She agreed. “But the body surfing part was fun!”

Andro nodded his head. “Yes it was.”

“It was the talk of the village for weeks.” Lisisa agreed with a smile. “Especially the part about Andro frightening half the girls to death because his... he was exposed and flopping all over the place.”

“Oh my!” Sarlana gasped as even she could not hold back her laughter now and she saw the look on Androcles’ face. She watched Carisia lean up and whisper something in his ear and Lu’ria pressed closer to them as she did. His azure eyes grew slightly wider and he grinned down at them. So much had been going on over the last months that had hidden his playful side deep down Sarlana knew, but now Androcles once more felt free and happy and this was showing in his actions every moment.

“Murano...” Eliani broke in now a few moments later, mainly because she knew Andro would want them focused on this information going forward. “Did the Pralors ever believe in building something that was normal in size?” She asked as she gazed at the plans of the station. “This Science Facility is not huge... it’s colossal!”

Murano grinned at her comment. “We are lucky... this is one of the smaller ones.” He told her.

“Smaller?” Eliani gasped.

Andro leaned over the table now. “You are certain that the Scourge would not have a presence here?”

Murano nodded his head quickly. “I confirmed this with the information Armen has in the records archives here on SPARTA’S WRATH. This particular science station was idle when the Scourge swept through this portion of Pralor space. It was inactive. It is on the very far reaching borders of what was Pralor space and was used primarily to conduct sensor scans of the neighboring system’s new sun and its corona. It does, however, sit only twenty-two light years from the border of Darastrixi space. If my average understanding of science terminology is accurate, then it was only used sparingly because it was so far from widely traveled corridors within Pralor space.”

“So it was not deemed as a threat?” Jomann asked.

Murano nodded. “We had many such facilities spread across the expanse of space. Many of them were not in active use when the second Scourge invasion began. All of them were either ignored completely, or searched and left as dead hulks in space. Armen can confirm that once he departed for the Alpha Quadrant from our homeworld, the Scourge had not returned to this sector of Pralor space in over fifty years. We’ll be able to confirm that even further when we get close. Armen has assured me he has tweaked the Shrouds enough that not even Scourge sensors will be able to see us and our sensors were always more accurate than theirs.”

Andro looked up as the doors to the lounge opened and Armen himself entered carrying two datapads and with the Senior Worker Drone clinging to his massive shoulders. The Worker Drones were broken up into three different sections for more cohesive repairs and any kinds of construction that was needed. This Worker Drone, known as Alpha Six, had a crimson stripe across the top of its oval shaped frame indicating that it was the Coordination Drone for all the three groups. Everyone had come to discover that this Drone was never very far from where Armen was anywhere on the ship.

“Armen?” Andro spoke as the hulking seven foot tall Avatar moved up behind him. He and Dorian moved slightly so that he could take up a position between them.

-Denali’s initial report indicates that their first official meeting with representatives of the Vanari government did not go well- Armen spoke as he handed Andro one of the pads.

“That doesn’t sound like Deni.” Nara spoke up.

-His actual words were... it went like skelraini sibfla- Armen added. (Smoking shit)

Lisisa laughed. "Now that is my beautiful Denali." She stated with warmth and love in her voice that they all detected. Lisisa missed Deni and Arduri and she made no bones about that.

Andro set the pad aside on the table and nodded. "I did not expect anything else." He said. "What have you and Alpha Six come up with?"

-We can reconfigure four of our long range probes and outfit them with Union Shrouds. In addition we can upload Praetorian Command codes to Alpha Nine and Alpha Thirteen that they can then use to activate individual sections of the station when needed- Armen told him.

"Wait a minute..." Andro said. "I never said anything about sending our Drones. It's too much of a risk Armen."

-It is the most logical course of action Androcles. Alpha Nine and Alpha Thirteen would be able to adjust and compensate for any unknown events that may occur. The Darastrixi will not be familiar with the station's equipment or use. They will also be able to counter anything that the Scourge may have left behind and repair whatever they may have done in order to sabotage the station- Armen stated. -The Scourge are not the most unique thinkers Androcles-

All of them saw Alpha Six rise up and down on its six legs twice as it chirped loudly and balanced itself easily on Armen's shoulder.

Andro shook his head. "I don't doubt they could do it Alpha Six..." He said quickly. "I just did not want to risk exposing our Drones to unknown dangers."

Murano shook his head in awe. "You know... it took decades for our technicians to be able to understand the Drone's use of sound as a language. You, Deion and my niece do it like it is nothing. Mari and Deion I can understand given their schooling... but you..."

Andro shrugged. "Just lucky I guess." He said.

"You should know by now that our brother isn't exactly normal Murano." Nara spoke with a grin.

"That is so the understatement of the month arande." Eliani said.

"I'm sorry... I will endeavor to..." Nara began.

"Be more profound in my words." Deion finished for her knowing that it drove Eliani crazy when they finished each other's statements.

"Hey! What have I told you two about doing that?" Eliani snapped. "Carians... it's so creepy!"

Andro shook his head with a smile as everyone chuckled. He turned to Alpha Six. "Very well." He said. "But they are not to risk themselves for any reason."

Alpha Six chirped three times in reply and Andro nodded his head.

"Now what can they carry?" Dorian asked.

-We will remove the internal long range sensor packages currently installed- Armen told them. - Between the four Probes we can send enough equipment and supplies for fifty men and women-

Alpha Six chirped half a dozen times now and Armen nodded.

-Alpha Six also recommends we pass on to the Darastrixi that they do not enter the station with any more than this number. Alpha Nine and Alpha Thirteen will only be bringing the station's power core to 10 percent in order to remain undetected by any ships that may be nearby. This setting will only allow for minimal life support- Armen continued.

“There won’t be fifty.” Androcles said as he looked at the plans once more. “Laren and Ladur will not allow them to taken more than twenty. Murano... the corridors are large enough to allow unfettered access to Elynth and the others? Ladur included?”

Murano nodded in reply. “Easily.”

Andro pointed to one side of the station. “How many landing bays?” He asked.

“Three. One main hanger bay and two alternates.” Murano answered as he zoomed in the plans closer by touching the table. “Here, here and here.” His finger touched three different locations on the table.

Andro lifted his head slightly. “Sadi?” He called out into the empty air.

“We will talk about your antics as a child later Saradasaar.” Sadi’s voice echoed with humor from the speakers and they saw Andro shake his head slightly. “The one on the upper tower is a no go. Our length is too much and we don’t want to risk going in perpendicular to the atmospheric shield and force field.” Her voice answered from the starboard hanger bay where she, Ne’Veha and Kameka were within the PREMONITION and monitoring the briefing. “We can fit in the lower one easily, but the upper one will have to be STRIKER Mark IIs only.”

“Normya?” Andro asked the air once more.

“Max of two fervon. Any more and we will have no room to maneuver inside the bay itself. Which I’m sure you want us to be able to do.” Normya answered from her STRIKER Mark II. “Tir’ut?”

“I concur.” His voice answered instantly.

Andro looked at Dorian first, and then Deion, both of whom nodded. “Then this is what we do...” He said. “Murano goes in one STRIKER into the upper bay. Deion and Nara with him to access the command terminals in the Control Center.”

“I am going too!” Mari stated quickly.

Andro looked at Murano and saw him nod without any doubts. “Her computer skills will be invaluable in powering up the station more quickly and downloading whatever information we can from the main cores. With both Mari and Deion doing this it will halve the time needed to accomplish the task. This is one time where I will welcome her help without question. We don’t expect any trouble and even if we detect Scourge vessels we can be gone long before they arrive.”

“Then Normya and Tir’ut will fly the Mark II with you, Deion, Nara, Mari and Jeru and Mayla. Primary objective is to secure the Command Center as quickly as possible.” Andro said.

“Why their Bonded Ones?” Murano asked.

“My people will not recklessly fire on any Darastrixi.” Sarlana explained. “As long as there is a dragon in each group, then there will be no accidents. They will have been there for at least several days before we arrive and there is no reason to suspect they will not want to spread out and explore.”

Murano nodded his understanding. “That will allow them excellent defensive positions while they are there, but they should all move to areas close to the landing bays by the time we arrive. It will make extraction proceed more quickly.”

Andro shifted his finger on the table to another portion of the Science Station schematics. “Cowen, Ridor, Torian and Sherice will be on the second Mark II with Caydren and Cinol. Their objective will be the Station’s Weapons locker here on deck ten.”

“What will this locker have in it Murano?” Torian’s voice spoke from all around them on the internal speakers. He was standing with Cowen and the others in an exact duplicate of the lounge they were in on the starboard side of the ship and four decks beneath them.

“Standard Security complement of weapons.” Murano answered. “Do not be concerned with trying to use them. Armen will be needed to unlock their genetic activation sequencers. But with actual weapons, the Drones should be able to reverse engineer them quickly enough to send to Martin so that the Drones with him can produce enough of them to supply those that will be defending Honelze.”

“Why not replicate the weapons you have on Artaaya?” Dorian asked him.

Murano shook his head. “They are only light weapons. The weapons on this station are military grade. One of the more unpopular decisions my brother made when we first arrived on Artaaya, at least with the few portions of the military that remained, was to not do exactly what we are going to do now. Take this information from an abandoned station on the edge of our border.”

“Wouldn’t the ships you escaped on have had these plans and weapons?” Deion asked.

Murano shook his head. “Most of the ships that escaped the Purge were civilian ships. This information would not have been in their files. The few military ships we did have were ordered to empty their archives before leaving Pralor space so that they could upload Scientific information that would help us to escape.”

“You purged this information without making back up files?” Jomann spoke now.

Murano nodded slowly. “There were many decisions made in those last days that were done without thought of the future or defense Jomann. Only escape. The Scourge were pressing all across what was left of our Empire and no one was concerned with fighting them anymore. Only surviving... in any way that they could.” He touched the schematics. “This locker will also have several hundred pounds of explosive that we will then need to place at five different points in order to destroy this station when we are done. It is very similar to your own man-portable explosive, albeit slightly more powerful. The points are all centrally located off the main lifts and can be reached easily and quickly.”

“Cowen... you and Torian will be doing that while the others secure whatever weapons you can on the saddle packs that Caydren and Cinol will be wearing.” Andro said. “Ridor and Sherice can direct that portion with whoever we decide to send with them.”

“I suggest at least six others.” Cowen spoke immediately from the second lounge. “Four to assist Ridor and Sherice and two to provide security and either end of this main corridor.”

They could all see his finger on their chart table as it indicated two different locations.

“I’m not going to try and micromanage this operation.” Andro spoke. “That never works out for anyone. Each of you will determine how best to accomplish the task and then return to your ships, but understand this... extraction of Laren and Ladur and those with them is priority over everything else. Is that understood by all? The secondary objectives are not more important than the lives we will be saving. Are we clear on this?”

Andro heard all of their voices answer in the affirmative almost exactly at the same time. He nodded his head. “Good. We will enter in the lower hanger bay and make our way here...” He stabbed down on the table. “...to this point. It is the single largest room on the station and is accessible by six different lifts.”

“What is it Murano?” Eliani asked.

“An artificially generated Amphitheater.” Murano replied. “It could fit the entire station crew if needed and is where most of the public announcements were made. If my memory of your history is accurate... it is the same in size to one of your Coliseums where you hold your yearly sports events in and around Sparta.”

Dorian whistled. “Wow... that’s big.”

“It’s the most heavily shielded area of the station and as your brother pointed out, the most accessible to the many lifts in the area.” Murano answered. “Five of the six Lifts exit directly to the main hanger bay and this is where life support will be focused even though most of the station will have minimal systems online.”

“Dorian, Elynth, Ryner and I will enter from this end, while Jomann will bring the rest of our force in from the opposite end.” Andro said as his finger glided across the board. “Once we have a handle on the situation, Normya, Sadi and the other STRIKER will lift off and converge on the main hanger bay to extract everyone at once.”

“We expect a Darastrixi transport of some sort to be waiting hidden within this small asteroid field.” Dorian spoke as he now leaned over the table and zoomed the image out to encompass the space around the station and he pointed to a spot. “Once we have secured all those with Laren and Ladur and are ready to extract, this ship will break from the field and move to SPARTA’S WRATH and be taken aboard.”

-I will drop the Shroud around the hanger bays for twenty-two seconds in order to receive the Darastrixi transport- Armen spoke now. -And only when our other ships are in position to make a simultaneous entry into the other bays. I will reengage the Shroud and jump out of the area ten seconds later-

“We don’t want to stay here any longer than we have to.” Andro spoke. “Getting in and out unseen is a priority. We’ll be getting updated intelligence from Laren over the course of the next few weeks... but as it stands this is the outline of the plan.”

“Armen is currently working on setting up some sort of covert communication channel to this Koppentotz Aviel we spoke to.” Murano added. “It should be ready in a day or so and will give us the ability to stay up to date on anything happening there.”

“Meaning no disrespect Doraanar...” Deion spoke looking at her. “Can we trust him?”

Sarlana smiled and nodded her head to him. “None taken young Deion.” She answered. “I believe it is safe to say we can trust him. Ch’teven trusts him... as do Laren and Ladur.”

“And if they are wrong?” Deion pressed her.

Sarlana nodded once more. “If they are wrong... then there are already plans in place to insure he does not leave the Darastrixi homeworld with them.”

Deion looked at his brothers. “Forgive me Andro... Dorian... I just don’t...”

Andro shook his head quickly. “Never apologize for being cautious Deo.”

Nara took Deion’s arm. “You two aren’t... so someone has to be.” She exclaimed.

“Hey! We are cautious.” Dorian complained.

Sheva elbowed him in the ribs. “By whose definition of cautious Dori?” She stated as he turned his eyes on her. “Not ours for sure.”

Everyone laughed softly once more which made Deion relax. He had not wanted to ask the question but he knew what this meant to his brothers and he did not want to see them be disappointed.

[It was the right question fervon.] Andro’s voice reached for him across the table and he met his brother’s azure eyes.

[Do not be angry with me Andro.] Deion spoke.

[Angry at you for asking the question all of us have thought?] He replied. [That will never happen Deo. Never.]

Eliani could almost sense they were speaking in a shielded moment and she acted. “What if we get delayed in the Beta Quadrant fervon?” Eliani asked sensing a change of topic was needed if only to put Deion at ease.

Andro met her eyes after smiling at Deion. “We won’t. I have already spoken to our father and mothers in regards to that. We are all of the same mind. We will not jerk around with the Vanari or the Rothryn in any way. If the Vanari wish to cling to their centuries old distrust and hatred, they are welcome to it. The Rothryn people are the bigger question mark because of this Rothryn Science Academy, but the Vanari who have sanctioned what is going on now will not be so easily flung from power. It needs to come from within... and that is something we do not have the time to wait for.”

Jomann grinned. “You are making friends wherever you go.” He said.

Andro chuckled in reply. “Aren’t I though?”

“When are father and our mothers leaving to investigate this planet?” Lisisa asked now.

“Based on our last communication... they will be departing tomorrow afternoon from Manne. He will be sending his Corvette to us in the Beta Quadrant with a courier and updated data on these Svorag that he does not want to send via COMs.” Andro answered her. “I want all of you to take the first few days after arriving in the Beta Quadrant to remain on SPARTA’S WRATH to rest and study these plans. Coren is relatively sure their Board of Regents will make us wait for any kind of official meeting with them. Lisi... I will leave it to you to fill Deni and Arduri in when you reunited with them.”

“You need to rest too fervon.” Eliani told him.

Andro nodded his head looking quickly at Carisia and Lu’ria next to him. “And I will... once Inamarno is back with us.” He said turning back to her.

“Yes we will.” Lu’ria echoed.

“We will have a public gathering and State Dinner on Lorent to meet everyone next week. Tenna Deia will be attending with grandfather L’tian.”

“What about the operation against the OSG?” Jomann asked.

“We will only provide support for the majority of it unless something comes up.” Andro said. “Denali and Dutkne are confident the former Protectorate forces can accomplish the mission without our direct aide. They have been doing it for centuries already and many of them have a particular dislike for anything OSG related.”

“Something will come up.” Lisisa said dismissively. “Something always does.”

Andro smiled and nodded his head. “That is why I want all of us rested. It might get very interesting... for I have no doubt that the Vanari will positively shit their pants when they see this ship.”

All of them looked at him with wide eyes. It was Eliani who spoke what they all thought. “Andro... did you just try to make a joke?” She gasped with a huge grin.

Carisia and Lu'ria were the first to burst out laughing, followed quickly by everyone else. Andro looked at them. “What? That wasn't funny?” He demanded.

ICARAVA
DARASTRIXI HOMEWORLD
DARASTRIXETHE (DRAGONBLOOD) SPACE
DEFENSE MINISTRY BUILDING

“...Actually saw them?” Dytin gasped as he looked at Aviel from across the Darastrixi version of the chart table.

Aviel nodded his head. “They appeared like arcanisstok in the courtyard Dytin my friend. It was... it was awe inspiring! They were using some device that allowed them to boost their Etheric power so that they appeared as if they were actually among us. Their power is more than even Chalith and the others believed. I... we spoke to Doraanar Sarlana as well Dytin.” (Magic)

Dytin shook his head before looking at his long time friend. “An actual Doraanar.” He muttered softly. “Ini wer ithquenti Aviel! This is... this is more than we had ever hoped for.” (By the gods)

Aviel nodded. “It is indeed.” He stated as he held out the data scroll to him and Dytin quickly plugged it into the smallish chart table in his office. “Do you recall a Praetorian by the name of Murano?”

Dytin met his eyes evenly. “Yes... he was one of those who came here with Sumar when they requested our aide.” He answered immediately seeing Aviel's eyes look at him oddly. He smiled and shrugged his broad shoulders. “After you first told me I went back and dug up the recordings of their visit to study them. No small task I tell you. I spent four hours searching the archives for them.”

“I do not know how or if there are more of them... but this Murano was among them as well Dytin.” Aviel said.

“A Praetorian of old!” Dytin gasped once more. “Alive! And traveling with the reborn Dahakoan?” He pushed away from the small table. “Aviel... this is no coincidence. It can not be. This is a sign my friend.”

Aviel nodded his head. “I believe it is as well.”

“What are they... what are they like?” Dytin asked.

Aviel thought about that for a moment before answering. They had spent nearly as much time questioning him as they had learning of Laren and Ladur. “They are confident and fierce.” He spoke finally. “Not as physically imposing as I had imagined they would be, but there was... there was something about them... something that spoke of the capacity for great violence yet great compassion as well.”

“And the older one, Androcles, he and his Vrrarhoinpa are truly Vrelvel Sargti?” Dytin asked.

Aviel nodded his head quickly. “Without question. We could all feel it within us Dytin my friend.”

“This is almost too much to take in Aviel.” Dytin spoke softly. “All of this happening now. The return of the Dahakoan, discovering that the Praetorians are not long dead, that they both live on within a species our scientists would call barbaric?” He shook his head.

Aviel looked at him. “Do you question all that is happening now my friend?”

Dytin looked at him quickly. “What? No!” He exclaimed. “It only makes my resolve that much stronger knowing these things. You know of course that those in power will not believe. They will do everything within their ability to keep that power.”

Aviel nodded his head. “I know.” He said softly. “There are a few I could approach. Those who believe as we do.”

Dytin shook his head. “No... secrecy is our best ally now.” He stated. “The more who know of what is taking place the greater the risk to Laren and Ladur. And to us. Besides... they will be needed here after we depart.”

Aviel nodded his head. “What have you put in place so far?” He asked.

Dytin turned to the smallish Chart Table and activated it. “Five ships Aviel.” He began. “Two of our new ITHAEL-Class Heavy Cruisers and three Passenger liners. They are the only ones large enough to accommodate the additional personnel. I have already chosen the officers who will command. I mentored them in their early days and they have a deep faith that matches our own. All of them come from deeply faithful families... it is part of why I chose them. None of them question what we will do Aviel.”

Aviel looked at him. “Then they know what we do?” He asked.

Dytin shook his head. “Not all of it... no. Only the ship commanders know everything. Five men I trust implicitly. The rest of the officers, I would trust any of them with my life Aviel, but even they do not need to know it all. I can’t ask them to do this however and have them leave their families behind.”

Aviel nodded. “Of course not!” He stated.

“I have instructed them immediate family only.” Dytin said. “Dask, opsola, isthasyi and myvishi only. If they are joined they must be careful of their wives family, but I have been to each of their joining ceremonies and so far their wives’ families are no different from them in the strength of their faith.”

“You realize that many will call us religious fanatics.” Aviel said.

“I do not care what they call us!” Dytin hissed. “There are many things I could call them after viewing what you gave to me and allowing this to happen for so long! Not to mention many things I would like to do to them!”

Aviel nodded his head. “Indeed.” He motioned to the data scroll. “Androcles instructed me to give this information to you. I entered what he told me onto this pad and only I have seen it. I’m sure Laren and Ladur know the contents, I suspect they were communicating far more than we realize, but for now only we two know what is on here.”

Dytin looked at him. “You seem... you shaken somewhat when you speak of him Aviel. I have never seen this in you. He frightens you?”

Aviel met his eyes. “Androcles told me something just before the transmission ended Dytin. Something that only I heard for that is what he wanted.”

“What?”

“He told me that if anything happens to Laren and Ladur, if the Scourge discover them because of the fools within our own government, or if they are taken by members of our own government...” Aviel shook his head.

“Go on.” Dytin told him.

“Dytin... he told me if anything happens to Laren and Ladur... if they are betrayed in any way... he will come for us.” Aviel spoke softly. “He will come for all of us. And when he is done with the Scourge he will turn his full attention on the Darastrixi and unleash the fury of the Dahakoan from the beginning of time upon us. And he will not stop until all of us have seen his justice done.”

Dytin was silent for a long moment as he stared at his friend. He allowed the small grin to split his face finally and he nodded his head. “I like this Lycavorian Androcles.” He said with intense respect. “Oh yes... I like him quite a bit.”

“We must not fail Dytin my friend.” Aviel told him. “I saw the look in this young man’s eyes and I do not doubt his words for an instant.”

“What did you see Aviel?” Dytin asked.

“Death incarnate for any who stand between him and retrieving Laren and Ladur.” Aviel answered. “Death incarnate.”

Dytin stood up tall and nodded his head. “It is about time that death was on our side for once.” He stated forcefully.

CHAPTER THIRTY-NINE

ULU SCIMITAR ORBITING AUSTROVA

To say Asay Va Eldost was teetering on the edge of not believing would have been an accurate statement as she entered the large Mess Lounge. Not believing anything about the Lycavorian people that she had been hearing for all of her life. Much of that was attributed to the night of wildly passionate lovemaking she had taken part in just the past evening with the tall, ebony skinned Lycavorian. Her own sky blue skin shone with vibrancy as it did in any Vanari female who felt fulfilled and so very happy.

Asay was nearing six hundred years old and had been a very good friend with Devra Re Mydala before being voted onto the Senior Board of Regents four years ago. The older woman had impressed Asay with her determination and fearlessness when it came to bringing issues to the forefront. Devra was also not afraid of the SBR as many of the junior Regents were. She had earned her position on the lower Board of Regents with hard work and the ability to make men and women both see her line of thinking. Asay on the other hand, she had assumed her father's position on the SBR when he died three years ago in a Lifter accident on his way to his office. He had been tutoring her along as a junior Regent, hoping one day she would rise to his position within their government. As was usually the case when family members were involved in the government and the senior family member died, Asay rose to fill his position.

The Va Eldost family was a very influential family among the Vanari elite, having been one of those who helped to found the capital city. Their assets were many and diversified and while they would never come close to the Re Mydala family and others in wealth, they were still powerful in their own right. Asay had unwillingly become the head of that family when her father died and she still mourned his loss every day since his death. Asay Va Eldost was the oldest of her father's four daughters, all of them with long, shimmering white blond hair and figures that did make most Vanari men drool at the sight of. Unlike her sisters however, Asay Va Eldost was still very much single and had to chase away suitors every day because of her beauty and now her position as a member of the Senior Board of Regents. Asay was also known to participate quite willingly in the Celebration of The Hundreds Ritual, and she had for decades in the hopes of finding a man who she was compatible with as well as one who would love her completely. While she was well known for being very adventurous and sexually desirable, she had never found a man who could keep up with her wants and passions.

That was until last night, when her world and her passions were swallowed whole by one man.

Ardan and the others had been allowed to remain aboard the SCIMITAR for the evening after speaking with the young woman Yssyla and her parents. Yssyla Vol Dumor and her very traditional parents were quite adamant about her remaining on this ship and not returning to Austrova to be examined by Vanari physicians. Ardan and Galar had mentioned the threat of repercussions should they refuse and Yssyla's father, a senior Vanari Cadre Commando leader, had told Ardan and Galar they would have to go through him to get to his daughter. Asay had remained silent for the most part, watching, as she had during their meeting with the Lycavorian representatives, for unlike the others her mind was not set. Her beloved father had always told his daughter to be observant and make up their own mind on issues. When she was elected to the Junior Board of Regents he had told Asay to never let herself be influenced by the older Regents who thought that they were superior simply by their age. Asay had remained true to this ideal all of her life and even more so after her father had died. Asay had sat, watched and listened while Ardan and Galar took the lead in questioning Yssyla, while Cruor and his idiotic son Eyon seemingly studied everything around them. Asay was also sick of Eyon continually making lewd comments to her in whispered conversations about how they should spend more time together. Asay was well known for doing wilder things during The Celebration of The Hundreds, but even she had her standards, and Eyon Arn Del was not a man she would allow to take her to bed. She was also the only one who noticed that Yssyla's father did not appear in the least bit upset that his youngest daughter and a Lycavorian were so deeply involved. He in fact had defended the man several times.

Asay could not sleep after the questioning was over and since it was still late afternoon, and she was hungry, she had left the large and spacious quarters assigned to her in order to find her way back to the lounge she had been in earlier in the day. Within several minutes she was hopelessly lost among the many corridors and different decks. The Lycavorians she saw in the corridors obviously did not feel threatened by them for she had no security outside her quarters and no one had stopped her as she made her way around trying to find some sort of map to assist her. It wasn't until the tall Lycavorian male with dark chocolate colored skin and wearing a form fitting uniform had approached her that anyone from the ship had come forward to assist her.

Asay was taken with him from the very first moment. He had very short, dark black hair with a perfectly trimmed mustache and goatee. His ice blue eyes were riveting to say the least against the background of his dark, ebony colored skin. Ice blue eyes that had gazed upon her with equal parts unmitigated desire and true respect. His name she learned was Nellian Tyrine, a senior Captain with the Lycavorian Durcunusaan assigned to this ship and perhaps the most physically imposing man she had ever come across. He was far more muscular than any Vanari male she knew and considerably taller at nearly six foot four, yet almost immediately his supreme intelligence came shining through. He kept bowing his head to her as he talked, and she soon discovered he was only fifty years older than her own five hundred and seventy-two years. Asay was captured by his words and the way his voice flattered deliciously across her skin and ignited her senses. He did not treat her badly, something they had been told to expect when they first arrived, but was going out of his way to direct her to the nearest lounge closest to her quarters and then even suggesting some simple drinks that could help her to sleep. Asay didn't know why she did it, asking him to remain with her and talk, but she was never happier with a decision that she had made in her life.

Nellian Tyrine was incredibly well spoken and treated her with the utmost respect. He answered as many questions that he was allowed when Asay asked him, never once seeming to be hiding anything. It wasn't long before she was asking about Lycavorian culture and tradition and then his true self came shining forth. Asay discovered that his family had called Sparta home for centuries and they were among the first to take a second name when Martin Leonidas returned to claim his throne. It was something that had become commonplace now among the Lycavorian people as a way to distinguish each of their families, and more and more of the Lycavorian people were moving to add surnames to their families and packs. She could see the pride in his eyes and voice as he spoke of his family, a father who commanded one of the largest fleets within the Union, a mother who was a recognized scholar of Lycavorian history and friend to the King's revered mother Gorgo. She learned of his seven brothers and sisters as well, of which he was the oldest.

Asay learned more about the Lycavorian people in the three hours that they had talked and picked at the food he had suggested than she had in the previous centuries of watching others among her people interact with them. Nellian had taken the Vanari misconception of his people and tossed it out of the airlock in the space of the first hour. This openness also allowed her to talk of her family as she never had before to anyone. His presence filled her with trust and warmth unlike anything she had felt before. Asay had followed Vanari law as a member of the Board of Regents was expected to and she avoided contact with all Lycavorians if it was possible. Now however, being next to him and listening to him talk had enraptured her like nothing else had in her life. Asay Va Eldost had never been one to act on instinct and emotion yet she could not control her actions and this is what surprised and delighted her the most. It was early evening when, after the rather tasty selection of Lycavorian foods, he had escorted her back to her quarters. He had remained in the corridor while she opened her door and stepped into her quarters before turning to face him.

Asay acted without thinking then, the desire and passion had been building in her since she had first seen this beautiful specimen of a man. She grabbed the front of his uniform and pulled him into the large main room of her quarters, slapping her hand down on the controls to close the door. Asay heard the low growl from within his chest and then he was pinning her against the bulkhead of the ship and his warm lips came down on hers with ardent fervor. His kiss alone set her entire body on fire, her Alkay quickly seeping from her pores as her passion rose to a level she had never felt before, her body instantly responding and becoming warm. Nellian was hesitant at first, unsure of what she truly wanted, until her arms wrapped around his broad back and she pulled him against her lush body tightly while trying to get his uniform off him as quickly as possible. She didn't know how he knew that this had nothing to do with why she was here on this ship, but once he seemed to discover this fact, Asay dropped into a world of blissful abandon that she had never known existed before. It happened before his kisses stole her breath and her heart away, before his huge, pulsing manhood had filled her more than any man she had ever been with before, and before the most devastating climatic experience of her life rocked her world.

It was before all this that Asay Va Eldost had fallen utterly and completely in love.

Asay had stared at him earlier that morning as they lay in the bed, her light green eyes wandering over his broad and maddeningly delicious muscular chest. She was snuggled against his side, one of her long legs tossed across both of his, her firm breasts pushing against his ribcage as her fingers tracing the line of his strong, even jaw and her white blond hair wildly askew across his shoulder. She had awakened with both of his arms laced around her body and holding her tightly in a protective cocoon. She had never felt such warmth and peace as she had at that moment and she stretched her wonderfully sore body against his even more as she looked up into his face and saw those beautiful eyes watching her. He didn't speak any words to her, his eyes told her everything she had always wanted to see in a man's eyes and he kissed her then with all that he was. Asay returned that emotion as she drew his face tighter and held him as he delighted her senses with his kiss. Asay remembered vividly their conversation.

She drew her finger across his soft lips, looking into those ice blue eyes. "What will take place now Nellian?" She asked softly.

His large hand came up and his fingers stroked her cheek as they had stroked her body only a short while ago. "I imagine that would depend on you." He answered her. "What do you want to happen Asay Va Eldost?"

"I don't know?" She answered honestly though her name from his lips delighted her ears and made her shiver inside.

"I don't imagine you came to our ship expecting this to take place." He said.

"Prophets no!" Asay exclaimed.

"Do you regret what happen between us Asay?"

Her soft green eyes came up instantly and she looked at him. "No! Nellian no!" She gasped forcefully. "Not for a single moment! It was... by the prophets... it was glorious!"

"It was for me as well." He told her with a smile. "Even without this..." His finger traced her upper arm. "What do you call this oil that comes from your skin again?"

"Alkay." She replied.

Nellian nodded. "Even without your Alkay, though you certainly did not need this oil to make me desire you Asay." Nellian said.

"It does not affect you?" Asay told him.

"We were told what it can do." Nellian told her as he met her eyes with those beautiful ice blue orbs. "This oil you secrete from your skin is why your females are taken from you. To harvest this oil that your body produces when you are... aroused. It is a sickening practice but no... it does not affect us as it does others. At least not in the manner your people are accustom to. The Lycavorian regenerative system is slightly different than those within what was once the Protectorate simply because of the area of space we live in. According to Queen Leonidas, we in the Alpha Quadrant have been exposed to far more genetic mutative gases and oils and have developed quite the immunity to such influencing factors."

Asay could attest to that. Even when her Alkay was seeping from her skin in copious amounts and coating both of their bodies in a glistening sheen, it only seemed to increase his desire for her, as well as his endurance and staying power. It didn't make him more susceptible to suggestion or coercion for she had been gasping in his ear nonstop to do one thing or the other because he was driving her insane with pleasure and he had ignored her completely and continued to make love to her in a way that had her senses screaming in ecstasy and had kept her on the edge of orgasmic paradise the entire time.

"Did your government really do what your Senator said they did?" Asay asked him. "Did they find the men who took part in this and kill them?"

"Slavery is an abomination to the vast majority of the citizens of the Union regardless of their species Asay." Nellian told her. "My father and mother were both born in Sparta, on Earth as I told you. This feeling is felt more deeply there because of Earth's own history with slavery. When added to the hatred of it among others of the Union because of our years as slaves to the High Coven, you will be hard pressed to find anyone who finds it acceptable in any fashion. There are those who do not adhere to this mentality, but their numbers are few. They are few because of the overwhelming attitude regarding this type of action. I was not involved with the three operations that removed this blight upon my people's honor, but I read the after action reports. Yes... we did exactly as Senator Ya'sur stated we did, though their numbers were far fewer than we had initially thought because of Prince Androcles' actions in retrieving Princess Caliria from those monsters."

"But the serum that..."

Nellian had rolled over atop her then, pulling her body tighter against his. Asay smiled happily at this action and responded to his kiss with equal happiness as his arms curled under her body and his weight upon her made her feel wondrous. When he finally drew apart from her, his eyes were alive with emotion and he traced the outline of her jaw and caressed the ridge of her ear.

“I am not a politician Asay.” He told her. “I am a soldier. I am honored to hold the position I have now. I do not begin to understand the intricacies of politics and I don’t want to understand them. They give me a headache. Was politics your motivation for your actions last evening with me?”

“Certainly not!” Asay hissed instantly.

“Nor were they mine.” Nellian told. “You are the most beautiful woman I have ever seen in my life and you smell like fresh blossoming daisies on a windswept morning. I will never want another as I wanted you last night and still want you even now. This is a choice that you have to make. I would much prefer that what we discovered last night continue for many more centuries to come... but I will... I will not like it... I will hate it... but I will understand if this is something you cannot do.”

“Nellian I...”

He kissed her gently once more, the emotion and passion openly exposed within his kiss. And then he was gone.

Asay looked around the lounge hoping she would see him but knowing she would not. He knew this ship and though she hardly knew him at all, she sensed he would not want to pressure her into a decision she could not make by seeing him. A decision she could not make just yet it seemed. She did, however, see Ardan and Galar sitting with Cruor and his son Eyon and after gathering a glass of the sweet tasting juice Nellian had introduced her to last evening from the counter and one of the fruit topped Danishes he had suggested, she moved to the table they sat at.

“...Do not know if they will allow us to remove her from this ship.” Galar was speaking to Ardan. “It seems they have somehow influenced her parents as well in this regard. This man Yssyla clings to is never far from her.”

“How were they able to do this?” Cruor asked quickly.

Ardan shook his head. “I do not know... but even if we wanted to do this and had the personnel to do it... I fear we would not succeed. This ship is just too large and our Intelligence people have not been able to penetrate the hull of Prince Denali’s ship for weeks. Even our most sophisticated sensors can not pierce whatever jammers they have operating.”

“Does not the size and scope of this ship tell you something?” Cruor asked. “It is a warship through and through. It is twice the size of our largest ships and bigger than anything we have seen within the Protectorate.”

“That we know of father.” Eyon spoke once more.

Cruor nodded. “That we know of yes.”

Galar looked at Asay as she settled to the table. “You should not eat or drink the food they provide to us Asay.” He told her.

Asay met his eyes as she purposefully bit into the Danish. “Trying to poison us in any way is not something they would do.” She stated with confidence as she chewed the delicious tasting Danish.

“We do not know that!” Galar insisted. “I’m quite certain our quarters were monitored in some way!”

“I found nothing.” Cruor spoke again. “I managed to bring a portable scanner aboard and since they did not search us when we first arrived, I used it when they gave me my quarters. It was not able to penetrate whatever composes the metal within this ship as you said Ardan... but I could detect no listening devices. I could not access the computer in my quarters either.”

“I expected that.” Ardan spoke.

“Why are you so certain that there were any monitoring devices Galar?” Asay asked him.

“They are Lycavorians!” Galar hissed softly. “Nothing more than violent brutes! We should not even be here talking to them!”

It was Eyon who picked up on the vibrant color of Asay’s skin and the brightness of her eyes as well as her hair, which seemed much shiner than normal. All of these were signs that were exhibited by Vanari females who were filled with passion and desire for man. Eyon had no idea that man was a Lycavorian that had stolen Asay’s heart.

“You seem... you seem different Asay?” Eyon finally said.

Asay met his eyes knowing that a pig like him would detect it, but shrugged her slim shoulders indifferently. “I slept rather well.” She answered.

“It’s obvious from what they told us yesterday that they will try and alter the Right of Passage Agreement as well as the many trade agreements we have with the Protectorate.” Galar stated now.

Ardan shook his head. “That will not happen. Alrerin Sha Harael has assured me that he will not allow this.”

“He has remained silent these past weeks for the most part Ardan.” Galar spoke. “Can we count on his support?”

Asay was not stupid by any means and she noticed out of the corner of her eye that Ardan glanced at her quickly before answering. “We will speak of his support with him when we return Galar.”

Asay made it seem that she was interested more in eating the Danish than listening to them, but she noticed that Galar glanced at her as well before answering. “Of course.” He said softly.

Asay had seen enough men and even some female Regents speaking in such hushed voices and she knew full well it was in regards to something that the vast majority of their fellow Regents had no idea about. Asay Va Eldost decided right there that something was not right. Ardan and Galar were trying very hard to hide something and a sick feeling began to seep into the bottom of her stomach because if it was in regard to what she thought it was, the shockwaves it would cause could very well bring down the Vanari government.

“We should...” Ardan began but his words were drowned out by the blaring noise of some kind of alarm. It echoed through the entire Mess Lounge causing the heads of the many men and women to lift upwards as the internal speakers came alive with a female voice.

“ATTENTION SHIP WIDE! ATTENTION SHIP WIDE!”

Ardan glanced up and saw the large Lycavorian moving directly for their table as the voice continued.

“SPARTA'S WRATH HAS ENTERED SCIMITAR'S GRID! SPARTA'S WRATH HAS ENTERED SCIMITAR'S GRID! ALL DUTY ROTATION PERSONNEL REPORT TO YOUR STATIONS! ALL DUTY ROTATION PERSONNEL REPORT TO YOUR STATIONS! WE WILL MAKE CONTACT IN FOUR MINUTES! REPEAT... CONTACT IN FOUR MINUTES!”

Ardan and the others watched as just over a dozen personnel sitting among the tables rose to their feet and began making their way out of the Lounge with measured and swift steps. His eyes shifted to the Lycavorian who approached their table and stopped beside him.

“Regent Vu Lamurrion?” The young man asked respectfully Asay noticed.

Ardan came to his feet. “What is going on?” He demanded.

“Admiral Sa'sur and Senator Ya'sur asked that I collect you and your fellow Regents and bring you to the bridge.” The young man said.

“Why?” Galar spat as he rose to his feet.

The Durcunusaan officer remained calm and in control Asay noticed. “I do not know the exact purpose sir,” He answered. “However I would imagine that is has something to do with SPARTA'S WRATH arriving.”

“What... what is this SPARTA'S WRATH?” Ardan questioned.

“It is the Command Ship for Crown Princess Androcles.” The Durcunusaan officer told him. Asay could almost see the delight in his eyes as he saw their expressions of shock and she had to hold in her sudden feeling of humor at seeing these powerful men so dumbstruck that they could not talk.

“Wait!” Ardan stammered. “Your... your Prince was not due to arrive for several more weeks!”

The Durcunusaan shrugged his broad shoulders. “Your information was incorrect sir.” He stated flatly. “If you will follow me... I will take you to the bridge.”

SCIMITAR BRIDGE

The bridge of this ship was not somewhere they had expected to be shown, but as they entered from a side entrance, they saw a beehive of activity that was extremely well organized and calm. They were all stunned at the complexity of the bridge and its computer systems and this feeling came out in their expressions. Since none of them had ever made a single attempt to discover how far the Protectorate had advanced technologically, they were not prepared for the level of sophistication on this ship. It matched and even exceeded Vanari technology in many ways just from what they were able to make out around them. Asay had more experience than any of them when it came to technology, and once more Nellian's words to her last night came rushing to the forefront of her mind.

“We are not so barbaric and backwards as your people believe. And when your people discover this it is going to come as a very big shock.”

Asay Va Eldost and the Vanari people would not be able to deny the truth of his words now.

They saw the elven female Admiral Sa'sur standing on the upraised center platform with Denali Leonidas and Dutkne on either side of her. The four Union Senators they had met with yesterday were standing to the side conversing in quiet whispers among themselves but not afraid of being overheard. Ya'sur motioned to the officer and the Durcunusaan officer guided them across the width of the bridge behind Sa'sur and the others to stand with them.

“Good morning Regent Vu Lamurrion. I trust you and your fellow Regents slept well.” Ya'sur spoke.

“What is going on here?” Arden demanded right away. “This officer told us that your Prince is arriving now!”

Ya'sur nodded his head in recognition while Ulana's face creased in a scowl of disgust at his arrogance. “Yes... that is correct.” He replied.

“We did not know this!” Galar spat.

“I wasn't aware that we had to check with you before this took place.” Ya'sur told him. “You have always known he was coming.”

“We should have been notified that he was arriving earlier than expected!” Galar pressed angrily.

“We never gave a definitive time table as to when Prince Androcles would eventually arrive here Regent Galar.” Senator Pyath spoke. “He is much like his father in that it is next to impossible to predict his actions. He apparently finished whatever business he had to take care of in the Alpha Quadrant and then proceeded here.”

“I need to speak with my office!” Ardan demanded.

Ya'sur shook his head. “I'm sorry... at the moment Admiral Sa'sur has secured the COM array. She will unlock it when SPARTA'S WRATH is in synchronous orbit with the SCIMITAR so that no accidents happen. It is standard procedure for Union ships.”

Ulana did not allow it to show on her face but she reached for Ya'sur within the Etheric realm. Ya'sur... this is no such procedure. She said.

Ya'sur chuckled in the connection. Yes... but they do not know that. He answered. Why let Regent Ardan spoil our surprise by warning his minions?

All of them turned when Sa'sur's voice echoed above the others. “Look sharp people!” She called out. “Give me a status?”

“Helm is maintaining station keeping thrusters!”

“Communications is standing by!”

“Ops standing by! SPARTA'S WRATH is moving into position one hundred thousand meters off our starboard bow!”

“Tactical is good! Preparing to transfer Grid Control to SPARTA'S WRATH on your mark Admiral!”

“Very well... stand by Tactical.” Sa'sur answered.

“Incoming non-secure transmission from SPARTA'S WRATH Actual Admiral.” The COM officer spoke up.

“Main holo disc if you would Lieutenant.” Sa'sur spoke.

“Transferring.”

The disc came alive with a soft flare of white light and then the image of the extremely broad and tall form of Armen filled the transmission cone. He wore his newly tailored fleet uniform with red sash around his waist.

-Admiral Sa'sur... a pleasure to see you again- Armen spoke in his deep, gravelly but mechanical sounding voice.

Sa'sur nodded her head. "Armen... glad you could make it." She said with a smile. It was odd speaking to him in such a familiar manner being that he was a machine, but it was growing on Sa'sur quickly. A machine he may have been but he had more than proved his abilities in battle on several occasions and he was certainly like no android or machine she had ever seen. He had spent several hours quizzing her before she left on this trip, all in regards to Androcles and his tendencies. She could have sworn that he wanted to impress him as much as possible. "You are eleven hours and twenty-three minutes late Armen. Did something come up?"

Armen shook his head. -A minor power fluctuation in the dorsal engine nacelle when we exited our last jump. We did not proceed so that we could investigate it. It was nothing to be concerned with-

Sa'sur glanced at Denali quickly and then back to the transmission. SPARTA'S WRATH did not have a dorsal engine and the Avatar obviously had seen the Vanari on the bridge and was not about to reveal the true purpose they had been delayed. She nodded her head to him in a show of continuing the farce. "Glad to hear it." She answered. "I recommend that you drop your Shroud Armen. We don't want to frighten the Vanari Orbital Control officer."

-We have already been in contact with him- Armen answered. -He seemed rather excited when I informed him of how much space we would need within his orbital grid-

Sa'sur chuckled. "I have no doubt."

-Stand by... we are disengaging our Shroud-

Ardan, Galar and the others could only stare in unabashed shock as they watched the view window and the bulk of SPARTA'S WRATH began to appear, soon blotting out anything else in view as the nearly twenty-two thousand meter long ship un-Shrouded and came fully into view. None of them could hear the many alarms that were blaring all across the Vanari ships that were in orbit around their home planet, nor could they see the mass hysteria within the Vanari military command center on Austrova as the enormous ship appeared on their sensors in position with the Lycavorian Command ship just as they had instructed.

Ardan and Galar could not reach the view window quickly enough with Cruor and Eyon as they gaped in disbelief at what was now only a hundred thousand meters from the very ship they were on. Even at that distance it looked as if they could reach out and touch the ship right through the view window.

"By all the Prophets we hold dear...!" Galar gasped in disbelief.

Asay Va Eldost simply stood back slightly and gazed in open mouth awe at the enormous star ship now parked only a short distance away from them. It was easily five times the size of the SCIMITAR, which was itself larger than any Vanari warship that they now possessed she knew. Nellian's words filled her mind once more and this time Asay could not help the small smile that split her lips. Asay Va Eldost made her decision right then. A decision that would alter her life going forward no doubt but now Asay was not afraid of what that unknown could bring to her. Now she wanted to discover all of it.

-Austrova Orbital Control... our station keeping thrusters are active and we are locked in position- Armen's voice spoke from within the transmission.

All of them heard the voice stammer its reply and they could only smile. "We... we have you on... we have you SPARTA'S WRATH. Please... please maintain your... your current position."

-Understood Austrova Control. We thank you for the skilled direction and assist in moving into position- Armen commented.

None of them saw the three Vanari officers inside the orbital station look at each other and shake their heads in disbelief. They hadn't done a thing except watch as the massive ship had moved into position with exacting precision and not veering from course by even one meter.

“Nicely done Armen.” Sa'sur complimented him on his skill at maneuvering the massive ship so easily. “Nicely done indeed.”

-Androcles has just arrived on the bridge Admiral. I will turn it over to him- Armen spoke as he moved just out of the cone of the transmission and they all saw Androcles step into view.

It was only a moment before Andro's full six foot one frame filled the entire transmission and he was looking at them with those near glowing azure eyes. His bright smile was genuine and warm however, and this was something that all of them noticed right away, for it had been a very long time since his face had such a smile on it.

“Sa'sur... Dutkne... fervon!” He spoke quickly, his voice carrying a note of happiness in it that none of them had heard before either. “Top of the morning to you!” He declared.

Sa'sur let Denali move up beside her and speak knowing the brothers hadn't physically seen each other in months.

“You are a sight for sore eyes fervon!” Denali spoke with a large smile of his own.

“As are you.” Andro said reaching across space within the Etheric realm and touching Denali and Dutkne both. Though the Vanari Regents didn't know what it meant, everyone on the bridge certainly knew why Denali and Dutkne closed their eyes for the briefest of moments and then smiled as they reopened them.

“Andro... it is good to see you.” Sa'sur commented.

Andro nodded and turned his head slightly to look at her. “Sa'sur... you are looking very well?”

“I'm making due.” She stated with a smile.

“Atle suila forn?” Denali asked in their language. (What kept you?)

Andro smiled at the question. “Nes intus gilde el jar.” (They were waiting for us.) He replied. “Nes intus gilde bucco aer nerveta eokre. Vada igords. Evell gur echta rie un poset.” (They were waiting inside an asteroid belt. The fools. We will speak of it later.)

“Evell devri dobar forn?” Dutkne asked now. (They didn't detect you?)

Andro chuckled and shook his head. “Not hardly.” He spoke.

Ardan chose this time to intervene and he brazenly stepped up onto the center platform. “Prince Androcles... we... we were not aware you were arriving so soon! You did not inform us of this!” He stated in a tone of voice that suggested arrogance but did not cross the line.

Asay was the only one who noticed Sa'sur as she raised her hand subtly and quickly and stop the two burly Durcunusaan from moving forward.

“Regent Vu Lamurrion.” Andro said as he looked at the man. “I wasn't aware that I had to announce my arrival.”

Ardan shook his head. “Of... of course not. We... we could have prepared a proper welcome however.”

“I'm not real fond of proper welcomes Regent Vu Lamurrion... especially when I am not welcome.”

Andro said to him.

“That is not... that is not true!” Ardan spoke quickly. “There is just... there is much we need to discuss!”

Andro nodded his head. “Yes there is... however not at the moment. I have something I need to do first.”

Ardan looked at Denali and Dutkne. “I don't understand... you have only just arrived.” He finally said looking back to Androcles. “What could there be for you to do?”

Andro's azure blue eyes focused on him intently. “I have already received clearance to enter Mydala City Airspace Regent Vu Lamurrion...”

Galar chose this time to step up beside him. “We did not authorize this!” He almost shouted.

“You did not perhaps, whoever you are... however... Coren Re Mydala did.” Andro told him with little to no warmth in his voice. “He will be waiting for you at your main spaceport transport hub when you return to Austrova with Senator Ya'sur and our political delegation. Which will be as soon as this transmission is over I imagine.”

“You can not just come to our planet and go where you wish!” Cruor snapped from behind them now.

Andro nodded his head. “I do not know who you are... but your arrogance pours forth in your words and body language.” Andro spoke firmly. “I am aware of your laws regarding where and what my people are allowed to do on your planet... however I am only going to one place.”

“Where... where might this be?” Ardan asked quickly.

Andro smiled. “I think you know where that is Regent Vu Lamurrion. I am going to find my Inamarno Caliria Re Mydala. My Vanari wife and mate. I am going to find her and beg her forgiveness for ever letting her leave my world without knowing her place is with me. With us.”

“Prince Androcles this is highly irregular!” Ardan spoke. “We cannot simply let you roam our planet looking for one female. I must protest this action and...”

Andro reached up and touched his nose gently. “I know exactly where she is and what she is doing.” He spoke. “Her father has already cleared me for access to the University so that I may retrieve her... and that is what I intend to do.”

“There are more important things we need to discuss before you do this!” Ardan snapped now.

Andro shook his head. “Nothing is more important to me than having Caliria back within my arms. Within our arms. Where she belongs.” He told him. “You and your fellow Regents will be taken to the landing bay and brought to the surface with the Union Delegation. You will not however, be allowed to communicate with anyone on the surface, until after you reach your main space port. By then I will have retrieved our Inamarno and we can speak of other things.”

“I must protest this action!” Ardan barked.

“Protest all you like sir.” Androcles told him quickly. “I will not allow the OSG to move on Caliria before I arrive to retrieve her. Something that would do doubt take place if I allowed you access to ground communications. Why do you think I had Ya'sur invite you to our ship Ardan? I am not the fool you believe me to be sir... and the sooner you come to realize that... the better it will be. I look forward to speaking with you on the surface.”

“You can not do this! I will not allow this to take place!” Ardan shouted now clearly angry as he stepped closer to the holo transmission.

Andro met his gaze as his eyes grew wide and Asay gasped loudly as those azure orbs began to almost glow.

“I have already obliterated one supposed government in order to retrieve Caliria Re Mydala from the horror that the Vanari government allowed her to be swallowed up by old man!” Androcles snarled viciously at him, his fangs bursting forth and extending to their full length as the black rings surrounded the glowing azure pupils in his eyes. “Just as my father destroyed an Empire to retrieve my mother! Do not think for an instant that I will stop at that should anyone attempt to prevent me from retrieving her this time! My people do not think so little of our wives and mates Regent Vu Lamurrion! I suggest you keep that in mind as you return to the surface!”

Andro turned away from him and looked at Denali. “Full measures Deni.” He spoke. “I will see you both on the surface.”

Deni and Dutkne nodded. “Cuia fas vada carians fervon.” Deni spoke evenly. (Go with the gods brother)

“For forn.” Andro spoke before turning away from the transmission. All of them watched it fold and shrink back into the floor. (And you)

AUSTROVA MAIN SPACEPORT SECURITY CONTROL CENTER

“...By the prophets Regent Re Mydala!” The Senior Cadre Commando Officer on duty gasped as the transmission ended. They had monitored the entire exchange from this office above the sprawling spaceport. Androcles had contacted him directly on a secure channel only an hour ago. A channel that only five people alive knew and Coren had no doubts Caliria had given this direct conduit to him via Denali. It was something he would thank his daughter for in the near future, after Androcles picked her up from the University. Coren had done most of the talking, surprising even Androcles with his eagerness to show that his mind had indeed been opened.

It was nothing for Coren to authorize a Lycavorian ship to enter Mydala airspace. Any of the three hundred members of the Senior Board of Regents could do this, but since he was also considered one of the top five Regents on The SBR, Coren could do just about anything he wanted when it came to making autonomous decisions. The PREMONITION was granted full access to Mydala airspace and given the exact coordinates to the University. The other three ships that were arriving on the surface from SPARTA'S WRATH were directed to one of the largest hanger bays at the spaceport by the men in the Control Center.

Coren smiled down at the officer. "He can be very intimidating." Coren said sheepishly.

"Or he is just devoted to his wife sir." The man spoke.

"Well... there is that yes." Coren answered.

"Sir... Regent Re Mydala... are they all like this?" The man asked.

Coren nodded his head. "When it comes to their wives and mates Colonel... yes they are." He looked at the man. "Does that bother you?"

The Colonel met his eyes. "Bother me sir? No. It makes me want to go home to my two daughters and insure that they find Lycavorian men like this Prince so that I know they will always be safe and loved."

Coren smiled and reached out to squeeze his shoulder. "Do not give up hope Colonel." He said. "That day may well come... especially if I have anything to say about it."

The Colonel nodded. "I will insure that internal communications in the main hanger bay remains disabled until you signal me Regent Re Mydala." He offered. "It is the least I can do for you after allowing me to view this."

Coren nodded. "Thank you." He told him. "Take care of yourself Colonel. Should you need support for anything... you may come to me."

The man nodded in appreciation and Coren turned to life his wrist as he began to walk for the exit. "Jokros... advise Rinel and Nyosa to meet me in Hanger Bay four. Also... contact the University Security Teams and inform them they are not to interfere with Androcles and the others when they arrive under any circumstance. He will hurt them if they try to impede him. And make arrangements for their ship to land nearby in the courtyard. It is big enough."

"Understood." Jokros replied. "Was this the right play Coren?"

"Once Deni contacted me and told me Androcles was only hours away it was the only play we could make." Coren replied. "They would have moved against her and possibly even me and the others in the next several days and even if they had not succeeded... the results would have been horrific my friend."

"I understand." Jokros spoke softly.

"Jokros... if you would... contact Praetor Dyack as well." Coren spoke. "It seems now that he has learned the truth about his daughter from Lady Aleatia, he is not only willing to help us in any way... he is insisting."

Jokros chuckled softly once more. "Yes I now. He has already discretely informed me that their embassy is ready to receive any who we feel may be in danger."

Coren nodded as he walked. "Good... I was hoping he would offer that. Even the OSG is not stupid enough to attack the Rothryn Embassy. Not if they want them to remain out of everything that is currently going on."

"I will see you in the hanger Coren." Jokros said.

ULU PREMONITION ENTERING MYDALA CITY AIRSPACE

"...Should be telling you this is a very unwise move." Jomann spoke as he stood next to Andro near the rear ramp of the PREMONITION.

Andro stood beside where Elynth rested on the skid free deck plates and looked at his Captain and closest friend. He wore his full Mark V ArmorPly uniform with the long crimson colored cape streaming from behind his shoulders to lightly scuff the deck. His helmet rested on top of the saddle upon Elynth's back. The Dragon Armor was fully deployed over the Mark V ArmorPly, encasing him in glittering gold armor.

"That's what you should be telling me...yes." Andro answered. "But you aren't going to tell me that are you?"

"Jorbhe lae!" Jomann spat. "I would be doing the same thing."

And therein lies the trouble with today's youth. The deep voice of Jenso filled their minds as they turned to look at him as he settled to the deck behind Jomann. You have the propensity to never listen to reason learned through experience.

Andro and Jomann both smiled as Jomann reached out and stroked the scales of Jenso's muscular neck. And what would you recommend Jenso my friend? Jomann asked.

Jenso glanced at Elynth who was watching him. I recommend that Elynth takes a deeper five degree slant as you descend. It will get you on the ground much quicker.

They all laughed at this and Jenso butted Jomann in the shoulder gently with his snout. He had been severely wounded and lost his Bonded Brother at Alba Tau yes, but the gods of fate and chance had given to him another brother from that vile place they would never forget and Jenso had embraced this rebirth. They were not Bonded together within the Etheric realm, but in just four weeks they had become nearly as close as Bonded Ones could be. Though Jenso was nearing eight hundred years of age, Elder Syrilth knew he still had a wild streak in him, and that is why she suggested he become paired with Jomann. He jumped at this opportunity with no hesitation and now he was so very happy he had.

"You'll be on the ground four minutes after me." Andro spoke finally. "What could possibly happen in four minutes?"

They heard the decidedly female snort and turned as Eliani walked up with Brendi in tow and holding her hand tightly.

"Sibfla!" Eliani chortled. "In four minutes, knowing you like I do fervon, you could start and finish a small war." She told him.

Andro leaned over and nuzzled her cheek in a brotherly fashion and Eliani's fern green eyes closed in delight. She kissed his cheek quickly. "Just be careful." She told him.

"I am always careful." Andro said. "Sometimes careful does not like me."

"Ain't that the nubous truth!" Eliani blurted out.

Andro looked at Jomann. "I thought you were going to tame her sharp tongue." He said.

Jomann shook his head as Eliani's face beamed at him. "Oh no. I like her sharp tongue." He said.

Andro shook his head in mock disgust. "Pig." He muttered.

"Me? What about you?" Jomann declared.

Eliani stepped up to him and snuggled against his side. It was a silly image as the top of her head barely reached his chest, but it was priceless. "You are my pig though... Jomann my love." She told him in a seductive voice.

Jomann grinned proudly. "Thank you." He stated. He looked at Andro once more. "Normya and Tir'ut have broken off with Lisisa and will greet Denali and the others at the spaceport. The other two STRIKERS will deploy to the designated coordinates and remain Shrouded."

The design of the PREMONITION permitted only two working Lifter Tubes in the ship. There were ladders spaced all over the decks that many of them used more than the Lifts and it was from one of these ladders conduits that they saw Daio drop quickly holding to the sides of the ladder and then turn to come across the small flight area where they launched dragons and could launch small two or three person shuttles.

"Sadi has given control to Meka." Daio reported. "She and Ne'Veha will change and meet you on the surface with Carisia, Lu'ria and Sehri once we land."

Andro nodded his head. "Once you set down in this courtyard Daio... let Ridor and Cowen work the outside. You get up top with long eyes."

"You expect something Andro?" Daio asked.

Andro shook his head. "We are moving too fast for them to compensate, unless they are already in position. It never hurts to be ready though."

Daio nodded. "Fair enough."

“Have Meka keep the engines spooled but at their lowest setting so that...” Andro began but they all felt the tingle in their heads.

I have done this type of thing before you know. Meka’s voice, clear and confident, spoke in their minds. Andro smiled once more. Forgive me Meka. He said. I will never be outspoken again.

They all heard Meka snort in disgust now and Eliani could barely contain her laughter at this. Yeah... like I will believe that.

Daio couldn’t help but laugh now and he shook his head. “I did warn you once already that she is... Eliani what did you call her?”

“She’s a spitfire!” Eliani said. “She will keep you on your toes Daio, and tell my brother to stuff it when he tries to tell her how to do her job.”

Thank you Eliani. Meka spoke once more from the cockpit.

“Us women have to stick together with all the testosterone floating around on this ship.” Eliani said. “It makes the bullshit even thicker.”

Carians Eli! Sadi’s voice echoed happily within the open Etheric realm now. You have such a wonderful way with words.

We need to take more lessons KertaGai. Lu’ria’s voice chimed in.

Andro looked at his sister. “You are giving them lessons?” He asked.

“Of course.” Eliani answered him. “You don’t think I am going to leave your wives and mates without some very inventive ways to cuss you out when you piss them off do you?”

“Eli...” Andro began.

Three minutes Andro. Ramp coming down. Meka told him.

Andro nodded his head and reached for his helmet as Eliani grinned widely and pulled Brendi closer. “Deo and Nara are meeting the couriers father sent and then they will join us on the surface with Murano and Mari. We...” He was speaking as he held his helmet in his hands.

Jomann stepped closer and reached out to squeeze his arm. “Enough delaying Andro.” He said softly. “Stop being such a coward and go and get Caliria.”

Andro met his eyes with a smile and nodded. “Yes.” He spoke as the ramp cracked and the whistle of the swirling wind made almost all verbal conversation impossible. He lowered his helmet onto his head and climbed into the saddle upon Elynth’s back.

Ready Elynth my sister? He asked her as Elynth came to her four talon equipped feet and flexed her leg muscles.

I am always ready Andro my brother. Elynth answered digging her talons into the non-skid deck plating.

Andro looked out into the clear blue skies over Mydala city twenty-two thousand feet below and smiled. I am coming for you Inamarno. He whispered softly. I am coming for you. Andro commanded the Dragon armor leg braces into position and then smiled. Sister! Go!

MYDALA CITY ADVANCED STUDIES UNIVERSITY

“...He say from which direction he will be coming?” The Cadre Commando officer spoke as she and her Second Officer moved quickly down the main steps of the University, weaving in and out between the hundreds of students that were walking along the grounds and in and out of the University.

“No Senior Commander!” The Second Officer answered as he kept up easily. “Only that their ship would be landing in the Theater Courtyard and to insure it was clear.”

“Send two men to make this happen!” The University Cadre Commando Senior Officer barked out the order. “It will probably be mostly empty this time of the morning but just make sure!”

“The orders from Regent Re Mydala were not to impede his progress in any manner.” The Second Officer spoke. These two particular Cadre Commandos as well as the team of nine that they commanded had been assigned by the Senior Board of Regents to insure that Caliria Re Mydala did not go anywhere they deemed unnecessary. It was their way of watching her and protecting her at the same time. What most of them did not realize was that this group of Cadre Commandos were among Nirilo Re Mydala's closest friends and comrades. They would allow no harm to come to Caliria for any reason.

"Impede his... prophets... I have no intention of impeding anything he wants." The female Officer snapped. "I saw the transmission from Earth and what he did to that man without even touching him!"

The man stopped as his eyes lifted skyward. "Senior Commander... look!" He gasped and lifted his hand skyward to point.

They both stopped and gazed skyward to see the small silver like speck in the clear sky. They continued to watch as another speck, black in color separated from the silver object and began a dizzying plummet to the surface. The man snatched his small macro binos from his belt and trained them up and he swore under his breath.

"Prophets!" He declared loudly. "It's one of their beasts! One of their dragons! And there is someone on its back."

The Senior Commander lifted her own binos. "By all that is holy... the creature is diving straight down!"

"The ship is pulling away!" The map announced.

"Get on the COM!" She barked out not taking her eyes from the speeding black spot in the sky. "Inform the rest of our team and Paga!"

"I am here Senior Commander." The female voice spoke and the woman cut her eyes to see Paga's tall frame beside her. She had not heard the Lycavorian woman approach. In the weeks that they had been working together the Senior Commander had come to like this woman quite a bit. She was equally as intelligent as she was beautiful and she treated the Vanari Cadre Commandos around her as if they were close friends. This made all of the team guarding Caliria relaxed and inquisitive and in the hours Caliria spent in the classroom they had learned much from this woman about Lycavorians in general and their culture.

"Paga!" She gasped. "Is this... is this normal?"

Paga's keen wolf eyes could detect the dragon continuing its dive easily and she smiled. "Oh yes." She answered. "For Androcles Leonidas... this is very normal Entia."

"They will crash into the ground if they do not pull up!" Entia hissed.

Paga smiled and shook her head. "No... that is not something that will happen."

Many of the Vanari students were now beginning to take notice of the rapidly increasing size of the black object in the sky above and more and more began to stop what they were doing to look skyward.

The dive was exhilarating, as it always was when they did this type of thing. Andro gripped the edges of the saddle and was slouched low in the saddle. Elynth's wings were folded over the top of his legs, her body a streaking missile of obsidian colored power. The wind was hardly felt against their Mindvoice shield, Andro's eyes wide and searching the ground far beneath them.

Gods! Elynth gasped out openly. I love it when we fly like this!

Andro grinned under his helmet. As do I.

You have been so very happy these last days Andro my brother. Elynth told him. It is a joyous feeling.

Those who harmed our family have been dealt with sister. Andro answered. I can feel all of their happiness within me now. It fills me with joy and contentment to know that they are so happy.

Yes... I can feel it too. Elynth spoke. And it carries over to us both. Though the joke you tried to make was horribly bad.

Andro chuckled within their connection. I will try to get better... but you know humor has never been my strongpoint sister.

It is... you just need to let it come naturally. Elynth told him. You have a dry humor my brother.

There! Andro called out. Alter three degrees north sister. There is the University.

Elynth acted without thought as she rotated her body with the simplest of twitches from her wing tip. What altitude do we pull out? She asked nonchalantly.

That depends sister... Andro answered. How adventurous do you feel today?

Three hundred feet. I do not want to knock anyone over. Elynth answered with a great deal of humor in her voice.

Three hundred feet it is. Andro spoke. One pass over the entrance and then swing around and land in that small clearing by the entrance steps.

I see it. Elynth answered. Here we go!

Many students were now anchored in their spots as they watched the obsidian colored dragon plummet towards them at impossible speeds. Some were beginning to shout out to others as the dragon was making no effort to pull out of its dive. Almost all Vanari now knew that a new branch of Lycavorians had been discovered. It had been all over their news channels for weeks now, with the different channels fighting over who could get images of them when they were outside Coren Re Mydala's Estate. They also knew that the newest branch of the Lycavorian people traveled with and rode dragons. A mythical beast that most Vanari never believed could exist, at least until now. They had seen Denali Leonidas on his dragon and the young woman who had come to Austrova all those weeks ago. Her dragon had been even larger but they had not been seen for some time now.

Ardan and his fellow members of the Senior Board of Regents were far out of touch with the rest of their people and had been for many years now. The younger generations of Vanari men and women were far more open minded and accepting than their parents and grandparents. Most did not view the Rothryn or the Protectorate as a threat to them or their way of life. They wanted closer ties to the different species within the Beta Quadrant, especially the Protectorate and the Rothryn and the vast majority of the younger generations all carried great distaste and hate for the Eridiani in general and the OSG in particular. The Cadre Commandos that were now graduating from their training Corps were among the smartest and deadliest Vanari Cadre Commandos to ever walk their planet. And to a person they wanted nothing more than to rip into the OSG and make them pay for centuries of humiliation and pain.

Like Caliria Re Mydala, who many of the younger generation of Vanari secretly admired and looked up to, many of the younger Vanari were of a different mindset than their much older rulers and this would soon begin to make itself known.

Hundreds of students were gazing skyward now as Elynth fell faster still, many of them shouting out in delight at the elegant nature of her muscular body. They were certain she intended to smash into the ground before them, so when her powerful wings snapped out to the sides with an electrifying pop that thundered across the immediate landscape, most of them screamed out and fell to the ground as her body shifted direction instantly and turned with gut wrenching speed and precision until she was blasting over the tops of their heads at only three hundred feet heading right for the University's main building.

Entia, Paga and most of her detail could only gape in unashamed awe as Elynth skimmed the tree tops as she rocketed over the top of them, the backwash of her passing buffeting their bodies like the winds of a small but powerful storm.

"Prophets preserve me!" Entia gasped aloud as she stood there and watched Elynth roll into another impossibly tight turn until she was pointed back at them.

Paga came up beside her as they watched Elynth flare her massive wings to the side and slow almost to a stop a short distance away from them. She closed on their position, dropping to only a hundred feet from the ground, and that is when Andro released the Dragon Armor leg braces and tossed his right leg over the saddle and simply dropped into open air. Hundreds of voices screamed aloud and hundreds of pairs of eyes watched in awe and saw him drop the last hundred feet to the ground and land with precise control over his body, causing the stone tile beneath him to buckle and crack under the tremendous force his landing generated. Paga grabbed Entia's arm tightly.

"He has her scent Entia." Paga told her quickly. "Advise the team members that he will find her now."

"Paga... the University has over five thousand students. How..." Entia stopped her question when she saw Paga smile. "His sense of smell is that keen?"

Paga nodded. "Yes. When it comes to our wives and mates... any Lycavorians' sense of smell is at its finest."

Paga watched Androcles as he strode past her with only a nod of his head. His azure blue eyes were brighter than she had ever seen them under his helmet and he appeared so physically imposing in the full Dragon Armor that Vanari students from the University were scrambling to get out of his way as he made directly for the main entrance. Entia was speaking rapidly into her headset to insure the others inside the building knew Androcles was coming.

MYDALA UNIVERSITY ADVANCED INTERSTELLAR MEDICINES FOURTH FLOOR

“...Can tell me the medical procedure for creating a base formula to treat Orlantium Fever if it has already reached Stage Four?” The female Vanari Professor spoke to the hundred and twenty students in her lecture room as she walked up and down the eight rows of slightly elevated stairs between the three hundred plus seats. As her eyes looked around the lecture room she shook her head when she saw only one student with their arm raised.

“I understand now why only one of my students was able to answer this question on the last test I gave.” Salarn spoke as she held out the data pad in front of the student who she stopped next to. “Very poor work young man.” She stated as she turned.

The Vanari man couldn't meet her eyes as she turned back towards the front of the lecture room.

“Is there some particular reason why only Caliria Re Mydala got the answer to this question correct?” The Professor asked as she began to walk across the aisle to the next row.

Caliria turned around in her chair surprised and saw she was the only one with her hand up to answer the question, which she quickly dropped in embarrassment.

“All she has time to do is study and dream of her imaginary Lycavorian Prince Professor Salarn.” The stunning young Vanari female four rows behind Caliria muttered softly, but loud enough for the four other Vanari females sitting with her to hear. They all laughed mockingly as Caliria glared at them from her seat.

The Professor appeared beside her and shoved the data pad into her face. “Perhaps less time spent on other matters and more on your studies will allow you to pass this course Tulia Arn Domel.”

The young woman glance dup at her with anger in her eyes for singling her out. “Why do we have to learn the medical formula for a disease that has been extinct for over a millennia Professor?”

The Professor looked at Caliria. “Caliria Re Mydala... would you care to answer that question?”

Caliria looked at her. “While Orlantium Fever may have been eradicated from Vanari society... we are still carriers of the disease. Interaction with other species may result in incidental transference of the virus to other species. Without a base medical formula, there will be no way to create a workable serum that will cure Orlantium Fever in another species based on their genetic makeup.”

“Exactly.” The Professor spoke as she headed for the front of the lecture room.

“Be careful then Caliria Re Mydala... you might infect your imaginary Prince.” Another of the Vanari females spat at her sarcastically.

“The Lycavorian Regenerative Healing system would eradicate the virus within thirty seconds of exposure!” Caliria snapped back at the young woman. “We could not pass it on to them!”

“How do you know that for certain Caliria?” Salarn asked her now, genuinely very interested in her answer since no studies of the Lycavorian Regenerative and Immune system had been done. Salarn knew all about Caliria Re Mydala and what had happened to her, there were few who did not. The Board of Regents was trying very hard to play down what had taken place, but more and more people within the scientific community were beginning to ask how it was she had been cured of the OSG virus and how had she become so closely tied to these new Lycavorians that had been discovered.

Caliria looked at her. “The rate at which the Lycavorian Immune System reacts to foreign bodies is nearly a hundred times faster than any other known species. Their red and white blood cells work in concert to attack and destroy any foreign substance introduced into their systems, unlike other species where their different type blood cells work opposite of each other.”

“How do you know this child?” Salarn asked her. “No extended study of the Lycavorian internal organs or regenerative system has ever been done.”

The five Vanari females with white blond hair laughed from their seats. “Didn’t you know Professor Salarn? Caliria Re Mydala believes she is a Princess of the Lycavorian Union. The new government of Lycavorians that was recently discovered by her father and Regent Ardan in the Alpha Quadrant.”

“According to her... she is the wife of their Crown Prince. One of six wives that this man has. He is probably deformed in some way if he needs six wives to sate his needs.” Another of the woman said.

“Even a Lycavorian... as limited in their intelligence as they are... even they would not choose a dark haired Vanari female as their wife.” Another said. “Defective genes right from the start.”

Caliria came to her feet trying very hard to maintain her anger. “I do not have defective genes!” She snarled. “And you are as stupid as the fool who shares your bed Tulia Arn Domel.”

“At least he is not from a race of animals!” Tulia snapped right back.

“Does Vumel know that you share yourself with others on a nightly basis?” Caliria spoke to her sweetly seeing her eyes go wide. “That you will spill your Alkay for any man who simply smiles at you.”

Tulia’s eyes darkened. “You know nothing bitch!” She shouted.

“I know you will spread your legs for any man with the wealth and influence that you so covet!” Caliria growled at her.

“You say that to me when you cannot even attract a real man!” Tulia spat. “You must maintain this fantasy that you are the Princess of a man who already has five wives! I have seen his picture... we all have... and he is very handsome Caliria. Why would he chose you over someone like me?” Tulia smiled sadistically at her. “By the Prophets woman... I could steal him from you in front of your very eyes and there is nothing you could do about it! I hear all Lycavorians have big cocks and they are ruled by their sexual desires. They will fuck anything that flashes them.”

“You don’t know half of what you think you do Tulia!” Caliria spat.

“Then tell us Caliria Re Mydala... where is this so called Crown Prince?” Tulia asked. “Why are you here while he is off bedding countless other females with far better genes than you? He has probably found another dark haired Vanari female willing to spread her legs for him on command.”

The Professor did not intervene in the exchange between them, mainly because she was still stunned that Caliria knew so much about Lycavorians. How could she know these things when no studies were ever commissioned by the Board of Regents? She looked up and saw that many of her students begin to rise from their seats and dash to the back of the lecture hall which overlooked the courtyard only a short distance away. “What do you think you are doing?” She demanded.

“Professor Salarn... something is going on outside!” One of the students exclaimed. “Look!”

This drew the attention of nearly everyone in the room as they began to move for the back wall and the balcony overlooking the courtyard. Caliria remained in her seat and turned back to the front doing her best to hold in her emotions. Tulia couldn’t be right. Androcles would not do that. Would he? He would not just dismiss her for what she had done and find another to take her place would he? Caliria felt small tears begin to form in the corners of her eyes as these thoughts raced through her mind and she gripped the edges of her desk.

“By the Prophets look! One of their dragons!” She heard one of the students shout. She turned her head slowly as another student called out.

“The Board of Regents has forbid them free access to the city!” The male voice said. “How could that thing be here?”

“It is different in color than the others we have seen!” Another student echoed. “And much larger!”

Caliria turned fully to the back of the room as she rose to her feet and was about to step towards the rear of the lecture hall when she gasped loudly as the staggeringly powerful Etheric essence filled her mind in a rush and a wonderfully dominant male aura swarmed her new but limited female wolf senses and made her whimper in want and desire.

Inamarno... do you truly believe I would dishonor you in such a way? Androcles’ voice filled her mind with such clarity it made her stumble against the chair and drop the data pad she was holding as she gripped the chair to steady herself. It clanged off the floor and rolled down the steps making noise the entire way causing others to turn back and look at her. Those who did turn saw something none of them had ever expected.

“Prophets! Look!” Someone gasped and then everyone began to turn and their eyes grew wide in disbelief. “It’s him! He’s here!”

Androcles moved into the lecture hall slowly, taking measured steps so as not to alarm anyone. His azure eyes were focused completely on Caliria and where she stood, ignoring all others in the large room.

Caliria turned slowly and her soft green eyes grew wider still and filled with tears when she saw him. Androcles! She gasped within the Etheric connection.

Andro was barely holding his emotions inside for not only did his own love and desire for Caliria flow through him, but he could also feel Sadi, Carisia, Ne'Veha, Lu'ria and Sehri as they projected their own feelings into him. He could feel Sadi and Carisia more than the others for they were still fine tuning their Etheric abilities, but it was nearly overpowering with the five of them filling his being.

Caliria was frozen in her spot gripping the back of the chair tightly as he approached her. He didn't pause or hesitate and moved up to stand directly in front of her. He heard the gasps from the others as, with a simple thought, he retracted the Dragon Armor that incased his body. He could hear the murmurs from the other students as the armor retracted into it's hidden slots and then he was standing there in his normal Mark V ArmorPly. He reached up and removed his helmet and let it drop to the floor. His eyes were aglow now, bright orbs of azure blue as he gazed at her. The elegant line of her eyebrows, the vibrant color of her cornflower blue skin and the delicate, soft green eyes that stared at him.

Androcles... I... my love I am so sorry! Caliria cried within the connection. I... I was so... I was so lost and confused and...

Caliria gasped loudly now as he stepped even closer and took her face in his powerful hands. She had seen those hands bring death and destruction on a scale that would stagger the minds of most who saw it, yet they took her face now in the gentlest of caresses and his thumbs lifted to stroke her cheeks.

I have shamed you Caliria Leonidas. Androcles spoke to her. All that has happened is my fault Inamarno. I should have never let you leave my embrace. Our embrace. I did not follow what my instincts screamed for me to do and...

Caliria didn't hear anything within her mind after his first sentence. Everything Nyosa had told her was correct. She had thought Nyosa was only trying to make her feel better in her own way, but as the words spilled from Andro's lips, Caliria realized it was all so very true.

...love you Caliria Leonidas! His words came back into focus now. We love you with all that we are! I... we...

Androcles couldn't find the right words he wanted to say. He had practiced within his mind for days on what he wanted to say to her. She bore no guilt or shame for what had taken place and he wanted her to know that it was his fault. Andro knew that had his father been anywhere nearby, he would have come to Earth and soundly beaten his oldest son for doing something so utterly stupid. He shook his head finally and looked at her.

“Ah... screw it.” Andro hissed finally just before lowering his head and covering her soft violet lips with his own.

Caliria's body came alive and her hands came up in shock and absolute delight when his lips came down on hers. They shook terribly for several seconds, unsure of what to do and then she reached up and took his beautiful face in her hands and surrendered to his kiss. She heard him growl softly deep within his chest and he squatted down slightly, his powerful arms curling around her hips just under her ass and he lifted her into the air and crushed her to him. Caliria nearly screamed as she threw her arms around his broad shoulders and returned the sizzling kiss with every ounce of ardor she had held in these last weeks and months. She could feel him slowly whirling her around in his arms as he moved down the four steps to the lecture room floor and his broad back ended up was facing the other students in the room. Caliria gasped loudly as he tore his lips from hers and furiously nuzzled her cheeks and neck causing Caliria to lose all pretense of control. Her soft green eyes changed and her new wolf fangs extended until they were fully visible to everyone in the room. She did not hear the loud exclamations of shock from the students who saw this for her head and heart were pounding with unrequited passion and desire. As his lips returned to claim hers, Caliria tightened her hold on his shoulders, kissing him even harder and finally growling with unrestrained need into his lips as their fangs banged together and impeded their sizzling kiss, though not so much as to cause him to break their hold.

Caliria could feel his love and passion and devotion swarming all around her, wrapping her within a blanket of his wolf aura that enchanted her senses and filled her with such complete clarity and peace. Arduri had told her she that would only be able to feel his wolf aura on a small scale until he had truly bitten her and the virus filled her body as Denali had done for her. Caliria's body shivered in unreserved lust, passion and absolute love because of his aura, and if it was like this now, she wanted to feel the full force of his aura upon her as soon as she could.

Andro finally drew back from their kiss and held her tightly just as she was, looking into her radiant face with those glowing azure eyes. "I am so sorry Inamarno." He spoke softly. "You should never have had to endure this and... I will love you until you can no longer stand it Inamarno. We will love you until..."

Caliria shook her head quickly, not bothering to let her fangs retract or her eyes change back. She kissed him once, stopping his words as she gripped his face with her hands. "You have... you have returned to me." She spoke with a brilliant smile. "That is all... that is all I care about Androcles my love. I have missed you so very much! All of you!"

"What is the meaning of this!?" Salarn's voice bellowed now causing both of them to turn their heads and see the Vanari Professor march fearlessly down the aisle until she was on the floor in front of them.

Androcles quickly returned Caliria to her feet, but did not remove his hands from her waist as he looked at the woman. "Forgive me Lady Salarn." He told her respectfully as he bowed his head to her slightly, which surprised Salarn quite a bit since she had heard all Lycavorians were uneducated brutes.

Salarn looked at him with wide eyes. "You... you know my name? How... how is that possible?"

Andro turned and looked at Caliria who was staring up at him with unabashed love. "I know everything about you Lady Salarn. I know everything about anyone who has contact with my wife and mate. Inamarno truly loves your class." He spoke as he looked back to her.

"You... you are not allowed here." Salarn stammered finally in shock at this revelation. "Lycavorians are not... your people are not allowed to go out into the city. How..."

"I received permission from Regent Re Mydala to come here." Andro told her. "I have only just arrived on your planet Lady Salarn, but I needed to collect that which is very dear to me." He looked at Caliria with shining eyes. "I needed to collect my Vanari wife and mate. One of the pieces of my heart and soul."

Salarn looked at Caliria with wide eyes. "Caliria is this...?"

Caliria nodded her head quickly. "Yes." She said. "Yes."

"This is... this is highly irregular!" Salarn spoke.

Andro looked at her. "I will wait until you are finished if need be." He said. "But I am not leaving without her."

"We... we were almost done for the day." Salarn spoke again. "I will... I will need to make sure that this..."

"You may check with whomever you like..." Andro told her. "But I am taking Caliria with me to..."

Caliria gripped his arms tightly. "Andro wait." She gasped quickly. "I must... I must do something first."

Andro looked at her. "What?"

He watched confused as Caliria stepped around him, once more making no effort to retract her fangs or allow her eyes to change back. She straightened her clothes with a simple brush of her hands and then she stepped right up to where Tulia stood in open mouth shock.

"You always were an arrogant, stupid bitch Tulia!" Caliria snapped. "Tonight I will be within the arms of my husband and mate. My Prince! I will feel his enormous manhood within me making me scream out in delight while I taste my fellow wives and Princesses over and over. And you... you Tulia will still be a cheap whore!"

Caliria Leonidas drew back her hand and using all of her training as a Cadre Commando and all of her new found wolf strength, she punched Tulia directly in her shocked face. The young woman's legs flew out from under her and she went over backwards into the row of seats until she landed three rows back. Caliria didn't pause and she turned back to see Andro's wide eyes staring at her. She wiped away the last of her tears and leaped into his arms once more knowing he would catch her easily.

"What was...?" He stuttered in shock.

Caliria smiled brilliantly at him as he whirled her around once more and tossed her legs up into his arms to carry her. "I was defending what is mine." She said simply.

He had taken it upon himself to be the one to watch Caliria. He wanted the opportunity to have her submit to him again. Franklin Adams was the epitome of perfection as far as the OSG was concerned. He was the very first of a new breed of genetically enhanced OSG soldier. Fast, powerful and very smart. His schooling was perfect, his training without equal. He did not understand how this could have happened though. His plan was perfect in every respect. He left no detail out, yet the moment he saw the flash of obsidian scales overhead he knew it was too late. He was running for the entrance of the University but was far too slow as he skidded to a halt when he saw Androcles enter and disappear into the building. The Vanari security detail on Caliria Re Mydala was on full alert now, as was the Lycavorian bitch who had been her shadow for so long. He had planned on giving that bitch to several of his more sadistic men and see how she tolerated that. It would have been an interesting experiment. Now all he could do was watch as within five minutes, the strange looking ship had landed in the nearby courtyard and then Androcles reappeared with Caliria in his arms. Five more of the enormous dragons exited the sleek looking ship, as did five other women and three men. Two of the men immediately took up very obvious defensive positions near the front and back of the sleek looking ship.

Two of the five dragons were slightly smaller in size than the other three, but they were still massive monsters that his men would stand no chance against. Franklin hung back from the row of stairs that led up into the main foyer of the University as he watched Androcles Leonidas put Caliria on the ground. They shared a kiss right there on the steps before she turned and sprinted for where the other women were moving towards her. He watched as the second man shook his head with a smile when Caliria flew past him and he came up beside Androcles who had settled to the steps to watch.

Caliria didn't hesitate for a split second as she reached for Sadi first and then they were laughing and crying as they bunched together hugging and kissing each other with intense and very real emotion. These were not the actions of friends Franklin Adams knew, their kisses too passionate, and their embraces far too intimate. Even the young daughter of the Rothryn Praetor took part as she and Caliria stood facing each other for a single long moment, staring at each other, and then they were sharing an embrace and kiss of long time lovers. It was disgusting as far as he was concerned, but there was nothing he could do right now as the five huge dragons quickly encircled the six women in a protective ring while they reunited with each other right there in the courtyard.

Franklin Adams was by no means a coward, and seeing the Lycavorian Crown Prince sitting with just the second man on the steps was an inviting target. He was also not a fool as his eyes scanned the area around the University grounds and surrounding area. There was no way that additional security was not already in place around the campus he knew now. There is no way they would have allowed him to come here if that was not the case. As he continued to watch intently, his patience and keen eyes paid off. He saw the shimmer of movement and then a dark skinned female, one of their Drow elves it seemed, appeared from the shadows of one of the large trees that Androcles sat near. He did not appear surprised and only looked up as she moved closer to him, parking her ass on the steps to his left while the large Lycavorian was to his right.

Perhaps this situation called for boldness Franklin thought quickly. He lifted his arm casually to brush it across his face.

"I'm going in. All teams hold position. Do not execute. Not now."

Andro tore his eyes from where his wives and mates were still hugging each other and speaking happily and he watched as the Drow elf female settled to the steps beside him.

"Illia... you are looking well." Andro said as she parked her firm ass on the step beside him.

The female Drow looked at Andro and smiled at him, her amber eyes bright and alert. "The shadows here agree with me." She told him.

Illia Ta'lab of the Drow House Ta'lab had worked under Androcles Leonidas and his command almost exclusively since finishing her training nearly a decade ago. She and her fourteen person Drow scout team were now assigned permanently to his Combined Fleet Forces Group and all of them had volunteered to come to the Beta Quadrant with him. They had been following and protecting Caliria Leonidas from the shadows since the day she had returned to the world of her birth. While Paga was the public portion of her security detail, the person that everyone saw in the open, Illia and her team were the covert side. The Vanari government had relented in allowing Paga to accompany Caliria, but only because they were watching her as well.

“Report.” Andro spoke the single word as his eyes went back to where Caliria and Lu'ria were embracing and laughing as Majeir stuck her large head into their small circle.

“There are three teams in position around the campus.” Illia spoke. “They are well armed and well trained but they think they are invisible. We spotted them the first day they blundered into position. I'd say that they were getting ready to try and take her soon Andro.”

It was well known within the Union military that no Drow referred to any member of the Royal family by their title when they were alone or in private settings. Martin had forbid it many years ago considering the ties and trust he had in the Drow as a whole, as well as the fact that he considered the Drow Queen Aihola his adopted sister just as he did Tarifa. Aihola had direct links to the King and Queens no matter where they were and everyone knew that she acted with his approval regardless of the situation. This loyalty had carried over to Androcles and his children as well... and since Andro had taken Lu'ria as his wife and mate that trust and loyalty had become almost fanatical.

Andro smiled at that. “Bet my little surprise visit put a major kink in that plan.” He said.

Jomann chuckled. “No bet here.”

“And this Franklin character?” Andro asked.

“He hasn't approached her directly since the day at her apartment.” Illia answered. “I like to think Inamarno and Paga put the fear of the gods in him, but he has been here at least part of the time, every day since then. He has been trying to remain hidden, though not doing a very good job of it if you ask me.”

Jomann laughed softly. He had met with Illia and her team before they left Earth and to say he had been impressed was an understatement. He knew of the relationship the Drow had to the Royal family, there were few who did not, but there was definitely no questioning their skill in any way. “Do I detect a note of disgust in your voice Illia?” He asked.

The Drow grinned. “Just a professional observation.” She said. “He is watching us right now however.”

“I'm sure he is.” Andro commented. “What else?”

“They have one safe house nearby... another that we are certain is twenty blocks from here in an area they call The Boardwalk. It is close to the river that runs through the city and provides at least a dozen easy access points to enter and exit the city without detection.”

“No one has seen your people?” Andro asked.

Illia looked at him with an expression of disgust. “Please Andro... I said they were well trained... not equal to us. Your mother trained us.”

Andro grinned at her answer and bumped her shoulder with his. “And she would be very proud of you.”

“I have one two person team shadowing Coren... another set up in an office across the street from his building. Five plus me with Paga are always on Inamarno.” Illia continued with a smile of pride. “We have established a safe house three clicks from Coren's residence... ground and water access. The Durcunusaan Team that Denali added has since secured it even more and are monitoring all portions of the city from there. We have eyes and ears almost everywhere since Coren allowed us to tap into the city's internal VIDCOM network.”

“Who has the Safe House?” Andro asked.

“Arusk and Kintia Dinato.” Illia answered.

Andro met her eyes. “Marci cut them loose?” He asked.

Illia nodded. “They arrived secretly just over a month ago. According to her... we needed a level headed Control Action Team.”

Andro smiled and nodded his head. “I'll have to send her a thank you for that.” He said.

Illia nodded her head in agreement. “That you will... when they got to the safe house things really came together.”

“What about the Eridiani?” Andro asked.

“The city is infested with them.” Illia answered him calmly even though she saw Franklin approaching from behind them out of the corner of her eyes. “It is some sort of legitimate Joint Cooperation Deal that they have with the Eridiani. If I had to guess I'd say at least a third of them are OSG assets in one way or another.”

“Then it’s as you thought Andro.” Jomann said. “Part of their agreement with the traitors on their Board of Regents is to allow unlimited access across the planet.”

Androcles nodded. “It would appear so.” He said. “What better way to mark their targets and keep track of things.”

“It appears he is making a bold move Andro. A hundred meters and closing.” Illia spoke. “He is going to confront you it seems.”

Andro nodded his head. “They’ll hit us within two days once word gets out I am here, probably at Coren’s estate. They won’t attempt anything at the Rothryn embassy.” He spoke as he came to his feet. “Any Lycavorians?”

Illia shook her head. “Not that we have seen openly. It is easy enough to pick them out of the Rothryn who frequent the city with the scanner Eliani developed. If they are here, then they are probably remaining out of sight in their many safe houses.”

“That sounds right considering the restrictions on our people here.” Jomann commented. “They’ll spearhead the attack though.”

“So they can place blame on the former Protectorate and us.” Andro said in agreement. “Yes they will.” He looked at Illia. “Collapse your people back to Coren’s estate and prepare the defenses there Illia. And send two additional teams to cover Coren. Him they may attempt to hit at his office in order to make a statement to others. I will not allow any harm to come to Inamarno’s father. Not now.”

Illia nodded. “I will leave you to deal with the fool behind you.” She said before moving quickly away from him and back into the shadows of the large trees where she simply vanished from sight.

Andro took a deep breath and smiled as he rose to his feet casually. “Franklin Adams... I presume.” He spoke as he turned quickly causing Franklin to come up short in surprise.

Franklin recovered quickly though. “Crown Prince Androcles Leonidas.” He stated quite calmly. He was equal in height to Andro though far less broad and nowhere near as thickly muscled. “You have arrived sooner than everyone expected it seems.”

Andro smiled once more. “I like to be unpredictable.” He replied.

“Your arrival here will change nothing!” Franklin spat.

Androcles nodded his head. “Perhaps not.” He said. “It will not matter for you and the OSG however.”

The Cadre Commando officer Entia had remained nearby and when she saw the Eridiani move up behind the Lycavorian Prince she motioned several of her team closer. It would not do for the Lycavorian Crown Prince to be killed or injured in an attack here on the University grounds. She and her team members moved within hearing range.

“You do not know as much as you think you do Prince Androcles.” Franklin spoke.

“I think you’d be surprised at what I know.” Andro told him.

“You and your kind do not frighten us.” Franklin snarled softly. “There is nothing you can do to us. We are untouchable here on Austrova.”

“That may be so.” Androcles said calmly. “It will not change your fate as I said.”

“We are better than you.” Franklin spat. “Better. Stronger. Faster. We are what the fool humans on Earth could have been! We are among you even now, at the highest levels of your government and military!”

Andro smiled and shook his head slowly. “If you are referring to my Uncle Ben and Aunt Tina... just to name a few of the hundred and sixty three Eridiani that live on Earth and call the Union home...” Andro saw Franklin’s eyes grow slightly wider. “Then your supposed influence is for shit. They know what you and your friends are... and they would rip your heart from your chest before giving you the time of day. You have not kept up on current events have you Franklin?”

“Whatever information you got from that bitch Brendi Faith is no longer useful to you.” Franklin said.

Andro held out his hand and blocked Jomann from snatching the smaller man up and smashing him to the granite slab beneath them. “I’d be very careful how you speak of Brendi Franklin Adams. She has embraced her new life as my sister’s lover and has become wife to both her and Jomann here. And take my word for it... Jomann is very protective of his beloved wives and mates.”

Franklin’s eyes cut to Jomann and the cold gaze of death in his eyes while Andro saw the flicker of surprise in them. No doubt about it, this man was well trained. It would not matter in the end though.

“Let me give you a bit of information that you and your OSG minions and bosses do not know Franklin Adams.” Andro spoke as he moved closer to him. “Regardless of what happens between my people and the Vanari... the OSG will cease to exist as an entity when I am done with you.” Andro’s eyes became a little brighter and Franklin couldn’t help but take a step back at this.

“We have the cure for the vile poison you use on Vanari females and we will release this to the Vanari public in three days. Then you and the Vanari who are protecting you and your putrid organization will have nothing.” This incredible information caused the eyes of Entia and her Commandos to explode open in shock as they had heard every word Androcles had just spoken.

“When that takes place... I intend to give my Vanari wife the wedding gift of a lifetime. I will give her your head for violating her in the manner you did. Then I will give to her father and the Vanari people the heads of every OSG Regional Commander on a platter for what you and others have made her and so many other Vanari suffer for too long. I will come for you and your kind Franklin Adams... from every direction... from the darkness and from the light. I will come from the stars and from the earth. I will insure that every one of your vile kind is buried in the deepest, darkest hole I can find for them. When I am done... there will be nothing left of the Orionis Syndicate Group or its minions.” Andro allowed his fangs to extend to their full length and the black ring encircled his azure eyes as he stared at Franklin.

“And the Vanari people will finally be free of your wretched existence and your control of them as a people. And you Franklin Adams...” Andro stepped even closer to him, his azure eyes beginning to glow intensely. “You I will save until the very end... and for what you did to my Caliria I will crush you like the insignificant fucking cockroach you truly are. Then you will know the true meaning of pain.”

Androcles! What... what are you doing? Caliria’s sweet, musical voice echoed in his head and he turned to see her watching him. Sadi and the others were gathered around her and watching as well, but he could feel her concern for him and what was being said even though she could not hear him.

Androcles turned back to Franklin. “Pray to whatever gods you and your people believe in Franklin Adams. Pray that they will offer you mercy... for I will offer you nothing but death. When I am finished... Caliria will be free of your taint upon her soul... and the Vanari people will be free of your sick perversions forever.” Andro’s eyes returned to normal and he smiled at him.

“Tell your masters I am coming for them Franklin Adams. Tell them death is coming for them. And I will spare no one. I used up my forgiveness quota for this decade already.” Andro glared at him for a few more seconds before moving.

Androcles spun around without another word and began walking away from him. Jomann stared at Franklin for several more seconds with cruel eyes before he too turned and followed Androcles, quickly catching up to him.

[Andro... Brendi is not...] Jomann began to talk.

[He doesn’t know that.] Andro answered him. [It will give them pause in making her a target Jomann. Besides... you and my sister need to stop tap dancing and act on your feelings for her.]

[We do not want to push her Andro.] Jomann spoke.

[Push her into doing something her scent says she wants more than anything?] Andro told him. He turned and looked at him as they walked towards the PREMONITION. [You two are so blinded by your feelings for her that you can’t see Brendi is just too scared to approach either of you. She doesn’t know how. Use your instincts Jomann... you and my sister need to use your instincts and then you will know what to do.]

Andro slapped him in the shoulder with a smile. “C’mon... let’s get out of here. More fun awaits Jomann my friend. You know how much I love politics!”

“You hate politics!” Jomann said.

“Yes... that is why it will be so much fun!”

AUSTROVA MAIN SPACEPORT SECURITY AND BRIEFING ROOM

“You had no right!” Galar hissed at Coren. “You had no authority to do this!”

Coren glared at him as the echo of the PREMONITION landing in the background began to recede. “I am still a member of the SBR!” He snapped unafraid of the older man in front of him. “I had every right to do what I did Galar! And I had every authority to act!”

“I do not care that she is your daughter!” Galar continued. “She is under investigation by the Board of Regent Court for crimes against the Vanari people! As are your other daughters, your former wife and your son! And you should be too, as far as I am concerned, for how close you have become with them since your return!”

“And how exactly would you have proposed to stop him Galar?” Coren snarled. “You know what he can do! And you know how they view their wives! He would have gotten her no matter what we did, and our people would have paid the price!”

“They would have eventually secured him.” Galar snapped.

“At what cost in lives and injuries Galar?” Asay spoke now coming forward. “How many of our brave Cadre Commandos would have fallen to appease your vanity?”

“You facilitated this!” Galar spoke ignoring Asay. “The only reason they are not in holding cells right now is because they are your children Coren Re Mydala! That could very well change you know!”

Coren stepped closer to the much older Galar. “Do not threaten me Galar Arn Del!” He growled savagely and stepped even closer to him. “Do not threaten Caliria ever again, or any of my children for that matter!”

Ardan chose that time to intervene and he stepped between the two men. “This does not solve anything!” He barked at them. He looked at Coren. “I assume he retrieved her from the University already?”

Coren looked at him. “How did you know that is where she was?” He asked feigning surprise. “You have been watching her Ardan?”

“Only to insure that she does not try and recreate her failed experiments Coren.” Ardan stated.

“She was successful Ardan!” Coren hissed at him now. “You saw this for yourself in the Alpha Quadrant and yet you keep the facts of this bogged down in procedure! Why?”

“I don’t know what I saw.” Ardan answered as he turned away. “And the formula given to us by their people does not work Coren! You know this for yourself! Our own scientists say this very thing. It only makes them appear more culpable in what has occurred.”

“It doesn’t work because, as Senator Ya'sur told you, we were not given all the parts to the formula!” Coren said. “You know this!”

“Why didn’t they give us the entire formula?” Ardan stated turning back to look at him.

“We have not done much in the last millennia or so to earn their trust Ardan.” Coren told him. “Why should they trust us?”

“They are animals Coren!” Galar spoke more subdued now. “Why can’t you see this?”

“What I see... is a species of men and women who can change their outward appearance. That does not change who they are inside.” Coren answered.

Galar turned and looked at Ardan. “You see... they have corrupted him as well!”

“So when we receive the final pieces of the formula and our scientists go over it and discover that it does indeed work as they say... are we going to continue to say it does not work Ardan?” Coren asked.

“This is neither the time nor the place to discuss such matters!” Ardan spoke.

“When will it be time Ardan? You have been burying this information in procedure for weeks and months now, knowing that it is not true!” Coren said. “How soon do we tell our people the truth and then act on this knowledge? We can break the hold of the OSG on our people forever!”

Ardan glared at him. “Do not push me Coren!” He snarled softly. “We are friends yes... but do not overstep your place among us, or among the Senior Board of Regents Coren.”

“What do you mean my place among you Ardan?” Coren snarled right back at the man who he had always trusted with everything. A man he discovered was betraying and enslaving his own people for profit. “My place is insuring that our people are taken care of! My place is insuring that we do not facilitate or take part in something that does them harm! That is my place! That is your place as well Ardan. That is what we are meant to do!”

“Regents... they are here!” The Vanari Security officer spoke from the doorway.

Ardan met Coren’s eyes. “We will discuss this later.” He spoke before turning away from him and motioning for Galar and Asay to move closer to him as they turned to the doorway.

Coren looked at them and saw Asay watching him. He watched her shake her head with an imperceptible motion and his eyes grew slightly wider at this. He had thought Asay was on Ardan's side for many years. He had thought she was sleeping with the man. Apparently that did not appear to be the case.

MAIN HANGER BAY AUSTROVA SPACEPORT

No one interfered as the two brothers embraced with enough physical power to crack the ribs of normal men and women. Lisisa and Arduri stood with Sadi and the others, their arms around each other in happiness. Their reunion had been everything Arduri had dreamed of, once more tasting Lisisa's lips on hers and feeling her body pressed tightly to hers. Arduri and Deni had planned their first night back together very carefully and she had every intention of seeing that it happened. Now though, it was time for Androcles and Denali to reunite. Eliani and Zarah aside, all of their siblings knew Andro was closer to his pureblood brothers and sister. He never treated them any differently and he loved them all with equal devotion, but Denali, Deion and Nara were special to him because they were purebloods and because they all knew that they now carried the Praetorian gene. And this was something that bound them even tighter together than the blood that flowed in their veins.

Andro finally pushed Deni away and looked at him. His face was alive with that crooked grin he always had and Denali squeezed his brother's shoulders. "You don't know how good it is to see you fervon." Deni stated with happiness. "I have grown so tired of dealing with these igords by myself."

Andro smiled and nodded his head. "And you have done a superior job." He said.

Deni laughed. "Others would debate that with you." He said.

Andro shook his head. "No... I don't think so." He told him. "Once we are at Coren's estate we can talk more freely."

"You know that they will hit us soon now that you are here." Deni spoke softly.

Andro nodded. "I'm counting on it."

Deni nodded. "Good... I am getting tired of dancing around with these fools and I want to stomp some heads."

"Good... so do I." Andro told him. He turned his head and looked at Dutkne who stood beside Denali.

Praetorian Warrior and Praetorian Mage, brought together by fate and destiny, across the span of time and space. Andro released Deni and stepped up to him and Dutkne didn't hesitate as they shared a similar rib cracking embrace. Each of them placed a hand behind the other's head almost without thought and everyone nearby saw the tiny fraction of white blue light flare around those hands as they held their foreheads together. It was just as Murano had said it would be and it happened seamlessly as they shared with each other every relevant item of information that each of them had obtained in the months apart, as well as everything that had taken place. It was over just as quickly as it had begun and then they were staring at each other.

Dutkne gripped Andro's head tightly and Androcles could feel the thick emotion within Dutkne. "It was a fitting end for what he did to her fervon. I just wish I was there to..." He whispered and shook his head. "Thank... thank you."

All of the Leonidas children knew by now that Dutkne was hopelessly in love with their sister Zarah and Lucia both. It was not something he could keep from her family no matter how much he tried, and considering the acceptance and trust he had, Dutkne knew that all of them approved of that. They knew he would not push or pressure Zarah in any way and all of them knew that he would wait however long it took for her to realize it.

Andro squeezed his head as well and nodded. "Never give up on her Dutkne my brother." He said. "It will take time... but she will come to know what is inside you. Lucia as well. They will feel it... and embrace it."

"You... you sound so sure." Dutkne said.

Andro smiled. "I have seen it." He answered confidently. "And that is all I will say."

Dutkne nodded his head assertively. "Then I will endure until that day comes." He said.

Andro leaned forward and kissed his cheek. He turned to look at Deni once more. "They are here I take it?"

Deni nodded his head. "They are in the briefing room over there with Coren. And according to Ya'sur and Ulana, Ardan and his cronies are not in the least bit happy at your stunt. Ardan had steam coming out of his ears and Galar's face was so red it looked as if it would explode."

"Fuck them!" Andro spoke bluntly. "They will be even less happy when they hear what I have to tell them."

"No doubt." Dutkne said with a grin.

"Ulana?" Andro asked.

Deni nodded his head. "Surprisingly Andro... she has spent a lot of time with Arduri since getting here two days ago. Duri saw something in her right away and took it upon herself to take action. She is different fervon. She isn't the same Ulana we knew growing up."

Andro nodded. "I had hoped that would be the case by getting her away from her idiot friends and the inbred arrogance of their kind. Duan Gai's father Denali, will he be at the estate?"

Deni nodded quickly. "As soon as Lady Aleatia filled him in he contacted me. I had to tell him to shut up with the apologizing. They'll be there."

Androcles nodded once more and squeezed Dutkne's shoulders. "Then let's get this over with. Deni... I want you to take everyone to Coren's Estate. Dutkne, Eli, Jomann, Brendi and Caliria will remain with me."

"Is it wise exposing Brendi fervon?" Deni asked.

Andro grinned. "It was her idea." He said. "She has been hanging around our sister for too long it seems."

Deni rolled his eyes. "Then that answers that. She will be just as bird brained and utterly corrupted as she is."

"I heard that igord!" Eliani's voice echoed from behind them and they all laughed as she jumped onto her brother's back and tossed her arms around his shoulders from behind. Eliani bit down gently on Denali's ear like she used to do when she was small. "And I get it from my two brothers with the least amount of common sense!"

Denali laughed and spun her around and Eliani laughed happily as Sadi came up to Andro with Caliria holding her hand tightly. Her face was brilliant in its beauty and happiness and she made no effort to hide it in the least. Caliria now wore the same uniform as all of them, the standard Mark V ArmorPly with crimson cape that reached to the floor and the crimson sash that wrapped around her waist. Attached to the belt she wore was a Nehtes, which was more for show than anything else, and a KM14 secured in a holster on her thigh.

"I am ready." Caliria spoke.

Andro nodded and leaned over to kiss both of them. He looked into Sadi's jungle green eyes intently. "Make sure everything is ready KertaGai." He said softly.

Sadi nodded her head in acknowledgement. Since becoming Andro's wife, mate, and his Anome, Sadi Leonidas had been elevated to a position of influence and power that matched his mothers in every way. If Androcles was unavailable... everyone knew that Sadi was the one to go to for answers. "I will my love." She replied. "Now go and do what you need to do quickly and then bring Inamarno back to us. We have a full night ahead of us you know." Sadi finished that statement with a seductive overtone to her voice.

"We most certainly do." Caliria agreed happily with bright soft green eyes. "And I intend to make every single moment count for the rest of my life."

"So do we." Andro spoke as he pulled her against him tightly. "So do we."

Sadi leaned up and kissed him once more; drawing her tongue slowly across his lips as she knew he so loved her to do and squeezed his hand. "Be quick Andro our love. Don't play with these fools if they react as you believe they will."

Andro nodded. "I won't." He told her. "Don't worry."

"...Must apologize Prince Androcles." Ardan spoke as he motioned around the security briefing room they were in. "I had hoped to receive you in more comfortable surroundings."

"More comfortable surroundings would not have changed the reaction to my arrival I'm guessing Regent Ardan." Andro told him.

“I see that you were able to retrieve Caliria Re Mydala without incident.” Ardan spoke seeing Caliria pressed against Andro’s side intimately.

“I did tell you that all I wanted was my wife and mate Regent Ardan.” Andro said. “Once I had her... I returned here. Just as I said I would.”

“Caliria Re Mydala is not authorized to take part in such meetings as these!” Galar spat now. “These are matters of government and state. She does not belong here!”

“Caliria Re Mydala is now, and has been for the last nearly half a year, Caliria Leonidas Galar Arn Del. She is one of six Crown Princess of the United Lycavorian Union.” Dutkne spoke from just to Caliria’s left. “This position gives her every right to be here since it concerns the Union that she is now a citizen of and will have a hand in ruling one day in the future. Of course, if you still wish to claim you don’t recognize her Union citizenship or her marriage to Androcles, then here is the man to speak with that about.” Dutkne motioned to Andro with a large grin.

“We do not...” Galar began to speak but Ardan gripped his arm.

“I’m sure these are items that we can discuss in more private surroundings.” He spoke calmly.

“Let me be very clear on this. When it comes to Caliria... there will be no discussion on her status or anything else for that matter. Where that discussion be held publicly or privately.” Andro stated fully. “Eli?”

Eliani stepped forward and held out the pad to Ardan. “This is the last part of the formula for countering the OSG virus.” She stated. “It will allow your scientists to calculate and mass produce the serum.”

“Your serum does not work!” Cruor snapped softly.

“It doesn’t work because you did not have the last four equations that were used to make the serum viable.” Eliani told him sternly. “Now you have them.”

“We are supposed to believe this when you stand beside an OSG agent!” Cruor spoke more forcefully now. “You blatantly bring her here, knowing what she is? We would be within our rights to arrest her instantly!”

Eliani’s smile was anything but friendly. “You could certainly try.” She stated with utter confidence as she pulled the taller Brendi closer to her and pressed her body against hers. “You would not succeed.” She finished her statement feeling Jomann come up behind both of them and press against their backs.

“I no longer associate myself with the OSG!” Brendi stated as she moved even closer to Eliani, secretly loving the feel of their bodies against her own and relishing in the sensations it caused. “I haven’t associated with them in almost a year.”

“And we are just expected to believe this?” Galar barked.

“What you believe or do not believe will not change the facts as they are.” Andro spoke evenly. “Brendi Faith has worked and lived with us for nearly a year now and we trust her. She helped us to crack the OSG slavery ring within the Alpha Quadrant and bring it to an end. Her family has found new lives and purpose on Earth and with any luck Brendi will become part of my family soon enough.” Brendi looked at Andro with wide eyes as she heard what he said. “I do not care if you trust her or not. We do. Those are the facts.”

“Your involvement with her only lends proof to the information that your people were working with the OSG this entire time!” Eyon spoke now. “It is the same Intelligence that you yourselves gave to us if you remember!”

“I have already openly stated to you that the OSG was involved with certain citizens of the Lycavorian Union.” Ya’sur moved up next to Andro now. “None of them were part of our government however, and this was certainly not sanctioned by our government in any way. To suggest otherwise is an insult. The information we have given to you is clear and accurate, and those scum are now history. The Lycavorian Union does not tolerate slavery in any shape or form, period. This is something I have already told you.”

“So you say!” Galar spoke.

Andro shook his head. “Brendi is not the issue here.” He said. “You have the remaining parts of the formula to make the serum. It does work as Regent Ardan can attest too. Whether he chooses to or not is irrelevant to me. He saw it work on the young women we rescued from the slavers, one of whom is on the ship above you in orbit right now. I believe you have already talked to her.”

“She refuses to return to Austrova to be examined by our physicians!” Galar spoke.

Andro nodded his head. "So I understand." He said. "That is her choice however, not mine. She is the only one who offered to return here as proof that the serum does work and only because Caliria contacted her and asked her to come."

"You contacted her?" Galar gasped with wide eyes. "You were not allowed to have the access or the means to communicate off world!"

"I didn't use Vanari communications!" Caliria snapped at him. Andro's love flowed through her without shame, as did the love of her fellow Princesses. She could feel them within the Etheric realm as well as flowing through her because of the wolf blood that now flowed within her veins. Caliria also knew this would only grow stronger the moment Andro bit her and passed the virus into her body. This unquestioned love removed any and all remaining blocks to Caliria's inner psyche. It also allowed her own confidence and self worth to come pouring out, which made Coren beam in pride from behind the others where he stood. "I used Lycavorian Union COM channels on one of our ships! Yssyla is my friend and she agreed to come here in order to prove the serum does work. But I swore to her I would not allow anyone to turn her into an object for study and experimentation! Or risk her conveniently being taken by the OSG again!"

"You would not allow?" Galar almost shouted as he glared at her. "You have no..."

"And we are to graciously believe you are not influencing her in some manner?" Cruor spat now, coming up beside Galar and cutting off his words with the question. "Keeping her from being examined by our own doctors and scientists?"

"You mean keeping her from being experimented on don't you?" Eliani snarled at him now.

"Eli!" Andro snapped softly at his sister. Everyone saw her look at him and then they saw the miniscule shake of his head. Their eyes locked for a long moment and everyone who could use Mindvoice knew they were talking within a very private and heavily shielded connection.

Andro turned back to Ardan and the others after a moment. "Forgive my sister... she is a doctor and she despises what your females have had to endure."

"Your parents should have also taught her better manners when speaking to her betters!" Galar snapped.

Andro stepped forward quickly, even before Eliani could open her mouth to retort. He stopped directly in front of Galar who gazed at him with wide eyes and he took a step back when Andro's eyes changed and his fangs extended.

"Do not make the mistake of believing you are my sister's better Galar Arn Del." Andro spoke firmly, his dual fangs looking exceptionally deadly to almost everyone in the room who was not Lycavorian. "None of us in this room are her better! She is far smarter than you and I will ever be! You would do well not to insult her again in my presence. Nor our parents... for you are certainly not better than them. If my mother Anja was here... you would be picking pieces of your teeth from the floor for speaking to her in such a way."

"This gets us nowhere!" Ardan spoke. "Please Androcles... there are far more important items for us to discuss now that you are here."

Andro glared at Galar for a long moment. "Do not make the mistake of insulting my sister or anyone within my family again Regent Arn Del. You would not like the reaction you receive from me."

"Are... are you threatening me?" Galar gasped in anger.

"No sir... I'm merely stating a fact." Andro told him. He stepped back from Galar even as Eliani squeezed Brendi's hand and looked at her brother with adoration in her eyes. "You are right... there are more important things for us to discuss Regent Ardan. Eliani has given you the data you need to complete the formula. I will give you three days to do whatever tests you feel you need to do."

Ardan nodded his head. "Three days is certainly acceptable to us." He replied quickly, too quickly to suit Coren or Androcles in any way. "We can then meet in more formal and official surroundings to review what we have discovered and the political ramifications of your merger with the Protectorate."

Andro looked at him oddly. "There are no ramifications of our merger Regent Ardan. The former Protectorate is made up of Lycavorians and others who have finally come home to join their brethren. The wait has been too long as it is as far as I am concerned and the joy that spreads in the Union upon discovering that they exist is not something I can put into words." He stated.

"Your delegation has put forth changes to the many trade agreements and the Right of Passage that we had with the Protectorate." Ardan spoke. "These agreements have been in place for millennia."

Andro nodded his head. "And they are wholly unfair towards my people." He said. "That is going to stop."

"And you threaten us again!" Galar growled.

"I get the sense you do not know the true definition of the word threat Regent Arn Del." Andro told him. "I have made no threat. Once more I have stated fact. Whatever agreements are in place are made to benefit the Vanari people. I have read the dialogue in the trade agreements, as well as the Right of Passage. All of them are unfairly balanced in favor of the Vanari. All of them are catered to insure the Vanari keep my people at a distance."

"It is... it is the way of things." Ardan said.

"Not anymore." Andro told him. "As Crown Prince I act with the authority of my father and all six of my mothers since they are not here."

Eliani snorted softly. "Thankfully for you they aren't here." She muttered under her breath.

Andro looked at her and smiled before turning back to Ardan. "The status quo is no longer to the benefit of my people, if it ever was to begin with. If the Vanari government is not willing or able to make the changes that we feel are fair... then I will do what my brother told you I would do. I will end all trade and commerce between the Vanari government and the Union. I will declare all agreements null and void and I will turn our trading ships around. I will ask that all Vanari who are currently within Union space present themselves for transport back to Vanari space if that is their wish. Those who believe as we do, that the agreements and such are unfair; they will be welcome to remain. All travel currently allowed will be stopped and Vanari ships will no longer be allowed to enter Union space for any reason. You wish to keep us at arm's length, fine, we will do just that. All communications between our governments will cease and the only contact we will have will be between whatever ambassadors we may choose to appoint. I have already asked Regent Coren Re Mydala to act in this manner for us and he has accepted. No one else will be satisfactory to us."

"This is... this is outrageous!" Ardan did shout now.

"Outrageous to you perhaps... not to us I'm afraid." Andro said evenly. "In the Union we believe in fair and equal trade. That is something conspicuously absent from current agreements that are in place right now. That will change one way or the other."

"You can't seriously be thinking about this?" Ardan stammered.

"Thinking about it... no. I am done thinking about it... and I will not share with you what my father and mothers said when I told them." Andro told him. "Am I ready to implement it...? That will be up to the Vanari Board of Regents I suppose."

Ardan moved closer and opened his mouth to speak but Andro held up his hand. "Forgive me Regent Ardan. These are matters that we can discuss when you have been able to share this information with the entire Board of Regents. We will meet again in three days just as you have suggested. Coren Re Mydala has graciously arranged for us to stay on his estate while we are here. If this is not acceptable to the Vanari government in any way, then we will remain on our ship. However... it has been several months since I have had the scent of my Vanari mate in my nose and I would like to spend the next few hours doing nothing but ravaging her in our bed and showing her how much that I have missed her." Andro looked down into Caliria's sea green eyes. "And how much I love her. How much we love her."

Caliria's cheeks turned a bright shade of violet against her cornflower blue skin as she blushed, but she wrapped her arms tighter around his waist and smiled up at him with devotion in those eyes.

"We can not allow you to..." Galar began.

"That is quite acceptable to us." Ardan cut Galar off.

Galar looked at him with wide eyes. "You are going to allow them to stay outside the embassy grounds?" He gasped.

Ardan nodded his head. "Coren's estate is quite sufficient. I will insure we have an open liaison from his office to his estate."

Andro nodded and bowed his head slightly to Ardan. "Then I look forward to speaking with you again about the future we could have together."

Ardan forced a smile. "As do I."

Coren stepped forward now. "Androcles... I have transport waiting outside. If everyone will follow me?"

With that... the first and shortest meeting of the Union and Vanari governments came to an end.

ARC ROYAL

NINETEEN HOURS FROM VENTORI DESERTED LYCAVORIAN COLONY

“...Still cannot fathom what he had hoped to accomplish by making this virus.” Radra spoke from her chair.

The Medical Center for the ARC ROYAL was dark at this time of night, the examining beds empty. The on duty elven medical officer sat at her station on the far side of the center, reading through some sort of manual, while the opposite end of the Med Center was occupied physically by Anja, Radra, Duewa and Anuk. The four women sat around the medium sized table, data pads were scattered across the surface haphazardly, and there were several water bottles and coffee mugs near each of them. Ceale was joining them as well, her image from the office on Manne within the holo transmission disc on the floor.

This was Anja Leonidas’s element. She was sitting with others who had equally keen minds and knowledge that matched her own. This small group, only Eurin and Sivana were missing at the moment had grown by two with the addition of Radra and Ceale, but this group Anja had no doubts could solve any problem if they put their collective minds together. Anja did not consider herself smarter than anyone and she went out of her way to insure that credit was given to those who deserved it. Anja just did not take into account that her mind worked in ways other minds did not because of Martin’s blood flowing within her. It was the main reason why she alone had discovered treatments and cures for diseases that had been a way of life for some species in the Union their entire existence. Everyone could think outside the box as she did, and they were very creative in many ways, but Anja Leonidas was the only one who could make her mind look beyond what was proven and real and reach past what many considered impossible in order to seek an answer to what she sought.

“Understanding what he was trying to do would help us to determine what he was going to use it for. We know it was some sort of weapon... but we don’t know the purpose.” Ceale spoke from within the transmission. “Knowing the purpose... now that would allow us the ability to react accordingly... but it still would not give us the capability to effectively treat this thing.”

“Ceale is right.” Duewa spoke. “The treatment Anja and I developed will only work on select individuals. They would need to be men or women that we have in our custody who we can directly influence medically as we did with Jacina and Recia.”

“I understand... the base formula that you and Anja created will not work across the board because you were able to locally adjust for the added mutative nature of the virus within Jacina and Recia.” Ceale said. “This we cannot do on a larger scale, there are just too many variables and unknown to try and account for.”

Anja nodded her head. “And the delivery option that Radra and I decided on for Jacina and Recia is not exactly conducive with introducing a wholesale cure. We can’t directly inject over seven million Svorag in their necks for obvious reasons.”

“Becoming one of these things does not appeal to me in the least.” Anuk spoke now. “And most especially not in the way that they introduce this virus into the bodies of those they attack.”

“No argument here.” Anja said with a small grin.

“We need the virus’s original base formula.” Radra said leaning back in the chair. “It is the only way that we can then establish treatment vectors and make an antigen.”

“So then we are not trying to find a cure?” Ceale asked.

Duewa shook her head. “As much as it pains me to say... I don’t think we can. We must focus on developing an antigen as Radra has said. It is the only way to protect our people as well as anyone else from future attacks and to limit the Svorag from turning any more victims.”

Anja looked at Ceale in the transmission. “Ceale... you are more knowledgeable in the treatment phase than Duewa and I. What do you think?”

Ceale was silent for a moment before finally shaking her head. “There is too much risk.” She said finally. “I have to agree with Duewa and Radra. The only thing that we can do now is to develop an Antigen that will stop the spread of this virus. Once that is complete and we are confident that they can turn no more people, then we can begin to work on a cure for those that are already infected.”

“I think as doctors and researchers we all know that there are just too many of them to account for right now.” Anja spoke. “We could turn loose the men we love and let them have at it... but they just would not be able to eliminate them all. Invariably some will survive and that is what we need to plan for.”

“So what were they doing on Onterom Anja?” Anuk asked.

“I think Lorendo’s people were doing exactly what we are going to try and do.” Anja answered. “They were using the research and experiments of legitimate scientists like Jacina and Recia as cover. That fat little rat fuck Lorendo lost control of them and he was using the facilities on Onterom to try and find a way to get that control back. Jacina and Recia and the others were only a means for him to hide his real work. And when he lost control of that... he left them to die and sealed the facility.”

“I might be able to discover who he was using on Onterom.” Radra offered. “If Avi or Avatar 27 can do a wide pattern search we may be able to discover who Lorendo had working on that project. He would have insured his people were pulled off first.”

Anja nodded her head. “That would mean accessing the main computer database on your homeworld. I’ll talk to Martin about that. He and Delnash may not be willing to risk Avi or 27 being discovered.”

Radra looked at her. “I assume that is why he has not acted already.”

“In a manner of speaking.” Anja said.

“You do not trust me?” Radra asked surprised.

Anja shook her head quickly and reached across the table to take her hand. “No!” She spoke forcefully. “No... that is not it Radra. Never think that... please. You could not be further from the truth if you think that.”

“Then what?” Radra asked more sedately. The relief she felt was very genuine for she truly enjoyed Anja’s presence and her wonderful mind.

Anja sat back in her own chair. “It’s hard to explain really.” She said thoughtfully. “The best way I could describe it is like this. Marty is... Martin is very methodical. His mind is like a trap. He thinks four, five sometimes six moves from what he is doing now. He is teaching Chief Elder Delnash to do this without even really trying.”

“I don’t follow.” Radra said leaning forward.

“He is giving Lorendo enough rope to hang himself.” Anuk spoke now seeing Radra turn to look at her.

Anja nodded her head in agreement with Anuk’s statement. “Lorendo is responsible for the deaths of millions of Pralors Radra.” She watched Radra turn back to her. “When he altered the Star Charts to hide the Ion storm from those City Ships, he sentenced millions to death. That alone dictates a very painful death in Martin’s eyes for no matter what anyone thinks, Martin considers himself at least part Pralor because of Sumar.”

Radra nodded her head. “As well he should.” She stated confidently. “He is the direct descendant of the most popular Chief Elder in our history and the very first Praetorian. There is no question with that.”

“He is also Lycavorian and a Spartan.” Anja said. “Lorendo gave the orders to attack us knowing full well we were using non-lethal ammunition. Lorendo ordered Sashan to use those grenades because he was trying to protect his secrets. He knew what Martin was... and once he realized this... he knew it was only a matter of time before his work on Onterom was brought into the light. He could not allow that.” Anja lifted her mug of Aricia’s coffee and took a sip before continuing. “When he killed those Spartans... when he almost killed Fedor... when he struck me... let’s just say Lorendo would have died a very long and painful death on Onterom had Murano and Helen not stepped in and stopped him.”

“That is not something that I find hard to believe.” Radra said.

“Well... when he discovered what Lorendo was really doing on Onterom... what he was trying to protect... Martin entered what Aricia, Bella and I affectionately call his Methodical Beast Mode.” Anja said. “He does it to us when we are all in phase together and it makes all of us scream to the moon in...” Anja looked at her and stopped. Her cheeks turned a slight shade of red even under her dark tan. “Ah... I think I will just let that hang out there for now.” She said with a smile.

“Anse!” Anuk swore. “I was hoping for details!”

They all laughed at this and relaxed even more.

“Anyway... as Anuk said... Martin is letting Lorendo do what he wants for right now, hence her figure of speech.” Anja said. “What Lorendo doesn’t know or want to admit is that Martin is far more intelligent than Lorendo believes and he is setting him up. I’m sure Delnash has some idea of what he is doing... Martin wouldn’t leave him out of the loop so to speak. He truly likes Delnash and he trusts him, which is no small feat when it comes to our mate. When all is said and done however, Lorendo is going to die a very brutal death for what he has done. Lorendo is living on borrowed time right now because Martin needs him alive in order for us to discover what he is doing and what he has done in the past so that we can try and correct it. That means we need to find out everything we can about what he was doing and eventually put together an antigen for the Svorag virus so that we never have to worry about it again.”

Radra was silent for a moment as she gazed at Anja. “He does seem rather severe at times.” She finally said.

Anja laughed softly and leaned back with a nod. “That’s true... but if you think Marty is severe... wait until you meet our son Androcles.” She said. “When those two get together and start plotting, then you know the shit is about to hit the fan. And it won’t be pretty.”

“I have heard you say that before...” Radra said. “What does this mean... when the shit hits the fan?”

Radra didn’t know why all of them burst out laughing. Even Ceale, who was the more conservative of the women, could not hold her laughter in. Anja flashed her an image of what the phrase meant through Mindvoice and Radra’s eyes grew wide in shock... before she too understood the connotation of the phrase and began to laugh just as hard as they were.

As Radra laughed with them, one thought swept through her mind and it made her so very happy. When the full influence of these men and women met the strict and controlled society of Pralor people, they would be given an instant jolt of life anew. A chance to become reborn and once more be the people they once were. There were many who would resist initially she knew, but the quick wit and intelligence of Martin and his beautiful Queens would win them over in the end.

Perhaps there was a future for all of them.

CHAPTER FORTY

SPARTA'S WRATH

Mari had heard Deion’s excited cry within Mindvoice from where he and Nara were meeting the couriers from their father in the landing bay. She did not hesitate or question his call for her and she burst from his quarters at a dead run. Mari knew that the changes in her body were beginning, just as they had with Kesyla, yet she did not fear them in the least. She and Deion had been making love every moment they could spare over the last few days; for it seemed that they could not get enough of each other. While Mari knew what was happening within her, she wanted to be sure.

She went to see Eliani.

Eliani Leonidas confirmed what Mari already knew was happening with just a simple glance and sniff of her keen wolf nose. Then Eliani happily told her what Mari so much wanted to hear. The virus in Deion’s blood, so much more potent because of the exceptional pureness of that blood, was already beginning to alter her DNA. And it was changing her far faster than Mari had thought possible, simply because of the number of times they had been together. Mari did not hold back from telling Eliani anything for she was the caretaker of all the Leonidas siblings among them and despite her brazen nature, she was one of the most thoughtful and intelligent woman she had ever met. She was so much like her mother Anja and Mari had come to adore Anja’s quick wit and intelligence. Eliani had locked the medical bay down for the next two hours and during the brief but very thorough exam, Mari had seen the more serious side of Eliani Leonidas and they had grown much closer. Eliani had taken the time to explain to her in detail that she was now considered a member of their family and unless, for some crazy reason she and Deion parted ways before he finally claimed her, Mari would be treated and thought of as such by everyone. No Lycavorian would dare approach her now with Deion’s scent in her blood as deeply as it was and the Durcunusaan would soon begin to see her in a different light as well.

Mari did not shy from this knowledge; Deion had already told her as much as they laid together, and instead she embraced it fully. Just as Kesyla had. When Mari left the medical bay after those two hours she finally had what she had always secretly desired for so long. A man who loved her without question.

Mari's sense of smell had expanded almost to the point of driving her crazy in frustration, until Deion had seen this within her and taken care of that. They had laid naked in bed just last night and he had been so patient and loving as he held her in his arms and talked her through the process of categorizing the many different scents and filing them away in her head in a very unique system. It had taken several hours and they had not made love, but just being beside him, her naked flesh against his own, this made Mari crave him that much more. Small, dual wolf fangs, unique to the Leonidas family alone she discovered, had begun to form now and she had spent hours simply running her fingers over them. Her blue green eyes could now change as well, a thick black ring surrounding the blue green of her pupil whenever she chose to allow the slight transformation to occur. Eliani had told her that when Deion finally did bite her, claim her for his own, the initial moment when the virus raced through her bloodstream was extremely painful, but it would be over very quickly because of the changes already occurring within her.

Mari happily admitted she could not get enough of Deion Leonidas, her petite and very firm body fit within his powerful embrace as if it was always meant too. She loved to curl up beside him in bed, her large breasts pushing against his side while her shorter legs entwined with his own much longer ones. He was the most physically gifted man she had ever seen, and certainly the largest who she had ever slept with, but that fact had never caused her fear. He was so caring and gentle, and even when they made love with untamed passion and increased physical intensity; it was far beyond Mari's wildest dreams. Deion could not seem to get enough of her, always exploring and caressing her body in ways that drove her crazy with ardor. When you added to this blissful fact that he was perhaps the smartest man she had ever been involved with, it made her mind and senses scream out even louder. He was not afraid of her intelligence in the least; indeed this fact seemed to only make him desire her even more. Mari knew he felt the same way for her because their minds were now linked in a way that could not be changed and she felt and saw everything he did just as he did with her. Their Etheric connection was so seamless and clear that at first it had frightened both of them. They had adjusted quickly however, and the many strands of Etheric power within their minds both mingled and mixed and finally became one. Mari had always known she was different, for she took to the lessons her mother taught her like they were second nature.

Now she understood why.

Her shameless love and desire for Deion Leonidas had answered that question within her almost from the very first night they had been together. This was how she knew that her mother Tobia felt for her father even to this day, for she could sense it within her mother still. And she could sense it within her father even more. Deion had agreed with her completely and given what they both knew it was the only thing that made any sense in the least.

Mari was a Praetorian.

Mari was like Deion and his brothers and her parents. She may not have been able to do what they could right now, that would take training and study Mari knew, but at least to her and Deion there was no question. This fact only made them love each other even more.

It felt so very strange to know what Deion thought, what he wanted for the future, and even stranger for him to know and see what she desired. Mari did not doubt what she felt for him in the least. It was absolute and without question. She sensed the very same thing from him and Mari knew that they would be together for eternity. This knowledge did not frighten Mari in any way, and young though they may have been, their love would only grow and become so much stronger as the years passed and that is what Mari had wished for her entire life.

Many men and women scattered as she sprinted as fast as she could from the Lift and into the massive hanger bay. What she saw made her skid to a stop quickly and a sharp tinge of pain shot through her heart along with a large chunk of intense jealousy. The stunningly beautiful blond haired female half elf was in Deion's arms and he was crushing her to him in a bear hug. The female elf's back was to Mari and she could not see her face but Mari could see that she was gripping his shoulders tightly and hugging him just as closely. Nara was in the embrace of the tall, blond haired elf male who also had his back to her, while another couple stood to the background and smiled. The two looked so much alike and somehow familiar. She calmed her racing heart and slowed to a more sedate walk as she crossed the distance between them, trying desperately to keep her anger in check. Deion must have smelled her because he turned quickly and reached for her while still holding the waist of the younger woman. It was then that Mari saw who it was and she felt so utterly foolish in that instant.

Deion took her hand and without thought he pulled her close to him, wrapping his arm around her waist and lower back because he was so much taller than her. Mari felt his love for her pouring forth in his aura as it swarmed around and through her and she wrapped her arms around his waist. Eliani and Nara had taught her how to begin to detect the aura he could project to her right away and both of them told her it would only increase in effect when Deion finally made her his completely. Mari relaxed even more as she folded her body possessively against him for she could feel his happiness and she suddenly felt even more foolish for thinking what she had been thinking.

“Mari... this is... this is Eirene!” He spoke excitedly. “This is my sister Eirene!” Mari felt his powerful arm squeeze her even tighter and his next words made Mari smile brilliantly and mentally kick herself for being so utterly stupid. “Sister... this is... this is my Mari!” Deion spoke confidently.

Eirene, her own face animated, happy and full of tears, nodded. “I know who she is silly!” She stammered. Mari didn’t hesitate when Eirene opened her arms and they embraced tightly.

[Don’t worry Mari... I would have thought the same thing. He is so very handsome.] Eirene’s voice echoed in her mind in the shielded Etheric connection and Mari hugged her even tighter and laughed softly.

Mari drew back and smiled as she shook her head. “It is... it is so very nice to see you again Eirene.” She said as they squeezed each other’s hands tightly.

“So it was Mari!” The male voice boomed and Mari did not have time to react before Fedor’s arms scooped her up and spun her around hugging her tightly before setting her back down beside Deion. “I thought for sure father was pulling our leg!”

Mari laughed again as Eirene slapped her twin’s shoulder. “Fedor don’t be a mida!” She hissed.

Mari felt the warmth and love of family permeating all of them and she wrapped her arms around Deion’s waist again without shame or hesitation. She should have expected that Deion’s father would have sensed her Etheric resonance within Deion’s but it did not matter. “Yes... it was me Fedor.” She spoke.

“Wait!” Deion gasped. “Father and... father and our mothers know?”

Eirene laughed at his expression. “Did you honestly think you could hide that from our parents? Especially our mothers? They felt your happiness from across the galaxy you igord!” She told him. She looked at Mari smiling. “Did he make you scream to the moon Mari?”

Mari pressed her head to Deion’s chest with a brilliant smile. “That and so much more.” She replied happily and without an ounce of embarrassment.

Fedor turned and held out his hand now as the young woman came up behind him and he pulled her close. “This is Iama’Juturi Leonidas.” He spoke with a similar pride spilling over in his voice. “My wife and mate.”

Nara stepped forward and embraced Iama without hesitation. “We have heard so much about you!” She gushed.

Iama had long ago grown accustomed to the Leonidas family displays of affection and she hugged Nara tightly. “And we have heard more about you.” Iama said with a smile.

Nara laughed. “Probably about him.” She said playfully motioning with her head. “He’s the bad twin.”

“As if anyone with half a brain will believe that!” Deion spoke.

“You have half a brain fervon.” Nara spoke with a grin.

Deion shook his head as he looked at the hulking Kavalian male now attached to Eirene’s side. “And you must be Miseo.” He spoke.

“The last time I checked... yes.” Miseo answered happily. Miseo watched as Nara turned and looked at him as well. Deion moved forward and grasped his hand and forearm tightly.

“Sister... he is...” Deion started.

“...Very large!” Nara finished his sentence.

It was Mari who burst out laughing now and she stepped forward. “Stop you two!” She declared looking at Eirene and taking her hand. “They do that all of the time. It drives Eliani crazy!”

Deion stretched out on his tip toes several times and kept looking between Miseo and Eirene. “Wow! Very large!” He stated.

Mari looked at him and slapped his abdomen. “Deo... stop!” She hissed at him.

Deion grinned and tightened his hand on Miseo’s arm. “Welcome fervon.” He said with warmth and affection.

Miseo nodded his head as his tail encircled Eirene’s waist and his arm went around her lower back. “I look forward to meeting all of Eirene’s brothers and sisters.” He said.

“So do I!” Iama echoed happily as Fedor pulled her close.

“I don’t know...” Deion spoke as he stepped back.

“... We aren’t exactly normal.” Nara finished the sentence.

“And we are?” Fedor exclaimed.

Deion and Nara both laughed. “So true.” She agreed with him.

“Deion... Nara...” Fedor turned and moved back several steps to motion Kalis and Serale forward.

“This is...”

Fedor stopped in surprise when Deion moved past him and stood in front of Kalis. They were of equal size, with Kalis being slightly more bulky, but to his credit Kalis did not shy away. He needn’t have been concerned for Deion pulled him into a rib cracking embrace and took his head in his hands before kissing his cheek.

“We owe you more than you will ever know Kalis Leonidas.” Deion spoke with a soft and serious voice.

Kalis shook his head as he held Deion’s arms. “I was protecting my family cousin.” He told him proudly. “The only family that I have or will ever need now. There is nothing owed within family.”

Deion smiled as Nara came up to him and pressed her frame close to his, hugging him tightly under Deion’s embrace. She reached up and kissed his cheek tenderly. “No... there is not.” Nara said lifting her hand and caressing his cheek. “But your actions... they will never be forgotten Kalis.”

Kalis looked at both of them and smiled. “It is... it is so very good to meet you both.” He drew back and pulled Serale closer to him. “This is Serale Leonidas.” He spoke proudly. “My wife... my mate... my light.”

“Eliani will be so very happy to meet you!” Nara said as they embraced tightly. “With the exception of Inamarno and Cvea... all she does is complain to Andro about being understaffed and not able to do her job.”

“She complains about that all of the time.” Deion said.

“Where... where is Andro?” Eirene asked first with obvious excitement in her voice.

Deion looked at her as he moved back beside Mari and pulled her tighter. “He’s waiting for us on the surface.” He answered. “Mari’s father is... Murano is... sibfla...” He swore under his breath.

Mari placed her hand on his chest. “It is alright Deo my love.” She said without hesitation or embarrassment. “He does not hear as we do and he can not break our Etheric shields.” She turned and looked at Fedor and Eirene who had puzzled expressions on their faces. “It is a long story which I am sure you will discover and eventually see to its end. I am just too much of a coward at the moment.”

Eirene smiled at her brightly. “We knew already Mari.” She said touching her nose.

Mari rolled her eyes. “Yes... I should have known.” She said.

Deion lifted his hand. “Enough of that!” He said. “Murano, Jeru and Mayla are waiting with the ship. Andro wanted us to bring the couriers father was sending to the surface right away. Where are Kdan and Dnom?”

Eirene looked around. “They sprinted off the ship before we could stop them.” She replied. “We are always chasing those two.”

“Andro probably already knows it was you that father sent and just did not tell us.” Nara spoke. “He can be a closed mouth ronnus when he wants to be.”

“Our gear is already stowed... we can move to the other hanger bay and leave as soon as you are ready.” Deion said.

“This ship is... it’s huge!” Fedor spoke as he clutched Iama and they began to follow Deion and Nara.

Nara laughed. “Wait until you see the rest of it.” She exclaimed. “As Eli says... it will rock your socks off!”

“Blows your socks off sister.” Deion corrected her. “Blows your socks off.”

Nara waved her hand dismissively. “Whatever... let’s find Kdan and Dnom and get to the surface.”

AUSTROVA RE MYDALA ESTATE

Dyack watched from the balcony above the courtyard as the Leonidas family had a small reunion of sorts.

Dyack had felt like an utter fool the moment he saw Sehri jump from the dragon's back and into his arms. It was the first time he had seen Androcles Leonidas in person and nothing had prepared him for what he saw in his youngest daughter's face. Sehri had been riding in front of him when his massive dragon landed on the grass in the lower courtyard and Dyack had watched with Aleatia beside him as Androcles gracefully climbed down, immediately turning for his daughter. Sehri had practically leaped into his arm from the saddle and they had shared a passionate kiss right there as he spun her around slowly in his arms. Her face was so bright and animated with happiness, unlike any time he had seen in her life. As the kiss broke they shared whispered words he could not hear. Words that had Sehri's musical laughter drifting up to him on the balcony. Soon the other dragons had arrived and then five more women joined them, crowding around Andro and the Vanari female who was Coren's daughter. Dyack noticed right away that Sehri was always within physical contact with one of them as they laughed and moved among the dragons to greet the others that were landing. All of the young women who crowded around Androcles were in physical contact with each other and the contact was not one of a simple nature. The physical contact and kisses were what lovers shared and that knowledge did not affect him as he had thought it would when seeing it. Dyack had thought he might be repulsed by such a thing, but seeing Sehri and the others interact quickly pushed that out of his mind. They did it so naturally, like it was the most normal thing in the universe for them to act this way. Within moments, Dyack had no doubts about what Sehri had become part of, and his hand squeezed Aleatia's hand with happiness because of this. His youngest daughter, his baby, had found unquenchable love with Androcles and her fellow wives and that was as obvious as the sun in the sky above them. Sehri had become the future of their people and what they could eventually become and for Dyack that was what mattered most.

That had been an hour ago and now Dyack sensed someone come up beside him and he turned his head from watching Denali and Lisisa and Arduri talking animatedly with their sisters as Androcles moved up to the railing next to him. He turned back and looked at Sehri once more.

"I have never seen her so happy Androcles." Dyack spoke softly. "She glows with such life and energy."

"We love her sir." Andro said softly. "I love her."

Dyack looked at him now. "I will not ask you to explain how this could be Androcles Leonidas. Aleatia has already told me that it is not something you can explain. Only that it is and it can never be broken now."

Andro nodded his head. "As I told her... I gave up trying to discover the why of it many years ago. I am different... and for many years I hated that. When Sadi finally came back into my life the pieces began to fall together. Sehri is part of that. She always has been. It just took us this long to find her." Andro met his eyes evenly. "I will adhere to any marriage ritual that the Rothryn people might honor sir... I give you my word."

"Aleatia tells me you never break your word." Dyack spoke turning fully to face him.

"I try not too." Andro replied.

"Then your word to love my daughter and all of them with everything that you are will suffice Androcles Leonidas." Dyack said.

"That is a promise I will happily commit to sir." Andro said. "And I will honor it until the day I pass into the next life. And beyond."

Dyack nodded his head. "I can ask for nothing else." He said.

"My father and you are very much alike." Andro said. "When you finally do meet him I think you will get along famously."

"Coren tells me your father and mothers are in what would be the Echo quadrant." Dyack said. "Searching for answers to questions about the Ancient blood within you."

Andro nodded his head. "The Pralor blood, what your people call the Ancients, yes." He answered him. "It hasn't been an easy trip... but they are making progress now and my father is very hopeful and optimistic. They are moving to a planet that has more Lycavorians on it right now. Those that the Ancients transported from our homeworld."

“As they did us?” Dyack said. “You don’t seem to agree with that from the tone of your voice.”

Andro nodded again. “I don’t.” He answered. “I understand why they did it... but the manner in which it was done is abhorrent to me. It takes choice out of the equation. Choice is what makes each of us who we are.”

“Indeed.” Dyack said. “You have them among you now I understand. Two of them.”

Andro met his eyes. “Murano and his daughter Mari.” He replied. “Murano is... he was one of my great grandfather Sumar’s finest Praetorian warriors and a friend. He left him behind when he departed... and Murano did not understand why until now. Until my father found him. His daughter Mari... well she has quite unexpectedly fallen in love with my brother Deion. She is a Praetorian as well... but even Murano does not know that just yet.”

“He does not know his own daughter is one of these warriors?” Dyack asked.

Andro grinned. “He doesn’t know Mari is his daughter.” He told him. “Not yet anyway.”

“How can that be?” Dyack asked.

Andro shook his head. “It has something to do with the Etheric skills of her birth mother Tobia. Mari is able to shrink her Etheric resonance to levels that would not be detectable by normal Praetorians. My father only discovered what her relation was because of our sense of smell. You can not hide family in someone’s scent.”

Dyack turned back and looked down into the courtyard once more. “The Rothryn... we do not use the senses we possess as you do. It is something I have always tried to change but we have evolved to this point without them and I believe many think it is silly.” He turned back to Andro. “Sehri has...she can use these skills now? And shift her form?”

Andro nodded once more. “The way my sister Eliani explains it and medical terminology always gives me a headache... the Ancients or Pralors... they never removed the gene within the Rothryn that allows you to shift your forms as we do. They only suppressed it. When I... when I bit Sehri... the virus in my blood reactivated the dormant gene.”

Dyack smiled and reached out to touch Andro’s arm. “Do not be embarrassed for doing what your instincts called for you to do Androcles.” He said. “Aleatia told me a little of your customs... and I will learn more as time passes. It is a gift that you have returned to my people, starting with Sehri, and hopefully continuing into the future.”

“It must remain secret for now however.” Andro said.

Dyack nodded his head. “As much as it angers me to say... yes.” He stated. “If word of this broke to the general population, I fear that others who do not have the best interests of my people at heart would act to try and stop this from happening.”

Androcles nodded. “Among them this Rothryn Science Academy I take it?”

Dyack nodded as well. “They would be the largest voice against such a thing... but there would be others.” He looked at Andro intently. “These are issues for discussion at another time however. There is already much going on that does not concern the Rothryn people, though it could affect them.”

“It is important to me sir.” Andro told him.

Dyack nodded his head in agreement. “For me as well... but the issues with the Vanari need to be resolved first. We have not even made an official announcement that your people exist, though it is the talk of my world among everyone.”

“Whether you can shift your form or not sir... you are still Lycavorian.” Andro told him.

“And I believe this as well. Now more than ever.” Dyack replied. “How we deal with this crisis however, that will determine from which direction we approach the official introduction of your people to mine and how we proceed with the politics of things.”

Androcles rolled his eyes in disgust. “Carians... I hate politics.” He said.

Dyack laughed and nodded his head. “On that I believe we agree utterly Androcles.” He said truly liking this young man. His honesty was refreshing and he carried with him an aura of command and power, yet he was not arrogant or rude in any way.

They both turned when Dorian came up to them from the side. “Excuse me sir...” He spoke looking at Dyack.

Dyack nodded his head in recognition taking note of how polite these young men and women were. “Of course.”

Dorian looked at Andro. “Coren is ready.” He said. “He wants us to come to his office.” Andro nodded and looked at Dyack. “Now the fun begins.” He said motioning with his hand.

ARC ROYAL
FOUR HOURS FROM VENTORI
DESERTED LYCAVORIAN COLONY

Aricia Leonidas walked down the corridor carrying the mug of coffee in one hand and the data pad in the other without regard for where she was. The engineers on the ARC ROYAL had actually cordoned off this entire section of the deck with portable walls and two Durcunusaan soldiers at each of the three corridors leading into this section to keep others out. They had done this when it was determined this would be the deck and section where the quarters for the King and those of his family would be. It was far more of a privacy measure than anything else Aricia knew and that is why she didn't hesitate in walking down the corridor with nothing but thick, thigh high socks, white thong panties and her floor length white robe over her otherwise naked body. Fedor and Eirene's quarters were now empty, but they would return sooner or later, and she didn't doubt they would need to expand a little when Gorgo and her own mother Dasha arrived for they always stayed very close to them.

Aricia Leonidas had changed so much since the days of that young woman who had first greeted Martin Leonidas on Earth. Her love for Martin and her fellow Queens had not only saved her in so many ways, but it had altered her as well. Aricia did not think back very often on that time, for she was not that naïve woman anymore and the shame and pain of those few weeks and months had long ago drifted into obscurity. Martin's love for her, her fellow Queen's love for her, it had saved her. Martin's actions all those years ago had shown Aricia her path and what she was meant for. It was a path she had embraced and continued to embrace even to this day. She was Martin's Anome... the one who held the very center of his soul within her hands. She was the one who brought focus to the love and desire for Martin that she and her fellow Queens and lovers felt for Martin. Even Isabella and Cirith, who were far older than her in years and experience, even they considered her their center. Aricia had not wanted it this way, but it was a role Anja, Dysea and the others had given to her. A role she now relished more than anything. Aricia would be their combined voice when they were together. She would be the personification of the love and passion all of them had for Martin. Aricia was so happy when For'mya finally came back to them and was able to feel what only she and Dysea had been able to feel for years. When first Anja and then Cirith and finally For'mya were able to feel the full force of Martin's unshielded aura upon them as she and Dysea had for so long, it brought completeness to them all. Though Bella could not feel his wolf aura as they did, his Etheric resonance within her mind and on her body was equal to what his wolf aura did to the others.

Martin had never been very good with words, they all knew that, but his love for each of them was unquestioned because he showed them everyday what they meant to him in his actions. His affectionate nuzzles. The touch of his aura on them. The soft, fluttering kisses or the feel of his caress upon them. His words in the interview with Lady Tinra had touched a cord within all of them.

“They are me and I am them.”

Up until that moment Aricia did not think that any of them could love Martin Leonidas more than they already did. Those seven words had proven her so very wrong. Though it was well known that the Queens of the Union gravitated to each other differently, Aricia, Anja and For'mya to each other, while Dysea, Bella and Cirith had become nearly inseparable, it was also well known that each of them loved Martin voraciously. They had not truly known why Martin almost never questioned them or what they did. He had not in the past, and Aricia knew he would not in the future. They now knew why this was. Each of them were extensions of his will and he did not question the decisions they made for they were part of him and he part of them.

Aricia looked up as she reached the door to Zarah and Lucia's quarters and she touched the panel. “Come in!” Lucia's voice echoed from within.

Aricia tapped the panel once more and the door slid aside and she entered quickly. As the door slid closed behind her she saw Zarah and Lucia on the couch in the main room. Lucia was sitting between Zarah's legs sipping a glass of juice and reading from a data pad while Zarah skillfully pulled a brush through her long, silky raven black hair. Both of them were clad only in bra and panties, their bodies more muscular and lean than Aricia remembered, but that was not surprising. The time out here had honed all of them to new physical preparedness.

"Good morning mother." Zarah spoke happily as she saw Aricia come in.

Aricia smiled as she came fully into the room. What had happened to her had caused all of them shame and hurt, more so Androcles than anyone, but Zarah Leonidas had turned out to be far more resilient than even they could predict. Most of that was Lucia's love for her they all knew, but the other part was her connection to Androcles. His essence within her and Lucia's untainted love had given her the strength to push back the veil of darkness that could have enveloped her and it gave her the fortitude to begin anew. Finding the love she had with Lucia was a surprise, but Zarah had always been one to follow her brother's adventurous nature, and when Lucia had come into her life, she had not hesitated for an instant to embrace that.

"How long have you two been up?" Aricia asked as she settled to the couch across from them. "Your father and I told you to get some rest."

"We have only been awake for an hour." Lucia said with a happy smile. "We went to bed early enough... but I could not keep Zarah's lips from finding different spots that kept me from sleeping."

Zarah chuckled in delight and leaned forward to kiss her cheek. "I can't help it if you taste so good." She stated. "Blame my father for my wolf genes."

"Hah!" Lucia laughed. "I would rather thank him for your wolf genes!"

Aricia laughed with them for there was no denying the love between the two young women or how powerful it was.

"Why does it matter how much we slept mother?" Zarah asked as she continued to run the brush through Lucia's hair. "When we reach this planet the only thing father will let us do is watch from orbit." She finished with a touch of disgust in her voice.

Lucia turned her head slightly and ran her hand along Zarah's bare thigh. "Udos xun naut zhaun nindel whol zhaunus ussta ssinssrigg." She said. (We do not know that for sure my love.)

Aricia held up the data pad in her hand. "I would not be too sure about that fenneennum. Just as Lucia has said." She said as both of their eyes focused on her. "That is why I am here now." (Daughter)

Zarah stopped brushing Lucia's hair as she sat up. "What... what do you mean mother?" She asked.

"Never think for an instant that your father does not trust in you or your abilities." Aricia told them. She looked directly at Lucia. "Either of you. Your father has only been holding you back until he had a better understanding of what your connection with Androcles has meant for your skills Zarah. And what you are truly capable of Lucia."

"What are you saying mother?" Zarah asked again.

"You have the dormant Praetorian gene within you Lucia, just as I do. Just as Sadi does." Aricia told her. "Your mother was able to confirm this for us when she met with Martin. You, Carisia and now Onera are the only ones who she passed this gene too. It did not pass to your brothers for some reason. It allows us to do things that others can not with the Etheric realm. Your whips are the perfect example. They are Etheric in nature and while not normally physical objects, they are fueled by the emotions within you and that is why they can be extremely deadly weapons that can be used to inflict serious injuries if your emotions are running high."

Lucia nodded her head slowly. "Yes." She stated thinking back to what she was able to do to her foul brother.

"While we cannot normally do this... because of the pureness of our blood... if our emotions are running very high... we can project our Etheric powers into the physical realm for the briefest of moments." Aricia told them. "We have confirmed this after talking at length with Wayonn and Murano. It is really the only explanation that we have come up with." She looked at Zarah. "When you took so much of your brother's blood Zarah... it did essentially the same thing. It granted you abilities that you would not normally have. This is the only thing that has held your father back when concerning you and Lucia. Being able to hide Radem for so long and so effectively only confirmed it for him."

"So what does that all mean?" Lucia asked.

Aricia set the data pad on the table between them. “Your father is putting both of you in command of the Scouts that will go to the planet with us.” She told them seeing their eyes go wide in shock as Zarah snatched up the pad and began to read. “You will have six of your Aunt Aihola’s Drow Vampire scouts under your command. They came with Manda’s group. Also... you will have two of your grandfather Vengal’s senior vampire Durcunusaan Scouts acting as your Lieutenants. Use their experience and knowledge... but your father has made clear that you and Lucia are in charge.”

Zarah looked at her, eyes still very wide in shock. “Mother... tell me this is not a joke!” She declared.

Aricia smiled and shook his head. “This is no joke fenneennum. The Command is yours and you will be among the first of us on Ventori. Your father loves you Zarah. And that love extends to you Lucia, because of what you share with our daughter. He also trusts both of you without question. He just tends to move rather slowly when putting his children in harms way. As do we all.”

Zarah screamed in delight and blurred across the small distance between them to throw her arms around her mother knocking Aricia back on the couch slightly. Aricia was laughing as she returned the embrace and held her tightly. She took Zarah's face in her hands and stared at her.

“Just remember all you have learned Zarah. Everything your brother has taught you. All we have taught you.” Aricia said gently.

“I will mother. I promise.” Zarah told her.

Aricia nodded her head. “Good. Now let me get back to your father before your mother Anja steals all of the warmth of his body. We only have two hours before we need to begin to prepare.”

Zarah moved back beside Lucia as Aricia got to her feet and moved for the door. She turned back once and saw both of them beginning to go through the data pad, pressing their heads together. Aricia smiled and exited the room.

VENTORI DESERTED LYCAVORIAN COLONY

“...Detected them three hours ago. I didn’t disturb you and the others because we were still too far out to really do anything.” Akemi told Martin who stood beside her chair in the center of the ARC ROYAL’s bridge. “The Cruiser REPULSE is remaining back from us as our front... and any active sensor sweeps we do may be detected.”

Martin looked at her. “NOVA-Class?” He asked.

Akemi shook her head. “VANGUARD-Class MkIII Interdictor. More versatility and firepower. Admiral Lorian likes to be prepared.”

Martin nodded. “Nice.” He said.

“How many ships Akemi?” Danny asked moving up beside Martin.

“Just the one right now.” She answered. “Heavy Cruiser type that is comparable to our NOVA-Class Refits though not as large. Admiral Lorian is breaking off her Wing and moving for the opposite side of the planet. Making sure no one is hiding back there or behind one of the three moons.”

Martin turned when the doors to the bridge opened and Tobia and Valael came rushing in. “Morning.” He said cheerfully. “We have guests it seems.”

Tobia and Valael came up beside him looking at the main view window which was at a hundred and ten percent magnification. Tobia gasped slightly and reached out to touch Martin’s arm. “That is not a Tasmor ship Martin.” She spoke quickly. “It’s from the Kintaur Hegemony.”

“I’m guessing that is not a good thing?” Danny asked.

“The Tasmor and Kintaur have been at war, off and on, for four centuries. They hate each other.” Valael spoke now.

“Of course they do.” Martin said as he rolled his eyes.

“Tobia... what is the lifespan of the Tasmor?” Aricia asked.

“Several hundred years.” Tobia answered. “I don’t know exactly but Saydia is just over a hundred and forty years old.”

Martin shook his head. "You know... there is no love in this quadrant of space. What happened to let's all just get along and be friends?" All of them heard the fit of coughing from the side of the bridge and they turned to see the elven female wiping her tea from her lips where she had just spit some out in laughter. Aricia and For'mya grinned at this and For'mya slapped his rock hard abdomen playfully.

"When I last visited the Tasmor four years ago, no incidents between the Kintaur and Tasmor had taken place in a decade." Tobia told Martin as she too smiled in amusement now. His dry humor was beginning to grow on her and there were times when he was hysterically funny and did not even know it.

"Why would they be here?" Martin asked. "If what you told me is accurate Tobia... they are a long way from home aren't they?"

Tobia nodded. "Yes." She replied. "Their area of controlled space is on the opposite side of the Tasmor Regime. At least two months travel with the technology of their current engine design."

Martin looked at Danny for a brief moment and Dan shrugged his broad shoulders. "It's not just a job..." He said.

Martin nodded his head as he turned back. "It's a fucking adventure." He muttered. "You know fervon... I've come to really hate that phrase through the years."

Danny chuckled. "You and me both."

"Captain! Incoming hail from Admiral Lorian on Secure War Channel Alpha!" The ARC ROYAL'S COM officer announced.

Akemi didn't hesitate. "Put it up. Main holo disc."

They all turned slightly to the left as Miranda's image shimmered to life, flickered and then became crystal clear from the bridge of the ARIZONA.

"Manda?" Martin spoke first. "What do you got? Happy news I hope."

"Two ships... holding position just inside the gas rings of the second moon." Miranda answered.

"Same make as this one?" Martin asked.

Miranda shook her head. "Smaller. Heavy Frigate Class to us. Tasmor ships based on the schematics Lady Tobia gave to us." She answered. "I have a ship moving closer to get more detailed scans but they definitely appear to be hiding. Using the rings as cover."

Martin looked at Tobia and saw her nod her head. "The Kintaur are not as advanced in many areas as the Tasmor. Their sensors for instance. Just one of the many sticking points between them."

"Why do I not like the fact that both of these species are in different orbits of the planet that was home to my people." Martin asked. "Have they detected the REPULSE yet?"

Akemi nodded her head. "If the information we have is as accurate as everything else Lady Tobia has given us then they should be coming into range of the sensors on this Kintaur ship within moments."

"Akemi... focus one of the ventral arrays on the planet and give me some sweeps of the surface. Tell me what is down there." Martin spoke as he moved around behind her chair and stood on her opposite side.

"Ops?" Akemi barked.

"Realigning forward ventral array now." The voice echoed. "Stand by."

"Manda... you think they can detect each other?" Martin asked his eyes never leaving the holo image of the planet and three ships shown in white colors.

Miranda shook her head. "Doubtful given the level of technology Lady Tobia has told us they possess, unless the Kintaur ship maintains a constant orbit with the gravitational rotation of the planet. Then the Tasmor ships will see them in about thirteen hours at the current rotation."

"Tactical?" Akemi snapped.

"The Kintaur ship is holding station over the northern most continent above the planet's equator." The TAC Officer answered instantly.

Martin nodded. "Ok... that answers that question."

"Ops... anything on that continent above their position?" Akemi asked.

"It appears they are holding station above one of the larger abandoned cities Captain." The Ops officer answered. "I'm detecting Kintaur lifesigns on the surface of the planet. They appear to be centered on the outskirts of this city. Looks to be about eighty of them."

"Tasmor signs?" Akemi asked.

“Not within the passive cone of the forward ventral array Captain.” The man answered. “An active scan would tell us.”

Martin shook his head quickly. “No... not yet. An active scan will give us away and let them know there is more than one ship out here. Have the REPULSE do it when they are in range.”

“COM officer... send the order to the Captain of the REPULSE.” Akemi barked out.

“The REPULSE should be coming into range of the Kintaur ship’s sensors now sir.” The TAC officer reported.

“Who’s commanding?” Martin asked Akemi.

“Captain Nemoa Or’sali.” She answered instantly. “Lycavorian. Four hundred years in command slots. Mated over a thousand years now. Her mate is her First Officer.”

“Janon chose her from the 14th CFFG Martin.” Miranda Lorian added quickly from the ARIZONA’s bridge. “She’s smart and witty. Alba Tau vet.”

Martin nodded his head in approval. Those two words alone were all he needed to know. Anyone who had fought on the ground or in the stars at Alba Tau was considered a notch above the average Fleet Officer. The space battles had been just as down right vicious and costly as the operations on the ground. Martin, Danny and Miranda were perfect examples of that.

“Let her roll with it.” Martin spoke seeing Danny nod in approval out of the corner of his eye.

Tobia saw this and turned to look at Aricia and For'mya just behind her. She took a few steps closer to them. “I have heard this name from others before.” She said softly. “Is this name... this Alba Tau... is it significant?” She asked them.

Aricia glanced at For'mya quickly and then back to Tobia. “Yes.” She replied simply.

Tobia saw the look in her eyes and turned her head back to where Martin stood. She glanced back to Aricia and For'mya when they didn’t continue. “You can not tell me about this?”

“No.” For'mya told her. “It is... it is not spoken of freely. I’m sorry.”

Tobia looked somewhat surprised as none of them had held anything back from her and Valael before now. She bowed her head slightly in recognition of For'mya’s answer and turned back to look at the holo map. This information was something she would have to discover at a later time.

“Captain! The Kintaur ship is breaking orbit and moving for the REPULSE!” The TAC officer barked out. “They are hailing them! Low band sub space transmission! Captain Nemoa is transmitting audio only for the moment.”

“Monitor it.” Akemi barked out the order. “Tap their feed!”

“On speakers and holo disc three!”

All of them turned to see the humanoid face appear within the holo image. The dark brown skin of the Kintaur male was weathered and drawn tight across his face. He had a wide forehead that formed two large ridges along where his temples would be and then extended back on the hairless skull. The skull was almost oval in shape, his nearly black eyes large and sunken into his brow. He had the outline of a nose but only two small slits above the lipless mouth.

“Whoa!” Danny muttered softly. “He’s attractive.”

This comment brought soft murmurs of laughter from those who had heard it just before the voice echoed from the internal speakers.

“Unidentified ship... you are approaching the Kintaur Hegemony Cruiser BRIGHT STAR.” The deep male voice sounded through the speakers on the bridge. “I am First Warrior Gars. You will stand to and prepare to be boarded! You have entered Kintaur Hegemony territory without authorization. Respond.”

“I am Captain Nemoa Or’sali of the Lycavorian Union Cruiser REPULSE.” The female voice filled the bridge now. “We are new to this area of space, but we have received confirmed reports of the existence of our people on the planet that you are orbiting. We would like to make contact with them.”

“You are female?” Gars spoke.

There was a pause before Nemoa answered. “The last time I checked... yes I am.” She answered, drawing soft laughter from almost everyone on the bridge of the ARC ROYAL at the sarcastic tone of her answer. It apparently did not register with the Kintaur.

“How many females do you have aboard your ship? I do not recognize the configuration of your vessel. What is your crew complement and where do you come from?” Gars demanded now.

“I have several hundred females among my crew.” Nemoa replied evenly. “And as I have already told you... we have confirmed reports of our people having settled on this planet. We would like to make contact with them.”

“What is a Lycavorian?” Gars hissed. “We have no knowledge of such a species. You will activate a video transmission immediately.”

The ARC ROYAL’S COM officer instantly split the holo transmission they were watching and all of them saw the face of Nemoa appear. She was an attractive Lycavorian woman with bright, light brown eyes and short, dark blond hair. Martin guessed her age to be roughly nine hundred to fifteen hundred years old. Showing just a small bit of her experience, Nemoa only revealed her face and upper body in the return holo transmission.

“I am a Lycavorian.” Nemoa answered him now. “It is a pleasure to be introduced First Warrior Gars.”

“Your ship is unknown to us.” Gars spat with noticeable contempt. “You have entered Kintaur Hegemony controlled space. I will speak to your senior officer at once and you will prepare to be boarded!”

Nemoa blinked several times. “That would be me.” She answered. “I am Captain of this ship.”

“You... you are a female!” Gars said.

Nemoa nodded. “I believe I have already stated that fact.” She told him.

“You are in command of that vessel?” Gars asked once more looking as if he did not believe what she was telling him.

“That would be an accurate assumption.” Nemoa told him.

“You will cut power to your engines and prepare to be boarded!” Gars spoke again.

“And why would I do this?” Nemoa asked calmly.

“I am ordering you to!” Gars replied as if it was the most normal thing in the world. “You have entered Kintaur space without authorization!”

“According to my information this area of space is not controlled by anyone.” Nemoa spoke. “We would simply like to make contact with our people on the surface of Ventori and ascertain their condition.”

“Did you not hear me woman!” Gars’ voice rose slightly. “This is Kintaur space! You will do as I command you!”

Nemoa couldn’t help but smile now. “You’ll forgive me when I tell you that I can’t do that. Our information of this area of space indicates that it is not controlled by anyone as I said earlier and I most certainly will not allow you to board my ship. We only wish to seek out those of my people on the surface and inquire of them if they need any assistance.”

“There are none of your people on the surface!” Gars growled at her. “You are violating our territory and you will do as I order you!”

Nemoa turned from Gars and to the side of her bridge. “Are we in range?” She asked the question to someone out of the cone of transmission. There was a subdued voice that replied and she nodded her head. “Begin active scan. All arrays.”

“What are you doing?” Gars demanded to know. “I have ordered you to cut power to your engines and prepare to be boarded!”

Nemoa returned her gaze to him and smiled sweetly. “Yes... I heard you the first time.” She spoke looking back to the side. “Route the active feed to them.” She spoke.

They watched as Gars turned his head now, someone in the background aboard his ship speaking to him. He turned back quickly and glared at Nemoa. “You are scanning the surface of the planet! You are not allowed to do this! I order you to stop immediately or we will fire on your ship!”

Nemoa met his gaze and this time her eyes shifted and her wolf fangs extended half way, clearly exposing the pointed tips just beneath her upper lips. “If you can produce some sort of documentation that proves this planet and system belong to you then I will abide by your request. As I have stated several times now, our information tells us Ventori and this entire system is free space, and I intend to search for our people.”

“The Kintaur Hegemony has claimed all of this system!” Gars shouted now. “To include all of the planets within it!”

“He didn’t blink.” Miranda spoke softly from the bridge of the ARIZONA.

“No he did not.” Martin agreed.

Tobia and Valael looked between the two of them quickly before Valael spoke. “What do you mean?” He asked.

“When Nemoa exposed her fangs.” Danny answered looking at him. “He didn’t blink an eye. He’s seen it before. Which means he’s seen our people before.”

Tobia moved closer to Martin. “Something must have happened in the last five years if the Kintaur have come into this area of space and begun claiming planets Martin. Ventori is far closer to Tasmor space and the Tasmor would never allow that ship to cross their territory unopposed.”

Martin looked at her. “How far out of the way would they need to travel to get around Tasmor space and come here without crossing into their territory?”

“The Tasmor have marked all of their borders with buoys of sorts. Beacons.” Tobia told him. “It would take a Kintaur ship months to move around the borders to get here. Every system with habitable planets between here and the Kintaur border is controlled by the Tasmor. As I told you... they are arrogant... but not to the extreme. They do feel that they are superior to most however, hence why they control most of the planets in this and the surrounding sectors. Ventori is among a dozen or so planets within this sector alone that no one controls but are relatively close to the Tasmor border.”

“They conquer these worlds?” For'mya asked with distaste evident in her voice.

Tobia shook her head. “No... not in a military sense. But they do manage to insure they are the ones who eventually gain control of these worlds, or insuring the populous supports them.”

“I’ve never heard of them coming this far from their space Tobia.” Valael spoke now.

“Neither have I.” She agreed.

“Manda... those Tasmor ships? Have they moved?” Martin asked now turning to look at her in the second open transmission.

Miranda shook her head. “No. We are detecting short range sub space COMS from one of the ships however. Directed at the planet’s surface. Can’t pinpoint exactly where, but its close to where the Kintaur are on the surface.”

Danny looked at Martin. “I don’t like that Skipper.” He said.

Martin nodded his head. “Neither do I.” His eyes shifted to Miranda. “Can those Tasmor ships pick up the COMS Manda?”

“Nemoa is broadcasting in the clear just like the Kintaur ship.” She replied. “Anyone within half a light year could detect that.”

“King Leonidas!” The Ops officer barked out causing all eyes to turn to where he was at his station. “Sire... I’m getting lifesign readings from the surface now! Captain Nemoa is using a multidirectional sensor band focused on the area around the city. The feed just began to come in. I’m detecting multiply Kintaur lifesigns, roughly eighty in total and at least seventy others. Contact is intermittent Milord... I can’t get a true number but...”

“Give me what you got son.” Martin spoke as he stepped closer to him. “Don’t hold back now.”

The Ops officer looked at him. “Sire... I am almost certain they are Lycavorian lifesigns. Mixed in with what appear to be Tasmor. At least two dozen of them.”

“How certain son?” Martin asked him.

“There are slight differences but...” The young man took a leap and met his King’s eyes. “Milord... they are Lycavorian. I am certain of it.”

Martin nodded his head. “That’s good enough for me.”

“Fucking right!” Danny growled.

“Cross deck that back to Nemoa.” Martin said turning to Akemi. “Let’s see what our fugly friend has to say then. Tell her to leave out the part about the Tasmor.”

“Sending data back to the REPULSE.” The Ops officer echoed as his hands worked his two consoles.

Martin turned once more and watched as Nemoa took a data pad from someone they couldn’t see and she read quickly. She looked up and met Gars’ angry eyes.

“First Warrior Gars... my sensors are detecting lifesigns on the surface that belong to my people.” She stated evenly. “We are also detecting Kintaur lifesigns. What exactly is your intent sir?”

“I do not answer to you woman!” Gars growled. “How... how can you detect them when the planet is so far away? This planet now belongs to the Kintaur Hegemony. Any who are on the surface will be taken into custody!”

Tobia reached out and took Martin's arm. "Do not let them do that Martin Leonidas." She told him urgently. Akemi slashed her hand down and the COM officer cut the audio feed they were listening to. "The Hegemony prisons and work camps are vile places. They have captured a few hundred of our people through the years... scientists and researchers mostly... and we never saw them again. The same can be said for the Tasmor as well."

Martin looked at her and his dark brown eyes narrowed considerably. "And you didn't think that this was something important enough to tell us!" He hissed at her.

Tobia shook her head embarrassed and took a step back in fear from him. "I... I had no reason to believe that we would encounter the Kintaur so close to Tasmor space Martin. I did not think it was important enough to mention since we would not be dealing with them."

Martin knew right away that Tobia was being truthful. He could detect no sign of a lie within her scent and she looked extremely concerned and embarrassed. Tobia had been totally forthcoming about everything since arriving on Manne and making friends with everyone she came across because of her calm and outgoing demeanor. Added to the fact that his son and her daughter Mari had entered into a very intimate, passionate and committed relationship from everything Martin and his Queens could sense, trust was not an issue with Tobia and he was not going to make it one. He covered her hand on his arm with his own and nodded his head.

"No worries." He said in a softer voice while squeezing her hand. "What can you tell us now that can help us?"

Tobia felt relief wash through her at his words and the way his resonance echoed around her. She berated herself for being so stupid as to not tell him more of the Kintaur but...

"Tobia... don't." Martin spoke and she met his eyes. "Stuff like this happens all the time. It's not your fault. Just give us what you can right now."

Tobia took a deep breath and nodded her head. "They are a violent and unpredictable species." She spoke confidently now.

Aricia and For'mya smiled to one another for they knew Martin had the uncanny ability to put someone at ease very quickly with his wit and charm.

"They hate the Tasmor with a passion, bordering on the fanatical. I asked Saydia once why this is but she told me she did not know. It had something to do with what happened long before she became Sovereign, during the time of her grandmother's rule, but she did not know what it was." Tobia continued.

"Why would they be here Tobia?" Aricia asked now.

Tobia shook her head and met her eyes briefly before turning back to Martin. "I don't know... but you can be assured it is not to be diplomatic." She answered. "I don't think they can spell that word."

"Given what we have seen so far... I tend to agree." Akemi spoke up.

"Does anyone else find it odd that they are both here now? Just when we happen to show up?" Martin asked turning his head back and forth and finally looking at Danny.

"Stinks to high heaven is what it does fervon." Danny agreed with him.

Martin moved closer to Akemi. "Give me ship-to-ship COMs with Nemoa Akemi." He told her. Akemi didn't pause and stabbed down twice on the arm of her chair.

"Secure. Go." She told him.

"Captain Nemoa... this is Martin Leonidas! Give me a full power active scan of their ship! Make sure none of our people are on that ship!"

Martin turned and watched as Nemoa motioned quickly to someone off screen as she heard Martin's voice echo from speakers on her ship and the Ops officer on the ARC ROYAL activated the audio link once more. It took only seconds before Gars realized what was happening.

"You are scanning our ship!" He shouted.

Nemoa met his gaze. "How very astute of you." She answered him calmly. "We have detected our people on the surface of this world and I want to insure there are none on your ship."

"You have no right to do this woman!" He screamed. "You will cease this at once! We are Kintaur!" He turned to look at someone on his bridge. "Well... stop it!" He snarled.

"I can not First Warrior!" The voice shouted back.

Gars turned back to the transmission. "I will give you only one more warning! Cease your activities and prepare to be boarded!"

Nemoa rolled her eyes before turning and looking at her sensor operator who was shaking his head. She turned back to Gars knowing that the King was listening. “Luckily for you, none of our people are present on your ship.”

Akemi turned when she heard the soft beeping and the COM officer went to the console behind his station. “Milord... incoming secure from REPULSE Ops officer!”

“Let’s hear it!” Martin barked.

“Milord... we detected no Lycavorian lifesigns on their ship but we did distinguish one Tasmor lifesign. Female from the looks of it.” The man reported. “It was faint... but there. From the scans it appears to be behind some sort of energy barrier and that is why I can not get a solid lock.”

“Man... this just keeps getting better and better. I will not be drawn into a conflict that is not mine!” Martin snapped.

Tobia stepped closer to him now. “The Kintaur are not known to be kind toward their prisoners Martin Leonidas. Any prisoners. They are especially brutal towards the Tasmor. They will... they will rape and torture her for days before they kill her Martin.”

“I did not come out here looking for a war Tobia!” Martin exclaimed. “They have done nothing to me except make silly demands that even that half wit Gars knows we won’t comply with!”

“What about those on the surface?” Tobia asked him softly.

Martin turned his head quickly to the sensor operator. “Report!” He barked.

“The Lycavorian and Tasmor lifesigns are intermingled sire.” The man answered. Martin looked at the ARC ROYAL’S Ops officer who nodded his head.

“And the Kintaur?” Martin asked.

“Our people and the Tasmor are in two different groups but they are moving together and moving fast. The Kintaur lifesigns...” Martin saw his brow furrow slightly. “Sire... they have broken into two groups now as well and seem to be pursuing them.” The man spoke.

“They’re hunting them.” Danny snapped becoming more alert.

“Fuck me!” Martin swore loudly. His decision was made almost instantly, shocking Tobia and Valael at the speed of this and even more at the orders he began to issue. “Avi?” Martin touched the arm of Akemi’s chair again.

-Standing by Martin- Avi answered instantly.

“The teleport pads?” Martin asked.

-The Worker Drones have finished the upgrades transmitted to us from Armen on SPARTA’S WRATH yesterday Martin. They are fully functional and completely safe-

“Anja?” Martin hissed out loud. “Give me a no shit assessment Red? Go or no go.”

Anja’s response was also very quick and without hesitation. “I don’t know what they did Lover... I’ll have to review the details later but Andro and Armen got the damn thing working perfectly. Avi has conducted four tests since the Drones finished their work and all of them were successful. As much as I want to say we need to do more tests... you have my Go as Chief Medical Officer.”

“Avi... how many can we send at once?” Martin asked.

-There are two main Teleport Pads in Landing Bay Two that can hold fourteen- Avi answered. – Three smaller pads throughout the ship can transport six personnel each. Three more are being installed currently but are not ready for activation-

Martin turned without hesitation and looked at Akemi. “How many on that ship now?” He asked.

“TAC Officer?” Akemi barked out as she turned.

“Sensors are picking up three hundred and sixty-four.” The man answered.

“How many around where this Tasmor is?” Danny asked now coming up beside Martin and knowing what he was thinking.

“Nine within thirty meters General.”

Martin looked at him and Danny nodded. “I’ll take T’lolt, Jules, the Master Chief, Kenny and Pablo. We’ll interrupt the power flow; grab the prisoner and teleport out. K.I.S.S. all the way!”

Martin nodded his head. “Go! How many of these Kintaur douche bags are on the surface again? Give me numbers!” He asked as Danny bolted from the bridge.

“Forty-two in one group Sire!” The man answered. “Thirty-eight in the other! The larger group is pursuing our people along a northern path away from the city while the smaller one is moving northeast in what appears to be an attempt to cut them off before they reach this large river.” He traced the landmark on the holo map.

“Avi... how soon before you come within range of the planet?” Martin asked.

-Two minutes Martin. I can transport each group twenty seconds apart or as fast as they can step onto the Teleport Pads. We will need to remain within range of the Kintaur vessel until Daniel returns but it will not strain our capability. I have already assigned officers to operate each Teleport Unit-

Martin reached for his daughter within Mindvoice without shielding. Zarah?

We are here father. She answered instantly.

This just got a lot bigger than a recon fenneenum.

We have been listening. We can do this Papa. Zarah spoke without reservation.

Then move to the landing bay Zar. As soon as your uncle Danny teleports over to that ship I want you and your team moving. Pick four additional Spartans to take with you in the first group Zarah. Eighteen more will come down from the other pads. I’ll send you another fourteen twenty seconds after that. I’m sending you to a point in front this northeastern group. Set up a standard ambush Zar. Hit them hard and fast! Your mother’s and I will hit the main force following our people. Once you are secure move to link up with us.

We are moving now! Zarah told him.

Watch your ass daughter. Your brother will spank you silly if you get yourself hurt. Martin told her as he sent an Etheric pulse of love and confidence to her.

Papa! Zarah exclaimed happily.

Zarah... these Kintaur appear to be really bad news fenneenum. Don’t jerk around with them.

Zarah paused for only a moment as the true meaning of her father’s words filled her. I will not. I will see you on the surface father.

“Anja... meet Aricia and I in Landing Bay 2.” Martin spoke openly now. He looked at For'mya. “Come in guns blazing if you need to Kinsoaurgai.”

For'mya nodded. “You can count on it.” She told him.

Martin turned to Tobia and Valael. They were both utterly stunned at how quickly they had seen Martin Leonidas change. He had just issued orders that would have taken their commanders hours to implement and not one person had batted an eye at these orders or even tried to tell him they were not prepared to do such things. They obviously had done things like this many times in the past.

“Elder Valael, I need you to remain here in case those Tasmor ships try anything stupid. Let them know we are trying to help. Tobia you are with me.”

“Milord?” Akemi asked causing him to turn and look at her. “What about the Kintaur ship?”

Martin paused for only a moment and then moved to her chair and activated the ship-to-ship secure COM.

“Captain Nemoa?”

“I am here my King.” She answered.

“As soon as you get the word from Akemi that General Simpson has returned here to the ARC ROYAL... do me a favor.” Martin spoke.

“Of course Milord.” Nemoa answered.

“Blow that ugly, loud mouthed bastard out of the stars.” Martin told her.

AUSTROVA RE MYDALA ESTATE

Whatever doubts or fears that may have been lingering in the back of Caliria Leonidas' mind had been dispelled within the first hour of being back within his arms. With Caliria urging him on, Androcles had taken her furiously in that first hour, his unshielded aura setting her body on fire in a way nothing that ever had and his huge cock making her sing to the moon above as it filled her to overflowing. When he had bitten her, just as his seed erupted within her depths, Caliria had descended into utter heaven. The intense pain had been so very brief as the virus in his blood rushed through her, but the changes that had taken place within her already only sped up the merger, and once the pain was gone it left nothing but unmitigated pleasure. Her soft cries of passion had filled the large room then as she clutched at his shoulders in ardor, and when Sadi and the others appeared on the bed beside them, Caliria discovered the true meaning of paradise.

It had been so shamelessly corrupt and wondrously lustful and Caliria was very nearly overwhelmed for she knew it would be like this for the rest of her life and she relished in this knowledge more than anything else.

A tangle of limbs, lips, tongues and hands that had not stopped for hours. Androcles was the center of it for all of them, twisting and turning and taking what they so wanted him to have. Her Alkay enchanted all of them, soon covering each of them in a fine sheen, which only served to increase their desire and endurance to new proportions. Caliria tasted all of them once more, reveling in the flavor and scents of her fellow Princesses almost as much as Androcles' lavender and pines scent. His wolf aura was pulsing madly for all of them and completely unshielded. Carisia may not have been able to feel his wolf aura, but his Etheric resonance was doing the same thing to her that his wolf aura did to them, keeping them on the brink of devastating and total pleasure, and then allowing them to experience it in irresistible waves and hearing them cry out in glee as they shuddered in release.

They filled her being now, and Caliria could not get enough of them, Lu'ria and Carisia most of all. The moment they settled to the bed with them, it began a night of exploration and blissful passion that none of them would ever forget. It did not matter who Androcles was taking at any given time, for they were all servicing one another with little thought of anything else. Even Sehri, though they had only met a few hours before, even Sehri was unashamedly taking part in everything. She had pleased Caliria two or three times, each time making her scream out her release before Caliria returned the pleasure with equal fervor. Androcles had taken each of them at least twice before he began to tire, and even when he did, his hands and lips and tongue remained so very active. There was not a single time where any of them lost physical contact with each other. They were always touching in some manner, their love and devotion for each other shining through like a blazing light in the darkness. All of them felt something within their beloved Androcles, he had laid open his soul for them and the absolute and unquestioned love that flowed from him for them was beyond words. All of them felt it however, something just on the edge of his perceptions, something new and unique and so very lovely. It filled them as well, for he held nothing back, and while the knowledge of what this was would come to them eventually, this night they let it slip back as their desires and passion for each other overrode everything else.

The sun rising outside the bathed their bodies now, warming their skin, but none of them wanting to move. Caliria was magnificently spent, her heart still racing from the hours of utterly decadent lovemaking. She lay between Androcles' long, powerful legs, her head resting on his flat abdomen and his delicious but now flaccid cock pressing between her breasts. Lu'ria's head was resting on the back of her shoulder, her shimmering white hair splayed across her back, her legs canted slightly to keep from dangling off the edge of the bed. A bed that was not nearly as large as it needed to be Caliria thought.

Caliria lifted her head when all of them began to laugh softly and she realized they had heard her open thoughts. Andro's face was so peaceful as he slept; the rise and fall of his broad chest calm and smooth.

"Well... it's true!" Caliria spoke openly completely unashamed of herself.

Sadi, curled up beside Andro with her head resting on his shoulder, laughed once more and reached out to caress her cheek. "Don't worry Inamarno; the bed on our ship is notably larger and much more comfortable." She said softly.

Caliria kissed Sadi's fingertips before dropping her head back to Andro's powerful abdomen. "Thank the prophets!" She exclaimed.

Ne'Veha was on Andro's opposite side with Sehri tucked between her and Andro's body, her blond head resting against Ne'Veha's ample and proudly firm breasts. Their legs were entwined together, Sehri's hands resting on Ne'Veha's exquisitely shaped ass.

"Can we... can we wait for a few hours." Sehri stammered. "I am so worn out I don't know if I want to move."

"If we move we will wake Androcles." Ne'Veha said softly.

"I'm already awake." His voice sounded and they all turned to see his azure blue eyes open and glance around. "It's kind of hard to sleep when my wives and mates are chattering like birds in the morning."

Sadi lifted her head in mock indignation. "We do not chatter!" She announced.

"No we do not!" Carisia added. "And it is your fault anyway."

"My fault?" Andro said lifting his head and looking at Carisia who was stretched out beside Sadi and spooned against her back. "How is this my fault?"

"If you were not so voracious and did not have such a delicious celie then we might have a chance at actually refusing your wonderful attentions." Carisia told him with a glint her maya blue eyes. (cock)

"Voracious?" Andro spoke. "If I recall... it is you and Sadi who took it upon yourselves to inspire me once I fell on the floor exhausted. I didn't have anything to do with that!"

"Don't blame us!" Sadi retorted. "We can not help it if you are irresistibly tasty! And you were just laying there!"

"Nope." Carisia agreed with her.

"Just admit that you are a demanding and insatiable beast our love." Lu'ria commented now with bright amber eyes and a wide smile.

"Fine!" Andro spoke. "It's all my fault."

Caliria smiled brilliantly and placed her chin on his flat abdomen and looked at his face from across the expanse of his mouth-wateringly muscle packed stomach. "Just continue to admit that our love... and there will be no reason for us to punish you."

Androcles Leonidas lay there and basked in the scents and auras of the six women he worshiped as they swirled around and through him. Sadi's sugar plume and spice scent was the strongest of them, but as each day passed, the sweet amaretto scent of Ne'Veha, Sehri's warm walnut scent, Lu'ria's honey melon scent, Carisia's rose blossom scent and Caliria's musky honey dew scent were growing stronger and stronger. His instincts told him he had found the six strongest females anywhere and those same instincts made him love them all the more. He had felt it last night, all of them had, but he had no idea what it was and he was not going to worry about it. They were together now and this is what mattered the most to him.

Andro lifted his head at Caliria's words and stared into her eyes. "Punish me?" He said with a smile. "Would punishing me involve anything like what Sadi and Carisia did last night? I would gladly submit to that punishment!"

Sadi's jungle green eyes went wide. "You pig!" She exclaimed.

Andro chuckled and pulled her closer to him with one arm, pulsing her with his aura and watching her eyes close in blissful enchantment. He allowed his aura to reach out to all of them and heard them gasp in delight.

"Stop you beast!" Ne'Veha exclaimed in happiness.

The laughter and happiness was all any of them felt at the moment and to them it most the most glorious thing they had ever felt.

Androcles entered the main sitting room of Coren's estate holding the mug of his mother's coffee in one hand and reading from the data pad. He stopped moving when he felt their combined presence and he lifted his head to see all of his brothers and sisters in the main room sitting around or standing. All of them focused their eyes on him.

His eyes touched nearly all of them before he spread his arms open wide. "What?" He exclaimed loudly.

Fedor and Eirene had arrived after Andro and the others had retired to their bedroom and could not see him. They stepped forward now and Andro saw them and quickly found a table to set his mug and pad on. Almost instantly after that they were both in his arms. Eirene had tears falling freely from her dark brown eyes and even Fedor was holding back the moistness as their brother crushed them in his powerful arms and nuzzled them both furiously. It was almost an impossibility to see tears falling from their brother's eyes, but everyone in the room saw it now as two streams of tears rolled down his cheeks from his tightly shut eyes and he absorbed the auras of his brother and sister.

Denali, Lisisa, Normya and Eliani looked at one another knowingly, for among those present, only they, Sadi and Andro's wives and mates were there and truly knew what Andro had done and what he had endured in order to touch Fedor and Eirene within their mother For'mya's womb. Only they knew the shame that their brother still carried for having to attack his own mother in such a way. Andro had granted Fedor and Eirene awareness before they had even been born, much the same as he had been, and it was this gift alone that had saved their mother and their family from experiencing so much more agony and suffering. They watched for only a moment before Eliani was the first to break from Jomann's arms and move across the large room and press up against Eirene from behind. Eirene's body was shaking, wracked with the sobs of very powerful emotions while Fedor's powerful arm was trying to pull his brother's head closer. Denali, Lisisa and Normya quickly followed their sister and then Dorian, Deion and Nara joined them while everyone else looked on.

This was a moment in time for the Leonidas children alone and no one wanted to intrude upon this, and while they may have been missing three of their brothers and four of their sisters, no one in the room doubted that this emotion was not being felt by them wherever they were.

Coren stood beside Rinel and he looked down when Nyosa gripped his arm tightly. He saw small tears flowing from her eyes, and she pressed close to him. Rinel reached out with moist eyes of his own and placed his hand on Coren's shoulder because he knew Coren did not really understand what was happening. He stepped closer to the man he had called friend for so many years.

"Rinel...? What is...? What is happening?" Coren whispered.

"I don't believe we will ever truly know or understand what took place Coren my friend." Rinel answered in a similar whisper as he moved closer to Coren. "Something very deep and very emotional happened between these twins Fedor and Eirene and their brother Androcles. It has affected them all quite profoundly, and that is why they act as they do now."

"It's beautiful." Nyosa whispered tucking her head against Coren's chest.

Coren's arm unconsciously curled around her slim waist as he turned back to see Andro lift his head from Fedor's shoulder, his azure blue eyes wet with tears. He looked around briefly and settled on the young man who Coren knew was called Kalis. He must have said something within the Etheric realm to him for Kalis stepped slowly away from the tearful red haired young woman beside him. Coren watched as this young man was pulled into the embrace of so many bodies, Androcles' arm drawing him tight and brushing his face against his, whispering in his ear before Kalis's arms wrapped tightly around all of them as best he was able. Coren would never know, but for Kalis this was the culmination of his transformation. As he pressed his head to Andro's, the tears came once more as the feeling of family and acceptance swarmed around all of them. The only task that remained for him was to find his mother, Karun and Nikkei and insure that they knew this was who he was now. This gathering continued for many minutes, none of them wanting to leave the mass embrace, even as Sadi and Caliria led Andro's wives and mates out of their bedroom and into the sitting room, moving to stand with Sheva, Onera and Serale. Words were not exchanged as Iama, Serale and Miseo were just as quickly pulled close and were sharing embraces with Sadi and the others with no hesitation.

Brendi stood close to Jomann and she looked up into his handsome face as he watched what was happening. "Jomann...?"

He looked at her immediately. "Yes?"

"Is it... is it always like this?" Brendi asked softly.

Jomann nodded his head. "Some say... some say the bond between the Leonidas family is something that cannot be explained... that its power transcends that of normal families. They would not agree... but yes... it is like this all of the time. With any Lycavorian or elven family, and for that matter, I imagine it is like this with any family... no matter their species." He answered her question as his eyes went back to the group.

“Jomann... I think... I think I may have fallen in love with Eliani and you. Both of you.” Brendi spoke softly once more. “I don’t know how or why but...”

Jomann looked at her once more, his ocean blue eyes bright. His powerful arm snaked around her waist and pulled her five foot nine body close to his. Brendi did not shy away from this action in the least and she actually pressed against him harder than he was pulling her. “We already know that Brendi Faith.” He told her. “Just as we love you.”

“What do we do?” She asked him.

“What do you want to do Brendi?” Jomann asked her even as his heart raced with new happiness.

Brendi Faith met his eyes without an ounce of fear or hesitation. “I want to experience it Jomann. I want to feel what you feel for Eliani. What she feels for you.”

“What we both feel for you?” Jomann said.

Brendi nodded. “Yes.”

“It will change your life Brendi... even more than it has already been changed.” Jomann told her. “Are you sure that is what you want?”

“Yes.” She answered instantly. “I have never been more sure of anything.”

Jomann leaned over and kissed her softly. Her hand came up and caressed his cheek as his soft lips sent shivers through her. He drew back slightly and stared at her dark brown eyes. “Then we will gladly show you what you mean to us Brendi Faith. In more ways than you could possibly imagine.”

Brendi felt her body flush and become aroused at his words and she smiled brightly. She could not deny it any longer. She did not want to deny it any longer. Her sisters and her parents had found a new life and new happiness and now Brendi decided that she was going to do the same thing.

That new life would include Eliani and Jomann, of that she had no doubts or fears, and that knowledge filled her with complete and utter happiness.

“...Returned to the Rothryn embassy.” Coren spoke as he looked across the small table between him and Androcles. Sadi sat to his right, Ne'Veha and Sehri beside her, while Eirene now sat to his left and her face glowed as she gazed at her brother. All of them had gathered in the Sitting Room now, whether it was sitting on the chairs and couches or the floor itself. Lu'ria sat on the floor between Andro's legs with Carisia and Caliria squeezed between her long legs. Coren had quickly noticed that no matter where they chose to sit, all of them were touching each other in some fashion. Denali and Lisisa and his daughter Arduri. Dorian, Sheva and Onera. Jomann Eliani and Brendi Faith. It did not matter how, they simply were. “Dyack thought it best.”

Andro nodded his head in agreement. “What is happening does not concern the Rothryn with the exception of Sehri, and it is better if they continue to stay out of it completely. We will have our own issues in the future I'm sure but right now... better that they sit this out and remain out of the line of fire.”

Coren held out the data pad to him. “I contacted my office this morning before everyone began to wake up.” He explained. “None of the other members of the SBR or the normal Board of Regents has heard anything from Ardan in regards to this. It appears he is either not going to present it to them, or he is waiting to see if the formula actually does work now that they have the entire thing.”

“Does that surprise you?” Androcles asked.

Coren shook his head. “No... but it does leave him vulnerable to leaks.”

“Really? Why?”

“Rinel and I talked of this last night.” Coren said. “There is no question he has men and women who work for him that are researchers like Caliria. However, if they find that this formula does indeed work, Rinel and I both believe he will not be able to keep it quiet for very long, if at all.”

Rinel sat casually on the arm of the couch holding the mug of Lycavorian coffee. “There are very few among the Vanari who have not been touched in some way by this chemical Prince Leonidas.” He told them calmly. “Whether it be within their family, or a family of their friends, whatever it is... all of them know what a discovery like this can do.”

“Ardan and those like him believe that our people have become so lax and detached that it is just a fact of our lives that we must deal with.” Coren continued. “I believe they count on this way of thinking and even encourage it. Ardan has shown as much in the past and you have seen this for yourself. Rinell and I believe that if the existence of the Counter Agent is revealed to the general population then it will have a cascading effect.”

“Hasn’t this already been part of your own Public Channels for weeks now?” Andro asked him. “Surely everyone must know that your children are being investigated.”

Coren nodded his head in agreement. “It has been all over our News Channels.” He said. “But Ardan and his supporters have been very careful about what they intentionally release to the News. There have been no specific charges brought up in public, only rumor, conjecture and innuendo behind their words. And the only mention of the Counter Agent that they have made has been in reference to what Caliria was working on.”

[It is true my love.] Caliria’s voice filled his head in the private connection. Andro turned to look at her where she was sitting with Carisia and Lu’ria on the floor. [Even at the University, all anyone has been concerned with are the reports that I was claiming to be your wife and mate. They made fun of me for weeks because of this and never brought up the rumors of what I was being accused of.]

[Well... I think you settled that little debate quite convincingly yesterday.] Andro told her with a very large smile.

Caliria smiled as well and Lu’ria and Carisia both chuckled as they leaned into her. [I suppose I did, didn’t I.] She spoke.

[Quite convincingly indeed!] Sadi agreed with a grin of her own.

“The largest unknown right now is the First Regent.” Coren continued as Andro turned back to him. “Alrerin Sha Harael has always been an open and very liberal mind so to speak but in the last century he has become a vocal opponent of anything having to do with bringing us closer to the former Protectorate. He has always blocked such things in a vote regardless of the outcome especially in the last century or so as I said.”

Andro sat back on the couch now looking at him. “So he will take Ardan’s side without regard for the truth?” He asked.

Coren looked at Rinell and then back to Andro. “We are not so sure that this is not an act of some kind and has been for some time.”

“I don’t follow.” Andro said.

“Five hundred and thirteen years ago Alrerin’s oldest daughter Narlei was taken by the OSG.” Coren spoke. “It was shortly after Dutkne took the reins of power fully from what I understand.”

Dutkne nodded from his chair to Andro’s right. “That sounds about right.” He spoke up.

“Unlike Caliria, she has white blond hair and was taken in a raid that saw the OSG kidnap fourteen Vanari females with dark hair.” Coren continued. “It appears that they did not know she was on the ship they hijacked. Neither did Alrerin for that matter. She was traveling with a close friend of hers that had dark hair.”

“And this matters why?” Andro asked. “If anything... I would think this would make him more open to my people.”

Rinell nodded his head. “You would think so yes.” He stated evenly. “Alrerin’s daughter was among the first Vanari females that the Protectorate rescued when Dutkne ordered such operations like this to begin on a regular basis. By this time she had been a prisoner of the same Enverr Warlord for over four hundred years. It was shortly after my wife and I married as I told Coren.” Rinell saw Andro lean forward at this news, his interest very much peaked. “When they were offered the equipment to contact their families and let them know they were free, Narlei was the first to accept. She contacted her father. When the time came for us to transport them back to Vanari space... all but two refused to leave. Narlei among them. As I told Coren, I don’t know what was spoken between them, but she was extremely adamant about not returning after that conversation with her father and she convinced the majority of the others not too as well.”

“Where is she now?” Andro asked. “Can we talk to her?”

“Two years after she refused to return to Vanari space she married a Lycavorian officer.” Rinell told him. “They have had seven children and are a cornerstone and guiding hand for the mixed relationships that have begun among our two peoples. She and her husband have become the symbol of these relationships. The man worships the very ground she walks upon as I also told Coren. She has become a very vocal voice of the Lycanari that are among us and she has incredible influence. She recently won election to a seat on the Protectorate Senate... but I do not know how the merger will affect that.”

“It won’t affect that at all.” Dutkne spoke up.

“I contacted my wife Tarnie after speaking with Coren about her.” Rinel said. “I have not heard anything back from her as of yet.”

“Does Alrerin know all this Coren?” Andro asked.

Coren shook his head. “I don’t know. I have Jokros trying to find out as much as he is able, but Alrerin Sha Harael is a very private man and has been for as long as I have known him. Even when I was a boy.”

“When do you expect to hear from Jokros father?” Arduri asked.

“He should be making contact with me tonight.” Coren said.

Andro looked at him. “Contact him first.” He stated. “You will not be here tonight.”

Coren looked at him suddenly. “What? Why?”

Andro met his gaze evenly as he rose to his feet. “They will hit us tonight and I have no intention of even accidentally losing you, Inamarno or Arduri to these fools.”

“How can you be so sure?” Rinel asked.

“It is what I would do.” Andro said. “Give us a full day and night to settle in and become comfortable and then hit us when they think we least expect it.”

“Surely the OSG can’t think they can get away with that.” Coren stated.

“It won’t be the OSG who attack us. Not directly.” Andro said.

Rinel now rose to his feet as well. “The Lycavorians who are working with them.” He said seeing Andro nod.

“It fits perfectly with what Ardan and the others are trying to do.” Androcles said. “Place blame entirely on Lycavorians for supporting and even helping the OSG. He can say anything he likes about us, even that it was some sort of internal fight between my people on how to proceed with the slavery of the Vanari females. It would cause the Vanari to turn against us as an entire people and forever destroy what we could have.”

“And tighten Ardan’s grip on power. As well as those among the OSG who control him.” Coren said.

Andro nodded his head. “Pretty much.”

Caliria and Arduri had gotten to their feet now. “I will not hide!” Caliria snapped. “Not anymore! Not ever again!”

“Nor will I!” Arduri echoed her sister.

Andro shook his head quickly. “No. I will not risk your life or Arduri’s safety for any reason Inamarno. And I will certainly not risk your father. Inamarno... you will be with Eliani, Serale and Cvea preparing to treat any wounded. Arduri... you and Nyosa will be covering your father with a contingent of the Drow scouts we have on the surface. All of you will sneak out at different portions of the day because I’m quite sure they are watching the estate even now.” He looked at Denali. “The tunnels are finished?”

Deni nodded from where he sat beside Lisisa. “Yes.”

“Tunnels?” Coren asked. “You mean that is why you have had people under my home digging?”

Andro turned back to him. “Three tunnels. Two with exits to the river and the third that extends all the way to the edge of the city.” He told him.

“How?” Coren asked in disbelief.

Andro grinned. “Aradace was quite the tunnel maker when she was small.” He answered. “Between her and Cemath... they dug tunnels all over our island on Apo Prime.”

Coren looked at Denali. “That is why we have not seen your dragon? I thought you had sent her to your ship?”

Denali shook his head. “I did... for the first couple of days.”

Andro looked at Coren. “You will be in the safe house we have established in the city. Caliria and Arduri as well with the Trauma unit my sister will set up just in case. You’ll be able to see and hear everything... but the only people who will be here are those members of my team.”

“But you have told me that there are over forty of your people hidden within the city!” Coren spoke. “If all of them attack the estate tonight you will be outnumbered!”

Rinel shook his head slowly. “Not completely Coren my friend. Ryana, myself and four of our finest snipers will be positioned across the estate. Two of them have been in place for eight hours already. This will come down to a close quarters combat battle within the walls here Coren. We do not want to be inside when that takes place. No Vanari, no matter how skilled is a match for pureblooded Lycavorians, despite how much the SBR thinks they are.”

“Trust me it is better this way sir.” Andro told him. “If they succeed in even injuring you a little bit... Ardan will turn this against us. You must not be present.”

“I don’t like it damn it!” Coren snapped.

Caliria stepped up to him. “Papa... I want to be here as well but Androcles is right.” She told him.

“Ardan and the others do not yet know of the Lycanari Coren.” Rinell said. “While we are not full blooded... we are far more capable than normal Cadre Commandos.”

“They will not attack in broad daylight.” Andro said rising to his feet. “It would raise far too many questions among your people about why so many Lycavorians are wandering about the capital when the restrictions on my people are so well known.”

Coren met his eyes. “And you are certain it is this Franklin Adams who is running their operation?”

Andro nodded. “It is him.” He said softly.

“And what will happen to him?” Coren asked.

Andro glanced at Caliria before turning to her father and Coren saw the look of death in those azure eyes. “He won’t attack the estate with the others.” Andro spoke. “He will more than likely direct the operation from their own safe house. After speaking with him at the University, I believe he is very high up in the OSG pecking order so to speak. At least here on Austrova.”

“But he is not the one giving the orders?” Coren questioned.

Andro shook his head. “No.”

Coren’s eyes grew a little wider. “His father!” He gasped.

“You have met him?”

Coren shook his head quickly. “Not directly no. Ardan and some others have invited him to different functions over the years. He is the Eridiani Ambassador to the Vanari. Their senior official. Is has to be him!”

“He is the one pulling the strings then.” Androcles spoke with a nod. “Coren, how many Eridiani are there on Austrova?”

Coren shrugged his shoulders. “Aside from those who work at the embassy... and the three hundred or so enrolled at the Austrova University... several thousand I believe. Most of them have opened cafés or stores of some kind.”

“And how many of them are OSG?” Denali asked now.

“Our Intelligence has only been able to confirm a dozen establishments that have known OSG contacts.” Coren said. “We have always kept them under close supervision but we have never moved on them because of their weapon and their threats to use it as a weapon of mass destruction against every one of our colony worlds.”

“And the others?” Andro asked.

Coren shrugged once more. “I truly do not know. Many appear very forthcoming and friendly to be honest. Never trouble with the Vanari Security Police that I am aware of. They operate fair businesses and have many Vanari as customers or patrons.”

Andro looked at Coren, stepping up to him now. “You do realize that once they conduct this attack sir... things may well rapidly spiral downward from there?”

Coren nodded his head slowly. “Yes.”

“Are you prepared for that sir?” Andro asked him. “Any action you take that makes it seem as if you are supporting us in any way will cause you to become an outcast among your peers.”

Coren met his eyes. “Only until they have their eyes opened as I have Androcles.” He stated. “And that is something I fully intend to see happen. Jokros is on his way back here as we speak. He said he has discovered some information that could work in our favor.”

Andro nodded. “We can use every advantage we can get.” He said.

“What about us Andro?” Fedor spoke now from behind where Eirene sat. “We fought the Svorag and father did not send us here to sit on our hands! Eirene and I are ready and we wil not let you do this without us!”

Coren looked at Andro. “The Svorag?” He asked.

“One of the few very bad things my father and mothers are now dealing with in the Echo Quadrant.” He answered. “It is not something we need to be concerned with right now.” He looked at Fedor as Iama stepped up to him and wrapped her tail around his thigh as she pressed close to him.

Dorian moved up beside Androcles now. [They are like us Andro.] He spoke to him in a heavily shielded connection. [At least somewhat. We will have a naturally stronger connection to them.]

[They do not have our experience fervon.] Andro said.

Dorian nodded his head. [Perhaps not... but with the depth of our connection to them, it could prove invaluable if they are spread out and monitoring things from locations that we deem important.]

Andro met Dorian's multi colored eyes for a long moment and could not deny the sound tactical move it would be. He looked back to Fedor and Eirene and made his decision.

"Very well. Fedor... you will return to SPARTA'S WRATH and take command of the QRF detail."

Andro told him. "I will assign Famus as your Second. Use his experience and knowledge fervon for he can teach you so much. If things go bad for us down here I will expect you to come screaming in to save our collective asses. Normya and Tir'ut will be flying the STRIKER you will be on so you will have extra support there as well."

Fedor nodded quickly. "I will." He stated confidently.

"Ne'Veha and I will be in the PREMONITION providing high cover." Sadi told him. "If the call comes Fedor... we will cover your STRIKER."

Fedor nodded. "Understood."

Andro looked at Dorian. "Do we have enough sets of the new Mark VI Armor?"

Dorian nodded his head. "Sa'sur just sent down the last shipment from Uncle Ben."

Andro turned back to Fedor. "Once we are done here... you and Eirene get fitted with the new armor."

"I didn't know we had new Body Armor." Fedor spoke.

Andro nodded his head. "Uncle Ben's people shipped it shortly after we left Earth. It didn't catch up to Sa'sur until they arrived here. It's essentially a much lighter version of the Cataphract Armor wore by Josie and those in the 82nd. You'll see when we are done here. It probably arrived with father as you were transiting here." Andro turned to Eirene. "Eirene... you and Miseo will accompany Eliani and Cvea." Andro said. "Once you are there I want you to coordinate with Arusk and Kimtia and monitor all the VID feeds we have across the city now. If anything appears to be out of place or suspicious... contact me or Dorian directly within Mindvoice. No matter how minor it might be. It will be easier to link with one of us because of how we were all born and it will not distract us if we are otherwise engaged. Mother says she has never seen anyone who can multitask better than you. We will need your eyes watching us and directing us."

Eirene nodded her head with a smile. "We will make you proud." She stammered.

"We are already proud of you." Denali said. "All of us."

"Which means you have nothing to prove to us." Lisisa echoed him. "Just do what father and our mothers trained you to do and everything will be fine."

"We will." Eirene said.

Andro turned and looked at where Kalis stood and had remained very silent until now. "Kalis..." He spoke. "I told you there was a spot for you here with us. I meant it."

Kalis pushed away from the wall. "I... I did not know if I would fit in." He said softly.

It was Eliani who spoke and echoed what she knew all of her siblings felt. "Fit in?" She gasped.

"Sibfla... we are all misfits! You fit in just fine!"

Andro rolled his eyes at Eliani's comment but nodded his head after a second as the rest of them laughed. "While I would not have used misfits to describe us... Eli is essentially very correct. Surprisingly!"

Eliani looked at Andro. "Blow it out your ass fervon!" She popped causing more laughter among them.

Coren and Rinel stood there flabbergasted at the exchange between the brothers and sisters and only Nyosa had a smile on her face.

"You are making jokes?" Coren gasped. "Now? Knowing what we face?"

"Just little ones sir." Denali chimed in now. "You haven't seen Eli until she gets rolling. She can cuss at you in six different languages without breaking a sweat... and she isn't afraid to use some very descriptive uses of those same languages."

Eliani smiled brightly. "What can I say, I'm very talented."

"Yes you are." Jomann spoke from beside Brendi who was pressed tightly to his side. "In more ways than one."

Eliani saw them and felt her heart flutter and fill with joy. “See?” Eliani quipped as she began to imagine the three of them together.

“Oh get a room will ya!” Lisisa exclaimed.

Andro shook his head with a large smile as he looked at Coren once more. He shrugged his broad shoulders. “We should probably go over the small details before your man Jokros arrives.” He said. “You truly do not want to hear my sisters when they get wound up.”

AUSTROVA OSG STAGING AREA ERIDIANI EMBASSY

“How many?” The Lycavorian asked as he stared at the holo image of the Re Mydala Estate.

Franklin Adams stepped up to the table. Like his father he did not care for anyone who was not Eridiani. He thought them all to be inferior to his species and what they had been able to accomplish. However, unlike his father, Franklin knew that they could not do everything by themselves. Regardless of the amount of genetic enhancement the Eridiani had undergone through the years, or how well trained they were, they would not be able to stand toe to toe with a Lycavorian in close quarters. The Lycavorians possessed far too much strength and endurance to physically overcome them in battle. This had been proven countless times when captured Lycavorians had savaged OSG soldiers in personal combat even though hampered by injuries or drugs. There were experiments underway trying to determine if they could combine the natural abilities of the Lycavorians with the Eridiani but still leave his people pure. None of their work had come to fruition as of yet because of the enormous healing properties of the Lycavorian immune system. They could sustain incredible damage and injury and still function, and their bodies naturally attacked any foreign substance either ingested or introduced into their bodies unnaturally, destroying it within moments. Advances had been made, but so far none were even close to being able to help them.

“My people in place around the estate have reported that Coren and two of his daughters are present.” Franklin answered. “There is a small, three person detachment of their Cadre Commandos consisting of an older male and two younger females. His security most likely, as the one with blond hair is never far from his side. They have also confirmed that Androcles Leonidas and all of his siblings and their wives are present.”

The Lycavorian looked up from the holo image and met his eyes. “All of them?”

“That is what I am being told.” He answered. “Is there an issue with that Unnel?”

The Lycavorian shook his head. “It seems the boy Prince is not as smart as he likes to think he is.” He stated. “He’s pulled them all into one location. We will be able to destroy the Royal family in one fell swoop. It will throw the Union into chaos and allow us to move against the Protectorate and take control.”

“Are you not all one government now?” Franklin asked.

Unnel shook his head. “There are many who did not want the merger to take place. We do not consider ourselves part of what this Union has built. We have lived without them for all of these years and we do not need them. When we succeed tonight it will give us the single opportunity that we have lacked for centuries.”

“And perhaps allow us to become closer as working partners?” Franklin said.

Unnel nodded. “There is that possibility.” He said.

“Would you allow me to pass this on to my superiors?” Franklin asked.

“I would not have mentioned it otherwise Franklin Adams.” Unnel said calmly. “We have enjoyed the working relationship we have had with the Eridiani and the OSG. I do not see why that can not continue.”

Franklin nodded. “Interesting.” He said. He looked back to the holo image of the estate. “They have installed additional defenses on the estate but we expected this and just before your assault my people will cut power to the entire grid. If you include the Vanari security detail on Coren I estimate roughly twenty individuals.”

“And none of their beasts are there?” Unnel spoke.

Franklin shook his head. “The Vanari have refused to allow them to the surface after Prince Androcles’ stunt at the Austrova University. All of them have returned to their ships in orbit.”

Unnel nodded. "We will attack from two directions." He spoke pointing to the image of the estate. "One from the river, and then over this wall here along the bank. The other will come from the main entrance through the walk in doors. The main estate gates will remain locked so as to minimize any of them possibly escaping."

"How many?" Franklin asked.

"I have my entire force." Unnel said. "Sixty-three soldiers. We have them outnumbered and our experience will give us the advantage."

"All of them have combat experience Unnel." Franklin spoke.

"They have not fought us." Unnel told him confidently.

Franklin nodded his head. "Very well. I will have three ships standing by to lift off from this Vanari garrison seven kilometers across the river to the east. All of them will be piloted by Vanari Cadre Commandos loyal to us. Once you have confirmed the deaths, they will respond to your call and extract you by landing in the courtyard one at a time." Adams told him. "You will need to gather your wounded and dead and be gone within four minutes. That is how long it will take the Vanari to respond from this garrison to the north. They are part of the Vanari 64th Recon Regiment commanded by one of Coren Re Mydala's close friends and we have never been able to insert someone into their ranks. They will also come to full alert and expect the Eastern garrison to respond but they will only wait for so long. Our people might be able to stretch that timetable for another two, possibly three minutes with false communications issues but... four minutes is your true window and the one you should use."

Unnel nodded. "We can do it." He stated. "The time of our attack should put them all in their separate rooms either sleeping or fucking like animals. We will have complete surprise."

Franklin Adams nodded his head. "Caliria Re Mydala is not to be harmed." He stated. "And we want at least one of the other two pureblood brothers. Either Denali or Deion Leonidas or one of the brothers and the female twin. Nara I believe her name is."

"For what purpose?" Unnel asked.

"That is not your concern." Franklin told him. "If all else fails... you must secure at least one of the pureblood Leonidas children except for Androcles."

"You do not care for him." Unnel said. "I can smell your hate."

Franklin looked at him. "Let's just say he took something from me that I intend to get back."

"The Vanari wench?" Unnel asked.

"Yes."

"I will make no guarantees... but we will try." Unnel told him.

"Bring her back to me unharmed and I will increase your payment by an additional five percent."

Franklin told him. "She and her sister have exhibited signs of being affected by the virus that runs within your species. We wish to study that."

"And have her in your bed whenever you want." Unnel commented with a knowing glance.

"An additional five percent." Franklin told him once more.

"The others?" Unnel asked.

Franklin shook his head. "Kill them." He answered. "Kill them all."

ECHO QUADRANT

KINTAUR HEGEMONY MEDIUM CRUISER

BRIGHT STAR

The Kintaur were a humanoid species that claimed thirteen planets as their own. The vast majority of their species were of medium height and build but very few ever reached more than two meters in height. They were a militaristic society and everything was conformed to insure their government persevered above all else. If you were part of the military or the government Quorum then you were considered above the normal citizens. Every part of their society was regimented and driven. Every citizen in the Hegemony worked for the betterment of the whole. No one questioned the government or its leaders. The citizens of the Kintaur Hegemony wanted for nothing and crime within their strict society was nearly non-existent. The punishment for most crimes was usually death, regardless of the type of crime and the sentence was carried out very swiftly. Most everything within the Hegemony was centered around keeping their military the strongest it could possibly be. New discoveries in any field were reviewed first for their military value and possible development as weapons or new technology for their ships and soldiers. There truly was no dissension within the overall society as a whole. Everyone knew their place and they accepted this as a fact of their lives.

The Kintaur military was very well trained and led. They had the finest equipment their government could develop and everything was centralized. While their technology fell just shy of the Tasmor, they were still an advanced species and not surprised by very much. Like the Tasmor they had tried on several occasions to bargain, take or capture Pralor technology in order to gain the upper hand over the other races that they deemed inferior to them. All of these attempts failed. They had gained some knowledge over the years through the torture of captured Pralor men and women, twenty-two of them total, but nothing that they could use to improve their military. Those Pralors they had captured were mainly Agricultural Scientists that were attempting to improve the growth rates of different plants from the planets they had been captured on. The thirteen men they had interrogated and killed within hours. The nine women they had raped and tortured for several weeks before sending them to their homeworld to be dealt with. Their final fate was unknown except to a few.

The Brig of the BRIGHT STAR was especially barren of any comforts. There were six holding cells, all but one empty at the moment. Three Kintaur were sitting at the small table playing some sort of board game, two more were resting on the uncomfortable looking bunks along the bulkhead, and two were standing at the view window trying to get a glimpse of what it was they were pursuing since their Captain had pulled them out of orbit. The last two men were the Brig officer and his Second. They were standing in front of the cell looking at the half naked body of the badly beaten Tasmor soldier they had captured from her ship yesterday. They had boarded the Tasmor frigate with a small force with one purpose and that was to take this female prisoner. It did not matter that they had lost nineteen of the twenty-four members of the boarding party; they had succeeded in their goal.

The Tasmor female's standard green patterned fatigues were nearly shredded from her body. They had taken her boots from her, and shredded the fatigue jacket she had been wearing. The flimsy shirt she wore underneath was torn nearly in half, exposing one of her firm breasts, while her fatigue pants she held together with one hand in some sense of dignity. Her entire body was badly bruised, small cuts on her breasts and a larger laceration across the back of her left shoulder. Her legs appeared as if she had been dragged through some sort of thorn bush and dried blood was evident all across her skin. Both of her legs appeared swollen and the wounds puffy and just beginning to ooze clear liquid from the open sores. Her breathing came in labored gasps, her long blond hair falling over her face and hiding her features. Unlike other Tasmor prisoners they had taken in the past, this one had been left unsullied. They had beaten her and subjected her to light torture, but First Warrior Gars had left orders insuring she was not to be violated. At least not yet.

The Brig officer turned his head to look at his two men by the view window. "Do you see anything?" He asked.

"No sir!" One man answered. "If we have moved to intercept a Tasmor ship we cannot see it from this side."

"Return to your duties then!" The man ordered. "We may yet have more prisoners to deal with and I want to...!"

There was a bright, yellowish/red flare of light behind him combined with a strange whining noise and the Brig Officer and his Second whirled around. His black eyes grew wide in stunned shock as seven humanoid figures appeared within the center of that light and instantly materialized into solid forms. Three of them were utterly huge individuals; easily over two meters in height, and all of them carried black weapons that seemed to be extensions of their bodies. All of them wore some type of conforming black and red armor that he had never seen before.

"Break now!" Danny hissed out the order as he stepped forward and lifted his silenced P190A4 and jammed it into the chest of the Brig officer, loosing a five round burst into the Kintaur's broad chest before the man had a chance to register shock on his face.

The five 12.7mm DA coated hollow points were specifically designed to do maximum damage on a target without actually leaving the target's body. This type of round had been the ideal choice for assaulting old world jet aircraft and for the Air Marshalls that sometimes rode those same aircraft back on Earth in the early twenty first century. The lethal rounds traveled at incredible velocity but would not penetrate and exit a target's body and possibly puncture the skin of an aircraft while in flight. Martin had ordered this round back into production within the first two years of him returning as King and now they were the standard ammo used in all Union Special Operations. Union engineers had switched to the Kavalian 12.7mm round several years earlier for its added stopping power and when added to the Dragon Armor coating on the round, hence the DA identifier in the round's name, they were instantly deadly rounds. They had left Earth in a hurry for their search for For'mya, leaving without this specialized ammo but Andro's supply ships had been stocked to overflowing with these rounds and he knew how his father liked to operate.

The five round burst entered the Kintaur's chest at nearly four thousand feet per second and instantly upon entering his chest the lethal DA coated rounds expanded and then splintered, doing horrific damage to the chest cavity, shredding organs and shattering bones. The kinetic energy was instantly spent however and the Kintaur Officer's body was flung back two meters from the force of the rounds just as T'lolt and Tony broke from around his side lifting their own weapons.

Two five round bursts and the Kintaur who had been standing beside their view window were lifted off their feet and fell to the deck, both of them with accurate shots and pink colored blood leaking from those holes to pour over the front of their bodies. Kenny and Pablo had moved around T'lolt and Tony and both of them sprayed the two Kintaur who had been lying on the cots with accurate bursts. None of the men made it halfway up before the rounds perforated their bodies and destroyed vital organs. As Kenny and Pablo continued to track their weapons to the remaining three Kintaur, they watched as those men sitting at the table were all dispatched with lethally precise head shots from Julie and Anuk. It was over in exactly nine seconds and Danny's head turned to Kenny.

"Kenny! Pablo! Cover the door!" Danny hissed as he jammed the barrel of his A4 under the chin of the last Kintaur. "Jules... get on the power grid to this thing."

"On it!" Julie spoke as she blurred to the wall of computers.

T'lolt and Tony swept over the bodies of the dead Kintaur and tossed aside any hidden weapons just to be certain.

"T'lolt?" Danny barked softly as he moved to the side of the only active cell.

"They are all dead Daniel." T'lolt replied as he flung what appeared to be a hand weapon of some sort under the nearby bunk. The pinkish colored blood was beginning to pool on the floor. "I think."

"You think?" Daniel gasped.

"We have never encountered this species before Daniel." T'lolt complained.

"Don't think!" Daniel rasped. "Be sure! Better safe than sorry T'lolt my friend!"

T'lolt did not take offense at Daniel's urgent tone of voice and he simply drew out the silenced K12 KM and pressed it to the Kintaur's forehead, caressing the trigger once. He stood up and did the same with the three men in the cots. He turned back to Daniel. "Now I am sure." He stated.

Daniel shrugged his broad shoulders. "Works for me." He stated. "Jules?"

"Standard brig controls for the most part." Julie spoke as her hands drifted over the console.

"Can you open this cell?" Daniel asked. "We're burning daylight here!"

"The upload to our implants only let's us speak their language! I can't read their fucking language Simpson!" Julie declared.

Danny turned his yellow wolf eyes on the Kintaur and exposed his fangs. The Kintaur's eyes grew wide in fear when he saw this. He appeared younger than the officer, at least to Dan. "Hi! We're from the Interstellar Prisoner Exchange Association." Danny spoke. "And right now... we are here to exchange your prisoner from your custody to ours. You understand me right?"

The Kintaur officer bobbed his head up and down quickly. Danny grinned as he realized the language upload that Tobia had conducted on all of their internal implants had worked perfectly. "Which control to release the force field?" Danny asked.

The Kintaur motioned with his hand to the far console beside where Julie stood. "The... the blinking red one!" He managed to stammer.

"Jules?"

"Got it!" Julie barked as her hand came down on the button and the soft humming of the energy barrier in front of Danny ceased as the barrier disappeared.

Danny looked at the Kintaur. “Thanks. You’ve been a big help.” Dan caressed the trigger of his A4 and sent one round up into the skull of the Kintaur officer. His body leaped off the ground from the power of such a close range shot and then dropped like a bag of rocks to the deck. “Anuk baby!” Danny barked even as Anuk broke from where she was standing against his back and moved into the cell where the Tasmor woman was staring at them in unabashed awe.

Anuk held up her hands as she dropped to her knees in front of her, swinging her A4 around behind her body and out of the immediate ability for the prisoner to grasp it and use it against them. “We are here to help you!” She spoke. “I am a Field Medical Officer. Do you understand me?”

The Tasmor was staring directly at Danny, who had his A4 pointed at her, the small laser dot centered directly over the bridge of her nose. Anuk stayed out of her husband’s line of sight, knowing that he was using standard protocols and protecting her. She reached out to take the young woman’s beaten and bloody face in her hands. When she felt Anuk touch her skin her head moved instantly and was looking at her.

“You understand us yes?” Anuk asked her once more.

The woman nodded her head quickly now. “Yes... yes!” She saw the elegantly curved four inch high elven ears on Anuk and her eyes grew even wider. Whenever she conducted an operation like this, Anuk always pulled her rust colored red hair into a tightly bound pony tail that fell to the middle of her back, leaving her elven ears fully exposed. “What... what are you?”

Anuk opened her hands in a show of passiveness. “We are friends. I am a doctor and I want to treat you quickly so we can get you out of here. What is your name?”

“I am... I am Third Officer Emylea Daret.” She stammered.

Anuk smiled brightly at her now. Daniel and Nayeca both had told her for years that she had the warmest and most enticing smile of anyone they had ever met. Her smile alone could put a person at ease almost immediately and while she had heard others speak the same thing, Anuk never really believed them. In fact it was very true as the Tasmor woman saw that smile and the obvious intelligence of her cerulean blue eyes and this put her immediately at ease.

“I want to scan you quickly Emylea and then give you a shot that will increase your heart rate and give you an energy boost. A stimulant to be exact.” Anuk told her. “It will only take a few seconds... but it will allow you to shrug off the effects of any drugs they may have given you or the physical torture they forced you to endure.”

Emylea nodded quickly as Anuk brought the scanner up and she glanced once more at Danny as he had now lowered his weapon and turned to the others.

“Jules?” He called out.

“Running the tap!” Julie barked. “Avi... you getting this?”

-Affirmative Julie- Avi’s calm mechanical voice echoed in their implants. -Elder Valael is reviewing it as you send it-

“Twenty seconds is all you are getting and then we’re out of here!” Julie hissed.

-Understood-

Emylea’s eyes darted back and forth between Daniel, Tony and T’lolt where they had moved up beside him. She had seen the huge black man extend wolf fangs like those men and women she had seen on the planet below and his eyes had changed in color as well, now a bright yellowish brown color. She had never seen one so large as him before however, or the even larger black skinned man beside him who also had changed eyes and full fangs. The third man was completely new to her with his bronze colored skin, massive body and strange features on his face. He seemed to have spikes all along his jaw line that extended into the thick hair on his neck. She turned back to the female.

“Who... who are you?” She gasped. “I have...” Anuk looked up and Emylea’s eyes grew wider still when she realized that Anuk had changed eyes as well and the tips of her fangs were exposed just under her lip. “You are like them!” She gasped aloud. “You are... you are like the men and... you are Lycavorian!”

Anuk looked up quickly. “You know what we are?” She asked her sensing Danny’s head come around and look at them.

Emylea nodded. “Your kind... your kind is on the planet below. Lycavorians. But I have never seen one with ears like you. Or like him.” She motioned with her head to where T'lolt stood.

“How many of our people are on the surface?” Danny asked moving closer as Anuk passed the medical scanner over her chest now.

“Not many now. A few hundred at most scattered across the planet in the ruins of your cities.” Emylea answered almost immediately. “We have moved most of the survivors from this world. It is not safe here.”

“Survivors?” Anuk questioned looking at her before glancing up at Danny.

“You are them!” Emylea said. “How do you not know of...?” Her blue eyes narrowed somewhat and she looked back up to where Dan stood. “Who... are you?”

“We are friends.” Anuk said. “We came looking for our people and instead we found you and these men.” She lifted the hypo injector. “This is the medicine I told you of. I want to inject it so we can leave this ship.”

Emylea nodded her head quickly. If she had her strength back and she needed to, she could fight her way free, but not in this condition. They had beaten her badly, though they had not yet raped her, which was unusual to say the least and without a stimulant of some sort she would be utterly helpless. “We must hurry!” She stammered. “They will know what has happened here very soon. They are savages but they are efficient.”

“That’s all you are getting Avi!” Anuk heard Julie call out as she nodded and gently pressed the hypo against her neck and depressed the button. She saw Emylea grimace slightly but that quickly passed. She gripped her arm gently then.

“We are not the enemy Emylea.” She spoke. “We are here to get you off this ship and return you to your people. You must trust me.”

Emylea lifted her eyes. “Trust must be earned.” She said.

Anuk nodded and got to her feet holding out her hand. “Then let us earn it.”

Emylea didn’t hesitate for she felt she could trust this strange woman. She took her hand and saw Anuk smile. “Daniel... your space blanket!” Anuk called.

Danny turned slightly away from her, effectively blocking Emylea from other eyes and presented his back to her. Emylea took notice of this action regardless and she relaxed even more as she realized he was blocking any view of her near naked form. “In my pack Baby!” He told her.

Anuk flipped up the Velcro flap and pulled out the silver, light weight blanket. She turned back to Emylea and wrapped it around her shoulders tightly, covering her near naked body. “We are ready.” Anuk told him.

Danny nodded. “Time to go folks!” Dan barked as Julie dashed back over to him and stepped up to Emylea on the opposite side to help support her. Danny touched his ear implant.

“Ghost Two to ARC ROYAL. Avi... get us out of this stink pot!”

-Stand by. Activating Teleporter-

“Wait!” The strange voice echoed in their implants. “Wait! Daniel wait!”

Dan’s eyes narrowed somewhat as he recognized Valael’s voice. “Elder Valael... we are in a hurry here!” He snapped.

“Daniel... it was a trap!” Valael spoke quickly. “I am reviewing the logs we tapped. These Kintaur apparently knew who was on the Tasmor ships. They had orders to come here and take the young woman prisoner at all costs.”

Danny looked at Emylea between Anuk and Julie and her face showed confusion when she saw him react in such a manner. “Are you sure Valael?” Danny asked him.

“It is the reason Delnash sent Tobia and I with you. Both of us can read Kintaur and speak their native tongue. This First Warrior Gars was under orders to capture the young woman you have rescued.”

“Coincidence?” Daniel asked.

“I do not believe in coincidences Daniel Simpson.” Valael answered.

“Yeah... neither to I.” Daniel spoke. “Stand by!” Danny tapped his jaw twice, switching channels on his implant. “Ghost Two to REPULSE Actual!”

“Nemoa here General Simpson! Go!”

“Captain... I am remanding the King’s order to destroy this ship! Cripple it and make sure it doesn’t leave the system, but do not destroy it! Confirm.” Daniel stated.

There were perhaps a dozen individuals within the entire Lycavorian Union that had the authority to countermand an order from the King. General/Colonel Daniel Simpson was one of them.

“Confirming new orders! Incapacitate only!” Nemoa answered.

Danny switched channels once more. “Avi... execute!”

-Teleporting- Avi answered instantly.

In the same flash of light as when they had arrived, Daniel and his team vanished. They left nine dead Kintaur and many questions that the Kintaur would never be able to answer.

ARC ROYAL

MAIN TELEPORT STATION ONE

-...Have them- Avi’s voice spoke from behind the console. -Strike Team One has returned-

“Akemi!” Martin’s voice rang out as he entered the Teleport Station with Aricia, Anja, Colin, Thoti, Cody and eight other members of the Durcunusaan. “Break for the planet now!”

“Already done Martin!” Akemi’s voice filled the internal COM.

“Avi?” Martin questioned as he passed Avi at the controls.

-I will put you down four hundred meters in front of them Martin- Avi answered. -At their current rate of advance they will be upon your position two minutes after you arrive. The other teams are standing by on Station Two’s pad and all three support pads-

Martin nodded his head. “Forty-six will be enough.” He stated as he stepped onto the main teleport pad, one hand gripping his A4.

-Daniel has rescinded your order for the Kintaur ship Martin- Avi reported. -Additional information was discovered-

Martin watched as the others stepped onto the pad as well and moved around him. Aricia was on his right and Anja on his left. “Danny has that authority Avi. If he did it... then he has his reasons. Coordinate with him and let him run with it.”

-Understood-

Anja looked up at Martin with questions in her beautiful eyes. “It’ll be fun Red.” He said with a grin. “Don’t worry so much!”

Anja snorted in disgust. “Fun?” She stated. “Scattering your atoms into little tiny pieces and transferring them through some sort of sub space dimension onto a planet that is still three hundred and seventy thousand kilometers from where we are standing is fun to you?”

Aricia chuckled as Martin leaned over and nuzzled her cheek. “You’ll see.” He said. “Our son did it.”

“Our son is even more malda than you!” Anja spat. She looked away and gripped her A4. “I swear... one of these days I’m going to have both of you committed to a facility for those who are criminally insane.”

“Melyanna... we don’t have such a facility.” Aricia spoke from Martin’s other side.

“Then I’ll have one built for these two and wait for them to do something this stupid again!” Anja declared. “Then I’ll commit them.”

“C’mon... what happen to it’s not just a job it’s an adventure.” Martin spoke.

“Sibfla... that saying was meant for an ocean going Navy that didn’t even know life existed out here Martin!” Anja hissed at him. She looked up into his eyes once more. “Before you and your big cock ever came out of stasis and corrupted me Martin Leonidas and before I even got to Earth!”

All of them heard the others around them laugh softly at Anja’s words. They had heard it many times in the past and it never ceased to amuse them.

-Shall I abort the...-

“No!” Anja barked. “Just do it Avi! If I am going to...”

-Teleporting- Avi spoke as he pressed the console and Anja’s words vanished in the yellowish red flash of light. Avi turned when he heard the soft laughing from his side and he looked at the female Vampire Engineer who would control this station when he was not here.

“The King is going to have some serious body worshipping to do when they get back.” She said. “Queen Anja was just getting wound up.”

-Indeed- Avi spoke in reply knowing that she was very correct. -Your assessment is quite accurate- He turned to the other Durcunusaan who were moving on to the teleport pad. -Prepare to initiate second sequence-

VENTORI

This mission had been ill thought out from the very beginning and thrown together far too quickly she thought to herself as she stood behind the massive uprooted tree and watched with alert dark brown eyes as her people moved through the timber all around her mingled with the several dozen Lycavorians they had been able to find. She could see that almost half of the Lycavorians had changed their forms and were sprinting back and forth, yelping with short barks of encouragement and even urgency to the others. This was her sixth mission here and she knew enough of the Lycavorians and their people now to know that they had found two family packs hiding within the remains of the city. She did not know why her mother’s quorum had decided to help them three years ago, but once the decision was made they had begun to make weekly forays back to Ventori in order to take more and more of them off this dead world. Nearly six million Lycavorians had been relocated to seven different Tasmor worlds so far in the last three years and each trip here was becoming more and more dangerous. Word had leaked out somehow that they were doing this, and now the Kintaur had taken notice and had begun to come to this world as well looking for new slaves. The Kintaur cruiser had appeared from light speed travel within the planetary system and was upon them before they had realized it. She and her people were already on the surface and the last reports she had received from their ship was that they were under attack and the Kintaur had boarded one of the Frigates and taken her sister prisoner before they had been able to repel the attack. Emylea had been in overall command of the operation and her last order before being captured was to hide within the nebula on the far side of the planet and for her people on the surface to disappear into the deep timber.

The Lycavorian people who called this planet home had been very wary when they first arrived. The Tasmor Quorum had known they existed but had elected to not pursue first contact with them. They had a very stable government and while their technology as a whole was much lesser than the Tasmor, they had been well on their way to discovering space flight within the next fifty years or so. Their innate ability to transform their bodies into the shape of wolves had fascinated many Tasmor scientists and doctors and this had been studied for some time from safe locations hidden on the planet that the Tasmor had established. They had a large military that was well equipped and very well trained, and when added to their obvious other abilities, it was decided to not pursue relations just yet. From what they had been able to determine through years of watching them, there had been no wars between the Lycavorians on Ventori in all of their history. They were hard working and committed to one another in a way that even the Tasmor people were not.

It wasn't until after the Svorag had come that things changed.

The Lycavorians had fought savagely and valiantly, but in the end it did not matter. Their military had been crushed within the first month of the invasion, swarmed over by numbers and superior weapons. Then the Svorag had decimated their cities, killing millions and millions of innocents while taking millions of prisoners, most of them female Lycavorians. It wasn't until the Svorag had finally left that they had begun to come here trying to discover if they could help whatever survivors remained. They had found far more than anyone had first thought and the decision was quickly made to relocate them. Now she was not so sure that had been a good idea. In the last year alone they had lost thirteen combat ships to the Kintaur Hegemony and another twenty to random Svorag patrols. Nearly twenty thousand of her fellow Tasmor and equal that number of Lycavorians. The Kintaur had developed new engines it seemed and were now able to skirt Tasmor space in much less time and come here.

They had scanned the area for two days before Emylea had decided to continue to the surface. Then the Kintaur had arrived. It had gone downhill from there.

She turned her head just as the large wolf skidded to a halt beside her and she watched as the graying brown furred wolf transformed before her eyes in a soft white explosion of light. Unlike many of her people, she did not look down upon the Lycavorians as inferior to them. They were a proud and strong species and while very different from her own people, they were not stupid. When the transformation was complete the much older Lycavorian squatted beside her. He was of medium height but lean and in excellent condition. His dark brown hair was wild and almost shoulder length, his beard trimmed. Gray flowed through his hair extensively, but this did not take away from his physical condition as it would with many other species. Gray in their hair usually meant they were old and frail. That was not the case with Lycavorians she had discovered. It was a sign of experience and age, something the Tasmor had revealed within the first weeks of beginning these missions. Lycavorians were very much like Pralors in that they were essentially immortal.

"They are closing on us Namiri." The man spoke urgently. "We must stop and face them while the women and children continue to the river or they will kill us all!"

"How far Nalmos?" She asked him even as her dark eyes turned to look back the way they had come.

"A hundred meters. Two at most. We must turn to face them." Nalmos spoke.

"Damn!" Namiri Daret exclaimed in a harsh whisper.

Namiri Daret, the youngest of her mother's six daughters at twenty-three years old and the one least respected and looked upon as a daughter of the Tasmor Sovereign Regent. Her dark brown and red colored haired was very long and now pulled into a pony tail and tucked within her light weight body armor. She had the full lips, high cheekbones and delicate brow bone ridges of her mother but the deeply tanned skin and large dark brown eyes of her father. The brow bone ridges of the Tasmor were what set her people apart. They could be sharp and severe or, as with Namiri and her sisters, delicately curved and sloping and quite attractive. Namiri was very petite, unlike her sisters, at only five foot three and barely a hundred and five pounds soaking wet, but she had long legs for her height, a slim waist and very firm and impressive sized breasts. She had made a decision when she was young to honor her Tasmor father by joining the ground forces of the Tasmor military. Her father was one of the few Tasmor men who had climbed the ranks into leadership roles and she had wanted to honor him for this. Her sisters, all but Emylea, had made fun of her for this. They considered themselves above such things and her mother did nothing to discourage how they treated her. She may have been the daughter of the Tasmor Sovereign Regent and held the title of Lady Regent like her sisters, but Namiri was very much alone in the great scheme of things. Only Emylea had ever shown her the love of a sister, and the two of them were very close. This frustrated her mother and older sisters but Emylea did not care and she had remained very close with her and made it a point for them to do many things together.

Namiri lifted the small MIC she wore on her combat harness. "Alpha and Beta teams break off into defensive positions now! Charlie Team continue to the river with the women and children! Execute!"

Namiri saw Nalmos stiffen beside her and she looked at him as he sniffed the air. "What is it?" She exclaimed.

“Some... something!” He rasped.

“More Kintaur from behind us?” Namiri gasped.

Nalmos shook his head quickly. “Something... something all around us.” He spoke in almost a whisper. “Something wild and pure!”

“Nalmos what are you talking about?” Namiri almost yelled. “We need to...”

The war scream cut off her words and caused both of them to whirl and watch in what appeared to be slow motion as the Kintaur warrior came charging over the massive log with his weapon raised. He carried the huge Kintaur pain stick, a large club like instrument designed to inflict horrible and incapacitating electrical charges into its victims. One full strike could render a fully grown man or woman almost helpless as electricity coursed through their bodies and the blunt end of the club broke bones or ruptured muscles. This was the Kintaur War Leader. The largest and most fearsome of the Kintaur ground troops, the War Leader commanded all of their ground troops in any given situation. Even as Namiri attempted to bring her weapon to bear, that pain stick came flashing forward and caught her a glancing blow on her arm. Thankfully it only connected with the barrel of her weapon and not her flesh, but as she watched her weapon sail away with horror filled eyes Namiri knew it was too late. Nalmos reared up with a savage growl but the Kintaur’s opposite hand flashed out and struck the older Lycavorian a solid blow to his head and sent him sprawling to the ground. The War Leader’s eyes returned to Namiri as she stared up at him frozen in fear.

“You are mine now Namiri Daret!” The Kintaur bellowed. “And I will enjoy our time together! I will...”

Namiri’s eyes grew even wider as she saw the War Leader’s eyes bug out of his head and his chest exploded outward, showering her torso with pinkish Kintaur blood. Namiri saw the glistening, almost invisible head of some sort of spear protruding from the War Leader’s chest almost a foot and she watched as the War leader looked down to stare in shock at the blood covered spear causing the agony wracking his body now. His Pain Stick fell from suddenly useless fingers and both his hands moved to grasp the protruding shaft. Namiri gasped in shock as the air behind the War Leader shimmered and the light altered as the form of a huge man in strange armor appeared behind him. She watched as he leaned close over the War Leader’s shoulder and then she saw the yellow/golden colored eyes and savagely barred fangs under the helmet. Long fangs not unlike the fangs she has seen on Lycavorians in the past but this set of fangs had another set of equally wicked looking teeth beside them and together the dual fangs were the most frightening thing she had ever seen in her life.

And then Namiri heard that apparition speak.

“Not in this lifetime motherfucker!” Martin Leonidas snarled savagely just before twisting and then wrenching his Nehtes out of the Kintaur’s chest with incredible strength.

Namiri heard the War Leader’s spine snap as close as she was and she heard the rush of air leave his lungs and they were shredded but she could not take her eyes from the massive armored form standing above her.

Then, as if from some ancient story of warriors that her father had read to her as a child, Namiri saw them begin to appear all around. Huge armored forms appearing all around them from thin air and lifting weapons like she had never seen and moving without fear or hesitation directly at the advancing Kintaur forces. She could hear the soft popping of weapons and as the armored forms moved directly for the Kintaur forces and with each popping sound she saw a Kintaur soldier fall. Namiri’s eyes turned back to the huge man in front of her and saw the multicolored plume extending down the back of his helmet as he touched the side of his helmet.

“Sweep and clear!” His voice barked out. “No prisoners!”

Namiri’s eyes filled with stunned shock as she saw the white flash of light so similar to when she saw other Lycavorians shift their forms. Yet the wolf that materialized in front of her now was nearly three times the size of any Lycavorian she had ever seen before, Nearly four feet tall at the shoulders and Namiri could actually see the bands of muscle flex under the raven black fur as that wolf sprang into the air and released a savage howl. Namiri kicked her way to where Nalmos was staring in disbelief at what was happening and she reached for him.

“Nalmos!” She barked. “They... they are Lycavorian!” She cried out.

“They are... they are Alphas!” Nalmos shouted out. “They are Alpha Lycavorians! Praise the gods in the stars! We did not... we did not believe any still existed!”

Namiri's head snapped around when she heard several shouts from her own people and then she saw what they were frantically motioning at. From the northeast timber another group of these new Lycavorians burst forth and fell upon the Kintaur with death in their eyes. Namiri caught the glimpse of motion and she could only gawk in disbelief as she saw the forms of two females moving so fast that they blurred in motion as they entered the melee, short blades flashing in the rising sunlight.

"Nalmos... how is this possible?" Namiri gasped aloud. "I thought... I thought you said all these Alphas of your people were long dead!"

"Well... the explanation is rather long." The female voice spoke from behind them and both of them whirled around to see the two figures behind them. Namiri was stunned at how close they had gotten without her keen senses detecting them. "But not entirely boring."

Anja reached up and lifted her helmet from her head as the massive form of Atropos covered her and Aricia from one knee slightly behind her. Anja shook her head gently and let her Persian red hair fall free.

"Anja... I will join our Beloved." Aricia spoke from beneath her own helmet, her hand reaching out to squeeze Anja's arm. Aricia's azure colored wolf eyes captured Namiri's gaze like a magnet and held her.

Anja nodded. "Go! He is angry Little Wolf... see to it that he does nothing stupid." She spoke. "Remind him he is King."

Aricia laughed softly. "He hates when we do that... but I will try."

Namiri could only gasp in shock as Aricia moved with incredible speed and sprinted away from them directly into the fray below them on the ridge. Her eyes turned back to Anja as she dropped to one knee in front of her and Nalmos. She appeared completely unfazed at the battle that was raging only a hundred meters away and her jade colored wolf eyes were simply incredible. Namiri saw the huge man behind her touch his helmeted head and nod.

"Anja... my Queen." He spoke formally as was his way when not alone with her or among family and friends. "Duewa and your medics are down and she is establishing a triage area four hundred meters from our location. Security is being established as we speak. We should begin moving the civilians out of the area while the King and the Durcunusaan deal with these fools."

"Que... you are a Queen?" Namiri gasped aloud.

Anja nodded her head as she looked at Nalmos and then back to Namiri. "We have ships landing as we speak and we have established a medical triage area behind us. You seem to be the one in charge of your people so if you would let them know to begin moving that way I would appreciate it." Anja turned to Atropos. "Give the order Atropos. Anyone not actively engaged... start ushering our people back out of the kill zone."

Anja saw Nalmos sniff the air slightly and gaze at her. "You are... you are not entirely Lycavorian... yet you... you are a female Alpha." He stammered the words.

"There is a story to that." Anja explained. "One which we can talk about later." She looked at Namiri. "We know of your people from the Pralor Tobia..."

"Tobia?" Namiri gasped once more. "You... you know of her? Of the Pralor people?"

Anja nodded her head. "She is with the medical triage unit. I would ask that you inform your people we are not the enemy and we are here to help... but if they do something stupid we will not hesitate to kill them. Our husband and mate is not in the best of moods since we arrived here. He gets upset when people try to hurt or kill our people. You saw that for yourself."

Nalmos stared at her in incredulity. "That... that was your husband and mate?" He rasped.

Anja smiled brightly. "Yep. Big, reckless lug that he is. We love him though." Anja's words caused Atropos to chuckle softly.

"You... you called him King." Namiri stammered. "And he..." She looked at Atropos. "He called you Queen."

Anja nodded. "We are from the Lycavorian Union." She spoke proudly and Nalmos saw Atropos's chest swell with pride at her words. "We've come to take you home."

VENTORI ZARAH'S AMBUSH SITE

Though it would not become known to Zarah Leonidas for many months, this day was the day that she earned complete and utter faith in her abilities from her father, the only man outside of her brother Androcles whose opinion mattered most to her. Young though she may have been, Zarah's connection to Andro had bestowed gifts upon her that she would not have otherwise had. Many who were close to the Leonidas family, mainly the Durcunusaan, took notice of this closeness and the extra training that Androcles had given to his sister through the years. It was these gifts that she had cultivated and perfected over the same years. Androcles already knew what his sister could do, he already trusted in her abilities, for Zarah knew he would never have put her in charge of training the High Coven riders in hand to hand combat had he not. Since those horrific moments, once Lucia had come into her life and saved her from the abyss, all Zarah wanted to do was show her father that she was not a broken child. That she was still the young woman she had been. His love for her was unquestioned, Zarah knew that, it was his faith in her recovery and her combat abilities that she knew worried him the most. Zarah Leonidas would lay her father's doubts about her to rest for all time today. And thanks to her adopted elven grandfather Vengal's senior Durcunusaan Scouts, the word would spread quickly that Zarah Leonidas, like her father and brother Androcles, had no mercy or pity whatsoever in her petite body for her enemies.

The moment they had materialized on Ventori, Vengal's senior men could only look on with awe and approval as Zarah and Lucia immediately flew into action. The two of them were like a single entity as they issued orders and men and women began to take up positions. When the second group materialized, Lucia was directing them to their positions almost before they had fully formed. There was no hesitation on their part in the least; they spoke with confidence and purpose and with a single voice. It was Zarah Leonidas who noticed Radem first and she moved right up to the Evolli assassin without regard as others looked on. They shared several whispered words and Radem bowed his head in respect to her at the end of their conversation. All of them noticed that Radem then became Zarah and Lucia's shadow.

While the information would never be made public nor would it be acknowledged in the least by anyone who knew the truth, by the Royal Order of King Martin Leonidas, Radem had been assigned as the permanent protector of Zarah and Lucia Leonidas. This role suited Radem just fine. New found faith and hope flowed through Radem as it now flowed through his people and at Martin Leonidas' request, Radem had sworn to teach Zarah and Lucia everything he had ever learned in his years of warfare, including his unequaled skills as an assassin. It would become known among the Royal family and all of the Durcunusaan as time passed, but those with Martin and the others right now already knew that Radem's actions had earned him a place of high honor. For the first time in the history of the Union, an Evolli would now walk the walls of power within the Union freely and forever have a place of honor and respect among the family that had once been so hated and feared among his people. This information would finally make its way back to the Evolli homeworld and the planets they claimed in the months ahead and it would forever seal the trust and loyalty of an entire people that had once been bitter and savage enemies. This knowledge would spur the Evolli to great things in the future to come and no matter where a Leonidas walked within Evolli space they would be honored and trusted friends. Also unknown to Radem or anyone else at this time, the moment he had killed Pusintin and fulfilled his sacred oath to Androcles, he had secured his own bloodline's future. From this day and for millennia to come, the bloodline of the Evolli Holnari Convoasce family would be tied to the Leonidas Royal family, never to be sundered or dismissed. Future generations of both families would walk together, fight together and call themselves kindred souls.

The moment the Kintaur soldiers rushing headlong through the timber came into the kill zone, Zarah Leonidas acted without hesitation and sprang their ambush. None of the Kintaur troops moving through the timber were rookies; all of them had seen some form of combat through the years. However, the last few years had seem them doing nothing but collecting prisoners and slaves who did not fight back and none of them had ever been on the receiving end of such a vicious and unforgiving ambush by forces with greater firepower and one thing that the Kintaur lacked.

Purpose.

The ambush was meticulously executed, regardless of the fact it had essentially been thrown together at the last minute. This was what the Spartans within the Union excelled at however, and this is why they may have lost battles throughout the years, but they had never lost a war. A full minute of sustained fire from over forty P190 A4s had shredded the Kintaur forces like so much Swiss cheese. Going one step further than what her father had wanted and pulling from her brother's knowledge and tactics he had used, Zarah had laid a perfect S type ambush. No matter which direction the Kintaur tried to run, they were slaughtered and chopped to pieces from hidden Spartans. It was over before the Kintaur truly knew what was happening and then Zarah rose to her feet and surveyed the smoky terrain before her.

"All teams report!" Zarah barked into her implant.

"Team One... no casualties."

"Team Two... we're good."

"Team Three... just peachy."

"Team Four... a little more resistance would have been nice."

Zarah couldn't help but smile and look at Lucia as Lucia rose to her feet next to her. "We did it." Zarah muttered softly not realizing that, also from this day forward, she had the combat unit she had always wanted.

"Do not delay Zarah and Lucia." Radem's voice echoed softly from behind them and Zarah and Lucia turned to look at him as he was changing magazines in his A4 smoothly and without conscious thought. "We must reunite with your father as quickly as possible. They will engage within moments. Surprise and speed is our friend at the moment and we must make every use of it."

Zarah nodded and began moving, lifting her hand and tapping her jaw implant. "Sweep and kill any survivors!" She ordered. "No prisoners people! They were hunting our kind and carians knows what they intended! Let us make a statement of our own! Thirty seconds and then we break for my father's position!"

The first true test of Zarah and Lucia Leonidas' combat ability and leadership capability had been proven. There would be many more in the future to come.

VENTORI ORBIT

ULU REPULSE

"...Heard the General!" Nemoa spoke as she rose from her chair. "Tactical... give me a place to shoot and kill all power on that ship except life support! What's their hull made of?"

"Standard Duetronium Captain! Guess they use it out here like we do back home!" The Sensor Officer barked out. "Still running with no shields!"

"Fucking fools!" Nemoa spoke softly.

The Tactical Officer was already prepared. "Here!" He announced as he brought up the holo image of the Kintaur ship. "Focused, tight beam shots from the five forward Type I turrets Captain! Take them in a tractor beam and then punch their engine core right out the bottom of their ship before it even has time to explode!"

"How many will that kill TO?" Nemoa asked.

The man looked up at her. "Forty-seven are currently in their engineering section." He told her. "None of them will survive."

"Captain!" The COM officer shouted. "Captain... I think they have figured out General Simpson stopped in to say hello and took their Tasmor prisoner!"

"Sibfla!" Nemoa hissed. "Ops...?"

"They appear to be channeling power to their forward weapons array Captain!" The man answered.

"That's it then!" Nemoa spoke. "Ops... hit them with a tractor! TO... bring turrets two through five to bear. Tightest beam focus we can obtain! Weapons officer...?"

"Standing by!" The voice echoed before Nemoa even got to finish her statement. She smiled to herself. She loved her crew.

"Captain... the Kintaur ship is hailing us!"

"Put it up." Nemoa spoke.

The face of Gars appeared and if Nemoa was any judge of character he was not happy.

“You have taken my ship within some sort of holding beam!” He screamed. “Release us at once or I will open fire and destroy your vessel!”

Nemoa chuckled. “Not likely ugly.” She told him. “We are about to punch your entire engine core out of your ship Gars. Prepare to engage your emergency power.”

“What?!” He screamed even louder. “What...”

“Weapons!!” Nemoa barked. “Fire!”

The forward section of the REPULSE came together in two points and on the edges of those two points were two of the five forward Type I batteries she carried. Two hundred meters further back were the next two, and it was these four Type I batteries that flared instantly and released the tightest configuration of plasma based beams that they were capable of. Powered as they were by the REPULSE's Hyper Matter Fusion Core there was never any question in what they would do. Compared to normal beam operation, these were like firing four, torpedo thin beams of staggering power. The four beams struck the BRIGHT STAR about two thirds of the way back from the bridge and all of them saw Gars and his bridge crew stagger wildly. The hole image cut out then as the four tightly concentrated beams of plasma burned through the hull of the BRIGHT STAR almost instantly. They carved their way through the hull, directly into the main engineering section and struck the ship's main engineering core square on top of its mounts. The colossal force of the plasma weapons began to burn through the core shielding almost immediately, but their kinetic energy also served to rip the engine core from its mounts and rammed it further down into the ship's superstructure until it finally punched out the bottom of the Kintaur vessel six decks below them. Four seconds later, the plasma beams reached the still active core and the explosion that followed lit up the area of space for a full ten seconds.

“Report!” Nemoa barked.

“The Kintaur ship has established emergency power!” The Sensor Operator yelled. “They have activated emergency force fields in both hull breaches! They are well trained at least!”

“Imminent death has that effect!” Another crew member barked out.

“The core exploding has filled the area with Neutron Particle Radiation and I'm adjusting the sensors to compensate!” The SO announced.

“Neutron particle radiation!” Nemoa exclaimed. “Their core was nuclear?”

“No sir!” The Sensor Operator answered. “Not in the same sense we know of nuclear power! Whatever they have powering their ships is based in part on the much older nuclear plants of Earth's oceangoing ships! But it is not a full nuclear power system.”

“Argh!” Nemoa shook her head. “Spare me the details for now. Active scan of the entire area! Get as much information as we can on whatever they were using to power their ship! Queen Anja will want it for sure! Their emergency shields are holding?”

“Yes Captain!” The TO replied. “Tractor beam is solid as well!”

“Very well... helm... take us to a point halfway between here and the planet!” Nemoa ordered as she moved back to her chair. “Then we will maintain station until Queen Anja says we are safe. Make sure everyone onboard has updated radiological immunizations and make damn sure we are not being irradiated!”

“Chief Medical Officer has confirmed Captain.” The Ops Officer spoke.

“Very well. We are out of it for now people... but let's take up an overwatch of the system.” Nemoa spoke. “All sensors to active mode! Anything comes into this system and doesn't squawk from the Union I want to know about it! Our job isn't done folks... let's stay on our toes!”

VENTORI

Their Beloved was angry.

So much deep emotion flowed through him since they had rescued For'mya and she had returned to their arms. Unlike at any time since they had been together Martin now held nothing back from his Queens. Any of his Queens. His words to Tinra, words he thought none of them would ever hear; they were the embodiment of his deep feelings for all of them. Now... now all of them could swim within his mind and feel his utter and complete commitment, desire and love for each of them.

He was them and they were him.

And the love and unrequited desire for him alone was returned by his Queens a hundred fold. There was one place within his mind that they would not go however. A place that he shared only with his son and his mard fervon. A place all of them had decided they did not want to go, for what was inside terrified them all. It was a place that held all of the horrors and power that he could unleash upon his enemies. A place that showed the lengths to which he would go to safeguard all of his family and his people. The destruction he would wrought if it meant that his family and his people were left alone to live in peace. Aricia Leonidas and her fellow lovers and Queens knew better than most that Martin Leonidas would be perfectly content to spend his days loving his Queens breathlessly and playing with his children. He would muddle through the more mundane tasks as King, make decisions that benefited all of their people and lead them by what his heart told him. There were very few however, that could possibly imagine the death and violence he would and could give free rein if it meant protecting that which he had come to love.

Aricia Leonidas was witnessing just a small portion of that this day.

All of the weeks and months spent searching for and finally rescuing their Kinsoaurgai, imagining the horrors and humiliation she had endured, and finally feeling her back within their embrace. It had been building in their husband and mate, and while he kept it tightly controlled they all knew it would come out soon enough. Coming out here to discover about their history, what had taken place on Onterom and now seeing his people being hunted by what were quite obviously violent and evil people had been the tipping point.

Martin Leonidas had had enough.

While they had not the time to set up a proper ambush because the Kintaur had moved faster than they thought, Lycavorian Spartans, truly anyone trained as a Spartan, could adapt on the fly instantly. When the Tasmor forces had begun to turn to face the advancing Kintaur, that is when they struck. Yet it was their beloved husband, mate and King that carried the day and the battle. Martin Leonidas had finally reached the end of his tolerance and the Kintaur suffered for it. Even as she moved along behind him, witnessing what he was doing, she could feel the thick emotion flooding through him and how it affected everyone around him. It made them act with perfect action.

Martin had shifted back to human form just before he fell upon the Kintaur troops, his yellow/gold eyes wide in savage anger, and his aura pulsing madly. The Durcunusaan troops with them had fought beside their King many times before for they were members of the King's personal 1st Spartan Attack Group. Androcles had sent men and women who he knew would not hesitate to follow his father anywhere. The Durcunusaan and regular troops of the 1st Spartan Attack Group were dedicated to their King in an almost fanatical manner. They had been at his side since their inception nearly twenty five years ago and none of them would willingly leave his command. They had fought beside their King before and they knew what he was capable of. These men and women, Lycavorian, Elf and Vampire, a mixture of other races as well, they moved far faster than the Kintaur could compensate for and before they could lift their weapons and react the battle was upon them in a very personal way. What she saw then, Aricia Leonidas would share with her fellow Queens without question. And it would give them an insight into the man who held their hearts and souls so tightly within his grasp.

His Etheric shield was fully active, encasing his form in a light blue and white glow that conformed to his body like a second skin over the new Mark VI ArmorPly Body Armor they all wore. He had shifted back to human form just as his massive paws touched the ground, right in the middle of a group of five Kintaur who were frozen in shock at the colossal beast that had just landed among their small party. Torma may have been circling the battlefield above in their STRIKER Mark II, but their combined Etheric shield was unlike anything that Aricia had ever seen with the exception of her son Androcles and Elynth. This had to be one of the skills they had taught themselves from the Ancient Tomes of Martin's grandfather Sumar. Something that all Praetorians appeared to be able to do.

The new Mark VI armor conformed to Martin's two hundred and forty pound body like a glove. Most of it was made from layers of flexible, tightly weaved material once referred to as Kevlar. In the many centuries since this material had come into existence, it had been changed many times she knew. Somehow, Benjamin's researchers at Dreamland had combined the best of both the Kevlar and the exquisitely weaved Drow Scout armor material called Tiriam. It was a simple material that the Drow had discovered in what was once Canada.

It was a fire resistant and shatterproof metal like substance that, when properly forged, was lighter than aluminum and very near unbreakable. Once this combination had been perfected, exceptionally thin layers of Dragon Armor were blended into the actual interlacing of the material and reinforcing the armor. Thin plates were then added to the chest area as well as the shoulder joints and shin area of the combat boots to provide additional protection. Aricia knew that this armor was now being mass produced on Earth and Apo Prime under the watchful eyes of Drow, Nodon and elven scientists for distribution as soon as it was ready. Several thousand sets of this armor had been sent to them and to Andro by Ben's people for use in the field. As with the earlier versions of the ArmorPly, the new armor conformed to its wearer within a matter of hours and retained this memory in its design. It was a snug fit for females, especially those who had larger than average chests like Anja and herself, but the discomfort was quickly forgotten when it was discovered that this armor allowed their bodies to breathe and move with far more freedom and relief.

Aricia reached her beloved mate just as he unleashed a roar of anger from under his full helmet, his dual wolf fangs fully extended and utterly terrifying to behold to the uninitiated. His yellow/gold eyes, such beautiful, expressive orbs to the women who loved him so, held nothing but death in them now. His Nehtes, extended to its full length before anyone even took notice, stabbed out with unerring accuracy and Martin drove it entirely through the chest of the closest Kintaur. Pinkish blood exploded out his back and Martin released the shaft as the Kintaur began to fall. What followed next wasn't like what they had witnessed on Enurrua, it was truly unlike anything Aricia Leonidas or the others had ever seen from their husband and mate, and it made her near glowing azure colored wolf eyes beam with unadulterated love.

The Kintaur had been chasing their people in tight groups spread out every ten meters or so. Martin had landed among the first group in the center of their formation and now he became a whirlwind of destruction. His armored hands came up and he snatched up the four remaining Kintaur soldiers in an Etheric wave and simply smashed them back to the hard ground with ghastly horrific force. The grunts and sounds of shattering bones and squishy flesh reached her ears as Martin turned instantly, forgetting the four now dead Kintaur in an instant. Ten meters away was another group of Kintaur and his left hand whipped out, a bluish Etheric wave of tight rippling outward and crossing the distance in two blinks of her eyes. She watched as that wave of Etheric power smashed into the group of six Kintaur and lifted them into the air. Four of their Durcunusaan then rose and lifted their A4s and sent deadly bursts of 12.7 mm rounds into each of the six Kintaur soldiers, killing them before they crashed back to the earth. Aricia could only watch in awe as her Beloved moved with almost magical grace and power. For a man of his size physically, he moved with speed most did not possess. He seemed to know where each group of Kintaur soldiers was without even looking across the expanse of the field. Etheric power rippled all around him, pulsing with life and devastating power. With each of his attacks, Kintaur died in groups. Whether he smashed them back into the unforgiving earth himself or he left them exposed for his men and women to kill with lethally precise shooting, it did not matter.

When Aricia saw their daughter Zarah lead her attacking unit from the flank she knew it was over for the Kintaur. Aricia and the others now knew of the connection that Zarah had with her brother Androcles. What he had done in order to protect her, and what he had passed to her in acting how he did. The Etheric power flowed around Zarah's arms and hands, Lucia's Etheric whips snapping out at different times fueled by her passion and emotion, as they moved as one entity to converge on where Martin was. They now knew that the Etheric power that flowed in all of them was fueled by their emotions and passion, and as it allowed Aricia to use her Etheric knives or less powerful versions of the Etheric diamonds, it allowed Lucia to use her whips as weapons. Though not actually within the physical realm, they appeared and acted as if they were and were just as lethal.

Martin had dropped among a final group of Kintaur by now and his sword was now in his hand. His Shi Viska burst into life, but remained on his arm as he used it like a shield. The front of the shield smashed into one Kintaur soldier's chest and even from her position a few meters behind him, Aricia's wolf ears heard the man's entire chest crunch as every bone in his upper body shattered. As his body lifted completely off the ground and sailed back, Martin brought his sword whipping around with blistering speed, totally decapitating another Kintaur in one powerful swing. He reversed his sword in a single blink and sent a lone pulse of deadly energy from the pommel, the thin yellow reddish beam of concentrated energy burning entirely through another's Kintaur's upper body. Aricia knew he had been training with the new sword ever since Enurrua and Avi had tinkered with the charge pack giving Martin another ten shots before he had to replace the small power cell. Martin whirled around and drove the edge of his Shi Viska into the midsection of another Kintaur just as Zarah reached her father and saw the lone remaining Kintaur raising his weapon to shoot her father in the back.

Zarah's hands closed around the barrel of the weapon and she wrenched it from his hands with a snarl of intense anger, stunning the large Kintaur with the speed and viciousness of her attack. Zarah then reversed the weapon in her grip and used the butt to drive into his face with all of her wolf and vampire power combined. The Kintaur's face caved in with a sickening sound and Zarah dropped the weapon instantly and stepped into a ridge hand strike directly over his throat before the scream of pain ever escaped his lips. That one blow crushed the bones and cartilage in his throat and his hands reached for his neck as his pain filled eyes bugged out of his head when he could no longer breathe. It didn't matter for Lucia swept up beside him and drove one of her dual blades into his chest with all of her strength and then ripped it out to the side, spraying his purple colored blood over the ground around them.

Martin's head whipped around then and he saw his daughter and her devoted lover and wife Lucia beside him. His mouth split wide in a toothy smile, his fangs ever so prominent as he gazed on them in happiness. His yellow gold wolf eyes quickly turned and took stock of what was happening and he saw Zarah's men and women quickly mixing in with his Durcunusaan and sweeping the area of any and all Kintaur that had turned and fled. He turned back to face his daughter and the one he would call adopted daughter for millennia to come as half a dozen other Durcunusaan closed in around them and encircled their King, Queen and two Princesses, their weapons facing out and searching for any threats. Given what had taken place over the last months, no one among the Durcunusaan were going to take chances with the lives of their Royal Family.

"Bout time you got here!" He barked loudly just as Aricia moved up behind them, her Nehtes clutched in her hand but unused. "I thought I was gonna have to chase them all the way to the river!"

Aricia saw the light of love on Zarah's face as her father embraced her and Lucia in his arms. Aricia knew then that their daughter had almost fully healed now. She would always carry with her what had come to pass, but with Lucia's unquestioned love and the commitment of her family, she had beaten back the horrors and begun her road into the future. And Aricia, like her son Androcles, sensed that Zarah's and Lucia's love would open the door for both of them to find the one man who would love them both breathlessly and without regret.

Martin reached up quickly and tapped his jaw. "Colin!" He barked. "Report!"

Colin had been the only one of his personal team to accompany him to the surface and Martin began to search the field looking for his friend.

"What the fuck do you want me to report?" Colin's voice barked right back in the clear through their implants. "Why did we even bother coming down here? We could have sat on the sidelines and drank beer or drinks with little umbrellas while we watched you open the whup ass on these fools! That would have been much more fun!"

Martin's keen eyes finally found Colin Walsh standing roughly a hundred and fifty meters to his right and holding his A4 propped on his hip, several Kintaur bodies bunched on the ground around him and two other Durcunusaan, both of whom happen to be vampires. He grinned quickly.

"Give me eyes Colin!" Martin told him. "All the way back to where they had their initial camp! Make sure we got all of them homey."

Martin saw Colin nod his head even across the distance. "Rules Skipper?" He asked.

"If you find any others, take them out with extreme prejudice!" Martin hissed. "These bastards were here to take our people as slaves. That burns my ass!"

"Consider it done!" Colin snapped. "Be back soon!"

Martin watched him speak to the two others who were with him and then they blurred off into the forest, disappearing like the ghosts they were trained to be. He turned back and looked at Zarah just as Radem moved stealthily up behind them. He nodded his head to the Evolli who was now their protector. "Did you get them all Zar?" Martin asked Zarah.

Zarah nodded. "They walked right into our kill zone father." She answered as Aricia came up beside her and began to inspect her and Lucia for any injuries as any of her mother's would do. "None of them survived."

"Get your people in place and secure the landing zone for our ships then." Martin told her. "Make it a standard H perimeter Zar and have your medic make sure no one is hurt. Get them back to your mother if they are. We don't know what ugly little bugs might be on this planet that we have not been exposed to."

Zarah nodded. "We'll get it done Papa." She said.

"When you got them settled in, you and Lucia move back to the main perimeter they are establishing and find me." Martin said. "Something tells me we are going to be here for a few days and we'll need to institute more permanent Intel and positions."

Zarah nodded her head, leaned up on her tip toes to kiss his cheek and then took Lucia's hand. They both gripped Radem's arms and blurred off, carrying their Evolli guardian with them without question.

Martin looked at Aricia as he took his helmet off and he stared into her azure blue eyes as the high of combat began to slowly bleed off. She looked very imposing in her armor and helmet as did all of his Queens. She was looking at him intently and he lowered his helmet. "What?" He asked softly.

"Are you quite finished taking unnecessary risks?" Aricia asked him while trying to remain straight-faced and not let the fact that his display had stirred her wolf blood intensely, not to mention Anja's and For'mya's because they were so tightly bound together.

"I did what needed to be done!" Martin quipped.

"Oh really?" Aricia retorted as she stepped out his line of sight and motioned with her hand behind them.

Martin's yellow/gold wolf eyes saw where she was motioning and they grew wider. The path of destruction he had wrought extended back nearly two hundred meters, with at least six different groups of now dead Kintaur between where his rampage had begun and where he now stood. Martin finally turned and focused on Aricia's own beautiful wolf eyes.

"Oops." He managed to stammer.

Aricia couldn't help but laugh at his expression and comment as she took off her own helmet and the half dozen Durcunusaan soldiers who were within ear shot of them began laughing as well. She stepped into his embrace and nuzzled his cheek with devotion as relief began to spread outward now that the fighting was over.

Namiri Daret could only sit near the massive fallen tree and look upon the battlefield in utter disbelief with Nalmos beside her. They were ignoring the mass of bodies moving past them as Lycavorians from Ventori were being guided or carried by their kindred brothers and sisters towards where Duewa had already begun to set up the Field Triage Center. Most of them were still in a state of shock at what had happened and were simply going through the motions of following. Namiri however, she could not tear her eyes from the enormous Lycavorian after he had begun to cut his terrible path of destruction through the Kintaur soldiers. Though only twenty-three years old, Namiri Daret had seen plenty of battle with the Kintaur over the last five years. Never in all that time had she seen one man ravage them in such a way, using powers and skills she could not comprehend and had never seen before. She finally tore her eyes away and looked at Nalmos when she saw the two young women blur in motion away from where the Lycavorian stood with the reptilian man between them.

"Nalmos?" She gasped.

The Lycavorian looked at her, his turned wolf eyes were bright and clear. She could see the tips of his fangs protruding just beneath his upper lip. "I... I don't..."

"Nalmos... I thought you said there were no other Lycavorians! That you were the last of your kind!" Namiri exclaimed.

Nalmos nodded quickly. "That is... that is what we have always believed." He couldn't help but stammer.

"These others... they are not like you!" Namiri hissed.

Nalmos shook his head. "They are Lycavorians... but they are Alphas Namiri! Most of them that I can see anyway! There are many Beta wolves among them, but the majority of them are Alpha wolves! The most powerful of our kind Namiri; those we have thought long extinct!"

"How?" Namiri asked. "How can that... how can he do such things?"

Namiri Daret, unlike many of her people, had spent many weeks among the Lycavorians they had rescued before now. The long journey back to Tasmor space had allowed her to do this on many different occasions. She found the Lycavorian people to be proud and strong and in no way beneath them. Some of their scholars were just as intelligent as any Tasmor. She had developed several friendships among those they had rescued and while her mother and all but one of her sisters frowned on this, Namiri had kept those friendships alive. She had been chosen to lead this ground mission because of these friendships and she had been the one to make contact with Nalmos and his people once they were on the ground. They had been speaking for two weeks before even arriving here and had developed a friendly relationship much like a father and daughter.

Nalmos shook his head. "I do not know Namiri." He told her. "All of our history and science has told us the Alphas died out long ago, before we even came here to Ventori. Only the Betas and the Omegas were left."

"Are you certain?" Namiri asked. "What... what about that one?" Namiri pointed to where Martin stood in the distance. "How is he able to do that? I have never seen one of your people able to do what he did Nalmos? He... I have never seen anything like what he was doing to the Kintaur."

"Namiri I don't know!" Nalmos exclaimed. "I'm not lying to you child. I... this is so... it's unbelievable! I would..."

Nalmos stopped talking and looked up, Namiri's eyes following his as the tall, thickly muscled Lycavorian stopped beside them. The strange looking full faced helmet covered all of his features except for his eyes and a small portion of his lips.

"Are you injured?" He asked as he looked at them. His voice was calm and carried a tone of respect and friendliness.

Nalmos shook his head quickly. "No." He managed to answer sensing right away that this was a young Alpha wolf.

"Though the battle is over, there may still be enemies in the area sir." The young Alpha told him. "I am Enomotarch Jontas Asear, third in command of the King's personal detail of Durcunusaan. We have established a secure area several hundred meters back. Please... I will escort you and your friend to safer surroundings. Queen Anja and Colonel Thoti's wife and mate Duewa will have already begun to give medical attention if it is needed and we will have food and fresh water very soon."

Nalmos glanced at Namiri and then back to the young Alpha Jontas. "The Tasmor... Namiri and her people... they have been helping us." He stated.

The young wolf nodded his head. "Yes sir... that has already been made known to us." He told them. "You... you are the leader of our people here yes?"

Nalmos rose to his feet, squeezing Namiri's hands as he did so. "They... they follow me yes." Nalmos answered.

Jontas nodded his head. "The King will want to speak with you sir."

"That man?" Nalmos asked. "That Alpha..." He motioned out into the field where Martin still stood with Aricia. "Who is he?"

"That is King Leonidas sir. He leads the Lycavorian Union with his Queens." The young wolf spoke proudly Nalmos noted, his chest almost swelling with pride under the incredible body armor that he wore. "We are his Durcunusaan as I said."

Nalmos looked at him with wide eyes as he just realized something. "You... you speak the ancient language of our people!" He gasped.

Namiri noted the young alpha looked delighted that Nalmos knew what he had said. "It is not so ancient anymore it seems sir." Jontas said.

"What... what does this word mean?" Namiri asked.

Nalmos looked at her. "Durcunusaan. In the ancient Lycavorian language... it means..." He looked at the young Alpha. "It means Wolves of the Blood."

The Durcunusaan motioned with his free hand. "Please... let us move away from the smell of death and have Queen Anja or one of her medical people look you both over."

Namiri noticed that the young man spoke to Nalmos with utter respect and gently reached out to take his arm when Nalmos almost stumbled as he began to move forward without question. Namiri took Nalmos's other arm as they began to move away from the field knowing she and her people had no real choice but to do what they were told at the moment. Whoever these new Lycavorians were, they were extremely well organized and trained and obviously did not see the Tasmor as a threat for all of her people still had their weapons. They had a right to think this way she knew, for they had just decimated an entire Kintaur platoon and had not even broken a sweat in doing so. Namiri glanced back quickly and saw the towering Lycavorian man standing beside the stunningly beautiful raven haired female and speaking to her while circled by no less than six guards, all of whom were facing out and looking for danger.

As her eyes swept the area she saw other newcomers helping their fellow Lycavorians along and in one case she even saw one of the new Lycavorians carrying three children, one who was atop his broad shoulders and looking all around with delight, two others were in his arms, while their mother moved along just in front of him carrying the small baby. There was no hesitation on the parts of these new Lycavorians when it came to assisting their own people, and she even saw one carrying a much older woman in his arms. She could see her people moving along with them, still somewhat in shock had what had just taken place, for none of them had seen anything like it before. All of them smart enough to know however, that whoever these new Lycavorians were, they were no match for them and they were heavily outnumbered. Since these new Lycavorians did not seem to regard them as an enemy, that is the way the Tasmor wanted to keep it. They were helping the younger Lycavorian children as well as the older men and women right with the new Lycavorians. They would not act without orders from Namiri regardless and she had no intention of risking their lives in any way by attempting to do something stupid. These Lycavorians were obviously very technologically advanced, more so than even her own people and they were equipped with weapons and gear that she had never seen before. She doubted her small ground team would stand much of a chance against them if it came to a battle.

Namiri Daret had no idea her respect and knowledge of the Lycavorian people she had been helping for the last few years would lead her to wonders she never imagined she would experience.

ARIZONA

ORBIT OF VENTORI

“...Secure here Manda.” Martin spoke within the main holo disc on the bridge of the ARIZONA. “We’re establishing a hard base camp and perimeter now. You and Akemi prep whatever MENKLA transports you have and load them with spare uniforms, clothes, and whatever hot chow the Mess Chief can throw together. Tell Akemi to load up whatever Anuk feels they need in the way of medications and get them moving. I want them on the ground within the hour.”

Miranda nodded her head. “Consider it done.” She stated calmly. “Casualties Martin?” She asked knowing that only her bridge crew would hear her address him informally and they knew that their Admiral and her Drow wife and lover were two of only a handful who were allowed this.

Martin shook his head slowly. “Not among our people... but these Kintaur are wiped.” He answered. “Have your Wing G4 Officer come down Manda. I want the bodies of the Kintaur collected and treated with respect. Have him assign a detail to that. Whatever their reasons they fought bravely and well. Anja will give him a couple of her medics to do spot scans of their bodies and to make sure none of them are playing dead.”

Miranda nodded her head. “Done.” She spoke. “Captain Nemoa has taken the Kintaur ship under tractor and moved to the edge of the system. Apparently their engine core was based on some form of nuclear fusion and when they destroyed it, a cloud of radiation covered the area. Nemoa is playing it safe but she and her ship are secure.”

“Manda... de-shroud the Wing.” Martin told her. “Leave your flanking ships shrouded but I’m done sneaking around!”

Miranda leaned forward in her command chair. “I recommend against that.” She stated calmly not afraid to voice her opinion. “Three or four ships at most Martin but not the entire Wing. It could draw unwanted attention and put all of you at risk.”

Martin thought about that for a second then nodded his head. “Very well... I’ll let you handle it. Have the ARC ROYAL and three others de-shroud then and move closer to the planet. Deploy the Wing as you see fit.”

“Martin I...” Miranda began to speak.

“That is your realm up there Manda!” Martin told her. “It’s why Ben and I gave you the job. This is my realm down here. I expect you to tell me to stick it in my ear when I get stupid. Ben does all the time.”

Miranda chuckled as did most of the ARIZONA's bridge crew. She didn't pause or reflect on the subject for she knew Martin would not. "Our guests up here still have not made any move to indicate they know what is happening."

"That's bullshit!" Martin spoke. "They know what is going on down here. Send out an open COM message Manda. Find their channel and let them know who we are and what we are doing. Inform them that we got their officer off the Kintaur ship and what has taken place down here."

"We'll reveal that we can see them." Miranda said.

Martin nodded his head. "That doesn't matter now." He stated. "There's about three dozen Tasmor here on the ground with us that were helping our people run from the Kintaur. If they haven't communicated with their ships before now they will shortly. Tobia just touched down in the last STRIKER with Torma, Isheeni and Aurith. She knows them... she can talk to them."

"Understood." Manda spoke.

"Now tell me why that big bastard countermanded my orders to ventilate that Kintaur ship Manda?" Martin asked.

Miranda smiled. "Apparently Elder Valael found something when Danny and the others were downloading their computer core during the snatch mission. It indicated that the Kintaur knew the Tasmor were going to be here Martin."

Martin's eyes narrowed. "Really?"

Miranda nodded her head as E'dira moved up beside her, the data pad in her hand. "Elder Valael is currently going over the intelligence we got, but he is certain that the Kintaur knew the Tasmor were going to be here and what they were doing." E'dira spoke. "The Tasmor officer we rescued is... she was beaten and tortured harshly but she appears to be resilient and proud and she will survive."

"E'dira... did they...?" Martin began to ask.

E'dira nodded her head slowly knowing that her answer would dictate how Martin Leonidas dealt with the Kintaur in the future. "Yes... several different times according to the officer Martin. Emylea Daret is her name; First Commander of the Tasmor Defense Forces. She is strong however and is already requesting to be sent to the surface or back to her ships. She is the overall commander of this mission it seems. Her sister... a Namiri Daret... commands the ground force."

"Daret?" Martin asked. "Isn't that the name Tobia mentioned? The name of their so called Sovereign Regent or something?"

"Elder Valael confirmed this yes." Miranda said.

"Why does that strike me as odd? She sends two of her children on a mission so far away from their space at considerable risk?" Martin spoke.

"Elder Valael thought the same thing." Manda told him. "He is going through the entirety of the Kintaur ship's logs but it will take him several hours."

Martin nodded. "Have Avi help him Manda." He spoke. "Then have him come to the surface once we are established. I want to hear this. Is Zaala there?"

Zaala looked up from her station. "I am here Martin." She spoke up.

"Zaala... I want you and Chuess to rig up some portable power generators that are strong enough to operate a combined ground shroud shield and jamming nodes." Martin told her. "Send the specs to the ARC ROYAL's bunch of Worker Drones so they can put them together and get them to us. I don't want your drones pulled away from their tasks."

Zaala nodded her head as she came to her feet. "That should only take us about an hour." She answered.

Martin nodded. "Good enough. Red should be done with her initial exams by then. This will be our forward base Manda. From here we're going to initiate searches of the nearby city and others in range. There has to be more of our people here and I intend to find them and bring them in. Have Akemi start shuttling the remainder of the Durcunusaan down to the surface as well."

"Understood." Miranda spoke. "I can QCR back home and have Union Command send a couple more of the newer MENKLA IIs. They can carry twice the load and three times the passengers. It will take them a few days to get here but they could come in very handy. It appears we're going to need the transport capability."

"Route them through Manne first Manda." Martin spoke. "And give them a full Tactical Wing as an escort. I got a feeling we are going to need them. I want them moving like yesterday afternoon!"

Miranda nodded her head. "I'll see to it." She said. "The Tasmor frigates appear to have atmospheric landing capability if our scans are accurate. Do we let them land?"

Martin nodded his head. "If they choose to yes. But put them down several clicks from where we are now. I want to see them coming if that is the case."

"I'll let Daniel and the rest of your team know to bring the Tasmor officer as soon as she is able to travel." Miranda spoke.

"Good enough. I'm going to go talk to the spokesman for this group here and try and find out what is going on. Contact me if you need anything or we get any other visitors trying to make Ventori their vacation home." Martin spoke.

Miranda nodded with another chuckle. "Will do."

"Spartan One clear." Martin said just before he ended the transmission.

VENTORI ADHOC BASE

"...All the way back to their camp." Colin told Martin as they stood around the portable table that now held a holographic version of the entire area around them for fifty kilometers. "I dropped TAP cameras every few hundred meters and they are all online."

"Nothing?" Martin asked him.

Colin shook his head. "If there were any back at their main camp they aren't there now." He replied. "We detected probably half a dozen on the short range sensors, but they were long gone when we got there."

Martin nodded his head. "No worries." He stated. "I'll have Torma and the others find them." He stated.

Zarah leaned over the table from beside her father and pointed to several locations on the image. "I have established OPs at these four locations father." She told him. "Six member teams that have whatever heavy weapons we brought with us. The landing zone is completely secure at the moment. We'll need to add more when we get more boots on the ground father, but for now mother will have no worries landing whatever ships we need."

Martin nodded his head in approval. "Excellent." He spoke. "Colin... have four teams of four set up on this trail leading back here. I want a clean route from here to the landing zone. Our people have been running enough it seems and they are done running. These Kintaur assholes don't seem bothered at inflicting damage against innocents and I won't let them do that anymore."

"I'll see to it Skipper." Colin said.

Martin turned slightly as Jontas led the much older Lycavorian and Tasmor female up to their small group. He knew each of his personal Durcunusaan team and treated them a tad bit more casually than everyone else. "Jontas... what's up?" He spoke.

"Milord... this is Nalmos." The Durcunusaan officer spoke. "He leads these men and women and..."

Nalmos dropped to one knee in front of Martin, bowing his head in obvious deference. "I submit to your will as an Alpha of our people." Nalmos spoke clearly. He didn't see Martin's eyes, and the eyes of everyone else grow wide at this display and Martin quickly reached out and took Nalmos by his shoulders.

"What the hell?" Martin exclaimed loudly. "You are Lycavorian and you submit to no one." Martin told him firmly as he pulled Nalmos to his feet and the older man looked at Martin.

"But you... you are an Alpha." Nalmos stammered, not really knowing what to expect. All of their history scrolls and legends of the Alphas from their past told him that Alpha Wolves were dominant and aggressive in everything they did.

"And that doesn't make me any more important than anyone else." Martin answered him as he helped Nalmos to back to his feet and held the smaller man by his shoulders. "You make it sound as if we are somehow better than you."

Nalmos stared at him in shock. He glanced between Jontas and Martin several times before meeting Martin's gaze. "You... so many of you are Alphas!" He stuttered. "Alpha wolves are... they have never existed" on Ventori in our entire time here! Almost a hundred thousand years our people have lived here and no Alpha wolf has ever existed in all that time. They are... they are only in our history books and... and our legends.”

“How is that possible?” Martin asked him with a stunned expression.

Nalmos shook his head quickly. “I was... I was going to ask you the same question.” He stated. “You are... you are the King of our people?”

Martin sighed heavily and rolled his eyes. “That is one of the names people use to refer to me.” He stated. “I hate it personally... but...”

Zarah elbowed her father in the side. “Father...” She gasped aloud.

Martin grinned and looked at her before turning back to Nalmos. “This is my daughter Zarah.” He said.

Zarah reached out and took Nalmos’s hands in hers and stepped close to him, brushing her cheek against his in the wolf form of greeting. Nalmos looked at her with wide eyes, clearly smelling that she was an alpha female, but also that she was not entirely wolf. It also thrilled him that they seemed to know many of the ancient customs of their people. “It is an honor to meet you sir.” Zarah told him. “We never thought to discover our people so far from home and it is a joy... truly.”

“Home?” Nalmos asked her looking once more at Martin.

“That’s a long story.” Martin said with a smile. “...One that I can explain later if you don’t mind.” He looked at Namiri. “And who is this?”

“I am Commander Lieutenant Namiri Daret of the Tasmor Defense Forces!” Namiri spoke immediately. “I demand to know who you are, what you are doing on Ventori and what are your intentions?”

“Namiri!” Nalmos gasped in shock though not seeing Martin smile as he took in her proud display and the strength she had for demanding such a thing. “You must show respect! They saved our lives!”

“We do not know why they saved us!” Namiri exclaimed. “We don’t know who they are or where they come from! We...”

“Should remember your mother’s teachings and follow her rules of conduct Namiri Daret.” Tobia’s voice echoed softly from behind Martin. He had smelled her coming and turned his head slightly to watch her walk up. Namiri’s eyes grew wide in shock as she saw her.

“Tobia!” Namiri gasped in sincere astonishment. She didn’t hesitate however and stepped right up to Tobia grasping her hands.

Tobia smiled warmly as she gripped Namiri’s hands tightly and brought her forehead to Namiri’s for a brief moment as was the Tasmor way of greeting friends and family. “It has been a very long time since I saw you last Namiri Daret. You are even more beautiful now than I remember.”

Namiri blushed under the tanned color of her skin and squeezed Tobia’s hands. “You are... you are looking well Tobia.”

All of Saydia’s daughters knew of the relationship Tobia had shared with their mother. Though it had been torrid and brief, all of them still thought of Tobia as a treasured friend and confidant.

“Your mother?” Tobia asked her bringing up a hand to touch her cheek. “Your sisters?”

“We...” Namiri began.

“Ah... Tobia?” Martin chimed in.

Tobia glanced at him. “Yes... forgive me Martin.” She turned back to Namiri. “Namiri... we need your help.” She told her. “Martin and his people are not your enemies. They are here only because we discovered that Lycavorians occupied this planet. We did not know you would be here. We were coming to investigate the ruins of the cities here and...”

“And any survivors we can find.” Martin said seeing Namiri’s eyes turn to look at him.

“You are... you are not from this quadrant of space are you?” Namiri asked.

Martin grinned sheepishly. “It’s that obvious huh?” He asked.

“You... you destroyed an entire Hunting Cadre of Kintaur warriors without a single loss of life.” Namiri gasped with wide eyes. “That... no one has ever done that before. Who are you people?”

Tobia squeezed her hands tightly causing Namiri to turn back and look at her. “Martin’s people rescued Emylea from the Kintaur ship...”

“Emylea!” Namiri gasped looking between Tobia and Martin and then back to Tobia. “She is...”

“She is safe.” Tobia answered. “And she is requesting to be brought here. As soon as the medical people on our ship clear her they will escort her down.”

Namiri looked at Martin. "You... how did you... you took her from their ship?" She asked in astonishment. "How did... how did you do this?"

"Does it matter?" Martin asked her. "She is safe. The Kintaur bastards used her badly if what I understand is correct... but she is strong willed your sister and..."

Namiri's eyes grew wide. "They took her against her will!" She almost shouted. "I must see her! I must go to her! Tobia you know what..."

Tobia pulled Namiri into her embrace. "It will be alright child." She said looking at Martin's questioning look. "If they... if the Kintaur were able to rape her... Emylea will lose her command and all rank and honor as an officer of the Tasmor Defense Force."

"What the hell for?" Martin snarled loudly, his anger surging to the front and causing Namiri to turn and look at him.

"It is a sign of weakness to the Tasmor." Tobia said softly.

"She only allowed herself to be taken in order to give us time here on the surface to get to a safe area where the Kintaur would not follow us!" Namiri pleaded. "To save her ships and her crews! My sister is not weak!"

"Namiri... why are you here?" Tobia asked. "I know enough of your mother to know that she would never allow both you and Emylea to come this far out from Tasmor space without a larger force!"

Namiri shook her head. "We have a Task Force two light years from here. Just across the border. We were training when this mission was sent to us." She looked at Tobia. "The orders had authorization from my mother's office. We were to come here, extract Nalmos and his people and then leave!"

Nalmos nodded his head. "We have been sending distress calls to the known Tasmor relays in this system with the equipment that others of the Tasmor left behind for us." He stated. "We received a response two weeks ago, and two days later Namiri contacted me and told me they were coming. I moved those who follow me here over the last week in order to evacuate and within hours of Namiri arriving, these Kintaur showed up."

"That's convenient." Colin spoke up now.

Martin met his eyes with a knowing look. "You think." He said.

Namiri looked between the two men. "What... what are you saying?" She demanded.

"These Kintaur ass wipes knew you were coming here." Martin told her evenly. "We downloaded their computer core when we rescued your sister. Elder Valael noticed something in their COM logs that indicated they knew you were coming here; not just your ships but you and your sister specifically."

"That... that doesn't make any sense." Namiri said. "How could they know that? The orders had my mother's authorization!"

Martin looked at Tobia. "I thought I left all the back stabbing and grasps for power back in the Alpha Quadrant Tobia." He stated.

Nalmos's eyes grew wide in shock. "The Alpha Quadrant?" He almost shouted.

Namiri gazed at Martin in shock as well. "You... you came from the Alpha Quadrant?" She gasped. "That... that would mean you have Interstellar Drive capabilities!" Namiri's dark brown eyes narrowed and she looked at Tobia. "Tobia... you travel with them. How... how did you not know that...?" Namiri stepped back from her. "What is going on Tobia?"

Tobia reached for her hands. "Believe me child... my people are not as all powerful as you seem to think."

Martin chuckled softly. "True enough. You should have seen how surprised they were when we showed up in their backyard."

"Surprised is an understatement Skipper." Colin said with a grin.

Martin shook his head and reached out to touch the small control panel on the portable table. "Spartan One Actual to ARC ROYAL Actual." He spoke aloud causing Nalmos and Namiri to look at him with wide eyes for very different reasons. He glanced between them. "What did I say?" He asked.

"You... you are called Spartan?" Nalmos asked.

Martin nodded his head. "We are all Spartans." He answered. "It is part of our history... ever since my father. Why?"

"That... the term Spartan is... it is used in our history scrolls." Nalmos told him.

“It’s a common enough term.” Martin said.

Nalmos shook his head. “Not... not in the manner in which it is used.” He stated.

Akemi’s voice stopped any response from Martin. “ARC ROYAL Actual!” She replied. “Now is not a good time Milord. Our sensors indicate that a dozen ships of Tasmor design are closing on the Ventori system at high speed! They will revert from LSD travel within our zone of operation!”

Namiri’s shook her head slightly to clear her mind. “Our Task Force ships!” She told him. “Emylea’s Second Officer must have gotten a distress call out to them!”

“Why does the way you say that make the hair on the back of my neck shiver?” Martin asked her.

“If she got a distress call out then they will enter the system prepared to do battle with the Kintaur!” Namiri told him. “They will see the Kintaur ship that you crippled and think you are helping them!”

“Your orders King Leonidas?” Akemi asked.

“Can you talk to them Namiri?” Tobia asked quickly.

Namiri nodded her head. “Yes... once they are in the system.”

“Once they are in the system is too late.” Martin said calmly. “If they come in blasting Tobia... my people will return fire!”

“Namiri... your communication codes child!” Tobia said gripping her hands. “Your ships will not stand a chance against Martin’s ships. The Lycavorian Union’s ships are based on our technology! They will swat your ships from the stars if they are fired on!”

“How could they have your technology?” Namiri demanded. “We have been asking for centuries for you to give us...”

Tobia shook her head. “It is a long story Namiri; one that does not have anything to do with the Tasmor or the Kintaur. It has to do with mistakes made by my people and directed at Martin’s people from long ago. Please child... you know I would never do anything to endanger your people. Especially your mother. Martin’s people are not like mine. They will not hesitate to defend themselves if your ships attack when they enter the system. And your people will not stand a chance.”

The console on the table beeped madly and Miranda’s voice erupted from the small speaker. “ARIZONA Actual to Spartan One Actual! Martin... we have inbound Tasmor ships and they appear to be in some sort of attack formation! The REPUSLE is the only ship de-shrouded at the moment Martin! We haven’t moved into position to de-shroud the others like we decided!” Miranda’s voice was calm but all of them could tell there was a sense of urgency in her tone. “They’ll focus on the REPULSE unless we act Martin!”

Martin looked at Namiri evenly. “I will order my people to defend themselves if you do nothing Namiri Daret.” He told her. “Don’t think for an instant that they have a chance against us. The moment your ships begin firing I will order them obliterated from the stars!”

“Namiri!” Tobia exclaimed.

Namiri Daret stared into those dark brown orbs for a moment longer before making her decision. These men and women were not a threat to her or her people. They had proven that already this day and she would not destroy the truce that was now in place. She stepped up to the table.

“I need... I need to speak with my sister!” Namiri spoke firmly. “Our combined Central Command codes will be enough to let them know there is no danger.”

“I’ll have her brought to the bridge immediately! Stand by! We can...” Akemi answered instantly.

“General Simpson is patching her through via Medical Captain!” An unknown voice spoke from the background.

“Link her up!” Akemi ordered.

“Sister?” The new female voice erupted from the speaker. “Namiri!”

“Emylea!” Namiri exclaimed as her face became animated and bright. “Sister... are you...?”

“I am... I am sore sister... but I am alive and very safe.” Emylea answered. “Thanks solely to these men and women. You... you should see this ship sister... it is... by all the stars it is glorious!”

“Emylea... our Task Force is about to enter the system!” Namiri spoke. “We need to contact them or...”

“Or watch them blown from the stars.” Emylea answered. “Yes... General Simpson has explained to me what is going on. Captain Akemi... can you tune one of your transmitters to Sub Space frequency 3459.28. It is one of the emergency channels that all of our ships monitor at all times. My Command code is...”

TASMOR DEFENSE FORCE
ALTIA FALCON CLASS-WAR CRUISER
TDF SAKAR

The pride of the seven hundred ship Tasmor Combat Fleet.

The TDF SAKAR was the flagship of the Tasmor people and the personal ship of their Sovereign Regent. The ALTIA FALCON CLASS-War Cruiser was the most recent ship design to enter service with the TDF, and the most heavily armed and armored. She carried all of the most advanced technology that the Tasmor had available to them. Two thousand meters long with a beam of six hundred meters, she was the largest ship the Tasmor had ever built. In the ten years since the first had joined the TDF, forty-three more had been built and were now in service, with another twenty-six within two years of commissioning. The ship had been built to combat the growing Kintaur threat as well as other enemies that may have been out there among the stars.

At the moment however, the Sovereign Regent of the Tasmor people did not care about any of this and was instead raging openly at one of her staunchest rivals. That she was incensed was easy enough for any of the people in the private conference room to see and with good reason as far as most of them were concerned.

Saydia Daret had been Sovereign Regent of the Tasmor people for the last twenty-three years since the passing of her mother. Her ascension to the highest seat of power within the Tasmor Empire had been looked upon with great happiness by an almost unanimous count of the Tasmor people for her mother had been a beloved leader for her eighty-three year reign. Saydia Daret had been followed for years as her mother's successor and it was no surprise when she rose to the Regent's Chair. As the oldest and most beautiful of her mother's daughters, Saydia had garnered most of the attention while she grew. Everything about her was public knowledge and this afforded her special attention wherever she went. It also allowed her to protect her sisters from the limelight and enable them to lead somewhat regular lives. When she became Sovereign Regent Saydia immediately named her four sisters to positions of great status and honor that allowed them to help her govern their people. Saydia had used her appeal among the people and her intelligence to her advantage and she learned all there was to know about everything she was exposed to before being named Regent. She was a supremely intelligent woman as well as an exceptional warrior in her own right. She had led over a dozen battles herself against Kintaur forces in key victories for the Tasmor Defense Forces. She was well liked by those within the TDF for she was one of their own, and she was well respected by the Tasmor Council of Governors.

Saydia Daret stood just under five foot ten inches in height and her hundred and thirty-five pound body was all muscles and curves. She had large and very firm breasts, a slim waist and exceptionally long legs. She had prided herself on her physical condition and even after giving birth to six daughters, she maintained the figure of a woman forty years her junior and was still a stunningly beautiful woman who most Tasmor men would kill for a night with. At the moment however, Saydia Daret was using her slight height advantage and her position as Sovereign Regent to tear into her most senior and powerful rival and The Chief Counsel of the Tasmor people.

"...Tell me what you were thinking Perlyea!" Saydia barked loudly now. "They are my daughters! You put them at extreme risk by sending them here knowing what could await them! How dare you decide this without my knowledge?"

"They are both members of the TDF Saydia." The woman answered her evenly. "And by all accounts they are among the best at what they do!"

"They are my youngest daughters!" Saydia screamed at her. "I do not care that they are the best at what they do! You do not have the authorization to sanction military missions! And certainly not one that sends two of my daughters off into unknown space without proper force and support!"

"My TDF Military Advisor does however." Perlyea answered.

"Your military advisor has never seen a day of combat against the Kintaur in her life! And nor have you! You are a politician Perlyea!" Saydia shouted. "She is just as ignorant as you when it comes to military operations! Ordering the Duty officer to transmit the orders to their Task Force is not within her realm of activity or authority!"

“As Chief Counsel to the Tasmor people I have a right to insure the preservation of our people!” Perlyea snapped.

“You do not have the right to endanger our people!” Saydia snapped right back. “Sending two Patrol Frigates to Ventori was beyond stupid!”

“We needed the mission to remain low profile and the amount of people we were extracting did not call for anything larger than a Patrol Frigate.” Perlyea spoke.

“Extracting Lycavorians from Ventori is not low profile!” Saydia raged. “It needs to be done properly! You should have come to me when you discovered this group! We could have planned an operation that would not have seen two of my daughters placed in danger without need!”

“As Chief Counsel I did not feel it needed to be brought to you for approval!” Perlyea said. “That is my right as well as Chief Counsel to the Council of Governors.”

Saydia stepped right up into her face. “I will tell you what is your right Perlyea!” She hissed angrily. “If my daughters have been harmed in any way, even one scratch, I will hold you responsible and I will insure you pay.”

“Are you threatening me Sovereign?” Perlyea asked her.

“Yes you bitch!” Saydia screamed at her.

It was then the near six foot tall Tasmor woman with light caramel colored skin and long black hair stepped forward from the wall near the door. She wore the standard light body armor of the TDF and the sidearm on her right hip with the long bladed knife on her left.

“My Regent...” She started to speak.

“Remove her from my presence Anthylea!” Saydia barked as she turned away. “I will deal with her and the Council of Governors when we return! We...”

The loud chime in the conference room prevented her from finishing and everyone looked toward the internal speakers.

“Sovereign Regent... our sensors are detecting a large, unknown ship within the Ventori system. It does not match any known ship configurations we have in our data base.” The female voice spoke. “We are also detecting a Kintaur Medium Cruiser in the system. Long range sensors indicate it is without main power but we are still too far to determine anything else.”

“I’m on my way!” Saydia snapped. “She pointed at Perlyea. “Bring her and her cronies Anthylea! If my daughters are dead... then I will insure they die ten seconds after I discover this.”

Saydia didn’t hesitate and headed out of the conference room for the bridge of her flagship.

BRIDGE OF THE SAKAR

“...Still can’t determine the configuration of the ship!” A voice spoke from one side of the bridge. “I’ve never seen anything like it!”

“Keep searching the databanks!” The Tasmor Captain barked from her slightly inclined chair on the right side of the bridge. “Status of weapons and shields?”

“Shields at full power!”

“Weapons standing by!”

The large double doors to the bridge opened and Saydia entered at a brisk walk. The female Captain rose to her feet as Saydia looked directly at her. “Speak to me Drenia!” She hissed in a more subdued and friendly tone of voice. “What is happening?”

“We don’t know anything yet.” Drenia answered immediately. “Our long range sensors cannot give us precise scans of the ship.”

Saydia looked at her. “We are in range.” She stated. “Why not?”

Drenia shook her head. “Something is scrambling the sensors. The ship matches nothing like I have ever seen. It is the largest ship I have ever encountered Saydia. If what scans we do have are accurate it is over two thousand five hundred meters long Regent.”

Saydia looked at her with wide eyes not even registering the fact Drenia had used her name. They were close friends and Saydia demanded Drenia act in this way. "Is it... could it be Pralor?" She asked.

Drenia shook her head. "Unless they have designed a smaller combat ship that we are not aware of... no. However it is..."

"What?" Saydia asked.

"It is radiating something very similar to Pralor Power signatures Regent Daret." Drenia answered.

"Similar but unlike them in any way that I have studied."

"The Kintaur ship?" Saydia demanded.

"It is operating on emergency power only." Drenia answered. "This new ship appears to be holding it in some sort of immobilizing beam. We are detecting no engines emissions from the Kintaur ship at all. But we have detected two hull breaches. One above their engine core and one below. Both have emergency force fields in place. It appears... it appears as if the Kintaur ship has been deprived of its main engine."

Saydia looked at her oddly. She was not unfamiliar with ship combat and operations and she had never heard of this. "Deprived?" She asked. "What do you mean Drenia?"

Drenia Corllor had been the Captain of Saydia's flagship for the better part of ten years. The Sovereign Regent was a taskmaster and demanded the finest from her ship and crew, yet she was also fair and even tempered. She trusted Drenia to train and lead the crew and maintain their readiness.

"It is unlike anything I have ever seen Sovereign." Drenia answered. "The engine core of the Kintaur ship has somehow been literally removed from the ship. It's as if some giant hand simply punched through the entire ship and took their main engine with it."

"How soon before we enter the system." Saydia asked.

"Fifty-three seconds Sovereign." Drenia answered.

"Target the Kintaur ship first!" Saydia barked. "Destroy it completely Drenia. Then break into Attack Pattern Domrae and we will destroy this new ship as well. And begin scanning for our frigates and any of our people on the surface when we enter the system."

"You... you wish to attack this unknown ship Regent?" Drenia gasped.

"If they have not destroyed the Kintaur ship then they must be helping them." Saydia spoke. "Our frigates must have disabled the cruiser and then they called for reinforcements! Why else would they have the Kintaur ship in a holding beam?"

"Regent... this ship is six hundred meters larger than the SAKAR." Drenia said. "It is larger than any ship we have in our fleet. We..."

"Captain Drenia...!" The female voice echoed from the opposite side of the bridge. "I am receiving an Urgent Situation Gamma transmission on Sub Space frequency 3459.28! It's the emergency channel!"

Drenia turned to face the woman. "From who?" She demanded.

"It bears the Command authorizations of both Emylea and Namiri Daret!" The woman answered.

Saydia's eyes grew wide. "Open the channel!" She ordered without hesitation.

"...Approaching Tasmor Defense Forces ships! This is First Commander Emylea Daret and my sister, First Legion Scout Commander Namiri Daret! You must respond!" Emylea's voice echoed on the bridge now.

Saydia heard the urgency in her daughter's voice and moved closer to the COM officer. "Can she hear me?"

"Yes Regent."

"Emylea!" Saydia blurted without pause. "Emylea!"

"Mother?" Emylea's voice echoed in surprise. "Mother is that you?"

Saydia wanted to openly weep in relief but she held her will firm and nodded her head even though Emylea could not see her. "Yes Emylea... it is I. Namiri is with you Emylea?"

"She is within the transmission mother but sending from the planet." Emylea spoke. "Can you... can you activate a holo transmission mother?"

Saydia looked at Drenia. "It is a risk Regent." Drenia spoke softly. "We do not know..."

"Mother... the First Captain is correct... it is a risk and not something we normally do... but Namiri and I are fine." Emylea's voice echoed in the speakers.

"Mother... Tobia is with me on the surface!" Namiri's voice chimed in now.

"Tobia?" Saydia gasped aloud. "Namiri how..."

“The ship you are detecting is not an enemy mother!” Emylea spoke once more. “It is a Lycavorian ship! It has disabled the Kintaur cruiser and they have killed those Kintaur on the surface. They are here for their people mother. They are not an enemy.”

“Activate a holo link!” Saydia exclaimed.

“Initiating!” The COM officer spoke.

The floor to the side lit up briefly and then Saydia was looking at her daughters in the transmission. She wanted to cry out in relief but she once more maintained her composure. It was obvious enough to see that Emylea was not on any Tasmor ship that they knew of and Namiri was standing outside with a great deal of activity behind her.

“Emylea! Namiri! What is going on?” Saydia demanded.

“Mother... if you enter the system and attack the Lycavorian ship you will be destroyed!” Emylea spoke quickly.

“They are protecting the Kintaur ship!” Saydia spat disdainfully. “They have it in some sort of holding beam!”

Emylea nodded her head. “They disabled the Kintaur cruiser’s power by destroying its main engine core mother.” Emylea stated quickly. “They are keeping it in a holding beam so the residual particles from its engine do not spread across the system. They saved me mother. I was a prisoner on the Kintaur ship and they just appeared and... and they rescued me!”

“A prisoner!” Saydia hissed in horror.

“I am fine mother!” Emylea quickly added. “Namiri... tell her...”

“Mother... the Kintaur forces here on the surface were chasing us.” Namiri began once more. “These new... these new Lycavorians appeared and... mother they destroyed an entire Kintaur War Platoon in under three minutes! I witnessed it with my own eyes! They left none alive!”

This news caused murmurs among the bridge crew as heads turned back and forth and eyes met. As a commander of ground forces Namiri Daret may have been young by Tasmor standards, but no one doubted her skill or bravery. She was a vicious fighter and had proven herself many times over in the past. She was also one of the foremost experts among the Scout Legions.

“Mother... they have other ships in orbit that you can not see!” Emylea spoke again. “They... they have a way to hide their ships from our sensors and visual reference! If you attack... they will stop hiding and they will destroy all of you! You must stand down and enter the system peacefully!”

“How... how do I know this is not all some elaborate hoax?” Saydia demanded. “Emylea, Namiri, the Kintaur have used our people like this before! You know that! We...”

Saydia saw Namiri looked to the side in her transmission and then the obvious form of the female moved into the transmission next to her. She was taller than her petite five foot tall daughter by a good five inches and Saydia Daret could not hold back the intake of breath at her exotic beauty. She wore very strange black and crimson body armor, armor unlike any she had ever seen before and her black hair was very long and pulled into some sort of pony tail. What was even more amazing were her eyes, astonishing azure blue eyes that almost glowed in their brightness. The blue colored eyes were encased by a thick black ring and it was obvious that whoever she was, she was Lycavorian, as the tips of her fangs were extended and protruding from beneath her full lips. Saydia also saw the tips of a dual set of fangs beside her main ones, something she had never seen in a Lycavorian before. Those eyes gazed at her intently now.

“Good day!” Aricia spoke casually. “Your daughters are telling you the truth Sovereign Regent Daret. They are in no danger from us. They were helping our people run from these fool Kintaur and were ready to defend them with their lives. They have nothing to fear from us. And nor do you.”

“You... you are holding them there!” Saydia stammered.

Aricia shook her head. “We are not holding them at all Sovereign Regent Saydia Daret.” Aricia smiled gently when she saw the surprised look on Saydia’s face. “Yes... Tobia has told us about you.”

“Who are you?” Saydia demanded.

“My name is Aricia Leonidas... I am one of six Queens of the Lycavorian Union.” She answered seeing the surprise on Saydia’s face once more. “My people do not run from the enemy very well Sovereign Regent Daret. Any enemy. It’s not in our nature. Your people stood with us bravely and we recognize this. Our mate’s brother is going to bring your daughter to the surface as soon as we are done talking. Your people are being fed... though our combat rations are not the tastiest food they will ever have I'm quite sure. My fellow Queen and wife Anja Leonidas is seeing to their medical needs if any."

"You are... you are a Queen?" Saydia gasped in surprise.

"Mother... this is the Queen of the Lycavorian people. One... one of them anyway." Namiri declared.

"There is no Lycavorian Queen! There is no King! The Lycavorian government was destroyed when the Svorag attacked that planet!" Perlyea snapped from the side of the bridge now. "You are lying! You are lying to us! All of you lie!"

"Perlyea remain silent!" Saydia hissed angrily.

Aricia shook her head slowly in disbelief at the ignorance of some people. "Forgive me... I am not in the best of moods at the moment. We have come a long way to find our people and when we do... we discover these Kintaur fools trying to turn them into slaves! Our husband and King did not like this in the least and he made the Kintaur pay the ultimate price for their misconceptions. As our beloved husband is fond of saying... we can do this one of two ways. We have no desire for a conflict with you and we even assisted your people here on the surface. They are fine troops by the way, and very well led. You can see one of our ships on your sensors... but if you enter this system and attack that ship... the other forty will appear and our husband and mate will order them to blow your arrogant asses out of the stars." Aricia finished in a rather blunt and final tone of voice. "How is that for diplomacy and first contact? It's your choice to make."

Saydia could not see Helen rolling her eyes in disgust at Aricia's words as she stood just outside the transmission cone. She had arrived on the surface only a few moments before the transmission and helped Tobia convince Martin to allow Aricia to make the initial transmission since the Tasmor were a female dominated society. Helen should have known better though, Aricia Leonidas, like Anja and Martin, could be as blunt as a sledge hammer at times. This was one of those times.

"Drenia... what is on our sensors?" Saydia gasped.

"Nothing that we can see Sovereign..." Drenia answered. "There is still nothing on the sensors except that one ship and the disabled Kintaur vessel!" She exclaimed.

"Twenty seconds to entry of system!" The voice echoed.

Saydia returned her gaze to those beautiful azure blue eyes eyes in the transmission standing beside her daughter.

"I have twelve ships!" Saydia spoke.

Aricia nodded her head. "We have forty-one. And two of them are twice the size of the ship you can see on your sensors. We are not looking for a conflict as I said... but if you want one... it will be very short I assure you. And all of you will be space dust!"

"Mother please listen to her!" Emylea pleaded. "She is telling the truth mother. I am on one of the ships you cannot see! It is huge mother! Their technology is... it is beyond ours!"

"Mother... I told you Tobia is on the surface with me." Namiri spoke once more. "She urges you to be wise and use your intuition."

Saydia's mind raced back to the moments she and the Pralor Tobia had shared. Tobia was a soothsayer almost and could always say and do things to put Saydia at ease. She was also a very good lover in their bed and though they had parted ways it had been on excellent terms for Saydia realized Tobia was still very much in love with another and Saydia had feelings for someone else as well. Truly, Tobia was one of only three Pralors that Saydia had any faith and trust in.

Saydia turned to Drenia. "Drenia... give the order to power down our weapons." She stated.

"Sovereign Regent I protest!" Perlyea spat as she moved forward. "You can not allow them to dictate to us what we will do! We are Tasmor!"

Saydia ignored her. "Captain Drenia, please issue the order to power down our weapons and prepare to enter the system. Pass the word to all ships that we are dropping to medium alert. We do not know what is happening and I will not risk our people and ships against an unknown force."

Drenia nodded her head in relief and turned to begin issuing orders. Saydia turned back to the image of the man in the transmission. "I have done as you ask." She spoke. "I ask only that you do not hurt my daughters."

Saydia saw the woman smile now and bare those incredibly vicious dual wolf fangs unlike any she had seen before. However her eyes told Saydia a different story and she felt herself relax somewhat.

“We have no intention of hurting your daughters.” Aricia told her. “They and your other people helped mine. They were willing to die fighting these Kintaur fools in protecting my people. We don’t forget things like that. We have daughters as well Sovereign Regent, eight of them in fact. To show you that we are not an enemy I will even put your daughters on one of our transports and we will shuttle up to your ship when you obtain orbit.”

“And after that?” Saydia asked her.

“Our husband will allow you to maintain a defensive posture if you wish... and we will order a few more of our ships to appear so that you know what you would have faced would have been suicidal.” Aricia told her. “Then I suggest that we all return to the surface so that we can talk.”

“Talk?” Saydia gasped. “I want my daughters and our people back! We have nothing to talk about!”

Aricia’s smile was not pleasant this time and Saydia almost sensed that. “Oh... but we do have a lot to talk about Sovereign Regent Saydia Daret. We need to talk about where you have taken all of our people that survived the Svorag attack on this planet. We would like them back if you don’t mind; every last one of them. We will see you shortly. Spartan Two is clear!”

Saydia looked at the transmission in shock as it ended abruptly. What had she just opened the door into she wondered.

TDF SAKAR OFFICER CONFERENCE ROOM

“Five ships total. Four of which materialized out of nowhere just as we entered the system. One is nearly four thousand meters long! None of them match any known ship we have in our databases.” Captain Drenia spoke as she read from the data pad. “I have deployed our Detachment into a standard defensive diamond and we will come in range of the planet in just under an hour.”

“What about these ships?” Saydia asked.

“Our passive sensors are unable to penetrate their hulls, as they are made of some sort of material we have never seen before. My Chief Sensor Operator says even an active scan might not get through.” Drenia answered her. “We have never seen their configuration before as I have said. Visual sensors indicate what appear to be large, energy based turrets all across the surface of the largest ship and our helm officer says what looks like smaller launch bays on the ventral portion of this same ship.”

“Launch bays?” Saydia asked. “Launch bays for what Drenia?”

“I would have to say fighters or drones of some sort Sovereign.” Drenia answered. “If I had to guess... I would say this is a carrier vessel of some kind Sovereign. It is similar in theory to what we once considered but ruled out due to the size and cost.” She looked back to the data pad. “From what we have been able to determine, all of the ships have what appear to be some form of regenerative shielding and this same composition of armor and hull. All of them also have what appear to be Pralor Quantum Fusion power sources; at the very least based on their technology anyway. They are very different energy readings than what we have taken from Pralor ships but they are also very similar in some ways. They are all exceptionally well armed Sovereign Regent. That woman was right... given what we have been able to detect on sensors and the obvious advanced power source on all the ships... we would not have stood a chance against them.”

“Such defeatist’s attitudes are not needed!” Perlyea snapped from her seat.

“Chief Counsel Perlyea Kalrr!” Saydia snarled at the woman. “You will not berate one of the most senior ship officers within the TDF in my presence! Captain Drenia certainly has forgotten more about ship combat than you will ever understand Chief Counsel!”

“The Second Officer from your daughter’s Patrol Frigate forwarded a initial report as soon as we entered the system Sovereign.” Drenia said. “They only saw the one ship on their sensors the entire time. They fired on the Kintaur ship almost instantly after taking it within this holding beam. Within moments they detected the signatures of half a dozen smaller transport ships entering the atmosphere of Ventori. None of them came from this single ship. At least a dozen more have moved to the surface since the fighting stopped. Emylea herself stated that they just appeared on the Kintaur ship and rescued her. These are things we just cannot dismiss as irrelevant!”

“We are Tasmor!” Perlyea barked. “We bow to no one, especially not to some male who pronounces himself King and uses females as his pawns!”

“How do we know he is not a King?” Another female spoke from the end of the table.

Saydia looked at the woman. “Major Remina...?”

“We have been assisting the relocation of the Lycavorian people from Ventori for just over three years now Sovereign Regent, but we do not know enough about them or their history to draw any definitive answers to many questions that we still have. They are not native to this system, which we do know without question. Even their own history scholars say this. How did they get here if those on Ventori have not even achieved space flight? They are a proud people, just as we are.” The woman answered. “Only a few among our people, including your daughter Namiri, have made any effort to learn about them and their ways.”

“They are beneath us!” Perlyea said.

“Those Lycavorians from Ventori are less advanced than us in technological terms Chief Counsel... but that does not make them less than us.” Remina answered calmly. “They stood against the Svorag without fear and with great skill before they were overwhelmed by sheer numbers. They killed hundreds of thousands of them before they fell. They are by no means stupid and their remaining leaders have insured they look after their people first and foremost in any dealings that they have with us concerning our agreements with the Polyplast mines.”

“We must not forget that these new Lycavorians are technologically far more advanced than us.” Drenia spoke. “Where did they come from?”

“It’s obvious they are pawns of the Pralors!” Perlyea hissed. “They even admit to Tobia travelling with them.”

“We already know what you think of the Pralor people Perlyea!” Saydia snapped. “Tobia has never lied to me or to us! I do not believe she is lying to us now! If she is with them, there is a reason that we do not know.”

“You only think this because she shared the warmth of your bed during her stays among our people!” Perlyea spoke.

Saydia lifted her hand to point at Perlyea. “Who I share my bed with is my business and mine alone Chief Counsel! Tobia was among our people for nearly a year and she did nothing but make friends and assist us in however she was able! You will not speak badly of her! Is that very clear?”

“Your judgment concerning her is clouded and...” Perlyea began.

“I do not think Sovereign Regent Daret’s judgment is clouded Chief Counsel Perlyea.” Drenia spoke thoughtfully, cutting off Perlyea. “If they did get their technology from the Pralor people, then it would be recognizable to us. These ships and the power sources my people are seeing are quite different. It may look like Pralor technology at first glance but it is most certainly not their technology. They built it to be very similar perhaps using some base designs and schematics, but it is definitely not Pralor tech.”

“Namiri said these new Lycavorians decimated an entire Kintaur War Platoon Sovereign Regent.” Remina spoke once more. “How can we just overlook that? We have fought the Kintaur for centuries and would never face a War Platoon with anything less than two or three to one odds.”

“The female who spoke to us Remina...?” Saydia asked turning to look at her. “She seemed different than other females I have seen from their species.”

“Much more confident and in control... yes I noticed that as well.” Remina spoke. “I have a theory Sovereign... if you will allow me.”

Saydia nodded. “Of course.”

“I have debriefed many of the Lycavorian leaders that were able to escape the Svorag attacks and who we then rescued.” Remina told her. “When I asked about their history... all of them were very open of what their history scrolls and data pads spoke of. We did not have to assist them yet you made the decision to do just that. They are very grateful to us Sovereign.”

“What did they tell you?” Saydia asked.

“They spoke of another entirely different caste of Lycavorians that was thought lost to the ages long ago. Alpha Lycavorians they called them; the most dominant males and females of their species. These Alpha Lycavorians were the ones who usually had most of the positions of authority and who did most of the fighting. They were physically larger, much more aggressive and far less prone to bow to pressure. Hence why this female acted as she did. I would hazard a guess and say she is an Alpha Lycavorian female. And if she spoke of a King, her husband and mate, then he is undoubtedly an Alpha as well.”

“We know every portion of this Quadrant of space!” Perlyea spoke now. “There are no such Lycavorians anywhere like you speak!”

“I did not say they came from this Quadrant of space Chief Counsel.” Remina stated. “And it would be ignorant in the extreme for us to assume that we are alone among the stars with the exception of those species in this quadrant.”

Drenia and Saydia both looked at her with wide eyes as they understood what she was saying. “They have Interstellar Drive capability!” Saydia finally gasped.

“It would explain why we have never seen them before.” Remina said. “Captain Drenia has already said their technology appears to be based on Pralor technology... at least in some form. We already know that the Pralor people have Interstellar Drive capability...”

“Which they refused to share with us!” Perlyea spat.

“Just because they refused to share this knowledge with us does not make them bad Chief Counsel. Or untrustworthy as you believe.” Remina stated and Saydia held back her smile as she watched the Major stick it to the arrogant woman. “We will eventually develop Interstellar travel, just as we developed Interplanetary travel. Having it given to us by another species when we are not ready to face whatever is out there... that is foolish. It is also foolish to assume that the Pralors are the only species that has this knowledge?”

This statement caused even Perlyea to remain quiet while ideas and options raced through their minds.

Perlyea was the first one to speak. “Major Remina... would it be logical to think that if this Alpha caste did indeed exist, that they would be even more physically robust than those we are familiar with?”

Remina nodded her head slowly. “I would imagine so yes.” She replied.

Saydia looked at her now. “Remina do you still have the names of the Lycavorians you spoke to?”

“Certainly Sovereign Regent. As well as the planets we relocated them to.” She replied. “All of them went to our planets with the largest Polyplast mines in our territory. As I said it is one of the agreements they offered in return for us helping them. They insisted on this in order to keep their honor and work ethic. They would work the mines for us and in return we would provide housing and pay and medical care. As you know the Polyplast mines are deadly to our people but have no effect on Lycavorians due to their increased regenerative healing systems. It is my understanding the agreement has worked out rather well for both of our peoples and ore production has increased by nineteen percent since they began running the mines. They actually offered this to us in return for our help as I said. They are a proud species after all.”

“I want you to speak with them again.” Saydia said. “Transfer to one of our Battlecruisers and use our long range communications. Have them gathered and talk with them. Find out whatever you can about what they know.”

Perlyea glared at her. “You can’t seriously be entertaining the notion of allowing them to return to Tasmor space with us?” She almost shouted.

Saydia looked at her. “Yes I am.” She stated.

“I protest!” Perlyea spat.

“Protest all you like.” Saydia told her. “I will do everything within my power to protect our people whether the Council of Governors agrees or not!”

“You can’t be serious?” Perlyea gasped.

“I have six hundred billion Tasmor lives that rely on me to keep them safe and to insure that they have a future!” Saydia barked. “I assure you... I am most serious!”

The buzzing from the panel on the table started and Saydia reached out and tapped the panel. “Yes?”

“Sovereign... one of the Lycavorian transports has left the surface. They are requesting permission to land in our Port Landing Bay.” The female voice spoke. “They say that your daughters are onboard as well as the woman who spoke to you.”

“Allow them to land!” Saydia spoke. “I want a full security detachment in place in three minutes!”

“Their orders?” The voice asked.

“To observe for now.” Saydia answered. “Only observe.”

TDF SAKAR PORT LANDING BAY

Saydia and the others were circled by a ring of twelve TDF Regent Security. They were exceptionally well trained Tasmor females that were Saydia's personal guard. These twelve traveled wherever Saydia went, while another twenty-four secured her home and offices on the Tasmor homeworld of Maravina. They rotated over the course of months so that none of them became complacent in their duties. The tall, dark skinned and exotically beautiful Anthylea was their commander and she stood just to Saydia's right and slightly behind her. Anthylea was never very far from their Sovereign Regent's side and had been her personal RS Officer for over a decade now.

Activity in the landing bay had come to a halt as the STRIKER DT MK II had eased into the landing bay with the instructions from the Tasmor flight control officer and settled gently to the deck. The odd looking ship was nearly as large as some of the Tasmor military Frigates and from the way it maneuvered to enter the bay and then inside the landing bay, none one doubted the skill of the pilot. All of them stared at the sleek looking ship in awe. They had never seen anything like it before and many wondered just what was inside the more than one hundred meter long ship. Drenia stood beside Saydia and her trained eye took in the smooth way the ship hovered off the deck and moved within the confines of the landing bay. Whoever was piloting the ship was very, very good at what they did Drenia decided.

As the landing struts touched down and the engines of the strange ship began to ebb, Tasmor Security forces moved forward to surround it.

"Weapons at the ready but keep them pointed at the deck!" Anthylea called out.

It wasn't long before the rear ramp of the MK II began to lower and as everyone watched the interior of the ship appear, the first thing Saydia saw was her daughters standing just inside. Between them stood the woman she had spoken to in the transmission and as soon as the ramp touched the deck and was fully down, Emylea and Namiri jogged down the ramp holding hands directly for where she stood.

Saydia put aside all pretense of her position as she stepped between her security officers and met her daughters half way. She embraced them both tightly in her arms, kissing their heads and holding them to her for a bit longer than usual. This was a surprise for Namiri since her mother had really never shown her much affection as she grew, while her older sisters were showered with love and care. Namiri still loved her mother dearly and this display right now made her feel as if her mother did indeed love her just as much as her sisters. Her words and actions only confirmed this for Namiri, which made her heart sing.

Saydia hugged them both tightly, holding each of their faces in her hands as she inspected them, and then kissing their cheeks on both sides in the traditional fashion of Tasmor mothers. She then planted an additional kiss on each of their foreheads which indicated her deep love for her children as was also tradition in Tasmor society. This was something that Saydia had never done with Namiri, and having her act this way now made Namiri's heart sing in happiness.

Saydia held Namiri's hand in her right and Emylea's hand in her left as she looked back and forth between them. "You are both unhurt?" She asked with concern.

Emylea and Namiri nodded quickly in reply. "We are fine mother." Emylea answered her. "Really... we are fine."

Saydia looked back and forth between them and, as if for the first time in many years, she stared at Namiri and saw the stunning beauty she had grown into. Her flowing dark hair and stunning eyes belonged to her father yes, but Namiri had gotten her mother's delicious female figure as had all her daughters, and her features were definitely more like her own. Saydia realized at that very moment that she had not shown Namiri the love she had deserved through her life because of who her father was and the way they had parted, and she swore now to make amends as best as she was able starting now.

Namiri stared into her eyes and saw something in her mother's beautiful orbs that she had never seen before when she looked at her. She saw love and acceptance and this caused even more happiness to surge through her.

“We had a few casualties... but nothing serious.” Namiri told her.

Saydia looked up as she saw the figure of the woman begin to walk down the ramp now. She saw only the tall, helmeted man beside her, dressed in similar body armor as her and his eyes sweeping back and forth as if looking for danger.

Emylea and Namiri turned as Aricia strode up slowly and stopped.

“Mother... this is... this is Queen Aricia Leonidas.” Namiri spoke as she motioned to Aricia.

Saydia took note that while she was not as tall as her own five foot ten, this woman stood close to that and the body armor she wore did not hide the obvious female proportions of her body. Her raven black hair, still in the pony tail, was now drawn over to the front of her left shoulder.

Aricia smiled as she looked at Saydia. “I bid you welcome from the United Lycavorian Union Sovereign Regent Daret.” She stated.

“You will bow before the Sovereign Regent of the Tasmor people!” Anthylea barked as she stepped forward quickly.

Atropos glared at the tall woman. “A Queen of the Lycavorian Union does not bow to anyone!” He snapped at her.

“You will be silent man!” Anthylea hissed at him. “And know your place among us!”

Aricia reached out calmly and placed her hand on her older brother’s arm before he sent the woman flying across the bay. Tobia had told them to expect this type of greeting and had recommended that Atropos remain behind. Martin and Anja had insisted however and Aricia agreed knowing her brother would not allow her to go alone.

“Pen ur echta un el fervon.” She told him gently. (I will talk to them brother.)

Atropos met his younger sister’s eyes and nodded his head. “Evell alad ter pera oyln nes wen tulan arande.” He told her. (We do not know if they are friend sister)

Aricia smiled up at him. [Isn’t that what we are here to find out?] She asked him within Mindvoice now.

[That does not mean I will allow them to mistreat you Aricia!] Atropos told her. Though he had never been a very powerful Mindvoicer to begin with, once becoming Anja’s Captain and a member of the Durcunusaan, Atropos had grown ten fold in ability and power. He was among those who were considered very high Tier Six Mindvoicers now, equal to Andreus his brother.

Aricia nodded her head. [I know fervon. Just keep your temper in check. As many years as you have protected Anja, her utter lack of patience for arrogant fools has rubbed off on you completely.]

Atropos blinked and then smiled slightly. [Well... that is true.] He answered.

Aricia squeezed his arm and then turned to meet Anthylea’s dark eyes. The exchange between them had not gone unnoticed by Namiri for she had seen other Lycavorians doing the same thing; looking at one another as if talking and it finally hit her standing there. She looked up at her mother.

“Mother... they are speaking with their minds.” She whispered though others who stood close by could hear her.

Saydia looked at her with wide eyes. “What?”

“I have seen other Lycavorians do this.” Namiri said. “They are communicating with their minds and using their native language in the open.”

Aricia’s eyes turned away from where Anthylea glared at her trying to intimidate her and having no effect and focused on Saydia just as she was looking back to her. “Your daughter is correct Sovereign Regent Daret.” Aricia spoke calmly. “My brother and I were talking with each other.”

“You... you can speak with your thoughts?” Saydia gasped aloud.

Aricia nodded. “In a manner of speaking yes.”

“What... what did you say? Speak now!” Anthylea demanded moving closer to Saydia.

“I do not bow to anyone.” Aricia stated evenly as she met Anthylea’s gaze. “I am one of six Queens of the Lycavorian Union and Anome to the King. Is that going to be a problem for you?”

“You will show respect where it is deemed!” Anthylea snapped once more.

“Your attempts at intimidation are sorely lacking whoever you are. They will not work with me.” Aricia stated.

“I am First Colonel Anthylea Tomar! I command the Sovereign Regent’s personal detail of Tasmor Regent Security!” Anthylea spat.

“An impressive title I’m sure.” Aricia told her. “However... respect is earned and not given simply because it is demanded.” Aricia spoke before she looked back to Saydia and met her eyes dismissing Anthylea. This dismissal infuriated Anthylea and she made to move closer to Aricia but Saydia’s discrete hand motion stopped her. “I have returned your daughters to you Regent Daret. Your ships are welcome to land on Ventori in order to retrieve your other people. We are grateful for their help and honor them for their actions. We in turn would like to meet and discuss the location of where you have taken the other survivors among our people so that we may retrieve them.”

“We have taken no one!” Perlyea snapped now as she came forward. “We saved your people from the Svorag!”

Aricia nodded her head. “To which we are extremely grateful.” Aricia said. “However... we are here now and we would like them back. All of them.”

“Now you make demands!” Perlyea spat.

“I’m making a request.” Aricia spoke.

“We are Tasmor and we do not answer to you!” Perlyea barked. “We do not even know who you are! Where you come from? Yet you threaten us with these so called hidden ships that you say you have!”

“Those ships are very real I assure you. Your forces were in an attack formation.” Aricia spoke calmly. “Your intent was to attack our ship when you entered the system without even trying to determine what the situation was. You thought we were helping the Kintaur. Is that not correct Sovereign Daret?”

“The Sovereign Regent of the Tasmor people does not respond to individuals who claim to be Queen and threaten our people!” Perlyea snapped once more. “We do not know you! Why should we trust you! You do not even follow proper decorum when speaking to your betters!”

“Decorum?” Aricia asked slightly surprised. “And who exactly are you?”

“I am Chief Counsel of the Tasmor people Perlyea Kalrr!” She replied.

“And that is a position of some importance I assume?” Aricia asked honestly.

Namiri could barely contain the small laugh that threatened to escape her throat at Aricia’s comment. She saw Perlyea’s eyes widen in anger at this and out of the corner of her eyes she saw Emylea also trying to hide her smile. She stepped forward slightly.

“The Chief Counsel of the Tasmor people is second only to my mother in authority.” Namiri spoke to Aricia.

Aricia nodded her head. “I see.”

“That the Sovereign Regent even chose to meet with you is only because of her two daughters!” Perlyea continued after a moment and even more angry because of Namiri’s answer to Aricia’s question. “We are Tasmor and we are dominant here!”

Aricia looked at Perlyea once more. “Yes... you have already stated that. Quite bluntly I might add. I am not Tasmor however.” She spoke looking back to Saydia who had remained silent so far much to the surprise of both Emylea and Namiri. “Is this how it is to be then?” Aricia asked. “These two voices speak for you as the Sovereign Regent and leader of your people?”

“Mother!” Emylea gasped. “Mother they... they saved us!”

“We do not... we do not know them Emylea!” Saydia spoke for the first time now. “We don’t know where they came from or what they want!”

“We come from what normal star charts would call the Alpha Quadrant.” Aricia stated openly causing many of them to gaze at her in open shock. “And all we want is our people back. I believe I have already made that abundantly clear.”

“Then you do have Interstellar Drive capability!” Perlyea hissed.

Aricia ignored her. “My husband and mate had hoped that you would come to Ventori so that we could sit down in more comfortable surroundings and discuss things in a friendly and open way.” She said.

“Answer my question!” Perlyea barked at her.

“I do not answer to you... upae! And I am done talking to you!” Aricia snarled now as her patience began to wear thin and she allowed her azure blue eyes to shift to her wolf persona. The Regent Security force grew anxious and their hands tightened on their weapons as they inched closer to their regent. Aricia turned back to Saydia. “You have your daughters Regent Daret... and you may collect your other forces on Ventori freely. Once that is complete... if you wish no further contact with us then we ask that you leave the Ventori system and make no attempt to return. We will find our people on our own and retrieve them, wherever they may be.”

“Are you threatening us?” Perlyea growled.

Aricia shook her head. “Not at all... I’m merely stating what we will do.” She replied. “We are new to this quadrant of space and we would have liked to seek out new allies and friends. I see that is not what you want as well.”

“Your people are within Tasmor space!” Perlyea spat.

“Then that is where we will go to collect them.” Aricia said. “Unless you are now telling me you will not allow us to do this.”

“You ally yourself with the Pralor people!” Perlyea spoke. “They are no friends to us!”

Aricia looked at her. “There are many among our people, myself included, who can trace our original bloodlines back within our history and discover Pralor bloodlines mixed in with that of our Lycavorian blood. Trust me... it was very much a surprise to the Pralor people when we arrived here. However... that is the reason we came out here.” Aricia told her. “We did not know what we would find.”

“But you do have Interstellar Drive capability?” Saydia asked finally speaking.

Aricia met her eyes. “I don’t see the relevance of that in our current situation.” She replied.

“We will decide what is relevant!” Perlyea spoke. “You tell us you have over forty ships hidden out here. We see only five! You demand your people back when you have not provided and cared for them for the last three years! We saved your people!” She snarled vehemently. “The Tasmor saved your people! What will you give us in return for what we have done?”

Aricia’s eyes went from Perlyea to Saydia slowly. “Are you saying that you will hold our people hostage in return for some form of reparations Sovereign Regent Daret?” She asked.

“Mother you can’t!” Namiri exclaimed. “Mother... they saved us!”

“Mother please!” Emylea protested. “They...”

“Be silent both of you!” Saydia hissed at them. She turned back to Aricia quickly. “You are... you are not like the other Lycavorians that we are accustomed to. Are there... are there more of your people?”

“The Lycavorian Union comprises over nine hundred worlds and some hundred and ninety different species.” Aricia told her. “Lycavorians are only part of the Union.”

“Nine hundred worlds?” Saydia gasped in shock. “How... how large is...”

“At our last census... our population was almost forty trillion.” Aricia answered her seeing the looks of utter astonishment from many of those standing around. “Lycavorians as a whole make up only about fourteen percent of our population.”

“Yet you are Queen.” Saydia said. “An Alpha female... yes?”

Aricia canted her head slightly as she looked at her. “The different castes of our people have long since been abandoned... but yes... to answer your question, I am what would be considered an Alpha female. As are all my fellow Queens.”

“No doubt your pig male uses you and the others at his whim!” Perlyea hissed. “You are pawns of his!”

Aricia’s wolf eyes narrowed somewhat. “Martin Leonidas is King of the Union. We are his wives and mates and Queens. We are mothers to his many children. He is many things... but he is most certainly not a pig.” She told Perlyea. “The tone in which you speak of our beloved husband is offensive to me. The entire tone of this meeting is offensive to me. I believe we will be leaving now. It has been a pleasure meeting you Sovereign Regent Daret... but our business is concluded. I will return to Ventori and explain to my husband that you do not wish to be friends or have friendly relations.”

“You cannot leave!” Perlyea shouted out stunned that this female would just dismiss them.

Aricia looked at her. “Oh yes... I can. Unless you plan on trying to stop me... or attempt to hold me hostage in some way. Either outcome would lead to violence and I can assure you, your people would not come out the victors.” She stated calmly.

“You think much of yourself little Queen!” Perlyea snapped moving closer to her now very angry.

Aricia met her eyes with no back down in her whatsoever. “And you think too much of yourself. If conflict is what you wish then I guarantee that my brother and I will kill most of those in this landing bay before we fall. And we will begin with your Sovereign Regent and you woman!”

“Enough!” Saydia barked now as she moved forward. “We do not want violence!”

“Your Chief Counsel seems to think otherwise.” Aricia spoke.

“Perlyea damn you step back or I will have you arrested!” Saydia growled.

Aricia waited until the woman had taken several steps back, the look on her face one of arrogance and anger. She turned back to Saydia. “Please contact our Command ship on the frequency that we gave to you in order to facilitate the return of our people. As for any sort of reparations that you expect...”

“Wait!” Saydia exclaimed loudly. Saydia Daret looked at Aricia intently as she moved closer to her. This woman was confident and strong, much more so than any Lycavorian female she had ever met. She did not act as if the Tasmor were beneath her in any way, but she was obviously not going to be pushed around. In all honesty, she was like a breath of fresh air to Saydia. There was also something about her that told Saydia if pushed too far she would react viciously and the one thing Saydia had noticed right away was that she was highly skilled, as was the tall man beside her who she called brother. If it came to a conflict, Saydia did not doubt that those in their immediate area would not survive the encounter. “I will accept your invitation Queen Leonidas.”

Perlyea looked at her as if she had lost her mind. “Sovereign Regent you can’t!” She gasped aloud.

Saydia looked at her. “I can and I will.” Saydia spoke harshly. She turned back to Aricia. “May I bring others?”

Aricia turned back to face her fully. “You are in no danger with us Sovereign Regent... and you may bring as many aides or security as you see fit. Our ship can carry fifty easily... though most will have to sit on the floor. This class of ship is more of a moving home if you will.”

“Sovereign you cannot!” Perlyea persisted. “You will be out of our reach! We will not be able to retrieve you should anything happen!”

“Do you foresee something happening?” Aricia asked her now. “We do not wish a conflict and we most certainly will not start one. Will you?”

“No... we will not!” Saydia stated firmly. “Anthylea... choose a dozen to accompany us. Drenia... some of your engineers and technicians I think as well.” Saydia looked at Aricia. “If that is alright?”

Aricia nodded. “Of course.” She said.

“Mother... Namiri and I wish to return.” Emylea spoke. “I ordered my frigates to land and that is where our people are.”

Saydia looked at her and then Namiri and saw both of them nod. She bowed her head in acceptance. “Very well.” She said.

“Can we bring weapons?” Anthylea asked looking at Aricia.

“All of your people on Ventori still have their weapons First Colonel Anthylea Tomar.” Aricia answered her surprising Anthylea with her tone of respect. “You will not need them but it would be foolish of us to expect you to be weaponless given the situation don’t you think.”

“And what if the Kintaur return?” Perlyea demanded. “What if they come here with more ships and men?”

Aricia met her eyes. “Then they will find my beloved husband and mate does not care for them in the least. And he will deal with them. Harshly.”

VENTORI

“...Came out of nowhere Milord.” Nalmos spoke softly.

The ADHOC base was rapidly taking shape as more personnel from the ARC ROYAL and other ships were shuttling down. Portable buildings had already been put up and the smell of hot food was beginning to filter through the afternoon air. Word had spread quickly among the people that their King intended to remain here and search for more survivors. Already teams were preparing to strike out to the nearest cities and begin searching for more survivors. The Lycavorians from Ventori were still being looked after, many of them enjoying the first really good hot meal in months and for the first time in years feeling safe and secure. Duewa had been among the first down to the surface once the camp had been secure and she was now overseeing the medics as they moved among the people and examined and treated them. Duewa discovered that she, Anja and the dozen Hadarian medics were being viewed as almost godlike because of their healing abilities. Anja had done the initial exams and Duewa was now directing most of her efforts on those who Anja had singled out as needing special care. Most of the Lycavorians were in excellent health considering, but there were some elderly and children that needed specialized care and those were the ones Duewa focused on.

Anja and Helen had joined Martin, Danny and Nalmos on the grassy bank of the nearby river. Half a dozen Durcunusaan were situated at different locations all around them, all of them within fifty meters of their King, Queen and Feravomir. The arrival of Torma, Isheeni, Arzoal, Aurith and Miath had thrown the Lycavorians from Ventori and the Tasmor troops into a fit at first upon seeing the huge beasts when they exited the STRIKERS that landed. It took only a moment of seeing Martin standing in front of the obsidian scaled monstrosity and stroke his scales to calm the Lycavorians. As with their Alpha wolf brothers and sisters, the Beta and Omega wolves of Ventori adapted instantly to most any situation. The Tasmor had been another story as they huddled with each other and tried to move as far as possible from the dragons. It took only moments before the Ventori Lycavorians realized the dragons were just as intelligent as any two legged person walking the surface for they could feel and hear the tremors within the Etheric realm as Martin spoke to them and with nods of understanding they had taken to the skies above and begun searching out the area around them.

Nalmos lowered the ration bar after taking a bite and chewing for a few seconds. He had watched as the tiny, Persian red haired Queen settled between the King's legs and tucked her petite form intimately against that of his. It looked comical in a way because of the body armor they both wore but Nalmos knew instantly why Anja did this. Martin's Leonidas's mint like scent permeated her entire being and he judged she had been turned at least two decades ago, probably more. While he would never comment on it, her honey scent and female wolf aura called only for one man and that was the King. He could smell five other distinct scents on the King, all deeply imbedded within his blood. Two of those scents Nalmos had met and watched as they departed the planet with Namiri; the raven haired pureblood female Queen and the golden blond haired elven Queen. For'mya's ears, as well as those other elves among their group, had been something of incredible interest to the Ventori Lycavorians and the Tasmor for they had never seen elves before. Nalmos could also detect all of their female scents mingled deeply together which told him many things about the King and Queens now before him. He had watched as Martin reached into a small pouch on his belt as Anja settled between his legs and he pulled out what appeared to be a similar ration bar. He tore open the wrapper, and handed it to Anja who bit a chunk off before handing it back to him. It was a true Alpha instinct Nalmos knew. Always insure your mates ate first and had the choice pick of food. Nalmos knew Alphas adhered to this deeply from the many history scrolls he had studied growing up, and even now, at thirty-three thousand years old, to see that it was all actually true was a blessing.

Nalmos lifted his eyes back to Martin. "We had no warning. We had only just begun to build satellites that could see outside of our system. We had established a Space Program only the year prior to the initial attack. None of our satellites ever saw the monsters coming." He continued speaking. "I was... I was Chief Justice of Jorlari... the city most of us are from."

"Chief Justice?" Martin asked. "Like a judge?"

Nalmos shook his head. "I was the leader of Jorlari."

Anja glanced up at Martin's face. "Like a mayor Lover." She spoke.

Martin nodded. "Ah... ok. That's why everyone defers to you now?"

"They came out of the night sky in ships. Hundreds of ships." Nalmos spoke softly. "There must have been hundreds of thousands of them that landed in the first wave all across the planet. Five million died in the first day. Fifteen million the second. My city... my city had a population of forty-three million Milord." The pain in his voice was obvious to all of them and it showed in his face. "Those monsters butchered us in the streets like fodder! We fought valiantly but many of our most modern weapons were ineffective against them. On the third day we discovered they were taking thousands of our people prisoner and transporting them to their ships in orbit. Reports were coming in from all over the planet from other Chief Justices. They were reporting the same thing. Millions dead. Thousands taken prisoner. They were... they were transforming them and..."

“We know.” Anja said softly seeing his eyes look up at her. “We have seen what they do to those they take prisoner. They are called Svorag.”

“You... you have fought them my Queen?” Nalmos asked surprised.

Martin nodded his head. “Yes. Our weapons work a lot better... but they are still some hard ronnus to kill.”

“Please continue Nalmos.” Anja said softly.

“We... we broke into small groups... hundreds of small groups and began making our way into the timber and mountains to escape them.” Nalmos continued now. “Many were soon discovered and...”

“You had family?” Martin asked him gently.

Nalmos looked up into his eyes. “A wife and mate.” He answered with a gentle nod. “We had... we had nine children. She... my mate was killed on the second night along with our two youngest sons. Four of my sons were in the active army and my daughters all worked in City Common areas. The Medical Center and Communications Department. My mate... she was... she was Senior Surgeon at the main medical center. I do... I do not know what became of my other children. Survivors were scattered everywhere across the planet. It is... it is my hope that they were rescued by the Tasmor and taken to safety.”

“When did these Tasmor show up?” Martin asked.

Nalmos looked at him. “Six months after the invasion began they just... these Svorag just stopped looking for survivors and left. The first Tasmor ships began to land a month later.”

Martin’s eyes narrowed. “Wait... they just stopped and left?” He asked.

Nalmos nodded his head. “No one can explain it. We went to sleep one night and they were all around. That morning they were gone. Our cities were destroyed... our infrastructure devastated. The few groups we could talk to spoke of the same thing all across the planet. So much... thousands of years of growing and expanding our knowledge and our people and it was over in less than a year.”

“That seems awful convenient.” Martin said.

Nalmos shook his head. “They assisted us Milord.” He said quickly. “You must have seen their technology... they would have been no match for these Svorag. They would have died just as we did.”

“He’s right Martin.” Helen spoke now looking at him and knowing what was running through his head as his Praetorian Mage. “Not everyone has the will or determination of Spartans Martin Leonidas. Not all of us are willing to fight to the death. I know you recognize that.”

Martin nodded slowly. “I know.” He said softly.

“If everything we have seen is to be believed Lover...” Anja spoke now. “The Tasmor did what they were able to do. They did not have to come here at all... but they did. They have saved thousands.”

“They brought food and water and medicines Milord.” Nalmos affirmed Anja’s words. “They set up large camps for refugees and provided shelter and care from the elements. They... they treated our females better than our males obviously given their nature... but they never refused us anything.”

“How did they begin taking our people offworld?” Martin asked.

“The camps were becoming over crowded.” Nalmos answered. “The remaining Chief Justices gathered and we went to the Tasmor with an offer.”

“What offer?”

“By then we knew that much of their metal was formed from Polyplast.” Nalmos spoke. “We knew of this ore because there are massive deposits here on Ventori. We did not mine the mineral because we did not know what uses there were for it. When we discovered this, then we approached them about allowing us to mine it for them in return for their continued assistance. The mineral ore in its natural form is lethal to their people and they have been mining it with machines for centuries. Very inefficiently I might add. We offered to do this for them.”

“For what in return?” Anja asked.

“They have taken millions of our people as refugees and moved them to their planets with the largest mines.” Nalmos said. “They have given us homes and restored some semblance of what we once had. Namiri and her team were here to do that with my group here. I am the last Chief Justice remaining on Ventori that I know of. The others have been pushing for me to leave for the last year. I have been resisting because...”

“Because Ventori is your home.” Helen spoke gently.

Nalmos nodded his head. “Yes.”

“You can communicate with the others though?” Helen asked.

Nalmos nodded once more. “The Tasmor left caches of equipment at the former camps. Among the equipment was the ability to communicate with our people. Life is... life on the Tasmor worlds is not like it was here... but it is better than trying to survive on this now barren world.”

“Nalmos... how many are left?” Martin finally asked him.

“I do not know Milord.” He answered. “We do not... we do not have the ability to scan the surface of Ventori and discover this. I would not know where to begin.”

“You do now.” Martin spoke confidently. “How many of these Chief Justices remain?”

“Seven Milord.” Nalmos answered. “I was senior so I made sure all of them were among the first refugees to leave Ventori. In order to keep our people together as best as they were able and to insure the agreement we made with the Tasmor was honored.”

“And has it been honored?” Helen asked.

Nalmos nodded his head. “I have spoken to all of them over the course of the last year. The Tasmor are... they are a unique species... but they are not unfriendly. Our people have homes and safety once more.”

“And these Kintaur dirt bags?” Martin asked.

Nalmos shook his head now. “I do not know much about them.” He answered. “Until six months ago we had never seen them before. I know the Tasmor hate them and they are dire foes, but they also fear them.”

“They are fugly.” Anja stated flatly.

Nalmos watched as Martin grinned and leaned over to nuzzle Anja’s ear and cheek. He saw her eyes close in delight before she pushed him away embarrassed. Helen smiled now as well.

“Don’t mind them.” Danny spoke for the first time. “They aren’t exactly normal if you get my meaning.”

Nalmos looked at him and then swept his eyes over Helen and back to Martin and Anja. “You are Alphas. All of you are Alphas. You are not entirely Lycavorian my Queen but you are definitely an Alpha.”

Anja chuckled. “That’s his fault.” Anja stated with a smile. “Sometimes he can’t keep his fangs or his...”

“Anja!” Helen exclaimed knowing what she was going to say.

Anja looked at her only slightly embarrassed and then back to Nalmos. She smiled shyly. “Sorry.” She said. “But you are correct. I am also Hadarian. My people are Healers. We have been part of the Union since its inception by this big lug’s grandfather.”

“And... the one... the Queen with the ears... she is...” Nalmos asked.

Danny nodded. “Another species within the Union.” He replied. “Two of my wives and mates are elves. Tasty too.” He stated with a smile.

“Daniel Simpson!” Helen popped.

“What?” Daniel spoke right back. “It’s true!”

“I will make sure I inform Anuk and Nayeca of your description of them.” Helen stated.

Nalmos couldn’t help but laugh gently now. The first laugh he had been able to have in many years now. He shook his head. “Our history scrolls... you are so much like what they say Alphas are... but you are so unlike them in many ways as well.”

Helen leaned forward. “Yes... well these two have made a history of being strange.” She stated. “And their chosen wives and mates are no different!”

All of them heard the STRIKER flash overhead and begin its descent into the landing zone a few hundred meters away. Martin rose to his feet and pulled Anja up with him before reaching over to help Helen up. Daniel rose and assisted Nalmos by his arm and they all looked at him.

“Time to go meet the boss of this female dominant species.” Martin said.

“This will be interesting.” Danny spoke.

“If everything... my experience with the Tasmor tells me they will be somewhat taken aback by your nature Milord.” Nalmos spoke as Helen took his arm.

“You have no idea.” Helen spoke as she began to lead him away.

“I’m not that bad.” Martin protested.

Anja slapped his armored chest. “That’s open for debate Lover.” She said before following Helen.

Danny moved up beside Martin as they waited until they were out of earshot. “What do you have running through that head of yours fervon?” He asked.

“Something stinks Dan.” Martin said softly. “It stinks to high heaven.”

“You noticed that too huh?” Danny commented.

“The Svorag didn’t just happen to find this planet in a leisurely stroll out among the stars Danny.” Martin said. “They were sent here. Directed here. And why just up and leave overnight when they were wiping everything out?”

“You think these Tasmor are involved?” Danny asked.

Martin shook his head. “That I don’t know.” He said. “What I do know is that these Kintaur ass wipes showed up here when the Tasmor were trying to pull Nalmos and survivors off the planet. They knew that the Tasmor would be here. They got that information from someone.”

Danny nodded. “That’s what the computer logs seem to indicate.” He said.

Martin looked at him. “I told Torma to find those few that Colin says escaped Danny. He and Isheeni will find them and bring them to you. Have Nubian work her magic on them.” He said referring to Nayeca by the nickname Danny had given her decades ago. “I want answers to my questions fervon.”

“Rules?” Danny asked.

“None.” Marti answered him. “None at all.”

CHAPTER FORTY-TWO

AUSTROVA

2.3 KILOMETERS FROM COREN RE MYDALA’S ESTATE

The lights of the city in the distance and the many homes along its banks reflecting off the river gave it a beautiful glow along its entire length Sherice thought to herself. It stretched for many miles outside of the city; Arduri telling her it began in the mountains far to the north and ended up nearly a hundred and eighty miles to the south. As she allowed her soft blue eyes to scan the banks of the river with her keen wolf vision, Sherice couldn’t help the feelings of contentment and happiness that filled her now, no matter their situation. As she glanced out of the corner of her eyes, the source of those blissful emotions lay on the hard metal roof beside her behind the massive sniper rifle. Given whom her mother was, and the closeness that she had with all of the Leonidas children and the Royal family as a whole, Sherice shouldn’t have been taken by surprise at the emotions that flowed through her now. Growing up within Sparta and seeing the unquestioned love of the Leonidas family as well as her own family and so many others within Sparta, it should have been expected. These particular emotions had taken her completely off guard however, and they had blossomed and grew too powerful to resist far faster than even she had expected. It had all been so confusing to her at first... that was until she had made the call.

Sherice remembered the conversation with her beloved Lycavorian father as if it was yesterday. It was something she would never forget.

“Papa... I... I was looking for mother.”

The stern but handsome face of her Lycavorian father filled the holo transmission from her parent’s home within Sparta. She had not expected him to be home at this time of the day considering his duties and she was hoping to speak with her mother Thr’won.

“Your mother is in Eden City assisting Deia with her upcoming speech there.” Dansel answered her question. “She won’t return until this evening. Aren’t you deployed with Prince Androcles Sherice? Why are you calling? Is something wrong?”

Sherice shook her head quickly. “No, nothing is wrong father. I was just hoping to speak with mother about something.”

That is when her father’s bright blue eyes narrowed and the corner of his mouth curled slightly upward as it always had when he knew she wasn’t being completely truthful as a child. Sherice adored her father and always had. He was a stern Spartan yes, but he was the most loving man she had ever known. He worshiped the ground her mother Thr'won walked upon and even after over five hundred years together, it was like watching newly mated wolves when they were together. Dandel was a powerful Lycavorian Alpha wolf of very pure blood and the opportunity to take other mates had presented itself to him in the past, yet he had never stopped to consider them. He had once told Sherice that her mother Thr'won was the only woman who could cause his Alpha blood to burn as it did. The day he had turned her and made her his mate was the finest day of his life. Sherice also knew that her mother loved him shamelessly in return.

This was a love that they had showered upon their six children, four daughters and two boys, Sherice being the oldest. She had been born two years before the return of King Leonidas, a time when her mother was very active within Sparta as the senior mage and advisor. When it was officially known who King Leonidas was, her mother became even more important and her authority and influence grew. This only made her father even prouder of the woman he had chosen to spend his days with, and he encouraged Thr'won to be as active as she felt the need to be. It was often her father who doted on her and her sisters while her mother took care of business within Sparta and across Earth as the First Oracle's trusted Assistant and finally the Senior Oracle for all of Earth.

Sherice had grown up among the Spartan instructors just like her father and was every bit as skilled as any young male wolf. Her father and others had taught her everything they knew, preparing her for her Agoge for weeks until she was ready. Dandel was a traditional Spartan soldier and senior member of the Durcunusaan now and he adhered to many of the ancient customs, but he was not adverse to change and new things which made him very unique in many ways. Sherice had never been afraid to speak to her father about anything at all when she was growing. Her five siblings had arrived after the return of the King, two of her sisters within the first two years, but Sherice had always remained her father's favorite.

Dandel looked at his oldest daughter in the transmission and reached out to pull the chair closer to him as he sat down. "What is wrong Sherice?" He asked her.

"What makes you think there is something wrong?" She spoke trying to deflect the focus away from her.

"You are the oldest of our children Sherice." Dandel told her. "I have taught you all I know and held nothing back..."

"That is because I am the oldest Papa! My brothers are not yet of age for their Agoges." Sherice said with a smile.

"I am as proud of you as I would be of any son of mine that your mother has given me. You are my first born Sherice; the anchor that holds all of your siblings together." Dandel stated confidently. "Give your mother and I time Sherice, we are still young you know! We will give you and your sisters more brothers; to even things out as your mother says." He finished with a smile.

Sherice smiled and laughed softly. "I know Papa." She answered knowingly for her mother and she had spoken of that very thing before she had left. "Mother has been talking about it as well."

"What troubles you daughter?" Dandel asked. "I know my oldest child well enough to know that you would not call from half a galaxy away unless something troubled you."

Sherice took a deep breath. "Papa I have met someone." She told him. "He is someone who..." Sherice met her father's eyes. "Papa, he causes my wolf blood to sing joyously to the moon. He is someone who..."

"It is the Kavalian that Androcles wanted you to assist with his Etheric powers isn't it?" Dandel questioned. "The one that he touched and granted our Etheric gift of Mindvoicing to isn't it?"

"Mother told you what I was doing?" Sherice asked surprised. She shouldn't have been shocked she knew, for her father, like many of the older Alpha wolves that were born and raised in Sparta had educated themselves in dozens of different fields over the years. The better to be prepared to face whatever came their way he had always told her. Sherice knew it was a matter of pride with them however and her father now held an advanced degree in engineering and was considered an exceptionally powerful Mindvoicer, one of the strongest within Sparta and on Earth.

"Your mother and I keep no secrets from each other Sherice." He answered. "You know that. The Durcunusaan knew that Androcles wanted her to recommend someone and she chose you. Your Etheric skills are nearly the equal of your mother and selecting you was an easy decision for her. The Feravomir agreed."

"Papa, you know that I allowed Falo to scent me?" Sherice told him.

"I am your father! Of course I would know this!" He stated.

"I thought Falo... I thought he was the one Papa." Sherice said. "He is strong and smart and he smells nice but, carians papa, he does not compare to Cowen."

"Tell me what you feel Sherice." Dansel told.

"Cowen is wild papa; so very wild and delicious." Sherice said wistfully. "He is so different than what we have been raised to believe about Kavalians. He is smart and thoughtful and so very powerful. His scent is like, it is like warm, roasted walnuts and it fills my head and my blood even when I am not around him papa! I want to give myself to him but I do not want to dishonor you and mother."

Dansel's eyes grew wide. "Dishonor us?" He exclaimed. "Sherice you could never dishonor your mother and I! Why would you think such a thing?"

"I let Falo scent me Papa." Sherice said. "He believes we are a couple now. I thought we were a couple until I met Cowen. Now I don't know. You have... you are a traditional Spartan papa, and that is how you raised us to be. I..."

"What does your blood and your heart tell you Sherice?" Dansel asked his daughter. "You are half elf but you are still an Alpha female. What does your blood and heart call for daughter?"

"They scream for Cowen papa." She answered instantly. "They scream for him to the very heavens. It is not something I ever expected. I didn't even care for him in the beginning."

"Then you act on that daughter!" Dansel spoke firmly. "If this Cowen does this to you, then you act on it! Your mother and I have never questioned your instincts Sherice. I will not question them now over some silly notion that because Falo scented you, that you now belong to him. You are not mates! If another man stirs your blood enough to have you question what you feel for Falo then it is your right to explore this. And chose him if that is your desire!"

"He is the one Papa." Sherice said. "I know he is the one. I feel it in my heart of hearts."

Dansel nodded his head. "Then I expect you to act as the Spartan daughter I raised you to be." He told her. "I will deal with this Falo."

"Cowen is Kavalian father." Sherice said softly.

"I do not care if he is a green alien from across the stars!" Dansel replied with firm confidence. "If he has stolen the heart of my oldest daughter then he stands above all others."

Sherice smiled. "Thank you papa." She said.

Dansel laughed. "Do not thank me." He said happily. "You do not need my permission to pursue what your wolf blood tells you daughter. You never have. All I ask is that you are sure of your actions."

"I am sure father." Sherice said.

"Then I look forward to meeting this Cowen." Dansel spoke. "And we will share mugs of Spartan wine and talk of the future."

"I don't know when we will return papa." Sherice said.

"Then do your duty daughter and be safe." Dansel said. "I will tell your mother when she returns and we will pray for you out there among the stars."

"As I do for both of you Papa." Sherice said.

Sherice had done exactly what her father told her to do. She acted on what her wolf blood called for her to do. And she was so very delighted she had.

Last night had been the most incredibly erotic and pleasurable evening of her young life and what made it even better was that she knew it would continue for centuries to come. She had gone to Cowen's room, unable to contain the burning of her blood for the massive and very shy Kavalian. Cowen had been surprised yes, but that had not lasted long however. Apparently his emotions were running just as hot as hers. It had taken some nudging on Sherice's part, but what had followed had been the most explosive, passionate and fulfilling night of sex in her life. Cowen's Shan may not have been Lycavorian, but you would have been hard pressed to convince Sherice of that last night. He had practically torn her clothes from her and then proceeded to spend the next hour simply worshiping her lithe body in ways she had never imagined a man could. He had explored and tasted every curve of her body, leaving nothing undiscovered. His short, light brown fur was so very soft and Sherice couldn't keep herself from running her long fingers through his fur no matter where on his huge frame it was as his lips and tongue and hands explored every inch of her body. And his tail... what he had done to her with his tail was simply divine.

Cowen's six foot four body dwarfed her in size, the muscles bulging under his short fur, but for all his size, Sherice had never met a man so gentle but so zealous in his love making. There was nothing he did that came close to the many things she had heard about Kavalians and how they forced their females to be submissive. If anything, Cowen's Shan went out of his way to be the complete opposite. When it finally came time for Sherice to see and experience all he had to give her, she had descended into a world of decadent pleasure that shook her body and her soul right to its core. Sherice was no stranger to men but Cowen filled her in a way that no man had ever been able to do. He was so thick and so long and when she finally grew accustomed to his enormous size, he began to make love to her with a fervor that was unmatched by any wolf or elven man that had ever shared her bed. Her half Lycavorian and half elven body was wrapped within his powerful arms the entire time, as one earth shattering orgasm after another piled atop each other. When Cowen finally reached his own peak and the bulb at the base of his huge cock expanded and locked them together Sherice simply screamed in absolute harmony.

A full hour they had remained locked together that first time and during that time they had stroked each other's bodies and spoke in soft whispers of love and devotion. His soft lips showered her shoulders and neck with fluttering kisses even as his tail danced across her thighs and along her lower back. Cowen did not hold back from her, he didn't want to, for she had already seen the most private parts of his mind during her schooling of him. It was Sherice who began the next bout of love making between them, and Cowen had allowed her to take the lead. And for a glorious hour Sherice had ridden him, sweat adorning both of their bodies and his amazing cock never ceasing to cause rapturous orgasms to ripple through her, even as her whimpers of delight echoed softly in the room. When she sensed he could no longer hold back, Sherice slammed herself down upon his huge cock one last time and felt that wondrous bulb expand once more, locking their groins together as his hot passion erupted deep within her. Sherice had collapsed into an exhausted heap upon his chest utterly spent after that and while his hands and tail stroked her skin once more, she drifted off into a content filled sleep.

That is where she had awoken this morning. The warmth of his fur covered body and his powerful arms encircling her waist made her feel safer at that moment than at any time in her life.

"Archangel Team One is in position Angel Base." Cowen's deep voice jarred her out of her incredible memories as he spoke into his COM implant and she scooted closer to him.

It had been Cowen's idea to have a Sniper Team higher up than the others in an over watch position, which meant putting them across the river from Coren Re Mydala's estate on the roof of this building that had not yet opened to the public. Four other teams were lower to the ground and set up in different locations but only Cowen could see the entire estate from his position. This also meant a larger sniper rifle with more range and once more, only Cowen had the skill and experience in distance shooting to handle the Lycavorian Union's largest and most lethal sniper rifle.

The Union H21A CHAOS was designed and manufactured after King Leonidas returned because of his penchant for durable and reliable weapons. The H21A was the heaviest and longest ranged sniper rifle known to exist today. Cowen's eyes had lit up when he had seen the weapon and Sherice couldn't help but chuckle at his reaction. It was chambered for the ancient, human .50 caliber projectile round, but each and every bullet was hand crafted and loaded. Each round was tipped with a Dragon Armor casing wrapped around a tiny plasma explosive tip. In tests, the H21A had killed targets over four kilometers away with a one hundred percent success ratio. The action and barrel had been reworked when it was redesigned, the different materials used to manufacture it lighter than what they once were, but it was still a heavy weapon and looked nearly identical in looks to its grandfather, the .50 caliber Barrett Sniper Rifle. It had also been proven to be able to punch through thin layers of most known metal and light armor if used by a superior marksman. Cowen's Shan was such a shooter.

Cowen turned his head and let his eyes gaze at Sherice as he felt her press up against his side and lift the macro-binos to her eyes to scan the area. The sun was going down but the glow on the horizon made her skin shimmer in beauty. Cowen too remembered the night before and what it meant for his future. In all of his wildest dreams, never once did he imagine he would have a beauty such as Sherice. There were Kavalian females who were equally as beautiful but something about Sherice gave her the edge over them. She was his, of that he had no doubt. She had professed as much to him over and over while they pleased each other. He had done the same, whispering words of love to her while he allowed her to swim within his mind. Feeling her lush body in his arms was all it took to prove to him that this was no dream and waking with her sprawled upon his chest and sleeping peacefully was all the reward he ever wanted. His life now rested beside him; his life and his future. Cowen had allowed the instincts his father had secretly instilled in him to come out, for he no longer needed to hide these values and ideals among these men and women. He had acted as his father taught him to act. Sherice was a precious gem to him now, one for which he would gladly kill or be killed. His heart belonged to her and she had made it abundantly clear just this morning as they laid in bed that he now belonged to her. He let his eyes wander over her delicately curved half elven ears and the curve of her jaw. Her blond hair was pulled into a tight pony tail as most of the female Durcunusaan and soldiers of the Union did.

“Visibility will be down to nothing in about an hour.” Sherice spoke softly. “You’ll have to use the Low Light Spectral Imaging scope.”

“I know.” Cowen said seeing her face turn to his as she lowered the binos.

Sherice saw his beautiful, feline like hazel colored eyes gazing on her and she felt a shudder of delight ripple through her.

“Sherice I...” He began to speak.

Sherice covered his lips with two fingers quickly and shook her head. She leaned over and replaced her fingers with her lips and kissed him lovingly. It was a slow, lingering kiss of total devotion and commitment. “I am yours Cowen’Shan. I am yours and you are mine.” She said softly.

“Are you certain?” He asked wanting one more confirmation.

Sherice smiled brilliantly. “I am more certain about us than anything else in my life.” She told him.

Cowen’s eyes glittered at her words. “As am I.” He stated.

“Good. Now let’s do this, so that we can have more nights like we did last night.” Sherice told him seductively. “Twice was not nearly enough with my new husband and mate, though it was absolutely divine.”

“Yes it was.” He agreed.

“Archangel Team One, do you have eyes on the entire estate?” The male voice sounded over their COM implants and Cowen smiled and stole a kiss from Sherice before turning his head back to his scope.

“Affirmative Angel Base.” Cowen answered. “I will be switching to Low Light Spectral Vision shortly.”

“Acknowledged Team One. Be advised... only secure transmissions from here on out. We will be using the newly issued communications designators. Confirm?”

“Confirmed Angel Base.” Sherice answered for them.

General Vengal had sent out the word from Earth and it had reached them only the night before. Admiral Sa’sur had passed it on to them in the daily briefing. The new Communications Designators had been designed in such a way that they were easy to remember, but it would not be simple to pinpoint who exactly was being talked about. Vengal had taken a page from the ancient Secret Service Agency that had once protected the President of the United States back when there had been such a country. Only the Durcunusaan or those close to the Royal family would have the official code words of each Leonidas family member, while their Spartan call signs would remain the same with only minor adjustments to add Fedor and Eirene to the list, as well as Kalis and Karun now. Their sister Nikkei had also received a similar number, but since she had chosen to remain with her mother and follow more the calling of her Kavalian blood, her call sign would remain inactive for now.

Due to his penchant for being so protective of his siblings and his family altogether, Androcles Leonidas would now be known as Archangel among the Durcunusaan. His Spartan call sign would not change from Spartan 11, with Sadi and his other wives and mates carrying a letter designator after the number 11. The King and Queens were Spartan One through Spartan Seven, while Gorgo was Spartan Eight, Deia Spartan Nine and Daniel Simpson Spartan Ten.

“Archangel Team Four is in position and Team Lead would like a description of the area while she aligns the cameras.” The voice stated.

Cowen settled behind the scope as Sherice lifted her binos once more.

“...Sniper teams are all in place.” Murano spoke as he reentered the room Coren had used for his office for nearly a hundred years.

He now wore Union Body armor but still carried his Saber Staff and an additional K12 Magnum on his left leg. He refused to carry a P190 A4, but that concerned no one. Androcles hardly ever used one anymore, and Murano had proven more than capable without the chopped down version of the rifle.

“Coren made it out as well?” Andro asked turning from the table they were using as a map tile. It had a holographic image of the estate on the surface, with Denali, Dorian, Deion, Jomann and Dutkne standing around it.

Murano moved up beside him with a nod. “He will act on the new information this Rinel and his friend Jokros were able to discover. It should be interesting what they find.”

“No bets here.” Denali quipped.

Andro nodded and turned back to the holo map. “I will leave that to Coren.” He said.

Murano looked at the detailed holo image of the estate and the grounds. “What is this?” He asked.

Andro motioned with his finger. “The two most likely routes they will take to perform entry onto the estate grounds.” He answered turning back to the map model. “...One from the northeast, the other directly from the west. They provide the most cover and concealment leading up to the estate and the least chance to be spotted by Vanari who might be awake.”

Murano nodded his head. “We have already covered this.” He spoke. He looked at Andro intently. “Now tell me what it is you feel boy, or what you two have seen with your Dahakoan sight.”

Murano and Sarlana had spoken many times since that first moment on the ship, mostly of Androcles and Dorian, but of other things as well. A grudging respect and friendship had formed between them and now they felt comfortable being with each other. It was Sarlana who had tried to explain to him why the Dahakoan of old had been so powerful and so successful against the Scourge even though they lacked the Etheric powers of the Pralor Praetorians. The Dahakoan had somehow been able to see into the future for short seconds and were able to almost always predict what the Scourge were going to do. It was like this in personal combat as well and that is why so few of them fell to Scourge warriors in one on one fights. It was sort of a living and moving precognition skill as Sarlana had tried to explain to him, and combined with their natural strength and speed as a species, it had been devastating. Not many people knew of this skill but as a Doraanar, it was one of the secrets that they held the knowledge of. Androcles, Murano knew now thanks to his father, had been exhibiting flashes of this skill all of his life, which would account in part for his incredible prowess on the battlefield. Dorian had showed signs of this as well in several different battles recently on Solmar. Murano had begun calling it their Dahakoan sight and even as he schooled them in Praetorian tactics and skills, he knew this Dahakoan sight made them far more deadly than any Praetorian that had ever lived with the exception perhaps of their father. Martin Leonidas was unique unto himself.

“It’s not that simple Murano.” Dorian spoke. “We can’t exactly control it.”

“We in this room are the beginning of the future of the Praetorians and the Dahakoan.” Murano spoke. “With Sarlana, Dutkne, Nara, Helen and others, we will be the Heralds of a new day. We will be hope for the future of my people as well as your own and the Darastrixi. This is not what I had envisioned happening, but it is what is taking place and we must accept it and embrace it.”

“Really Murano...?” Deni spoke up now. “No pressure huh...?”

Murano looked at him. “You believe it is different for me Denali? It is not. I have to learn new things just as all of you are. I am still learning, and I believe your grandfather Sumar knew this and that is why he insured I was left behind; so that I could be here and so we could learn together. Teach each other. This power we command is...” Murano shook his head. “We must remain ever vigilant over ourselves and what we can do my friends. I do not wish to change who all of you are. I am the one who must change to suit the times, and I have and still am, but we can learn from the past, just as we learn from the present and what the future could hold.”

It was silent for a moment until Andro met his eyes. “You have been hanging around with Sarlana haven’t you?” He said.

Murano grinned a crooked grin and shrugged. “Perhaps a little.” He answered.

“Anse fervon, for a minute there I thought he was going to go into a Feravomir rant like when we were small.” Denali spoke.

This broke the tension and they all laughed softly as they turned back to the holo map. Andro pointed to the northeast on the map.

“They will come from the northeast.” He stated moving his finger along the path. “From there, right up to the employee entrance of the estate and onto the main grounds.”

Dorian leaned closer to the map now. “They’ll split into two groups. Half will move for the residential rooms, while the others move into the main estate here.”

Murano looked at the map and nodded. “They are confident.” He spoke finally. “Too confident.”

“That is because they have never faced anyone like those in this room.” Dutkne spoke now. “You must remember, with the exception of the Enverr, no one has been brazen enough to confront us directly in this quadrant of space. Not after we had our encounter with the OSG and destroyed one of their colony worlds.”

“It will be full dark in three hours.” Andro said looking up and out of the patio doors into the setting sun. “They will hit us shortly after high moon. When they assume we will be in our rooms sleeping or entertaining ourselves.”

“Well... some of us would be anyway.” Dutkne spoke again with a grin.

Deion elbowed him gently in the side. “Your day will come Dutkne.” He stated already knowing, as did all of his brothers and sisters that Dutkne was head over heels for their sister Zarah and Lucia. It was only a matter of time before they realized that he was who they wanted as well.

“Before or after I am old enough to remember how it works?” Dutkne asked.

This brought soft laughter from all of them and Murano once more had to shake his head at the laconic nature of Lycavorian Spartans. Most especially those like Martin and his sons and daughters. They viewed danger as a challenge. And they never backed down from a challenge.

“Eirene has set up in Safe House One and is monitoring all of the Vid Feeds from the area. Mari is standing by with her in order to override any electronic measures they might put in place as well as mess with the Vanari systems.” Andro continued. “Eli, Inamarno, Serale and Cvea have the triage set up and standing by at Safe House Two. The tunnels connect them so they will never be out of touch.”

Jomann nodded. “And I won’t tell you the words she used to describe being left out of the fighting.” He spoke up with a smile.

“If this goes to sibfla... she will be up to her eye balls in fighting.” Andro commented. “She won’t have time to complain.”

“True enough.” Jomann said.

“Fedor and Famus will drop the QRF right on top of us if I call for them.” Andro told them. “Father and Uncle Danny say he is a little on the reckless side, but his tactics and skill are unquestioned. He will come in guns blazing if we need him too, and he won’t be concerned for property damage.”

“Let us hope we don’t need them.” Murano stated. “I spoke to some of Garan’s men after Onterom. Until the moment he was injured they said Fedor and his wife Iama were like ghosts. They took down two teams of Garan’s men before they knew what hit them.”

“Then we must keep the battle contained to Coren’s estate, inside the perimeter that Vanari Commandos loyal to Coren will set up the moment the battle starts. We must move quickly and decisively and keep the initiative.” Andro told them. “If the fight spills into the streets, you can damn well bet that Ardan will have his own Vanari Commandos ready to act. They won’t hesitate to fire on any Lycavorian they see. It fits perfectly with the picture he is trying to paint of our people. Denali and I now have Vanari wives and mates and we truly do not want to injure or kill their people.” Andro motioned to the map again. “Kalis, Daio, and Ridor will be set up on three points of the compass to insure none of them escape back the way they come in. With Cowen and Sherice directing them from the building across the river, none should reach the wall. We contain them, collapse them and then kill them.”

“Where’s Torrian?” Denali asked. “His speed would be welcome on the perimeter edges.”

Andro shook his head. “He is escorting Ulana and the other Senators to Lorent on Amanuce. It’s very low key and I want it to stay that way. They will review the final pieces of the merger and then brief Tenna Deia and the other members of the Senate back home.”

“Prisoners fervon?” Dorian asked.

Andro shook his head slowly. “Only one. I want the leader of this assault team, whoever he is.” He replied. “Cowen will try to mark him when they enter the estate, no doubt he will be directing the others. The rest do not leave the property alive.”

“What will you do with this man Androcles?” Murano asked now.

Andro met his eyes. "I'm going to give him to my Drow brother Am'uur and my Drow father." He replied instantly. "They are waiting on SPARTA'S WRATH. They will interrogate him."

"And when they are done?" Murano pressed him.

"Then they will see to it that he disappears." Androcles answered looking directly into Murano's eyes. "Forever."

After a moment Murano nodded his head. In the short time he had spent with Martin and Wayonn and even now among Androcles, he discovered his tolerance for criminals or dictators of any kind had grown non-existent. He thought perhaps it was because of their influence on him, or perhaps because he had never experienced such things within Pralor society. Finally he decided it disgusted his Praetorian honor to see such actions could be undertaken by one species against another, and the new found emotions that were coming forth from within him, that he wasn't afraid to keep in any more, they were causing him to feel like this. It was refreshing for Murano and felt so very free. Sumar had always taught them to guard their emotions and keep them held in check, but now he saw and was learning what Sumar obviously had learned and did all those millennia ago when he became part of these people.

Emotions were their strength and their power.

"So be it." He stated.

AUSTROVA WESTERN HEIGHTS RESIDENTIAL SECTOR HOME OF VANARI FIRST REGENT ALRERIN SHA HARAEL

Coren looked up at the rising moon as he exited the Lifter car on the private platform of Alrerin Sha Harael. His home was situated on the far edge of the city and set back against the base of the mountains to the north. He looked at Jokros as he exited the Lifter along with Rinell, Nyosa, Lisisa, Arduri and two Cadre Commandos loyal to him. Coren had to admit that Andro was far more politically adept than others made him out to be as he had sent his sister Lisisa along with them at the last moment in order to make a statement. His discussions and talks with Denali over the last months had made Coren come to see that Androcles knew intimately where each of his siblings excelled. Lisisa was the statesmen among the Leonidas children. There were no questions about her fighting skills, but Lisisa Leonidas was also able to put men and women alike at ease with her calm demeanor, incredible exotic beauty and soft spoken voice. Androcles had used Lisisa before in such a role and that is why he had sent her tonight, to show that the commitment of Andro and the Union to the Vanari was true and honest. Coren for one was very happy she was here.

"You are sure she is here Jokros?" Coren asked softly.

Jokros nodded as he saw the two Vanari security make their way towards them from the small security building. "Yes. These two Cadre are children of one of my best friends Coren. They would not lie to me."

Coren turned as the two Commandos walked up alertly but not with hostility. One was female and the other male and they stopped in front of Coren and the others.

"She is inside Jokros." The female Vanari spoke. "As well as her husband and children."

Jokros looked at her with wide eyes. "The husband came as well Ma'nia?" He gasped.

The Cadre Commando nodded. "He always does whenever he can break away from his duties in the Protectorate. Well... the Union now."

Coren looked at her wide eyed. "How long has this been going on?" He gasped softly in surprise.

Ma'nia met his eyes. "Since the birth of their first child Regent Re Mydala."

"How... how is that possible?" Coren gasped.

"The Underground System Tarnie helped to put in place." Rinell spoke now. "No wonder she has been so protective of it. She uses it herself!"

"We must go inside Coren." Lisisa spoke now. "If someone sees us even by accident, our gambit will be lost. Jeth is above us circling with Tharua and they are high enough to remain hidden from casual view but why press our advantage."

Coren nodded his head. "Yes of course." He stated. Coren had to admit he felt a bit safer with Lisisa Leonidas with them. Arduri was beside her, their hands clasped tightly together and he relaxed even more. He knew that Denali and Lisisa both loved Arduri more than he could ever imagine. And his second oldest daughter loved them both equally in return. He also knew that Androcles trusted his sister Lisisa without question when it came to security and other such issues. He was aware of the relationship Androcles had with his sisters and brothers thanks to the times he had spoken to Denali, and while Eliani and this Zarah, whom he had never met, seemed to be more attuned to him in many ways, he trusted Lisisa without hesitation.

"This way Regent." Ma'nia spoke as she motioned with her hand and began leading them down the path.

Alrerin Sha Harael's weathered face was absent of the strain and pressure of leadership as he laughed and bounced the small, blue skinned Vanari child on his knee in front of the roaring fireplace. This was his daughter's youngest child, the three year old boy with a head of thick dark hair and bright blue eyes. His small wolf fangs were extended in happiness as he played with his grandfather and he clutched at Alrerin's cheeks and pulled on his hair gently. It was a sight that not many Vanari had ever seen and one the vast majority would not believe. Alrerin She Harael had always been an avid supporter of the anti-Lycavorian members of the Board of Regents. He had almost never sided against them in political matters when hashing out the treaties and such and this had painted him as one who did not care for the Lycavorians of the Protectorate.

The reality could not have been further from the perceived truth.

Alrerin Sha Harael had been present for all but one of the births of his grandchildren with his oldest daughter Narlei and her Lycavorian husband. She was his oldest child and his only daughter and until ninety-six years ago he had thought her lost to him forever. They day she contacted him from Lorent and told him that she had been rescued, that was the day Alrerin Sha Harael became a changed man. His entire outlook on events and happenings within the Vanari Empire became different. His first act was to insist that his daughter not return to Austrova or allow the others who had been rescued to return either. Narlei had protested vehemently until her much more political astute father explained to her his reasoning. As he did this, he could see the set of her jaw and the hardening of stunning green her eyes as he allowed her to know all that he had suspected of happening within the government. Narlei reluctantly agreed and did as he asked of her. She trusted her father's wisdom and knowledge of how the Vanari government system worked implicitly. When the man who had carried her from that camp swore to him that he would keep her safe from harm Alrerin had taken him at his word. He knew far more of the many customs and society of the Lycavorian people than he let on to anyone and he knew the man's words were sincere. He spoke to Narlei every week for the next two years until the day that Riordian had contacted him directly. At first he thought something had happened because the man, whom he had spoken to quite often over those two years, appeared flustered and anxious. Alrerin discovered why when Riordian finally asked for his permission to take Narlei as his wife and mate.

Alrerin Sha Harael hesitated for all of two seconds before he blessed their union with every ounce of happiness within him. It was not uncommon for him to retreat to his personal estate for days on end with no sightings since Narlei's abduction, and he used this habit of his to insure that he and his wife were present on Lorent for their ceremony. Until that time he had never been to the Protectorate homeworld, indeed to any Protectorate world, and though his visit was known to only a very small group of men and women, he found it fascinating. He was surprised when he first saw Riordian in the flesh; the man was like a walking around tree trunk, so tall and thickly built, yet he could not contain the happiness he felt at seeing the look on his daughter's face, or the utter gaze of devotion Riordian held for her in his blue eyes. Riordian worshiped his daughter and the ground she walked upon and this is when Alrerin began to learn one of the true customs of the Lycavorian people, their devotion to their wives and mates, their family and to each other. The small ceremony was short but utterly beautiful, and the party lasted for two entire days. Alrerin met most of Riordian's family and was duly impressed with the intelligence and respect he was shown. He got along famously with Riordian's father, a much older Lycavorian who was so happy his son had finally taken a wife the man could not stop praising Narlei and all she had accomplished in just two short years among them.

He was right too, for Narlei had immediately begun to form the Lycanari Underground and within the first eighteen months had established a network of contacts within both governments that would allow her to do what she wanted to do. The Lycanari Underground would provide for ways that rescued Vanari could communicate with their families if they so chose. All of them who had been rescued with Narlei were now founding members of the Lycanari society. It had been small when they started, for there were only a few dozen Vanari and Lycavorian relationships before the Protectorate began to rescue those taken by the OSG, but it quickly grew and Narlei found herself appointed as the defacto representative of them. She embraced this role, as did Riordian, and she threw herself into her work and her new life as the wife and mate to a Lycavorian. Narlei possessed all the skills of a turned Lycavorian, but as with all Lycanari, she could not shift her form. The Vanari DNA makeup did not allow for this type of change, though Narlei discovered it mattered not to the billions of Lycavorians in the Protectorate. The Lycanari, as they came to call themselves, were equally as respected and welcomed as any.

Alrerin and his wife spent the last decades speaking to their daughter every week and seeing her as often as they were able to get away. They had been present for the births of all of Narlei and Riordian's children except for their last child, who Alrerin now held in his lap. It was during these trips that Alrerin learned more and more of the Lycavorian people and even their ancient language. He came to love Riordian as a son for the man doted over Narlei in every way possible and when he held any of his children in his arms, you could tell he did not see a Lycanari, he saw his flesh and blood no matter the color of their skin. Alrerin knew that his daughter had just been selected by unanimous vote of the Protectorate Senate to join their ranks and take part in their government openly. This would mean changes Alrerin knew, and new revelations, but the pride he felt for her accomplishments knew no bounds.

And so did his concern.

Alrerin did not doubt that Ardan had spies watching him and had for decades. He also did not doubt that Ardan and his OSG supporters undoubtedly knew about Narlei being alive and well and the wife of a Lycavorian. Alrerin knew of what Ardan and his cronies were doing and to counter this, he made it seem as if he hated the Lycavorians even more for his daughter's actions in not returning to Austrova. He sided with them on nearly everything through the years and began to make them believe that he was solidly in their pocket, all the while secretly meeting with his daughter and husband and his grandchildren. He had no intention of doing anything that would bring harm to his only daughter and the life she had built, but he still worried constantly for her. It was times like these however; times that made him forget those worries as he bounced his grandson on his knees and played with the small but strong boy. Five of his grandchildren had made the trip this time, three of them sitting at the table in the kitchen and eating their favorite Vanari foods while their older boy helped their father unload their equipment from the hidden Lifter that had brought them here. They would stay for a week this time and Alrerin intended to enjoy every moment of that time.

Fate however, Fate had other ideas.

Ma'nia stepped around the corner of the entrance hall and into the main room of the home and looked at him. Alrerin turned after a moment, sensing her presence, and he smiled at her. Ma'nia was one of a half dozen Cadre Commandos who knew what went on here and the relationship the First Regent had with his daughter and her Lycavorian husband. He trusted her and the others with their lives and he saw the look of worry on her face almost instantly.

"Ma'nia?" Alrerin asked as he turned in the chair. "What is wrong?"

Ma'nia met his eyes. "Forgive me First Regent... but I have... I can not let this go on any longer?" She spoke softly.

"What do you mean?" Alrerin asked.

Ma'nia looked to the side and nodded her head. That is when Coren stepped around the corner with Rinell and came fully into the room. Alrerin rose to his feet and lifted his grandson into his arms protectively as Lisisa, Arduri, Nyosa and Jokros quickly followed Coren into the room.

"I believe she means that we have much to talk of Alrerin my old friend." Coren spoke calmly.

"Coren!" Alrerin exclaimed aloud. His eyes grew even wider when he recognized Rinell instantly as well. "Rinell? Rinell is that... is that you?"

Rinell bowed his head out of respect. "It has been many years First Regent." He answered him.

Narlei had heard her father's intake of breath even from the kitchen with her wolf ears and she came rushing around the corner from another direction with her mother and Riordian in tow.

"Papa what..." Her voice stopped when she saw where her father was looking and she came up short as well.

Riordian however, he acted with all the instincts of any pureblood Lycavorian and he brought up his sidearm to level it at the small group. He would protect his beloved wife and family no matter the cost to him. Lisisa had expected this and lifted her hand instantly, and using her TK power, she ripped the weapon from Riordian's grasp easily. His eyes went wide as it slapped into her hand from ten meters away.

"There is no need for weapons." Lisisa spoke calmly as she handed the weapon to Ma'nia with barely a thought. "We are not here to do anyone harm."

"Princess Leonidas!" Riordian gasped aloud as he recognized her instantly from the many holo images and reports that had been floating around Protectorate space of the Leonidas Royal family and how they were the most beloved Royal family in anyone's history. Lisisa watched as he dropped to one knee without a thought, Narlei beside him, and both of them dipped their heads.

Lisisa shook her head in disgust. "Get up both of you!" She snapped moving around Coren. "No one saw us arrive and no one but my brother knows we are here! Everyone just relax and remain calm. We have only come to talk."

Coren waited before stepped up beside Lisisa and leaning over to kiss her cheek. "I bless your brother's decision to send you with me." He stated openly.

Lisisa looked at him and smiled. "What happens from here on out Coren Re Mydala, it means as much to him as it does to us all." She stated.

Coren nodded his head. "Indeed it does." He said as he watched Riordian and Narlei rise back to their feet slowly. Coren returned his gaze to Alrerin. "Lisisa is correct Alrerin, no one saw us leave my estate and no one knows we are here. Your secret is safe. However, I do believe it is time we had a long, overdue talk about things have come to be as they are. Please my friend, we can no longer keep these secrets from each other, for it will destroy our people from within."

Alrerin stood there holding his grandson for along moment. He turned his head and looked at his grandson's smiling face and how he still clung to his hair. Alrerin Sha Harael made his decision then. A decision he should have made decades ago. He turned back to Coren and shifted his grandson into a more comfortable position on his hip and his demeanor became one of welcoming warmth.

"There is much that I need to tell you Coren Re Mydala." He stated confidently. "Please, I welcome you into my home."

"...Began to suspect Ardan knew she was alive after a decade." Alrerin spoke softly. All of them were now sitting in the main room, Alrerin's wife of nearly two thousand years sat beside him with their grandson on her lap. Narlei and Riordian sat together on one couch, Lisisa and Arduri sitting on the second couch with two of their other children between them. Narlei and Riordian's children were fascinated with Lisisa and Arduri for they were old enough to know that they were both Princesses of the Union and Lisisa's half Lycavorian and half Vampire nature gave her an exotic look that they had not seen before.

Coren, Rinel and Jokros occupied the third couch that had been moved into the main room and were listening intently.

"Thankfully, getting information out of the former Protectorate government was next to impossible for a Vanari diplomat." Alrerin explained. "They were keeping the Lycanari a closely guarded secret. They did not want to cause undo political issues if the Board of Regents discovered that so many of our people had chosen to remain and make lives for themselves with the Lycavorians."

"When the Protectorate Senate finally held their secret vote on whether to continue the operations to rescue us, it was unanimous. There was not a dissenting vote among the three hundred plus who took part in it." Narlei picked it up. "Even after ten years among them and eight years of being Riordian's wife and mate, I still did not understand the intense hatred of slavery that is common to the Lycavorians."

"It carried over from the Black Day didn't it?" Lisisa said softly.

Narlei nodded her head. "Even though those in the Protectorate had not experienced the Black Day and what came after, we knew what had taken place and it resonated among our people deeply." She spoke. It was Lisisa who noted with some satisfaction that Narlei spoke the word Lycavorian with pride and used it to refer to both her own Vanari blood and now her Lycavorian blood. "Slavery in any shape or form is considered vile and just as heinous as it is within the Union; and it is eliminated without question whenever it is found."

Coren looked at Alrerin. "You knew then didn't you?" He asked.

Alrerin met his eyes and nodded. "I suspected yes." He replied. "Only after speaking with Narlei when she was rescued was I able to confirm it."

"Wait a minute... I don't understand?" Jokros spoke up now. "If Ardan knows she is alive why has he not moved against you before?"

"I believe he suspects Narlei lives, though I am not entirely sure." Alrerin corrected him.

"There are very few on Lorent that know I am the daughter to the Vanari First Regent." Narlei told them. "It did not seem like the sort of information I should be offering."

"Wise move." Coren agreed.

"Even if he does know for sure, I have cultivated the idea that her decision to stay among them was her idea. That she was betraying us." Alrerin answered him.

"Then all of these years," Rinel spoke now. "Your public position on the Lycavorians has been a ruse?"

Alrerin nodded his head. "It was the only way I knew of that I could keep her safe. Given what I suspected and what you have now only confirmed, if Ardan and those working with him knew that I was aware of what they were doing, they would have gone after Narlei and my grandchildren. I could not allow that."

Narlei rolled her eyes. "As if that was ever the case papa." She told him with a warm smile. "I sometimes trip over the security my husband and mate has around me."

"Knowing what we have discovered now it is better that he did." Lisisa spoke up. "The number of Lycavorians involved in this has my brother and Dutkne very upset. They will settle accounts harshly I assure you."

Coren rose to his feet slowly. "This cannot remain hidden any longer Alrerin." He said looking at him.

Alrerin met his eyes. "I will do nothing that puts my family at risk!" He barked out. "I thought Narlei lost to me once! I will not go through that again!"

"Androcles Leonidas will do exactly as he says he will Alrerin!" Coren snapped. "Even now he is preparing to defend us!"

"What... what do you mean?" Alrerin asked.

"We know that the OSG is working with members of the former Protectorate." Lisisa explained. "We also know that members of the Union were working with them as well. This has been going on far longer than you realize and it is much more involved than just Narlei and yourself Alrerin Sha Harael. The moment they brought slaves through Union space they made an enemy of my brother and my father. Our entire family. Now they will pay the price for breaking our laws and trafficking in slavery."

"I don't follow." Alrerin said.

"Those members of the Union who were involved in this are either all dead or have gone so far underground they will never resurface for fear of their lives." Lisisa told him. "Those from the former Protectorate who are involved are now all being watched carefully. Andro's arrival has caused them to act. They fear Caliria's discovery being made public. Until we arrived they did not know for sure if the serum she discovered actually worked. Androcles made abundantly clear that it did when he retrieved Caliria from the University. Ardan and others saw this for themselves on the SCIMITAR when one of the young women taken from the Beta Quadrant with Caliria returned fully cured and having no desire to return to the surface. She was Caliria's friend."

Narlei looked at her now. "Then... then it is true?" She asked. "She... she devised a serum?"

Lisisa nodded her head. "And the means to mass produce it with the help of my Hadarian mother and Aunts." She replied watching as Narlei took Riordian's hand in hers and squeezed it tightly.

Alrerin rose to his feet now as well. "I have been trying to do what I can to minimize how many of our females they take." Alrerin spoke. "I have been passing information to Narlei and others in order to make it harder for them to conduct their vile kidnappings."

Coren looked at him. “That is why?” He gasped. “That is why they have moved so close to the core of our territory?”

Alrerin nodded his head. “I haven’t been idle Coren. I have risked much through the years in trying to blunt their actions!”

“It is you that has been giving our ships the information.” Rinel spoke now.

Lisisa looked at him. “Rinel?” She asked.

Rinel rose to his feet now as well. “For decades now we have been receiving encrypted messages with the locations and travel corridors of Vanari ships which would be considered high value targets for the OSG. A high number of young Vanari females on board. In many of these cases we were able to have ships in the area along our borders that would have responded to any distress call or sign of trouble. Our presence kept the OSG from acting. It is why the OSG has moved further and further into Vanari space over the years. The information Alrerin has passed to us allowed us to thwart many of these abductions.”

Alrerin nodded. “But in response, Ardan has ordered Vanari ships to remain closer to the core of our territory and conduct their travels. This has enabled the OSG to begin resuming their abductions with little or no resistance. It is why so many have been taken in recent years. The OSG grew bolder because of Ardan and his actions.”

“Alrerin why did you not come to me?” Coren asked him. “To anyone?”

“With what proof?” Alrerin exclaimed. “Rumor and innuendo? I could not find any proof Coren Re Mydala! Ardan is not a stupid man, and those who are helping him are not stupid either Coren. Had I come forward with what I suspected, I would have been laughed at and scorned. He would have initiated a call of no confidence in my leadership and then all would have been lost, you know this!”

Coren stepped closer to him. “He would have lobbied to have himself installed as First Regent.” He said softly with a nod.

Alrerin nodded. “I knew the only way I could continue to help until I discovered a way to stop him was to remain First Regent and try to manage things from the shadows!” He said. “And doing this also allowed me to protect Narlei and my grandchildren.”

Coren looked at him now. “And your public support of anything anti-Lycavorian made it impossible to believe you were the one.” He said softly.

Alrerin nodded. “Ardan may think Narlei is alive, but as I said, my actions publicly have allowed me to maintain my façade that I hated the Protectorate and I would do nothing to hinder the OSG in their activities. My supposed dismissal of Narlei being the most powerful sign that I was not a threat to them.” Alrerin stepped closer to him. “My... my lack of support for you when Caliria was taken was... I was torn Coren. I am so sorry she had to endure what she did.”

Coren shook his head quickly. “It is not your fault.” He stated. “It is my shame to bear.”

Lisisa looked at him. “Inamarno does not feel that way Coren.” She told him. “Do not think like that.”

“None of that matters now.” Rinel spoke. “It is in the past. We need to act now!”

“To do what?” Alrerin asked. “I do not have the power I once had as First Regent. Ardan and others have seen to that discretely. You know this Coren. Much of the singular power I had has been delegated to the Board of Regents and more specifically the SBR. Many of whom are friends or have ties to Ardan in some way. They will not go against him. They fear him almost as much as they fear losing their hold on what power and influence they do have.”

“We will lose so much more if we cannot convince them.” Coren spoke.

Alrerin looked at Lisisa. “Your brother... he would actually do what he has threatened to do Princess?” He asked her.

Lisisa stood up now and nodded her head. “Yes sir, I’m afraid so.” She answered. “My brother is not the most forgiving of individuals and even till this day many question his resolve in different matters even though he has never gone back on something he stated he would do. He will not abide the one sided relationship that currently exists between the Vanari and the former Protectorate First Regent. They are part of the Union now and it is not something we would allow.”

“And your elected leaders would allow this?” Alrerin gasped. “Your Senate? Your Prime Minister? Your father the King and his Queens?”

“Androcles and we operate with the blessing of the Union Senate and my Tenna Deia.” Lisisa told him. “It is why we have a Union Senatorial Delegation with us. They are currently on their way to Lorent to inform the government members there of what is happening and to finalize any last minute details. As for my father and mothers, let me just say that in this circumstance, you would much rather deal with Androcles. It will save you a rather harsh and wholly inventive tongue lashing.”

“Alrerin, after tonight many hard decisions will need to be made!” Coren insisted.

Alrerin looked at him. “Coren I know what...”

Narlei came to her feet now looking at Coren. “You said something similar earlier Regent Re Mydala. What exactly did you mean?”

Coren glanced at her and then slowly back to Alrerin. “The OSG has unleashed their Lycavorian lap dogs Alrerin. Androcles and others even now prepare to do battle with them.”

“I don’t understand.” Alrerin said.

“The moment Androcles arrived here and reclaimed my daughter as his wife and mate, he set in motion events that cannot be altered Alrerin.” Coren spoke. “He has prodded the OSG to open action and he suspects they will send their Lycavorian minions to my estate in the hopes that they can kill all of us. They don’t know that we are gone or what awaits them, but Ardan must know of this impending attack and he will certainly use this action as the tip of the spear to dismantle any meaningful relations with the Lycavorians. In doing so, Ardan will cement his power base and then insure that our people will never be free of the OSG and their insidious actions!”

It was Narlei and Riordian who saw first Lisisa and then Arduri stagger slightly and grip each other tightly. Riordian moved instantly to support Arduri who he was closest to while Narlei reached for Lisisa.

“Princess!” Riordian gasped causing all of them to turn and look at her. “What is it?”

Lisisa gripped his arms tightly and met Coren’s eyes. “It’s too late Coren.” She rasped the words. “It has... it has already begun!”

As if to confirm her words, the deep, rolling thunder caused all of them to turn and look out the large glass double doors at the expanse of Mydala city in the distance. All of them saw the massive fireball rise into the night sky trailing fingers of flame as pieces of debris were tossed skyward.

“By the Prophets!” Alrerin gasped aloud.

No one saw Lisisa’s head tilt upwards. “Jeth?” She questioned aloud causing them to turn back to her.

Lisisa my sister! Jeth’s voice echoed in her mind as well as Arduri’s and Rinel’s.

“Jeth what is wrong?” Lisisa demanded.

Lisisa we are detecting at least twelve individuals moving up to the estate from the east! Tharua’s voice echoed now. We were sweeping back north when we spotted them! Lisisa they are all armed and we cannot reach them before they enter the estate.

Lisisa lifted her dark green eyes and looked at Coren. “Twelve unknown men are about to breach the perimeter wall here.” She told him.

Coren moved closer to her. “Lisisa, how by the prophets did they know we would be here?” He stammered. “That is not possible! We told no one that...” Coren stopped talking and whirled back to look at Alrerin.

Lisisa nodded her head as her hand dropped to her side and she withdrew the Nehtes that rested there.

“Yes Coren, you are correct in your thoughts.” She stated. “We are not the target!”

Alrerin was no fool and his own eyes grew wide at what Lisisa said. “Me!” He almost yelled. “Ardan has sanctioned an attack against me!”

Lisisa turned to Narlei. “Get your mother and your children to the safest room on the property Narlei!” She ordered. “Where is it?”

“My father’s office upstairs!” She answered instantly.

Lisisa nodded. “Then go. Coren, you and Alrerin as well.”

“I will not...” Coren began to speak but Lisisa cut him off.

“Whatever happens in the future Coren, you and Alrerin need to be alive to lead it. Andro would allow nothing to happen to you and neither will I.” Lisisa stated calmly. “We will handle the fools coming here, but we cannot do that if we are trying to protect you.”

“Go Coren!” Rinel declared. “First Regent... go now!”

Alrerin gripped Coren's arm. "They are correct Coren!" He hissed. He turned quickly and grabbed for his wife's hand. "Go to the room! Gather our other grandchildren as well Sertia my wife! Go!"

Narlei quickly laid a blistering kiss on her husband and then grabbed for her mother's hand. "Quickly mother!" She gasped as she took her son from her mother's arms.

Lisisa looked at Riordian as he took out the weapon that she had returned to him. "You should protect your wife and family." She stated.

Riordian met her gaze and took a deep breath. "And I will Princess." He specified proudly. "I will protect them by killing those who would do them harm! And I will do so at your side."

Lisisa smiled and the tips of her now extended fangs were very visible. She turned to Rinel. "Pull those Cadre Commandos back into the house with us Rinel. We will meet them in close quarters where their weapons will be more of a hindrance than an advantage."

"Do we take prisoners Princess?" Nyosa asked from beside her father. Her own Lycanari fangs were extended and exposed. While not nearly as large as the fangs on a pureblood, or a turned elf or Hadarian wolf, for their bodies seemed to adapt much better to the changes, they were no less dangerous and equally as intimidating.

Lisisa shook her head. "I am like my brother Nyosa. There will be no prisoners. Not this night. Not after what we know they have been involved in."

AUSTROVA SAFE HOUSE ONE

Eliani Leonidas and Brendi Faith moved back into the main room of the underground Spartan Safe House holding hands tightly. They had not been more than a few feet apart since earlier in the day and many of the personnel had caught Eliani and Brendi sharing soft, loving kisses with each other at different moments. While Brendi was still somewhat anxious, this did not stop her from kissing Eliani with as much passion and desire as she felt racing within her for the fiery tempered and petite red haired beauty that Eliani was. Brendi Faith had never even considered such a relationship at any time in her life, yet after meeting Eliani and being around her for so long, the overwhelming urge to experience it was beyond her control. As were the emotions that flowed through her for both Eliani and Jomann. Emotions that they returned to her in spades.

The Control Center was situated in an old converted sewer control center with branching tunnels all over the city. While most of them had long been sealed, three of them were still clear and passable. It was here that they had established the small triage center for any wounded that might come in. They were only a kilometer from the actual estate and one of the main tunnels allowed them unfettered access to the southern store room within Coren Re Mydala's home. Beneath the entrance to the storeroom, half a dozen troops from Andro's 9th Spartan Attack Division had set up two heavy weapon positions on either side of Elynth and Anthar who now occupied the center of the tunnel. Anything that came down the hidden stairwell and wasn't part of their force would die within seconds. Sehri rested between Elynth's front legs and listened intently as she and Anthar were instructing her in several very advanced Etheric training skills that would allow for Sehri to focus and direct her shielding ability much more easily.

The 9th Spartan Attack Division had a long and decorated history dating back almost six hundred years. They truly hadn't come into their own until the day Androcles Leonidas took command of them. They were part of the Androcles' 9th CSAFG along with the 21st Spartan Expeditionary Division and now the 82nd Cataphract Division. The 21st SED was still within a training cycle and had not deployed with the 9th CSAFG this time. The 9th SAD had many former Durcunusaan officers in it and nearly the entire Division had fought in some manner on Alba Tau. While not usually a normal occurrence, the former Durcunusaan members had requested transfers to the 9th when Androcles took overall command. These requests were granted almost immediately and their inclusion into the ranks of the 9th SAD made an already exceptional division of men and women even better. Since this operation was supposed to be low key, the 82nd had not deployed any forces to the surface of Austrova though the officers were monitoring the situation from the KINDRED SOUL's main CIC.

Another half dozen members of the 9th were situated half a kilometer away guarding the tunnel that would take them directly to the river's edge if escape was needed. All three came together by the entrance to the Control Center which now had nine men and women sitting at different portable stations. Eirene occupied the largest station and spread out in front of her was five rows of fifteen inch video monitors that stretched six across. Her golden blond hair was tied tightly behind her head and she wore the new Mark VI ArmorPly, but her complete and utter attention was focused on the screens. She was using the dual keyboards in front of her to manipulate the different screens and was essentially tied into the entire video network of Mydala City. The towering Kavalian Miseo stood only two meters behind Eirene and was speaking in soft whispers with the tall Lycavorian. Eliani had to admit to herself that for a Biogenic Kavalian, Miseo was very handsome even with the two meter long tail that he sported. His skin was tanned and healthy and his facial features were not harsh in any way. Eliani also took note, as did all of her brothers and sisters, that Miseo adored their younger sister. That was obvious to all just by the way he looked at her.

She moved up beside the female Lycavorian and smiled as they shared a kiss on each other's cheeks in greeting. "It has been a long time Kimtia." She stated.

The blond woman nodded her head. "Almost three years." She replied.

"Arusk is tending to you I take it." Eliani said with a smile.

"Hah! Anymore tending and I will not have to wipe myself!" The stunning young woman answered her. Eliani saw her blue eyes dart to where her husband and mate stood with Miseo and they shone with devotion. "He is so very good to me Eliani." She stated. "And to our children."

Arusk and Kimtia were nearly celebrities, or as near to celebrities as anyone within the Kryperia were allowed to be. They were the very first husband and wife team that Armetus had recruited into the Kryperia so long ago, and now they were one of only five mated couples within the ranks of the Union Intelligence Agency. The Union's intelligence apparatus was modeled after the Krypteia of ancient Spartan, though Armetus had altered the spelling of their name somewhat, as well as their duties. They were not the Spartan Secret Police of the days of their beloved King Leonidas the First, but the supremely well trained and educated Lycavorian Union Intelligence Agency. An Intelligence Agency that was now feared and respected by everyone within the Alpha Quadrant for they were utterly ruthless in their pursuits, and had almost never failed since their inception. Arusk and Kimtia had worked with Androcles, Eliani, Lisisa and Denali in the latter portion of the last year of the Evolli War and all of them had grown close as friends.

"As it should be Kimtia." Eliani answered her.

Kimtia looked at Eliani and then Brendi. "And what about you... Eliani? First that gorgeous specimen of an Alpha Jomann and now this delicious woman Brendi Faith." Her words caused Brendi to blush somewhat even under in tan.

Eliani looked up into Brendi's eyes with a brilliant smile and nodded her head. "I have been blessed." She said turning back to look at Kimtia.

"We both have." Kimtia agreed. "We both have."

Eliani glanced over to where Eirene sat and then back to Kimtia. "How is she doing?" She asked.

