

Wolves and Dragons of the Blood: Revelations

A Spartan's War Chronicles: Book 5

By Michael J. Cropo
Copyright 2016-2017

Visit the Spartan's War Chronicles web site at <https://aspartanswarchronicles.com/>

CHAPTER ONE

MARTIN LEONIDAS

FIVE WEEKS, SIX DAYS POST DECLARATION OF WAR

JANUARY 27, 2575

They were no longer children in appearance or action. If they ever were.

Her name was Eirene Leonidas.

She stood two inches shorter than her elven mother's five foot eight frame, and weighed in at only one hundred and seventeen pounds, but every part of her was womanly curves and head turning beauty. Her bright golden hair, falling almost to the middle of her back, was tied into a single pony tail with a simple leather tie. The exceptionally tight, dark gray color workout clothes she wore did absolutely nothing to hide the tempting curves of her lithe, tanned half elven half Lycavorian body, and she was not in the least bit shy about showing what she had. It was a trait that the vast majority of Lycavorians embraced. They were unafraid to show their sexuality in the way they dressed, acted and talked. It was a trait that was shared by the elves who were born and raised on Earth and it was a cultural oddity that was quickly gaining vast popularity on the elven homeworld of Elear and many of their colony worlds. Her breasts were extremely firm, topped with small but pert nipples. Her flat abdomen was tightly muscled and her waist narrow. The dark gray knee high pants conformed to her supple, yet maddeningly taut ass cheeks and long, power packed legs. She was barefoot on the training mat as she snapped her right foot forward with confidence and incredible power. Strength that was packed into her half elf, half Lycavorian body, granting her increased speed and additional physical power over normal elves and even some Lycavorians. Eirene's dark brown eyes, exact duplications of For'mya's intense dark orbs, were determined and alert and focused. She had her mother's high cheekbones and luscious soft, thin lips, but most surprisingly to those that saw her was the fact that her face bore the resemblance of her mother but also the man who stood in front of her. A man who was watching her movements intently. A man who was more a father to her and her twin brother Fedor than anyone could possibly imagine. A commanding man whose Mindvoice essence filled her just as much as her beloved mother and the one who was her brother.

Eirene's confident movements matched exactly the graceful movements of the six foot one, exceptionally muscled young man to her left.

Her beloved twin brother Fedor Leonidas.

Fedor was dressed only in loose fitting workout pants similar to the man in front of them. His darker golden blond hair was cut short with his hair spiking to the middle of his head in a unique style he liked. His broad, tanned chest and thick arms bore semblance to the exquisitely muscled man in front of them. Fedor's abdomen rippled with superb definition, the "V" cut of his back nearly matching that of their instructor. Their tanned skin was slick with sweat from the grueling intensity of their work out, but neither of them would have it any other way, and this pleased the man in front of them.

That they were brother and sister was obvious to even a casual observer. That they were fraternal twins only required a simple question to be asked for them to begin their rant. Neither of them was shy about the other, nor were they the least bit hesitant about bragging in relation to each other, though Fedor seemed to be the more reserved of the duo. Since their accelerated birth only six weeks ago they had never been apart and while this had been mostly because of the distinct circumstances surrounding their birth, it had instilled in both of them the love of paternal twins. Their accelerated growth, caused by the drugs injected into their mother, also had a side effect of making them much more attuned to each other. When Andro touched them within Mindvoice he unknowingly amplified this sensation two fold, as well as bestowing awareness of life and their surroundings to them while they were still in their mother's womb. They now did nearly everything together, whether it was instruction with one of the six women they called mother, or the man they called "Father of their Hearts". And they were never very far from the two they called Bonded Brother. Kdan and Dnom had grown fast as well and in the nearly six weeks since they had hatched they had grown close to fifteen feet long and almost the same in height when they stood on their hind legs. While this was unusual for dragons, Arzoal had said it was not unheard of. They were filling out into rather muscular Firespitter dragons with near identical light green scales. At the moment they were undergoing just as strenuous and demanding a training regime with Torma and Aurith in the ARC ROYAL'S port landing bay.

Eirene and Fedor Leonidas's movements were fluid and precise as they completed the turn and front kick motion, Fedor's leg going much higher than his shorter sister. The music that played in the background was their instructor's idea and it was very loud and carried with it a rhythmic balance that flowed with their movements. Eirene and Fedor Leonidas had decided together to go against their mother in the first and only act of defiance of their parent's wishes. Well... more five of their six mothers really. They had done it to honor the man who they called father without hesitation or doubt. They convinced Pablo Gomez, a very talented tattoo artist from Martin's SEAL Team, to decorate their bodies with his art. When they had done this, For'mya finally decided to stop trying to control what they did to protect them and allow them to grow as she had Arrarn and Bryon. Fedor now sported a large black and red cross like image on his upper right arm and an ancient Chinese symbol that meant Honor on his upper left arm. Eirene had the image of a sun setting over a black ocean tattooed at the small of her back. Both had been inspired because of the tattoos adorning the body of the man they called father and the elf female they called mother. Dysea Leonidas was the only one of Martin's Queens to have tattoos and she considered them superb pieces of work and the symbolism of the designs quite meaningful. Martin also approved of them and this pleased both Fedor and Eirene and quickly caused For'mya to turn her mild anger on Martin. That anger didn't last long Fedor and Eirene knew, for they had stood and watched as the Father of their Hearts simply touched For'mya with his aura of love and she could not stay mad at him for more than a few seconds before she was melting into his embrace.

Martin watched as they both turned slightly after executing the front kick and then thrust their hands forward as if executing a double chest strike. It was a technique that he had seen only one other person execute with enough force to shatter ribs and that was Androcles. He nodded his head approvingly, knowing that his oldest son had passed to them quite a bit of his fighting style, believing they would need it. Martin knew Androcles was one of the most lethal hand-to-hand fighters he had ever known, not only because Martin himself had taught him almost everything he knew, but because he absorbed everything Danny and Nayeca and even Lynwe had taught him as he was growing. What used to be called Kenpo, mixed with gutter fighting and Drow training had made his son a most lethal combatant. As Fedor and Eirene executed this final ending move they came to a halt in defensive positions with the knife edges of their hands facing forward and ready to strike once more.

Martin nodded his head and stepped forward. He too wore just a pair of work out pants, his powerful upper body decorated in the black flame tattoos he had gotten long ago and his Talon Guardian Brand above the right side of his pectoral muscle. It was the branded talon of the long dead Dragon Elder and very first Talon Guardian Gorath, a brand that signified his position as a Talon Guardian for the dragon species.

"Excellent!" He spoke as he moved to the panel on the wall and ended the music. He turned back to them. "As strange as it may seem, dancing is almost identical to fighting. It uses the same muscle groups and tones them in the same way. Use it when you can because it can turn the mundane into something interesting. I see you have adapted some of what Androcles passed to you into your forms."

"It... it came almost naturally MedwanGai." Eirene spoke first calling him the name they had given him. (Father Heart.)

Fedor nodded. "Like it was part of us."

Martin moved up to them and nodded. Looking at them he could not help but be filled with the same pride as he felt for his other children. That Eirene and Fedor were not his blood children never entered his mind anymore. Yes they were his foul brother's children, but Pusintin had been away from their people for so long that he had forgotten how to pass on his Mindvoice essence to his children with a Lycavorian female, or one who had been turned as For'mya had. The twins had reached for such an essence of their father within their mother For'mya and instead Eirene and Fedor had found his essence burning ever so bright. He had been the one to turn For'mya so long ago and because she was his mate, his Mindvoice essence resonated within For'mya like a beacon of light, and this is what they had used and reached for. This is what had shaped them in those first few hours after they had been conceived, and that resonance is what would shape them going into the future. It is why they both looked more like For'mya and oddly like himself than they did his brother Pusintin. The differences were not something you could notice instantly for they were subtle, but they were there nonetheless. It was also something that pleased Martin to no end. When Pusintin did finally see them he would be enraged to say the least.

“Your brother Androcles is one of the deadliest close quarters fighters that lives today. His style is unique for he has combined several different techniques from those who instructed him.” Martin told them. “He passed some of his basic knowledge to you because he knew you would need it. It gives me and your Uncle Danny a solid base to build from like we have been doing. The learning never ends though... remember that.”

“It makes us feel powerful.” Fedor said with a smile.

Martin nodded his head. “Just remember Fedor, it does not make you indestructible and you should not call on these skills unless they are necessary to defend yourselves or others.” He stated with an even voice. “We are Spartans yes... but since the time of my father, we have never begun a fight out of anger or greed or the desire to conquer. Our wolf nature sometimes drives us to... but our minds harness that urge. Always fight as a last resort. Never seek conflict for that is what you will become known for, and then people will not respect you. They will fear you... and that fear will lead to hate. That is what will ultimately destroy you.” He clasped his hands behind his back. “You have Lycavorian blood and elven blood within both of you. It allows you to harness the wild nature of one species and direct it with the calm nature of the other. Those of us who are true purebloods sometimes have to struggle more to harness it, like your brothers Andro and Deni, but it should come naturally to both of you.”

“I would never use my skills to hurt others MedwanGai.” Fedor spoke softly.

Martin smiled and reached up to place his hand on Fedor’s neck and squeeze. “I know that keto.” He spoke seeing Fedor’s eyes smile back at him. Martin directed them to the floor mat and all of them settled lotus style to the mats. “As time passes both of you will come to discover what it is you are meant to do. What path you are meant to walk.” He spoke to them. “But neither of you should wish for power or wealth or influence. These things always corrupt and change you.” (Son)

“But don’t we... won’t we have that anyway MedwanGai?” Eirene asked. “Because of the name we carry?”

“Yes you do.” Martin said. “And as you learn more you will see how the others in your family blend that with who they are so as not to let it corrupt them.”

“We will always be your children though MedwanGai.” Eirene said.

Martin nodded with a smile. “Yes you will. Always. Nothing that happens will change that now. Nothing. Ever. Your mothers and I will not allow it.”

“Why did it happen like this father?” Fedor asked softly. “We look like mother and some say like you even more than him. That is not normal. Mother said it is because you are stronger. That you are the strongest Alpha wolf within the Union. The entire galaxy!”

“Mother says your aura makes her melt.” Eirene spoke with a knowing glint in her eye.

Martin shook his head with a smile now. “No it’s not normal.” He took a breath. “I love your mother. Just as intensely as I do all your mothers. She is the Voice of my Heart. Part of who I am.”

“Your Kinsoaurgai.” Eirene said softly.

“Yes.” Martin said. “I was the one who turned your mother, so a part of me, a part of my essence will always reside within her. In her blood, mixed with her own essence. When we as Lycavorians have children, pureblood and turned wolves alike, our children instinctively reach for the Mindvoice and Etheric essence and core that is their parents within a few hours of being conceived. He forgot that part of how our people influence our children within the womb. He forgot that we can control it to a point. When you were conceived you reached for that essence and you found your mother. You found me.”

“We do not look like him at all MedwanGai. So mother is right isn’t she? Your resonance is more powerful.” Eirene asked.

Martin met her eyes and shook his head with a lopsided grin. “No you do not look like him.” He answered her question with a modicum of pride. “Thankfully both of you got your mother’s looks. I’m uglier than a hundred year old mole rat. And to answer your question Eirene, yes it would appear I am stronger.”

Eirene laughed. “I don’t think our mothers agree with that father.” She exclaimed.

“How did mother Aricia put it Eirene?” Fedor asked with a smile on his face now. “That MedwanGai is the perfect specimen of a man and they love to eat him up.”

Eirene nodded with a chuckle. “Yes... that is what they said.”

Martin grinned as the faces and luscious bodies of his Queens flashed through his mind. “Well... let’s hope they continue to think that for a lot of years. And I think the same about them.”

“You have never... you have never desired another woman MedwanGai. Outside of our mothers?” He asked.

“Fedor you igord!” Eirene gasped. “That is none of our business!”

“I was only curious!” He defended himself.

Martin shook his head. “Never. Not since the day each of them came into my life and made me part of who I am. Their Mindvoice and Etheric essence is part of me as I am part of them. What I feel for them, all of them, it comes from deep within me. I could not feel for another what I feel for them. I would be unable to find any other attractive enough to pursue in that way even if I wanted too. And I most certainly do not.” He said instantly. “Trust your instincts and your nose... but most of all trust your heart. Most of the time it will not let you down. It hasn’t for me.”

“But not all of the time?” Eirene asked softly.

Martin smiled again as he shook his head. Martin had found in the last weeks that both of them were always full of questions.

“No. Some people can mask their scents to a degree. Kavalians have this ability in a limited fashion, but they are also like us in a way with enhanced senses. Their senses are not as acute because they do not know how to process the myriad of smells they come across in their lifetimes. Your sense of smell will never be as acute as a pureblood, but you are half wolf and you can train your elven senses to make up for that difference.” He spoke reaching out to stroke Eirene’s two and a half inch pointed ear in the way a father would stroke her ear. She leaned into his caress lovingly. “Your brother’s Arrarn and Resumar and your sister Normya have done this and your brother Bryon is beginning to master the nuances as well. Never rush things. It will only lead to you hurting yourself or others. You must master one skill before moving on to the next and it will make you stronger. Patience. As you train with Kdan and Dnom, use the patience you master with them to train yourself in other areas as well. When you finally meet your sisters Zarah and Carina they will tell you the same thing. They had to learn patience as well. We all do.”

“Uncle Danny and Aunt Jules say you have not always been patient.” Fedor said with a smile.

Martin chuckled. “No I have not.” He answered. “But I also paid for those instances in pain and blood.”

“They said that too.” Eirene told him with a bright smile.

“Yes... and I’m quite sure they used much more colorful metaphors to describe it as well.” He said.

Fedor and Eirene both laughed at that and nodded their heads. “Yes.” Eirene said.

Martin nodded. “Always remember you are a Leonidas. That blood flows within you as your mother’s royal elven blood flows within you. The blood of the First Elven King. As your Pralor blood flows within you.” He told them, meeting their attentive gaze. “Never forget that our blood and what it represents to others is what makes them follow us. It makes them believe in us and themselves. When they are better... it makes us better. When they honor us it make us honor them more. No matter what... try as hard as you can to never inflict harm on innocents. People look to those with our blood to lead and as my father taught me...”

“Fight with your head...” Fedor spoke.

“But lead with your heart.” Eirene finished.

Martin smiled. “Yes.” He spoke.

“He will find us won’t he father?” Eirene asked softly after a moment.

Martin lifted his eyes to her and nodded his head. “Probably... yes.” He answered them honestly. “We haven’t been able to determine how he found you the first time and it stands to reason he will do so again.”

“Mother Anja says it is probably something so simple we are not thinking about it the right way.” Fedor spoke.

“More than likely. Your mother Anja is a brilliant doctor.” He told them. “The finest in the universe... but she is not perfect. None of us are. And we can not think of everything. That is also something you will come to discover.”

“Do you hate him father?” Eirene asked.

Martin met her gaze. “I don’t hate him... no. I don’t think so. I hate what he has done.” He answered. “What he did to your mother... what he did to the both of you. I hate what he has done to our people. His actions can never be forgiven. And he needs to be stopped.” He looked at them. “That is not something you need to concern yourselves with at the moment.” He spoke getting to his feet. “We still have two hours before your mothers return from the planet... and you need to get you history instruction with your mother Dysea in before they come back.” He watched them rise up. “Same time tomorrow. We’ll continue with advanced weapons training then.”

Fedor nodded his head and Eirene reached up on her toes to kiss his cheek. She turned quickly and took Fedor’s hand before they both began to jog across the ARC ROYAL’S training gym.

[Why didn’t you tell them the truth brother?] Torma’s voice filled his mind from the landing bay. [Your true feelings and intentions?]

[They do not need to know I hate him with every fiber of my being Torma. They do not need to know that I will take his head from his shoulders for what he has done.] Martin spoke. [There has been enough hate to begin their lives brother; they do not need more of it going forward.]

[Perhaps. But I believe they are stronger than you know my Bonded Brother.] Torma spoke with wisdom. [Androcles did not just impart his some of his skills upon them. He gave them part of who he is.]

Martin nodded. [I know. And that is what frightens me.]

Martin held Anja with one arm and Aricia with the other as For'mya walked down the ramp of the STRIKER DT IIA wearing her flight suit and laughing softly with Endith and Tina. There was a reason the three of them were considered the finest flight crew within the Union. Their skills intermingled almost magically and they knew what the other was thinking almost instantly. Four weeks For'mya had been back flying with them and the happiness that gave to her could be seen in her face and eyes. And it made Endith and Tina exceptionally happy as well. Endith was the more naturally gifted pilot, For'mya the more experienced and tactically sound and Tina was a master engineer and excellent pilot herself. They meshed together like fingers and gloves.

Martin watched her share a friendly kiss with both before moving towards where he stood with Anja and Aricia. She stepped right up to him, Aricia's and Anja’s arms circling her waist and pulling her close to all of them as For'mya and Martin shared a kiss of passion, devotion and love.

“Nothing useful I take it?” He asked finally.

Anja shook her head. “Not at all. We were able to gather a hundred tons of fruits and vegetables that were growing wild.” She answered. “Iama was thrilled when we discovered the fruit patch. Once I cleared it medically she had all of us eating something that tasted similar to an apple. You’ll like them.”

“She is proving to be invaluable Beloved.” Aricia spoke looking at him. “Her skill at cooking is amazing... and she has a talent for making even the rations taste good. She is quick witted and far more intelligent than we suspected the Kavalians allowed their females to become.”

“No doubts about her?” Martin asked knowing that because she was a Kavalian there were many among the crew who still did not trust her.

Aricia looked at Anja and For'mya and then shook her head. “There are always doubts Martin, you know this better than us. But none of us have detected anything remotely like a lie coming from her. She speaks openly of her past without hesitation, though she does harbor an incredible amount of hate and anger at her family for giving her to the biogenic process. She does worry that no man will want her now because of what she was forced to do and that is why she has thrown herself into her cooking skills. No... I firmly believe she is relishing the second chance on life she has now.”

“The Kavalians were training their biogenically altered females to do just what she is doing.” Martin said. “To infiltrate and confuse. That is where the smarts come from. Resumar says they schooled them mercilessly in many areas to give them more options as spies.”

Aricia nodded. “Yes. But she was being used as a common whore for the troops at that facility Beloved. You saw and heard the same thing we did.”

“Lift the surveillance on her Marty.” Anja said to him softly. “She’s proven she is not our enemy, and if we stop trusting our instincts where does that leave us? We are not like them and that is what makes us different.”

“Kinsoaurgai?” Martin asked.

For'mya nodded. “I concur.” She said.

Martin nodded. “Consider it done.” He spoke.

For'mya looked around, her dark brown eyes searching. "Where are Eirene and Fedor?" She asked.

Martin motioned over to the other side of the massive landing bay and For'mya cut her eyes. She could see them standing beside the large dragons Kdan and Dnom, their Bonded Ones. All of them were listening to whatever Arzoal and Helen were imparting to them within Mindvoice. Kdan and Dnom were her grandsons and Arzoal was taking a personal interest in their teachings and what they learned. She had spent most of her days instructing the hatchlings that filled the port landing bay, many of them almost the same size as Kdan and Dnom now. Arzoal believed their rapid growth had something to do with the amino acids that the drones were providing to them in their eggs. She and Helen worked tirelessly with the hatchlings, devoting most of their time to them.

For'mya smiled. "Good." She said.

"Good?" Martin asked with a smile.

For'mya turned back to look at him. "They are beginning to fit in." She said. "They no longer greet us every morning and they are doing things on their own. They are making friends and that makes me very happy."

Aricia smiled and leaned over to nuzzle her elven ear. "I told you Kinsoaurgai." She said.

For'mya leaned into the nuzzle with a smile of her own and nodded. "I know." She said. She looked at Martin. "Can they come with us to Twelve Alpha Martin? It's three days away and the experience could be good for them. They need to get off the ship."

Martin nodded his head. "I don't see why not." He answered her. "Akemi says the indigenous humanoid life signs are on the far side of the planet from where we will get the meat. According to Wayonn, who seems to have found a niche working the sensors on the bridge if you ask Akemi, his extensive planetary scans have determined they are a pre-light drive society." He looked at Anja and Aricia. "Comparable to Earth during the 20th century before they began to explore Mars and the other planets. Not exactly primitive... but not very advanced either."

"Humans?" Anja asked.

Martin shook his head. "More reptilian in outward appearance but very close. They are confined to the southern continent it appears. We are going to the northern continent. That's where the big beasts are. I saw a picture of one of these things we're going after and it looks damn close to a Woolly Mammoth from ancient Earth."

"What are we taking?" For'mya asked.

"Danny and I will put the finishing touches on the security team tonight, but Iama says she will need at least a hundred men and women to help her slice and dice the meat that Torma and the others bring to her. Another hundred to load the KADENs. We'll have thirty-six hours to gather as much as we can carry. If we get enough, Iama says she can make it last for two maybe three months at least."

"As long as it is medically sound." Anja said immediately.

Martin nodded. "Yep."

"We should insure our footprint on the planet is well covered Beloved." Aricia said. "This will be the first planet we have landed on that has humanoid indigenous life."

"Hey! Who handles the tactics around here?" He asked defensively.

Aricia grinned. "I'm just saying..."

Martin leaned over quickly and softly bit her ear lobe causing her to giggle in delight. For'mya looked around once more. "Where are Bella and Cirith?" She asked. "And Melda Min?"

"Bella and Cirith should be on their way back with Miseo." Martin answered. "They have spent the entire day on DAYRIDER instructing the Monitors and those who have come forward to volunteer to be trained." DAYRIDER was the name of the ship Muton and his people had built. Half of the thirty-three Worker Drones that had been discovered with the dragon eggs were now working on her all of the time. She was a solid ship and the drones had begun tweaking her systems to make her even more efficient. "Wayonn caught Dysea as she was coming down. He wanted to show her something in regards to a schooling program for the twins."

"Schooling?" For'mya asked. "In what?"

"Andro passed more to them than we first thought." Martin said. "It was his way of trying to insure they and you survived in case we did not reach you it seems. Wayonn would like to develop a training regime aside from what they are already doing. He seems to think that Andro may have affected them similar to what happen with Zarah."

“Ethereic power?” Anja asked.

“In a manner of speaking. He wants to test them.” Martin said. “He’s going to discuss it with all of us at dinner. He wanted to run the organization part of it by Dysea first to make sure they were not overloaded.”

“What do you think Martin?” For'mya asked him.

Martin shrugged his shoulders. “I say we hear what he has in mind. They have pretty full schedules right now and trying to squeeze something else in may be more harmful than good.” He answered.

For'mya, Aricia and Anja nodded. Anja pulled them both away from Martin. “Come on.” She said. “Let’s go change out of these field uniforms and get ready for dinner.”

Martin watched with dark brown eyes as they began walking across the bay, his eyes lingering on their asses as they walked, Eirene’s words coming back into his mind. Even with her flight suit and their body armor, Aricia, Anja and For'mya looked delicious.

[Pervert!] Anja called over her shoulder at him. [Stop looking at our asses!]

[Hey! If you got it... flaunt it!] Martin barked back. [And you ladies certainly have it! Yum... yum!]

[That is the best you can come up with?] For'mya asked without turning as they continued to walk.

[Yum. Yum?]

[I'll show you my best tonight!] Martin snapped playfully.

[Promises... promises!] Aricia called as they all laughed softly and kept walking.

Martin caught the movement out of the corner of his eye and turned as Tony waved to him casually from the back of the DT. He didn’t hesitate and made his way to the bottom of the ramp and he saw Tony standing near the COM panel at the top of the ramp and Cody sitting on midway up the ramp, his P190A4 resting across his knees.

“Master Chief?” Martin asked as he came up.

Tony motioned to the COM panel. “It’s Yuriko Skipper.” He said.

Martin moved up the ramp to stand in front of the screen where he saw the face of his adopted pureblood vampire daughter Yuriko. Unknown to everyone but Andro, Danny and the members of his personal team and Captain Akemi, Yuriko and OMEN THREE were tailing them by a full day, remaining under Shroud and covering their rear. It had been a last minute decision by Martin and one he trusted fully with Yuriko. The crew of her ship adored her, not only because of her name, but because she was truly a commander who cared for her people. Of all his children, adopted or blood, Yuriko was the one he trusted the most behind Andro. She was the most experienced and like his son, she had a darker streak to her that she could call on if it was necessary to escape a situation they were in. If he was doing something on the ARC ROYAL when she called then Yuriko would contact Tony or Danny directly.

“Yuriko?” He spoke warmly, smiling as he looked at her image.

“Tony said you were busy so I was going to fill him in but then he saw you were free.” She spoke.

“What do you have?” Martin asked.

“We are clear.” She told him. “No sign of pursuit... but then again we are only scanning the current sector we are in father. I think we are following too close. If Pusintin is following us then he will be very cautious and not close within range of the ARC ROYAL’s sensors. He will assume we have eyes and ears out in the way of fighters and such. He would not know we do not have this luxury. He would remain as far back as possible depending on how he is tracking mother.”

Martin shook his head. “He’s following us, bet on it, but their gear is not as advanced as ours you’re right.” He told her. “I don’t want you dropping back more than five light years though Yuriko. No more. You and OMEN THREE are too important to us and we have no idea what we could encounter out here. Akemi would normally have RAPTOR’s out doing what you are doing... so right now you are our eyes and eyes outside this sector.”

Yuriko nodded. “Very well. Five LY limit. I will order the adjusted course. We are cross decking our sensor scans to the ARC ROYAL every hour via secure link. I’d like to start sprinting up to your group and letting my people spend some time on the ARC ROYAL father. Civilian clothes so no one catches on easily, and only in twos and threes.”

Martin nodded his head. “They can hang with The Master Chief and Team Twelve in their area. Less chance that they will be noticed. No one goes down there.”

Cody chuckled and turned his head to look back up the ramp. "We seem to be these big bad warriors that no one wants to get close to." He said from his spot on the ramp. "Can't figure out why though?"

Yuriko smiled from her ship. "Perhaps because you tend to kill everything before asking questions Cody." She said.

Cody turned his head and looked at her image. "Yeah... that could be it." He said.

"Could be that you are just plain fugly!" Tony spat. "Ever think of that?"

"That hurts Master Chief." Cody grinned at him.

"Yeah... my ass!" Tony grunted. "Insulting you is like trying to insult a rock." He turned back to the monitor. "We can set your people up Yuriko." Tony spoke. "We got room for five more in our barracks and we have our own mess and recreation area. We'll watch out for them." Tony looked at Martin. "That means Iama will see them Skipper. She skips down to the small mess lounge on that deck at different times to check stocks and stuff."

Martin nodded. "I'm going to talk to her but I don't believe she is a threat of any kind. Aricia and the others concur."

Tony nodded. "Danny, Jules and I were talking about that as well. She seems genuine enough."

"I'm lifting the surveillance on her." Martin said. "She's becoming valuable to everyone and it's time we began to trust her."

"Father... why the secrecy with us?" Yuriko asked.

Martin met her gaze. "Laustinos could have influenced more people than we know." He stated. "Andro told me as much when we spoke last week. If by some chance one of them did manage to infiltrate Dreamland and get involved in the Arizona Project and they are on this ship I don't want to reveal all our cards."

"That's a big if father?" Yuriko said. "You know Uncle Ben is ruthless with his security at Dreamland."

Martin nodded. "I know... but even Ben would say better safe than sorry. Until we finish the checks on the crew this is how I want to play it."

"We're about half done." Tony told Yuriko. "But it's a slow process without any of Armetus's people and not alerting anyone."

Yuriko nodded. "I understand." She said.

"You haven't detected anything that could be used as a trail I suppose?" Martin asked her somewhat hopefully. He could feel his brother following them, but that didn't mean he wanted to engage in combat against a Kavalian fleet.

Yuriko shook her head. "We are using every spectrum we can think of father. So far nothing. Whatever they are using to track mother... it's either more advanced than anything we have or it's too simple and we just haven't thought about it. I'm leaning towards the latter. The Kavalians don't strike me as very open to new ideas or sophistication. Hell... they have five hundred year old ships in their front ranks."

Martin nodded. "Me too."

"I have my people beginning to shift to older communication and scanning means to try and sweep areas, but the unique possibilities are nearly limitless father, and I don't want to limit our sensor arrays." Yuriko told him. "If we happen to stumble across it, it would be a miracle. We'll keep at it though."

Martin nodded again. "I know. Try your best... but maintain your normal sweeps and sprints ahead of us."

Yuriko nodded. "Tony... I'll let you or Uncle Danny know when we make another sprint and drop our people off."

Tony nodded. "Will do." He said.

"I love you father." Yuriko said.

"And I you." Martin told her. "Tell Filrian I send my regards."

Yuriko nodded and the transmission ended. Tony looked at Martin. "You want to keep these transmissions on the DT Skipper?"

Martin nodded. "For the moment." He answered. "We keep Yuriko and the others out of the main net of the ARC ROYAL for as long as possible. If we do have a traitor on board... I don't want to give my foul brother any advantages."

"You really think he is coming after us Skipper?" Cody asked.

Martin nodded his head slowly. "He's following us... yeah." He answered softly. "I can feel his slimy ass."

"Skipper... next time we meet him... gut the motherfucker will ya." Tony said. "Save us all a lot of aggravation in the future."

Martin nodded. "I intend to Master Chief. I intend to."

It had been decided shortly after they had begun this journey that Muton and Miseo would remain on the ARC ROYAL to better facilitate joint operations between the two ships and their crew. In the ensuing five plus weeks they had grown accustomed to the corridors of the ship and the Union crew. They also took note that many on the crew looked at them in an elevated manner for their actions in rescuing their elven Queen and her children. They were greeted with friendly smiles and waves almost everywhere they went on the ship now, even though they were Kavalians. Whatever caused the crew to act differently with Iama apparently did not carry over to Miseo and Muton. The entire crew was polite and open with them and even inquisitive in some respects, wanting to discover about them all they could. Training under Isabella and Cirith Leonidas was no easy feat by any stretch of the imagination. They were taskmasters to the extreme, but Miseo and his fellow Monitors and those who had volunteered to be trained relished in the sometimes harsh training. Sixty-five of the younger Kavalians had joined the thirteen monitors with a desire to learn all they could from the Union vampire Queen they knew to be nearly as deadly as the King. Cirith Leonidas was also exceptionally skilled as they were discovering, and in five weeks they had begun to shape a fighting unit that could rival a Union company.

It had been odd for Miseo and the others to take orders from vampires at first. Though none of them had ever fought against the High Coven, they had heard stories passed on by others about vampires, none of which were turning out to be true. All of them found Isabella and Cirith both to be patient and extremely intelligent. They worked one on one with someone if it was needed and it did not matter to them that they were Kavalian. This only reinforced the idea of many of them in regards to King Leonidas. If you were not his enemy, then he would go to great lengths to insure you could reach the potential that nature intended for you. The Worker Drones were the primary example. They skittered all over the DAYRIDER now tweaking this system or repairing that system and the ship ran better now than it ever did. He had sent them over to the DAYRIDER before anything else, holding out the hand of friendship without even a breath of hesitation.

Muton enjoyed the discussions he had with Wayonn while they were on the ARC ROYAL; while Miseo's primary reason for remaining was far different. He had not intended for it to happen but he could not help himself or the direction his heart was obviously taking him in. He had felt something the moment she touched his tail on Nefoa, what seemed like a lifetime ago already, and up until a week ago he had done everything within his power to try and suppress these new feelings and sensations she brought out within him. Each time he had seen her she had grown more and become more beautiful in his eyes. Each time he had seen her he wanted her even more. She was fully grown now he knew and if one looked at her they would see she was now a twenty-four year old half elf, half Lycavorian Princess who could turn heads no matter she went. However it had happened, since he did not delve much into the intricacies of Mindvoice, her mind had matured right along with her body. Miseo tried to think and see the small girl who he had seen first on Nefoa. The same one who was fascinated with his tail. That was becoming far too hard over the past weeks and it became downright impossible as of last week.

Miseo stepped quickly through the door to his quarters and caught her in midair before the door was even fully closed, her body moving with all the speed and grace of her elven nature. He held her in midair then as she laughed softly, turning quickly to the side as his gear dropped to the deck and he pinned her to the bulkhead and covered her wonderful tasting lips with his own. His two meter long tail twitched madly as it snarled around her waist and her long legs curled around his back, her combat boots locking at the base of his spine. Her arms went under his, her hands spreading across his broad back as their kiss smoldered in its intensity and his powerful arms drew her tighter to him.

Eirene groaned in blissful delight as his arms crushed her lithe form to his wonderfully powerful body and she ground her hips against his, making sure her firm breasts were crushed against his chest. She could feel his cock, even through the layers of clothes between them and this only made her hotter. The nipples of her breasts strained against the thin fabric of the shirt she wore as she allowed a small portion of her Coming of Age fever to engulf her as she kissed the man she desperately desired with ardor. Miseo's large hands gripped her firm ass cheeks and he pulled her tighter against his body caught up in the moment, causing her to coo out her enchantment within their kiss. Her Coming of Age fever was upon Eirene, but unlike her other half sisters and even pureblood females, Andro's touch within Mindvoice had gifted her with the power to suppress it entirely. She didn't know how, but it was how she had hid it from her mothers, making sure it did not come out in her scent which she knew her MedwanGai would detect instantly no matter how slight it was. His nose was keener than any living wolf Andro had passed to her and Fedor and nothing escaped his notice even though it may have seemed that way. Fedor helped her as much as he was able, adding his own abilities to help her mask her fever, but there was no way he could help her when she allowed it to come out as she did now.

Eirene had known shortly after coming to the ARC ROYAL that Miseo was the one she had wanted. She may have been fifteen at the time during her growth cycle, but she was sure. The awareness that Andro had granted to her and Fedor had allowed them to do much more than others thought. Now that she was fully grown, with all the needs and abilities of a female wolf, she knew with no doubt in her mind. His juniper like scent drove her mad whenever she caught a whiff of it, setting her body on fire unlike anything she had ever felt in her short life so far. It was so similar to what she had witnessed with her mother on Enurrua when she was reunited with her MedwanGai. Her mother's scent of sweet orchids had spiked unbelievably and her desire and want for him poured forth in buckets from her very pores. Just as it did with Eirene for Miseo. None of the pureblood or turned wolves on the ARC ROYAL had even caught her nose in interest, and there were many who were even more attractive than Miseo. None of that mattered to her. She wanted him and no other. She knew he had been fighting it for so long and last week she had grown tired of waiting. She had thrown herself on him one evening in his quarters just like this and during their passion filled kisses they had professed what they both felt for one another.

Miseo finally pulled his head back to stare into her changed wolf eyes and he saw the tips of her dual wolf fangs protruding from beneath her lip. Smaller than the fangs of her brother but fangs that were unique to the Leonidas bloodline he knew. Miseo had spent the last weeks using the computers on the ARC ROYAL to discover as much as he could about the family of the woman who had so captured his heart and soul in such little time. Trying to find some way that he could fit in. His body vibrated with need for Eirene and he blinked several times as his heart pounded away in his chest. He leaned forward finally to nuzzle the outer ridge of her half elven ear, drawing a gasp of delight from her as he fought his own raging emotions and hormones.

"I have... I have missed you so Miseo!" Eirene rasped out the words as her hands came up to his beautifully handsome face and his tail tightened around her waist.

"I have only been gone a day Eirene." He said with a smile.

Eirene grinned and rubbed her lips across his cheek. "A day is too long!" She exclaimed. "It will always be too long until you claim me!"

Miseo met her eyes as he was finally able to gather enough control of his emotions to keep from ravaging her right here. "Your fever burns hotter Little One?" He asked.

"Yes damn it! And it burns only for you!" Eirene pleaded.

Miseo pressed his forehead to her silky throat and allowed his own lips to brush against the skin just above the valley of her breasts. "I do... Eirene I do not want to deny you choice." He stated. "I do not want to keep others from..."

"I have been on this ship for almost six weeks Miseo! The fever has become so strong. I have gone to every area on this ship... looked at every man! Just as you wanted me too!" Eirene gasped pulling his head up so she could look at his face. "You are who I want Miseo! You! No one else! Why... why do you resist? I know you want me as much as I crave you. I can smell it coming from you Miseo!"

"I can barely control myself Eirene." He told her. "But I have read about your people. You are suppressing your fever... I don't know how... but you are. It is not fair to others if they can not prove to you..."

Eirene snarled and nipped his jaw with her fangs, the slight pin prick of pain causing Miseo to grin. "This is not a competition!" She growled at him. "I am suppressing my fever because I want you damn it! I have always wanted you! I don't want to be bothered by others who wish to claim me because of who my MedwanGai and mothers are! I have seen how some of them look at me."

“Listen to her Miseo.” Fedor’s voice broke in and Miseo turned his head to see him walk out of the small bathroom area of his quarters. “You aren’t going to change her mind. She’s a stubborn upae.” He spoke as he settled to the couch.

“Shut up Fedor you midaeus!” Eirene snapped at her brother.

Miseo pulled his eyes back to Eirene and her dark brown orbs smoldered at him as she tilted her head to the side in a ‘I told you so’ manner. Miseo knew that Eirene and Fedor were tied together in a very unique way for a brother and sister. That they shared everything with each other, holding nothing back from one another, didn’t bother him in the least. Miseo liked Fedor immensely. They were closer in age than any of Miseo’s own brothers and they shared many of the same values and interests.

“Your... your MedwanGai would not approve Eirene. I am Kavalian no matter that I have Pralor blood within me.” He said finally looking at her. “He would not approve after what...”

“Why don’t you let me worry about what I would approve of?” Martin’s voice carried to them and all of their heads snapped around as the door to Miseo’s quarters slid fully open and Martin stepped into the room, For’mya beside him with Anja.

“Sibfla!” Fedor gasped as he shot to his feet. “Father! Mothers!”

Miseo’s eyes were wide as he quickly retracted his tail from around Eirene’s waist and lowered her to the deck. His father had raised him to be true to his individual nature and not to act differently for someone’s approval. In that instant Miseo decided he would not hide his feelings for Eirene Leonidas any longer. Eirene’s dark brown eyes were wide as well and they flashed with anger at him when he withdrew his tail, but they instantly changed to adoring love when she felt him grip her hand tightly, refusing to let go.

“King... King Leonidas!” He rasped as the door closed behind them.

“Would any of you care to explain what is going on here?” For’mya asked sternly.

“Mother...” Fedor began. “We...”

For’mya held up her hand. “I’m not looking for an answer from you young man.” She spoke turning her eyes on Eirene. “I want one from your sister.”

Eirene gripped Miseo’s hand tightly with one hand, her other grasping his arm as she pressed her body close to his side. “Mother I...”

“Eirene... you didn’t really think you could suppress your fever from your father did you?” For’mya asked.

Eirene’s eyes cut to look at Martin as he crossed his hands behind his back. “You... you know MedwanGai?” She asked in a stunned voice.

“I’ve known for a week.” He told her. “I don’t know how you have learned to suppress it as you have Eirene, a talent that many of our females would like to learn I’m sure, but it leaked out ever so slightly in your training. I told your mothers immediately.”

“What else has your brother Androcles taught you?” For’mya asked looking at Fedor now too. “He certainly did not tell us about this. Or many things for that matter. He showed you how to do this didn’t he? He has passed to both of you far more than he told us. As he has done with all of his siblings.”

Martin nodded his head. “Something I will address with him when we speak again I can assure you.”

For’mya stepped up to Eirene but made no effort to pull her away from Miseo. She let her eyes drift from Miseo’s face and she looked at Eirene. She brought her hand up and touched her daughter’s cheek, feeling her warm skin and easily smelling her heightened arousal in her sweet musky amber and orchid scent. Eirene closed her eyes in delight at the touch of her mother and she leaned into her touch. “You should have told me Eirene. You should have told us. Your mothers and I do have a little bit of experience in this you know. You did not have to do this on your own.”

“Stop suppressing it Eirene.” Martin told her. “We know... so you no longer need to hide it.”

“MedwanGai... I... I do not wish to become the object of interest for every male wolf on the ARC ROYAL!” Eirene spoke passionately. “They will smell me and I will be shooing them away like flies from food. And it disrespects my Miseo having to do this.”

“They would not get near you.” Miseo growled softly.

Martin moved up beside For’mya and Anja with a sly grin at Miseo’s response and he looked at her. “It is part of who you are Eirene. You can’t hide it.” He said softly. “What have I told you in our classes?”

Eirene met his eyes. “Be... be who you are and not what others want you to be.” She said softly.

“So be who you are daughter.” Martin said. “It is nothing to be ashamed of Eirene... our people, Lycavorian and turned wolf alike, this is something we all deal with. Well... the ladies anyway.”

Anja moved behind Eirene and pressed close to her as For'mya inched closer as well. For'mya felt her mother's auras wash over her and surround her and she smiled. “Do not be afraid Eirene.” Anja spoke softly into her ear. “Be yourself.”

For'mya nodded as she continued to look at her and Eirene finally lowered all of the Mindvoice shields she had been using to hide her scent. The intensity of her scent spiked five fold when she lowered her shields and For'mya, Anja, Martin and Fedor all detected it immediately. It did not affect them because they were her family, but surprisingly enough it did affect Miseo. He inhaled deeply, his eyes wide and he looked at her with astonishment and a new pride.

“Eirene... my love... you have... you have been suppressing this?” He gasped as his body began to vibrate being so close to her. Kavalians did not have as keen a sense of smell as Lycavorians, but it was strong enough to detect heady scents and right now Eirene's pungent fever induced scent was maddening to him. For'mya and Anja could detect the intensity of her aroused female scent and who exactly it burned for. And they could also detect the response it was receiving from Miseo, and if they could detect it they knew Martin could as well. For'mya felt him come up behind her and stand between her and Anja.

“This could be a problem.” Martin said softly.

“See!” Eirene protested vehemently. “I told you! I will attract every unmated wolf on this ship now MedwanGai! I didn't want that! I only want Miseo!”

“Milord... King Leonidas... this is my fault!” Miseo began to speak doing his best to try and shield Eirene anyway he could.

“Damn right it is!” Martin snapped looking at him. “I've smelled your scent on her for nearly a week! That's not the problem I was talking about though...”

“MedwanGai please!” Eirene spoke frantically reaching out to take his hand with hers thinking he was going to deny her what she wanted so much. “I am... I want this father! I know what I feel and...”

“You should have claimed her days ago!” Martin finished with a snort looking at Miseo.

Miseo's eyes mirrored Eirene's as they went wide and looked at him. “I thought... I did not...”

Martin shook his head quickly. “Never think that because you are Kavalian I lump you in with a single group Miseo. You, your father, the others, they have Pralor blood within them. You are not fully Kavalian and therefore you do not share the same values. And even if you were pure Kavalian, your actions have more than shown all of us that you are different. That is and has been very clear to me from the moment you and your father began helping For'mya. Pian, Jalersi, all of them. They think and feel like you and that is why they are on our side. I could care less if you were Kavalian, Kochab or Algolian. If you loved our daughter the way your scent says you do then that is all that matters.”

For'mya took Eirene's hand in hers. “You are a woman Eirene. No matter how quickly that came to be... no matter how much I hate that it happened the way it did, you are fully grown and I can not deny that. Your desire for Miseo pours from you in waves and his for you.” For'mya said. “We have never denied what the hearts of our children want and that does not change with you and Fedor.”

“The ways of your people...” Miseo stammered looking at For'mya. “I have... I have nothing to offer to you Milady. Nothing to give you for...”

“Do you love her?” Martin asked simply.

Miseo's blue eyes darted to him once more and then they turned on Eirene. “I... more than I have ever loved anyone in my life.” He said seeing Eirene's eyes become moist and her face beaming in its beauty. “I have never felt these things that I feel for her within me. I...”

“Then love her Miseo.” Anja spoke moving around to stand beside Martin and wrapping her arms around his waist as his arm curled around her back and he drew her close to him. “Love her. Honor her. Protect her.”

For'mya looked at Miseo. “Respect her above all else.” For'mya said. “And love her so much it takes her breath away. Just be sure it is what you both want. If you do this... if you do this... you will be together for eternity.”

“Lycavorians and elves become mates and husbands and wives for all time.” Anja said. “Especially when the decision is made during a Coming of Age fever or a first Phase. Be sure. Both of you.”

Eirene watched as For'mya stepped back and did much the same as her mother Anja, pressing close to Martin, and her arms going around his waist. Her eyes were wide in disbelief. "That's... that's it?" She gasped.

Martin chuckled and looked at her with love and warmth. "What? Did you expect us to be a bunch of raving lunatics?" He asked her. "I can still do that if it makes you feel better. Run up and down the decks screaming my head off and ranting like an idiot with foam coming from my mouth."

"Like that is any different than how you normally act?" Anja quipped up into his face with an adoring smile.

For'mya laughed and smiled at her daughter. "We vowed to each other long ago to never try and interfere in the lives of our children." She spoke. "Why should that change for you or Fedor? All we ask is that you share it with us Eirene. No matter what it is? You and Fedor are... you are special in many ways."

Anja turned her head and looked at Fedor who had crossed his arms over his broad chest with a smile. "Don't let that go to your head young man!" She quipped. "It's not a free pass to get away with murder!"

Fedor's smug look disappeared quickly and Anja smiled at his expression.

"Ok... enough of this mushy stuff!" Martin barked. "I'm hungry and that's where I was going before this little detour." He looked at Eirene and Miseo. "You two will join us for dinner no matter how much you want to stay here. You don't have anything to worry about Eirene. You are saturating Miseo with your scent daughter... given that and his own scent on you... no one will bother you."

Eirene couldn't help but blush and she giggled softly looking at her mothers. "I can't help it." She said as For'mya and Anja reached for her and drew her away from Miseo.

"When you are done eating... then you can return here." For'mya spoke. She looked back to Miseo. "I expect that her fever will no longer be a problem for her come morning." She said sternly.

Miseo shook his head quickly not really understanding what she meant. He just said the first thing that came to his mind. "No... no!" He stammered.

"Good!" Anja echoed. "We didn't want to have to get ugly."

Martin chuckled as For'mya and Anja began to lead Eirene out of Miseo's quarters.

"We will see you in the Mess Lounge." For'mya called over her shoulder as they led Eirene out.

Martin looked at Miseo his face calm. "You need to let Muton and your mother know what is happening." He said. "I clued your father in a few days ago."

Miseo's eyes grew wider. "He knows!" He gasped. Miseo shook his head slowly. "Then everyone knows."

"Miseo..." Martin said softly and Miseo lifted his eyes to look at him. "You, your father, the others, you are not part of the Kavalians that we left behind or that are probably chasing us. You are different and never doubt that I trust all of you with my life." Martin moved closer to him. "One thing though... if you ever hurt her... even a little bit... pray someone finds you before her mother's and I."

Miseo didn't back down or look away and that told Martin all he needed to know. "I would die before ever hurting her. I would kill myself before that happened."

Martin nodded and reached up to pound his shoulder. "Good. Now let's go get some food. As intense as her fever is... you're going to need it. Have you ever..."

Miseo shook his head slowly embarrassed. "No. No... no woman has ever affected me like Eirene. And with all my training as a Monitor, I never had the time. This is what... this is what For'mya meant?"

Martin nodded with a smile. "Yep!" Miseo looked somewhat concerned and Martin grabbed his arm. "I will give you a tip or two that always works with her elven mothers. Once you claim her tonight, the fever will recede and she will be your mate." Martin said with a grin. "The rest is up for you to figure out. And for fuck's sake... don't tell Eirene! She'll just turn around and tell her mothers and then I'll be in deep shit!"

Miseo looked at him and then Fedor who stood behind him. He looked back to Martin and then began laughing as they headed out of his quarters.

“Noooo! Not there! Noooooo! You bastard nooo! Ahhhhhhhh!”

The female voice grated against Kalis’s ears as he approached his father’s room. Kalis stared at the door of his father’s private quarters as the whimpers of pain and humiliation from the Hadarian Healer he now knew as Ceale reached him even through the thick steel door. His father had been abusing the woman every few days ever since they had left Nefoa, her cries of defiance and pain reaching into the corridor of the ship even as his father forced himself upon her, sometimes violently.

Kalis lifted the data pad he had brought and looked at it before dropping it to the floor in front of his father’s door and turning to move down the corridor. He almost reached the lift when he came to the large view window and he looked outside to see the Kavalian warships they had taken from Nefoa on this stupid chase across unknown space. They were going into their sixth week of chasing his Uncle and still they were no closer. The trail was there as his father had hoped, half of PUMA’S PRIDE sensors being used to keep tracking it. The LSD jumps took a toll on their engines and they had to stop every few days to reinitialize the engine cores and make minor usage repairs. His grandfather Keleru had ranted over the COM at what his father was going to do, enraged that he would conduct himself in such a manner when the Kavalian military needed him. He had relented in the end, both he and his father still believing that somehow recapturing the elf female and her bastard children would give them some important leverage against the Lycavorian Union.

Something that deep down within himself Kalis did not believe for an instant.

His father had largely ignored him for the entire trip so far, barely speaking to him even when they sat down together for dinner in the Mess Lounge with the other officers. Kalis could see the disappointment in his eyes that he had not performed better on Enurrua. That he had somehow not fought better and helped him to defeat his Uncle. He had come away with only half his ribs broken and two severe lacerations of his abdomen from sharp rocks where he had landed. It was almost as if his father didn’t care about that. How do you fight a man who could do the things his Uncle had that day. Kalis was by no means helpless. He was a cunning warrior himself who had fought the vampires on many different occasions with Special Operations. He was a skilled hand to hand fighter and perhaps the finest shot on PUMA’S PRIDE with any weapon. How do you fight that kind of rage over a woman though? How do you fight a man who can do things you could not explain? It was not an ideal Kalis could comprehend.

Now they were off on this wild chase through areas of space that they had no idea about. They did not know what awaited them and part of Kalis was frightened of this. Frightened yes but so very interested as well. The other officers on the bridge of PUMA’S PRIDE were wary and unsure, but to Kalis this was an opportunity to see what no one had ever seen. He just wished they weren’t doing this because of his father’s misguided belief that the elf female For'mya had feelings for him. Kalis knew there was no chance of that being true. He had tried to tell his father this calmly but he would have none of it, slapping him repeatedly in front of other officers on the ship to demean him and show others he was weak and did not know what he was talking about. None of the other officers would say anything to him, or do something that showed the disrespect they felt for him, for he still held the rank of Colonel. Who his father was insured this and the fact that Kalis was exceptionally deadly all by himself and he would not hesitate to kill in order to discipline someone. But the lack of respect was there Kalis knew. And it was growing. Especially among the Puma Bane troops.

Kalis had tried for years to become the same son that his younger brother Leruk was to their father. Even when they were small, he never paid much attention to him or Karun once Leruk had been born. It was almost as if they no longer existed. This did not bother Karun as much as it did Kalis. Karun was always closer to their mother and sister than him and Leruk. It was something his father hated, but there was nothing he could do about it. When first Karun and then his mother betrayed them and defected to the Union, his father reacted as he expected with outrage and threats of retaliation if they were captured. When they discovered that Leruk had been killed by his cousin Androcles however, his father seemed to lose a small portion of himself. He became crueler and harder and silently he swore vile revenge on Androcles. Of course it never occurred to his father than he had to capture Androcles to fulfill that oath. A possibility that had no chance of ever happening Kalis knew for some reason. And that was before they discovered that his Uncle was not dead and was indeed very much alive. Kalis had seen his father fly into a rage unlike anything he had ever seen when that was confirmed. Now they had an entire and fully modern Fleet Group and a division of Kavalian troops and they were chasing his Uncle and For'mya into the unknown.

It was stupid Kalis knew.

He had read the reports of what that lone ship had done to their Task Force and they had no idea if that ship had gotten reinforcements before departing Union space. For all they knew they could be facing a much larger Union force because his Uncle was King and they would not allow him to go off unprotected. Kalis turned away when he heard the Hadarian female bellow in painful humiliation once more and he stepped onto the lift trying to push her cries from his head. No doubt his father was punishing her for losing For'mya. He had been using her as a fuck toy since they had departed Nefoa, and it seemed he was becoming more and more cruel when he took her. Her felt sorry for her really. What was happening was not of her doing and she had been the one to heal his father and save his life. This is how his father repaid her. By turning her into his whore and hurting her at every opportunity. Her family was being kept in separate locations on the ship, her fool husband by himself.

Kalis didn't know what sort of arrangement the man had made, but he had made some sort of deal with his father to insure he was not harmed in any way while his wife and children were kept in one large cell and his father raped his wife almost daily. The man was a pig as far as Kalis was concerned. To leave his woman and children to the mercies of others while he kept himself safe was the purest form of cowardice that Kalis could think of. Kalis didn't even realize that was his wolf blood within him or how similar that made him to many others who thought like that?

Kalis exited the lift on deck twenty-six, the second lowest deck of the ship and where his quarters were. He had chosen this location because it was quiet and far from the relentless scorn his father now looked at him with. Only the Kavalian engineering crew stayed on this deck and it was easy to avoid them as he moved to his quarters and punched in the code for entry. Kalis had changed the entry code and added an additional layer of security after the events on Enurrua had finished. He didn't know why, but a looming sense of personal security had overcome him and he feared what some upstart Kavalian trooper might attempt in order to get on his father's good graces. When the door closed he secured it in the same way, engaging the security system almost as an afterthought. Anyone who attempted to breach his quarters now, whether he was in them or not, would be carved in half by the security laser beams he had installed in the door and floor frame.

Kalis looked around his large quarters a moment, a main room, large kitchen area and then a separate bedroom area. He had spent quite a bit of time making the quarters try to reflect who he wanted to be, statues and pictures of famous Kavalian warriors decorating his walls, everything in its exact place. Looking around the room now something was very different. It was missing something. What Kalis had seen on Enurrua was unlike anything he had ever witnessed or heard about. The ferocity of his Uncle was almost beautiful in its depiction. The look in his eyes, even knowing he was outnumbered more than three to one. It was inspiring for lack of a better word. The glow from those yellow/gold eyes he had never seen on any other man. Not even his father in the wake of one victory or another. Those eyes were so confident, so brilliant and so methodical. His father's eyes were always so cruel and emotionless.

Kalis moved to his desk and reached down to enter the code to unlock it. He opened the small drawer and pulled out the data disc his Uncle had given him. Kalis didn't know what had possessed him to keep it and tell no one but he had. As he lifted it out of the drawer, the memories of that day flashed back to him.

Martin lifted his hand with his palm towards Pusintin and you could clearly see the pulsing of the psychic power radiating from his palm. Without any warning Kalis was yanked from his feet and rocketed through the air towards Martin. He covered the sixty meters in four heartbeats and then he was gasping for air in Martin's armored fist as his fingers closed around Kalis's throat. Not enough to crush his windpipe or larynx but enough to make it very difficult to breath and cause Kalis to claw at his hand with strong fingers. Kalis could feel the intense heat radiating from the psychic shield around his Uncle, only the part of his arm from the elbow up to the hand squeezing his throat now free of that shield.

Pusintin took three steps towards them but stopped.

"So nephew..." Martin spoke softly gazing at Kalis's dark blue eyes. "Your father stands there. He will not come for you Kalis. He will not try to protect you from me. In truth... he does not care what happens to you!"

"I do... I do not believe you! You... you do... not frighten me!" Kalis gagged on the words even as he continued to claw at the armored fist that held him suspended two feet off the ground. The grip was far too powerful for him to even get the tips of his fingers under the armored grasp.

Martin drew him closer, Kalis's blue eyes growing wide the closer he came to the searing psychic shield and he stopped struggling with both hands wrapped around his Uncle's wrist. "I see within you Kalis." Martin growled softly loosening his iron clad grip on Kalis's throat ever so slightly. "Like I saw within your brother Karun. You have never seen the things Karun has discovered Kalis. Never experienced them."

"Karun is a traitor!" Kalis hissed. "He betrayed us! His people!"

"Did he?" Martin asked him, his voice softer now. "Or did he just embrace the things your father has never spoken of with you? That he has never showed you? The things that it was his duty to show you! The things you could be still."

"You lie!" Kalis spat once more.

"Do I?" Martin asked calmly. "Your brother Leruk was a lost cause Kalis. He spent too much time around your father. It twisted him beyond help. I saw this in my son's mind after what happened. That is why you have tried so hard to gain his favor. He always regarded Leruk as his favorite. You have a chance Kalis... you have a chance he did not. You have a choice."

"I will never betray my father!" Kalis hissed. "I will never betray my people! I am... I am not afraid of you!"

Martin smiled up at him, but there was no joy in that smile. His wolf fangs prevented it from being anything but a smile of death. "I am not the one you should be afraid of Kalis. It is not my mate that you disrespected by doing what you did. You would be dead already if it was. It is only another crime that your father bears the shame for. Not teaching you what you should know as a wolf." Martin told him.

"He... he killed my brother!" Kalis snarled.

Martin shook his head. "Androcles killed a cancer. Not your brother." He spoke softly still. "I see that cancer growing within you as well... but you can stop it Kalis. You can choose to stop it. You can open your eyes and make a choice."

"Never!" Kalis growled.

"You are on a collision course with fate Kalis." Martin spoke softly and he drew a thin data pad from a small pouch on his belt, keeping his movements hidden from all those around him. "Open your eyes nephew... open your eyes to what you could be. It will be your only chance. You will survive this day Kalis... and I will leave you with a gift. Do with it as you wish." Martin pushed his other hand through the psychic shield and shoved the data pad into the folds of Kalis's loose fitting clothing and partial body armor. "And remember my words to you now... Androcles Leonidas is my son... and there is not a merciful bone in his body nephew. For what you have done he will carve you up and spit you out. Your only chance is to read what I just gave you. Read it! And then make your choice. My son will not give you a second chance nephew."

"I do not fear him!" Kalis growled.

Martin smiled. "You should boy. He is the instrument of your death or your salvation." He spoke. "Now... no more words. I have other things to attend to. Think for yourself for once Kalis! Think for yourself and become a Leonidas! It is the choice your grandfather wants you to have. Try to land without breaking too many bones."

Kalis stared at the data disc for a long moment. What harm could there be in this piece of material. Perhaps he could learn something from it that would establish himself back in his father's eyes and good graces. He closed the draw and sat in the chair, pressing the disc into the slot of his computer and making sure all the security protocols were in place so that no one could access his personal computer. The monitor flashed and Kalis sat back in shock as the pad ejected by itself and flopped on the desk top, a thin beam of light projecting from the thin front side. And then suddenly standing before him was the figure of his Uncle in the holo projection. Instinctively he rose to his feet prepared to defend himself, but then his mind recognized it was simply a holographic portrayal of his Uncle. The man who had nearly killed him almost six weeks ago.

“I see you have finally worked up the courage to view this nephew.” Martin’s image spoke. He was dressed in simple clothes, not the glittering armor Kalis had seen him wearing on Enurrua. The tunic was a dark blue color and cut low around his neck, the pants black in color and he wore a simple pair of boots. “That makes me glad.”

Kalis looked at his image with wide eyes. “How...?”

The image of Martin smiled. “You are probably asking how I knew to say that?” It spoke. “Let’s just call it a guess shall we. I know you are viewing this alone because it would not have activated if someone else was with you. I would imagine you wouldn’t see much of this program if your father was with you, so I took precautions to insure only you viewed it. This data disc is not something you will be able to use to gather intelligence on me or others. Now that it has activated, it will also no longer open without your assistance.”

Kalis reached forward disgustedly to end the transmission when he heard the soft laughter and clucking sound and looked up to see his Uncle shaking his head.

“Don’t turn it off Kalis. That’s what you were going to do isn’t it Mandri? Mandri is nephew in the ancient language of our people in case you didn’t know. Five minutes Mandri. That’s all I ask. Listen to me for five minutes and then make your decision.” His hands went out to the sides. “As you can see... I’m speaking to you from a ship. I’m on my way to recover my Kinsoargai from your father. The Voice of my Heart in the ancient language.” Martin’s image spoke. “This is kind of awkward... but after meeting your brother Karun... I made the decision to do this. It was a decision to try and show you what your father has not shown you. That is obvious in your brother Karun, but since he has embraced the part of himself that your father denied him, he will learn these things on his own. You will not have that chance. I was going to try and figure out a way to get this to you within Kavalian space but once I determined what your father was working towards I knew I would be meeting you face to face at some point. Probably very soon too.”

Kalis looked at the image with wide eyes. “You... you knew!” He gasped.

“What your father has done Kalis... it goes against everything that is honorable in all of us.” Martin spoke. “I do not blame you for what is happening Kalis. I blame your father. You are... you are simply a casualty of the hate that your father has for me and your grandmother. I do not understand all of it Mandri... in truth... now I don’t care. I would have listened to him; I would have listened to anything he wanted to say to me Kalis. And had he expressed a desire to return to his people, though many would have called me insane, I would have granted him that. He was my brother and I loved him. I loved him right up until he took For'mya from me. Until he used her, raped her, treated her as some sort of animal to further his sick goals. He should have read the ancient laws set forth by our grandfather better and not listened to those who said they could help him achieve what he wanted. For'mya is my mate and wife Kalis. She has always been mine, and will always be mine. A much higher power than you or I saw to that nephew. She knows I am alive now and I will get to her before your father. And I will do what I should have done a long time ago. I will make her truly mine in every possible way. When that happens, your father will have no affect on her no matter what he does.”

Kalis remembered on Enurrua when his father hit For'mya with his full Alpha Wolf aura and she simply stared back at him with hate in her eyes.

“This disc is not about your father however. It is about you Kalis.” Martin continued. “You have probably heard many things from your father and others about me. Hell... some of them may even be true. But I want you to hear about them from me. I want you to hear the reasons why I did things. I want to share with you some things I have only shared with one other. My son Androcles.” Martin began walking and Kalis could see it was indeed the corridor of a ship. “I will tell you why I want to do this... and believe it if you will... but it is what your grandfather wants. It is what our father wants me to do in order to try and save you. I talk to him in my dreams sometimes...” Martin held up his hand. “I know... weird... but what can I say?”

Kalis couldn't help the small chuckle that escaped his lips and he found himself drawn to this image. This was so different than the vengeful warrior he had encountered on Enurrua. The man who had single-handedly wiped out nearly a full platoon of Puma Bane soldiers in his rage and he didn't break a sweat doing it.

“Come with me nephew.” Martin's voice continued drawing Kalis's eyes back to the image. “Come with me and allow me to show you what the other part of your blood means. You are only half Kavalian Kalis. The blood of a Leonidas also flows in your veins and there is not a single reason why that blood can not live side by side with your Kavalian blood. I have met your mother and the man who she now calls husband. She is strong and proud and she loves you. She just wanted more than your father and others allowed her.” Martin's hands went behind his back as he walked and the Vid Drone must have moved around in front of him.

“A species can not survive if the ones who give us the sons and daughters that make us strong are treated as if they are nothing more than animals themselves Kalis. That is one of the major differences between our people. We view our females as the bearers of our future. We do not need to beat them down or force ourselves upon them. Treating them as if they are precious jewels works far better my boy. It is not wrong to show them you love them. To let them know they are your equal in every way.” Martin chuckled. “Believe me... it can be a lot more fun and adventurous between the sheets when the woman or women in your life knows how you feel about them. It can get downright...” Martin stopped. “Ah... I digress.” He said with a smile as he stopped walking. “I ask only one thing Kalis. If you truly want to see things differently... if you truly want to see what you can have... then let me show you. Let me show you what your father should have shown you. Let me give you the ability to make your own decisions in a life that is yours, not someone else's. There is no information you will gain militarily by viewing this disc, none at all. I'm not that stupid regardless of what your father thinks. But if you wish to know what he has not told you; about your blood; about your choices; then allow me to tell you. At least then you will have all the information you need to decide for yourself what you want going into the future.”

Kalis found himself pulling the chair away from the desk and settling into it with almost no hesitation.

“I have talked to Androcles about what I want to do nephew.” Martin continued. “What I want to show you. There is very little that I do not share with my oldest son. There are some things that we have experienced together that no one has ever seen. I want to share them with you and he has agreed.” Martin looked directly into the Vid Drone. “He also wanted me to pass on a message nephew. ‘Choose with the heart that beats in your chest cousin and not with the false hate that flows through you because you have not seen the truth.’” Martin smiled. “He can be very profound when he wants to be don't you think? If you do this... Andro believes you would be one of the strongest of Leonidas blood, our blood and he would be honored to stand beside you. If you do not... then history... history will never know you existed.” Martin held up his hand again quickly. “Do not take offense at this Kalis. It is what I believe as well... and as much as it would pain me, no matter the tears I might shed... I will kill you just as assuredly as I will kill your father. I would much rather you have the opportunity to decide for yourself which path in this life you want to walk... because that is the choice your father has taken from you. A choice he had no right to take away from you. I want to give that back to you. So come with me nephew, let me show you the world of a Leonidas. A life you could have without question if you so desired. All you need do is reach out.”

Kalis was riveted from that moment on.

Serale stared at the door to the quarters that was now their prison waiting.

Never in all her years did she imagine she would be waiting for her nineteenth birthday as a prisoner on a Kavalian ship. Nine more days to add to the almost six weeks they had been on this ship barely surviving on the rations they were fed and constantly harassed. What her mother was enduring brought tears to her eyes every time she thought about it. And the hatred for her father grew by the hour.

Serale was one of the most gifted Healers her grandmother had ever seen she had been told. She was one of the few Hadarians, like her mother, who preferred to use their power to diagnose injuries and diseases and forgo the instruments that were available to them to do this. They would then treat the injuries or diseases with their Healing power of metaphysical radiation. Serale had ascended only last year, feeling the ecstatic surge of healing power as it swept through her body and infused her with the unique radiation that allowed Hadarians to be what they were. The galaxy's foremost medical Healers and researchers. At almost nineteen, Serale was a vision of Hadarian beauty. Standing barely five foot three and just over a hundred pounds, her physical assets were hard to miss. Her breasts were medium sized and very firm and she had a tiny waist to go with lean muscular legs and an incredibly firm backside. She had spent the last few years on Talbor Seven and hated every moment of it, just like her mother. She hated the advances of males from nearly every species regardless of her age. A Kochab businessman had even offered to purchase Serale so that he could turn her into his personal sex toy and doctor. She had only been sixteen at the time, her mother having to threaten her father that she would take Serale and her brother off Talbor Seven and return to Hadaria if her father did not take a more active role in keeping things like that from happening.

Her mother and father had fought a great deal since coming to Talbor Seven. Her mother did not mind that they were helping others who did not normally have access to Hadarian medical means, but nearly seven years without returning to their homeworld had taken its toll on all of them. It was on Talbor Seven where Serale had finally seen her father's indifference to both her and her brother. He seemed more interested in making credits and treating less than savory individuals outside the limits of the many resorts than he was in raising them. She had witnessed his docile attitude when the Kavalians had stormed into their clinic and demanded that they accompany them. Her father had done very little to keep this from happening and he had ignored the lustful looks both his wife and daughter had received from the cruel looking troops. He believed Elder Healer Buonau's actions in disposing Queen Anja and aligning with the Kavalians was the right one, while her mother and Serale did not. They beat him down viciously when he protested the first time they touched her mother, but he didn't protest what was happening after that. Even though he knew what the Kavalians had planned.

They had only seen him three times in their entire five week imprisonment. Each time he had looked well fed and his clothes were clean. Serale, her mother and brother still had the same clothes on, and they had only been allowed to bath twice a week. Serale knew what was happening each time they came for her mother. She came back battered, bruised and sore. The Lycavorian they knew as Marshall Pusintin, King Leonidas's brother, was raping her mother each time he sent for her. And he was not gentle with her in the least. She would return with dark bruises on the insides of her thighs and on her shoulders and arms. Her cheeks would be red and bruised as well and Serale knew why. She was no stranger to men, Serale had seen her fair share of young men that she was attracted to, but her father was of the old school and he was insistent on choosing a husband for her. Serale had no intention of allowing that, but she would let him rant about it so he did not argue with her. There were times that he would get truly angry with her and slap her in the face or verbally abuse her as he did her mother.

Serale knew there was no love between her parents, if there ever had been. Their union had also been arranged and her mother had not wanted to marry her father. Their families would have nothing of it. Her brother Danim was only fourteen and though he was very intelligent, he did not want to believe their father was letting this happen to them. Serale had even seen some of the Kavalian troops look at him with something akin to a predatory glance. Danim's eyes were being open however, and his anger at the Kavalians taking his mother every other day was beginning to shine through. Danim was fair skinned like their father and his soft brown hair was wavy while Serale was deeply tanned like her mother, with long, billowing rosewood red hair that fell to the small of her back and dark Hunter green eyes. Serale knew at some point she would be taken and there was nothing she could do about it. This Pusintin would tire of her mother and take her, or she would be given to his men for ridiculous achievement. She knew how Kavalians treated and regarded their females, and she did not know if she would be strong enough to fight them.

The door to the quarters opened and Serale scrambled up to her feet as her mother staggered through slowly.

“Mother!” Serale gasped as she went to her, the door closing almost immediately.

Ceale let her daughter wrap her arms around her waist and support her weight as she guided her to the couch. Pain wracked her body, but the humiliation was far more. Serale felt her tears come as she lifted her hands and the soft white of her healing ability flared openly on her mother’s badly bruised face and split lips.

“Mother!” Serale gasped. “Mother this can’t continue!” She stammered drawing her hands over her mother’s face and watching as the bruises and injuries healed quickly.

“I will... I will endure.” Ceale hissed. “I have too Serale!”

“This pig of a man punishes you so mother!” Serale exclaimed as her hands dropped to her mother’s midsection and she let her power flare once more over her abdomen. The healing radiation pulsed forth, healing the bruises to her stomach and then Serale adjusted the healing radiation of her power to kill any sperm Pusintin may have injected into her womb. When she did this she discovered what else Pusintin had done to her mother and her eyes flew open in horror. “Mamma!” She declared in horror.

Ceale shook her head slowly. “The pain... the pain is almost gone. Just check for tears Serale. He is a bull in the cock department and uncaring of the force he uses. I thought... I thought I felt something tear inside me.”

Serale shook her head quickly as she used her hands to smoothly run over her mother’s abdomen and hips. “No.” She said confidently. “No tears.” She pulsed out another soothing wave of her power through her mother, causing her body to begin to revert to its state before he had taken her this time.

Ceale shook her head quickly. “No!” She hissed softly. “Leave it! He... he rutted like a dog on my back and he will do so again. Better to leave me accustom to his size. He puts your father to shame.”

“Mother!” Serale gasped.

Ceale looked at her daughter. “I must find... I must find something humorous in all this Serale or I will go insane.” She stated reaching up to place her hand on her daughter’s cheek. “Better to have him spill his seed into my ass than in my womb. I will not carry a child of that vile man! Now that he has discovered my ass, perhaps this is where he will empty himself now. He ruts like an animal. Over and over. When he is done with me, he forces me to... he forces me to pleasure his officers with my mouth while they sit there and laugh at me. They are even larger than he is by a good deal. I would never survive having them inside me.”

“Oh mother!” Serale sobbed lowering her head to her mother’s abdomen and letting the tears come. “Why is this happening mother? What... what do they want? Why are they doing this?”

Ceale rested her hand on Serale’s head as the pain in her body began to fade away with Serale’s healing pulses. “I don’t... I don’t know.” She answered. “Something about the King and Queen For'mya I think.”

Serale lifted her head to look at her as Ceale straightened on the couch and sat up. “King Martin?” She asked. “I thought... I thought he was dead.”

Ceale shook her head. “No. The information must not have reached Talbor Seven before these bastards arrived, but he is very much alive. I heard them talking when they thought I was... I was preoccupied.”

Serale looked at her. “Mother... if the King lives then... then this man forced the Queen against her will. He tricked her somehow. You know how Lycavorian females act when their mates die. If she believed him dead then...”

Ceale nodded. “Then her body would have reacted even if her mind did not.” She answered. “But we are not returning to Kavalian space. We are chasing the King and Queen For'mya and the children she bore him against her will. We are no longer in the Alpha Quadrant Serale.”

“We have gone beyond the outer border?” Serale gasped.

Ceale nodded her head. “Following a trail that supposedly leads to Queen For'mya.” She answered. “He wants her back.”

Serale’s eyes were wide. “Wants her back?” She rasped. “She is not his mate if the King is alive! Queen For'mya would never betray her love of the King for that pig! None of the Queens would!”

Ceale nodded as she rose to her feet slowly and moved to the medium sized view window in the quarters that was now their prison. “He is going after her anyway. For some reason he thinks she will come with him. He is a sick man Serale. Twisted in his head. Beyond anger and hate now.” She turned back to her daughter. “That is why we must keep secret that you have Ascended.”

“Mother why?” Serale asked. “I could help you!”

Ceale shook her head vigorously and moved to take her hands. “No! They would only use you Serale!” She gasped in worry. “He has already threatened to give you to his men if I do not submit to his orders!”

“Mother I...” Serale began to protest.

“No!” Ceale insisted. “I will not see my only daughter raped repeatedly by these savages! It would kill you Serale.”

“Father knows mother. Surely he already told them.” Serale spoke.

Ceale shook her head. “I never told your father we snuck back to Hadaria so you could Ascend.” She spoke. “You know there is no love between us Serale. There has not been for a very long time. If there ever was.”

Serale nodded. “I know.” She spoke softly.

“Your father is a supporter of Buonau.” Ceale spoke. “He is probably using that fact to insure his own safety somehow. He has abandoned us Serale. All of us.”

Serale nodded again. “I know mother. And Danim is beginning to see it now as well.”

“That is why your powers must never be used in view of them.” Ceale spoke. “If they knew you had Ascended I can’t begin to imagine what they would do to you. No... we tell no one. I will endure Serale. As long as I know you and Danim are safe I will endure.”

“Mother you can not endure this for much longer!” Serale complained. “He hurts you every time they take you to him!”

“I have to Serale!” Ceale insisted. “Until we can discover a way to escape I have to do this!”

“Mother we are trapped on this ship and not even near the Alpha Quadrant!” Serale hissed. “I have seen their transport ships when we came aboard. If you are correct that we are no longer within the Alpha Quadrant, none of their ships have long range capabilities! We would leave one trap only to be stranded somewhere in another.”

“We have to try Serale.” Ceale spoke.

“How?” She gasped.

Ceale took her hands. “Hope for a miracle.”

ARC ROYAL

“...already noticed that he passed to them more than he told us.” Wayonn spoke as they sat at one of the large tables in the Mess Lounge.

In the nearly six weeks they had been on board, Martin and his queens had fallen into a routine. They pushed two tables together when they entered the Mess Lounge and all of them sat at the single large table. At first no one would sit near them, they were the King and Queens after all, but gradually crewmen began to sit at the other table and soon it was a race to see who could be at their table first. Though it was well known that King Martin and his queens were incredibly open and down to Earth, the crew of the ARC ROYAL did not begin to see it until the laughter and jokes began to emanate from the table during meal times. Eirene had done as her father and mothers asked, keeping her shields low and allowing all to know that she was within her Coming of Age fever. She got several interested looks immediately from Lycavorians when she entered the Mess Lounge, all of which quickly turned to disinterest when they saw the hulking Kavalian Miseo beside her and smelled his scent already surrounding her. Not to mention the fact that her female wolf aura was radiating for him and only him, making it very clear she was not in any way available. Danny and Julie always sat with Martin and his queens as did Wayonn and Helen. At the moment Helen sat beside her grandfather listening as Wayonn explained what he had in mind to Martin and the others. Anja and Aricia sat on either side of Martin with For'mya to Aricia's right and then Eirene and Miseo. Fedor sat between his vampire mothers as he always did, his mother Isabella very nearly as skilled as his MedwanGai when it came to hand combat. He learned much from listening to her and his mother Aricia and insured he always sat near one of them. His mother Cirith, though the newest of his father's Queens, was a half breed like himself and he had learned many things from her about balancing the dual nature of himself. Now all of them were listening intently to Wayonn.

Wayonn had learned quickly that while they ate, business was not discussed unless absolutely necessary. The time just before the meal and during was used to reconnect with each other and talk of what they had done during the day. It was one of the reasons the devotion and love within the Leonidas family was so famous. Wayonn knew and he had long ago been swept up within that family and learned the small things. He was wolf as well and Wayonn quickly detected Eirene's fever when she entered, but also the intent of Miseso. He had worked many long hours with Muton and Helen and Arzoal in the weeks prior, learning all he could about what they knew of the people and quite possibly the dragons they were hoping to find on the target planet.

Martin nodded. "Yeah. Something I'm going to mention to him when we talk again." Martin spoke.

Wayonn shook his head. "Do not be angry with him Martin. Helen, Arzoal and I believe he does not realize that he has done this." He said.

Martin's eyes narrowed. "Come again?"

"Andro is nearly as powerful as you Martin." Helen spoke now. "If you were to have done the same thing he did, you could quite possibly have taught Fedor and Eirene more than you intended or realized. Peripheral Etheric Resonance. Information that flows through all of us but comes so naturally we do not realize it. Certain skills and such."

"Are you saying Andro didn't know he passed this to us?" Eirene asked.

Wayonn nodded. "It's possible child." He answered. "It is not unheard of."

Martin shook his head. "While I understand what you are saying Wayonn... this was no mistake. Androcles knew exactly what he was doing. He passed to them the skills he thought they would need to survive in the event I was not able to retrieve them."

"Which makes him more like you then he realizes." Helen spoke. "You have a tendency to prepare for the worst as well."

Martin nodded. "True."

"What kind of tests are we talking Val'istar?" For'mya asked. "They are already being bombarded with training and schooling."

"Dysea and I discussed this." He said. "It is why I wanted to speak with her first. She is the closest thing we have to a higher education administrator. We do not need to add to what they are studying now. We can blend it in with their current classes. They are simple tests at memory really. Most of the time they won't even know it."

"As their emotions and certain things they have experienced so far trigger these instances that Andro has passed to them, we can make it so it comes out naturally." Dysea explained. "It may just be a spoken word or an emotion. I was going to use the same regime I did for Andro when we discovered he was fully aware within Aricia's womb. In principle it should work the same."

"Their potential is there." Wayonn spoke. "Reaching for For'mya's essence and then yours Martin right after they were conceived triggered it. You have touched all of your mates in a way most alpha's do not."

"That's putting it mildly." Anja popped from beside Martin with a seductive grin. "He's been doing that for years."

Martin looked at her. "Now who is the pervert?" He exclaimed.

"Just stating the obvious lover." Anja answered.

Wayonn shook his head with a grin. "Touched them with Mindvoice." He corrected his wording.

"Oh... like that?" Anja continued. "Yeah... he's done that too."

Cirith laughed and leaned into Anja from the side. "You are so bad." She hissed softly.

"Dysea's ability of precognition." Wayonn continued as he shook his head with humor. "For'mya's ability to read emotions from the life force of others around her. In some ways even Anja's healing power has been augmented by you. Making it possible for her to go such long periods without Ascending. These are skills that they have acquired because of you Martin."

"So it is his fault?" For'mya said with a smile looking at Martin out of the corner of her eye.

"It's always his fault." Bella chipped in.

"That's it! Blame everything on me." Martin declared.

Danny laughed from further down the table. "Hell... it's always worked for us fervon." He spoke.

Wayonn looked at Martin. "With Fedor and Eirene being bonded to dragons, it doubles the chance they will have more of these events happen. Discovering and then unlocking that potential as it appears will be tricky, but it can be done. They could conceivably become just as powerful as say Resumar or Eliani... they are the two strongest of your children behind Andro and Denali. I have not seen Dorian so I can not say what his skill level is right now, but given that he too was born aware of everything around him it stands to reason he will be experiencing the same things.” Wayonn said looking at Isabella. He turned back to Martin. “The sooner we are able to discover and bring to the forefront within their minds these abilities, the sooner they will achieve the full potential for the age they now are.”

“So it’s just an accelerated Mindvoice and Etheric growth spurt. Like the serum they used to make us grow so fast?” Eirene asked.

Wayonn nodded. “Essentially yes. Andro may have known what he was doing, but when Arrarn shoved him away as he was biting For'mya he may not have been able to put the triggers into a cohesive pattern. That pattern is what we need to discover.”

“Can’t we just ask him Val’istar?” Fedor asked.

“We could... but I don’t know if he would be able to answer that question.” Wayonn spoke. “There were a few Paladins that Sumar and I knew who had this ability but we never had the opportunity to study it closely. Sumar’s Tomes might reveal more and Helen and I are studying them but if what I have seen so far with Eirene and Fedor stands, then this is what Andro tried to do. The patterns may be nothing more than advanced fighting skills given how Andro views all of his siblings with such regard. A failsafe measure if you will Martin, just as you believe.”

Martin nodded. “That would be like him.” He said.

“So what do we do to make this happen?” For'mya asked.

“I believe Twelve Alpha will be an excellent opportunity.” Wayonn said. “They are going with you to the planet yes?”

Martin nodded. “Yeah.”

Wayonn nodded and sat back. “Outside this confined environment working with their dragons will stimulate the patterns if I am correct. Paladins were not used to learning in such restrictive places when they trained. Our classrooms were always outdoors. It may very well be the same for Fedor and Eirene.”

“But they won’t become Paladins?” For'mya asked.

Helen was the one who shook her head now. “They are not Lycavorian pureblood. In order for the Paladin gene to be present, the parents must always be both Lycavorian and descendants of the original Ruling packs on Lycavore. They were who Wayonn and the other Pralors chose to merge with.”

“The mission to Twelve Alpha may be just what they need.” Wayonn continued. “I will remain here on the ARC ROYAL to monitor the sensors and also to keep tabs on Eirene and Fedor. I have already tuned one grid to stay locked on them while they are down there. Helen and Arzoal will be on the surface as well and should any of the triggers happen they will be nearby.”

“There is no danger to them is there Wayonn?” For'mya asked worried.

“Mother we are grown you know.” Fedor complained.

Wayonn reached across and took For'mya’s hand before she could snap at his dismissal of her motherly concern. “No For'mya.” He said. “If a trigger does happen, all that will result is a short period of time where they will be confused as they absorb the trigger’s patterns into themselves. A few seconds at most.”

Martin nodded. “Ok. Danny... you, Kenny and Jules go to the collection point with Iama... keep Fedor and Dnom with you.” He said. “Eirene, Kdan and Miseo will stay with us at the load point.”

Danny nodded. “Done.” He said.

“Wayonn... have you discovered anything with the sensors that could...”

For'mya turned her head slightly and looked at Eirene. [Go Eirene.] She said with loving warmth. [Take Miseo and discover what you have found daughter.]

Eirene looked at her. [I... I am frightened mother.]

[Do not be. He will not hurt you and discovering the pleasures you can have with one that loves you as he does will be enlightening.] For'mya told her.

[I do not want to be rude mother. I...] Eirene began.

For'mya smiled. [You are not being rude Eirene my daughter. Trust me... having you nearby is having an affect on all of us and that will lead to a very pleasant evening for us as well. Now go. And be ready for the mission when we arrive at Twelve Alpha in two days.]

Eirene turned to Miseo who was chewing a piece of spicy meat. His eyes showed confusion and then Eirene smiled and took his arm, pulling him up from the table. He quickly dropped his fork and napkin to the table and allowed her to lead him out of the Mess Lounge to the knowing smiles of many of the Lycavorian females within the room.

The inbred nature of Lycavorians and turned female elves did not include a shyness of their sexuality when gripped within either their Coming of Age fever or the fever when they were in Phase. Alone in Miseo's quarters with him for the first time since she knew this was the man she wanted, Eirene let down all of her Mindvoice and Etheric shields and let her fever come roaring forth. Miseo had Pralor blood within him yes, but he was still a Kavalian. Though their senses were not as acute as a Lycavorian, the strength of her fever combined with how he felt for Eirene made it easy for him to smell her sweet desire and feel the trembling of her Mindvoice power against his own limited abilities. They were barely within his small quarters before they were locked in an impassioned kiss and pulling at each other's clothes. The fever burned within Eirene brightly, her nipples almost painfully erect and the moistness of her womanhood easily discernible even in the low lighting of his quarters as she quickly stripped out of her clothes. Miseo was a little more controlled in his actions and his blue eyes grew wide as Eirene was finally exposed to him.

His hands were trembling as he stood before her, looking down into her beautiful face, and he lifted his hands to caress the bare skin of her shoulders and neck. Her hair shimmered in the light causing his heart to race and pound against his bare chest. Eirene for her part stared at the exquisite definition of his upper body with ardent fervor. She had felt his chest against hers before, but never bare skin to bare skin and she stepped closer to him with a whimper and pressed her lips to his skin. Her hands explored the hardness of his shoulders and she fell to her knees as her lips dragged along his rippled abdomen in wanton need. Quickly she tugged at his pants, the only remaining item of clothing he had on and with her wolf and elven strength she pulled down mightily revealing what he had to offer her. Eirene gasped in both fear and blissful desire as his cock was exposed for her eyes. It was far longer and thicker than she had imagined it to be these past nights in her quarters, tapered from the tip back to the abnormally thick base. He was hairless and Eirene's eyes gazed at every wonderful inch before she reached up and grasped the length of his cock in her warm hands.

Miseo hissed in barely uncontrollable need now and he shook his head in scarcely controlled desire. He would not allow this just yet. He wanted Eirene to know how much he loved her... how much he cherished her. Miseo gripped her shoulders and quickly yanked her to her feet.

"Miseo!" Eirene gasped. "What... I wanted to taste..."

"No!" Miseo hissed as he drew her into his arms and lifted her off the floor. Her arms flew around his shoulders and her legs locked around his waist, her passion dripping onto his cock and lower abdomen. "I will show you what you mean to me first!" His voice trembled out the words and then he crushed her lips with his own.

Eirene nearly exploded right then from the force and intensity of his kiss. The waves of unabashed pleasure swept through her like a storm, and then she was groaning deeply into his mouth as her hips bucked against his abdomen and her sweet juices soaked his tanned skin. She couldn't help it as the orgasm smashed against her senses and overwhelmed her. Locked in the kiss with him as she was she barely felt him lower them to the single bed in his quarters but when she felt his weight upon her she tore her lips from his and clutched at his powerful back.

"Ahhhhhhhh... Miseo!" She cried with tightly shut eyes, her long legs locked at the small of his back.

Miseo waited for a few moments as she rode the storm of her orgasm and then her changed wolf eyes opened slowly and looked at him. "Mis... Miseo!" She gasped out.

"I will... I will show you this night what I feel for you Eirene Leonidas. This night and every night into our future." He stated with a husky voice. "I do not know what hold you have over me... but I will deny it no longer."

"Miseo... I... you..."

Miseo reached around and took her long legs in his hands. Eirene thought she knew what he wanted and she unlocked her ankles, only to have Miseo lift her legs high into the air. She gazed at him with wide eyes, unsure of what he was doing now. "Miseo... what..."

Miseo was beyond help now, his own desire for this exquisite woman far outweighing his own inexperience. He brought his lips to her calf where he held her legs above him and kissed her satiny skin.

Eirene stared at him, her eyes wide and her fever burning within her body. "Miseo I want..." Eirene suddenly saw his face drop from between her thighs and her eyes flew open in carnal delight when she felt his lips and tongue delve deeply into her dripping center. Her entire upper body went rigid in violent pleasure as her belly undulated with another staggering orgasm induced by his ministrations.

Eirene screamed. She screamed long and loud in utter catatonic bliss as one raging orgasm after another smashed against her senses. This was not what she had envisioned. This was far beyond what she had ever thought she would feel. She had no idea it was only the very beginning of a night of pleasure she would never forget.

Martin sat on the large couch in the quarters they were using, the data pad in his hand, but his dark brown eyes gazing upon the six women who occupied the large bedroom area of the quarters. The ARC ROYAL'S engineers had cut out the wall between the two smaller sets of quarters making them into a large single one for their King and his Queens. They had designed an enormous oval shaped bed that fit perfectly within one section of wall they had cut away, leaving a meter on either side of the bed to move around. The bed could easily accommodate all of them with room to spare. Martin Leonidas was not one to silently go around thanking the gods for what he had. He was a man who believed deeply in faith, more so since he had discovered long ago who and what he really was after so long not knowing. He did not often stop to reflect what he had endured in his life to reach this point, but this night for some reason he could not help it as he gazed at them.

Martin had never once imagined himself in this position. Many years ago when he had first met Anja he would have been completely content to settle down with her at that very moment. She had called to his wolf blood even then, before he knew what he truly was. That he would one day have six breathtakingly beautiful women who adored and loved him to the point of complete devotion was not something that any fantasy could have prepared him for. He watched them as they talked softly amongst themselves, sometimes giggling or laughing, and always touching one another. It had been a long time since they had all been together and these past five weeks had been a godsend for them Martin knew. Even Cirith, the newest and last woman that would share his life, had quickly been accepted and fallen into a similar pattern of comfort with her fellow Queens. She had yet to have a formal ceremony granting her the title, but they would when they returned to Union space. Cirith wore a simple yet enticing black lace panty and bra set, her body tightly packed and rippling with muscle and power as were all his Queens. Anja sat beside her on the bed as they discussed something from a data pad, one of Martin's dark t-shirts pulled down over her body hiding her straining breasts but leaving her hairless center bared for all to see. For'mya wore a maroon colored pair of thong like panties, leaving her larger breasts bare. For'mya was strangely thrilled to have larger breasts, apparently feeling for a long time that her smaller breasts were inadequate compared to her fellow Queens. Aricia sat behind her completely naked as she brushed out For'mya's long hair with slow strokes. Dysea and Isabella were also completely naked, their legs entwined as they laid on their stomachs, each of them reading from data pads. Their exquisitely tight and muscled asses were exposed for his hungry gaze. As usual there was no shyness between them when they were alone together. After all they had shared together through the years, all the times that they had pleased one another in so many ways; it was ridiculous to try and hide from each other.

Martin knew of the many rumors that filtered among the Union. How he had such surreal and beautiful Queens and how he had all of them every night. Martin Leonidas had chased far more male Lycavorians away than his mates knew about. Male Alphas who thought they could challenge him for one of his Queens. Those who survived the encounter knew the error of their ways and quickly became devoted followers of their King. They went on to discover equally beautiful mates that they now cherished as he did his Queens. Those that did not survive... well at least they died well. When it came to his Queens or the Union, Martin Leonidas could and did have a savage streak within him that he did not often unlock. In truth, most of their nights were like this, lounging around and relishing the company of each other. If the mood gripped them, they would let it be known easily enough. There were times, like now, when his Queens paid him no mind and concentrated on each other, either by brushing out their hair or hot oil massages given to each other that usually led to torrid moments between them. They kept nothing from each other or him and he could easily smell when they pleased each other. They would probably curl into the arms of the one they were with and sleep this night though their sexual activity had been frequent lately because they were rejoicing that For'mya had returned to them. Looking at them on the bed, he felt the swell of desire for all of them within him, and while all their scents swirled around him constantly, tonight Anja's scent was sweet and pure and called to him brightly. Her comment earlier in the day probably had something to do with it, but like Aricia, Anja was always sexually adventurous.

He began to rise from his chair in the main room where he was watching them from when the soft beeping of his personal data pad stopped him. His personal data pad was far more complex and advanced than the standard one and each member of his family carried one. He settled back into the chair and lifted the pad so he could see the screen.

-Holoprogram Leonidas One has been initiated King Leonidas- The simple typed words appeared on the small screen referring to the computer program he had designed with Avi's help many years ago. He had just never used it before. Martin displayed a public distaste for computers but in private he had become quite the expert with Avi's help and instruction through the years.

Martin glanced up at his Queens, saw that they had not noticed, and he rose to his feet moving in front of the view window and out of sight of them. He looked at the pad and tapped several commands into it activating voice interaction. "Confirm time." Martin asked softly.

-Six point three hours ago-

"External target?" Martin continued.

-Present-

"Any others?"

-Negative. Primary coded target was alone-

"Did he view the entire program cycle?" Martin asked.

-Affirmative-

Martin smiled slowly and looked up and out the view window at the stars surrounding the ARC ROYAL. His normally dark brown eyes changed quickly to the yellow/gold color of his wolf persona. {Ah... Pleistarchus my brother.} Martin whispered within his thoughts. {You have made your final mistake brother. You violated the most sacred of our people's laws by taking my Kinsoaurgai. For what you have done to her, how you have violated her, I will revisit that pain upon you ten fold. And it will not be quickly either. I'm going to take everything from you brother. I have already accomplished that with Karun. He is seeing all he could be now. He has a half elven woman who he worships, a woman who worships him. He is seeing what being a Leonidas means. Leruk... the son you twisted down that dark path beyond redemption is dead... and you have lost your daughter Nikkei.} Martin's yellow/gold eyes nearly pulsed in brightness to his thoughts. {Eirene and Fedor are my children now. They will always be my children now. I will raise them with my wives and mates and they will carry the blood of our father with honor and respect. Now I am going to take everything you have left brother. I am going to take Kalis.} Martin blinked as he stared at the stars. {I will teach him what you should have taught him brother. I will give him the choice you never gave him. And should he choose the path I hope, I will be the father you should have been to him. If he does not then he will die just as you will.} Martin looked at the pad.

{And when we meet again brother, when we stand face to face you will know how big a failure you truly are before I spill your entrails before you and take your head.}

Martin tapped on the pad. "Initiate Leonidas Protocol Three Four Six. Activate upon target's physical touch with transmitter and initiate interactive program." He spoke softly.

-Initiating Leonidas Protocol Three Four Six. Parameters set. Activation trigger set for interactive program utility-

"Inform me when next program cycle is complete and then automatically activate follow on Protocols until they are all complete. Insure no activation if primary target is not alone." Martin spoke.

-Commands understood-

Martin allowed his eyes to return to normal as he smelled Anja come up behind him and he deactivated the data pad.

"Lover?" Her whisper reached his ears. "Are you ok?"

Martin turned and looked down into her bright jade green eyes. He quickly tossed the data pad discretely behind her back as he leaned over and collected her into his arms, lifting her up so her face was even with his and she could see his smile of intense desire. Anja looked a little surprised when his lips came down on hers with wanton need, but as his unshielded aura quickly wrapped around her like a warm blanket and she felt his love come pouring out, she quickly forgot everything else and returned his kiss with equal fervor as he carried her back to the bed.

The howls of delight from six voices began soon after.

Eirene was beyond overwhelmed.

The last few hours had been nothing but pure, unadulterated pleasure on a plane she had no idea existed. Her mothers had told her that making love to a man who consumed their soul was the most powerful and blissful feeling in the world. They had this with her father, and Eirene now had this with Miseo. There were no doubts in her mind, no questions of her heart. Any fears she may have had quickly disappeared with her shyness when his lips and tongue dove into her center and brought the world crashing down around her. She had very nearly screamed herself hoarse as the staggering orgasms followed, crashing upon one another with no end in sight. These feelings only doubled in intensity when Miseo had poised himself to fill her and then, with an inexperienced yet eager plunge, he sank the entirety of his fourteen inch cock into her depths in a single soul shattering drive. It was all Eirene could do to keep from passing out at the devastating sensations of uncharted bliss that ripped through her. She thought there might be some pain at least, given his enormous size and her petite figure, but the only thing Eirene had felt was an all unbearable need for more.

Miseo gave her everything she wanted. And so very much more.

Now Eirene found herself atop him, his swollen cock buried within her and causing ripples of ecstasy every time she ground her hips upon him. Her breasts were crushed against his sweaty chest, her own skin slick with sweat, as she showered his handsome face with kisses and his hands continuously stroked the flesh of her thighs and lower back. His fingers tickled the sensitive spot of her tattoo, causing jolts of pleasure to shoot through her. And then there was his tail. Never did she think his tail could do what it did. It never seemed to stop rubbing her body in different locations, wrapping around her waist, dragging deliciously across her breasts to intentionally brush over her super sensitive nipples and drawing ragged gasps of unabashed delight from her. It delved over and between her perfect ass, never ceasing to explore every minute portion of her flesh. Her hips were a blur of motion as she rode him, striving to reach the pinnacle of pleasure. Each time their loins crashed together it brought joyful cries from her and groans of intense pleasure from Miseo.

Eirene had experienced countless orgasms up until this point, but she didn't understand why Miseo had not yet exploded. Why he hung on the edge for so long and did not let his passion fill her as she so desperately wanted. When his hands clamped onto her ass cheeks and he began slamming into her with fervor she knew he was close. She met his upward thrusts with downward smashes of her hips, wanting him to fill her and make her his. She gasped in unearthly bliss when with a growl of arousal he sat up, causing her to fully impale herself on his wonderful cock.

“Eirene!” He gasped between clenched teeth. “I... you don’t... what will happen!” He gasped as he looked at her enchanted face, gripped in intense pleasure.

Eirene’s eyes were half shut as dominating tremors of another building orgasm from deep within her belly and the base of her spine began to surge upward. “Give me all of you!” She rasped out the words.

“Eirene... I am Kavalian!” He gasped with another upward thrust of his hips. He watched her face twist into a dreamy smile as he pierced her so deeply. “I will... we will... Eirene!”

Eirene’s eyes grew wide when she felt it. She was fully speared upon his massive cock, his strong hands pulling her down even more and then she felt the base of his delicious cock swell even larger, stretching her around him and sealing their bodies together over a sizeable bulb at the base of his cock. She gasped in devastating pleasure as the length of his cock also swelled thicker and then his lava hot passion was rocketing up the length of his shaft to erupt into the depths of her womb. His soft lips wrapped around her right nipple and he nursed on it almost painfully as she screamed in utter, cataclysmic heaven. His powerful body went rigid, his hands holding her ass tightly to his hips insuring she could not move and the bulb at the base of his cock insuring they were locked together. His explosive release into her quivering body sent Eirene cascading over the edge of the pleasure abyss and Eirene couldn’t help the screams of enchantment then as her whole body rumbled in out of control ecstasy.

Miseo fell back on the end, dragging her with him as his hot passion continued to erupt into her. Four times. Five times. Six. Seven. With each eruption Eirene cried out in glee as another orgasm rocked her own body. It was almost too much as her body responded to his, her mind awash in catatonic bliss. Three full minutes, what seemed like an eternity, and finally Miseo’s body relaxed and he rolled over on the bed, covering her petite figure with his and finding her lips in another breath stealing kiss of desire and need and love. She could feel him within her depths still filling her with his essence. Eirene’s arms wrapped around his powerful back, his tail twitching madly as it danced across the flesh of her outer thigh, until finally they drew apart and his head fell to the crook of her neck mewling out words of love and devotion as he nibbled the skin of her neck and shoulder. His breathing was coming in great heaves and Eirene couldn’t stop the tears in her eyes from forming as his words reached her elven and wolf ears.

“I love you Eirene Leonidas.” Miseo hissed in a whisper. “More than I have ever loved anything in my short life. I do not know how this came to be... but I... I can’t live without you now.”

Eirene shuddered in delight as he nuzzled the outer ridge of her two and a half inch half elven ear and she gripped him even tighter.

“My... my Miseo!” She gasped into his cheek her voice filled with happiness. “With all that I am... I love you.”

Miseo pulled his face back to gaze into her beautiful dark brown eyes. He leaned over and kissed her quivering lips, relishing in the taste of her lips and skin. “Forgive... forgive me.” He said finally. “We will... I will not soften for at least an hour... if not more. We are locked... we can not separate until I soften Eirene.”

Eirene’s eyes twinkled in delight and she shook her head as she squeezed the shaft of his cock as tightly as she could with the inner muscles of her womanhood. She watched his face contort as she did and she chuckled. “Who says... who says I want to separate.” She hissed softly.

Miseo looked at her with adoring eyes. “If you continue to do that it will be longer.” He told her.

Eirene drew her hands from his back and took his face in her palms. “Hold me Miseo my love. Crush me to you and hold me and never let go.”

Miseo did exactly as Eirene asked him, wrapping his powerful arms around her body and rolling to his side. His tail wrapped tightly around her thigh as she curled it up alongside his hip and he pulled her against him. Eirene relished in the feelings of his strong arms around her and his incredible cock still buried deeply within her. She pressed her face to his chest and with much reluctance, the exertion of the last few hours finally caught up with her. Miseo watched as her eyes closed and she was asleep in moments, a smile of blissful satisfaction and love on her face. Miseo brought his hand to the back of her head and he held her there as his own eyes closed and he followed her quickly into the blackness of sleep.

They had found something wonderful in this crazy world. And that something was each other. There was no going back now, and in truth, neither of them would have it any other way.

PLANET TWELVE ALPHA

STRIKER DT IIA

JANUARY 30, 2575

SEVEN MINUTES FROM LANDING

For'mya turned her helmeted head and glanced out of the right side window to view the KADEN transport that was matching their speed and descent angle. She reached up and touched the side of her helmet. “KADEN One Four... adjust your course three degrees to starboard. You are too close to our ventral exhaust.”

“KADEN One Four acknowledged.” The voice answered.

For'mya turned and looked at Endith in the pilot's seat. Endith smiled and shook her head slowly. “Rookies.” She said humorously.

“Final inbound marker in five seconds.” Tina spoke.

“Final marker copy.” Endith echoed as her hand dropped to the thruster controls of the STRIKER DT IIA.

For'mya touched her helmet again. “Martin Leonidas... we are six minutes from the landing zone. Daniel's team is already down.”

“Copy Kinsoaurgai.” Martin's voice replied. A hint of a smile played across For'mya's face as his words filtered to her. He had ceased replying with her full name as they had begun during that time on Ukwav. Now he simply called her Kinsoaurgai. This difference was not lost on For'mya for it showed her that his love for her was absolute. Just as it was for all of them.

They all heard Martin's voice fill the internal ship COM. It was his business voice now, and no one would question his instructions.

“Six minutes people. Once we are down, Dysea and I, with Torma and Iriral will do an airborne circuit before we begin to disembark and set up the staging areas.” Martin's voice spoke. “Cody and the Master Chief will conduct the ground perimeter check and establish our defenses. When we give the all clear, begin setting up your load stations. Iama will direct what is coming from the processing area so be prepared. Torma, Arzoal, Isheeni, Miath and the new hatchlings will be working quickly. We have thirty-six hours but I want to be fully loaded and gone in twenty-eight. The follow on KADENS will arrive in twelve hours so let's be ready for them. This planet is unknown to us so no one wander away from the perimeter. Science Team Leader?”

“Here King Leonidas.” The female voice answered.

“Status?”

“The site we wanted to inspect is only half a click from the load area. Once you give the word we can be ready to move in seven minutes.” She answered.

“Good enough. We'll get the perimeter up and then we'll detail you out.” Martin replied. “Aide station will be the back of my STRIKER. Designate your buddy teams and prepare for touch down.” Martin looked towards the cockpit. “Take us down For'mya.” He ordered.

“In we go then!” She announced as Martin turned and saw Eirene standing beside Kdan as Miseo was further back in the ship helping Cody adjust something on their cargo containers. He made his way over to them and as he approached her heard Eirene speaking with Kdan within Mindvoice. They had forgotten to shield their conversation and he quickly threw up a barrier for them without them noticing. He inhaled deeply and instantly detected Miseo's rich scent buried deep within her blood now. She was also much calmer and all signs of her Coming of Age fever was gone. The wolf within her proudly announced to all that she was Miseo's wife and mate now and she would brook no insult. The elf within her had chattered away with her mothers for nearly an hour before boarding the ship this morning, her face beaming and so very beautiful just like her mother.

[... his wife and mate now Kdan.] Eirene spoke as she stroked his cool light green scales.

[He is... he is very large sister. He did not hurt you?] Kdan asked with real concern in his voice.

Eirene smiled as she pressed her cheek to the scales on his enormous head. Kdan's dark green eyes closed in happiness. [It was... it was beyond wondrous Kdan.] She said slowly. [I am a little sore after two days... but the pleasure was beyond anything I imagined or hoped for. I...]

Martin did not want to intrude on their conversation any longer and he stepped up behind her softly. Her head turned when she smelled and sensed him, and Martin saw the brightness in her eyes.

"MedwanGai." She spoke softly and with adoring love.

Martin leaned over and nuzzled her cheek drawing a sigh of happiness from her. "I am so very glad for you arande." He said softly. "But remember to shield your conversations with Kdan. Unless you wish everyone to know about the pleasure you experienced these previous nights with your new husband and mate."

Eirene's eyes grew wide at his words and her cheeks flushed with embarrassment. [Oh... oh no!] She gasped.

Martin grinned and nuzzled her cheek again. [I shielded for you.] He said. *[And do not be embarrassed about what you experienced and will experience into the future arande. There is nothing to be ashamed of. Nothing at all.]*

[MedwanGai I...] Eirene began to speak.

Martin shook his head. *[Your sisters Lisisa and Eliani both have shared things with me that may seem out of place for a daughter to tell her father. For them to share that with me is an honor. That my daughter's trust me enough to not be afraid to talk with me is even more of an honor. And it is a confidence I will never break. You need not fear I will judge you arande. You can talk to me of anything you wish.]*

Eirene stared into his dark eyes and felt warmth wash over her as his aura drifted out and engulfed her in a fatherly manner. [Thank you MedwanGai.] She whispered within Mindvoice. [You... you don't know what that means to me.]

[You and Kdan stay close to Torma and I when we are groundside. After he is done with the collection for the day we want to teach you some tricks that are not normally used by other Bonded Pairs. Your mother and Isheeni will be teaching Fedor and Dnom the same skills.] He told her.

[We will.] Eirene answered.

Martin nodded his head with a smile and then moved towards the back of the ship. Eirene turned back and looked into Kdan's green eyes. [There are times my Bonded Brother... there are times when Fedor and I wish that he was our true father. Not just of our hearts... but of our blood.]

Kdan touched his snout to her shoulder. [But he is Eirene my sister.] He told her. [You need no more proof than to look in the mirror. He is the one who turned your mother. He is the one your mother loves more than any breath she may take. When he turned her, his blood became part of her. It flows within her. And that blood flows through you and Fedor as well. Never doubt that.]

Eirene looked at him with a beaming face. [I love you my Bonded Brother.] She said softly.

[No more than I love and treasure you now sister.] Kdan snorted softly as Eirene did what she had done when she was still growing. She snuggled her body under his folded wing and placed her head against the side of his chest to hear his heartbeat.

Eirene did not see Martin step up to Miseo.

"Miseo?"

Miseo rose quickly to his feet and turned. "King Leonidas." He gasped.

Martin looked at this tall, powerfully built Kavalian with Pralor blood running in his veins. The biogenic process had altered his outward appearance, his tail the only thing left from a different life, but standing before him was a man that could have just as easily passed for a Spartan. "Thank you Miseo." Martin said softly. "You have... you have given her happiness after everything she has endured up until now."

Miseo let his blue eyes look behind him and he saw Eirene cuddled under Kdan's wing. He turned back to Martin. "It is I who should be thanking you Milord." He said respectfully. "She is... Eirene is like a precious jewel to me. One I will worship for the rest of my life."

Martin nodded. "As it should be." He said. He leaned closer. "Did it work?"

Miseo couldn't help but grin at him. "Milord... she would not release my head for almost an hour." He answered. "I will continue to improve my technique in that regard. She... she tastes like sweet honey. I would have... I would have never thought of that myself."

Martin pounded Miseo on the shoulder. "Good man." He said. "I've learned through the years that it shows them that you love every little thing about them. When they know that..." Martin grinned. "Well... let's just say that things will always stay spicy. If more of your people back in the Alpha quadrant would try it... things might be very different."

Miseo chuckled softly. "That may very well be true Milord."

Martin nodded. "You and I will have the first watch for tonight. We can talk more and I can establish a more definitive connection for you and Eirene to use for just yourselves. You have Pralor blood within you and it's time you began to learn about that part of you. At least as much as I can teach you. Your father agrees"

Miseo nodded. "I will look forward to that sir."

"And stop with this Milord crap will ya!" Martin hissed. "Sibfla... you're making me feel ancient!"

PLANET TWELVE ALPHA PROCESSING SITE
MID MORNING JANUARY 30

"Tell me what you see?" Danny asked as he handed Fedor the macrobinoculars.

Fedor took them and adjusted his position on the ground beside the man he called Uncle without hesitation. They were on the ridgeline two hundred meters north of where Iama was establishing her Processing Site on the plateau three hundred meters above the beach four hundred meters away. Three other teams of two were out on the four corners of the perimeter, though Dnom was with them, so they counted as three.

"I see lush green forests and an ocean in the distance." Fedor answered.

Danny rolled his eyes. "Wise ass." He muttered. "Now tell me what you really see?"

Fedor chuckled and then allowed the wolf within him to come out. His dark brown eyes became encased in a dark black ring as he began flipping through the different spectrums that his wolf eyes allowed him. "The animals are plentiful." He spoke as he observed the terrain surrounding them. "Their movements are slightly erratic... almost as if they are spooked in some manner." Fedor said lowering the binos and looking at his Uncle's dark skin and eyes.

Danny nodded. "Good. Very good." He said taking the binos back. "I got a feeling most of them can smell us and our dragon friends and they are being wary. Wayonn's scans did not indicate any predators close to the size of the dragons and they are probably worried they will become a meal."

"How many of these beasts do we need to take?" Fedor asked shifting his Mark IV ArmorPly slightly to be more comfortable.

"About sixty." Danny answered. "Half today... half tomorrow." His eyes scanning the treeline below them.

Fedor looked at his Uncle from the side after a long moment of silence. "Do they fear us Uncle?" Fedor asked.

Danny turned to look at him. "Fear you? I don't follow. What do you mean?"

"The crew." Fedor asked. "Sometimes I can sense their confusion and distrust of how Eirene and I came to be."

Danny lowered the binos and looked at him. "Last time I checked you came to be just like every other child." He spoke. "Just at a little faster pace is all."

Fedor nodded. "That is just it." He said. "They question if we will be like our brothers and sisters. Like Andro and Deni and Eliani. They fear us because of how we were conceived and what Eirene and I could do."

Danny shook his head. "They don't fear you Fedor." He said. "They are timid because of who they know you are. Of the events surrounding how you and your sister came to be. It's not that they fear you... they don't know you."

"Don't know us?" Fedor asked.

"Your father and mothers have been keeping you two pretty secluded these last few weeks. Only recently have you begun to get out among the crew and mingled. They... they are feeling you and Eirene out." Danny said.

“Why?” Fedor asked.

Danny shrugged his broad shoulders. “It’s what we do.” He replied. “You are the son and daughter of the King and For’mya. That makes you larger than life in some respects. Most of them have never ever seen the Royal family in person and now there is a shit pot full of you on their ship. It will take some getting used too.”

“Then they know who he is?” Fedor asked with distaste in his voice.

“Everyone knows who he is boy.” Danny said. “Kind of hard to miss the biggest asshole in the known universe. Not to mention he is uglier than sin.” Danny shifted his body. “You are worried that they see you and Eirene as his children and not Marty’s?”

Fedor nodded his head slowly with a trace of a smile at his Uncle’s words. “I some ways yes.” He answered.

Danny shook his head. “You and Eirene can put that right out of your head Fedor. None of them believe that for an instant. Especially not now. I’ve seen his ugly mug up close and personal. Neither of you looks anything like him. You look like your mother and Marty as strange as that seems. I’m sure you know why that is by now?”

Fedor nodded. “Because MedwanGai is much more powerful than him.” He said. “When Eirene and I reached for the essence of our father... we found his.”

“That’s part of it yes.” Danny said. “The other part... the larger part of it is that Marty’s essence comes from in here!” Danny stabbed his fingers into his chest. “The heart pumping in your MedwanGai’s chest is pure gold Fedor. He loves without question, and when he trusts, he trusts without hesitation. Somehow... somehow he has found the perfect balance between compassion and violence. Between anger and peace. He is a very unique man. A man that in many ways is closer to me than my own brothers. I would die for him in a blink. Not because of his name... but because I know deep down he would die for me just as quickly.”

“How old were you when the Guardian of the Line brought you to live with him?” Fedor asked.

Danny shrugged. “A year maybe. Me and Jules.” He replied. “We’ve been together since the very beginning of everything. In all that time he has never given up, never left any of us behind and he has loved us all despite our flaws. And we have loved him. No doubts. No regret. None of us would be here today if not for him at one point or another.” Danny rolled onto his back. “You know the difference between your MedwanGai and Pusintin?”

Fedor shook his head. “No.”

“Martin has never wanted power.” Danny said. “He’s never wanted power or control or any of that shit. You could take all of this away from him tomorrow and he’d be happier than a pig in sibfla. He would take your mothers, retire on some lush planet like this and never look back. If he knew we would never have to fight again. And I’d take your Aunt Anuk and Aunt Nayeca and be right beside him.”

“He would give it all up?” Fedor asked.

Danny nodded. “In a nubous heartbeat.” He said. “And you would be hard pressed to get Andro to take his place. That boy is scary like his father and he’d probably be on the same ship with him as they ran away.”

“But he is King?” Fedor said. “Andro is Crown Prince?”

Danny nodded his head. “Yes they are. And believe me when I tell you there is not a power mongering bone in either of their bodies. They hate to fight. Hell... we all do! It just so happens that we are very, very good at it. I’d much rather be home nuzzling my Anome and your Aunt Nayeca and partaking of their beauty and gifts than out here.” Danny smiled. “I’ll give you a piece of advice your MedwanGai shared with me when we were still very young. We had just completed our second mission and we were watching the moon in our wolf forms. Damned if I can remember where though.” Danny shook his head. “Marty told me if anyone offers me power... if they offer me something that seems to good to be true on the outside... then run away. Run away just as fast as I can. Those who want power are the ones who are dangerous. Those who want power are easily corrupted. Those who have no desire for power... those are the men and women who are usually the ones who make history as the leaders of others. Mainly because the whole time they are in power, they are trying to get back to their normal lives. Your MedwanGai has three... four rules really. He drilled them into our heads as we were growing. Has he told you them?”

Fedor shook his head. “No.”

Danny smiled. “He can be very profound when he wants to be you know. First rule... the Pack comes before the individual. He hates being King but he does it because he considers the Union his Pack. And as the Alpha, it is his duty to insure everything he does is good for the pack. Second rule... Blood before all else. Your blood is your strength... that is where your power lies. Never betray your blood for any reason.”

“But we are not...” Fedor began but stopped himself. “No... we are his blood.” He said looking at Danny. “We are of grandfather’s blood. His blood and essence.”

Danny nodded. “Yes you are. You and Eirene both. You are his blood and you are his children. Nothing and no one can ever take that away from you. Either of you. The third rule... never for any reason disrespect the ones who bear your name and your future.” Danny said. “Love your wives and mates with everything that you are. Show them that they are everything to you. Do that... and they will love you back with a fervor and many happy times will be had by all.”

Fedor nodded his head slowly and then looked back up to him. “You said he had four rules Uncle.”

Danny nodded. “The fourth rule... well that is simple. Kill anything and anyone who tries to keep you from fulfilling the first three rules.” Danny’s head tilted slightly as he caught the scent on the slight wind. He turned back on the ridge. “Show time.” He said. “Torma and the others are bringing back the first load.”

Iama stood near the center of the Processing Camp they had established, ready for the work to come and completely relishing the new life that she had discovered here among those who she had been raised to believe were her enemies. Her short conversation with King Martin the previous night had released all her doubts and inhibitions about making the decisions she had in the recent weeks into the void of space.

Her family had forsaken her. Her Pride had forsaken her. These men and women had embraced her.

All in an attempt to become more powerful within the Kavalian hierarchy. An attempt that to this day had not born fruit to the best of her knowledge. So they had given her away for nothing. They had allowed the Kavalian leadership to turn her into a biogenic whore for their troops. When the biogenic treatments had not taken completely and left her with her tail, all the schooling and training they had given her was for naught. They shipped her off to Nefoa to be used as a sex slave within the brothels there. The only thing that had gotten her away from Nefoa was her willingness to do anything sexually that got her free from the sometimes six times a night she had to lay with rutting Kavalian troops. Troops that she was only an object to. Iama had proven stronger than that, and the day the Lycavorian King had come to her on that planet and offered her a new life, Iama had jumped at the chance to have something different. Even with an enemy.

Yet what Iama had found was not the enemy she had been raised to distrust and hate. This was an enemy that offered her whatever she wanted and asked for nothing in return. This was an enemy that was not an enemy at all. The Lycavorian King had given her the chance, and with every day that passed and her future appeared brighter, Iama began to fit in. Everyone knew her to be a biogenic Kavalian female, but only those who had been on the planet knew of her tail. It was the one thing she kept hidden. She had no idea how it would make others react to her. Twice now in the last eight weeks she had caught the eye of a Lycavorian male and when they had discovered she still had her tail, twice they had politely told her that was not something that they could deal with. Iama understood... she might find it hard herself. It was the reason she kept her tail tightly wrapped around her waist like a belt that was part of her uniform. No one questioned it, and no one got close enough to her backside to see that she had cut a small slit in her uniform to allow this to happen. Cooking had become a desire for her, an outlet to make her forget her life. That she had become incredibly good at it never really crossed her mind until that day on the planet.

The day Martin Leonidas and his Queens set her free.

As she looked at the ridge where she knew Daniel Simpson was she saw Julie Collins move across in front of her. She darted forward to Julie, the one time female wolf and now vampire clone with all the memories of the Lycavorian female who had died long ago and that she had replaced. She felt a kindred connection to Julie for the woman had endured almost the exact same thing as she had, just in a different form.

“Julie?” Iama asked casing Julie to stop and turn to face her.

“I think we are in good shape Iama.” Julie said.

Iama nodded. “We are just waiting for the signal that the King’s dragon and the others are returning.” She said. “I wanted to ask something.”

Julie nodded her head. "Shoot." The young Kavalian female was very inquisitive and none of the questions she had asked her up to now had been military in nature.

"The half breed with Daniel Simpson?" Iama asked. "I have... I have never seen him before. Who is he?"

Julie smiled. "Fedor?" She asked. "He's really cute isn't he?"

Iama shrugged her slim shoulders far too quickly in dismissal. "I had not noticed really." She lied and not noticing the slight crook in Julie's mouth that indicated she knew Iama was lying. "Only that he has never been on one of our gathering missions before. I wanted to make sure he was properly trained and would not be a burden. The King was very specific in his instructions."

Julie nodded. "You don't need to worry about Fedor Iama. He can more than take care of himself."

"The last few days I have seen him and a young blond woman sitting at the King's table." Iama spoke looking at her. "Are they the children of friends perhaps? Is that why they are here? Some sort of reward for being faithful."

Julie looked at her for a long moment. "That is not something we do Iama. No... if you must know... they are the children of For'mya and the Skipper's brother."

Iama's eyes grew slightly wider. "The twins?" She gasped. "I... I heard about them when they came aboard! I saw them even! That... that can not be them! They are fully grown now! When they came on board they were just children!"

Julie nodded. "It is true." She said in response. "The same accelerated growth serum that your people use was for your infants and the clones was used on the twins while they were in For'mya's womb. It was part of Pusintin's plan to use them to try and take control of the Union. He's as dumb as he is ugly for thinking that."

"Then they... they are Prince and Princess?" Iama asked.

Julie nodded. "Yeah. Why don't you talk to him?"

Iama shook her head quickly. "Oh no. I could not. He is a Prince."

"Prince is just a title." Julie said. "And like his MedwanGai and his brother, I'm thinking he will not really care for the title."

"MedwanGai?" Iama asked.

"It's what Fedor and Eirene call Marty." Julie said. "Father of our Hearts. They don't recognize Pusintin as their father."

"How can they do that?" Iama asked.

Julie smiled. "It's actually very confusing. Has to do with Mindvoicing and Etheric power and such. They've been training and staying mostly with their dragons when they eat. Martin and the others decided to acclimate them slowly. I think that part is over now and they'll be around more now. Eirene just took Miseo as her mate and husband. You should talk to Fedor Iama. He's really very interesting."

Iama looked at her with wide eyes. "Miseo? He is... he is Kavalian? He is... she is just a child! He is just a child!" She gasped.

Julie nodded. "What difference does it make if he is Kavalian? And believe me, Eirene and Fedor are not children any longer." She asked. "When two are meant to be together you can't fight it. Eirene didn't fight it and neither did Miseo. They make a cute couple really. He's so much taller and wider than her that it looks silly sometimes."

"I thought..." Iama began to say something but that was quickly pushed from her mind as Danny's voice echoed in both of their ear implants.

"Tally Ho! You got inbound!" His voice spoke. "Torma and Isheeni are bringing back the first batch!"

"How many Danny?" Anja's voice filled their ears and they turn as her five foot three figure walked up to them wearing similar Mark IV ArmorPly.

"Looks like six Red." He answered.

Anja nodded as she stopped next to Iama. "We're standing by." Anja reached out and squeezed Iama's hand. "Ready?"

Iama smiled and nodded. "Yes."

Anja grinned. "I clear them, you dice them."

"That's original Anja." Julie quipped.

Anja looked at her and smiled brightly. This Julie Collins didn't remember what they had shared all those years ago. She probably knew about it now, but she didn't remember it. It didn't matter to Anja, Julie and Danny had been the catalyst to her finally discovering and most importantly accepting her love for Martin and for Anja that had been the most important part. This Julie was still discovering memories, but as far as Anja was concerned, this woman was the friend she had been way back then.

Anja shrugged her shoulders as she looked at Julie. "Marty and Danny are the one liner experts not me." She said.

Julie laughed and shook her head as she mocked punched Anja in the arm. "As if anyone will believe that." She spoke.

Anja smiled at her as they heard Torma's trumpet and they turned to see him carrying the enormous beast in his talons.

"Time to go to work." She stated.

PUMA'S PRIDE

"...Fighter group is ranging out ahead two light years." Popal reported to Pusintin as they sat in the officer's lounge. "Their modified sensors are detecting the Borellum trace, barely, but it is on a constant course."

"Can they estimate how old?" Pusintin asked as he sipped the wine.

"Given the dissipation, the Flight Leader estimates three days... four at most." Popal answered.

Pusintin nodded. "They must be stopping every few days." He said. "Why though?"

"The other ship with them did not appear to be a warship Marshall." Popal spoke. "The design is nothing we have seen, but it appeared more like a transport of some kind. A large one."

"They're looking for supplies?" Pusintin said.

"It's a possibility." Popal spoke. "We were able to replenish our stores before we left Nefoa. There is no indication they returned to any Union planet to do the same. They could have replenished by ship, but they could not have received much."

"It is out of character for my brother." Pusintin said as he rose to his feet. "And why run in the opposite direction into unknown space? They could have made it back to core Union space easily. What else Popal?"

"Captain Korua has the reports you asked for." Popal spoke motioning to the Kavalian officer that occupied the table with them. Kalis sat quietly at the other end of the table.

"What took so long?" Pusintin asked.

"Marshall... I wanted to be absolutely sure about my conclusions before I presented them to you. It took some time to trace all the information within the ship's data bases." The man answered.

Pusintin nodded. "What did you find?"

"The report from the outpost that was struck by the Lycavorian King and his men stated that all were accounted for except one of the females that was sent there to entertain the men. Iama Juturi was not among the dead. Biogenically altered, but her tail remained. She was given to the brothels of Nefoa because of this." Korua spoke evenly. "It just so happens that her father commanded a DIATAGA assigned to Nefoa Marshall. He is among the fleet even now. He knows of his daughter's betrayal and he has been asking to speak to you since we left."

"Really?" Pusintin asked.

"Commander Koguth Marshall." Korua answered. "He has served the Empire since he was a small boy. He commands the RAVAGER with his son who is his executive officer. He is highly spoken of by even Prefect Keleru. Commander Koguth's father is one of the Prefect's most strident supporters."

"Interesting." Pusintin spoke. "Set it up Korua. Now... tell me why this attack on the outpost was significant."

"Well... aside from the fact that they killed everyone and stuck their heads on staffs, we believe they were able to somehow tap into our command channels Marshall." Korua told him. "Nothing truly secure but enough access to give them deployments and numbers for a sizeable number of our fleets. I believe that is how they determined you had only a short Task Force with you. I am not completely sure... but much of the evidence indicates this.”

“I don’t care about that Korua.” Pusintin said. “I care about anything you have discovered about Muton and the others that helped For’mya escape.”

Korua nodded and held out the data pad to him. “This is everything Marshall.” He stated. “I cross referenced his name over nineteen different data bases. He is part of a group that the prefect ordered destroyed nearly a thousand years ago.”

Pusintin looked at him. “That group on Cabelir? The Watchers... the seers... something ridiculous like that.”

“They called themselves Monitors.” Korua spoke. “A religious sect of some sort that Prefect Keleru ordered wiped out as I said. It is actually the second time he has done this, the first being some five thousand years ago.”

Pusintin looked at him. “Same group?” He asked.

Korua nodded. “Yes Marshall.” He answered. “I have nothing to base my...” Korua stopped talking and looked down.

Pusintin glanced at Popal and then back to Korua. “Captain Korua... I may be a mean sonofabitch, but I’m not completely foolish. Do not be afraid to tell me what you have found and what you think. Intelligence is your field... not mine.”

Korua looked at him. “Thank you Marshall Pusintin.” He spoke. He lifted his copy of the data pad. “I do not believe Muton was what he made himself out to be.” He said. “Yes... he was your doctor for nearly four centuries Marshall, but he was far more than he deceived everyone into believing. I believe he was one of these Monitors. His age alone indicates that he was alive at the time Prefect Keleru first ordered their religious cult destroyed. He is nearly as old as the Prefect if the records we have are accurate. Which leads me to my next point. The records are incomplete.”

“Incomplete?” Pusintin asked. “In what way?”

“They only go back five thousand eight hundred years.” Korua answered. “His age alone indicates that we should have records going back nearly ten thousand. We do not.”

Pusintin looked at him. “And when did Keleru first order this Monitor Group destroyed?” He asked.

“It was before you came to us Marshall. The exact date is lost to our historians, but it happened five thousand eight hundred years ago, give or take a decade.” Korua answered.

“You think he was part of the group that Keleru took out?” Pusintin asked.

“As I said Marshall... I have no proof.” Korua said. “But that is what I believe yes. And he has been among our midst all of this time planning for something just like what they have executed. A mass exodus out of Kavalian space.”

“Why?” Pusintin asked as he returned to his seat.

“I’m not entirely sure Marshall... but I believe it has something to do with these Pralors that have been mentioned in recent Union broadcasts. A race of highly advanced species of humanoid persuasion that have incredible mind powers and I dare say, are the species that built the ship that butchered so many of our brothers. I would even go so far as to surmise that the old woman Demahra is of this species.”

“The one who tried to guide Keleru into different areas?” Pusintin asked.

Korua nodded his head. “One and the same. He ordered her immediate execution after Athani defected but she was never found. The Prefect blames her for twisting Athani’s thoughts and manners. There may be more to that than we know.”

“She disappeared months ago.” Pusintin said. “And if she has stayed hidden that suggests she has quite a following.”

Korua nodded. “Yes. No record of her having been found or her death has ever been produced.” He spoke. “I believe she is somehow tied to this ship. Somehow tied to the obvious technological advances the Union has made in recent years that we did not know about.”

“Korua... where have you been assigned before you came to PUMA’S PRIDE?” Pusintin asked.

Korua lowered his face. “I was a minor analyst within the Intelligence Division sir.” He said. “No one... no one believed any of my theories.”

Pusintin looked at Popal. “Popal what do you think?” He asked.

“Had we not seen and experienced what we did Marshall I would say he is crazy as a mole wasp.” Popal answered. “Now... now his theories actually make sense.”

“Korua... I want you to draft a secure message to Keleru. Lay out everything you have and tell him it is my belief that my brother is after something else out here.” Pusintin spoke as he leaned back. “Put it all together for him and I’ll sign it.” He looked at the wall. “I may have come out here after her, but it’s entirely possible he’s not running away from us and running to a place we know nothing about.”

“For what?” Popal spoke.

It was Kalis who leaned forward now. “More of those ships.” He stated.

Pusintin looked at his son across the table with some distaste but some new respect for what he had just said. At least he wasn’t as ignorant as Pusintin thought. “Kalis is right.” He said. “Can you imagine what we could do with ships like that Popal? Two or three of those ships under my command and we could rule the entire universe.”

“They would fight us.” Kalis spoke again. “And they already have an advantage in their engine designs or else we would have caught them by now.”

“Let them try to fight us!” Pusintin said. “We have detected no other Core Plasma Traces from different engines since we have been out here which tells me they have that one ship and the transport we saw at Enurrua. We have an entire Fleet Group!” Pusintin got to his feet and smiled. “Oh this is beautiful! I’m going to rescue For’mya, fuck his other Queens to death in front of him and take whatever it is he finds before I kill him. When we return to Kavalian space we’ll be hailed as heroes.”

Kalis looked at his father silently as he paced the room at the other end of the table. {Rescue For’mya?} Kalis thought to himself. {She would carve your nor from your body before she ever allowed you to have her again.} Kalis blinked several times in surprise as he realized he had just used a word from the Lycavorian language. He also realized then that his father was twisted beyond his ability to reason with him.

His hate for me and your grandmother drives him now. His Uncle Martin had told him in the Holoprogram. He is beyond reason. Beyond redemption now.

For the first time in twenty-five and a half years, Kalis realized just how true that really was.

Kalis was walking down the deck towards the lift, his mind adrift in thought, when he heard the desperate female cry. He had been deep in thought as he went from deck to deck simply walking and trying to bring things into focus within his mind. Nothing had deterred him until he heard that voice.

“Stop it! You’re hurting him! Stop it!”

“Shut up wench!”

Kalis stopped when he heard the distinct sound of a hand hitting flesh and he altered his direction. He was on deck nineteen, and he realized this is the deck where they were holding the Hadarians. He quickened his pace, winding around the corner until he came to the open door and saw three Kavalian troops. One was standing in the corridor laughing at whatever was taking place inside the quarters. He heard the deep thud of a fist hitting a body and he moved quickly towards the quarters. The Kavalian in the doorway did nothing as Kalis stepped into the quarters and his blue eyes grew wide.

The teenage Hadarian male was on the floor beneath the much larger Puma Bane troop as he pummeled the young man. The second was looming over both Hadarian females menacingly with one hand holding the front of the younger female’s shirt. Kalis had seen the older Hadarian female before but he had not seen the younger one and his dark blue eyes grew even wider as the scent reached him. It was a delicious cinnamon and cherries scent but it was also mixed with fear and something inside Kalis told him that was not right. The scent should not have the fear in it. Kalis did not know what possessed him to do it, but he would eventually discover it was the Lycavorian male within him that acted upon Serale’s female scent touching his nose and igniting something within him. The sweet and pungent scent of cinnamon and cherries assailed Kalis’s senses, overriding everything else in the room and his blue eyes suddenly and quite instinctively changed to that of his wolf persona. The thick black ring appeared around his eyes shifting between different spectrums without aide until they stopped and he was looking at the Kavalians and Hadarians in the room with a bluish hue to them. He felt the splash of his saliva inside his mouth as the long dual wolf fangs burst forth from his gums. His hands went to his mouth as he felt the long powerful fangs fully extend, his eyes going ever wider. This had never happened to him before. His father had never delved very deeply into the Lycavorian half of his blood, never taught him anything and because of this fact Kalis responded in a very instinctive manner. A most instinctive and painful manner.

His keen mind determined he had three seconds before the Kavalian straddling the young Hadarian male would hit him again and Kalis moved. He moved with all the inbred speed of his wolf and feline blood combined and he struck viciously and without mercy. He snatched the raised arm of the Puma Bane troop and twisted savagely to the left. The trooper yelled in pain as his arm dislocated and then Kalis's knee ended his conscious thoughts as it crashed into his jaw with terminal velocity. His head snapped back roughly and he exploded off the floor to land against the wall unconscious and out of the fight. The Puma Bane troop hovering over Serale and Ceale whirled instantly; lifting his arm to strike Kalis in the head. A blow intended to kill. A blow that would not strike anything but air. Kalis simply sidestepped the soldier's weak blow and hit him with a ridge hand just above his nose. That part of his face crunched and ground together as blood erupted and the pain caused his eyes to tear up as he staggered back. As he reached for his face, Kalis continued to move. He stopped behind the dazed trooper, gripped the back of his head and brought it smashing into the bulkhead with devastating force, shattering the man's cheek and staining the bulkhead red with blood as he slumped to the deck befuddled and completely out of it.

The Kavalian from the corridor was entering the quarters by now and reaching for his assault rifle. As the Puma Bane troop got it unclipped and was about to bring it up, the Kavalian Industries ARSOC 11 12.7mm sidearm that Kalis always carried was out and jammed painfully into his cheek stopping the Puma Bane soldier in his tracks. Kalis wasn't even looking at him as he slowly turned and the Puma Bane soldier saw those wolf eyes focus on him. His dark eyes grew wide as he saw Kalis snarl and expose the vicious looking dual fangs. The Puma Bane troop did not know the significance of those dual fangs. He did not know now and he would never know before his death came to him.

"I will give you five seconds to explain your actions Senior Sergeant!" Kalis growled savagely. "Then I will pull this trigger and scatter your ignorant brains all over the bulkhead for what you were attempting to do here!"

"Colonel!" He gasped. "You... your father sent us to bring the Hadarian bitch to him! The boy got in our way and struck Sergeant Greno! Then the younger female struck Hendi! Your father has decreed the Hadarian bitch is to be left untouched but not the children! They struck us! Greno and Hindi were only going to..."

Kalis rammed the barrel of the ARSOC tighter into his cheek in savage anger that he did not understand. "Going to what?" Kalis snarled at him. "Beat the boy to death and rape the female! Rape her in front of her family! In front of her mother and brother!" Kalis's wolf eyes were wild with unbridled and overwhelming anger.

"She struck Hendi!" The sergeant growled back.

"My father sent you to collect her mother!" Kalis snarled at him. "Not to force yourself upon her daughter and beat her son while she watched! He has told her they will remain unharmed if she does as she is instructed! You will not violate that decree! Collect your men and leave! Now! Send another detachment to collect the woman!"

"Colonel we..."

Kalis reached up and jerked back the slid action of his ARSOC. "Do not make me repeat myself or you will be dead for disobeying the orders of a superior officer! You and your men may not care for me Senior Sergeant, but you will follow the Kavalian Order of Command or I will execute you right here!"

Kalis could see the hate in the man's eyes but he also knew the Puma Bane soldier would comply. He watched as he lowered his rifle and moved to help his fellow trooper to his feet. Together they got their unconscious comrade between them and hauled his inert form out of the quarters.

Kalis lowered his ARSOC, his entire body shaking in a combination of fear and resolve. He slowly turned his wolf eyes on Serale, gazing at her tanned face and wide dark green eyes. He stared into her face for a long moment, studying the contours of her cheeks and her lips, the way her deep rosewood colored red hair cascaded around her face and over her shoulders. The depth and brightness of those eyes. To the surprise of both himself and Serale, his eyes never once moved lower to gaze upon her womanly body. They remained locked on her face and the way her eyes moved and her lips quivered in fear. Finally, after what seemed like several minutes, Kalis blinked.

“Tend... tend to your brother. Before... before more of them come.” He spoke finally in a soft whisper of a voice.

Serale didn't hesitate and didn't think. She dashed to where Danim lay on the floor, her hands flaring a soft white.

“Serale no!” Ceale gasped seeing this.

Kalis turned his head quickly and saw the shimmering glow of her hands vanish instantly at her mother's warning. Serale's face was locked in an expression of horror as she realized what she had done and stared at Kalis. He turned his head and looked back to Ceale and then to Serale once more, his wolf eyes wide. His father did not know the younger Hadarian female had this ability yet, of that he was positive. The mother had told his father that her daughter had not Ascended... yes that is what she had called it. Kalis looked back to Ceale and he could still see the minor bruising of the woman's face and the state of her clothes. His mind suddenly pictured the younger woman like that and terrible anger surged through him. In another act he would not fully understand until later, Kalis turned back to Serale and nodded his head.

“Heal him. Heal him quickly.” He hissed at her softly. “Do not let them see you doing this. Hurry!” Serale didn't move from her position, her eyes now filled with confusion as she looked at Kalis. “I will tell no one! But you must hurry! Take care of your brother!” Kalis insisted jarring Serale out of her daze.

Serale didn't hesitate and she brought her hands to her brother and began to heal his painful injuries.

Ceale stared at Kalis from the floor and pushed herself into a sitting position against the wall. “Wha... why?” She gasped.

Kalis returned his ARSOC to its holster and met her eyes. “I... I do not know.” He spoke softly. The words poured forth then and to Kalis they were the most truthful words he had ever spoken in his entire life. “I... I am not like... I am not my father.”

“Your father?” Ceale rasped with wide eyes.

Kalis didn't answer her and moved for the door and let it close behind him as his wolf persona finally left him and he took several deep breaths before locking the door. Her scent was not as powerful here in the corridor and it did not affect him as potently as when he was in the room. He shook his head gently as a two member team of Puma Bane soldiers came rushing up to the door. One of them the man Kalis had leveled his weapon at. The other man was the Senior Master Sergeant of the Puma Bane detachment and a man who had trained Kalis when he was younger. A harsh Kavalian instructor but one who had taught him well and always seemed to take interest in what Kalis was doing.

“Kalis... what is going on?” He demanded.

“They were beating the woman's son in front of her Mata!” Kalis hissed angrily. “They were going to rape the younger female in front of her mother! My father told the woman they would not be touched if she cooperated with him.”

The Kavalian looked at the second soldier. “Is this true?” He snarled.

“They are Hadarian!” The man hissed back. “Prisoners! We should be able to use the younger wench as we see fit! There are many of us who wish to use her! And she struck Hendi Senior Sergeant!”

Mata's large hand snapped out and struck the Puma Bane soldier in the head savagely. “We do not disobey the orders of the Marshall or his son! No matter the reason!” He growled. “She is a tiny thing... her blow would have been no more than an insect hitting him!”

“She must know her place!” The man insisted.

“You would take her against the Marshall's wishes?” Mata growled.

“Why not? She is female and many of the others agree. She is ripe and she has a lush body for fucking! She could entertain many of us!”

Mata lifted his hand again to strike him but held back. “The Marshall would see you flayed for disobeying his orders. Is that worth some young Hadarian wench? Is it?”

The younger Puma Bane trooper finally shook his head. “No.”

“I will discipline you for this!” Mata snarled.

“No.” Kalis said quickly looking at him. “It is done Mata. But they are not to transport the female prisoner anywhere on the ship and they are not allowed to come near this room again. Is that clear?”

Mata bowed his head. “I will see to it Kalis.” He spoke.

“Allow them a few minutes to recover from this fool’s actions and then you may collect the mother to take to my father.” Kalis spoke the words even though they left a foul taste in his mouth. “I will be in my quarters.”

Mata watched him turn and head down the corridor. When Kalis was out of ear shot the other spoke. “Why do we listen to him Senior Master?” The man hissed with contempt dripping from his voice. “He is not the Marshall.”

Mata looked at him with angry eyes. “He is the Marshall’s son and he defeated you and your stupid friends with ease. He is not to be trifled with. I am the one who trained him and he would make short work of you and the others” Mata snapped. “He will be obeyed because of the rank he wears! Do not make the mistake of thinking him weak. He is not weak. And he will kill you if you press him too far.”

“Him? Kill me? Not likely.” The Puma Bane soldier said. “He is not Leruk!”

“No... he is not Leruk! And that is what makes him more dangerous than his brother. Who is now dead in case you have forgotten?” Mata hissed.

The man shook his head. “No.” He answered meekly.

“Return to the barracks and send the Watch Sergeant fool!” Mata hissed. “If the Marshall catches wind of this he will punish you regardless of his son’s orders to leave you be. You heard his orders... now go!”

“He is no Kavalian.” The man spoke before turning and heading down the corridor.

Mata turned to see Kalis’s back as he rounded the corner of the corridor heading for the lift and he nodded his head. “No. He is no Kavalian.” Mata said softly. “He is something... he is something different.”

Kalis entered his quarters and waited for the door to close before he released the long sigh he had been holding in. He stood with his back to the door for an enduring minute as the memories of what had just happened raced through his mind. The wolf blood within him had never come out like. When her scent had wafted around him, drawn deeply into his lungs so that it filled his head, Kalis had felt the incredible surge of anger at what the Puma Bane troops were doing. He wanted to slaughter them all, his entire body filling with the strength of the wolf inside him. His father had never told him anything of the wolf blood within him. He had never taught him how to shift his form, how to track with his nose or use the many different spectrums of vision he had when his wolf persona gripped him. What had occurred today had been instinctive to him, his mind reacting without thought.

Kalis liked that feeling. It was a feeling of power and control. A feeling of confidence and... honor.

He pushed away from the wall quickly and moved to his desk to unlock the Data Disc. He had already viewed it three times in its entirety, listening to his Uncle’s voice as he walked the corridors of the ship he had been on, telling him things he had never known. Part of the Hologram had also had him walking within some sort of modern village where he had seen Immortals in the background, as well as dragons and elves and other Lycavorians in great numbers. All of them working together, talking and even at one point laughing. True to the very purpose of the Union his Uncle had said. His Uncle Martin spoke with patience and even humor as he told him of many things Kalis had never imagined. It was mostly about the men and women in the Union. How they had built what they had. Towards the end his Uncle had spoken of his grandfather and grandmother and a longing had filled Kalis to meet her just as his brother had. Kalis had hoped for more from the data disc, but he knew you could only put so much information on one, no matter how sophisticated it was. And the one he had was exactly that Kalis knew. He had tried to take it apart to study it, but decided against it for fear of damaging it in some way and losing the program. The technology was far beyond him and would be far beyond any technician on PUMA’S PRIDE. Not that he would ever give it to any of them.

The last two times he had viewed it, he had fallen asleep with his Uncle’s voice in the background. A confident and warm voice, always interjecting humor whenever he could into his words. During that sleep he had dreams unlike any he had ever experienced. So vivid and lifelike. Places and people he had never met. Events he had never experienced. Images of so many of his cousins as they grew, laughing and smiling. So many things that he had never experienced yet they were events he wanted to experience for himself. Seeing the Holoprogram had awakened the wolf within him and Kalis wanted more. He wanted to know so much more. To experience more than what he had now. The craving was growing stronger by the hour and he found himself no longer fighting it. Even knowing that it would be the same program again Kalis reached for the data disc wanting to watch it again. As he lifted it, the data disc beeped twice and activated on its own. Kalis looked at it wide eyed as he had not hit the button to begin the program. He stood there amazed as a different image of his Uncle suddenly appeared from the tiny holoprojector in the disc's front edge. This time he was dressed in a different set of clothes than Kalis had seen him in before, and he was standing before a monument of some kind.

“Hello Mandri.” Martin's voice spoke. “Have I surprised you again?” His image smiled and looked around. “The Data Disc you have is a unique device Kalis. It is not of Lycavorian design, nor High Coven. It is a technology that is not widely known and only my family and one or two friends have them. Primarily because we don't know how to build more just yet. Each Data Disc is encoded to its user. The one you now hold in your hand is the last of twenty-one of these devices and it is now yours. No one else will be able to access the information on it, or utilize the other options it can facilitate. That Data Disc you have is now encoded to you nephew. It is linked to your life signs. If it detects that your life has ended it will self destruct. Use it Kalis. Store your thoughts and wishes upon it. It will only activate by your touch and it will not work if there is someone else in the area with you unless you have activated and entered a biometric scan of that individual that you want to be able to access the information into the Disc. Something I don't believe you can do just yet. You know as well as I Kalis that a biometric scan is very thorough and takes several minutes to complete and it is my hope that after viewing the previous Holoprogram, you have at least decided to see for yourself what your Lycavorian blood gives you. The history it gives you.” Kalis saw him hold up an identical Data Disc. “Every one of these pads is linked to mine. Given the nature of the men and women who designed them, they are... powerful to say the least. Wherever I am at the moment, a message has been sent to me and I know that you have seen the previous holoprojection.”

Kalis's eyes grew wide as he heard this and he looked at the Data Disc.

“It is I who has activated the additional programs within the disc's memory Kalis. As before... they will reveal no military information useful to your father or anyone for that matter. I am of the hope that now you would not share that information with others. At least until you have seen what I am showing you. These programs... they are meant only to give you knowledge Kalis.”

Kalis pulled his chair out quickly and sat down.

“As you can probably see I am not where I was previously. These programs I made weeks prior to whatever event led me to get this Disc to you. This is Thermopylae Kalis.” Martin waved his hand behind him and to the sides. “This is where your grandfather fought and died for the freedom of so many against the High Coven. His remains are interned here in the tomb behind me. I come here often when I want to focus and think of things. I thought it would be the best place to teach you. To give you the knowledge your father should have given you. Each Holoprogram that is now active within this disc is a separate training and history program. It is... using an expression I learned long ago... it is a poor man's tool. A way for me to give you at least the beginnings of your Lycavorian and Spartan history and possibly the future you could have. As I have told you, I do not wish to influence you Kalis. What I want is for you to see the other side of your blood. Only then will you be able to make a definitive decision on the path you wish your life to follow. I will not plead or beg for you to turn against your father or those you have come to call your people. That would be wrong in every way. I am going to give you the means to follow your instincts in what you feel you want for your future. Something they will not do.”

Kalis watched him turn and face the monument in the background.

“I remember the first time I came here.” Martin spoke. “It was nighttime and the moon was high in the sky. I was with my Melda Min. My first elven mate Dysea. It was the night I discovered who I really was Kalis. The night I discovered the true blood that runs in my veins. The blood that runs in your veins Mandri. Somehow your grandfather’s essence had been lying dormant here until I arrived. Over three thousand years since his death and it had remained within the circle of power of this place. He appeared to me that night Kalis. In front of those who were with me.” Martin turned back to the vid drone that was recording the message. “As crazy as it seems, I have been able to speak with him or an image of him if you will, in my dreams ever since. I wasn’t kidding when I told you that before. Not directly mind you, but in the form of a dream and whatever event that dream is depicting.” Martin began walking now and Kalis waited patiently until his Uncle reached what appeared to be some sort of bleacher benches and sat down. Martin looked up as the vid drone shifted again.

“There are six programs available to you now Kalis. Each of them about three hours in length. The first two are simple history files. The history of our family and the history of Sparta and the Union. These were put together by a man who fought beside my father during that time. He is called The Guardian of our Line. The man who is responsible for raising me in many respects. For saving me. He will be the one conducting the classes since he is the one who knows the most about it. Assisting him will be another man who I have come to trust with my life. You probably know him already; he is your grandmother’s current mate, Fleet Admiral Riall. The second two programs are given by two of my wives and mates. Anja is Hadarian. And she is as fiery as the color of her hair. I turned her long ago and it is she who can tell you all you need to know about what you can do and cannot do as a child of two species. She will also be able to tell you many things of the species you call your people that you probably did not know. The fourth program is where you will meet my Melda Min. She is as supremely intelligent as she is beautiful and she is also an exceptionally skilled warrior. She can answer almost any question you may have in regards to the Union now. Our politics, our education system. Anything. The fifth program is much more recent... and it took a bit of arm twisting mind you after what took place on Hadaria... but that is by your cousin Androcles. He does not yet trust you Kalis and he thinks this is a bad idea but he will allow you to begin to view the world using your wolf blood. He will show you how to shift, how to run and turn and fight in wolf form and how to use many of your senses. He does this regardless of his feelings because of your blood Kalis.” Martin smiled at the vid drone.

“Androcles is... he is as passionate as he deadly. Like his brothers and sisters, he honors the blood in his veins with all that he does. The sixth program is by me and you will only discover what it is about when you complete the others. It will remain locked until you have completed each instruction block. Only then will you understand what I will tell you.” Martin sat back on the bleachers.

“The really cool thing about this particular Data Disc is that it is interactive.” Martin told him. “It will allow you to ask questions within a specific set of parameters. I am doing this Kalis... I am doing this to give you all the pieces you need to make a decision on your future. You may hate me now... hate your cousin and all of us because that is what your Kavalian blood and your father no doubt tell you, but you deserve to have all the pieces of knowledge Kalis. All the parts your father did not tell you. That he did not let you experience. It is your choice nephew. It is my hope that you will make the best one. Do what you will now Kalis. I have given you the means to discover everything about who you are. And perhaps explain to you some of the things you have experienced but do not understand. What you do with them is now up to you. If you take nothing from these programs then know one thing. You are of my blood Kalis. Your grandfather’s blood. I will love you without question until the moment you give me reason not too. Then... then we will be enemies. And you have already seen how I deal with my enemies. I hope that does not turn out to be the case my boy. Learn all you can Kalis. Only then will you be who you are truly meant to be.”

Kalis sat there as the holoimage froze at the end of the message. He looked down at the Data Disc in his hands and stared at the metallic surface for several long moments.

“What I could have?” Kalis whispered to the silence around him. “What I could have?”

Kalis lifted his thumb and without hesitation he stabbed down on the control board. “Activate first Program.” He spoke in a firm voice.

PLANET TWELVE ALPHA

It was primitive given the technology they had but without proper facilities and tools, they made the best of it. And it moved quite smoothly even without proper tools. Twenty-nine of the enormous beasts had been captured by the dragons, killed with quick but savage twists of powerful jaws and snapping of the necks. Torma, Isheeni, Arzoal and the others were careful to cull only the older looking beasts from the herds that dotted the plains below. The six week old hatchlings were able to participate to an extent as well, refining their flying skills as well as their hunting skills. None of them were able to actually make a kill, but Torma and the adult dragons allowed them to track and direct the hunt in little ways.

Iama and forty others were the ones assigned to process the animals and they were efficient and quick after the first two beasts were processed. Iama wasted nothing, even keeping the huge bones of the animals for the dragons to gnaw on and keep their teeth strong and sharp. This was something that did not escape Arzoal's notice and unbeknownst to Iama, she earned many dragon friends that day. For a Kavalian, Iama seemed very comfortable around the dragons. She did not go out of her way to pet them or go near them, but the inbred fear she had of dragons had been harnessed long ago on Kranek. While Iama and the others processed the meat and bones and skins, the remaining personnel packaged them with equal efficiency and within six hours the dragons were lifting off into the air to bring the cargo down to the loading area in the valley beneath them.

As darkness began to stretch across the sky and the land, a huge table was set up and Iama and the cooks from the ARC ROYAL began to put together a generous meal of fresh meat, vegetables, orange colored potatoes and spicy green salad. Within an hour, the men and women were sitting on the ground in twos and threes or larger and enjoying a night under moonlit skies and a delicious meal. Portable lights were set up all around the camp making it easier to move around among the many transferable soft metal tents that had been set up.

Iama was proud of herself at what they had accomplished. As she drew in a deep breath of fresh air she knew she had found her niche in this life. She had found a place where she was respected and treated well and above all else liked. The skills her mother had passed to her in cooking she thought useless at the time. Now they were paying huge dividends and carving her a place among those she now referred to as friends and comrades. As she sat at the table on the far end of the row of tables, her keen feline eyes detected the large dragon first as it swooped down from the security positions above and then she saw General Simpson and the boy Prince appear from the darkness walking casually. They appeared to be talking quietly between themselves and smiling as they did. Iama was surprised at this for she assumed the boy Prince would be the first to arrive to eat his fill. As he and Daniel Simpson stepped up to the table weighed down with food she realized they had just returned from their posts. Her light green eyes were able to watch him easily even as the portable lights cast an eerie glow across them. They had actually waited until everyone had eaten before even leaving their posts above.

He was tall Iama saw, much taller than her five foot four frame, and even under the Mark IV ArmorPly he wore she could tell he was fully developed and incredibly muscular. She heard him laugh at something Daniel Simpson said and he turned to toss a large chunk of meat at his dragon, which the beast easily snatched from the air and gulped down. As Iama watched he withdrew an odd looking knife from his right leg and stabbed another piece of meat. The way he twisted the blade and twirled it in his hand before stabbing the meat told Iama he was very skilled with it in some form of combat. Most soldiers she knew did not prefer knives because they were hard to master, but this boy Prince seemed to be equally as comfortable with a knife as he was with the cut down version of the P190A3 that dangled from quick release straps. Iama had to admit to herself, he was incredibly handsome. Even more handsome than many of the Lycavorians she had seen since joining them. Her ears detected soft laughter and she turned her head to see several Lycavorian and elf females watching him as well and giggling to themselves as they watched him. Iama shook her head in disgust. How could they desire someone who would no doubt have the mind of a child? When Kavalians finished their growth cycles they had to undergo months of strenuous mental conditioning to be able to catch up to their fully grown bodies. This boy Prince was only six or seven weeks old. He would not know the difference between anything Iama knew.

Iama turned her head once more when she heard Julie call out for Daniel from the COM tent. Her eyes went back to where they stood and she saw Daniel and him leave their plates on the table as they turned and began moving towards the tent. Iama saw an opportunity then to make additional points with the King. She knew that Daniel Simpson was widely regarded as the only brother of the King. His status among the Lycavorians and others was nearly equal to the King. Though they were not brothers by blood, she had learned that they had been together since both were a year old. They had seen and done things together, bled together and fought impossible odds together. They were brothers in the truest sense Iama found out and that is how Daniel Simpson was viewed. She rose from her table and moved to where he had left his plate of food, retrieving it. As an afterthought she also grabbed the plate of the boy Prince, seeing several thick slabs of meat but hardly any greens on it, and shaking her head at his unhealthy diet.

She quickly moved after Daniel Simpson towards the COM tent.

“...looking good here Skipper.” Julie spoke as they stood around the holoimage of Martin from the valley below them.

Danny stood next to Julie, Fedor sitting on the table to their right flank and scratching Dnom under his massive jaw with his head extending into the tent and his huge body outside the tent.

“We’re settling in for the night.” Danny told him. “Security is out and the perimeter is activated.”

“Portable Gun Platforms and sensors?” Martin asked.

Danny nodded. “One Avenger PGP on every corner and two inside the perimeter facing all avenues. I do know my job you know?”

“Well... excuse me for asking.” Martin quipped playfully. “You know... you’re getting ornery in your old age.”

Fedor chuckled from behind them and Danny snickered. “Careful oh great and ugly King Martin. You gave your son to me remember. I might just get him to spike your coffee in the morning. Give you the runs for a week.”

Martin laughed in the transmission. “Ignore him Fedor.” He said. “He’s always been angry that I am so much better looking.”

“Shiit!” Danny grunted. “That will be the day.”

“Ok...” Julie announced. “Enough testosterone!”

As it had been so long ago, Julie was the one who had always ended their banter back and forth. Even though she was a vampire clone, she still had that power over them it seemed and it was the main reason both Danny and Martin had welcomed her with open arms upon realizing it was truly her regardless of what Aikiro had done to her body.

“First two birds are away.” Martin told them as the tent flap opened and Iama entered carrying the plates.

She glanced quickly to the side of the huge dragon and saw Fedor sitting on the table. Her eyes rolled slightly as she saw him, though up close as she was now, she had to admit he was even more handsome than she first thought. She thrust out his plate to him with barely a pause. “You should eat more greens.” She stated sternly. “It will stimulate the growth of your mind.”

Fedor looked at her with wide eyes as he took the plate she had shoved at him. His nostrils flared wide as her sweet kiwi scent crashed against his senses and he watched her turn to his Uncle.

“You... you left your plate General.” She spoke in a much more friendly tone.

Danny looked at her and took the plate. “Thank you Iama.” He said.

“Iama... you did an outstanding job today.” Martin told her from the transmission.

Iama looked at him. “It was a team effort King Leonidas.” She told him honestly. “All of us deserve the praise.”

“Think we can do it again tomorrow?” Martin asked.

Iama smiled. “We’ll do better.”

“Science team find anything interesting Marty?” Julie asked.

“Last time I checked they were giddy over some samples they found in the soil of their site.” Martin answered. “Something about exponential growth or some shit like that. Gives me a frigging headache if you ask me.”

“Maybe a colony planet in the future?” Julie spoke now. “We could start marking any promising ones we find you know.”

Martin nodded. “Maybe.” He said. “If I know you Jules... you are already doing that.”

Julie grinned and held up her data pad. “By the numbers.” She replied waving the pad back and forth. “Makes me wonder how you and Danny ever got by when I went on vacation for a quarter century.”

Martin and Danny both laughed. Julie had begun referring to her death and reincarnation as a vampire as an extended vacation.

“We muddled through pretty good.” Danny told her. “But we got you back to pick up the slack now sister!”

Julie looked at him. “Fuck you Simpson. I ain’t carrying your tight asses any longer. Both of you are going to carry your weight!”

“Here! Here!” They heard Anja’s distinct voice in the background of Martin’s end of the transmission.

“Cute!” Martin said. “Danny... we’re going to close out for the night. I got two techs on duty monitoring any calls from the ARC ROYAL. Stay at Condition Two. We still don’t know enough about this world to let our hair down all the way.”

Danny nodded. “Will do.” He stated. “Tur anzen fervon.” (Be safe brother)

Martin nodded in return. “Mornar forn.” (And you)

Danny looked at Iama as Martin’s image faded. “You done good Iama.” He said. “Damn good.”

Iama smiled sweetly at him. “Thank you General.” She said. “All of us had a hand in it.” She said.

“This meat is really very good.” Fedor spoke from the table. “What spices did you use?”

Iama turned her head to look at him. Fedor’s dark brown orbs blinked several times at the look of near disdain that came across in her eyes. “You would not understand if I explained it to you.” Iama spoke almost harshly though only Julie caught the true inflection in her voice. “You should pay more attention to your training and less to your stomach.” Iama looked at Danny who had a surprised expression on his face. “I will see you in the morning General. We will be ready.”

Danny nodded his head. “Ok. Sure.” He said as Iama turned and glanced at Fedor once more before pushing past Dnom’s bulk out of the tent.

Fedor got up off the table and looked at him. “Uncle... did I do something wrong?” He asked.

Danny shrugged his shoulders and looked at him. “Beats the hell out of me.” He turned to Julie. “Know anything about that Jules?”

Julie shook her head as well. “Caught me by surprise too.”

“Wow!” Danny said. “Be careful where you tread boy, maybe you stepped on her tail when you were smaller.”

“I’ve never seen her before tonight.” Fedor complained even as her kiwi scent still drifted to his wolf nose and aroused his other senses.

“Don’t worry about it Fedor.” Julie told him. “She doesn’t know you.”

Fedor looked at the tent flap. “Treating me with contempt is not right though.” He said. “I have done nothing to her.”

Danny put his hand on his shoulder. “Don’t sweat it.” He said. “Grab some more chow and then get some rest. Tomorrow will be just as busy.”

Fedor turned to look at him and nodded his head. “I will be ready.” He said.

Danny nodded. “Good.”

Fedor looked at Dnom. “Let’s go brother.” He said. “I found a good spot for us this morning. And I want to say goodnight to my sister.”

[... would she say these things Fedor?] Eirene asked softly within their sole connection. Eirene was tightly wrapped within a sleeping Miseo’s powerful arms; her lithe body conformed to his and swallowed up within his embrace. She had fallen asleep like this for the last three nights and to Eirene, nothing could ever compete with the sensations this caused within her.

[I do not know sister.] Fedor answered from the processing site above them. [She spoke to me with contempt in her voice. Like I had wronged her in some way. Like I was a child!]

[Did she smell good?] Eirene asked him playfully.

Eirene heard her twin chuckle softly within their private connection. Only Kdan and Dnom could access this connection if they wanted, though Eirene knew their father and mothers were strong enough within Mindvoice to intrude if they so desired.

[She smelled very good Eirene. Like sweet sugary kiwi. Her eyes are fascinating and her skin...] Fedor spoke with more truth than humor in his voice. Something his sister detected right away.

[Enough Fedor... I get the idea!] Eirene told him with a laugh. [So you do find her attractive then?]

[That does not make up for her attitude towards me Eirene.] He said. [I did nothing to her to deserve that tone or her harsh words.] Eirene heard Fedor sigh and dismiss it. [My heart sings for your happiness sister.] He told her. [He is good to you?]

[Carians Fedor... he is even bigger than our mothers say father is.] Eirene answered with no shame. She and Fedor were tied together so closely that it made no sense to try and hide from him anything. [He was so gentle and caring. And when he kissed me I thought I would explode. I did explode!]

Eirene could feel her twin brother's smile of love even from above her on the plateau. [Finding the Father of our Hearts has brought us so much more than we would have ever had sister.] Fedor told her. [We must never let that be taken from us.]

[We won't ferveron! We won't.] Eirene agreed. [As Miseo affected me because of my fever, perhaps this Iama is affecting you in some way.]

[Perhaps... I will ask father when we are alone but it doesn't matter right now. She is being an upaee!] He said. [I did nothing wrong to her and we have taken the trait from our mother that makes us dislike arrogant people.]

[Yes we have.] Eirene said.

[I will ignore her.] Fedor spoke. [She knows nothing about me and to act in such a way is far more arrogance than I want to deal with. I do not wish to become angry.]

[Then stay away from her ferveron.] Eirene said. [You will find someone just like I have. It just may not... it may not happen so quickly.] Fedor heard the sadness in her voice and he shook his head where he was.

Fedor hissed softly within their connection. [Never regret what you have found because of me sister!] He scolded her. [You are right. I will find someone someday. But I will always love you first.]

Eirene smiled dreamily in Miseo's arms and nodded. [And I will love you first always.] She answered. [Sleep well in his arms my arande. I will see you tomorrow.] Fedor spoke.

ARC ROYAL

Akemi read the last report for the day and signed off on it before getting to her feet. "How are our people?" She asked out loud.

The Tactical Officer turned from his post. "The King reported in ten minutes ago. They are tucked in tight for the night."

"Sensors are clean." Wayonn spoke as the second shift officer stood behind him waiting to relieve him.

Akemi smiled. "I like it when things go smoothly." She stated out loud. "Makes my job a lot easier."

Wayonn got to his feet and looked at her. "Considering Martin's propensity for finding trouble I have to agree Captain." He said.

Akemi moved up next to him. "Recalibrations are complete for both ARC ROYAL and DAYRIDER. We'll be able to make jump seven as soon as they are aboard. Which also makes me very happy."

Wayonn looked at her. "Worried?" He asked.

Akemi shook her head. "Not really I guess... but the King's sense of things is sometimes scary. Ben and Miranda both told me that if he feels something it is usually correct. He believes the Kavalians are following us. If he believes it, so do I. I don't like staying in one place too long knowing that."

"Then that makes you concerned?" Wayonn asked.

"We can outrun anything those Kavalian space scavengers have in their inventory and we won't have to get out and push." Akemi snarled proudly. "Even with DAYRIDER attached to us. And if they drop from LSD operation anywhere within sensor range we'll have plenty of time to react even if they do see us. Our sensor range is three times what theirs is."

"Then why feel so anxious?" Wayonn spoke.

Akemi looked at him. "I'm human Val'istar." She answered. "Being anxious is part of our nature. We react better when we are prepared for the worse. That has always been the case with us."

Wayonn tilted his head to the side. "Ah... I see." He spoke. He took her arm. "Well let's go to the Mess Lounge Captain. We can be anxious together. That is part of Pralor nature too you know."

Akemi grinned and allowed him to lead her off the bridge.

"...do you think we'll find Val'istar?" Akemi asked Wayonn as they sat at the table drinking two steaming mugs of Aricia's coffee.

Wayonn met her gaze. "To be honest I don't really know." He answered. "Muton's calculations are correct and Anja has medically confirmed he and all of his people have different Pralor genes within him. Some stronger than others like Muton and his sons. That matches with the memories he has as well as those the others possess. The DAYRIDER might not look like much, but they built it from memories passed to them from their ancestors. And then the way his memories and dreams led Muton to the map on Enurrua? There are only two species within the known universe that I know of, that can imprint their children with memories and images like that. Pralors and Lycavorians. I can only take so much coincidence before I have to start to believe."

Akemi nodded her head. "Same here."

"Those Pralors that left with Arzoal's dragons are probably dead by now." Wayonn spoke sadly. "I don't imagine we will find much of them left after so many years no matter how much I wish otherwise. It would be nice to know that Shiria and I are not the last connection to a lost species. Whether any of Muton's ancestors survive is up for grabs to be honest. The dragons... if they flourished... they would probably number in the ten thousands by now. Perhaps more. If they have survived, will they recognize Arzoal as the Elder Mother they left behind? An awful lot of questions is what I think we will find." Wayonn looked at her. "But I have known to be wrong in the past as well."

"How often did that happen?" Akemi asked him.

Wayonn chuckled. "Only twice." He said.

Akemi smiled. Her face became serious then. "Tell me of the Scourge Val'istar?" She asked.

Wayonn looked at her surprised that she knew of them. "How did you...?"

Akemi smiled once more. "I can tell you the biggest reason why the military of the Union would follow the King to hell and back Val'istar. They trust him. He doesn't keep information from those who he knows needs that information. He gave me a pad when he first came on board. Not a whole lot of information mind you, I think he was holding a lot back that he has seen in his mind, but it was enough to nearly make me wet my panties. He told me you would have more."

Wayonn nodded slowly. "They are not a kind species Akemi." He said softly. "They can not be reasoned with. They can not be communicated with. They can not be trusted. I watched to many civilian settlements burn under their weapons during our first war to believe that they even have a soul. They exist now only to conquer and kill anything or anyone with Pralor blood or those who have helped them."

"They never took prisoners?" Akemi asked.

Wayonn shook his head. "No... they took prisoners." He answered. "Only they weren't prisoners for very long. Those they did not feed on they turned into warrior vermin. Their basic soldiers. The cannon fodder as Martin calls them. They altered them genetically to become like them in many ways. It was not a pretty sight. Sumar and I were leading a small unit at one point. We stumbled upon one of their conversion chambers. I was sick for a full day at what I saw and I could not eat for two more.” Wayonn leaned across the table and set his mug down. “Martin is right. It is time I began to share what knowledge I have. I will tell you all I know Akemi, what Martin and Andro already know, but promise me that you will tell no one until the time is right. When it becomes time to reveal it to everyone, then you may tell anyone who needs to know. Until then... it is better if the whole did not know.”

Akemi nodded her head instantly. “Done.” She said.

Wayonn took a deep breath. “It was our fault.” He told her. “Xaxon’s fault. In reality, the Scourge are of our own creation. Xaxon just did not know the entire scope of the species he wantonly began to slaughter one day. It began on...”

The Sensor Watch Officer was leaning back in his chair sipping a mug of tea. It was the only comfort that Akemi allowed while on duty. She demanded perfection from her crew and for the most part she received it. As with all the ARIZONA-Class ships, most of the crews were hand picked by the Captains, and just being part of a crew of one of these ships was an honor. An honor he would preserve for the sake of his name and his family. The crew on the third watch would banter back and forth, but all of them maintained constant attention to their duty stations. This constant attention is what allowed him to see the row of small white blips on the sensor screen that was monitoring the ground team. He blinked and leaned forward, sitting up in his chair to insure he hadn’t seen a glitch. On the next sweep they were still there and moving. He set his tea aside and adjusted his sensor array slightly to bring the contacts into focus more clearly. His eyes grew wider when he realized that the contacts were in open water and moving towards the position of their King and the ground crew. He didn’t hesitate for a moment.

“Contacts!” He barked out causing all heads on the bridge to turn towards him. “I have unknown surface contacts! Bearing three six one and closing on the Ground Team’s position!”

The Third Watch Duty Officer was beside him in five steps. “Confirm!” He snapped.

The SWO nodded his head. “Already confirmed sir.” He spoke confidently. “Thirteen surface contacts. Now bearing three six two. Range fourteen clicks from the Ground Team. They are on the water.”

“On the water?” The DO asked.

“Coming in from the southern islands.” The SWO answered.

“Tactical! Immediate realignment of the lateral array to sensor coordinates. Lock onto the contacts and show me what we got!” He barked. “Put it up on the main monitor!”

“Shifting array!” The Tactical Officer barked. “Locked. Magnifying!”

The Nodon JCN Type 71 Tactical Sensor Array was the most powerful the ARIZONA-Class carried, the most powerful in the entire fleet to be exact and it could cut through pea soup like clouds on its worst day. Clouds was not something they had to worry about however as the night on the northern continent was clear and star filled. As the DO turned to the main screen he saw the picture of the ocean focus and zoom three times to align on the thirteen contacts. His eyes grew a little wider.

“Water ships!” He hissed.

“Confirmed.” The Tactical Officer echoed. “Thirteen water ships. Estimate sixty meters in length for each ship. Target closing speed is one hundred and fifty KPH constant. Current speed and course will put them on land only two kilometers from the Processing site. On the beach to the east!”

“Give me a picture of the deck!” The DO barked. “Set Condition One and get the Captain and Wayonn up here now!”

The screen zoomed once more and they could all make out the figures standing on the deck of the ship.

“Not good!” The Tactical Officer snapped. “Not good! Looks like about thirty to forty indigenous personnel on the deck of each ship. They appear reptilian in nature as per the Op order. They are jammed pretty tight and it’s hard for the sensors to distinguish! They... Commander they appear to be armed!”

“Fuck me!” The man snarled. “This isn’t good! Have the spare KADENS spool their engines and prepare for immediate Evac! Do it now!”

Akemi burst onto the bridge three minutes later still pulling her uniform top on, Wayonn just behind her. “Report!” She barked.

“Thirteen surface contacts! On the water, bearing three six three! Closing on the King’s position! Range twelve point two clicks! Speed one fifty-eight steady!” The ARC ROYAL’S Tactical Officer called out.

“They appear to be part of the indigenous population from the southern continent.” Akemi’s XO told her as she settled into the command chair. “Approximately forty per contact. They appear to be on some sort of water ship.”

“Doing over a hundred KPH?” Akemi snapped. “Wayonn... I thought this was supposed to be a Pre-LSD drive society?”

Wayonn stood next to the sensor operator now and he turned to look at her and nod. “My preliminary scans indicated no Plasma or Fusion Matter power sources. They would need these for space flight!”

“Power source of the Water Ships appears to be some sort of fuel induced turbine.” The XO said. “Wayonn would not have detected it without a Gamma Spectrum scan. Our gear isn’t tuned to detect power sources we haven’t used in over ten thousand years Captain.”

“Fuck!” Akemi exclaimed loudly. “Wayonn get on the other sensor station! Reconfigure the operational parameters and give me detail! How the hell did we pick them up in the first place?”

“I was utilizing a lateral sweep of the ocean around the continent Captain.” The Sensor Operator replied. “Adjusted for surface temperature variants. It detected the ships because they were an abnormal heat signature with no base variables!”

“I have the KADENS spooling for an evac.” Her XO said. “We can launch in another three minutes.”

“How soon before they reach land?” Akemi asked.

“At current velocity they will reach landfall in seven minutes. Five hundred meters from the processing camp and two hundred forty meters below them.”

“Shit! Get me base camp! Wake the King up if you have to!” She snarled. “And tell the KADEN crews to fucking hump it!”

PLANET TWELVE ALPHA

JANUARY 31, 2575

Fedor was leaning up against Dnom’s broad chest, his Bonded Brother’s neck and head resting on the ground beside him, one of his large talons draped across Fedor’s lower leg. His long tail was curled alongside his body. They had chosen to forgo setting up a tent because of the clear skies and fresh air. Fedor wouldn’t know until later that what he and Dnom were doing was something his brother and Elynth often did, and it was a minor twist of information that Andro had passed to them.

Dnom’s eyes popped open when he detected movement and he saw Danny moving towards them with a purpose. A simple nudge of his talon against Fedor’s leg and Fedor came fully awake and looked up as his Uncle appeared beside them.

“Uncle?” Fedor asked.

“Up and at them Fedor.” Danny spoke. “We got company. Bring your toys too. You may need them.”

Fedor was moving instantly as his Uncle Daniel turned to head back to the COM tent. He adjusted his MARK IV ArmorPly and secured his combat vest. He yanked a belt from the large duffle bag next to where he and Dnom sat and then pulled it over his shoulder and chest like a bandolier before snatching up the most recent P190A4 from atop his gear. The Lycavorian A4 was very similar to its P190A3 predecessor, but it was a cut down version, and fully four inches shorter than the original. It also kept in line with his father’s mentality about stealth, as it had a integral silencer built into the barrel. It was a weapon that had been specifically manufactured for the Durcumusaan and the Omega Teams his MedwanGai had told him. Light, accurate, and providing a powerful punch with it’s Kavalian based 12.7mm caseless round. The war with the Evolli had brought to light the Kavalian 12.7mm kinetic round and Martin had quickly seen the excellent stopping power and accuracy it provided. He ordered it adopted for all the covert units within the Union.

Fedor didn't need to tell Dnom to follow him as he turned and bolted for the COM tent. He covered the distance in seconds, pushing aside the tent flap to see his Uncle, Julie and the Kavalian female Iama already inside. The image of his MedwanGai was once more active within the holoprojector. "... where they came from or how they got so close but we got about four minutes to get ready." Martin said.

"If Wayonn was only scanning for modern power sources Marty, it's no wonder he missed them." Julie said.

Martin nodded. "I know. The ARC ROYAL is retuning her sensors to detect non-Plasma and fusion based power sources, but that ain't our problem right now."

"Where are they going to land?" Danny asked.

"About two hundred meters west of you Dan, down on the beach no doubt." Martin told him. "I want you to pull your people in tight Danny. Take Fedor with you and eyeball them from the ridge. Use Dnom if you have to since it is still relatively dark."

"Hostile?" Danny asked.

Martin shrugged and shook his head. "I don't know... but there's a whole lot of them and they appear to be armed with older projectile weapons according to Wayonn." He replied. "That doesn't imply friendly in my book."

"Mine either." Danny said.

"We are half a click east of you in the valley. The backup KADENS are inbound for a fast Evac if necessary." Martin told him. "Looking at the terrain... they'll have to go right through your camp to get to us."

"Oh... ain't that convenient." Danny remarked sarcastically. "I'm always the one out in front protecting your fat ass!"

"You're a bigger target!" Martin exclaimed.

"I should go with you Daniel!" Iama spoke quickly.

"There's no need for that." Fedor spoke calmly.

Iama's eyes flashed angrily at him. "I was not talking to you!" She snapped. "I have been trained in close combat! I have seen combat! I am the better choice!"

Fedor met her eyes. "I wouldn't be too sure." He said. "I'm pretty good."

"You are a boy in the body of a man!" Iama barked causing even Martin to take notice of her reaction to Fedor.

Fedor's eyes darkened at the obvious insult and he glared at her moving a step closer to her. "You don't..."

"Iama you stay with Julie and help to get the others ready here." Danny ended the heated discussion before it got out of hand. "We don't have time to argue! Fedor goes with me. Jules... break out the old faithful backups and get a perimeter established."

Julie nodded. "Will do."

Danny looked at the monitor. "If their hostile fervon?" He asked.

"That's why Tony and Kenny are on their way up to you." Martin told him. "With a few surprises."

"Nice." Danny spoke.

Martin's expression didn't change. "Do not engage unless they engage us Danny. If they do... all bets are off and we beat feet, but I ain't losing people over the fact we don't know them right now. They want to make nice... fine. But we lose no one."

"Understood." Danny said. "Be ready if we come barreling down the hill brother."

Martin nodded. "We will." Martin looked at Fedor. "Keto... listen to your Uncle and stay close to Dnom. That is your strength."

Fedor nodded. "I will MedwanGai." He spoke. "Eirene?" He asked.

"She's helping your mothers establish a secondary perimeter here. Kdan is never more than ten meters from her, and neither is Miseo. She will be fine. You and those with you will be in the most danger if this goes to shit."

Fedor nodded. "We will be fine."

"Marty... we're out of here." Danny spoke once more.

Martin nodded. "Watch your six."

“Always.” Danny answered taking Fedor’s arm and exiting the tent quickly. Martin’s image faded from view on the monitor and Iama looked at Julie.

“I should be the one going with him.” She stated. “The boy Prince will be of no use to him Julie!” She stated.

“I wouldn’t take bets on that.” Julie said.

“He may look like a man, but his mind is like a child! He has not grown anywhere near enough!” Iama insisted.

Julie shook her head. “Not our problem now. Let’s get that perimeter set up.”

Dnom rolled over in the warm air and cut silently back inland. He had stayed at five hundred feet as he passed over the Water ships as they began to land on the beach below. This allowed him ample time to view the figures below easily with his dragon eyes.

I count over four hundred Fedor. Dnom spoke as he turned once more and shot over the tree below him where he knew Danny and his Bonded Brother rested. All of them armed. They are exiting the Water Ships with speed. As if they have done this before.

What else brother? Fedor asked.

They are reptilian in nature as the reports said... but there is something different about them.

What do you mean different Dnom? Danny asked as he was listening in on Dnom and Fedor’s Mindvoice connection.

Their skin appears scaly like my own, but it is also similar to your skin Daniel. Dnom answered.

Similar to ours in what way? Danny asked confused.

Supple and not as rigid as normal scales would be. Darker in color as well. They have clawed hands and feet, and they move with a hunch in their gait, but it seems natural to them. Dnom explained.

Danny looked at Fedor. “Scales. Hunch in their gait. Dark color. What does that equate to you?” He asked.

Fedor met his eyes. “A species built for conflict.”

Danny nodded. “My thoughts too.”

Fedor looked skyward. Dnom... land a hundred meters behind us and wait. The sun is coming up brother and I don’t want you caught in the sky above.

I will be waiting. Dnom answered.

Fedor lifted his A4 and sighted down the scope towards the beach. Their position did not give them a clear view of the beach, only the thin treeline surrounding it. Fedor could make out half a dozen large vessels that were stationary just off the shore and flashes of movement in the water.

“Left Fedor. Forty-five degrees from that double trunk tree.” Danny’s voice whispered softly and Fedor shifted his scope.

Fedor’s heart began beating much faster than normal as he saw what his Uncle was looking at. “Sibfla!” His hissed softly.

“Ugly fuckers aren’t they.” Danny spoke. “And watch your language boy.”

Fedor lifted his eyes and looked at his Uncle with a sarcastic gaze before bringing his eye back to his scope. “Sharp boney protrusions from their heads. Bone plate covering half their face. Large eyes.”

“Yep. Ugly.” Danny spoke. “He’s the leader.”

Fedor focused his scope on the alien who appeared to be doing all the shouting and giving orders. His arm was pointing in different directions and then dozens of the creatures would sprint off.

“He’s sending flanking teams Uncle.” Fedor spoke quickly.

Danny nodded. “He sure is.” Dan answered. “And you don’t send flanking teams unless you plan on attacking a target.”

“That is the general disposition of forces.” Fedor spoke.

Danny glanced at Fedor. “Stay calm boy. Remember your training. And keep your psychic shield with Dnom in place. Anything happens to you and your father and mothers will cook my nor if I live.”

“I... I am frightened Uncle.” Fedor stammered looking at him.

Danny nodded. "Good. Me too. It will keep us sharp. Just remember who you are. Let the fear flow through you but not control you Fedor. Just like your father and I taught you and your sister. You get into a bind... you send Dnom to the sky, you shift and haul ass!" Fedor took a deep breath and nodded his head.

"I won't leave you." Fedor said.

"Leave me?" Danny spoke. "Sibfla boy... I'll be right behind you!" Fedor couldn't help but grin. "Just imagine you are chasing Iama's ass. That will get your blood pumping. She's got a tight little ass."

"She is an upaee!" Fedor spat.

Danny nodded and sighted through his scope. "Yep! But she is an upaee with a fine ass! Makes you wonder what you could do with that tail of hers too."

"Bah!" Fedor spat softly. "She would probably still be calling me man child or boy prince or something like that! I don't know what I did to piss her off, but she is beginning to annoy me something fierce."

Danny looked at him. "Yep! That's how it starts!"

"How what starts?" Fedor asked.

Danny shifted on the ground. "Uh-oh... here they come." He spoke.

Fedor looked at him. "Uncle... we still don't know if they are hostile. Perhaps they think we are the enemy."

Danny looked at him. "Well shit... you want to stand up and fucking ask them?" Fedor met his eyes for a moment and then rose to his feet exposing himself. "Fuck! Fedor what...?"

Fedor drew his K12 from the holster on his right thigh and fired a single shot into the air, the echo of the discharge reverberating through the trees and hills. He made sure his weapon was pointed skyward so as to appear as less threatening as possible. The single shot had the desired effect as all of the creatures that they could see, including the leader, came to abrupt halts and dove for whatever cover they could find. Fedor stepped higher on the log.

"We are not hostile!" He bellowed down the ridge, his keen wolf eyes seeing many heads looking in his direction. "We are Spartans from the Lycavorian Union and we come in peace!"

Danny looked at him from the ground. "We come in peace? What the nubous is that?" He exclaimed.

Fedor looked down at him. "I saw it in an old Earth movie that Eirene and I watched last week. It was quite good." Fedor spoke. "The villain speaks these words just before he kills his victims."

"Christ... Marty's got to keep you away from the Vid Room." Danny gasped.

They could hear shouting coming from below and Danny peeked around the side of the log he was still hidden behind. "What are they doing?" He asked.

Fedor shook his head. "It appears my presence has confused them I think." He answered. "They..."

A single booming shot rang out and Fedor was thrown backwards.

"Fuck!" Danny nearly screamed as he scrambled to where Fedor now rolled onto his back his eyes wide. "Fedor! Fedor!"

Fedor looked at his Uncle grimacing in pain. "Oh... Uncle Daniel." He hissed. "That... that hurt!"

Danny looked at him wide eyed and then watched as he moved his hands away from the impact point in his upper chest. Danny watched as the single rifle slug fell away from the outside of the Mark IV ArmorPly leaving a medium sized dent in the armor. His heart nearly fell from relief. "No shit it hurt! You just got shot! Have you lost your nubous mind?" Danny barked. "What the fuck was that?"

Fedor began to push himself up. "I think... I think I have just confirmed their intention." He said reaching for his A4.

"No shit! What was your first clue?" Danny exclaimed.

Fedor looked up at him with a smile but that smile faded quickly when he saw one of the creatures rise above the log they had been using for cover, the strange looking weapon leveled at his Uncle's back.

Danny saw Fedor's eyes change instantly, saw his whole body tense and felt his scent spike off the charts. He didn't have time to react as Fedor grabbed his Uncle's shoulder pulling him to the side, his other hand bringing the A4 up in the same motion. Three shots rang out and Danny turned just in time to see the creature's skull explode into a mass of red and gray as all three rounds impacted his oversized head and punched right through the boney plate. Danny's would be the first of two lives Fedor Leonidas would save this day, and it would begin to build him a reputation of respect and honor that would carry him well into the future. It would also show one individual that perhaps he was not a child after all.

“Shit!” Danny barked as he rolled away and scrambled back to the log, Fedor beside him. He risked a glance over the log this time and could see the dozens of creatures dashing among the trees below. “They’re on the move!” He snapped.

“Father did say not to engage them until they engage us.” Fedor spoke. “I am reasonably sure we have established their intent and they did shoot me.”

“Fucking smart ass!” Danny spat. “No one is going to doubt whose son you are after this! Let’s stir the nest shall we?”

Both Danny and Fedor thrust their bodies around either end of the log and began to unload carefully placed shots downrange. The scopes on their weapons provided a Virtual Aim Assist and bodies began to fly. Martin’s voice began to echo in their ear pieces demanding a report and Fedor tapped his jaw quickly.

“MedwanGai... we are rather busy at the moment!” He snapped as he took another of the creatures through the chest and watched as his body flew back from the force of the 12.7mm kinetic round.

“I ordered not to engage unless they fired on us boy!” Martin shouted from his location.

“They did fire on us.” Fedor spoke. “I have the dent in my armor to prove it!”

“What? You’re hit?” Martin screamed. “Danny?”

Danny rolled to the side behind the log. “Yeah! Yeah! We come in fucking peace!” He shouted. “Not now! We’re busy!” Danny ended the conversation and looked at Fedor. “Time to go boy!”

“I agree.” Fedor stated.

“Get to chasing that ass!” Danny barked. “I’m right behind you!”

Fedor didn’t hesitate and in a silver/white flash of light the large dark blond wolf took his place. Almost three feet at the shoulder, Fedor was impressive in wolf form and his dark eyes watched as his Uncle shifted into an even larger black/brown colored wolf. Then the two wolves were kicking up dirt and leaves as their large paws propelled them with incredible speed back towards their encampment.

Iama turned from where she was positioned behind the large crates as Julie came up to her. “What is wrong?” She gasped. “What was that shooting?”

Julie shook her head. “They fired on Danny and Fedor!” She gasped. “Fedor was hit! I don’t know after that!”

“I told you!” Iama barked. “I should have gone with him! I...” Iama stopped talking as the large shadow swooped over them and Dnom settled to the ground in a rustle of air and dirt. She turned her head to look in the direction he had come from and her eyes grew wide when she saw the huge body of the dark blond furred wolf leaping directly at her over the crate. Three steps behind him was the even larger black/brown colored wolf following suit. Iama ducked down as Fedor leaped over the top of her and the crates and she whirled around to watch as they both skidded to stops and then two silver/white flashes of light later Danny and Fedor returned to their normal forms.

Julie rose to her feet. “Danny!”

“Start them out of here Jules!” Danny barked. “They’re flanking us on two sides and they got us outnumbered four to one!”

“What happened?” Julie demanded.

“We tried to communicate with them Jules and apparently they didn’t appreciate Fedor’s special introduction.” Danny spoke with a small amount of humor. Iama couldn’t believe his tone of voice. He acted as if nothing was happening around them. “They popped him in the chest.”

Julie looked at Fedor as he checked his weapon. “You’re hit?” She barked.

Fedor pointed at his armor. “It did not penetrate my armor.” He spoke. “I am fine. We need to leave Aunt Julie! Now!”

Julie glanced at Danny when she heard that command tone in Fedor’s voice and a look of acknowledgement and wisdom passed between her and Danny. A look that told her Fedor was everything Marty was in the leadership department.

Iama was still in shock at what she had seen. The boy prince was very large in wolf form, larger than most Lycavorians she had seen on the ARC ROYAL with the exception of the King himself and the transition between his forms had happened much more quickly than she had seen the others do. She glared at him however and finally rose to her feet and moved up to them. "I told you I should have come with you!" She popped at Danny.

"And you would be dead!" Fedor barked at her. "You have no armor!"

"They would not have shot at me fool boy!" Iama snapped.

"This is no time for arguments!" Danny snarled. "We have three minutes tops before they are on us! Get everyone moving Iama! Head them to the Loading Site! Go!"

Iama glared Fedor for a moment longer and then turned to run across the camp towards the primary defensive outpost.

"I will pack the COM gear and load it on Dnom!" Fedor spoke quickly before moving off.

Julie looked at Danny then stepping up to him. "Danny?" She asked softly.

Danny looked at her after changing his magazine. "He saved my bacon Jules." He told her seriously. "Popped one of those fuckers in the head just as he was about to shoot me in the back. Three round burst center mass of the ugly fucker's head. He didn't hesitate or blink."

Julie's eyes turned to watch Fedor's back as he moved towards the COM tent. "Another Leonidas son. Another leader." She said softly.

"Fucking A." Danny said. "We're gonna need them too." He looked around. "Tony here yet?"

Julie nodded. "Set up at the Primary." She said.

"These fuckers are fast and shifty Jules." Danny said as they began walking quickly. "If they get in the perimeter they'll be all over us. Make sure we get the crew out before they get here."

Julie nodded. "On it." She said before taking off at a sprint.

Danny tapped his jaw. "Marty?" He spoke.

"Danny... what the fuck is going on fervon?" He barked immediately.

"I'm sending our people to you Marty." Danny told him as he walked quickly toward the primary defensive position. "They'll be moving fast. These things are fast and they ain't happy to see us. Fedor took one in the chest but his armor saved him. Then he turned around and saved my life fervon. He's loading the COM gear. We're coming at ya fast and heavy brother."

"We'll be ready." Martin told him and Danny could hear the relief in his voice that they were ok.

LOAD SITE

"SHOT!" For'mya screamed as she looked up from the co-pilot's seat and listened to Martin in her implant.

"He's not hurt!" Martin exclaimed. "They're moving here now!"

"MedwanGai... he was shot!" Eirene protested as they were all connected into the same channel. "We must go to him!"

"They are evacuating now Eirene!" Martin hissed. "They'll be here in minutes."

"No! I must got to him!" Eirene insisted.

"Eirene don't... Eirene!"

For'mya glanced out of her cockpit side window frantically and saw her golden haired daughter motioning furiously with her arm. She saw a flash of light green scales and then Kdan was tearing in front of the cockpit lifting into the air. In a silver/white flash of light Eirene shifted into a golden furred female wolf and was speeding off into the timber, Miseo easily keeping pace with her using his inbred feline speed.

"Oh... that ain't good!" Endith stated as she watched what For'mya saw.

"Nubou!" For'mya roared as she tore at her helmet. "Endy..."

"Go!" Endith snapped waving her hand. "Go!"

For'mya Leonidas was a pilot by trade, one of the finest in the Union, but what few people knew about her was that she had become an exceptionally skilled fighter as well. Daily sessions with Aricia and Isabella and Dysea had honed her combat skills to razor sharpness. Hours upon hours of instruction by Martin and Aricia had also turned her, Anja and Dysea into true Alpha female wolves. As graceful as they were beautiful in wolf form and just as lethal. Before hitting the end of the ramp For'mya had shifted into the large female wolf and was sprinting after her daughter and Miseo into the timber.

Martin reached the end of the ramp just as her tail vanished into the timber. He had sprinted to the STRIKER in order to stop her from doing what she had just done and he shook his head as he skidded to a halt.

“Shit!” He swore long and loud. “No one fucking listens to me anymore!” He tapped his jaw. “Pablo!” “Here Skipper!”

“Up top Pablo! Unpack and launch G.O.D!” Martin snapped.

“Thirty seconds boss!” Pablo replied and Martin saw his form dash for the STRIKER from the side and disappear into the interior.

“You kill anything that gets close to my family Pablo! You hear me?” Martin snarled.

“Consider it done Skipper!” Pablo answered.

Torma! Isheeni! Get airborne and down to the beach! Make sure more of these assholes aren't coming and take out those ships. Aricia, Aurith go after For'mya! Arzoal, Iriral, Helen and Dysea... get the other adolescents on the KADENS now! Martin fired off the orders rapid fire. And god damn it... everyone better start listening to me or I'm going to become real agitated!

You're always agitated lover! Anja quipped.

You... just get the damn people loaded Red! Martin hissed. We are not set up to engage in an all out battle with a bunch of reptilian looking goons!

I'm on it! Anja answered without a sarcastic comment, realizing by his tone that Martin was very upset about not being able to engage in the fight. She knew he hated to be out of the action.

PROCESSING SITE

“Dnom go!” Fedor shouted as he secured the final duffle of gear on Dnom’s back. “Drop it at the Load site and get back here quickly!”

Dnom trumpeted out his answer and lifted off into the sky.

Fedor turned and began sprinting for the primary defensive position. He leaped and careened over the stacked crates and landed next to his Uncle on the ground. Julie squatted next to Kenny with Iama beside Tony and looking over the top of the crates with wide eyes. “COM gear is secure and gone.” He spoke.

Daniel nodded his head. “Good job Mandri.” He stated. He looked at the ground and Tony reached over and slapped Fedor on the shoulder.

“You done good boy.” Tony spoke.

Iama looked back quickly. “If not for him we would not be in this position!” She snapped at Fedor with angry green eyes.

Danny stabbed his knife into the ground. “Ok... enough! They’re coming from both flanks and head on. Tony... you and Iama got left flank; Kenny and Julie right flank. Fedor and I will cover the front. They go down pretty easy but they’re fast as shit. Once they get close enough to our perimeter the right flank will have to close with the main body because of the cliff. That’s when we cut loose with the PGPs! We need to give our people at least five minutes to load out and extract.”

“They could go around us to the west!” Iama spoke quickly.

Fedor shook his head looking upward in the direction she had indicated. “The ridge to the northwest impedes their movement.” He spoke. “They do not seem to like the thick timber for they are avoiding it in their drive towards us.”

Danny nodded. “And the east is a straight drop of two hundred meters or more.” He said. “No... Fedor is right... they’re going to come straight at us with tight flanks.”

“How many did you tag?” Kenny asked.

Danny shook his head. “Twenty... maybe twenty-five.” He spoke. “We...” Danny looked up as he saw the flash of movement coming from the loading area and suddenly Eirene’s wolf form came into view, Miseo keeping pace with her. Just behind them Danny saw For'mya and Aricia in their wolf forms and then the three women were shifting their forms and skidding to halts behind the defensive crates, Miseo landing smoothly next to Julie. Danny grinned at them. "Welcome to the party!" He exclaimed.

For'mya and Eirene ignored him as they moved directly to where Fedor sat.

"Fedor?" Eirene gasped.

"I am fine sister!" Fedor complained. "You and mother should not have come. It is not safe!"

"You were shot!" For'mya exclaimed as her hands began to roam over his upper body and finding the dent in his Mark IV easily. The material was already beginning to return to its original shape. "Don't tell me about safe!"

Fedor took her hands. "Mother! I am fine!" He said.

"I told you to be careful!" For'mya snapped at him.

Iama snorted. "See?" She hissed. "It is the act of a child to not listen to his mother!"

Aricia's azure eyes went to Iama and her pureblood nose kicked in. Her eyes grew slightly wider as she realized that Iama's scent reeked of attraction to Fedor. She glanced at Danny. "Daniel?"

Danny nodded. "Yeah... I know. Not something we can worry about now though."

Aricia tilted her head slightly. "Kdan and Aurith say they are moving closer. A hundred meters. They can burn the trees."

Danny nodded. "Do it!" He hissed. "Fedor... take your sister, Miseo and your mother with you and jump to the next position. Aricia will cover the front with me."

For'mya looked at him. "Daniel... how many?" She asked.

Dan met her gaze. "Too many for us to do anything other than hold for two minutes and then run like hell! Two minutes people. Then haul ass!"

The strange screams began as two Firespitter dragons swept in over the western side of the position and cut loose with searing streams of flame directly into the thin timber and setting dozens of the creatures ablaze instantly.

Whatever they were, they came at them with little regard for their own lives. The PGPs had a store of three hundred rounds per gun and the 20mm chain guns could fire it all in a matter of seconds. This they did, in short controlled bursts that chopped the creatures into hamburger. When the guns ran dry nearly two hundred of them lay scattered about the treeline. The creatures burst over the top of their fallen brethren then, horrible screeches filling the air as they began to rush the defensive positions.

"They are insane!" Miseo screamed as he let loose with a long sustained burst that brought four of the creatures down.

"Thirty seconds!" Danny's voice filled their implants.

Eirene reloaded her K14 KM and began firing around the side of the crate, picking her shots like her mother. "They are almost on us!" She shouted.

Fedor dropped back down after emptying his A4 and ejected his magazine, ramming home a new one. He glanced at his mother. "Medwaw!" He barked watching as she slammed another magazine into the spare A4 that Julie had tossed her.

"Down to one mag!" For'mya announced before rising slightly and beginning to pick her shots with relentless fortitude. Anger gripped For'mya, for these creatures had shot her son, no matter that he was unhurt.

Fedor turned and was about to lift over the crates when he saw one of the creatures make an unbelievable jump and land on the crate just above Julie who was reloading. His eyes grew wide as the creature let out an unearthly screech and the boney plate covering half its face split open to reveal rows of tiny sharp teeth and what could only be a tongue of some sort that was easily fifteen or sixteen inches long. The creature reached down and grabbed Julie by her head, that tongue snapping out to graze her cheek and trying to force its way into her mouth. Julie's eyes went wide, but she was a seasoned soldier in every respect.

"Fuck!" She screamed reaching up and grabbing the tongue like appendage and ripping her hands downward.

The appendage gave way easily enough and tore free from its roots showering both her and Danny with sickly looking pasty white blood. As the creature roared out its agony Danny lifted his A4 and shot it four times in the head flipping the creature back off the crate and three meters back.

“Fuck this! That thing just tried to tongue fuck me!” Julie screamed. “Let’s get the fuck out of here!”

“They are around us!” Tony roared as he laid down a withering field of fire with the Mini-Gatlin Laser. “They are breaking for our people!”

“There’s too many!” Miseo echoed.

“Pull back!” Danny shouted. “Move! They’ll catch the last of our people if we don’t go now! Evac! Evac!”

Fedor looked at his mother. “Mother go! Eirene too!” He barked. “Miseo and I will cover you as we follow!”

“Fedor you...” For'mya began to protest.

“Mother... go now!” Fedor screamed at her his dark eyes determined and unquestioning.

Eirene could feel the resolve of her brother and the command tone of his voice and she quickly dashed to where their mother squatted. She grabbed For'mya’s hand knowing her brother would not fail and knowing that For'mya had heard the inflection of his voice as well. His confidence filled her as well and she yanked on her mother’s arm. “Medwaw we must go! Now!”

For'mya met her eyes and saw the concern for her and she swore to herself. She should have seen it coming weeks ago in the way they acted with her. They would not leave her in danger and they would face down any enemy in order to protect her. For'mya saw it in Eirene’s eyes and it was so very evident in Fedor’s eyes. They would die before allowing her to come to harm ever again. She gripped Eirene’s hand and nodded. “Right behind us!” She screamed at Fedor.

Fedor nodded. “I have no desire to stay and entertain mother!” He shouted back coming to his knees and beginning to cut loose with his A4 as Miseo moved up beside him and together they began to mow down more of the creatures.

Two silver/white flashes and then For'mya and Eirene were tearing away in wolf form, their paws barely touching long enough to leave a print as they ran downhill.

Fedor! Dnom’s voice echoed in his head.

Fedor looked skyward. Burn in front of us brother! He barked out. As hot as you can make it!

“Fedor now!” Danny screamed at his nephew and Fedor nodded.

Miseo grabbed his arm with one hand. “Now Fedor!” He snapped as Dnom came in a hundred meters in front of them and his stream of flame set a dozen of the creatures ablaze while laying down a line of fire in front of his retreating Bonded Brother.

Fedor rose up and nodded. “Go! Go!” He exclaimed as he pushed Miseo ahead of him.

Miseo didn’t hesitate and began to sprint away, Fedor digging in his combat boots and beginning to follow. He saw his Uncle and the Master Chief tearing away from their position as well as he ran and he was just about to shift into wolf form when he noticed Iama scrambling around the ground near her body as if she was looking for something. Fedor’s eyes grew wide as he saw two of the creatures leap over the line of flame Dnom had laid and land on the crates. Iama whirled around and screamed as one leaped down upon her.

“Iama! NO!” Fedor screamed his eyes wide.

Savage fury gripped Fedor Leonidas then and with a howl of unbridled rage he ran straight for where the creature was now beating his arms down upon an obviously stunned Iama. Fedor had no idea what came over him, but he allowed the rage to engulf him and his wolf eyes burned with hatred as he ran. When he reached ten meters from where she was Fedor Leonidas leaped into air and was shifting before he had even fully left the ground.

For'mya and Eirene were racing side by side down the ridge, almost identical in size and color. Their powerful hind muscles propelled them at great speed, so fast that they were closing on a group of five creatures who had managed to get around behind them and were chasing the slowest members of the Processing Group that were running for the Landing Zone. For'mya quickly spied the running figures of three females and two male elves who were trying to keep them between them.

Mother! Eirene screamed out within Mindvoice.

I see them! For'mya barked.

We will not reach them in time! Eirene rasped as her paws dug harder into the ground trying to go faster.

Faster Eirene! Shift just before we reach them and use your weapons! For'mya shouted out as she dug her paws in harder and moved faster.

Even as they ran they were witness to two of the creatures dragging down two elven females from behind. Even though they struggled and screamed trying to beat the creatures off, Eirene and For'mya watched in horror as the bone plates on both creatures lifted, exposing those small teeth and tongue like appendages. Those tongue appendages shot out amazingly fast and plunged into the open mouths of the two females. The creatures faces drew close as their tongues bulged the necks of the women as they were shoved deep into their throats. Filled with horror and anger For'mya began shifting even as those tongues began to move and For'mya could see bulges constrict the female's throats as if something was being pumped into their stomachs. They were nearly inert now, quivering as the creatures continued to plunge those tongues into their throats. Her eyes detected two creatures bring down one of the males in front of them, but For'mya was already committed.

For'mya and Eirene were shifting before they even came to complete stops. As she took her elven form, For'mya was reaching for her K14. When she got within three feet she lifted the weapon and fired four times point blank into the creatures head. The impact of the rounds tossed the creatures off the elven female, its tongue appendage whipping out from between her lips as his body flew back. For'mya pumped three more rounds into the disgusting animal before dropping beside the elf female who was holding her throat and gasping for air.

Eirene shifted back and simply stepped up to the creature atop the female and grabbed its head in anger. She twisted violently, using all of her inbred elven and wolf strength and the creatures neck could be heard popping in the forest. Eirene wrenched even harder, yanking its body off the elven female, its own teeth biting through its tongue in place. Eirene didn't hesitate or watch as the body flew to the side and she bent over the elf female and grabbed the slimy appendage, tearing it out of the elf's mouth and throat and hearing her gasp for air and begin coughing.

"Mother!" Eirene screamed out as she helped the female get to her feet. "We have to help them!"

For'mya looked up and saw the last creature had caught the third female elf. "Get her to the Landing Zone Eirene!" For'mya barked back.

"Mother... the others are..."

"Your father and mother will save the others!" For'mya snapped as she bent down and began to haul the elf female to her unsteady feet.

Eirene's eyes shifted and grew wide as she saw the massive black shape racing towards them through the trees. Eirene had seen her MedwanGai in wolf form before on the ARC ROYAL during their lessons, his majestic size and power always captivating to her and Fedor. She had never seen him in his wolf form and moving as he was now however. His speed was unlike anything she had ever seen, his massive paws propelling him forward but seemingly never touching the ground. His raven black fur was glossy and shiny with health and even now she could see the riveting muscles bunched and tightly corded within his chest and hind quarters as he ran. With a howl of savagery the likes of which she had never witnessed Martin fell on the two creatures that had brought the man down. One was about to stab his tongue forward into the man's throat when a four inch wide paw smashed across his reptilian face and black, razor like claws removed the lower half of his head in a single swipe. His tongue appendage included. Eirene watched with adoring love as her MedwanGai skidded to a stop, turned instantly using his bushy tail, reared up on his hind legs and shifted back to his human form.

The second creature hissed evilly at her father and leaped towards him. Eirene stared in unabashed awe as her father simply stood there and reached out with his hand, freezing the creature in mid-leap within the grips of his Etheric power.

"These are my people motherfucker!" Martin screamed in anger, spittle flying from his lips. "And you can't have them!"

Martin's left hand rose and a shimmering psychic diamond appeared instantly. He then launched the psychic diamond from only sixteen inches away from the creatures face, its tongue flapping wildly in the air between them trying to reach her father. The psychic diamond struck the creature just below its large eyes and blew its head into oblivion. With a simple wave of his hand Martin tossed the creature aside and released it from its Etheric prison. The body sailed through the air to smash against a large tree as he knelt next to the elf male. Another flash of movement and Eirene saw a smaller raven wolf leap through the air and land upon the fifth creature who had injected its tongue appendage into the last female's throat. Aricia Leonidas was just as capable and even faster when in wolf form. She was the largest of Martin's Queens when she was a wolf, now easily a hundred and sixty pounds of muscle and teeth. Aricia was also the most feral and unforgiving of her mothers when she wanted to be Eirene knew.

And that was right now.

She tore open the creature's chest with her talons without hesitation, hearing it howl and begin to rise. As it did Aricia slashed down with her right paw and severed the creature's tongue from its mouth, drawing even more howls of agony. She leaped away to land and then shifted into her human form, the psychic knife exploding from her clenched right fist. She didn't hesitate and stepped up to the dazed creature and drove the psychic knife into its skull until her knuckles met its skin. She twisted her fist and Eirene watched the creature's body go rigid as Aricia solidified the psychic knife in the monster's head. She yanked her arm free quickly, leaving a gaping and smoking hole in the skull of the misshapen monstrosity, spit on the body of the creature and turned immediately to the elven female.

Martin had pulled the man to his feet and turned to For'mya and Eirene as they rushed up with their two elven females. "Get to the loading area!" He shouted. "Take them! Go!" He screamed. "I'll cover the rear!" He looked at the elf man and handed him his A4. "Go with them and cover them."

The man nodded quickly. "Thank... thank you Milord!" He gasped as his hands tightened on the weapon.

"From now on, all of us go armed!" Martin told him and the man nodded.

"That seems to be the prudent course of action sire." He stated breathing heavy in a combination of fear and adrenalin.

"Get moving! Go!" Martin spoke as his eyes turned and he found Aricia some hundred meters distant.

Daniel, Fedor and the others were right behind us Beloved! She snapped out in Mindvoice.

Saaurano... have Anja check them when they get back! Martin told her. Something about these fucking things has me worried.

Aricia nodded. I saw it as well.

I'll wait for Danny and the others. Go.

Aricia didn't question him and helped the elf female to her feet and began heading back to the Landing Zone.

Martin looked into the distance and saw more wolf shapes moving nimbly towards him. He began moving towards them. "C'mon Fedor my boy." He whispered as he shifted back into wolf form and began to sprint.

Iama was in trouble and she knew it.

The creature had stunned her when he leaped upon her, her head banging into the ground with enough force to bring stars to her eyes. She had enough presence of mind to roll onto her back and then she saw the foul monster on top of her, its mouth opening and she saw the tongue appendage. Her green eyes grew wide and her hands snapped up to try and hold the creature back by its shoulders as she realized what the disgusting beast wanted to do.

"No!" She screamed. "No!"

The beast used its hands to slam down on her arms, the pain shooting through her limbs and she could only withstand two blows before her arms gave out and she screamed in pain. With a roar of approval the beast reared back its head and its tongue shot forward with dazzling speed.

"NO!" Iama screamed knowing what was coming and suddenly unable to act. Iama did not want to be assaulted by this beast. This putrid monster. She had suffered too much in her life to reach this point. Been tossed aside so casually by so many. Tolerated too many foul monsters of her own species that had forced themselves on her for her to accept some reptile looking beast to have her. Iama also didn't believe she was going to survive this encounter or have the strength to fight for long so she did the only thing she could think of. With a last surge of strength she heaved upwards with her hips trying to throw the creature off in the hopes that she could free herself enough to begin running.

That is when she heard the savage growl and she saw him.

A flash of dark blond fur and corded muscles, and then a silver/white flash of light and Fedor Leonidas was there. Only one thing popped into her mind at that moment and that was he had come back for her. Iama watched with wide green eyes as Fedor's hand snatched out and caught the creature's tongue centimeters before it would have plunged down Iama's throat. With a savage cry of anger Fedor ripped upwards and the tongue tore free from its roots, showering both of them with white pasty blood. As the creature roared in pain Fedor grabbed its head in his large hands and physically ripped it off Iama before tossing it several meters away. The creature was fast as it righted itself and landed on its feet, its bloody mouth opening again to let out a screech of rage. Iama watched with awe then as Fedor Leonidas reached up to the strange bandolier he wore across his body and suddenly a slim and lethal looking knife was in his hand. In that same instant Fedor's arm snapped out with blinding speed and the knife covered the distance to the creature in the blink of an eye, striking it in the eyeball. The force of the thrown knife flipped the creature over backwards, landing on its belly.

Fedor turned and was reaching for Iama. "Time to go!" He screamed.

Iama's mind cleared instantly at the tone of his voice and she was scrambling to her feet. "My pad!" She cried out. "I dropped my pad!"

Fedor looked at her and even in the midst of the blood and gore all around them Iama shivered as those beautiful wolf eyes fell on her. "You are not worth losing over some fucking data pad!" He screamed at her grabbing her arm. "Let's go!" He pushed her towards the evac point. "Go!"

Iama, still surprised at his actions, broke into a run just as Fedor looked down and saw a glint of metal. He reached down and snatched the data pad from under the dusting of dirt beneath where she had been laying and rose back up to see three creatures sprinting after Iama. With a howl of rage he shifted once more and was sprinting after Iama. He closed quickly on the closest creature, taking note that Iama had unwrapped her tail from around her waist as this allowed her to move with incredible speed and agility. He leaped, his right front paw smashing into the head of the closest creature and crushing his skull with a sickening sound. As his paws hit the ground again he was running, digging his paws in lightly, propelling himself with his hind legs just as his MedwanGai had taught him and Eirene. His wolf eyes were mindful of everything around him as he came up on the second creature and jumped once more, stopping only long enough to drive the monster to the ground and rake his hind claws across its back. He didn't break stride as the creature howled and squirmed on the ground.

Iama knew the creature was just behind her and it would be upon her before she could get to the safe area. With a burst of determination and anger for a reason she didn't understand, she whirled around to face the monster just as it leaped to fall upon her. Iama's tail snapped up and with vicious precision it wrapped around the creature's arm and wrenched to the side, slamming the smaller beast to the ground beside her. Iama fell on the monster with a scream of rage, pummeling it with her fists. Iama's Juturi was not weak by any means, she was a Kavalian after all, and her blows were incredibly painful and the fourth one shattered the creature's jaw and one side of its face. As she raised her arm to land another blow, Fedor was shifting in front of her while still running. His powerful arm reached out and snatched her up as he ran by without breaking his strike or slowing down. Iama was only five foot four and barely over a hundred pounds while Fedor Leonidas was easily six foot one and two hundred plus pounds. As she felt his arm close around her waist, Iama instantly released her tail from around the creature's and let Fedor's momentum carry her back. With all the grace of her feline nature, she scrambled up and over his back and her feet came down on the ground beside him in a running motion. What she didn't realize was that she had not released his hand in the entire motion and she gripped it tightly even as they ran.

Fedor let his nose guide them, his MedwanGai's strong mint smell easily pulling him forward. In seconds he saw his father in the treeline, his eyes watching them and waving his arm frantically as he stood beside his Uncle Danny. In another fifty meters they were beside him and they skidded to a halt.

"What the fuck!" Martin screamed at him. "You stop to sight see boy!"

"No time to scold him now!" Danny barked. "Let's di di mau! Like right fucking now!"

They looked behind Fedor and saw more of the creatures running through the timber towards them.

“Sibfla! Move!” Martin shouted grabbing Fedor and shoving him toward the Landing Zone.

Fedor looked behind them as well and saw what had to be dozens of the creatures closing on them. “Shit!” He exclaimed pulling Iama with him as they began to run again.

“There!” Aricia screamed from the rear of the STRIKER’s ramp as she saw them running across the huge clearing where they had set up the Loading Zone. Aricia’s azure blue eyes grew wide when she saw dozens of those creatures burst out of the treeline just behind them. “Pablo! Now!” She screamed.

“Got it!” His voice filled her implant. “G.O.D. is on station!”

Aricia looked up into the sky at the sound of a heavy gun report and she saw the remote guided gun platform move into sight. The Guided Ordnance Delivery platform was mounted with a mini fifty caliber cannon and atmospheric thrusters. The God Gun Platform as it had been named was the result of a tinkering job by Julie and Collin in their off time. It was only two meters tall and one meter long but it was a devastating piece of armament. There were three of them on each STRIKER and everyone could operate them easily, Pablo just seemed to have a special knack for it. Aricia watched with satisfaction as Pablo brought the God Platform low to the ground, barely above the heads of her beloved Martin and the others and the mini chain cannon began to spit concentrated death, mowing down the foul creatures in droves as they burst from the treeline.

Aricia turned back towards the cockpit. “Endy! For'mya! Take off now!” She shouted, though her implant transferred the directive in a more subdued tone.

The surge of the engines told Aricia they had heard her and the STRIKER began to rise slowly off the ground just as Fedor and Iama reached the edge of the ramp. He scooped her up and literally tossed her the last five feet and she landed nimbly on the ramp just in front of him. Martin and Danny jumped off the ground as the STRIKER got to three meters height and they landed on the ramp easily just as Endy fed more power into the engines and they began to rise further. Iama stumbled forward as Fedor turned to look at his MedwanGai and Uncle. His eyes grew wide as two of the creatures landed on the ramp. They both screeched loudly, causing Martin and Danny to turn with Fedor, all of them pulling K12 KMs. One creature sent his tongue shooting out towards Martin.

Martin’s hand moved faster than could be followed and he grabbed onto the slimy tongue appendage before it got close to his mouth.

“Get off my fucking ride asshole!” Martin screamed before pulling the trigger. Danny and Fedor joined him and the two creatures were perforated with at least nine rounds apiece, their bodies flailing madly as the ramp continued to rise and tossed them about. Both fell dead, their pasty white blood staining the deck.

“They even smell bad!” Danny snarled.

“Kick their carcasses off my ship!” Martin growled as he reloaded his K12. “Endy... get us to five thousand feet and we’ll do an in-flight recovery of Torma and Isheeni over the water.”

“Will do!” Endith’s voice echoed in his ear implant. “Hell of a morning Skipper!”

“You got that right.” Martin answered. “Pablo... have God follow us out over the water and we’ll recover it then.

“Already moving bossman.” Pablo’s voice answered.

“Wait!” Anja called out as she moved back to the rear with them. “Don’t kick them out!” She barked. “Make sure they are fucking dead and then bag them Danny! Intact!”

Martin looked at her as she came up. “Red?”

“They injected several of our people with those tongue things lover and I want their bodies. I want their carcasses as base variables to make sure I find out if we are going to have problems.” Anja said.

“They ok?” Martin asked looking at the three elf females that had those tongues shoved down their throats. They were sitting on a bench; all of them still in shock had what had just happened.

Anja nodded her head. “They seem to be right now. I’m quarantining them when we get back aboard. I’ve already contacted Duewa to set it up. Just to be sure.”

Martin nodded and looked at Danny. “Do it!”

Anja turned to Fedor. “Take your armor off.” She ordered.

Fedor met her eyes. “Mother... they did not stick their tongue down my throat.” He said.

“You were shot igord!” Anja popped. “Take your armor off! I want to make sure nothing else besides your head is broken.”

Fedor grinned and saw his sister and mother moving towards them. Eirene didn't hesitate and walked right up to her brother and slugged him in the chest. “Reckless fool!” She yelled at him. “What were you thinking going back?”

Fedor glanced quickly to where Iama was now sitting on a bench and one of the medics was running a medical scanner over her. He turned back to his sister. “I... I had to go back.” He said. Eirene saw where his eyes went and she moved closer to him.

For'mya picked up on this right away and her dark eyes went to Martin. His gaze touched hers and he gave her a slight nod. For'mya took Fedor's arm then. “Let's get your armor off.” She stated.

“Mother... I can do it myself.” He complained.

For'mya met his gaze. “Just like you follow orders right?” She spoke sternly. “Your sister and I will make sure this time. Dnom is not happy with you either! You better talk to him before we reach the ARC ROYAL.”

Martin watched For'mya draw him to the side with Eirene and he stepped back to where Danny and Tony were rolling one of the creature's bodies over next to a body bag. “Danny?” He said softly.

Dan looked up from where he was squatting. “He saved my life fervon. He saved Iama by going back for her.” Danny told him knowing what Martin wanted to hear.

“You can smell why he went back for her.” Martin said.

Danny nodded. “Yeah... but what matters is he didn't hesitate. He tried to make contact and they shot him Martin. He's got ice in his veins Marty. Cool under fire no matter what. Sort of like your ugly ass, he's just better looking.”

Tony grunted. “Seems that runs in the family.” He spoke with a grin.

Danny looked over at Fedor. “You think he realizes why he went back for her?”

Martin shook his head. “I don't think he has a clue.” He answered. “I'll talk to him when we get back to the ship. Res and Arrarn had the same issue... and I'll need to let him know what's going on inside him.”

Danny nodded his head. “He done good Martin. He done real good. Eirene too. A lot better than most rookie's first time out.”

Martin looked back to where For'mya and Eirene were fawning over Fedor now and he nodded his head. “It's only the beginning.” He said turning back to them. He motioned to the dead creatures. “Cut that fuckers head off. Same with his partner. I don't want them waking up anytime soon. Anja can yell at me later.”

“Can we watch?” Tony asked with a smile.

Danny laughed. “It's always fun to watch Red chew you out. She does it so well.”

Martin couldn't help but laugh now as the adrenalin began to bleed off now that they were safe. He had some things to do when they returned and he needed to talk to Wayonn about them.

CHAPTER TWO

ANDROCLES LEONIDAS

CRANAE ISLAND

FEBRUARY 3, 2575

The sun was just beginning to creep over the horizon of the Laconia Gulf, a warm breeze sweeping in from the west and blowing across the large island owned by Androcles as men and women began to wake on the island itself and within the city of Gytheio across the inlet. Cranae Island was now home to two hundred and fifty Durcunusaan troops, most of them assigned to the island after the thwarted attack by the Eridiani OSG on the villa and its occupants. Jomann and the other detail heads that he had selected had hand picked all of the Durcunusaan, some of them coming from as far away as Apo Prime. They were taking no chances with the lives of their Crown Prince and Princesses, especially not now with the King so far away in parts unknown. This also applied to all of Androcles's brothers and sisters since, as Andro's Captain, Jomann now considered them his responsibility as well. Cranae Island was now a fortress unto itself and because of several innovative ideas of Jomann and others; the island had lost almost none of its exterior beauty. The white sandy beaches and timber was still present since all of the improvements had been built around the natural makeup of the island and this also insured the defenses were much harder to detect.

Sadi Leonidas sat on the couch in the main living room of the villa; her legs pulled under her firm bottom as she sipped a mug of Aricia's special coffee blend and alternately watched the Netnews channel with the volume down low and read from the data pad in her hand on the new STRIKER DT IIA Variant. She had been up for over an hour already, as she was never one to sleep late anyway, more so since she had become Andro's mate. Lu'ria and Carisia were with Lu'ria's mother Daba in Eden City for the last day of a three day trip and Ne'Veha had only risen a few moments ago and was in the shower. The Netnews was covering the Union military buildup that was underway in as much detail as they possibly could while also covering the few skirmishes that had taken place along the borders of the KFI and the Union. They were not large battles, mostly small units or special operations forces, but there was no mistaking that the Union was now at war. The mood of the men and women within the Union was not indifferent by any means. Countless interviews had been conducted across the Union by the many Netnews channels and almost overwhelmingly men and women were paying close attention to what was happening. They were also fully in support of Andro's actions by a ninety-six percent margin across the Union according to the last polls taken by Deia's office.

While the Netnews men and women were obviously unable to get specifics about the buildup, all of the channels were trying as hard as they could, even though the three owners and thousands of employees of the three corporations that the military conversion affected were not talking. Sadi knew the two men and one woman who owned those companies, thanks in part to her father's connections and while they were businessmen and women, they were also totally loyal to the Union. As were those who worked for them. They had come out of the slavery years under the High Coven with a special love for the Union and no matter what they had been asked over the last four thousand years, whether by Resumar, Deia or Martin, they had delivered upon without question. They were also tied to the original five bloodlines of Lycavorian people by marriages that lasted and endured even now. Sadi was aware that Ben worked with all of them on many things of a civilian nature, though none of them knew of the existence of Dreamland. The two men and one woman knew there was much Riyal in it for their companies as the Union government had no problems paying them to build their weapons or the items that improved the lives of everyone within the Union. Sadi knew of an agreement made with Andro's father that a small part of their profit from the Union be turned around and put back into the Union Social System. Those three companies donated more time, Riyal and resources to aide the needy than all remaining thirteen engineering companies within the Union combined. There would always be those who needed help; whether due to natural disaster or whatever circumstance, no one in the Union was denied the resources to help them get back on their feet. The Union Social System was carefully monitored so that no one abused the structure, but it was very rare to find someone who did not want to work for what they had. It was a matter of honor for a Lycavorian or elf and generally for all the species of the Union. Those men and women who came across the borders to squat and live off others, of any species, were quickly shown to the borders of the Union when it was discovered and unceremoniously kicked the hell out. They never lasted for more than a few weeks.

There were ten out of the hundred and nineteen Netnews channels that were completely devoted to following the Union Senate and the political situation that was always changing and these were the ones that Sadi Leonidas watched carefully. This morning Netnews Channel 39, a longtime opponent of Deia and then Martin and the Queen's policies, had been interviewing one politician after the other who had voted in opposition to declaring war on the KFI for their actions against the citizens of the Union. The same men and women who voted against Spartan Law. All told there were a hundred and twenty-seven of them, but Sadi was only concerned with the few who were not afraid to be outspoken about it.

Or what they felt about her, thanks to Ulana.

Sadi Leonidas was one hundred and thirty years old. She had experienced more and endured more in her short life than most young female wolves her age. Indeed, by the very nature of their people, she was in some ways still considered no more than a child because of her age. Regardless of the crimes she had been forced to commit and the sexual favors she had been coerced into performing while under the thumb of the High Coven and her vile step mother; that she had never stopped trying to protect her father and his reputation had earned her untold respect from many of the older Lycavorians and elves who valued family above all else. Much of what she had gone through was now public knowledge, only the parts deemed far too sensitive or private were kept as state secrets. None of that mattered to Sadi Leonidas in the least anymore, for the day she had looked into those azure colored eyes on the Royal Island; Sadi Leonidas had been hooked forever. Yes... she had denied it at times during the years they were apart, until Androcles had grown into a man, but it was always there and what a delicious man he had grown into. Just looking at him now could set her wolf blood to sizzling. Not only was he the most scrumptious man Sadi had ever seen or smelled physically but he was the most intelligent as well. He could carry on a conversation with scholars in one moment and cuss with the best of the soldiers in the next. He stimulated her mind just as completely as he stimulated her body. That wonderful feeling of belonging to him heart and soul and knowing that she commanded his heart and soul in return was something she could not put into words.

Sadi had been given her life back after the events of that night on the Royal Island of Apo Prime. Her father was once more safe from injury and false accusations and now thriving in his role as a civilian consultant to the military. Her vile step-mother and step-brothers were now rotting in prison somewhere for their crimes and Sadi was finally free of the years of High Coven manipulation. Over the ensuing twenty plus years after that night she finally discovered what freedom was like as she did what she wanted and when she wanted. She became a pilot and studied at the School of the Mages and finally she entered the Union Fleet Academy. No matter what she did or who she was with, her path had ultimately already been set in motion the moment she first saw him. After that it was simply a matter of living her life until the day when their lives would eventually come back together. And Sadi Leonidas was so very happy when it did.

The day Androcles Leonidas returned to her on the tarmac of that Durcunusaan base on Apo Prime, Sadi felt everything coming together into focus. He was so tall and powerful and he was all hers in every way. She resisted briefly... the difference in their ages making her hesitate for all of ten seconds. Then she learned that Androcles Leonidas's mind was far older than she would ever be and when he had shared that awareness with her their first night together Sadi had been convinced. When they found Carisia and then Ne'Veha and then Lu'ria, all within months of each other, the pieces rapidly fell together like the missing parts of a puzzle. Sadi knew at times that it bothered Andro that he had more than one wife and mate. He was trying to come out from under his father's shadow and having more than one mate was a well known signature of his father's. But in the end, like her, Andro could not deny the strong emotion and feelings he had for each of them or how powerfully they were drawn to one another.

Androcles was her life now. Her center. In her eyes, he was the most beautiful man that lived and none other could compare to him. It was no different for Carisia or Ne'Veha or Lu'ria. And no matter what had happened Sadi knew deep down that Caliria felt the same way no matter how far away she was. Sadi and the others had also been trying to understand what all of them had seen and felt during the Senate meeting some weeks back. The color of those eyes and the presence they had felt within their minds was powerful and it meshed within all of them so easily. They had talked of it with each other a few times these last weeks but with everything that was happening around them, all of them had decided to not try and determine what it all meant until they knew more. Sadi knew Andro almost as well as she knew herself. They all did. And he knew them just as intimately. There was only one who might know him better than they did and that was Elynth.

Androcles Leonidas was an open book to his mates and wives but he was an enigma to so many others. Yes... he was Crown Prince... but he had never considered himself anything other than a Spartan warrior. Like his father, he did not want power and he did go out of his way to seek power. He only wanted to love his mates and protect his people. He did not realize that this mentality is what endeared him and his father to so many men and women within the Union no matter what their species. The Gods had granted him complete awareness and the wisdom of three lifetimes while still within his mother's womb and he had been born fully cognizant of everything around him with Elynth acting as his only voice. It was something that even to this day no one could explain or understand. At times it was a burden that he and Elynth hated Sadi knew. To have the memories of three lives spanning thousands of years wrapped within their minds was stressful without a doubt. There were times when they would awake in the middle of the night because of some nightmare or the other. Andro would be soaked in sweat and within minutes Elynth would be screaming to the villa from the small cave like structure on the island that was hers and Anthar's and then they would be gone into the night sky, not returning until morning when they had either sorted out what the dream meant or pushed it far enough to the backs of their minds that it did not affect them. Then he would share it with his wives and mates. He held nothing back from any of them and they shared everything with him. Sadi knew it had become easier with the birth of his brother Dorian for he too had been blessed by the gods and been born fully aware and bonded to a dragon. Sadi had witnessed Andro, Dorian and their sister Zarah on several occasions these last weeks walking the beaches of Cranae island holding hands and talking within a Mindvoice connection that no one would ever be allowed to enter without the three of them agreeing. When Andro had saved her life as a child, allowing her to feed on his blood in the grips of the Blood Fever, Zarah had been granted a gift that only she and Andro understood. With the birth of Dorian they had someone to share that with.

This very introverted mentality that Andro had towards others is what caused many of the misconceptions about him Sadi knew. Those that were not a member of his family or close friends did not know him and could only guess at what went on in his mind. He was powerful without any question, physically and within Mindvoice, and many men and women whispered to themselves that one day he would surpass his father. Many also knew that he had a temper as well as a dark and sinister side to him. Many of the older male Spartan warriors who had been born and raised in Sparta and had endured the harshness of that life so long ago knew what it was. The calling of true Spartan wolf blood. Untainted and pure. Martin Leonidas accepted the darkness within him that came from his Spartan blood, though he did not often embrace it as his son did.

The first step in trying to lift that veil of secrecy that surrounded him, Andro had already taken by commandeering the Netnews briefing given by Senator Icho. That three hour glimpse into the life and mind of the Crown Prince of the Union had made everyone want more. And in wanting more of Androcles, they wanted more of his wives and mates. Sadi being the most interesting as far as they were concerned. It was a drawback of being Andro's wife, mate and Anome that Sadi was well aware of and accepted without question. Sadi Leonidas had become almost as popular as Androcles among the many older generations of Lycavorians and elves and Algolian people most of all. And with that fame came those who either did not like her or care for what her past involved and had taught her.

Senator Icho and Senator Ulana were the most well known among their ilk. They had tried to call into question Sadi's past and her association with the High Coven. They tried to push the fact that she had worked for the High Coven as a courier of sorts as the reason she should not be trusted, among other things. They never spoke of how she had been forced into this way of life or the circumstances behind it. They had tried to imply she had worked as some sort of whore for the High Coven as well, but that did not go far or very well. Speaking that outright in public would turn others against them, so they only whispered it in private. Sadi and Androcles had laid those questions to bed when, during that briefing; they addressed her past openly and honestly, leaving out only the most sensitive information. This had only added to the growing comparison between Sadi and Gorgo. Many of the older Spartans born and raised on Earth in Sparta and those who hailed from Apo Prime and other colonies saw Sadi as the reincarnation of Queen Gorgo. The intense compassion, the strength, the low key temper and the intelligence. The comparison made Sadi blush and become uncomfortable, but that is what people saw and felt about her. Gorgo did not help matters either by stimulating this thinking, but then again Sadi did not know that Gorgo felt the same things when she looked at Sadi and saw herself. It was definitely something that made her very proud.

When Icho and Ulana's initial ploy did not work, they began to try a different tact, calling into question Sadi's bloodline and questioning whether she should be Crown Princess based on her PCC levels and her long dead mother's bloodlines. Sadi knew the only reason Ulana was taking part in all this was because she was a spoiled, arrogant upaee who thought herself above everyone else. Ulana thought that the four or five months that she had dated Andro gave her rights to Androcles Leonidas and the position Sadi and the others held now held as Crown Princesses. Sadi had to laugh softly to herself at times, for if Androcles made love to Ulana with even a fraction of the staggering passion and intense devotion he had when making love to Sadi and the others, it was no wonder Ulana still wanted him. It was more than likely the best sex she had ever had. But Androcles belonged to her now, and to Ne'Veha and Carisia and Lu'ria and Caliria. Ulana didn't seem to understand she would never get him back and all she did when she tried was to piss off Sadi and the others and make herself look the fool.

Icho on the other hand; he was very different. Androcles and many others considered him an enemy agent for the Kavalians, with a completely different set of reasons for doing what he was doing. He was allowing Ulana to take the forefront of everything in order to make her the ultimate fall person. She got all of the Netnews coverage for the most part and unfortunately for herself, Ulana was too wrapped up within herself to see this. It only showed just how truly stupid she really was.

Sadi's jungle green eyes cut to the kitchen as Ne'Veha appeared in just a simple white lace bra and panties and a loose fitting, nearly transparent robe draped over that. Her long dark brown hair fell to the top of her exquisitely shaped ass cheeks now and her lush elven body had been honed to perfection along with Sadi's over the last few weeks by Carisia and Lu'ria in their private training sessions. As Sadi watched Ne'Veha, she allowed her jungle green eyes to wander over Ne'Veha's figure with carnal thoughts and desire. In Sadi's eyes Ne'Veha had the most delicious ass of any of them, so firm and exquisitely shaped. Sadi had been lovers with one other woman after her life had changed that night on the island. Teeria and she had spent that one night together nearly a decade ago and while it had been very pleasurable to say the least, it had only been that one night. Sadi had never pursued a relationship with a woman after that, the desire just was not there, and looking back now Sadi believed it was because of Ne'Veha and Carisia and Lu'ria and Caliria. Now she blissfully shared a bed with them all, but no matter the pleasure they all shared together, Sadi always found herself reaching for Ne'Veha first and foremost when Andro was not among them. She didn't know what it was about her elven lover and fellow Princess that drew her to Ne'Veha more than the others but her delicious lover did it every time. Ne'Veha's five foot four height was lusciously curved and she tipped the scales at only a hundred and nine pounds soaking wet. Only five pounds less than Carisia and her five foot two height. When in wolf form however, the transformation added about thirty pounds of muscle to Ne'Veha's frame and she was sleek and beautiful. While Sadi desired Carisia and Lu'ria intensely at times, Ne'Veha called to her wolf blood just a little more than her Drow Mistress and her Maya eyed vampire lover. Sadi and Ne'Veha had many things in common since they were both pilots, and because they were the pilot's of Andro's STRIKER DT, they were almost never apart. Her four inch high elven ears were delicious to Sadi and her amaretto scent was so very enticing and intoxicating.

Sadi watched with bright, sultry eyes as Ne'Veha made her morning tea and then crossed the main room to join her on the couch. Ne'Veha was the only one among them who did not drink coffee. She much preferred tea to coffee, especially after getting a special blend from her grandmother. Ne'Veha leaned over and they shared a soft, loving and lingering kiss and then Ne'Veha drew her legs under her mimicking Sadi's position on the couch. Her dark brown eyes went to the monitor and she saw the Netnews channel Sadi was watching and she shook her head with a smile.

"You follow what those foolish people say too much KertaGai." Ne'Veha told her. "You should just ignore them."

Sadi looked back at the monitor and nodded. "Perhaps..." She answered. "I like to know what wild accusations they are perpetrating however. They are so predictable at times about what they assume they are so knowledgeable."

"Midaeus is what they are!" Ne'Veha hissed.

Sadi chuckled at her response. "Yes indeed."

Ne'Veha Leonidas had grown much since becoming their mate and being changed by Andro, foremost among that was the fact she simply adored hearing her name roll off the lips of other people.

Ne'Veha Leonidas.

It wasn't arrogance or Ne'Veha thinking herself better than other people, she just adored the way her name sounded, since only those hailing from Earth had taken the custom of having a last name. Other species within the Union had more than one name, but only the Lycavorian Spartans and humans seemed to take the names of their husbands or wives as their second name and this had become very common. Ne'Veha's childhood upbringing had been very strict even by elven standards, her father raising her to dislike and distrust all Lycavorians because of what had happened in the past with her elven grandmother. Her father had raised Ne'Veha and her siblings to think their grandmother was dead. It wasn't until Ne'Veha stumbled upon the real reasons her father acted as he did that she began to understand. When Ne'Veha discovered her elven grandmother was alive and well; that she had left her elven husband and that she had fallen in love with a Lycavorian and allowed him to change her, that is when Ne'Veha's eyes were open fully. She had dismissed all her father had taught her then and fully embraced her new life with Androcles. With all of them. Andro had changed her during one of their more torrid nights together, giving Ne'Veha what she so desperately wanted. To be like him. Like Sadi. Now that she was wolf herself Ne'Veha looked at things in a very different light. She had almost lost them because she didn't understand what she felt, but that was behind her now and she could not imagine being without them. She loved Androcles with every breath she took. He could make her quiver in delight with a simple caress or nuzzle of her elven ear and his wolf aura could have her crying out for more within seconds as he did with Sadi and Lu'ria. Ne'Veha loved them all yes, but she was always drawn to Sadi more and she knew Sadi was drawn to her just as intensely. They had a special connection between them and it was strong and passionate and Ne'Veha relished in that closeness. Sadi's sugar plume and spice scent was nearly as intense as Andro's lavender and mint scent and it made her blood churn just being near them. Nothing would take her away from them now, no matter what her father did or said. She was a Princess of the Lycavorian Union and now wolf. That is all that mattered to her.

"We should take the new STRIKER up today and make sure the adjustments we asked to be made are accurate." Ne'Veha spoke sipping her tea.

Sadi nodded as she looked at her and held up the pad. "I was thinking the same thing. The lateral thrusters most of all." She said thoughtfully. "Syrilth sent word that she would like to see us at Dragon Mountain today as well."

Ne'Veha's dark brown eyes showed interest. "Really? Why?"

Sadi shrugged her shoulders. "I don't know." She answered. "It may have something to do with Andro's position as Talon Guardian and because he is not here on Earth she will pass it to us as his mates. We could also draft a couple of dragons to insure the harnesses in the rear are correctly fitted into the deck panels."

"Why didn't he take us with him Sadi?" Ne'Veha asked.

"It was a routine pick up and he felt it would be a waste of our time SirsanGai." Sadi said with a smile. "You know that. He only went to get Dorian some operational experience. They have been training every day and it was time Dorian and Ryner got real time duty in the field. Having us there wasn't necessary."

"Sibfla!" Ne'Veha spat playfully. "He went because he wanted to get away from all the politics. He has been going stir crazy with all the meetings and reports and the constant calls for interviews from the Netnews."

Sadi laughed at Ne'Veha's words and nodded her head. Ne'Veha had taken to the ancient Lycavorian language like a fish to water and she was extremely fluent in it now. She also liked to use the various swear words within the ancient language for they better expressed her unique sentiments at many things according to her. Ne'Veha's frequent use of the ancient language had many people within Sparta that knew Andro and his mates fawning over her whenever she and Sadi went into the city. The way the ancient words rolled off her tongue was like music to many of the older men and women in the city and many of them conversed with Ne'Veha in the ancient language almost exclusively.

"That is probably very correct." She answered. "Just think of the delight we will share when he returns after two days without us wrapped around him. He'll last for hours."

Ne'Veha's dark brown eyes glittered. "I have thought about that." She spoke softly. "And they have been very decadent thoughts to say the least."

Sadi laughed happily and nodded. "Mine as well."

They both turned their heads when the door to the living area of the villa opened. Two thirds of their villa was now restricted to family and friends, while the last third was used as the local Durcunusaan Control Center, backing up the main center on the other end of the island. That is where the barracks and landing pad for the island were situated. The main living area as well as the family and guest wings were highly restricted to anyone who was not a member of the Leonidas family or the Durcunusaan. Only they had unrestricted access. Not counting their master bedroom, the main villa could house nearly all of Andro's brothers and sisters and half a dozen guests if need be. The female Durcunusaan officer stuck her head through the door and searched quickly until her eyes found Sadi and Ne'Veha sitting on the couch. Since the attack by the OSG Andro had insisted that each of them be assigned a Durcunusaan Detail of at least three whenever they went places individually or without him. It had taken Jomann only one week to decide on the heads of these details for they would have broad powers to go with their new positions. He had chosen four females for different reasons, but all of them having one thing in common. Like himself, they were all born and raised in Sparta, and while it might seem biased to others, Jomann felt better knowing this. Jomann was reasonably certain the Princesses would be more comfortable with a female Detail Head and more likely to listen to them in time of need. This Durcunusaan female was the head of Ne'Veha's Detail. Her shoulder length blond hair was tied tightly into a short ponytail and her blue eyes were sharp and alert. Aegea and the head of Sadi's detail Kynthia had developed a very smooth working relationship right from the outset because of the closeness of the two young Princesses and their own mutual likes and dislikes. As Androcles's Captain of the Guard, Jomann maintained overall command of the entire Durcunusaan force tasked with guarding the Prince and Princesses and he was still going over records and such to determine the final two members of each detail, so at the moment the four heads of the details were in charge and dealt with everything.

"Aeqea?" Ne'Veha asked.

The young woman stepped fully into the main living area now. "Forgive me for bothering you so early Ne'Veha, Sadi..." She spoke. Ne'Veha and Sadi had made it very clear right from the start that the heads of their details were not to refer to them formally in any way, shape or form. Especially not if they were going to be laying their lives on the line for them. "Prime Minister Deia and Lady Gorgo are landing at the main LP. They needed to speak with you about something that has come up."

Sadi lowered her mug of coffee. "Something wrong Aeqea?" She asked.

Aeqea shook her head. "I don't believe so Sadi." She answered. "Not that they mentioned to Kynthia anyway."

"We'll start breakfast Aeqea. You and Kynthia escort them in and we'll all eat together." Sadi spoke coming to her feet.

Aeqea nodded. "As you wish." She stated moving back out the door.

Ne'Veha rose to her feet and began to follow Sadi across the main room. "This should be interesting." She said.

Sadi nodded. "Very."

"...is why I am doing this." They watched the image of Ulana on the small kitchen monitor as they sipped coffee. Six plates of eggs, steak, fruit and toasted bread were now empty in front of them at the eat-in counter. Large mugs of coffee were full and steaming however. "I do not wish to be the one to bring attention to these issues, but if I do not, who else will? I... I care deeply for Androcles. I... I love him, even after the way he has treated me and what we shared. I believe he is unaware of the kind of women who he has chosen to take as his wives and mates. Or what they are capable of or intend. This woman Sadi, who flaunts her pureblood status even though it still remains in question, and the elf female Ne'Veha most of all. Andro hates to fly, he always has and he has two mates who are pilots? That is completely out of character for him. I know him and he is not acting as the Androcles I know. He promised me we would always be together and Andro does not break his promises. I..."

"Yes you are Ulana." Sadi said softly and Ne'Veha giggled as she leaned into her from her chair. "You are completely unaware of who we are or what we are capable of. Hates to fly aur mida!" She looked at Ne'Veha. "Where does she get her information? Gypsies are us? If Elynth heard this she would be spitting fire and want to scorch this malda indalmus athach!" (Crazy ignorant witch)

Deia let out a small laugh at Sadi's words and the reaction from Ne'Veha and she reached over from her spot and muted the monitor by touching the screen, turning back to Sadi and Ne'Veha. "For the last three weeks Ulana has been holding these small rallies across Apo Prime in her home district. She draws crowds ranging in size from fifty to several hundred. They are mostly die hard supporters of her father's policies and by default hers."

"So it is no longer just Sadi that she is going after then. Now she is going after Ne'Veha as well?" Kynthia spoke now. The short dark hair of the female Durcunusaan Lieutenant was streaked with dark blond highlights and her tanned skin was healthy and smooth. Her cool brown eyes were alert and resolute and she took her duties as Sadi's Detail Head very seriously.

Gorgo nodded. "It would appear that is now the case yes." She said.

"She has referenced different items in regards to Ne'Veha as well as Carisia." Deia spoke looking at the data pad quickly and then to Ne'Veha. "Specifically your father's views towards Lycavorians Ne'Veha and a certain Captain Tarren. Sadi and Ne'Veha are the most well known of Andro's mates. Ne'Veha because of her status as a Fleet pilot and how she took command of certain things after the attempt on your lives here by the OSG and Sadi for obvious reasons."

“Tarren?” Ne'Veha gasped. “What does he have to do with anything?”

“Ulana has made it a point to mention in her recent rallies that this Tarren fellow says he claimed you before Andro.” Deia said calmly. Deia didn't believe it for an instant, even when her aides brought it to her. Her nephew Martin and great-nephew Androcles were perhaps the most entrenched in tradition when it came to the Spartan way of life and if Ne'Veha had been mated, or even discussing it with another male, Androcles would never have pursued her. “That you accepted and then, when Andro came into your life, you dismissed Tarren. And that you and Andro are also responsible for ruining his career based on false information in order to keep quiet the fact that he had claimed you before Andro. Not to mention that he is being held under false pretence by the Durcunusaan and that he has been interrogated extensively.”

Ne'Veha looked at her with wide eyes. “She actually talked to that igord?” She hissed angrily. “How did she even get access to him? He's locked in a prison cell! Tarren will say anything to protect himself and his ego!”

“Apparently Ulana discovered he had this information and arranged for a meeting.” Deia said. “We don't know how. She's is lobbying hard to have him released.”

Gorgo reached out and took Ne'Veha's hand. “Ne'Veha... we do not believe anything Ulana or this Tarren fellow says... but you understand how this could look inappropriate for Androcles and give ammunition to those who do not like him.”

The outrage on Ne'Veha's face was obvious and completely honest. “That disgusting gostin!” She hissed looking at Gorgo. “I never did any such thing! I dated him for a time yes... but it was never anything serious to me. I was confused over how my father raised us to be and then being exposed to something different in the fleet. Tarren practically scented me without telling me what he was doing! I had no idea he had done this until I saw the look in Sadi's eyes when she came to the SCIMITAR to visit me! Up until then... Tarren and I had an on again off again relationship! Nothing more! He was part of the problem! When I realized what he had done I never saw him again!”

“What about this claim of ruining his career and...?” Deia began to ask but Sadi stepped in.

“Taren is the one who gave the information to the OSG agents that attacked us here on the island Deia.” Sadi spoke. “Unwittingly or not, he was responsible. SirsanGai acted as any of us would have acted. Considering what happen, Tarren is lucky he was not executed for treason because of his actions.”

Deia nodded. “Forgive me for asking Ne'Veha. I never doubted you child but I needed to hear what you did in your own words.”

“I should have ordered the Durcunusaan to execute him!” Ne'Veha hissed. “If I knew he would be involved in this I...”

“Do not worry about Tarren child. Dealing with him will be easy. He is one of the type of Alphas with an over inflated sense of self worth. We can deal with him easily enough.” Gorgo spoke with a smile.

“So Ulana is going to have him released?” Ne'Veha hissed. “How do the orders of a new Senator override the orders of a Princess?”

“Once Tarren was remanded to custody, the Durcunusaan questioned him and then turned him over to Fleet authority.” Deia answered. “I discovered that he was able to contact his father, a prominent officer himself, who put pressure on Fleet authorities to have him released and when Ulana suddenly took interest they went ahead and granted the release request until such time as he stands trial for his actions.”

“Regardless of why he did it Deia... he gave intelligence to an enemy who then used that intelligence to attack our home here and try to kill us!” Sadi spat. “How do we just let him free after that?”

“He and Ulana are claiming Andro and you were not the targets.” Deia said. “That there was another target here that the OSG Team was after. They did not mention names but that is what they were implying. The Commissioning Board of Fleet officers went over the evidence and released him to Ulana's custody. They set his trial date for five months from now as well.”

“How would they know about Lady Devra?” Aegea asked now. “No one knew she and her daughters were here.”

“No one is perfect Aegea.” Deia said. “Even the Durcunusaan. If I had to guess I would say it came unwittingly from within the ranks of the Durcunusaan. Talking to a comrade or member of their family. And it was over heard by someone with big ears. Similar in a way to how they got their meeting with Andro some months back.”

“Anse!” Kynthia spat. “Jomann will have a fit when he hears that. I can guarantee it will not happen anymore!”

Deia nodded her head. “Better it comes from you too.” She said. “I will leave that for the Durcunusaan to sort out.

“To continue on... Ulana’s comments on Carisia are well known.” Gorgo spoke as she squeezed Ne’Veha’s hand reassuringly as she spoke. “Carisia is Yuri’s daughter and a vampire of the High Coven and therefore cannot be trusted. So on and so forth. She won’t openly go after her however... or Lu’ria.”

“She’s afraid of them. Especially our Drow Mistress.” Ne’Veha spoke confidently.

Gorgo nodded. “That is what Deia and I feel as well.” She said. “Ulana will not go after Lu’ria because she is a Drow. No one in their right mind wants Aihola or Daba and the Drow facing off against them. That would be political suicide in more ways than one. Since Carisia spends more time with her and they are often together because of what they feel for each other, Ulana will not go after them. You and Sadi are the most visible of Andro’s wives and mates because you are his pilots, because Sadi is a pureblood and now because of what Tarren is saying Ne’Veha has done. Therefore Ulana is going to target the two of you.”

Sadi looked at them and shook her head finally. “We don’t care what Ulana does. Why bring this to us now?” She asked.

Gorgo looked at Sadi. “She has announced that she will hold a rally like this in Sparta at the end of this week.” She said. “Tarifa was going to deny her a permit but we convinced her to not get involved.”

Ne’Veha looked at Gorgo. “Why?” She asked.

Gorgo looked at Ne’Veha and smiled warmly, her dark eyes bright. She truly adored all of her grandsons mates. They were a unique blend of unbelievable beauty, skill and intellect. Though they would never admit it, they were cut from the same mold as her son’s Queens and it was no secret that Gorgo adored all of Martin’s wives and mates. Sadi and the others were rapidly beginning to command as much respect as them from throughout the Union. “If Ulana wishes to bring her misguided message here to Sparta... let her. She will not find so enraptured an audience I’m thinking. She still does not understand the importance of Sparta to our family. I believe she is going to jump into the lion’s pit fully unaware of the consequences.” Gorgo told her.

“Sparta has become the place of power for our family.” Deia picked it up. “I had hoped when Martin first returned that it would be Apo Prime. Once I saw the love in his eyes for this city I knew that was not going to be the case. Since I have been here, lived here over these past years, I now know why he feels this and my feelings have become his. The Leonidas family has become synonymous with Sparta. They are completely interwoven with each other. With Sparta and Gytheio. And while I do not carry that name... Martin once told me that I will always be a Leonidas in my heart and blood. I have come to feel as he does in regards to Sparta and Earth. So many have come here from across the Union to make it their home, that it is now a melting pot from across the entire Union. It is also here where the loyalty and love of our family runs deepest.”

Gorgo nodded. “Let Ulana come and try to do here what she is doing on Apo Prime. I think she will quickly discover that she can not.”

“You know of course that she is being used.” Sadi said softly.

Deia nodded. “That is what we believe as well, unfortunately there is no way to prove that she is not working of her own accord.”

“So this fool Icho and the others are letting her do this even knowing that it will not work in the way she hopes?” Ne’Veha asked.

Aeqea nodded as she leaned forward in her seat. “She is the public face while they sit behind closed doors and pull the strings.” She said understanding.

Deia nodded. “Exactly. I’m quite sure they hope this plot of hers will work in some way. And to be honest, it may work to some small degree, but nothing like what Ulana hopes. She is blind to the fact that the others are using her. She was never a very bright girl no matter what she likes to think of herself. All of us saw that the few times she spent moments with us on the Royal Island on Apo Prime. She will never be able to convince the majority of the population of Sparta and Earth, or the Union for that matter, that these accusations are true in any way. Not after witnessing the way Androcles dotes over each of you, how he pulls all of you close to him.” Deia said with a grin. “If anything... she will only bring more people over to your side with her foul spewing. Sadi... you have been told how many people are beginning to view you... and it is contagious, for those same men and women are beginning to speak the same about Ne’Veha and Lu’ria and Carisia. All of you have a draw about you, a sense of mysticism. It happened with Aricia and the others and now it is happening with all of you.”

Sadi looked at her. “Deia... I do not want to play on the sensibilities of other people. It isn’t right.”

Deia nodded. “I’m not saying that you should.” She replied.

Sadi looked at her intently. “But you came here to tell us this for a reason.” She said slightly confused. “Why?”

“For whatever the reason... you and Ne’Veha have become the face of Androcles.” Deia told her. “You are almost never apart when the Netnews catches you. Carisia and Lu’ria are the mystery that no one dares delve into. I don’t think there is a Netnews reporter alive with the nor to enter one of the Drow cities and start poking around and asking questions about Lu’ria. And since Carisia and she are almost always together, that carries over to her as well. Ne’Veha and yourself on the other hand are different. We know Andro loves all of you; that is not at question ever, but like Dysea and For’mya have become for his father, you and Ne’Veha are becoming for Andro. No one among the Netnews will approach Aricia or Anja... they have told the Netnews on more than one occasion to stuff it. In much more entertaining language I might add.” She said with a smile. “They have always feared Isabella in some way. Dysea and For’mya on the other hand have that elven sense of patience and calm.”

“We are his public face.” Sadi said softly.

Deia nodded. “Yes. And therefore the main targets.” She answered. “Ulana has it in her head that you stole Androcles away from her. That you took what she should have had. And that just pisses her off.”

Sadi shook her head with disgust. “I never stole Andro away from that upaee! He was always mine. He was always ours.” Sadi answered confidently. “From the moment I saw him on the island that first time he has been mine. And I have been his. We have been his. It is the same for SirsanGai. For Carisia and Lu’ria as well.”

Deia nodded her head. “I know that. As I said... she was never very bright no matter what she thinks of herself.” She said. “Perhaps it is time to express what you share with Andro however.”

Sadi met her eyes. “What do you mean?”

“Our people and the elves are deeply entrenched in our faiths and what we believe in our hearts.” Gorgo spoke. “Let’s start showing that.”

Sadi shook her head. “We may be Princesses... but we both still have duties to perform.” She spoke. “We fly Andro’s STRIKER and we are just starting to become familiar with the new version. I for one do not want to begin giving speeches and interviews when our people may be in harm’s way.”

Ne’Veha nodded her head in agreement. “I feel the same way.” She said softly. “And I am just beginning to learn of my grandmother with the time I have been spending with her when I’m not with Sadi. I do not want to take away from that.”

“If we do nothing... Ulana will continue to spew her nonsense.” Deia said.

Sadi looked at her for a moment. “Let her spew it.” Sadi said meeting her gaze and seeing something else there. “There is more to this isn’t there Deia?” She asked. “What is going on here?” She looked at Gorgo. “Gorgo?”

Deia shrugged her shoulders and looked at Gorgo. “I told you it wouldn’t work.” She said with a smile.

Gorgo nodded a similar smile on her face. “So you did.”

Sadi looked at Ne’Veha and then back and forth between the two women. Ne’Veha was the one to speak though. “You knew what wouldn’t work?”

“I tried to convince Andro to address this.” Deia spoke with a glint of humor in her dark eyes. “He told me in no uncertain terms that his life with his wives and mates is not an open book and he wouldn’t share it. In his words, especially not with those Netnews tukannupae! He was much more passionate about it than his father. Martin simply said nubou joa.” She finished with a wide smile. “It was quite entertaining.”

Sadi tilted her head to the side. “And you thought we might?” She asked. “Deia... none of us would ever go against Andro’s wishes. You know that.”

Gorgo reached over and took Sadi’s hand as well as Ne’Veha’s. Her dark eyes gazed at them with love and understanding. They were the same as her, yet they were so much more Gorgo knew. “There is a saying among the Sparta of old... They say the plain and the ordinary are ruled by fate... but it is the heroic that choose their own fate.” Gorgo looked between them. “I have always disagreed with that.” She told them. “I believe... I believe that every few thousand years destiny chooses its own champions. For whatever the reason Sadi... destiny has chosen my son and grandson to be those champions because of what is happening now and what is to come in the future. I believe that within my deepest heart. You Sadi Leonidas... you, Ne'Veha, Carisia, Lu'ria, all of Andro's mothers... you are the voices of those champions. You own their hearts and their souls in a way many will never fully comprehend or understand. The way Martin looks at Aricia and the others, the way Andro looks at you and Ne'Veha and the others... how they treat you. The people can see the absolute devotion and love in their eyes but they don't understand it. You can be touched by others. And because of that... people feel that my son and grandson are no different than they are. That they can be touched as well."

"Gorgo... that is precisely what Andro and Martin do not want to happen." Sadi said softly. "They don't want to be looked at as something more than they are. They hurt and they bleed... just like anyone. You more than anyone should know that."

Gorgo nodded. "I do." She answered just as softly. "But what Martin and Andro have not yet learned... what my Leonidas only learned in his last days among us... sometimes destiny doesn't give you much of a choice."

"So you want us to combat Ulana's lies with..." Ne'Veha began to ask.

"The truth." Deia finished her sentence. "Nothing but the truth. One interview... all of you together. You began it by capturing Icho's briefing like you did... follow it up with this. You can give people an insight into Androcles that they do not have now. If we do nothing and allow Ulana to spread her lies it will eventually come down to blows between the two of you. And we all know how that will end."

"You think I would... I would kill her?" Sadi asked.

"I think that you, Ne'Veha or any of you would butcher anyone who tried to take my mandri from you." Deia said. "I have seen how possessive Aricia and the others are towards Martin... and I have seen it briefly within all of you. I'm not entirely sure what power draws you to them in such a way, nor do I understand it, but it is there. Am I wrong?"

Sadi looked at her and shook her head after a moment. "No." She said softly. "Deia there are others within the Union that do not share our faith and beliefs. They may very well begin to consider us religious fanatics if we do this."

Deia nodded her head. "I realize that... but I think you might be surprised." She said in reply. "I believe everyone knows how deeply Martin and others view their faith even though he may not show it as often as others. I think they consider it a strength."

Ne'Veha reached out and clasped her fingers within Sadi's and looked at Gorgo. "Yes." She said softly. "We will do this."

"SirsanGai... you realize that..." Sadi stopped talking but continued to look at Ne'Veha. They were right she thought to herself. But it was also an opportunity to put a face to the name. To allow people to see that Andro and his father were no different in many respects than the average person.

"We need to do this KertaGai." Ne'Veha told her softly.

Sadi turned her eyes to Gorgo and Deia after a moment and nodded. "Very well... but we need to lay some ground rules first." Sadi told them. "First and foremost... Dilaen chooses who does the interview."

Deia smiled and held out the data pad she had been keeping on her belt. "She already has. Do you remember that elf Me'alla who was in Sparta that day of the Kavalian attack and caught everything in her camera? She lives here in Gytheio... and while she is not a die hard supporter of Martin or the Queens, she is loyal to the core."

Sadi nodded her head. "I recall her broadcasts. They were even and truthful and not filled with opinion and assumption."

Deia nodded. "Exactly."

"We do it here at the villa." Sadi spoke turning to look at her Durcunusaan Detail Head. "Kynthia can you set it up? We can use the main room here but we want to make sure nothing gets seen in the background that we don't want seen. We don't intend for our lives to become a soap opera on the Netnews."

Kynthia nodded. "Easily." She answered.

"The patio KertaGai. We can do it out there." Ne'Veha spoke. "So Majeir and Anthar can be part of it and no one sees inside our home."

Sadi nodded. "The patio then."

"When?" Deia asked.

“We can’t do it today.” Sadi said. “Carisia and Lu’ria won’t be back from Eden City until early tomorrow. Late tomorrow morning... after Carisia and Lu’ria return.”

“I’ll make the arrangements.” Deia said.

“I hope this doesn’t backfire on us.” Sadi said.

“It won’t.” Deia said.

“There is still the issue of how Ulana is getting all this information.” Aegea said. “Some how she is getting intelligence that she should not have. Details that are not public and that we the Durcunusaan are not giving out by accident by being stupid.”

Kynthia nodded with a smile. “We believe we have traced it back to her time when she was dating the Prince. She may have accessed different internal computers at the island palace on Apo Prime. Or within Andro’s apartment. Downloaded information.” She told them. “We are investigating, but even we are stretched thin.”

Deia nodded. “That would make sense. Like Gorgo I never really trusted her to be honest with you.” She said. “Keep your investigation moving regardless Kynthia; it will only make things better when you finally discover the truth. As for what we intend now... it will not effect the outcome.”

Gorgo looked around the villa then as if realizing something for the first time. “Where... where is Andro?” She asked. “I don’t smell him anywhere on the island.”

“He and Dorian left on the SCIMITAR late yesterday.” Sadi answered. “They were doing a routine pick up of an Omega Team from Solmar. Near the Bontawillian border in The Wilds. Andro felt it would be good operational training for Dorian and Ryner. They needed field time together.”

“Routine?” Deia asked.

Sadi nodded. “Yes. It is perfectly safe Deia. And well outside the Kavalian operational areas. They should be back tomorrow.”

“Tomorrow?” Deia said not sounding very convinced. “Why does that not give me much peace?”

SOLMAR

THE WILDS

FEBRUARY 3RD 2575

OMEGA TEAM 62

Routine. There was nothing routine about this day.

There were four of them left now. And they could do nothing but run.

Four wolves racing in unison through the timber of the terrain, all headed in the same direction and for the same location. They were slightly above average for Lycavorian wolves in size, two dark brown in color; another black with gray just beginning to streak its fur and the last was the smallest and the most beautiful to look at with dark russet fur. They were darting between the trees and around the boulders as they moved up the side of the ridge. Their sprint had started nearly ten kilometers back, on the edges of the largest settlement of Solmar and the only one with a spaceport. Five of their team had been cut down in order that they could escape and none of them were happy about that. Even as they watched the five other members of their team chopped down in the firefight, they took pride in the fact that nearly twenty of their enemy fell dead around them before that happened. Unfortunately... waiting for just those few seconds enabled the Kavalians to see them and give away their support position. They were outgunned and overmatched and the four of them responded just as their intense training told them. They turned and they ran.

Omega Team 62.

They began as nine men and women. Four Lycavorians, three elves, one vampire and one elf/Lycavorian hybrid. All volunteers, all of them dedicated to the Union and her continued existence and all of them no longer listed among the active roles of the Union military. They had completed their training regime some four months ago, all of them selected from the top tier of their units as were the other sixty-one Omega Teams and they were the last Team to have been trained by the finest collection of instructors within the Union ranks. Instructors who were officially dead by all Union records and who worked strictly for the Krypteria. Instructors who taught them how to be the most ruthless and brave fighting force anywhere. Only thirteen senior men and women knew of their existence, in part because those thirteen men and women had taken an active role in their training. They were as the King intended them to be. Silent and deadly.

A deep bark by the black and gray wolf echoed in the trees and caused all of them to shift their direction and merge their paths until they were once more together. Four soft silver/white flashes of light and then they were back in human form as they came to a halt and dropped to one knee near the massive fallen stump. The large older Lycavorian quickly took stock. He was the senior enlisted man and second in command of their team behind their Lieutenant who had fallen.

“Vari? Emios?” He hissed out the words.

The two Lycavorians nodded their heads as their chests heaved. Ten kilometers at a dead sprint would affect even the most physically in shape wolves out there.

“I am unhurt.” Vari answered with a nod.

Emios looked at his right arm. “I took one through the meat of my arm.” He spoke almost as an afterthought. “It is almost fully healed now.”

“Let me look.” The lone female spoke.

“Haridl?” Dantio asked her.

The woman looked at him, her two inch high elven ears marking her as half elf and half Lycavorian. Her Lycavorian father and elven mother had been mated for over a millennia and while she had not seen them in over two years, she always stayed in touch when she could. She was Team 62’s medic, trained by Queen Anja and Colonel Anuk themselves, as were all of the Omega Team medics.

“I am... I am fine Dantio.” She rasped as she moved next to Emios and began to inspect the healed wound in the sleeve of his ArmorPly Scout armor. A much lighter and more flexible version of the Mark IV ArmorPly.

Dantio was nearly seven hundred years old and a grizzled veteran of many battles with the High Coven. Born on Apo Prime and now calling Earth his home, Dantio had been among the first who had volunteered for the Omega Teams.

“We must not rest long.” He spoke. “They could still be pursuing us even two kilometers back.”

“Dantio... the others?” Vari asked softly.

Dantio shook his head. “You saw the same thing I did Vari.” He answered. “They are lost.”

“They may not be dead Dantio.” Emios spoke. “They may only be injured!”

“Emios you saw the numbers!” Dantio hissed softly. “They were surrounded by at least two companies of Kavalians! And they did not care that they mowed down a dozen civilians to get our people!”

“It was a set up!” Vari snarled.

Dantio looked at him. “Then why wait until the Zero Squad was off?” He asked. “That was our mission. Why hit us after we completed our mission? No one but senior command knows our missions or that we even exist!”

“The Kavalians were not supposed to be here!” Haridl spoke softly as her fingers dug into Emios’s arm probing to insure the projectile was not lodged within his flesh. “We are only five light years from Bontawillian space! How have they reached this far and we didn’t know about it!”

Dantio shook his head. “They may be many things... but they are not stupid.” He spoke. “Establishing an outpost this close to Union space is prudent.”

“Dantio... two companies is not an outpost!” Vari hissed at him. “Solmar is a large planet! They could have an entire base hidden here somewhere! And how did they mark the others as soldiers?”

“We have been here for two weeks acting as tourists.” Emios said. “The civilians in the settlement had no idea we were soldiers or else they would have come sooner.”

“We don’t know that.” Haridl spoke patting Emios on the arm telling him he was ok. “The extraction team is waiting for us. We need to make contact and then go back.”

“We don’t leave our people! Not to the Kavalian dogs!” Vari agreed. “And we need to find out how many of them there are!”

Dantio looked at them. He nodded his head in agreement for he felt the same way. Dead or not... they could not leave the bodies of their comrades. “They could already be offworld.” He said.

“Then we need to make sure!” Emios spoke.

Dantio looked back through the timber in the direction they had come from. “We make the extraction point, take some extra equipment from the extraction team and then move west and circle around to the mountains on the north end of the settlement. They are high enough for us to view the entire settlement and discover what is going on.”

“The extraction team won’t wait for us.” Vari said.

“Then they can come back!” Haridl said. “We don’t leave our people behind!”

Emios nodded his head. “Let’s do this!” He said quickly. “We need to discover about the Kavalian force anyway. We can’t leave now. Not without knowing.”

Dantio nodded his head. “Five more kilometers to the extraction point. We don’t stop. The Kavalian dogs are fast but we are faster and they can not track us. Rest for twenty minutes and then we go. Vari... move back two hundred meters and cover our tails. The lieutenant had the planetary radio and our implants will not reach the ship in orbit. No attempts to reach the Extraction Point. Team COMS or Mindvoice only until we get there.”

“We have to assume they took the radio.” Haridl said. “No sense in giving them a means to track us.”

Dantio looked around at their position. “Vari... go! We wait twenty minutes and then go.”

Vari nodded and quickly rose into a crouch moving his muscular form back the way they had come.

Haridl looked at Dantio. “Something tells me this is not an outpost Dantio.”

He met her eyes and nodded. “I agree.” He spoke. “A forward command post perhaps.”

“I can’t believe the Bontawillians missed this.” Emios spoke.

“Our Bontawillian allies are not true warriors Emios.” Dantio spoke. “I do not think they would know what to look for, even close to the border as we are.”

“They will sibfla when they find out the Kavalians are on one of their colony worlds.” Emios said.

Dantio nodded. “Yes... I do believe they will.”

“...have made contact by now Andro?” Dorian asked walking up to where his brother sat on the ramp of the STRIKER.

Andro sat at the foot of the ramp between Elynth’s huge front forelegs, her right talon resting on his thigh. They had landed in the small clearing eighteen kilometers from the largest settlement on Solmar. The settlement with the only spaceport. The mission parameters had been simple really. The Omega Team was to rendezvous and then escort the Zero Squad to the single spaceport and see them off. The Zero Squad would then find their way into Kavalian space from other ports within The Wilds. Andro had decided to do the pick up of the Omega Team himself, allowing Dorian the experience of an actual operation while also getting out of Sparta and off Earth before he went crazy. While he reveled in the military aspect of things, he was easily bored and in some cases angered having to deal with the political tone. He had told only Sadi and Ne’Veha that he was going and they in turn would tell Carisia and Lu’ria. Jomann would understand and he was busy forming the last of the details and helping Eliani with assisting Brendi Faith and her family to become acclimated to their new lives within Sparta. Dorian had jumped at the chance for him and Ryner to actually put their new skills to use and relying on Jomann to inform the head of his Durcunusaan detail Sheva Juconi. She was not going to be happy Dorian was sure.

The pureblood vampire female, though three hundred plus years his senior, could and did elicit powerful emotions to come out in him. The part of his blood that was wolf called for her in a way he had never felt before. Just being around her and having to endure her rich caramel scent drove him malda. Andro had told him what he was experiencing and even taught him some techniques to try and block the pungent flavor of her scent when he was near her. Andro had encouraged him to pursue Sheva because of the strength of his attraction to her and what it could mean, but Dorian had refused. He didn’t want to scare her away and Dorian knew that she still considered him a child no matter that he was now a fully grown twenty-four year old. She did not truly believe that Dorian had become aware in his mother’s womb and this had triggered the powerful bond with Ryner. Jomann had tried to explain it to her Andro knew, but she had dismissed it because she didn’t believe it was possible. Sheva was an odd sort Andro decided, having spent so much time within the Durcunusaan and working with the Bonded Pairs, and then not believing Dorian’s connection with Ryner. Perhaps Dorian being born fully aware she did not understand and Andro had decided to speak with her privately about it to allow her to see that it was very possible.

Dorian matched his brother's height at six foot one, but he was about twenty-five pounds lighter at a hundred and ninety-five pounds. He was equally as defined as any of his brothers, a trait that came from their father he knew. Dorian had been training almost non-stop every day though his actual schooling had ended some two weeks ago. Ryner was exceptionally intelligent and much of what his Bonded Brother knew he had passed to Dorian without hesitation. Their bond had grown in both power and skill and Andro concluded that they had reached a level that only Lisisa, Eliani and Resumar had achieved as non-purebloods with their dragons. Dorian and Ryner were even a tad more powerful than Resumar and Cemath Andro concluded, though they lacked the extensive experience of Resumar and his Bonded Brother. That would come with years and actual fieldwork, which is why Andro decided to take them on this mission. It was a simple pick up, but they would act as if they were in enemy territory.

Andro had grabbed the most senior STRIKER pilot on the SCIMITAR to fly the ship while he acted as co-pilot. Andro was a fair pilot himself, but nowhere near skilled enough as an elf at the controls. Ne'Veha had recommended the female elf and he had gone with that. She was currently sitting in the cockpit with the Flight Engineer monitoring the sensors and COM gear. The small, six person team of Durcunusaan that he had brought were permanently assigned to the SCIMITAR but they were just as skilled and experienced as those who were not assigned to ships. The senior Durcunusaan was a battle hardened Lycavorian who had fought with Andro during the Evolli war. Two more Lycavorians, two elves and one Drow made up the remainder of the small team. They had set up a perimeter immediately upon landing and with Elynth and Ryner helping, they had gotten the camouflage net stretched out over the ninety meter length of the STRIKER. Now all they had to do was wait. Something that Dorian was finding very hard to do.

Andro tore a hunk from the large piece of dried beef with his teeth and began to chew as he held up the rest in his hand. Elynth's muzzle snapped forward, her razor sharp maw opening and closing on the chunk of meat with incredible gentleness as she took it from Andro's fingers. To those who were unfamiliar with dragons it would appear to be an insane move, putting one's hand so close to a mouth that could probably engulf all of Andro's upper body with simple ease. He watched as Dorian stepped up next to Ryner and lifted his hand to stroke the scales of his Bonded Brother's thick neck.

"They aren't overdue yet Dorian." Andro said as he chewed. "This is the hardest part I know fervon. We've all been through it."

The senior Durcunusaan enlisted man grinned and nodded his head from where he sat at the top of the ramp. "We were on a similar OP during the Evolli War." He said looking at Dorian as he lifted his own ration bar to his mouth and bit a chunk off. "A normal pickup of a Drow Scout team. Fleet Intelligence forgot to tell us they were stopping to spend the night with some locals they had befriended. We waited in a driving rain storm for eighteen hours with no ship and only light gear. We didn't find out what happened until they strolled into our perimeter the next afternoon." Cletus said shaking his head. "Needless to say I cornered the Intelligence Officer when we returned to our ship and properly let him know he had failed in his job."

Andro grunted with a small laugh. "You didn't hurt him did you Cletus?" H asked.

Cletus looked at him. "Only a very small bit Milord." He answered. "He never made the same mistake again."

Andro chuckled. "I'm sure he didn't." He said turning his head as the female elf pilot walked down the ramp and looked at him.

"Excuse me Milord?" She spoke as she squatted down.

Andro looked at her. "Sa'roh... when will you and Cletus stop calling me that?" He asked. "We've worked together for six years on the SCIMITAR."

The female elf smiled at him. "When will you stop being Crown Prince?" Sa'roh asked him nonchalantly.

Andro rolled his eyes waved his hand in a dismissive manner. "I wish I could do that now." He answered with a grin and shake of his head. He turned back to her. "What's up?" He asked.

Sa'roh held out the data pad. "Something strange." She spoke. "When we arrived five hours ago, normal civilian traffic was plentiful from all the settlements. Radio broadcasts... Netnews channels... all of the Union Entertainment channels. Normal settlement to settlement broadcasts."

Andro took the pad and looked at her. "So?"

"As of ten minutes ago... everything has dropped to nothing." Sa'roh explained. "No COM traffic at all. When I tried to tap into the spaceport central core I discovered it had been locked out."

"Locked out?" Andro asked. "Maintenance?"

"That's the automated message being transmitted but you don't lock out the electrical and power subsystems to do maintenance Milord." She told him evenly. "All exterior connections to suborbital satellites are locked out as well. Nothing is coming in or going out. The satellites are receiving, but nothing is being beamed to the planet. Essentially the entire colony has been cut off from the Union."

Andro turned his eyes to the pad as Cletus and Dorian moved closer. "Why would you broadcast that you are doing maintenance and cut off the entire colony?"

"You wouldn't Milord." Sa'roh answered.

Andro turned his eyes back to her. "You are saying this is not just some sort of computer malfunction?"

"If it was just a power shutdown I would say yes." Sa'roh answered. "But when all the colony's satellites are locked out and subsystems have been rerouted... no."

"How would you do this Sa'roh?" Andro asked her as he got to his feet slowly.

Sa'roh rose as well. "Well... the best way to control these things is from the colony's power substation. It would allow you to bypass all safeties and essentially control the entire distribution grid across the planet."

"Show me." Andro spoke.

Sa'roh led them back up into the STRIKER and to the left side of the ship. This is where the Operational Command section was. Several monitors and computer stations compacted into a small area that could act as an Operational Hub for missions. From this area of the STRIKER you could communicate and control forces up to a Combined Fleet Group in size. Sa'roh moved to the computer station and began typing commands. Andro watched as she brought up the holo graphic depiction of Solmar. She pointed to the monitor.

"Here." She said. "The Power substation is built into this mountain two hundred and fourteen kilometers west of here. It gets most of its power from the waterfall it is built around. The Bontawillians added some additional generator units but even without them, the size of the settlements means the waterfall can power all of them without the additional boost."

Andro looked at the monitor. "It's central to all the settlements?" He asked tracing his finger on the screen.

Sa'roh nodded her head. "No more than a hundred kilometers from any of the six major settlements on this continent." She replied. "The Bontawillians were going to expand onto the western continent next year. All of the equipment is set to go but they haven't picked the excavation teams yet."

"You know a lot about this colony Sa'roh." Dorian told her.

Sa'roh nodded her head looking at the handsome half breed Prince. She and many of the other elven females on the SCIMITAR had been discussing Dorian's availability. It was natural for elven females to seek out the strongest and most virile males to take as husbands. This was something inbred in all female elves since the very inception of their species. You could not get more virile and strong than a Leonidas son, and considering the fact that no Queen or Princess ever was seen without a smile on their faces, there had to be something else to the enigma of the Leonidas men. Something that made many females swoon just thinking about it. Perhaps the many rumors of the Leonidas men all being built like bulls in the cock department was true. "It's touted as the crown jewel of Bontawillian colonies. Lush and fertile. Temperate climate. My parents were thinking of purchasing a retirement home here."

"Can we still access the satellites?" Andro asked.

Sa'roh looked at him. "The Bontawillian government won't be happy about us breaching their computer systems." She said.

"They can sue me later." Andro popped. "Something tells me that this is not happening because of a screw up. Use our fleet backup codes and get me a picture from orbit. Overlay it over what you already have up."

Sa'roh nodded and her hands flew over the console as more of the Durcunusaan team came up the ramp and got closer. Andro's eyes grew narrow as he watched her overlay what he had asked and she looked up.

"All six settlements are dark." Sa'roh told him. "Look... power has been severed in six different spots. All three PDC stations are dark too." She traced the outline of several different underground conduits on the screen. “Well... not really severed. Just stopped. Power is still flowing to the PDC stations... it’s just not branching to the six settlements.”

“Stopped how?” Andro asked.

“If I had to guess I’d say someone yanked the PDCs for each settlement’s grid.” Sa’roh answered.

“PDCs?” Dorian asked.

“Power Distribution Coils.” Sa’roh explained. “Pull the cells and no matter where the power is coming from it won’t reach the designated points. Looks like all three PDC stations have gone dark along with the Power Substation itself.”

“That doesn’t sound good.” Cletus spoke softly.

“What’s the nearest PDC from here?” Andro asked.

“Seventeen kilometers east.” Sa’roh answered looking at him.

“Why would someone yank the PDCs?” Andro asked.

Sa’roh shook her head quickly. “You wouldn’t. Not all of them at once. Not even for a major maintenance overhaul.” She replied. “Power flow would be interrupted all over the planet and you’d have to shut down the main power substation and then reboot it in order to get the power flowing once again.” She answered. “No one would want to screw around with a job like that. It would take days just to realign the Coils.”

“Any ships in orbit?” Andro asked.

Sa’roh shook her head. “No.”

“Where are Sa’sur and the SCIMITAR?” Andro asked.

“Shrouded on the far side of the fourth moon.” Sa’roh answered.

“Send a coded burst to her. I want her back in orbit and doing passive scans of the terrain surrounding all the settlements.” Andro told her quickly. “Cletus you’re with me. Peus rides with Dorian.”

“Where are we going?” Cletus asked though part of him already knew the answer and his Spartan blood began to churn.

“I want to check out the closest PDC Station.” Androcles answered. “Leave your second here to wait for the Omega Team. Sa’roh... once Sa’sur is back in orbit have her cross deck all scans to you here.”

She looked at him. “You don’t think this is an accident do you?” She asked.

“This was done on purpose.” Andro said shaking his head. “And not by those who are our friends.”

“Kavalians?” Sa’roh asked. “Here?”

“Close to the Bontawillian border.” Cletus spoke. “Nice strategic forward base if they can get established without anyone knowing. It would be a mother to dig them out of the mountains and timber if they got in deep. Even for us.”

Andro looked at Dorian now. “Fervon? You up for this? It may not be a routine mission anymore.”

Dorian took a deep breath and nodded. “We are ready.”

Andro turned back to Sa’roh. “Implant channel thirteen. We’ll report back what we find.”

“Milord... shouldn’t we have Sa’sur deploy the Spartan company on the SCIMITAR? We...” Sa’roh asked.

Andro shook his head. “Not yet. I want to make sure what...” Andro stopped talking and tilted his head back towards the open ramp. Sister? He reached out to Elynth.

I feel them too. She answered. Heavily shielded but moving closer.

Andro looked at Cletus. “Defensive positions.” He hissed. “We’ve got company moving towards us.”

Cletus became instantly alert. “The Omega Team?” He asked.

Andro nodded. “Unless the Kavalians have learned how to Mindvoice and have Tier Five Shields... the Omega Team would be my guess. Elynth can feel them too.”

Dorian looked at Andro. “Ryner and I as well. Just barely.”

Andro looked at his younger brother and smiled. “That’s one of the gifts that being born aware gives us fervon.” He stated. “Being able to sense other high tier Mindvoice users. Elynth and I will teach you how to properly focus so it has more clarity.” He turned to Cletus and Sa’roh. “Defensive positions. Sa’roh... get forward and get that message to Sa’sur. Lock out the cockpit until you hear from me.”

Sa’roh nodded and headed forward without hesitation. “Why wouldn’t they contact us via COMs?” Cletus asked Andro.

“There are only four of them. They are... they are anxious” Dorian spoke his eyes clear as if he was concentrating really hard. “The standard Omega Team size is nine. Something has happened. Something very bad.”

Andro nodded pleased at how quickly Dorian was learning the small subtleties of an advanced Mindvoice user. “I’ll reach out to them first.” He said. “Have your men ready though. If they have led Kavalians back here then they all die.”

Cletus looked at him. “Omega Teams are not... they wouldn’t do that Androcles.” He said.

Andro nodded. “I know. Which means if they have led them back here they are prisoners and the Kavalians have the ability to track them.”

“Sibfla... that would be bad.” Cletus said.

Andro nodded. “Yes it would.” He said. Elynth... you and Ryner get airborne and stay just above the trees. No sense in letting any Kavalians in the area see you flying at altitude.

We are moving. Elynth answered.

Andro unclipped his P190A3 A4 from his shoulder. “Let’s get in position.” He said.

Sa'sur groaned sleepily at the insistent buzzing of her COM. She felt the powerful arms of her husband and mate pull her tighter and then she smiled thinking it was just a dream. The buzzing continued and she opened her pale blue eyes slowly as the noise chased away sleep.

“You had better answer it.” The deep voice spoke just next to her elven ear and she turned her head slightly, leaning into the delightful nuzzle that her mate gave to her sensitive elven ear.

Sa'sur’s husband and mate of nearly nine hundred years had joined them on Earth for a short leave before he returned to his own ship and crew. When Andro decided to conduct this mission he had come along just to remain near his beautiful elven mate and not lose the time they had together. It was a simple mission and would still allow them plenty of time when they returned to Earth.

“Perhaps I will choose not to.” She stated with a smug smile.

Menlan grinned at her response. “Ah... so this is how the discipline on the Prince’s ship goes.” He stated sarcastically. “It all begins with the Captain you know.”

Sa'sur rolled her naked body over within his arms and glared at him with her changed pale blue wolf eyes. “I will show you discipline husband.” She growled at him as she leaned closer and nibbled on his chin with her fangs.

Menlan chuckled softly, enjoying the attention of his elven mate. Nine hundred years and five children had not dulled his desire for her in any way and he pulled her tighter as she kissed him. He felt her tense in his embrace as the buzzing continued. He smiled once more and drew his nose over her lips as they ended the kiss. “Answer it Sa'sur.” He said. “I still have four days and all of it is to be spent with you. What could possibly be wrong on so simple a mission?”

Sa'sur groaned and smiled. “You don’t know Andro that well my husband. Trouble seems to follow that poor boy no matter where he goes.”

“He is a Spartan and a leader of men.” Menlan told her. “Like his father. Trouble doesn’t follow them... it seeks them out.”

Sa'sur nodded her head with a small laugh. “Yes it does.” She rolled away from him quickly, pulling the sheet with her and wrapping it around her body as she stood. Menlan laid there and Sa'sur’s wolf eyes gazed hungrily at his naked form. “Don’t you move do you hear me?” She told him with a soft and sultry voice. “I am going to feast on you when I get rid of this call.”

Menlan laid back on the bed and grinned. “I look forward to it.” He said.

Sa'sur turned and marched across her bedroom and slapped her hand down on the console of her desk. “Sa'sur!” She snapped. “And this had better be good! I asked not to be disturbed unless there was an emergency!”

“Commander Waltra Captain! We have received a Priority One Alpha message from the Prince! He is ordering us into orbit of Solmar under Shroud to conduct passive sweeps of the planet! The entire power system has been brought down and he suspects Kavalians are on the surface!”

Sa'sur immediately became all business. "Kavalians?" She gasped. "Sibfla! And we are without our Strike Wing again! Contacts?"

"None so far Captain."

"Alter course and put us in the best position to scan the planet! Begin full spectrum array passive scans of the surface!" Sa'sur hissed. "I'll be on the bridge in three minutes!" Sa'sur turned back as the conversation ended and she saw Menlan rising to his feet. "Menlan I..."

Menlan shook his head. "You are Captain of this ship for a reason my beautiful wife and mate." He stated reaching for his clothes. "Got room for an observer?"

Sa'sur moved for the chair and her own clothes. "As long as you are observing me and not the female crew!" She quipped playfully.

Menlan laughed as he pulled his pants on. "Only you stir my blood Sa'sur. Only you."

Dantio studied the small clearing from the treeline. He could just make out the outline of the ship. Whoever the pilot was they had consummate skill to land the ship in the clearing as they had. The camouflage net was secured to several large trees and would make it impossible to spot the ship from the air. He could see no movement under the net, though from his position he could only make out the rear of the ship.

[Dantio?] Vari asked reaching out within Mindvoice so their voices would not be heard or carry over the distance.

[No movement.] Dantio answered. [Larger than I thought the pick up ship would be.]

[Looks like a STRIKER from the back here.] Emios commented. [Ramp is right and the length is good.]

[Why would a STRIKER be the pick up ship? RAPTORs usually pick us up.] Haridl asked.

[Location is right.] Dantio spoke. [Sibfla... will nothing go according to plan on this day?] He cursed.

"You know what they say about plans." The deep voice spoke from behind them.

All four of them moved with incredible speed, rolling in different directions as they brought their weapons up. Dorian was impressed to say the least. He knew that his vampire blood gave him unmatched speed and allowed him to blur in motion, but these three men and one half elf female had moved with incredible reflexes and speed themselves. He had wrapped Andro within the shadows just as his mother had taught him and they quickly made their way to where the Omega Team was watching the ship. Dorian knew his mother was considered one of the masters of using the shadows among all vampires, and her skill in this regard had passed to him easily. She had helped him to refine it to exacting control before she had left to join his father, but Dorian remembered all her lessons. Dorian had his father's deeply tanned skin and his eyes, but his features were all his mother and Isabella was widely considered one of the most beautiful vampire females anywhere within the Union.

"Nubou!" Dantio hissed as he leveled his weapon at the two figures. His mind quickly saw who it was and his eyes grew even wider. He would recognize Prince Androcles anywhere and he lowered his weapon just as quickly. "Milord!" He gasped in shock.

Andro was squatting on the ground, his azure colored eyes bright and focused. He had been prepared to use his Etheric power to disarm the Omega Team if they had opened fired without question. Thankfully Andro saw that his father's training and that of others prevailed over their base instincts.

"Prince Androcles?" Vari gasped with wide eyes seeing him and the tall young man standing beside him.

"Put your weapons down." Andro spoke firmly. "You are back among friends."

Dantio didn't hesitate and lowered his A4 instantly as he pushed himself to his knees. "Sire we..."

"I decided to make the pick up." Andro told him. "It was supposed to be routine and I thought the field experience would benefit my brother Dorian."

Dantio looked at Dorian quickly. "Brother?" He asked surprised. "Your... your mother was still carrying your brother when we left Union space three months ago Milord."

Dorian grinned. "It's a long story." He stated.

"Where is the rest of your team?" Andro asked.

Dantio shook his head. “Kavalians hit us Milord.” He spoke. “They were everywhere. The Lieutenant and half our team went into the settlement to see the Zero Squad off from the spaceport. Once the ship had left they were moving to rejoin us. The Kavalians hit them in force.”

“Kavalians.” Andro hissed. “They didn’t follow you?”

Dantio shook his head. “They tracked us until we moved into the deep timber to make the pick up point.” He replied. “I assumed they did not want to follow us.”

Andro shook his head. “That isn’t it.” He said. “They’ve brought down the power grid for the entire planet and locked out all primary satellite feeds. They didn’t feel the need to pursue you. How many hit you?”

“Two companies at least Milord.” Emios answered.

Andro got to his feet and held out his hand to Dantio. “We’re not leaving just yet Dantio. There is more to do.” He said.

Haridl looked at him. “Milord... we don’t know if they were taken alive or dead.” She spoke up. “All of them went down... but they could still be alive.”

Andro nodded his head. “One of them is at least.” He said. He tapped his head. “Once you got close enough for me and Elynth to detect your shields and the resonance you were using I could make out one other who is not among your group here. Robaran? He’s a vampire isn’t he?”

Haridl gasped softly and Dantio nodded his head pulling his eyes away from her. “Our communications operator.” He said in reply. “They... they will not treat him kindly if he lives Milord.”

Andro glanced at Haridl because of her reaction and then back to Dantio. “Mark my words... we will not leave him behind. If it is possible in any way we’ll go after him. However, it appears the attack against your team was only the beginning. We have other issues that have come up.”

The Omega Team looked at him. “Sire?” Emios asked.

“If my guess is accurate... the Kavalians have brought down the entire power grid for the planet.” Andro told them. “It appears they want Solmar as a forward base and have moved to do just such a thing. They’ve taken down all three power Substations, deactivated power to all the settlements and shut down the main Power Plant in the west. All offworld COMs are being jammed except for our military channels. They apparently think having you here was a flunk since no general alarm has been raised. At least none that we can detect. You’re sure the Zero Squad got off?”

Dantio nodded. “We watched their transport depart Milord.”

“The settlements?” Vari asked. “They’ll go after the settlements and begin digging in deeply.”

Andro nodded. “That is why we aren’t leaving. Come on.” Andro spoke heading in the direction of the STRIKER.

SCIMITAR

Sa'sur moved onto the bridge with even strides and immediately began to bark orders. Menlan simply moved to the side out of the way and watched with pride as his wife and mate showed why she was one of the most feared ship commanders in the entire Union Fleet. Sa'sur was completely unaware of this reputation he knew, but there were very few Fleet Officers who wanted to go up against her in drills. Her association with the Crown Prince had given her an entirely different outlook in combat. She drove the SCIMITAR to do things most commanders would not expect of their ships or their crew. Menlan also knew the SCIMITAR was far more advanced than most of the LEONIDAS IIA-Class Strike Cruisers in the fleet because it was the Crown Prince’s ship. Many of her systems, while not directly based on City Ship 41 technology like the new ARIZONA-Class Strike Carriers, were tweaked and then fitted in such a way that the SCIMITAR was as close to the ARIZONA-Class ships as possible in terms of capability, though it would never be a match for the newer ships. Menlan knew the turnover rate for the Prince’s ship was the lowest among active ships. Part of that was because of the honor that came with serving on Androcles’s ship, but a larger reason was his wife and mate. She was a taskmaster towards her crew, demanding nothing but the very best from them all of the time, but she would also go right to the wall in order to protect them and care for them. The crew of the SCIMITAR knew this and who in their right mind would want to transfer to a new ship when his wife and mate commanded the SCIMITAR in such a way.

“...to me!” Menlan heard Sa'sur bark as he watched her.

“We are settling into a high polar orbit and have begun scanning the planet.” Her XO barked out from where he stood next to the sensor station.

“Still no contacts in orbit?” Sa'sur called out.

“None that we can detect Captain.” The Tactical Officer replied.

“Andro says there are Kavalians on the planet damn it!” Sa'sur snapped. “I want to know where the nubou they came from!”

“Captain... the entire planetary power grid is offline!” Her XO barked once more. “The main Power Station is still operating at barely sustainable levels and power is barely flowing to the PDC Substations, but from there it has been stopped! Sensors indicate the PDC Coils have been removed from each substation! All six settlement grids are dark!”

“All orbiting satellites are locked out!” The XO snapped turning to face her and holding a data pad. His fingers tapped quickly on the pad. “We can use our fleet backup codes to access them, but no one on the surface will be able to access the network.” He moved up next to her chair. “The planet is effectively cut off.”

“Adjust lateral array nine to scan for Tri-Cobalt power sources!” Sa'sur ordered. “Both in orbit and on the surface!” She turned to her XO. “Tap into the satellite system Legol and tell me exactly what they were doing before they were locked out.” The man nodded and moved to another station. “Begin powering weapons! Bring the shields online as well! Have the Ready Alert Squadron on standby! And tell the Spartan detachment to suit up and move to the landing bay! I want them fully loaded! And tell them this is not a drill!”

“Captain!” The male voice spoke and Sa'sur turned to look at her husband and mate.

“Menlan?” She asked.

He stepped forward. “My recent trip to the Advanced War College brought me into the same class as Carina Leonidas. She suggested this same scenario in our classes on Kavalian tactics.”

“What scenario?” Sa'sur asked.

“If the information you are receiving is accurate then these are the estimated actions a Puma Bane Commando unit would assert in order to take the planet for a forward staging area.” Menlan spoke. “It would involved cutting the planet off and then securing key points before a larger force arrived to take the planet.”

Sa'sur came to her feet slowly. “Nubou lae!” She swore. “And Solmar is a strategic point to stage out of!”

Menlan nodded. “Given it's proximity to the Bontawillian border and Union space I would have to agree.” He said.

“Captain!” The sensor operator shouted as she turned from her station. “Long range sensors are detecting Kavalian ships jumping into the system!”

“Get Andro for me!” Sa'sur snarled. “Now!”

“Standby!”

Sa'sur turned to her XO. “I want Mark 22s in the missile launchers! Prep all torpedo bays and standby to launch the Ready Fighters!”

“Captain... Commander Sa'roh reports that the Prince has moved to the Eastern PDC substation. Without the satellites to bounce off, we'll need to move to an ecliptic orbit for direct COMs with his implant!”

“Do it!” Sa'sur snapped. “How long?”

“Six minutes!”

SOLMAR EASTERN POWER DISTRIBUTION COIL SUBSTATION

Andro stood beside the smashed computer control station and his azure eyes drifted over the bloody remains of nineteen Bontawillian and elf workers. His A4 hung from quick release clips now and his hands clenched and unclenched on the pistol grip and barrel of his weapon. It had taken them only fifteen minutes to cover the seventeen kilometers running full out in their wolf forms. Thankfully the terrain between where his STRIKER was and the substation was essentially flat and it allowed for them to traverse the thick timber easily. Andro stepped up to the aging Bontawillian who was leaning back in his chair, his throat sliced open by a large blade, his blood covering his uniform and pooled beneath his body. All of them had been executed in a similar callous manner. It mattered not that the engineers were all civilians and many of them probably had never fired a weapon in their entire lives.

Andro turned his head when Dorian and Dantio moved back into the control room.

“The engineering section looks the same.” Dantio spoke softly.

Dorian nodded. “Barracks area as well. They murdered everyone. Some even look as if they have been interrogated.”

“Three of the engineers appear to have been tortured as well.” Dantio spoke moving up beside his Prince. “Their bodies were... their limbs were missing.”

Andro nodded. “Puma Bane Commandos.” He answered. “They are not known for their forgiving natures. Nubous butchers!” He hissed.

“The PDC Coil generators are gone Milord.” Dantio continued. “No way to get power back.”

“How many dead?” Andro asked.

“Each substation had a standing crew of sixty-three.” Dantio answered him from memory of his mission files. “We’ve accounted for fifty-seven of them.”

Andro looked at him. “Elves.” He said.

“Milord?”

“Did you find any female elves?” Andro asked. “Personnel records indicate anywhere from four to six female elves worked at each Substation. They were from the 1st Elf Engineer Division.”

Dantio shook his head. “No Milord.”

Andro turned back to the dead bodies. “Then they were taken.” He said softly his anger beginning a slow burn.

“Sire... if they hit all three PDC Substations and the Power Station at the same time, they must have five times the number we saw take down our team.” Dantio said. “I estimate they hit this Substation with no less than fifty troops.”

“Dantio... what is the population of Solmar?” Andro asked turning to look at him once more.

“Between sixteen and eighteen thousand Milord.” He answered. “Mostly Bontawillian with a mixture of others. Elves and humans mostly.”

Andro’s ear implant crackled and Cletus’s voice sounded. “Andro... Sa’sur is trying to contact you. The station is disrupting her signal without the satellites. I have her on the short range holo projectors. She must have moved the SCIMITAR.”

Andro nodded. “On my way.” He spoke. He looked at Dantio. “Take whatever explosives we have with us and booby trap the generators.” He spoke. “If these Kavalian bastards try to turn the power back on to this station I want them to pay dearly.”

Dantio nodded. “Understood.” He spoke. “Then what?”

“Then we are going to detour and try to see what is happening at the spaceport.” Andro said. “I want to know what is going on.”

“Andro...” Dorian spoke now. “Standard OPSEC says we are to evacuate the planet.”

Andro nodded. “I know. But I won’t leave unless I know rescuing any civilians is not doable.” He said. “That’s why we are going to the spaceport.”

Dorian nodded his head. His own anger was building as well at what he had seen. The mindless butchering was almost too much. He held no regrets in his mind for killing Qurot in the fashion he had, but this senseless murder of civilians was unacceptable to him. And to his brother it seemed.

“I want gone from here in five Dantio.” Andro spoke. “You and the rest of your team just got drafted into the Durcunusaan as my personal team. Get to work.”

Dantio didn’t hesitate and turned to leave the control room as Dorian stepped closer to Andro. He looked at his older brother, a man who had taught him so much these last weeks. Dorian had spoken with his father three times since they had departed, each time longer than the last as his father imparted upon him all sorts of knowledge and his love. Yet Andro had been there from the outset and because they were both born fully aware of everything around them, this gave them a connection. “What now?” He asked softly.

Andro met his dual colored eyes. “We get as many civilians off this planet as we can fervon. No matter what it takes.”

SCIMITAR

“...thirty-seven Kavalian warships.” Sa'sur told him. “No GREAT SOULS... but a boat load of DIATAGAs escorting troop ships! They'll be in position at their present speed to begin landing troops within the hour. From the number of troop ships we estimate at least two to three complete divisions! Close to a hundred and fifty thousand troops! Andro... you need to get out of there now!” Sa'sur spoke to the fuzzy holographic image of Androcles on the surface of the planet below.

Sa'sur saw him shake his head. “No.” He answered. “We need to determine how many civilians are left. I don't think the Kavalians will have killed them all. We need to evac as many of them as possible.”

“That is not acceptable!” Sa'sur snapped back surprising Menlan with how she spoke to him. Then it occurred to him that they had fought together for many years and they were friends above all else. “You are Crown Prince! You can't not stay on a planet that is being invaded by the nubous Kavalians!”

“I will not leave these people to the mercies of the Puma Bane butchers!” Andro snapped right back. “You have not seen what they have done to those engineers we found here at the PDC Substation Sa'sur.” Sa'sur watched a Durcumusaan officer she did not recognize step into the transmission and whisper something to Andro. He turned back to her. “Send me the Spartan company Sa'sur. And every STRIKER and KADEN we have on board since they have Shrouds. We can stage out of another area on a different continent. I'll send the coordinates for them to land now.”

“Andro... you can not pull off the entire population!” Sa'sur barked at him.

“And you can not fight almost forty ships alone!” Andro ordered. “Take the SCIMITAR out system and call for back up. With the Spartan company and what I have here we can at least delay them from fully entrenching themselves here. It should buy you enough time to contact General Vengal and Admiral Ceneu. They are in command while Riall is in High Coven space! They will know what to send and how much!”

“Andro you...” Sa'sur began to protest more.

“You know I am right.” Andro said. “I will not risk our ship and our people against the odds arrayed in opposition to you now. Send me what I asked for and then leave the system and bring back help!”

“Three days Andro.” Sa'sur announced. “Four at most!”

Andro nodded. “We aren't going anywhere.” He said trying to interject some humor.

“Jomann and Sadi and your other mates are going to have my ass for leaving you!” Sa'sur stated.

Andro laughed now. “Only after they are done with me.” He said. “You are safe.”

“I'll be back Andro.” Sa'sur said.

“You always return Sa'sur.” Andro said. “That is why I trust you with my life. Now kick those ships loose and get out of here before the Kavalians arrive in force.”

“Stay frosty Andro!” Sa'sur exclaimed.

“I will.”

Sa'sur stood up as the transmission faded and then turned to her XO. “I want every possible bit of supplies we can spare on those KADENs and leaving in ten minutes!” She snapped. “Weapons! Rations! Uniforms! Everything! Go!” Her XO nodded and dashed from the bridge. “Helm... as soon as the KADENs launch come about and take us across the Bontawillian border. I don't care where. Send a coded burst to our Strike Wing. I'm done going places without our full Wing!”

Menlan stepped up to her now. “It is the right move tactically Sa'sur.” He said softly.

Sa'sur turned to look at him and nodded. “I know my love. That doesn't mean I have to like it.”

Menlan nodded. “True. Put me to work. I feel like a third wheel here. What can I do?”

SOLMAR
PRELIMINARY KAVALIAN ADHOC

His name was Azlenr'Macoe.

He was an experienced field General who had fought the High Coven for almost the entire war. He commanded three divisions of Kavalian regular and cloned troops and he had never failed in his tasks. He was considered ruthless and was not above killing innocent men and women to obtain his goals, but he also avoided wanton slaughter at all costs. His dark brown fur was just beginning to show gray due to his four thousand six hundred years of life, but he was as fit and sharp as he had been in his youth. Unlike many Kavalian officers and Pride Leaders he preferred to operate meticulously and with care. He did not rush into a situation blind and this is why he was so successful. This operation was his idea, seizing the newest Bontawillian colony as a forward staging area with overwhelming force before the Union even knew they had lost it. Azlenr studied the terrain around him from the ridgeline where he had set up his command post. They had set up on the plateau roughly three thousand feet above the valley floor with the remaining ten thousand feet of mountain reaching up into the low clouds behind them. His meteorologists told him the clouds would clear mid day and he would be able to look across the valley and see the mountain where the main Power Station was, as well as the magnificent waterfall. He lowered the macrobinos as his senior aide and another officer walked up to him.

"All teams have reported in General." His aide reported. "Power to all the settlements is down. We have used their computers to lock out the satellites and all communications now must go through our people."

"We have broadcast the false reports?" Azlenr asked.

"The last one went out only moments ago." His aide said. "The Union is unaware of what is happening."

"Insure we monitor any incoming traffic Makali'Bengane." Azlenr spoke. "They will become aware soon enough."

"As you order General." Makali replied. "This is Major Marsin'Jiate General. The Puma Bane Detachment commander."

Azlenr looked at the Puma Bane officer. He did not care for Puma Bane troops. They were on average exceptionally violent and cared not for the ramifications of their actions. Most of them were cruel to the extreme and he knew they answered to Keleru'Puat no matter what. "Yes... I know of Major Marsin. Your teams did well Major." He said finally.

The Puma Bane troop bowed his head. "It was an inspired plan General. I commend you."

"Your status?" Azlenr asked.

"My teams have secured all objectives." Marsin answered. "We have pulled back to our areas per your instructions."

"The Power Coils?" Azlenr asked him.

"Fifteen power coils are in our possession. Three from each PDC Substation and one back up from each facility." Marsin answered.

"You will have your teams transport the coils to our main supply depot." Azlenr told him. "It is being established at the base of this mountain on the west. I want the coils there within six hours."

Marsin looked at him. "I thought we were supposed to secure them General." He asked.

"And you did." Azlenr answered. "Now you will hand them over to my people."

"May I ask why?" Marsin spoke. "Our team areas are much more covertly hidden than the supply depot General. The coils would be safer there."

Azlenr turned his body and faced the Puma Bane officer. "My forward scouts are even now entering the settlements Major. Your men killed upwards of four thousand civilians in taking control of the settlements. Among them several dozen children. You were instructed to use minimal force in subduing the population Major."

"And we did sir!" Marsin hissed softly. "Those who died fought us."

"Unharmd civilians fought you and your men Major?" Azlenr asked. "Bontawillians by their nature are not militaristic. You should have used non-lethal force to subdue them. Thanks to your actions when word leaks out of the civilian casualties here you will have painted a very large target on us. You know as well as I the light the Union sees in intentionally harming civilians. What could have been a simple loss of a colony world, your actions and those of your Puma Bane troops will now turn into a major point of contention."

“The Union will not commit forces to retake this colony General.” Marsin spoke. “They are stretched thinner than we are. And we still outnumber them three to one while we recoup our ship and clone losses.”

“Are you so sure Major?” Azlenr spoke.

“I have studied the Union intensely General.” Marsin answered. “Especially this boy Prince who is now in charge while their King runs from Marshall Pusintin. He is not fool enough, nor experienced enough to try and retake this colony.”

“I wonder if the Evolli thought as you do Major?” Azlenr asked. “You know what he did to them.”

Marsin’s eyes narrowed. “We are not the Evolli sir!” He snarled.

“No we are not Major. We are Kavalians!” Azlenr snapped moving closer to the man. “And we follow orders! My orders! You and your men will have no more contact with the civilian population of this colony Major. You have killed enough of them and made my job harder.”

Marsin held his tongue and nodded his head. “As you order General.” He said.

“What about this military unit you engaged near the spaceport?” Azlenr asked.

“They were most likely on leave here sir.” Marsin answered. “Five of them. They were at the spaceport seeing off friends it appears. They departed on the last transport before we shut down the network. One of them lives. A vampire. He has not been very forthcoming so far with information. My men will take up the interrogation again when they reach their team staging area.”

Azlenr shook his head. “No.” He said. “I want him remanded to the custody of my men. Along with the elven females you took from the PDC Substations.”

Marsin’s eyes narrowed once more. “Sir?”

“I know every detail about this colony Major.” Azlenr snarled. “Right down to how many children are left after the twenty-eight you and your men killed. Each PDC Substation had six female elves assigned to it from the 1st Elven Engineer Division based on Elear. I do not know what other commanders you have worked for have allowed you to do in the past, but you will not be keeping those females as spoils of war Major.”

“They are females General.” Marsin said. “I will use them to keep the moral of my men at peak levels.”

“You will turn every single one of them over to my people.” Azlenr told him. “Alive and unhurt. And you will do so immediately Major.”

“General you...”

Azlenr stepped even closer. “Do not press me Major. I know who you are and what you have done in the past.” Azlenr snarled at him. “I do not like Puma Bane troops. You take too many liberties and are far too violent for this type of operation. You have served your purpose and now you will hand over everything you took from the PDC Substations and the main Power Plant. Including the female elves. I will not allow your men to rape them or mark them at your whim. This would only incite the Union even more.”

“And if I do not?” Marsin asked.

“Then Major... you and your men will not live out the day.” Azlenr snapped. “My men are loyal to me... and they are not children. You may kill a few of them but you will die.”

“We are Puma Bane Warriors!” Marsin growled.

Azlenr nodded. “The finest of us all.” He said. “I have heard it all before. You will follow orders Major. Or do I need to contact the Prefect myself. He is the one who sanctioned this operation and placed me in overall command. Who do you think he will side with Major? You may answer to him, but even he knows what your uses are.” Azlenr stepped back. “You and your men will have your blood Major.” He said. “After what you have done the Union will no doubt make retaking Solmar one of their top objectives. And your lack of respect for your enemies will be your undoing as well Major. The Lycavorian Union is not the High Coven and they will not throw down their weapons and run at the first sign of trouble.”

“I do not fear the Union or its toy soldiers!” Marsin snapped.

Azlenr nodded. “And I will place that on your tombstone Major. Now... now you will do as I order you or I will string up your carcass for all to see. Is that understood?”

Marsin looked around and saw that at least half a dozen security troops had slowly moved closer. All of them with stern, no nonsense expressions. He turned back to Azlenr. “My men will deliver the prisoners to you within six hours.” He said. “Unhurt.”

Azlenr nodded. “Excellent. Do not worry Major; I will insure you and your men have your blood. But it will be on my terms... not yours. You are dismissed.”

Azlenr waited until Marsin had walked out of earshot before looking at his aide. “You do not trust him Makali?”

The Colonel looked at him. “I do not trust Puma Bane troops as a whole General.” He replied.

Azlenr nodded. “Nor do I my friend. Nor do I. This one I know well from a friend.” He said. “Their skills are unmatched however and right now we need those skills.”

Makali looked at him. “What do you suspect General?” He asked.

“This group of soldiers his men butchered?” Azlenr said. “Our own intelligence officers that I have questioned since arriving have stated that reports taken from civilians indicate they killed twenty of Marsin’s men before they fell. Five of them Makali. And they took down twenty Puma Bane troops before they fell? That tells me they were not normal troops and I want to know what they were doing here. Insure this vampire they captured is delivered unharmed. As well as the elven females. I will meet with them when our main forces are on the surface and deploying to their positions.”

Makali nodded. “Brigadier Byka’Caleo says they will begin landing in under forty minutes.”

Azlenr nodded. “Good. And Makali... insure no Puma Bane troop crosses paths with Byka. He hates them all. Marsin is the one who took his daughter from him and maimed her. When he discovers it is him we will need to keep them apart.”

Makali nodded. “I will see to it sir.”

Brigadier Byka’Caleo was a good friend and had served with Azlenr for going on four hundred years now. Like Azlenr... he was a true Kavalian of old. He still had honor and he cared for the men under his command as a Pride Leader. Also like Azlenr... he had been with the same woman for centuries. As Pride leaders they could take several females to share their bed if they so chose. It was a part of their culture to insure the strongest bloodlines existed into the future. While many of the younger Pride Leaders did this often, Azlenr had no desire to do such a thing. His woman had bore him seven strong children, among them two daughters who were now the wives of officers within his own command so that he could watch out for them. It was something he had promised his woman when they entered this world and Azlenr kept his promises to her. Byka was no different and it was well known he hated Puma Bane troops across the board. His youngest daughter Kameka, one of the very first females to undergo the biogenic altering, had been taken from him by Marsin several years ago. Byka had been unable to stop this, and within a year Marsin had returned his daughter to them maimed and unable to bear children. Then he had tried to have the name of their Pride disgraced by her so called actions. Marsin reported that she resisted him in almost every attempt to take her into his bed. That had not worked out the way he had planned because of Byka’s influence, but no action was ever taken against him. The scars his daughter bore on her face from his rutting served to remind Byka every day of his feelings for those of his ilk. Kameka had recovered enough to become quite an exceptional pilot, the scars still visible but not as prominent as they were the first months after the attack. Byka had been given special permission for her to serve in combat with his unit because of the way Marsin had mistreated her and tried to tarnish the name of his Pride. His daughter was now a close assault pilot flying a PROTOSS gunship. Her only wish now was to die with as much of her dignity as she had left intact. Byka knew this and there were times it tore at him inside knowing what she was feeling. He also knew this was not how most male Kavalians would act and he kept it hidden from her.

“No signs of ships in orbit Makali?” Azlenr asked.

“No General.”

“Which means nothing with the Union Shrouds.” Azlenr spoke absently. “Make sure our anti-ship batteries go into service first. If the Union comes here I want to make sure they pay for whatever gains they may try to make.”

“Understood General.” Makali said.

“Tell Byka I want his scouts out within thirty minutes of him landing.” Azlenr said. “The soldiers Marsin encountered are an oddity that I want to figure out quickly. And bring me the vampire as soon as he is delivered.”

Makali nodded. “I will see to it sir.”

EARTH
SPARTA
FEBRUARY 3RD 2575
OFFICES OF SENATOR ICHO

“...not a good idea Ulana.” Icho spoke to the image of Ulana within the holographic COM unit on his desk.

“Why not?” Ulana asked. “I have been having the rallies all across my district on Apo Prime and they have been well received.”

Icho shook his head. “This is not Apo Prime.” He stated. “The Spartan lore and history our people have embraced starts here in Sparta. It is strongest here. Openly trying to denounce anyone within the Royal Family within Sparta or Gytheio will only backfire on you.”

“There are many who call Sparta home now.” Ulana spoke.

Icho nodded. “And for the most part they live here because they have adopted the Spartan legacy as well.”

“It is already planned.” Ulana stated smugly. “I can not back out. I have two ships full of supporters arriving from Apo Prime who will attend the rallies as well.”

“You are going to cause more problems with these rallies than you realize.” Icho spoke. “What we are trying to do takes time and patience.”

“And this is how I will approach what we are trying to do.” Ulana told him. “That blond wolf bitch Sadi holds the title I should have! She has the man I should have! She is a common tart and I will show her what place she holds in the grand scheme soon enough!”

Icho cut his eyes to his senior aide quickly and then looked back at Ulana. “Very well. As long as you know what you are doing Ulana?”

“Trust me Icho. I am an Alpha female and I will have Androcles coming to me before all is said and done.” Ulana told him.

“Keep me informed of what you are doing. We still need to coordinate our actions to keep pressure on them from all different sides.” Ulana said.

Ulana nodded her head in the transmission. “Of course.” She said.

Icho reached forward and tapped the console and her image disappeared. He turned his head to look at Aleus. “She is becoming more of a nuisance than I first imagined Aleus.” He spoke.

“It is hard to believe she clings to this misbegotten idea that she will somehow win back the Prince.” Aleus spoke.

Icho nodded as he rose to his feet and moved to the wet bar. He poured himself a large glass of Spartan wine and held it out to his aide. Aleus moved forward and took it and then Icho poured another for himself. “Ulana is her own worst enemy.” He said. “Her father spoiled her to no end as his only daughter. She believes everyone owes her something. And she believes Androcles belongs to her.”

Aleus nodded as he settled into the chair. “Is it possible she could succeed?” He asked.

Icho moved back to his desk. “No. Not if all the data you gathered is correct.”

“I had our people double check all of it Senator.” Aleus spoke. “It can not be refuted.”

Icho nodded as he sat down. “Then Ulana will fail miserably at what she is attempting to do. There will be some who convert to her side and begin to ask questions but the vast majority will not be fooled by her no matter what information she presents.”

“Her actions could lead to a confrontation with the Princess.” Aleus spoke. “Perhaps we could use that?”

Icho shook his head. “If it does come to blows, the Princess will be within her realm to beat her down. Even kill her depending on what Ulana attempts. No... Ulana is on her own if she wishes to butt heads with Sadi Leonidas. We will help as much as we are able but she will act on her own accord and fall if need be.”

Aleus nodded. “As you wish.”

“Silele is moving forward?” Icho asked.

Aleus nodded. “She is a member of the Defense Committee. She and Ulana both will be in the session today. Silele will lead the questioning of this Marci person from the Krypteria.”

Icho nodded. “Good. Insure Nomean keeps our lines to Laustinos open but secure. Any information that we obtain must be sent to him immediately. Do we know where he is?”

Aleus shook his head. “We assume somewhere within Kavalian space, but we have no real location to go by.”

Icho nodded. “He will make contact soon enough.” He said. “He is thorough if nothing else.”

“Do you trust him Senator?” Aleus asked.

Icho nodded. “It is he who brought me into the fold remember.” He answered. “The goal he set for beginning these actions was in my opinion foolhardy. Trying to insure things went according to a plan that gave him Dysea in the end was ignorant, but the man is brilliant. If the Kavalians had not failed in killing Martin Leonidas, our position would be much better. As it is... the longer he stays away the better our chances. His son is no politician and his Aunt and others can only protect him for so long. As long as we continue along the plan we established three years ago we will be protected and our actions will not lead back to us if we are careful Aleus. Make sure everyone knows that.”

Aleus nodded. “I have Senator. On several occasions.”

Icho smiled. “No doubt.” He said. “Now... what is the status of those within the fleet who sympathize with us?”

Aleus looked at the data pad. “Six are in a position to give us good information. Another five that can provide rumor and gossip based information. They are not high enough in rank to provide what the others can.”

“Rumor and gossip is good for our plans.” Icho said. “Any within the Prince’s Strike Wing.”

Aleus shook his head. “His immediate Strike Wing were all handpicked by the Captain of the SCIMITAR and others. We have one of the six within his overall Combined Fleet Unit, but not on his ship.”

“How difficult would that be to change?” Icho asked.

“I could find out.” Aleus said. “I have a contact in Fleet Personnel.”

“Do that Aleus.” Icho said. “Now let’s talk about the two proposals we will bring before the Senate Financial Committee about our young Prince. You are certain about your facts?”

Aleus nodded. “They are irrefutable Senator.”

Icho nodded his head. “Good. It will be enjoyable to see him sweat and brought down to our level. And it will be the first crack in the armor of the Leonidas family.”

SPARTA

GOVERNOR’S OFFICE

CHEILONOS BOULEVARD

The Governor’s office of Sparta was located on the south end of Cheilonos Boulevard and had occupied the same building for the last four hundred and nineteen years. While the exterior of the four story building remained the same architectural style as just after The Great Fire, the interior of the building was as modern as it could possibly be. From the day Tarifa had become wolf she had fully embraced everything about the culture and traditions of Sparta. Even her elven father, War Master Tareif, and her mother and siblings had embraced the life almost completely. Tarifa had risen to a position that no non-pureblood wolf had ever occupied before as Governor of Sparta. Her closeness with Martin and their adventures before had played some part, but not all, in the fact that over ninety percent of the men and women who called Sparta home voted for her in the Special election held after Andro appointed her Governor. Tarifa’s own energy and grasp of Lycavorian and Spartan history that was held so dear was the main reason so many Lycavorian Spartans voted for her without question. She and Aihola had given their mate six proud Spartan children over the past twenty-six years, and all of them were true Spartans at heart no matter that three of them were part Drow. Tarifa commanded respect and attention wherever she went because of her surreal beauty but also because of her intelligence and manner. She was not a woman to be trifled with as many had discovered through the years in different and painful ways and the fact that the King of the Lycavorian Union considered her a beloved sister also gave her quite a lot of political clout. Clout that she used to make things better for all of the people of Sparta as well as Earth.

Tarifa looked across her desk at Deia and Gorgo. "I still don't understand why you did not let me just refuse her a permit." She spoke as she handed the pad to her senior aide and the female elf turned to exit the office.

"It is better to confront these issues head on." Deia spoke. "Ulana's concerns with Sadi would have only grown more prominent if we denied her the right to hold her ridiculous rallies here in Sparta."

"She brought in nearly three hundred men and women from Apo Prime." Tarifa spoke with a grin. "Fucking Peaceniks Martin once called them."

Deia chuckled loudly. "He does have such a way with words doesn't he?" She said with a smile.

"The fact that she had them brought her tells us that she knows her rallies will not attract many people within Sparta. She brought them as a way to make herself seem more important." Gorgo spoke. "That they are not citizens of Sparta or Earth will be made a very prominent news item when the rallies are reported on."

"Are we so sure?" Tarifa asked. "The Netnews Channels that will be covering the rally are not known to support Martin or his policies."

Deia nodded. "No... this is true." She said. "But we are going to fight misinformation with good information. Sadi and the others have agreed to do an interview. One that we hope will offset any lies that Ulana spews at her rally. It will air on thirty-seven channels live the day after her rally."

Tarifa looked at her with a smile. "How exactly did you manage that?" She asked.

"It wasn't easy believe me." Deia replied. "Sadi and Ne'Veha are wary of the Netnews people. More so than Carisia or Lu'ria because the Netnews reporters will not attempt to go after either of them."

Tarifa nodded her head. "A wise move considering that most Drow would take great offense at such a move. Not to mention that Lu'ria's mother is a Senator and representative of Earth." She looked at Deia and Gorgo as she sipped her tea. "Ulana is not the reason you are here though is it?" She asked.

Deia shook her head. "No." She spoke. "We've come to warn you. It's very possible that Icho will attempt to somehow use your past relationship with Martin against him and by default against you."

"My past relationship?" Tarifa asked. "I assume you are referring to the few weeks that we were lovers right after he returned to Earth?"

Gorgo nodded her head. "Icho is just the type to try and use this fact against you."

Tarifa snorted very unladylike and then laughed. "Let the fool try." She stated firmly with no hint of back up in her. "Our relationship is a matter of history Gorgo. You both know this. It has not mattered to anyone before. Why should it matter now?"

Deia looked at Gorgo quickly and then turned back to Tarifa. "Androcles believes... and many of us agree... that Icho is working in some fashion for the Kavalians."

Tarifa's sapphire colored eyes opened slightly wider and she leaned back in her chair. "But you have no proof." She said.

Deia nodded. "Not yet. We can not openly order an investigation against him without some sort of evidence. Evidence which we do not have." She explained. "That would look like we are holding a grudge against him because of his vote in the Senate."

"I take it he is one of those who voted against Spartan Law and the Declaration of War against the KFI?" Tarifa asked.

Deia nodded. "Yes."

"What does this have to do with me?" Tarifa asked. "I am only the Governor of Sparta. I have no say in the overall politics of the Union."

"Your words carry far more weight than you might think Tarifa." Gorgo told her. "You are perhaps the most respected living female elf behind Dysea and For'mya."

Tarifa grinned. "So I am in good company." She stated remembering briefly the close relationship she had shared with Dysea so long ago, as well as the friendship she now had with both of them.

Deia looked at her. "You and Martin have fought for the same things Tarifa. You always have. Ever since those first days. Your minds operate in the same fashion. You..."

Tarifa held up her hand stopping Deia's words. "Deia... you do not need to shower me with praise in order to ask me what you want to ask me." She said. "You should know me better than that by now."

Gorgo chuckled now and she looked at Deia. "Now it is I who will tell you I told you so." She said.

Deia laughed softly in agreement and looked at Tarifa. “As Prime Minister I can not have an investigation started on Icho.” She stated. “But as Governor of Sparta you can. Discretely of course.”

Tarifa smiled knowingly at the two women. “So you wish me to ask Nya Istel to have the Drow begin an investigation of him?”

“Aihola is Vice President of Earth and Queen of the Drow.” Deia said. “Icho maintains two residences here on Earth and he has several business dealings with companies located in Eden City. I also know that Aihola has started similar investigations at Martin’s behest in the past. Anything at all that might be helpful in determining what Icho is up to would be greatly appreciated.”

“I take it Androcles does not know about this?” Tarifa said.

Deia chuckled. “No. My mandri is still very naïve when it comes to politics. The three of us are not. His solution to the problem would be...” Deia shrugged. “Questionable at best.”

Tarifa nodded. “His solution would be just to eliminate Icho and call it a day.” She stated knowingly. “Sort of like his father.”

“Now you see why we came to you.” Deia said. “Icho knows we can not come after him in any way without some sort of evidence that he has done something wrong. You however... you are not so limited.”

Tarifa nodded. “Consider it done.” She stated. “Aihola and I are having lunch together and I will speak with her then. What does Panos say?” She asked.

Gorgo grinned. “Panos is doing what I expect an old Spartan to do.” She said. “We most likely do not want to know.”

Tarifa laughed once more. “Oh I do know that feeling.” She said. She had spent nearly a decade as Panos’s Lieutenant Governor and she knew well the trouble he used to get into. She looked at Deia. “I assume then that you are fully back to work?”

Deia nodded her head. “For the most part.” She answered. “Though I am letting Panos handle most of it. To think he was in front of me all these years and I never noticed it. He is the wisest and most devious politician I have ever met. Excluding myself of course.” She said with a smile. “And trust me... I’ve dealt with some very devious politicians in my time.”

“It comes from his time on the Spartan Senate.” Gorgo spoke. “Even back then they would toss each other to the wolves if they could get away with it. And they were not as polite about how they did it back then. Leonidas hated it.”

“Well I for one am glad he is on my side.” Deia said.

“Why don’t you and Gorgo join Aihola and I for lunch?” Tarifa asked.

Deia looked at her. “That could cause some rumblings.” She said.

“Let the Netnews rumble.” Tarifa snorted. “You are Martin’s Aunt and mother and Aihola and I are like his sisters. We both feel that way towards him. Neither of us had an older brother... well Nya Istel did... but Martin has taken Tari’s place in her heart now. Why should we be denied the enjoyment of family?”

“Where?” Gorgo asked.

“Where else?” Tarifa asked with a smile. “Gallais’s Retreat.”

EARTH

DRAGON MOUNTAIN

Once known as the island of Sardinia and now home to Dragon Mountain.

Syrilth waited patiently as her ruby red eyes watched the STRIKER DT power down on one of the eight landing pads now built around Dragon Mountain. Through everything that had happened in the last quarter century, the one thing that Syrilth had never imagined was having the position she now did. She was the youngest Dragon Elder on the Council at only three thousand and fourteen years of age, but her experiences and the many hundreds of years she had spent doing nothing but safeguarding her brothers and sisters had earned her untold respect in the eyes of every living dragon. Giving her a seat of the Dragon Elder Council was the very least Arzoal and the others could think to do, for while there were many who were older than her, none of them had forsaken everything about themselves to protect others as Syrilth had. None of them had endured the pain and humiliation she had endured being forced to bond with vile Maraud as he was now called in order to keep her siblings alive. Whatever sins she may have committed while protecting her siblings had long been forgiven. Now Syrilth was honored and trusted and respected. Her sister Tharua was the Bonded One of Eliani Leonidas and her younger brother Roluth was Bonded to not one, but two beautiful women who held the fates of so many in their hands. The youngest of her siblings who had so far hatched was now the Bonded One to Lu'ria of the Drow and Majeir carried a Princess of the Union with dignity, honor and love. It seemed the moment that Aricia Blue Eyes, Isheeni and the others had freed them, Syrilth and her siblings were thrust into a position of importance for all time.

Syrilth watched with patience yes... but inside she was bursting with excitement. Arzoal had tasked her with one mission when she left. A mission of great importance and honor since it directly affected Talon Guardian Androcles. Through the years Syrilth had garnered an almost reverent respect for Martin Leonidas and his son Androcles. For Torma and Elynth. Their brave actions on Alba Tau were already burned into the history scrolls and minds of every living and breathing dragon. What they had done that long and bloody night, refusing to surrender the bodies of their fellow riders and dragons to the Evolli even though hopelessly outnumbered and injured themselves, this single act had raised the four of them to almost mystical proportions among the dragons across the Union. No matter where they went now, no matter what they encountered, any breathing dragon would know they were Talon Guardians and they would honor that most reverent of positions in dragon society.

Syrilth saw the ramp lock into a down position and she watched Sadi and Ne'Veha making their way down the metal deck plates. She watched them stop at the bottom of the ramp and look at the side of the mountain that was formerly City Ship 41. Now buried within the mountainous terrain of Sardinia, City Ship 41 was not only home to all the dragons on Earth, but also a place of quiet learning and study to those that were bound to dragons. Avi had configured the bio-mechanical nature of the ship into such a shape as to allow the dragons who called it home to feel as natural as possible. The main chamber itself was massive in size and easily able to accommodate the lessons in flying that were given to all the hatchlings. There were hundreds of cave like structures now, some part of the ship and some even part of the actual mountain Avi had landed within. The caves of Dragons and their hatchlings. Families of dragons. Dozens of them. Their numbers grew each year and Syrilth and the other Dragon Elders could not be happier. It was not uncommon now to see dragons filling the skies of Earth and moving along the wide streets of Sparta and other cities with their Bonded Ones just as they did on Elear. Syrilth's ruby eyes blinked knowing that Sadi and Ne'Veha could feel it. Sadi was nearly the equal of Androcles in terms of power Syrilth could feel, and Ne'Veha was a burning light that was growing in leaps and bounds daily. As were Carisia and Lu'ria.

Syrilth turned her massive head to the light green scaled male dragon who waited quietly beside her. A Dragon Council Sentinel, one of the newest members of that revered group whose sole duty was to protect the Dragon Elder Council at all costs.

Bessyn... will you escort them to the private chamber on deck three. Syrilth told him.

The male dragon nodded. They can feel them Elder Syrilth. They don't know what it is but they can feel them even through the shielding.

Syrilth nodded. Yes they can. But they are Talon Guardian Androcles's wives and mates. Would you expect anything less?

Bessyn looked at her and gave her what passed for a dragon smile. No I would not Elder Syrilth. I will bring them to you straight away.

Syrilth blinked and nodded her huge head. Quickly Bessyn... now that they have come... the shielding will not work for very long. Both of them have grown too strong and without the Elder Mother or Androcles here to reinforce it, the shielding will not remain active for more than a few minutes.

Bessyn nodded and turned his massive body heading out of the small view platform while Syrilth made her way in the opposite direction.

Ne'Veha squeezed Sadi's hand as they made their way down the stone like corridor following the dragon. "Sadi... Sadi I feel... I feel very different." She said softly.

Sadi watched the huge dragon in front of them guide them down the corridor. "As do I. I have... I have been here many times and I have never felt like this before. I am anxious but..."

"... feeling so very alert and focused." Ne'Veha said.

"Yes." Sadi agreed looking at her. "I can almost feel each and every dragon within the mountain. I have never been able to do that before."

"I have never felt it at all before now." Ne'Veha spoke wistfully. "It is... it is wondrous!"

They were gripping each other's hands tightly when they entered the small lounge area and saw Syrilth's huge body. The lounge overlooked the massive flying chamber in the center of the ship as all of them did and Sadi and Ne'Veha could see dozens of hatchlings taking instruction from different adult dragons. Sadi and Ne'Veha did not hesitate in the least and they moved right up to Syrilth.

"Syrilth." Sadi spoke with genuine warmth as she reached up and laid her palm on Syrilth's smooth scales snout. "It is always a pleasure to see you."

Syrilth's ruby eyes beamed as she felt Sadi's warm hand and then Ne'Veha's as they greeted her. It is always an honor and privilege to have the beloved wives and mates to Talon Guardian Androcles here. She told them. Both of you have grown so much in so short a time.

Sadi chuckled and glanced at Ne'Veha. "Some would debate that with you." She stated.

Syrilth snorted and her ruby eyes did a fair impression of rolling in her head. You speak of the fools who attempt to besmirch you Sadi and the SirsanGai of Androcles. They will fail in the end.

"Let's hope so." Ne'Veha said with a smile.

Sadi looked around slowly. "Syrilth... why did you ask us here?" She questioned. "Do you have something to pass onto Andro when he returns?"

Syrilth looked at her and shook her massive head. It would be more fair to say that your beloved Saradasaar wanted me to pass something on to you. To both of you.

Sadi looked quickly at Ne'Veha and then back to Syrilth. "Ok now you have us stumped." She spoke. "We have been wondering all morning what it is you needed from us."

Can you not feel it? Syrilth asked.

"Feel... feel what?" Ne'Veha asked softly as she looked at her.

You do feel it don't you? Syrilth asked them again. I can see it within your eyes and your hearts. How he knows these things is beyond me... but he was right.

"Who was right Syrilth?" Sadi asked hesitantly.

Have you not wondered why you feel differently this morning? Syrilth asked. Why as you came closer to Dragon Mountain your awareness and focus grew so much stronger than it has before?

Sadi glanced at Ne'Veha again quickly. "We have wondered this yes." She answered. "What... Syrilth what is going on? What has Andro done?"

Syrilth gazed at them for a long moment before answering. It is... I will show you why this is. She stated finally. And you will know the truth of what your husband and mate has known for many weeks and months.

"Now you are beginning to scare me." Ne'Veha stated.

Be not afraid SirsanGai of Androcles. Syrilth spoke. This is a moment of great joy and happiness.

"Syrilth what..." Sadi began to ask her but her jungle green eyes grew wide and she gasped loudly. "Ohhh..."

Now it is time to lower all of your shields and allow yourselves to come forth. Syrilth spoke softly. Reach out with everything you are and meet those who were meant for you from the day they were hatched.

Sadi and Ne'Veha turned at the sound of the secondary door off the lounge opening and they watched with wide eyes as the light green scaled dragon and the dark tanned scaled dragon moved into the lounge quickly. They looked to be very young adolescent dragons, no more than perhaps eight months old, though you would not be able to tell that from the size of their lean muscular bodies. And both of them had finally dropped the pretense of hiding what they knew would happen as they had for the last four months. The power within Mindvoice was there now, surging outward as the sons of Vollenth and Viera dropped their shields completely and let their Bonded Ones know they existed.

Syrilth had never witnessed a natural Bonding of two minds before and for her it was just as new and beautiful as the first sunrise after being hatched. She watched as Caydren, the larger of the two brothers by perhaps half a meter in height and length moved without question or pause to stand in front of Sadi. His dark tan scales gleamed with heath and power, his ten foot height and fifteen foot length imposing to all but Sadi as she stared at him in wonder. His wings unfurled slowly and began to shiver as he reached for Sadi within Mindvoice. Cinol did almost exactly the same to Ne'Veha, moving right up in front of her and extending his large head down to just in front of her shocked face.

Reach for me my sister! Caydren spoke with a trembling voice to Sadi as she stared at him with wide eyes. I have... we have waited so long for this day!

Neither Sadi or Ne'Veha hesitated in the least and they dropped all attempts of shielding themselves from the dragons before them. The gasps of incredible happiness and amazement sounded from both of them, Ne'Veha dropping to her knees in overwhelming wonder as Cinol's young mind merged with hers seamlessly. Sadi remained standing barely, her hands reaching up instinctively to touch both sides of Caydren's snout with horribly trembling hands and then the essence of who he was surged through her as Cinol's did with Ne'Veha. Even from the deck where she was on her knees Ne'Veha looked up with wide dark brown eyes and brought her palms to Cinol's muzzle above her.

Syrlith could only watch in wonder, their wings and tails twitching madly as four minds became two. It was an experience she would never forget as she too could feel their minds merging and sharing all that they were with each other. Among the dragons of the Union Sadi Leonidas was considered nearly on a par with Aricia Blue Eyes in terms of reverence and even power. Ne'Veha Leonidas was an elf and now mate to Talon Guardian Androcles and her power was growing by the day. Caydren and Cinol had been waiting for this day since returning to Earth from Kranek. The moment they entered this world both Arzoal and Andro had known they were meant for Sadi and Ne'Veha. They had safeguarded this information until Caydren and Cinol returned to Earth and Andro and Arzoal had met briefly with Syrlith before Arzoal left to decide what to do. Arzoal had charged Syrlith to train the hatchlings hard, schooling them so that they would be prepared sooner than most for they were intended for the wives and mates of a Talon Guardian. The ability was there because of their father Vollenth and Arzoal had no doubts they could handle it. She had been right as Caydren and Cinol absorbed all she had taught them and yearned for more. Their thirst for knowledge was unmatched for hatchlings their age and Syrlith knew it was because of what their father had discovered when finally free of Yuri Moran's touch.

Syrlith settled to the floor of the lounge as Bessyn slip through the doorway and watched with wonder for a moment before turning to her.

Elder Syrlith? He spoke softly.

Syrlith turned her head. Bessyn... have liquid and fruit brought here. They will need it soon.

Then it was a success? He asked.

Can you not see my friend? Syrlith spoke her ruby eyes gazing at the two pairs before her. Spread the word Bessyn. Allow our kind within the Mountain to sing their praise and joy for what is happening.

Bessyn nodded his large head. I will Elder Syrlith. I will.

Syrlith watched as he departed quickly and her eyes went back to Sadi and Ne'Veha. Their faces glowed in enchantment as they absorbed the essences of their Bonded Brothers and Caydren and Cinol in turn absorbed their essences. Merging as they were, their combined Mindvoice resonances had grown five fold and with a simple thought Syrlith sent the order to the control center deep within Dragon Mountain, to the elf commanding officer, to increase the output of the exterior Mindvoice dampeners. She was answered immediately with a another simple thought and her ordered was acted on instantly. The Mindvoice dampeners that had been constructed encircling the island of Sardinia and surrounded Dragon Mountain increased their power levels. The control center was staffed exclusively by elves or Lycavorians and their sole purpose was to insure the safety and security of Dragon Mountain, especially since Aikiro's breach of the mountain those months ago. Anyone who was not a Tier Six Etheric user would now no longer be able to feel the hundreds of dragon minds from the Mountain. At least for the time being. It was a unique step to insure privacy for Sadi and Ne'Veha and no doubt Syrlith would be receiving a visit from the Director of the School of Mages or his representative because she had done this. Syrlith knew they hated to be left out of what was happening inside Dragon Mountain and while they could request to come here at any time, they were always escorted. Neither Martin nor Andro trusted them in the least, and Helen and Arzoal trusted them only slightly more than they did.

Since Helen had stepped down as DoSM, the man she had left in charge was somewhat overbearing and arrogant. He felt he needed to be informed of everything that happened in regards to Etheric use. And he was particularly interested in everything that occurred within Dragon Mountain. To his great chagrin, he had to announce his intent to come to the mountain or send his agents and Arzoal never informed him of what occurred within the mountain which pissed him off mightily. Syrilth only continued this action since she was the senior Dragon Elder on Earth when Arzoal was not present and she had a particular distain for the man. He held no respect for the dragons it seemed. Syrilth had no doubts someone would be contacting her soon enough.

Now Syrilth simply basked in the joy of the Bonding as she sat with them in the lounge and watched their minds dance together within Mindvoice, their bonds forming and growing before her very eyes.

SOLMAR

NORTHWEST OF SPACEPORT

TRAKEN MOUNTAIN RANGE

Andro lowered the macrobinos and let his azure eyes scan the settlement far below them. He rested on the mountain ridge some two thousand feet above the settlement and northwest of the spaceport on the west edge of the settlement. Elynth and Ryner rested within the treeline of the plateau they were on, Dantio and Cletus on either side of him and Dorian. The remainder of the Omega Team 62 were spread out along the ridge, everyone watching some portion of the city.

“This isn’t good.” Dorian spoke softly.

Andro shook his head. “No it isn’t.” He echoed his brother.

“They’re moving fast.” Dantio said his eyes glued to his binos. “Looks like they are gathering all of the civilians in one place. The Amphitheater on the south edge of the city. Lots of guards too.”

“They are burning bodies on the east edge of the settlement.” Vari hissed softly.

Andro lifted his binos and shifted to that location. He could see the black smoke and the Kavalian soldiers almost callously tossing more bodies onto the three piles that were burning. “Nubous ronnus!” He cursed knowing that the Kavalians were denying the Bontawillians their death rights by doing what they were doing.

“Looks like a Command Post on the peak opposite of the settlement Andro.” Cletus said. “I can just make out anti-air placements.”

Andro shifted his focus again. “Nice location.” He stated. “High enough to see into three of the six settlements from one location.” He lowered the binos. “Our people won’t be there. It makes it too much of a target. Emios?”

The Omega Team member was on the far end of the line and inspecting the west side of the settlement. “I can’t be sure but I think... yes! The elven females from the PDC Substations! Four o’clock!”

Andro and Dorian immediately shifted their view and zoomed in on the western edge of the settlement. This is where the Admin offices of the settlement were according to Dantio, as well as the secondary gate that was used for entry into the settlement itself. Each settlement was surrounded by a six meter high steel fabricated wall that was two feet thick. It was a standard prefab wall that all new colonies surrounded themselves with in order to protect against natural predators and other concerns when settling a world. Andro watched as four elven females were roughly pushed through the double doors of a two story structure inside the wall.

“What is that building Dantio?” Dorian asked.

“The armory.” Dantio answered remembering the layout of the settlement from their time within the walls. “It holds the un-issued weapons and portable turrets for the wall. Best place to house high value prisoners as well. Triple Max vault with state of the art locking system.”

“Those are Puma Bane troops delivering the females.” Vari spoke. “They are giving them up. I thought standard practice for them was to keep whatever spoils they found. Especially any females.”

Andro nodded. “That is what we have heard.” He said studying the faces of the Puma Bane troops. None of them looked happy even from this distance of two thousand eight hundred meters away. “They don’t look happy.”

Dantio turned his head quickly and looked at Andro. “Someone made them turn them over Andro.” He said. “They would not have given them up willingly.”

Andro nodded. "Which means someone besides the Puma Bane assholes is in charge."

Dorian shifted his glasses at vehicle movement. "Fervon... two o'clock! Coming down the side road near the armory. Looks like three SID75 Scout Cars. Command type."

Andro shifted his binos once more. "Dantio? Cletus?"

"Got them." Dantio replied.

"I see them." Cletus answered a second later. "Nubou they are moving fast. Armored Scout Cars already."

"I don't see any CHAOS tanks." Dantio said.

"Terrain is not suited for them except for static defense." Andro said. He was watching as the Kavalians stopped in front of the armory building and half a dozen exited the three vehicles. "Hello." He said quickly. "I think we are seeing the head cheese here. Look at the shoulders, can you zoom and see what rank he is? I don't have the angle."

Dorian adjusted his binos. "Standard field uniform. Can't be sure but the color looks almost gold."

"Gold on black." Vari added. "Nice catch Milord. Definitely a General."

Andro turned his head back to look at Haridl. "What do you have for gold on black Haridl?" He asked. She quickly paged through her data pad and finally stopped. "Got it. Gold on black. Standard rank for Shock General Third Tier. Equivalent of our Ground Division Commanders." She answered.

Andro met her eyes. "A specialized division then?"

Haridl nodded. "Special Operations it would seem."

"Interesting. We didn't know they operated such units separate from Field Commands." Andro stated turning back. "It appears that is not the case."

"They must be landing the majority of their forces on the far side of that peak where their headquarters is set up." Emios said. "Nothing in the air just yet."

"That won't last." Andro said. "As soon as they establish their anti-air defenses their PROTOSS gunships will be up and shuttling troops all over."

Haridl remained on her stomach and inched her way up next to Dantio between Dorian and Andro. "You think they will have Robaran there?" She asked.

Andro glanced at her. "That is my guess." He said. "If this officer is getting involved it is most likely because he is trying to determine what Robaran and the others were doing here. And how you managed to kill so many of his Puma Bane troops before falling."

Haridl looked at him. "So he suspects something?"

Andro shrugged. "It's possible." He answered. "We won't know for sure until tonight."

"What happens tonight?" Dantio asked looking at him.

"Tonight we are going to do a little close quarters recon." Andro said. "And send the Kavalians a message."

Dorian looked at his brother. "What message?"

Andro met his eyes. "That they made a mistake coming here." He answered.

EARTH

EDEN CITY

HOME OF SELENE AND LYNWE

Selene glanced up from the daily report she received every day as Prime Minister of Earth to let her steel blue eyes settle on Lynwe as she exited the bedroom and came into the kitchen of their spacious but very modest three bedroom home on the southern edge of Eden City. To look at it from the outside you would never know that the Prime Minister of Earth and one of Earth's most senior Generals called it home. They maintained a suite at Eden Towers within the center of the city but rarely stayed there when both of them were together. They preferred the warmth and familiarity of the home where they had raised five children together with Joarl and Layna. Three houses to the left is where Joarl and Layna now called home. Though their split had made the Netnews, it was nothing but friendly and loving. The four of them had decided this was for the best. Selene would never love anyone more than Lynwe and vice versa. They had been through too much together, shared more than many couples, and this is what they had all decided was best. Joarl and Layna still spent much time here, as they did in their home only a few meters down the quiet street. Their five children from Joarl called all three of them mother, as did Cihera, their adopted Drow daughter. They were as close knit a family as you would find. All of their children were now grown and out of their homes, but all of them remained within Eden City in some role or another.

Selene let her eyes drink in Lynwe's firm six foot one ebony body. Lynwe had let her hair grow very long over the last year and the shimmering white mane fell to just above her powerful ass cheeks. Her body spoke of power and grace; her large breasts still incredibly firm and nearly twice the size of Selene's. A point of delight that Selene often reminded her of. Her long legs ended at that powerful and firm ass; taut ass cheeks that Selene had gripped on many occasions in blissful pleasure as Lynwe made love to her. No matter what had happened over the past twenty-seven years, their love for each other had remained a stalwart anchor of their relationship. Only Tarifa and Aihola had been together longer among their many friends. It was Lynwe's and Selene's relationship, as well as Tarifa and Aihola's that had defined the new Drow. Yes... they were still dominant in most ways... but now it was not uncommon to see a Drow female and her lover walking hand in hand along the streets as equals in every way. The Mistress/Slave role came into play only within the privacy of their homes and beds. Aihola and Lynwe had shown the Drow what they could have all those years ago and now Mistress and Slave were only terms of endearment.

Lynwe had the largest equipment that Selene had ever had inside her, and she knew how to use it so well. Lynwe once considered her anatomical trans gender a curse of High Coven experimentation. It wasn't until Tarifa and Aihola had shown her otherwise that Lynwe came to accept herself and shed the persona of self hatred. When she met Selene, she had been in the process of a similar wave of self hatred and it was Lynwe who had saved her life. That they were both now fully turned vampires was another stepping stone that had brought them closer together. They shared an emotional and Etheric bond now that could never be broken or intruded upon. This was part of the reason they had ended their physical relationship with Joarl and Layna. While both Selene and Lynwe thoroughly enjoyed being with them in a physical way, they always found themselves drawing back to each other. They had taken two other female lovers into their bed since parting with Joarl and Layna ten years ago, but none of them had lasted for more than a few months. Their sex life was still very active however, both of them craving each other emotionally as well as physically. In Selene's eyes she had the best of both worlds and for Lynwe... well... Selene was the epitome of beautiful. That would never change. There might be someone out there for them, but neither Selene nor Lynwe were busy searching. They were completely content with their love for each other.

Lynwe poured herself a mug of coffee, Aricia's blend, as she was one of the few Drow who actually preferred coffee to tea. She added cream and then moved to the table where she leaned over to a smiling Selene and shared a deep kiss of love and devotion. Lynwe pulled out the chair next to her and settled into it. They never sat across from one another at their table wanting to be able to rub shoulders or lean close for a kiss at any moment.

Selene gazed at Lynwe's beautiful face for a moment and smiled. "Are you and Tareif still getting together for lunch?" She asked.

Lynwe nodded. "He wants to go over the deployments of Colonel Norris's units now that he has accepted the position with Narice. He will begin pulling his units out of the field next week and transporting them to High Coven space. Tareif and I will decide where to send his Dragoons in order to replace them."

"Lynwe are you...?" Selene began to ask.

Lynwe smiled and shook her head. "What Androcles did was the right thing Selene." She said. "I can't hold an entire species to blame for what a few scientists did to me. I have put that far behind me. I met Narice, talked with her; she is the future for the High Coven Selene. The chance and the leader they need to pull themselves out of their past and into the future."

"And letting Yuri go?" Selene asked.

"If how Andro explained it to us is in fact the truth of it... then I can forgive." Lynwe answered her. "We are still learning about this Etheric ability that many of us have. Even you and I. If Yuri was under the control of this Xaxon person then she is only partially responsible for the things she did. I will... I will reserve judgment until I know how she will live her life now."

Selene sipped her coffee. "I don't know if I could be so forgiving my love." She said.

Lynwe looked at her with sparkling amber colored eyes. "I have concluded that what happen to me... what was done to me... these things were meant to happen because they led me to you." Lynwe spoke. "My talks with Tarifa and Aihola as well as Aricia and Dysea have led me to this."

Selene looked at her with adoring love. "And I bless that day every moment." She said.

Lynwe smiled and kissed her before sipping her own coffee. "What do you and Charles have planned today?"

Selene held up the data pad. "Two meetings this morning with Aihola. A construction contract with Nodon Engineering representatives to build the continent bridge and then we are meeting with Daba and several Drow senators to make final decisions on their new city out west. It appears as if this will be a grand city like those of old. It will take decades to complete, but it will be beautiful." She held out the data pad to her. "This arrived for you in the morning pouch."

Lynwe took the pad and activated it, her amber eyes scanning the contents of the morning report to her. As second in command of Earth's now abundant and increasingly active military, she received reports daily on training and other assets. Lynwe was also in total command of the two Drow Divisions and responsible for the Drow that were still searching different portions of Earth for the Kavalian imposters who they still believed were hiding somewhere. Much of Earth was still largely unsettled because of the massive loss of life after The Great Fire, and there were hundreds of locations that these Kavalian imposters could hide and not be found for months. Lynwe grunted at something and Selene looked up from her own reading.

"What?" She asked.

"A message from Marci to meet with her and Nesa here in Eden City today." Lynwe said. "She is arriving at 1000 hours."

"What for?" Selene asked knowing who Marci was. She had worked closely with the Assistant Director of the Krypteria on several occasions.

"Doesn't say." Lynwe answered. "Only that she needed to meet with me."

"Trouble perhaps?" Selene asked.

"I don't know what about but that she is bringing Nesa doesn't bode for good news." Lynwe said thoughtfully. "The first WASP-Class Transport is almost complete. Perhaps it is about the equipment for our troops."

"Oh... I understand you and Tareif finally selected your last Company Commander for the new division." Selene said.

Lynwe nodded and looked at her with excited eyes. "Yes we did. The first entirely human division since The Great Fire. We are very pleased. They should make a formidable force with their Cataphract Battle Armor. Charles is tickled that humans will finally be able to contribute to the defense of the Union. He has said for years that the Drow and Tareif's Dragoons have pulled the load of protecting Earth for too long without help. The human commanders have been training with the Drow and Dragoons for weeks to establish procedures and such. Tareif and I are very pleased."

Selene laughed. "Yes I know. You should see Charles when he gets to talking about them." She said. "He is like a child in a candy shop!"

Lynwe laughed as well and looked at the clock on the wall. "I should get ready." She spoke. "Meet me for lunch?" She asked looking at Selene.

"That depends." Selene said with a sultry twinkle in her eye. "What's on the menu?"

Lynwe grinned as well and felt the stirring in her groin that Selene could always elicit from her. "I'm sure we could find something appropriate my love. But you are always desert."

Selene cooed and shifted in her seat. "I can hardly wait." She said. "Twelve thirty. And don't be late!"

Lynwe kissed her. "Not a chance."

Andro looked at the overlay of the settlement on the chart in the rear of his STRIKER. Darkness was fast approaching and he wanted to act quickly before the Kavalians had a chance to truly settle in.

“Sa'roh was able to tap into the satellites without the Kavalians knowing.” Andro spoke as his fingers moved across the chart map. “She’s using Union military codes but they will figure out someone has got into the system through the back door sooner or later. We’ll do as much as we are able while we have that advantage.”

Dorian looked at his brother. “What did you have in mind Andro?”

Andro stabbed his finger down on one spot. “Going through the Sat Feed Sa'roh was able to determine where one Puma Bane Team is.” He spoke. “We’re going to introduce ourselves to them.”

Dantio nodded with a smile. “Nice.” He said.

Andro slid his finger across the chart map. “I’m hoping this will give them pause. And make them begin to spread their forces out searching the surrounding terrain.” He said. “If they do... especially the Puma Bane troops... it will make getting Robaran and the female elves out of that armory a whole lot easier.”

“You think they will remain there?” Cletus asked.

Andro nodded. “No point in moving them so soon after beginning their operation.” He said. “Lock them up until this head Kavalian midaeus has a chance to interrogate them and then ship them offworld.”

“Or kill them once he has no need for them any longer.” Dorian stated softly.

Andro looked at his brother. “Yes. That is what we are going to try and prevent.” Andro touched the edge of the chart and it shifted focus. “Elynth and I will take Dantio, Vari and eight of the Spartan company and hit the Puma Bane camp. If the SAT feed is accurate, there is only sixteen of them there.” He shifted the chart again and looked at Dorian. “Fervon... you and Ryner are going with Cletus, Haridl, Emios and four others from the Spartan company. Have Emios and the squad set up a line of defense as close to this gate as possible and then you use the shadows to sneak Haridl and yourself into the settlement. Try and get as much information as you can. Ryner can fly cover for you over the settlement since he does not show up on sensors and the night skies will be moonless tonight.”

Dorian nodded and looked at the map closely. He glanced at Haridl as if calculating some things in his head and then turned back to Andro. “She is not as big as you fervon. I might be able to sneak us inside the armory itself.”

Andro stared at him for a long moment and then nodded. “If it is possible then do it. If there is not a chance of one hundred percent success... do not risk it Dorian. We’ll put them in more danger if you are caught or a firefight breaks out. Once we hit the Puma Bane camp I’m sure they’ll send for help and draw attention away from you and it may make it possible but do not force it. Those within the city will be on alert. This isn’t training anymore fervon... we need to be smart. And mother and father will kill me if I let anything happen to you.”

Dorian nodded his head taking his brother’s words as they were intended. Encouragement and common sense. Androcles was right and even though Dorian could feel his Spartan blood surging through him at the prospect of battle, he tempered it with his vampire blood and its cold and calculating sense. “I know. I have too much I want to do in my life. Acting stupid and dying in the first months of this war, before discovering what I want would be a waste. Besides... Ryner will be watching over me.”

Yes I will. Ryner’s voice echoed within Mindvoice and they all smiled.

“The rest of the company will be setting up defenses and digging in at our new home for the time being.” Andro spoke. “Sa'roh has found a nice location on the southern continent and an advanced team is already there with the KADENs. Once we depart Sa'roh will take the STRIKER and move to this point ten kilometers north of the settlement. That’s our pick up.”

“Won’t their ships in orbit pick up our movements Milord?” Dantio asked. “Their sensors can surely pick up lifeforms.”

“The advance team with the KADENs has already erected RP14 Sensor Maskers.” Andro told them. “They are a new toy the folks at Dreamland thought up. The SCIMITAR got one of the first batches and Sa'sur sent them down with the company.” He explained. “Essentially what they do is create a void in ground sensor coverage. They can effectively hide us as long as we keep our power generation to a minimum.”

Haridl stepped closer. “How long... how long do we intend to stay Milord?” She asked the question that burned within all of them.

“As long as is necessary.” Androcles answered. “We cannot afford for the Kavalians to have a base this close to Union space. We are damn lucky we found it before they were able to dig in. Now we have to take it back.”

EARTH

LYCAVORIAN UNION MILITARY HQ

OVERALL DURCUNUSAAN COMMAND CENTER

500 METERS BENEATH MOUNT HAGIOS

He was, without a doubt, one of the five most well known male elves in the entire Union. A masterful military mind who led Wood Elf rangers against High Coven troops for decades, surviving by superior skill and wit. He was the father of the Star Colonel Anuk, the second most senior officer within the Union Medical Corp behind Queen Anja and Princess Eliani, and wife and Anome to General Daniel Simpson. He was a man who was sworn to the preservation of the Lycavorian Union and what it stood for. A man who was fanatically loyal to the King as well as being considered a family member. He had been part of it since the beginning of it all so long ago, fighting beside Martin and Daniel from the very start. As soon as he realized that Anuk and Daniel were going to be living in Sparta with their Drow Mistress Nayeca, Vengal uprooted his wife and moved to Sparta lock, stock and barrel. He and his wife had now become a permanent fixture within Sparta, his wife owning and running a very successful fabrics shop in the Old District of the city. He was co-founder and primary commander of the now legendary Spartan Royal Guard.

The Durcunusaan. The Wolves of the Blood.

He and Vistr had built them from scratch all those years ago, and with Vistr assuming overall command of the entire Spartan Combined Ground Force in and around Apo Prime and Elear, command of the Durcunusaan had fallen fully to him. Vengal could not have been happier with his life at this moment. His only daughter was mated to a man Vengal loved like a son. The Drow woman who shared their lives he now regarded as an adopted daughter. He had eight beautiful grandchildren from Anuk and Nayeca, and his life was far removed from the time when Anuk was his only remaining daughter and he thought he had lost her. His two living sons often returned to Earth with the ships they commanded, staying with their sister and the man they both respected above all else. Vengal was devoted to his family and the Durcunusaan above all else. Their training was sometimes brutal and humiliating, reminiscent of the times of the Ancient Agoge in Spartan lore, but if you graduated Durcunusaan training you were accepted into the ranks of men and women who were widely regarded as the finest trained and most lethal unit within the whole of the Union military. They were regarded as such because it was their duty to guard the Royal family. To this end they received training from across a broad spectrum of fields. The majority of Mjolnir's Hand had been selected from the ranks of the Durcunusaan, as had many of the thousand plus Bonded Pairs within the Union. And Vengal was their commander.

His office within the base under Mount Hagios was spacious and comfortably furnished, but not lavishly so. It was more homey than most since he had let his wife decorate for him. It was probably more inviting that he would have decorated but that is why he adored his wife of three hundred plus years. She was his better half in everything and he worshiped the ground she walked upon. Vengal had chosen each and every one of the members of the Durcunusaan after extensive research of their personal files. While their numbers were not publicly known, Vengal could field two complete divisions of fifty thousand men apiece if he needed to. They were pilots and intelligence officers; technicians and engineers. He had it all within the ranks of the Durcunusaan. Only one in one hundred were accepted to join the Durcunusaan. Vengal had relaxed over the years to allow this sort of ratio from the one in one thousand he and Vistr had begun with. He got the best of the best and once you were a member of the Durcunusaan, no matter where you went after that you were always a member of the Durcunusaan.

Vengal rose from his chair as he read the daily reports and moved to the wet bar where he poured himself a large glass of berry juice. The door to his office slid open without warning and he looked up. Only his senior aide would dare burst into his office unannounced and Vengal knew it was him immediately by the shimmering white hair that hung well past his shoulders. The Drow Colonel had been with him for the last ten years, twice refusing a promotion and command of his own to remain as Vengal's aide. His position afforded him the most action he could hope for, as well as the most respect for his Drow family. He was one of the Drow who had fully accepted Aihola's reign as Queen long ago as well as her morals and values. His wife of seventeen years was a ravishing blond haired former High Elf from Mountain City. A woman who was as completely devoted to her Drow husband and the Drow values as he was devoted to her. He was also one of the most cool headed men Vengal had ever met in his life. The only thing that got him excited was his wife and bad news.

"Unless you are going to tell me your wife is pregnant once more Colonel Nufco of the Family Razah, then something is wrong." Vengal spoke quickly.

Nufco Razah looked at his general. "General... we have a problem." He gasped out of breath.

The alarms in Vengal's head began to sound loudly. "Speak."

"We just received a coded transmission from Captain Sa'sur of the SCIMITAR." He spoke quickly. "The Kavalians have struck Solmar in force. Androcles fears they may be trying to establish a forward base. He sent Sa'sur away to call for reinforcements. He remains on the planet with Dorian, the Spartan company and the remaining members of Omega Team Sixty-Two."

Vengal's eyes grew wider with every word Nufco spoke. "Fuck me!" Vengal snarled as he moved to his desk and slammed his hand down on the COM panel. "Officer of the Watch... initiate a full Durcunusaan covert alert! I want the Ready Division on station in one hour! They are to move to their designated Pick Up points and stand by!"

"Understood General!" The voice answered.

"And get me Admiral Ceneu! I don't care where he is!" Vengal snapped turning back to Nufco. "Give me more Nufco!"

Nufco moved to the ever present Star chart and plugged in the data pad he carried. "As you know the Prince went to Solmar to retrieve the Omega Team. The Kavalians were already on the planet it seems. A forward unit to begin taking down the colony network in advance of a larger force. Captain Sa'sur reported upwards of forty ships entering the system with PROTOSS Troop ships spread among the task force. She estimates at least a full division based on the number of troop ships." Nufco looked at him. "Based on recent information obtained from the High Coven General, we have determined this is how their operational tactics will execute when they have chosen to take a planet. A small force to initiate the main landing."

"And Andro is right in the middle of it!" Vengal hissed.

"He refused to leave with the SCIMITAR in order to ascertain if it would be feasible to get as many civilians off the colony as possible." Nufco told him. "According to Sa'sur's report he said he would secure a landing zone on the southern continent for the Spartan company and the remainder of the SCIMITAR's STRIKER and KADEN compliment. They have the new sensor maskers General. If they can get established... it's very possible they could remain undetected for a time."

"Undetected?" Vengal chortled. "Do you think Andro will remain undetected?"

Nufco looked at him. "No." He answered. "Preliminary reports from Sa'sur indicate a large loss of civilian life in order to shut down the colony in the way they have."

"Fuck!" Vengal swore. "Find Jomann and Sheva Nufco! Get them here now! How many Shroud capable ships do we have in orbit?"

"Including the Earth's AUTUMN MOON Defense Contingent... thirty-seven." Nufco answered immediately.

"Contact Charles and let him know we need to use his AUTUMN MOONS." Vengal spoke. "He won't blink when he realizes its Andro. He's got a soft spot for the boy. Have the SCIMITAR's Strike Wing spool up and leave immediately to rendezvous with Sa'sur. This is a silent deployment! If the Netnews discovers Andro is out there with his ass hanging in the wind there will be hell to pay! They'll broadcast it all across the Union and you can damn well bet the Kavalians have people monitoring our Netnews channels twenty-four seven. They'll converge on Solmar like the plaque!"

Nufco nodded. “Undoubtedly.” He said.

“How soon before we can deploy?” Vengal asked.

“We?” Nufco looked at him.

Vengal met his eyes. “There’s no way I’m staying behind on this! And weren’t you just complaining you were bored?”

Nufco nodded his head with a grin. “I was, wasn’t I? The Durcunusaan Ready Division will be fully prepped in under an hour. A full Silent Deployment from their staging areas will require more time sir. We can load everyone out by late tomorrow morning if we hump it. That’s the earliest if we want to keep this under wraps. Once the divisions are in orbit we can deploy at will.”

“Do it!” Vengal snapped. “And keep chatter on the secure channels to a minimum. Use Mindvoice if they have too. This can’t leak out before we leave.”

Nufco nodded. “I will see to it.” He said. “Our Command Group?”

Vengal nodded. “Small Unit Op Nufco. Only what we need.”

“I will inform the rest of the team.” Nufco answered.

Vengal gripped his arm. “Contact Aihola. I want a contingent of her Drow Scouts with us Nufco. And tell Charles that it’s time to show what this human division he has been touting can do. They’re going with us.”

Nufco looked at him. “The 82nd is a Cataphract Armor Orbital Drop Division General. A mix of Heavy Infantry and specialized units. Is that what we need?”

“Do you think Andro is going to leave civilians on that planet if there is a way to get them off?” Vengal asked.

“No... no sir.” Nufco said.

Vengal nodded. “Better to have the power than not. They will compliment the Ready Division. I have a feeling this is not going to be a simple swing by and evacuate the civilians. Nothing is ever simple with Andro or his father.”

“This is true.” Nufco said.

“Make it happen Nufco.” Vengal ordered.

Nufco nodded. “As you order General.”

CHAPTER THREE

ULU REAPER

VANGUARD MK III INTERDICTION-CLASS CRUISER

DETACHED DUTY FROM ARCHDEMON STRIKE WING

FEBRUARY 3RD, 2575, 2226 HRS, EARTH STANDARD TIME (EST)

ENROUTE TO EARTH WITH PRINCESS LISISA AND PRELIMINARY ROTHRYN DIPLOMATIC CONTINGENT

The last few weeks had raced past like a whirlwind in Sehri’s mind.

From the moment they had discovered the results of the tests from the DNA samples provided to them by Denali Leonidas it had been a whirlwind. When the results were confirmed everything became second fiddle to meeting and talking with Androcles Leonidas or his father. Since they now knew his father was not available, they would be meeting with Androcles and this knowledge made Sehri weak kneed and very anxious.

Denali Leonidas and Androcles had been true to their word just as Sehri knew deep down they would be. The Science Lab on the ARCHDEMON was made available to them two days after Androcles had talked to her father and their own scientists were allowed to test the DNA samples with the ship’s senior physician present. The results had been both conclusive and quite staggering in nature. Both brothers had over three thousand alleles that matched with the sample of the Rothryn people and nearly two thousand alleles that matched to the sample of the Ancient Ones they had recovered many hundreds of years ago. Given that result, twelve different men and women from the crew were also tested and the results were similar in every way. It could only mean one thing and that was that the Rothryn people and the Lycavorian people were without a doubt genetically related to one another. More than likely, the Rothryn scientists that had tested the samples believed that the Rothryn people were formerly Lycavorians who had their DNA altered in some way in order to be able to survive on their original homeworld. This was no doubt connected to the Ancient Ones they now knew as Pralors and the DNA match that the brothers had to them. This had come as a great surprise and revelation to her father Dyack and Sehri had witnessed with great joy as Dyack fully embraced the Prophecy more than at any other time in his life. Dyack had immediately thrown himself into helping Denali and Coren Re Mydala, honoring his word.

Sehri didn't know exactly how that was progressing for they had begun planning for this trip within days of discovering the results. Her father decided to send her mother and her sisters, as well as her older brother Kelelm. Accompanying them was Harira, who her father had met and liked immediately. She would represent those Shaman Master's of the Circle who believed deeply in the prophecy. They had a small group of her brother's personal contingent of soldiers, all of whom had seen some form of combat and another slightly larger group of scientists and doctors, including those who had confirmed the results initially. Sehri agreed to come without hesitation when asked by her father. Dyack seemed to sense her innate desire and need to come on the mission though he didn't truly understand and since she was also a member of the Circle, it was a two fold benefit for him. Sehri was a dedicated believer in the Prophecy and the Circle of Shamans, but she was also his daughter and she reported everything to him no matter what it was.

The crew of REAPER had treated them as guests and longtime friends from the moment they came aboard. Word had spread among the crew that the Rothryn and Lycavorian people were descended from the same genes and ancestors, so it was almost as if they were long lost Lycavorians themselves. In truth, the only thing that really separated them was their inability to shift to wolf form. The Rothryn people had similar genetic structures which granted them the enhanced sense of smell and other senses as well as the incredible healing factor so common to Lycavorians. While they weren't allowed into the sensitive areas of the ship, Lisisa Leonidas had granted them access to just about everything else. Denali had asked her to escort them back to Earth to meet with their brother because she was a woman and Aleatia was Dyack's wife and his representative. Lisisa had agreed reluctantly Sehri knew for she had wanted to remain with Denali and Arduri, but she was extremely pleasant and open to all of them. Lisisa knew Denali thought he was making them more comfortable by having her on board and Lisisa could not be angry with her husband and mate for trying to do the right thing. Lisisa also knew she would rejoin them soon enough and their reunion would be very sweet.

Sehri sat in the large Mess Lounge of the REAPER sipping the mug of fruit juice while her mother and sisters chatted away with Kelelm. There were perhaps two dozen other members of the crew in the lounge, as it was becoming dinner time and the lounge was filling up. Sehri was aware of the many looks of interest she was receiving from the Lycavorian men in the mess lounge. The Rothryn did not have the ability to shift their forms, but their bodies retained the scents and auras of their Lycavorian brothers and sisters as well as many of the genetic changes that Lycavorians experienced. Sehri was only twenty-one years old, and she was just beginning to experience her Coming of Age Fever, albeit on a much smaller scale. This scent was very detectable by every unmated male on the ship though she did not truly understand it or the looks she was receiving. Sehri didn't know that her aura was radiating a simple message to the males around her and that message was that she was not willing or interested in being approached. She was trying to act indifferent towards them for reasons which were her own and this translated in the small aura she was able to project to leave her alone.

Since coming on board Sehri had immersed herself in the computer libraries available to her. She wanted to learn about the history of the Lycavorian people. What they had experienced as a people. While her sisters Osbela and Ibani were delightfully spending their time in the gym and watching the Lycavorian males train and flex their muscles, Sehri was more interested in discovering what drove them. And learning about those who she had seen within her mind and whom she felt even now within her. She wanted to know about them for the emotions and feelings were growing stronger by the hour as they drew closer. She could feel their minds within her own though they were guarded by Mindvoice shields of staggering power. Shields unlike any she had ever experienced even from the oldest of the Shaman Masters on the Circle. They called it Mindvoicing... and every Lycavorian, vampire and many elves were capable of using this skill naturally Sehri had learned. The level of their power and abilities related directly to the purity of their blood and the schooling they received. Sehri had told no one, but having them within her mind even shielded was augmenting her own abilities in many ways. Her control had grown three fold since she began to feel them within her mind and the last two days she had discovered she was able to move small objects within a simple thought or motion of her hand. It was disconcerting but it also made her feel powerful and confident. She could almost feel her Etheric power increasing within her, coursing through her body and awakening things she had never been able to do before.

“Sehri?” Her mother’s voice broke into her own thoughts and Sehri looked up at her. “Are you well?” Her mother’s question caused Harira to turn and gaze at her from her spot at the table.

Sehri smiled at her. “I’m fine mother.” She spoke.

“You seem distant.” Aleatia asked.

“Sehri has spent all this time immersed in her computer files mother.” Ibani said with a small laugh. “She has not enjoyed herself at all on this trip.”

Sehri looked at her sister with some disdain. “I prefer my computer files to the massive amounts of testosterone alive in that gym you go to.” She said.

Osbela laughed. “But it is some very handsome testosterone!” She exclaimed. “I guess that’s not something that interests you. Don’t worry sister... I’m sure that Prince Androcles has many friends that prefer bookworms.” She said and Ibani joined with her laughter. “I will be sure to introduce you to some when I am within his arms.”

“You?” Ibani exclaimed. “That will be me!”

Sehri looked at her sisters and shook her head. Osbela and Ibani were sluts in her eyes. All they cared about was finding the most attractive man they could and enticing them into their beds. They did not care for history or knowledge of the past or future. And they were clueless when it came to the real world.

“Sehri?” Aleatia asked her softly.

“I am fine mother.” Sehri answered. “Really.”

“Have you found anything interesting in their computer files sister?” Kelelm asked her with genuine curiosity.

Sehri looked at him and nodded her head with a smile to him. Kelelm had always treated her different. He was very protective of all his sisters but he sensed there was something about Sehri that made her different. He had always encouraged her to follow her heart and not listen to others.

“Their history is both diverse and intriguing.” Sehri replied as she perked up. “It is filled with pain and suffering but also happiness and growth. I have been reading about their King and his background most recently. His life is incredible... both before he discovered his true history and after.”

“Do the history files give you any insight to this Androcles who we will be meeting?” Aleatia asked. “We should concentrate on him since he is the one we will be meeting. I would imagine his father has complete trust in him?”

“There is very little background on Androcles outside of his military file mother.” Sehri told her. “He is a very private person and...”

Osbela chuckled now. “Sehri... you speak as if you know him so well.” She spoke in a sarcastic tone. “He is a Prince and a man... what more is there to know?”

“A delicious man.” Ibani added.

Sehri looked at her sister and was about to retort when Kelelm’s hand touched her wrist. [Ignore her Sehri.] He spoke warmly within Mindvoice. [You know as well as I that Osbela and Ibani have never truly understood the intricacies of Mindvoice. Nor do they have your skill and knowledge with this ability. You are different from them sister... ignore their remarks and be yourself.]

Sehri looked at her brother and covered his hand with hers and smiled at him again. She turned back to her mother. “He is widely regarded among the military establishment as a brilliant tactician. Superior to all but his father and a few with senior Union officers. He and his father are responsible for planning most of the final battles during their war with the species they call Evolli. He is considered by many to be one of the foremost warriors among their people behind only his father and several others.” Sehri told her. “He was decorated with the Union’s highest award during their war with this species called the Evolli when he was only twenty-two. This species gave him a nickname during their war... Soul Slayer.”

“Soul Slayer?” Harira spoke now. “Why give him such a name?”

Sehri looked at her now. “Androcles and his dragon Elynth are believed to have killed more Evolli in combat than any others, including his father. He has been working diligently to come out from under his father’s shadow and he is succeeding.”

“How do you know that Sehri?” Kelelm asked. “That can’t be in his military file.”

Sehri shrugged her slim shoulders as her sisters chuckled to themselves smugly. “I just do.” She answered him.

Aleatia leaned forward at the table. “Does his military file give any insight to his political leanings Sehri? That is what I am most interested in.”

Sehri shook her head. “Aside from a comment by an Admiral Wallace that he is known as a true Spartan of old... no mother. I believe how he is dealing with the Vanari is our best indicator there.”

“He has told the Vanari... rather bluntly if the reaction from Regent Ardan is any indicator... he will not deal with them if they do not change their views of Lycavorians as a whole.” Kelelm said. “And we know how the Vanari treat those Lycavorians from the Protectorate. Something that won’t matter once the merger is complete.”

Aleatia nodded in agreement with her oldest son. “The members of the Protectorate are extremely limited in their interaction with the Vanari people.” She said. “Many are not allowed to leave their embassy grounds without escort.” She turned to Harira. “Shaman Master Harira... is there anything you can share?”

Harira shook her head quickly. “The Circle has tried for decades to learn more of the Protectorate Lady Aleatia. Our own government’s distance from them has made that... it has made it increasingly difficult.”

Aleatia nodded. “Yes. When we should have been embracing them we were pushing them away because we did not understand them. That is why I am very glad you are here. Your insight will be invaluable.”

Harira nodded her head in respect at Aleatia’s words. Praetor Dyack’s wife was well respected within the Circle for her common sense and ability to see outside the box. She was also considered a strong and loyal supporter of the Circle of Shamans. “I don’t think we would have discovered what we have with the recent DNA tests... but we would have been much further along in discovering the history and relation we have with Lycavorians as a whole.”

“You don’t think DNA tests with members of the Protectorate would have produced the same results Harira?” Aleatia asked.

“The same genetic results that show the commonality between our people yes...” Harira answered. “Not the Etheric connection with the Ancient Ones. That connection seems to reside only within those from the Union. Granted it is possible since we have never actually done tests with individuals from the Protectorate. What we know of their history does make it very possible.”

Aleatia looked at Sehri. “And this Androcles is among the most powerful users of Etheric power Sehri?”

Sehri nodded. “Without question. You have... we have all seen some of what he can do mother. He is... he is very special. He...”

“He’s very yummy!” Osbela stated quickly. “I can’t wait to be wrapped around his body.”

“Not you sister...” Ibani stated. “Me.”

Sehri felt the surge of anger within her and she bolted to her feet quickly, her blue eyes flashing in anger. “You know nothing!” She snapped softly keeping her voice low enough so that it did not carry. “Your scents will no more entice him than a Gotri Bark Worm! You don’t understand him! You will never understand him!”

“And you do Sehri?” Osbela snapped back. “You... who have never known the pleasures of a man and will never know them? You wouldn’t know the first thing to do with a real one? We’ll see who gets him Sehri.”

Sehri laughed at her sister. “Get him?” She asked. “You’ll never get him Osbela. Not unless you are more powerful than his Anome Sadi. Or his SirsanGai Ne’Veha. His Drow Mistress Lu’ria or his Enylarcopri Carisia! You have no idea what you... what we are walking into. And you certainly will never know Androcles in that way!”

Osbela smiled at her sister. “We shall see Sehri. We shall see whose scent is on him when all is said and done. At least I know enough not to kick a man who is interested in me in the balls. Unlike you.”

“Osbela! Enough!” Aleatia snarled.

Sehri trembled in anger as she stood there and she lifted her right hand, the light blue swirl of Etheric power beginning to take substance. It was Harira who saw it first and she rose to her feet. “Sehri!” She snapped.

Her voice snapped Sehri out of her anger and the swirl of Etheric power vanished just as quickly as it had come. Sehri hissed in anger and turned suddenly, leaving those of her family behind as she exited the mess lounge.

“Sehri!” Aleatia came to her feet and glared at her other daughters before moving after her youngest.

The VANGUARD MK III INTERDICTION cruisers were built with both elevator lifts and sloped stairwells to better accommodate the dragons that they could carry. Sehri had memorized quite a bit of the ship in the three days they had been aboard and as she held back the tears that threatened to pour from her eyes she found herself making her way down the port stairwell. The downward incline didn't faze her as she proceeded down three decks from the mess lounge and suddenly found herself in an area of the ship she had never been to before. She could hear quite a bit of activity and she followed the sounds until she came to the open metal walkway that stretched across the expanse of the huge landing bay of the REAPER. Slowly Sehri made her way out onto the walkway, her blue eyes wide as she took in the ground crews below her moving several Union fighters around and others working on different ships. Her eyes lifted when she heard the trumpet and they grew a little wider when she saw the massive form of Lisisa Leonidas's dragon Jeth. He was reared up on his hind quarters, his huge wings extended fully to the sides as the tiny form of the Princess held a high pressure water hose and was spraying his black with bluish tinted scales. Jeth seemed to be enjoying it immensely. They were in a large pen area set to the side of the landing bay nearest to where the three STRIKER DTs were parked close together. Sehri stepped up to the railing of the walkway and simply watched as Lisisa moved that hose back and forth, spraying every exposed portion of the dragon's scales.

“Sehri?” Her mother's voice came to her and she turned her head quickly as Aleatia moved up beside her.

Sehri exhaled heavily. “I'm sorry mother. I...”

Aleatia shook her head immediately and took her youngest daughter into her arms. “You have nothing to apologize for.” She stated softly. She took Sehri's face in her warm hands and leaned over to nuzzle her daughter's cheek. “It is affecting you more than you realized isn't it?” She asked.

Sehri nodded. “The closer we get... the closer we get the stronger it becomes.” She told her softly.

“Can you not block it?” Aleatia asked. “I have spoken at length with Harira... and she tells me you are stronger within Mindvoice than many of the older Shaman Masters.”

“I'm trying mother.” Sehri answered. “It is so strong though, especially when they are together. Even alone his aura is overwhelming... and it... it calls to me so momma.” She looked at her mother. “All of them do. It feels so wonderful but...”

“But what?” Aleatia asked her as she stroked her jaw line like she had done when Sehri was a child. Even now it still had the affect of calming and soothing her and this pleased Aleatia to no end.

“I have never... I have never felt such raw, unbridled power mother.” Sehri told her. “They... they keep it in check by force of will alone... but just being able to feel it is so very disconcerting to me.”

“It frightens you?” Aleatia asked.

Sehri nodded. “Yes.”

“We both saw what he did Sehri.” Aleatia said. “How could we not be frightened? The Etheric Academy has always kept tight control on those like you and the other Shamans. That is why the Circle broke away and remains in hiding. If the Academy knew you existed they would take you away from us.”

Sehri nodded. “I know.” She answered. She turned and looked down at where Lisisa was now stroking Jeth's scales with a brush of some sort. “The power within him... within all of them... even her.” She motioned to Lisisa. “They wield it so casually and...”

Aleatia brought her face back around and looked at her daughter. “Tell others that if you like Sehri... but I am your mother.” She spoke. “His resonance is battering your shields and you are having a difficult time suppressing your fever aren't you?”

Sehri didn't speak for a moment but she had never kept anything from her mother before and she was not going to start now. She gripped her mother's arms and nodded slowly looking up into her face. “His aura is like... it is like a burning sun within Mindvoice mother. We are... we are Rothryn! Why does it affect me so? It shouldn't!"

"Why shouldn't it?" Aleatia said. "As we have discovered there is very little difference between our peoples. We are essentially Lycavorian without the ability to shift. We have the same senses, the same healing ability, but we have always suppressed the baser instincts within us. Those within the Union have not. It is not wrong that you desire him Sehri."

"It's not just him mother!" Sehri declared. "It's all of them! Sadi and Ne'Veha most of all!"

Aleatia looked at her for a long moment. "They are affecting you as well?" She asked finally, more than a little surprised to say the least. Same sex relationships, while not against Rothryn law, were frowned upon immensely because no children would result from such a pairing.

Sehri nodded her head. "I can... I can almost feel the beats of their hearts within me. My focus and clarity within Mindvoice is growing stronger by the hour. It's them! As we draw closer I can feel them more and more. It makes... it makes me shudder in want."

"And these feelings... they are making you doubt your decision to become a Shaman aren't they?" Aleatia said.

"It is making me doubt everything." Sehri said in reply. "I... it's almost as if I don't know who I am anymore."

"This is a restricted area! Don't move!" The male voice spoke forcefully and they both whirled around to see the pair of security officers staring at them, their weapons out but not pointed at them.

Aleatia pulled Sehri close to her. "Forgive us!" She stammered. "We did not... we did not know where we were!"

The guard who had spoken sniffed the air gently, his eyes never leaving Sehri. Aleatia took note of this and drew her daughter closer. "This area is restricted to crewmembers of this ship." He spoke gruffly. "How did you get here?"

Sehri looked at the man and could see that he was reacting to her fever. His eyes grew narrow and his breathing became shallow as he moved closer. Her hands tightened on her mother's arms as he stopped only a few feet from her.

"I was... I was upset and did not pay attention to where I was going." Sehri stammered suddenly feeling very worried.

"Please..." Aleatia spoke. "We will leave. We..."

The man stared at Sehri for a long period of time saying nothing. His dark eyes appeared as if they were looking through her and into her soul. Sehri could easily feel his Mindvoice resonance and she quickly determined that he was a member of the Lycavorian Durcunusaan. She hesitated for a second and then spoke.

"You... you are Durcunusaan?" She asked softly.

The man looked at her then and straightened his stance. "You are... you are within your Coming of Age fever little one." He spoke matter-of-factly.

Sehri glanced at her mother quickly and Aleatia's eyes were filled with worry. Sehri turned back to the man and slowly nodded her head. "Yes." She answered him.

The light blue eyed Durcunusaan Commander quickly put his sidearm away and the second man followed suit instantly. Aleatia breathed a small sigh of relief at this but her heart still raced with worry. They were alone and without any of Kelelm's men to watch over them. Aleatia didn't know what would happen but she had heard of how Lycavorian men could react around a female who was within her fever. It was one of the first things she had read about when they came on board because she knew Sehri was within her Coming of Age. They were Rothryn yes... but they were also Lycavorian and Aleatia didn't doubt the males on this ship would smell her fever if she stopped suppressing it.

"You are suppressing it well little one..." The man spoke. "But it is getting stronger isn't it?"

Sehri looked at him surprised and somewhat embarrassed. "How... how do you..."

The man lifted his eyes to Aleatia. "I am Commander Eotharon. Second in command of Princess Lisisa's Durcunusaan detail Lady Aleatia. My... my youngest daughter is working through her fever even now. And you should not be ashamed of this in the least little one." Eotharon told her looking directly at Sehri. Aleatia felt the worry begin to slip away quickly as the man moved closer to them and she watched as he looked at Sehri closely. "I have read all the reports on your people." He spoke turning back to Aleatia. "You may be called Rothryn... but you have Lycavorian blood surging through your veins and that makes you Lycavorian whether you can shift your forms or not.” He turned back to Sehri. “You are projecting indifference with your aura little one. That is good. Many of our females are not strong enough within Mindvoice to do this at your age and it will keep the more determined fools at bay.” He removed a data pad from his utility belt and typed on it for a few moments. He held it out to Sehri. “A recipe for tea that my mate devised for our daughters. It does not suppress the fever, but it adds a very distinct flavor to your scent for a few days that will cause the males of our species to shy away from you. Those who are only interested in a casual encounter that is. It does not sit well with their nose.”

Sehri looked at Eotharon as she reached out and took the pad. “It makes them stay away from me?” She asked in surprise.

Eotharon nodded. “Only those who are attracted by your fever and wish to be with you because your scent is so sweet now.” He said. “Those with any sense will take note that your aura calls for only one and they will know it is not them. You should not suppress what you are young lady. You do yourself a disservice by such actions. Be proud of who and what you are. And you need not worry about what our males will do... all of them are taught from birth to honor and respect all women. Especially those who could without difficulty squash them within Mindvoice.”

“You... you can feel me within Mindvoice?” Sehri asked.

Eotharon smiled warmly. “Quite easily Little One. Your resonance is nearly as powerful as Princess Lisisa there... albeit somewhat unfocused at the moment because of what you are experiencing. You would be considered a very high level Tier Six Etheric user by the way we now measure our people... and you are still growing it seems.” He spoke as he stepped even closer to Sehri. “You have been touched by someone of immense power within Mindvoice. Someone who is bound to a dragon. A touch you accepted. I can feel the echo of them... of him within you. He is an Alpha wolf of great ability.” His blue eyes shimmered as they looked at her. “There are very few within Union space that have the raw power I sense within his echo. Two to be exact. Interesting.” He lifted his head and backed away from her. “Your mother would be a Tier Five Etheric user without question. It is good to see our Lycavorian brothers who call themselves Rothryn have nurtured this skill.”

“You said my scent?” Sehri said softly. She looked at him. “What... what do I smell like?”

Eotharon shook his head quickly at her. “It would be inappropriate for me to answer that question Little One. Only the man who you decide to take as your husband and mate would dare speak of your scent publicly. It is a great insult within the Union. It is done between the males yes... but never in your presence and never so others can overhear.” He answered her quickly. “My mate and daughter accompanied me on this trip because we did not know how long we would be gone. My daughter spends most of her time in the engineering section. She has a taste for engines. Her name is Remali if you wish to seek her out and perhaps some spend time with someone who knows what you are going through.”

Aleatia looked at him. “How long have you been mated Commander?” She asked with interest.

Eotharon smiled. “Nine hundred years, eleven months and six days Lady Aleatia. The very best years of my life.” He answered proudly. “We have six strong children and my beloved wife and mate carries our seventh.”

Aleatia smiled. “Congratulations Commander.” She said warmly.

Eotharon bowed his head to her. “We will leave you to your privacy. If anyone asks, you have my permission to be here. The smell of the fuel and such keeps most casual observers away from this area. I will make adjustments to your access for the remainder of the trip when I return to my office and I will insure no males approach you.”

Sehri blinked. “But... I thought it was natural for males to act in the way they do?” She asked.

Eotharon nodded. “It is... but not with you. Be yourself Little One and you will see.” He answered.

“Why?” Aleatia asked him.

Eotharon looked at her and smiled. “Ask your daughter Lady Aleatia.” He said.

“Thank you Commander.” Sehri spoke.

Eotharon nodded his head. “Un coi aur hador. Dalas atle forn cabret Little One. Quvor maeve gur vada leoda arvel tur bacj.” (It is my honor. Find what you seek little one. Only then will the fever truly be gone.)

Sehri stared at him for a long moment and then nodded her head. “Pen gur.” She spoke. (I will)

Eotharon smiled and then turned with the other Durcunusaan soldier and they exited the metal walkway the way they had come. Sehri looked at her mother and smiled. Aleatia hugged her tightly.

“Come... let’s get back to our quarters and you can give this recipe a try.” Aleatia said.

Eotharon touched the arm of his junior officer as they moved back down the corridor. “Put the word out among the ship discretely Kokun. Sehri is not to be approached by any male. Not if they value their nor.”

“What did you sense Commander.” The younger man asked. “She does smell very good sir. It will not make the men happy.”

Eotharon looked at him and smiled. “There are two Alphas with the power to reach the Beta Quadrant and touch her as she has been touched within Mindvoice. Only one is close to her age and the King would never seek a female so young. It is a touch that she accepted and even now holds onto tightly.”

Kokun’s eyes grew a little wider. “Prince Androcles?” He gasped.

Eotharon nodded his head. “I could feel Princess Sadi and Ne’Veha on her as well. They seem to be more focused than either Princess Lu’ria or Princess Carisia. They must have been closest to him when he touched her. It is why I told her to be herself and allow others to sense the fever. What male in their right mind would approach her if they detected Prince Andro within her Mindvoice essence?”

Kokun nodded. “Only those with a death wish.” He said. “I see your point commander. I will pass the word this night.”

Eotharon pounded his on the back as they walked. “Inform the rest of the detail to keep their eyes on her as well. Just in case.”

FEBRUARY 4TH, 2575, 0430 HRS EST

“...miss you Lisi.” Denali spoke from within the holographic communication. “I’m kicking myself for having you go with them.”

Lisisa was inside the secure COM center, the REAPER equipped with the newest and most advanced Quantum based Holo Communications Projectors. Similar to what was standard on all of the ARIZONA-Class warships and the SCIMITAR. The images were not as clear as they could be because of the distance involved, but unknown to all but a few, the new QHCP arrays allowed for direct communication over distances previously thought impossible. The Quantum based technology sent the signals through mini worm holes formed and detectable only with special sensors. These sensors were equipped only on a handful of ships at the moment as Ben and the others at Dreamland worked out the details of mass production and installation within the thousands of Union warships. Only the Block One and Block Two ARIZONA-Class Ships, the new VANGUARD MK III INTERDICTION Cruisers and the newer MOONLANCER-B-Class Battle Cruisers were equipped with the QHCP. Outside of those ships, only the LEONIDAS IIAs assigned to the Royal Family were equipped with them. Namely the ARCHDEMON and the REAPER.

Lisisa Leonidas smiled at Deni’s words for she could feel the emotion in them. Lisisa knew how Denali felt for her as his wife and mate and how she felt for him. They would never be the same without each other, especially with Arduri now sharing their lives and their future. Something that both of them relished.

“You have Duri to sate your desires Denali.” Lisisa sent the jab at him.

Denali rolled his eyes. “You know what I mean.” He hissed. “And Arduri isn’t too happy with me that I sent you away either.”

Lisisa smiled at his image. “I miss you both terribly. We... we have never been this far apart from each other you know.” She said.

Deni nodded. “And we won’t ever be again once you return.” He stated confidently. “Lisisa I want...”

“This was the right decision Deni and you know it.” Lisisa said. “Having me here with the Rothryn Delegation will speed their transition once we get to Earth and get them to see Andro that much more quickly. I know that my love. I figure at least three days of suitable body worshiping of me and Arduri when I return should make up for it.”

“Say a week and you have a deal.” Denali told her and Lisisa laughed.

“I’ll hold you to that.” She exclaimed with delight. Just seeing his face and hearing his voice was enough for now to chase away the loneliness she felt. Something he had been able to do from their very first moment together. Their love making the last few weeks had been incredibly intense and passionate. Denali almost never seemed to tire of her or Arduri for that matter. She had a sense of why this was and it filled her with even more love for the much younger man who was now her husband and mate. There had been times at the very beginning of their relationship when Lisisa fought within her mind at what they were doing. They were related and he was so much younger than her. Nearly five hundred years younger. Lisisa was no stranger to men, but Denali could do to her what no man ever could. His aura was so powerful and controlled he could make the wolf blood within her quiver with a simple caress of his aura on her. No Lycavorian who she had bedded since returning from Lycavore had ever been able to elicit those kinds of emotions and feelings. Denali didn’t just make love to her, her possessed her very being. And it certainly helped that his body could have been chiseled from granite and he was incredibly gifted within the cock department, not to mention that he tasted delicious.

It took several days for Lisisa to realize that Denali, like Andro, had been imprinted with the memories of their father and mother. Though he outwardly did not show it very often and it was not as profound an imprint on him as it was on Andro, Denali was far wiser and intelligent than he let on. When Lisisa finally allowed herself to recognize all of these things about the man who had so swept her up into his embrace, that was when the true blissful pleasure and feelings of devotion came rippling forth. She had not looked back since.

“Where is Duri?” She asked finally.

“She is with Coren and Caliria at her apartment finalizing the details of Dyack’s plan with him.” Denali answered. “Hopefully it will be sufficient to bring about the results we want for when Andro arrives. You should be almost to Earth yes?”

Lisisa nodded. “We made our last HMFC jump seven hours ago. We’ll be crossing the border into Union space in forty minutes or so. Once there we can use the Gates and be to Earth by morning.”

“Lisisa... make sure to remind Andro to bring Zarah and Lucia with him when he comes.” Denali said. “Having to listen to Dutkne bellyache much more will send me into a fit of anger.”

Lisisa laughed. “He’s gotten worse I know.” She said.

“He never stops asking me questions about them.” Deni told her. “What do they like to eat? To drink? Their favorite flower? Argh... it drives me insane!”

“Deni... he knows what...” Lisisa began to ask.

Denali nodded. “Yes. He doesn’t care. He told me he would wait for thousands of years until she was ready. And he would remain at her side regardless if she did not.”

Lisisa was impressed. “He is... he is that taken with them?”

Denali nodded. “He said he felt it long before he ever came here but he could never explain it. Then seeing them together on Earth, what they could do together as they were searching for Janae? It is more than just being taken with them Lisi... in his own way it is what I feel for you and now Arduri. What Andro feels for Sadi and the others? It is powerful and will never go away.”

Lisisa nodded. “Good.” She said softly. “Perhaps seeing this will allow our sister to be able to one day have what she so desires.”

Deni nodded “Avoi.” He said.

Lisisa’s head lifted as a voice intruded upon their communication. “Princess Lisisa please report to the bridge immediately! Princess Lisisa to the bridge immediately!” The internal ship COM sang out.

“Deni... I must go my love.” Lisisa said getting to her feet.

“Contact me from Dragon Mountain after you are settled.” He told her. “The QHCP emitters there will make our connection much clearer.”

“I love you Denali Leonidas my husband and mate.” Lisisa told him.

Deni smiled. “And I love you Lisisa Leonidas... my beautiful wife and mate.”

“I will see you soon.” Lisisa said before reaching down to the holographic table and touching the solid panel. The QHCP communication ended then and she was within the much smaller room on the REAPER. She turned quickly and headed for the bridge.

Lisisa strode onto the bridge confidently and watched the REAPER'S Captain rise from his command chair. The door to the opposite side of the bridge also opened and she watched as Aleatia, Harira, Kelelm and Sehri entered with two Durcunusaan officers. She glanced at them for a brief moment and then looked at the Elven Captain of the REAPER.

"Lunerr?" She asked as she came up next to him.

"I sent for them Princess." He said as the Durcunusaan brought them up to where they stood.

"Why?" Lisisa asked.

"Their presence among us might affect your decision." Lunerr told her.

"My decision on what?" Lisisa asked.

Lunerr motioned with his hand. "You should probably see this." He spoke as he led all of them over the plot table and touched several portions of the holographic control panel. "I tapped into the SUCOM arrays when we arrived back in the Alpha Quadrant. This came over the secure Durcunusaan channel seven and a half hours ago. I just discovered it."

Lisisa watched as Sa'sur's face appeared.

"...ULU SCIMITAR. I am declaring a Crimson Storm Protocol Two Five. Prince Androcles Leonidas is groundside on the Bontawillian Colony of Solmar with Prince Dorian. Kavalian ground and air forces are now in control of the planet. I am ordering an immediate deployment of the SCIMITAR's Strike Wing to my current location. This is a Level Nine Command Authority deployment. I am ordering activation of the primary Durcunusaan Ready Division and preparation of Union forces for immediate covert deployment to the region. Verify confirmation of deployment on this channel."

"Captain Sa'sur this is Durcunusaan command." The male voice broke in. "Confirm with Command Codes your last."

"SCIMITAR, Gamma Alpha One four seven nine." Sa'sur answered.

"Codes confirmed Captain." The voice answered. "Initiating activation per your orders! Your status?"

"SCIMITAR has withdrawn at Androcles's order to Bontawillian space. Coordinates seven three nine one two point six. Primary mission went to sibfla nine hours in. Unknown at this time mission status. Kavalian forces have occupied all settlements on Solmar and taken down the main power grid. Confirmed thirty-seven Kavalian ships entering the system as we departed. Spartan company has been deployed with our remaining STRIKERS and KADENs to Andro's position on the surface. They appear to be attempting to set up a forward staging area. Large number of Kavalian ground forces were entering system as we departed and they will be landing by now. I estimate two divisions at least by the number of DAGGER-Class Troop ships. Are you getting this?"

"Affirmative Captain Sa'sur." The voice answered. "Priority alert has already gone out to General Vengal and the DRF. He received your preliminary alert three hours ago and the deployment has already begun."

"This cannot hit the open airwaves!" Sa'sur spoke. "If the Kavalians find out Andro is on the surface they will commit everything to taking him out! I need the Durcunusaan Ready Force moving within hours. Covert deployment. General Vengal will know the drill."

Lunerr looked at Lisisa. "By now the DRF will have begun moving to their staging areas on Earth for deployment Princess. And whatever other assets the General believes he can get off the planet without alerting the Netnews to an unscheduled deployment."

"Sa'sur's position is just inside the Bontawillian border." Lisisa stated looking at the star chart. "How soon before the additional forces reach her location?"

"It is 2200 hours on Earth now. If they are able to begin moving by morning... thirty-six hours." He answered. "Then another twelve back to Solmar. There are no Gates they can use to get them there faster and only the SCIMITAR's Strike Wing has HMFC engines."

"Nubou!" Lisisa swore turning away for a moment as her mind shuffled through dozens of scenarios.

“Princess... we are only nine hours from Solmar.” Lunerr told her watching Lisisa turn to look at him. “We have three hundred Spartans we can put groundside along with yourself and Jeth. That would be four hundred and fifty Spartans and three dragons.” He looked at where Aleatia and the others stood. “There is a slight problem however.”

Kelelm knew immediately what he meant and he looked at his mother who still appeared somewhat confused at what was happening. “Us.” He told her.

“Us?” Aleatia asked.

“You are a Political Delegation Lady Aleatia.” Lunerr told her. “The Lycavorian Union Chapter specifically states that endangering the welfare of a Political Delegation is punishable with severe consequences.”

Sehri looked at her. “Mother... we have to help!” She declared.

Harira stepped forward. “That would not be advisable.” She stated. “With the exception of Kelelm and his detachment, none of us have seen combat. Even if we remained on this ship we would still be in danger.”

“The Kavalians would never be able to detect us with our Shrouds.” Lunerr spoke. “We could remain at a safe distance from the planet itself and simply act as a relay Princess.”

Harira looked at Lunerr. “That woman said there were upwards of two divisions on the planet. I am not completely unknowledgeable in military affairs Captain. What is the number of a... what do you call them... Kavalians. How many in one of their divisions?”

Lunerr shrugged. “Between twenty and thirty thousand depending on composition of the division.” He replied.

Harira’s eyes grew wide. “Thirty thousand!” She gasped. “Against four hundred? That is suicide!”

“Actually it would be closer to sixty thousand if there are two divisions.” Lunerr told her.

“How many civilians on Solmar?” Lisisa asked.

“The settlement has a population of nearly twenty thousand.” Lunerr answered. “Mostly Bontawillian, elven and human engineers and teraformers. According to colony logs... they were planning to begin expansion onto the southern continent next month.”

Lisisa looked at him. “The only reason Andro and Dorian would have remained is to try and help the civilians.” She stated.

“Help them do what?” Harira stammered.

“Move as many of them to a central point for evacuation.” Lunerr answered her. “Make no mistake Lady Harira... when Sa'sur returns with Union forces... there will be a battle. We will not leave civilians to the mercies of the Kavalians for any reason. Not if there is a chance to get them out. Once the Union task force arrives, the evacuation of civilians will be their main priority.”

Sehri looked at her mother once more. “Mother... it is Andro!” She exclaimed. “We have to...”

“Sehri child... you are not thinking rationally.” Harira spoke.

Sehri’s head snapped around. “I’m thinking completely rationally!” She barked at the Shaman Master. Harira’s eyes grew a little wider at the obvious emotion and anger within her response.

Lisisa looked at Lunerr. “Do we have enough ships to load out our Spartans and you can continue to Earth with Lady Aleatia and the others?”

Lunerr shook his head. “No. We have only three STRIKERS and one KADEN on board Princess. You wouldn’t be able to take more than two hundred and all of their gear.”

“Then I’ll take what I can.” Lisisa answered. “You will continue on with the Rothryn Delegation to Earth.”

“No.” Aleatia spoke finally as she looked at Lisisa.

“I can’t risk your safety.” Lisisa told her. “It would not be right... this is not your war. And my Tenna Deia would have my ass if I did. Andro too probably.”

Aleatia took a deep breath. “I believe I know what my husband and mate would do.” Aleatia spoke. “We came with you to meet your brother Androcles and discover all we could about not only our past but our future as well. If Androcles... if your brother dies on this planet then our mission will have failed in every way. I am not willing to allow that and I don’t believe Dyack would be either.”

“Lady Aleatia this is crazy!” Harira said. “His father still lives! Our mission will not have failed!”

Aleatia looked at her. “Androcles Leonidas is the one who began this odyssey for us by allowing us to compare our DNA with his and his brother Denali. He made the first overture with little knowledge of us or our people Harira. I’d say that is an incredible leap of faith.”

Harira nodded. “Yes it is.”

Aleatia turned to Lisisa. “Your brother... he obviously believes deeply in faith does he not Princess Lisisa?”

Lisisa nodded. “He doesn’t show it at times but yes... he does. Very much so.” She answered honestly.

Aleatia nodded. “Then we will do no less.” She spoke. “Something tells me when he discovers we are among you...” Aleatia looked at Sehri. “He will insure our safety as well as the civilians he is trying to save. And my son and his men are not without experience in this kind of situation either.” She turned back to Lisisa. “We will accompany you and the Rothryn people will not hold you responsible for anything that might happen Princess.”

Lisisa didn’t hesitate and she turned to Lunerr. “Plot the course and get us there as quickly as you can Lunerr.”

The elven Captain nodded. “Consider it done.” He said.

Lisisa turned to the Durcunusaan soldier closest to them. “Enomotarch... you will take...”

Kelelm looked at her. “I am a Colonel within our military Princess.” He stated.

“You will take Colonel Kelelm and his detachment and outfit them with our equipment and primary weapons.” Lisisa said. “Have Eotharon alter ship board access for Lady Aleatia and her daughters to allow them to be on the bridge once we arrive.”

“As you order Princess.” The man said.

Lisisa looked at her. “If events begin to spiral out of our control Lady Aleatia... Captain Lunerr will leave the system and bring you to Earth.”

Aleatia nodded. “I understand.” She said.

EARTH

GYTHEIO

MOUNTAIN VILLA OF ZARAH AND LUCIA

FEBRUARY 4TH, 2575, 0545 HRS EST

Zarah Leonidas stretched her lithe body on the bed, reveling in the new sensations and emotions surging through her. Not since before the attack on her had she felt these things and she knew without question it was due to one thing. Zarah rolled over in her bed reaching for Lucia and her dark eyes grew wide when she discovered no body next to her. As her hand slid across the sheets a fleeting moment of terrifying fear and loneliness swept through her and then her eyes lifted as the door to their bedroom opened and Lucia came in carrying the small tray. That fear vanished into the wind as her eyes fell on the deliciously naked body of Lucia.

Her Lucia.

Almost six months had passed since the attack, since they had taken her innocence from her. That day also saw Lucia enter her life and the healing had begun almost immediately. Lucia had saved her life without thought; had been beside her every day since then. The attraction between them was undisputable and unmistakable. The blood they had shared building upon and reinforcing the connection that was already there, made from across the stars. It had taken Zarah six months to work up the courage to try and experience physical pleasure the way it was meant to be. Consensual and loving. Their last two nights and most of the days together had been everything Zarah had ever imagined it could be. Neither of them had been with any partner before each other, but these last weeks and months of sleeping naked within each other’s arms had chased away any unfamiliarity and left them more time to explore and delve into the deep mysteries that they were. Explore and delve is exactly what they had done to each other, finally and forever sealing their love for one another in a way nothing else could.

Zarah let her head drop back to the pillow as she watched Lucia move towards her. She had memorized every single contour and curve Lucia had, her lips and tongue reaching and then exploring every detail with great gusto while Lucia thrashed and cried out her delight. And then Lucia had done the same to her for hours on end, Zarah's blissful cries of rapture filling their bedroom and surely echoing along the mountain ridge where their villa was. Zarah had insisted that they purchase a villa together. A place they would call their home. With Eliani and Sadi's help they decided on this large villa sitting on the ridge and overlooking the gulf. Thanks to Sadi and Eliani's influence and contacts all the proper paperwork and transfers of Riyal were made within hours instead of days. Androcles had been the one to purchase the villa for them, his gift to them he had told them that day. He had also deliberately designed her schedule of working and training with the Durcunusaan to give her maximum time with Lucia. Zarah had figured this out very quickly, but instead of being angry at him for catering to her as he always did, she found she loved her older brother even more. Twice now he had saved her life, first upon that mountain on Apo Prime and then by not killing Lucia outright when he discovered them together immediately after the attack. He was the first to have seen the love in Lucia's eyes for Zarah when he discovered Lucia holding a battered Zarah within her arms inside a powerful Etheric bubble she had erected. Lucia had almost not let him enter that bubble, but even then she knew that Andro would save them both.

Zarah had held a tremendous fear that she would never be able to feel pleasure again after what was done to her. That she would never know the delight of loving someone and sharing herself with them for all time. Those fears, along with the last vestiges of the attack against her had been washed away in that first of dozens of blissful orgasms that Lucia had given to her. Feelings and sensations that Zarah eagerly returned to her equally upon discovering that she was not dead to emotion.

Zarah gazed at Lucia's lush body as she walked towards the bed and almost seeing the same thoughts and emotions racing through Lucia's head.

Lucia Moran... youngest child of Yuri Moran... and in the eyes of many of the Leonidas family, part of the glue that had held them together during that time. To Lucia... Zarah was a vision of exquisite beauty that now belonged to her in every way. So many years of loving her from a distance, having to hide that love from others was gone. Now she was with her beloved Zarah and nothing would ever come between them. Zarah had saved her from the darkness that had taken her mother and brothers, that single strand of power within Mindvoice that Lucia had clung to tenaciously for almost a decade until they were finally together. They were like one mind now, their sharing of blood bringing them far closer together than most people except their family realized. And Lucia was a Leonidas now... in body and soul. She didn't doubt her purpose or the path she walked with Zarah at her side. One conversation with Martin Leonidas had chased all the fears within her away with each word he had spoken to her. It had taken place while he was out among the stars searching for For'mya, a simple transmission that only held them. Lucia remembered his words that day perfectly, and she would take them to her life's end with pride and happiness.

“... something I should have done a long time ago. I'm doing it now to show you how I feel. You have stolen each other's hearts... and I can not begin to tell you how happy that makes me. Andro has given me some idea of what you have endured Lucia... hiding the real you for so many years. Hiding your love for my daughter. I let my feelings for your mother cloud my judgment at first... I won't let that happen ever again. Know this Lucia... from this day forward you are a Leonidas. I will treat you with the same love and devotion as I treat my own daughters. Never fear me or what I will say for you are now part of my family. Love each other every day like there is no tomorrow. Never doubt. Never hesitate. And know that you will always have my love behind you.”

Such simple words... but they had been the final line she had crossed to be who she now was as a person. She was Lucia Leonidas and she loved her Zarah like nothing else in this universe. Her bonded sister Seyra had also rejoiced and found new life and purpose among these men and women and the many dragons they called friend and family, making their bond even stronger than it was and enveloping Zarah within that very special connection. Seyra had grown viciously protective of both of them in every way and there were very few that she allowed to get close to her Bonded sisters.

Lucia settled her naked form onto the bed as Zarah sat up and she placed the tray between their legs. She leaned over without hesitation and caught Zarah's soft lips in a kiss of love and passion that lasted for several long moments before they parted and Zarah sat up completely, shifting her body so that Lucia could slide closer to her.

“We have taken quite a bit of each other’s blood these last hours.” Lucia said holding out the glass of pulpy orange juice. “We need to replenish that or the first training session we have both of us will collapse from exhaustion.”

Zarah giggled as she took the glass. “But everyone will know why.” She stated with some amusement. “And it won’t be nearly as pleasant.”

Lucia smiled and nodded her head, her black hair wild and unkempt at the moment and moving across her shoulders. “No... it certainly won’t.” She answered before sipping the juice. “What time do we have to meet with Thr’won and Syrilth?”

“1000 hours.” Zarah answered. “Our lessons with them are giving me much more clarity and focus.”

Lucia nodded. “Me as well.” She said. “I can control my whips with more exacting control. It’s amazing. My grandmother made the mistake of suppressing those vampires who showed promise within Mindvoice. Their Etheric abilities may have helped against the KFI in many ways.”

“She was too frightened to allow others to reach her level of ability.” Zarah said. “Andro believes that was more Xaxon’s influence on her than anything. She didn’t have the strength to fight him as you did my love. She was too long within his grasp.”

Lucia looked at her silent for a moment before speaking again. “Zarah... do you think my mother will find peace?”

Zarah lowered her glass. “Yes.” She said. “Perhaps... perhaps not as we have... but you remember what Andro told us. She was different Lucia... the darkness gone from her. It is why he could not kill her.”

“Part of me wishes her to be happy.” Lucia said as she scooted closer to Zarah on the bed. “But part of me still harbors a great deal of anger at her for what she allowed to happen.”

Zarah shook her head. “Most of what she allowed to happen was not truly her Lucia.” She said.

Lucia looked at her. “You defend her?” She asked.

Zarah shook her head. “No...” She shrugged her shoulders. “Maybe. I can’t stop thinking that it would be if I was forced in some way to hurt you against what I knew to be wrong. To be able to control your grandmother as he did, for so many millennia and then infect your mother the way he did. With what your father and grandmother were doing to her, influencing her in the way that they did, there are very few who could fight that. It almost took my own father you know that.” Zarah looked at her. “You know how I trust Andro my love.”

Lucia nodded. “Yes. As I trust him now. How could I not? He was the first to fully accept that I loved you as I do.”

“I have always trusted him implicitly.” Zarah said. “His instincts. His sense of people. In many ways he is even more gifted than my father in regards to being able to sense a person’s resonance and their inner being. He sensed something was different within your mother Lucia. He could not bring himself to kill her because of this. I may not know exactly what it was that he saw... but I trust my brother with all that I am. If he did not kill her for what she was perceived to have done then there is a higher reason. Something he saw within her that stayed his hand.”

Lucia nodded. “Do you think we will ever see her again?”

“Do you want too?” Zarah asked.

Lucia stared at her for a long moment before replying. “Part of me does.” She said softly.

“Then our roads may cross again if it is our destiny.” Zarah said.

“I will kill my father and brother if I ever see them again.” Lucia hissed. “They are responsible for so much pain and it doesn’t bother them in the least. I hope Aunt Narice is able to find them and kill them. I...” Lucia looked at Zarah as her lips came to hers and they kissed softly.

“Do not do this my love.” Zarah told her as she pulled away ever so slightly. “We are together now. Nothing will ever change that. Let us... let us put our past behind us and go into the sunlight together.”

Lucia nodded her head quickly. “You are right.” She said without hesitation. She met Zarah’s kiss with equal passion then but just as their kiss deepened, Zarah gasped and pulled away quickly, her hand tightening on Lucia’s thigh. “Zarah my love!” She gasped. “What is wrong?”

Zarah shook her head as if trying to clear her thoughts. “I felt... it was a massive spike within Mindvoice. From Andro!” She rasped out.

“Andro?” Lucia asked.

Zarah nodded. “We have always been connected in a way since that day on Apo Prime. I have always been able to sense his Etheric resonance when he drops his shields low enough. But he almost never does that. Not unless...”

“Not unless what?” Lucia pressed her.

Zarah looked at her. “He never drops his shields low enough for me to sense him unless there is something wrong and he is acting out of rage or some other powerful emotion. Wherever he and Dorian are... something has gone wrong.”

“I thought... I thought the mission he and Dorian went on was a routine pick up?” Lucia said.

“That is what he told me before he left.” Zarah said. “Something is wrong though Lucia! I feel it!”

“Sadi?” Lucia blurted immediately.

Zarah shook her head. “Sadi is just like Andro. She maintains her shields at near their maximum ability all of the time. It is something the Feravomir taught her at the School of the Mages. Unless Andro has touched her directly she would not sense it. What I felt... it was focused and directed at me alone.”

Lucia’s hands gripped Zarah’s. “If there is trouble then he is reaching for you because he knows you will not panic as the others will!” She gasped. “That must be it.”

Zarah looked at her. “We need to get to Jomann!”

Lucia rose to her feet. “They will still be at their villa. It is less than a mile! Come!”

GYTHEIO

HOME OF ELIANI AND JOMANN

FEBRUARY 4TH, 2575, 0605 HRS EST

“...don’t care what you have to do!” Eliani snapped angrily. “You get those supplies to the ship within the next hour! We are deploying at 1300 with or without them and if they aren’t there I will have your nor in my hands Captain! It won’t be pretty! Is that in any way unclear?”

“It will be done Princess!” The man stammered.

“Thank you!” Eliani barked before slamming her hand down on the COM panel and turning to look at Jomann as he entered the main living area of their home. “The medical supplies will be leaving within the hour.” She told him.

Jomann nodded and tapped on his data pad. “I knew you would be able to move them.” He told her as he stepped up to her and slipped his arm around her waist. Jomann pulsed her with a portion of his aura, not enough to incite sexual urges, but enough to calm and sooth her excited state.

Eliani rested her head against his chest as she felt his aura sweep through her and she returned the pulse with one of her own. She looked up at her husband and mate. “Why... why contact Vengal first and not us?” She asked.

“Sa’sur has been Andro’s right hand for nearly seven years now Eli... and she knows how any of his family would react. Most especially Sadi and the others.” Jomann answered calmly. “You would blow windows out in leaving the planet to go to him and that is not what is needed. It must be done with precision and force Innel... but also with complete secrecy.”

Eliani looked into his ocean blue eyes and smiled when he called her baby. From any other male that word would have been insulting and provocative and it would have caused Eliani to react accordingly. From Jomann however, that word was music to her ears. When it rolled off his tongue, that one word held all of his combined love and desire for her and it surged through her being and made her wolf blood sing in happiness. “I know.” She said finally.

“Two thirds of the Durcunusaan Division is loaded and nearly half of the human 82nd Orbital Drop Division.” He stated. “We must maintain our façade in order to not alert the Kavalians who we believe are still on Earth. That is why we have been coordinating from here and we have not moved to Andro’s villa.”

“Sadi is going to pop a vessel when they finish that stupid interview and you tell her what is going on.” Eliani told him.

Jomann nodded. “Probably... but she will understand very quickly why. Just as you do.”

“I want to come with you.” The second female voice spoke and they both turned to see Brendi Faith standing in the archway to the corridor that led to the three bedrooms in their villa.

Brendi Faith stared at them from the archway and couldn't believe she had just said that. She knew why of course... but she didn't believe she had reacted so instinctively in speaking. It was not something that she ever did. She blurted the first words that had popped into her mind and she struggled with the why of her statement but not the statement itself. Brendi Faith had been among these men and women as a whole for nearly six months now. Nearly everything of importance that the OSG intelligence pads had on the Lycavorian Union was in some way wrong or taken out of context. She had seen a people dedicated to each other, to their values and to peace. She had seen a people driven to the edge of a war they did not want and tried to avoid. A people that ultimately decided war was the only way to protect and defend what they had as a people. A war Androcles Leonidas had tried his very best to evade but when that decision had come, it was a decision he made without hesitation.

These last six months with the man and woman in front of her had also affected her own reasoning no matter how much she fought it. Brendi had been living with them for almost six months now, her parents and twin sisters living with the Spartan family of the man who was now her sister's husband. Their villa was enormous and had more than enough room for them but Brendi did not want to live with them after being on her own for so long. Her family was adapting far better than her and her younger sister Nicolle was happier than she had ever seen her, Tasha just as bubbly because she was Nicolle's twin. Her mother and father spent hours with Mento's mother and father, her own father drawn to the history and culture of the Spartan people like nothing she had ever seen. Jomann and Eliani would not allow her to have her own villa for security purposes. They just did not know if Corbin or the OSG would come after them. Brendi understood this reasoning and accepted it without question. She had no desire to fall into her brother's hands or see her family be captured by him. Mento's parent's villa was now a fortress unto itself and Brendi did not fear for them. She did not fear for herself either, as no one in their right mind would target the home of the Durcunusaan Captain of Androcles Leonidas. Not if they valued their lives even a little bit.

Brendi could go into the city proper whenever she wanted as long as she was under heavy guard. Surprisingly the Durcunusaan soldiers assigned to protect her made it seem as if they weren't there. She always had difficulty pinpointing where exactly the four men and two women were as they guarded her, and she had stopped trying. She no longer thought about them really. Gytheio was much more secluded than Sparta and since the events on Cranae Island that night, the Netnews reporters were no longer allowed to set up shop in the city limits by order of the Mayor. They could come and go as they pleased, but they were not allowed to be stationary for any length of time, and filming any member of the Royal Family now meant immediate arrest. Brendi had been trained to fit in, and that is exactly what she did, pleased with her skill at avoiding the Netnews. Something was happening to her however, and it was frightening to her.

Brendi Faith had actually begun to care about someone besides herself. She had begun to care about two individuals really, and that emotion had led her to become accepted by nearly all of Eliani and Jomann's family without question. She had become a fixture in the lives of Eliani and Jomann and unbeknownst to them, that meant more than she realized. They did not treat her as an enemy in any way. She was included in their dinners and their breakfasts, and Jomann had even begun cooking food that she loved. He was the most amazing cook, as was Eliani, and seeing them in the kitchen acting out their art was delightful. Whenever the Krypteria came to the home to ask her questions, Brendi told them whatever they wanted. She had no love for the OSG and if her answers went to eventually freeing the Eridiani from the OSG influence she was all for it. She had given them every name she knew of OSG agents on Earth and in turn, they had discovered more. The OSG had pulled their agents off Earth finally, adhering to Andro's orders but Brendi didn't doubt they had more who she was not aware of. The Krypteria agreed and was not hesitant to come to her about suspects they might have. Brendi had also spent the last months learning everything she could about the Kavalian people and any individuals of interest. Her expanded brain capacity allowed her to now know just about everything the Union had on any officer above the rank of Colonel within the KFI. Her near photographic memory was incredible.

Brendi Faith could no longer deny the attraction to Eliani Leonidas. At least to herself. The OSG and the Eridiani considered any kind of same sex relationship taboo to the extreme, and when it was discovered it was punished. Brendi knew all this and her first reaction upon realizing Eliani didn't shy away from this type of thing had been disgust. Now... now she could not explain the intense draw to the shorter woman. With Jomann it was easy enough. He was incredibly handsome, his physical proportions unlike anything she had seen before on a man. And if the howls of delight coming from their room at night were any indication, he was obviously a man who thoroughly enjoyed making his wife scream out his name in passion. They had kept her awake at night many times with their antics and didn't realize that their moans of pleasure and professions of love to each other had a distinct affect on Brendi. So distinct in fact that Brendi had begun to recently dream about being with them. Not only one at a time but also together. Brendi found herself wanting to submerge her body within their arms and experience what they shared so easily.

Jomann shook his head. "Brendi... I do not think that is a good idea." He told her shaking her from her thoughts.

Brendi blinked several times and moved into the main room with them. "I can help." She stated. "I've studied every dossier on every Kavalian within their military! I... I know how they think! I... it's what I do! I can..."

Jomann's eyes narrowed. "What?" He gasped looking at Eliani just as quickly. "Eli?"

Eliani met his gaze with a sheepish grin. "I may have given her access to the files." She answered with a lopsided grin.

"You gave her access to Krypteria files?" Jomann hissed. "Are you insane? If..."

"I am not the enemy Jomann!" Brendi insisted as she moved closer to them.

Jomann met her dark brown eyes and fought down what both he and Eliani had been feeling these last weeks. "I know you are not Brendi." He told her honestly and with no hesitation Brendi saw. This fact registered in a small portion of her mind and made her very happy. "There may be others who do not see it that way however! Eliani this was not a good..."

"I am a Princess of the Union." Eliani spoke confidently. "It was my decision to give her the files. Saarrieemeran's brain capacity is four times the normal human and she processes this information twice as fast as a Lycavorian. She's nearly a walking computer. She's also not bad in CQB either. Zarah can vouch for that as she and Lucia are the ones who have been schooling her."

There was that word again Brendi thought. They had called her that on several occasions and Brendi knew what it meant. Every time they spoke it to her or in regards to her it made her flush. They had told her one night why they called her that but Brendi sensed there was a hidden meaning to them behind it.

Jomann shook his head. [Eli... I... we have spoken of this.] He told her. [No matter how much you desire her...]

Eliani moved closer to her handsome husband and mate. [How much we desire her?] She corrected him.

Jomann nodded instantly. [Yes. How much we desire her.] He spoke. They had spoken of Brendi many times over these last weeks and months and what she made both of them feel. They were Anomes... soulmates. Nothing living or dead would ever come between them now, but both of them could feel the powerful draw Brendi had on both of them. Her wild strawberry scent could excite them both and it certainly had grown sweeter to them over the last weeks. [Is this the way to go about it though?]

[She is not our enemy Jomann.] Eliani said.

[I know this.] He said.

[She is searching for a purpose Jomann.] Eliani told him. [She sees how quickly her own family has come to accept and trust and embrace their new lives and she is trying to discover a way as well. She is an Intelligence analyst. Her insight could be invaluable.]

Brendi moved forward until she was directly in front of them. "Stop that." She said softly. "I know you are talking about me. It's very disconcerting to do it right in front of me."

They both turned to her. "Saarrieemeran... we trust you." Jomann spoke to her. "There are others who still do not. Doing this will expose you to them. It is why Eliani has had you training with Zarah and Lucia. We can not predict what others will do."

"I'm not afraid." Brendi told them. "I'm not afraid and I want to do this. I can't prove to anyone that I can be trusted if I am restricted in where I go and who I see."

Jomann nodded slowly. "That is true." He admitted.

"Then let me help!" Brendi pressed him.

Jomann glanced at Eliani quickly and then back to her. "Your brother will have my nor... you know this." He spoke finally.

Eliani pressed close to him and cooed into his ear. "I'll make them feel better my love." She whispered into his ear.

Jomann growled softly in his chest at her words and nodded his head. "Contact your family and tell them you are leaving with us so they do not worry. Do not tell them where we are going Saarrieemeran."

They turned at the buzzing of their door and watched as it opened to reveal Zarah and Lucia who rushed past the two Durcunusaan just inside the doorway.

"Eli... Jomann!" Zarah exclaimed. "What is going on? Something is wrong with Andro! I felt him touch me!"

Jomann turned back to Brendi. "Go Saarrieemeran. Use the COM unit and then pack your gear."

Brendi nodded with a smile and turned to do just what he had said. Jomann turned back and saw Eliani taking Zarah's hands.

"Calm down Zarah." Eliani said. "We already know about it and we are taking action."

"What is happening?" Zarah demanded.

Whatever happened from now on was in the hands of the gods he knew.

SOLMAR

PUMA BANE FORWARD STAGING BASE

FEBRUARY 4TH, 2575, 0650 EST

General Azlenr'Macoe stood stoically reviewing the site of the massacre as his men moved across the area. Sixteen bodies were stretched out on the ground before him, each one covered by thin dark blanket that was standard issue for all Kavalian troops. The sun that was rising reflected off the damp moistness of blood that soaked both the bodies and ground beneath them and several areas around the Puma Bane Camp. It was a standard Puma Bane forward base camp. Two security posts that were manned when the team was inside the perimeter at all times. This forward base provided excellent defense with the towering cliffs in the west and the five hundred foot drop to the valley floor below in the south. The only path up to the base had been expertly culled to provide precise fields of fire while looking as if the vegetation had naturally worn away. The Puma Bane troops knew their jobs and this team was very experienced as a unit. The base had failed to report in at its normal time three hours ago and the Duty officer in the main settlement had dispatched a fire team to discover why. This is what they had found.

Only Azlenr's eyes shifted as Makali slowly made his way through the gore up to him with one of Azlenr's senior shock troops. He recognized the Sergeant Master easily, the scar from a High Coven blade running along the entire left side of his face. The man was a beast in combat and had survived that attack to lead a rush against hardened vampire positions all the while he bled on the ground beneath him. When the battle was over, he had simply sat down and waited for the medics to come to him and treat him. That Sergeant Master was now Azlenr's most trusted enlisted man and the one who saw to most of the mundane things for his division during the day. He also was Azlenr's personal bodyguard when he moved outside of an established perimeter of Kavalian forces. The sounds of a DAGGER gunship were growing closer in the morning air and Azlenr lifted his eyes only slightly to see the ship approaching fast from the east. That would be his friend Byka'Caleo. The most experienced and fearless leader of ground troops that Azlenr knew. He had sent for him even as his own DAGGER gunship had been lifting off from the settlement less than an hour ago. He brought his eyes back down to Makali and Sergeant Master Iweo'Cachowe.

"General." Makali spoke as the two men came up to him.

"Tell me what happen here Iweo." Azlenr spoke evenly. "This was not done by a group of Bontawillian civilians that somehow escaped one of the settlements and decided to become commandos overnight."

The grizzled Kavalian Sergeant Master met his general's eyes. "No my General." Iweo answered him.

Conversation became almost impossible as the DAGGER gunship flared expertly a hundred and fifty meters away over the lone clear spot and settled gently to the ground even as the forward ramp began to lower and Byka'Caleo was jogging from inside the Attack Transport directly for where he stood. Azlenr glanced up into the cockpit of the DAGGER and his keen eyes spotted the helmeted head of Byka's pilot daughter Kameka as she continued to power down the KFI's newest and most deadly planetary transport. She would join her father shortly as his bodyguard. The DAGGER had been built in secret to supplement the PROTOSS on a planetary scale. The PROTOSS were far too big to act as short range transports once they were down and the Kavalians decided on their own version of the Union STRIKER Attack Transport.

Byka reached where they stood in moments and Azlenr immediately extended his hand as the DAGGER's engines no longer hindered his being heard.

"Byka!" Azlenr greeted him as their hands clasped together.

"I am honored General." Byka' Caleo stated.

Azlenr squeezed his hand tightly looking at the dark fur that adorned his face. It was just beginning to streak with gray just as his was, but it would be many centuries before Byka gave up what he had now. "We have been together too long Byka my friend." Azlenr spoke. "We are not among the politicians of the homeworld. Speak my name old friend."

Byka smiled and nodded his head. "My division is fully down Azlenr and we have moved to establish ourselves in the two far western settlements. I have already ordered patrols out per our standard tactics to search for any who may have escaped the settlements. Lethal force has been authorized only as a last resort and I told my patrol leaders if they need to use it they had better be bleeding from their eyes."

Azlenr nodded. "Good. Too many civilians have been killed already as it is. I informed the Prefect that civilian deaths will only complicate our position here and make us a major target. Killing civilians only makes it worse."

"We will already be a target Azlenr." Byka said. "The Union will not abide a forward base this close to their border. They will come after us once they discover we are here."

Azlenr nodded. "If they do not know already." He said. "But it will take time for them to mount any kind of operation to expel us and we must use that time to be ready."

"Marsin had the civilians killed didn't he?" Byka asked.

Azlenr met his eyes. "I can trust you to keep your feelings in check can't I Byka?" He asked. "I do not need you looking for retribution."

Byka shook his head. "You know me General." He spoke. "I will initiate nothing unless he firsts opens his hole."

Azlenr nodded. "Good." He turned to look at Iweo. "My Sergeant Master Iweo." He said as introduction. "He was going to tell me what happened here."

Byka looked around. "Taking out a full Puma Bane Squad is no small feat." He said. "And they were set up in their defensive positions. Marsin knows?"

Azlenr nodded his head. "He is enroute from his forward base and he is incensed." He looked at Iweo. "Iweo... you may continue now."

"This way." He spoke. Iweo led them through the camp and past the row of bodies to the edge of the cliff. Near the edge he stooped down and lifted the small metal spike from the ground and held it up for the two Kavalians Generals.

Byka leaned over the edge and looked down seeing the valley floor far below. "What is that? Two hundred meters?"

"One hundred and eighty-five General." Iweo answered. "Over five hundred feet straight down."

Byka looked back to Azlenr. "No Bontawillian civilian made that climb." He stated confidently.

"No sir." Iweo held up the metal spike to Azlenr. "They scaled the cliff using these General. If we sent men down on ropes we would undoubtedly find many more of them jammed into the crevices of rock along the face."

Azlenr took the spike. "Climbing spikes." He said softly.

"Boot scuffs along this edge and twenty meters further down." Iweo spoke. "I estimate no more than ten in number."

"Ten!" Azlenr gasped. "Ten men did this?"

"Ten men and three females general. Based on the depth of boot prints circling the Puma Bane perimeter." Iweo spoke.

"None of them were killed with firearms." Makali spoke now. "All wounds are consistent with bladed weapons. Incredibly sharp bladed weapons."

Byka looked at him. “That would imply they were able to close with and attack before the Puma Bane troops even knew they were here.”

Iweo nodded. “The two security posts were taken out first.” He said motioning them to follow him. They didn’t hesitate and followed him the thirty meters to the closest security post. It was a loose collection of logs and rocks that the men had gathered, but more than enough to provide adequate protection against small arms fire. Azlenr turned as he felt another join them and he saw the long legs and incredibly firm body of Kameka’Caleo join them, the smallish machine pistol grasped in her hands.

To look at her from the neck down one would see a Kavalian female who had undergone the biogenic treatments to remove the hair from her body. Kameka’Caleo was young at only twenty-five years of age, but her lush figure had many young Kavalians pressing Byka for her hand. Her five foot seven height was due to rather long legs that ended in an exquisitely shaped ass that was now encased in an armored flight suit. Her breasts were high and firm, her reddish brown hair long and pulled together in a single pony tail over her right shoulder. The treatments had removed her tail, but once Marsin had so callously abused her six years ago, Kameka had stopped taking the biogenic treatments and her tail had since grown back. She kept it wrapped tightly around her waist as to not make it so obvious, but Byka in very un-Kavalian like fashion, supported his daughter in her decision. Incredibly the Prefect had granted Byka whatever he wanted because of Marsin’s actions and Byka had bowed to his daughter’s desire to become a pilot. There were very few female pilots within the Kavalian forces, mostly of civilian transport craft. Kameka had learned in four years what took most pilots eight years to learn. Her aptitude for flying was uncanny and quickly recognized by the more moderate Kavalian instructors. Some had tried to get her tossed from the training but she had defeated every problem they threw at her. She was not allowed to participate in the graduation ceremonies because she was female and she had no official rank within the Kavalian military, but Byka had held his own ceremony when she joined his command. A ceremony that Azlenr had attended. It was very low key, something Azlenr knew Byka did to keep from garnering unwanted attention, but the effect on Kameka had been profound. In the two years since that day she had proven to be the most gifted pilot within her father’s division, even earning the admiration of the many male pilots.

Azlenr knew however that she would never be wanted by another Kavalian male. The three long jagged scars began at her hairline and extended down across her cheek and under her collar and they marred her beauty. Marsin had marked her severely, raking his claws down her perfect flesh when she refused to submit to him one evening during one of his drunken bouts. She had not wanted to become Marsin’s mate but Kavalian law was very clear. Her father had been powerless to stop it and for eight months she’d had to endure his rutting upon her until she could take it no more. Marsin had dumped her outside her family’s home, bleeding and very nearly broken. This had sent Byka into a rage that Azlenr had never seen before. It had taken four Kavalian Puma Bane Troops to pull Byka off Marsin before the much older and more experienced General pummeled Marsin into bloody bits. As the news began to spread of what had happened, many of the older Kavalian Generals and officers like Azlenr had thrown their full support behind Byka without question. Taking his daughter was one thing, but disfiguring her and then trying to blame her father and her Pride was going too far. Keleru could not dismiss them because they were the heart of his army no matter that it was known he favored the Puma Bane Troops heavily. To keep an internal rebellion from occurring Keleru publicly reprimanded Marsin but never even considered time in a Kavalian jail. To appease his generals, Keleru granted Byka and Kameka freedom to pursue goals and entitlements that regular females were never allowed. She chose to become a pilot and the rest was history.

Since joining her father’s command, she had become his personal pilot as well as his bodyguard and Azlenr knew she was viciously protective of her father. She had proven this several times during skirmishes with the High Coven only two short years ago, killing nearly a dozen vampires who had broken through their defensive perimeter. Azlenr nodded his head to her as she took up position slightly behind her father.

Iweo moved around to the opposite side of the security post and motioned to the blood. “These men were taken out before they had time to register a threat.” He spoke. “The bodies were still here when I arrived General, and I had time to inspect them. The Puma Bane troops still had their weapons in their hands. One was beheaded completely; the other suffered a fatal puncturing wound directly through his face from something other than a Union Nehtes.”

“Sword.” Byka spoke softly.

“Yes General.” Iweo said.

Azlenr looked at Byka. "What?" He asked. "I thought all Union troops carried swords on their person."

Byka met his eyes evenly and shook his head. "The capability of the Union Shi Viskas combined with their advancement in standard weaponry has made it so the majority of Union soldiers no longer carry swords. It has been this way since the end of the Evolli War. Many had given up their swords by then for the more adjustable Nehtes. Their Nehtes... their expandable spear... this is part of their load out but the vast majority no longer carry swords." He looked at Iweo. "All of them were killed by blades Sergeant Master?"

Iweo nodded his head. "Yes General."

"Which means they got in close." Byka spoke.

Iweo nodded again. "Very close. I inspected some of the wounds and they were precise and surgical in nature. Whoever wielded these swords has killed before." He moved back around the security post. "None of the Puma Bane weapons or COM units are missing. If civilians did this they would have taken the weapons and rations. Whatever they could carry. Since they are all accounted for, this was done to send us a message."

Byka shook his head. "This was not done by civilians." He stated. "The Bontawillians may have what they refer to as a military but they are nothing more than a militia. Iweo is right. Whoever did this did not want weapons or equipment."

Azlenr looked at him. "Are you saying there is a Union military unit on Solmar?" He asked.

"You said Marsin's Puma Bane teams killed several soldiers. Took one prisoner?" Byka asked.

Azlenr nodded. "He is a vampire. I have him at the main settlement. The armory that is standard with Union colonies. They interrogated him, tortured him, but he gave them nothing. I am having my medical people treat his wounds before I question him myself." Azlenr moved closer to Byka. "You said the majority of Union troops no longer carry swords. Who does?"

Byka looked at him. "According to our intelligence... intelligence we got from the traitor Laustinos... the only Union units that carry swords now are the Durcunusaan and perhaps half a dozen specialized units made up mostly of their Drow elves."

Iweo stepped forward. "The Drow elves provide the bulk of their recon and scout units General Azlenr." He said. "They are formidable in battle... it is why the Prefect had their outposts in The Wilds destroyed. This was not done by the Drow however."

Azlenr and Byka looked at him. "How can you be so sure Iweo?" Azlenr asked.

Iweo motioned for them to follow him and he led them over to a small bare patch of ground within the Puma Bane perimeter. He pointed at the ground. "This is why." He stated.

All of them looked down to see the huge prints in the soft dirt and eyes went wide. Byka knelt down beside the print, his hand dwarfed by the size and three inch depth of the print. "A dragon print." He hissed softly. "Kameka?" He spat.

Azlenr watched as his daughter moved up beside him and squatted down beside the print. He looked at Byka as he stood back up. "Byka?"

Byka met his gaze. "This is what she does." He said. "I don't know what her fascination is, but she seems to have no fear of them as the rest of us do. She has studied everything we have in our databases about them these last few years. All the information we have obtained from Elear and other places."

"Truly?" Azlenr gasped at this knowledge as he watched her stand back up and turn to them.

"Based on the size and depth of the print I estimate a female dragon." Kameka told them as she came to her feet and turned to face them. "Slightly larger than normal... perhaps sixteen meters in length and just over three metric tons in weight. That size would indicate she is fully grown General... which means she is at least a decade old. Perhaps more. And she is also mated to a male."

"What? Are you sure? How can you tell that?" Azlenr asked her.

Kameka nodded. "Dragons go through stages of growth sir." She answered. "They reach full maturity within their first year. After that they are strong enough to carry a rider. Over the next decade they may or may not grow more, but usually not. Once they have passed ten years of age they will not have another potential growth cycle until they have reached a millennia in age. According to the many brochures given out on Elear in regards to the dragons, almost all of them have reached their full size within their first year. In the rare instance some may grow much larger as is the case with the Lycavorian King's dragon and the half breed Princess's dragon. Very few grow larger than the print indicates this female is and she is above normal in size by a meter and a half at least given what I estimate her weight at."

“How do you know it is female? And mated.” Azlenr asked.

Kameka turned back to the print. “Do you see the indentation in the ground behind the prints? Three meters back.”

Azlenr followed where she pointed. “Yes I see it.”

“Mated female dragons will instinctively always place their tail on the ground behind them when they stop for any length of time and are at rest.” Kameka spoke. “Male dragons do not. It is a... it is a defense mechanism I guess you could call it. This female was in this spot long enough for her to relax.”

“Fuck!” Azlenr swore as the sounds of another DAGGER landing reached them.

“Azlenr... only the Union Durcunusaan are known to work closely with dragons.” Byka told him.

“They are the only ones with sufficient ability in what they call Mindvoice to actually communicate with them.”

Iweo nodded. “If there is a dragon on this world General... then whoever hit this team is Durcunusaan.”

“Get out of my way!” Marsin’s voice carried to them as he stormed into the perimeter. Azlenr’s men stepped out of the way of the Puma Bane Commander more to avoid any sort of confrontation than fear. Byka shifted to the side slightly as Marsin came up to them, putting half his body in front of his daughter in a protective fashion that only Azlenr really noticed. Kameka he saw only stared at Marsin with something akin to savage hatred in her dark brown eyes, her bottom lip almost quivering.

“General!” Marsin popped. “Why wasn’t I informed of this attack sooner?” He demanded from the senior man, his voice holding the contempt he felt.

“We only discovered it three hours ago.” Azlenr stated ignoring the Major’s lack of respect.

“I should have been informed immediately!” Marsin snarled.

“I did not need you and your men coming here and destroying any information we might be able to obtain.” Azlenr told him. “Your men are over there.” He pointed behind him to the left. “We have covered all of them and you may make arrangements to transport them home as soon as we are done.”

Marsin glared at him. “Done?” He demanded.

“Each body will be examined by my medical people to determine cause of death.” Azlenr stated. “We need to know who killed your men Major.”

“Who?” Marsin snapped. “It’s obvious isn’t it? Those civilians who escaped as we took the settlements. They have formed into guerilla groups and are striking back!”

“This was not done by Bontawillian civilians.” Byka spoke. “This was carried out by Union Durcunusaan troops. Durcunusaan who have at least one dragon with them that we know of.”

“Durcunusaan?” Marsin snarled. “Impossible.”

“Do you know of anyone else who works closely with dragons Major?” Azlenr asked. “Lieutenant Kameka here has confirmed these prints come from a female dragon Major.”

“Lieutenant...” Marsin’s eyes went to where Byka stood and he saw Kameka standing just behind her father. His eyes gazed at her with anger and hate and met only the same thing in response. Kameka did not drop her eyes from his face as Kavalian women often did in front of males and this only made him angrier. He tore his eyes from her and looked at Azlenr. “General Azlenr... our intelligence never mentioned Durcunusaan being on Solmar.”

“It appears our intelligence was wrong.” Azlenr said.

“We should begin interrogating the civilians!” Marsin snapped. “They had to know about this!”

Azlenr shook his head. “I am not going to interrogate civilians Major.” He stated. “If we did not know they were here what makes you think a bunch of colonists did.”

“General you...” Marsin began to speak but Azlenr turned from him. “Makali... insure the bodies are removed to the Field Hospital. I want the senior medical doctor to examine them. I will meet with him in two hours.”

Makali nodded. “At once General.” He spoke before moving off.

Azlenr turned back to the others. “Byka... I want every T19 we have mustered and on the perimeters of every settlement. Just one dragon on this planet could adversely affect our men if it attacked.”

“How many civilians will you execute for this attack?” Marsin demanded.

Azlenr and Byka looked at him. “Excuse me?” Azlenr spoke.

“We must send a message to the civilians and whoever is out there!” Marsin spat. “Any attack against our troops will be punished severely. It is the only way to keep order!”

“I have no intention of executing any civilians Major.” Azlenr told him. “They were not involved in this.”

“They will know of those who are!” Marsin argued. “Do you think they don’t know a Union military unit is out there somewhere? This will continue General! This is how we keep the others in line!”

“By murdering civilians?” Byka spat. “That is a brilliant move Major!”

Azlenr shook his head. “There is no indication the civilians who escaped the settlements as we occupied them are involved in this attack. None. I will not execute others to keep order Major.”

“I will protest this!” Marsin growled.

“Protest it all you like!” Azlenr spat back. “I am in command of this operation... not you Major Marsin! Return to your command and I will inform you when you can retrieve the bodies of your men! You are dismissed!”

Marsin snarled in anger before spinning on his heels and marching away. Byka moved closer to Azlenr. “He will contact the Prefect.” He said.

“Let him.” Azlenr hissed. “The Prefect put me in charge of this operation because he knows this close to the border we need to be careful and precise. Marsin is a vicious animal, a shock trooper. Nothing more. He knows nothing but how to kill those who cannot defend themselves. The Bontawillians are no threat to our people. Whoever is out there is a threat.” He looked at Byka. “I want your scouts ranging out ten kilometers in every direction from each settlement. Full combat gear and make sure they have adequate armor support. We must find these Durcunusaan before they strike again.”

Byka nodded. “As you order.”

Azlenr nodded. “Issue your orders and then meet me back at my command post. I have some things I wish to discuss.”

“One hour.” He said.

Azlenr nodded and began to walk away.

Byka moved forward into the cockpit of the DAGGER Transport and motioned with his head at the male co-pilot. The Kavalian pilot got up quickly and moved around the bulk of his commanding General as Byka settled into the seat and looked across at his daughter who was adjusting one control or another.

“Kameka?” He spoke softly unsure of what to say.

Byka’Caleo was a very traditional Kavalian except when it came to his daughter. His three sons served proudly within his Pride’s Division of troops, each leading battalions of cloned and normal Kavalian troops. They were well thought of by their men because like their father, they did not needlessly throw away lives to accomplish a mission. He also knew that they each had secretly schooled their younger sister in things that she was not allowed to know because like their father, they cared for her. Byka’Caleo was among the many senior Pride Leaders who accepted the laws of their people but did not necessarily agree with them. He had been mated to the same woman for nearly seven centuries now and she had given him five strong children. His oldest son he had lost in a transport crash before Kameka had ever been born while Kameka was the image of her mother with her exotic, sultry looks and her large dark eyes, she reminded him of his oldest son in many ways.

What many people who were not Kavalian didn’t know was that they were not always as callous and violent. At least not those who were over five hundred years of age and could recall their lives before Keleru had begun to implement so many changes. They remembered a time when it was better. Yes... their females were considered second class citizens, but not every male Kavalian felt this way. Many were different men behind the doors of their homes with their women and most of those same men hated having to hide it because of the ones who embraced Keleru’s ideals and laws. Byka felt as Azlenr did. The core of the Kavalian people was beginning to fracture. First Athani’Puat defecting and finding a future with a Prince of the Union. Then Pian’Nruarani had truly begun it by stealing away Keleru’s daughter from Pusintin and then his entire Pride disappearing into the unknown. They had cracked the center and as more time passed without change, Byka believed it would all come crumbling down.

“Did you know he would be on this operation Papa?” Kameka asked as she turned to look at him.

Byka let out a heavy sigh and nodded. He would not lie to her, not after all she had suffered and endured. “Yes. I did not think you would ever need to see him and that is why I did not tell you. What happened today was not something we were prepared for.”

“I... I want to skin him papa.” Kameka said softly. “I want to cut his cock from his body and make him suffer as much as he made me suffer.”

Byka looked at her, seeing the fire in her eyes. “You can not!” He hissed. “He deserves whatever horrors you would inflict upon him Meka...” He spoke referring to the nickname he had given to her as a child. “But I could not protect you then! I do not wish to lose you Meka! Your mother does not wish to lose you!”

Kameka leaned forward and placed her head against the instrument panel gently. “I... I will never know what mother shares with you Papa. You show her tenderness and love that our younger generation does not understand. No man wants me because of what he did to me. They can’t even stand to look at me Papa.”

“Meka...” Byka spoke.

She looked at him. “All of them want to fuck me!” She snarled. “But none of them will even consider me as something more than a whore. This is the word that Marsin has put out! This is what he tells everyone who will listen! This is the curse I have!”

“Kill him... kill him Meka and he wins.” Byka told her. She turned to look at him. “If you kill him... then I can not protect you. You will throw away everything that you have gained from the horrors he perpetrated upon you. His day of reckoning will come daughter... he will answer for his crimes... but it will be all the sweeter for you when that day comes if it is you who is still standing at the end.”

Kameka stared at her father’s face, his dark fur smooth and well groomed. He had always been handsome to her and the look in his eyes had always been able to sooth her. A small smile played across her lips. “Mother always said you were handsome Papa.” She said softly.

Byka chuckled softly then. “Your mother settled for my ugly hide.” He stated. “Had she held out for another...?” Byka looked at her and took her hand. “Your mother deserves more Meka. You deserve more. I will give you more daughter. And you will have your vengeance. All I ask is that you remain patient.”

Kameka nodded slowly. “I have always trusted you Papa.” She said. “That will not change now. Never.”

Byka nodded and rose from the seat. “I have sent the orders to the men. Take us to Azlenr’s command post Meka.”

Kameka nodded as he moved into the back of the DAGGER and she immediately began her preflight sequence. She believe her father, believed him deep down, but she would also have her vengeance one day and she prayed every day that she would find a man who could look past her disfigurement and allow her to know love.

SOLMAR

UNION AD-HOC BASE

SOUTHERN CONTINENT

0635 HRS, EST

“...ready to pull out at a moment’s notice.” Andro was speaking to the others at the makeshift command post inside his STRIKER. “We have to assume they could find us before Sa’sur returns with the reinforcements and I want three backup sites marked and distributed to everyone in case we get scattered.”

Sa’roh nodded her head. “I will see to that.” She said. “I am almost finished mapping the entire planet using remote signals from the satellites and current maps of the colony.”

Andro nodded. “The OP last night went off perfectly. Dorian and Haridl were able to get into the armory and speak with Robaran.” Andro looked up as Cletus led another Durcunusaan troop forward. “Cletus?”

“Phylearch Daeo Milord.” Cletus answered motioning to the tall and powerfully built Durcunusaan troop. “He was off duty when we departed and he came down with the Spartan company. I have assigned him as your personal guard until Jomann arrives. It is his first trip out since completing his Durcunusaan training.”

“A wet nose.” Dantio spoke with a grin.

“Not so wet Dantio.” Cletus was quick to point out. “Alba Tau, Seventh Spartan Recon Brigade. Sixteen missions... three decorations for valor and two for injuries received. He may be young... but he has done his time.”

Dantio looked at the young man once more and nodded his head slowly. Alba Tau had become the measure of a modern Lycavorian Spartan. The Evolli War was five years long, but the battle at Alba Tau had involved nearly a full third of the Union’s ground forces during that war and the Evolli had made it hell for anyone on that foul planet. Over half the Union ground casualties from the entire war had come during that four month long battle on that cesspool, and no one had come away without scars. The Evolli had laid every trap known to exist in order to kill them; they had ambushed the Union forces at every turn, the heat and humidity making it virtually impossible to detect scents unless they were incredibly strong. Everyone knew of Andro and his father and what they had done at the beginning of that encounter and not one single Lycavorian Spartan had shrunk from battle after that day. Many had even visited the site of that one battle to draw their inspiration from it. It had been left untouched after the bodies and the survivors had been taken away, but it was as if every soldier who went there could visualize each and every charge the Evolli made. They could almost see the blood as it was spilled, feel the blows of weapons and the burning of Evolli as the dragons fought. The Evolli had thrown nearly seven thousand men at their position throughout the night, another three thousand at the position that General Simpson and his son had held only six hundred meters away. It was said that the screams of the dying could be heard for hundreds of meters across the valley floor that night.

There had been many battles over the course of the four months it took for Union forces to dig the Evolli out of their holes, but that holding action by Andro and Martin Leonidas, by General Simpson and a few others, that had set the stage for the rest of the fight. No quarter was shown or given to the Evolli, and when all was said and done, Alba Tau had broken the backs of the Evolli war effort. Very few men and women who had fought on that planet returned, even after a monument to those who fell was officially erected. No matter their reasoning behind it, no one who had fought at Alba Tau had come away the same person as they were when it had begun and the vast majority of them were Andro’s age or slightly older. This had formed a bond with the millions of older Spartans across the Union who had fought the High Coven for so long. A bond of understanding and camaraderie that would never be broken. Those who had graduated from their Agoges and entered into service since that battle could not understand why no one spoke of that place.

The men and women who fought there had left too many of their friends on that planet and all of them had left a piece of themselves there as well.

“Avoi. Aladore camerra jar Fervon rie vada Saan.” Dantio spoke instantly moving to the side in order for Daeo to move up beside him. (Amen. Welcome among us Brother of the Blood)

Andro looked at the young man and nodded his head slowly. Daeo appeared to be about his age, perhaps a year or two younger, but his rank also spoke of skill enough to reach it so young. No rank within the Union military was easy to get and while he held the rank of Admiral, Andro had worked hard and relentlessly to insure that he did everything he could to prove he deserved that rank. Daeo was easily as tall as his Uncle Danny’s six foot four and equally as ripped as any Spartan under his new Mark V ArmorPly body armor. His exposed skin was a light caramel color, his hair nothing more than dark stubble on his head. He sported a rough growth of a beard and mustache since facial hair was allowed and sometimes even expected within the Union, but his dark eyes were bright and full of intelligence. He looked at Androcles.

“Milord Prince.” He stated proudly.

Andro held up his hand and wagged his finger. “None of that sibfla.” He stated firmly. “Alba Tau earned you the right to call me by my name.”

Daeo looked quickly at Cletus and then Dantio. Both men nodded and Cletus moved up on his opposite side. “You will see Daeo. Operating with Andro is more than unusual in many respects. Wait until Jomann arrives. Then we will see some real action.”

Dorian chuckled. “Unusual and insane.” He stated. “But who’s keeping track of silly things like that?”

That brought chuckles from everyone and Andro elbowed his brother in the gut before looking at Haridl. Dantio grinned. “And it is rubbing off on Dorian as well.” He stated.

“Continue Haridl.” Andro said shaking his head with a smile.

Haridl leaned forward. “Puma Bane troops had him before he was turned over to this Kavalian General. He was severely beaten by those nubous butchers but the Kavalians at the armory have treated his wounds as best as they were able. I slipped him a vial of my blood to speed the process. Not enough to fully heal him outwardly, but enough to repair anything inside. They will believe it is just his own healing factor. We have two names now. A General Azlenr'Macoe and General Byka'Caleo."

"Your blood?" Andro asked her though he already suspected the answer as the reason Haridl had been acting as she had.

Haridl met his eyes without any embarrassment in the least. "He has... he has taken my blood before Milord." She said.

Andro nodded as her words confirmed what he already knew. "Very well."

Sa'roh's hands moved across the chart table and the pictures of the two men came up so they all could see. "Both of these men are senior Kavalian Generals Andro. This General Azlenr is apparently in overall command if what Robaran told Haridl is accurate and this General Byka commands his front line division."

"Composition?" Andro asked.

"They are mainly a Hover Mech Division." Sa'roh replied. "Our jacket on these men is very thick. They were responsible for more victories against the High Coven on the ground than any other Kavalian officers. And they did it without suffering the same amount of casualties." She adjusted the images to include several more. "Byka'Caleo commands his lead division; the second one is commanded by a relatively new officer but one loyal to Azlenr'Macoe. The third is primarily support and is commanded by Azlenr's oldest son. A much higher mix of Kavalian clone troops and pure Kavalian officers than other mainstream Kavalian divisions too. There does not seem to be any difference in how this Azlenr and Byka treat the clones, unlike most other Kavalian units."

"So these men don't use them for cannon fodder Sa'roh?" Vari asked.

Sa'roh shook her head. "Not if our Intel is accurate." She answered. "Their two Prides have been working together for the better part of five hundred years near as we can determine. The Krypteria believes they are very close friends and have many of the same ideals." She looked at Andro. "They are two of the more moderate Kavalians in their beliefs."

Andro nodded his head. "Their actions make sense then. This close to the border they don't want to make many waves. I imagine they wanted nothing more than to get in quiet and unseen. The civilians?"

Haridl shook her head. "They had nothing to do with that." She stated quickly. "Robaran heard the Kavalian troops talking in the armory. Apparently the Puma Bane Commander is the one who ordered that. This pleasant gentlemen." She adjusted the chart table to include another photo. "Major Marsin'Jiate. A real Prince... pardon the pun. According to information given to us by General Pian on Puma Bane officers before he left... this Marsin is a violent and cold ronnus. Likes to kill and has no qualms about having civilians murdered."

Dantio grinned. "Then he's bound to be upset about finding so many of his boys dead this fine morning." He said.

Andro smiled. "I just bet he is." He said. "What about their armor?"

Sa'roh adjusted the screen once more. "Aside from the Scout Cars you saw earlier, it appears they are keeping their armor at the northern settlement. If the satellite feed is accurate I estimate two brigades of T12 CHAOS Tanks with a full battery of their R9 Plasma Artillery per brigade."

"Seems kind of short for taking a planet?" Cletus said.

"A Bontawillian colony." Daeo spoke for the first time. "They will not land their full load out for such an operation. The Bontawillians may like to call their forces an army and a fleet but they are truly no more than Border militia... albeit well trained border militia."

Andro nodded. "Daeo is right. Which means the rest of their tanks and such are still in orbit. Probably prepped for landing should they need them?"

Dantio nodded. "That's a good bet." He said.

"Sa'roh... burst Sa'sur a coded message." Andro said. "I want the Kavalian troop ships and the DIATAGAs targeted and destroyed first when they jump back in. The DIATAGAs won't get near the planet so they must be carrying the remainder of the armor."

Sa'roh nodded. "Done."

"I dispatched teams to each settlement while we were gone last night." Andro said. "They are to provide forward recon of the area and my orders were to exfil if the Kavalians got too close. They don't seem to be interested in moving out of their areas to the rest of the planet so we should be safe here for the time being."

“They won’t stay like that Andro.” Cletus spoke. “Not after we hit the second Puma Bane site tonight.”

Andro nodded. “I know... but between the STRIKERS and KADENS sensors, we’ll have plenty of warning if they get too close to us here.” He held up his hand before any of them spoke. “To be safe... the three topside mounts on the STRIKERS have been converted to ground to air missiles. Sa'roh also had heavy guns set up on top of the KADENS. Unless they come at us in force we’ll be fine.”

“Robaran said that quite a large number of civilians managed to get out of the settlements before the Kavs got full control.” Haridl told them. “Should we try and make contact with them Andro?”

“Eight three person teams have already departed with pre-plotted areas to sweep.” Andro answered instantly. “Sa'roh arranged for one of the KADENS to put each of them down within ten kilometers of the settlements. Their orders are to avoid contact and search for any civilians that got out. If they find some... move to a PZ and call for pick up. Bring them here. I don’t want them wandering around out there stumbling all over and possibly getting us caught with our dicks in our hands as my father says.” Andro looked at Sa'roh his face turning slightly red. “Sorry.”

Sa'roh and Haridl laughed. “While the image of you holding your dick in your hand is quite appealing Milord...” Sa'roh spoke with a wicked twinkle in her eye. “I don’t think Sadi or the others would appreciate it.”

Andro laughed. “No they would not.” He answered.

“And I have seen these characters with their dicks in their hands Andro.” Haridl added. “I wasn't impressed.”

“That’s not what Robaran said.” Vari exclaimed.

Haridl looked at him with a grin. “I wasn’t speaking about him you fool. He is very nicely equipped thank you.”

Andro shook his head. “Alright.” He said ending the banter back and forth. “Sa'roh... impress upon our people the need for them to remain below three hundred feet. They may be Shrouded... but there is no reason to give the Kavalians any hiccups on their sensors that could let them know we are coming.”

“They are aware... but I will remind them.” She stated.

“Any idea on where this ronnus is?” Andro asked tapping on the screen to Marsin’s photo.

“The main Puma Base detachment seems to be within the western settlement near the spaceport.” Sa'roh answered pointing at the map. “Here.”

“He doesn’t strike me as someone who would be at one of the camps.” Dantio spoke.

“So he leads like most Kavalians.” Daeo said. “From the rear with the gear.” Andro looked at him with wide eyes and laughed. Daeo grinned now and shrugged. “I was born and raised in Sparta Milord. Your father’s and General Simpson’s euphuisms are well known as you know.”

“Where?” Andro asked him.

“Half a kilometer from The Acropolis sire.” Daeo answered.

Dantio mocked rolling his eyes. “Son vada carians... your kind is popping up all over the place!” He spat playfully.

Daeo smiled. “The pace in Sparta is much slower Dantio. Our parents have more time to make babies.”

Dantio looked at him. “They need to start making them prettier.” He said with a grin. “You ain’t exactly Casanova boy.”

Daeo looked at him confused. “Casanova? Who is this Casanova?”

This caused everyone to break out laughing and Dantio slammed his hand down on Daeo’s shoulder. “Let me educate you boy.” He said.

Haridl pulled back from the table. “Oh boy. Here we go.” She stated. “It’s like the blind leading the blind.”

ARC ROYAL
FEBRUARY 4TH, 0700 EST
THREE HOURS POST JUMP NINETEEN

“AHHHHHHHH! Marrtinnnn!”

Anja's cry of orgasmic delight echoed among the walls of their bedroom and her head dropped to Dysea's heaving abdomen as Martin's powerful aura swarmed around them and his hot seed filled her womb. Her teeth clenched together and she gripped Dysea's hands as the third staggering orgasm this morning coursed through her unchecked and she quivered in bliss. Martin's large hands were filled with her breasts, his face buried in the back of her neck as he pressed his hips tightly against her ass cheeks, keeping his throbbing organ buried within her. She felt his powerful body begin to collapse onto her back, his huge manhood deeply buried within her, emptying his essence into her womb.

Isabella and Cirith had taken Aricia with them to Muton's ship to have her show them certain skills within Mindvoice that would be able to assist them. For'mya had met with Endith and Tina early to tweak the flight schedule, leaving just Anja and Dysea in bed with Martin when they woke. Neither Anja or Dysea had expected anything to happen after a glorious previous night, but after over twenty-five years together they should have known better. His growl of desire was their first sign and then Dysea succumb to his attentions without so much as a whimper of reluctance. Not that she really wanted to not be on the receiving end of her Nauta Melme's wonderful touch.

Then it had been Anja's turn as Martin mounted her from behind as she so loved and she feasted on her beautiful elven lover as Martin pounded her from behind. He knew it was her weakness and she never lasted long when he took her in that way. He reached so far inside her petite body in this position that it overwhelmed her senses very quickly. This morning was no different as her head dropped to Dysea's abdomen and she shuddered within the grasps of an amazing multiple orgasm. As he finally lowered himself to her back Anja licked Dysea's sweetness from her lips and she cooed in unabashed delight. Dysea's fingers were wrapped within Anja's Persian red hair and her breathing was labored from Anja's divine attentions. Anja knew just how to set Dysea off in such a way that she would leave her weak kneed and wanting more of her long Hadarian tongue. And Dysea always collected. They had gotten much closer on this trip, back to how they were when it was just the two of them with Martin before Aricia joined them. Those were some amazing nights together and they thoroughly enjoyed reliving them.

As Martin's lips nuzzled the back of her ear and her neck sending tremors of delight racing through her, his cock still maddeningly hard within her, Anja shivered in wondrous happiness. She lifted her head, leaving a trail of butterfly kisses across Dysea's powerful and exceedingly moist lower abdomen as she did, and turned her head slightly to the side to look at Martin.

"Gods... you are an insatiable pig!" She hissed the words. "You... you know I can't resist when you take me like that!"

Martin chuckled behind her ear and used his hips to push her forward. Not only did it serve to cause Anja to gasp in residual delight as she felt him still deeply inside her, she slid up further on Dysea's body until she was sandwiched between her much taller lovers.

"But you love me don't me?" Martin whispered in her ear as his fangs nibbled on her ear lobe.

Anja couldn't help but lean in to the nibble with ardor. "Carians yes!" She gasped as Dysea watched her face twist into idyllic enchantment and Martin took her chin in his hand leaning his head over to the side to catch her soft lips in a breath stealing kiss, tasting Dysea on Anja's lips and deepening their kiss even further.

Dysea also felt the power of her Nauta Melme's aura as he encircled both of them with it. He had not shielded any portion of his aura from them since Curila 6, all of them feeling every ounce of the alpha he was. It was almost too much for Anja, For'mya and Cirith to endure but he always wrapped their minds within a unique cocoon that allowed them to keep their wits about them and experience the full power of his aura on them. Now they all could feel what only she and Aricia had been able to feel for so long and it had only brought them that much closer together. As their lips parted and Martin's changed eyes fell on her, Dysea knew what was coming. He leaned even further forward and captured Dysea's lips in a similar sizzling kiss, one hand slipping under the back of her neck to hold her head and bring her closer to him as Anja's fingers stroked the outsides of her breasts.

Anja groaned in disappointment as Martin shifted his body to the side so as not to bury her under his muscular bulk and his now softening cock slipped from inside her. That groan turned to a moan as she felt him draw her close against his chest and rest half his body on the bed while the other half remained on her and Dysea. Anja was still somewhat pinned, but she could stay like this forever for all she cared.

"Gods lover... you are wearing us out." Anja stammered.

“Just think Melyanna... this is what our retirement will be like.” Dysea spoke playfully.

“You will be my hobby.” Martin spoke as he kissed Anja’s shoulder softly.

“Your hobby?” Anja gasped in mock indignation. Martin chuckled and nuzzled the back of her ear firmly. “Ooohhhhhh! Stop that!”

“My hobby will be one hundred and one ways to turn you to jelly.” Martin whispered in her ear before nibbling it.

Anja couldn’t help the tremble that rippled through her and she smiled in enjoyment. “Well... when you... when you put it that way.” She stuttered.

Dysea laughed and slid a little lower on the bed bringing her face to Anja’s and kissing her. “I for one can not wait for that day to come.” She gasped as she broke the kiss.

“Yum. Yum.” Martin tickled her cheek with his nose and Anja burst out laughing now.

“Christ Marty... where did the yum yum thing come from.” Anja blurted out. “You’ll need to come up with something better than that to get into my panties.”

Martin grinned. “Ok... how bout this?” He hit her with a half power pulse of his aura and Anja hissed in wondrous abandon.

“Ahhh! You... you are so evil.” She exclaimed with a smile.

The COM unit on their bedside buzzed drawing all of them from their reverie and Dysea reached back with her hand to touch the console. “Audio only.” She spoke. “Receive.”

“Anja?” Duewa’s voice filled their room. “Anja are you there?”

Anja sighed and lifted her face from Dysea’s abdomen. “I’m... I’m here Duewa.” She answered. Martin leaned over and nibbled her ear again and Anja slapped at his hip with her hand. “Stop that!” She gasped.

Dysea couldn’t help but let the small laugh escape and they all heard Duewa snicker in a knowing way. “When you... when you can pull yourself away Anja... there is something you need to see in the Med Bay.” She spoke with some humor in her voice. “And you can bring Martin with you as well.”

“I’ll be down in...” Anja felt Martin inch closer and his hands reached around to cup her full breasts. “Marty... for fuck’s sake you need too...” Martin rolled her over more quickly than Anja was prepared for and covered her protesting lips with his own as Dysea laughed once more. “Mmmmmppppfff!” Anja’s dissent was quickly smothered.

Dysea’s emerald eyes sparkled as Anja melted into the kiss. “Duewa... we will be down in thirty minutes.” She spoke.

Dysea heard Duewa laugh very quietly on the COM for she had experienced with Thoti exactly what Anja was experiencing, only about an hour earlier this morning. “Thirty minutes is fine Dysea. Just make sure she gets here.” She answered. “I’ll be waiting.”

As the COM signal blinked out Dysea quickly scooted closer and leaned close to their kissing lips and she groaned in happiness as Martin’s lips left Anja’s and caught hers. And then they were all somehow sharing their tongues in a threesome kiss that managed to make them laugh at the awkwardness of it.

Martin’s arms pulled both of them tighter and he rested his head on Anja’s breasts as he tucked Dysea’s face to his neck and Anja tried to wrapped her arms around both of them. They would lay like that for ten minutes before rising and preparing to begin their day.

Duewa turned in her chair exactly thirty-seven minutes later as the door to the Med Bay opened and Anja and Dysea both jumped through the doorway slapping Martin’s hands away while holding mugs of coffee and tea in their hands. Duewa grinned as Martin came in holding his own mug of coffee, his dark eyes bright. Duewa had been studying with Thoti every free moment about being able to catalogue scents and file them to her memory. Even though she could detect the scent of soap and water, she still was able to pick up the unmistakable aroma of sex still embedded in their scents and their blood. She smiled to herself, for it had been a very active night for her and Thoti as well. While they missed their sons terribly, having just the two of them together on this trip had been a godsend for Duewa. She was learning and growing as a female wolf and to say she was happier than she had ever been would be an understatement. Their walk from the mess lounge must have been quite the entertainment for the crew as they witnessed their playful antics.

“Yum. Yum.” Duewa heard Martin whisper softly as they approached.

Anja shook her head. “Gostin!” She hissed as she looked at Duewa.

“Malda.” Dysea agreed now.

“More like totally off his rocker.” Anja commented and then she smiled at Duewa. “Good morning.” She said stepping forward and kissing Duewa’s cheek.

“Good morning.” Duewa spoke with a smile. “I see it is contagious this morning.” She said. “I practically had to beat Thoti away to get out the door of our quarters.” A few months ago Duewa would never have commented on her sex life or her husband to anyone, let alone in public. Since being turned however, Duewa had come to accept the openness of Lycavorian sexuality. It was part of their culture, part of who they were and Duewa found herself beginning to enjoy that new part of herself.

Dysea leaned over and kissed her cheek as well. “It must be an Alpha thing today.” She said with a grin.

Martin moved behind Dysea and let his fingers craze her perfect ass causing her to jump in surprise. “Maybe.” He stated as he leaned over and kissed Duewa’s cheek as well. “Good morning Duewa.”

“Martin.” She said with that ever present smile.

Anja leaned against the desk and looked at her. Duewa was a woman that not so long ago she couldn’t stand. At one point she hated her for what she had done. That all changed the day Duewa saved the lives of Retta and Calyb and kept them from being kidnapped by Duewa’s mother Buonau. The day she became wolf and entered into a world that she had fallen in love with. It was kind of hard to hate her then, and over the past weeks they had become very good friends. It was always wonderful to have someone around who could understand what you were saying, and Duewa could talk shop with Anja on her best day. Though she did not have Anja’s raw power or the ability to draw from the life around her to use her healing abilities, she was probably within the top ten of Hadarian Healers within the Union now and free of her mother’s manipulation Duewa had come into her own.

“What’s up?” Anja asked her.

“I think we may have a problem.” Duewa said as she came to her feet.

Anja perked up now as she watched Duewa moved to one medical computer and take a data pad from the desk. “A problem concerning?” She asked.

Duewa came back over to her and held out the data pad. “A problem concerning our dead guests.” Duewa answered.

“What about them?” Anja asked.

“One of them is not so dead anymore.” Duewa stated.

Martin now came to full attention. “Come again?”

Duewa motioned with her hand and led them into another section of the ARC ROYAL’s Med Bay that was used for Research. There were two small but secure, floor to ceiling rooms with thick and very unbreakable polyglass that could be raised and lowered. Both of them were lit up with the bodies of the creatures on the beds, each one covered by a single sheet and one of the rooms with the polyglass up and locked into place. This body also was not covered completely by the sheet.

“Remember I told you I was going to run a Electrosanitizer Screening and then filter that through the DNA micro analyzer.” Duewa said to Anja. “Well... I did that. I set it up to run last night and this is what came back this morning. That’s also why our guest is now in there and not the freezer.”

Anja’s eyes were wide as she looked at the pad. “Nubous Lae!” She exclaimed.

Duewa nodded her head. “Almost exactly what I said. Thoti thought I had gone crazy when he heard me say it.”

“Someone want to let us less intelligent medical individuals in on the secret?” Martin said as he sipped his coffee. “Meaning me of course Melda Min.”

Dysea smiled. “I have no idea what they just said either Nauta Melme.” She stated.

Anja turned to look at the creature. “It’s regenerating Marty!” She gasped. “It’s still alive and it’s regenerating!”

Marti turned his head to the side and began coughing as his coffee went down the wrong tube and he came to his feet. “What?” He managed to spit out as he wiped his mouth. “That thing is still alive?”

“It is in a very deep coma... but yes.” Duewa said.

“Duewa... we put seven holes in that thing point blank!” Martin nearly shouted. He glanced at Anja. “I told you to let me cut their heads off!”

Duewa nodded and moved in front of the polyglass turning back to look at him. “Yes you did Martin. However... I also discovered that this creature’s outward appearance is not its natural form.”

“Come again?” Martin asked.

“Mutative Meiosis!” Anja spoke in a hushed voice.

Duewa nodded. “Yes. On a molecular level.” She continued. “This creature’s entire base DNA structure has been rewritten Anja. The Micro Analyzer detected seven thousand different chromatins and signs of homologous recombination.”

Martin shook his head. “Homo what?” He spat.

Anja looked at her. “You are certain Duewa? You confirmed the data?” Anja shook her head. “That was a stupid question. Of course you confirmed it.” She stated. “What about Allele count? Mutagen detection?”

“Whatever it is... it is not airborne or active for that matter.” She spoke. “It’s a contact mutagen from what I can tell... and it ceased to be effective the moment this one was killed and this one’s body shut down. We are in no danger.”

“Hello!” Martin barked. “Lost. Hanging out here in left field with no idea what you are talking about! Help!”

Anja turned to look at him. “Duewa is saying that this creature used to be something else lover. A different... a different species.”

Martin turned and looked at the creature through the glass. “What species?” He asked.

Duewa shook her head. “That is something we will probably never know. We don’t have any base genetic material to go by to compare it.” She glanced through the polyglass again before turning back to him. “It doesn’t match anything in the ship’s database and nothing that I have ever seen.”

Anja was paging down on the data pad and nodded. “Nothing like I’ve ever seen before either.”

“There’s something else Anja. Two things really.” Duewa said. “I ran the same baseline on the creature that is still dead. You are not going to believe what I found.”

Anja looked up at her tone of voice. “We aren’t going to like this are we?” She said.

Duewa shook her head. “Probably not.” She answered. She moved to the second small room that held the second body. “If my tests are accurate...” She turned back around to face Martin and the others. “This disgusting thing here... it has the same basic chromatin structure as a Lycavorian.” She saw Martin’s eyes go wide. “And I’ve detected base Pralor genetic code in its cells as well.”

Iama’Juturi kept glancing up at the men and women moving through the mess line, her light green eyes searching for only one individual. Four days had passed since the incident on Twelve Alpha, and still the words echoed within her. It was not something she had heard in regards to her ever in her life. Her Pride had given her away with barely a pause, her family disowning her when the biogenic treatments did not fully succeed and she was left with her tail. They did not even try to keep her from being tossed away so callously and sent to Nefoa as a whore for the soldiers there. Iama had seen the true beast within her people then and instead of breaking her as it did so many other Kavalian females, it changed her. It made her hardened to events around her. She was willing to do anything sexually to get off Nefoa in the hopes of making an escape, and she had succeeded after a fashion. The Lycavorian King’s attack on the outpost she had been sent to was a blessing from the gods that Iama thought had abandoned her. She now had what she had always desired. Freedom and a future. Even in just the few short weeks she had been among these Lycavorians she discovered her skills were very well received when it came to managing and cooking the meals they ate. No soldier, no matter the species, could deny they wanted good food to eat while deployed. It was a natural thing. What her mother had taught her was now paying dividends that she had never imagined. That she was actually using a skill she loved and in charge of the entire operation on a Lycavorian ship was beyond anything she could have dreamed. The entire crew of the ARC ROYAL were more than friendly to her in every way, treating her not as an enemy but as ally and to a number of elven and Lycavorian females she was fast becoming a friend. This treatment was not something she had expected at first, at least not until she had been among them for several weeks and came to realize they were nothing like what her people thought.

There were many handsome Lycavorian men on this ship and despite her background, which was not secret unfortunately; all of them had treated her with respect. Iama recognized the many lustful stares she sometimes got but the many rumors she had heard about how Lycavorians treated their females were all true. While the male crewmembers had given her enticing looks and coy words, none of them had pressed her very far to pursue something. Iama knew that while they found her attractive, and they knew her history, her tail gave them pause. Most of them anyway. There were several who did not seem to care about her meter and a half long tail and since the events on Twelve Alpha, Iama noticed they were becoming less reserved around her. She was a woman and she knew when a man wanted her and though Iama wanted to, she held back. She had no intention of becoming the ship's resident slut though she doubted that is what would happen on this ship. The next man who took her into his bed was the man she would remain with for the remainder of her life. The man that would be the father of her children and the man who would love her breathless every day. Iama was not stupid in any way, and she knew without question she wanted the boy/prince. Not because of his actions on Twelve Alpha in saving her life, but because her body reacted just being close to him. The manner of his birth and upbringing gave her pause however. She feared he would be like the many clone soldiers she had to endure on Nefoa. A child in the body of a man with no presence of mind at what he was doing aside from killing and trying to fuck her harder and longer than the last clone.

He hadn't eaten in the main mess lounge since the mission, avoiding her at every turn after she had called him a stupid child for his actions, even as he returned her lost data pad to her. He had saved her life and she had berated him in front of others, embarrassing him. He had been born using the Kavalian accelerated growth hormones and Iama had seen the results of their work. The majority of the Cloned soldiers she had been forced to bed with were nothing more than rutting animals with the minds of children. They looked at her with nothing more than lust in their eyes and they were less than gentle at times. She had expected him to be the same and given her new freedom she was not about to accept his lewd stares or actions. The only problem with that was he did not look at her with feral lust in his dark eyes, nor did he treat her as an object. From the first time she had seen him on Twelve Alpha and discovered who he was Iama had wrongly assumed he was the same.

You are not worth losing over some data pad!

He had spoken those words to her just after placing himself in extreme danger to save her from those disgusting creatures. He had not hesitated for even an instant and the look in his dark eyes as he protected her was something that Iama had never seen in a man's eyes before. For a fleeting moment, Iama had actually felt wanted and special. That look remained even after they returned to the ship, but seconds after she berated him when he returned her pad, it was gone. Iama didn't truly understand the concept of Mindvoicing, or how someone could be bonded to a dragon with their minds. She had not experienced it until coming to be among the King and the others. She watched them with their dragons and how they acted. They regarded them as family and dear friends and she could now tell when they were speaking to them within that realm she didn't understand. Being among them for this time had all but erased the inbred fear she had for them, but she did not go out of her way to be near them either.

Iama glanced up and her eyes opened wider as several bodies shifted out of her line of sight and she saw him. He was sitting at a table within the lounge near the door with his sister and the huge Kavalian she knew was his sister's husband and mate now. Their union had been the talk of the ship before Twelve Alpha, and for the last three nights she had had to listen as her friends kept discussing Fedor Leonidas and what they would do to him in bed. She was silent and only replied when asked a direct question about him, but knowing that so many females also desired him made her very sad and very jealous. Iama blinked several times not understanding how he had passed her in the line and she had not seen him. Then she realized that his sister and Miseo must have gotten him a tray of food when they went through earlier. Iama stared at him from across the large room. He was reading from a data pad as he shoveled forkfuls of eggs and sliced meat into his mouth, Eirene and Miseo sitting beside him and whispering to one another as they shared a mug of coffee. He was sitting sideways to her and Iama could see he wore standard gray fleet fatigue pants and a dark gray t-shirt that conformed to his upper body like a second skin. She could just make out the bottom of the tattoo on his upper right arm and Iama blinked wondering what it looked like. Holstered to his right thigh was a K12 KM. It was the first time she had seen him in four days and Iama felt her heart flutter ever so slightly. Iama could not deny that he was gorgeous in every way, even more handsome than the Lycavorian men who had shown an interest in her, but he was still just like the cloned soldiers who had undergone the same type of accelerated growth. His mind was still that of a child's. Wasn't it? Julie had said they were no longer children... and though she didn't really understand why, Iama wanted to know if that was true.

Fedor paged down on his pad as he stuffed another mouthful of eggs and the delicious sliced meat into his mouth and began to chew. His personal pad was almost an exact duplicate of his MedwanGai's pad. It was of Pralor design, nearly fifty more of the unique pads being discovered on SPARTA'S WRATH. His father had begun calling it a P1 and that designation had stuck with his mothers and the others of his family. Only seven were active outside his family to include his Uncle Danny. Andro had sent twenty of them to the ARC ROYAL in the last supply shipment before they had left the Alpha Quadrant. He and Eirene were still learning to use them because they were so much more advanced and could do so much more than a normal data pad. They were encoded to each individual user and no one else could access the information on them without authorization from the primary user in the form of a biometric scan of additional users added to its core data base. At the moment Fedor was accessing additional files added to the P1 by the Avatar Avi and his counterpart 341 before shipping them to the ARC ROYAL. His father had told Eirene and him of the hulking Avi and all he had learned from him through the years and Fedor wanted to meet him.

Fedor had shown an incredible aptitude for engineering and building while Eirene had been blessed with inherent skills in piloting that no doubt came from their mother. The Chief Engineer of the ARC ROYAL, a grizzled and weathered human of nearly seventy years of age, had been allowing Fedor to poke around the ARC ROYAL's engine design. The man knew a gifted engineer when he saw one and he had complemented Fedor many times on his ideas and encouraged him to continue in the field. Fedor had every intention of doing just that for he knew that they would not always be fighting in their lifetimes. He leaned over to his sister as his brow furrowed.

"Eirene... I can't get the primary flow regulator to adjust for flow rate and temperature." He stated lifting the pad to show her the engineering problem he was working on as part of his classes.

Eirene glanced over at the pad. "Did you compensate for the increased heat caused by Quantum induced fusion?" She asked.

Fedor hissed at himself. "Jeez! How stupid can I be?" He muttered as he tapped the pad. "That's the first thing Wayonn taught us."

Miseo grinned. "You should have seen me trying to complete the problems my father gave to me in regards to Aerodynamics and Magnetic Tri-Cobalt Inducer Systems. I thought I was going to pull my hair from my head."

Fedor looked at him. "You don't have a lot of hair to begin with Miseo." He said with a smile.

Miseo chuckled. "How true."

Fedor turned back to his pad but looked up when the shadow fell across the table. His heart skipped a beat when he saw her there and then her sweet kiwi scent began to swarm around him.

"Good morning." Iama spoke softly as she stood there with her hands behind her back. They couldn't see that her fingers were laced together and the whites of her knuckles were showing in anxiousness as she stood in front of him. "You... you have not taken your meals here in the main mess lounge these last few days. I was wondering why."

Fedor looked at her, resisting the urge to scoop her into his arms and kiss her. He took a deep breath which didn't help since her scent was heavy because she was so nearby. "Why would it matter where I eat?" He finally stammered out the words.

"It is my job to insure that everyone eats healthy. The foods you eat directly affect how your mind matures." Iama responded with the first thing that popped into her head. She mentally berated herself for saying something so stupid.

Fedor tore his eyes away from her angelic face and returned them to his P1. "I'm eating fine." He hissed softly.

“Julie Collins told me that you were the boy/prince while we were on Twelve Alpha. That you and your sister were birthed using Kavalian accelerated growth hormones.” Iama said trying to think quickly. “When we returned I told your mothers I would see to it that you ate healthy so that you are able to reach your full potential.” She motioned to the tray of food in front of him. “There are no fruits on your tray. The enzymes in fruits stimulate the growth of synaptic brain cells.”

“You don’t say.” Fedor spoke failing miserably at trying to push her scent out of his head. “I don’t like fruit.”

Iama’s brow furrowed. “Who does not like fruit?” She asked surprised. “Your sister seems to like fruit.” She said motioning to the half eaten orange colored apple on Eirene’s tray. “Perhaps you should take after her.”

Fedor looked up. “I don’t like fruit.” He stated again. “Now is there something else you wanted or can I get back to my studies?”

“I would be happy to help you.” Iama offered. “Rudimentary mathematics can be very taxing on developing brain cells of those who were born with the growth hormones.”

Fedor’s eyes grew a little wider. “Rudimentary mathematics?” He gasped. “Do... do you think I am stupid or something?”

Iama looked confused now. “The physical skills and aptitude always mature the fastest in Kavalian clones. They need to undergo months of rigorous schooling to be able to function even remotely like an adult.”

“And now I am a child as well as stupid.” Fedor snapped.

“You are only weeks old.” Iama said. “I think that qualifies as still being a child. Why do you think I call you boy/prince?”

“Well... I guess that means I’m batting a thousand.” Fedor snapped unable to hide his anger any longer. “I’m stupid and a child. Great.” Fedor picked up his P1 as he got to his feet and looked at Eirene. “Pen gur men forn proir arande. Miseo.” (I will see you later sister.)

Eirene reached for her brother as he turned quickly and left the mess lounge. Her dark eyes glared at Iama now and she turned back to Miseo.

“Miseo!” She gasped.

Miseo didn’t hesitate for her knew how tightly they were connected as twins. “Go! Go Eirene!” He spoke to her.

Eirene didn’t hesitate then and she bolted out of her chair and followed her brother. As she passed Iama her fangs flashed into existence and her eyes changed. “Upae!” She growled as she moved by her.

Iama watched her exit and then turned her eyes back to Miseo as he rose and towered over her. “I am correct.” Iama said as he moved in front of her. “You should know I am correct better than most. You are Kavalian.”

Miseo looked at her. He was not angry at Iama, for she truly did not know or understand what he did about Eirene and Fedor or the effects of Mindvoice and Etheric abilities. Eirene had also told him that Iama’s kiwi scent called strongly for her brother. Miseo knew her background and knew she would not trust easily nor would she be able to find the strength to thank a man for saving her life after all she had endured.

Miseo finally nodded his head. “Yes... it’s true for the Kavalian clones.” He spoke. “Fedor and Eirene are not clones however Iama. The sooner you come to realize that the better.” He began to follow Eirene and stopped directly flanking Iama and turned his head. “You should know... the rudimentary mathematics you think he was working on...” Miseo waited until she turned to face him.

“Technically if he was in school... he would be in his second year at a higher university. The rudimentary mathematics you think he was studying... it was actually Phased Quantum Mechanics.” Miseo told her seeing her light green eyes go a little wider. “We are in a very different world now Iama’Juturi. Nothing is the same as you and I once knew it. I suggest you keep that in mind before insulting a Prince of the Lycavorian Union again.”

Iama stood there with wide eyes as Miseo turned and left the mess lounge.

“...Pralor?” Wayonn gasped. “Duewa... Duewa are you sure?”

Duewa nodded her head looking at Wayonn and Helen who had now joined them. Also crowded into the medical bay now was Captain Akemi, Muton, Daniel Simpson and Julie Collins. "I'm very sure Vall'istar." She answered.

Wayonn looked at Anja. "Anja?"

Anja was leaning against one of the exam tables. "Duewa's specialty is genetic Mutagens Wayonn. In some respects she's even more knowledgeable than me in this field because I focus more on genetic restructuring. I would listen to her."

Duewa looked at Anja and smiled inwardly. Her words let Duewa know that Anja trusted her fully. "I know it's a lot to take in but..."

"How did this happen Duewa?" Helen asked standing beside her grandfather.

Duewa turned to the medical screen and brought up some scans. "Anja and I conducted thorough internal scans of these creatures over the past few days."

"And one thoroughly disgusting internal physical exam." Anja quipped.

Duewa nodded. "Yes... that is very true." She adjusted the screen showing a holographic image of one creature's head. "This tongue appendage that we witnessed them using is laced with microscopic needles." She maximized the image and then they all could see the tiny needle like objects. Hundreds of them. "When it is fully inserted into a victim's throat, these needles extend and begin injecting a toxin into the victim. It is a metabolic toxin of some kind, both a neuro venom to make their victims unable to move or fight them, and also a cellular mutagen. Essentially it begins to break down the molecular base of a victim's DNA leaving it vulnerable to attack and manipulation." Duewa adjusted the screen. "When the victim is docile... it then injects massive amounts of its own cells."

"By raping them?" Julie asked softly.

Duewa nodded her head slowly. "It is the most effective way to introduce the volume of their own DNA needed to make this type of transformation into their victims. And it would not be pleasant." She touched the screen again and it focused on the creature's groin area. "Each of these creatures has two injection modules in their genitals. Very flexible and both nearly fourteen inches long."

"The thing has two dicks?" Danny almost shouted.

Julie looked at him. "Jesus Simpson... you have a one track mind." She blurted causing all of them to smile.

"What?" Danny snapped. "That's what she is saying! Isn't it?"

Duewa held back her laugh and nodded. "Yes Daniel... in answer to your question." She said. "As best as I am able to determine... the metabolic toxin makes their victims completely docile and unable to fight them. I don't know if it affects their minds or not but from everything I can determine I would say the victims are fully aware of what is happening to them."

"Then what?" Helen asked.

"Well... I can only estimate but..." She adjusted the screen once more. "Like this simulation here with each, for lack of a better term, orgasm, the creatures then flood the victims with their cells and DNA. These cells are highly aggressive and immediately begin to attack the now weakened cells of the victims. Once infected, the cellular mutation and rewrite begins and spreads incredibly fast."

"Given what we see here, Duewa and I estimate that the transformation would only take twelve hours." Anja spoke.

Martin looked at her quickly. "Our people Red?" He asked.

Anja shook her head. "None of them had time to inject the metabolic toxin into our people." She answered.

"We're keeping them under close observation Martin... but it appears these creatures need several moments before their tongue appendage seats fully and the needles extend." Duewa said. "Thankfully they did not have that time."

Wayonn moved to the polyglass enclosed room that held the dead creature. "And this one... this was a Pralor?" He asked.

Duewa nodded. "The victims seem to retain some strands of their core DNA within their mutated bodies. The Lycavorian cells are what made this one so hard to kill. Seven K12 rounds point blank." Duewa said. “Those core strands are what matched within our database and that is why they were detected during the Electrosanitizer Screening. This was a Pralor, probably female, who was changed by a Lycavorian.”

Martin looked at him. “Wayonn... Anja and Duewa both agree that this was a Pralor who had been changed by a Lycavorian. I thought that only happened on Lycavore.”

Wayonn turned back to look at him. “To the best of my knowledge it was Martin.” He told him. “You must remember that this was a decision Sumar made. It is not something that we did normally on seeding missions. It was forbidden in fact to interact with an indigenous species of a planet. Sumar knew of the Scourge and what they were doing in Pralor space and...”

“The first war never really ended did it Wayonn?” Martin asked him softly.

Wayonn shook his head and looked at Martin. “Not really no. The Scourge only pulled back in order to reformulate their plans. The thousand years of peace that followed the end of the first war was nothing more than a ruse that our government told our people.” Wayonn looked at the creature in the exam room. “Our military, such as it was, encountered them over three dozen times during that thousand year respite. Each time a brief engagement was fought and then they retreated.”

“Wayonn...” Martin began. “Arzoal said there were other planets that the Pralors seeded with Lycavorians. Four to be exact, not including Lycavore or the Rothryn people which Andro and Denali have discovered.”

Wayonn nodded his head. “Your... our species... was perhaps the most versatile species we had ever encountered.” He spoke. “Your unique abilities allowed you to adjust to almost any environment.”

“I take it the Rothryn are one of those groups for sure then?” Martin asked.

Wayonn nodded again. “Given everything that Andro and Denali have discovered about them I would have to say yes. But I do not know for sure Martin. I was not privy to every decision made by the Pralor Science Division. Shiria would probably know since she left so much later after we did. SPARTA'S WRATH may even have files on it. Sumar was the Chief Elder Pralor... but even he was not allowed to know everything the Science Division did.”

“Why does the way you say that not give me fuzzy warm feelings Wayonn?” Anja asked softly.

Wayonn looked at her. “Why should it?” He asked gently. “We may have been very technologically advanced Anja but we were by no means perfect.”

All we need do is remember what Artre did to know that. Arzoal's voice filled their heads from where she rested in the landing bay. All species are capable of terrible acts Anja and the Pralors were not exempt from such a thing.

“Point taken.” Anja said.

“Ok... I'm not going to let us get into a discussion of Pralor morality or the consequences of whatever they did in the past.” Martin spoke. “What I want to know is where this particular ugly came from.”

“Based on the structure of the few Lycavorian and Pralor DNA strands that I found I can estimate that the Lycavorian who turned this female was between two and three thousand years old.” Duewa told them.

“And the Pralor?” Wayonn asked.

“Somewhere between five and six thousand. Closer to six thousand in fact.” Duewa answered.

“Six thousand?” Wayonn asked. “You are sure?”

Duewa nodded. “Yes reasonably sure. I used your cells as a reference.” She told him.

“Does that make a difference grandfather?” Helen asked him.

“Yes.” He answered. “Because of Pralor longevity... anyone under five hundred years of age was not allowed to be part of expeditions outside our charted space.” Wayonn replied to her question. Arzoal... this order had not changed when you departed correct? He reached out within Mindvoice so they all could hear him.

Arzoal's answer was immediate. No it was still in effect.

Wayonn looked at them and their confusion. “It allowed our younger generations to discover themselves and have families of their own before reaching out into the stars.” He explained to them. “Age determined how far they were allowed to range outside our space. Pralors over five hundred years and under ten thousand years were allowed free access to whatever missions they wanted no matter the distance. Over ten thousand years the limits began.”

Because of the knowledge they would have acquired in that time. Arzoal spoke.

“Keep the older Pralors back because of their knowledge and what they could teach.” Martin said nodding his head. “That makes sense. We do it too.”

Wayonn nodded. “I do not remember any missions that were slotted for...” He looked at Akemi. “We are still within the Delta quadrant as our charts indicate correct Akemi?”

Akemi nodded immediately. “Yes. Our next jump will take us out of Delta and put us in Echo. At least according to our charts. Once we clear echo... we’ll truly be in the unknown as far as our charts extend. Muton’s map only plots a course... it doesn’t give information on the space we will cross.” She answered.

Wayonn looked at Martin. “We need to send this information to Shiria Martin.” He said. “She did not leave Pralor space until just under eleven thousand years ago. And she was a junior scientist within the Science Division. She may very well have this information. It may even be on SPARTA’S WRATH.”

Martin nodded his head. “Akemi... when do we do our next data dump to Dreamland?”

“Nine hours twenty-seven minutes.” Akemi answered instantly. “You know Ben is a stickler for precision.” She said.

“And he is the one that accepts all the dumps?” Martin asked.

Akemi nodded. “Personally.”

“Duewa... I want you and Anja to put all this information into a data packet that he can send to Shiria.” Martin said. “This stays within this room for right now understand?”

“Duewa and I want to keep the body of the dead one lover.” Anja said. “We may be able to learn a lot more with extended study.”

“I would like to assist them.” Wayonn spoke.

Martin nodded. “I’ll trust you two in that regard. No funky stuff you hear me?”

Duewa smiled. “Trust me Martin... I am not willing to endanger all I have discovered these last months over possible scientific discoveries. It’s not worth it.”

“What about this one that you say is still alive?” Muton spoke as he stood in front of the glass.

Martin looked at Duewa. “Duewa?”

“We don’t have any idea what species this one was before the transformation.” She stated. “We have nothing in our databases that comes close. The only thing I can determine is that it was bipedal like us. Aside from that... it is an unknown. Given what these things are capable of... if we keep it and it somehow manages to escape it could infect countless members of our crew before we even knew it was free. If that happened... we could lose hundreds.”

“Space it.” Julie spoke firmly.

Duewa looked at her and then back to Martin. “As much as my Hadarian blood calls for me to disagree with Julie... my Lycavorian blood tells me the same thing. I can take some additional samples from it... but then we need to vent it out an airlock Martin. It’s far too dangerous to keep onboard.”

Martin nodded and glanced at Anja who only smiled at him. “Do it.” He said. “I want it gone today. And slap a hazard buoy on it too... proximity activation... just to be safe.” He pushed off the table. “Wayonn... Helen... meet me in the landing bay with Arzoal. We need to have a talk.”

They watched Martin move to the door silently and exit the Medical Bay.

“Something tells me that ain’t going to be a pleasant talk.” Danny said softly leaning over to Julie.

Julie looked up at him. “You got that sense too huh?” She watched as Wayonn and Helen exited the Medical Bay with Muton. “You know Danny... this trip just keeps getting better and better.”

“It ain’t just a job...” Danny said.

“It’s a fucking adventure!” They both spoke at the same time.

PRIDE OF PUMAS
PUSINTIN’S COMMAND SHIP
FOUR DAYS BEHIND ARC ROYAL
0730 HRS, EST

“...hoping you might consider allowing me to utilize the services of this Hadarian wench you have on board Marshall.” Koguth’Juturi stood in front of his chair in the conference room of Pusintin’s ship.

The meeting had been going on for three hours now and Pusintin had to admit, this Koguth’Juturi knew his stuff. He hid his emotions well concerning his whore daughter but Pusintin could smell the anger and hate on him when he spoke of her. His only desire now it seemed was to capture her and make her pay for the dishonor she had brought to his Pride. His oldest son Mataen’Juturi had an even harder time disguising his emotions and Pusintin knew then he had found two allies. Pusintin hadn’t known until Popal told him that Koguth and his ship had been part of his Task Force to Enurrua. His ship had been heavily damaged in the initial missile attacks but they had held it together long enough to repair their engines and then limp to Nefoa. Those actions bespoke of solid leaders who would brook no defiance. The record of their Pride was impeccable and Pusintin knew that if Keleru trusted them completely, he could do so as well. At this request however, Pusintin leaned forward.

“How do you know I have her?” Pusintin asked first.

Koguth bowed his head. “Forgive me my forwardness Marshall.” He spoke. “Knowing of your injuries suffered on Enurrua and that your ship went to Talbor Seven, I only assumed you were there for the Hadarian couple. My apologies.”

Pusintin relaxed slightly. “There is no need to apologize.” He spoke sitting back. “I have them. The man is being kept apart for he is one of Buonau’s supporters. I would prefer to vent him out of the airlock, the cowardly fuck, but Keleru ordered me to keep him alive. His type of asshole is what is keeping Buonau in the good graces of her followers and to kill one would be detrimental to our plans for Hadaria.”

“Why could the man simply not have an accident Marshall?” Mataen asked.

Pusintin laughed as he got to his feet and looked at Kalis who sat at the other end of the table observing the meeting. He had only spoken a few times, but Pusintin had been impressed with his statements and his comments. Surprisingly... his son was beginning to show signs of being a capable leader and Kavalian. He trained everyday in the gym with the Kavalian Sergeant Master of the Puma Bane troops on board. He was absorbing tactical skills from Popal like a sponge and he was maxing out the test simulations that Popal was putting him through. Kalis was not Leruk... but perhaps his oldest son was finally beginning to become a man and something that Pusintin could at least be willing to call his son.

“I like the way your son thinks Koguth.” Pusintin said as he moved to the view window.

“Unfortunately... this little exercise has tested the limits of Keleru’s patience with me. He supports me... but I will not put that support in jeopardy by refusing his orders to keep the fool alive.”

Koguth nodded. “A wise decision Marshall. When we catch the Lycavorian King however, you will only show the Prefect you were right to begin with.”

Pusintin turned back around and looked at him. “Yes we will.” He stated. “I have been using the wife every few days to sate my needs. She is not particularly inventive in bed... but her healing skills are excellent. And the metaphysical radiation in her body keeps her nice and tight. Though she squalls too loudly for my taste when I take her ass.”

Koguth and his son laughed at this. “Put a sock in her mouth Marshall.” Mataen spoke finally.

Pusintin chuckled. “I just may do that.” He stated. “I have the daughter and son as well. They are locked in the Security Brig.”

“You don’t use the daughter?” Koguth asked.

Pusintin shook his head. “She has not Ascended as the Hadarians call it. She does not have the healing skills of her mother.”

“Dispose of them.” Koguth spoke.

Pusintin shook his head. “That is part of the deal with the husband. He does not care what we do to his woman... but his children are to be unharmed. Besides... I doubt from her age she has ever been with a man and I do not want the trouble of breaking in a virgin. Why do you ask this?”

Koguth lowered his head slightly. “I withdraw my request Marshall. She services your needs and that is what is important.”

“No... speak your mind Koguth.” Pusintin said. “If Keleru’Puat trusts you as he does then I am stupid for not following his actions. You have injured crewmen?”

Koguth looked at his son quickly and then nodded. "Many of my senior and most experienced officers and crew were injured during the attack. I have an excellent group of medics but one of the casualties was our ship's doctor. Many of my men report for duty holding in their pain as they should. I would like to provide them relief for their pain because of their actions in assisting Mataen and I in saving our ship."

"They are good officers and men?" Pusintin asked.

Koguth nodded. "I invite you to our ship to see for yourself Marshall. We would be honored to have you." He said quickly.

Pusintin held up his hand. "Your offer is welcome Koguth... but my duties here have me very busy."

"I understand Marshall." Koguth said. "We will endure as any Kavalian should."

"No... your words and deeds should be rewarded." Pusintin said. "You have shown your loyalty to Keleru and to the KFI many times over. This request is not in any way unreasonable." He sat back down in his chair. "She will be yours three days a week until your crew is returned to full status. You may use her if you wish... or your son... but I do not want her passed among your crew. She is too valuable to us now that we are out here in the unknown."

"You honor me Marshall." Koguth spoke bowing his head. "And only Mataen here has the energy to use her in his bed. I am too old and have no wish to have some hairless female in my bed."

Pusintin laughed. "Except for her head... she is hairless." He spoke.

"I will not injure her in any way Marshall. You have my word as one of your officers." Mataen told him.

"I have only one other simple request Marshall Pusintin... if I may?" Koguth asked.

Pusintin nodded. "Speak."

"When we have caught the animal King... when we have killed them... I request that my daughter be taken alive so that myself and her Pride may see to her execution." Koguth spoke harshly. "I do not wish her stain on our Pride to go unpunished."

Pusintin nodded his head. "If she is taken alive... you will have her." He said.

Koguth bowed his head deeply as he stood, Mataen rising to his feet as well. "You honor us Marshall Pusintin."

Pusintin nodded his head. "I will have her brought to your ship. Kalis... my son... he will see to it."

Pusintin stood up now. "I must return to my duties but please... I would be happy to have you for dinner one evening soon."

Koguth's eyes were bright. "That would be an honor we would never refuse Marshall." He stammered.

"Good. I will see to it. Good day gentlemen." Pusintin watched as they turned and left the conference room and he saw Kalis rise to his feet as the door slid shut. "Well?" He asked sternly.

Kalis moved closer to his father. "The internal room sensors could detect no lie from them father." He answered.

Pusintin nodded. "And I smelled nothing either."

"What they are asking seems reasonably considering their connections to grandfather." Kalis spoke. "Granting them the Hadarian bitch's services was a wise move to incur their further trust, however... keeping an eye on them is also smart. To make sure they are doing as you ask."

Pusintin grunted and looked at his son. "You have become different these last weeks Kalis." He said. "Why is that?"

Kalis looked at him. "I will never replace Leruk in your eyes father... I know that. I have decided to try and be like him as much as I can. If only to know that I no longer shame you when you speak my name. I do not want your approval father... only your belief that I will do what is necessary to accomplish this."

Pusintin turned away from him for a moment. "You are making a start Kalis." He said finally.

"I also have a request father... if I may?" Kalis said.

Pusintin turned back to him. "What is that?"

"The younger Hadarian bitch." Kalis spoke harshly. "I would like her."

Pusintin shook his head. "Her mother's cooperation stems from her children." He spoke. "If they are injured or used in any way I have no doubts the woman will kill herself or allow herself to be killed."

"I understand this father... but grandfather's instructions were for you to not use her." Kalis said. "His orders did not extend to me. And since the incident in the Security Brig, and my actions there, the Puma Bane Troops are becoming more discontent. I have the most secure quarters on this ship father. There is no way she or her stupid brother could escape them. The bulkhead doors alone would have them trapped in the lower engineering section. They can do no harm in the refuse area. It removes her from potential harm and allows you more control of her mother.”

“And gives the daughter to you.” Pusintin said.

Kalis smiled evilly. “I will not mark her father. I only want to fuck her.”

“Your actions that day were correct.” Pusintin said turning to move to the wet bar along the bulkhead.

“The men would have raped and beat her senseless after she struck one. It’s what I would have done.”

“Keeping them apart also gives you more control over her mother.” Kalis said. “She will be more accepting of her role if she wishes to see her children. She will not fight you as much.”

Pusintin turned and looked at him. “I like it when she fights.” He said with a grin. “But it will allow me to keep my anger in check knowing that she is slightly more docile.”

Kalis moved closer. “Allow me to do this father.” He spoke. “I will not mark her in any way when I use her... and it removes a potential problem in the future if the Puma Bane troops continue to guard her. There will be no... accidents.”

Pusintin stared at his son for a long moment. He could detect no lie within his scent and there was a cruelty that was not there a few short weeks ago. Pusintin finally nodded his head. “Very well Kalis.” He stated. “I will hold you responsible for their containment and their health. If anything happens to them I will take it out on you.”

Kalis nodded. “As you should father.” He stated.

“See to Ceale being transferred to Koguth’s ship and then take them down to your quarters.” Pusintin spoke. “Give Popal a copy of your security measures and codes and make one for myself.”

“I will have them to you this evening.” Kalis said.

“Don’t fail me Kalis.” Pusintin said.

Kalis shook his head. “I do not intend to father.”

Pusintin nodded. “Dismissed.”

Ceale moved beside Kalis as they made their way to the PRIDE OF PUMAS landing bay. His grip on her arm was tight but not painful and he was walking quickly, Ceale barely able to keep up. Ceale was frightened by this odd occurrence. She knew who Kalis was... her tormentor’s son... but in nearly six weeks he had done nothing but come to their cell and watch them from the monitors in the long corridor. Ceale had not had to endure Pusintin’s touch for almost three full days now and with the clothes and food that had begun magically appearing in their cell these last weeks she was nearly fully recovered. She turned her head to the side of Kalis’s face as they walked.

“Where... where are you taking me?” She asked with a tremble of fear in her voice.

“My father has given your services to some loyal officers on another ship.” Kalis told her with a stern voice. Mainly for the entertainment of the two soldiers who walked behind them. “You will heal their men and entertain the Captain’s son for three days every week until their crew is completely one hundred percent healthy.”

“What?” Ceale gasped as they stopped by the lift. “I will not leave my...”

Kalis jerked her arm as the door opened. “You will do as my father says bitch!” He growled at her. “Now shut up!” He turned to the two Kavalian troops. “I will take her up on this Lift. Take the port one and inform Captain Koguth we are on our way. I will stop on deck four to arrange for fitting clothes for her to wear.”

“Yes Colonel!” One of the men smiled at Kalis’s implied comment.

Kalis nodded and shoved Ceale into the lift. He touched the console and the door slid shut and they began to rise. Ceale watched as he tapped quickly on the panel and then turned to face her. Her eyes grew wider when she saw his facial expression had changed completely. It was no longer angry and violent, but concerned and very handsome. “You must listen to me very carefully.” He told her. “I am going to help you.”

Ceale's dark green eyes grew even wider. "Do you take me for a fool?" She hissed. "You are his son! You..."

Kalis grabbed her arms tightly with both hands and she expected a vicious slap to come next and closed her eyes in anticipation of the blow. All he did is squeeze her arms gently and his next words made her open her eyes. "I am not my father!" He snarled softly. "I am... I am nothing like him! I... I don't know who or what I truly am anymore... but I am not him!" He squeezed her arms tighter but not painfully. "Who do you think has been giving you the extra food? Not the slop you were eating! The clothes and the means to at least wash yourselves and keep what dignity my father has not taken from you by his actions!"

"You?" Ceale gasped. "Why?"

Kalis shook his head and turned to the lifter wall. He began to quickly unclip the pins on a panel housing. He withdrew a small, plain backpack and then replaced the panel. He stood back up and held it out to her. "I can not undo what my father has done." He told her. "His treatment of you is... it is vile and it makes me sick. I can't stop him from doing these things Ceale... as much as I want too. He would kill me without a second thought. You are a strong woman... as strong as my mother has shown she can be. And I did not ever take notice of her strength until it was too late." He lifted his blue eyes to her. "You must remain strong Ceale. I am... I am working on getting you off this ship forever but I need..."

"You... you are his son!" Ceale exclaimed in shock.

Kalis shook his head. "I may be his son by blood... but that... that is where it ends. I have... I have discovered some things about myself these last weeks, chief among them is that I do not want this life. Or what it makes me feel inside."

Ceale's mind was racing. Could it really be true? His words she could have dismissed had they not been spoken with such passion and sorrow. No one was that good of an actor. They actually caused her spirits to lift and take notice that perhaps hope had not abandoned them as she thought.

"These Kavalians that he has given you too... there is something about them. My father has dismissed so much of his Lycavorian blood that he did not take notice of it. I on the other hand have embraced my Lycavorian blood these past weeks and I did notice it. I can not explain it to you Lady Ceale... I can't explain it to myself. I do not think you will be in danger on their ship but..." Kalis dug into the bag and pulled out the small COM unit. He held it up for her to see. "This is a secure COM unit. It links directly with a special data pad that I have. It will also link to one I will give to Serale."

"Serale!" Ceale gasped. "She will..."

Kalis touched the lifter controls stopping them on deck four but keeping the doors closed. "I am moving Serale and your son to a more secure area on this ship. I will keep them safe I give you my word."

Ceale's eyes narrowed. "Why... why should I believe you?" She asked softly wanting to believe all he was saying.

Kalis looked at her. "Because I swear to you this day that I will find a way to get us off this ship and away from my father. I have... I have begun working on a plan that will take us to my uncle but I need time and it will not be easy."

"Your Uncle?" Ceale asked.

Kalis looked at her. "You know who my father is Lady Ceale?"

"Of course!" She hissed. "He is the brother..." Her eyes went wide when she realized what she was about to say.

Kalis nodded his head with just a hint of a smile. "Yes. And every day that passes I only wish to be with him more and more. I can not be forgiven for my past sins but I hope what I do now will at least atone for some of them. Serale and your son will be safe... I will protect them with my life if need be... I promise you. This COM unit will allow you to speak with her and not be detected. I finished the modifications a few days ago. The clothes are plain, but they will at least not leave you exposed.

"Why... why should I trust anything you say?" Ceale asked him.

Kalis lifted his hand and Ceale began to step back for fear of being struck, but once more his hand took her arm and squeezed not with painful intent, but reassuring warmth. "Because I have kept the secret of Serale... of your daughter having already Ascended." Kalis told her seeing her eyes go wide. "I have told no one since that day. You may not believe me... but I have tried to help in ways that will not be noticed. The food... the clothes. My father does not trust me so I must be careful. He thinks these things come from someone among the crew and he does not care. If he knew it was me he would be..." Kalis looked at her. "Let's just say it would not be pleasant."

"Why are you doing this?" Ceale asked him. "If he would kill you, his own son... why do you risk yourself like this to help me? To help us?"

"You... you would not believe me if I told you." He answered her softly and Ceale thought for sure she saw incredible sadness in his eyes. "Let's just say that my future... if I am to have a future... my future is not here. I do not want it to be here. I want more than the life that has been forced upon me. I can only have that with my Uncle. If he will even accept me." He reached up and touched the panel again and they began moving. "I will have Serale contact you tonight at 2200 hours. Tell no one what we have spoken of for it will end up getting all of us killed." He pushed the COM unit back into the bag and then tucked it into her arms. "You have no reason to trust me Lady Ceale... I know this. I am asking you to take a leap of faith."

"Kavalians do not believe in faith." Ceale spoke.

Kalis nodded his head. "But remember I am only half Kavalian." He said. "The other half of my blood is Lycavorian. The other half of my blood is a Leonidas."

The doors opened and Kalis turned quickly taking her arm and leading her out of the Lifter. Ceale's eyes were wide at his words and she stared at him for a moment as they moved but then she turned to look at the men standing by the ship. Kalis saw Koguth and Mataen waiting by the ramp of their shuttle and he directed her over to them.

Koguth stepped forward. "Ah... this is her?" He asked sternly.

"As my father told you." Kalis answered.

"She does not look like much." Mataen spoke as he moved around Ceale. "Are all Hadarians so... fragile?"

"I wouldn't know." Kalis replied. "Captain Koguth... a word if I could sir. A message from my father."

Koguth nodded. "Mataen... take her onboard. I wish her to begin right away." He said as he moved over to where Kalis had stepped to the side. "What can I do for the Marshall's esteemed son? A Colonel of the Puma Bane I understand?"

Kalis was only a inch shorter than Koguth's six foot four frame, the only one of his brothers to inherit their father's full height. He looked into Koguth's dark eyes. "My father may have missed it sir... but I did not." He spoke in a low, menacing voice. "You and your son are more than you lead others to believe. Do not harm her in any way. Do not abuse her. Do not take her against her will. If you do... if you do sir... then I will come for you and all of your Pride and I will extinguish them from existence."

Koguth stood there silently staring at Kalis. He saw the change come over Kalis, the dark ring that encircled his eyes, and the tips of his dual fangs protruding from beneath his upper lip. Something passed between the much older Kavalian and the young man before him, something buried deep within the currents of emotion. Koguth's Juturi was many things, but he was not a fool. The Marshall's son was not walking the same path as his idiot father. His path was very different and the words he had just spoken sent a shiver down his spine.

"I will take it under advisement Colonel Kalis." He said evenly.

Kalis watched Koguth turn and move for the back of his ship. He didn't wait to watch the ship depart and moved for the Lifter so that he could get Serale and her brother moved before others discovered what was going on.

KOGUTH'S LEUGERS TRANSPORT 0839 HRS EST

Mataen looked at his father as they cleared the landing bay of PRIDE OF PUMAS and headed for their own ship. He was staring at the closed ramp deep in thought, a pose Mataen had seen many times before. He stepped up next to him.

"Father?" He asked softly. "What is it?"

Koguth turned and looked at his oldest son. Mataen was six hundred and nine years old, the oldest of his nine children with his mate of eight hundred and twenty-four years. "The... the Marshall's son." He said softly.

Mataen moved closer. "What?"

"He is... he is not like his father Mataen." He spoke. "He said... he said his father did not detect it but that he did."

"Detect what?" Mataen asked.

"The lie." The female voice spoke now causing both men to turn around.

"Mani!" Koguth exclaimed. "We have only just left their ship!"

Mani Juturi stepped forward and removed the full face helmet she wore. "We are off their ship and even they do not have sensors that can look upon us in here my husband." The dark brown and very well groomed fur of the female Kavalian was very evident, as was the shape of her body under the uniform.

Ceale sat wide eyed as she watched the female move closer to the Kavalian called Koguth. Kalis's words echoed in her head. "These Kavalians that he has given you too... there is something about them. My father has dismissed so much of his Lycavorian blood that he did not take notice of it. I on the other hand have embraced my Lycavorian blood these past weeks and I did notice it. I can not explain it to you Lady Ceale... I can't explain it to myself. I do not think you will be in danger on their ship but..."

"We need to act safely mother." Mataen told her as she stepped up beside Koguth and pressed close to her husband of over eight hundred years. The fur on her face and body was shiny and pulsating with health and radiant color and her tail snaked around Koguth's right leg as she stood beside him, his longer tail encircling her waist.

"We are acting safely." Mani told him. "We are off that ship of horrors."

Koguth nodded. "I did not expect to feel so disgusted as I was." He said. "That ship is... it is like a dark abyss."

"The hate that infects them is powerful husband." She said.

"What did you mean Mani?" Koguth asked. "He could detect the lie?"

Mani nodded her head. "What did he tell you husband. I saw him pull you to the side."

Koguth glanced at Mataen and then back to her. "He told me if we hurt her in any way that he would extinguish our Pride from existence. He said he detected what his father did not."

Mani nodded her head. "He detected that you and Mataen were lying." She said with confidence.

"Mother... how could he?" Mataen protested. "Father, myself... all of us have trained rigorously to hide our true emotions and be able to lie as if it is second nature."

Mani nodded her head. "Something has happened that caused the Marshall's son to begin to embrace the Lycavorian blood within him." She answered. "I have studied the Lycavorians for decades Mataen... and their sense of smell far exceeds anything we can imagine. Pusintin, the foul beast, he may have forsaken that part of himself, but it appears his son has not. My only question is where has he gotten the training to use this skill. Lycavorians must be taught from birth to use their sense of smell in order to be able to catalogue different scents and such. His father would not teach him this... so where did he learn it?"

"He detected we were lying." Koguth spoke. "Yet he did not inform his father. That is very interesting."

Mani turned and saw Ceale staring at them from the bench in the LEUGERS and she pushed away from her husband. "And this is she?" She spoke as she knelt in front of Ceale. She lifted a fur covered hand and stroked Ceale's cheek. "You look very frightened child. And very tired."

Ceale looked at where Koguth and Mataen stood and then back to her. Ceale couldn't help but notice the well groomed fur and bright blue eyes. "You... you are... you are female." She stammered finally.

Mataen chuckled softly and moved to the bench to settle next to her. Ceale shied away quickly from his enormous bulk and he held up his own fur covered hands. His darker blue eyes fell on her, but Ceale could detect the distinct similarities between him and the female Kavalian.

"You may rest easy Milady." Mataen spoke. "You are in no danger among us."

"He speaks the truth child." Mani said dropping her hands to take one of Ceale's in hers. "We are not going to hurt you."

"I don't... I don't understand." Ceale said. "What... what is going on?"

"Father." Mataen spoke holding out the small COM unit he had removed from the bag.

Ceale's eyes went wide and she reached for it. "No!" She snapped. "No!"

Mataen held it away from her as his eyes inspected it. "A normal COM unit with some interesting modifications." He said.

"He gave it to me!" Ceale hissed. "He said I could use it to talk with Serale."

Koguth looked at Mani. "Her daughter." He told his wife.

"The Marshall's son gave this to you?" Mataen asked Ceale.

Ceale nodded. "Yes. Please... please give it back."

Mataen held up his hand indicating she should wait. He reached above his head and touched the COM panel. "Nedoni... are you detecting any unknown signal coming from our ship?"

"Negative. We are clean." The male voice replied.

"Have Corsa move back here for a moment brother." Mataen said.

"On her way." The male voice replied.

"Mataen?" Koguth asked him. "What is wrong?"

Mataen looked at him. "This COM unit has been modified in a unique way father." He said. "You say that Kalis gave this to you?" He asked Ceale.

Ceale nodded. "He said I could use it to communicate with Serale while I was with you. That no one else would detect it."

Ceale turned and saw the second Kavalian female move back among them from the cockpit area and stop. She removed the helmet as well and her shiny copper colored red hair fell well past her shoulders, her face calm and without fear. Unlike the others, she was completely without fur on her body and Ceale knew instantly she was one of the biogenic female Kavalians that had undergone treatment. Corsa stepped up close to Mataen without pause and then Ceale saw her tail unwind from around her waist and encircle his leg just as Mani had done. Ceale looked at her with wide eyes as she realized this female would have been considered a failure to the Kavalian scientists and either discarded or sent to be a whore in whatever brothels they had. Apparently this was not the case with her and Ceale saw Mataen's tail slowly snake around her waist just as his father's had around Mani's.

"Mataen my husband?" She asked.

Mataen held the COM unit out to her. "Corsa... what do you make of this?"

The Kavalian female took the unit and turned it over in her hands several times while studying it carefully. "Standard Kavalian COM unit with several advanced modifications. Site to site beam capability and a high level encryption protocol unit." She looked up at Mataen. "Whoever made this intends for it to be used outside of normal COM channels and remain undetected. If I'm correct... it is designed to piggy back on spacial harmonic frequencies."

"Spacial Harmonic Frequencies?" Koguth asked. "We don't have equipment that can do that Corsa. Only the Lycavorian Union has the ability to manipulate SHFs within their COM channels."

"You are correct my husband's father." Corsa answered him. "Yet this was made with Kavalian material... not Union. Whoever built this has Union knowledge. Who did this?" She looked at him. "This level of knowledge of communications could help us to secure our Pride's COM traffic from any prying ears and eyes. It would also mean this person has an in-depth knowledge of Union COM techniques. No one would be able to decipher it without the proper encryption key."

Mataen reached up and took it from her hand and then held it out to Ceale. She took it from him and clutched it to her chest, her eyes filled with more questions than she could process.

"He gave this to you for a reason and we will not keep that reason from you." Mataen told her. "I doubt very much his father or anyone else knows he has these skills." He continued. He turned to look at Koguth. "It appears the Marshall's son is far more than anyone knows."

Mani smiled and patted Ceale's hands. "It seems we are not the only ones out here who are working against the good Marshall." She said. She turned to Koguth. "If his own son is somehow in contact with the Union... or even the King... it could be our opportunity to find Iama and bring her home my husband."

Koguth nodded his head looking at Ceale. "We should probably fill our guest in on what is happening however. The poor thing looks lost. I do not think we have to worry that she will expose us to Pusintin."

Mani smiled and nodded. "Corsa and I will take care of that." She said turning back to Ceale. "Right now... let's get you some decent clothes to wear and something to warm your insides. You must be cold." She took her arms and gently urged her to her feet. "Come... we have some clothes in the back that we have made for you. You appear to be Corsa's size and she made them."

Ceale looked at her unsure of what was happening, but if it allowed her a respite from the pain she had been enduring she welcomed it and allowed them to lead her toward the rear of the ship. Looking within herself, Ceale found she suddenly had no fear for her daughter. The look in Kalis's eyes when he said he would protect her and her brother was something Ceale would never forget. It was a look of determination she had never seen before.

Perhaps it was hope.

Perhaps hope had not abandoned them at all. It was just coming in a different form.

Mataen looked at his father. "Kalis could be a powerful ally father." He spoke. "Pusintin has never treated him with the respect a father should of his first born. Especially one who is as skilled as he. That has been common knowledge for many years."

Koguth nodded. "Indeed." He said. "His skills are without question. The look... when he spoke to me he was looking upon me with wolf eyes Mataen. Feral wolf eyes that held no fear in them. No fear and a determination that I have never seen. Something is driving this boy to do what he is doing. And he is keeping it hidden from his father."

"Do you think he knows where the King is?" Mataen asked.

Koguth shook his head. "I don't know but while this Hadarian Ceale is among us I intend to discover a way to find out. You and Corsa are still willing to watch over her? Have her stay with you?"

Mataen nodded. "Yes. She looks malnourished and exceptionally tired and what she needs is rest. We will feed her and get her to rest for the first day. After that, if she is willing, she can begin her exams. Corsa has experienced the same things as her father... she should be able to help her."

Koguth nodded. "She is a fine young Kavalian female my son. I did not think it wise to join with her at first... but she has come out of her shell since that day. You made me proud by rescuing her and now she makes me proud to have her as a daughter. Tell her that for me. I do not wish to embarrass her in front of our Pride."

Mataen nodded his head with a smile. "I will." He said. His face became serious. "Father, do you think Pusintin and Keleru have any idea how many of us there are?"

Koguth met his eyes. "Keleru does... just not who." He answered. "He clings to power by threads my son. Pusintin is only a lap dog of his. A powerful tool... but still just a tool." He said. "That is our advantage."

"How long before Pian and the Nruarani Pride begin?" Mataen asked.

"I spoke with Pian's brother just before we departed Nefoa." Koguth answered. "If things go as they planned... then Pian will launch his campaign in a guerilla fashion. He is receiving Union support of materials but no men. At least not right now. The Union must be prepared to meet Keleru's thrusts when he decides it is time. For the moment Pian and the Nruarani Pride can hold their own."

"Can the Union hold against him father?" Mataen asked softly.

Koguth gazed into his son's eyes. "Keleru has no understanding of what he has done Mataen. The other Pride Leaders and myself saw this after our second attempted invasion of the High Coven and that is why we formed our groups. Power is the only thing Keleru craves and his actions against the Union have sealed his fate. When Martin Leonidas truly unleashes his son upon Keleru'Puat, he will know the grip of fear. The same fear so many of our people have lived under for too long."

"I thought... I thought he had already done so." Mataen said.

Koguth looked at him and smiled. "No Mataen. What we have seen so far is nothing." He said. "When Martin Leonidas unleashes the storm that is his son you will know. And then it will be time to throw all we are behind Androcles and free our people." Koguth gripped his arm. "But first I will do what I should have done years ago. I will find your sister and I will bring her home to your mother. To us."

"That was not your fault father and you know it." Mataen spoke quickly.

Koguth shook his head. "He was my father... his actions were mine." He said softly. "I should have killed him long before I did. Your sister would not have had to endure the horrors she has if I had acted as a father should have."

Mataen gripped his arm. "We are acting now father. Iama will see that and she will forgive."

Koguth nodded his head. "I hope you are correct my son. I hope you are correct." He took a deep breath. "Now... now we must adhere to our plan."

PRIDE OF PUMAS
0910 HRS, EST

Serale did not know what to expect when the son arrived at their cell but her dark green eyes watched him carefully as he spoke to the guard in the foyer and that Kavalian glanced at them and then nodded his head.

“What is happening Serale?” Danim asked her in a whisper.

Serale shook her head. “I don’t know.” She answered.

“Where did he take mother?”

Serale looked at him. “Danim I don’t know!” She hissed softly.

Danim turned back to look at Kalis. “This one... this one scares me Serale.” He said softly. “He is... he is that bastard’s son!”

Serale turned back to watch as Kalis entered a code into the door control. “Quiet! He’s coming in!” She whispered to him her eyes never leaving Kalis. Her eyes grew a little wider as he withdrew his ARSOC sidearm but did not point it at them, only held it along his leg.

“Gather what things you have and come with me.” He spoke sternly. “No tricks and do not attempt to run. There is no place on this ship where you can hide that I will not find you. It will not be pleasant when I do.”

“Where... where is our mother?” Serale asked softly.

“I did not say you could ask questions.” Kalis snapped. “Move now!”

Serale snatched up several items of clothing and the lone bar of soap that had appeared with the additional clothes and pulled on her brother’s arm. Danim rose to his feet and slipped his hand into Serale’s. Kalis motioned them forward out of the cell and into the corridor where another Kavalian waited.

“Kalis.” Popal spoke.

“Commander.” Kalis said moving up next to Serale.

Kalis towered over her by several inches and was nearly twice as wide as her. Her dark green eyes took in the exceptionally sculpted muscle of his arms and chest under the dark uniform shirt. She squeezed Danim’s hand making sure that she remembered to speak with him not to attempt anything with this one. They had watched him face down three Kavalians that day and there had been nothing but rage in his eyes, like he had no fear. His skin was deeply tanned and unbelievably Serale found herself thinking he was extraordinarily handsome. Serale watched him hand the Kavalian a data pad.

“These are the codes to my quarters and the security grid I have installed Commander.” Kalis spoke. “Make a copy for yourself and then give this pad to my father per his instructions. No one else is to see this.”

Popal nodded. “The discontent was growing Colonel. This is a sound move and I intend to advise your father of that.”

Kalis nodded. “I sensed it too. With them out of the immediate area things should calm in a few days.”

Popal held up the pad. “I will do as you order with this.” He said stepping out of the way.

Kalis looked at Serale. “Move into the corridor and do exactly as I say.” He barked.

Serale could not keep track of the number of turns and twists they moved down. They moved down three Lifters and among corridors that all looked the same. She made out several numbers on the bulkheads but crisscrossing as they did got her very confused.

Kalis did not speak to them aside from giving them directions where to go, partly to keep appearances up, but mostly because her cinnamon and cherry scent was swarming around him and making it hard to think. Kalis took several deep breaths as they walked and tried to focus on the instruction program from Androcles about how to regulate and block scents if he needed. Or at the very least force them to the back of his mind so that they were not so prominent. He was able to succeed for the most part and finally, seven minutes after leaving the Security Cell he ushered them through the dual bulkhead doors of his quarters. Kalis turned almost immediately and sealed the doors, engaging the locks. He holstered his ARSOC and placed his forehead against the cool metal and tried to take calming breaths.

Serale looked around the large quarters they had entered. There was a great desk and chair against one wall of the main room they were in. She saw a large couch and computer monitor on the table in the center with the huge view window behind that. A small kitchen area was off to the left and an archway that led into another room. The walls were mostly bare, but Serale could see where items had either been moved or taken down. On the desk she could see three image projectors. Two were of a stunning female with long white blond hair and the second was of a younger looking male and female, the male having many of the same features as the young man in the room with them. She looked at her brother and they turned to see Kalis take a deep breath and turn to face them. He typed several commands into the door panel and Serale looked up when she heard the faint sound of dampeners of some kind engaging. Her eyes went back quickly to Kalis as he faced them.

“You may speak freely now.” He said quickly. “I have engaged the audio and video dampeners. Sit... please.” He motioned to the couch. Serale and Danim both were very wary and neither of them moved. Kalis moved into the small kitchen but still they did not move, watching as he poured three glasses of a blue liquid from the container and then he turned back to see them still standing there. Kalis moved back into the main room and put the glasses on the table. “I asked you to sit.” He said maintaining his calm, now fully able to push Serale’s sweet scent to the back of his mind as Androcles’s teaching had shown him.

“Why... why are we here?” Serale asked softly. She was filled with a large amount of fear yes, but there was something about his man that caused her to feel safe as well. “Where did you take our mother?”

Kalis set his glass down and stripped out of the uniform top, leaving himself only in the black t-shirt. He sat down and lifted the blue liquid and took a long pull from the glass, downing half of it before setting it back down. “Your actions nearly six weeks ago have been fermenting among the Puma Bane troops assigned to this ship.” Kalis told her as he looked up. “I... I convinced my father to allow me to move you both down here in order to protect you.”

“Protect us from what?” Serale asked.

“The Puma Bane troops who would have gotten enough courage to disobey my father’s orders and come for you.” Kalis said. “I could not allow that to happen.”

“Come for me?” Serale asked softly.

Kalis nodded. “Yes. Both of you are probably far more intelligent than me. You must know what I mean?”

Serale looked at him with wide green eyes when he said that and she relaxed slightly. “Where is our mother?” She asked again. “Is she...”

Kalis looked at her and his own eyes grew wide. “No!” He gasped. “No! My father gave her to the commander of another ship...”

“What?” Serale snarled. “To do what he does to her! You bastard! You...”

Kalis put his glass down and made to reach for her but Serale instinctively slapped him viciously across his face leaving imprints of her fingers on his cheek and rocking his head back. “You fucking monster!” She hissed savagely. “It is not enough she has to submit to your father but now she must submit as a whore to more of your people! You...”

Danim grabbed his sister’s arms before she could strike again. “Serale!” He exclaimed.

Kalis’s eyes flashed and changed, his dual wolf fangs bursting from his gums further than they ever had before and becoming very prominent and looking exceedingly deadly. Serale gasped and backed up against her brother as Kalis moved forward faster than either of them could react. Serale whimpered as his tall and muscular body caused her to press up against the bulkhead, his body touching hers. Danim began to try and push him off her but Kalis’s hand closed around his throat and with gentle but firm pressure he backed him up to the bulkhead beside his sister. Kalis’s eyes never left Serale’s beautiful but terrified face and it was that look that caused the anger at her actions to slip away instantly. His eyes did not change but his fangs receded somewhat as he stared at her. Serale could feel his warmth breath on her cheek, a peppermint smell on his breath, unlike the foul breath of the Kavalians who had gotten close to her before.

Kalis drew in a deep breath; inhaling her sweet scent and feeling it reach to every part of his mind and body and actually calming him even more. “They... they are not my people Serale.” He spoke softly seeing her eyes slowly turn back to look at him. “They are not my people. And you were... you were right to strike me. I should not have grabbed for you. I am sorry.” Kalis turned to look at a very frightened Danim. He quickly took his hand away from his throat. “The blow you were going to try and land would have struck the side of my head Danim. You would have broken one or more of your fingers as a result. I am still half Lycavorian... and one of the traits I have acquired from that side of my blood is the thickness of our bones.” He turned back to Serale and gazed at her with those changed eyes. Serale held in the gasp that threatened to escape her lips as she saw the depth of those blue eyes and how beautiful they were in their changed form. "Forgive me." He spoke softly before backing up and moving back to the couch.

"I could not stop my father from sending your mother to the other ship." He said. "They are not... they are different than normal Kavalians. And they were lying to my father about their true intentions." He looked at Serale. "I do not believe your mother is in any danger. Of either physical abuse or mental."

Serale pushed off the wall. "What... what are you saying?" She asked. "Why have you brought us here? What is going on?"

Kalis lifted his eyes to her and motioned to the couch once more. "It is a very long story. Do you wish to remain standing for all of it?" He pointed to the glasses. "I know all they have given you is water these last weeks. It is not fancy, but this Grotian Berry Juice is very good." He saw the indecision in her eyes and smiled slightly. "You watched me pour it and I have already drank half of my glass. I am still breathing. I promised your mother I would keep you and Danim safe. I will keep my promise to her."

"Why?" Serale asked.

"Because I wish to escape this... all this..." He motioned with his hand. "I wish to escape it all as well. Please... please sit down. My uncle says it is not polite to have a woman stand while you sit, and I do not wish to relate my story to you while standing up."

The tone of his voice made Serale plant her firm ass on the cushions of the couch and Danim joined her a moment later. This was definitely not what she had in mind when he had come for them.

EARTH

CRANAE ISLAND

NETNEWS CHANNEL 65 INTERVIEW WITH CROWN PRINCESSES OF THE UNION

1015 HRS, EST

Me'alla watched them as they walked in front of her holding hands and leading her along the outdoor patio until they were facing the four dragons, two of which did not appear to be fully grown. She saw where the four chairs had been set up in front of where the dragons sat, as well as the three chairs for her and her crew. She could see several Durcunusaan on the edges of the patio, including the four female heads of their details watching from just inside the double doors leading out. Caydren and Cinol sat between Anthar and Majeir, their bodies smaller, but not by a great deal.

"...is the patio obviously." Sadi was speaking. "And these are our Bonded Brothers and sisters." Sadi moved immediately to where Caydren rested, her hands reaching up to touch his huge muzzle and bringing her forehead to his scales. Me'alla watched as Ne'Veha, Carisia and then Lu'ria Leonidas did the same thing.

Me'alla's eyes were wide as she watched Sadi and Ne'Veha interact with the two smaller dragons. "Forgive me Princess Sadi... no one... no one is aware that you and Princess Ne'Veha have bonded with dragons! May... may I ask when this happened?"

Sadi turned back to her, keeping her hands on Caydren's muzzle. "It happened yesterday actually." She spoke. "It was quite the surprise for SirsanGai and I... but what a wonderful surprise it was."

Ne'Veha nodded her head as she leaned close to Cinol and placed her cheek against his cool scales. Carisia was standing beneath Anthar's head, her hand stroking the underside of his jaw as she knew he loved so much. Lu'ria stood beside Majeir simply stroking the scales along her side. With Elynth gone, Majeir was the oldest by eighteen months, and she felt it her duty to be something of a leader. It also fit perfectly with Lu'ria's somewhat detached emotions to all of this Netnews coverage. Drow by their very nature were exceptionally private and while she was still learning to be more open because she was now a Princess of the Union, it was not an event that would happen overnight.

"A glorious surprise and blessed gift." Ne'Veha echoed Sadi's words, the happiness in her voice obvious to anyone who could hear her.

Sadi turned back to look at Me'alla. All of them looked beautifully stunning Me'alla thought to herself. Sadi wore an uncomplicated violet sundress that clung to her figure like a second skin and made her jangle green eyes stand out. Ne'Veha wore a simple tight royal blue jumpsuit and Carisia and Lu'ria had changed into tight fitting near matching khaki colored jumpsuits. It appeared none of them were in the least bit shy about their lush figures and Me'alla knew the ratings of this surprise interview would be very high just from all the young men who would watch to view their Princesses and wish they were Androcles Leonidas. Sadi motioned to the chairs set up for them. They were comfortable, cushioned chairs with metal frames.

“Please... sit down.” Sadi told her.

Me'alla looked at her, once more surprised. “We will not go inside and receive a tour of the villa?” She asked.

“This is our home.” Sadi spoke gently. “We agreed to do this interview... but only to a point. We will not share our home with the public. Some things must remain private to us and our home is one of them.”

“How you live.” Me'alla spoke. “How you live... what you do? These are things people are interested in.”

Ne'Veha stepped up beside Sadi. “Let them stay interested.” She spoke. “The inside of our home is not open to the public.”

“The King and Queens have given many interviews from within the walls of the Royal Villa and the palace on Apo Prime.” Me'alla spoke.

Sadi nodded. “We are not the King and Queens.” She stated plainly. “Androcles is our husband and mate and he is very private. And we cherish our privacy as well. He will not allow our private lives to become public knowledge and as his wives and mates we will not go against him in that regard. We like our privacy as well as I said.”

“Not to mention he would be very angry with us if we did this without first consulting him.” Ne'Veha said.

Carisia chuckled softly. “The punishment would be worth it though.” She said with a seductive glance at Lu'ria.

Lu'ria leaned close to Carisia. “You are so correct Enylarcopri.” She said softly. “Having his tongue explore every inch of our bodies is such delicious punishment.”

Sadi canted her head from side to side with a smile. “It would be very interesting.” She said with a smirk to them.

Me'alla couldn't help but grin as well as she motioned to her crew to sit down and she occupied one of the chairs as Sadi and the others sat. She noticed they reached for and took each other's hands after sitting down. She leaned forward. “I guess the first question I have is are the rumors that the Prince has also taken a wife and mate of the recently discovered Vanari species true?”

“Caliria returned home to her world to finish some projects she was involved in.” Sadi answered. “But to answer your question... yes it is true.”

“Will she be returning soon?” Me'alla asked.

“She will return when she is finished.” Sadi spoke. “We love her and we miss her, but she is also the daughter of Vanari Regents and she has tasks to complete to help her father.”

“Information on the Vanari is mostly speculation.” Me'alla said. “Can you perhaps tell us more about them? And also... this Protectorate of Lycavorians that has been discovered just recently. Rumors say that this Protectorate is quite large and that a merger of this Protectorate as they are called and the Lycavorian Union is very close to happening.”

Sadi glanced quickly at Ne'Veha and then to Carisia and Lu'ria. She turned back to Me'alla. “Me'alla... your Netnews channel and many others have been clamoring for this type of interview for months. It is said Androcles is too private... that nothing is known about him. He gave three hours to you and others not so long ago and now we are here willing to give you more. However... we are still Crown Princesses of the Union... and we will not discuss the workings of what may or may not be happening with newly discovered species and government contacts. If you wish these things, I suggest you request them from the Prime Minister's office and we can end this interview right now.” Sadi rose to her feet quickly as did the others.

Should I burn them sister! Caydren announced.

Majeir's head snapped around to look at him. Caydren! No! You will not! She exclaimed even as Anthar chuckled within Mindvoice.

Why? Caydren asked. They ask questions Sadi does not want to answer.

That is what they do Caydren. Anthar told him.

Then they are stupid. Cinol chimed in.

Cinol! Ne'Veha exclaimed but with a smile on her beautiful face.

Sadi and the others laughed softly and she turned to look at Caydren. No... my beautiful Bonded Brother. Burning them is definitely out of the question. She told him.

Sadi turned back to Me'alla to see she had risen as well. Me'alla stepped forward. "I did not mean to offend any of you Princess." She spoke.

"No offense was taken Me'alla." Lu'ria spoke now. "There are just some things that we will not discuss. Now... or in the future."

Me'alla looked at the first Drow Princess of the Union. "I assume your dragons said something to you that was humorous?"

Sadi grinned. "It is probably better if you did not know." She answered.

Me'alla turned back to Sadi. "I really... I came with a prepared set of questions given to me by my Channel Manager. This interview was offered so quickly that it is a standard set of questions that we did not think to change. I am... I am at a loss." Me'alla touched her finger to her ear as her implant chirped.

"You are lead on this Me'alla." The voice of her human Channel Manager echoed in her head. "It's your interview. You have free reign."

Me'alla took her finger away and looked back at Sadi and the others. "May we start again?" She asked. "How long do we have with you?"

Sadi and the others returned to their chairs. "A few hours at least." Sadi said. "We actually like talking about Andro. We talk about him all the time."

Me'alla smiled as she sat back down. "Then... then without revealing anything that is too sensitive... could each of you convey how Prince Androcles managed to have all of you fall in love with him? What he did to win your hearts?"

Ne'Veha smiled. "Ah... that is easy. He is the most delicious man alive." She stated proudly.

All of them laughed softly and nodded at Ne'Veha's words. Sadi squeezed her hand and looked at Me'alla. "How did Andro win our hearts?" She said softly. "SirsanGai is very right in that respect... but there is so much about Andro he does not show to others. I fell in love with him during that time of unrest on the Royal Island. Just before The Purge began. He was only eight months old and his scent... it... well... it swept me up that very first night. I... Andro is so very different. He was born fully aware you know. Aware of everything that was happening around him. He bonded with Elynth while Aricia still carried him within her womb. Even to this day no one understands how... only that it happened. Some do not believe it... but we know the truth. We can see it inside his mind whenever we swim within his thoughts. He would speak through her... through Mindvoice and his Etheric abilities. He..."

SOLMAR

KAVALIAN MAIN BASE

WESTERN SETTLEMENT

1049 HRS, EST

"...did this is extraordinarily skilled General." The Kavalian doctor told him.

Azlenr looked at where Byka and Kameka stood to his side, Kameka slightly behind the two Generals in a show of respect and command. "Explain." Azlenr spoke turning back to the man.

"The entry wounds are all very precise and executed with considerable strength behind them. Far more than a Bontawillian would be able to exhibit." The doctor turned to the body on the table behind him. He had shaved the fur away from the single three inch long gash in the Puma Bane soldier's chest. "This one died from a single sword thrust at an eighteen degree upward angle. I estimate the attacker was just over six feet tall. The thrust perforated his right lung, both his kidneys and then went clean through his heart. He was more than likely dead before his body hit the ground." He turned back to Azlenr and drop his hands to the pockets of his jumpsuit. “I was unable to obtain any microscopic shavings from the blade but that is not surprising with Union weapons.”

“Why?” Azlenr asked.

“I’m not very well versed in the process of...” The doctor began to answer.

“Union bladed weapons are now made almost exclusively with the Dragon Armor metal they discovered some two decades ago.” Kameka spoke suddenly.

Byka turned to face his daughter. “Meka!” He hissed.

Kameka lowered her head quickly knowing she had broken protocol. “Forgive me Generals” She said softly.

“No Byka... it is alright. Kameka... what do you know?” Azlenr asked her.

Kameka looked at her father who nodded his head. She turned back to Azlenr. “It is the result of the forging process General. The blades are nearly unbreakable and the forging process is extremely precise. The blades are folded over five hundred times and after each fold it is sharpened by hand to razor like exactness. When the folding process is finished it is then reinforced with defined laser sharpening so that it never loses its edge. While their Nehtes are mass produced, each sword and hand knife is specifically made for the individual. There are two known Blade Masters within Union space. The oldest is an elf... Nehtes. Their spears are named after him. The second is an Acamarian surprisingly. She is this Nehtes student. Or was. They work together. Nehtes handles the folding while the Acamarian handles the sharpening process.”

Azlenr shook his head. “Where did you learn all this Kameka?” He asked surprised. As long as they had been friends, Azlenr would never refer to Byka’s children by their rank.

Kameka looked at her father once more and Byka nodded. “Show him Meka.”

Azlenr’s eyes moved between them. “Show me what?”

Kameka reached behind her and tugged gently on a small covering at the small of her back. Her hand closed around the matte black pommel of the Shakur fighting knife she wore strapped under her harness. She withdrew the blade slowly, and brought it around in front of her. She uncurled her fingers and held it in her palm. “I... I took it from a vampire Major who carried it. How he got it I do not know. It is a Drow fighting knife General. I have carried it since...”

Azlenr met her eyes as he took the knife from her hand. “You killed him?”

Kameka nodded her head. “He was able to sneak into our defensive perimeter around our aircraft. I discovered him planting explosives on our transports. He was not particularly skilled and it makes me wonder how he got this blade. Drow do not give them up unless they are dead.”

Azlenr twisted the blade in his hand expertly and realized that Kameka must have had it adjusted to fit her for it was heavier in the pommel by a about a gram if he was correct. “Is it possible to get the formula for their Dragon Armor from this blade?”

Byka shook his head. “Meka brought it to me right away when she realized what it was. I had my people run a battery of tests on the metal. The forging process obliterates this possibility because it uses such high heat. My people tell me the formula for the dragon armor would no longer be the same after being subjected to this. Without the exact formula... nothing would work.”

Azlenr looked once more at Kameka. “How did you discover this information Kameka?”

She looked slightly embarrassed but met his eyes. “Access to the Union Net Channels was not restricted until just recently General.” She answered. “There was much to discover if you had the time and patience to search their Extranet.”

Azlenr smiled and held the blade out for her to take back. “So it would seem.” He said. “I wish others would be as intuitive as you Kameka.” He spoke as she took the weapon and returned it to its spot under her harness. He looked at Byka. “This only confirms what you believed at the site. This was conducted by a highly skilled team of Durcunusaan.”

Byka nodded. “I don’t see any other possibility.”

The doctor lifted his hand. “There is something else General.” He spoke. “Something that I have never seen before.”

Azlenr nodded. “Go on.”

“I should probably show you.” He stated motioning for them to follow him. He led them to the rear of the building where he pulled back the sheets on two Puma Bane Troops killed in the attack. “These two were not killed by a bladed weapon, nor a projectile weapon of any design I have ever come across.” He moved to the other side of the table where one body rested and he pointed to the upper left portion of the troop’s chest. There was a fist size hole clean through his flesh that allowed them to look through his body to the table beneath him. “As you can see, the edges of this wound are very clean. The wound itself was instantly fatal... his upper thorax perforated instantly and his clavicle and sternum destroyed by something moving with more than seven hundred newtons worth of force. You can see how his bone has been fused around the wound. The arteries and veins as well.”

“Heat?” Azlenr asked.

The Kavalian doctor shook his head. “It’s not something I have ever seen General. Not heat though for then it would be blackened and burned. This is some sort of energy that has no heat. It is the same with the second Puma Bane troop. The wound is clean and punched through his entire body obliterating his spine and most of his internal organs.”

Azlenr looked at Byka. “A new weapon?”

“No noise was heard Azlenr.” Byka said. “A firefight... even a single weapon would have been heard by someone. Notice was only taken when they did not report in.”

“How many ground engagements have we had with the Lycavorians Byka?” Azlenr asked.

“To my knowledge... only four. The outpost that was destroyed within the Erebus Expanse, our forces on Iraruzu, the attack against Central Command and Marshall Pusintin’s encounter with them on Enurrua.” Byka answered. “That does not include the attack on their colony by that fool Qurot twenty-six years ago.”

“Pull every bit of intelligence from all of those engagements.” Azlenr spoke. “All of it. Have your Intelligence people moved to the main base here. I will do the same. I want them pouring over every scrap of information from those four battles. I want to know if this has been seen before.”

Byka nodded his head. “As you order.” He spoke.

“I want additional DAGGER patrols up within the next hour. Have them range out two hundred kilometers from each settlement in every direction.” Azlenr spoke. “We may get lucky and see something from the air.”

“They could have anti-air weapons.” Byka said.

Azlenr shook his head. “How? We detected no ships in the system when we arrived. Even if they were Shrouded... who in their right mind would remain on this planet to confront us?” He looked at Byka. “No... this has to be an isolated unit of Durcunusaan who were here for something else. I want to question the vampire soldier that Marsin captured. We...”

All of them turned when Makali rushed in out of breath. Azlenr straightened up. “Makali what is wrong?” He asked.

“General... we just received a report that Major Marsin has executed nearly fifty civilians in reprisal for the attack on his team.” Makali stated.

“I gave no such orders! My orders were not to punish the civilians!” Azlenr screamed. “Where? Where is he?”

“The settlement to the south of us here.” Makali answered.

“Fuck!” Azlenr screamed as he strode for the door. “Byka... bring your security team! Meka will fly us!”

CHAPTER FOUR

AUSTROVA

HOME OF COREN RE MYDALA

CAPITAL CITY OF MYDALA

SOUTHERN BANKS OF KONABI RIVER

FEBRUARY 4TH, 0745, EST

Coren Re Mydala stood before the huge glass window that overlooked the Konabi River and the huge patio built above the river connecting to his home. His home was ten kilometers outside of the capital city on twenty square kilometers of his family's land. It was the same home he had been born and raised in. The same home that his children had been born in and now it was the same home they had returned to as adults. Something that, not so long ago, Coren had feared he would never see.

Coren stared at the many river darts that scooted along the surface of the watercourse as Vanari enjoyed themselves or began their long treks beside the river banks on their way to work in the city. The river was nearly a kilometer wide here, and in the distance along the winding banks he could see several other homes of the wealthy Vanari who lived in them. Wealth and power. Two things that had almost torn his life asunder Coren knew. Two things that had nearly taken from him all that he had ever cared for. He turned from the window and looked at Arduri, Caliria and Nirilo sitting among the many comfortable couches and chairs speaking animatedly with each other. The stunning Lycavorian female sat beside Nirilo, her slim hand on his thigh. All of the years that had passed him by and only in these last six weeks had he truly learned who his children were inside. Coren turned back to window and thought of Devra. He had loved her once, and she had loved him. His lust for more had pushed her away and eventually led to their break. He was happy for her now, very happy. She had found someone who treated her as she should be treated. As she deserved to be treated. He didn't love her anymore... if he ever truly did to be honest with his emotions... but his respect and admiration for her had pushed all of his darker feelings away. Devra had done what he should have done many years ago.

Coren Re Mydala had seen things in the past six weeks that had called into question all that he had ever believed. Call into question his false beliefs and then shattered them upon a mountain of legitimacy and reality. Everything he had ever believed had been dashed apart to be filled with truth and knowledge. The old Coren Re Mydala would have dismissed this, but the new Coren Re Mydala had had his eyes opened to the truth and he had embraced it wholly. He turned back to look at his children once more. Naesta was not among them, electing to remain with those she had discovered and now loved, but he had spoken to her just last week as he had several times since returning. She was happier than he had ever seen her, and Coren knew it was because of what she had found. The Spartan Joci was a terrifying visage to say the least with his ebony skin and dreadlock hair, but his devotion to his daughter was just as intense as his devotion to his first mate Ceuma as well. He looked forward to meeting them in person for their love for his daughter and Naesta's for them was something that no one could deny.

Arduri was no different. Her skin reflected her happiness in what she had discovered for it was more blue than he had ever seen it and everyone knew the bluer a Vanari's skin got only showed the happiness flowing within them. Denali Leonidas treated her as a precious gem, no different than how he treated Lisisa. Watching Arduri and Lisisa together with him could be inspiring and also very humorous. Finally meeting the Lycavorian female that had so entrapped his son's heart was a blessed moment. Jodae was a vision with reddish/blond hair and dazzling green eyes. The love she had for Nirilo was very real and on display the moment he met her. He did not think it was possible for a Lycavorian female to be attracted to a Vanari, something Jodae proved wrong within moments of meeting her. Amazingly she and Coren had hit it off within moments and ten minutes after meeting her, Jodae had Coren convinced beyond any doubt that her love for Nirilo was genuine and complete.

And finally... there was Caliria.

As his eyes fell upon her Coren felt a momentary pang of intense guilt sweep through him. He dismissed it just as quickly for Caliria had forgiven him completely for all the years he had denied her and she demanded he did not speak of it again. It was a strength that his oldest daughter possessed that Coren did not think he was capable of.

“This is a future of our making now papa.” She had told him. “And this future has no desire for the sins of our past to reside within it.”

Caliria was right of course and Coren Re Mydala had wrapped his arms around that just as wholeheartedly as she now had. Caliria had changed so much in the last weeks and Coren knew it was due in large part to her constant companion and now very close friend Paga. The female Lycavorian Durcunusaan officer had been just the anchor Caliria had needed to climb from her abyss of humiliation, questions, shame and regret. Even as she had helped them to plan, Caliria had immersed herself in the data library onboard the ARCHDEMON, learning all there was to learn about the Lycavorian people and especially the young man who had so captured her essence. She had been training every day with Paga, her body becoming lean and muscular and her mind no longer fearing anything. Her reborn confidence bubbled forth every waking moment. She had taken to wearing the coral red pendant that shimmered in the sunlight, the jewel resting on the simple silver chain and dangling between her full breasts in view of everyone. He did not know what symbol the pendant represented and he had been meaning to ask Denali. It was a question he would pose to him this morning as his eyes caught Denali's large form move from the kitchen area of his home sharing a joke with one of Coren's trusted employees.

Denali had spent considerable time with Caliria these past weeks and Coren knew that she was learning when she was with him. Learning of history and culture and about so many other things, including the man she desperately wanted to feel wrap his arms around her. Coren also knew Denali was helping her to refine and control her new Mindvoice abilities for he had seen her do many things that no Vanari could do. If there was ever a Vanari that was moving into the future with no doubts, a Vanari that could be called a Lycavorian in her heart, it was his daughter. She loved Androcles Leonidas and the others with every breath she took. What had happened between her and the Eridiani Franklin just after returning to Austrova had been a colossal mistake. It was also mostly Coren's mistake, for his actions had been the main contributing factor to Caliria's confusion and pain when she had returned to her homeworld. She had been clinging to the ideals he had espoused for so long that it had fought an intense battle within her about how she should feel. Whatever Paga had told her or shown to her, Caliria was very different. She was a Princess now... a Princess of the Lycavorian Union... and the times he had gone to the ship with her he saw this reflected in the actions of the men and women on that ship towards her.

Coren sipped his juice once more as Denali came up to him by the window. Denali Leonidas was unlike any Lycavorian he had ever met. Coren could sense there was a darkness within this young man, much like the one within his brother Androcles, yet they controlled it and embraced it as part of who they were. Denali Leonidas was humorous and playful, but Coren knew that he was also extremely intelligent and he had already witnessed what Denali could do if he was angry and was pressed too hard. Like his brother he wielded a power that Coren did not really understand, and while he was no where near as strong as his brother with this power, Coren doubted even the vaunted Vanari Cadre Commandos could stand against this young man for very long.

"This reminds me of the Evrotas River that runs through Sparta." Denali spoke sipping his mug of coffee. "Peaceful and contemplative."

Coren turned fully and looked out over the river once more nodding his head. "There have been many mornings when I have stood here and just absorbed the beauty of it." He said. He looked at Deni. "Dyack was picked up ten minutes ago by Dutkne and his detail. They were able to escape notice. He will arrive shortly."

Denali nodded. "It will be interesting to see what the Eridiani told him." He said.

Coren took a deep breath. "Denali I must..."

Deni turned and looked at him. "No." He stated simply. "Caliria told me you might try to apologize but I'm sure she already told you what I would say."

Coren glanced back to Caliria and then returned his eyes to Denali. "Yes she did."

Deni nodded his head. "Then listen to her sir. She is Andro's wife and mate now, a Princess of the Lycavorian Union, but that does not make her any less your daughter. And that makes her happier than you know, especially now. Your strength is now hers, and Arduri's. My people do not believe in dwelling in the past Coren Re Mydala. Your eyes have been opened and your actions since discovering what you have are all the apology we will ever need. Let the past stay where it is intended. In the past."

"Will your brother see it that way?" Coren asked him. "He... he still frightens me in many ways."

Denali chuckled softly. "Hell... you aren't alone there... he frightens everyone." He said. "When you meet our father you will see where he gets it from."

"These last weeks have been enlightening to say the least." Coren spoke looking out the window. "I can't believe I actually believed what that gypsy woman told me so many years ago. That I let all this happen because of what she said. I... I almost lost my children."

Denali looked at him contemplatively. "Maybe you just misinterpreted what she said sir." He spoke.

Coren looked at him. "What do you mean?"

“Perhaps when she said you would lose all that you cared for she really meant that you would awake to see that all you cared about before no longer mattered.” Denali told him. “The power and the wealth and the influence. Perhaps she meant that you would eventually see things differently when compared to what truly mattered to you. The love of family, of friends, that everything else would pale in comparison to that.”

Coren stared at him for a long moment. “I must admit I never thought of it in that context Denali.” He said finally. Coren smiled at him as his spirits were boosted even more. “Not until this very moment. You are right!”

Denali smiled. “Glad to see I am. Lisisa says I’m never right.”

Coren looked at him with wide eyes. “Well... you are this time young man.” He stated. “There really is nothing you would not do for her. And for my daughter. Is there?”

Denali glanced back and let his dark eyes fall on Arduri and her petite form. Like Lisisa, her body was a power packed temple as far as he was concerned. When they were together he found his stamina increased and he could not get enough of either of them. Her white blond hair was shiny and long and her scent filled his mind and aura just as much as Lisisa’s. He turned back to Coren. “I would not be who I am without them.” He answered softly. “I fought what I felt for her at first you know; Lisisa didn’t but I did. I finally realized she was meant for me... for Lisisa and I... and we for her. By a power much higher than us. When I finally recognized that, I embraced it. There are not many times when my people can resist what our blood calls for us to do sir. It’s just not part of who we are.”

“Will Androcles forgive her?” Coren asked softly.

Denali looked back at Caliria and then turned his eyes back to Coren. “My brother may be many things sir, but he is no fool. Caliria is just as much a part of him as Sadi or Ne’Veha or Carisia or Lu’ria. He made a mistake letting her return here.” Deni held up his hand when Coren was about to reply.

“Mistake?” Coren gasped. “He...”

“Wait... before you comment let me explain something. Andro is... he is closest to his instincts Coren... more so than any of us. A large part of the reason for that I believe is because our mother carried him for several months in her womb and he was fully aware of all around him. He had bonded with Elynth and he could see with her eyes. He could see how our father acted with our mothers. The instinctive emotion and sense of purpose. My father did not follow his instincts once and he almost lost our mother. Andro may try to make others believe he is not like our father, but they are so much alike it is scary to see them together sometimes. He made the same mistake as our father.”

“I don’t think I understand.” Coren said.

Denali met his eyes. “Andro let her go because of you.” He said. “He thought it might be a way to show you that we were different from what you believed. Had he followed what his instincts told him, he would not have made that decision. Caliria would have remained with him on Earth until her mind and emotions were clear. She knows she is meant to be with him sir, she’s known since she began having the dreams while still a prisoner. She told me that during one of our talks.”

“So what happened is my fault in a way.” Coren said softly. “Her pain at thinking she has lost him is my fault.”

Denali shook his head quickly. “No... not really. Everything happens for a reason Coren. If Caliria had not returned with us... I doubt things would have taken place as they have. Your eyes would not have been opened and we would not be working towards our goals in the way we are now.”

“If she had remained, what we are working towards would never have been revealed to me. To us.” Coren said.

Denali shook his head. “Are you so sure? Perhaps not in the way it has happened, but it would have come to pass regardless.” He said. “Our two peoples were meant to be friends and allies. I firmly believe that now.” Deni said. “And I will honor my brother’s word to you when it comes to the Eridiani and the OSG.”

“It just seems...” Coren looked at him. “The more we discover... the more time I spend around you and Dutkne... it seems that this is something that should have happened long ago. It is so familiar to me, working beside you, and yet I know it has never happened before now.”

“Andro believed that the High Coven and Lycavorian Union were always meant to be friends and allies. The path our peoples took to reach that goal is not the one that should have been followed... but the end result was the same. I believe it is no different than what is happening now between us and the Vanari.” Denali looked out over the river. “I would not worry about what will happen Coren. Andro is stubborn as a Folcani Wood Beetle... but I wouldn’t be a bit surprised if he already knows and feels that what happen with Caliria is his fault. Someone or something will eventually kick him in the mida and make him realize that. Probably Sadi. You’ll see when he gets here.”

Coren’s head lifted when he heard the Skycar beginning to land. “Then we must insure when he gets here that my people do not throw their future away by dismissing him.”

Denali nodded. “That would be a good thing.”

“...were surprised that I had suddenly become so interested in such things but when I explained to them the reasons we came up with they were finally convinced.” Dyack spoke as he sat on the couch next to Coren and Dutkne.

“So there is no rationale to think they might suspect anything?” Coren asked.

Dyack looked at him. “Unless they have learned how to hide the adrenalin dump into their bodies when they lie... no.” He glanced at Denali. “What you schooled me to look for was exactly what I saw and smelled Denali.” Dyack turned back to Coren. “They do not realize that my people are Lycavorians that simply can not shift our forms. I don’t believe anyone realizes that or what it means and that is what has made it advantageous for us in the past. We have the same skills as our Lycavorian brothers and sisters, the enhanced senses and our healing factors, albeit we have not used them to the extent of Denali and his faction of Lycavorians. We drew away from the instincts that the wolf within us provide to our people because we can not shift. That was a mistake, and one I intend to begin rectifying as soon as I am able. Teaching me what to look for in their scents was just the first step.”

“So what are the details?” Deni asked.

“They most definitely have contacts within your government Coren.” Dyack spoke looking at him. “It only took them a week to confirm the information I gave to them that three of our future trade contracts with the Vanari were being carefully weighted heavily in favor of the Vanari and I was not pleased with that. This also served to convince them that I was genuine in my interests.”

“I knew nothing of this Dyack.” Coren spoke quickly. “Not until Caliria and Arduri discovered the details.”

Dyack shook his head. “I can not hold this information against you Coren.” He told him. “This was not your doing. Thankfully for us it was the perfect excuse for me to turn to the Eridiani for future business.”

Deni nodded. “Just as they had planned all along.” He said.

Dyack nodded. “They knew we would not be happy about these trade agreements or the terms and it would force us to look elsewhere to move our products. Conveniently the Eridiani and the OSG would be ready to just step right in. This would give them a conduit into our government and also allow the OSG to begin trying to establish another outlet for their slavery ring of Vanari females.”

“Surely your government and those in our government who are not involved would see that the sudden increase of Vanari females on your home planet as something not entirely legal Praetor.” Caliria spoke now.

“Unfortunately Caliria, there is a sizeable underground black market on Lentani.” Dyack admitted with some embarrassment. “Items that I and other Praetors before me have forbid our people to have. Mainly weapons and different kinds of drugs. This same criminal underground would undoubtedly be the ones to participate in the buying and selling of your females. There is a substantial demand for the Alkay that your females secrete from their pores Caliria. More than I believe the Vanari realize. You... you more than anyone should know that.”

Caliria met his eyes and nodded slowly. “Yes.”

“My security forces are aware of the existence of this Black Market and they destroy different cells whenever they are found, but it runs deep within the social castes of my people and it has for hundreds if not thousands of years. To stamp it out completely would require far more resources than I have.” Dyack said. “And as much as it truly pains me to say... there could be men and women very close to me that are involved in this who would not look kindly on me trying to destroy it.”

“Your honesty now only reinforces your commitment to ending this sir.” Denali told him. “It’s why Andro and I agreed to allow Lisisa to return to Earth with your mate and a political delegation.”

Dyack looked at him and nodded. “I fear that may bring unknown troubles as well when it is discovered, especially with those in control of the Rothryn Science Academy, but it needed to be done.” Dyack waved his hand. “We will deal with that when the time comes. Now we must end this slavery of the Vanari before it becomes worse than it is. A general destabilization of their government is not good for anyone in the Beta Quadrant, including my people.”

Dutkne moved from the couch behind Arduri now. “I have my internal security people shadowing those within the Protectorate that we know are involved in this. The surveillance has revealed three more senior members of my government that are indirectly involved.”

“What does indirectly mean Dutkne?” Arduri asked as he moved and sat beside her.

Dutkne shook his head as he handed the data pad to her to review. “They do not provide material support but their positions within my government allow them to pass different bills and maneuver appropriations that ultimately help the OSG in their goals.”

“And they do this willingly?” Coren asked.

Dutkne nodded his head. “All of them are making quite a bit of credits and then securing those credits in accounts outside Protectorate space. There is also reason to believe there may be quite a few Vanari females being held by these men and women in secure locations on our homeworld and other planets within Protectorate space. I have my people trying to discover if this is true so we can rescue them when we decide to move. We’re also going to go after their assets... mainly within the Enverr Dominion.”

“The Enverr?” Arduri gasped.

Dutkne nodded again. “Yes... I was surprised as well. The Enverr do not have the most lawful or trusting society, however their banking restrictions are nonexistent and it is easy to hide credits there. For a price of course.”

“Lawful? That is a kinder word than I would have used Dutkne.” Coren spoke moving to sit beside Caliria.

Dutkne nodded. “True enough.”

“Bad people I take it?” Deni asked.

Coren looked at Deni now. “They are nothing more than a collection of rogue mercenary groups and clans who have formed a pseudo government of affiliation, albeit a very large one.” He watched Caliria pour more juice into his mug and he smiled lovingly at her before turning back to Deni. “I dare say they are more than a match for the OSG in many ways, however most of them are extremely violent and secretive in their actions and they refuse to do business with the OSG.”

Dyack nodded his head. “If they ever got smart and pooled their combined resources they would be a formidable force.”

“Why haven’t they?” Deni questioned.

“The infighting between the Clan leaders.” Coren replied. “There are hundreds of clans... perhaps thousands... we don’t know for sure because we have never attempted to establish relations with them. All of them with their own ideas of how to do things. Blood Feuds between the clans is a daily occurrence. They do not trust each other. They don’t trust anyone for that matter.”

“We have encountered them outside the borders of Protectorate space on several different occasions.” Dutkne told him. “The encounters usually end up being hostile. They are always claiming territory that either does not belong to them or is considered free space. Thankfully they do not possess the level of technology to stand for very long against any of us. They usually avoid most areas where military ships are active and try to target civilian transports and colonies.”

“The Rothryn have conducted several joint operations with the Vanari fleet to punish them for one transgression or another.” Dyack said with a nod. “As Dutkne said... their ships are mainly small and underpowered. They can not stand against several cruisers of any kind and when we have met them on the ground, between our forces and the Vanari Cadre Commandos, we quickly destroyed them.” Dyack looked across the table at Dutkne. “Dutkne... could these people within your government be passing them information or materials?”

“It’s possible... but we’ve seen no sign of that.” Dutkne replied honestly. “Most of our military advancements, weapons and engines, have been localized and compartmentalized as Andro calls it. It is something my grandfather was very adamant about; even more so after he discovered Shiria had given many such technological advances to Andro’s branch of our people on Earth. While the Union had Flatspace technology because of the Pralors who settled on Lycavore, they did not implement it with their Shi Viskas until the rebellion began in. Shiria gave this technology to those on Earth, something my grandfather was not happy about when he discovered it. Ever since then we have been brutally protective of any military project we worked on. Very few men and women knew of them while they were being worked on and once they came online fully it was too late to profit from them since the military controlled the access to them.” Dutkne looked at Coren. “It’s why you did not discover our engine advancements until just recently.”

“Could the Enverr be part of the OSG channels?” Caliria asked. “They may not trust each other but that does not mean they are not working together.”

“Nothing outward that we can tell. At least not from the Protectorate end. Just the credit accounts.” Dutkne said. “There is no way to be sure though as Caliria says.”

“The OSG is more than competent enough not to have to use or associate with the Enverr in any way.” Coren said. “However, I suggest all of us begin to discretely look for any possible associations.”

Dyack nodded. “I agree Coren.” He spoke. “Just to be safe, I will have my people begin a discrete investigation on the Rothryn end. The information that I have reached out to the OSG will find its way to others on Lentani. Those with less than stellar reputations and contacts no doubt.”

“This Barnak person you told me of Dyack?” Coren asked him surprising both Caliria and Arduri. Apparently their father and Dyack had exchanged far more information than they had known of.

Dyack nodded. “Yes.”

“Will they attempt to use this information against you?” Coren asked.

Dyack met his eyes. “I would.” He replied.

Coren nodded his head. “Then we must proceed more quickly and with greater security. I have several contacts within the Vanari Fleets that I trust implicitly. I can give them several communications codes that would allow them to coordinate securely with people you trust Dyack. If these men on your world try to move against you, we will need to get you off your planet quickly under the ruse of some diplomatic mission. At least until the truth is known.” He said.

“My son.” Dyack spoke. “I will inform Kineto. He commands a medium cruiser that I have used in the past for diplomatic transport. It will not look strange if I need to do this. My brother Loro commands our family’s Fleets, but I do not wish to involve him just yet. I need to shield him for the moment until we need him. If we need him.”

Coren nodded. “Androcles will be arriving within weeks. Ardan no doubt plans to spring his little trap on him when he is standing before the entire Board of Regents. That is when it will have the most effect. He will place full blame on him for everything.”

Caliria glanced at her father. “Papa... they will not try to arrest him will they?” She gasped. “Or Deni before he arrives?”

“That would be a singularly stupid thing to attempt.” Dutkne spoke up. “He must know the Protectorate would never allow Deni to be arrested. We would take him offworld before we allowed that.”

“But would they attempt it with Androcles?” Dyack asked. “Very few of your Senior Regents saw the transmission we did Coren. They do not know what this young man is capable of. Attempting to arrest him could set off a change of events that might rapidly spiral out of our control.”

Coren shook his head. “I don’t know. Arden has almost completely ceased speaking with me. I am getting the information from others who are still friendly to me but nothing directly from him.”

Deni looked at him. “That could also mean he’s trying to put distance between you and him in preparation for some type of move against you.”

“Cruor did tell me I would regret shaming him papa. He said he and his father would not let what I did stand.” Arduri stated.

“You shamed no one!” Coren snapped. “You acted just as you were suppose to act! Not one thing you did was outside of our established laws. The family contracts were not signed and completed and no transfers took place! Eyon Ahn Vernalo and his son can go right straight to hell! Especially since we know they are involved with this.”

Arduri glanced at her sister with a hidden smile in her eyes that only Caliria understood. This was the father both of them had wanted for many years. Now that he had emerged, they were not about to let him go back into hiding. A quick glance to their brother showed that he too felt the same way and no doubt Naesta would be very pleased as well.

Dyack looked up at Deni. “You should increase the security you already have on Coren and the others Denali Leonidas. Arden will not move directly against me because once he discovers my new associations with the OSG he will consider us... friendly. At least to a point.”

Deni nodded. “I’ll see to it.” He said. “What about you?”

“I will be safe for the moment.” Dyack spoke. “Barnak may have twisted one of my sons to his way of thinking but not the two who are most important. I can manipulate Anroth for the time being but he is not stupid. He will eventually discover his mother and sisters have gone to Earth and with Barnak’s contacts he will discover this false ruse I have established with the OSG and the Eridiani.”

“But Kelelm is with your mate and daughters.” Dutkne said.

Dyack nodded his head. “He also insured I would be protected when he left.” He said. “If I feel the need for more I will come to you Denali. Right now we need for me to nurture this new contact with the OSG until we have the evidence we need to expose them all.”

Deni looked at him. “You seem like you are looking forward to this.” He said.

Dyack grinned and looked at Coren who was also smiling. “Oh... I haven’t had this much fun since I was a young man chasing Aleatia along the streets of our city trying to get her to notice me.” He laughed.

“This could get you killed Dyack.” Dutkne spoke with a sobering tone.

Dyack chuckled. “You don’t know how many males were chasing Aleatia at the time.” He answered with a wide smile.

Dutkne and Denali couldn’t help but smile. “That sounds like something my father would say.” Deni spoke with a grin. “When he has the scent of one or more of my mothers in his head there is very little that will deter him. Most people just stay the hell out of his way until he finds them.”

Dyack sat back on the couch. “I truly look forward to meeting your father Denali. And your brother... when he arrives.” He said.

Coren nodded. “As do I.”

Dyack took a deep breath. “We have our people where they need to be. Coren and I will become the focal points in the very near future. I trust your security will not let any of us down young man?” Dyack said looking at Denali.

Denali smiled as well. “That will never happen.” He said.

Dyack nodded. “Then we continue to do what we have been doing and meet back here in one week. Just as we have been.” He looked at them. “What we are doing now will effect the futures of all three of our peoples. We need to get this right and bring them all down together. It will not work otherwise.”

Coren nodded. “And it needs to be after Arden makes his play when Androcles is before the Board. Then he will be vulnerable and we can present everything at once while the entire Board is in session.”

Caliria looked up. “Papa... you do realize what Androcles will do if we don’t succeed?” She asked.

Coren looked at her. “I don’t follow Caliria.”

“Regardless of what Regent Ardan does... if we do not have the information we need by that time, if we can not prove what we are trying to prove... Androcles will sever all ties with the Vanari when Ardan makes his accusations. He will not hesitate for a moment papa.” Caliria said. “He will pull all of our trade agreements and contacts with the Protectorate. All will be lost then.”

Coren looked at Denali and saw Deni nod. “Caliria is my brother’s wife and mate Coren. She has seen inside his thoughts. On this I think we should listen to her.”

Coren turned back to his daughter. “Then we will make sure everything is in order when that time comes.” He told her. “I promise you.”

SOLMAR

SOUTHERN SETTLEMENT

FEBRUARY 4TH, 1120 HRS, EST

Azlenr brushed aside the two Puma Bane guards outside of the building they had taken as their headquarters and stormed into the entrance, Byka, Kameka and Makali right on his heels. Marsin was just turning from talking to a junior officer when Azlenr cleared the entrance.

“Ah General... I am glad you are here.” Marsin stated. “We have new...”

Azlenr’s right fist slammed into Marsin’s jaw like a sledgehammer. Azlenr’s Macoe was a very large man even for a Kavalian, fully six foot five and easily two hundred and forty pounds, if not more. He unleashed all of that size and strength on Marsin in a single blow that spun the Puma Bane Commander completely around and dropped him to the floor of the building with stars dancing behind his eyes and pain coursing through his body. The Puma Bane troops from outside and the one Marsin had been talking to immediately dropped into combat stances and began bringing their weapons up. Byka, Kameka and Makali all had their weapons out instantly as Azlenr towered over Marsin.

Byka jammed the barrel of his ARSOC into the closest Puma Bane troop’s chest even as his rifle was halfway up. “Who dies first?” Byka snarled.

“Who commands here dog?” Azlenr screamed down at Marsin. “This is my operation! My command! Now tell your sheep to lower their weapons or I will have all of you butchered where you stand!” Azlenr reached down and grabbed Marsin’s uniform, yanking the man to his feet none too gently. “Do it now!”

Marsin glared at Azlenr with murder in his eyes. Both of his lips had been torn up by his own teeth from Azlenr’s blow. The General’s knuckles were like calloused rocks impacting his face. He had not been hit that hard since his father beat him as a boy for disobeying him. He lifted his hand and wiped the back of his hand across his bloody mouth. There was no way he could get away with killing Azlenr for striking him in front of his men and tarnishing his status. Not with so many witnesses. Even his own men would turn on him out of self preservation if he killed the General. He glanced at his trio of Puma Bane troops.

“Leave us.” He snarled loudly.

Azlenr’s burning eyes did not leave Marsin as the three Puma Bane soldiers lowered their weapons and then quickly departed the headquarters building. At least they were smart enough to not want to get caught in the middle of what was brewing between their commander and the famous Kavalian General. “I will ask you only once more Major Marsin’ Jiate! Who is it that commands this operation?”

“You do General.” He hissed his answer back.

“Yes... I do! And you took it upon yourself to disobey my specific orders not to harm the civilian populous!” Azlenr barked at him. “Explain this to me quickly Major... my tolerance for you is now nearly zero! You know full well what the penalty is for disobeying the orders of a superior in this manner!”

“I was following my orders General!” Marsin snarled back.

“Fifty-three civilians are now dead! Executed in front of countless others by your men!” Azlenr shouted. “I did not give that order Major!”

“No... I did Azlenr.” The new voice spoke calmly and all of them whirled to see Keleru’s face on the monitor that Marsin had been in front of when they entered.

“Prefect?” Azlenr gasped.

“I gave Marsin his orders General.” Keleru stated. “We can not have a civilian populous insurgency beginning after you have only just begun to secure the planet for our use. When he reported to me what happen I gave him permission to execute the civilians to insure this will not continue.”

Azlenr glanced at Marsin with that savage glare. “Did the Major also think to inform you that this attack against his troops was not carried out by civilians Prefect?” He asked turning back to Keleru in the transmission.

“The Major was certain General.” Keleru stated cautiously now. “He told me you... he told me you were hesitating about executing civilians in reprisal to keep this from happening again.”

“Yes... I’m sure that is what the Major told you Prefect.” Azlenr stated. “However, had the Major accompanied me to my medical headquarters, he would now know this attack was not carried out by civilian assets.”

“Who else then?” Marsin snarled.

Keleru blinked within the transmission. “I don’t understand.” He said.

“My Chief surgeon informed me only moments ago that all but two of Marsin’s men were killed by bladed weapons. Swords or Nehtes. Two of them had wounds on their bodies that we have as yet been unable to determine what type of weapon was used. My Intelligence people have informed me that the only Union forces that still carry swords are members of their Durcunusaan.”

“The Durcunusaan?” Keleru snapped coming forward in his chair.

Azlenr nodded. “We also discovered the prints from... from a very large female dragon Prefect.”

“Dragon? Here on Solmar?” Marsin hissed. “Impossible!”

Azlenr looked at him. “Major... as the Prefect is my witness... speak another word and I will remove your tongue from your head!”

“Azlenr there is...” Keleru began.

Azlenr turned back to the monitor. “Prefect... have I ever failed you in the nine hundred years I have served our people as a General under your command? Have I ever failed to secure an objective you gave to me?” Azlenr asked.

“Never.” Keleru answered without hesitation.

“Major Marsin’s and his men executed their part of this mission brilliantly Prefect... but they also killed over four thousand civilians in the process.” Azlenr spoke. “You tasked me with taking this planet and its settlements with as little notice as possible.”

“Yes.” Keleru said.

“The deaths of over four thousand civilians makes that nearly impossible when it is discovered Prefect.” Azlenr stated. “The Bontawillians are not a warring people. They have a small fleet of ships and a militia, but they are not soldiers. When word leaks out, and it will leak out sooner or later when they begin to try and contact this colony, when word leaks out that we have this colony and that many civilians died in the taking of it, what do you think the Union leadership will do?”

“Prefect... the Union will not attempt to retake this...” Marsin began to speak.

“Silence Marsin!” Keleru snarled. “Azlenr... speak to me.”

“We have a Union soldier that was taken by the Major’s men when they secured the settlements.” Azlenr said. “They killed four others that were with him and chased another four into the deep mountain timber before losing contact with them. What the Major did not tell you is that these four Union soldiers killed nearly twenty of his men before falling. Twenty of them Prefect! They were not normal Union troops. They were some sort of special operations team here for relaxation is my guess. The wounds on the bodies of the Major’s men killed last night are consistent with exceptionally skilled warriors that are lethally proficient in the use of swords and spears. At least ten men hit the Puma Bane camp Prefect. Not four. And they had at least one dragon with them. The Bontawillian people do not possess the needed strength or combat skill to kill with such surgical precision. None of them do... no matter how much training they could receive!”

“You... you are telling me there are Durcunusaan on Solmar?” Keleru asked him.

Azlenr nodded. “At least ten... probably twice that. General Byka agrees with me.” He said. “I am taking steps to find and neutralize them Prefect... but killing civilians will not help me accomplish the task you gave to me! It will only incite whoever is out there to conduct more attacks!”

“If they know we will kill civilians in retribution they will stop!” Marsin barked.

“Are you daft Major?” Azlenr shouted at him. “These are Bontawillians! Colonists! Not Lycavorians or elves or vampires. These civilians do not know how to fight! When word finally does get out that we have taken this planet and it is known that we arbitrarily executed civilians, this colony world will jump to the very top of their target lists! Their people will demand it! They will encircle us, cut off any escape route that we have and then slaughter us as you and your men slaughtered those civilians! Any hope we may have had of maintaining this colony as a forward base will be lost!”

“Then we will hold them hostage!” Marsin snarled.

Azlenr ignored him and looked at Keleru. “Prefect... I have the ground forces necessary to secure this planet. I need ships to protect us from Union forces when they do arrive.”

“The union is stretched even thinner than we are Azlenr.” Keleru spoke. “And we replace our clone troops by the thousands every day. Civilian casualties are not a concern of mine at this moment. Your operation is just one of four that we are conducting in order to establish forward bases. We need these bases and if you have to kill a few hundred civilians to do it then so be it. You must use all your options Azlenr'Macoe. You must not fail."

"I do not intend to fail Prefect but executing civilians will not..." Azlenr began to speak but was cut off.

"Major Marsin... your Puma Bane Detachment will refrain from any more civilian executions unless something like this happens again."

"Prefect that is not a good idea." Azlenr spoke quickly. "It could back fire on a colossal scale if executions continue."

"I will not have your men... my men butchered by these Durcunusaan dogs!" Keleru snapped softly. "If this continues then we will show these few Union troops that to remain and continue these attacks is not going to benefit them in the least. It will only spill more civilian blood. Leave the civilians to Major Marsin and you concentrate on securing that colony for our use."

Azlenr bowed his head with a sigh of defeat. "As you order Prefect."

"Marsin!" Keleru snapped seeing the grin on his face within the transmission.

"Prefect!" Marsin barked.

"Major... you are Puma Bane... but you are not above the chain of command. If you ever disobey an order from General Azlenr that does not deal with the civilians on that world I will see to it personally that you and your entire Pride are stripped of their honor and their skins! Is that clear?"

The smirk on Marsin's face had vanished quickly at Keleru's words and he nodded his head. "I understand Prefect."

Keleru nodded. "Make sure you do Major. Make sure you do."

Azlenr glared at Marsin for a long moment, the major not backing down in the least. He lifted his hand and stabbed his finger into Marsin's chest. "You executed the civilians Major... so to keep their rotting bodies from harming our men, you and your Puma Bane troops will collect them and remove the health hazard to the rest of my soldiers!"

Azlenr spun around and marched out of the building, the others following him rapidly to keep up with his long legged stride. He stopped walking halfway to the DAGGER and savagely kicked at an overturned barrel as Byka and Makali came up behind him. Azlenr turned and looked at Byka.

"Find them Byka!" Azlenr said. "Find them and kill them before they do something like this again and Marsin murders more innocent civilians!"

Byka nodded. "I'll put my best teams on it my friend." He said. "We'll find them."

"Makali... I want you to assign as many civilians as you can to labor intensive duties." He spoke. "Moving equipment... manual bunker preparations. Things like that. I want them split into three shifts so we can use as many of them as possible."

"General?" Makali asked confused.

"If they are being used for military purposes then there are fewer for Marsin to execute!" Azlenr hissed softly. "I will not be party to helping him or giving him free reign to killing civilians!"

Makali nodded. "It will require we pull line troops to provide guard duty." He said.

Azlenr nodded. "I know. We can spare several companies for this duty from our reserve." Azlenr said. "Make the commanders understand they are there to guard the colonists and not to interact with them in any way. But they are not to use lethal force!"

"I will give the orders sir." Makali spoke.

Azlenr looked around again his eyes taking in the walls of the settlement. "Have all the Puma Bane detachments moved outside the settlement walls Byka. I do not want our men injured if another attack targeting them comes."

Byka met his eyes. "That will not make Marsin happy."

"Fuck him." Azlenr spat. "I will not have our men targeted for killing civilians when they have nothing to do with it."

"Do you think they will attack again?" Byka asked.

Azlenr looked at him. "That depends." He said. Azlenr looked off into the distance beyond the settlement wall once more. "It depends on what type of man leads these troops." He replied. "Pray it is one who reacts with emotion and compassion and not someone who sees that it does not matter in the least."

“What doesn’t matter?” Byka asked.

“Marsin intends to execute civilians for any minor infraction.” Azlenr said. “I could see it in his eyes. Fucking Puma Bane soldiers!” He swore. “If the commander of these Durcunusaan realizes that no matter what he does, civilians will die, he will attack again.” He turned to face Byka. “I want to talk to this vampire.” He spoke. “Let them know I am coming. I want to find out what we are up against.”

“Prefect... I have the ground forces necessary to secure this planet. I need ships to protect us from Union forces when they do arrive.”

“The union is stretched even thinner than we are Azlenr.” Keleru spoke. “And we replace our clone troops by the thousands every day. Civilian casualties are not a concern of mine at this moment. Your operation is just one of four that we are conducting in order to establish forward bases. We need these bases and if you have to kill a few hundred civilians to do it then so be it. You must use all your options Azlenr’Macaoe. You must not fail.”

“I do not intend to fail Prefect.” Azlenr stated.

“Major Marsin... your Puma Bane Detachment will refrain from any more civilian executions unless something like this happens again.”

“Prefect that is not a good idea.” Azlenr spoke quickly. “It could back fire on a colossal scale if executions continue.”

“I will not have your men... my men butchered by these Durcunusaan dogs!” Keleru snapped softly. “If this continues then we will show these few Union troops that remain it is not going to benefit them in the least to continue their attacks. It will only spill innocent blood. Leave the civilians to Major Marsin and you concentrate on securing that colony for our use.”

“As you order Prefect.”

“Marsin!” Keleru snapped.

“Prefect!” Marsin barked.

“Major... you are Puma Bane... but you are not above the chain of command. If you ever disobey an order from General Azlenr that does not deal with the civilians on that world I will see to it personally that you and your entire Pride are stripped of their honor and their skins! Is that clear?”

“I understand Prefect.”

Sa'roh touched the control panel on the STRIKER's Chart Table and looked at Andro slowly. They had been able to tap into the communications of the Kavalians with relative ease. The encryption was not very sophisticated among individual Puma Bane Communications devices and taking the different channels from the dead bodies and downloading them to Union COM units had allowed them to scan all of their channels and hear the entire conversation that had just taken place.

“Andro?” Sa'roh spoke.

Andro looked up as Cletus walked back up the ramp of the STRIKER and moved to the chart table. “Our team watching the southern settlement just confirmed it.” He spoke softly. “Fifty-three Bontawillians and humans were put up against the outside wall of the settlement and executed. They... they left the bodies to rot where they fell.”

“Nubou!” Andro nearly screamed as he pushed away from the table.

“This Marsin...” Dantio spoke his voice trembling in anger. “I want this man’s nor in my hands!”

They watched silently as Elynth moved up next to Andro and lowered her snout beside his shoulder. His arms moved up and encircled her muzzle as much as they were able and his forehead touched her scales.

You must not blame yourself Andro. Elynth spoke softly. This is not your fault. This man takes pleasure in hurting others. He would have found another way.

Andro nodded his head keeping his skin in contact with her scales and feeling her soothing presence within Mindvoice fill him. He lifted his head finally. I can’t allow this to stand sister.

Elynth nodded her massive head. No you cannot. What does your Spartan soul call for you to do? Make them know it was a mistake. That they never should have come here. Andro answered.

Then make it so. She told him.

Andro turned back to the chart table. “How many Puma Bane troops are on the planet Cletus?” Andro asked as he moved back up to the table.

“Near as our people can determine... a reinforced detachment Milord. Twelve hundred give or take. Two hundred and fifty at each settlement and perhaps another three hundred in reserve here at the southernmost settlement.” He answered. “From what we know... this is their standard size when conducting an operation like this. A little smaller than the ones that hit High Coven worlds according to their Intel reports, but large enough against a colony with no real defenses. And they are living up to their reputation. Stone cold killers and nothing more according to High Coven survivors and officers.”

“And this Marsin character?” Andro asked.

“The signal was coming from the southern settlement Andro.” Sa'roh answered that question. “That must be where he has his command.”

“Our long eyes reported that both the generals we saw yesterday afternoon showed up in a hurry.” Cletus said. “That is who was with him when they were talking.”

Andro turned to Sa'roh. “How long before they figure out we can monitor their COMS?” He asked.

Sa'roh shook her head. “I estimate we got hours before someone realizes it. It won't take much Andro. A simple systems check will detect the tap.”

“Then we move now.” He answered. “Where is the smallest contingent?” Andro asked looking at the chart.

Dorian pointed to the northern plains. “This one here.” He answered immediately. “The Northern settlement that sits on the plains. They set up the settlement just at the entrance of the valley that begins at the tip of the mountain range to make use of the river. It's where the ones you killed came from based on numbers.”

“How long will it take our long eyes in the north to get into an overwatch position?” Andro asked.

Dantio looked at Cletus and then back to Andro. “Not more than an hour if they shift and move along this depression. The vegetation is thick enough to hide them until they reach this plateau.”

Andro nodded. “Get them moving.” He spoke. “Two STRIKERS Sa'roh. How many can we carry?”

“Not counting you and Elynth, we can carry sixty per bird if we crammed them tight.” She answered.

“Cram them tight then.” Andro said. “Elynth and I will exit here and sweep in from north of the valley. You'll drop our team right on the north edge of the camp after we ghost it. Daio... I want you leading my team. Dorian... you and Dantio take the second team. Exit over the plains and then you and Ryner sweep in from the south at the same time Elynth and I come in from the north. Dantio, drop right on the south edge of the camp. Shi Viskas active and drive north. We'll drive south and meet in the middle.”

“After... after what we just saw Andro, this murdering ronnus will kill a lot more of the civilians if we do this.” Sa'roh stated.

“He would find some way to kill more anyway. Not attacking them only gives them more time to dig in and fuck us later.” Andro said. “We need to keep them on edge until Sa'sur and General Vengal arrive with the Durcunusaan Division. Then we will drive them out of this fucking sector.”

“What about the civilians Milord?” Haridl asked. “There must be something we can do to keep them safe. Or try to at least.”

Andro looked at Sa'roh. “Can we transmit on their channels with our gear?”

Sa'roh looked at him with a disgusted glare. “Please Andro... I could make it so you can speak to that Kavalian prick Keleru if you want.”

Andro grinned. “He'll get the message soon enough. Copy this transmission of theirs and burst it to Marci and Armetus. They will know what to do with it.”

“Sa'sur's last message was that our Strike Wing had joined with her and they were only waiting for the last parts of the divisions to load out.” Sa'roh told him. “She estimates they'll be back insystem in thirty-four hours.”

They all turned when Vari came running up the ramp.

“Vari?” Andro asked.

“Long eyes from the north and east have reported a large contingent of their DAGGERS lifting off from the spaceport loaded with troops. They spread out south and west once airborne and were burning speed.” Vari said.

Andro nodded. "They're looking for us." He said.

"And wasting their time since we aren't even on the same continent." Dorian spat. "They are thinking one dimensional fervon. Not outside of the box. Unless these ships begin to move for the ocean then they haven't even thought we could be on another continent. They are sticking with the west and south because the terrain is more agreeable and they don't realize we have our own ships."

"And we'll use that to our advantage until they smarten up." Andro said. "Sooner or later they'll figure out we have transport of our own. And it's only sixty kilometers across the ocean to reach us."

"I'll make sure Captain Trenou has her triage ready to receive any casualties." Sa'roh spoke.

Andro looked at her and nodded. He turned back to the others. "If it wears the uniform of a Puma Bane soldier kill it." He growled. "I don't care if they are kneeling in their own blood and screaming for mercy. Kill them. No prisoners people. No mercy. Once we have secured the settlement we'll load the STRIKERS with as many civilians as we can and then start heading back north while Sa'roh brings them back here. Sa'roh?"

"We can drop off and return in under an hour if we stay low and use max thrusters across the ocean." She answered.

Dantio nodded. "We should be able to cover ten kilometers in that time." He said. "If all goes well... they won't even begin knowing something is wrong until you pick up the second group of civilians. By that time they'll have realized this settlement is silent and send someone to investigate. It's close... but we've done tighter ops."

"I'll buy us more time." Andro stated. "We just need to keep the civilians moving as fast as they are able."

They all nodded. Things were about to heat up considerably. They looked up at Andro and Dorian as the two brothers backed away from the table with surprised looks on their faces. Dantio stood up fully.

"Milord? What is it?"

Andro looked at him. "My sister Lisisa and Jeth have entered the system... Dorian!" He gasped.

Dorian nodded his head. "I feel her too. Both of them." He said.

Andro's eyes narrowed. "I feel... someone else is with her." He said softly. "Someone that I..." Andro looked up. "Sa'roh prep a data burst! I can see what she is planning and we need to give guidance to the Captain of her ship! Dorian and I will make contact with her within Mindvoice." Sa'roh didn't hesitate and began moving back to the cockpit.

ULU REAPER

ENTERING SOLMAR SYSTEM

TIME TO SOLMAR COLONY: THIRTY-SEVEN MINUTES

"...go over this one more time." Lisisa was speaking to the group in the landing bay of the REAPER. "The KADEN will carry the bulk of the Spartan company; the rest will be split up between two STRIKERS. I'm holding one in reserve and to act as an escort. Kelelm... you and your people will be on my STRIKER with Jeth and I and will go in with Eotharon and the other seven Durcunusaan that are accompanying us."

Kelelm nodded his head now dressed in the Mark V ArmorPly body armor and delighting in the ability to extend and retract the additional Dragon Armor. He hadn't stopped playing with it until just recently. "We will help Eotharon to secure a landing zone if it is determine it is needed."

Lisisa nodded. "If I know my brother, he probably has already established some sort of central point and has scouts out watching the Kavalians." She spoke looking at the chart of the planet. "The settlements for this colony were all centrally located within a hundred kilometers of this massive waterfall where they were getting most of their power from. The REAPER will remain out of the immediate planetary exclusion zone and we'll go in with our ships. We'll make contact with Andro and then move to his location."

"Why not just move right in?" Kelelm asked.

Lisisa looked at him with a small smile. "The last time a pilot tried to enter my brother's airspace without telling him first, they nearly got their asses blown out of the sky. When they landed he about chewed the poor girl up and spit her out."

Kelelm nodded. "I see." He stated. "I think I'm glad it wasn't me."

Lisisa chuckled. "It was our sister Normya so it wasn't that bad." She answered. "Jeth and I should have been able to contact him within Mindvoice by now... we can feel them but we can't penetrate their shields which tells me something is going on." Lisisa said.

"You would... you would be able to feel and speak with him even from this distance?" Harira asked with surprise in her eyes.

"Feel him yes. Speak with him no. Not unless he and Dorian lower their MV shields. No one but Sadi or one of his other mates would be able to penetrate his shields as high as they are now." Lisisa answered. "If we can sense him, then I know he feels us. He's not contacting us for a reason."

Aleatia looked at her from beside Sehri. "We have only just entered the planetary system Lisisa. We have... we have trouble reaching someone on the other side of our planet using our Etheric abilities and you would be able to speak with him now? That is amazing."

"Unfortunately it's not helping us right now." Lisisa snapped impatiently as she looked at the map on the table.

Sehri trembled just a little as the overwhelming Mindvoice resonance rushed through her and caused warmth to spread through her young body. She shivered in incredible delight as an aura more powerful than anything she had ever felt in her young life, far more powerful than even her own father, greeted her with sincere tenderness and... and desire as it skipped along her shields. The power and aura she sensed could have easily overwhelmed her shields yet it only swarmed around her mind letting her know it was seeking to communicate with her. Sehri didn't hesitate and lowered her shields enough to allow what the aura sought. She gasped softly as her body then reacted in a way it never had before, the nipples of her medium sized breasts becoming instantly hard and aroused, far more than she had ever been able to illicit by her own ministrations. It also caused her scent to spike very high which caused her mother to glance at her with wide eyes and some of the younger Durcunusaan troops to shift uncomfortably when they smelled her. The word had already come down however, and Sehri was off limits to any unmated male on the ship for she had already chosen who she would give herself to.

"Sehri?" Aleatia questioned.

"He... Andro says to stand by... stand by for a data burst." Sehri stammered as Lisisa's eyes grew wide and she looked at Sehri.

Lisisa moved away from the portable chart table. "He is... he's talking to you Sehri?" She gasped.

Harira looked at Sehri with wide eyes as well. "How is that possible?" She gasped.

Aleatia gripped Sehri's arms. "Sehri?"

"They are... they are going to mount an attack." Sehri continued her glaucous colored blue eyes wide and expressing sincere delight at what she felt within her. "He says... he says the situation on the surface has changed somewhat and he is sending you a data burst so that you know what he needs you to do." Sehri blinked at her. "He is also very angry Lisisa. I can feel his... his rage."

"At me?" Lisisa asked somewhat worried. She truly did not want to be on the receiving end of a verbal reprimand from her brother.

Sehri shook her head quickly. "No... something the Kavalians... something your enemies have done." Sehri blinked several times again. "He is only a little angry at you."

The internal COM system on the REAPER activated and Lunerr's voice filled the landing bay surprising them all.

"Princess... we are receiving a data burst from Prince Androcles's STRIKER on the surface." Lunerr's voice echoed. "We have updated Intel! Forwarding it to you now. They are preparing to attack a static Kavalian position and..."

Lisisa winced slightly at the sound of his voice. "Lunerr... route the data stream to the portable Chart Table and then standby!" She barked.

"Wait Lisisa!" Sehri gasped. "He is... he is moving away from the others with your brother and..."

Hello Lisi! Andro and Dorian's voices filled hers and Jeth's minds and this caused Jeth to move his massive bulk closer to her. Lisisa released a loud sigh of relief and gripped the edges of the table as she felt the connection expand to include all those capable of Mindvoicing at a Tier Six level and both her brother's auras embraced her warmly. She glanced quickly at Aleatia and Harira and saw their eyes wide in disbelief at the clarity of the connection and the incredible focus.

Andro. Dorian. You are... you are safe? Lisisa asked.

Ah... well if your definition of safe is being on a planet full of Kavalians wanting to kill us... sure. Andro answered her flippantly. We're cozy as hell. Did you bring the popcorn?

Midaeus! Lisisa spat. Andro what is going on?

Lisisa... what are you doing here? Andro asked her. You are supposed to be escorting the Rothryn delegation to Earth.

We intercepted Sa'sur's transmissions. Lisisa answered. You can yell at me later but for now I have another company of Spartans, Jeth and I. What's going on Andro? She asked him again.

To paraphrase father... things are Fubar arande. Andro told her. Link your PI into whatever data disc Lunerr is downloading to. We are lifting off in a few minutes so check your PI while you infiltrate. Send all of the Spartans with you to the Alpha site and have them begin prepping additional defensive sites and expanding the perimeter we have already established. Tell your pilots to stay below sensor level and under Shroud until you get there. You'll see where we are heading and I want you and Jeth above us once Dorian and I hit the camp. Burn anything that gets out of our circle Lisi. No prisoners. The civilians, roughly five hundred of them, have all been herded into the main auditorium building in the center of the settlement so friendly fire is not a concern.

Andro... Lisi began.

What I'm going to do will either work or it won't arande. If it doesn't... there will be time for one Op with our combined force to pull as many civilians off this colony as we can. The rest we will need to leave. Andro told her. Sa'sur and Vengal will not get here in time for us to save them. There are too many Kavalians on the planet and the Puma Bane Commander is a mean motherfucker.

And slightly pissed off that we took out ten of his precious Puma Bane troops! Dorian added. Though the word slightly might be a bit of an understatement.

Sibfla! Lisisa swore.

Have Lunerr maintain his current position. Andro continued. If this goes to hell, we'll come to him. And Lisi... they probably have T19s deployed so be mindful of your position above the settlement. Dorian and I will take out as many as we see... just watch your ass. Deni will kill me if you get hurt.

Yes... and I prefer to continue living since I have only been around a few months now and there is much I would like to experience. Dorian chimed in.

Lisi nodded with a smile at hearing Dorian and feeling how powerful he had become. If she was any judge, these last weeks with Andro and the training he had given him had brought Dorian on a level with her. Understood. We'll see you in less than thirty.

Eotharon didn't hesitate once Androcles ended the connection. He spun around and began barking orders at the top of his lungs throwing Durcunusaan and regular Spartans into action before the first order died away.

Lisi looked at Kelelm first. "This is not going to be pretty. It's much worse than I thought Colonel. You and your men can tag along to observe but no leaving the STRIKER unless we are on the ground and out of the shooting."

Kelelm moved closer. "Three of my men are excellent sharpshooters." He offered. "I know why your brother wishes for you to stop any from escaping his attack. Give us sniper rifles and we can help."

Lisisa shook her head. "This is not your war and I'm not going to involve you!" She hissed.

Kelelm shook his head. "We may call ourselves Rothryn but we are Lycavorian!" Kelelm shouted passionately drawing the attention of many Durcunusaan and regular Spartans who were close enough to hear him. "We carry the same blood as you within us! It does not matter to me that we can not shift... we are still Lycavorian! This is now as much our war as it is yours! You can't begin to imagine how long we have waited for this day to come Princess. I will not sit by while other Lycavorians risk their lives! Not when I can act!"

"Kelelm!" Harira barked at him.

Aleatia looked at Sehri quickly and then to Lisisa. "My son is correct Lisisa." She spoke softly. "I know what my mate would do in this instance. We have... we have waited far too long for this day to come to turn our heads the other way while our people die."

“Lady Aleatia... this... these are not our people!” Harira protested.

“Aren’t they Harira?” Aleatia spoke. “We can not shift our forms as they can as my son has said, but that is the only difference between us! That is the only discernible difference! I know Dyack embraced the Prophecy when he saw the results of the DNA tests! This is what he would do without thinking! It is why he was so eager to help Denali and the Protectorate! We have discovered our future Harira!”

“This is not right!” Harira spat. “I can not allow you to do this! We are not warriors!”

“But we are Shaman Master.” Kelelm answered looking at Lisisa evenly. “We are with you Princess!” Aleatia took Sehri’s arm. “Sehri... we must get out of their way.”

“Mother... I want to go!” Sehri hissed.

“No! Are you crazy child?” Aleatia snapped quickly. “This is best left to those who know what battle is!”

“I know what...” Sehri began to protest. “He is...”

“No!” Aleatia snapped once more as she pulled Sehri out of the way of the troops. “Go with the gods Kelelm. We will see you soon.”

Kelelm nodded to his mother. “And you mother.”

“No!” Sehri protested. “I want to go!”

Kelelm turned to Lisisa. “Princess?”

Lisisa shook her head. “Sibfla... he’s already going to chew my mida for bringing you.” She snapped. “Eotharon! Get them four H40s. High velocity armor piercing rounds. We don’t know what kind of armor the Kavalians will have! Better safe than sorry!”

Kelelm nodded. “Excellent choice!”

“Follow me.” Eotharon said with a smile.

Sehri finally pulled her arm from her mother’s grasp as they were entering the doors for the lift. She gave her mother a gentle push into the elevator and slammed her hand down on the panel. Aleatia turned as the doors began to close.

“Sehri!” She screamed.

“I need to go mother!” Sehri rasped. “I need to go!”

Sehri turned and began heading back towards the STRIKER as the doors closed fully and alarms began to sound in the landing bay. Her wide eyes darted back and forth as she grew closer to the ship, trying to understand what she had felt surging through her during the brief connection. Sehri prided herself on being able to control her emotions and the physical portions of the wolf blood that flowed through her. Her Coming of Age fever as Eotharon had called it was far stronger than her mother had told her it would be. Sehri knew it was because of being on this ship and around so many Lycavorians that embraced their instincts, but it also served to confuse her immensely. Her brother was right, the Rothryn were essentially Lycavorians who could not shift their forms. Aside from that, the DNA tests had proven that there were no other differences in their genetic makeup. Being apart from them for so long and pushing back virtually all of the instincts of their blood because they didn’t know any better was making it that much stronger now that she was among them.

Sehri was so wrapped up within her thoughts that she didn’t see Eotharon’s arm reach out and snag her around her waist. She let out a small scream in surprise and whirled to face him, drawing her hand up and preparing to unleash an Etheric attack until she saw who it was.

“Eotharon!” She gasped gripping his arm.

“You need to return to the bridge and be with your mother Little One.” He told her.

“No! I need... I need to go Eotharon!” She stammered.

“It will not be safe Sehri.” He told her. “We will be dropping into a maelstrom. Prince Androcles... he is like his father and he does not play at war Little One! You must have felt this when he touched you.”

“I must go!” Sehri pressed. “I... Eotharon I...”

“Are you that sure of what your blood calls for Little One? If you... if you do this there will be no going back.” Eotharon asked her.

Sehri met his eyes and answered with no hesitation whatsoever. “Yes.” She replied.

Eotharon stared at her for a moment and then nodded his head. "Then let us get you a uniform. You can not go unprotected."

Sehri clung to his arm as he turned and began to lead her towards the ship.

Lunerr looked at the two Rothryn women as they exited the lift and rushed towards him. Lady Aleatia's two other daughters stood in the corner of the bridge with wide eyes at all the activity and they rushed to their mother's side as Aleatia came up to him.

"Captain... my daughter!" Aleatia spoke. "She pulled away from me! You have to tell Lisisa not to allow her to go!"

Lunerr looked at her. "What?"

"Sehri pulled away from us as we were entering the lift!" Harira explained. "She..."

"She did what?" Osbela demanded. "Is she stupid!"

"She said she needed to go!" Aleatia told her daughters. "She wouldn't listen to me! She was running back towards the ship they were taking and..."

"Captain! STRIKERS are away! KADEN is ten seconds from launch!" The officer barked from across the bridge.

"No!" Aleatia exclaimed.

"You have to recall them!" Harira demanded.

Lunerr shook his head. "I can't!" He told them. "If they return then they miss the window that Prince Androcles wants them in as cover."

Ibani gripped her mother's arms as Aleatia sobbed. "Sehri." Aleatia moaned.

Lunerr turned to his COM officer. "Get me the Princess's STRIKER. Low beam and secure." He turned back to Aleatia. "I can let you talk to her Lady Aleatia. They'll go dark in four minutes but you can talk to her before that."

Sehri looked with wonder at the Mark V ArmorPly that now encased her lithe form. It hugged her like a glove with added armor along the more exposed portions of her body. The armor was far more flexible and lightweight than it appeared and incredibly it was not hot or cumbersome to wear. She turned her head quickly when she felt hands on her waist and she saw Lisisa adjusting something.

"I certainly hope you know what you are doing." Lisisa told her.

Sehri met her eyes. "I have no idea what I'm doing Princess Lisisa." She admitted. "I am only... I am only following what feels right within me. I've never done something like that before."

"This is crazy you know. If... Sehri if what I sense between you and Andro and the others is right... if you get hurt... he will never forgive me for allowing you to come." Lisisa told her.

"Then why... why did you let me get on the ship?" Sehri asked her.

"Because there are only five people in the entire galaxy that could touch my brother when his shields are as high as they are now. Not even our father can do that without forcing his power on Andro. Those five are the women that command his heart and soul. Something tells me that you have just joined that small group. And if he reached out through you then he knows it as well." Lisisa told her. "I can sense his Mindvoice resonance on you as I sense it on Sadi and the others. I can sense their touch on you as well Sehri."

Sehri met her eyes. "I... I can't explain it Lisisa." She said.

"I can." Lisisa said. "Your fever is making you more attune to your body. Your instincts are telling you what you want. That is the wolf within you Sehri. Even though you can't shift your form you are still wolf and your instincts are starting to overpower what your people have forgotten through the millennia."

"What does it mean?" Sehri asked her.

"It means that you belong to them and they belong to you." Lisisa told her. "There is no other explanation. You would never have been able to breach his shields if you were not already part of him in some way." She moved closer to her in the press of bodies. "You've been feeling them within Mindvoice haven't you?"

Sehri nodded her head slowly. "Since... since the day we saw him on the monitor. The day he killed that man. All of them. I've sensed all of them within me."

Lisisa nodded. "Just be sure Sehri." She said. "With the way your fever is spiking it's going to affect all of them. Andro, Sadi, Ne'Veha, all of them that are wolf. This is all very new to you Sehri... and you are very young."

Sehri's eyes flared. "I'm not a child!" She hissed almost angrily.

Lisisa shook her head. "I'm not saying you are. All I'm saying is just be certain that it is what you want as well." Lisisa patted the small of her back. "The trigger to extend the Dragon Armor is on the inside on your right wrist. Touch the small button there and it will extend. It will feel funny for several seconds as it locks into place but once it's done you'll be fine. You are staying on the ship so you shouldn't need it."

Sehri looked at her shyly. "Thank you Lisisa." She said softly.

Lisisa nodded her head. "Now go to the cockpit and talk to your mother. Try and make her understand. She thinks you have gone insane. You got about two minutes before we go dark."

Lisisa watched her nod and then start moving around the bodies towards the cockpit. She felt Eotharon come up behind her. "Did you smell it on her Eotharon?" She asked.

Eotharon nodded. "Indeed I did." He answered.

Lisisa looked at him. "Six wives and mates. Just like our father." She said softly. "No matter how much he tries to run away from it... or tries to deny it he is more like our father than he realizes."

Eotharon nodded. "And that is why we would follow him anywhere. And any member of your family... including you." He stated calmly. He motioned with his head to Sehri's back. "Something is holding her back though Princess." He said thoughtfully. "She wants to embrace what her blood calls for but something is holding her back."

Lisisa nodded. "Well... it's not something we can worry about right now." She stated. "Let's get ready to deploy."

EARTH

CRANAE ISLAND

FEBRUARY 4TH, 1100 HRS, EST

"...don't know where other people got the notion that Andro doesn't like to fly." Sadi was speaking. "He's been flying with Elynth since he was four years old. He loves to fly with her. It is something that helps to clear his mind and give him peace."

"And give us fits with some of the stunts he does." Carisia added with a knowing smirk. This brought chuckles from all of them and Me'alla leaned closer thinking she saw an opening.

"He is reckless when he flies?" She asked.

Sadi smiled. "Andro and Elynth are so closely bonded together that at times it is almost as if they know what the other will do before they do themselves. They can do things when they fly that others can't. Not even the King and Torma. Well... perhaps not them." Sadi said with a smile. "I wouldn't call it reckless... I would call it beautiful."

"He doesn't even take interplanetary transport anymore unless he is going to Eden City or some distant location. Nor do we." Ne'Veha spoke. "Why would we when we have Elynth and our Bonded Brothers and sisters?"

Damn straight! Majeir commented causing Lu'ria to look at her and smile. What sister? She exclaimed. Walter said that all the time!

Me'alla leaned forward in her chair. "So you are saying that Senator Ulana is wrong in the recent statements she has made about the Prince not liking to fly? And the statements she has said about all of you."

"What Senator Ulana chooses to say or not say is of no concern to us." Sadi spoke. "She may profess to know him, but we are Andro's wives and mates. I think we know him far better than someone who only saw him intermittently for several months. For her to say that Andro doesn't like to fly is only one of the many comments she has made which only show she doesn't know him as closely as she would like to think she does."

“So she lied?” Me'alla asked.

Sadi shrugged her shoulders. “I wouldn't say she lied.” She spoke. “She is ill-informed... that's all.”

“Prince Androcles ended his relationship with her the same day that you reunited with him is that correct?” Me'alla asked.

Sadi nodded. “Yes.”

“Senator Ulana states that several of the Prince's sister threatened her that same day if she spoke out about her relationship with the Prince.” Me'alla said.

Sadi looked genuinely surprised. “Really?” She said. “I... I never heard that.”

“Why would Ulana feel the need to speak out?” Lu'ria asked now. “What would be the reasoning behind that? Unless she wanted to besmirch Andro in public for some wrongdoing she perceived he made in dismissing her and ending what relationship they did have.”

“As you are well aware, the Leonidas family is very close but we are all individuals.” Sadi said evenly. “I will not attempt to speak for Andro's sisters. They know the Senator better than I and whatever they did... if anything... I'm sure it was their way of protecting their brother.”

“Protecting him from what?” Me'alla asked.

“I don't know.” Sadi said. “Perhaps speaking to one of his sisters will get that answer for you. We don't have it.”

“And we don't care.” Carisia added.

Me'alla saw all of them nod in agreement with that statement. She shuffled in her chair and then looked at Sadi. “It appears... it appears you are all of the same mind.” She said.

“We are.” Sadi said.

“Yet you are his Anome.” Me'alla said.

Sadi nodded her head. “Yes.” She answered. “What difference does that make? As with Andro's father and all the Queens, Andro loves each of us equally and without question. Just as Martin loves his mothers. Just as we love him... and each other. We can't explain it to you for there are times we don't understand it ourselves. But it is what we all feel within our hearts and minds. Of course we would speak with one voice, we are essentially one mind in many respects and that is how we see things.”

“Doesn't that... doesn't it cause conflict between...” Me'alla began.

Me'alla was surprised when all of them laughed softly and shared coy glances. It was Carisia who answered the unspoken question and she did so with a very sultry look on her face and in her dark eyes. “I would say there is more than enough of Andro to go around for each of us.” She said. “Even when we are all together.”

Lu'ria nodded. “Indeed there is.” She said with a knowing grin.

Sadi smiled and nodded in agreement. “Let's just say that Andro's stamina is superior to anyone I have ever met. He is a true Alpha male... like his father and thousands of other males within the Union who keep their wives and mates very happy.” She didn't know it then, but that statement would earn Sadi and all of them many points of honor and respect from the male population within the Union, as well as the females.

Me'alla looked at her data pad and then back to Sadi. “Senator Ulana suggests that she has a much higher pureblood PCC level than you Princess Sadi. Can you confirm for our viewers what your PCC level is? And do you know Senator Ulana's?” Me'alla said.

Sadi shrugged her shoulders. “I don't know what Senator Ulana's pureblood PCC level is.” Sadi answered. “Nor do I care.” She smiled. “I don't even know my own to answer your question. It's not something that I ever really worried about.”

“Isn't the pureblood PCC level of a Lycavorian used to determine potential Mindvoice ability?” Me'alla asked. “You studied at the School of the Mages didn't you?”

“The answer to the first part of your question is yes.” Sadi spoke. “And yes again to the second part. I studied there for almost four years under several different instructors as well as the Feravomir.”

“The School of the Oracles has recently released several bits of information from a classified report that lists you as a Category nineteen Etheric user based on the new measuring rules of Mindvoice ability.” Me'alla spoke looking at the data pad she held. Her Channel Manager had been sending her information on the pad since the beginning of the interview to help her formulate questions.

Sadi's eyes narrowed. "Really?" She asked calmly. "That is interesting... since the entire report was supposed to be classified."

Me'alla pressed on quickly before Sadi had a chance to shut her down on this portion of information she had gotten. Her Channel Manager had not known where it came from, only that it had been sent at the beginning of the interview by an unknown source. "The report lists only five Category Nineteen users as the Director of the School of the Mages state. That includes Queen Aricia, Prince Denali, the former Pralor Wayonn, Prince Androcles's Captain Jomann and yourself. Category Nineteen users have the most potential to rise in power. Could you comment on that?"

Sadi shook her head. "No." She answered curtly.

"Are your fellow Crown Princesses also Category Nineteen Etheric users?" Me'alla asked.

"I don't know." Sadi answered. "Not that it matters."

"The King is listed as a Category twenty-one and Prince Androcles as a Category Twenty user. They are the only two who have such a high rating. Most of the Union has seen what the Prince is capable of after the Senate vote, at least a small portion of what he can do. And there are rumors beginning to circulate that the King has used similar abilities in the rescue of Queen For'mya. Do you or the other Princesses have these skills as well?"

"Why do you wish to know?" Ne'Veha asked.

"According to statements by the head of the DSM, it is his opinion that the abuse of these skills could take place. He believes all of the Royal Family needs to be tested again and then their use of Etheric power monitored and controlled by the DSM." Me'alla said. "Do you agree with this statement?"

Sadi shook her head with a small laugh. "Controlled by the DSM? No... certainly not." She said. "I'm sure it will give him a fit when he discovers Ne'Veha and I have now bonded with dragons as well. The DSM has no authority to do such things... he is a teacher... and the DSM is not part of the government. And there are many who do not follow his train of thought either. What exactly does he mean by abuse?"

"He doesn't go into detail." Me'alla answered.

"Yes... he doesn't go into detail because he doesn't know." She answered. "I know the DSM Me'alla... I studied under him for a year. He is a pompous and arrogant little man who can't not abide someone with abilities that surpass his. Why the Feravomir put him in charge is not something I understand, but she is the First Oracle of our people and perhaps she saw something within him I did not." Sadi shifted in her seat to get more comfortable. "Mindvoice abilities... or Etheric power as it is now known because of recent discoveries... is inherent in all our people and the majority of vampires and some elves. It has been this way for millennia."

Me'alla nodded in agreement. "That is true... but as we understand it more and become aware of what these abilities allow some to do... do you not worry about the abuse of such power?"

"Etheric power is based on pureness of blood. The percentage of Etheric users that even have the pureness of blood to advance this power beyond a Tier Three level is infinitesimal when held to the entire population of the Union." Sadi answered. "It has always been this way and for millennia it has never been abused in any way. You know as well as I it is even a crime for us to do some of the things our abilities might allow. Because one man says we should be concerned, a man who if I am not mistaken is only a Category Seventeen by the new standards of measuring, we should all just take his word and begin persecuting these men and women?"

"He doesn't advocate that Princess." Me'alla said.

"He hasn't said he doesn't advocate that either." Sadi told her. "It is well known what the King and Andro are capable of. As you have said yourself, most of the Union has seen part of what Andro can do. They have always had this power within them and in the twenty-seven years since Andro's father returned and took his grandfather's throne... has the King ever misused this power or lied to our people? No. Has Androcles? No. What the DSM wants is no different than what the Rothryn people must endure now and..."

"KertaGai!" Carisia gasped.

Sadi stopped as Me'alla's eyes grew wider. "Sibfla!" Sadi cursed under her breath.

"The Rothryn people?" Me'alla asked quickly. "I have never... who are the Rothryn people Princess? Have we... has a new race of people besides the Vanari been discovered and we do not know about them?"

Sadi thought quickly. “Our entry into the Beta Quadrant has allowed us to meet not only the Vanari but others species as well. I will say no more than that... I’ve already said too much. That is something that the Prime Minister will address at a later time. I will not comment on that any more. Period.”

Me'alla could tell that the Princess knew she had made a mistake and to insure that she did not lose control of this interview and have it cut short she quickly went to another line of questions.

“As you wish Princess.” Me'alla said. “Going back to PCC levels... does the PCC level also give an idea of how closely a Lycavorian is related to the Original Five Ruling Bloodlines on Lycavore?” Me'alla asked.

Sadi nodded her head and relaxed slightly. “To my knowledge yes.”

“Would you be willing to be tested again?” Me'alla asked.

“For what purpose?” Sadi asked her. “To appease Senator Ulana’s vanity?”

“She alleges that since her PCC level is higher... she has more claim to the position you now hold as Crown Princess.” Me'alla said. “The position all of you hold for that matter as Crown Princesses.”

“And what would give the good Senator that idea?” Ne'Veha asked. “To the best of my knowledge the PCC level of a pureblood has never come into consideration when Lycavorians find wives and mates.”

“It only matters to Ulana because Andro is Crown Prince and next in line for the throne.” Carisia commented with a touch of contempt in her voice. “Anyone with a small bit of common sense can see that.”

“I am only stating things that Senator Ulana has already been quoted as saying.” Me'alla spoke quickly. “I’m not assuming her intentions by her statements Princess... only that she has said them.”

Sadi reached out and squeezed Carisia’s hand tightly turning to looked at her. “It is fine Enylarcopri.” She said softly. She turned back to Me'alla. “The facts are this... no matter what Ulana says or does, it will not change the reality that we are Andro’s mates. That is not going to change simply because the Senator wishes it so. Andro does not desire her in any way, shape or form, and no matter how much she rants or screams about it, that is not going to change.”

“And if she challenges that?” Me'alla asked.

Sadi canted her head to the side. “What will she challenge Me'alla? She can’t force Androcles to make her his wife and mate. If she wishes to challenge me in some way then I welcome her to try.” Sadi spat. “I have no problem putting the good Senator in her place if she wishes to pursue it. Andro did not scent her during their time together so she has nothing to base a challenge on.”

“You are certain of this Princess?” Me'alla asked.

“We are Andro’s mates and we have free reign within Andro’s mind. He hides nothing from us. Nothing. We have seen his time with Senator Ulana and we would know if this took place. It did not, no matter how much Ulana wishes it, so she has nothing to challenge. I am also an Alpha female... and I... we... will defend what is ours. In any way we need too. And Andro is ours without question.”

Me'alla was smart enough to know when to leave a subject before it got out of hand. It was very obvious that Senator Ulana was a sore subject with all of them, and being a female Me'alla knew why. The woman was attempting to insinuate herself into their lives and making claims and accusations that were angering many people, including the ones that her comments were mainly focused on.

Me'alla looked up. “Princess Ne'Veha... I was wondering if we could discuss your life before becoming the Prince’s mate. You met him after Princess Carisia had joined their lives correct?”

Ne'Veha nodded in return. “I physically met him and Sadi after Carisia had joined them yes.” She answered. “But as with all of us... we were already connected within our minds through Mindvoice. We just hadn’t realized it yet.”

“Can you tell us a little about it?” Me'alla asked.

SOLMAR

STRIKER 51 AND 52

FEBRUARY 4TH, 1155 HRS, EST

[...daylight mission Milord.] Daio spoke softly to Andro at the rear of the STRIKER. He was using a shielded conversation with his Prince in order to have their words be private. He was a Tier Six Mindvoicer and a Durcunusaan officer so it was easy enough for him to initiate the connection and Andro instinctively strengthened it even more.

Andro looked up from where he had been straightening the saddle on Elynth's broad back. He turned his head and looked at Daio. He was just about the same age as Androcles, as were many of the Durcunusaan assigned to the SCIMITAR. They had been through different hells on Alba Tau, but there was no distinction when it came to that planet. Every battle there had been a nightmare for every Spartan who had taken part. Andro knew Jomann had reviewed every Durcunusaan soldier assigned to him in any way, and if Jomann had elected to keep Daio on the SCIMITAR there was a reason. It was likely that Daio's deep connections to Sparta played a part in that decision. Daio had been born and raised in Sparta just as Jomann and Andro had. In a way Jomann was partial to those Durcunusaan who had been born and raised in Sparta like himself and Andro. It was a tiny flaw in his Captain's mentality, but it was a flaw that Andro himself had.

[What other choice do we have Daio?] Andro spoke softly. [And stop with this Milord sibfla Daio. Not when we speak as we are now.]

Daio nodded his head. [I don't doubt the necessity of the attack Andro. I don't like what I think you have planned in your head however. Why you asked if we can contact them with our COM gear. I have an idea of what you are planning and Jomann would not be happy. I am not happy about it.]

[It's the only way to buy us enough time for Sa'sur and the others to get here.] Andro told him.

[It will also serve to bring every Kavalian ship within range of this planet here.] Daio told him.

[I'm hoping by that time it will be over.] Andro told him.

[And if it's not?] Daio asked.

Andro grinned. [Then we'll have to figure something else out.] He answered.

[Why are you doing this Andro?] Daio asked him. Daio's eyes lifted when Elynth's neck moved and her head came around to stare at him.

[Too many innocents have died because of our actions Daio.] Her voice filled his head easily.

[My actions sister.] Andro corrected her.

Elynth's golden eyes looked at her Bonded Brother. [Your actions are mine Andro, just as mine are yours. There is no distinction my brother. You know that.] She looked back to Daio. [We have to try and save as many as we can Daio.]

Daio nodded his head after a moment. [I understand that. I think you both carry a blame you don't deserve but I can not change that.] He spoke. [But I will tell you this... with your father gone Androcles, you are who all of us look to. The moment I see it is hopeless I will act as my Durcunusaan oath requires that I act. I will secure your safety just as Jomann would expect me too.]

Andro met his eyes. [It won't go that far Daio. I won't let it. I know what is at stake my friend.]

Daio nodded and ran his hands along Elynth's scales. [Then I will say no more about it.] He said. [Though I think Jomann will certainly give you a piece of his mind. Not to mention the Princesses.]

Andro smiled. [Of that I have little doubt.] He said.

Daio nodded. [I will prepare the others.]

[Daio...] Andro spoke drawing his eyes back to him. [Pass the word... I want the officer in charge of this Puma Bane detail taken alive if at all possible. Once we have secured the settlement move as many civilians as we can to the STRIKERs and call for the KADEN. We'll send them north across the ocean and then break for the coast from here with the rest.]

Daio nodded. [Understood.]

Elynth and Ryner flew wing tip to wing tip through the winding valley approaching the settlement. Dorian and Andro both had their Dragon Armor extended around their bodies. The armor glinted in the sunlight and they rode low in their saddles because of it. Their psychic shields would serve to dull most of the glare from the armor. Dreamland's scientists were working on a way to color the armor for operations at night and for general camouflage. The properties of the armor did not join well with coloring elements but Ben had told him they were close. Andro glanced over at his younger brother since he had been silent since they left the STRIKERs some miles back.

[Dorian.] Andro reached out for him.

Dorian's head turned. [I'm scared fervon.] He spoke.

[As am I my brother.] He replied. [This is not limited to you.]

[You?] Dorian gasped. [But you have... you have done this hundreds of times.]

[And we are terrified each and every time.] Elynth answered as she tipped her wings slightly.

[Just remember the training we have given to you brother.] Andro said. [You and Ryner are one... fight as one. Your psychic shield can protect you from most lighter weapons so be mindful of those carrying heavier ones and take them out first. You are more adept with your dual blades, but use your firearms until you close the range. Once you are among them, ignite the light within you fervon and let it shine. Elynth and I have seen it Dorian. Don't hold back and embrace what is within you! Own this time fervon... own this time like no other.]

Dorian looked across the small distance that separated them from each other feeling the pride and confidence swell within him. It came from his brother, from Ryner, from Elynth. It came from the blood of both his parents. [I will make our father proud.] He stated.

Andro shook his head. [Our father is already proud of you fervon. Never doubt that.] Andro said.

[Today... today begin the story of yourself Dorian Leonidas. Have faith... and begin your own legend brother!]

[Today we fight to free others!] Elynth spoke.

[And we will succeed!] Ryner chimed in with the same confidence swarming through Dorian.

[Break now fervon!] Andro barked. [I will meet you in the center of the settlement and we will burn the vileness clean as our Tenna's words spoke not so long ago.]

[Ryner!] Dorian called out and Andro watched Ryner dip his right wing and peel away with skin flaying speed. His powerful wings rocketed him and Dorian over the nearby ridge and then he dropped from sight as he hugged the terrain.

Andro turned his head forward and took a deep breath. [Very well my sister.] Andro said softly, his hands spread across Elynth's neck scales and feeling the blood pound through her body. Their heartbeats were like one well oiled machine of precision and this is what set them apart from all the Bonded Pairs except their fathers. They were truly one in every sense of the word. [Once more we are called to act. His speed will put him in position in sixty seconds. Then we roll in and attack.]

Andro felt Elynth's confidence flow through him now as well.

[And we will show them what a mistake they have made by coming here. I am tired of reacting to what others do.] She spoke.

The Puma Bane troops on guard along the top of the wall were expertly trained and very alert. They were Puma Bane soldiers after all, the finest within the KFI. The Bontawillians had used standard Union colony kits in establishing themselves on this planet. The prefab settlement walls were extremely sturdy and allowed for walking patrols along the tops of the wall. This settlement had been established along the northern edges of a river of medium width that supplied an abundance of fresh, clear water to the settlement. The two Puma Bane soldiers were on a normal watch patrol where they walked back and forth between the two T19 Missile Team positions that faced north. Another two T19 Missile Teams faced south on the southern section of wall half a kilometer away, giving the Kavalians a full three hundred and sixty degrees of coverage on the settlement. It was the smallest of the six Bontawillian settlements making up the whole of the colony. Just over five hundred civilians remained from the original population of two thousand. These surviving civilians were now locked down in the main auditorium of the settlement. The building had not been built to hold all of the people together so Major Marsin ordered that enough be culled to allow them to place their prisoners in one building. That had required nearly seventeen hundred civilians be killed during the taking of the settlement.

The two Puma Bane troops had laughed as they gunned down screaming men, women and children in the streets. The vast majority of civilians here were scientists or some sort of researcher so none of them had put up much of a fight and it had been ridiculously easy to trim their numbers as the major ordered. The mainstream of the Bontawillian people were nothing more than scientists and farmers and knew nothing of fighting. The two men were now bored and hoping that the attack on their comrades meant that at least someone on this planet was going to put up a fight. It was nearing midday and the sun was high in the sky and they were only minutes from being relieved.

That relief would never come.

The Puma Bane soldiers were good and both of them saw the flash of black against the daytime sky as Elynth screamed in from over the crest of the ridge, hugging the trees so close that the tips of the giant green and brown leaves brushed her belly. As they raised their weapons and began to scream out a warning they eyes grew wide as Elynth vanished in a shimmer of transparent light and reappeared not fifty feet in front of them, her talons extended out. Neither of them had seen Andro's hand mash down on the teleportation control on the side of their saddle. Though they were designed for short range teleportation, the engineers at Dreamland had been working on the devices continuously since the successful teleportation of his father and Torma on Earth. Two new models had come out in the ensuing months based on that data and Andro had just installed the newest version in their saddle only two weeks ago. Ship to planet teleportation was still an iffy process... but the site to site teleportation had been deemed safe and reliable, though still limited in range.

Their combined focus was so precise that Elynth knew exactly what she was going to do after Andro mashed his hand down on the teleporter control built into every Mark Eleven saddle. They reappeared just where she had planned for them to and her front talons then landed upon and mashed the two Puma Bane troops into the walkway of the settlement wall as she brought her three plus metric tons down on top of them. She ignored the crunch of bone and the sound of her talons puncturing flesh and her armored head whipped to the left even as Andro extended his P190A3 from its bracket on the side of their saddle to the right and Elynth cut loose with the most powerful stream of flame tinged superheated breath she could generate.

That stream of flame reached the T19 Missile Team just as they began to react. Three thousand plus degree heat surrounded by open flame engulfed the three members of the Missile Team and instantly melted their missile tubes and parts of their bodies. Her flame tinged breath also served to ignite and detonate the stack of T19 missiles ready for use and one whole section of the wall erupted in a massive explosion. While Androcles Leonidas preferred to fight close where he could use his swords, he was more than an expert shot. His five round burst caught the missile toting Kavalian in the chest, the rounds walking up and to the right, blowing huge holes in the Kavalian's lightly armored body. The last round impacted the launcher itself, the high velocity kinetic round punching through the casing of the launch tube and hitting the missile. The result was catastrophic as the missile exploded in the tube while the user began to fall and it sent shrapnel in all directions, effectively tearing apart the two other Kavalians in the Missile Team.

Elynth's head snapped to the south and she beamed in pride as she saw Ryner come tearing out of the western sky directly from beneath the sun and above the two missile teams set up on the southern wall. She turned her head back knowing they would succeed and unleashed her voice with a trumpet of anger that shook the nearby buildings. She felt Andro leap from the saddle and she then let loose with a sustained stream of her flame tinged breath, sweeping it across the ground in front of the exterior doors of the settlement. Nearly one hundred and fifty meters her flame reached out, igniting almost everything in its path to include Kavalian troops who were gawking at her in unabashed fear.

Andro landed in front of the massive doors, paused for only a second and then reached deep within his Talon Guardian reserves of Etheric abilities. With a scream not of rage but concentration he directed and set free a wave of Etheric power that struck the massive doors on their weak structural joints. The massive surge of psychic power struck the hinges of the doors not unlike the blast of a hurricane, only with five times the power. The metal was designed to withstand the elements and small assaults by primitive indigenous species, not an angry young man who commanded power most could not understand. The huge ten foot high doors buckled instantly and then blew inward at incredible velocity as the metal bent and then gave way completely. One huge now destroyed door crushed four Kavalian troops as it was propelled back into the settlement and that is when Daio shifted back to human form and with a howl of delight he rushed the now sundered opening in the wall.

The Spartans had gotten as close to the settlement as they were able in wolf form, some of them like Daio, closer than others and scrapping their fur covered bellies along the tall grass and brush. They had tensed briefly when they saw Elynth and Andro execute their maneuver and then Andro had leaped down to the front of the doors and blew them open with his Etheric power. This gave Daio and the others pause for only a split second as they marveled at their Prince's actions and then, like any Spartan from history past, they charged lifting their left or right arms and sending a wave of Shi Viskas screaming forward of their rush.

Andro didn't bother launching his own Shi Viska as the others zipped by his head and he simply reached up and grasped the two odd looking handles attached to the front of his combat harness. As his hands closed around the handles he snapped his hands downward and in a soft flash of white light he called the blades from Flatspace.

The Elven Weapons Master Nehtes knew of what Andro had done by giving the Iphan and Halize Rie Aellseleum to the Immortal Pa'cour. To him it had been an incredible act of selfless honor and trust that had moved the ancient elven Weapons Maker nearly to the point of tears when he heard of the circumstances surrounding it. When he had asked Jomann how it had come about and Jomann told him Nehtes knew...

“The Immortal Pa'cour knew of your skill at creating weapons Master Nehtes.” Jomann had told him. “Andro knew there was no time to do what Pa'cour requested. To honor his grandfather's request that Pa'cour be blessed for his actions so long ago, he offered him his own swords. He didn't hesitate in the least for he had seen something within Pa'cour and Yuri both that none of us did. It was a very moving moment.”

Nehtes had already been under a directive of the King to build some very special bladed weapons and after Andro's gift to Pa'cour he knew what he would name the dual swords he was making for Androcles Leonidas. He had become the only Weapons Master that Martin Leonidas would come to shortly after the building of Eden City had begun. Nehtes had grown right with the Leonidas family, was allowed free reign within the Royal estates on both planets and was one of only three individuals outside of the immediate family and inner circle of friends that had physical access to all of them whenever he wanted.

Androcles Leonidas was the most gifted swordsmen Nehtes had ever been blessed to witness in all his years of life. The swords he carried, whether he used one or both in combat, they were extensions of his very being. He could make them sing a song of battle that was filled with wondrous power but also incredible grace and speed. Nehtes had already forged the blades themselves and he only needed to complete the pommels. He knew Andro despised opulence in any form and he had forged two simple handles that looked like dragon talons. They were lovingly carved from nearly unbreakable dragon bone given to him by Arzoal, with the talons holding the blade in place. In the rear of each sword was a small power crystal just like in his father's sword, allowing him thirty shots per sword of very intense, focused and powerful energy bursts of phased anti-matter plasma.

Vada Saar for Cana rie Emanur. (The Light and Hope of Eternity.)

The first day Nehtes had seen Androcles wield the swords in a training exercise was a day Nehtes would never forget. One word had entered his mind as he watched that display with dozens of others.

Incorruptible.

With Saar in his left hand and Cana in his right, Andro joined the rush of Spartans just as they reached where he stood.

Dorian gripped the edges of the saddle just as Andro and Elynth taught him. Not too tightly but then not too loosely. Just tight enough to feel the shift of his Bonded Brother's muscles beneath the saddle and the rush of his blood through his veins. They had decided the best way to take out the two Missile Teams was out of the sun. It would blind the men and render the missiles useless firing into the glare of the sun. Dorian felt his pulse increase just as Ryner gained several hundred feet of altitude and then tipped over and dove for the surface. He saw a flash to his left that could only be Elynth's unique flame tinged breath and then he had Ryner were within range.

Now brother! Dorian barked out.

Ryner drew back his head just a bit and then unleashed a searing stream of raw flame that reached down and fully engulfed the first missile team even as they were turning to view what was happening in the north. Ryner was a pure Firespitter dragon, and while still very young, some of his instructors had noticed the uncanny control he had over his flame streams. These dragons had been awestruck to discover the masterful focus bonding with Dorian Leonidas had granted Ryner and all of them were quick to advance his level of training to its maximum to take advantage of this. Ryner adjusted his downward trajectory slightly and continued burning that stream of flame across the southern walk way until it had reached the second missile team. The Kavalian shooter had been fast enough to twist his body and lift the launcher to face Ryner. Just as he pulled the trigger and the missile began to leave the launcher, Ryner's intense stream of flame scorched the Kavalian Missile Team into blackened corpses. The exiting missile was engulfed by the intense three thousand plus degree heat and its warhead melted before leaving the weapon fully. The missile's propellant added to the blistering flame that engulfed the missile team and added a small explosion that sizzled across their shields as they passed overhead. That small explosion threw Dantio and his Spartans into action and Dorian turned his head to see them rise from the ground just as Daio's men had and begin to rush the southern entrance of the small settlement. The southern doors were always locked in an open position and even as Kavalian Puma Bane troops began to react quickly, another wave of Shi Viskas hurtled through the warm air to smash into their line. Screams and arcs of blood began to follow.

Ryner! Land just inside! Dorian barked. Elynth is sweeping to her right and you do the same. I will remain on your flank!

Hold on! Ryner barked as he dipped his wings and executed a near heart stopping turn and plummet towards the ground. He flared his wings a hundred meters from the surface, felt Dorian prepare himself and the moment he reached twenty meters Dorian leaped from the saddle. Ryner landed just to his right kicking up dirt as he did and let loose with another stream of flame across the right side of the wall. Dorian turned and saw Dantio leading the Spartans forward, drawing them so tightly into the ranks with the confused Kavalians that they could barely use their weapons. Weapons that did no damage against the Shi Viska shields that began to return to their owners streaked with blood and fur.

Dorian whipped his head around to Ryner. Just as Andro told us! He screamed. We sweep right along the wall removing any who might come up behind our men. They we cut to the middle and meet Andro!

Ryner nodded his massive head. Then let us begin!

Kelelm had never witnessed anything like it in his entire life. He was no stranger to combat and among the Rothryn people he was considered a superior warrior and a brilliant tactician. From the moment they had witnessed Princess Lisisa exit the STRIKER in the manner she had on Jeth's back, Kelelm began to realize many things. As he and his three men situated themselves on their stomachs on the end of the lowered ramp and they began to sight down the barrels of the impressive sniper rifles they had been provided, Kelelm realized that these men and women, these Lycavorians, they were utter masters of war. The pilot of the STRIKER held them almost perfectly still five hundred meters above the ground and perhaps half a kilometer outside the settlement walls. What Kelelm saw within that scope was unlike anything he had ever experienced in his lifetime. Like the conductor of a fine orchestra, watching that wave of fifty plus Shi Viskas leap from the arms of the Spartans after being called from Flatspace was not something he could put into words. The Spartans closed far too quickly with the Kavalians inside the settlement for them to establish any sort of defensive perimeter. Once the walls had been breached at either end, the battle quickly descended into a slugfest. Kelelm watched as the two massive, armored dragons on the ground relentlessly pressed forward along the sides of the settlement driving terrified Kavalian troopers out of hiding and into the fray. If they didn't kill them with devastating streams of flame first. Eotharon had mentioned that the Kavalian people were terrified of dragons for some reason, to the point that a single dragon could freeze many of them in horror. It was something within their genetic memories that made them fear dragons and the Union knew this and would use it.

Kelelm witnessed the single Spartan moving with the Sinopia colored dragon, his combat movements nearly a blur. Kelelm realized this must have been the half breed brother of Lisisa Leonidas. He was using his vampiric ability to blur as he struck different Kavalians with lethal precision, always remaining near the left flank of the dragon that was burning Kavalians and tossing bodies into the sky with his massive talons and even blows from his huge wings. This was a different form of combat that was unlike anything he had ever studied or seen in person. The Spartans were using their shields as weapons, their P190A3s extended over the top of those shields and spitting death in every direction. Occasionally he would witness a shield streak across the field and strike a Kavalian, killing or maiming him. Kelelm knew their shields were controlled within their Mindvoice and Etheric ability, but to actually see it used in battle was something else entirely. The Spartans manipulated Flatspace with almost childlike ease. While his own people used Flatspace for some things, mainly the electronic tools their scientists carried, they had not yet obtained the knowledge and skill possessed by these men and women in either understanding it or applying it in battle.

Kelelm spied a Kavalian rise from the wreckage of the side of a building behind where Dorian and Ryner had already passed. He didn't hesitate, drew in a breath and squeezed the trigger as he exhaled. The H40 responded to his action and sent a single 20mm shell into the Kavalian's chest. His body flipped over from the tremendous force of the impact, a smoking hole in the center of what was once his chest. He could hear his men also firing when they discovered a target, providing a deadly support to the attacking Spartans.

His mother had been right Kelelm thought to himself. The moment that their father had discovered the results of the tests done he had changed. He had become driven to do as the Prophecy dictated. They were Lycavorians in his father's eyes. Whatever else his father felt, the instinctual draw of their peoples was undeniable and when he discovered this information it was as if his father embraced his instincts without hesitation. Kelelm saw this in the actions of the crew of the REAPER as they traveled here. They were treated as equals, invited into the quarters of people they did not know to have dinner and learn of each other. His father must have seen this, felt it somehow, because the longer Kelelm remained among these Lycavorians, the more he began to feel it as well. That they could not shift their forms never even came up in casual conversations. The Rothryn people were Lycavorians in the eyes of those within the Union and that is how they were treated.

Kelelm's head turned when he felt the body come to rest beside him. "Sehri!" He hissed. "Go back to the monitor!"

"I wanted to see!" Sehri snapped back at him with wide eyes.

Kelelm motioned with his head. "Then look sister!" He rasped. "Look and behold battle unlike any we have ever witnessed."

And look Sehri did. Her eyes found Lisisa and Jeth in the distance first as they circled the settlement below, twice plummeting towards the ground where Jeth unleashed a stream of searing breath killing something. She could see dozens upon dozens of men locked in close combat and darting between buildings and cover. She could see even more bodies laid out on the ground below. Sehri heard the implant come to life in her ear. All of them had been given the implants to better facilitate communications. The receiver implanted in the skin of their inner ear and the transmitter in their jaw line.

"Colonel Kelelm I'm shifting position!" The voice of the STRIKER's pilot sounded. "The Princess detected several Kavalians trying to establish a bunkered heavy gun position on the west side of Princes Androcles! She wants you and your people to remove them!"

Kelelm nodded his head. "Understood." Kelelm answered instantly.

Sehri felt the STRIKER begin to slide over and draw even closer to the settlement. That is when she and Kelelm both saw him.

Androcles was squatting behind several shipping containers with seven or eight other Spartans and exchanging fire with an equal number of Kavalians dug into the recently destroyed remains of a building. Sehri watched with amazement as she saw him rise and unleash a wave of Etheric power that buckled the ground in front of him, tossing objects into the air as it sped relentlessly towards the entrenched Kavalians. She watched as that wave struck the Kavalian's position and most of them were tossed into the air like toys, the massive concussive wave of Etheric power shattering their weapons along with bones and internal organs. The Spartans wasted no time as they peeled away from around their Prince and the advantage he had just given them, several launching their Shi Viskas and the others firing their weapons.

"By all that we hold holy!" Kelelm gasped with wide eyes at what he had just seen.

Kelelm continued to watch as Andro rushed forward as well, three psychic diamonds launching from his hands and catching two Kavalians in the open as they staggered to their feet. The shaped Etheric weapons punched through their bodies, tossing them aside with great force and leaving large wounds where the diamond shaped projectiles had struck. The obsidian colored dragon burst from the insides of a damaged building, sending concrete and small metal plates flying outward as she unleashed another gout of flame tinged superheated breath that caught two Kavalians in the open and instantly reduced them almost to ash. Sehri watched in awe as Androcles moved with stunning speed, scrambling up the foreleg that the dragon seemed to instinctively hold out for him, and leaping over her back to land among several Kavalians that were staggering about as if they were drunk. She watched his dual swords strike out and kill two of the Kavalians without any hesitation in the least, their heads loping into the air to fall to the ground near their bodies. The third he simply lifted within the grasp of his Etheric power and brought his hand down with a jerking motion, smashing the Kavalian amidst the remains of the building the dragon had just exiting with devastating force. Sehri knew from the way his body impacted that he would not be getting up. Androcles appeared to be shouting orders and he waved his arms towards several other Spartans who instantly began to move.

Sehri gasped when his head lifted and his eyes seemed to fall directly on her.

“Tallyho!” The pilot’s voice barked in her ear. “Target at ten o’clock! Kavalian heavy gun position!”

“We have it!” Kelelm barked as he sighted through the scope of his H40. “Preparing to fire!”

“Shit! Another one Kelelm! Three o’clock!” The pilot screamed. “This one is already unmasked! It’s firing!”

Kelelm felt deep impacts along the floor of the STRIKER, the heavy shells slamming into the armor of the ship. They were armored Kelelm knew, but from the force of the impacts he wondered how much damage they could sustain. His answer came at the new sounds and he turned when he heard the reverberation of shattering glass and the screams of wounded. The STRIKER heeled sharply to the right and began to spin around, Kelelm reaching for Sehri as she screamed in terror because she wasn’t secured to the deck as they were. Her body began to lift off the floor and Kelelm snatched her arms and pulled her close to him.

“We’re hit! Shit we’re hit!” The pilot screamed, her voice excited but still calm and in control. “Co-pilot is dead! Lost lateral thrusters and secondary engines. Instruments are fucked! I’ve lost attitude control! We’re going in! Fuck we’re going in! Brace for impact! Brace for impact!”

“Kelelm!” Sehri screamed as her brother pulled her closer.

“Do not let go of me!” Kelelm screamed at her over the roar and whine of the crippled engines. “Do not let go Sehri!”

Kelelm felt his stomach drop as the STRIKER dipped awkwardly and plummeted down. He felt Sehri ripped from his grasp just as they impacted the ground and began to roll. “Sehri!” He screamed before blackness overcame him.

EARTH

CRANAE ISLAND

CHANNEL 65 INTERVIEW WITH CROWN PRINCESSES

FEBRUARY 4TH, 1220 HRS, EST

“...ask about the recent events surrounding the unusual birth of the latest Leonidas child. The son Queen Isabella was carrying. There are many reports filtering out now that the young man who has been seen with Prince Androcles these last weeks is this child. Can you comment on this?” Me’alla spoke.

“What would you like me to say?” Sadi asked.

“Is it true?” Me’alla asked her. “This young man is now fully grown and he has been like the Prince’s shadow. He has been seen with him in Sparta, at different military bases and at Thermopylae as well. If this is indeed the son that Queen Isabella was carrying, how could he be as old as he is?”

Sadi reached out quickly within Mindvoice to Deia and Gorgo. They were at Deia’s office watching the live interview she knew.

[What do I tell her Deia?] Sadi asked them when she connected easily with their MV resonance.

[Tell her the truth.] Deia answered. [It will come out eventually and better we control the how of it.]

[I agree.] Gorgo echoed. [Deia and I can address the questions that will undoubtedly come... but we should not lie.]

Sadi nodded and brought her attention back to Me’alla. “The young man who has been seen with Andro is the child Isabella had been carrying. He is Andro’s brother Dorian Leonidas, the son of Martin and Isabella.”

Me’alla looked at her with a stunned expression, fumbled with her words for a few seconds and then simply spit out one word.

“How?” She gasped.

Sadi smiled at her reaction and then turned to Carisia. “Enylarcopri... would you care to answer this? You know more about the situation and could better explain it.”

Carisia nodded. “Queen Isabella became afflicted with a very rare condition for vampire females who are pregnant. I won’t try to explain the details, Eliani or Queen Anja would be better suited for that, but essentially this condition... this disease... it breaks down the womb of a vampire female until she can no longer provide for the child she carries. It is a hereditary disease carried within the male gene and passed to the female children. It is extremely rare, but in every case it is fatal for the infant. At least until now.”

Me’alla blinked several times. “How... how was... how was Dorian saved if it is always fatal for the infant?”

Sadi leaned forward now. “Dorian was given an accelerated growth hormone while still within the womb. Queen Anja and her sisters, combined with Eurin were able to determine a procedure that would allow Dorian to be born before her womb failed. It... it was an untested theory, but they had to try. It worked... and Dorian joined us a month before Isabella’s womb would have been unable to sustain him longer. The serum they used was active even after he was born and did not fully run its course until he appears as he is now. He’s quite handsome don’t you think?” Sadi added with a smile.

“Yes... yes he is.” Me’alla blurted out before thinking. “But... but how... how could his mind develop at such an accelerated rate?” Me’alla asked. “Is he...?”

Sadi shook her head. “How do I explain this... just before he was born Dorian... Dorian experienced something similar to what happen with Androcles.” She said. “I don’t know the entirety of it, nor the more technical aspects, but Dorian bonded with a dragon while still within Isabella’s womb. Very much like Andro did. Because of this and the connection Bonded Pairs have with each other, his mind was protected. Actually stimulated would be a better word I think. Ryner... his Bonded Brother now... Ryner wrapped Dorian’s mind in a cocoon that was augmented by the Dragon Elder Mother’s abilities. Even as his body grew, so did his mind within that cocoon. His Bonded Brother shared everything of his life with him as Pairs usually do, and the Elder Mother added her own resonance to that, reinforcing it. Dorian is just as cognizant as any adult his age; he even was able to master Conceptual Dynamic Engineering thanks to the Elder Mother. A class I will admit I did not do well in at the Academy.”

Me’alla looked at her amazed. “This... this is amazing.” She gasped. “Then he is...”

Sadi nodded. “He is a very normal twenty-four year old man... yes. And very smart I might add.” She said. “He and Ryner have been training with Andro and Elynth since his growth stopped and he’s made amazing strides. He’s rarely been away from his brother. Everyone has noticed that he is a voracious learner and being around Andro so much has tempered his normal youthful urges somewhat. Though being around Andro and Elynth have also made him and Ryner more prone to doing wild things when flying. I dare say he is almost as skilled as Lisisa or Denali in many respects. And he has a very large sense of humor.” She finished that statement with a happy smile. “He was having dinner with us just last week and...”

There were billions of citizens of the Union watching the interview with the Crown Princesses with great interest and enjoyment. One citizen however had stopped what she was doing the moment Dorian’s name was mentioned.

Sheva Juconi was in the Durcunusaan Control Center of the villa coordinating the last transports as they left Earth and were taken in by the ships in orbit. Sheva had not wanted to be assigned to the newborn Dorian Leonidas as his Durcunusaan Captain, for she thought using Kavalian technology to accelerate his birth after all they had done was wrong and Sheva felt she deserved the better posting as Isabella’s Captain. She kept her other reasons to herself, revealing them to no one. Jomann and Isabella had insisted however and Sheva finally relented. Sheva had been there, seen all that Sadi Leonidas was telling the elf female, but she still did not believe it. Her mind could not grasp that what she was saying could happen. Jomann had sent her to a restructured class for Detail Heads, a six month course crammed into four weeks and taught by General Vengal himself. She had been away since the second day after Dorian’s birth and had not had the chance to get to know him at all except for a few times they were on Earth and he was training with his brother. This really did not matter to her because she viewed him as a child in many ways, but Sheva could also not help the feelings she had when looking at him.

Sheva may have been more than three hundred years his senior, but she could not deny being drawn to him physically. She had seen him training in the mornings with Androcles and the definition of his muscular body was almost beyond belief. It matched his brother in every way, though he was slightly less burly than Andro in some ways. His short dark hair was jet black in color and his dual colored eyes were almost surreal to look at. That she found him so physically attracting conflicted with her mind telling her he was still just a child regardless of what Jomann and others told her. They knew she did not want this posting, that she would rather be assigned to Isabella as she originally was, but for some reason they would not reassign her. Jomann had promised to reassign her once Dorian was more established and Sheva accepted that knowing he would not lie to her. Now she was just biding her time until Jomann made the switch and she was sent to be with Isabella.

Now... at the first mention of his name by Sadi, her full attention went to the monitor. The things Sadi was saying could not be true could they? Sheva knew Mindvoice existed; she was even able to use it herself on a limited level. She would normally be rated as a high Tier Four or a Category Twelve using the new measuring chart. Her fighting skills and intelligence are what had gotten her a slot within the Durcunusaan even though she was barely over five feet two in height and a hundred and five pounds. She had beaten men quite larger than her in combat training and this had gotten her noticed. Sheva could use Mindvoice if needed, but she did not truly believe or comprehend how this power could be manifested into the physical realm even though she had seen it used by Androcles. It was something she struggled with daily, and her obvious physical attraction to Dorian Leonidas was not making things any easier. She did not know what it was about him that pulled at her, but it was uncomfortable to say the least. She had not taken a lover into her bed in almost a decade now and she knew this was also having an effect on her. Though Sheva lived and worked among them daily and had many friends who were Lycavorian or even half breeds, she had never once considered taking a non-pureblood vampire or other species to bed. Sheva's adopted parents, an older pureblood vampire couple that had taken her in when she was an infant because her parents had been lost in a transport accident; they had never been able to understand the feelings within her as she grew. Sheva cared for them deeply, but they were not her real parents and they never would be in her eyes.

Sheva blinked several times as her Durcunusaan COM unit began to chirp madly on her belt. She reached down and touched the small console and felt her ear implant come alive.

"Juconi." She stated evenly.

"Sheva... move to the main villa." Jomann's voice ordered her. "We are ending the interview they are giving. We need to leave within the next hour."

Sheva's eyes narrowed. "Why?"

"We just received an insystem report from the ship bringing Lisisa and the Rothryn delegation back to Earth." Jomann explained. "They diverted their course and went to assist Andro. When they arrived Andro was readying his forces to attack a Puma Bane encampment. Apparently they have begun killing civilians. We need to move! Now!"

Sheva was rising to her feet. "I told you it was a bad idea to let them go." She hissed.

"Just get to the main villa and I'll meet you there!" Jomann snapped.

"I'm moving." Sheva spoke.

"...you comment on what exactly the King and Queens are doing? Or perhaps where they are for that matter? By all accounts they have simply disappeared from Union space. No one has seen them in the nearly six weeks since Queen For'mya's rescue."

"They are doing what they have always done." Sadi answered. "Insuring the future and prosperity of our Union."

"Yet no one has seen or heard from them for six weeks." Me'alla spoke. "Can you say where they are or what they are doing?"

Sadi shook her head. "No."

"Does anyone know?" Me'alla pressed.

Sadi nodded. "Andro and a few others yes. We can not reveal..." Sadi stopped talking when she felt Jomann and Sheva enter the patio area and all of them turn to look at him. Sadi rose to her feet quickly, as did Ne'Veha and the others. "Jomann?" She asked softly as he whispered to Aequea and Kynthia.

Jomann moved up in front of her and looked at Me'alla. "I'm sorry... but we are going to have to cut this interview short. Something has come up that requires the attentions of the Princesses." He spoke calmly and evenly.

Me'alla rose to her feet. "May I ask what that is?" She questioned him.

Jomann ignored her and looked at Sadi. [We need to go.] He stated within Mindvoice to all of them.

[Jomann... what is wrong?] Lu'ria asked moving closer.

[It's Andro!] Sadi exclaimed as she lowered her MV shields from the high state she always held them in and for the first time she felt her beloved Andro's Mindvoice resonance and the mishmash of emotions that were coursing through him. She glanced at Ne'Veha and the others as they too felt it now and turned back to Jomann. [What is happening Jomann?] She demanded.

[I will explain on the way.] Jomann told her. [Right now we need to leave. General Vengal is briefing Deia and Gorgo. He will join us in orbit when he is finished.]

Me'alla stepped closer. "Princess Sadi what is happening?" She asked.

Sadi looked at her. "If you will excuse us Me'alla, we need to end this interview now. I'm sorry."

"Can you tell us what is happening?" Me'alla asked excitedly.

"No... I'm sorry." Sadi spoke moving past Jomann as his hand guided her and the others towards the door.

Me'alla attempted to step forward and Jomann imposed his bulk in front of her. "You should begin gathering your things. Another one of my officers will escort you out."

Me'alla glanced over his shoulder. "Princess Sadi... this is the perfect time to show how open Prince Androcles truly is!" She almost shouted. "Whatever it is that is happening... this is where trust is forged!"

Sadi stopped and turned her body to look at Me'alla. "We... we have trusted before Me'alla and the Netnews has not been very grateful."

"I am not them!" Me'alla exclaimed moving closer. "I have no political agenda! If I did you would not have allowed me to do this interview! I am not a fool Princess! I know there are many things we can not know as a people... yet there is much I could show our citizens. The bravery of our men. The thinking of our Prince. These are what our people want to see. What they want to know!"

Sadi stared at her for a long moment before her gaze went to where Ne'Veha, Carisia and Lu'ria stood. Ne'Veha simply shrugged her slim shoulders while Carisia and Lu'ria shared a quick glance before both of them nodded. Me'alla was right and perhaps it was time. Sadi turned back to her. "Very well." She stated.

"Princess..." Jomann began to protest but he saw the set of Sadi's jaw and stopped himself. "She will answer to Dilaen and no other! Her broadcasts will be monitored and also recorded."

Sadi looked at her. "Jomann is Andro's Captain. It is his rules or you don't go further." She spoke.

Me'alla nodded instantly. "Yes... of course." She said with wide eyes not really believing this was happening.

"Enough!" Jomann spat. "We have wasted enough time! We're leaving!"

Sadi glanced at where Eliani and Brendi sat on the bench of the new STRIKER DT Mark II Variant as she moved up the ramp. Zarah and Lucia sat opposite them quietly. As she felt the ship begin to lift into the sky she turned and looked at Jomann.

"Jomann... you will tell us what is going on right now!" She snapped as Ne'Veha and the others moved up around her. "There is a reason Andro does not lower his shields and why he demands we keep ours up as well! But it is not so we are the last ones to discover he is agitated and angry!"

Jomann took a deep breath. "I have not spoken to him directly Sadi." He answered. "But I know why he has done it."

"Well?" Carisia snapped.

“Had you discovered what was happening before now you would have wanted to depart Earth immediately. Before we were ready.” Jomann answered her. “All of you would have wanted to leave and dismiss what we have done in the last few hours. Andro didn’t want that.”

“What is happening Jomann?” Ne’Veha asked. “This mission he and Dorian went on to Solmar was supposed to be routine.”

Jomann nodded. “And it was... right up until the Kavalians decided they wanted Solmar as a forward base and invaded.”

“Invaded?” Sadi gasped. “Son vada carians!”

“The SCIMITAR’s Strike Wing has already departed.” Jomann told them quickly. “The Durcunusaan Reactionary Division is already loaded with the Human 82nd Cataphract Division. We will join with the WASP-Assault Transport Carrier KINDRED SOUL and then rendezvous with the SCIMITAR and her Wing and continue on to Solmar.” He reached out and took Sadi’s arm. “He has the Spartan company from the SCIMITAR with him and from what I understand Lisisa and the company with her has now joined with him. She apparently intercepted the transmission from Sa’sur and moved to his location.”

“Lisi?” Carisia asked. “She was escorting the Rothryn delegation to Earth.”

Jomann nodded. “She was.” He spoke. “A secure transmission came from Captain Lunerr and he let us know what they were doing.”

“You should have told us!” Sadi gasped.

Jomann squeezed her arm. “I should have... yes.” He stated plainly. “But having you and Ne’Veha and Carisia and Lu’ria charging off into the unknown would have only made things worse and you know it Sadi.”

Sadi met his eyes and nodded her head after a long moment. “You... you are right.” She said softly.

“I imagine the four of you will want to prepare for the support mission.” Jomann said. “General Vengal will be waiting for you on the KINDRED SOUL. We should arrive at Solmar in a little more than twenty-four hours.”

Sadi nodded. “Yes. Of course.” She said softly.

“Zarah and Lucia have a rundown of what Andro has with him right now.” Jomann said. “You know Andro Sadi. All of you do. You know what he will do and what drives him. Do not let your concern for him override what you know of your mate.”

Sadi turned as Zarah’s hand touched her arm. “Come Sadi.” Zarah spoke. “Lucia and I will brief all of you.” She said.

Jomann watched as Zarah drew them over to where Lucia sat and they huddled together around the small chart table. He looked at where Me’alla sat with her crew and was staring at him wide eyed. He stepped over to her. “You have heard things that could very well get many people killed if it becomes common knowledge before we are ready. Your reports to your office will be filtered heavily until we have arrived and know what is going on.”

Me’alla nodded quickly. “I understand.” She said. “I will not betray the trust Princess Sadi and the others have put in me.”

“Good. The punishment for doing so would not be pleasant in the least.” He spoke firmly. “I will have one of my people get you situated when we board the KINDRED SOUL and Dilaen can take those duties when we arrive on the SCIMITAR.” He told her. “For now... stay seated and do not press others for information. There will be plenty coming your way when this thing kicks off.”

Jomann turned toward the rear of the STRIKER and moved up beside where Sheva stood watching him. “Bringing them was a bad idea Jomann.” Sheva spoke motioning discretely to Me’alla and her crew.

“I don’t disagree.” Jomann told her. “But Sadi made the decision and it is done.”

“We should not have let them go on this mission!” Sheva spat. “He is no where skilled enough to be operating with Prince Androcles! I told you this!”

Jomann focused his blue eyes on her. “I know you resent being assigned to Dorian, it shows in your attitude towards him every moment of the day... but you need to get over it!” He hissed.

“I don’t resent it!” Sheva snapped softly.

Jomann moved closer to her. “Yes you do.” He stated. “I don’t know where these feelings come from Sheva, but as Durcunusaan we go where we are assigned. That is our oath. I have seen you with him since your return and you treat him as if he is some child with no intelligence or mind of his own. Believe in your mind what you will... but do not allow that to influence the way you treat him. Dorian Leonidas is far more skilled than you give him credit for. You have only been back a week and you have only been around him twice in that time. You know nothing about him or who he has become. I suggest you learn that first... for if your attitude continues I will recommend to Androcles that you be reassigned to the Durcunusaan Command Center on Apo Prime permanently. Is that understood?"

Sheva met his eyes knowing that he would do exactly what he said. Jomann had already done something similar to two other Durcunusaan troops who he felt were detrimental to the Prince's detail. Being assigned to the Command Center on Apo Prime was a sure way to have your career come to an undignified end. The men and women guarding the Command Center there were older Durcunusaan who had held the positions for decades. They were ruthless to those assigned there as a disciplinary measure for they took the protection of the Command Center and Royal Estate as some sacred duty only they could perform. Most who were assigned their for one infraction or another eventually quit the Durcunusaan and returned to their normal field units for they could not take it. It held a very negative stigma to it. Sheva nodded her head.

"Yes." She finally said.

Jomann nodded. "Good. I won't mention it again as long as you don't give me cause." He told her. "Queen Isabella saw something in you Sheva... that is why she requested you become part of her detail those months ago. Do not disappoint her." Jomann shifted his 190A4. "You and I are now the senior members of this detail. Aegea and the others will look to us. I did that for a reason as well." Sheva looked at him with surprised light green eyes and Jomann smiled. "You think I supported the Queen's decision to keep you as Dorian's Captain because you are a woman? You know battle, just as I do, and your influence will help those who head the details of the Princesses. Don't think for a moment that I don't trust your skills Sheva Juconi."

Jomann had never told her this before and despite herself Sheva felt a swell of pride within her chest. "Thank you Jomann." She said finally.

Jomann nodded. "We will be moving quickly when we arrive on the KINDRED SOUL. Keep them focused on their duties... and for nubous sake... make sure they don't allow the Princesses to kill the witch."

Sheva looked at him puzzled. "Witch? What are you talking about?"

"I don't know how it came about... the general will probably tell us when we get aboard but the good Senator Ulana somehow manipulated her way into coming with us." Jomann said.

"That elg'caress!" Sheva gasped. "How?"

Jomann shrugged his broad shoulder. "I don't know. Just make sure they keep Sadi and the others from killing her."

Sheva met his eyes. "Is that even possible?" She asked.

Jomann smiled. "That's your job." He stated. "If it was up to me... I'd vent her out the nearest airlock. Welcome to the Durcunusaan Sheva."

CHAPTER FIVE

SOLMAR

FEBRUARY 4TH, 1315 HRS, EST

Sehri opened her blue eyes and groaned softly at the pain that filtered through her mind. Her nose could immediately detect the scent of heavy smoke and the coppery smell of blood. Burning metal also assailed her nostrils and Sehri lifted her head from the crook of her arm where it rested. Fresh pain caused her to gasp as her head rose and she fought down the wave of agony as her eyes opened fully. She looked to her right side and saw the torn bulkhead of the STRIKER DT ship she had been riding in. She could just make out glimpses of the sun through the smoke and dangling wires that had made up the wall of the ship. The impact must have torn open the side of the ship, scattering metal and equipment everywhere as the STRIKER had gone down. Sehri could hear the scattered sounds of weapons fire and some shouting, but it was not as close as she had expected. Sehri got her hands under her and began to lift her upper body from the deck. As she rose, the searing pain that shot through her leg and lower body made her scream out in agony. She twisted her head around to look behind her and her eyes grew wide when she saw the eight inches of bloody, jagged metal sticking through the back of her thigh and a smaller piece protruding from her lower back. The one inch thick beam in her leg looked as if it came from the ribbed interior frame of the ship. She rolled over very slowly, gritting her teeth against the pain as she dragged her leg over and flopped half onto her back to keep from pushing the smaller sliver back into her abdomen.

“Sehri!” The voice called out and she twisted her head around quickly to see her brother pushing his way around a section of bulkhead that led into the rear most portion of the ship near the ramp area.

“Kelelm!” Sehri barked.

Kelelm gave the hanging bulkhead a final push and stepped into the section of the STRIKER where he knew his sister was. She had been ripped from his grasp and sucked back into the STRIKER's innards by the gravity of spinning. His safety line had kept him from being sucked out into the open of the rear of the ship, his two men not as lucky as the force had torn their safety lines free and sent them hurtling into the open maw of the ramp and out of sight. The impact had caused the deck of the STRIKER to buckle and heave upwards directly under him and had Kelelm's harness not been as tight he would have suffered a similar fate. He did not escape injury however, as his right arm hung next to useless from a dislocated shoulder and his face had several deep lacerations on it.

“Sehri!” Kelelm gasped as he came up next to her and saw how she was positioned half on her side. His eyes took in the blunt end of the metal sliver that protruded from both sides of his sister's leg.

“Kelelm... it hurts!” Sehri gasped gripping his arm tightly with one hand as she tugged at the helmet she wore.

“Be still sister!” He rasped at her taking his own helmet off. “We are crashed within the settlement Sehri. There still might be these Kavalians around. You must be strong!”

Sehri nodded as she finally got the helmet off and pushed it to the side. She forced herself on her elbow and saw how he was favoring his arm and the lacerations on his face. “Kelelm... you are injured!” She hissed.

Kelelm shook his head. “Not as badly as you sister.” He answered bending over her and inspecting her wounds carefully. “Clean penetrations. I don't think they hit any major arteries.” He glanced up at her and could see the pain etched onto her face as well as the beads of sweat that rolled down past her temples. Her jaw was set however, and she was enduring the pain as well as she could. The look of determination on her face made Kelelm's chest swell with pride. Sehri was truly not like her older sisters in the least. Osbela and Ibani would have been balling loudly had they been in a similar situation. “I must find a medical kit.” He stammered lifting his eyes to search the interior of the crashed ship.

Sehri pointed to deeper in the ship. “I saw one secured to the bulkhead just before going into the cockpit.” She hissed out the words.

Kelelm nodded and began moving forward to search. The interior of the STRIKER was a complete loss. They had hit with such force that the frame of the aircraft was buckled and cracked in several different places that Kelelm could see. He was amazed that they were even still alive. No ship within the Rothryn fleet could have taken such damage and survived as intact as the STRIKER was. He shoved aside some webbed seating and his eyes saw the large red container still attached to the bulkhead. The door to the cockpit was crushed into the frame of the ship and he could just make out the dangling arms of the pilots. He would check on them after he treated his sister he thought as he ripped the medical kit from the bulkhead clamps and began to make his way back to Sehri.

Kelelm could hear weapons fire nearby as he moved back through the tangle of circuitry and crushed frame of the ship and settled beside his sister once more. He glanced towards the rear of the STRIKER forty meters away and could see the upper back portion of the ship nearly touching the ground, but the actual ramp door itself had been torn away leaving the rear of the ship open to the outside. His keen eyes could detect the lower body of one of Lisisa's Spartans protruding from under some of the heavy equipment crates they had been carrying, the man's body appearing to have been crushed. He wondered if the others had been thrown out of the ship like his men because they were not secured with safety lines.

“Kelelm!” Sehri hissed in pain drawing his attention back to her.

Kelelm dropped to his knees beside her and began to yank at the clamps of the medical kit to get it open. “Hold on sister!” He rasped to her.

Kelelm got the kit open and began rummaging through the contents looking for some item that could be a pain killer. "I don't know what is..."

"Kelelm!" Sehri barked.

"Sehri I don't know what they use for pain!" He snapped back.

"Kelelm... behind us!" Sehri screamed causing her brother to whirl around reaching for the K12 magnum he still wore on his leg with his good arm. His eyes grew wide as he saw the Kavalian soldier beginning to lift his rifle towards them and his fingers closed around the K12 but knowing he was too slow because of his injured arm.

Three booming shots echoed in the confines of the crashed STRIKER and both of them saw the Kavalian's chest erupt with the impact, sending his body flying back out the rear of the STRIKER. Their heads turned to see the mass of metal and two webbed seats heave off the floor and Eotharon rose from his back, his right hand holding the K12 tightly. He shoved with a loud grunt and managed to push the debris from his body and get to his knees. Kelelm could see his eyes had changed to that of his wolf persona and his long fangs were fully extended as he shoved more equipment from in front of him and got to his feet with measured movements. The left side of his body armor was sliced open and Kelelm could see the blood stains covering his abdomen and hip as he staggered forward towards them, but Kelelm also saw clear and focused eyes.

"Eotharon!" Sehri gasped as she recognized him immediately.

Eotharon shook his head several times to clear the remaining fogginess from his brain and then came up beside them. "Not exactly... the most proper of landings!" He grunted, his eyes taking in Sehri's injuries. "Little One!" He gasped moving around to her side opposite Kelelm.

"I don't know what..." Kelelm began.

Eotharon met his eyes seeing the pain from his own injuries on his face. Eotharon didn't hesitate and reached across Sehri's body to grasp Kelelm's wrist. He yanked his arm upward and out, Kelelm nearly passing out from the pain as Eotharon popped his shoulder back into place. The pain faded quickly however with the adrenalin surging through his body and he flexed his fingers to return the feeling to them.

"The small blue pills! Orange container!" Eotharon hissed. "Give her one now! It is a stimulant!"

Kelelm looked down into the kit and found the container with those pills, tearing the cover off and dropping half a dozen into his palm. He got his fingers around one of them and dropped it into Sehri's open mouth. She swallowed without question, her eyes never leaving Eotharon's face.

"That will keep you from going into shock Little One!" Eotharon spoke as his fingers probed the area on her lower abdomen and leg. "We are still in battle and I can't give you pain medicine in case we have to move. You are wearing the newest form of our ArmorPly Body Armor. It will sense your wounds and begin a modified treatment that will stabilize you and stop the bleeding. The medical properties built into the armor will begin kicking in shortly. You will feel a warm sensation over the portions where you are injured and then you will know it is working."

"Eotharon... I'm... am I going to die?" Sehri gasped.

"Yes... you are!" The voice behind them growled.

Eotharon and Kelelm were turning before the words had finished being spoken but it was far too late. At least for the four Kavalians that stood behind them with their rifles leveled at them.

WASP-CLASS ASSAULT TRANSPORT KINDRED SOUL

Sadi, Ne'Veha, Carisia and Lu'ria followed Jomann through the corridors of the ship right behind the KINDRED SOUL's security escort, Sheva bringing up the rear with Aequea, Me'alla and her two crewman in front of them with wide eyes at what was happening. Me'alla was no fool and she knew something big must have been going on for the Princesses to have been pulled from the planet so quickly. The crew members of the KINDRED SOUL quickly got out of the way as they moved.

Three minutes after landing they were entering the bridge of the ship, some sixteen decks up from the forward landing bays of the KINDRED SOUL. Landing bays that were the size of entire ships in some cases due to the new WASP-Class ship's role and duties within the Fleet. As they entered they were assailed by the reverberating voice of a human male who stood no more than five foot four feet tall. He looked to be in his late thirties to early forties and was obviously a man chosen by Ben O'Connor.

"...prep all Troop Bays! Lock all drop pods into launch positions! I want to be ready to shit all over the Kavalians the minute we enter orbit!" The human man turned as Jomann led Sadi and the others onto his bridge and he straightened up just a little.

"Captain..." Jomann spoke.

"Captain George S. Patton!" The man barked bowing his head slightly. "At your service Princesses! We have secured your ships and our Task Force is preparing to jump to meet with the SCIMITAR's Strike Group."

"Strike Group?" Sadi asked surprised.

Patton nodded his head. "From what I understand, other parts of her entire Strike Group have responded from areas near Earth and Apo Prime at Sa'sur's orders. When we get there... we should have adequate firepower to blow the Kavalians right straight to hell! If you'll excuse my choice of words Princesses."

Jomann looked at Sadi quickly for he had studied human history intensely. He turned back to Patton. "George Patton... as in..."

The man nodded his head. "Don't know how many generations have passed since he was alive and I don't care. I'm one of his descendants and I carry my name proudly."

Jomann nodded. "As well you should Captain." He stated with some respect. "He was an inspired leader if his time."

Patton motioned them to the side of the busy bridge. "General Vengal is coming up from the aft landing bay and I told him I would lead you to our Staging Lounge. He can fill all of us in then. I must lodge a protest however Princess... I do not like have politicians on my ship. They are no better than cannon fodder to me, always getting underfoot and asking stupid questions." He looked at Me'alla and her crew. "Present company accepted of course. I've been following your work at Channel 65 for a few months now. Impressive."

Me'alla looked very surprised and it showed on her face. "Thank... thank you. I think." She said softly.

Sadi glanced at Jomann and nodded. "We feel the same Captain." She answered. "I imagine the General will inform us of what is happening when we meet him."

Patton nodded and motioned for them to follow him. "The Staging Lounge is this way." He said beginning to walk. "The 82nd Cataphract Division Mobile Commanders are already there conferring with the Durcunusaan Commanders."

They exited the bridge and moved down a short corridor to a set of double doors that were being guarded by two Durcunusaan soldiers and two human soldiers from the 82nd. They were ushered in without delay and as they entered, the doors on the opposite side of the room opened to admit Vengal, two of his officers and none other than Ulana and an aide that walked behind her. Sadi bristled at the presence of the younger woman but kept her face impassive when Ne'Veha and Carisia took her hands and squeezed tightly. Ulana exuded arrogance and when her eyes found Sadi they darkened considerably. The glare bounced off Sadi with barely any reaction from her and when Ulana's eyes fell on Ne'Veha and the others hoping to intimate them all she found was hostility staring back at her.

The Durcunusaan Division Commander turned toward Vengal as they all came up to the table, Ulana having to squeeze in between the 82nd's Commander and his aide even though the table was large enough to accommodate all of them around it easily. The Lycavorians in the room could sense the unspoken dislike floating between the women in the room easily, while Vengal and the others already knew of it. There was little that escaped the commander of the Durcunusaan. It was why, even as an elf, Vengal commanded the complete loyalty and trust of not only the entire Royal family, but also every living Durcunusaan. It also helped that his daughter was the Anome of General Daniel Simpson and Vengal was considered family by every living Leonidas.

"General... we've uploaded the last data burst from Captain Sa'sur." The Durcunusaan Colonel spoke. "It came from Captain Lunerr of Princess Lisisa's ship."

Vengal nodded and moved over between Sadi and Carisia, leaning over to kiss both their cheeks and then doing the same with Ne'Veha and Lu'ria. "I'm truly sorry I did not inform you sooner but all of you would have done something rash, and that is not what we needed and I think you know that."

Sadi nodded her head, understanding his actions. "Thank you Vengal." She said. "And you are right."

Vengal nodded and turned back to the Colonel. “Mosont... what do we have?”

The Lycavorian Colonel stabbed down on the large chart table. “The situation is fluid at the moment but according to Captain Lunerr, Androcles has established a small base camp on the southern continent here based on his last data burst to them. The REAPER is remaining outside the planet’s gravity well under Shroud and acting as a secure relay right now. The six Bontawillian settlements are established on the larger continent north of his position. They are all within a hundred kilometers of this major power plant. According to Lunerr, Andro was heading to this northern settlement to conduct an attack and free the colonists. It is the smallest and only forty kilometers from the coast. An earlier night attack by Andro and the remainder of the Omega Team resulted in the Kavalian Puma Bane Commander executing nearly fifty civilians in retaliation.”

“Wait.” Ulana exclaimed. “What... what is an Omega Team?”

Vengal glanced at her from across the table. “You are not cleared for such information Senator... I’m sorry.”

“General Vengal, I am a Senator of the Union and a member of the Union Defense Committee.” Ulana spoke. “I assure you... I have clearance.”

Vengal met her eyes and smiled. “Contrary to what you seem to believe Senator Ulana... you do not have clearance to everything. Ron?” Vengal turned and looked at the human commander.

The human commander, a man of medium height and deeply tanned skin leaned forward and began speaking before Ulana could respond. Major General Ronald Washington was thirty-seven years old, and the most experienced human commander among all of Earth’s forces. His dark brown hair held a small amount of gray in it, but aside from that his five foot ten body was in superb condition. He had commanded the two dozen or so Special Operations units that the humans had fielded during the war with the Evolli, and they had performed superbly. Working in concert with many Drow units, they had wreaked havoc behind Evolli lines on numerous occasions.

“Princess Lisisa went in with the Spartan Company stationed on the REAPER.” Ron spoke now. “The Prince’s last orders were to send the Spartans to reinforce their base camp and Lisisa would remain with him as they hit the settlement. No reports have come in since... but given how long it’s been, it’s almost certain the attack is already under way.”

Vengal nodded. “No bets against that.” He stated.

“Preliminary reports indicate the Kavalians are not fully established.” Mosont said. “Ron and I agree that they probably still have the majority of their infantry forces in and around the settlements and Sa'sur says Andro’s last report to her gave her instructions to remove all of the DIATAGA’s the moment we jumped into the system. They must have the bulk of the Kavalian equipment still in orbit.”

“Ships in orbit are Sa'sur’s problem.” Vengal said. “She has more moving correct?”

Washington nodded and motioned back towards Apo Prime on the chart. “She recalled the majority of the SCIMITAR’s Strike Group under the Royal Command Directive Urgent Storm. The last of them will join with her two hours before we do. Captain Patton has also discovered that to complement her Attack Force she pulled twelve MOONLANCER-B Missile Cruisers from the yards at Apo Prime. What she has should be more than a match for the Kavalian ships we know are in orbit.”

“Unless they call for more.” Vengal spoke.

Sadi shook her head slowly now. “They’ll know it’s him soon enough.” Sadi spoke softly as she looked at hm. “Vengal... what he’s doing... we can sense what he wants to accomplish. He’s doing it to save as many civilians as he can. Have Admiral Ceneu deploy two Fleet Groups under Shroud to these four different areas.” Sadi said pointing to the chart. “They are to stop any reinforcements to the Solmar sector at any cost.”

Vengal didn’t hesitate. “Captain Patton?”

The man was already moving. “I’m on it!”

Vengal turned back to Sadi. “He’s going to reveal that he’s on the planet isn’t he? Draw all of their attention away from interaction with the civilians and focus it on him.”

Sadi looked at Carisia and the others and nodded her head as she turned back to Vengal. “Yes.”

“They’ll undoubtedly surge out of their staging areas and try to capture him.” Vengal spoke. “Leaving light forces to guard the civilians.”

“You are moving Union military forces into The Wilds!” Ulana spoke up. “That should be approved by the Prime Minister and the Union Senate to insure we do not infringe upon our trading partners territory or rights.”

Sadi took a deep breath and then turned her head to Vengal. “There is a reason I brought Me'alla and her crew Vengal.” She spoke calmly. “I’m not entirely clear on why... on why the Senator is here. Perhaps you could enlighten me?”

Vengal began to speak but Ulana cut him off. “The Union Senate reserves the Right of Embarkation. We can board any warship within the Union Fleet in war or in peace to witness ongoing operations. The Prime Minister can not deny us that right for it violates Section Nine of the Union Charter if she does. And I will be transferring to the SCIMITAR when we rendezvous with her.”

Sadi glared at her. “The Right of Embarkation?” She hissed. “That has not been used in over seven hundred years.” She snapped.

“Perhaps not by others before me.” Ulana answered confidently. “But I am different. You should have studied the Diplomatic Bi-Laws more thoroughly while in the Academy Princess.” Ulana told her smugly. “That is something you should know.”

Vengal let his hand brush Sadi’s arm firmly, but hidden from Ulana’s eyes. “The Prime Minister deemed this was an appropriate action to take Sadi.” He spoke. “I disagreed... but was overruled by both her and Panos.”

Sadi looked at Vengal keeping her temper in check but wanting nothing more than to rip Ulana’s face off. “Panos?” She asked.

Vengal nodded. “He was very adamant.”

Sadi caught the hint of a message in his words and finally nodded her head. “Very well. Vengal insure all sub space communications off this ship and then off the SCIMITAR when we arrive are secure and have the approval of one of us or yourself before they are sent out.” She spoke motioning to Ne'Veha and the others.

Vengal nodded. “Done.” He said.

“You can not refuse me communications!” Ulana snapped. “You don’t have the authority to do that!”

Sadi met her eyes. “Perhaps you should have done your homework before invoking the Right of Embarkation.” She growled. “Then maybe you would have caught the part that says you fall under the most senior officer’s authority. Section thirteen, paragraph nine. As Crown Princesses of the Union... that happens to be us Senator. If we are not available then it is General Vengal as Commander of the Durcunusaan.”

“He is... he is an elf and a military officer!” Ulana spat. “I do not answer to him!”

“He is the fifth most senior military officer in all of the Union!” Washington snarled out before anyone else had a chance to answer. “He’s also been alive a hell of a lot longer than most of us in this room Senator! I suggest you remember that!”

Sadi turned to Vengal, dismissing Ulana before she could reply. “Andro’s STRIKER DT Mark II Variant is on the SCIMITAR... we will need it prepped by our ground crew and ready to launch the moment we transfer.”

Vengal nodded. “Already sent word ahead.” He spoke. “I’ll be riding with you if you don’t mind. At least until Captain Patton has got the KINDRED SOUL down on the surface.”

“How soon before we reach Sa’sur’s position?” Sadi asked.

“Twenty-two hours nine minutes Princess. Two jumps.” Mosont answered looking at her. “Another thirteen from there back to Andro. We are keeping track as well Princess.”

Sadi nodded with a small smile. “Yes... I suppose you are.” She said. “Vengal... is there some place we can speak privately.”

“I have a right to be involved in what you are planning!” Ulana snapped.

Sadi looked at her with blazing jungle green eyes. “Not in this reality!” She snarled back before turning and then staggering to the side.

Vengal reached for her just as Ne'Veha, Carisia and Lu'ria all staggered slightly away from the table. “Sadi!” He gasped.

Jomann had reached for and now supported both Ne'Veha and Carisia while Aegea had grabbed Lu'ria’s arms. “What is it?” Jomann gasped looking at them. “Sadi?”

Sadi shook her head. “Something... something has happened.” She stammered.

“With Andro?” Jomann barked.

Sadi shook her head quickly. “No!” She answered. “We felt... we felt terror and pain! It was... it wasn't Andro.” Sadi turned and looked at Ne'Veha, Carisia and Lu'ria. “It's the same, it's the same presence we felt at the Senate vote!”

“She's with him!” Lu'ria rasped gripping Carisia's hand. “Sadi... she's with him!”

SOLMAR

FEBRUARY 4TH, 1325 HRS, EST

Androcles Leonidas was his father's son far more than he would ever admit.

Whether it was making war, or loving those who were his wives and mates, the similarity was obvious to all. Until he had felt her a short time ago, Androcles had pushed what he and the others had felt at the Senate vote to the back of his mind. All of them had. But then sensing her on Lisisa's ship as he had, tasting her Mindvoice and Etheric resonance, it had brought all of the emotions and new feelings they had tried to bury back to the forefront. He had acted quite by instinct then by sending his aura through the connection that they had shared. He gently probed and explored, expressing his interest and intense desire to her through Mindvoice, and feeling her instinctual acceptance and delight at his attentions. He had been aware of her presence on the STRIKER, felt her excitement and bravery, and then her fear as the ship was hit and began to spin out of control until it crashed several hundred meters away from him inside the settlement. She was calling to him and did not even know it and this action only succeeded in one result. The same result had it been Sadi or any of his mates calling to him.

It turned Androcles Leonidas into a heat seeking missile.

Sadi was the core of Andro's heart and soul. She, more than him, had utterly accepted that other women would share their lives as mates and lovers. She had embraced this from the outset and was far stronger for it. It was Sadi's recognition of this that finally allowed him to completely acknowledge it as well and now he felt it within him just as powerfully as she did. As they all did. They did not know her name but she was a powerful beam of light within their minds and filled with passion and desire for them as well as extreme intelligence. She was not as focused as they were, but Andro could feel her growing in strength and clarity because of her connection to them. She was not something they were willing to sacrifice to the fickle gods of war.

Elynth had sensed it within him seconds after he did and her response had been simple and very direct, as was her nature.

Go to her now! Let nothing stop you my Bonded Brother! Go!

That is exactly what Androcles had done. And he was not alone. Daio had seen him break towards where the STRIKER had crashed and without thinking he had followed his Prince. His oath as a Durcunusaan demanded it, and would be the reason his future would alter in the days to come. Across the settlement, the newest Leonidas son had also felt it within his brother, and without even a single pause, Dorian and Ryner began to carve their way in that direction while Elynth flew above them all and swept Kavalian soldiers aside like a tornado. It was this action that finally broke the backs of the Kavalian defenders. The Puma Bane soldiers were trained to harness their fear of dragons, to use it. After the initial attack caught them by surprise they had quickly dug in however, making the Union advances difficult and not without cost. The Union STRIKER crashing nearby with Sehri in it had sent the Durcunusaan and Spartan troops with Androcles into a frenzy. Their attacks became more ferocious and Shi Viskas began to sing in the midday air as they fed off the aura of their Prince that was unwittingly permeating their heads within Mindvoice.

Andro leaped easily over the top of a destroyed Heavy lifter, his wolf eyes blazing bright as the rear of the STRIKER came into view. He clutched Cana in his right hand, spotting half a dozen Kavalian troops moving for the rear of the ship. With barely a thought Andro lifted his left arm and his Shi Viska flared into existence and launched in the blink of an eye. He didn't hesitate and followed his shield as it streaked toward the Kavalian troops, razor like blades extending from all around the shield's edge. He was twenty meters away when his Shi Viska struck the lead Puma Bane soldier just above his shoulders and sent his head flopping through the air as it sped off, his body continuing forward at a run for another few feet before dropping to the ground. The remaining five soldiers turned and saw Andro bearing down on them and they lifted their combat rifles, sending a lethal barrage of kinetic projectiles at the foolish Union soldier. Their eyes only grew wider as they saw their rounds begin to harmlessly impact some sort of bluish shield encasing the soldier who was wearing gleaming gold armor with crimson streaks on the shoulders and chest. The Lycavorian was insane looking as he charged them, his empty hand filling with a handle of some sort and then a wicked looking sword blade appearing from that handle as if by magic. As they stood there and began to try and reload their weapons Andro fell upon them.

The first Kavalian, dismissing trying to reload his weapon, simply swung his rifle like a club with a wild scream. Saar came up instantly and with a powerful flick of his wrist, the sword sliced through the mechanism of the rifle and sent it spinning away in two parts. Cana plunged forward then, the blade of the sword driving through the center of the Kavalian's chest and erupting out between his shoulder blades, splashing his comrades with blood. Andro didn't stop his forward momentum, dipping low to his right and spinning around while sweeping Saar in front of him. The Dragon Armor forged metal blade claimed another victim as it decapitated the next Kavalian with barely a pause in its motion. Andro ripped Cana free of the Kavalian's chest as he spun and brought that blade whistling forward to chop the leg out from another Puma Bane soldier. As that soldier began to fall, screaming out his agony, Andro's right fist pummeled forward holding the pommel of Saar. The small bluish ball of power left his fist instantly and crossed the two meters to another Kavalian smashing into his chest. The ball of Etheric power lifted the Kavalian off the ground and sent him hurtling into the air screaming in agony as every bone in his upper body was crushed. He did not need to worry about landing for Elynth chose that time to sweep in from above and snatch his body into her curved talons. With barely a blink she ripped the Kavalian in half, ending his screaming and then tossing his body to the sides as she dipped her wings and began to turn back.

Four more Puma Bane troops appeared from behind a building, sprinting towards Andro with savage cries of rage. These four never even got close. Andro saw a flash of blackness and then two of the Kavalians were lifted off their feet and driven into the unyielding side of the building they had just run around. The shadows unwrapped instantly to reveal Dorian who then smashed his helmeted head into the face of one Kavalian while driving one of his Dragon Armor forged dual fighting knives, almost identical in appearance to those his Uncle had given to Yuri, into the throat of the other. With a trumpet of anger, Ryner blew through a stack of equipment containers, his jaws opening and closing on one Kavalian even as his huge wing was whipping around to smash into the body of the fourth Kavalian. The muffled screams of the Kavalian died as Ryner bit clean through his body and jerked his head to the side tossing his lower body one way and then spitting out his upper body to the other side. The Kavalian he had hit with his wing smashed into more crates upside down, falling to the ground in agony from dozens of broken bones. His pain would not last as Elynth flared her wings and landed, one of her talon equipped feet crushing the life from him while impaling two of her curved talons through his upper body. Dorian looked down at the stunned Kavalian he had hit in the face and simply reached down with both hands and grabbed his head. He twisted with all of his combined vampire and wolf strength and the man's neck was instantly broken into dozens of pieces and he died instantly.

As Andro whirled back around to face the last two Kavalians he had attacked, he saw one already on the ground impaled by a Nehtes that now was driven a good two feet into the dirt. He saw Daio holding his right hand out fully extended, the K12 booming as he sent seven rounds into the last Kavalian's upper body even as he was moving forward. When he got close enough to the Puma Bane troop, his left hand grabbed the dying man's lightly armored front and yanked him closer. Daio placed the barrel of his K12 against the man's head and pulled the trigger with no hesitation in the least.

"Nubou forn!" Daio screamed as the man's head exploded like an over pressurized coolant tank.

Andro's eyes went to the rear of the STRIKER now, his sensitive nose detecting the nearly overpowering apple walnut scent of a female within her fever, and the fear that was pulsing through that scent. Sehri's Etheric resonance echoed within him and it was filled with terror. Daio was beside him now and he quickly slapped his Prince hard in the shoulder. He too could detect the scent and the meaning behind it, as well as the fear.

"Go Andro! We will hold them!" Daio barked.

Andro didn't hesitate and was shifting to his wolf form before Daio's words had finished echoing in the air.

“Eotharon... I’m... am I going to die?” Sehri gasped.

“Yes... you are!” The voice behind them growled.

Eotharon and Kelelm were turning before the words had finished being spoken but it was far too late. At least for the four Kavalians that stood behind them with their rifles leveled at them. Sehri’s eyes grew incredibly wide, as did Kelelm’s, even as Eotharon smiled broadly staring down the barrels of four rifles. One Kavalian’s eyes narrowed.

“You laugh in the face of your death!” He snarled jerking his rifle up even more.

“In the face of yours.” Eotharon commented.

“By the gods of our people!” Kelelm rasped out the words.

The Kavalian who had spoken realized Kelelm wasn't looking at them when he spoke and he turned his head sharply behind him, his own eyes going wide. Standing behind them with blazing azure blue eyes was the largest wolf the Kavalian had ever seen in the intelligence files of his people. Nearly three and a half feet tall at the shoulders and easily close to three hundred pounds by the looks of it. Those eyes stood out against the jet black fur that surrounded the muzzle of that creature, it’s lips drawn back over savagely long front fangs capable of tearing flesh easily, and it’s hugely muscular body poised to leap.

“Fuucckkkkk!” He screamed beginning to bring his rifle around.

He would never make it.

It was the most beautifully savage thing Kelelm had ever witnessed in his life and it was a moment in time that he would have forever. Everything seemed to slow around him as he saw the massive black wolf leap into the air directly at the Kavalian, it’s right front paw, easily three inches across and equipped with vicious looking talons, ripped outwards to strike the Kavalian in the neck. That single blow tore open the man’s neck, nearly severing his head from his body, blood arcing into the air as his body went sailing across the confines of the STRIKER to smash against the hard bulkhead. As the wolf continued its leap it was already changing and in a single blink he saw the form of a tall, exceptionally powerful Lycavorian in luminous gold armor take shape. A glimmering sword was in his right hand and as the large body of the Lycavorian finished spinning around that sword had already taken the heads of two more Kavalians before they even realized they were under attack. Their bodies were falling as Kelelm saw the eight inch long psychic knife burst from the left fist of the young man as the last Kavalian was turning. It entered just under his furry jaw and drove upwards with the force of the blow. In a display of strength unlike any Kelelm had ever seen Andro extended his left fist, his psychic knife fully imbedded in the Kavalian’s head and slamming him into the top of the damaged STRIKER with a sickening thud. The Kavalian’s body was clearly six to eight inches off the deck and his weapon clattered to the deck from twitching and suddenly useless hands. Andro’s eyes were ablaze with that azure blue glow, and his mouth was open to expose the vicious looking dual fangs that Kelelm would later learn were unique to the Leonidas bloodline. Kelelm watched in awe as the Kavalian’s legs convulsed madly and his eyes became nothing more than dark orbs as Andro twisted his hand slightly and he solidified his psychic knife inside the man’s head.

“Never! Never touch her!” Andro’s voice growled in a clearly vengeful tone.

Andro yanked his hand back, the psychic knife still clearly evident, and he watched the body of the Kavalian fall limply to the deck. Andro’s chest was heaving in exertion and slowly the helmeted head turned to face them and those eyes settled on his sister. It was almost as if a switch flipped then, for the savage looking expression disappeared completely and the psychic knife vanished. With a simple nod of his head, the polished and blood stained Dragon Armor began to retract instantly and he was reaching for his helmet. Kelelm watched as he yanked it off and tossed it to the deck. Kelelm saw the dark hair and neatly trimmed goatee now and he watched as Andro moved for his sister, dropping to his knees beside her. Kelelm moved to intercede his body between them but Eotharon grabbed him and held him back, quickly shaking his head.

Sehri stared at those azure eyes, caught in their grasp as she was, the desire and want that swept through her quickly pushing aside the pain she still felt. She gasped in new sensations and delight as Andro quickly lowered his head to nearly touch hers and her inhaled deeply of her rich apple and walnut scent. Filled with pain and fear at the moment, but still very sweet to him. Sehri gasped as well, his aura suddenly surrounding and embracing her, filling her with warmth and passion and love, all of her senses coming alive like they never had before. Kelelm could only sit there and watch in shock as his sister's pain filled face changed then and became animated and bright. She gasped as Androcles took another deep breath and she could feel his Etheric resonance embrace her fully. His nose brushed against her cheek and then across her lips, her hands coming up to take his face within her grasp without fear.

"You should have stayed on the ship." Andro spoke the words only centimeters from her own quivering lips.

Kelelm watched in shock as his usually very demure sister grasped Andro's face tighter and she pulled his lips down on hers with confidence. Sehri kissed him hungrily, a hunger Andro returned with fervor, and though she had never kissed a man before Sehri soaked up his essence and reveled in what it made her feel. His armored hand came up to grip her head gently, holding her up so they could deepen the kiss, something Sehri did without hesitation.

Andro reluctantly pulled his lips from hers after a long moment, his blood screaming within his veins almost as brightly as it did for Sadi. He took a deep breath, her hands still on his cheeks staring at him and he looked at her. "You should have remained on the ship Sehri." He spoke finally, Kelelm's eyes growing wider as he spoke his sister's name. How did he know her name if they had just met?

"I... I could not." She answered him.

"You are a stubborn woman." Andro commented with a grin as he lifted his head slightly and studied her wounds for a moment.

Sehri watched his face, the most beautiful face she had ever gazed at, as his eyes studied her injuries and then his hand came up and a finger touched his ear.

"Sa'roh?" His voice barked.

"Here Andro!"

"Status?"

"Daio already ordered me down. One hundred meters west of your position." Sa'roh answered immediately "Dantio and the others are just now reaching the auditorium to release the civilians."

"Lisi?" Andro spoke lifting his head up and looking at the top of the crashed ship.

"We're not seeing any movement at all Andro." Lisisa answered over the COM implant which all of them wore.

"You and Jeth remain airborne for now." Andro told her. "Daio... secure an evac corridor to get the civilians out of the settlement to the STRIKERS. And order the KADEN in. Dantio?"

"We're entering now Andro." Dantio spoke and Andro could hear the excited voices of dozens of different men and women. "Number looks about right."

"Dantio... losses?" Andro asked.

There was a moment of silence before Dantio answered. "Sixteen that I know of for sure." He replied softly. "I'm still getting a headcount of our people."

"Daio?" Andro asked.

"Eleven confirmed Andro." Daio answered in that subdued voice. "They put up a much better fight than we expected."

Sehri watched Andro's eyes close for a brief moment and she felt the anguish wash over him. She reached out quickly and took his face in her hands and she saw that anguish quickly pass as she tried to touch him with her own aura as much as possible given she did not really know how to control it. She saw him nod slowly to her.

"We leave no one." Andro spoke. "Get the civilians moving. Sa'roh... I'll meet you at the LZ. Have Haridl standing by... I'm bringing her a priority patient."

"Understood."

Andro looked at Sehri. "It is better if a medical person removes these. I need to lift you Sehri. Draw from me what you need."

Sehri nodded her head quickly understanding what he meant as his arms began to slid under her body and she laced her own arms over his broad shoulders.

"I can carry her!" Kelelm spoke as he moved forward and started to rise painfully in order to protect his sister's virtue and honor.

Andro's eyes lifted as he got his arms under Sehri's legs and her waist. "You are injured as well Kelelm... better that you do not injure yourself further. Your sister's honor is more than safe with me."

Kelelm met those azure eyes and nodded after a moment. "Of that I have little doubt." He spoke.

Andro nodded and turned back to look at Sehri. "Ready?"

She nodded quickly. "Yes." She answered, opening her mind to Andro's and preparing to use whatever she needed to dull the pain of when he moved her.

Andro smiled. "This is not exactly the way we had envisioned meeting you." He spoke softly. "Sadi and the others will be angry with you for this."

Sehri was about to answer when Andro lifted her and she grit her teeth against the surge of pain, quickly drawing a part of Andro's tolerance for pain into her so she did not pass out. He stood up fully with her petite form in his arms and looked at her once more as her face relaxed somewhat. "Can we go now, or is there something else you wish to see?"

Kelelm saw his sister glare at him, but in that glare he saw a love that was reserved for those who would share your life forever. A love that his wife and mate gave to him everyday. As Eotharon gripped his arm and helped him up fully Kelelm had a sense that life was going to be very different in the future.

Haridl dropped the smaller piece of metal to the deck of the STRIKER and returned her gaze to the open wound on Sehri's side. She lifted the portable scanner and nodded her head. "Good... no slivers remain." She spoke. She looked up at Sehri. "The medical filaments in your armor did their job. I will..."

Haridl's implant cackled in her ear. "Hari... we need you!" Danito's voice echoed. "We have wounded coming in!"

Haridl looked at to where Andro was watching and saw him nod. "Go! I will finish." He said.

Haridl nodded and grabbed her kit and began moving past the throng of recently freed civilians as they crowded the back of the STRIKER. Andro knelt in front of her, Kelelm beside her and holding her hand. The upper and lower portions of her armor, including the lightweight fatigue top had been removed leaving nothing more than a loose t-shirt that was partially soaked in sweat and outlined her pert, medium sized breasts perfectly. Kelelm's eyes watched as Andro took the large medical patch bandage and began to apply it to the wound on Sehri's side. Not once did his eyes wander from their task Kelelm noticed, even though his hands were so close to Sehri in such an intimate way. Given the social values of their people, this is not something Sehri would have allowed of a man she had just met. To view her in such a way and allow him to touch her so. It was only another sign to Kelelm that things were going to be very interesting from now on.

"This patch will anchor itself with micro filaments and feed your system with antibiotic fluids and additional enzymes that will assist your healing system." Andro spoke holding it firmly to her side for a moment. "It will drop off in a few hours when it runs its course. Do not remove it."

"I will insure this." Kelelm said.

Andro saw her shiver slightly. "You are cold?" He asked.

Sehri nodded quickly. "Inside the ship... yes." She answered.

Andro began to unbuckle the clasps along the sides of his own upper body armor. Kelelm and Sehri watched intently as he removed it quickly and they saw a similar fatigue top which he unbutton quickly and pulled off. Sehri barely held in the gasp of wanton desire as she saw his entire upper body bared to her eyes for he wore no t-shirt under the fatigue top. Her blue eyes quickly took in the flaming tattoo on his abdomen, the numerous scars and the Talon Guardian Brand on his upper chest. Kelelm for his part recognized the body of a fellow warrior and based on the scars he determined this was not a man who spent much time inside. His skin was deeply tanned and the muscles excruciating in their detail. Andro reached up quickly and draped the top over Sehri's shoulders. She swiftly put her arms through the sleeves and drew it tightly around herself.

"Better?" He asked.

Sehri nodded and without thinking she reached out and drew a finger across the brand of the Dragon Talon. Her eyes grew slightly wider when she touched it for it was directly over his heart and she could feel the thumping of his powerful heart under her touch as well as the warmth of his skin. The texture of the brand was unlike any burn or injury she had seen and it almost pulsed with a life of its own.

“What... what is this?” She asked softly.

Andro reached up and pulled her hand away gently, bringing her fingers up to his lips where he kissed them softly. “Something you can discover at a later time if you wish.” He said. “Something... something all of us desire.”

“They are... Sadi and the others... they are coming aren't they?” Sehri asked in a soft whisper voice.

Andro nodded as he reached down and pulled his armor back up, slipping it over his skin and beginning to refasten it. “Yes. They will be here in under a day if all goes well.” He replied. “You however... you are finished exploring the unknown. At least for now.”

They looked up as the female elf came up and placed her hand on Andro's shoulder. He looked up into Sa'roh's face. “We're almost ready.” She spoke.

Andro nodded and turned back to Sehri. “You will return to our base camp with Sa'roh. We are going to head north with those civilians we could not get loaded this time around. They will return for a second trip and we should return about the same time as your mother coming down from the REAPER. I understand she practically held Lunerr at gunpoint in order to get him to release the last STRIKER.”

Kelelm grinned. “She can be persuasive.” He said.

“I am coming with you.” Sehri stated firmly.

“Sehri you are injured!” Kelelm exclaimed.

Sehri's eyes never left Andro's face. “The medicines are working and I will only grow stronger as my healing system kicks in. You know this.” She stated calmly. “I don't want to... I don't want to be away from you Androcles. Not... not so soon after discovering you.”

“Sehri... it will only be for a few hours.” He said.

“I'm coming with you!” She spoke more firmly and slowly got to her feet. The pain in her leg had become nothing more than a dull throb by now.

Andro got up as well and looked at Kelelm. “Is she always this stubborn?” He asked.

Kelelm looked at his sister and shrugged his shoulders. “She never listened to our mother and father when growing either.”

Sehri snapped out with her hand and hit him in the abdomen. “Kelelm!”

“Very well... but I will carry you if you show signs of weakening.” Andro spoke. “We will be moving relatively fast to put as much distance as we can between us and this settlement. They'll be looking for us shortly.”

Kelelm looked at him. “The attack was perfect.” He said. “They won't discover we were here for several hours.”

Andro shook his head. “They'll discover we were here in several minutes.”

Kelelm looked confused. “How?”

Andro grinned. “I intend to tell them.” He said.

KAVALIAN AD-HOC HQ
GENERAL AZLENR'S COMMAND CENTER
1430 HRS, EST

“...go more easy if you will only tell me what I wish to know. That is why I have brought you here.” Azlenr spoke to the vampire who was kneeling before the portable desk. Azlenr was standing beside it, Makali and Byka standing to the side with two Kavalian soldiers holding their weapons on the man.

Robaran looked at the man. His face was swollen on the right side from his broken cheek, his eye puffy and nearly shut. His entire body was sore and only Haridl's blood had given him the strength to recover as much as he had from the beating the Puma Bane troops had given to him. He had been stunned into silence when his long time elven lover had appeared out of nowhere alongside the younger brother of Prince Androcles. She could not treat him as much as she wanted too and after only fifteen minutes she had kissed him goodbye with tears in her eyes. Robaran had decided to ask her to be his wife the moment she left. He would not let such a woman of strength leave his life.

Of course... he had to live through this as well.

“And if I don’t know or won’t tell you the answers to your questions then you give me back to your Puma Bane dogs?” Robaran snapped. “I’d rather you kill me now. Get it over with.”

Azlenr looked at the man intently. Azlenr had no particular hatred for vampires; they had never done anything to him. He only fought them because he was ordered to. The man appeared to be in superb physical condition, probably only a few hundred years old and he was obviously well trained in resisting interrogation or Marsin and his men would have gotten him to talk. His demeanor alone told Azlenr he was no ordinary Union Spartan.

“I have been around enough soldiers in my life to know that you are not a common foot soldier.” Azlenr spoke calmly. “If I had to guess I would say Union Special Forces or a member of their Durcunusaan. I understand your loyalty but these are questions that we can already deduce from your actions. You and your fellow team members managed to kill twenty Puma Bane Commandos before you fell. That is no small feat.”

“It’s easy enough when the only thing they are trained for is killing helpless men, women and children.” Robaran hissed.

“A... regrettable occurrence... but one I did not have knowledge of and one I did not endorse.” Azlenr spoke. He stepped away from the desk and tossed several printed frozen images on the floor in front of Robaran. The bodies of several Puma Bane troops and the large dragon print. “Last night someone attacked a small Puma Bane encampment in the mountains above the northern settlement. They killed the ten Puma Bane troops with nothing more than bladed weapons and escaped without leaving any trace of where they might have gone. The weapons used were mostly your Nehtes and swords. We can also confirm there is at least one dragon here as well. Now... we know that only your Durcunusaan uses swords... and this action was far too precise for standard Union Spartans. We also know that many of your Durcunusaan are... connected to dragons. Bonded Pairs you call them. How many of them are on this planet and where are they hiding?”

“You don’t know half of what you think you know!” Robaran spat at him.

“You might be surprised at what we know.” Azlenr spoke calmly.

“I doubt that... General Azlenr’Macaoe.” Robaran spoke looking at him.

Azlenr looked more than slightly surprised that the vampire knew who he was, but this only confirmed to him that he was something more than a normal soldier. “You know who I am?” He said calmly.

“I know who you are.” Robaran snapped. “And him.” He said motioning with his head to where Byka sat on the edge of the table. “General Byka’Caleo. The two men given most credit for cracking the High Coven defenses around Tenari. You always work together and in the war with the Coven you failed only once and that was because you had a traitor in your midst who warned the Coven you were coming. Yeah... I know who you are.”

“You seem awfully well informed for a common foot soldier.” Byka stated calmly as he looked at him.

Robaran shrugged. “What can I say...? I watch the Netnews.”

Azlenr moved in front of Robaran and squatted down. “Humor?” He said. “For a man in your position, humor is not something I would expect.”

“I’m dead anyway.” Robaran said. “Why not have a laugh before I die.”

Azlenr looked at him and smiled. “No... I don’t think that is what you believe.” He said. “You are filled with hope that your fellow soldiers that escaped will come for you. That they will somehow find a way to rescue you.”

“They’re already gone.” Robaran said.

“Doubtful considering your... shall we say... your mood.” Azlenr told him.

“Dying in service to my King... to my people... that is what makes my mood!” Robaran spat. “Pride! Honor! Things you have no knowledge of if you butcher children in the streets like they are animals!”

One of the guards lifted his rifle to slam it into the back of Robaran’s head but Azlenr held up his hand. “No!” He barked. “We are not Puma Bane and we do not treat prisoners in such a way!” He got back to his feet and turned his back to Robaran. “I told you that was not my doing.”

“I’m supposed to believe that?” Robaran barked. “I watched those Puma Bane troops shoot children in the back who were only trying to find a place to hide! And they laughed as they did it!”

Azlenr looked over at Byka who met his eyes. That sounded like something Marsin’s men would certainly do and it was the reason they had not wanted to use the Puma Bane troops to begin with. Keleru was insistent for some reason however and he finally had no choice. Azlenr turned back and looked at him. "It is the truth." He stated evenly. "I have no reason to lie to you."

"And I suppose you didn't support your precious Keleru in blowing up the Union Senate Building on Earth and killing over a thousand innocents. Among them two hundred children whose only crime was trying to learn. Bet you didn't support that huh?" Robaran snapped. "You must think I'm really stupid."

Byka came to his feet now and looked at him. "You lie vampire!" He snarled. "Just like your Netnews lies! The KFI supported no such action!"

"You'd better check your facts on that bub!" Robaran snapped. "Just like you butchered hundreds of children within the borders of the High Coven when you invaded for no reason!"

Azlenr held up his hand keeping Byka from replying. "Now it is you who should check your facts. We had solid Intelligence that the High Coven was about to launch more poison missiles on our homeworld. We could not allow that to happen again. We were defending ourselves, nothing more."

Robaran looked at him with wide eyes. "I suppose that is what your leaders told you huh? No one even knew the Kavalians had made a resurgence when you invaded the High Coven!" He snapped. "Fuck this! I'm not telling you shit! Just give me back to your Puma Bane animals and let them kill me!"

"I have no..." Azlenr began to speak but was interrupted when the small door slid to the side and his senior COM officer burst in.

"General!" The man gasped. "General... we are receiving a communications!"

Azlenr looked at the man annoyed. "And this is important to me why?" He growled.

"The man... General... he claims he has just destroyed the Puma Bane detachment in the northern settlement and has freed all of the civilians. He wishes... he wishes to speak with you sir!" The officer stammered.

Azlenr looked at the man. "What?"

"It is a Union soldier. He... he says he has just wiped out the Puma Bane detachment at the northern settlement and has freed the civilians. He... wishes to speak with you." The man repeated his statement.

"He is on our channels?" Byka gasped.

The COM officer nodded. "Yes General."

"Bring him." Azlenr ordered as he surged forward pointing at Robaran. "Byka with me!" He stopped for a second. "Get Marsin here as well." He ordered the COM officer. "Move... move quickly!"

Andro watched as Dantio and the others got the Bontawillian, elf and human civilians that remained from the settlement lined up and moving out of the sundered settlement gates heading north. They were moving quickly and efficiently as was the normal way for most Bontawillian people. All of them were clearly overjoyed to be free and Sehri and Kelelm had seen the looks of adoration given to Andro as the men and women passed him. Kelelm was not about to let his sister remain behind and they now sat together on the half ton chunk of concrete that had been part of the door before Andro had used his power to blow it open. Kelelm was watching him intently for clearly military purposes, Andro's helmet once more on his head and hiding most of his features. The matte black helmet had a long plume of multi colored hair that fell back between his shoulder blades and was unlike anything Kelelm had seen before. The golden eyed dragon with open maw on the front of the helmet was very intimidating. That this normal armor could, in mere milliseconds, be covered in glimmering Dragon Armor did not escape Kelelm in the least. The powerful aura of command that surrounded this young man was there for all to see and feel and only those too dense to know their own name would miss it. That he was so young did not faze the much older Lycavorian Spartans that moved back and forth among the soldiers. He conferred several times with both the Lycavorian Dantio as well as the taller Daio. He also saw him make odd motions and signals with his hands towards different Union soldiers at different times. They would only nod and move off to conduct something that Kelelm would not see. The KADEN had taken nearly three hundred of the civilians aboard, almost thirty percent over her gross operating safety weight. Andro had trusted the human pilot when she said she could do it, and the ship had cleared the tree tops as it made its way north towards the ocean where it would cross the ninety kilometers of open water to their base on the southern continent. The STRIKER was fully loaded as well, and waiting for his signal to lift off.

Sehri simply trembled and stared at him with newly discovered emotions and sensations surging through her. Through him Sehri could feel Sadi and the others growing stronger by the moment. They were getting closer she knew, but still hours away, yet that did not keep them from reaching for her and embracing her within their Etheric resonance as well. And everything around her was becoming so much clearer and focused as they drew closer. Her glaucous blue eyes never left Andro as he paced back and forth two meters away, stealing glances at her while issuing orders to his men. Sehri was also intelligent enough to know who Eotharon and the two other Durcunusaan soldiers who knelt discretely to the side were. They were there to protect her. Sehri remembered the greeting between Andro and Lisisa. He had swept his sister up in his arms and hugged her tightly, all the while scolding her for doing something so stupid as to come here. Sehri had watched and listened within Mindvoice as Elynth scolded her younger but much larger brother, all the while checking him for possible injuries and finally brushing her snout against his affectionately. Sehri noticed for the first time that Lisisa wore a similar helmet to Andro, though the plume was nowhere near as long, and it was missing the dragon face in the front. The pain in her side was nearly gone between the medical patch and her own remarkable healing system and the throbbing in her leg was an afterthought now.

She and Kelelm had watched him speak to the Kavalian officer on the portable monitor that had been set up and give his instructions. Now it was only a matter of waiting until the Kavalian Commander replied. Sehri watched him reach up and remove his helmet as he turned to them and he crossed the distance to them in a dozen steps before squatting in front of her. His hand came up and she could feel the warmth of his body through the leather like ArmorPly that covered his palm as he stroked her cheek with his fingers. Sehri reached up quickly and placed her hand over his holding his fingers in place.

“The pain is almost gone?” He asked softly taking off his helmet.

Sehri nodded her head. “Yes. So is the throbbing. I told you that.” She said with a smile.

Kelelm looked back and forth between them. “You told him... Sehri... you have been sitting here with me the whole time. How...” He stopped and saw his youngest sister look at him with an odd gaze. Kelelm glanced at Andro and then back to her. “Ahhh... I understand now.” He said.

Andro looked at Kelelm. “This is... this is not something any of us expected Kelelm.” Andro spoke.

“You mean you and your other wives and mates?” Kelelm asked.

Andro nodded. “It is as much a surprise to us as it is to Sehri. Especially the intensity of it.” He answered. “Part of it is her fever yes, but the majority of it is something else within all of us. It pushes Sehri’s fever to the back.”

Kelelm looked at him. “I have to say... first meeting your brother on Austrova... now you here in the middle of a war...” Kelelm shook his head with a smile. “This is not how my father and mother envisioned it.”

“I can safely say it is not exactly what I had in mind either.” Andro replied.

Kelelm looked at him. “Why do this?” He asked. “Why make yourself a target. Is it not easier to simply leave?”

Andro nodded. “Yes. In doing that however, I leave these people to the mercies of the Kavalians. You have seen the bodies and the condition of the survivors. The Kavalians that we killed lined up over fifteen hundred innocents and butchered them because they would not fit in the main auditorium in the center of the settlement. Men, women and even children.” Andro shrugged his broad shoulders. “That was the only reason. These dead Puma Bane soldiers you see all around us... they are the Kavalian Shock Troopers... totally committed and loyal to their leader Keleru. They will kill everything in their path to accomplish their goals. Securing this planet was their goal and they massacred thousands of innocents to do so. What makes you think any survivors would be treated differently.”

“But you are... you are the Crown Prince of your people!” Kelelm stated. “You are risking your own life!”

Andro chuckled. “Yes I am.” He stated. “And I’m also known to have a few screws loose as well.”

Kelelm looked at Sehri quickly and saw her smile. “Screws loose?” He asked. “What does that mean?”

“Andro!” Sa’roh called out to him from the portable COM unit. “They are answering!”

Andro smiled wider. “It’s a nice way of saying that I tend to do rather crazy things.” He answered before kissing Sehri firmly and then rising to his feet, returning his helmet to his head. “Things that drive others malda as well.” He looked at Sa’roh as he came up to her. “The instant I end this, you are airborne.”

Sa’roh nodded. “You don’t have to tell me twice.” She said.

Andro nodded and touched the inside of his left wrist activating the Dragon Armor. It took exactly four seconds for the pliable plates of Dragon Armor to extend and conform to his body over the top of the ArmorPly Mark V uniform, making him a very imposing figure.

“Activate it!”

KAVALIAN FIELD HQ SOUTHERN SETTLEMENT

Azlenr moved into his communications center, Byka taking up a position to his right at an COM panel. As Robaran was pushed roughly to his knees on the left, the main door opened and Marsin made his entrance. He glanced darkly at where two of Azlenr’s men stood on either side of the Union vampire prisoner and then back to Azlenr.

“General...” Marsin stated. “I was told we are receiving a communications from the so called terrorist leader!” He hissed.

Azlenr nodded his head. “I was just about to reply to him.” He stated. “He claims they have destroyed the northern settlement and killed all of your men.”

“Impossible.” Marsin snapped. “A handful of civilian insurgents do not stand a chance against my men!”

Azlenr shook his head in disgust and looked at Byka. “Byka?”

“I have gunships standing by.” He spoke. “And a light armor company moving to the northern settlement as we speak. They should arrive in twenty-seven minutes.”

“Send the gunships!” Marsin snapped.

“We have a limited number of DAGGERS Major... most of them still reside on our ships in orbit and I will not send them into the unknown.” Azlenr answered. “Let us see this rebel leader. Activate the COM link.”

The Kavalian COM officer nodded his head and adjusted his controls. The holographic image exploded into existence in the room and it was not the image of a Bontawillian or elven civilian. They were looking at a fully armored Lycavorian Union Spartan staring at the transmitter from under the helmet. Only his eyes and small portions of his skin were visible with his lips, the rest covered in crimson streaked gold Dragon Armor. The crimson coloring decorated his shoulders and chest and had to be some sort of rank insignia if Azlenr was any judge. They could see very little behind the Lycavorian as the window of the holo signal was being kept very small on the other end.

Azlenr kept his eyes on the image as he issued orders. “Get me an identity from our data banks, though I doubt we will find one if this is just a common Durcunusaan soldier!” He hissed. “Trace the COM signal and direct the ground forces accordingly Byka! Activate audio as well.”

“General... you aren’t actually going to talk to this terrorist are you?” Marsin gasped.

Azlenr didn’t meet his eyes. “Yes I am.” He spoke. “It will buy time for our ground forces to get there.”

“We should just send our gunships!” Marsin declared.

Azlenr looked at him now. “We are receiving no response from your men Major!” He hissed. “No outgoing transmissions and no answers to our calls! I’m not going to risk what few gunships we have in an unknown situation! Especially if they have wiped out your men!”

“I refuse to believe that!” Marsin snarled.

“Keep thinking that Major.” Azlenr spoke dismissing him as he turned to face the image. “Activate audio now!”

“Active General.” The COM Officer spoke.

Azlenr stepped closer to the holo projection. “To whom am I speaking?” Azlenr spoke firmly.

“Who I am does not matter.” Andro answered him. “What I am going to tell you does... General Azlenr’Macaoe.”

Azlenr looked surprised at this and it showed in his expression. He looked around quickly and then back to the image. “You have me at a disadvantage.” He spoke finally.

“Yeah... it’s been like that for a day or so now hasn’t it.” Andro answered flippantly. “A pity for the men you have lost but they were nothing more than the murderers of innocents and they deserved their fate.”

“Those were my men!” Marsin screamed moving into the cone of the transmission now. “And you will pay for their deaths!”

“Ah... you must Major Marsin’Jiate. The local Puma Bane butcher.” Andro spat with contempt and once more surprising Azlenr with his knowledge. “You men are not so skilled or adept when they are facing men and women who can defend themselves. They did not put up much of a fight to be honest. I thought there would be more to them.”

Marsin hissed in hatred. “We will see who is laughing in the end when I have you under my blade Lycavorian dog!” He snarled. “You will...”

“Enough!” Azlenr barked shoving Marsin back. He looked at Andro. “You know who we are... so I will assume you are not some civilian insurgency cobbled together from those who escaped when we took the settlements. You were obviously soldiers here for rest and relaxation when we began our assault. Just like the man we now hold I would gather. Surrender yourself and your men to me and there will be no more death.”

“General!” Marsin hissed in shock.

“Silence!” Azlenr snapped at him as they heard Andro chuckle from the transmission. Azlenr looked at him with angry eyes. “You risk the lives of your men and every Union citizen on this planet with your disregard!” He barked at Andro.

“You think I contacted you to negotiate my surrender?” Andro asked calmly. “You presume much Kavalian.”

“Why else would you contact me?” Azlenr demanded. “You have obviously cracked our COM codes to be able to contact me on our own channels. Why do that unless you plan to surrender?”

Andro shook his head slowly. “Spartans do not surrender General Azlenr.” He spoke calmly. “It is against the code of honor that we follow. You do know what honor is don’t you?”

“Honor?” Marsin rasped with a smirk. “I will show you your honor! I will find you!” He growled. “I will find you and you will pay!”

“Enough Major!” Azlenr shouted. “You will remain silent or I will have you removed!”

Andro shook his head once more. “You are a putrid excuse for a man Marsin’Jiate.” He spoke. “You know nothing of honor! I would be surprised to discover that you can even spell that word. You butcher innocent men, women and children even as they beg you for their very lives!” Andro was looking directly at the transmitter on his end of the communication. “You will not leave this world alive Major Marsin’Jiate. I will spread your remains among the dirt of the world you have violated so!”

Azlenr stared at the holoimage. “You contacted us! Do not waste my time any longer unless you have something to say!” He said angrily growing tired of the games.

“Oh... I have something to say.” Andro spoke as he lifted his hands and grasped his helmet. They watched as he removed the helmet slowly, revealing his face.

The gasps from within the room were very obvious and Byka hissed loudest of all with wide eyes. “Fuck!” He rasped quietly. “It’s the Lycavorian Prince! It’s the son!”

Azlenr was the only one who did not show a great deal of emotion as he stared at Andro. “Prince Androcles Leonidas.” He finally stated calmly. “This... this is a surprise.”

“You are holding over ten thousand Union citizens against their will. I want them loaded aboard one of your ships and removed from this planet. I will grant that ship access to return to Bontawillian space.” Andro stated. “I want this done in the next twelve hours.”

Azlenr chuckled softly. “You will grant access? I control this planet now Prince Androcles. I control this planet and the space it resides in.”

Andro smiled. “There is an old saying on Earth General Azlenr... Don’t count your birds before they hatch.” Andro said. “Do not be so secure in the position you now hold. The civilians on this planet are innocent settlers and scientists. You have already killed several thousand of them. I will not allow you to take any more of their lives.”

“We are at war Prince Androcles. A war you started with your actions.” Azlenr answered calmly.

Andro’s head tilted to the side and his eyes narrowed. “Members of your Puma Bane Commandos infiltrated my homeworld! My father’s city!” He snarled. “Your people kidnapped my second elven mother after you thought you had succeeded in killing my father! Then my perverted uncle raped her! He took her against her will!” He roared angrily as the images of what had happened that he had gotten from Fedor and Eirene flashed in his mind. “A crime I will make all of you pay for even as my father makes my uncle pay! Your sick Puma Bane commandos blew up a building with over a thousand innocent men, women and children. Two hundred and forty-three children to be exact! Children who will now never have the chance to grow old! Who...!”

“I will not listen to these lies boy!” Azlenr snapped. “You were training High Coven dragons to fight my people! We needed to act in order to protect ourselves!”

“By killing children?” Andro gasped.

“That is a lie!” Azlenr snarled. “Enough of this! I will spar with you no more! Surrender yourself to me and we can end this war before it even begins!”

Azlenr and the others couldn’t help but take an involuntary step away from the holo image when Andro’s eyes suddenly flared brightly and almost began to glow that azure blue color. “This war... this war began the day your leaders made the mistake of trying to kill my father!” Andro snarled. “This war began the day you made the decision to lay your hands upon my elven mother’s person and defile her as you have! Lie to yourself and your men General... but do not lie to me about the truth!” Andro moved closer to the transmitter. “You have Union citizens you are holding against their will... give them a ship and allow them to leave. Then we can battle as two armies and victory will go to the better of us.”

“I have two divisions of Kavalian troops already on the ground!” Azlenr snapped. “You cannot possibly hope to match my numbers. We will find you!”

Those glowing eyes blinked and Andro nodded. “I have six hundred... give or take a few dozen.” He answered with a shrug. “We have you outnumbered.”

Azlenr blinked in shocked his face locked in an expression of disbelief. “Are you mad?” He barked finally.

“Since you have no intention of releasing those Union Citizens that you hold, I will say this.” Andro spoke. “For every Union citizen that dies by your hand or the hand of any man under your command I will kill ten of your soldiers. You executed fifty-three Union civilians only hours ago... the five hundred and nineteen Puma Bane troops you had here at the northern settlement makes us even. Ten of your men for every civilian life you take General Azlenr. That is my oath to you. My math is excellent General, eventually I will get to you by simple process of elimination. You will run out of men willing to defend you.”

“You arrogant...” Azlenr began to shout.

“You may come collect the bodies of your men.” Andro told him. “You will find we are much more civilized than you.” Andro’s glowing eyes turned to look at Marsin. He bared his dual fangs which were now fully extended. “Marsin’ Jiate...” He growled. “Enjoy your last days in this life you foul excuse for a man, for when I find you, I will take your head and mount it on my spear. Then I will put it on display for the crimes and dishonor you have committed against the Bontawillian people! You... mister big bad Puma Bane cock breath leader... you will suffer for every innocent life you have taken or caused harm. I will see to that myself.”

“I will kill you!” Marsin screamed. “I will kill you boy!”

Andro almost smiled at him. “Yes, I’m sure you would like too. As my father would say however... get in line motherfucker!” Andro turned back to Azlenr. “Say good bye to your armored column General. It is right now coming into range of my weapons. This will be your only warning General Azlenr’ Macoe and the only time we will talk. You have had your chance, I do not give second chances. By the time you get someone else here, we will be gone and then this war will have truly begun.” Andro turned to someone outside their cone of vision on the Kavalian end. “STGs!” He barked. “Destroy the column!”

Andro turned back and looked at Azlenr. “Welcome to my war General.” He stated. “You should have stayed home.”

CHAPTER SIX

SCIMITAR

ELEVEN HOURS FROM SOLMAR SYSTEM
FEBRUARY 4TH, 1840 HRS EST

“...lost your minds?” Ben O’Connor’s voice sprang from the holo transmission in front of Sadi and Ne’Veha.

Sadi glanced at Ne’Veha quickly where she sat next to her and smiled, Carisia and Lu’ria bookending them on the couch in their quarters on the SCIMITAR, also with small grins on their faces. She turned back to the life size figure of Admiral O’Connor who was pacing back and forth in his office at Dreamland.

“I assure you Admiral... we are quite in command of all our cognizant abilities.” Sadi answered him with a smile.

Ben stopped pacing and looked at them. “I’m not so sure.” He hissed. “He’s beginning to take after his father you know! Now their nut job mentality has rubbed off on you just like it did Anja and the others! Andro’s boneheaded move just revealed to half the Kavalian Command Structure where he is and...”

“You know the reason he did that Admiral.” Lu’ria spoke up quickly.

Ben nodded. “I know why he did it.” He stated. “I’m just trying to determine how much of a blow he took to the head in order to actually do it!”

“We trust him.” Sadi spoke confidently. “And I have already ordered Admiral Ceneu to deploy forces in order to counter any reinforcements the Kavalians may send. Whatever forces they have there already will be all they are getting.”

Ben lifted the data pad. “Now you send me this?”

“You received our schematics then?” Ne’Veha asked.

“I got them Ne’Veha. How long did it take you and Sadi to put this together?” Ben asked her.

Ne’Veha glanced at Sadi. “Seven hours.” She answered almost embarrassed, turning back to the image of the most famous human/vampire hybrid in the entire Lycavorian Union. A man who made the impossible seem mundane. Admiral Benjamin O’Connor was one of Martin Leonidas’s oldest and most cherished friends. A man who had been with him long before he had ever become King of the Union and a man that the King listened too exclusively when he spoke. A man that Andro secretly suspected of being an Eridiani Sadi knew. It would account for his amazing longevity even before becoming a vampire as well as his supreme intelligence.

“Seven hours!” Ben almost shouted. “Seven hours to take the frame of one of the Pralor corvettes, twist it and turn it to suit your needs and turn it into one of the most advanced ships in the fleet!”

Sadi nodded her head. “Umm... essentially yes.” She said also somewhat embarrassed.

“Why ain’t you two working for me instead of traipsing all over the galaxy after that malda man you are mated too!” Ben barked.

“It wouldn’t be anywhere near as fun.” Carisia spoke now.

Ben snorted loudly. “Fun!” He bellowed. “Are you saying I’m not fun young lady?”

Carisia’s face narrowed in worry and she shook her head quickly. “No... no sir.” She stammered.

“Admiral... we consulted with both Avi and 341 and they...” Sadi began.

Ben held up his hand. “No wife to Androcles Leonidas calls me Admiral... is that clear?” He stated. “I forbid it.”

“Ben...” Sadi said softly. “There is a reason for this.” She spoke. “With Ne’Veha and I now bonded to dragons, even the new STRIKER is not large enough for all of us. We needed a ship that could match the speed and abilities of the STRIKER and still carry all of us. You know Jomann and Eli will never be apart from Andro. They are too close as Prince and Captain and brother and sister. Eli would never let him go anywhere far from her. She feels her purpose is to keep him in one piece and that purpose now extends to us as well it seems.”

“Good luck to her with that.” Ben said with a smile. “She’s been trying to do that since she was a little girl and he always manages to get the shit kicked out of him every so often. She might have better luck with you five, but I doubt it.”

All of them laughed softly at that. “How true.” Lu’ria said softly.

“With all of us combined we are talking about seven dragons. Possibly one or two more in the future. We are not sure about that yet.” Sadi said. “We used Shiria’s ship as a foundation base and it just turned out to be a perfect fit.”

“Sadi... considering the size and power this ship would have... you’re talking about an entirely new class.” Ben spoke. “A Heavy Corvette for lack of a better term. Not to mention it will be our first attempt at building a purely Pralor ship.” He typed on the pad. “What kind of crew are we talking?”

“We want to keep the flight crew at three.” Sadi answered. “Myself, SirsanGai and a Flight Engineer. Preferably one who is an excellent pilot so that we can cross deck to one another. Andro and Jomann are well versed enough in weapons and tactics and Eliani added her designs for a small Med Bay. Dutkne has become Andro’s... his Oracle for lack of a better term. If all goes as Shiria and Deia have worked out then Jomann will have a counter to him as a Paladin. Aside from the eleven of us and our dragons, perhaps a dozen more permanent crew. More than likely cross trained Durcunusaan that Jomann will pick.”

Ben looked at her in the transmission. “You do realize that putting one of SPARTA’S WRATH’S spare Quantum Fusion Resonance Reactors in this puppy will make it seriously overpowered for the size you are talking.”

Sadi smiled. “That’s what we like.” She said.

“We’re going to have to reinforce every brace and strut with a solid coating of inch thick Dragon Armor and Lyrium Durcorsis seams.” Ben spoke almost to himself. “The outer hull shell will have to be made up of our Dragon Armor laced with the Pralor Lyrium Weave Durcorsis to keep it as light as you want but not lose any structural integrity or the ability to take a pounding.” He looked up and them. “We can’t duplicate the bio-mechanical properties of true Pralor vessels, I’ve already confirmed that with Avi. We don’t have the minerals needed for full osmosis into the hull.”

Sadi nodded her head. “Avi told us their Lyrium Weave Durcorsis and Dragon Armor will make a superior combination almost equal in endurance.”

“Sadi... this will be the first ship that we build that will be based solely on advanced Pralor technology right down to the brackets. It will just look like one of ours.” Ben told them. “After a fashion anyway. Most of the tech will come from SPARTA’S WRATH since CS4’s main drive is inert.”

Sadi nodded. “It will also serve as a test bed for future enhancements of the ARIZONA’S and other ships.” She smiled. “Miranda and Zaala were with 341 when we contacted him and Avi. They actually already had the design ideas for the power conduits and the engine core chamber. They are taking a very interested stance. If these designs work on this ship, Miranda will request to have similar ones installed on the newer ARIZONA’S. I’m betting they will want to help build it since it needs to fit into the SCIMITAR’S landing bay.”

“Figures they’d have their two cents in on this.” Ben spoke. “They are the best people I got on Pralor tech outside of Avi and 341. And those two have been like winning the lottery to me. And no bet with Manda and Zaala or their back channel intentions.” He said with a grin. “I’d lose anyway. I got nearly a thousand of those worker drones scurrying all over the fucking place tweaking this and that and working with my engineers. They are helping us to kick out ships at four times the rate. I love it!”

“Given the design parameters and the worker drones you have Ben... how soon do you think before you can have it?” Sadi asked.

Ben looked at her. “Jeez girl... you don’t beat around the bush do you?” He hissed. “This is going to take time! We’re building it from the frame up!”

Sadi met his gaze. “I’ll give you three weeks.” She stated firmly. “We know Andro... and we can give it whatever shake down tests it may need. We want...”

Ben held up his hand. “Give me four weeks.” He told her. “I’ll have it for you before you go to the Beta Quadrant.”

Sadi blinked and looked at Lu'ria quickly before turning back to him. “What makes you think we are going to the Beta Quadrant any time soon?” She asked.

Ben chuckled gently now. “Ah... Sadi. Don’t forget... I’ve known Androcles a lot longer than you. I know how that boy thinks... cause he thinks just like his father. And his father is one evil and devious sonofabitch when he wants to be.”

Carisia leaned forward now. “What... what do you mean Ben?” She asked softly.

Ben smiled. “Ask him what he has planned when you link up with him. He’ll tell you.” He answered. He held up the data pad. “I’ll put together a team to start building this. 341 will be giving you updates. Avi is heading out on one of the Pralor corvettes tomorrow.”

“Heading where?” Sadi asked.

“Andro contacted me a couple days ago and said he wanted Avi put on one of the Pralor corvettes and sent to link up with Marty and the others.” Ben said with a shrug. “He didn’t offer a reason and I didn’t ask. We’re packing the ship with some extra goodies for Marty and the gang and it will return with messages for families and Intel. It’s the first of a series of supply meets that we have arranged. Having the corvettes makes it relatively smooth.” A chime of some kind echoed in the background and caused him to look up. “Ok... got to go. I’ll have 341 keep you in the loop and contact you if he has any questions.”

“Thank you Ben.” Sadi said quickly.

Ben nodded. “Tell Andro to keep his hard head down.”

“We will.” Sadi answered just before the transmission ended and Ben’s life size image disappeared. She leaned back on the couch and looked at Ne’Veha thoughtfully. “He took that better than I thought.” She said.

“He couldn’t have known...” Lu’ria said. “You and SirsanGai only just finished the details a few hours ago.”

Sadi looked at her. “Perhaps... but it just seems he has been expecting such a request.”

“The 1st Elven Engineer Division considers him the most brilliant mind in the entire Union when it comes to engineering.” Ne’Veha spoke. “That is as big a praise as you will get from the commander of that unit.”

Sadi nodded. “Yes it is.”

Carisia moved closer to Ne’Veha on the couch. “We should speak of Sehri while we are here together.” She stated softly watching as they all turned to her. “I’m a pureblood vampire and even I could sense within Mindvoice that her Coming of Age fever is upon her. And quite strongly.”

Sadi nodded again. “From what we now know, the Rothryn people are Lycavorians who simply cannot shift their forms. They are identical to us in every other way. And that means they still have the same physical reactions.”

“And since she would be considered a pureblood...” Lu’ria began. “Her fever will be very strong.”

“She is suppressing it rather well.” Ne’Veha commented. “At least to others.”

“It’s still battering her shields terribly.” Sadi agreed with a nod. “And she has doubts about something that is keeping her from embracing what she feels entirely.”

“We will need to strengthen our connection with her as we draw closer Sadi.” Lu’ria spoke. “I am only recently turned... just like SirsanGai. Because of how we are connected within Mindvoice, the effects of her fever are more pronounced on us physically and with Enylarcopri it within Mindvoice. We can’t let that distract us.”

“There is no doubt in Andro’s mind.” Ne’Veha spoke with a small smile. “No hesitation in the least when he thinks of her or any of us.”

Sadi nodded and smiled. “I know. He has accepted it fully now. After what happen with Caliria he will no longer doubt his instincts. We belong to him.”

“What do you mean?” Carisia asked.

“He feels responsible for what happen with Caliria.” Sadi said. “All of you feel that. He won’t speak of it to us because it shames him but his emotions are torn about what to do.” Sadi shook her head. “That will work itself out.” She spoke. “We must concentrate on the here and now.”

“And you still will not allow me to visit Ulana and explain things to her?” Lu’ria asked with lethal humor.

All of them laughed and Sadi leaned over to grab Lu’ria’s soft, pink lips in a kiss as Ne’Veha and Carisia grinned while looking on. “Oh Mistress... that would not be entirely fair.” Sadi spoke.

“Who said anything about being fair?” Lu’ria hissed. “Andro is ours!”

Sadi nuzzled Lu’ria’s throat and ran her tongue between the deep valley of ebony skin between her Drow Mistress’s large breasts. “Have no fear Mistress. That will become painfully clear to Ulana in the days ahead... and we won’t have to do a thing. Given what we are all feeling from Andro... I’m thinking he will set Ulana in her place.”

REMAINS OF THE NORTHERN SETTLEMENT
FEBRUARY 4TH, 1915 HRS, EST

Azlenr squatted among the smoking remains of the settlement, his dark eyes focused on the rows of bodies stretched out before him. He wanted to feel anger for this action but he was unable to. These were Puma Bane troops and not his or Byka's men. As far as he was concerned these men got what they deserved for their actions, though he would never say that aloud. The bodies had been dumped unceremoniously in rows of thirty or so. No care was taken in this action and it was obvious to Azlenr the message that Prince Androcles was sending, though he knew it would be lost on Marsin in a fit of rage. The bodies had been collected near the south and north entrances to the settlement, and they were the first thing anyone saw upon entering the walls. The stench of dead flesh was beginning to grow more pronounced as his head shifted and he saw Byka and Kameka moving towards his location. Dozens of his men were moving through the wreckage of the settlement, looking for additional bodies and any clues as to how this battle had unfolded. Azlenr rose to his feet as Byka came up to him and Makali began moving towards him from across the rows of bodies. He had not seen Marsin since they had landed close to twenty minutes ago and Azlenr didn't know if that was good or bad.

Azlenr met the eyes of his cherished friend as he came up beside him. "Survivors Byka?" He asked softly although he was relatively sure of the answer.

Byka shook his head slowly. "No. The entire contingent was wiped out." He answered. "No one survived." He looked at his daughter and motioned with his head. "Tell him what you told me Meka?"

Kameka glanced at her father and then looked at Azlenr. "At least two dragons took part in the assault General." She spoke. "There are prints from a third one, a much larger third one, but nothing that indicate that particular dragon was on the ground during the assault."

"Three?" Azlenr gasped. "You are certain?"

Kameka nodded. "The prints are very clear and very different sir. They were used to sweep up the interior of the settlement along the retaining wall. I found... I found the remains of several dozen bodies."

"Remains?" Azlenr asked.

"They were burned to ash for the most part sir." Kameka answered. "There is not much that can stand against three thousand degree heat when directed with such intensity."

Azlenr nodded. "You are correct in that." He said. Azlenr looked at Makali as he came up. "Makali?"

The Kavalian Colonel took a deep breath. "I suspect no more than a hundred and fifty Union soldiers hit this settlement General. There are both boot prints and paw prints outside either entrance. I suspect they got close to the walls in their wolf forms and then shifted just as they launched their attack."

"Ground sensors would not pick up the shapes of wolves as they approached." Byka spoke looking at Azlenr. "Their silhouette is too small."

Makali nodded. "I estimate sixty to seventy hit the settlement from either end while their dragons took out the men with T19 missiles." He continued. "I doubt they even knew what was happening before they were killed. Intelligence reports from the Evolli indicate these dragons can strike with blinding speed. Even out of the sky."

Azlenr looked around. "Three dragons and a hundred and fifty men took out a five hundred member strong Puma Bane detachment." He said softly.

"They took casualties General." Makali spoke. "There are signs where their men went down."

Azlenr turned back and looked at him. "That they even attempted this to begin with shows me some measure of what they are capable of Makali."

"Yes sir."

"Has anyone seen Marsin?" Azlenr asked.

Byka motioned to the west of their location with his head. "He was looking for the body of the detachment commander near the western wall." He answered. "The... the death toll did not seem to concern him."

"As if this is any news to us." Makali said with some contempt.

"I saw the scorch marks of at least two short range ships General. And one larger one. If I had to guess I'd say it was one of their KADEN transports. The crashed ship was definitely a STRIKER, though it has been gutted and destroyed with Thermite core charges. They burned everything so we could not recover it."

“Not even pieces of their Dragon Armor?” Azlenr asked. “Don’t their STRIKERS all carry that?”

Kameka nodded. “Yes sir... but these thermite core charges were designed to melt even their Dragon Armor and render the stable chemicals involved in the forging inert and unusable.” She stated. “We will get nothing from the wreckage.”

“Lots of tracks leading north of the settlement towards the coast. A few hundred at least.” Byka said. “We should send a gunship to investigate Azlenr. They might be able to catch them as they are moving.”

Azlenr shook his head. “Which is exactly what he would suspect I would do.” He said. “No... I will not lose one of our gunships to a surprise missile attack from the ground. The ground column was more than I expected to lose in so little time on this planet. The terrain becomes less friendly the closer to the coast that you move does it not?”

Byka nodded. “According to the thermal scans yes.”

“Darkness is coming and any gunships we send would be sitting ducks flying at tree top level looking for civilians in the jungles below.” Azlenr spoke. “I will not chase him. That is what he wants. The Puma Bane troops may be trained to go after them in the deep timber and jungles but our men are not. I will not risk them against the kind of experience he undoubtedly has with him. They would be slaughtered. He cannot have more than a few hundred men with him or our teams would have detected them by now.”

“If they have transport our ships may be able to pick them up from orbit.” Makali said.

Byka shook his head. “Not through their Shrouds.” He stated calmly. “Remember their KADEN transports and their STRIKERS are interstellar ships and both are equipped with those damnable Shrouds. They have the range to be anywhere on the planet by now.”

Azlenr turned to look north. “They called him Soul Slayer.” Azlenr said softly.

“Sir?” Makali asked.

Azlenr turned back. “The Evolli. They called him Soul Slayer. He and his dragon are said to have killed more Evolli soldiers during their war than five others combined. Even more than his father.”

“He is a boy General.” Makali spoke.

“And he is considered to be one of the foremost tactical minds within the Union behind only his father an one or two others. And he is even more brutal than his father when it comes to his enemies. You know what he did to the Icalro Alliance. And that was over a female he considered his wife!” Azlenr said.

Kameka looked at him for a moment and then turned to her father. This was something she had not heard. “Father?” She asked.

Byka met her eyes. Azlenr had stood beside him and Meka throughout the entire affair with Marsin and he knew his friend treated his own daughters with much more respect and emotion than normally allowed by Kavalian standards. “The Icalro Alliance apparently was involved with a criminal organization that kidnapped a female who this Prince considered his wife and mate. He went to rescue her and in the process he utterly destroyed the Icalro Alliance Fleet and their capital city. All of their leaders were killed and the Icalro Alliance is now nothing but a memory.”

Meka’s eyes grew a little wider but she kept her council to herself. What would it be like to be loved by a man in such a way? A man who would destroy entire governments for her. A man who worshiped the ground upon which she walked. That was what Meka yearned for... but it was something she knew she would never have.

“Young he may be Makali... but this Lycavorian Spartan Prince knows what he is about quite well.” He looked at Byka. “I want gunships up first thing in the morning Byka. Move them in pairs to cover each other. Sweep the entire area to the north. Put down as many troops as you need to cover all the way to the coast. I will move another company of our light armor to this location before nightfall so they can support you.”

Byka nodded. “We should be able to follow their trail easily enough.” He said. “It will be almost impossible to hide that many civilians trampling through the jungle and timber. They can not hide from us.”

Azlenr nodded. “Make it happen Byka.” He spoke. “I need to find Marsin and insure he does not exact retribution for this.”

“You believe he will do as he says General?” Makali asked.

Azlenr met his eyes. “I believe he will do exactly as he says.” Azlenr spoke. “He has the skill and the personnel to dance around and cut us in so many spots we could not respond to them all. And he will adhere to his promise. I have no wish to lose our men to Marsin’s anger and stupidity.”

Marsin tossed down the remains of the message satchel and looked around the area. The half cooked body of his detachment commander lay before his feet, his upper body looking as if it had been held over an intense fire for hours, while his lower body rested a meter away.

“Empty. Fuck!” He hissed softly. He turned to two of the three men that accompanied him. “Search the immediate area!” He ordered. “Look for data pads or message cubes! Quickly! Before Azlenr’s men move into this area.”

Marsin’s second in command moved up beside him as the two others moved off. “He had nothing tying us to the plan Major.” He spoke.

“No Dico’Noers.” Marsin answered. “What he did have however, would undoubtedly cause Azlenr to become suspicious of our motives in being here and he would start asking questions.”

“The Prefect will not be happy sir.” Dico spoke.

“The Prefect will not find out.” Marsin spoke. “If these Spartan dogs are the ones who took the files as I believe, they will not tell Azlenr. To them... our orders would be a benefit.”

“True.” Dico said.

Marsin looked at him. “We must act accordingly.” He spoke. “I will demand several gunships to search for these animals. Azlenr will no doubt send Byka after them. And since he likes to take chances, it makes our job easier. He will fly with his bitch daughter and I can have her one last time before I give her to you and the others. When we are done they will be dead.”

“Is she as good as you claim sir?” Dico asked with a smile.

Marsin grinned. “Tightest pussy I ever had my friend.” He stated. “And it is much more fun when she fights. It will be gratifying to hear her howling in misery once more.” He looked at him and tapped his arm. “One more sweep of the area in case we may have missed where the messages might have been tossed. Then we find Azlenr.”

SOLMAR

NORTHERN JUNGLE PLAINS

FEBRUARY 5TH, 0435 HRS EST

Kelelm watched as Sehri leaned slightly across the front of Andro’s body holding his shoulder while he inspected her wound once more. All around them civilian men, women and children rested quietly under the canopy of the temperate jungle. The mild humidity was nothing new to them since they had been here for many months and sometimes years. Most of them were simply thrilled to be alive and all of it was due to the male and female Spartans all around them, led by their Crown Prince. Kelelm had been slightly surprised at the lack of complaining by the civilians. The Bontawillian were on odd looking people who did not appear used to such physical labor. Not a single one of them stopped or demanded to rest as they made their way through the undergrowth. They moved as quickly as they were able in very simple groups that stuck together and helped one another, all the while putting their trust in the Union Spartans. Kelelm saw many of these soldiers carrying small Bontawillian children and sharing what rations they had with the many civilians. The civilians were not in the least bit frightened of the soldiers as most Rothryn would be of the military. They actually seemed to look up to them in many ways.

Kelelm moved his eyes back to where Andro and his brother were, Daio sitting only a few feet from his prince next to Dorian. The two massive dragon beasts sat stretched out behind Andro and Dorian, their heads resting on wickedly curved talon equipped feet, but their eyes taking everything in. Andro’s fingers gently probed the skin along Sehri’s side in a manner that the vast majority of Rothryn women would consider inappropriate from a man they were not mated to and hardly knew. This did not seem to faze his sister Sehri in the least, and while his touch was only to check her for further injuries, Kelelm knew from the look on her face that there was much more to it and Sehri was already well aware of what she felt.

“The pain is gone?” Andro asked her.

Sehri nodded quickly. "Not even a throbbing in my side anymore." She answered. "My leg however..."

Andro nodded his head with a small smile as he lowered his fatigue top that she wore and then reattached her body armor. "You've been using it that's why." He stated. "I'm pretty sure I recommended you didn't."

Kelelm watched his sister stick her tongue out at him as he refastened her upper armor and then settle to the ground. Sehri quickly scooted over between his legs, her hands grasping his left arm as it draped over her shoulder in an almost possessive manner. Kelelm had read as much as he was able to obtain on these Lycavorian people after his father told him he would be coming here. Denali and Lisisa both supplied him with as much material as he wanted to read. Kelelm was now convinced, like his father, mother and Sehri, that the Rothryn people were simply an offshoot of the Lycavorian people as a whole. An offshoot that could not shift their forms, but were identical in every other way. The instinctual nature of these Lycavorians was written about extensively in what Kelelm had read, and it seemed that Sehri was embracing it far faster than anyone else realized. Kelelm was happy for her really. Sehri was the youngest of his sisters and because she was a member of the Circle of Shamans she was very different from Osbela and Ibani. She was far stronger in her Etheric abilities than her older sisters and in many ways they hated that about her. They also teased her mercilessly about having never been with a man and how she would not know what to do if ever the situation came up. Kelelm had to smile to himself because Osbela and Ibani had been thinking that they would be the ones to vie for Androcles's attention. They would be very angry with Sehri when they discovered Androcles Leonidas had eyes only for Sehri if what Kelelm could tell was any indication.

"We are much further away from the settlement than I thought we would achieve given all of the civilians." Kelelm stated as he shook his mind clear of those thoughts. He watched Androcles hand Sehri a brown ration bar after taking a bite out of it and beginning to chew. His sister didn't hesitate and began to gnaw on the ration bar.

Andro nodded his head towards him. "You will find that most of the citizens of the Union are in excellent physical condition Kelelm, regardless of how frail they look outwardly." Andro answered. "My mother and others have seen to their well being for decades and they have made sure everyone is as healthy as they can be."

"Your... your Hadarian mother?" Kelelm asked hesitantly.

Dorian chuckled softly. "Have no fear Kelelm... it will take some time to get used to the fact that we draw no distinction between any of our mothers. They all speak with the same stern voice regardless of which one gave life to us. It is sometimes confusing when we speak of them because some don't know to which one we are referring."

"How true." Andro spoke with a grin. "And yes... I was referring to our Hadarian mother Colonel."

Kelelm looked at Dorian. "You... you call all of them mother?"

"All of them have had a hand in raising us." Andro answered. "Well... except for Cirith, but from what I understand she is making up for that with Fedor and Eirene."

Kelelm looked at Dorian. "You are Dorian... brother to Androcles. A Prince of the Union as well?" He asked. "I must say... your skills are impressive."

Dorian smiled. "Not bad for someone who is only four months old huh?" He stated.

Kelelm looked at him and then to Andro. "Four... four months? I don't understand... you are fully grown."

Dorian smiled again. "There is a story to that... trust me." He answered as he took a long pull from the container of water. "Someday one of us will understand it enough to explain it to you."

Andro chuckled at the look on Kelelm's face. "Don't ask me. I was lost when mother began to rattle off the molecular structure thingy." He spoke as turned his head and watched Jeth's massive body land light footed in the small clearing fifty meters away. Kelelm watched his face as he saw his petite sister jump causally from the saddle and then head towards where they sat. The monstrous dragon moved to settle beside the obsidian colored beast that Kelelm knew to be Androcles's dragon. Kelelm watched as Lisisa began to settle to the ground next to her younger brother.

"You and Daio were right Andro." She stated confidently. "They swarmed all over the settlement but didn't pursue." Lisisa stated as she nudged Dorian in the shoulder and he moved over on the ground to allow her to perch her butt on the dry leaves where he handed her the container of water.

Andro nodded and Sehri looked up into his face. "This Azlenr is no fool." He said. "His dossier was very extensive. He and this General Byka are two of their best officers as far as Armetus and Marci are concerned. At least those who operate strictly on the ground."

"He knew we would have the advantage if they pursued with their DAGGERS." Lisisa said. "We could blow them out of the sky from under this canopy and they would never know where we hit them from."

Andro nodded. "You can bet they will be out in force come daybreak though." He said. "We will be long gone by then however."

"How have you kept your base hidden?" Sehri asked. "Wouldn't they be able to pinpoint it from orbit?"

"Normally yes... if you wish to call it a base at all." He answered her with a larger smile that did not go unnoticed to Lisisa.

Lisisa was not as close to Andro as Zarah or Eliani but she knew her brother well enough. It was obvious to any Lycavorian that Sehri was to be his, and her scent and interaction with him made it very clear she was very much in agreement with that arrangement. No male among their people would approach Sehri once they recognized that, not because Andro was crown Prince, but because it was the honorable thing to do. Lisisa could sense Sehri's vivid Mindvoice resonance and how it echoed for Andro, but she could also feel the echo for Sadi and the others. Considering that the Rothryn people were Lycavorians who could not shift, Lisisa could detect the strength of Sehri's fever buried beneath her attempts at suppressing it. It was the fever of a pureblood Lycavorian, of that Lisisa was sure without question. It would be very interesting to see how the Rothryn were received by Lycavorians across the Union, as well as how they would be accepted by the Rothryn people.

"We have taken to using some of the very first Pralor designed devices our engineers built after we discovered CS41." Andro explained to Sehri. "One of those discoveries was a masking device that hides personnel and ships from orbital or ground sensors. It is not unlike our Shrouds. It can't be used on a massive scale, but for the size of our base it suits our needs for the moment."

"It helps that Kavalian sensors are not as accurate as ours either." Lisisa continued.

"What about Elynth and the others?" Sehri asked.

"All dragons have some sort of reflecting composition within the molecular structure of their scales." Andro answered. "It makes all of them invisible to any known sensors."

Elynth lifted her head and butted Andro in the back of the shoulder. And sometimes our own riders. She stated humorously.

Andro turned and looked at her. You can't hold that against me. He exclaimed.

And why not? Elynth asked smugly.

Sister... I was... I was...

You were as drunk as I have ever seen. You could barely stand up. It was a wonder you even found your way back to the villa.

Lisisa laughed softly. "Oh Elynth... you'll have to tell me more!" She spoke quickly. "I've never heard this story! Andro drunk? Now that is bound to be hilarious!"

"Yes!" Dorian spoke. "I want to hear that too!"

Andro turned to look at them sternly but he could not hold the expression and even Kelelm laughed. He was able to hear what the dragon had said since his Etheric abilities were far above average for the Rothryn people, much more so than his younger brothers. Sehri was by far the most powerful in her Etheric abilities, followed by their mother and father and then his sisters and himself. The extent of Sehri's abilities had never been made public because she would have been forced to surrender herself to the Rothryn Etheric Academy which was a very mysterious and sometimes repressive institution if what he heard was accurate. It is why their parents chose to have Sehri schooled by the Circle of Shamans in secret, something that Kelelm had supported fully.

Kelelm was amazed at the strong sense of confidence and calm that swept these men and women even though they were in an extremely dangerous situation. Their humor also helped to make everyone around them relax. His eyes fell once more to his youngest sister. Her fingers absently stroked the simple bridle on Andro's left hand that allowed him to call forth his shield from Flatspace. It was the same hand he had seen that psychic knife explode from. As his eyes lifted, he looked at her face and saw a happiness that had never been there before. He had seen her laugh and smile and show happiness, but what he saw in her face now as she looked at Andro and felt his left arm draw her tighter, it was far more than he had ever seen before.

All heads turned as Dantio made his appearance and lowered his 190A4. "Sa'roh and the others have landed." He stated simply. "One klick northeast of here. A large clearing just before you leave the jungle canopy and hit the beach."

Andro nodded his head and got to his feet, pulling Sehri with him. "Very well." He said. "Let's get everyone moving. As quietly as possible. Daio... take point with Dorian and Lisisa. Sehri and I will follow with the civilians. Dantio... take your team and make sure we missed no one following us."

Dantio nodded. "If we stumble across someone?" He asked.

Andro's answer was quick and very much to the point. "Kill them."

RAVAGER

DIATAGA-CLASS MISSILE CRUISER

FLAGSHIP OF JUTURI PRIDE

FEBRUARY 5TH, 0515 HRS EST

Ceale rolled over on the soft sheets and stretched out her body luxuriantly on the large bed. Her auburn colored hair splayed across the pillows and she felt alive and completely rested for the first time in weeks. Her green eyes opened slowly and as she looked around the room she suddenly remembered where she was and what was happening in her life. She sat up very quickly, her body filling with fear and forgetting to catch the sheet as it fell away from her large breasts, as her eyes darted around the small room she was in.

"You are awake!" The soft female voice spoke and Ceale cut her eyes to the doorway and saw the face and copper colored shoulder length hair of the Kavalian female. She could also see the long tail twitching back and forth behind her.

"Where... where am I?" Ceale asked quickly.

Corsa smiled as she came fully into the room carrying a small bundle in her arms. "These are our quarters." She answered. "My husband Mataen and I. You don't remember coming here?"

Ceale clutched the sheet tighter to her chest and slowly shook her head. "No."

Corsa moved up next to the bed. "It's not surprising really. You have slept for nearly fourteen hours. It appears your body and mind needed the rest. I'm sure it will return to you."

Ceale watched her as she set the bundle on the end of the bed, the cobwebs clearing from her mind and the memories of what had occurred in the last hours before she went to sleep slowly returning to her. Coming to this ship, what Kalis told her before coming here. Her brief conversation with Serale before sleep finally claimed her. All of it was returning to her now. That she was here in this bed, unhurt and having slept for so long told Ceale that perhaps she was as safe as they told her she was. She began to relax slightly.

"Fourteen hours?" She asked softly.

Corsa nodded as she perched her firm ass on the edge of the bed. Her tail twitched back and forth behind her indicating the calm she felt. "Yes." She said. "Koguth has been seeking an audience with that pig Pusintin for weeks. We knew you were on board but he never returned our requests until two days ago. We moved as quickly as we could then." She placed her hand on the bundle. "Some fresh clothes for you. The Hydro Shower is through the door. My beloved Mataen cannot cook to save his life, so his brother Nedoni has prepared a full breakfast for you. We have only Kavalian food, but I think you will find it to your liking. His mother Mani taught him. And Nedoni will be the one escorting you through the ship."

Ceale looked at her. "This isn't a dream right?" She asked knowing it sounded stupid.

Corsa laughed softly and reached out to take her hand and squeeze it. "No Ceale... this is no dream." She stated. "Please... take a shower so it helps you to relax and remember you do not need to fear anyone on this ship. Especially with Nedoni by your side. He is a pilot by trade, but he is one of the largest and most vicious fighters within the Juturi Pride. You will be quite safe. We will wait for you to begin eating."

Ceale watched as she rose and left her alone. She looked around the room and realized her heart was not racing as much as it should have been. The memories of what the older Kavalian woman and Corsa had told her before they arrived here were coming back quickly. They were from the Juturi Pride of the Kavalian people, having been well known and respected for many decades among the Prides. They were now also one of the nearly two dozen Prides who had secretly turned away from the teachings and barbaric laws of the old Kavalian Empire that Keleru and Pusintin wanted to remain in place. They had pledged their loyalty and their future to the Nruarani Pride, the largest Pride to openly side against Keleru and his cronies. Mani and Corsa had told her they were at Nefoa when Pusintin showed up to form a Strike Force to go after the Lycavorian King. Koguth and Mataen had heard through the intelligence grapevine that her youngest daughter Iama had been rescued from a Kavalian outpost the Union King had obliterated. Their latest intelligence surmised she was still on the ship he occupied and this is the only reason they had accompanied Pusintin. The passion Mani had spoken with about her daughter left no doubt in Ceale's mind that what she was saying was truthful. Their actions convinced Ceale she was in no danger. She had been treated wonderfully since coming aboard this ship. She had been given a short tour, introduced to many different Kavalians, some of whom had undergone the biogenic treatments to remove their body hair but they still retained their long tails. They had fed her until she could not eat anymore and then Corsa had led her to this room where Ceale had fallen instantly asleep the moment her head hit the pillow.

Ceale was pretty sure that if they had planned anything nefarious, they would have done it already. As she moved quickly to the shower she determined to try and immerse herself in the respite she was getting from that pig Pusintin. The shower was hot and helped to wake her completely and sooth her battered body even more. After she toweled herself dry, she used her healing skills to repair and bruises she still had, and then she dressed in the simple satin soft undergarments and plain dark blue jumpsuit. As she stepped out of the doorway she heard Corsa talking to someone out of her view. The room was filled with the enticing aroma of food and smelled slightly of nutmeg.

"...strong to have endured so much and kept her wits Corsa." The male voice out of Ceale's sight was speaking. "And no matter what that fucker Pusintin has done to her, it has not made her any less beautiful."

"Ah Nedoni... you are taken with her." Corsa's voice echoed.

Ceale heard a soft snort. "As if that will matter. Pusintin and those pigs on his ship have already given her a picture of our people that she will not be able to overcome. That we are all violent animals. Their actions demean our people and make others see us as beneath them when we are not!"

Ceale saw Corsa step into view and continue placing items on the large table that she was setting. "The Nruarani Pride has already begun to show others not all of us are like those in charge Nedoni. You have heard of how Pian Nruarani treats Jalersi. How their entire Pride has embraced new values and ideals, just as we have."

"Yes... I just want... I want us to do more." Nedoni's voice said.

"What we are doing now is more Nedoni." Corsa spoke turning to look into the kitchen area. "Bringing your sister back home to us is more. And it is only the beginning. Your father cannot focus on anything else until Iama is back with her family and we can show her that what she thinks is not the truth."

"I know." Nedoni's voice answered.

"Have faith Nedoni." Corsa spoke. "All will come together when the time is right."

"You think so?" Nedoni's voice asked.

Ceale saw Corsa nod quickly. "I know so." She answered. "Faith brought me your brother and he made me his wife. Faith will bring Iama home to us and then faith will guide our path into the future."

Ceale's eyes grew a little wider when she saw Nedoni move into view now and she was barely able to suppress her gasp. Nedoni towered over Corsa by a good foot, and she stood five foot six easily. His entire body that she could see was covered in short, dark blond hair, much shorter than she had seen his brother or other Kavalians. The long mane of hair that fell from his head was shiny and tied tightly into dozens of long braided portions, almost like dreadlocks. His face was surprisingly almost void of hair and she could actually see his tanned skin under the very short covering of hair on his cheeks. A thicker but neatly trimmed beard covered his strong chin and his lips were surrounded by a precisely groomed mustache. The shirt he wore encased a fur covered body that was incredibly muscular from what she could tell and then there was that two meter long tail that casually flipped back and forth behind him. His size didn't surprise her so much, nor the words he had spoken. What stunned Ceale right down to her booted feet was how very attractive she found him.

Apparently she was not able to suppress her gasp as much as she thought for they both turned to see her standing there in the doorway of the bedroom. Corsa didn't hesitate.

"Ceale... you should have told us you were there." She stated as she began walking towards her.

"I'm... I'm sorry." Ceale stammered. "I did not... I didn't want to interrupt your conversation."

Corsa laughed. "Never fear doing that." She stated as she came up to her and took her hands. "I was blessed when my husband made me his wife." She spoke. "He brought me into a family and a Pride that can actually carry on intelligent conversations most of the time."

"Most of the time?" Nedoni asked as he moved closer, his light green eyes staring at her. He bowed his head slightly to her as he continued to stir something in the pan he was holding. "I hope... I hope you rested well." He fumbled with his words.

Ceale nodded quickly equally at a loss for words as she gazed at him. "Yes... yes... thank you."

This interaction did not escape Corsa's view and she filed it away in her mind as the door to the quarters opened and she saw Koguth, Mani and Mataen enter the quarters. "Finally!" She exclaimed moving towards Mani with open arms. "I have had to listen to Nedoni complain how he has to do all the cooking at he is hungrier than all of us."

Koguth grinned as Corsa embraced his wife. "If he was not so large he would have no problems." He grunted.

Mani looked at Koguth, a twinkle in her eye as she gazed at his six foot four frame. "And whose fault is that husband?" She asked calmly.

Koguth smiled broadly and stepped up to Ceale. He reached out and took her hands within his much larger fur covered hands and gazed at her. "Fourteen hours of sleep makes you radiant Lady Ceale." He spoke.

Ceale looked at him with wide eyes, not expecting such a compliment from a Kavalian. "I... thank you." She stammered.

Koguth laughed at her expression. "Didn't expect that from me did you?" He asked. "Good... I hope to show you many unexpected things in the hours and days you are among us." He motioned to the table where she saw everyone beginning to sit down. "Please... I would like to explain everything to you now that you are well rested."

SOLMAR

SPARTAN BASE CAMP

42.6 KILOMETERS INLAND FROM COAST ON SOUTHERN CONTINENT

FEBRUARY 5TH, 0608 HRS EST

Aleatia could barely contain herself and remain behind the row of Spartans that stood in front of her as she watched the STRIKER come in low over the tree tops and spin about before beginning to settle to the ground. The ramp was opening as the ship lowered and she could see masses of people waiting to exit. The same type of men and women she had seen exit the KADEN transport and first STRIKER that had landed only half a hour ago. Lisisa Leonidas had arrived on the first STRIKER and told her Sehri and Kelelm would be arriving shortly. Aleatia felt a sense of enormous relief after being on the bridge of the REAPER and listening to the battle that her son and youngest daughter had inadvertently been caught right in the middle of. She hadn't lasted long before the Captain submitted to her constant badgering and threats and released the last STRIKER to bring her to the surface after them. By the time they were heading for the planet Aleatia knew Sehri had been injured and Kelelm was with her. Though she felt an enormous amount of pride at what Sehri had done, she was also very angry with her for doing something so stupid. Osbela and Ibani stood beside her, Harira on her opposite side. The Spartans were waiting until the backwash from the STRIKER's powerful engines died before they allowed them past.

Harira gripped her arm. "I'm sure she is fine Lady Aleatia." She spoke. "Princess Lisisa told us as much."

Aleatia nodded slowly. "I know. But their definition of fine may be different than ours." She stated. "She is just... she is just a child still. Barely out of her Coming of Age! She should not have been so stupid! I raised her better! You taught her better!"

Harira nodded. "She has always been headstrong." Harira said quickly adding. "At least that is what her instructors report."

"Mother is right! It was a stupid move!" Osbela snapped.

The sounds of the engines grew silent and they watched as the Spartans parted to allow them through just as the civilians began to exit the ramp of the STRIKER with measured quickness. Ibani and Osbela pulled their mother forward hoping to get a glimpse of Sehri before their mother began to dress her down in front of everyone and embarrass her. They would be unpleasantly surprised.

"There... there she is!" Harira almost yelled as her eyes caught sight of Sehri's white blond hair. "Who... oh my!" She gasped as she came to a stop only a few meters from the ramp and actually winced.

Aleatia saw the look on her face and stopped as well. "Harira?" She asked with some concern.

Harira shook her head. "I... I am fine." She stammered. "Aleatia... Aleatia can you not feel it?" She asked. "Your shields... lower your shields!"

Aleatia did as Harira asked and her eyes instantly shot open and she whirled around to see Osbela and Ibani staring openmouthed at the sight coming down the ramp. Their sister was being carried with hardly any effort in the least by the tall, powerfully built young man. Aleatia immediately felt what Harira had first detected and she felt her insides begin to twist and turn in disbelief.

The Etheric resonance of the young man before them was staggering to say the least. He radiated raw, brilliant power. It flowed through him and around him as easily as the wind blew across the small landing area. And within that resonance Aleatia felt her daughter's presence, merging and mingling with his and five others in a harmony unlike any she had ever felt. Sehri's left arm was draped over his broad shoulders, her right hand pressed against his chest and holding an edge of the armor he wore. He cradled her in his arms tightly Aleatia saw, and as other Spartans and medical people approached no one attempted to take Sehri from him. Not until the Hadarian doctor she had met upon first landing pushed his way through a throng of men and women with a hover field bed.

"Aleatia!" Harira gasped. "Aleatia... do you feel it!" She gasped knowing that while Osbela and Ibani were strong Etheric users they were still far too young to have reached their mother's level of focus and ability.

Aleatia looked at her. "Yes! And I don't care! She is my daughter!" Aleatia snapped and broke into a short run towards where Andro was gently lowering Sehri onto the bed as the Hadarian female began to run her hands across Sehri's body, a soft glow forming around them.

Captain Trenou was an experienced Healer who had worked beside Princess Eliani on the SCIMITAR for nearly three years now. She had quickly come to take on the mentality and sometimes coarse nature of Eliani when it came to men and women interfering in her duty as a Healer. She also had a healthy respect and like for Androcles because he accepted her without question even though he already had his sister on the ship. Aleatia ran up just as Trenou was finishing her exam.

"Sehri!" Aleatia exclaimed practically throwing herself into Sehri's arms as she was sitting up on the hover bed.

"Momma!" Sehri cried as her mother's arms enveloped her and Andro stepped back slightly to allow Aleatia to hug her as tightly as she wanted. He had a small smile on his face as mother and daughter were reunited.

Aleatia held her at arm's length now. "Are you insane child!" She cried out. "That was the stupidest stunt you have ever pulled Sehri! Were you looking to get killed!"

"Mother... we were perfectly safe until the ship was shot down and..." Sehri began.

Aleatia's eyes went wide. "Shot down!" She almost shouted. "They said you... they said you were injured but not how! Where..."

Trenou looked up now trying to keep her stern expression in place as Eliani had taught her. "Her abdominal injury is completely healed." She said. "However... I need to lightly treat her leg as it appears she has over exerted herself."

Sehri turned her head quickly and looked at Andro. He smiled and shrugged his shoulders once. "I did tell you." He said.

“Andro...” Sehri spoke with a tone of worry in her voice now.

Andro quickly stepped forward next to Aleatia and took her hand in his. He leaned over and kissed her hard, causing the eyes Aleatia, Harira, Osbela and Ibani to nearly explode out of their heads. That Sehri returned the kiss with equal fervor and brought her hands up to grip his face shocked them even more. Aleatia and Harira could sense the intense emotion within the Etheric resonance of both of them, and the passion the kiss exhibited. Andro pulled away and leaned over to nuzzle Sehri’s neck and cheek, inhaling deeply of her sweet apple walnut scent and feeling the same surge of desire rise in him that he felt for all his mates and especially Sadi and Ne’Veha. Aleatia and Harira both saw Sehri gasp in near guttural delight, her eyes closing heavenly before he drew back and waited for her to look at him with eyes that filled with desire.

“Let Trenou treat you and then Eotharon will bring you to me.” Andro said. “I’ll be in my ship trying to plan our next moves. Sadi and the others will be here soon. Then... then we will need to figure all this out.”

“Promise me.” Sehri spoke softly holding his face in her hands.

“I promise.” Andro told her. He took her hands and kissed her knuckles before turning to Trenou. “Be good to her Trenou.” He said.

The Hadarian Healer smiled. “I got your back Andro.” She stated as she shifted the bed around and began to head back to where she had set up a portable triage area. Aleatia followed without question, Osbela and Ibani stealing glances back at Andro as he turned away. Harira stood for a moment longer looking at him intently until those azure eyes turned and fell upon her. Harira felt her heart racing as those eyes bore through her and his head tilted oddly to the side. Lisisa and Dorian broke that gaze as they came up.

“Andro... this is Shaman Master Harira.” Lisisa told him. “She is a member of the Circle of Shamans. Sort of like out School of the Oracles only covert.”

Andro blinked at his sister. “Covert?” He asked.

“The Rothryn Etheric Academy keeps pretty close tabs on Etheric use within Rothryn space.” Lisisa explained to him. “Most of those who have real ability go to the Academy.”

“Where they are repressed and looked down upon.” Harira quickly added. “Etheric use is not as widely accepted within Rothryn territory as it is within the Union.”

Andro moved closer to her. “Why? It is part of who we are.”

Harira nodded her head. “An ideal we are trying to push.” She stated. “But one that is not very popular. The Etheric Academy has succeeded in causing the majority of our people to fear the use of their Etheric abilities.”

Andro looked at Kelelm who moved up beside him. “It’s true.” Kelelm said. “They can not regulate everyone, for we all can use our Etheric abilities to speak within what you call Mindvoice but anyone with the skills that Sehri and others have shown are taken from their families and entered into the Academy. Many times against their will.”

“And many who go willingly!” Harira stated quickly.

“So you... you jail them?” Andro stated his eyes narrowing.

“They are schooled and treated well.” Harira spoke. “But many of their life decisions are made by Academy Scholars.”

Kelelm looked at Harira for a moment and then back to Andro. “They are prisoners.” He hissed softly. “Unable to come and go as they please and always under heavy guard from the Academy Security forces.”

Andro looked at Kelelm. “You will have to tell me more of this Etheric Academy. Our Feravomir will be very interested.” He stated.

Kelelm nodded. “With pleasure.”

“The Academy serves a purpose.” Harira spoke softly.

Andro turned to look at her once more. “You sound as if you approve of these actions Shaman Master... Harira is it?” He said.

Harira shook her head quickly. “I do not!” She stated quickly and forcefully. “I was once a member of the Academy but I left them for the Circle!”

“Why?” Andro asked.

“I... I did not agree with what they were teaching.” Harira said.

Andro nodded his head. "Taking a piss in the forest serves a purpose." Andro told her seeing her eyes go wide. "Putting down a rabid dog serves a purpose. Imprisoning men and women because of what they are serves no purpose. And it is wrong."

"You know nothing of our people or our ways young man!" Harira scolded him.

Andro smiled. "I know more than you might believe." He stated. "If you will excuse me, I have tasks to attend to."

Harira stood there for a moment longer staring at him and then turned to head for the triage area where Sehri would be. Kelelm watched her go and then turned to Andro. "The Circle of Shamans is a unique bunch." He said. "They are who have trained Sehri up until now."

Andro looked at him. "Something that will cease immediately." He stated confidently. "Sehri no longer needs them."

"She seemed more defensive then the last few days." Lisisa spoke looking at Andro.

Andro let his eyes fall to Dorian and a silent message passed between the two brothers. Dorian acknowledge this message with an imperceptible nod and flick of two fingers on his right hand. Andro turned to Kelelm once more.

"I do not know how you treat your honored dead Colonel... but while we have the time... we should give them a service as we will for my men before they are taken up to the REAPER."

Kelelm looked at Andro now. "My men... they... we are not Spartans like you Prince Androcles." He stated.

Andro turned to fully face him. "Your men are Lycavorian by whatever name you choose to call them." He stated. "They died in battle in a Spartan aircraft, fighting beside and in defense of fellow Spartans and innocent civilians. In my book that makes them Spartans! In their actions and in their hearts! As their commander... you should be present."

Kelelm nodded his head without hesitation, feeling pride swell within his chest unlike any he had ever felt before. "Thank you." He said softly.

Andro shook his head. "No. Thank them."

Trenou finished running her right hand over Sehri's leg and looked up at her and nodded. "Excellent." She spoke. Sehri sat on the exam bed, Aleatia next to her and several thick curtains hiding them from the view of the rest of the massive portable canvas triage center that had been set up. "Your healing systems are just as robust as any Lycavorian in the Union. That's very good. I treated the deep bruising which was causing the ache and I gave you some additional strong antibiotic enzymes." Trenou looked at Aleatia. "I'd like to give all of your people these same injections. There may be microbes within the Alpha Quadrant that you have not been exposed to in the Beta Quadrant. It's just a precaution."

Aleatia looked at her and nodded her head. "Of course. There is no permanent damage?" She asked quickly.

Trenou shook her head. "None at all." She looked at Sehri. "You'll be a little weak for a day or so because of the amount of blood you lost, but your systems will replenish that quickly enough." She smiled. "You are a tough young lady."

Sehri smiled shyly. "I didn't... I didn't feel tough at the time." She said.

Trenou smiled. "Who among us ever does?" She said. She patted Sehri's leg. "You can leave whenever you want. Andro's STRIKER is a hundred and fifty meters west, but you should be able to..."

Sehri nodded her head quickly, her eyes bright. "Yes... I can smell him very easily. He and his brother Dorian are talking with my brother and Lisisa."

Aleatia looked at her daughter with some surprise, Osbela and Ibani standing to the side with looks of consternation on their faces and not for the reasons that they should have been concerned about. While their people used their sense of smell for many things, Aleatia knew of no one who could use it with as much precision and skill as the Lycavorians did. No one except her daughter that is.

Trenou nodded her head. "Good. I have to attend to my other charges." She said with a smile. "Spartans are notoriously bad patients. They tend to think they are indestructible."

Aleatia waited until Trenou had left them alone and then she turned back to Sehri. “That was the most incredibly stupid thing you have ever done!” She hissed. “You could have been killed Sehri! What were you thinking?”

“She wasn’t thinking obviously!” Osbela snapped.

Sehri ignored her sister and looked at her mother. “I needed to go mother.” She stated calmly. “You know that.”

“She only did this to try and get to Prince Androcles first mother!” Ibani snapped. “It seems you aren’t so stupid in that regard after all sister!”

Aleatia tore her eyes from Sehri and glared at Ibani. “Not now Ibani!” She growled.

“It’s the reason she did it mother!” Osbela barked now. She looked at Sehri. “You can’t have him Sehri! Ibani or I are meant for him! You won’t be able to keep his attention! He is the type of man who desires an experienced woman!”

Sehri turned her glaucous blue eyes on her older sister and smiled. “Then by all means sister...” She spoke warmly and with a calm that Aleatia had never seen from her daughter when her sisters teased her in such a way. “I encourage you to use your experience on him. I’m sure he will be quite impressed.”

Aleatia looked at her two older daughters. “Leave us alone!” She snapped. “I need to speak with your sister alone!”

“Mother!” Osbela protested.

“Go now!” Aleatia snapped.

Osbela and Ibani had looks of indignation on their faces as they glared at Sehri one last time before they left the small area. Aleatia shifted her position and settled onto the exam bed next to Sehri, taking her small hands within hers.

“Sehri... tell me everything that happened.” Aleatia told her. “Leave nothing out. I want to know everything.”

“Momma...” Sehri smiled at her and squeezed her hands. “I belong to Androcles. And Sadi, and Ne’Veha, Caliria, Carisia and Lu’ria. I belong to all of them. Just as they belong to me. Nothing is going to change that. Not now.”

Aleatia nodded her head and reached up to stroke Sehri’s cheek. “Indulge me Sehri.” She said softly. “Tell me of this young man who has affected you in such a way. Tell me of them all.”

Sehri’s eyes were bright as she began to share with her mother all she had felt since this trip had begun.

ARC ROYAL
ECHO QUADRANT
FEBRUARY 5TH, 1128 HRS EST

Martin looked up from his tray of food and gazed at Helen who sat across from him. Since discovering this Pralor Paladin thing, they had been spending as much time together as they could just talking. At first it had been awkward, Martin always considered her a mother figure, but as the days and hours passed it became like second nature. He had never held anything back from Helen through the years, and discovering this new connection made it all the more important. Helen may have been over four thousand years old, but the time and the training she had put in since becoming bonded with Arzoal had been well worth it. The hard life in Sparta had caused her to look much older, but that was a ruse Martin knew. Helen was a terror in a fight as evidenced by the fact she was the one who killed Aikiro. She was very easily capable of holding her own in a fight, especially with Arzoal beside her. Not to mention that she and Arzoal had developed some very unique skill sets together. They met nearly every morning for breakfast and Wayonn had commented on how their connection was becoming more and more intertwined. Helen, for her part, thoroughly enjoyed the closeness they had nurtured these last weeks. From the day that Hadarian couple had returned Martin to Earth she had felt a bond with the infant, and always inquired of him from Walter even after he had assumed his role as Guardian of the Line. Now Helen understood why.

Helen lowered her mug of tea and looked at him. “What are you thinking Martin?” She asked softly.

Martin poked at his food several times before lifting his eyes to meet hers. She didn't press further for she knew he would answer when he had his thoughts focused. Martin Leonidas was far more intelligent than the vast majority of people gave him credit for. She knew he liked to put forward the idea that he was simply a soldier with good people around him but Helen knew better.

"I'm... I'm thinking about what we will discover." He said finally.

"Whether we will find a thriving people with thousands of dragons and Pralors... or the bones of long dead ancestors." She said.

Martin nodded. "Yes."

Helen nodded. "Arzoal and I have talked of this as well." She said softly. "Sometimes we question whether we acted too quickly once we rescued For'mya and the eggs from Enurrua. It is interesting that the planet that caused us so much pain in the past was the catalyst to us reaching out across the stars in search of part of our past and our future."

Martin looked at her. "You aren't going to go all cryptic on me are you?" He asked with that odd look on his face. One of his eyebrows would raise and the corner of his mouth would turn upward.

Helen chuckled softly. "No." She stated. "It does make you think though."

Martin nodded. "Sometimes too hard and it gives me a headache." He answered.

"Do you question whether we should be out here Martin?" She asked.

Martin shook his head. "No. I just don't like not having any idea of what is coming." He answered. "I don't fear the unknown Helen, you know that, but there are times when it is scary as all hell."

Helen nodded her head. "Indeed it is."

Martin looked at her. "And these Scourge. They give me pause."

Helen met his eyes. "The species we found recently has too many similarities to them. Yes... I was thinking the same thing."

Their talk with Wayonn and Arzoal in the cargo bay had been rather one sided. Martin had shown just a small portion of the anger he could bring to bear and it had surprised Wayonn to say the least since he was the focus of that anger.

"No more bullshit! I want to know everything! No games! No hidden information! I want to know everything or so help me I'll turn us all around and go back fucking now!"

Martin's outburst had caught Wayonn by surprise indeed considering the look in his eyes. Part of it was because the anger was focused at him and part of it was because Helen knew he had seen this type of thing before. He was the Mage to Sumar, and no doubt from his expression he had seen Sumar angry like this in the past. Her grandfather had talked then, talked for hours with Arzoal helping to fill in bits of information. In the end they knew all that Wayonn knew and Martin had taken Wayonn's arms in his hands.

"You have to trust in me now Wayonn." He had told him.

"Trusting you was never an issue Martin my boy." Wayonn had said. "It was only a matter of time before this all came out. It was a burden I did not want you to bear before you were ready. Now you are."

"You don't think Wayonn is holding back from us do you?" Helen asked him after a long moment of silence.

Martin shook his head quickly. "No. I think he sees what we see but doesn't have any more answers than we do. Just the same questions. That is why he is working with Anja and Duewa as much as possible. And I believe deep down he hopes to find more Pralors. I think part of him is lonely knowing he and Shiria are all that remains."

Helen nodded. "Yes. I will agree with that." She stated. "He tries to hide it from me, but we are blood and he cannot."

"Hell... I hope we find more of them." Martin said. "Lots more. We..."

Martin looked up and saw Anja crossing the mess lounge towards him and Helen with Duewa in tow. Both of them carried trays of food and held mugs of coffee, but Martin also took note of the bright, animated face Anja wore. He knew it was because of the steamy bout of sex they had stolen in the shower this morning while everyone still slept. Anja usually rose before the others and he had discovered her in the shower under the hot stream of water. Their brief coupling had been very intense and very satisfying, if a little short to suit them both. Though she was the smallest of his Queens in terms of physical stature, Anja more than made up for her size with her intense personality and her extremely fit body. Her Hadarian genes allowed her to last longer than his other Queens except when they were all in Phase, and behind Aricia, Anja was the most vocal and adventurous during their love making. The petite stature of her body had always made him crazy with lust, especially how she fit so easily into his arms, and combined with her urging moans and nips of love with her fangs and her whispers of ardor in his ears, it more often than not made him over excited and equally attentive to her. Which then led to some mind blowing experiences.

Helen turned to where his eyes were focused and saw Anja and Duewa move up to their table. Anja immediately went around to his side of the table and leaned over to him, catching his lips in a hungry kiss while Duewa settled next to her.

“Hi ya lover.” Anja spoke as she broke their kiss and she settled into the chair beside him.

“Hi yourself Red.” He stated with a smile.

Helen patted Duewa’s hand and kissed her cheek. “You are looking very... fulfilled Duewa.” She said with a smile. “This pleases me.”

Duewa smiled and nodded her head. “Until Thoti changed me, I didn’t fully grasp what I was missing about life.” She said thoughtfully looking at her. “Now I do. And I don’t intend to ever let it go.”

Martin lifted his coffee looking at Anja out of the corner of his eye. “I thought you two were going to be doing research this morning. Decided to take a break?”

Anja stabbed a piece of meat with her fork and plopped it into her mouth to chew before she answered. She turned to look at him as he waited. “Actually we came to see you.” She spoke after swallowing.

Martin’s mug stopped halfway to the table. “Oh boy... I know that look!” Martin said. “What is going on Red? Whenever you get that look it’s because you want something that I more than likely won’t want to give.”

“Lover?” Anja gasped. “You don’t mean that.”

“Uh-huh.” Martin muttered. “What do you have going through that devious mind of yours?”

“We need your permission for something.” Anja said.

Martin put his mug down. “I definitely am not going to like this.” He stated.

“Do you trust me?” Anja asked him.

Martin rolled his eyes. “Anja... please.”

Anja slid her hands around his arm, the warmth of his skin and the pulsing of his muscles always extremely pleasant and enticing to her and she looked at him with those jade green eyes. “I would not do this without asking you first. It’s too important.” She stated. “Duewa and I have discovered a way to revert the body of our guest back to their original state.”

Martin’s eyes narrowed. “Come again?”

Helen leaned forward. “I thought our... guest was dead?” She asked.

Anja nodded. “Our guest is.” She answered. “But all cells take time to lose their viability, and because our guest has both Pralor and Lycavorian cells in them it’s taking longer than it normally would.” She looked at Martin. “We can alter those cells now that it is dead to see what it looked like. It might give us an idea of where it came from and how it got out here.”

“How?” Martin asked.

Duewa leaned forward now and the excitement was evident in her reply. “It’s actually a combination of two things that Anja and I have been working on separately and never knew until now. Her Reverse Genetic Modifier combined with my work on Hereditary Chromatin Mycosis will allow us to...”

Martin held up his hand and stopped her. “Excuse me... what did you just say?”

Anja laughed and hugged his arm tightly knowing that he was truly out of his element here. “Duewa is saying we can make the cells in our dead guest revert back to their original form.”

Martin looked at Anja. “Why didn’t she just say that?” Martin asked.

“I did.” Duewa stated confused.

Helen chuckled and took her hand. "You must remember Duewa... Martin is very good at conversing with Avi about computer and electronic algorithms but start talking in advanced medical terms and he is lost. Literally."

Duewa looked at him. "Oh. Sorry."

Martin smiled at her. "Don't worry... I'm sure you'll spend enough time around me to discover all my pet peeves." He stated. "Everyone else does."

"How does this help us?" Helen asked.

"Well... if it works..." Anja began.

"It's a big if too." Duewa chimed in.

Anja nodded. "Yes... but if it works... Wayonn or even Arzoal might be able to tell us where this Pralor came from. It could give us an idea of how far they ranged out after the war, or if there are other survivors. If it works..."

"If it works it could also help us if we have any future encounters with this species." Duewa said. "It might even be worth it to try and capture one."

Martin blinked. "Capture one?" He hissed.

"If this reversion process works on the cells we have Marty, then there is no reason to think it won't work on actual living cells." Anja said. "Like those found in the living creatures. It could not only benefit us because we can treat any of our people who may get infected, and we may even be able to cause any of these creatures we may come across in the future to return to their normal appearance. I mean who would submit to this willingly?"

"I would hope no one." Helen stated.

Duewa nodded. "Exactly. We've already determined how aggressive these cells are and the most effective way to inject so many of them at once. I find it hard to believe anyone would willingly submit to being raped by one of these creatures. Male or female."

Martin looked at Anja intently. "You can do this Red?" He asked finally.

Anja nodded. "It's possible. I wanted to make sure you were in agreement before we tested it on the cells we have." She answered. "We may even be able to devise some sort of immunization to this type of forced conversion in case any of our people are caught by them. I... For'mya believes we will encounter them again. So does Melda Min."

Martin's dark eyes grew slightly wider. "Really?"

Helen leaned closer. "Her gift?" She asked.

Anja nodded. "Yes."

Duewa looked at Anja and then Martin and then back to Anja. "What do you mean Anja? What gift?" She asked.

Anja dropped her fork onto the plate. "Dysea has a sense of what most of us would consider precognition. She can see things that are going to happen. She doesn't get these flashes very often and they are usually jumbled and she can't really explain them but when she does we usually try and listen to what they might mean."

Martin looked at Duewa. "She saw that the Evolli would invade and that is why we were able to respond to their initial attacks so quickly. We just couldn't jump the gun without overstepping our intelligence sources or determine where they would come from and that is why they were able to gain three planets right off the bat."

"For'mya also is able to... how do I explain this..." Helen said. "She can sense life and death and even deeply buried emotions just from being near people or inanimate things like a ship or a rock even."

"Empathic abilities?" Duewa gasped.

Helen nodded. "Yes."

"That... that is fascinating!" Duewa stammered. "How... this is not common knowledge among our people is it. I have never heard of it!"

Martin shook his head. "No it's not common knowledge Duewa. There are seven outside of our family who know if it. You make eight."

Duewa gazed at him with wide eyes for a long moment. His answer was clear, but the fact that they trusted her enough to share this information with her told Duewa all she would ever need to know. No matter what had occurred in her past, her life as far as they were concerned began the day Thoti turned her. The trust they were showing in allowing her to know this swept through Duewa like a wave and she embraced it completely. They did not have to trust her, but they did, and Duewa would honor that trust just as intensely as she honored her love for Thoti.

Duewa met Martin's eyes. "I will... I will not forget the trust you are placing in me." She said softly.

Martin nodded his head and that was all she needed to see. "So this little reversion thingy could make our people safer if we run into those ugly bastards again?"

Anja nodded. "It's possible... yes. We need to run lots of tests to confirm it, but yes."

Martin looked between them. "And it's safe. It won't hurt you or Duewa... or put you in any kind of danger?"

Duewa nodded. "We will take every precaution." She said. "Neither of us wishes to make a mistake."

Anja nodded her head. "No argument here." She stated.

Martin nodded. "Ok... but I want two security people with you at all times. And both of you will be armed always. I don't want whatever you do to magically bring that ugly fucker back to life!"

"We're not gods Marty." Anja said. "That is not something we can do."

Martin looked at her. "When you put your mind to something like this Red... it's downright scary what you can accomplish."

Anja beamed with adoring love at him. "Well... thank you lover!" She said. "You have never told me that before."

Martin leaned over and nuzzled her cheek and then kissed her softly. "It's true."

Duewa shook her head slowly. "My last attempt at holding a weapon did not turn out so well Martin." She said with an embarrassed grin. "I got shot and almost died."

"It got you Thoti didn't it?" Martin asked.

Duewa smiled and nodded. "Well... that part is true." She answered.

"We'll get you some basic firearms training before you two start your work." Martin said. "Thoti will get a kick out of it trust me."

Duewa nodded. "Very well."

"We should let Wayonn and Arzoal know so they can be there if its successful." Anja said.

"I will tell them this afternoon when we gather with Fedor and Eirene." Helen said. "Both of them are advancing rapidly in their Etheric skills and Wayonn wants to proceed to the next level."

Martin looked at her. "Helen could... could my brother pass this Paladin gene to his children even if they aren't pureblood?" He asked.

Helen shook her head slowly. "We don't believe so. Granted we haven't been able to test his children who are with Jalersi but you would have felt something from Karun if this was the case. Paladins can sense each other when close by. You never felt anything odd about Karun did you?"

Martin shook his head. "No."

Helen nodded. "And neither you, Wayonn or I have sensed it within Fedor or Eirene." She answered. "Given their accelerated growth it would have already manifested itself if it was present. The gene seems to have skipped Pusintin and is only present in your blood. Their skills may be a secondary result of For'mya's latent empathic abilities which come from you, so in essence their skills come from you. Given what they have learned and mastered so far I would put them at Resumar's level in terms of abilities, especially bonded with dragons as they all have."

"That's still pretty powerful Helen." Anja said. "Resumar is no pushover by any means."

Helen nodded. "I know. I have seen flashes of his anger and skill." She said. "Eirene's skills seem more passive, helping her to have incredible reflexes like For'mya. She is becoming an exceptional pilot. Fedor's abilities seem to be more focused on his physical abilities, more to the point his uncanny knack for those throwing knives he carries wherever he goes. It seems he can almost guide them with a passive Etheric ability. Much like you and Andro can guide your Shi Viskas. It's rather unnerving to be honest." She finished with a smile. "Not to mention that he is becoming quite the budding engineer according to the ARC ROYAL's Chief Engineer."

Martin nodded. "Good. I wanted both of them to pick something that they discovered they liked and focus on that."

Helen nodded. "Well... they have." She answered. "Now all I have to do is keep Eirene's attention focused on her studies and less on her new mate." She spoke with a grin. "Their... their activities are tiring her out."

Anja laughed and pushed her shoulder into Martin's arm. "Oh... you'll never get that out of her Helen." She exclaimed. "Once a Leonidas woman latches onto a good thing... namely a man that curls their toes... they keep it!"

Helen shook her head. "Yes... I'm beginning to see just how accurate that statement is." She said.

Iama pulled the sheet tighter around her lush body and turned to look at the sleeping form of the Lycavorian in her bed. Her tail dangled behind her under the sheet, twitching gently back and forth. Iama felt a flash of anger that surged through her but she quickly shook her head and fought it down. It was anger at herself she knew. She had wanted him Iama thought to herself and his interest in her was utterly obvious but this was becoming too much. She would never be more than a delightful fling to the men on this ship, and she had already taken three men into her bed on this trip. Three more than she had wanted too when it had started. They had been nice to her, treated her respectfully and she had initiated their encounters because no matter what she had been through, Iama still enjoyed the company of men. She could still feel pleasure even after all these years. Perhaps what she had endured had made her this way, but they were men after all, and when she stuck her firm ass up at them they reacted as any man would. The only problem was that Iama wanted more. Much more than these men were willing to give to her. This one, as with the other two before him, would wake and go back to his duties and his life. He would no doubt try and entice her into his bed in the future, but as with the others, Iama would not allow that now. Their encounters had been pleasant and pleasurable, but Iama wanted more than just a casual fling. There was another reason as well and it was one she did not quite understand herself.

Iama turned to go into the living area of her quarters, crossing to the small kitchenette on the far bulkhead and pouring herself a mug of tea. As she lifted the tea to her lips his face came to her again. The same face that had taken the place of the man in her bed as he had been taking her. The same face that made her beyond anxious. The man she could not stop thinking about now. His face, his body, his voice. Iama didn't understand it for it had never happened to her before. After years as a sexual toy for so many Kavalian men, Iama was thrilled that she could still enjoy the pleasures of sex when she wanted to have it. The three Lycavorians she had bedded since being rescued had been adequate lovers, usually fumbling about as if they knew what they were doing, but they had shown her she could still feel and enjoy sex. They had not done much to really excite or satisfy her, and last night Iama had actually lost herself as she clutched at the man's shoulders in a small climax. Lost herself because she saw his face and not the man who was actually thrusting into her.

Fedor Leonidas.

There was something so very different about him. Something that drew her to him, but also frightened her terribly. That he was the most delicious specimen of any man she had ever met was without question, but he had been born as all the Kavalian clones had been born. The accelerated birth process was notoriously efficient, but it also left the clones decidedly lacking in intelligence. This had to be made up for in several months of intense schooling that not all of them did well in. Iama had already embarrassed herself in front of him twice by trying to treat him as she had treated the other clones. He was different than the Kavalian clones, something lurking within him that was far more dreamlike than she knew. Perhaps there was something to this Etheric Mindvoice thing than she had first thought possible. She was very practical and did not believe that such things could exist. Perhaps she was wrong in her beliefs. It was obvious to her that he and his sister, his whole family really, it was obvious they could do things that were not normal. All of them except his vampire mothers being bonded to dragons probably played a part in it, but even his two vampire mothers were far more skilled than any vampire she had ever seen or heard of. He and his sister trained privately for several hours a day with King Leonidas and no one was allowed within the gym during those hours. It made Iama wonder as she sipped her tea. What could the King be teaching them?

"Iama?" The voice broke into her thoughts and she looked up to see the Lycavorian come out of her bedroom pulling his shirt on.

"Deleon." She spoke getting to her feet.

The man moved up in front of her and smiled. "You could have woke me up you know." He stated.

Iama smiled. "And risk having you start again when we both need to get to work?" She said.

"Can we see each other again?" He asked.

Iama wanted to blurt out no right away but she smiled. "We'll see... ok?" She spoke.

Deleon nodded. "Fair enough." He spoke. "I should get going."

Iama nodded. "Of course." Iama thought quickly. "Deleon... do you know of a way to get into the gym on deck eight when it is locked down? The hot tubs in there are much larger and I was hoping to sneak in and use one when they aren't in use by others." She lied.

The Lycavorian smiled and took something from his shirt. "Here... take this." He told her. "This is a level six pass. It will get you into the gym."

Iama smiled. "Thank you." She said.

"Call me Iama." He said.

"We'll see." She said with a sadness in her voice that he did not pick up. She allowed him to lean over and kiss her and then she watched him move to the door of her quarters and exit. Iama looked at the pass in her hand and began to plot how she would discover what she wanted when it came to the twins. She needed to know why Fedor affected her so. She wanted to know why he made her feel as she did and Iama could be very persistent when she wanted to be. She wondered if he was as large as his physique hinted at. He was a beautiful man, even if he was no smarter than one of the clones. Her tail twitched at the thought of being wrapped in his arms, yet she did not quite understand the warm flush that swept through her at that thought either.

She would learn.

Had she been more attentive and looked into the corridor before allowing Deleon to leave she would have seen the dark brown eyes on a certain young man she was interested in look up and see Deleon exit her quarters as he was walking towards her doorway. She would have seen his eyes narrow somewhat as he came to a stop, and she would have seen the flash of pain across the same eyes as he turned and headed in the opposite direction quickly.

"...picked it up about seventeen minutes ago." Akemi told Martin as he moved up beside her near the star chart on the ARC ROYAL's bridge. Wayonn stood beside him on the right watching her intently.

"It's on a planet?" Martin asked.

"A moon actually." She told him her fingers dancing across the three dimensional chart and enlarging the dark green moon. It was smaller than the gas giant it was orbiting, but it was obviously able to sustain life if the vegetation data modifiers running alongside the moon were any indication. "About the same size as Earth's moon. Class M with near identical atmospheric conditions as Elear. Surprising considering it's a moon."

"Life signs?" Wayonn asked.

Akemi shook her head. "We're still too far out even for our long range sensors." She answered. "This was picked up by one of the probes we sent before making the last jump."

Martin looked at her. "Ok... why are we here again? We've seen a bunch of these type moons on this trip." He asked with a grin.

Akemi chuckled and played with the holographic console once more. "This." She told him pointing to the lone white dot on the image now. "A low power generator emitter." She said. "The probes are designed to detect any power emissions and then take extensive scans of the area they detect the power source coming from." She adjusted the image again and Martin saw a series of what appeared to be buildings. "These are the scans the probe sent back."

"It's a building." Martin answered.

Akemi nodded. "A very large building by all accounts." She answered. "Seven stories above ground and an additional ten below ground. It's Pralor tech King Leonidas." She told him seeing his eyes come up to meet hers.

"Pralor?" He hissed. "Out here?"

Akemi nodded. "All of the probes used on the ARIZONA-Class ships are designed to detect anything with a Pralor signature on it, whether it be power flows or mineral deposits. To include building materials. Anything."

Wayonn was leaning close to the chart table moving certain frozen images around on the holographic display. He adjusted one final one and let out an interested gasp. "Martin... it's a Pralor Portable Science Facility!"

"A what?" Martin asked.

Wayonn looked up now. "A Portable Science Facility. We would launch them from orbit and once they were situated on the surface of a planet we would occupy them."

"Launch them?" Akemi asked.

Wayonn nodded his head. "The part that is underground starts out as a very large drilling core. When launched it will activate upon touching the surface of a planet or moon, any solid surface really and burrow down until a predetermined depth is reached." He looked up at them. "Then it becomes the central power core as the rest of the station is extended from protected interior cells."

"No shit!" Martin asked surprised. "Very cool."

"I agree." Akemi echoed.

"What's it doing out here?" Martin asked him. "We're a long way from Pralor space Wayonn and you yourself have said there was nothing of value within the Echo quadrant. At least to Pralor civilization."

Wayonn nodded. "I don't know." He said. "Captain... how soon before we get into active sensor range?"

Akemi turned to an officer standing to her right. "Duty Officer?"

"Roughly six hours twenty-two minutes Captain." The man answered.

Akemi turned back to look at Wayonn. "Six hours and twenty-two minutes." She stated. "But that will be extreme long range for our sensors. Two days travel time at our current speed unless we kick in the Light Speed Drive."

Martin looked at her. "How does that affect our jump status?"

"It doesn't really put a crimp in our scheduling sire." She answered him. "With our Quantum Resonance Field Reactors we can do both. It will only slow the recharging of the Jump Drive several hours because we're diverting some power to the Light Speed Drive Coils."

Martin leaned over and touched a separate panel on the chart table. "Danny... you and Jules getting this?" He asked.

"Looking at it now Marty." Danny replied from the work station that he had quickly taken over nine decks below when Martin had sent him a Mindvoice pulse about a possible ground mission. Julie had been with him and they had been headed to do some mission report work when Martin had pulsed them both.

"Jesus!" They heard Julie gasp. "How big is this thing Wayonn?"

"Our Portable Science Facilities came in different versions and sizes depending on the type of research." Wayonn answered. He leaned closer to the images. "If I'm not mistaken, this is one of the smaller ones."

"Smaller?" Julie barked. "If these initial scans are correct it's the size of five square city blocks!"

"What's five blocks to a race that built planet size cities." Danny quipped.

Wayonn chuckled on the bridge and looked at Martin who was smiling. "We did want to be thorough." He stated.

"What's the big deal if it's abandoned?" Danny asked. "Why waste our time?"

"That's the question." Akemi spoke. "The reason the probe picked it up at all is because of very low frequency power emitter readings coming from this base."

Martin looked at her. "Life support?" He asked her.

Akemi shrugged. "It's possible. We just don't know."

"How long to get there if we kick in the LSDs?" Martin asked.

"A little under eleven hours." She answered immediately.

"Kick it then. Danny... prep a ground team." Martin spoke. "We're going to take a look at this thing."

Wayonn looked at him. "We may be able to discover quite a bit of information Martin. Information that could tell us quite a bit of what happened to my people." Wayonn said. "I'd like to go."

Martin nodded to him. “Danny... you, Julie and the Master Chief meet with Wayonn in the Tactical Command Center on deck three. I’ll join you in one hour.”

“On our way.” Danny said.

Martin looked at Wayonn. “I’ll grab Helen and meet you there with Aricia and Isabella.” He told him.

PUMA’S PRIDE

FEBRUARY 5TH, 1145 HRS, EST

The deep voice woke her up and Serale lifted her head off the pillow. She saw her brother Danim still sleeping soundly on the floor so she knew it was not his voice she heard. She sat up slowly, trying not to make any noise as she heard Kalis’s voice speaking. Slowly she got out of the bed, the lightweight jumpsuit conforming to her body. She had slept in her clothes since coming onto this ship and it had almost become second nature for her. The jumpsuit that Kalis had secured for her fit her like a second skin, and while she would not have picked it out of a store because it was so revealing, the almost leather like fabric kept her warm and made it very easy to move around. She crept quietly to the large sheet that Kalis had erected over the single open arch doorway to his bedroom and gently pulled it aside to look into the main living area of his spacious quarters.

Two days they had been here now and he had not spoken to them unless needed. Serale did not go out of her way to speak with him, especially with the hate Danim felt for him, but she could not deny the desire too do just that. He cooked for them, very good food actually, which both her and Danim ate quickly. He allowed them full access to his quarters when he wasn’t there, a surprising move until they realized there was nothing left they could use as weapons against him or in an escape attempt. Not that they could go anywhere. They were buried within the bowels of this ship and neither she or Danim had any idea how to reach the upper decks. He was always reading from that strange looking data pad he kept on his desk. She and Danim had tried to access it when he was gone the first time, but no matter what they did, it never activated as the data pads normally would by their touch. It must have been keyed to his bio-signature, which was technology Serale did not think the Kavalians had. If he knew they had tried he never said anything to them about it. It seemed that he was almost embarrassed to talk with them now. He had been true to his word though, and Serale had spoken to her mother just last night. Ceale was not able to tell her much, only that she was reasonably certain that Kalis had been right and she was in no danger among these Kavalians.

Serale held in the gasp of surprise when she saw Kalis. He was completely naked and sitting on the cold floor of the main room staring at the holo image of a young man Serale recognized without hesitation. Androcles Leonidas. He was wearing only a plain white pair of pants with crimson trim and appeared to be pacing calmly in front of a large fireplace. Serale let her dark green eyes wander over Kalis’s body, taking in the wide shoulders and exceptionally powerful back. She winced slightly when she saw the scars that crisscrossed his skin. They were long since faded, as if he had gotten them some time ago. His skin was deeply tanned and glistened with a fine sheen of sweat as if he had been working out. Her eyes went back to the moving image of Androcles Leonidas and she realized it was a recording of some kind.

“...will become like second nature the more you practice cousin. And you must try to practice as often as possible.” Androcles was saying. “You will only need to see it in your head and it will happen. In a few years you will not even need to do that. You need to master the little things Kalis... and this will come with time. Be patient, concentrate and when you become frustrated cousin, shift back and review what you just attempted. You will need to judge the surface beneath you with your paws, the feel of the air shifting around you. When you shift, your sense of smell will become ten times what it is in human form, be prepared for this. Everything will become sharper and clearer. Your vision. Your hearing. All of your senses will elevate to levels you are not used too. As you master them you will be able to draw upon them even in human form. You will be larger than normal Lycavorians even though you are half Kavalian. That is the strength of the Leonidas blood within us. Our grandfathers were nearly four feet at the shoulder and over three hundred pounds of muscle and teeth. Our fathers are nearly their equal. Use this to your advantage when you can Kalis but never abuse it. As you master these skills, other Lycavorians will sense the blood within you easily. They honor our name because of our grandfathers, and the actions of one of us affect us all cousin."

"Is it possible to block a scent that affects us strongly?" Serale heard Kalis ask the holo image and her eyes grew a little wider when the holo image flickered for a few seconds and then she saw the vision of Androcles shake his head.

"A scent that triggers stronger than normal emotions is usually caused by an event you witnessed or a female that has... a female that has certain potency to her scent that tickles your senses beyond normal if that is the definition of your question." Andro replied.

Serale realized then that whatever he was watching was a very sophisticated interactive holo program. Most definitely not the type of technology the Kavalians should have had access too.

"I will use Sadi and my other mates as an example for you if that is your meaning. All of them have a certain flavor to their scent that... for lack of a better explanation... that sets my blood to burning. I could track any of them across thousands of kilometers of a planet or across the stars simply by their Mindvoice and Etheric resonance. You will know when you taste that flavor on a female's scent. It will... it will excite you, make you feel full of energy and above all else, it will make you want to claim them as yours with an almost overpowering urge. It will make you want to protect them at any cost, even your own life, and you will not care about the price you might have to pay. It is easy to detect a similar emotion from females of Lycavorian descent, not so much in those who are not like us, and that is why grandfather taught our males to harness that part of ourselves. You will gain far more in treating the woman you wish to scent or become closer with as a precious gem as opposed to forcing yourself upon her. You will learn what makes her feel, what makes her breath. You will feel it within you and instinctively you will know what will make them quiver in your arms. If they desire you in a similar fashion, believe me, the pleasure you will feel is beyond words. That is what a female can do to you cousin. Knowing... knowing what the future with them could bring to you gives you power and strength. It makes you a better man."

Serale watched as the image of Androcles paced and then stopped to stare into whatever was recording the program.

"I have taught you all I can teach you using this manner Kalis." Androcles told him. "To be honest... I never thought you would get this far along." Androcles bowed his head. "For that you have my apologies cousin. I would be honored to run with you here in Sparta cousin. You can join my brothers and I and we could teach you so much more. This program... it was made by my father specifically for you Kalis. To show you what you could have! What could be yours! You do not need to forsake the blood that runs in your veins cousin. You do not need to follow in the footsteps of someone who has forgotten all our grandfather taught him. I am inputting the code so that you may retrieve my father's last message to you. I will leave you with this Kalis... make the choice from within your heart!" Andro brought his fist over his bare chest. "Draw it from deep within you before you proceed. Make the right choice... the choice I believe you wish to make if you have come this far. Make that choice and I will stand with you against any foe! Against any odds! All of us will! No matter what it may cost us... because you are family." Andro moved a little closer. "Make the wrong choice Kalis... make the wrong choice and there will be no place within the entirety of the galaxy where you will be able to hide from me. And while I may weep while doing it, I will drive my Nehtes through your chest and watch as the life leaves your eyes." Andro stepped back. "I don't believe that is the choice you wish to make cousin. I... I believe now you wish to discover what has never been shown to you. You have tasted it... and now you want more. A future awaits you Kalis my cousin... a future with your family. With your blood. Make the right choice."

Kalis sat there as the P1 powered down the program and he retrieved it from the floor. He typed on it for several seconds and confirmed that a code had indeed been released. He saw it there on the screen and his finger hovered over the activate button. That is when Kalis's focus opened more and he smelled her sweet cinnamon and cherry scent and detected the quickening of her heartbeat. He had spent the last four hours shifting back and forth, exactly as Androcles had spoken to him. This last week, learning to master his body while in wolf form had been exhaustive but so very rewarding to him. Androcles telling him it would only get easier with time and practice made Kalis want to remain as a wolf for hours and days on end. He could not do this he knew, so he spent the last few hours of every night going through the exercises with Andro's voice filling his head. He hadn't got much sleep this way, but his desire to discover something beyond what he had here was fuel for the fire that drove him.

Kalis reached out and pulled the sheet from the nearby couch and then rose to his feet slowly. As he placed the P1 on his desk he inhaled deeply and let Serale's scent flow through him. Incredibly, just as Andro had said, her scent rushed through him and charged his body and senses. He turned to the sheet covered doorway.

"You may come out now Serale." He spoke softly. "I know you are watching and you do not have to fear me. Ever."

Kalis watched the sheet moved a few inches to the side and then she stepped into view and quickly pulled the sheet back behind her. She turned to look at him with a sheepish expression because she had been caught. Her hands trembled because she did not know what he would do and she certainly did not want to anger him.

"I... I heard the Prince's voice." Serale stammered. "Forgive me... I did not..."

Kalis tucked the edges of the sheet tightly around his waist and crossed the distance to her in three strides. Serale gasped softly but did not back up which shocked her. She stared into those beautiful blue eyes of his as he looked at her for a long moment and felt the flush his gaze caused within her. "I will never hurt you Serale." He said softly. "If you believe nothing else I tell you... believe that."

"Where... where did you... how did you get that?" Serale asked. "How is it that you have an interactive holo program with the Crown Prince?"

Kalis smiled warmly. "Not just my cousin... my Aunt Dysea and Aunt Anja as well." He answered. "My Hadarian Aunt is very colorful in her choice of words. Are all Hadarians like her?"

"What?" Serale gasped. "Like the Queen? Heavens no! I wish I was like her."

Kalis turned away and moved back to the desk where he poured two glasses of the juice. He turned towards her and offered it out to her. Serale and Danim had refused anything he had offered to them personally because they feared him so. Serale decided there was something very different about him and the fear that had been there before was nearly gone. Without thinking she stepped forward and took the glass. Kalis smiled at this and turned back to the table, picking up the P1. He faced her once more and held it out to her.

"It is something my Uncle gave to me on Enurrua." He told her.

Serale looked at the odd pad as she sipped the juice. "You mean... you mean King Leonidas?" She said. Kalis nodded. "Yes." He answered. "Take it."

Serale reached out hesitantly... watching his eyes as her fingers closed around the pad. When she had it fully in her hand he released it and lifted his glass to drink. "You... you know what this is?" She asked him as her eyes dropped to the pad to inspect it.

"Apparently it is a very sophisticated data pad." Kalis answered. "One that every member of the Leonidas family has. My uncle said it was somehow derived from the amazing advances they discovered on that ship."

Serale looked at him. "The Mindvoice ship?" She spoke.

Kalis nodded. "Yes. It has... it has opened the door into a world I never knew existed." He told her. "A world that I very much want to reach."

Serale met his eyes as she held it back to him. "How... how did you get those scars?" She asked.

Kalis turned away from her and placed the P1 back on the table. "When I was fifteen I made my father angry." He answered turning to look at her. "His punishment was fifty lashes."

Serale's eyes grew wide in horror. "You mean... like from a whip?" She gasped.

Kalis nodded his head. "Something similar yes."

"What... what did you do?" Serale stammered.

"I questioned what he told me to do." Kalis told her. He motioned to the couch and Serale didn't hesitate much to her further surprise. She watched him sit in the chair opposite her and finish the rest of the juice before settling his eyes on her. "I will protect you and your brother Serale. I will die before I allow harm to come to either of you. I promised your mother this and I will begin to live my life honorably by fulfilling that promise. I don't... I don't want you to be afraid of me."

Serale blinked several times and then did something that she had heard Queen Anja say once in a speech. She took a leap of faith.

"Tell me of yourself." She asked him.

Kalis chuckled. "You do not wish to know about me." He said gently.

"What... what if I do?" Serale asked him.

"I would say you are crazy." Kalis answered with a smile. "My life has not... it has not been pleasant."

"Will it be the truth?" Serale asked him.

Kalis met her eyes. "Do you wish the truth?"

Serale nodded quickly. "Yes."

"It could take some time." Kalis said.

Serale looked around the room. "I don't think I'm going anywhere." She said with a small bit of humor.

Kalis's lips turned upward in a smile. A smile that made Serale's heart flutter and caused delicious sensations to ripple through her.

"Very well." He said.

ARC ROYAL

2142 HRS, EST

THIRTY MINUTES FROM ORBIT

"...detecting any lifesigns on the surface or within the facility itself." Martin spoke as he used his fingers to move the holographic images around on the Chart Table. "However... given our recent luck we're not going to take any chances and we are going in heavy." Aricia stood to his left while Isabella and Dysea stood to his right. Around the table also stood Wayonn, Helen, Danny, Julie, Fedor, Miseo and Muton. "This is a pure Pralor science facility according to Wayonn and we could possibly get a wealth of information and material from it. Lucky for us... the first of Ben's supply shipments should link up with us mid morning tomorrow. Avi will be among the group of Durcunusaan and engineers that he is sending." Martin looked at Akemi. "You'll have your full Science Department then Akemi."

The Captain of the Arc Royal nodded with a smile. "We'll need them out here Milord. Especially Avi. We're finding things that we've never seen before in probe scans."

Martin nodded and turned back to the Chart Table. "Ok... though the facility is huge, it precludes us from bringing any dragons into the interior of the facility so Arzoal and Torma are going to remain outside and provide aerial recon with Isheeni and Iriral. For'mya, Endith and Tina will remain airborne in the STRIKER after they drop us off and monitor things from above. Miath will be covering the north entrance here which is our main point of entry. Aurith will be doing the same on this west entrance. Mark the points on your data pads from the map here. Anything happens inside, beat feet to one of these entrances. If it ain't wearing one of our uniforms, Miath and Aurith are going to burn the shit out of it if it follows us out of the facility."

Danny leaned forward now. "The Skipper, Julie, me and five members of our team will be point and don't no one complain. This is our kind of Op and we need to know what each one of us will do in a given situation. Fifty meters behind us will be Aricia's group with Isabella, Cirith and Fedor. They'll have the bulk of the Science team we are sending with them and the rest of our team. Wayonn... Tony is going to be sticking to you and Helen like glue so you don't wander off."

"I have no intention of wandering off Daniel Simpson." Wayonn said as the others smiled at Danny's comment.

Danny grinned flashing his white teeth. "He'll make sure of that."

Muton leaned forward. "Forgive me Martin... why exactly am I going?" He asked. "I am not a scientist. I'm a doctor... not a very good one either I might add."

Martin nodded. "Anja and Dysea will be in the last group fifty meters behind the second. As soon as we move to the medical wing here..." Martin pointed on the map. "You and she will then set up a medical evacuation point. And Red requested you Muton. You have extensive experience in field medicine and that's what she wants. The four medics going with you will be taking orders from you and her."

Muton nodded after a moment. "I will make sure to thank her for her recommendation." He stated.

"Once we reach the medical wing and establish a perimeter we're going to start breaking off into teams to try and obtain as much data and material as we can." Danny continued. "We'll determine makeup after we get set in the facility. Miseo... you and your team of Monitors... they will be the security for Anja's third group. They are the only medical team we are sending so you got our lifeline if anything goes to shit."

Miseo nodded his head confidently. "We are ready." He said.

Helen looked at him from across the Chart Table. "Martin... is it wise to bring all of your Queens with us?" She asked.

Martin met her eyes and shrugged. "I was already told in very definitive terms what will happen if I leave them behind." He stated embarrassed. "It wasn't pretty."

Aricia gave him a gentle elbow in the ribs. "We are bringing extra security Feravomir." She said with a smile. "That is why Miseo and the Monitors are coming. We will be safe."

Helen knew better than to argue with any of Martin's Queens and she nodded her head. "Very well."

"There are five areas we want to inspect that are priority." Danny spoke adjusting the Chart Table. "Jules has worked out the COM frequencies for each team and all we need to do is upload them to our implants. This place is fucking huge so we need to stay in constant radio or Mindvoice contact. No exceptions. Obviously... the power core is central. According to Wayonn, the Research labs are here, four levels down from the medical wing using either stairs or an elevator if we can get it working. We..."

The soft chime caught everyone's attention and Martin pulled his P1 from his vest. He looked at it and then back to Dan. "We're good." He stated quickly. "Keep going Danny." Martin glanced at Helen before Danny began speaking again. He ignored the looks Aricia and Dysea gave to him before turning and moving off to a quiet portion of the TCC.

Martin lifted his P1 and typed his code into the pad.

-PRIMARY TARGET COMPLETED HISTORY PROGRAM 10.4 HOURS AGO-
-FINAL CODE HAS BEEN INPUTTED AND AUTHORIZED-
-NOTIFICATION OF SPARTAN 11 HAS BEEN INITIATED-

"Has it been accessed?" Martin asked softly.

-NEGATIVE-

"If Final Code is activated I want an immediate connection." Martin spoke. "Full safeties and security protocols."

-AFFIRMATIVE KING LEONIDAS-

"Once Avi is on board download any signals received to his neural link and have him monitor them twenty-four seven." Martin spoke. "I want..."

"Nauta Melme?" Dysea's soft voice interrupted him and he turned to see Aricia, Bella and Helen standing with her.

"What is it Beloved?" Aricia asked. "Is it Kalis?"

Martin looked at them intently. He had shared what he was doing with his Queens and Helen only. Aricia, Anja and For'mya liked the idea while Bella, Cirith and Dysea thought it was too dangerous. Helen knew why he was doing it and she was the only one who knew what would happen should things not work out the way Martin wanted.

Martin held up the P1. "He... he completed the program." He said with a half grin.

Dysea's eyes grew the widest and she stepped forward. "He completed it?" She asked. "Are you sure?"

Martin showed her the read out on the P1. "He completed Andro's portion ten hours ago and the code was automatically downloaded to his P1. I told you how I set this up in the very beginning. There is no way he would have gotten this far if Pusintin was involved in any way. He completed it in half the time I calculated he would, which means this is all he has been doing.”

Isabella took the P1 and gazed at the readout for a moment. She looked up at Martin. “I... I never believed he would complete it.” She said softly. “This... this is...”

“It changes things.” Dysea said gently her stunning emerald green eyes focusing on Martin. “This changes things a great deal. Forgive me for not believing in him at the outset.”

Martin shook his head. “I had more doubts than anyone.” He stated. “I still have doubts.”

Aricia shook her head and took his arm in her hands. “You believed when many did not Beloved.” She said.

“Yes you did.” Isabella commented. “I... I must have let my hatred for them overrule my belief in you.”

Dysea pressed close to Bella and slid her arm around her waist. “I am guilty of this as well Bella.” She stated.

“That does not matter now.” Helen told them as she moved closer. “What we do now does Martin?” Helen asked. “What has to happen?”

Martin shook his head. “He has to activate the last code in order for us to know.” He told them.

“You are sure about what you felt?” Helen asked him.

Martin nodded his head. “He may be half Kavalian but I could smell it all over him. The doubt. The fear. Beneath all that... it was there Helen. He only has to reach for it to let it out. He could... he could be just as powerful as Res or Dorian for all we know. And if he discovers what I hope he discovers... if he embraces it... then there will be no doubt.”

Helen met Martin’s eyes. “Then if he activates the last code Martin... we must retrieve him. You will have shown him a different life and in order for him to truly believe in that life we will need to go for him.”

Martin took a deep breath. “Then I will.” He stated firmly.

Dysea moved closer to him as did Isabella. “No. We will.” Bella spoke.

“You must tell Fedor and Eirene Martin.” Helen said now. “He is their brother... they have a right to know.”

Martin nodded. “I know. We will tell them after this mission.” He said. “I need them focused right now. Fedor already has enough issues.”

“The Kavalian girl. Iama?” Helen asked.

Martin nodded. “She’s got a hold on him something fierce.”

“Does she even feel the same thing?” Helen asked.

Aricia nodded. “If what I have smelled from her is accurate... yes. She just does not... she is hesitant and unsure. It is almost as if she thinks of herself unworthy if her surface thoughts are any indication. She is not used to the emotions I can smell swirling through her.”

“Well... we will need to bring an end to that sooner rather than later.” Dysea said. “Bella and I both have heard she is...”

“What?” Martin asked.

“She is searching for something Nauta Melme. And she is allowing herself to be taken advantage of in the process.” Dysea answered.

“She has already slept with three members of the crew.” Isabella told him. “Cirith was coming back from the mess lounge and saw another this morning leaving her quarters.”

Martin’s head tilted. “She is searching for something so she is making herself easy?” He spoke in a low voice that said he found that hard to believe.

“Nauta Melme... she is acting out the only way she knows how.” Dysea said. “She was a sex toy for the Kavalians for so long. Forced to bed men who she cared nothing for. She is strong to have kept her wits about her as she has, but it is the only way she knows how to look for what she is seeking.”

“And what is she seeking?” Martin asked still not convinced.

“We have no right to judge her.” Bella spoke softly. “What she is seeking is her business and how she goes about it is her business. Believe me... I have been where she is. I think we all agree based on what you have smelled that Fedor is what truly interests her... but like Aricia said... I think she believes she is not good enough for him. And she believes because his birth was accelerated he is no more different than the Kavalian clones she had to endure for so long. We have to let this play out on its own.”

“Bella is right.” Helen spoke. “We can watch and guide but we must not interfere in any way. She is coming on the mission yes?”

Martin nodded his head. “The food processors are one of the areas we want to see if we can salvage. It would help her feed all of us without spending hours in the kitchens.”

“I believe she likes that part of her duty... but if we can acquire devices to help her... all the better.” Helen said. “Let this play out Martin. Fedor is no fool... and I think he will begin to see what he needs to do.”

Martin nodded and looked over to see Danny bringing the briefing to an end. “Ok... all this goes on the back burner. We have a mission to go on and I want everyone focused on it.” He saw the nods from all of them. “Let’s get moving.”

Aricia drew Isabella and Dysea with her as they headed back to the Chart Table, but it was Helen’s hand that stopped Martin. He instantly felt her throw up heavy shields that he immediately reinforced and they both felt Torma and Arzoal instinctively add their own power to them.

[You have a plan if this doesn’t work don’t you?] Helen asked.

[Helen...] Martin began to speak and she squeezed his arm tighter.

[We are Paladin and Mage now Martin my boy. What affects you will affect me.] She said. [I am not your queens and I do not think like them. If this is all a ruse by Kalis... if he has only done this at the behest of that foul ronnu Pusintin... what do you intend?]

Martin met her eyes. [I had Avi installed a very small fusion device in Kalis’s P1.] He told her. [If this is not real... then I will trigger the device.]

[I know why you are doing this Martin.] Helen said. [Your Queens do not... but I do. Is it truly worth it?]

[I intend to make my brother pay for everything he has done Helen! For every touch he laid upon my Kinsoargai! For funding the scum who took my Melda Min and abused her! For raping Yuri and forsaking Lisisa in the manner he did! For everything he forced her to suffer through until I found her! For every innocent member of the Union he has killed! For depriving his children with Jalersi the right and the knowledge of their bloodline! For everything he has done!] Martin hissed his eyes changing and becoming yellow orbs and the tips of his dual fangs extending slightly. [I intend to make him pay in the most painful and horrific way that I can possibly imagine Helen! Taking his last child from him is part of it yes... but I will love that boy as if he is my own if it happens! You know that! He is a Leonidas and I know what I smelled and felt from him on Enurrua! Is it worth it? In intend to fulfill the promise I made to my mother and I will remove the stain upon the name of Leonidas! Yes! It is worth it!]

Helen stared at him for a long moment and finally nodded her head slowly. [Your Queens would not approve with the possible exception of Aricia because she is Spartan born.] She told him. [They would not understand this part of you. It is a part you have never shown them I sense! I do understand however, and I approve Martin. Just be sure to never reveal this side of your nature to your Queens. They... they might find it hard to truly understand.]

Martin nodded as he began to calm down quickly. [I will.] He said softly. [Thank you Feravomir.]

Helen squeezed his arm. [Let’s go see if we can discover more of our history shall we?]

CHAPTER SEVEN

SOLMAR

UNION BASE CAMP

FEBRUARY 6TH, 0240

Andro rubbed the sleep from his eyes as he came up the ramp of the STRIKER. He had wanted to spend time with Sehri but her mother and Harira had monopolized her time since returning and he had eventually leaned up against Elynth and let sleep take him for a few precious hours.

His pilot Sa’roh, Dantio and Daio were gathered around the Chart Table in the rear of the STRIKER as he came up the ramp and he saw Ryner flopped in the side pen with Dorian curled up on the mat between his Bonded Brother's front and rear legs sleeping soundly. Andro stared at his younger brother for a long moment, his wolf ears listening to Dorian's breathing as he tuned everything else out. Dorian had surprisingly proven himself easily the last few days and his resonance seemed to be growing stronger. He was very quick to catch on to things and the skills Andro had been drilling into him for the last few months he had improved measurably. They came to him naturally, almost as they had come to Andro himself as he was growing up. There was something else about his brother that was similar to what he felt when around Jomann and his father. A burning inside him that matched his own. It seemed so very familiar and it took a long moment before Andro's eyes grew a little wider when he realized what it felt like.

Sa'roh brought him out of his thoughts. "Andro?" She called softly causing his head to turn to face her.

Andro glanced over to her quickly and then back to Dorian, deciding this was something he needed to take up with his father privately. The ramifications of what he felt would be wide ranging if they were accurate. Andro moved past where they slept and came up to the Chart Table. "I take it nothing exciting has happened." He spoke glancing back once more at his brother and then turning to look at them fully.

"The Kavs left a small detachment in the northern settlement but the majority of their forces pulled back to the south." Dantio reported.

Andro looked at him. "You and Daio got some sleep I hope." He stated.

Dantio nodded. "Yes... both of us. Three hours. Sa'roh woke us only a short time ago to show us this."

Andro looked at her. "Sa'roh?"

"We've been switching back and forth in the cockpit." She told him. "Don't worry... I need my flight crew sharp and I'm making sure they stay that way."

Andro nodded. "Good. How long before Sa'sur and the SCIMITAR return?"

Sa'roh handed him a data pad. "Her last transmission said she would jump back into the system around seven. They are putting the finishing touches on their plans. She said we'll be able to see the fireworks show from down here."

Andro nodded. "I'm sure. Let's make sure everyone is up and alert by then." He ordered. "Where is the KINDRED SOUL going to land?"

Sa'roh pointed to the chart. "One point two kilometers from our current location." She answered. "Just along this beach. It's massive and completely bare. They can have defenses up within two hours of setting down after they deploy the 82nd."

"And the Durcunusaan Division?" Andro asked.

"They will be coming down on a mix of VIPERS and KADEN-Class transports." Daio answered. "Forward units will establish a defensive perimeter along this ridge west of the KINDRED SOUL. Captain Sa'sur recommends that we move everyone here as soon as they are set. Perhaps an hour after they re-enter the system."

Andro nodded his head. "Make sure everyone is ready to move. The civilians go first." He told them. "We'll get them off world when we have established our full perimeter." He looked at them. "So what is this you woke me for?"

Sa'roh handed him another pad. "You should probably see this." She spoke. "We took this off the Kavalian detachment commander at the northern settlement."

Andro nodded once more as he looked at it. "It's encrypted." He stated. "I thought you were going to try and crack it?"

Sa'roh nodded. "I did. In a manner of speaking."

"Come again?" Andro asked.

"We don't have the necessary encryption algorithms to do a full decoding here on the STRIKER. Our computers aren't coded for them. This is some highly classified Puma Bane Intelligence Andro. Not exactly what you would find on just any Puma Bane soldier you run across." She answered.

"So you weren't able to get anything?" He asked.

Sa'roh smiled. "I didn't say that." She spoke adjusting the Chart Table's interface and bringing up some information. "Much of the core information needs to be washed through the Krypteria's filters and their command computers. However... using some inventive decoding of my own I was able to decipher parts that were not as encrypted as the core. Those Puma Bane idiots are not as bright as they think."

Andro's eyes scanned the pad he was holding and they grew a little wider. He looked up at them. "They are supposed to assassinate Azlenr and Byka?" He gasped.

Sa'roh nodded. "That's what I have been able to discern so far. Rom'la is still working on more of it."

"Why would they want to assassinate two of their most experienced field commanders?" Andro asked. "After they have successfully captured this colony? That doesn't make any sense Sa'roh."

"Does anything the Kavalians do make sense?" She asked. "They are not exactly out of the box thinkers Andro."

Andro dipped his head back and forth. "True." He stated. "But this?"

"Their tactics are straightforward and basic. We've always known that." Sa'roh told him. "Their clones are not up to the same standards as the High Coven's are. The High Coven clones can think and act for themselves without guidance. The Kavalian clones need constant direction and guidance. They can't really process higher tactics and such. At least not that we are aware of. That's why none of them are officers or members of the Puma Bane Commandos that we are aware of. But according to this... the clones in Azlenr's and Byka's divisions are somewhat different."

"Different how?" Dantio asked.

Sa'roh shook her head. "We couldn't determine what exactly they meant... but it must be something major if Keleru and the Kavalian High Command want these two men dead."

Andro set the pad down. "We are talking about two men the Krypteria says were the most successful commanders during their war with the Coven." He spoke softly. "You don't just assassinate men like that. It's downright stupid."

"Whatever the reasons... we know the Puma Bane troops get their orders directly from Keleru or his senior aides." Dantio spoke. "This is not something they would do on their own. You know how Keleru likes to have a hand in everything. The Puma Bane midaeus are his right hand. His secret police so to speak. These orders are telling the Puma Bane Commander... this Marsin igord... they are telling him to assassinate Azlenr and Byka and as many senior officers as they can once the colony is fully secured. And do it in a way that makes it look like Union soldiers or civilians did it."

Andro lifted his eyes from the pad to Dantio. "That explains why this Marsin was so intent on blaming the civilians for our attacks." Andro said.

Daio nodded. "And now he no longer has that option." He said. "We've taken it away from them."

"They're going to pull out all the stops looking for us." Sa'roh said. "We'll be safe here as long as the generators power the Stealth Field. At least until Sa'sur and the SCIMITAR's Strike Wing gets here."

"Make sure we keep the civilians away from the edges of the field." Andro said. "We don't need one or more of them stumbling outside the field so Kavalian sensors can pick them up from orbit."

Daio nodded. "I already made sure of that." He said.

Andro looked at Sa'roh. "Send a burst to Sa'sur. Have her get someone to touch base with my brother Resumar. He's working closely with Pian'Nruarani and Jalersi. There has to be some reason why they want these men dead."

Sa'roh looked at him. "You can't do it with your P1?" She asked. There were few who knew the true capabilities of the P1 Pads that all of the Leonidas family carried outside of senior Durcunusaan personnel. Sa'roh was among those few because of her duties as a STRIKER pilot assigned to the Royal Family on different occasions when Sadi or Arrarn was not flying.

Andro shook his head. "We can only initiate one long range interstellar communication between pads at a time. I don't want father to try and contact me for some reason and be talking with Res." He replied. "Sadi or Ne'Veha can do it from the SCIMITAR before they get here. Carisia and Lu'ria are using their P1s to maintain prolonged connections with my grandmother on Earth and with Tenna Deia. We are not going to be caught by surprise again."

Dantio looked at him. "Can't they be detected Andro?" He asked.

Andro shook his head. "The P1s operate on Pralor communication waves." He replied. "An extremely high frequency subspace band. With... with the Pralors now gone, there is no activity on this subspace band but Avi determined it is still there. It's essentially sitting there unused. No one else has P1s except my family and a select few others. They are bio-encoded to the individuals and can only be used by them. Even my father and mothers do not understand the full extent of the technology, but we know what it can do. Shiria gave all of us extensive classes beyond what we already knew when she discovered we had them. Wayonn with my father and mothers as well.”

“These pads... they can span this far?” Daio asked.

“Subspace is infinite Daio.” Sa'roh spoke quickly. “There might be minor interference along the frequency band, but you could talk to someone thousands of light years away with Pralor COM units. It's how they communicated with their City Ships.” Sa'roh saw Andro's eyebrows go up a little when she finished and she smiled. “I have been quizzing Ne'Veha and Sadi quite a bit.” She said with a grin.

Andro smiled. “That explains that.” He said. “We use SPARTA'S WRATH as the central point to bounce the signals off. All the pads are coded to it and can reach it from anywhere in the Alpha Quadrant. Once there... the signal is bounced to wherever the destination is. Her COM relays are far more powerful than the individual pads. It's why I can talk to father even from where he is now.”

Daio looked at him. “Where is that?” He asked.

“According to our star maps and charts, they would have just left the Echo Quadrant and gone where we do not have any information.” Andro answered. “Uncharted space.”

Daio shook his head. “Now that's never fearing the unknown if you ask me.” He said.

Andro chuckled. “Yes... my father does tend to go places no one else has gone before doesn't he?” He said. “And he always manages to drag my mothers along with him.”

Dantio smiled now. “They are just as adventurous as he is if you ask me.” He said.

Andro nodded. “Probably.” He said looking at the pad once more. “Are these two moving around the planet with any additional security?” He asked.

Sa'roh shook her head. “Not that we can determine.” She answered. “We can pinpoint what DAGGER they are in because of the level of encryption in the COM signals, but aside from that we can't tell.”

“Begin recording where they go and when.” Andro spoke. “Perhaps they have a pattern we can narrow down and eventually use. Pass this information along to Sa'sur and have her assigned a team to monitor for this when they arrive in system.”

“Use?” Daio asked. “What for?”

Andro shrugged. “For all we know something might present itself.” He stated.

Sa'roh's head turned at the movement and she saw Aleatia coming up the ramp slowly, her eyes focused on Andro. “Andro.” She motioned with her head.

Andro turned and saw her and then looked back. “Get that burst off to Sadi and see if she can discover something before they arrive.” Andro turned fully and moved towards the back of the ramp as Aleatia stopped. Her eyes were moving back and forth taking in the inside of the ship and finally they came back to him as Andro stepped up to her. “Lady Aleatia? Is there something I can do for you?”

Aleatia looked at Andro, once more feeling the immense Etheric power within this young man. She had never felt anything like it, even from the strongest Shaman Masters within the Circle or the Rothryn Science Academy. In some ways it frightened her for Sehri had told her what she had seen Andro do during the battle with excitement and awe. Aleatia could also detect this young man's intense lavender and mint scent all over her daughter, something that surprised her to some extent. The Rothryn did not use their sense of smell as often or as intently as these Lycavorians did. It was not something that they ever felt the need for. However, being among them these last weeks and days, Aleatia found herself delving into her sense of smell more and more almost without thinking. She was beginning to take notice of the scents of others and she found that her husband Dyack's unique mountain musk scent could and did drive her own senses to a heightened state.

“Forgive... forgive me for interrupting.” She stammered.

Andro shook his head quickly. “It is no interruption.” He told her. “The balance of our forces will arrive in system in a few hours and I will insure you and the others are taken to the SCIMITAR when they have established control of the space above us. You will be safe there.”

Aleatia looked into his azure eyes deeply, seeing wisdom and experience that one so young should not have. It was another thing about this young man that frightened her. Sehri had told her about those eyes and what she had seen when he killed the Kavalian with that amazing Etheric spike he extended from his fist. Sehri had said those azure eyes, so beautiful to her; she said they had been almost glowing. “I know this is... this is perhaps not the best time.” She finally spoke. “I would... I would like to speak to you about...”

“Sehri?” Andro finished.

Aleatia nodded. “She is... she is my youngest daughter and...”

Andro reached out and took her arm gently. Aleatia gasped slightly at the warmth of his touch and the jolts of energy it caused to surge through her. She looked at him with wide eyes as she once more felt the dominating power within him even more clearly and focused. “You have nothing to fear from me or our people Lady Aleatia.” Andro said softly.

“We... so much has happened in the last weeks.” Aleatia stammered once more. “We have discovered so much and Dyack and I are...”

Andro nodded. “Why don’t we grab a mug of coffee and talk? We may not get the chance for the next few days and I want you to know...” Andro shook his head. “I will try and explain to you something that even me and my mates don’t really understand. All we know is that we feel it deeply within us and we have accepted that.”

Aleatia met his gaze for a moment and then nodded. “I think... I think I would like that.” She said.

The coffee, she discovered, was a special blend that his mother had made many years ago while she carried him in her womb. It was especially rich and smooth and it tasted wonderful to Aleatia. He told her that the recipe still resided only in his mother’s head and she had made a fortune off of selling it across the Union. They had retrieved two large mugs and then moved to an area that was relatively activity free around several dozen equipment crates near the nose of the KADEN transport. They sat on these crates across from one another, but close enough that Aleatia could see his face easily even in the dim light put off by the stars and the quarter moon. She listened to him at first, as he gave her a very brief history lesson on the Lycavorian people. She had heard some of it from Deni and Lisisa, but he was going even further and Aleatia was soon discovering answers to questions that she had wanted to ask for many weeks.

“So... these... these Pralors as you call them...” Aleatia asked after listening to him talk for nearly an hour. “They are... they are who we call the Ancient Ones? They are the ones who left us the Flatspace technology. And the many ruins scattered across our world that our people have been discovering and investigating for centuries? These belonged to them?”

Andro nodded his head. “I was able to confirm with Shiria that the third moon of Lentani is where they originally placed the Lycavorians taken from our homeworld. The moon, at the time, was not conducive to our alternate forms and that is why those taken from Lycavore had their ability to shift genetically removed. The hope of the Pralors was that you would eventually evolve to the point where you would terra form Lentani and settle there. As it turns out, that is exactly what you did. No matter the paths we have taken to get where we are Lady Aleatia, both our peoples come from the same place. We are all Lycavorians.”

Aleatia sipped her mug of coffee which they had both refilled twice in the last hour alone. Her eyes stayed on Andro as he answered her. “There are numerous signs that our civilization goes back nearly a hundred thousand years.” She stated. “These Ancient Ones... these Pralors, they have been doing this for a long time I take it?”

“Yes they have.” Andro answered with a nod. “Hundreds of thousands of years. I never really asked Wayonn or Shiria exactly how long.”

“You... you don’t sound like you approve of what they were doing Androcles.” Aleatia said. “What their species lived for.”

Andro shrugged his broad shoulders. “I understand why.” He answered her. “I guess my only issue is that they would take my people, our people Lady Aleatia... they would take them and drop them on some unknown planet to repopulate it. I don’t... I don’t like that choice was no where in the equation I guess.” Andro sipped his coffee and looked at her. “But everything we have talked of is not what you really want to know is it? I don’t usually ramble like that.” He said with a grin.

“I have... seen something in my daughter’s eyes.” Aleatia spoke softly. “It is not... it is not something that I have ever seen before. She is so young and...” Aleatia looked at him. “She looks at you with the same love and hunger that I look at Dyack with. Like she has... like she has been with you for decades. Like she has loved no one else. And I see... I see that same look in your eyes when you gaze upon her.”

Andro nodded his head. "Yes you do." He stated.

"And this is how your other mates will look at her when they arrive?" Aleatia asked.

"Yes." He answered.

"How?" Aleatia asked softly. "Before we came here she never knew you. She has always been different because of her Etheric abilities but this..."

"It is not a question I can answer." Andro said. "I can't explain it Lady Aleatia. It is not something I aspired too if that is your question. I have tried to avoid being like him for most of my life. It's foolish really."

"It is not foolish young man." Aleatia told him.

Andro smiled and nodded to her. "My father has six wives and mates and I have always tried to walk outside of my father's shadow. When I met KertaGai... when she first came into my life... I was only eight months old. I have loved her since that day. When we finally came back together when I was grown, it opened the gates within both of us that brought first Carisia and then Ne'Veha and Lu'ria and then Caliria into our lives. I struggled with this fact, the feelings inside me. Sadi did not. She embraced them. And finally she made me accept them as well. They are meant to be with us, with me. KertaGai is my Anome, my soulmate, but I love all of them with equal intensity. As if it has always been there." Andro looked at her. "That now includes Sehri."

"So you believe some sort of higher power has brought you together?" Aleatia asked him.

"I have heard those on our trip here refer to Gods and how they have guided you. Is this what you believe as well?"

Andro met her eyes for a contemplative moment. "There are nearly nine hundred species within the Lycavorian Union Lady Aleatia. Some of them very devout in their beliefs. Their origins and how they came to be. For me personally... I like to think that a higher power does exist and that whatever Gods are out there... they are benevolent and watch over us in ways we can not see. No matter what our species or belief." He replied. "That they guide our actions in some way. Do these Gods have names?" Andro shrugged again. "They did in the time of Ancient Sparta and on Earth. There are some who still believe in those same Gods today and that belief has transcended time to exist even now. As a whole however, I like to think that most believe as I do. When we part ways for instance, and I say go with the gods, it is my intent that whatever higher powers may be out there... that they watch over you. I have faith that they watch over all of us to some extent."

"Some of those on our ship believe your grandfather and others from your bloodline to be Gods in some way." Aleatia said softly.

Andro chuckled softly. "Yes... I know. Something that drives my father and grandmother malda at times." He looked up at her. "I believe my grandfathers watch over us. I believe they see all that we do. I even believe they call us names when we do something incredibly stupid. Something I'm quite sure they have done on several occasions because of my actions, and more because of my father." Aleatia couldn't help but laugh softly at this. "Believe this if you will, but my grandfather appeared to my father before I was born. When my father first discovered who he truly was. I believe it to be because of some Etheric resonance left over within his tomb. But Gods? No. They were as I am. Just men. Wolves. Trying to live our lives in the best way we are taught by our parents. We are more resilient than most and part of our instincts is to protect, regardless of what species a person is. Many have evolved now where they are our equals and we welcome that whole heartedly. The humans on Earth are the perfect example. The Great Fire changed the mentality of many of those who survived. They discovered that the Lycavorian Spartans watched over them through the centuries and now they have pushed themselves to be the best they can be and they have reached a point where they can stand beside us as equals in everything."

Aleatia looked at him for a moment. "You sound... I know Lycavorians... our people..." Aleatia spoke and she was surprised at how easily that word rolled off her lips now. "I know we can imprint our children to a degree when they are born. Give them memories and images... but you Androcles Leonidas. Your eyes and your demeanor, how you speak of things... you speak with a knowledge and wisdom that you should not have at so young an age."

Andro chuckled. "My mothers and my mates would not agree with you." He said. "They think I am somewhat malda." He looked at her. "Crazy."

"It is because of the power I feel within you isn't it?" Aleatia said softly. "The Etheric resonance I feel radiating from you. I am strong with Etheric ability, Dyack and our other daughters as well. Sehri dwarfs us in the resonance and ability she has however... it is why we sent her to the Circle of Shamans and not the Rothryn Science Academy. We did not want her submitted to the sometimes ridiculous restrictions and harsh labels those who are strong with Etheric abilities receive at the Academy. But you... what I feel coming from you... it surpasses anything I have ever felt. And it..."

Andro met her eyes. "It has caused Sehri's to become stronger."

Aleatia nodded quickly. "Just in... just in the few hours we have been among you here her resonance has become so much clearer and focused."

Andro nodded. "I seem to have that affect on all of my mates." He answered. "There is an explanation for that, one that I will gladly share with you, but it would require quite a bit more time to explain than what we have now because it is something that we are just discovering for ourselves thanks to Shiria and Wayonn."

Aleatia tilted her head. "The Pralor you have mentioned before?"

Andro nodded. "Yes."

"We never suspected Wayonn could be one of the Ancient Ones." Aleatia spoke softly. "To think he has been among the Protectorate for so long and we never knew?"

Andro nodded. "He hid himself very well from what I understand."

"Will you... will you allow us to speak with them?" Aleatia asked.

Andro looked at her. "Why would I not?" He asked. "They are just as large a part of your history as they are ours."

"And this information you are going to share with me about you?" Aleatia asked.

"There is something that affects me, my father, my brother and some others." Andro told her. "It is a gene of some sort in our bodies that causes you to feel what you do from us. It is passed down through the bloodlines of those who have certain Pralors as ancestors. A type of Pralor that merged with the Ruling Packs on Lycavore so long ago. Many thousands of years after your ancestors had been removed. Surely you felt it within Denali."

Aleatia nodded. "Yes... a little. But it was no where near as pronounced or powerful as I sense it within you."

Andro nodded. "Because he was hiding it." He said.

"Hiding it?" Aleatia asked.

Andro finished his coffee in two long gulps and set the mug on the crate. "Once it was discovered we carried this gene, Shiria and Wayonn taught all of us a very simple but effective technique to mask this resonance we put off. To make it seem less than it really is."

"But you aren't masking it now." Aleatia said.

Andro shook his head. "Who exactly would I need to mask it from here?" He asked with a smile as he lifted his hands to motion all around them. "The Kavalians, with extremely rare exceptions, can not Mindvoice. Nor do they have Etheric abilities. They would not be able to detect this resonance from me. From any of us. We have learned in the last few months that while we may not always understand or agree with what Shiria and Wayonn tell us, more often than not we still adhere to what they tell us. They have many thousands of years of knowledge and experience that we do not."

"And Sehri feeds off of this?" Aleatia asked.

Andro nodded. "To some extent... yes. All of my mates do. We don't know how exactly. Not yet. But we will someday."

"Will it remain so... so part of her?" Aleatia asked.

"I have opened myself to her Lady Aleatia. Just as I have with my other mates." Andro told her. "That was done more out of instinct than me actually deciding to do that. Her scent..." Andro looked at her almost shyly and Aleatia had to contain the smile that wanted to split the corners of her mouth. "Sehri's scent is... overpoweringly enticing to me." He said finally. "Just as the scents of my other mates are. Combined with the fact she is within her Coming of Age Fever... I can not help but project the aura I do." He looked up at her. "Surely you must feel something similar with your husband and mate. You are Lycavorian no matter the years that have passed."

Aleatia nodded her head as she held up her hand. "Perhaps not on such a scale... we have either forgotten or do not remember so much about our history... but yes." She answered him.

"I do not take this lightly Lady Aleatia." Andro told her. "It is not something I can just will away. The attraction... the desire... it is powerful. Sadi and Ne'Veha and Lu'ria will be just as affected by her scent because of how tightly we are all bound. Carisia because of the Etheric connection that binds us all together. Caliria will be able to feel it as well when we are back together with her.”

Aleatia looked up in to the dark sky. “This... this is not going the way we had hoped.” She stated softly. “What do you mean?” Andro asked.

Aleatia looked at him hoping she did not ruin whatever future there was with what she was going to tell him. He had been so forthcoming with her and she did not want to lie to this young man. “Do not think badly of Dyack or I Androcles... but we had hoped an attraction between you and either Ibani or Osbela, our older daughters, would develop.” She told him in a soft voice. “Ever since seeing what you... what you did to that man... whatever doubts we may have had in the Ancient Prophecy of our people were washed away. We had thought perhaps a marriage between you and one of our older daughters would cement our future forever. Bring our history and bloodlines back together with yours. That is the other thing he wanted to discuss with you if you remember what he told you?”

Andro nodded his head. “I remember. You still practice arranged marriages?” He asked surprised.

Aleatia nodded. “In some instances yes. It is written into our governing foundation.” She answered. “It was done by Dyack’s grandfather as a way to insure that our family remained in power. Someone from our line has ruled the Rothryn people for over three thousand years now, Dyack for the last seven hundred plus years. We are the most forward thinking of the Noble Families and each ruler from our line has been elected by overwhelming majority since Dyack’s grandfather.”

“And the parties agree to this?” Andro asked.

Aleatia nodded. “Yes. My union with Dyack was arranged... but he spent quite a bit of time courting me in the years prior to our actual union. He chased me through the streets of Lentani on many occasion... right along with the other males who were attempting to win my favor as my Coming of Age came closer. He had already won my heart before our fathers agreed to the Union without our knowledge. In our case it suited what we both wanted anyway. Ours was perhaps the smoothest transition of power in our history because we already loved each other before we became mates.”

“What if the parties don’t agree?” Andro asked.

Aleatia shrugged. “It has not happened in over two thousand years. Most of those Noble Families who think as we do school their children about what could happen if the more archaic of the Noble Families ever come to power. I have read some of the very early history of the Lycavorian people on Lycavore. That ship of yours that we were on had an extensive data base. Many of the Noble Rothryn Families cling to a set of ideals and values that have no place in the modern era just as those ideals of your people from long ago do not belong. They are not as many in number as the more modern families but they do have a loyal following. These families would bring back many things we do not want and have not wanted for millennia. Slavery and taking females by force during their Coming of Age. Things that the majority of our people dismissed as barbaric long ago. They put forth a candidate every time there is an election held. Thankfully no one they have put forth has ever come close to winning. So... you see why we still do this.”

Andro met her eyes. “Your daughters Ibani and Osbela are very beautiful Lady Aleatia... but I have no interest in either of them. Their scents... they do nothing for me; as terrible as that may sound. And we do not practice arranged marriages or unions among my people.”

Aleatia nodded. “Yes... I read that as well in your Chronicles of Law. And no, it does not sound terrible.” She spoke gently. “I don’t know how Dyack will react. Sehri is... Sehri has always been his favorite. His baby. Given her status as a member of the Circle of Shamans I don’t know what he would say. He may not approve of what the two of you share.”

“Why?” Andro asked looking at her.

“It is hard to explain and...” Aleatia began.

“He has already promised her hand in a union to someone else hasn’t he?” Andro said evenly. “Another of these Noble families you spoke of?”

Aleatia looked at him. “Why would you...?”

“It is written all over your face milady, and trying to lie to me would be pointless.” Andro told her.

Aleatia shook her head. “Yes... I gathered that on my own. Your insight does you credit young man.” She said.

“Does Sehri know?” Andro asked.

Aleatia nodded her head. "I am relatively sure she does." She answered him. "When the subject came up at a dinner of the families two years ago she became... agitated when Dyack suggested a union between her and the youngest son of this family be looked into." Aleatia looked at him. "Given what she has told me and what I have seen in these last few hours I think I am beginning to see why she reacted as she did."

Andro stood up slowly. "Are you going to ask me not to pursue Sehri Lady Aleatia?" He asked.

Aleatia came to her feet as well now. "Androcles... please believe me when I say this is not something I... we were prepared for or expected. I knew Sehri's Etheric resonance was very strong, it is the reason we kept her abilities secret and sent her to the Circle of Shamans to be trained, but I had no idea this would happen! The connection to you and the others. Events like this are... they do not happen among our people." Aleatia moved closer to him. "She speaks as if she... as if she already knows you. As if you have been together for many years. She is already beginning to speak your... our language with so much more fluency and ease. And I can no longer come close to penetrating the shields she now has up around her mind."

"In a sense... in a sense we have Lady Aleatia." Andro said softly. "It is no different than what I and my mates feel for her. What we feel for each other. Including Sehri now. Please do not ask me not to pursue her. My blood calls for her. Sadi and Ne'Veha and Lu'ria's blood calls for her. Her resonance within Mindvoice calls for Carisia. And she calls for us just as strongly."

Aleatia nodded. "Yes... yes she does. Even I can sense that now."

"I will not dismiss that." Andro told her. "I can not! It is part of me."

Aleatia looked at him for a long moment. She could hear the passion in his voice for her daughter. The want and the desire. It was stronger than anything she had ever felt before and Aleatia could not help but be so very happy for her youngest child that such a man would profess himself in such a way to her. She had seen what this young man could do first hand and she had no doubts he would love and cherish Sehri with an intensity that would steal her breath away. He would also defend and protect her savagely if the need arose. Aleatia stepped closer and rested her hand on his arm.

"Sehri has always been different from her sisters Androcles." Aleatia said. "Because of this she has always been lonely and unhappy. I have seen a brightness in her eyes that I have never seen before and it is because she has discovered you. I can not in my heart attempt to take that away from her. I will not."

"Our people's code of honor and our law within the Union is such that a male Lycavorian will never take a female before her birthing day. Only after that day, during the last week of her fever, if she so desires it as well." Andro said. "It is forbidden. It is a hateful and heinous crime among my people and the punishment for this is very harsh. I understand the Rothryn honor something similar?"

Aleatia nodded. "Truly the only difference is that if it is an arranged union the female's fever needs to be fully gone."

"So our people's have something else in common." Andro told her. "Perhaps we are not so different than you might think."

Aleatia met his eyes. "I have long believed we are descended somehow from Lycavorians Androcles. How could I not when the similarities between my people and those within the Protectorate are too numerous to count. I am discovering it as well with the Lycavorians of the Union. In what I have seen and what I have read. I can't deny it."

"We have adjusted the age factors for the Coming of Age fever within the Union, but no man with any shred of honor would claim a female against her will and it is punishable by harsh penalties if it is discovered as I said." Andro told her. "I will use these two days to discover Sehri, all of us will. As much as I am able given what is going on around us. And she will discover us if that is her wish. The day she reaches twenty years of life, which is what Rothryn law states a female must be if I am not mistaken...?" Aleatia nodded her head. "When she reaches twenty years old Lady Aleatia... if it is still Sehri's wish... and I hope it will be; I will put my nose to the ground as my father says, and I will discover her apple and walnut scent until it fills my head and my blood just as intensely as my other mates. I will make her mine... and I will curb the burning of her blood for me if that is also what she desires. Sadi, Ne'Veha, Lu'ria, Carisia and even Caliria will do the same. That is what we all crave. Including Sehri."

"I know." Aleatia said softly. "She told me as much in very strident terms. She has no fear of that day Androcles."

“I do not know how to explain this to you.” Andro said. “I told you that. Only that it is. I struggled with it for many months as I said. Until I came to the conclusion, with a little help from a board Sadi wielded unto my head, that fate and destiny always gets the last laugh and to just conduct myself by what my instincts tell me and what feels right.”

“And this is what you feel when you look at my daughter?” Aleatia asked.

“When I look at her... when I inhale her scent... I see part of myself. A part that is meant to complete all of us as a whole.” Andro told her. “It sounds crazy I know... but you can speak with Sadi when she arrives. Or Ne'Veha. All of them if you wish. They will tell you the same thing and you will see it in their eyes as well. Sehri belongs to us and we to her and it is meant to be by some higher power. That is what I feel Lady Aleatia. That is what burns within me. I failed to follow what my instincts told me once... it almost cost me Caliria and I need to make amends for that with her. Mark my words... I will not make that mistake again.”

Aleatia could barely keep the tears from her eyes at the professions of this young man who she had known for less than a day. A young man who she knew without question would worship the very ground her daughter walked upon. “You... you are a very serious young man you know.” She said finally. “It can be very... frightening.”

Andro's head dropped and he shook it slowly. “Forgive me.” He said with a smile. “My mothers and sisters have been telling me that for years.” He told her. “They even had me go to classes once to try and dispel this atmosphere I seem to project.” He said looking up to meet her eyes again. “I take it those classes didn't work?”

Aleatia couldn't help but laugh at the expression on his face now and she found herself drawing closer to him and slipping her hand around his arm. “No... I'm afraid they did not.” She stated with some humor. “You... you honor my daughter and me with your words today Androcles Leonidas. More so than any young Rothryn male ever has. Do we... do we have time before your people arrive to talk more?”

Androcles reached down and picked up their mugs from the crates. “We can make time right now as long as nothing exciting happens.” He said.

“Like these Kavalians attacking?” Aleatia asked.

“That would not be exciting.” Andro told her as they began to walk. “That would be very scary.”

Aleatia smiled as she moved with him. Perhaps there was more to this young man than met the eye she thought to herself.

ARC ROYAL STRIKE TEAM
GROUNDSIDE
PLANET SIXTEEN BRAVO
FEBRUARY 6TH, 0620 EST

Danny held up his hand bringing their small column to a halt fifty meters from the north facility entrance. The Pralor Science Facility stretched high up into the air, towering over the tall trees that surrounded it. The facility was positioned at the end of a large valley with an enormous lake taking up the other end and stretching almost all the way into the next valley. The green mountains on two sides reached high into the thin air with just a wisp of clouds above them. They had landed two clicks away and followed the edge of the lake as they approached the north entrance easily able to see the structure in the distance even through the tall trees. He looked at Martin as he settled next to him on one knee.

“This is a portable facility fervon?” Danny asked him with some awe in his voice. “I don't suppose our Pralor ancestors ever considered building something of normal size?”

Martin chuckled. “I don't think they believed in normal sized anything.” He spoke as Kenny dropped next to him. Martin reached up and pounded Kenny on the shoulder. “Go Kenny!” He spoke.

Kenny nodded and touched Pablo beside him and they sprinted forward to where they could see the massive entrance of the facility. It looked as if you could drive a tank through the main door as Kenny and Pablo moved to the control panel on the side.

Julie and Cody moved up to where they knelt. “You can tell where they had vehicles.” Julie spoke. “The terrain is tore up some leading right up to the door.”

Martin nodded and looked at her. “Anything?” He asked.

Julie shook her head. “Aside from the plant life no.” She answered. “No life signs of any kind. You or Danny smell anything unusual?”

“No.” Martin answered as he looked around. “That’s kind of odd don’t you think?” He said. “It seems like this planet is perfect for colonization.”

Danny nodded. “Yeah... it looks perfect. Until it jumps up to bite you in the ass. With our luck the fucking trees will spring to life when we least expect it and try to attack us.”

“Carians Simpson...” Julie exclaimed with a smile. “When did you become such a baby?”

“I don’t like surprises.” Danny said.

Martin lifted his A4 in one hand and slapped Danny’s arm. “Move up.” He said motioning to where Cody and Colin waited. They nodded and sprinted forward to take up covering positions of Kenny and Pablo. Martin, Danny and Julie covered the distance quickly coming up in front of the door. Martin tapped his jaw. None of them were wearing the standard helmet that completed the ArmorPly set to better facilitate seeing each other’s expressions. “We are about to breach the door Saaurano.”

“We are watching Beloved.” Aricia’s voice answered in his implant.

“Red... you and Melda Min get ready to turn tail and run if anything comes charging out at us.” Martin spoke.

“Understood.” Anja’s voice echoed.

Martin looked at Kenny who nodded. He brought his A4 up and nodded his head as the others did the same. Kenny touched the panel and a low grating sound echoed around them as the massive doors began to part. Kenny and Pablo sprinted back to stand beside Julie as the darkness inside was revealed. They bright sun exposed the nose of some sort of vehicle first. A vehicle with large balloon tires and deep tread that appeared to be armored in some way and had several dome like devices protruding from its exterior.

Martin looked up into the sky. Aurith... nothing is running out the entrance by you is it? He asked.

Dnom and I see nothing Martin. For'mya’s bonded sister answered immediately. That is good yes?

Martin smiled. Aurith was returning to her old self now that For'mya was back with them. There had been a time when he worried that she would never be the same again if they had been unable to rescue For'mya. Martin shook those thoughts from his mind and watched as the doors completed opening with a resounding echo and the interior of the facility was exposed for them. They could see low power light globes still shimmering in the rear of what could only be a garage of some sort. They could make out the silhouette of two other vehicles further back and ramps moving up on either side of the interior.

“Ok... we’re moving in.” Martin said as he got to his feet. “Red Six. Red Six. Disperse!”

He and his team burst into a sprint and were swallowed up by the shadows inside the facility. Their wolf and vampire eyes adjusted quickly to the dim interior and A4s were sweeping back and forth ready to trigger. Danny broke in one direction with Cody and Colin, Martin in the other with Julie and Kenny while Pablo remained by the door as covering fire. The garage appeared to be nearly two hundred meters long and equally as wide, but after they passed the three vehicles it opened up quite a bit to reveal neatly stacked crates in different areas and nothing else. Martin moved up the ramp on one side while Danny led them up on the opposite side until they met near the rear of the garage by another set of double doors.

“Martin?” Wayonn’s voice broke into his implant.

“Go.” Martin hissed.

“If it is a standard facility... then by the interior doors there will be a panel.” Wayonn told him. “All of our facilities were powered by Etheric resonance until the main reactor core was brought online. Touch the panel and power and interior lighting should activate inside where you are.”

“It’s some sort of garage Wayonn.” Martin spoke as his eyes moved along the wall trying to find the panel he spoke of.

“Does it have rectangular vehicles with large tires?” Wayonn asked.

“Yeah. Three of them.” Danny answered.

“Then it is a standard Portable Core Seeding Science facility.” Wayonn answered.

“Come again?” Julie cut in.

“A Science Facility deployed to a planet that has been chosen for seed life.” Wayonn told them.

“Got it.” Martin spoke as he placed his hand against the wall in an indentation that was eerily in the shape of a hand. The internal lights began to wink on all over the interior fully illuminating the strange vehicles and hundreds of equipment crates scattered all over.

Julie looked around and then up, her eyes growing wide as the ceiling extended perhaps four stories up. “Wow!” She gasped.

“Ok... this changes things.” Martin spoke reaching up to touch his jaw.

Danny nodded. “It sure does. Nice defensible position.”

“All teams move to our location! On the double!” Martin snapped. “Cody... you and Colin stand by here at the door. Anything comes out... shoot first ask questions later.”

“Got it skipper.” Cody said.

Martin began moving back down the ramp with Danny and Julie. “What are you thinking Skipper?” Danny asked.

“Wayonn said it was a seeding facility.” Martin said. “That’s why there is no life. They were going to bring new life here to settle the planet.”

Danny looked at him as they walked. “I thought Wayonn said the Pralors dismissed this quadrant of space.”

Martin nodded. “He did.”

“So why is this here? And why does it have power if the Pralors have been extinct for millennia?” Julie asked.

“Let’s find out.” Martin said as Aricia led her team into the garage at a casual jog, the Durcunusaan breaking off immediately to set up defensive positions.

“Start pulling these crates around and make a defensive wall!” Martin barked. “North and south near the interior door. And make sure there is nothing inside them that go boom!”

Aricia moved up to him with a smile at his words as Wayonn and Helen entered with the Master Chief right behind them. Isabella and Cirith, Fedor between them were looking around at the cavernous interior as they came up to the group. Martin grabbed Fedor’s shoulder and grinned at him. “Excited yet?” He asked.

Fedor smiled at his Medwan. “My toes are fidgeting father.” He answered.

Isabella nudged him in the side. “Just keep your toes in your boots for the moment aur keto.” She stated with a motherly smile. “It would not look good to see you running with only one boot on.” (my son)

Fedor grinned. “I will medwaw.” He said.

Martin looked at Wayonn as he came up to them with Helen. He had pulled out a larger version of the P1, almost the size of a 21st century Notepad computer and was quickly typing on it. “Wayonn?” He asked.

“Shiria sent me this before we departed. It is a Pralor P9 computer pad very similar to the P1s you all carry. SPARTA’S WRATH had two dozen of them on board and she was going to see that they were distributed to those who could use them best.” Wayonn said beginning to work on the notepad like computer. “All Pralor PSFs were marked with a number Martin.” Wayonn spoke. “That is how we kept track of them and their locations. The number should be stamped along the interior of the walls somewhere in this vehicle bay.”

Martin looked at Julie. “Jules?”

“On it.” She said before she moved away.

“You said this was a Core Seeding facility?” Martin said as he moved to one of the nearby crates and sat down.

Wayonn nodded. “That is what the vehicles were for.” He stated holding out the P9 to him. Martin took it as he listened to Wayonn speak. “They would be sent out across the planet to take core samples from different locations to insure the stability of the planet for future life. It’s strange though... these facilities were always dropped in groups of six or more to cover the entire planet. This is the only one we detected. Why is it here and why does it still have power? All Seeding operations were suspended when the second war with the Scourge began according to Shiria.”

Martin gave the P9 back to him and tapped his jaw. “Kinsoaurgai?”

“We are monitoring Martin.” For’mya’s voice responded immediately.

“You and Endy have enough room to land in front of the door?” Martin asked.

“With plenty to spare Skipper.” Endith answered.

“Ok... do a slow three sixty around the facility and have Tina and Eirene give me an updated battery of scans. Then land with your tail facing the door.” Martin ordered. “Keep the batteries charged in case you have to make a quick exit For'mya.”

“Understood. We'll see you in twenty-three minutes.” For'mya answered.

Martin stood back up as Anja, Dysea and Muton's group entered the garage. His head turned when Julie shouted from across the garage. “Skipper! Found it! Zero One Five!”

Martin turned back to Wayonn. “Wayonn?”

“Hold on.” He said as he typed. “That... that can't be right.” He said finally.

“What is it Wayonn?” Helen asked.

Wayonn looked up at Martin with a puzzled gaze. “According to the databases from SPARTA'S WRATH Facility Zero One Five was destroyed nearly fourteen thousand years ago by the Scourge.”

Danny looked around. “Looks in pretty good shape for being destroyed.” He said.

Wayonn looked at Martin. “We need to get to the main control room for the facility Martin.” He said. “It's the only way to be sure.”

“Yeah... this is where everything in the movies always goes to shit.” Martin spoke with a shake of his head causing most of them to laugh softly. “Ok... stick with our plan. Red... you, Miseo and Muton move to the medical wing. Master Chief you are with me, Dysea and Julie. We're going to take Wayonn and Helen to the control room. Danny... take the rest of the team to the Power Core and see if you can get full power back. Take a couple of the engineers we brought down from ARC ROYAL.”

“I will remain here and establish the defensive perimeter and emergency evacuation point.” Isabella spoke.

“I will take a team of three Durcunusaan and move to the western entrance with Aurith.” Cirith spoke now. “Being inside this facility makes my skin crawl.”

Aricia leaned close to her with a smile. “We'll have to explore that some time in the future Cirith. I can make your skin crawl as well. Just in a good way.” She spoke seductively to her lover and fellow Queen.

Cirith grinned back at her and flashed her dark eyes as she licked her full lips. “That sounds very promising.” She said.

“Slut!” Anja hissed playfully at Aricia.

“I hope that promise extends to all of us?” Isabella said with a smile.

“Indeed.” Dysea chimed in.

Helen looked at Wayonn's disbelieving expression and shrugged with smile. In the last few weeks she had watched Martin Leonidas's Queens grow closer than they ever had before. While their love for each other was famous across the Union, Helen had seen their friendship blossom and become an unbreakable bond over the last weeks, even more so than it already was. Almost losing For'mya and Dysea both, the events with Anja and having Cirith join them had changed all of them. On the ship they were unashamed to show the legendary affection they had for each other and Martin no matter where they were or who was watching. Even Cirith, the newest of Martin's beloved Queens, even she fell so easily into her role now and she relished in it. Each of them knew what they were good at and they acted without instruction from their beloved husband and mate. It was a trait all of them shared.

While Aricia was drawn more to For'mya and Anja in a physical way, she and Dysea were the better fighters and they didn't hesitate at taking this role. While Isabella was drawn more to Dysea and Cirith physically, she was a masterful fighter in her own right and she knew her skills were best used as a reinforcing barrier that could respond to any situation. Isabella Leonidas could and would be totally ruthless and unconcerned about who she killed or what she destroyed in order to reach Martin or one of her fellow Queens if they were in trouble. As was her darker pureblood vampire nature. Cirith's combined vampire and wolf skills were best used as a scouting force and she knew it. She would take the fastest and strongest Durcunusaan with her so they could cover more ground. Anja was their healer; the one all of them would go to in order to sooth their aches and injuries and she was the one they all turned to in order to laugh. For'mya Leonidas was the pilot and most everyone would agree, the unofficial leader of their family behind Martin Helen knew. Her calm leadership and patience served them all better if she was overseeing all of them and directing them if something happened. And they all knew For'mya would never leave any of them without first sacrificing her own life.

Martin shook his head with a smile. “Ok... Aricia will take Fedor and the rest of the facility team and head for the main living quarters.”

Wayonn looked around. “Since there still seems to be some power coming from the core the facilities’ bio-mechanical nature and passive sensors will undoubtedly pick up the Etheric resonance from each of you and activate emergency lighting in the areas you enter. Once Daniel is able to restore the core to full power you will find panels along the walls. Touch them and full lighting should be restored.”

“Move carefully people. And no wandering off like they do in the movies ok. That always leads to something bad happening and people dying. I would prefer not to have to deal with that today.” Martin ordered.

“Maybe we shouldn’t have had really steamy sex last night then Lover!” Anja declared with a twinkle in her jade green eyes. “There’s always really steamy sex before the bad parts in the movies! Just like we had last night!”

“Medwaw!” Fedor exclaimed. “Too much information! Way too much!”

“Indeed.” Wayonn echoed while shaking his head.

Martin smiled brightly and winked at Anja as everyone laughed now and began to ready themselves. “Let’s move!” He barked.

Aricia cut to the left as she passed through the large doorway, her A4 leading her entry and her wolf eyes sweeping the interior of the room. She felt Fedor do the same as he went right and they were quickly followed by three Durcunusaan. As they entered the area, dim lights began to wink on revealing what appeared to be some sort of lounge area. It was massive to say the least, stretching out some hundred yards in front of them and nearly twice that in width. As the emergency lights began to come on all down the length of the room they could see two other entrances that were closed. Along one wall were a row of what appeared to be windows covered with an exterior portion of armor. Aricia pointed to two more Durcunusaan who entered and then to the other doors. They nodded and moved off at a brisk jog.

Fedor held his P1 alongside his A4 and was watching the small screen as the others began to move in. “Nothing medwaw.” He spoke looking at Aricia. “The same power readings but no signs of life.”

Aricia nodded her head as she turned back to look at him. Her long, lustrous black hair was tied in a single long braid and secured by crimson red satin cords. All of them had begun using the same type of ties when securing their hair for riding or other types of operations. The Durcunusaan had also begun using these ties as a way to identify their Queens in the midst of confusion as well.

“We will use this room as a central location to branch out into the living quarters and general areas.” Aricia said.

Fedor’s head turned as the sweet kiwi scent filtered to him and Iama moved past him into the large room with half a dozen other technicians and engineers. Her beautiful eyes fell on him for a moment and then turned away as she continued forward. Fedor drew in a deep breath and tried to calm his raging emotions as her scent filtered through him. It was a reaction Aricia had seen before in many males of her kind and she quickly stepped close to him.

[Fedor?] She reached out to him. It was truly a wonder how all of them viewed their children. It did not matter who had given birth to them, Aricia and her fellow Queens felt just as much love and devotion to each child as the next. There had never been a time when any of them had disagreed about how to raise their children and while each of them had a softer spot for those they had given birth to, their love for all of Martin’s children knew no bounds.

Fedor opened his dark brown eyes and looked at her. [I am fine medwaw.] He said softly. [Medwan taught me how to push it to the side. He said it will pass in time.]

[Do you want it to pass keto?] Aricia asked.

[I will never be anything to her medwaw.] He spoke softly. [She does not look at me as anything more than another clone. She can not accept that I am different from them. She treats me like I am a child and I am stupid.]

[You are neither Fedor.] Aricia told him. [You know this.]

Fedor nodded. [I know. I just wish she would see that.] He sighed heavily. [Father says that... he says that it will pass and I know there are many thousands of beautiful women out there somewhere.]

Aricia nodded. [Yes there are.] She told him. [You will need to beat them off when we finally return home I'm thinking.] She finished with a smile.

[Seeing her... seeing her give herself to others so readily makes it easier I suppose.] Fedor said.

Aricia detected the heavy hint of sadness when he said that. [You saw...]

Fedor nodded. [This morning. I was passing her quarters when one of the Durcunusaan was leaving. She did not see me.]

[Do not judge her too harshly aur keto.] Aricia said gently. [Her life has not been an easy one and she has hardened herself to real emotion I think. She is unable to look beyond the surface of a person because of what she has endured. Some things are just not meant to be my son, but if the gods wish it then it will happen no matter what.]

Fedor met her eyes. [I know.] He forced a smile. [I will be fine.] He said.

Aricia reached out and squeezed his arm. "Let's get back to business. This will keep your mind occupied."

Fedor nodded. "Yes it will." He responded.

Aricia turned and faced the group of Durcunusaan and technicians that had come down from the ARC ROYAL. "According to the layout of the base, living quarters will be through the door here." She motioned to the side. "Work areas and the mess lounge through the far end. You all know what we need and this is just as important as those collecting information from other areas. All data pads you find, any prudent information on this base itself as well. Or how it came to be here. Men and women will speak more in their personal logs than in their duty logs. I will lead the team to the living quarters, Fedor to the mess lounge and work areas. Enomotarch..." She spoke looking at the young Durcunusaan. "Remain here with your team and secure this location."

The man nodded. "Understood my Queen."

"Do not become anxious if the power returns and continue with your search." Aricia spoke. "We will meet back here in one hour regardless. Stay in constant radio communication as well. And no one wander off." She looked at Fedor. "Let's do it."

"Impressive." Martin spoke as he pulled his hand away from the palm shaped indent on the right side of the door and Helen did the same from the left and they stepped through the double doors as they slid open. His eyes took in the immense size of the circular control room. There were silent computer stations and accompanying screens and monitors taking up the entire circular center of the room. The circular work stations wrapped around the tall, twelve foot high center mast. Along the outer wall of the room were dozens more stations as well as small alcoves that held one or two chairs in each.

Wayonn moved in behind him. "I've never seen security so tight on a PSS." He spoke as he moved past them into the main portion of the room.

"How so?" Martin asked.

Wayonn glanced over his shoulder. "The Control Center Doors were encoded so that only a Paladin and their Mage could open them. And the contact needed to be made simultaneously."

"You could not have opened it Wayonn?" Helen asked.

Wayonn shook his head as he turned back to the room. "Only a Pair." He replied. "The internal sensors on the door pads were linked to detect the corresponding Etheric resonance that radiates from a Paladin and Mage pair. Since you and Helen are linked by your resonance, it canceled out the security measures."

"And that's odd how?" Martin asked.

Wayonn turned back to look at him. "It tells me that whatever is on this station was either deemed extremely important or extremely deadly. As a rule we never used such high security measures because Paladins and their Mage counterparts were so few in number and often times they conducted missions apart from each other."

“You know... that statement didn’t give me a whole lot of warm fuzzy feelings.” Martin said. “It seems like dangerous or deadly to Pralors means large explosions and big body counts to us little guys.”

“I concur.” Dysea echoed his statement as her emerald eyes swept around the control room.

“You asked me to hold nothing back from you going forward.” Wayonn spoke. “I am not holding anything back.”

Martin tilted his head slightly and brought his fingers up so they were millimeters apart. “Ok... maybe you can hold back just a tiny bit. Like that part about deadly. I didn’t need to hear that. Not today. I’m in a pretty good mood and deadly would pretty much ruin that.”

“Do you take anything serious Martin Leonidas?” Wayonn asked him.

Martin shook his head. “Serious is no fun and more often than not it gives me a case of the red ass.” He answered as Helen came up beside him.

“Red ass?” Wayonn asked.

Helen shook her head. “You don’t want to know.” She said slapping Martin’s arm as she moved further into the room next to Wayonn.

“All these stations were manned Val’istar?” Dysea asked as Wayonn turned and moved past her to a computer station in the center circle.

Wayonn nodded to her after a last glance at Martin and a shake of his head. “You must remember Dysea... we monitored everything about a planet when we chose it for seeding. Right down to the molecular structure of the most miniscule life and how amino acids affected the most rudimentary elements and even future life. The different science fields are color coded for ease of new personnel to the bases. Green for vegetation. Gray for planetary crust and rock formation. Blue for air quality. Amber for Communications and Red is for station defense.”

Martin looked at him. “Station defense?” He asked.

Wayonn nodded. “All of the stations had a powerful shield like the one on SPARTA’S WRATH as well as base weapons platform.” He answered. “We did not send them to hundreds of different planets unable to fully defend themselves Martin my boy.”

“Of course you didn’t.” Martin said rolling his eyes.

Helen was crossing back in front of him as he did this and she shook her head with a smile and slapped his abdomen quickly as Dysea chuckled softly. Martin shook his head and tapped his jaw.

“Danny... you copy?” He asked.

“Go!”

“How you making out?” Martin asked.

“Just getting to the engineering section now.” Danny answered. “Stand by.”

Martin looked at Julie. “Jules... see if you can make sense of the COM gear and when the big lug gets power back, establish a subspace link with the ARC ROYAL. Melda Min you and the Master Chief make sure all these side rooms are empty... I don’t want any surprises popping out of the walls.”

Tony hefted his large assault rifle and nodded with a grin. “On it Skipper. Just like old times hey Dy?”

Dysea smiled and leaned up to plant a kiss on Martin’s cheek. “Indeed it is Anthony.” She said before turning and readying her A4 and moving towards the first set of double doors with Tony in step just to her right.

Martin moved up next to Wayonn as he was working on his P9, Helen on his opposite side watching intently. “Wayonn?”

“I will be able to link directly into the station’s network if Daniel is able to activate the core.” Wayonn answered looking at him. “At the moment... what I am seeing is... odd.”

“Odd how?” Martin asked.

“According to the data base on SPARTA’S WRATH, which is downloaded to this P9, station Zero One Five was destroyed by the Scourge like I said.” Wayonn said. “But so far all of the equipment I have seen is stenciled Zero One Five. Even the records I have been able to pull up.”

“A mistake?” Martin asked.

Wayonn shook his head quickly. “We were meticulous in the records we kept Martin.” He answered. “And the records I have been scanning only go back three thousand four hundred and six years.”

“You’re scanning them grandfather?” Helen asked.

Wayonn shook his head quickly. “The order in which they were made... not the actual content. I can’t access them until full power is restored. We...”

“Ok!” Danny’s voice barked in their implants. “How’s this?”

The humming began almost immediately and then all across the control center computer stations began to wink on and come to life. Lights activated immediately and caused all of them to wince as their eyes adjusted quickly. Wayonn turned back to his P9 and smiled. “Excellent!” He exclaimed. “The main core is now online.” He tapped his jaw. “Daniel! Your people are at the main core controls yes?”

“Affirmative.” Danny answered.

“Have the engineers bring the core to seventy percent and hold.” Wayonn spoke. “That is more than enough to power the station and all the terminals and lights.”

“Seventy percent. Got it.” Danny answered. “Marty... I’m going to leave the tech heads here and do a sweep of the corridors around this section.”

Martin nodded his head. “Understood fervon.” Helen looked at him and smiled to herself at how easily that word came to him when it concerned Daniel. “All teams sound off if power is not returning to your sections. Otherwise continue with the mission as planned.” Martin waited a second and when no one answered he looked at Wayonn. “Nice. You guys built these stations good.” He said.

Wayonn chuckled and nodded. “They are your people too my boy. Don’t forget that.” He said turning back to his P9. “Julie... you should have sufficient power to establish a link with the ARC ROYAL from your station.”

“Creating the link now!” Julie answered from across the center.

Wayonn nodded. “I’m activating the main Control Center grid.” He touched his P9 and the two screens just above his head activated instantly and massive amounts of data began to scroll across the large four by four monitors. In a few seconds the data in the center of the monitors slowed to a crawl and moved to the sides of the screen and an image of the station came up in the center. A small section of the lower station on the monitor was flashing red in a steady manner. “Interesting.” Wayonn spoke as he adjusted the controls.

“What’s interesting?” Martin asked.

“The station’s sensors are detecting a breach of the exterior wall on the southern side.” He answered. “It is an underground entrance. Similar to the vehicle entrance where we entered.” He touched the large monitor. “It appears as if one of the Science vehicles crashed into the exterior containment wall making a small breach to the interior.”

“How small?” Martin asked.

“Hard to say.” Wayonn spoke adjusting his controls. “The internal security cams in that interior corridor are no longer functioning. The impact must have knocked them out.”

“Can we reach it from inside?” Martin asked.

Wayonn nodded. “Yes... it’s not far from where Daniel and his team are.”

Martin touched his jaw. “Danny... Wayonn is sending the schematics of this station to your P1. There’s a breach of some sort in a garage like the one we entered, but it’s underground. Check it out and report back.”

“On it.” Danny answered.

Wayonn continued to tap the control console with practiced ease. “The integrity of the station is otherwise intact Martin.” He spoke. “Power is holding at seventy percent in all areas.”

“So they abandoned the station because of an accident?” Martin asked.

Wayonn looked at him. “I haven’t begun checking the logs yet but this accident as you say, it could have happened when the planet was still uninhabitable.” Wayonn said. “Perhaps they evacuated for safety reasons.”

Martin tilted his head slightly. “Wayonn?”

“Martin is right grandfather.” Helen said. “Given the level of your technology, would such an event cause them to evacuate the entire station?”

Wayonn shook his head. “Unlikely.” He stated. “Standard procedure would be to isolate the breach and then repair it.”

Martin nodded. “Yeah. I don’t mean to be a big kink in the wheel here Wayonn... but we are inside a station that is listed as destroyed, in a sector of space you yourself have stated the Pralors ignored because there wasn’t anything to be gained. I’m sure you understand why the hairs on the back of my neck are standing up right about now?”

Wayonn nodded. "Indeed I do. Mine are doing the exact same thing." He agreed. "Give me a few minutes and I will discover what is going on Martin."

Martin nodded. "That would be a good thing." He said. "This place is starting to give me the creeps."

"...set up the triage area here." Anja stated motioning to the six beds that were occupying the large section of the Medical Bay. "Muton... see if you can get some of the equipment up and running and get me a status on what is working and what isn't. Most of it looks similar to what we have on the ARC ROYAL."

Muton nodded his head and moved to one of the large medical computers, dropping his bulky medical bag on the chair. Anja dropped her own bag on one of the beds as her team of two medics and half a dozen engineers and techs began to spread out around the medical center and examine the equipment. The six member Durcunusaan team took up positions in pairs by either entrance and were maintaining security while Miseo and a Durcunusaan troop were the third pair and were sweeping the adjoining corridors quickly and efficiently. Muton had spent the last weeks working either in the medical bay of the ARC ROYAL with Anja and Duewa or instituting similar procedures aboard his own ship. The advanced medical equipment on the ARC ROYAL had rapidly become second nature to him and he used that new knowledge now as his eyes scanned the computers in front of him. He felt Anja come up beside him.

"Muton?" She asked.

"Some things I recognize and some I don't. You said that much of how the ARC ROYAL was built was based on the designs of City Ship 41 yes? Especially parts of the Medical Bay." He said.

Anja nodded. "Yes."

Muton nodded. "It is configured somewhat differently but essentially it is all the same." He told her. "I would imagine that the practical use is the same."

Anja let her eyes scan the array of equipment and she nodded. She reached across to wave her fingers in front of several screens. "Vital sensors on each of the beds. Looks like data storage here."

Muton nodded his head quickly. "And this appears to be some sort of automatic treatment synthesis program built into the actual beds." He spoke touching the screen. "Incredible."

Anja nodded. "Hadarian doctors and Union engineers have been trying to establish this as a working prototype." She said with bright eyes. "This is incredible!"

"Anja these data bases could hold countless wonders." Muton spoke. "Cures. Treatments. Things that would benefit so many!"

Anja nodded. "Yes they could. I'll see about getting some of the data cores we brought down so we can download them. Right now... let's stick to our plan and bring up the most recent medical files and uploading them to Duewa."

Muton nodded his head and began to work at the station as Anja turned to look around as she tapped her jaw. "Duewa... are you monitoring?"

"I am standing by Anja." Duewa's voice answered from the station she sat at on the ARC ROYAL.

"Muton is going to establish a upload link and we'll start sending everything we can." Anja said. "It's... it's amazing down here Duewa. The equipment alone is far more advanced than ours, but still relatively easy to use."

"Perhaps these Pralors made it in such a way Anja. So that others could use the apparatus without formal training." Duewa answered. "I wish I was there with you!"

Anja smiled at the excitement in her voice. "Don't worry... everything is being recorded and we can walk through it together when I get back."

"I will hold you to that." Duewa said. "Wait... getting the upload now from Muton. Yes... it's coming in."

"File as much of it as you can." Anja spoke. "The rest we'll transfer to the portable data cores we brought."

"Understood." Duewa said.

"I'll check back in an hour or so." Anja said. Anja turned to speak to Muton when her implant cackled to life.

“Medwaw Anja.” Miseo’s voice filled her ear. He had started to call all of them medwaw and then their name over the last weeks and it was a very touching way for Miseo to show his affection and respect for Eirene’s mothers. Anja and the others thought it was exceptionally sweet.

“Go Miseo.” Anja said.

“Ah... you might want to come to my location.” Miseo said.

“What’s wrong?” Anja asked as her senses began to come to full alert.

“You should probably see this.” Miseo answered.

Anja looked at Muton. “Stay here and keep the link with Duewa open.” She ordered. She turned to the two Durcunusaan near the entrance they had come in. “You two with me.” She ordered as she shifted her A4 around her body and into her hands.

The Durcunusaan didn’t hesitate and led Anja out of the Medical Bay down the corridor.

Danny looked at the ass end of the huge vehicle, the nose of the Science rover rammed at an angle into the exterior wall, buckling the bulkhead enough that there was now a large gap in the seam perhaps two feet across and reaching from the floor to just above the seven foot high vehicle. Danny motioned to Kenny and Pablo and they moved around the other side as he and Colin closed the distance.

Danny reached up and tapped his jaw. “Marty... we’re here. Looks like someone drove this thing into the bulkhead on purpose. There’s a breach roughly two feet across that extends from the floor up about seven feet.”

“The doors you came through?” Martin asked.

“Sealed from the outside.” Danny answered. “Like they were trying to keep something out.” Danny said.

“Driver’s door is open.” Kenny’s voice echoed. “Whoever was driving... they left in a real big hurry Skipper”

Danny looked at Colin and gave a quick jerk with his head. Colin nodded and began climbing up onto the rover like a cat. Once on top he paused and unlimbered his A4 once more and his eyes spotted something near the front.

“I got a body!” Colin announced as he moved forward in a rush. “Well... bones anyway.” He spoke as he moved up next to the set of remains and squatted down.

“Colin?” Martin’s voice asked.

“Bones Skipper. Look pretty old too. They’re on top of the rover. The driver maybe?” Colin said poking at the remains with the barrel of his A4.

“On top?” Martin asked.

“Yeah. Maybe he climbed up here.” Colin spoke.

“Or maybe something chased him up there.” Kenny echoed as his eyes swept the area they were in.

“Or maybe he is the one they wanted to run down.” Danny spoke now. “You see any leg bones Colin?” Danny asked as he moved closer and peered under the front of the rover.

“Negative.” Colin answered.

Danny’s eyes narrowed when he saw the splintered remains of leg bones sticking out of the opening in the bulkhead. “Yeah... because they are underneath the rover.” He hissed. “Shit Marty. This guy was the one they wanted to run down!”

“Gun would be simpler.” Kenny spoke.

“A lot neater too.” Colin agreed.

Pablo moved back to where Kenny stood. “Unless guns didn’t work too well.” He echoed out loud.

Danny looked up at the opening in the bulkhead. “Marty... we’d need a couple days and a full engineering crew to repair this breach.” He spoke. “It opens up into some sort of cavern near as I can tell. The doors are jammed for sure.”

“Make sure those other entrances are secure.” Martin ordered. “Then move back to engineering.”

Danny nodded. “Will do.”

“Daniel... bring a sample of bone with you. We can determine who it was with medical scans.” Wayonn spoke now.

Danny looked up to Colin who nodded. “Done.” Danny said. “Moving back to the Power Core and engineering.”

Martin looked at Wayonn. “Pralors run their people down with ten ton vehicles a lot do they?” He asked. “We don’t know what happened Martin.” Wayonn spoke.

“No we don’t.” Martin answered. “But my ‘Just about to get fucked meter’ has gone up a few notches.”

Wayonn met his eyes. “Yes... mine has too.” He stated causing Martin’s eyes to grow a little wider in surprise. Wayonn’s lips curled into a small grin. “I did not spend over twenty thousand years beside your grandfather Sumar and learn nothing Martin. I may have been his Paladin Mage, but we learned a few things spending so much time together.”

“Ok... I’ll give you that.” Martin said as Wayonn grinned.

“Grandfather look.” Helen spoke from the station beside Wayonn.

Wayonn and Martin turned to where she sat in the chair and was pointing at the monitor. “Helen?”

“You said this station is listed as destroyed fourteen thousand years ago.” Helen said.

Wayonn nodded. “Yes.”

Helen pointed to the corner of the screen. “Look.” She said. “If this data is accurate...” She ran her finger along the two lines of words. “This station is listed here as being built three thousand four hundred and five years ago.”

Wayonn leaned close to the large monitor and looked at the data. He grabbed his P9 and typed furiously on the pad and then looked at the screen again. “This can’t be.” He said.

“What?” Martin asked.

“According to the databases from SPARTA’S WRATH, the other two stations listed here were also destroyed by the Scourge over ten thousand years ago.” Wayonn said. All the PSSs were listed and number identified by the order they were built.”

“Like your ships?” Martin said.

Wayonn nodded. “Yes. We would never have reused a number. And this information fits with the logs I have recovered. No logs older than three thousand four hundred and three years.” He looked at the monitor. “That doesn’t make sense.”

Martin nodded. “You’re telling me.” He said.

Wayonn looked at him. “No... you misunderstand me Martin.” He said. “If what we are seeing is correct, this station is just over three thousand years old.”

“So?” Martin said.

“We stopped building the PSSs right after the second war with the Scourge began. At least according to Shiria.” Wayonn said. “This was built somewhere else and it was built just over three thousand years ago. It was built a little under ten thousand years after the Pralor people were thought to be extinguished as a species.”

Martin stared at him for a long moment as what he was saying sank in. “Wayonn... my ‘Just about to get fucked’ meter just went up another couple of notches.”

Wayonn nodded. “Yes again Martin... so did mine.” He began to turn back to the work stations when Anja’s voice stopped his motion.

“Ah... Lover?”

Martin tapped his jaw. “Red? What’s wrong?” He hissed.

“You should probably come down to where I am Lover.” Anja said. “And quickly. There’s something you need to see.”

“Fuck! On my way!” Martin didn’t hesitate and began moving for the door into the control center.

“Melda Min! Tony! With me!”

Wayonn looked at Helen. “Go with him Helen! Julie and I will remain here to try and decipher more information! We can monitor your progress from the internal sensors here in the control center! And perhaps activate the station’s defenses if needed!”

Helen didn’t hesitate either and bolted after Martin.

Martin came sprinting around the corner of the corridor and saw Anja standing with Miseo and the three Durcunusaan outside of a large archway with a set of massive metal doors. He skidded to a halt as Anja reached for him.

“We’re ok.” She spoke quickly feeling his concern for her within his aura and gripping his arm. “We’re ok.”

Martin looked at Miseo quickly and then back to her as Dysea, Tony and Helen looked around the corridor. “Anja? Your voice... it sounded...”

Anja nodded her head. “I saw something that... let’s just say it caused my pulse to race just a little.” She told him.

Martin looked around. “Ok. Want to let me in on the secret. There’s just you guys in the corridor here.”

“I... I don’t think there is any danger to us. I didn’t see anything that indicated that there was.” Anja told him quickly. “At least not the few seconds I saw anything before Miseo jerked me back and we shut the doors.”

“Red... don’t jerk me around.” Martin hissed. “What’s going on?”

Anja looked at Miseo. “Miseo... open the doors again.”

Martin looked at him. “We discovered it in our sweep King Leonidas.” Miseo told him as he activated the panel on the wall next to the huge doors.

“Discovered what?” Martin asked.

Miseo touched the panel and the low rumble began as the doors slid open incredibly fast. Martin’s eyes nearly exploded out of his head and his A4 was coming up before the first conscious thought to do it even formed in his mind.

“NUBOU LAE!” He nearly shouted. “BACK! Everyone back!”

“Lover no!” Anja barked just as loudly as she reached forward and grabbed the barrel of his A4. “They are frozen!”

Martin looked at her with changed wolf eyes now, his fangs fully extended and his body prepared to do battle. “What? Frozen? What the fuck does that mean?”

Anja moved closer to him, pressing between him and Dysea who had assumed a similar defensive stance with changed emerald green wolf eyes. She made sure she touched both of their in some manner so they could sense her own body’s emotions. “They are in suspended cryogenic chambers Marty. Their alive... but sleeping!”

“Yeah... well I don’t want them waking the fuck up!” Martin barked.

Anja shook her head. “They won’t unless we wake them up. The power coming back on didn’t change their status... it only lit up the room.”

“How the hell do you know that?” Martin demanded.

Anja moved to the side of the door and touched the panel. Her Etheric resonance could easily power the panel up and she tapped on the screen several times. “I checked.” She told him. “There is some kind of force field around each individual pod. Even if the pod were to open... they couldn’t get out. I’m not detecting any damaged chambers either. That’s the first thing I checked after calling you.”

They all turned when the noise of Danny and Kenny coming around the corner drew their attention. Danny skidded to a halt beside Martin barely out of breath. “We heard her call and...” His head turned into the open doorway and his eyes grew wider. “FUGLIES!” He screamed as he and Kenny both began to bring up their A4s.

“Will both of you trigger happy wolves shut up!” Helen snarled loudly as she pressed forward next to Anja. She had detected Anja’s calm aura almost immediately and she knew if Anja didn’t feel in danger they were safe. For the moment anyway. “Lower your weapons!”

“Feravomir...” Danny motioned with the barrel of his weapon. “That’s... that’s not a good idea! These things are hard enough to kill and they...”

“They are not awake!” Helen barked. “Anja says they are asleep!”

“Let’s kill them and make sure they stay asleep!” Kenny hissed. “Can’t get much more asleep then dead right!”

“Fucking amen!” Danny snapped.

“Marty...” Anja took his arms and brought his face back around. “Lover do you trust me?”

“Red... don’t ask me that?” Martin said. “You know I trust you... but this...”

Anja pulled on his arm and yanked him over to the small control panel and screen. “Look at what they have on!” She snapped. “Look at what they are wearing!”

Martin’s eyes were very confused and he turned to look at the small monitor, leaning close. His eyes grew a little wider and his A4 lowered just a little bit as he pulled away from the screen and glanced into the room quickly before returning his eyes to the screen. “Holy shit.”

Anja nodded. “Yes.” She said softly. “I used my P1 to do a quick scan before Miseo pulled me out and sealed the room.” She told him. “I was only able to scan the first few in the row but...” She typed on the panel. “This is what I found.”

Martin reached up with wide eyes and tapped the control panel expertly, sifting through the data. “This is accurate Red?” He gasped.

“Yes.” Anja told him. “They’re Pralors Martin. All three hundred and nine. They are in different stages of the infection but they are Pralors. They must have been placed in the cryo chambers before the others left. To preserve them.”

“What the fuck for?” Martin growled.

“Perhaps so they could return and try to save them Martin.” Helen spoke now as she gazed into the huge room.

“Oh man... this day just keeps getting better and better!” Martin rasped.

“There’s no danger unless they get out Lover.” Anja said squeezing his arm. “We can make sure that doesn’t happen.”

Martin looked at her. “You’re sure?”

Anja nodded. “One hundred percent.” She said. “We’ll just power down this section of the Medical Wing to what it was when we came in. Minimal life support. Just enough to keep the chambers active, but not enough to fully power them.”

“Why?” Martin hissed.

Helen turned and looked at him. “Because we do not have the right to take any hope they may have away from them.” She said.

“Helen... if even one of those things gets out we could be in deep sibfla!” Martin spoke.

“You trust in your wife and mate. As do we all. Trust in her now.” Helen told him. “And if what we have discovered so far is true, they have been here for over three thousand years and not gotten out. I believe it is safe to assume we can keep that from happening.”

“Shit!” He snarled as he turned his head. “Master Chief... you and Kenny set me up a Banger inside the door. Whatever you got! Then sealed the fucking thing!”

“How big Skipper?” Tony asked immediately.

“Big enough to take out the entire room Tony.” Anja answered him instantly. “On the off chance I’m wrong.”

“I’m down with that Anja.” Kenny spoke as he moved forward into the doorway.

Martin turned his head towards the interior of the room and couldn’t help but feel a cold sense of foreboding grip his gut as he saw the hundreds of cryo chambers with the same lizard like creatures they had fought on Twelve Alpha. Some were fully changed, others in different stages from what he could discern with just a glance and from what the data was telling him.

“Man... I am so going to regret this.” Martin muttered as he shook his head.

SLEKON CLUSTER

ARTAAYA

FIFTH PLANET WITHIN THE CLUSTER

FEBRUARY 6TH, 2018 HRS EST

PRALOR OCCUPIED WORLD

He moved quickly along the balcony walkway of the Council Chamber, not even looking up to glance at the three females who murmured to themselves and stared at him as he passed. No doubt they were shocked at his drawn appearance, but it wasn't something he was concerned about in the least. Not with the information he held in his hand. He barely noticed the large sun, just as it was beginning to sink over the horizon of the huge ocean in the distance. The spray and smell of the salt air revitalized him somewhat, pushing away the fatigue the six hour trek across the planet had hit him with. Three Jumper cars and then the kilometer march along the Promenade of Memories to get to the Council Chamber. He was going to burst in unannounced he knew, a major violation of protocol, but he had no other options. His information was just too important to request an audience.

He looked up as he approached the entrance and the two formal security guards moved quickly to open the huge doors for him. He had informed the Master of the Guard as he landed outside the Promenade and told him he was coming. At least that message got to who it needed to. He only grunted at the two men as he passed into the long corridor and was met by the tall, lanky man wearing a similar uniform but with elaborate markings on his sleeves and shoulders. He fell in beside him immediately, their physical proportions almost identical for they were brothers.

“Kasdan?” He snapped.

“I am not wrong Garan!” The man hissed.

“I hope so brother! Bursting into a meeting of the Chief Elder Council is unwise.” The second man spoke. “And it could cost me my position.”

“Have I ever been wrong Garan?” The man spat.

Garan shook his head quickly. “No... and that is the only reason why I am doing this brother. I trust in you and your skills.”

Kasdan met his younger brother's eyes and nodded. “Are they all present?” Kasdan asked.

Garan nodded. “Be patient with them brother.” He spoke. “You know how they view some of your ideas. Especially Lorendo.”

“They can not dismiss this anymore Garan.” Kasdan spoke. “Not this. It is too... it could be the beginning of a new dawn for our people. No more hiding. No more running. It could be the rebirth so many of us have prayed for.”

“A Praetorian Kasdan?” Garan asked with a shake of his head as he walked. “A living, breathing Praetorian. It is... it is too amazing to believe. We thought them lost forever.”

Kasdan looked at his brother. “No... not all of them. There is one here on Artaaya my brother. He has remained hidden for millennia so as not to endanger our people. He is... he is not right at times... but he lives.”

Garan's eyes flew open. “You jest! How? Where?”

Kasdan smiled. “He is how I knew what to look for brother. He... he found me several weeks ago actually. Somehow he knew what was happening. He no doubt knows what I know now for he would be able to feel them. I would... I would not doubt he is on his way here now. The Chief Elder will believe him even if he does not believe me. They have to believe me! There is no doubt now!”

Garan looked up and with a wave of his hand the two additional guards in front of the ornate doors swept their hands across the two separate panels. The large, elaborately carved doors swung open soundlessly to reveal a much smaller room than one would have assumed behind such doors. Until one looked up however and saw that the area above them appeared endless and two hundred meters above where one stood was the colored blue glass of the high ceiling.

There were seven of them sitting at the table. Five men and two women. The oldest and wisest of the survivors and the ones who had kept them safe for more millennia than many of their people had been alive. All of them wore the cream colored robes of the Chief Elder Pralors, but tailored to fit them in such a way as to not impede on simple activities. They were the leaders of the remaining Pralor population here on Artaaya and two smaller planets only a single jump away.

They were all that remained of the Pralor people.

Trillions upon trillions of men, women and children and they were reduced to just under a million souls when they arrived here. Generations found them running from the Scourge threat as they systematically destroyed Pralor civilization. The Scourge were relentless and completely remorseless in their actions. They didn't hesitate in their dealings and if it carried a hint of Pralor influence it was utterly obliterated. Four times they thought themselves safe and settled on different worlds. Each time the Scourge discovered them somehow and each time they had to run again. Their horrible plight got better when they arrived on the world with those that they considered instant friends because of their abilities and who was with them. They were accepted without question and they thought they had finally run far enough away. That had only lasted five millennia before they had to run once more. This time however, they ran with their new friends who the Scourge labeled as conspirators.

Time had finally brought them here to Artaaya and the surrounding system. Far beyond the borders of what had once been Pralor space. Here is where they settled and began to try and rebuild, while always remaining wary and ready. Three planets could support life in the entire cluster, Artaaya, Honelze and Nepneu. Artaaya was chosen as their base of power and where the main group of them would remain. They had named this city the same as the planet, a true beginning some had called it, and now the city stretched across nearly thirty kilometers of fertile land not far from the ocean which spanned a full third of the planet. Honelze and Nepneu had much smaller, but no less fantastic cities. They did not expand rapidly, keeping with their Pralor origins of patience and thoughtfulness and also to insure they did nothing that would draw the attention of the Scourge. Their population had increased as well as they sent one ship every five hundred years back into Pralor space to search for survivors. Sometimes they succeeded; sometimes they were caught by the Scourge and destroyed. The birth of children was encouraged by all and that was why now fully half their population was under twenty thousand years of age. They had once more begun doing what their people had always done while always keeping an eye open and expecting to see the Scourge. It was a hard life in many ways and very stressful, at least to those who were older and had seen the horrors of the two Scourge Wars and all they had lost as a people.

All of those at the table looked up from their discussion when Kasdan and Garan burst into the chamber. The man on the end of the oval table came to his feet, anger flashing across his face.

“What is the meaning of this Kasdan?” He demanded as he came away from the table. “You have no right to be here now! We are in session!”

“I have every right!” Kasdan barked right back as he moved closer to the table and stopped. “If you will not tell them then it falls to me! They need to know!”

“I directed you to confirm it first!” The man snarled.

“I did confirm it! And it is just as I told you Elder Lorendo! You simply refused to hear me!” Kasdan barked. “You will not deny me any longer! This needs to come out now!”

“You will remove yourself from this chamber or I will...!” Lorendo began to snap at him.

“Science Elder Lorendo?” The calm yet firm voice spoke up now. “Would you care to commence to us your Assistant Director of the Science Convention? I don’t believe you have ever formally introduced Kasdan here. Not since he became your assistant seven hundred years ago.” The voice sounded amused but held a tone of command and respect in it.

Lorendo turned slowly giving Kasdan an evil look and looked at the man who had spoken. “Chief Elder Delnash... perhaps another time would be more suitable to...”

The man rose to his feet slowly. He was not an old man at just barely fifty thousand years of age, not by their standards; he simply chose to execute his motions with precision and grace. His nearly white hair fell well past his shoulders but did nothing to diminish the healthy look of his skin and the brightness of his deep umber colored eyes. He moved away from the table with resolute movement. “Perhaps now is best Lorendo.” He stated more firmly than before. “And I would hear what the Assistant Director of our Science Convention deems so important as to interrupt our meeting.”

Lorendo bowed his head. “Of course Chief Elder Delnash. May I present Elder Kasdan, my Assistant Director.” He spoke motioning with his hand to Kasdan. “You know the Master of the Guard Garan. He is Elder Kasdan’s brother.”

Kasdan bowed his head deeply as the man stepped up to him. “It is an honor beyond words Chief Elder Pralor.” He spoke.

Delnash chuckled softly. “Yes... I’m quite sure that is what everyone would say Kasdan. I on the other hand believe it is an honor to meet you.”

Kasdan looked up, his eyes wide. “Chief Elder Pralor... I am humbled.” He gasped.

“Do not be Kasdan.” Delnash spoke. “I am no more important than you in the grander scheme of things. Tell me... how many years do you have?”

“Nineteen thousand six hundred and nine Chief Elder Pralor.” Kasdan answered.

“Ah... so you are Garan’s older brother.” Delnash said with a smile as he looked at the senior Pralor Elder Guard Commander. “Master of the Guard Garan... what say you? You have served this Council diligently for nearly five thousand years. Does your brother bring such information to us as to shock our minds?”

Garan nodded without hesitation. “I... I believe he does Chief Elder Pralor. I know he does. You know me Chief Elder Pralor... and you know I would bring nothing to you like this unless I thought it important.”

“Indeed. I also know I have told you on more than one occasion to skip the formalities when addressing me. I am not some High Lord Garan.” Delnash spoke.

Garan bowed his head with a smile. “You have Elder Delnash. On more than one occasion.”

Delnash smiled. “That is better. Now then we will hear what it is your brother brings to us.” Delnash spoke as he turned back to the table. “Perhaps it will be less mundane than everything else we have to hear.”

Lorendo stepped closer to him. “Chief Elder... allow me to speak with Kasdan and put the many volumes of information into some coherent form. I can...”

Delnash looked at him. “You can be silent and let him speak Lorendo.” Delnash ordered. “We on this Council are more than capable of understanding whatever he puts forth.”

“I agree.” The blond haired female spoke from the table now. “New ideas come from fresh, young minds. We need all of those we can manage.”

“Well spoken Chief Elder Radra.” The stern looking man spoke from the end of the table. “I agree as well.” Chief Elder Sashan spoke.

Delnash looked at Lorendo with a grin. “There you have it Lorendo. The Chief of our Medical Convention and the Chief of our Military Convention echo my sentiments.”

“Your sentiments are all that matter Chief Elder Delnash.” Lorendo spoke.

Delnash snorted loudly. “You do yourself no favors by trying to win my support in this fashion Lorendo. I have no intention of passing anytime soon and you will not move into my position regardless. Unlucky for you. It is also an attitude that is quite beneath your station.” Delnash reached out with his hand and Kasdan watched a chair appear from the shadows along the wall and slide across the floor in front of the table. “Join us Kasdan, and tell us what is so important that you have defied Lorendo’s instructions.”

Kasdan glanced at Lorendo who only glared back at him as he returned to his chair. His eyes went to Garan and his brother nodded his head in support. Kasdan took a deep breath and turned back to the table. “Chief Elder... may I use the computer?”

Delnash motioned to the computer panel in the middle of the table as he returned to his chair. “Please.” He said.

Kasdan stepped up and began to type rapidly on the panel. “Chief Elder... this concerns the Portable Seeding Station Zero One Five that we launched three thousand four hundred and six years ago. It was sent to what we refer to as the Omarian system. To a planet that was within our databases here but one our ancestors chose to dismiss because of the many difficulties in configuring the gravitational variances.” They watched as a star chart broke away from the wall above them and lowered in front of the table. “We named the planet Onterom; after the first Chief Elder Pralor.”

Delnash nodded his head in approval. “A man of many beginnings.” He said. “A fitting name.”

“We corrected for the gravitational variances and Station Zero One Five came online a year later.” Kasdan continued. “The station was launched with a full crew following behind it. They succeeded Chief Elder. Within two thousand four hundred years they were able to fully Terra Form the planet. Life was flourishing and we were planning to send a colony expedition when...”

“When the Svorag found them.” Delnash spoke softly.

“Yes Chief Elder.” Kasdan said softly.

“We know of this planet Kasdan.” Radra spoke. “We do read the reports. It was overrun with the infection the Svorag carry. They discovered our station in one of their sweeps through the cluster looking for Converts.”

Kasdan nodded. “Yes Elder Radra.” He said. “They infected a good number of the crew before their force was finally killed.”

“If I remember correctly we ordered the facility locked down and abandoned in case they returned.” Delnash spoke.

Kasdan nodded. “And it was Chief Elder. The Station Commander used the Cryo pods to secure those crew members who were infected in the hopes that one day we could return and assist those stricken with this disease. Three hundred and nine to be exact Chief Elder... all of them infected by the mutation the Svorag carry in some degree. Once this was done he and the remaining members of his crew departed. There was a breach in the lower vehicle section of the station but they secured both entrances so that nothing could get into the interior of the station from the outside.” Kasdan adjusted the large screen and an image of the planet appeared. A beautiful blue green tinted planet from orbit with absolutely nothing showing in the stars around it.

“Are you telling us you have found a cure?” Radra asked with wide eyes. This would be a tremendous find as the Svorag were a thorn in their sides in many ways.

“No Chief Elder Radra.” Kasdan said with a shake of his head. “My specialty field is not medicine... it is Fractal Quantum Physics.”

“So what does this station have to do with what you are trying to tell us?” Delnash asked politely. “What exactly are you trying to tell us?”

“You are aware of the four dozen Perlion Science Probes we have scattered across the many systems in this part of the galaxy Chief Elder Pralor? As well as several we have deployed to other parts.” Kasdan said.

Delnash nodded. “Our most advanced probe. Yes. I helped to design them.” He said. “What are you getting at Kasdan?”

“Chief Elder... one of our probes...” He turned to the Star Chart. “Here... on the edge of the coreward rim of the Perseus Arm... this Perlion Probe detected the activation of Seventh Tier Phased Quantum Fusion Resonance engines within the Alpha Quadrant just over eight weeks ago.”

Delnash leaned forward in his chair as his umber eyes grew wide. “What?” He gasped in disbelief.

“Kasdan... Seventh Tier Phased QFRs are the finest and most advanced engines our people ever designed. They were only built for the VORTEX-Class Heavy Cruisers.” Sashan added quickly. “They are still state of the art even now, some thirty thousand years later. Our engines now are based on their design and function.”

Kasdan nodded his head. “Yes I know Elder Sashan. That is why the Probe detected it. The Probe locked onto this signature and tracked it to several different locations within the Alpha Quadrant. This was... this was several weeks ago as I said.”

“Several weeks?” Another of the Chief Elders barked. “Why were we not informed of this immediately?”

“Even the Perlion Probes have limited capacity Chief Elder.” Kasdan added quickly. “Considering this Probe’s location, it took a week for this information to transmit through the normal buffers before reaching our listening post on Cochara. From there it was sent to me at the Science Division. I thought perhaps it had detected many of the drones our people activated before... before then end, so I dispatched primary command codes ordering the ship’s Avatar to return to a designated set of coordinates as per our normal action plan for this type of event. I was not even sure it was a ship and not just a reflection of some kind.” Kasdan was typing on the panel showing all of them his every action along the way. “Ten days later I received a very clear signal returned to the probe instructing the Probe’s core computer that no further directives were to be sent. It was sent by a Class Nine Avatar. The ship’s Avatar instructed the Probe that it was acting under orders that superseded my directives. Thirty seconds after it transmitted that message to me, the probe was destroyed by an inverse energy burst sent within the message. It overloaded the core and caused the Probe to explode. It was completely destroyed. Just before this took place a single signature was sent, unwittingly or not.”

“A signature?” Radra asked.

Kasdan nodded. “I do not know... it was a message of some sort and I do not know what the message itself means but...”

“What did it say?”

“Fool me once shame on me... fool me twice shame on you. Time to die. Avatar 41.” Kasdan answered.

“Avatar 41?” Delnash gasped.

Kasdan nodded. “I did an extensive computer search and discovered that Avatar 41 was the Class Seven Ship Avatar of...”

“Chief Elder Pralor Sumar.” Delnash spoke softly coming to his feet.

Kasdan looked at him surprised. “You... you know him Chief Elder Delnash?” He asked quickly.

Delnash shook his head. “Only by... only by reputation. He rose to prominence during the war. I worked in the Norpry System at the time and never met him personally. He was the eight hundred and nineteenth Chief Elder Pralor. A man of incredible will and persona. Trillions of our people loved him! His drive and how he related to our people endeared him to so many!” Delnash looked up. “He was also one of the very first Praetorians.”

That word caused all the heads to turn to look at him. “A Praetorian!” Sashan exclaimed. “You are certain Chief Elder Delnash? A true Praetorian.”

Delnash nodded. “The strongest among them if I am not mistaken. And the twin brother to Xaxon.”

“Xaxon the Butcher.” Lorendo snarled now. “He who brought the Scourge down upon us!”

“Delnash... I have read our history cubes extensively... according to our history cubes Sumar was lost with his Mage Oracle Wayonn and five other Seed ships a little over forty thousand years ago.” Sashan spoke looking at him. “That was before the Second War and long before we had VORTEX-Class ships. It was said he collected hundreds with the Praetorian gene on his ship and he was going to actively train them for the Scourge’s return. He took five other Praetorians with him and left the rest to stand watch and wait for his return.”

Delnash nodded looking at Kasdan. “His City ship... it was...”

Kasdan nodded. “It was City Ship 41. Yes Chief Elder.”

“The history cubes also speak of an Class Seven Avatar that was never very far from his side. It was almost as if Sumar had an affection for the machine.” Delnash started to ask. “You don’t think...”

“The odds of this are astronomical Chief Elder Delnash.” Lorendo spoke getting to his feet. “That is why I ordered Kasdan to forgo any further investigation into this. Praetorians have not existed for millennia. The Scourge wiped all of them out in the first years of the Second War nearly forty thousand years ago.” He said. “I saw no reason to continue such a fool’s hope. Kasdan chose to ignore my directives.”

“You did not even go over the data!” Kasdan snarled at him. “What I provided to you was proof enough to at least look into it!”

“Look into what?” Lorendo spoke harshly. “An unknown transmission from the Alpha Quadrant from this Avatar 41? There is no possible way this could be Sumar’s Avatar. And even if it was, what was it doing on a VORTEX Cruiser? Even if it was a VORTEX Cruiser! VORTEX Cruisers had Class Nine Ship Avatars!”

“The engine signatures matched!” Kasdan barked. “And the initial message was sent by a Class Nine Ship Avatar!”

“Across thousands of light years and then washed through any number of probes before reaching us?” Lorendo said shaking his head. “Impossible!”

“It is not impossible!” Kasdan shouted. He turned to look at Delnash. “Chief Elder Pralor Delnash... Station Zero One Five was shut down with an Etheric based locking system that...”

“Kasdan!” Lorendo snapped. “Enough of this!”

Delnash held up his hand, his curiosity piqued beyond measure now. This young scientist was very passionate and very confident in what he was saying. “I will decide what is enough Elder Lorendo.” Delnash spoke firmly. “What do you mean Kasdan?”

“Chief Elder Lorendo ordered that station One Zero Five be secured using an Etheric based recognition system.” Kasdan spoke quickly. “None of the operating systems left powered on could be activated unless the Etheric detectors built into the bio-mechanical structure of the station itself registered the presence of a Category Twenty or higher Etheric user entering the interior of the vehicle bay.”

“Category Twenty!” Delnash exclaimed looking at Lorendo. “Even those of us here at this table are no higher than a Category Nineteen! You sealed those people in there so that no one could access the station afterwards? Why Lorendo? You doomed them to remain in those cryo chambers for eternity!”

“We have no treatment for the Svorag Affliction Chief Elder Delnash. You know this. Any of our people infected with it eventually became Svorag Converts. Or they would have. Even those that were infected and put into the cryo chambers.” Lorendo spoke. “All of our most skilled medical research scientists were killed during our escape from the Scourge and no one had obtained sufficient skill in the medical field to even touch this affliction. I determined... I decided we could not devote time and materials to finding a treatment when so much else took priority at the time. The only way to be sure was to seal them in so that no one could access the station. I ordered the station commander to use an Etheric based recognition system and then entered the parameters such as they are.”

“What are those parameters?” Radra demanded.

Lorendo looked at her. “No one below a Category Twenty Etheric user could possibly hope to enter the station no matter what they did. Just as Kasdan has said. The power core was left at its lowest level to keep the security system active, but without a Category Twenty or higher Etheric user to enter and activate its disarming systems, the station would forever remain completely dormant.”

“Lorendo... the only Pralors that were Category Twenty and above were Praetorians!” Sashan barked at him. “The Scourge wiped out the Praetorians three decades into the Second War! You knew there were no living Pralors who could access this station! You killed everyone on that station by leaving them there under such conditions!”

“I had no choice!” Lorendo spat. “We could not risk the Svorag affliction reaching back to the worlds we had occupied! You know this Sashan!”

“This was not in the report you submitted to this Council of Elders Chief Elder Lorendo.” The new man spoke now leaning forward at the table.

Lorendo nodded. “No it wasn't. I left it out on purpose. We had more pressing problems at the time and all of you know it.”

“The issues with our dragon brothers and sisters were no where as severe as you made them out to be! We have been together too long for such petty things to come between us!” Radra snapped at him. “All it took was level minds to come together for a few days! Look what we have built since! An Alliance nothing could break!”

“We did not know that at the time!” Lorendo spoke. He turned to Delnash. “I did what I did to protect our people Chief Elder Pralor! You know this! There is no hope for them! There never was! I insured no danger ever left that station! Without a Praetorian to open the locks, no one is entering that station... and there are no Praetorians left alive! What's done is done!”

Delnash looked at him for a long moment. “That... that is not entirely true.” He spoke softly causing all of their heads to turn to look at him.

“Chief Elder Pralor?” Radra exclaimed. “What do you mean?”

“He means that not all of the Praetorians are dead! Or has governing turned all of you into daft fools!” The new voice bellowed causing all of them to whirl around and see the lone armored figure standing just inside the door to the chamber.

Delnash had a look of stunned shock on his face as he turned towards the figure.

They watched this man move forward towards them, his booted feet echoing among the towering walls. The armor he wore was ornate and elaborately made and announced to every soul in the room exactly who he was. Or to be more precise.

What he was.

The armor conformed to his physique like a second layer, the silver armor portions worn on top of the dark gray armored mesh that encased his upper and lower body. The armor on his shoulders was high and provided high protection around his neck and throat. It appeared layered over his upper arm and then formed into gauntlets around his thick forearms. Two overlapping sections extended down either hip to just above his knees and under that was a cloak of some sort that partially hid his legs. The full faced helmet he carried under his right arm, exposing his weathered skin to their eyes. A completely white beard and mustache was quite meticulously trimmed and gave him an almost surreal appearance, not to mention that he looked surprisingly like Delnash. They watched him as he approached slowly and all of them saw him flick his head to the side almost unnaturally. The rush of Etheric power they felt surge forth staggered them. Radra reached for the table's edge as the incredible amount of power swept around her and she was the first among them to recognize who stood in front of them.

“By... by all that we hold sacred... a Praetorian!” She gasped softly, her hand going to her throat in disbelief.

Delnash didn't hesitate then and moved around the table quickly. He stepped up in front of the man without fear or surprise and reached out to grip the armored upper arms. “What... Murano... what are you...?”

The man's eyes appeared moist and he looked as if he had been crying Delnash saw. His lips parted into a small smile. "It has been too long Delnash." He spoke in that gravelly voice looking at him with something akin to affection.

"Murano?" Sashan nearly yelled. "It... it can't be!"

Delnash turned his head to look over his shoulder at the Pralor military commander. "But it is." He spoke turning back to look at the man. "I... my friends... I present to you Praetorian Murano." He spoke turning to stand beside the taller man. "The last... of the Praetorians."

Sashan dropped to one knee immediately as did everyone except Lorendo and Delnash. "May the spirits of our people bless me?" He gasped softly. "Never... Praetorian Murano! I have read of your... your exploits with Praetorian Sumar in the first Scourge War."

The man let his light blue eyes fall of Sashan. "Chief Elder Pralor Sumar. A Praetorian like no other. The first among our kind. My teacher and friend." He stepped forward. "Get up! All of you! The Chief Elders of our people do not bow to me! Praetorians live to serve the Chief Pralors and their Council!"

Delnash watched as they got back to their feet and Murano bowed his head deeply to them. He reached out and took Murano's arm. "I believe we have evolved to a point beyond such shows of reverence to this Council. It is part of the reason we were so easily defeated by the Scourge Murano. You know this."

"Praetorians had a hand in creating the Scourge!" Lorendo hissed softly.

Murano turned his head to look at him. "One Praetorian did." He growled. "And he paid for his vile sins with everything he was!"

"And look where that got us!" Lorendo spat.

"Do not put me in the same category as that scum Xaxon!" Murano snarled at him softly. "Sumar, myself and our brethren fought him! We brought him to the justice of our people!"

"Too late to stop his abominations from returning to the Scourge Hive worlds and then birthing a whole new breed of their kind that destroyed our people!" Lorendo snapped. "The Praetorians had too much power! Your kind helped to bring about our near extinction!"

The man Murano stepped forward quickly, his body flaring with light blue Etheric power and he lifted his right hand, a thin Etheric spike forming from his knuckles. Radra gasped in fear and stepped away from Lorendo quickly.

"Do not dare to place us in the same breath as that monster Xaxon! Do not dare to judge Sumar... a Praetorian whom you never met! He was the first and the finest among us!" Murano barked savagely, his lips curling back over his teeth. "Praetorians existed for the defense of our people! It is all we lived for! Do not preach to me about blame when you and your kind did nothing while we and so many others fought and died!"

Delnash stepped forward while the others stared at Murano with wide eyes. None of them had ever met a Praetorian in their long lives and after believing they had all died so long ago, to see one in front of them now was awe inspiring. Delnash stepped closer and fearlessly placed his hand on Murano's arm. "This does nothing Murano." He said. "Lorendo is entitled to his own opinion no matter how misguided it may be." He watched as Murano slowly lowered his hand and the light blue Etheric glow dissipated. "Tell me... why have you come here? We... we agreed that you would remain in the mountains and hide your presence. What is wrong? Have you sensed the Scourge?"

Murano looked at him. "No." He stated.

"Then why? You risk revealing yourself to our people coming into the open as you have now." Delnash told him. "It is you who told me you did not want that type of attention Murano. You know how they will view you brother. Especially our younger generations."

"Brother?" Sashan gasped.

Delnash sighed heavily and nodded his head looking at Sashan. "Murano is... he is my younger brother. We were born only two years apart." He said softly. "I alone have known he lives. He has remained in the mountains of the far continent and shielded his existence from our people." Delnash turned and looked back to Murano. "Something I think it is too late to start again. Dozens will have felt you by now Murano. This building houses many Pralors capable of detecting your resonance."

Murano nodded. "The time for hiding is over brother." He spoke.

Delnash tilted his head. "What? Why? What has happened?" He asked somewhat worried about this statement.

“I have cried more tears in the last day than I have been able to muster in the last thirty thousand years Delnash.” Murano told him with a smile. “Tears of joy and happiness. Of rebirth and renewal of hope.”

Delnash shook his head. “I don’t understand.”

Murano turned to look at Kasdan and Garan. Both of them stood staring at him with wide eyes and near reverent expressions. “Finish telling them what you came here to tell them young Kasdan.” He spoke. “You know of what I speak. Now they must know as well.”

Delnash looked at Kasdan. “Kasdan... what does Murano mean?” He asked.

Kasdan shook his head and moved closer. “It is the reason I forced my way in here Chief Elder Pralor.” He spoke.

“What is?” Delnash asked.

Kasdan looked at Lorendo. “Station Zero One Five is still listed in our archived security databases Chief Elder Delnash. Which means it is still connected to all of our standard security protocols. Seven hours ago we received an encoded transmission from Station One Zero Five’s main computer core indicating that it had been reactivated and the station entered.”

“That is impossible!” Lorendo rasped. “Only a Praetorian could release the Etheric locks! If the only remaining Praetorian is standing here with us then...” Lorendo stopped talking as the enormity of what he was about to say hit him.

Kasdan nodded. “Yes Chief Elder Lorendo. That means another Praetorian lives.” He said. “And he or she is at this moment on Station Zero One Five.”

Murano looked at Delnash. “I have felt him brother. He... he...”

Delnash reached out and took his brother’s arm. “What is it?” He asked.

Murano met his eyes and Delnash saw the moistness returning to those light blue orbs. “He burns with the resonance of Sumar brother.” Murano said softly. “He burns with the essence of Sumar and through him I was able to sense others. Faintly... so very faintly... but at least two Delnash. At least two others... far from this one but part of him. All burning with the resonance of the First Praetorian Sumar. I can feel them within me as surely as I stand before you now.”

“What... what else?” Delnash gasped.

Murano shook his head. “Fleeting images. Large four legged animals covered in fur. Two that are as black in color as the void of space, but with blazing eyes of yellow and blue. I sense two, possibly three Mage Oracles as well. I see dragons Delnash! Dozens of them. Just as our brother and sister dragons here are now! I...” He shook his head.

“By the void!” The female voice announced within Mindvoice and they all heard the flapping of great wings. To the side of the chamber, the entire wall began to slid away to reveal the massive form of the green scaled dragon. The creature folded its wings fully and moved into the massive chamber with a speed that belied its size. “Delnash!”

“Teniri.” Delnash spoke calmly as the seventeen meter long dragon approached them.

“Why is... I felt Murano reveal himself. It has caused quite the stirring of my kind across the city.” The female dragon spoke, her voice soft and welcoming.

Delnash nodded his head. “I’m sure it has Elder Mother.” He said.

Lorendo moved closer. “Wait... Teniri knew of your brother! She knew of him and we on this Council did not?”

The huge sea green scaled head turned to him. “I detected him many years ago Lorendo.” She said. “I felt the connection to Delnash and went to him. Murano has spent much time with us in the mountains.”

Kasdan moved right up to the huge dragon and smiled. “I see the voice actuators are working well Elder Mother.” He spoke motioning to the thin leather like collar she wore on her thick neck that held the glittering sapphire gem.

The Dragon Voice Actuator was something Kasdan had designed and brought into existence specifically for the dragons. The simple sapphire gem was a channeling point for their Etheric power and allowed them to form their thoughts into words and chose how those words sounded. They could decide the tone and level of their voice once the gem was linked to their resonance. It was a permanent link and as long as they wore the collars, they could speak with the Pralors using Etheric methods or simply talking.

Teniri turned her head to him and blinked those large violet eyes. “Indeed they are Elder Kasdan. It has brought us much closer to you as a people and my kind welcome that.”

“As do we.” Delnash spoke.

Teniri turned her head back to him. “Why has Murano revealed himself Delnash? As I said... it is causing quite a stir. I could feel the questions coming from below as I flew over the city.”

Delnash looked at her. The dragon population on Artaaya was well over three hundred thousand now and they were friends to all. They walked among the city streets below as easily as any Pralor. When the Chief Elder Council needed to make a decision that would affect them all, Teniri had a hand and a vote in that decision. As the Dragon Elder mother she was looked to for guidance and support by every living dragon.

“The distance is too great to grab onto the images and delve into them Teniri.” Murano spoke. “I have seem flashes of dragons among the other images.”

Teniri’s violet eyes grew wide. “Dragons? Like... like us?”

Murano shook his head. “In a way... yet different. They wore... they wore glittering armor over their scales and fought beside these others as one entity.”

“They fought as one?” Teniri gasped. “They are bonded? But that is... that is not possible Murano!”

Murano shook his head. “I don’t know for sure Teniri. The images and resonance I felt were so fast and overwhelming. I saw...” He closed his eyes tightly. “I saw perhaps eight of them.”

“Are they... are these people you saw Pralors brother?” Delnash asked.

Murano looked at him. “Yes. And no.”

“What do you mean?” Delnash asked.

“They burn brightly with Praetorian blood Delnash... but they are not fully Pralor either.” Murano spoke. “Other blood flows within their veins. Passionate and proud blood. Savage yet compassionate. But the Praetorians I sensed... they are filled with the resonance of Sumar. Of that there is no doubt.”

“His descendants?” Delnash rasped.

Murano nodded. “It is the only thing it could be.” He said quickly. “We can waste no time brother. This one... this one on the Station. He has had training for he is now shielding his resonance once more and I can no longer detect him. What I felt was a fleeting moment, a loss of control perhaps. If he has had training then there must be Oracles with him just as I felt. I do not know how he learned these things, for even an Oracle can only teach him so much. We must find them Delnash! We must!”

Delnash nodded. “And we will.” He stated confidently. “Chief Elder Sashan... I want a ship. A medium cruiser if you please and a full Strike Team of your finest.”

Sashan came to his feet. “I will have them ready within the hour!” He announced.

“We must go as well Delnash.” Murano said.

“He is the Chief Elder Pralor!” Lorendo barked. “He does not take part in this sort of thing!”

“You are... you are the leader of our people brother.” Murano spoke. “This Praetorian... whoever he is... he will recognize that. You must not listen to this one...” Murano motioned to Lorendo. “He is just like those who had a hand in the indecision of our leaders so long ago. That indecision cost us far too much.”

“You lie!” Lorendo barked.

Murano looked at him. “Men and women like you... Elder Pralors... you delayed too long at the beginning of the Second War. Sumar and so many other Praetorians told you they would return and you would not listen! Do not bark at me Chief Elder Lorendo! We did not answer to your kind then and unless our laws have changed I do not answer to you now! I am a Praetorian and I will do whatever it takes to insure that our people survive. We will not be caught sleeping as we were the last time!”

“You know nothing of what you speak!” Lorendo snapped. “The history cubes are very specific in what...”

“I was there!” Murano bellowed even louder and once more moved up to Lorendo who backed up several steps this time. “Do not speak to me of history cubes fool! I was there! I witnessed it first hand while you cowered with so many others on the other side of our Empire! While you watched it torn down around us! I will not see that happen again!”

“This is not the time Murano.” Delnash spoke gripping his brother’s shoulders.

Murano looked at him. “You must accompany us Delnash.” He stated purposefully.

Delnash nodded without hesitation. “Of course.” He turned to look at Kasdan. “Elder Kasdan... you will assemble a small Science and Medical Team of specialists. You will lead them.”

Kasdan glanced at Lorendo quickly before nodding. “As you instruct Chief Elder Pralor.”

Delnash looked at Lorendo as well. “You are coming too Lorendo.” He spoke. “At the very least, you will see the faces of those you condemned with your actions so long ago. If they even still live.”

Teniri snorted. “Delnash?” She spoke.

Delnash didn't hesitate. “Sashan... insure we have the stores and portable pens for...” He looked at Teniri. “Twenty?”

Teniri nodded her huge head. “Twenty is more than sufficient.” She replied confidently. “Regardless of what training they have had... twenty can subdue them if need be.”

Delnash nodded. “Then I want to be leaving within the hour.”

Murano gripped his arm. “Our... our future awaits brother.”

Delnash nodded. “Let us hope beyond hope that this is so.”

CHAPTER EIGHT

VEYERAI

UNION SAFE ZONE

HIGH COVEN SPACE

FEBRUARY 6TH, 1935 HRS, EST

It had been far more taxing and painful than the labors of her other children without any doubt. Given the dazzling result however, Yuri Moran would welcome that pain and discomfort for every single child Pa'cour gave to her, for it was only another step on the long road of their redemption. A road that Yuri Moran walked with her head held high, and for the first time in her life, with pride in what she was doing.

Yuri stood in the vast Medical Wing of the underground facility staring out the two way glass view window that overlooked the dozen research labs below currently filled with Lidene's many busy scientists and researchers. So much had taken place in so short a time and but for the grace and compassion of one young man, Yuri Moran would not be experiencing it. The Darpia Syndrome had taken hold within her much more quickly after leaving Union space and coming here. Her earlier injuries at the hands of Androcles and then her mammoth expenditures of MV energy during their escape from Robert's ship had weakened her body enough so to allow the Darpia Syndrome to take hold more rapidly than normal when she had conceived Pa'cour's child within her womb. Nalavi had given her every bit of information he had on the disease and Yuri had done everything within her power to learn about it and adhere to the strict diet and exercises Nalavi regimented her too. All that would not have mattered except for the advanced growth serum given to them by Anja Leonidas. The means to insure they began their future with a happy event. An event that would solidify their path and resolve. And it had done just that. Beating down the inbred distrust of Lycavorians in general, Yuri had done exactly what Nalavi and the instructions from Anja had told her. Four all too brief weeks passed before Nalavi determined she needed to inject the serum and accelerate the birth or risk losing the child. She and Pa'cour made that life decision without a moment's hesitation.

It was a life altering decision to be sure, for the moment they heard their daughter's angry wail of life renewed, it cemented them on their road going forward.

The birth left her terribly weak given everything her body had suffered in the last months, but Yuri grasped onto the strength Pa'cour's unquenchable love had given her and never looked back. Under Nalavi's expert care and the advanced medical facilities this base provided to them, Yuri began to truly heal for the first time in her three thousand plus of years of life. Holding her new daughter in her arms those first few hours was like a soothing balm. It didn't last of course as Onera grew so rapidly, but it had the effect needed to propel Yuri forward and making a silent vow to somehow, some day, make amends to Carisia and Lucia. If ever she could and they would allow. Using the instructions given to them from Anja, Yuri used her own powerful Mindvoice abilities, so much clearer and focused now that Xaxon's vile essence was gone, to slowly pass knowledge to Onera as she grew. Within this knowledge Yuri gave their daughter the combined awareness of both her parents and their life experiences. It had been difficult for Pa'cour to share so many horrible memories that were secret to him, but he now had what he had wanted for the last two plus decades and that was Yuri. He was not going to lose that no matter what he had to do.

This connection also allowed Yuri and Pa'cour to share their lives in a manner not many had the chance to do. Seeing what each of them had endured throughout their lives only caused their new love for each other to become stronger and focused, right up until the point that now nothing would ever come between them. It was a love; a bond that Yuri and Pa'cour embraced without question for neither of them had ever felt something so beautiful and grand in two lives filled with so much violence and hate. It was especially powerful for Yuri, for in Pa'cour's mind she had seen the depth of his devotion to her and it had humbled her. No single person in all her years of life had ever shown such calm and voracious commitment to her with no thought of reward. Hours they spent in a Mindvoice connection passing to their daughter their knowledge of things, always keeping her mind even with the growth of her body. Three days spent doing this until the growth serum had run its course and Onera had, for all intents and purpose, reached the age of twenty-three. And then finally Yuri could rest and heal completely under Nalavi's care and Pa'cour's love. Nalavi and Pa'cour both had even mentioned that she did not look the same. Having Xaxon's essence out of her and the birth of Onera had brightened her normally dark features and she looked relaxed and... happy. It caused the intense lines in her face to fade quickly and now she looked so much calmer and at peace.

"... finally time to declare you at peak health!" Nalavi's voice broke into her thoughts and she turned to look at the man who had helped her so much through the years. A man who, for all intents and purposes, had been more a father to her than her own. "I don't believe I have ever seen your physical results as so impressive." He stopped in front of her and held up the data pad. "Everything is normal Yuri. Well beyond normal in fact to be honest. You are in the physical condition of a seasoned commando if I do say so myself. All of your tests are far above average and show no signs of lessening. Pa'cour's physical regiment has benefited you greatly." He took her arm, one of very few men or women who would dare such a thing and squeezed it gently feeling the new musculature. "Now... tell me how you feel."

Yuri couldn't help but smile at his obvious enthusiasm to this news and she looked at him with bright dark eyes. "I feel reborn Nalavi." She said confidently. "Truly reborn."

Nalavi nodded. "Now that's what I like to hear from my patients."

Yuri's head tilted to the side slightly, her lush black hair falling over her shoulder. The dark gray jumpsuit she wore conformed to her lithe body like a second skin. She had added ten pounds of muscle to her five foot seven frame thanks to her Immortal husband's workout regime as Nalavi had just commented. Her body had become leaner and much more muscular in just these last two or three weeks while she adhered to Pa'cour's regiment for her. While they had not made love since Onera's birth, Yuri relished in the nights of just being within Pa'cour's strong arms as they slept. Yuri was yearning for his touch again however and she had every intention of indulging in her Immortal husband's magnificent manhood again very soon.

"It has been you hasn't it Nalavi?" She said softly.

Nalavi met her eyes. "What do you mean?"

"All of these years right in front of me and I never suspected. My mother never suspected that it was you." Yuri said. "It has been you all of this time."

Nalavi's dark eyes narrowed. "I'm not following you Yuri."

"Pa'cour and I... we figured out there had to be a Union spy within our inner circle... or within my mother's inner circle. Someone positioned very deep. In a posting to know just about everything, or have the security access to discover just about everything they wanted." Yuri said evenly. "A spy that was able to feed the Union information on almost every operation that the High Coven executed. That is why there have been no engagements with Union forces in the past twenty-five years. If it did not directly affect the Union, they were intentionally avoiding areas of space where our forces would be. If it did affect them then they acted before we did; eliminating any course of action we could possibly take that might pit us against them. And all this time... all this time we thought for sure it was certain members of the Ventash'ma who were aiding the Kavalians."

"Yuri... what... I don't know what..." Nalavi began to stammer now. "I don't know what you mean Yuri."

“Who approached you Nalavi?” Yuri asked him. “Please my friend... do not lie to me now. Not after all we have been through together and the trust we have built. Do not act like my mother and Robert.”

Nalavi met her eyes and set the data pad on the examining bed. He turned to look out the view window into the research area. “I guess... I guess it had to come out sooner or later.” He said softly. “No one approached me Yuri.” He answered turning back to her. “I went to them. I had to go to them.”

“Who?” Yuri asked again. “Armetus?”

Nalavi nodded his head. “I met with him and a vampire female named Marci first yes and then...”

“Martin?” Yuri asked.

Nalavi nodded. “Six months after my first meeting with Armetus. I didn’t know he was going to be there. We were meeting in secret on Talbot Seven to put the finishing touches on certain things. Contact points. Communications channels. He had Isabella with him and he was already there.”

“Nalavi... I... you lost your wife and two children to a Lycavorian attack.” Yuri said. “I thought you hated them with...” Yuri saw his eyes and moved closer. “That is not what happened is it?”

Nalavi shook his head. “My wife and children have been living within the Union since shortly after you met with him to retrieve Vonis.” He said. “When I saw how you reacted to Vonis’s defection I... I knew I had to do something Yuri. It was... I saw then that everything was going to begin to fall apart. The Kavalian invasion only sped things up. Part of my demand was that my family be allowed to live within the Union without fear of reprisal should anything happen to me. The Krypteria has watched over them for over two decades now. He has kept his word to me. My daughter is a student at the Apo Prime University, tops in her class. My son... the last report I received was that he had just been promoted to Captain and commanded a Special Operations team made up of vampires and Drow. He is supremely well respected and he has just taken a Drow female as his Blessed Wife. I understand that caused quite a stir, but the Drow within his command respect him immensely. He is part of Colonel Norris’s Division on Earth. The clone officer who...”

“I remember him.” Yuri said. “You have not seen them?” Yuri asked.

Nalavi shook his head slowly and turned away from her again. “They think... they think I am dead Yuri.” He said softly. “It was the only way to get my wife to leave the High Coven and accept the Krypteria’s offer.”

Yuri’s hand came up to cover her mouth in sadness as he said this. “Nalavi...?” She finally gasped.

“Something needed to be done!” Nalavi spoke with heated passion in his voice turning back to face her. “I did not want to see the High Coven fall! The path your mother had us on would have brought death and destruction upon us as surely as we stand here now. If not from the Kavalians then from the Union itself Yuri. She had no idea how far they had advanced before she began her fool quest! She did not think them capable of such things! She was never more wrong about anything than she was this!”

“What... what were the terms?” Yuri asked.

“I gave them any information that I received or could gather.” Nalavi said becoming far more comfortable now that his secret was out. “In return they would avoid High Coven patrols along the border and not actively engage High Coven forces in any manner. I also demanded that if they could in any method assist us against the Kavalians... that they do so.”

Yuri looked at him with wide dark eyes. “Martin Leonidas agreed to this?” She gasped stepping closer to him.

“That man... he is unlike any man I have ever met.” Nalavi said softly shaking his head. “He is the most frightening individual to stand in front of, yet that same persona also makes him the most trusting. He stares at you with those eyes and he sees things! It’s like he stares into your soul! He knows things Yuri! Things we can’t imagine. His son has the same trait. I knew that when we stood in front of him on his ship. There is wisdom in their eyes that... it is almost unnatural. Wisdom that none of us have and I think we would be horrified to see what I think they see.” Nalavi looked at her and moved closer and took her hands in his. “Martin Leonidas hates his brother and the Kavalians far more than he dislikes the High Coven Yuri. He jumped at that chance to do this. Who do you think stopped the attack on Sytau? Or the one on Tungal? You, your mother, Moran... all of you thought the Kavalians had simply stopped their invasion movement and did not attack. Union forces destroyed them Yuri! Wiped them out to the last ship! They appeared out of Shroud, disabled the Kavalian’s communications in some manner, probably with the same thing that disabled the Kavalians communications around Kranek and then they obliterated them! They disappeared once more, leaving your mother and Moran to think the Kavalians had never gone through with their attacks. I saw the after action reports Yuri! Martin Leonidas wanted me to know he was keeping his word!” Nalavi turned away from her and laughed softly. “It’s amazing isn’t it? Your mother wanted him dead so badly... she wanted his head on a platter... and it is Martin Leonidas and the Union that has kept the High Coven from falling.”

“Nalavi... I...” Yuri stuttered.

Nalavi turned back to look at her. “Martin Leonidas could have removed any of you Yuri. He could have reached out to any of you at any time and nothing would have stopped him. The man is... he is the most lethal force I have ever seen in all my life. His son takes after him you know. The loyalty and confidence they inspire in others is... it is infectious. Fighting Androcles as you did was foolish.”

“I realize that now Nalavi.” Yuri spoke looking at the floor briefly.

“Martin Leonidas stayed his hand! But by his grace alone do we still stand here Yuri!” He said with intense passion flowing in his words. “Your mother thought she was better than him... more powerful? Ha! It is too bad she did not live long enough to see that she is a child compared to him!”

Yuri turned away from him shaking her head. “Yah... nindol zhah naubol saph Usstan ssiggrin.” She gasped. (God... this is nothing like I thought.)

Nalavi looked at her back. “So... so what happens now Yuri?” He asked softly. “Do you have me executed?”

Yuri spun around and looked at him with wide eyes. “What?” She exclaimed. “Phraktos nau! Nalavi no! Never! Never!” She almost shouted as she stepped up to him. “I only... I only wanted no secrets between us any longer! Nalavi you are a part of this! You saved me! You saved Pa'cour and our daughter! I... I could never hurt you! Not after what you have done! What you have told me! This... what we have started here... this is just as much your doing as it is ours!”

Nalavi shook his head. “I wouldn’t go that far.” He stated.

“But it is!” She exclaimed. “Without you... without you we would not be here!” Yuri stepped closer and wrapped her arms around his waist. “You... you have been more a father to me than my own ever was Nalavi.” She said softly pressing her head to his chest. “You have... you have helped me to shake off the darkness and discover the path I was meant to walk. You helped me to discover Pa'cour. To discover the person I was meant to be.” She pulled her head back and looked at him. “You will never have anything to fear from me Nalavi. Like Pa'cour... you have never wanted anything from me in all this time. And yet you watched over me. No... Nalavi... I...”

Nalavi lifted his hand and touched his finger to her lips. “I know.” He said with a small smile.

Yuri met his eyes. “What you have told me... it makes sense now.”

“What does?” He asked her.

“What Martin told me... the day Vonis defected to the Union.” Yuri spoke as she stepped away and drew his hands into hers.

“What... what did he say?” Nalavi asked.

Yuri’s eyes were bright. “Maybe one day Yuri. And then again... maybe not. No one knows what the future holds. I’d be more concerned about your future right now. It appears your precious High Coven is in deep trouble. So long Yuri. Give your mother a kiss for me... just to let her know how I feel about her.”

Nalavi’s eyes narrowed. “I don’t understand.” He said.

Yuri looked at him and smiled. “He knew Nalavi! He knew even then that this would happen! He knew my mother would never be able to defeat him all those years ago. He knew what his son would do even then! Ending the war! Bringing... bringing us together as he has with Narice. He perhaps did not know in the manner it would happen... but he knew it would happen! And it... it relates to what Androcles told me as well.”

“What he told you?” Nalavi said.

Yuri nodded. “That we would need each other in the future.” Yuri looked at Nalavi. “I... I don’t think he was referring to the Kavalians Nalavi.”

“Who could he have meant?” Nalavi said. “They are now at war with the Kavalians. Who else could we help them against?”

Yuri pulled away slowly. “The Kavalians! Ha!” She spat with some humor. “Androcles and Martin Leonidas are not the High Coven Nalavi. The Kavalians will come to see this very soon I think. At the cost of great pain. The Union will not prosecute their war against the KFI as we did Nalavi. The Union does not know how to fight a defensive war. They will not make our mistakes.” She turned back and looked at him. “The Kavalians will have some victories, simply because of their force of numbers, but when Androcles and his father decide it is time to end this farce of a war, the Kavalians will not know what hit them or from what direction it came. I am beginning to see now that there is far more to Martin Leonidas and his son than meets the eye.”

“If not the Kavalians... then who?” Nalavi asked.

Yuri shook her head. “I don’t know. Not yet. As we walk down this road we have set upon we will discover that answer. I know we will.” She said drawing in a deep breath. “Unlike before... I will not worry about that bridge until it is time to cross it.”

“And me?” Nalavi asked her softly.

Yuri looked at him with genuine affection in her dark eyes. “You? You are going to walk that road with us Nalavi. Your role has not changed. You have saved me. Saved Pa’cour. And you have brought our daughter into this world. That is not something we can ever repay.” She moved up in front of him and took his hands once more. “If that is what you want as well. I have no right to hold you here. You are free... you are free to go where you wish Nalavi my friend.”

Nalavi stared at her for a long moment. “You are going to need me to look out for you.” He said.

Yuri smiled. “No doubt.” She told him.

“Then I will stay.” He said. “For as long as you need me.”

“No more secrets Nalavi.” Yuri said. “I know well what damage secrets can do. Between you and I and Pa’cour. No more.”

Nalavi nodded his head. “Done.”

Quite unlike her old self Yuri kissed his cheek warmly. “Then if I have a clean bill of health... I need to meet with Lidene and discuss some of his concerns.” She spoke. “Join us for dinner. Onera simply adores you. She thinks of you as her grandfather you know.”

Nalavi nodded without question. “She does grow on you.” He said with a smile. He reached up and took her shoulders. “Do not let this new you hide your true self Yuri. Do not embrace this so much that you lose who you truly are. That would be a mistake. Keep your wits about you and remain sharp and unforgiving to those who are our enemies.”

“I am not my mother Nalavi.” Yuri said.

Nalavi shook his head. “No... you are not. And neither is Narice. You are both better than her. Just remember where you come from.”

Yuri nodded. “I don’t intend to lose myself my friend. And knowing what I know now... feeling what I do... I will be more than unforgiving to those who would do those I have come to love harm.”

“Good. Then I will see you for dinner.” He spoke.

Nalavi watched as she nodded with a smile and made her way out of the medical center. He breathed a huge sigh of relief and gripped the table’s edge tightly. He alone knew what Yuri could do if she truly wanted too and he had no desire to feel her wrath. Not now. Having this off his chest was soothing in a way. Now he did not need to hold anything back from her any longer. Now he could go into the future with a clear mind. And perhaps one day... perhaps one day he could reunite with the woman who still held his heart and the children he had not seen for more years than he could remember.

Yes... this was a good thing they had started. Whatever Yuri was talking about... the future did look far brighter than it had only a few short months ago.

Yuri stopped in the wide corridor outside the medical center and looked at the towering Immortal who waited for her. Pa’cour had succeeded in bringing nearly four hundred Immortals over to their cause, a dozen of them having pureblood vampire wives. That word was spreading that he was Cha’talla’s brother carried quite a bit of weight within the Immortal mind, more so that even Pa’cour realized, and he was being very careful about who he brought to Veyerai to join them. They had convinced nearly three thousand purebloods and half breed vampires who had scattered from the Coven shortly after Narice had reclaimed power, many of them not wanting to have their past deeds catch up to them. It was well known that Narice was cleaning house so to speak and anyone who had even an inkling of history with the Kavalians or doing things their own way was suspect. The men and women that had joined her and Pa'cour were patriots to the core, yet they had done things that would probably not have been construed as being in the best ideals of the High Coven now. They did not oppose Narice taking power, quite the opposite in fact, but what they did all have in common was that they feared her if what they had to do in the past was discovered.

The Immortal stepped up to her. "Princess?" He asked.

Yuri looked at him evenly. The Immortals who had joined them had not stopped calling her Princess and after the first few days she gave up trying to change that. They were Immortals that had served with Pa'cour through the years and would follow him through hell and back if he asked. All of them had taken the serum that returned their true Akruvian nature to them, Nalavi easily able to duplicate Esther's work with the formula she had given them. They viewed her now as many viewed Cha'talla's wife Esther, and while it was not something she wanted, it was something she had come to accept.

"Nalavi is to be protected at whatever the cost Ma'dur." She told him. "He is... he has become very special to me. To all of us. I will not lose him to foolishness from others who believe him to be a traitor."

The Immortal nodded without hesitation. "I will see to it Princess." He answered.

"If you are able Ma'dur... do you have contacts among those Immortals who joined Cha'talla?" Yuri asked him.

Ma'dur nodded slowly. "I... I have friends yes."

"Reach out to them if you trust them. Try and discover anything you can about Nalavi's family. Where they are? What they are doing?" Yuri said.

"May I inquire as to why Princess?" Ma'dur asked.

The old Yuri would have probably had the Immortal killed for questioning her intentions but now Yuri felt a kinship to the Immortals. Having Pa'cour as her Blessed Husband had made her see things about the Immortals that very few did. "Would you, as an Immortal, protect your family at any cost Ma'dur?" She asked him finally.

Ma'dur nodded. "Without hesitation. No matter the cost."

Yuri nodded. "I am the wife of an Immortal now Ma'dur. I intend to make sure that those we consider family are protected. No matter the cost."

Ma'dur nodded his head and smiled. "Indeed you are Princess. Indeed you are." He took a deep breath. "The new group is ready in Central Holding." The tone of his voice caused Yuri to look at him keenly.

Yuri looked at him. "What Ma'dur?" She asked. "You suspect something is wrong? Tell me."

"It may well be nothing Princess... but two of them... purebloods like yourself." He spoke carefully. "They seem out of place considering they approached us. They say they are engineers, but they move with..."

"What?" Yuri asked.

"They move with the skills of an assassin." Ma'dur said finally.

"You say they approached you?" Yuri asked him. "That is very interesting. We haven't exactly been broadcasting who we are or what we are doing to the masses?"

"No we haven't." Ma'dur agreed.

"Where did they approach you?" Yuri asked.

"Jagalir... when we were transiting from Ricot Four." Ma'dur answered. "They said they were referred by the Kochab Quellian."

Yuri began to walk. "Quellian huh?"

"I don't like or trust any Kochab Princess." Ma'dur spoke. "They are too quick to change their allegiance."

Yuri nodded her head as they rounded the corner headed for the elevator that would take them down one level to the research area. "And normally I would agree with you completely Ma'dur. Quellian is different however. I have dealt with him for many years without the knowledge of Robert or my mother. He has never tried to betray me and he has never gone back on what he says he can produce."

Ma'dur nodded. "A trait not normally found in their species."

Yuri nodded. "Exactly. Well... let's see what Quellian has to say shall we? I need to meet with Lidene so we can contact him from Lidene's office."

Ma'dur fell in beside her.

“...find you!” Pa'cour barked as he moved around the corner of the dimly lit corridor.

The Union base was enormous, fully four square kilometers, and built entirely under the thirteen thousand foot high mountain range on the northern continent. When they had first come here, Yuri and he were stunned at the sheer size and scope of the facility. How the Union could build it within High Coven space and never be discovered is something they would probably never know. The power core was connected directly into the molten heart of the planet itself. Huge heat exchangers gathered and then filtered the massive amounts of power to the entire base. Using the core of the planet insured that the base's power signature would never be distinguished from the planet itself, though six massive Shroud generators were erected and always powered from the four corners and the center of the facility. The base was seven stories deep, with the main control center near the top of the mountain. They were only using the first four levels right now, which left the entire level he was currently on to be used as an enormous training ground for those he and Yuri had been able to pull to their cause. The many empty rooms and corridors provided an excellent course for any soldier to learn his or her trade.

It was here among these walls that he had committed all of his combat skill and nearly seven thousand years of experience into training the person most precious to him behind Yuri. They had only been at it for a week now, but they were advancing more rapidly than even he could have imagined.

Events over the past months had flown by. The death and violence that had filled his life had culminated in the one day where he had waited seventeen terrifying seconds before rushing forward and grasping Yuri's shattered body in his arms and forcing her long, vampiric fangs into his thick neck, forcing her to feed off his blood to heal the horrific wounds she had suffered at the hands of Androcles Leonidas. Seventeen seconds waiting for that black mist like cloud to leave her broken body forever. He didn't know how she would react to his actions. He thought for sure she would have him executed. After over twenty years of secretly desiring her in the worst possible way, and knowing that he would never have her, Pa'cour welcomed death at her hands. What he had found instead, it made every day since that single moment in time, a gift he would forever cherish.

Two things he never thought the gods would gift him with were now his, and if he died tomorrow, Pa'cour of the Immortals would die knowing he had experienced everything this life had to offer. He had the most precious jewel of all as far as he was concerned. That jewel had shimmering raven black hair, wonderfully soft, full lips that he had tasted more times than he could count and a lithe body that he had and would worship until the end of his time. His love for Yuri had started the first day he had seen her on Lycavore all those years ago. A taboo that he could let no one know of, for back then, just the hint that he thought of the Princess in such a manner would have been instant death. As the years passed and he remained as her Captain, that secret love grew daily. Love was an emotion that Pa'cour thought himself incapable of until that fateful day that she came to Lycavore and altered his life forever. Yuri altered his world again when she not only embraced his forbidden love for her; she returned that love to him tenfold. Pa'cour knew who she was and what she was capable of. Her life had been hard, and everyone who had been close to her had tried to manipulate her in some manner to get what they wanted. Yuri sensed within him that he was different. He wanted nothing from her. No grand position of power, no staggering amount of credits. He wanted only her love, and the day she died on that planet was the moment that brought two tortured souls together, to heal and begin anew.

Pa'cour felt the flickering of the air too late and suddenly his legs were flying up from beneath him. He felt the soft yet strong hands shove his ankles away and he was crashing to the hard floor with a grunt of pain. His dark eyes blinked and he looked up into the face of his and Yuri's path of redemption and the second thing he never thought he would have.

She had the beautifully angular shaped face of her mother but his near bronze colored skin. The bone spurs along her jaw line were decidedly feminine in appearance and unlike the more pronounced bone spurs of the normal AkruXian female. They were still a healthy white color and provided an eye catching distinctive feature. Her jet black hair was tied into a single long strip that fell to nearly the middle of her back, her eyes the same dark brown as her mother. She stood much shorter than a pureblooded AkruXian female would at only five foot six but she matched her mother's height and general build. She was also endowed with her mother's lush figure. Large breasts and a narrow waist, and a muscular definition that could rival any Spartan woman from the Union. His redemption. His chance at starting over. The culmination of a forbidden love that was no longer forbidden.

His and Yuri's ultimate testament of their love.

Onera.

Their daughter.

"Unless I find you first father!" Onera proclaimed as she lowered the tip of Iphan rie Aellseleum to Pa'cour's chest right above his heart.

Pa'cour glanced at the tip of the sword and lifted his eyes to his daughter with what, to an Immortal, amounted to a shit eating grin. "So it would seem!" He spoke. "Well done! Very well done my daughter!"

Onera smiled and drew back the sword quickly, reaching out her hand for her father and watching as he gripped it. She assisted him as he got to his feet and stared into his dark eyes as he towered over her. "I wish mother was here to see it." She spoke.

Pa'cour met her eyes. "She has seen it Onera." He said. "She has seen it through my eyes dalharil. Never doubt that your mother sees all that you do." (Daughter)

Pa'cour had accepted fully the Mindvoice bond that Yuri and he had forged. With her skillful instruction he had begun to learn how to manipulate this new ability as much as his limited understanding allowed. He was learning more and more and Yuri was an excellent teacher. He knew she hated to be away from Onera, but there were duties that only she could see to and she knew it, as did Pa'cour. To compensate for this Yuri had established a special link that allowed her to see through her husband's eyes when she was focusing hard enough. Pa'cour could feel that focus in his mind even now and he knew Yuri was walking down the corridor in another part of the base and Ma'dur was wondering what she was smiling about.

Onera nodded. "I know." She said with a smile.

Pa'cour took her hand. "You begin your advanced training with the shadows next week dalharil." He told her. "Your mother is looking forward to that. She has been working on the regiment she will teach you for several days now. And she is a master at using the shadows." Pa'cour drew her over to a stack of crates and barrels that lined several of the corridors and motioned for her to sit down. "Onera... your mother is..."

Onera shook her head. "You do not have to explain to me Ilharn." She told him. "You forget... I have seen some of mother's past. Your past. At least that which you chose to show me. I know she does not want to make the same mistakes as before. As she did with my sisters because of the darkness that gripped her." Onera looked away with a smile. "Sometimes she... she smothers me." (Father)

Pa'cour brought Halize rie Aellseleum up and spun it expertly before sliding it into the scabbard on his back with barely a pause. "She is getting better Onera." He spoke. "As she grows more comfortable with herself now, without the darkness of Xaxon filling her, she is becoming more relaxed and easy."

Onera met his eyes and nodded. "I know... and she is! I know... I know she has not shown me everything that monster forced her to do... but I have seen some of it. I know she is hard sometimes, and she can be very vicious... but she keeps that locked away tightly now." She agreed.

Pa'cour nodded. "It is part of the vampire nature... to be cold and calculating. You have it within you as well. That is what Xaxon took advantage of. Twisted to his will. Who you see now... who everyone sees now is the real Yuri. Who she was meant to be. Yes... she can be cruel and harsh at times... but not to her children or those she loves."

"Like you and I." Onera said. "Like... like my sisters?"

Pa'cour nodded more slowly this time. "She will... she will try to make amends to them one day. She doesn't believe forgiveness is deserved from them, I know that, but only time will tell."

"I will always be different... won't I father?" Onera asked softly.

Pa'cour nodded his head. "Yes." He answered honestly. "Because of how you were born and because you are our daughter. There are many who still... who still hate your mother for her actions in the past. Some of that hate is justified... some is not. It is no different for me. We both have many sins to atone for Dalharil, that is why we did not simply disappear when we had the chance. The manner in which we conduct ourselves now is how we will make amends. Unfortunately... when we... when we discovered our love for each other, everything happened so quickly that we did not consider you could be the result."

Onera nodded her head with a sly smile. "Mother said it was the most glorious thing in the world though... making me. She said you make her quiver whenever you look at her."

Pa'cour looked at her with wide eyes. "She... she said that?" He gasped. "Dalharil... you should not speak of such things with me!"

Onera laughed at the expression on her father's face for she had never seen an Immortal blush. "I am not so reserved Papa." She spoke playfully. "And mother is becoming less so. Especially when it concerns you. She... she worships you Papa."

Pa'cour met her gaze. "No more than I worship her." He said.

Onera spun Iphan rie Aellseleum in her slim hand then and seated it into the scabbard in her opposite hand. "These swords Papa... they were not forged by an Immortal or vampire Weapons Master were they." She spoke.

Pa'cour shook his head. "No they are not." He answered looking at Halize rie Aellseleum in his own hand. "They were forged by the elven Weapons Master Nehtes."

Onera's dark eyes grew a little wider. "The Lycavorian Union's Weapons Master?" She gasped. "I have heard some of the other Immortals talking about him. And these swords! How did you... how did you obtain them from him?"

Pa'cour smiled. "They are exquisite are they not?" He spoke lifting Halize and admiring the curve of the pommel. "Forged from pure Union Dragon Armor. Unbreakable and never to lose their razor edge." He said softly, almost reverently Onera noticed. "They... they were a gift from a man." He said looking at her now. "A man who was honoring a request made many thousands of years ago. A man who believed in me. They are called the Hammer and Anvil of Justice in the Lycavorian language and I gave him my word that they would never be used outside of the names they carry. You must honor that now as well."

"Me?" Onera gasped.

"Your skills with the sword are at a level that you will need your own weapon. Iphan is suited for you yes?" Pa'cour asked.

Onera looked at the sword. "Yes!" She rasped. "It feels... it feels like it is almost alive at times."

"Then you will carry it now." Pa'cour told her. "You have earned the right and I trust you will help me to keep my word?"

Onera met his eyes. "Pholor ussta bel'la ilharn." (On my honor father.)

Pa'cour nodded. "Good."

"Who... who gave them to you Papa?" Onera prodded him once more.

Pa'cour looked at her. "There are some things that I keep close to my xukuth Dalharil." He answered with a smile. "Some day you will discover the answer you seek... but for now I will keep this knowledge close. For me... for me it was the day my life truly began."

Onera gripped the scabbard with Iphan in it tighter and pulled it close to her chest. "Then so shall I father." She said softly. "So shall I."

Pa'cour rose to his feet with a nod. "Then before we meet your mother and Nalavi for dinner we need to wash. It would not do for us to stink them out of our quarters would it?"

Onera chuckled softly. "We do smell rather bad don't we?"

Pa'cour nodded. "I also believe it is time for you to have your own quarters." He said.

Onera's eyes lit up in joy. "Really?" She almost shouted.

Pa'cour laughed as he took her arm and they began to walk towards the elevator. "It would not be appropriate for me to worship your mother with you in the next room." He told her calmly.

Onera's face broke into a huge smile and she began to laugh. "Papa! You just made a joke! A sexual joke!" She exclaimed. "Wait until I tell mother!"

Pa'cour grinned and drew her close. "You can accompany us to Nebonese in two days and purchase some items to decorate your new quarters."

"Really?"

Pa'cour nodded. "It was your mother's idea... but since we are going there anyway... it will allow you to begin to grow into who you are."

Onera wrapped her arm around her father's waist and hugged him as they walked. "And give you and mother time to worship each other again!" She said with a laugh.

Pa'cour chuckled. "Well... yes... there is that to consider." He told her.

“...is your complete list?” Yuri asked Lidene looking up to meet the eyes of the Research Professor who was now in charge of the entire Advanced Weapons program thought destroyed on Research Station One.

The man was of medium height, only an inch taller than Yuri’s five foot seven, his brown shoulder length hair slightly unkempt and his facial hair sparsely spaced which gave him a rather haggard appearance all of the time. Yuri had learned long ago to look past that for Lidene was brilliant. He was the one who had used the technology and material from the City Ship on Nuwaroa and integrated it into the High Coven’s Cloning Program. He and those of his team were the only ones her mother had allowed to study and actually work with the Pralor tech, and that is why Yuri had ordered him off the station before the Lycavorian Union reduced it to space rubble. Lidene was mildly excitable and could talk very fast at times, but no one could doubt his mind.

“I... I did not want them... you know... asking for personal items.” Lidene stammered as he looked at her.

Yuri smiled slightly and shook her head. “Lidene... this base will be our home for the foreseeable future.” She told him. “I want everyone to be as comfortable as possible. Many have brought their families here just as your people have.” She handed back the data pad to him. “Please... have your people request what they want. If we can procure it... we will.”

Lidene took the pad from her and nodded. “Thank you... thank you Princess.” He stammered once more.

Yuri nodded. “You have some information for me?” She asked.

Lidene’s eyes lit up. “What? Yes! Oh yes!” He exclaimed turning to the computer station he stood next too. He typed a few commands and Yuri watched as the monitor shifted and changed to show several different variants of weapons systems. “The most promising that we have so far been working on is a version of the Quantum Matter Pulse Cannons.” He adjusted the screen. “We can build the weapon itself with no difficulty, even mount it on a ship, but in order for it to do anything other than sit there, an enormous power core is needed.” He looked at her. “Or a Pralor power core. Twenty billion terawatts of power to be exact.”

Yuri looked at him. “Twenty billion!” She almost shouted. “Lidene... is that... is that even possible? That kind of power... the engine core for the ship would have to be as large as one of our frigates. We can not build a ship that size!”

Lidene shook his head. “No, no!” He said. “But based on the data taken from the Union ships that destroyed Research Station One, the Union has devised a Pralor based engine core. It appears to have been installed on all their capital ships from what I can tell. A Quantum Fusion based Resonance Matter Reactor. Much smaller and much, much more powerful than anything we have without question.”

“They have built their own Pralor ship?” Yuri asked.

Lidene shook his head. “No. They have designed and built an engine based on Pralor technology using materials known to us.” He answered. “And done so in a short time as well if their capital ships all have this power plant. Excellent work too... a bit ungainly if our theoretical specs are right... but excellent work nonetheless.”

Yuri shook her head. “Wait... how were you able to scan their ships Lidene? We have tried on several occasions and were not able to do this.”

Lidene nodded. “Unless you catch them when they are lowering their Shroud Shields. I... I was on a transport in the area when they did this to attack the Research Station One. It only allows a window of four point nine seconds, but I managed to conduct a very simple scan during that time. Nothing they would have detected, but far more than what I had hoped to get. They appear to have worked out the power matrix cycling of the Shrouds and have lessened the gap to less than five seconds. If you are not prepared for it, you will miss the window.”

“And you were prepared for it?” Yuri asked him.

Lidene shrugged his shoulders. “I knew something was going to happen. I got all of our people off, just as you ordered, but I remained behind in a G9 to see for myself.”

“That was a singularly stupid thing to do Lidene.” Yuri scolded him.

It bounced off Lidene and he smiled. "I know! I know!" He exclaimed. "Stupidest thing I've ever done in my life. I..." He looked at Yuri's expression and stopped talking. "Well... I got the readings and then escaped."

"What about... what about the rumors coming out of the Farnuri Expanse. A seven kilometer long ship and a handful of Union craft decimating nearly five hundred front line Kavalian warships." Yuri asked.

"Seven kilometers long." He shook his head. "We don't have..." He looked at her. "Oh... you mean the Union?" Lidene turned to his computer and typed in several commands. "Oh... the answer to that is easy." He answered. "They recovered the ship on Ritaah."

"What? The entire ship?" Yuri gasped. "How?"

"The reports, unconfirmed mind you, they match up almost flawlessly with the sensor readings our ships took of it when it was buried in the mountain. Size matches almost perfectly as I said." Lidene answered. "A Pralor ship of that size, with its advanced technology could easily do what the rumors say."

"So you are saying they have a Pralor ship." Yuri stated.

"Two if you include the one on Earth." Lidene told her. "I can safely estimate most of their current technology is based on the ship they took from Lycavore. Shields. Engines. Power generators. Communications. The Union far surpasses us in these fields now. Because of the one hidden on Earth. This ship from Ritaah not so much. When they do start to incorporate the technology from this new ship, it will be quick however. They already have all the parts in place and they have had twenty plus years to work out the small details. They are very bright you know. And whoever was able to build and modify engine cores based on the Pralors is positively brilliant. I want to meet them! These Pralors... they did not believe in building things small."

Yuri turned away for a moment and shook her head with a sly smile. "Martin Leonidas... you devious bastard! You did know!"

"Princess?" Lidene asked.

Yuri turned back to him. "It's not important right now." She told him. "So you can build these weapons Lidene?"

Lidene nodded his head. "With known materials of course. Not as sturdy or accurate as the Union... we don't have their expertise just yet... but reasonably similar... yes. The Power Cores to operate them... that is another story."

"One thing at a time Lidene. How many different types?" Yuri asked.

"Two different classes of ship based weapons. A unique missile launching technique, but without whatever missiles it is suppose to fire." Lidene said. "We haven't delved that far into the actual data itself. It's very hard to understand in some cases and even with the translation cubes from Nuwaroa... it's slow going. I don't know how the Union got so far along with it. They should have run into the same problems we are having."

"They had Martin Leonidas." Yuri said softly.

"Princess?" Lidene asked.

"If what I have studied these last weeks is even remotely accurate... the Pralor Ship on Lycavore was still nearly intact. The Pralors on that ship integrated into the Lycavorian population over the many centuries." Yuri met his eyes. "The Commander of that Pralor ship is Martin Leonidas's direct descendant. He has to be. My mother's notes referred to him as Sumar. My mother's notes were accurate, albeit very much filled with hatred and anger. She eluded to this in several areas of her journals."

Lidene's eyes grew a little wider. "Then he... then he would have known how to operate the ship! Maybe... maybe not directly or how... but he would have known."

"And don't forget the Avatar." Yuri spoke. "He was this Sumar's Avatar. He was never far from his side and if the journals and logs are accurate... this Avatar would retain everything from his time with Sumar."

Lidene looked at her. "Princess... would it be possible... could I review these journals?" He asked. "The ones that are not..."

Yuri looked at him. "Lidene... that is an excellent idea!" She spoke. "She was very meticulous in logging them. Anything having to do with the Pralors or their technology I will make sure get to you."

Lidene smiled excited. "They may be the keys to truly beginning to understand this technology Princess."

Yuri nodded. "I agree. What about small arms Lidene?" Yuri asked.

“I have a small team on that.” Lidene said. “I thought you only wanted ship data and did not bring that with me.”

Yuri shook her head. “That is fine. Small arms are not a priority right now. You can brief me later on that. Do you need anything to help in your research?”

Lidene met her eyes. “Princess... my team... we...”

Yuri stepped closer to him. “Professor Lidene... I have absolutely no intention of using this data or anything you create in order to conquer or oppress. Would you rather it had fallen into the hands of Admiral Moran?”

“Certainly not! He was a savage and vile...” Lidene stopped with wide eyes and looked at her.

Yuri chuckled at his expression. “Have no fear Professor... in that regard we have similar feelings towards my former husband.” Yuri shook her head. “I give you my word... for what it is worth I know... but I give you my word nothing that you create will be used to subjugate any species.”

“Then... if you don’t mind me asking... why develop it?” Lidene asked.

“So that if... if we need to defend what all of us regard as sacred to us... I want to be able to do that to the best of my ability.” Yuri answered. “You have free reign to proceed how you see fit Lidene. No one will watch over you or demand you build something we have not already agreed too. You answer to no one but myself and Pa'cour.”

“There is something you are not telling me.” Lidene said.

Yuri nodded. “Yes there is... and when I discover what it is myself Lidene... you will be among the first to know.”

“Ah... very good!” Lidene said.

Yuri smiled. “Was there something else?” She asked.

Lidene shook his head. “Don’t like the new group much.” He said. “They seem rather... odd... if you get my meaning.”

Yuri nodded. “Yes I do Lidene. I’ll take care of it.”

“Good. Good. Couple of them were downright scary. I’ll get back to work and let you know of anything new.”

Yuri watched him scamper across his lab towards a group of three other researchers as Ma'dur came up beside her.

“Princess... forgive me my boldness... but this man?” Ma'dur said. “He does not seem to be...”

“All there?” Yuri asked with a smile.

“Yes.” Ma'dur answered.

“He isn’t.” Yuri said. “But he is still the most brilliant man I have ever met with the possible exception of one.” She replied. “Come... let’s use Lidene’s office and check with Quellian before we meet this new group. Given that Lidene mentioned it... I doubt very much it is coincidence.”

“...recommended them?” the Kochab in the transmission snapped defensively. “I haven’t recommended anyone to you in the last three weeks Princess. You know that.” He spoke. “And I certainly would not have told them to meet with you on Jagalir. That spaceport is a cesspool for vermin of every species and it goes against the agreement we made.”

Yuri turned slowly in the chair as his smaller image moved within the office he was occupying on Nebonese. “I gathered as much Quellian.”

The Kochab looked at her evenly in the transmission. “Yuri...” He spoke forgoing her title to let her know he was serious. “We have done business for over ten years. Have I ever misled or lied to you in that time?”

Yuri leaned forward in the chair. “Forgive my lack of inflection Quellian.” She stated quickly. “No Quellian... you have never done any such thing, unlike many who choose to occupy themselves in a similar field as you. You have nothing to fear my friend... not from me. A trust that I hope is mutual?”

Quellian nodded instantly. “It is. Very much so. And it has been for some years now. I hope I have proven that.”

Yuri nodded. "You have more than proven that Quellian. I am troubled by who would direct these individuals however."

"I won't be doing any such thing in the future." Quellian spoke. "Not after you have gone and had a change of heart. Not to mention that walking mountain you now call your Blessed Husband."

Yuri chuckled. "Pa'cour is rather large isn't he?" She said. "I never doubted you Quellian but we needed to be sure." She leaned forward. "Can you find out anything about them or who might be volunteering information in regards to me?"

Quellian nodded his head. "I'll put some feelers out and check my own people to make sure they aren't talking about things they shouldn't be." He told her. "No promises though. Only someone very brave or very stupid would come after you now."

Yuri's eyes narrowed. "What do you mean?"

"The contract that maniac Lycavorian Prince put on you has been removed yes, but not the one by your former husband." Quellian said.

"Robert has put a contract on me?" Yuri said almost casually. "That is so like him. And Androcles Leonidas is no maniac... be assured of that."

"Yes well... it's causing quite the confusing situation." Quellian said.

"How so?" Yuri asked.

"It seems that when the young wolf Prince you angered changed his mind and removed the bounty on your head... he also implied it would not be in the best interests of anyone who continued to pursue the contract." Quellian told her.

Yuri's dark eyes were wide. "He ordered that?" She gasped.

Quellian shook his head. "Not openly no. He implied it however, as I said. Given what has occurred recently within the Lycavorian Union and here in The Wilds, not to mention his display on the Union's Netnews Channels, there are very few who are willing to cross him due to his propensity for obliterating things. He has developed the reputation of being exceptionally unforgiving towards those who harbor ill-will towards him or members of his family. I give you the Icalro Alliance as an example. The survivors of that debacle are still wandering in and all of them are babbling about invisible ships that blew that fledging government into oblivion. Scum though they may have been." Quellian stopped moving within the transmission. "That is why I said they are either very brave or very stupid to come after you. None of the usual sources will even touch the contract put out by your delightful former husband. I must say though... while your Immortal is overly large... he is definitely a vast improvement Yuri. I find myself liking this part of you far more than the old one."

Yuri smiled warmly. "As do I Quellian, as do I. And thank you for your words. I happen to agree with them most vigorously. I will send the remainder of our list to you before we depart tomorrow. That should give you ample time to gather what you are able. We will see you on Nebonese in four days."

The Kochab nodded. "Until then." He said.

Yuri looked at Ma'dur as the transmission ended. "Thoughts?" She asked.

"This Kochab speaks to you with more familiarity than I like Princess, but it seems his information is accurate. We must tell Pa'cour about this contract." Ma'dur stated. "This contract by Robert Moran is not something we knew about."

Yuri nodded her head. "Oh... I will tell him." She said quickly. "You said there were two of them among the group that recently arrived?"

Ma'dur nodded. "Knowing what Quellian has told us now... I believe the rest are also just scum that they hired to cover themselves."

Yuri got to her feet. "Indeed. I tend to agree with you. Robert was never very inventive in his actions. In or out of our bed." She said.

Ma'dur did not meet her eyes out of respect but he chuckled softly nonetheless. "It is truly good to see that your eyes have been opened Princess."

Yuri nodded with a smile. "I agree." She said. "As for our guests... see to it that all of them are eliminated except for our two special guests Ma'dur. Them... I want them interrogated until there is little left to gain from them. I do not care how it is done."

"And then?" Ma'dur asked.

Yuri met his eyes. “Then give their remains to the animals that live around our mountain. They need to eat as well.” She told him coldly.

Ma'dur smiled a positively evil smile. “I will see to it.”

SOLMAR SYSTEM
FEBRUARY 7TH, 0729 HRS, EST
ULU SCIMITAR STRIKE WING
BATTLE OF SOLMAR DAY ONE

They had been warned.

Azlenr had fought with the same fleet for a dozen years and he knew the overall Task Force commander. A man who was a bit rough around the edges and who thought highly of Keleru, but a man who knew his business nonetheless. Azlenr had warned him to keep his guard up after his conversation with Androcles Leonidas. The Lycavorian Prince was well known for being a tactical expert and willing to use very unorthodox in order to win. The Admiral had listened to Azlenr's warning and when their communication ended he promptly dismissed it. He was secure in the knowledge that they had more than enough ships in the system to handle even a full scale assault. He was also confident that should the need arise, reinforcements were not far away.

He was wrong on both counts.

No reinforcements would be coming, but not because they were not available. They would not be coming because they had been ordered to stand down.

And no matter his experience... the Kavalian Task Force Commander had only fought High Coven up until this day. He was used to having High Coven forces fight a defensive battle and quickly move out of the area after one or two volleys of their weapons. He had never fought a dedicated force of men and women from multiple species, all with the same enduring will to win.

When the ten MOONLANCER B-Class Battlecruisers dropped from LSD operation on the edge of the planetary system, the reaction of the Kavalian crews was slow and wrought with surprise at the appearance of Union capital ships. The MOONLANCER Bs were well out of the range of any Kavalian weapon and the Task Force commander sent word off to Azlenr that they were turning to meet Union ships. He ordered fighters launched from the six GREAT SOULs under his command and then he ordered fully half his DIATAGAs and DIMERUs to move to engage the ships. He gave the orders with confidence and more than a little arrogance and he walked directly into the careful trap Sa'sur had laid.

The MOONLANCER-Class Battlecruiser had originally been designed as a carrier of fighters to support the LEONIDAS I-Strike Cruisers. With the introduction of the LEONIDAS II their role had changed significantly and then with the advent of the ARIZONA-Class the older ship found its niche. Fifty of the enormous ships had undergone a swift refit, dispensing with much of the aircraft and hanger deck items needed to sustain fighters. In place of fighters, the B variant now sported one hundred M22A Missile Batteries, broken into ten separate launchers. Five of the massive batteries deployed along each enormous wing of the MOONLANCER B, each launcher with ten individual tubes. Three stretched across the top of each wing, two under each wing, giving the ship a decidedly ugly appearance. That appearance however, did not take away from the role of the MOONLANCER B in any way. As if on some unheard order, the moment the Kavalian ships turned to meet them, each MOONLANCER B opened up with every missile in its bays. Designed for a sustained bombardment of almost twenty minutes before its magazines ran dry, in the space of just four seconds, one thousand M22A ZMF were launched directly at the oncoming Kavalian ships. As the last missile left its launcher, five of the huge ships broke to the right and five to the left, each of them defying Kavalian reports that they were nothing more than lumbering behemoths. And each going through it's two minute reload cycle just as fast as their crews and computers could go. None of them wanted to be left out of the battle ahead.

The Kavalian Task Force commander, a man by the name of Gordna, came out of his chair with stunned eyes as his bridge crew began to scream about missiles.

“Report damn it!” He bellowed. “Give me a report!”

“Incoming missiles Admiral!” The sensor operator shouted. “Tracking a thousand of them! Unknown type!”

Gordna’s eyes grew even wider. “A thousand!” He gasped.

“It’s hard to track them! They have some sort of stealth profile!”

“Targeting on our DIATAGAs and DIMERUs!”

“Union ships breaking away!”

Gordna went to the closest tactical station on the bridge of his GREAT SOUL. “Order evasive!” He screamed. “Order our ships to start evasive maneuvers! Break contact!”

“Most of the missiles appear to be locked on already Admiral!” The operator barked.

Gordna was a man of emotion, as all Kavalians were. The emotion foremost in his mind right now was anger and he turned to watch as the larger tactical holo image showed the Union ships breaking away but not retreating out of the system. It was then that he made his second tactical error and doomed his Task Force forever.

“Don’t let them escape!” He snarled. “Second Echelon of DIEROYs move to engage the missile ships! Destroy them! Order all fighters to concentrate on them! Have our DIATAGAs and DIMERUs engage the missiles targeted on them! Form into groups and concentrate their point defenses!”

“Admiral... the missiles will impact in twenty-six seconds!” The operator gasped. “They can not...”

“DO IT!” Gordna roared. “Helm... come to course four seven nine three point two!” He moved back to his command chair. “I will show these Union dogs who is the superior fighter here! Power forward batteries and target the closest Union ship!”

It was a bold move and had the ten MOONLANCER Bs been the only threat, a move that would have no doubt succeeded as he brought his GREAT SOUL and its superior firepower to bear on the missile ships. There was only one flaw with his plan, and it was a flaw that would cost him his life. The MOONLANCERs were the bait. And if you wanted to live, you never took the bait in an ambush.

SCIMITAR STRIKE GROUP KINDRED SOUL GROUP ATTACHED
HOLDING OUTSIDE SOLMAR PLANETARY SYSTEM

“... That’s it Captain!” The Tactical Officer barked out from his station as he turned to look at where Sa'sur stood with Sadi, Ne'Veha, Jomann and Vengal. “The Kavalian Task Force has committed!”

Sa'sur smiled a predatory smile as she came to her feet from her command chair. “Stupid fucking Kavalians! Always thinking with their cocks!” She muttered hotly under her breath drawing a large grin from Sadi and Ne'Veha. “Signal the Strike Group! Prepare to jump into the system! Execute Plan Omega Four Three!” She barked out the orders. “Strike Wing Bravo to cover the KINDRED SOUL until she breaches the atmosphere! Wings Charlie and Delta to maneuver and engage. We are going straight for that fool Kavalian!”

“We’ll launch and follow Bravo and the KINDRED SOUL to the surface Sa'sur.” Sadi spoke. “General Vengal will assume overall command while General Washington and Colonel Mosont deploy and secure our position.”

“Andro and Dorian have already begun to stage and move the civilians they have to this area. Once we are secure, we’ll begin shuttling them up to the fleet.” Vengal spoke.

Sa'sur nodded. “We’ll keep the skies clear.” She spoke confidently. “I already have three fighter groups ready to deploy and escort from the surface. Captain Patton is going to be really pushing the KINDRED SOUL at a steep angle so remain back from his wake.”

Sadi and Ne'Veha nodded. “We will.” Ne'Veha answered.

Sa'sur nodded. “Alright... let’s do this.” She said.

Sadi nodded her head and knew then why Sa'sur and Andro had been such a success as a pair. Separately they could and did motivate and drive people around them forward. Together commanding the SCIMITAR, they drove men and women to greatness that few, save the crew of MJOLNIR'S HAND and Riall's ship, could surpass.

Sadi looked at Ne'Veha. "Come SirsanGai." She spoke taking her hand. "Our mate calls to us."

Jomann and Vengal fell in behind them silently as they left the bridge and Sa'sur couldn't help but grin as she turned back to her Combat Display. She looked over at her Tactical Officer. "Andro's going to need to do some serious body worshipping to get rid of the anger they have at him." She said.

The female elf chuckled and nodded her head in agreement. "I think he is up to the task Captain. And I don't believe they are as angry as they like everyone to think."

Sa'sur nodded. "No doubt!" She agreed and turned to face the main portion of her bridge. "Ok people! Twenty seconds! Get ready!"

ULU KINDRED SOUL WASP-CLASS ASSAULT CRUISER

She stood looking at the men and women of her command and could not feel anything but confident pride. They stretched back as far as she could see along this deployment section of their Drop Pods.

Colonel Josephine Miller. Commander of the Second Brigade, 82nd Cataphract Division, United Lycavorian Union military. The "Rabid Dogs" as they were affectionately referred to by other officers within the division. Josephine Miller, or Josie as she preferred unless you cared to have your teeth rattling around your mouth for calling her Josephine, was pound for pound as hard as they came. Her five foot seven body was a hundred and twenty-six pounds of chiseled muscle and bone. There was no body fat on her tanned frame whatsoever, yet she retained her feminine appeal because of the shape of her incredible ass and her firm, medium sized breasts. She had joined the Union military at seventeen, ten years after Earth was freed and one of a wave of volunteers that joined in the years after the Battle for Earth twenty eight years ago. She was quickly chosen for officer's school after her basic training because of her drive and intense charisma and the powers that be wanted human officers who could motivate and lead. At only nineteen years of age, almost ten years to the day after the end of the Battle for Earth, she found herself graduating from a shortened Officer's Training School and thrust into command of a platoon. Her history and reputation only grew from there.

Josie Miller was one of only nine human officers to lead forces during the Evolli war and one of only three in command of Union units during the Battle of Alba Tau. Her joint human and Drow scout unit had seen extensive action across that jungle hellhole of a planet and it was the cause of the single long scar that now decorated her face. A thin three and a half inch long scar from the end of an Evolli blade that ran from just below her left eye to just beneath her jaw. It was a wound that had grown infected before she was able to reach one of the Hadarian Healers, and while they could have removed any trace of a scar, Josie chose to keep it as a reminder of what happen on that planet. Josie Miller was not a woman to be trifled with as many had learned over the years. Her father, a General of Earth forces, worked closely with War Master Tareif and General Lynwe. The defense of Earth and all they had built from the ruins was foremost in their minds. Josie had beaten down many who had challenged her or her form of command, and she had the distinct label as the only human officer to ever tell a visiting alien dignitary to go fuck himself.

Josie lifted her hand and looked at the new Cataphract armor she and all her troops wore. Ten years of research had gone into the development of the Cataphract Armor and the finished product was about to get its baptism under fire. The Cataphract armor was special. A flexible layer of ArmorPly against the wearer's body, a Ducorsis weave on top of that layer, and finally a combination of Dragon Armor and Crystanium combined in a mixture that made it both light and incredibly durable. Within each layer of the armor were microfilaments that monitored the body of each wearer and served as an exoskeleton of sorts. The body armor made the wearer naturally stronger and faster and able to endure on the battlefield far longer than the normal human. Charles Taylor had been screaming for years about getting the humans involved more in the military portion of the Union's defense. He wanted humans to carry their own weight, and after years of research Ben O'Connor had delivered. Josie flexed her hand, feeling the added power in her grasp and the sense of accomplishment the armor gave to her. She looked up finally and glanced at the grizzled Sergeant Major who had been at her side for nearly a decade now. He nodded, holding both her helmet and his under his arms. Josie nodded back to him and climbed up onto the stack of ammunition crates.

“Listen up you Rabid Dogs!” She bellowed. Her voice carried over the distance only so far, but the implants they all wore insured even those in the back rows heard her. “This is it! The Kavalians have taken the bait and in two minutes we’re jumping into the shit!” Josie let her eyes sweep across the gathered men and women. “Many of you have been with me for a while so the same shit applies! For you new people... listen up! President Taylor and the King have been working towards this day for over ten years! The day when humans finally announced to the stars that we are here to stand up for what the Union means! The Lycavorians and the Elves have carried us for too long! Now we have the ability to carry our own weight out here! Now we show everyone that we can kick their ass just as well on the ground as Admiral Lorian does in the stars!”

Josie smiled when that comment got a rousing round of proud roars of approval. Miranda Lorian had become somewhat of an icon among the humans within the Union military. Her accomplishments showed everyone that humans could be just as important as anyone else.

“We got this armor... but it doesn’t make up for what we have in our heads and hearts!” Josie continued. “That is what drives us! The King and President Taylor never gave up on us and now it’s time to show them their faith wasn’t in vain! You all know the plan... once we are groundside... 1st Brigade and my command group link up with Colonel Mosont and a brigade of Durcunusaan! We secure their LZ since we are gonna be groundside first!” This brought even louder cheering from her people and Josie glanced back to where the Lycavorian commander of the Durcunusaan division stood with another. He smiled at her before she turned back. “The Kavalians have killed civilians! Innocent civilians who it’s our job to protect and defend! Now we get payback for them and get the rest of them offworld!” She shifted her form on the crates. “If it’s Kavalian... kill it with extreme prejudice! We don’t take prisoners on this Op! Not unless the word comes down! This is where we shine! President Taylor and King Leonidas worked hard at getting humans back into the thick of things, and this armor does it. But as the King says... if you break it, you buy it. And at twenty million riyal per suit... your ass will be in the military for a long time paying it back!”

That comment brought laughter now, cutting away the pre-combat tension that had been hanging over them.

“We are not invincible! Keep your wits about you! For you new people... listen to those who have seen combat before! Take what they say to heart! It may just save your ass and I don’t write letters very well!” Josie exclaimed. “You die on me... I’ll haunt your sorry ass for the rest of your spirit living fucking life!” Josie grinned at the wide eyes and stunned expressions she saw among the many new faces. They would be looked after by the older members of her Brigade she knew. “Maintain your spacing during the Drop! Stay with your platoons and companies and don’t over compensate on your Pod’s controls! And if you happen to land on top of one of those furry bastards, once you blow your hatch, bend over and introduce yourself! Right before you blow their sorry ass into the next life!” Josie turned to her Sergeant Major. “Sergeant Major... let’s do this!”

The man nodded and looked at the gathered men and women. “Alright you rabid dogs! Man your pods! Drop your socks and grab your cocks and pussies! It’s time to go to war!”

Josie chuckled as she stepped off the crate and moved over to her command group. She stared at Mosont for a long moment and he finally smiled. “Inspiring speech.” Mosont spoke.

“Don’t jerk my chain!” Josie snapped as she stepped up to him. “I don’t like being a puppet! Why are we being assigned to you?”

Mosont shook his head quickly. “You misunderstand your purpose Colonel Miller.” He said. “You are not being assigned to me. I asked General Washington for the best Brigade within the 82nd. There is no second fiddle here. The reason for my request is quite simple. I needed the best. The Kavalians on the surface have no doubt been made aware of our ambush by now and they will soon see our ships jumping into the system. They know the Prince is on the surface. He will need to break his Shroud based ground cover to get the civilians to the KINDRED SOUL. When he does that... every Kavalian on three continents will know where he is. They will drive right for him. Which is exactly what he wants them to do.”

Josie nodded her head. “Get the civilians off with all the attention focused on him.” She said.

Mosont nodded. “You see now why I requested you. Our two brigades are going to be moving directly from the LZ to his location in order to reinforce him. I do not want to be delayed by petty Kavalian forces. We destroy anything that gets in our way. Something I am to understand you do quite well.”

Josie grinned. "That's been said about me... yeah." She said.

"This is not an easy mission Colonel Miller... and I have the utmost respect for what you have accomplished. I commend you." Mosont said. "I basically want someone who I do not need to babysit. That is you." Mosont motioned to the Lycavorian next to him. "Allow me to introduce Dilochites Lemios. He will act as your liaison to me. There are times when radio communication will be spotty at best. He can Mindvoice me with any ideas or orders you feel necessary if the radios are not working. He's also fully drop qualified."

The Lycavorian was easily over six foot and his helmet hid most of his features but Josie looked at those piercing green eyes and saw no fear. He was a Lycavorian and she knew of very few who were afraid of anything. He bowed his head to her slightly. "It will be an honor to work with you Colonel." He spoke.

"You might regret saying that." Josie quipped.

The large Lycavorian shrugged his shoulders. "We shall see." He said. "But I sincerely doubt it."

Mosont held out his hand to her and Josie took it. "Good luck Colonel. May the gods guide your actions and I will see you on the ground."

Josie nodded. "Same to you." She said. She watched him turn and walk away and then her eyes went to Lemios. "Let's find you a pod..." She spoke. "We drop in six and a half minutes."

SOLMAR ANDROCLES'S TAC BASE

"... them in tight!" Andro's voice carried over the din of hundreds of men and women moving into the ships as quickly and safely as they could. He stood near the end of the ramp up in to the KADEN transport, a small Bontawillian girl in one arm as he ushered others forward with his free arm. Aleatia stood silently on the ramp of the STRIKER not far away with Harira and Kelelm watching him, Harira's eyes wide. "No one gets left behind!" They heard him yell above the sound of hundreds of feet.

"What is happening?" She asked having just this moment caught up to where Aleatia was.

Kelelm looked at her. "The assault has begun." He stated more calmly than he felt, but in the few short hours he had been among them, Kelelm was still filled with confidence and pride at what they had accomplished so far. "Union ships have entered the system and begun their attack against this Kavalian fleet. They are preparing to move the civilians to the staging area that reinforcing ground units will secure roughly four kilometers from here near the beach."

Ibani and Osbela came rushing up to them as well now. "Mother!" Ibani declared.

Aleatia looked at them and reached for their hands. "The Union attack has started." She told them. "We will be leaving shortly."

"Where is Sehri?" Osbela asked quickly.

Aleatia turned her head back to where the civilians were loading the KADEN and their eyes followed, seeing Sehri come moving back down the ramp of the KADEN and right up to where Andro was standing. He didn't hesitate and held out the small child for her to take. As Sehri scooped her into her arms, Andro moved to an elderly Bontawillian woman who was struggling to keep up with the rush of bodies and he lifted her into his arms without pause. He and Sehri immediately turned to go back into the KADEN as the woman in Andro's arms hugged him in happiness and relief.

"You see the way they look at him." Aleatia said softly. "With reverence in their eyes. It is how they look upon Sehri now as well. Just for being with him."

"You need to have her come with us Lady Aleatia." Harira spoke moving up to her. "She cannot remain here!"

"She's right mother!" Ibani insisted.

Aleatia smiled. "At this juncture... there is very little I would be able to force your sister to do." She stated.

"She is the youngest!" Osbela snapped. "She must listen to you!"

Aleatia smiled. "I don't think it is up to us any longer." She stated. She looked at Kelelm. "Is it my son?"

Kelelm shook his head. "No. The battle is already set in motion." He stated. "Once we receive word that Androcles's forces have secured their objectives, these ships with the civilians will leave. The Kavalians will undoubtedly detect where they came from and descend upon this area in overwhelming force."

"What?!" Harira gasped. "Kelelm... you are sure?"

Kelelm nodded. "It is a sound tactic. We will have revealed our position and the Kavalian leadership will be under the mistaken impression that killing Androcles will bring victory. At least that is the path they have followed so far."

Harira looked at Aleatia. "Lady Aleatia... then we need to be on one of those ships!" She rasped.

Aleatia looked at her. "You see these people Harira?" Aleatia said. "Different from us though they may be... it is obvious they are in no position to fend for themselves. I will not take the spot of one of them to protect myself."

"This is not our fight!" Harira exclaimed. "Dyack would agree with me and send you away!"

Aleatia shook her head. "Do not presume to know what my husband and mate would do better than I Shaman Master Harira." She spoke in a low, harsh voice. "Dyack would not place innocents in harm's way to save himself or any of us, though he would surely want too."

"This is not our fight!" Harira repeated her statement.

"That is where you are wrong Shaman Master." Kelelm spoke. "This is our fight. It became our fight the moment that we discovered part of our history with these men and women. We are Lycavorian... just as they are."

"We are Rothryn!" Harira hissed.

Kelelm smiled at her. "And what is a Rothryn Shaman Master Harira? A Lycavorian that simply cannot change their form. That is the only difference between us and it is certainly not enough of a difference for me to turn my back on everything that we have discovered since embarking on this trip."

Aleatia nodded. "Well spoken my son." She said. "There is so much more for us to learn. And I know Dyack would want us to learn it all."

Harira shook her head. "You must keep Sehri close by at least!" She snapped. "She is part of the Circle of Shamans! You cannot let her put herself at risk with this... this Androcles."

Aleatia grinned. "I have no control over that at this point." She answered.

"Mother!" Osbela exclaimed.

Aleatia looked at her daughter. "I know we had hoped something would happen between Androcles and you or Ibani, but that is not going to be the case Osbela. I'm sorry." She turned back to look at Androcles at the top of the ramp as he set the older woman down with extreme gentleness and let her shower his cheeks with kisses of gratitude. "With what I have discovered over the last few hours talking with Androcles... there is nothing that will alter your sister's path now. A path she walks with great happiness and hope."

"... Is everyone Milord." The Bontawillian spoke to Andro at the bottom of the ramp of the KADEN.

Andro nodded his head. "Keep everyone calm Councilman Chael." He said. "When the word comes for the ship to take off... it will be quick."

The Bontawillian nodded his head. "Milord Prince... what you have done here? It cannot be..."

Andro shook his head now. "What I have done is my duty."

Chael nodded and reached out to take Andro's free hand. Sehri clutched his other hand tightly. He looked at her now as well and took her free hand in his. "May I... may I assume this is...?"

Andro looked at Sehri with bright azure eyes and then back to him. He nodded his head. "Yes." He said.

Chael smiled. "Princess Sadi... Princess Ne'Veha... the others and now this shining light Milord." He spoke. "The gods of the mountains truly look upon you with their blessings that you discover and claim such strong women."

"I'll agree with that." Andro spoke.

Chael reached up and placed his palm to Sehri's cheek. "The blessings and thanks of my people go with you Princess." He said. "With both of you."

Andro and Sehri watched as he turned and quickly made his way up the ramp into the KADEN as it began to close. Sehri looked at Andro.

“He called... he called me Princess.” She said in a soft, disbelieving voice.

Andro smiled and drew her close to him with one arm. Sehri didn't hesitate and wrapped her arms around his waist with a bright smile. “That is what you will be if you choose.” He told her.

“It is Androcles.” Sehri answered him, her eyes never leaving his face as she looked up at him with confidence and desire. “More... more than anything.”

Andro leaned over and captured her lips with his surprising her with the intensity of the kiss. Sehri returned the kiss with equal passion, feeling the heat within her veins because of her fever grow even hotter at her desire for this powerful Alpha wolf holding her. Not until she had come into her Coming of Age fever had her wolf instincts and blood surged so powerfully to the forefront within her and she knew it was because of the wildness she smelled and sensed within Androcles. He pulled away reluctantly after a long moment but not before leaning over more and firmly nuzzling the ridge of her ear and causing delicious shivers of enchantment to race through her. “Come... we will make contact with KertaGai and the others. They will be making their approach soon and we need to get this over with soon.”

Sehri looked at him oddly with adoring eyes as his touch only added to the overwhelming craving she had for him and the women she had yet to meet. “Why? Isn't it... isn't it better to be safe.”

Andro smiled at her. “Because your scent is driving me mad and no doubt it will do the same to Sadi and the others when they arrive. I'm going to kick the Kavalians ass so that we can get you back to my ship and have our way with you.”

Sehri felt a warm sexual flush surge through her at his words and she pressed her body closer to his, feeling so very beautiful and confident with the way he spoke and looked at her. “You... you are very confident Androcles Leonidas.” She cooed to him.

Andro smiled and his azure eyes grew even brighter as he looked at her. “I know what your scent makes me feel. What it will make Sadi, Ne'Veha and Lu'ria feel because they are also wolf. I know what it will make Carisia feel because we are tied so tightly together within Mindvoice. I hope you are prepared Sehri... we will love you senseless.”

Sehri smiled as well, her face lighting up. “I think I will... I will savor that forever.” She said.

Andro smiled and took her hand and they headed for the STRIKER.

SOLMAR KAVALIAN BASE CAMP SOUTHERN SETTLEMENT

“...hitting our fleet hard!” The Kavalian tech monitoring the battle above shouted across the command room. Azlenr didn't respond to him as he stormed into his command center with Byka right behind him. “They are taking heavy damage!”

“They outnumber the Union fleet!” Azlenr almost screamed.

“They caught Admiral Gordna unprepared!” The man answered.

Azlenr snarled his anger. “More than likely they caught him fucking one of his slave girls!” He growled. “Insure all ground batteries are alert and prepared to repel any assault of this base that comes!” Azlenr snarled as he strode across the command center. “And get me a link to the Prefect!”

His COM officer turned and shook his head. “Communications is jammed General!” He reported. “We can't even talk with the ships in orbit! It began the moment the missile ships were detected! It is unlike any jamming I have ever seen! Nothing but white noise and complete silence on all channels!”

Azlenr looked at Byka and he nodded. “Just like at Kranek.” He said softly. “Reports say they never got a warning off before they were obliterated.”

“Have all air assets prepare for a mobile assault!” Azlenr snapped turning back to his men. “This fool Prince will have to reveal his location at some point before they begin landing troops and I want to be able to smash him into oblivion when he does! Have Major Marsin join us in my office when he gets here! Byka!”

Azlenr motioned him to follow and he turned and marched into the room that used to be the office and quarters for the Bontawillian Security Chief. Azlenr turned and waited for the door to shut before he reached out and locked it electronically. Byka looked at him oddly as he turned and moved to the makeshift desk that had been set up.

“Azlenr... what is going on?” Byka asked. “The Union is attacking in force! We need to respond! They must have troops they are going to land!”

Azlenr nodded. “No doubt.” He stated looking at his friend. “How long have we served together Byka?”

“Nearly three hundred years now.” Byka answered instantly moving closer. “And I know when something is wrong. What is it?”

Azlenr held out the data pad to him. “Read this.” He said.

Byka reached out with a puzzled expression and took the pad. He pulled it back and began to read silently, his eyes narrowing and growing dark as he read. All he needed was thirty seconds and he looked up.

“Where did you get this?” He snapped.

“The where does not matter at the moment does it” Azlenr said. “Do you think it is possible Byka?”

“Azlenr I...” Byka began.

“I asked you a question old friend. We have never held back from each other even in the worst of times when we have stood side by side against vampire forces.” Azlenr spoke again stopping his words. “Do you think it is possible?”

Byka looked at the pad once more before looking up and meeting Azlenr’s eyes. “Up... up until two years ago I would have said no.” He stated evenly.

Azlenr knew immediately what he meant. “What happen with Kameka?” He said.

Byka nodded his head. “I saw the way Keleru handled that.” He stated. “Nothing was done to Marsin. What he allowed Kameka to do afterwards, to become a pilot; it was only done as some sort of retribution. A ploy to appease the Pride leaders who support him but are more liberal and modern in their thinking.”

Azlenr nodded. “A view that more and more of our younger Pride leaders are beginning to share.”

Byka moved closer to him. “Where did you get this Azlenr?” He asked. “If Marsin’ Jiate discovers you have this he would be within his rights as Puma Bane Commander to arrest you and question you.”

Azlenr nodded. “Yes he would.” He replied. He turned and moved to the small counter and poured two glasses of the Bontawillian juice they had discovered upon taking the colony. “I was with the prisoner.” He explained as he turned around. “The vampire. His name is Robaran.”

Byka took the offered glass. “The prisoner? Why?”

Azlenr sipped the juice. “I wanted... I wanted to question him about this Androcles Leonidas.” He answered. “Perhaps find out how he thinks. Did you know that when a vampire takes the blood of someone, not a victim, but someone they care for, it develops a bond between them? A bond within what they call Mindvoice.”

Byka shook his head. “I never stopped to speak with any vampire long enough to ask such questions.” He answered.

Azlenr nodded his head. “Neither did I.” He said. “Until this Robaran. He is unlike the vampires we are so accustom too from the High Coven. There is no arrogance within his voice or his demeanor. He even referred to me as sir on a number of occasions.”

Byka shook his head. “I’m not following you Azlenr.”

Azlenr set the glass of juice down on the desk. “He is to be married to a female elf. She is on this planet as we speak among the Prince’s forces. She was given a message to pass to him within this Mindvoice. A message from Prince Androcles to me. This information was found by Union commandos on the commander of the northern settlement Byka. They were not able to decrypt all of it... but enough to know what the body of the message intends.”

Byka moved closer to him. “The prisoner gave you this?” He gasped. “You believe him? And why would the Lycavorian Prince send this after what he said in the transmission?”

Azlenr met his eyes. “What do you think my friend?” He asked. “Could what he says be true?”

“Azlenr that is crazy!” Byka spoke. “The Prefect could never hope to accomplish that and get away with it!” Byka looked at him. “Could he?”

“Why not?” Azlenr asked. “The Puma Bane Troops belong to him. To a man they would do whatever he commanded of them. He has warned us both in the past we allow too much freedom and control to our clones and he does not approve of it. That our men are loyal to us and not to the Imperium as a whole. Not to him. He has over three thousand of his Puma Bane troops on this operation alone. Why send so many?”

“We are successful!” Byka hissed. “We are successful because we grant this to our clone troops! And they fight harder and longer! They trust us!”

Azlenr nodded. “Yes... and that is what he sees as wrong.” He turned and moved to the window. “This entire operation felt wrong from the start Byka.” He said softly. “So close to the Union border. A Bontawillian colony and not Lycavorian. Innocents and not soldiers. And then there is Marsin. The man who scarred your daughter. A man who insists on killing innocents even when he is told they took no part in the death of his men. Why send him when he has so many other Puma Bane Commanders?” Azlenr turned and looked at Byka. “Up until an hour ago I was blind Byka... now... every nerve ending and combat sense that I have is standing at attention. And not because of the Union forces.”

“So you... you believe this information?” Byka asked.

“I believe that it is no coincidence that Marsin was chosen to be on this operation and not someone else.” Azlenr told him. “You heard Keleru yourself Byka. He didn’t care that there were civilian casualties. It didn’t faze him. Even after we told him that civilians were not responsible. That ought to tell you something old friend.”

Byka looked away for a long moment then turned back to him. “Azlenr... could what this vampire said... about the attack on their offices that killed children... could it be true?” He asked.

“I don’t know.” Azlenr spoke. “I will tell you this though... the more I learn... the more I believe he will do anything to gain more power.”

“Even target innocents?” Byka asked. “Children? Doing this would start a war with even the most docile of species! Against Lycavorians who value their females and children so... it is insanity!”

“Many of our comrades do not view the lives of innocents as we do Byka.” Azlenr said. “Another reason the Prefect does not care for us.”

Byka shook his head. “This is... it is all so outrageous!” He exclaimed. He looked at him. “What do you intend to do?”

“I mean to send Marsin and his Puma Bane troops after this Androcles when he reveals his location.” Azlenr spoke. It will be the only chance we have to stop the Union assault. If we kill him before they begin to land troops they may just retreat.”

Byka looked at him. “And if not?”

“Then you make sure that you do what you have wanted to do to Marsin for many years.” Azlenr spoke. “Give his life to Kameka. Remove him and the remainder of his men will fall in line enough to repel the Union attack and give us time to determine what is going on and what our future holds.”

“If any of this is true... if any of this is true my friend... our future may not be extending past our actions on this planet.” Byka said softly.

“I will not allow the Lycavorians to slaughter our men for actions which we neither agree with or would have supported.” Azlenr spat. “This also makes me wonder how many of our people actually know how this stupid war began! We had enough problems battling the High Coven!”

“And now they are aligned with the Union.” Byka said shaking his head. “Events have not worked out as I imagined.”

“Do they ever?” Azlenr said. He turned back to the window. “Choose your finest scout team Byka.” He said turning back. “Insure they have secure communications that the Union has not already jammed. Give them a LEUGERS and send them to Nebonese. Have them use the planet has cover to escape the Union ships. You have spies there you can trust yes? Men who will not be tainted by the information Keleru tells our people?”

Byka nodded. “Yes. Why?”

“Tell them to find out what the truth is Byka.” Azlenr stated firmly. “What this vampire Robaran has told me? It is almost too fantastic to believe.” Azlenr looked at him evenly. “Tell them to find out if we started this war to fuel the Prefect and Marshall Pusintin’s craving for power and their hatred of the Union. Tell them to find out if we started this war by killing children Byka.”

TALISMAN
PRALOR VECTOR-CLASS ATTACK CRUISER
ON COURSE FOR ONTEROM

Nearly two and a half kilometers long, the VECTOR-Class Attack cruisers were one of the newest designs of Pralor engineers and the first ships they had built after they had come to live on Artaaya. Many of the surviving senior officers and military fleet personnel from the war with the Scourge had advocated smaller ships that were not simply lumbering targets for the massive and powerful Scourge NEST-Class Carrier ships. Without the devastating influence of the new VORTEX-Class Heavy cruisers, introduced far too late in the conflict to help them, the Pralor fleet could not stand against the Scourge with the few remaining heavy warships they had. Currently they had only twenty-seven of the VECTOR-Class warships, the center of eight different fleets made up of an assortment of different smaller warships. All of them were hiding and training within different nebulas around their star system to hide from any Scourge patrol that might possibly wander by while also remaining close enough to begin to evacuate the planet should it be necessary. More warships were being built, but at a much slower pace than many of those within the military complex liked. They feared not being able to defend Artaaya if the need arose.

Murano stood staring out of the view window of the crew's lounge on deck thirty-one of the TALISMAN. His hands were clasped behind his back and he stood causally, ignoring the low murmurs of the crew that occupied the lounge. Word had spread very quickly that a Praetorian still lived and that he was on their ship. Many of the younger Pralors scrambled to get a glimpse of him for they had grown up reading and studying about them in their classes. The teachers of the new generations had refused a proposed edict by some members of the Elder Convention to remove the Praetorians and their history from what was taught in the schools. The many Pralors who taught the children and had survived because of Praetorians and their actions refused and after this failed attempt the proposed edict was forgotten. The actions of the Praetorians during the First Scourge War, as well as their sacrifices in the first decades of the second war had soon elevated them to near iconic status. Being that they were thought long extinct, when it was first discovered that the Praetorian Murano, a man who had fought behind the very First Praetorian Sumar, lived and breathed and was only middle aged by Pralor standards, it sent most of the crew into a tizzy as they tried to look upon the holy Praetorian in their midst. Several of the more history oriented buffs among the crew delved into the historical archives on the ship and discovered Murano's storied history. His exploits as a young Praetorian with Sumar, the very first and most powerful of the Praetorians, were now making the rounds of the ship.

Murano allowed his eyes to simply stare off into nothing as he let his memories drift to the forefront of his mind and once more fill him with pride and strength. The charges they had led against Scourge forces during the first war. The impossible tasks that Sumar had devised and then executed with brilliance. Fighting beside him had been the honor of Murano's life. He truly cared for all those under his command and there were times when Murano had seen him weep over the bodies of fallen Praetorians. None of them questioned his skill or his purpose and every Praetorian drew from the strength of purpose that Sumar so exuded. Even though they were victorious in the end, Sumar had known the Scourge would return to exact their revenge. He made it his priority to restore the ranks of the Praetorians even as he was named Chief Elder Pralor of their people. Murano knew this was done against the will of many older Pralors who did not appreciate or agree with how Sumar did things. He was too quick to action they said, and it was his own brother, another Praetorian, who insured that the Scourge's hatred would never die. Many blamed him for Xaxon's actions and while Sumar paid these thoughts and musings no mind, they were part of the reason he chose to command City Ship Mission 4039 himself. So that he could replenish the ranks of the Praetorians with those whom he had trained with his Holy One's help.

Sumar and Wayonn were a pair talked about all over the Pralor empire at the end of the first war. Where one went, the other was never very far behind. Wayonn was more a brother to Sumar than his own blood and many believed this is what drove the two of them to greatness among the Praetorians. They personified the bond between Praetorian and Holy One. Murano and his own Holy One were much the same way. Aleia was passionate about what they did and what they were protecting and Murano drew strength from this, just as she drew strength from his power and abilities. Aleia was long dead now, killed in one of the last Scourge attacks as they were escaping into the unknown, slashed to bloody pieces by three Scourge Warrior Elites as she was defending a small group of refugees. Dead and always remembered, just like Sumar and Wayonn.

Murano blinked slowly when those thoughts crossed his mind. The presence he felt was staggering in its power, so much so that it reminded him of Sumar and the aura he presented to all who could feel him. The presence was also darker in a way he could not place his finger on. Not in an evil sense... but wild and raw in its emotions. As if that darkness was part of the very essence of the individual. Whoever it was, he was very well trained to be able to shield his essence so completely and...

“Murano?” Delnash’s voice broke into his thoughts and he turned his head to look upon his older brother by two years.

“Delnash?” He spoke in that deep measured voice.

“You were deep in meditation Murano. Please forgive me for interrupting you.” Delnash spoke as he began to turn away.

Murano smiled and shook his head. “Memories brother. Only memories. No apology is needed.” He told him. “I should be commending you on your work. In leading our people how you have these last centuries and in keeping my secret for so long.”

Delnash bowed his head slightly with a smile. “You disapprove of many of my political decisions if I recall brother.”

Murano looked at him. “It is true we do not agree on many things Delnash... but you have always placed the interests of our people first. It is only in my opinion that you and the others cling to past concepts that contributed to the downfall of our people. There are too few with fresh ideas on the Elder Convention.” He said.

Delnash looked around. “You seem to have draw an audience brother.”

Murano nodded his head. “Something I have avoided for just this reason.”

“You are a Praetorian brother.” Delnash told him reaching out to place his hand on his arm. “That alone sets you apart and demands respect for who you are among our people. It was the Praetorians who saved us.”

Murano chuckled softly and shook his head. “There are those who would debate that with you Delnash. Some on the Elder Convention.” He said as he turned to face him fully and saw the many faces of the crew that were watching them.

Delnash took his arm and drew him to the nearest table. “You speak of Lorendo.” He said as he motioned for him to sit. “We have three on the Convention who are under well below the twenty thousand year age limit Murano.”

Murano nodded. “True... but it is not enough.” He stated simply. “Lorendo... even you at times. You cling to ideas and concepts that have long been proven to be unworkable. They are part of the reason we lost Delnash.”

“They have served us well in the past Murano.” Delnash spoke.

“In the past!” Murano insisted. “They are no longer feasible and we stagnate because of it Delnash!”

“You are speaking of the Children’s Law.” Delnash said. “I know you did not approve of that but it needed to be done.”

“Forcing our people into relationships and then telling them they had to have children for the sake of our future as a people?” Murano shook his head. “No! The relationships would have come given time. Children would have come, far faster than you think had you let nature take its course when we settled here instead of forcing it.”

Delnash shook his head. “I do not wish to argue with you about this again Murano.” He stated calmly. “I have the best interests of our people in my decisions.”

Murano nodded. “Yes... but they are sometimes decisions from the past brother. We need to look forward... not back. We will never reclaim what we had... no matter how much Lorendo and the others wish it.”

Delnash gripped his arm and squeezed it once more in a brotherly fashion. “I do not want to go over this again. I came to see if you can tell me anymore about what you have felt. These people. This... this Praetorian you sense. You said he was filled with the essence of Sumar. How is that possible Murano? Sumar had no wife. No children. His ship was lost and no trace of him was ever found.”

Murano shook his head. "I don't know the answers to those questions brother. Only that the essence I feel is definitely Sumar. As we draw closer the resonance takes better shape and I know that the two others I felt are also from Sumar in some manner." He answered honestly. "The resonance is too strong, too focused to be anything else."

"What else? You seem hesitant when you speak of it." Delnash asked.

"There is... it is like a darkness within the resonance." Murano said softly, Delnash's eyes growing larger.

"Darkness? You said that before brother. Evil you mean?" Delnash asked.

Murano shook his head quickly. "No. Not evil. A potential for savagery and anger unlike anything I have ever seen... but it is focused and controlled and..."

"And what?" Delnash asked.

Murano looked at him. "It is part of the resonance. It is very invigorating. Freeing." He answered.

"You are drawn to it?" Delnash gasped.

"It is part of the resonance I feel as I said." Murano answered. "It is part of the person whom this is. It is a male, that much I can sense. The other two as well." He shook his head. "Whoever it is... his shields are too much for me to attempt to breach from this distance. Even closer it would not matter. He has an Oracle supporting him, guiding him, perhaps more than one. Strong minds that radiate power. One even seems familiar somehow but I can not place it." Murano looked off to the side out the view window. "There are seven other minds that reinforce and sustain him. Six I believe are female... bound to him very tightly in some way. They are powerful minds that are intermingled with his completely. I've never seen or felt anything like it before. I believe... I believe the seventh is a dragon and if what I sense is correct, they are bound together in a way that Teniri says is not possible. Whoever they are brother, they know extensively of Etheric ability and they are heavily shielded."

"It is just the one Praetorian you feel on Onterom though?" Delnash asked.

Murano nodded. "Yes. The other two are not there but I feel them through him. And they burn with the same intensity as Sumar."

"How can that be if they are not Pralor?" Delnash asked.

Murano shook his head. "I don't know." He said.

Delnash leaned back in the chair. "We will need to proceed cautiously." He said.

Murano looked at him. "Delnash... this person... these men I feel! They burn with the blood of a Praetorian." He spoke sharply. "We should be rejoicing."

"Yes well... I would much prefer to discover who they are before we start celebrating Murano."

Delnash spoke. "We don't know who they are or what it is they are doing within Station One Zero Five. For all we know they could be helping the Svorag. That is why we brought a detachment of the Convention Guard."

Murano looked at him and shook his head. "The Convention Guard." He spoke softly. "Sashan is a good man brother, but you made a mistake appointing him Chief of the Military Convention."

"He has done well so far." Delnash said.

Murano nodded in agreement. "Yes he has... but that is because we have not come into contact with any force that we could not bully because of our superior technology and skill or those not intimidated by Teniri and our dragon brothers and sisters. Against the Scourge or someone more capable he will fold almost immediately. He is not a warrior."

"We are not at war Murano." Delnash spoke.

"We will always be at war as long as the threat of the Scourge surrounds us! You should have appointed Fleet Commander Angon. And you should have brought a detachment of Fleet Guard... not the Convention Guard. They are nothing more than ill-trained showpieces with their commander as the only exception from my eyes."

Delnash met his eyes. "They are good men brother." He said.

Murano nodded. "No doubt. Yet they have had no formal training and they were thrust into a role of some importance in guarding the Elder Convention when we fled. The years have done nothing except turn them into glorified bullies."

"I really wish you would agree with me more often Murano." Delnash spoke in a neutral tone. "You say I am doing a good job yet you do not agree with much of what I have done in order to keep our people safe."

Murano met his brother's eyes. "I agreed with quite a bit of what you had done initially Delnash. Expanding the Science and Medical Conventions for one was a brilliant move against the voices of the others. Investing in new and improved technologies that could benefit our people was what we needed at the time. Artaaya was the perfect place to settle and you made that decision with strength and conviction. However... Elder Lorendo should never have been made a Convention Elder in my eyes." He said calmly. "He is one of those who was advising the Chief Elder at the end and he was among those who gave him counsel against defending the Talgarain Expanse. We could have held for decades within the Talgarain Expanse and instead we withdrew. This only hastened the end of our people and cost billions of lives!"

"I was not among those advising the Chief Elder brother." Delnash spoke. "Not at the end of it all."

Murano nodded. "I know... and it makes me wonder why you would support Lorendo's appointment to the Convention of Elders."

"We needed his wisdom." Delnash said.

Murano snorted. "We need his wisdom like we need a case of Scalarion Measles!" He snapped. "He is a fool and I question your support of him and the decisions you have made in the last few centuries. You and the others act as if we are no longer in danger. It is almost as if you wish it to go back to the way it was."

"Murano you..." Delnash began.

Murano held up his hand. "I support you brother... but it is my duty as a Praetorian to let you know I take disagreement with some of the major decisions you have made. In the end... those will be the only ones that count."

Delnash looked at him. "Then I have your support?"

Murano met his eyes. "You are my brother and the Chief Elder of our people. Those of us that remain. Yes... I support you brother. Until the bitter end if that is what it means. As long as your first thought is for our people and their continued existence."

Delnash nodded. "It always has been brother." He reached across the table and gripped his arm. "I know it has been hard for you Murano. Remaining away and hiding yourself but..."

"Chief Elder Delnash... we have detected something you should see. Please join me on the bridge."

The voice of the TALISMAN's Commander filled Delnash's head from the internal ship speakers that dotted the vessel.

Murano looked up at the voice as Delnash tapped the small circular device in the center of the table. "I will join you momentarily Commander." He replied. "Send for the other Elders and I will bring Praetorian Murano."

"As you order Chief Elder." The man answered.

Delnash looked at his brother as he got to his feet. "I speak caution brother but I am just as excited as you to discover who these people are. And how they were able to enter our station even after the security measures Lorendo put in place."

Murano got to his feet as well and nodded. "As am I." He said. "As am I."

Murano enter the expansive bridge of the cruiser beside his brother and detected the scowl from Lorendo immediately. He dismissed the fool and looked at the Commander who stood beside the huge chart table along with the ship's seven foot tall Avatar.

"Commander Dehov?" Delnash spoke as he moved across the deck to stand in front of the man.

The TALISMAN's commanding officer was an experienced man who had fought against the Scourge many years ago. His dark brown hair was sprinkled generously with white but he was still in excellent physical shape even at forty-three thousand years old. He turned to the chart and typed quickly bringing up a crystal clear image of two ships near the planet. Two very large ships, though considerably smaller than the TALISMAN itself.

"We detected this six minutes ago Chief Elder. Our destination." Dehov spoke.

Delnash picked up on this quickly. "Ships?" He said.

Dehov nodded. "Yes Chief Elder."

Delnash looked at him. "These people had to have gotten there somehow... I don't see why this is significant Dehov." He spoke.

Murano moved around his brother and looked at the images and readings scrolling beside the images of the ships on the holo display. He tapped the control console as his eyes focused intently, Delnash and the others watching him. "Dehov... is this...?"

The Commander nodded. "Yes Praetorian Murano." He answered. "This is why I called you here Chief Elder." He moved up next to Murano. "We used the TALISMAN's main sensor array and tied it into a Series Twelve long range sensor probe which we launched just before making our first jump. The probe arrived in the Onterom system approximately nine minutes ago and we just started getting data back. We are using a low power passive scan at the moment."

"Why?" Lorendo asked. "The Series Twelve probe can do an active scan of the entire system in minutes."

Dehov nodded. "Yes... but immediately after arriving in the system the passive sensors on the probe detected a very sophisticated cone of energy emanating from one ship. This ship's sensors would detect an active scan the moment it began and the probe's internal command protocols stopped an active scan."

Kasdan moved forward now. "How is that even possible Commander? The Series Twelve sensors operate on a phased sub space level. They should be completely undetectable."

Dehov nodded his head in agreement. "And that would be the case Elder Kasdan... to ships that do not have access to our technology. But both of these vessels are exhibiting power signatures that are derived from Pralor technology."

Delnash's eyes grew wider. "What?" He gasped.

Lorendo stepped closer. "That is not possible!" He stammered.

Dehov nodded his head. "I assure you Elder Lorendo... our scans are quite accurate. This ship here on the right..." The image adjusted and brought the picture of the ARC ROYAL much closer for viewing. "This ship has a Quantum Resonance Reactor signature. Extremely efficient and very powerful for a ship this size. The differences in power output and frequency variables are there indicating marked difference in construction, but these engines are definitely based on Pralor technology. A Series Nine City Ship engine core design with some ingenious and very extensive modifications if I had to guess. The second ship is a more primitive version... but the signature is there as well."

"Series Nine City Ships were the most advanced we had but they have not existed for over thirty thousand years." Murano spoke again. "The Scourge destroyed the last sixteen of them when they took the shipyards on Lustan."

Dehov nodded. "Yes... I know."

Delnash pointed to several protrusions on the outer hull of the ship. "What are these?" He asked.

Dehov looked at him. "Those are gun turrets Chief Elder." He answered him with ease. "This... this is a warship." He spoke confidently. "The design is excellent and it indicates some sort of carrier class, but the external armaments indicate otherwise. Roughly three thousand five hundred meters long and some 400,000,000 metric tons. I estimate a fast strike capability coupled with some very advanced plasma based weaponry. Plasma weaponry that could very well decimate the vast majority of the ships from the Alpha Quadrant. Which is where these two ships are from by the way."

"The Alpha Quadrant." Murano said softly. "That is where... that is where Sumar's ship crashed." He turned to his brother. "A Series Nine City Ship."

Delnash shook his head. "Let's not get ahead of ourselves brother." He spoke softly.

Kasdan ran his finger along the edge of the underside of the ARC ROYAL's side. "What are these Captain?" He asked.

"Given their size and appearance I would guess they are landing bays of some sort. On both the ventral and dorsal access points. Given this ship's size, I estimate it could carry several hundred fighters of a small nature. Slightly larger than our own fighter drones if I had to guess." He looked at Delnash. "The main hull is comprised primarily of a mixture of metals that I have never seen before and... it is surrounded by Class Seven Pralor shields."

“Class Seven?” Murano hissed. He looked at Delnash. “The same shields carried by a Series Nine City Ship brother!”

“We are also detecting the smaller power signatures of Pralor Nanlar Worker drones. On both ships.” Dehov said. “Nearly three hundred in total.”

“Nanlar Worker Drones?” Delnash gasped once more. “How is that possible? Nanlar Worker Drones are the most sophisticated drones we have ever developed! Can you pulse their command codes!”

“No!” Murano barked.

“Why not?” Delnash snarled.

Kasdan moved right up to the table now. “In order to pulse their command codes Chief Elder, we would need to override their operating protocols. We can’t do that from here.”

“It would not matter even if we could.” Dehov spoke tapping on his console. “The Probe already tried to covertly access the Worker Drone Protocols and was denied access. The attempt was not detected... but it discovered that the Drones are working on entirely different command protocols than what they were designed for. They are moving around within the two ships of their own accord. Almost autonomously.”

Delnash looked at Lorendo and Kasdan. “They were never designed to work like that.” He spoke.

“No Chief Elder. I have no explanation.” Kasdan said. “Not without inspecting one of them.”

“There is something else Chief Elder.” Dehov said. “Something significantly more interesting if I do say so myself.” He turned to the large Avatar just behind him. “Avatar 27... your findings again please.”

The Avatar moved to the table and his large hands moved faster than their eyes could follow.

-Approximately two point seven minutes after the probe arrived in the Onterom system, a ship dropped from sustained Quantum Reversion and rendezvoused with the unknown alien vessel. It was taken into the port side landing bay of this unknown ship, supporting Commander Dehov’s assertion of a fighter complement-

“Quantum reversion?” Murano asked with wide eyes. “One of our ships?”

-Yes Praetorian Murano. Corvette Class of HELIX design. Passive sensors specify almost no deterioration of hull which I have concluded indicates low usage of primary drive core-

“HELIX design?” Murano asked. “HELIX Class Corvettes were not built until three decades before we fled our space. They were specifically tasked with supporting...” Murano’s eyes grew larger and Dehov nodded his head.

“Yes.” He said with a smile. “The only HELIX Class Corvettes we built were assigned to the VORTEX-Class Heavy cruisers. Seven per cruiser.”

Murano looked at the Avatar. “Two Seven... you are certain of your scans?”

-Accuracy is one hundred percent Praetorian Murano- The Avatar answered looking at him. -I was able to gain the registry of the corvette from the probe’s scans. It was assigned to VORTEX Cruiser 341. One of seven as Commander Dehov has pointed out-

Delnash looked at Dehov. “Is this ship in our database?”

Dehov nodded his head slowly. “Yes Chief Elder. VORTEX Cruiser 341 was the same ship that was chosen by the Elder Convention to download all information from the five main libraries on the homeworld Entheo. A single Junior Science Elder from the Science Convention was then selected and assigned to the ship and the ship was given a secret course. It departed the homeworld four days before... before Entheo fell.”

“Departed to where?” Delnash rasped out.

Dehov shook his head. “We were never able to discover that Chief Elder. That particular information was destroyed with the main Science Headquarters on Entheo. The headquarters was ruined before it could be taken by the Scourge or uploaded to an escaping ship.”

Delnash looked at Lorendo. “Lorendo... you were part of the Science Convention back then. Do you know anything about this VORTEX cruiser?”

Lorendo shook his head. “No. I was not privy to decisions made on Entheo Chief Elder. I was only a junior administrator then.”

“Lifesigns?” Delnash asked quickly turning back to Dehov.

Dehov shook his head. “That would require an active scan from the probe. It would be picked up instantly by this ship. I did not think it wise.”

“This is becoming more worrisome by the moment.” Lorendo spoke now. “These... these unknown people have our technology! Our ships! Our secrets!”

“They have shown an unique ability to adapt our technology as well.” Kasdan spoke with a much more curious nature than a worried one.

“Why are they at Station One Zero Five?” Lorendo asked. “How did they gain access and what are they looking for?”

Murano looked at him. “Kasdan and I have told you how.” He spoke.

Lorendo glared at him angrily. “Yes I know! Your feeling that there is somehow another Praetorian out there! One who is not of Pralor blood! That is not possible Murano and you know that! It was forbidden! Taboo! Sumar himself instituted that law when he was Chief Elder Pralor.”

Murano kept his distaste for Lorendo in check. “I know what my senses are telling me!” He stated calmly. “You may deny it all you wish and cling to a millennia’s old law that is all but extinct, but that does not change the fact that there is a Praetorian on Onterom right now. A Praetorian born of Sumar’s line.”

“Sumar is dead!” Lorendo spat. “He died when his ship was caught in an Ion storm and crashed! Everyone with him died! What you hope for is not real! Everything that was Sumar died with him!”

Dehov looked at Lorendo. “Forgive me Elder Lorendo... that statement is not entirely true.”

Lorendo whirled on the man. “What are you prattling about Commander? Why do you insist on helping this old fool’s rants?”

Dehov’s eyes narrowed and his forehead wrinkled in a look of extreme contempt and anger. “You’ll forgive me my words Elder Lorendo... you should not speak to Praetorian Murano in such a way and...”

“I will speak to him however I choose!” Lorendo barked loudly. “And you should mind your station Commander! You...”

“Enough!” Delnash snapped angrily. “Your distaste for the Praetorians is well known Lorendo! It was back then and I see time has not dulled your fervor. You will, however, address my brother with the proper respect and honor due his position. He is a Praetorian...” Delnash hissed at him. “... And among our people that has and always will grant him equal status and authority as any Elder on the Convention! That is how it was set up by Sumar and it has not changed over the millennia!”

“Perhaps now it should.” Lorendo spoke.

“You will not besmirch that authority and you will mind your words or I will have you removed!” Delnash barked at him. “Murano has seen and experienced more than any of us standing here now! You will not berate him in front of others! In front of me! Praetorians hold the Right of Justice and you would do well to mind your actions! That part of their duty was set in stone and it will not change whether Murano is the last Praetorian or not! As long as I am Chief Elder Pralor that will never change! Is that in any way unclear to you now?”

Lorendo opened his mouth to answer.

“Be very careful what you say to me now Elder Lorendo.” Delnash snapped. “Very careful.”

Lorendo stood there silently for a moment and then nodded his head. “As you wish it Chief Elder Delnash!”

Dehov stepped closer to Delnash stunned at what had just taken place. “Forgive me Chief Elder... but the information we have indicates that Elder Lorendo is very wrong regardless!”

Delnash turned back to him quickly. “Explain Dehov.” He ordered curtly.

Dehov looked at Avatar 27. “Tell them what else you found Two Seven.” He spoke.

-At Commander Dehov’s direction I was able to link my neural network with the probe exactly twenty three seconds before the HELIX Class corvette was taken aboard the unknown vessel- Avatar Two Seven explained. -While I was linked to the probe I detected the Protonic neural signal of another Avatar-

“Another Avatar?” Delnash exclaimed. “On the corvette?”

-Correct Chief Elder Pralor-

“By the Holy Word... they have access to an Avatar!” Lorendo nearly shouted but caught himself and kept his voice neutral.

“Two Seven... were you able to determine the Avatar’s source code?” Murano asked as his gut began to burn with happiness and fulfillment.

-It is very odd Praetorian Murano. The Source Code has been altered significantly. It has evolved to a level that should not be obtainable-

“Why?” Delnash asked.

-I detected neural pathways that are not supposed to exist in any Avatar Chief Elder. They are new and not part of normal programming. The brief scan I was able to execute was only point six milliseconds in length. Any longer duration and this Avatar would have detected such an intrusion based on the advances of its neural network pathways. The Protonic links were much more advanced than any I have installed-

“Why is this significant?” Lorendo exclaimed. “We are discussing the source code for Avatars when we should be talking about these unknown and possibly hostile individuals with access to our technology!”

Murano stepped right up to Avatar Two Seven and gazed at the taller, hulking form of the Artificial Intelligence that his people had built hundreds of thousands of years ago to help them in their exploration. Each Avatar was unique and the vast majority of them served on starships. “Avatar Two Seven... why is what you detected odd?” He asked.

-The Protonic Neural Pathways are unique to each Avatar Praetorian Murano. You know this-
Two Seven answered.

“Yes.” Murano said.

-The Protonic Neural Pathways I detected are from Class Seven Ship Avatar 41. He was the Avatar for Series Nine City Ship 41- Two seven answered. -They originate from the former Chief Elder Pralor Sumar’s Avatar-

CHAPTER NINE

SOLMAR SYSTEM ULU SCIMITAR

The LEONIDAS II-Class Strike Cruiser was always built to be the forward projection of Lycavorian Union power. The Nodon Shipyards were spilling them out at a rate of ten a month now and as soon as Ben and Avi got the details worked out, the Pralor Worker Drones were going to be deployed to all the major Union shipyards to increase that output by a factor of ten.

Those LEONIDAS II ships that were first produced were now in the process of being refitted to bring them up to the same standards as the SCIMITAR and others that were newer. The ship was capable of bringing an enormous amount of horrific firepower down upon on an enemy, as well as nearly two hundred of the finest fighter and fighter/bombers known to be operating within the Alpha Quadrant.

The Nodon species, officially called the Terraijin people, were the sixth race to join the Lycavorian Union when it all began and the brain child of the LEONIDAS II class ships. For millennia they had been the primary engineering species and ship makers within the Union and they were almost fanatical in their loyalty to the Union and the royal family. They were thrilled with anything that could help them perfect their trade and when Ben told them of the Worker Drones and the potential it would allow. Avi had been able to use the engine core and research database of SPARTA'S WRATH to first copy and then build a smaller version of the Worker Drone assembly line. That line was now up and running at full capacity and the Drones were being produced very quickly. They would soon become invaluable to the Nodon shipyards and others that were major engineering points across the Union as well as the ships they would be assigned too. Ben's only strict instruction to those who would be receiving the Drones was simple. Treat them as part of your team and not a machine. Most of the Drones produced at Ben's order would go to the Nodon, for he knew they would treat them as Avi had said to treat them. They were machines yes, but they were valuable parts of a mechanism and needed to be treated as such. The Nodon would do just that. A few ships within the Union fleet would be receiving the drones as well, but only those ships that Ben selected.

In the hands of an experienced field Commander who knew their ship and their crew, the LEONIDAS II-Strike Cruiser, named after the King's father, was a devastating machine of war that could strike fear into anyone.

Sa'sur was such a commander.

The crew of the SCIMITAR had been together for years and they knew their commander in what many considered a personal fashion. She had bailed more than one of them out of big trouble at one point or another in their careers and earned their lasting loyalty. She did not ask of them anything she was not prepared to do herself and all of them knew that and they knew what their ship could do. That the SCIMITAR was also Prince Androcles's personal ship also gave them a bit of swagger wherever they went. It also meant they had to be the best there was at their jobs. And they were.

Sa'sur was coming to her feet before they had even finished their jump reversion and she was barking out orders. Exactly four point five seconds after the SCIMITAR ended her jump, all of her main forward batteries opened up at the same time. All of them targeted on a single point in space. That the Kavalian command ship under Admiral Gordna occupied that space was no small coincidence to any of them. That ship just happened to be in the way of them getting to their Prince. Thirty two Type I MK9C Alpha Series plasma batteries, powered by the advanced Hyper Matter Fusion engine core installed on the SCIMITAR, targeted the Kavalian command ship. All of them were unforgiving in their precision. Gordna's shields were overwhelmed by the intense and concentrated firepower of the SCIMITAR's weapons and for the second time in less than a year, the SCIMITAR claimed the first destruction in battle of the vaunted Kavalian GREAT SOUL Command cruiser. This added to her total of seven so far if you included the ships she had destroyed at Kranek. The Kavalian ship's shields were unprepared for such a concentrated barrage of highly focused plasma beam power and the plasma turrets quickly sliced through those shields bringing them down. Once the shields came down, the Type II turrets continued the punishment by hammering the Kavalian hull in dozens of places, punching into the hull of the Kavalian ship like fists from some angry god. Internal explosions began to rock the ship and the bulkheads in half a dozen places along the hull began to buckle severely as the Type II turrets began to rip into the superstructure, blasting chunks from the hull of the ship. Then the torpedoes arrived. Seven Proton torpedoes punched into and through the outer hull of the GREAT SOUL and unleashed their killing power from within the belly of the great ship. Two struck just beneath the engine core of the Kavalian command ship, fracturing the core's shielding and sending deadly Tri-Cobalt radiation pouring into the interior of the ship. Three more torpedoes slammed into the upper hull, spaced along one forward wing and the resulting explosion blew a massive chunk of the superstructure clean off the main part of the ship. The Kavalian cruiser lost main power with the first torpedo hits and was suddenly very helpless.

Captain Sa'sur, turned many years ago by her Lycavorian husband and mate, gave them no mercy. Every torpedo, every hit by her plasma turrets, it was retribution for the many lives the Kavalians had so callously taken and the horrid abuses they had subjected their second elven Queen to. There would be no forgiveness this day. Not from her... not from their Prince and not from any member of her crew.

Gordna would not live to see the destruction of his fleet. The first barrage of Type II turrets had slammed into the superstructure above his bridge and the resulting explosions had sucked the air out of the entire bridge area before the upper deck collapsed onto the bridge and crushed everyone into oblivion. With that event, all command and control for the Kavalian fleet orbiting Solmar died. No more orders would come for them and they would be left to fend for themselves. A situation that most of them were unaccustomed to in any way. Essentially... the moment Gordna's ship died, the rout was on and every Lycavorian ship commander in the SCIMITAR's Strike Group knew it. Like a pack of intelligent but ravenous wolves, which many of the commanders were, they bore in on their enemy without an ounce of pity or remorse. They had become the type of predators that Prefect Keleru had never experienced before. They had become unrelenting.

Sa'sur saw Gordna's ship coming apart and she turned to her Tactical Officer. "Order Delta Wing to execute Attack Plan Gamma One Four! Charlie to commit to established orders! Tell the KINDRED SOUL she is clear to move in! Launch all fighters! Everything we have! We need to make this quick! ZMF missiles to target remaining DIATAGAs and DIMERUs! Take them out!"

"Captain! MOONLANCER Wing reports they have reloaded and are turning back into the battle!" A sensor tech barked out. "Bearing four seven eight three! Requesting targets!"

Sa'sur nodded her head. "Target rich environment!" Sa'sur barked. "Anything they can hit... kill it! We'll never get an opportunity like this again! The Kavalians may be fuck ups, but they'll learn from this!" Sa'sur stabbed down on the console on the arm of her chair. "Sadi! Launch now! Follow the KINDRED SOUL in!"

Sadi's voice was calm as she answered. "Launching now! Good luck Captain. Go with the gods!"

"And the same to you Princess." Sa'sur spoke as she turned back to her crew. "Let's go hunting people! Helm come to course four one seven three mark two. Weapons free! Weapons free! All fighter squadrons to pick a target and bear in! We take no prisoners today! We leave no ship operating! When we are done I want nothing but a graveyard full of Kavalian ships!"

That order would resonate to all the ships in the SCIMITAR's Strike Group and would find its way back to several senior Kavalian officers within Kavalian space within weeks. It was a statement that would crack the armor of their minds and put the first inkling in their heads that this war of choice begun by their Prefect was not going to turn out the way they had hoped.

STRIKER ONE FIVE ONE

"Clear!" Ne'Veha barked out as her hand moved across the controls. "KINDRED SOUL turning to starboard with Bravo Wing covering!"

Sadi turned her helmeted head and nodded. "Full power SirsanGai." She directed. "We'll go in ten thousand meters above her!"

Ne'Veha nodded. "Strikers One Five Two, One Five Three and One Five Four turning with us!"

"One five Two?" Sadi called out in her helmet COM.

"Six degrees off your port Sadi." Normya's voice answered confidently.

"Diamond formation Normya!" Sadi spoke. "We'll be going in through the KINDRED SOUL's wake and it will get rough!"

"Understood." Normya replied.

"Eli..." Sadi continued. "Make sure Tharua, Caydren and Cinol are secure! It will be very bumpy!"

"On it!" Eliani's voice for the rear of the STRIKER echoed.

"... a Union Senator and I can go..." Sadi's head turned as Ulana's voice snarled behind them and her jungle green eyes grew wide as she saw Ulana push her way past Jomann into the cockpit. Ulana's own eyes grew wide as she looked out the cockpit window and saw the dozens of much larger ships maneuvering all around them while their main guns were firing. "Oh... oh my!" She gasped in shock at what she saw. It appeared to be total chaos... it was anything but however, Ulana didn't know that.

"Jomann... what is this upaee doing on my ship?" Sadi snarled.

Jomann shrugged his broad shoulders. "I did not see her board." He answered.

“Get her out of our cockpit!” Ne'Veha barked now.

“I have every right to be here!” Ulana hissed back glaring at Sadi with extreme distaste. “I am...” Ulana was unable to finish her sentence as her head was yanked back viciously by her long hair and Eliani stepped around her from the side and stabbed her in the neck with an injector. Ulana’s eyes rolled into the back of her head instantly and Eliani let her begin to drop to the steel deck without regard.

“A nubous pain in the mida is what you are!” Eliani snarled as Jomann caught her limp form before she cracked her head on the deck plating. Sadi looked at Eliani who smiled back at her with those bright green eyes. “Brendi saw her coming forward. Figured I make sure she stayed out of the way. I’ve wanted to do that since the day Lisi, Carina and I told her to get screwed!”

Sadi grinned. “Thank you Eli.” She said.

The STRIKER rocked slightly and Jomann reached out to grab Eliani’s arm as Brendi staggered into the cockpit now as well. Ne'Veha adjusted her instruments. “KINDRED SOUL is beginning her descent!” She barked out. “She’s extending her Drop Pod doors! She’s prepping to drop the Cataphract division!”

Sadi motioned with her head. “Get her carcass secure and then grab a seat!” She barked. “We’re going in.”

Brendi’s eyes were wide as she saw the massive bulk of the WASP-Class Assault Carrier in front of and below them. She looked at Eliani. “Eliani... aren’t we... aren’t we awful close to that big assed ship!” She stammered.

Eliani grinned at her. “Where’s your spirit of adventure Brendi?” She chimed in sweetly as she gripped Ulana’s arm.

“I left it back on Earth.” Brendi answered her eyes wide.

“Help me with this bitch!” Eliani spoke and waited for Brendi to move under Ulana’s other armpit. Eliani looked at Brendi’s gorgeous brown eyes and felt a flush of excitement swirl through her body at the dark red hair and full body that Brendi possessed. “You hang out with us long enough and this will become the norm.” She stated. “C’mon... let’s get prissy pants here in a seat before she cracks her head.”

Jomann grinned at his gorgeous wife and mate as she and Brendi moved back into the rear of the STRIKER. The banter between the two of them was becoming more frequent and easy and Jomann could smell that Brendi was beginning to get very comfortable with Eliani and being around her. The desire from Brendi he could smell easily, as could Eliani, but neither of them wanted to rush her. Over the past weeks he had become more comfortable with the feeling inside him that found Brendi very enticing. Brendi would never be as completely delicious to him as his Anome, for nothing could stir him as Eliani did, but Brendi’s scent was extremely pleasant to both their senses. He knew Andro had struggled with the emotions and feelings of finding others who would share his and Sadi’s lives, and as with Sadi, Eliani seemed to have already fully accepted that. Andro told him he would only be able to resist it for so long before he knew it was time to claim her, especially if Eliani and she were to be together before he had fully accepted it. Trying to dodge or outrun fate and destiny was a losing battle, Andro had told him. Better to accept it for what it was and bask in the feelings it brought to all of them.

Jomann settled into the chair behind Sadi and Ne'Veha. “Has this ever been done before Sadi?” He asked. “Such a large ship landing on a planet?”

Sadi looked at him. “First time for everything.” She said.

“Yes... but you only die once.” Jomann reminded her.

“You’ve been hanging around Andro way too much.” Sadi said with a smile. “Besides... where is your spirit of adventure?”

“As with Brendi... I think I left it on Earth.” Jomann replied. “I am just glad I am not in one of those pods. Being blasted from the belly of a ship while still in orbit does not sit well with my stomach.”

Sadi turned back to the look out the cockpit window. “I’ll agree with that.” She stated. “We’ll have to keep Andro away from that part of the ship. Knowing him... he will want to try it.”

“...Pods locking into position!” A voice shouted out over the activity on the main bridge.

“Bravo Wing moving to port and starboard to cover us!” Another voice echoed. “Two fighter squadrons shadowing!”

“Hull temperature?” George Patton barked.

“Nominal Captain!”

“Adjust course three degrees starboard and eight degrees down angle.” Patton snapped. “Let’s begin our descent! Everyone on your game folks!”

“Helm answers three degrees starboard and eight degrees down angle!” The female voice barked out.

“Give me point three on launch thrusters!” Patton ordered. “Make damn sure coordinates are programmed in. I don’t want to blast our boys and girls all over the fucking planet!”

“Coordinates locked!” The Tactical Officer answered. “All Commanders acknowledge.”

“I just love doing things no one has ever done before!” Patton exclaimed as he came to his feet. He took a deep breath. “Open Drop Doors!”

Along the belly of the KINDRED SOUL, extending for nearly a third of the ship’s 2800 meters, massive doors retracted exposing a dark interior and the bulbous shapes of hundreds upon hundreds of individual Orbital Drop Pods.

“Drop doors open and locked!” The voice answered his command after twenty seconds.

“Shit... here goes nothing.” Patton muttered softly. “God speed people.” He turned to his Tactical Officer. “TO?”

The man turned to look at him. “Optimal position sir! Now or never!”

Patton didn’t hesitate. “Begin Drop! Launch the ODPs! Successive order by section! Launch! Launch!”

It was a sight to see for sure, and only a few hundred of the KINDRED SOUL’s crew got to see it, but they would insure the word spread like wildfire. With the first explosive blast of decompression, the human 82nd Cataphract Division, brainchild of Admiral Ben O’Connor, entered into active combat in force. The Orbital Drop Pods or ODPs began spitting from the interior of the belly of the KINDRED SOUL like bullets from a massive shotgun. The popping sound of explosive compression soon became a continuous roar as the first wave of three thousand ODPs were launched into the stars in the time of sixty-six seconds without a single failure of the launching mechanisms. As those three thousand pods began to drop through the atmosphere beneath them, a massive cocking system twisted the launching mechanism and dropped the next wave into place. One minute later, three thousand more ODPs were leaving the belly of the KINDRED SOUL, each carrying a living and breathing individual soldier who was becoming part of more Union history. The many crewmembers who were watching could only shake their heads in awe and wonder just who was insane enough to put their body into one of those pods and be shot from the belly of a ship in orbit.

The reputation and legend of the 82nd Cataphract Division began even before they put boots on the ground.

Patton sat in his command chair and waited silently, saying a special prayer his mother had taught him under his breath as he let his crew do their jobs. He had very little to do during the actual drop since they were not under fire thanks to Bravo Wing and the fighters so as a good commander he stayed out of the way. The KINDRED SOUL was barely skimming the surface of the atmosphere and moving at a snail’s pace for a ship her size, but this is what she had been intended and built for and Patton couldn’t help but feel pride that she was doing exactly what she was designed for. All of their training runs had proven that they could launch every pod they had in just eight point four minutes. At the seven point three minute mark his TO looked up from his screens.

“Captain! All pods away! All ODPs away clean! No malfunctions!”

Patton smiled to himself and sat up straighter. He would have to give each and every crewmember operating a piece of machinery in the ODP Section a special gift for executing their jobs to perfection and shaving over a minute off their best time in training. Combat did make the adrenalin surge.

“Close Drop Doors!” He snapped out the order. “Helm... prepare for full power descent! Shields at maximum! Order all stations to prep for atmospheric entry! Let’s get down there and make sure they have a command base to come back to!”

“Locking in Vertical Ventral Thrusters!” The Helm Officer barked out. “Spooling engine power to max! Lateral thrusters online! Shit! This is going to be so cool!” The woman barked out from her seat causing everyone on the bridge to laugh softly.

“Drop doors have been secured Captain!” The TO announced.

Patton nodded. “Helm! Let’s burn up the atmosphere shall we! Lieutenant Harbin...” Patton motioned with his arm. “If you would so kind Lieutenant! Smooth as you can Kelly! The ship is yours!”

The woman nodded her head. “Engaging Captain! Hold on everyone! This is going to be one hell of a ride!”

Skimming the atmosphere as they had been doing, when the KINDRED SOUL dipped her nose and began to penetrate the relatively thin upper layers, everyone on the ship felt their descent begin and they stopped what they were doing to hold on and try to find a place where they could see outside the view windows. This was going to be a sight and all of them knew it.

SOLMAR ANDRO’S BASE

“...Colonel Mosont and one brigade of the Durcunusaan Division as well as the 1st brigade of the 82nd Cataphract under a Colonel Miller are going to moving to our location from the south! The drop has already started and the 82nd should be on the ground in three to four minutes.” Andro was speaking to everyone who stood around the Chart table in the rear of the STRIKER. “As soon as the KINDRED SOUL lands, we will drop the ground based Shroud and send the civilians to her.”

“Long eyes report that the Kavaliens have every DAGGER that they got airborne and maintaining position over the northern settlement.” Dantio spoke moving his finger across the chart table. He looked at Andro. “They’re waiting... just as you thought they might. Given their position, once we drop the Shroud, we’ll have perhaps seventeen minutes before they are all over us.”

Kelelm shook his head. “To commit to such an action?” He spoke. “They actually think killing you will end the invasion?”

Andro nodded. “It seems that way.”

“Not very bright are they?” Dorian spoke from his spot ext to Lisisa.

“Downright foolish if you ask me.” Kelelm answered him. “If these commanders are as experienced as you believe, they must know your death won’t stop it.”

“They know that...” Andro answered. “They are hoping it causes enough of a pause for them to dig in deeper and make it more or less impossible for us to reclaim the settlements without massive losses on our part.”

Lisisa looked at him. “You think they are going to believe your message Andro?” She asked.

Andro shrugged his shoulders. “We’ll know when we see who exits these DAGGERS.” He replied. “If they are full of Puma Bane troops then we’ll know that Azlenr and Byka have at least given some consideration to it. If not... then they are fully committed and don’t believe what we sent them.”

“Wow... over two thousand of their Puma Bane troops?” Dorian spoke softly looking at his brother. “That means they’re serious about killing you fervon.”

Andro chuckled and nodded his head. “Nice to be so well thought of isn’t it?” He said.

“It’s his sparkling personality.” Lisisa said as she poked her brother in the ribs. “Always so charming.”

“Remember what father, Medwaw Anja and Uncle Danny always say?” Andro spoke.

“It’s not just a job...” Dorian mimicked their father.

“It’s a fucking adventure!” Lisisa finished with a grin.

Everyone at the table laughed softly except for Harira. She looked at them as if they were crazy. “This... this is insane!” She finally exclaimed. “We are going to wait here for them! You stand there and make jokes and these men are coming here to kill you! To kill us!”

Andro looked at her oddly. “Don’t worry Shaman Master Harira... if things don’t go as I hoped, Sa’roh will take off with you and the others and get you to the SCIMITAR.”

“Leaving you to die here?” Aleatia asked.

Andro smiled. “I have no intention of dying on this rock Lady Aleatia.” Andro said. “If it breaks down, we’ll sprint for the mountains to our east and then work our way around until we link up with Union forces to the south.”

“And then?” Aleatia asked.

Andro met her eyes for a long moment. “I will not allow the Kavalians to remain here on this planet Lady Aleatia. It is too strategic a location for them to have a forward base here able to strike into Union territory.”

“What does that mean?” Harira demanded.

Andro looked first at Lisisa and then to Dorian. He turned back to them slowly. “If we are unable to hold here and we don’t get some sort of indication that one or both of these Kavalian officers are wavering, then I will give the order.”

“The order for what?” Harira asked.

“I will order the settlements and surrounding areas glassed.” Andro answered her. “An orbital bombardment that will eliminate every living thing within five kilometers of each of the remaining five settlements.”

“That would... that would kill...” Aleatia gasped.

“Yes.” Lisisa spoke softly. “It would kill every innocent civilian within the settlements.” She answered for her brother. “And in their deaths... others will live.”

Her words brought silence to those gathered and Sehri stepped closer to Andro, pressing up against his side firmly. “How many... if you had to do this Andro. How many lives would be saved?”

Andro looked down into her eyes for a moment. His arm slipped around her waist with little regard for who saw and he pulled her close before looking up at Harira and Aleatia. “This colony rests within striking distance of nine major Bontawillian planets with a total population of over five hundred and ninety million souls.” He told her. “I will not allow the Kavalians to put those planets at risk by having a forward base here to strike into Union territory. Those civilians in the settlements would die yes, but they would die for the greater good and all of them know that. And every Bontawillian in those five remaining settlements would understand that it needed to be done.”

Then we must make sure we do not fail. Elynth’s voice filled the heads of everyone who could Mindvoice to include Harira, Aleatia, Ibani and Osbela. Everyone looked towards the rear of the STRIKER where Elynth rested with Ryner and Jeth. Ryner sat between the brother and sister pair, the last few hours speaking with them and learning from them. Jeth and Elynth were nearly as famous among the dragons of the Union as their father and to be able to soak up any knowledge they had was precious to him in order for Ryner to protect Dorian.

Andro nodded his head. “Well said sister.” He spoke. “When the fighting begins Lady Aleatia... all of you will remain on the STRIKER. I will leave a detachment of Durcunusaan to secure the area around the ship and should things begin to go badly, Sa’roh already has orders to take off and escape.”

“And what do we do until then?” Aleatia asked.

“We wait.” Andro replied laconically. “We should know within a few minutes what play the Kavalians will make. Once Union troops begin hitting the surface it will get real busy.”

ODP POD 1462
COLONEL JOSIE MILLER

She adjusted the glide of her pod as she passed through the thin layer of clouds and the ground appeared before her some thirty thousand feet below.

“Activating beacon!” Her voice was calm but the excitement and nervousness was also very present. This was the first actual drop they had done outside of simulations and so far it was going better than she had hoped. “Descent angle is within parameters! Speed seven hundred and fifty! Firing course correction thrusters! Standby!”

Small thrusters on the outside of her pod fired in synchronous order, adjusting the descent of her ODP until it was lined up perfectly with her impact point. The laser in the bottom of the pod had locked onto the perfect landing point and immediately relayed this information to all the pods in her Brigade. It would allow them to come down within a thousand meters of each other as a cohesive fighting force.

“Data received!” A male voice broke in. “ODP adjusting.”

Josie could hear the many voices of her company and battalion leaders as they called out their status and the status of their people, as she had her implant set on the brigade channel. She could detect the fear and excitement in all of the voices, but also the calm and she felt pride at this knowledge.

“Colonel Miller this is Colonel Mosont!” The deep voice broke into her helmet.

“Go!” Josie popped.

“We are four minutes from breaking into the lower atmosphere! Your status?” Mosont asked.

“All pods intact and on course!” Josie answered. “We’ll be on the ground in two minutes and your LZ will be secure four minutes after that! How’s the ride?”

Josie heard Mosont chuckled softly. “If I was in my wolf form, every hair on my body would be standing on end! Though I’d much rather be here than with you! Launching your body from a perfectly good starship while in orbit does require some...”

Josie laughed. “Balls?” She quipped.

“I was going to say loose brain circuits.” Mosont answered.

“Yeah... well maybe I was dropped too many times as a child.” Josie told him. “Gotta go now! We’ll see you in six minutes!”

“We’ll be there!” Mosont answered.

“First Battalion! Ground Imaging shows a slight rise in terrain at your LZ!” Josie called out. “Adjust your retro rockets to compensate so you don’t bury your pod half in the ground!”

“Already compensating Colonel.” The BC answered back.

“Stay on top of that Phillip! It might change more.” Josie ordered. “One minute forty seconds to touch down! All commanders form your units up and prepare for landing impact! And for fucks sake... no one forget to hit your braking thrusters!”

Josie could hear laughter over the COM as the order was passed down and many of her people made jokes about burning into the ground and a glorious way to go it was. She shook her head at the bravery of her people and set to the task of making sure she fired her own thrusters.

It wouldn’t do for the commander to burn in.

STRIKER ONE FIVE ONE

“This is it!” Sadi called out. “All STRIKERS, prepare to execute sixty degree turn to port! This is where we break from the KINDRED SOUL!”

Ne’Veha looked at her. “Ready.”

“Normya?” Sadi barked into her helmet COM.

“On your mark!” Normya answered.

“Three! Two! One! Mark!”

Sadi and Ne’Veha’s hands flew across their respective control consoles and the STRIKER banked sharply to the left and dropped so quickly Jomann nearly lost his stomach.

“Hull temp just spiked! KINDRED SOUL is burning up the area around her!” Ne’Veha barked. “Increasing liquid coolant through the hull to one hundred percent! Ventral shields holding steady!”

“Ten seconds and we’re clear!” Sadi answered as she drove the STRIKER down through the atmosphere. “Normya!”

“We’re a little cooked but with you!” Her voice answered.

“A little?” Tir’ut’s voice echoed over the com.

“Turning to one three five nine mark four!” Sadi announced. “TOT to Andro is two minutes three seconds!”

“...temp is four thousand degrees and rising!” The Operations Officer barked out as he gripped the edges of his console.

The edges of the main monitor showed where the hull was glowing red with the heat they were generating upon entering the atmosphere. Patton sat stoically in his chair gripping the arms tightly. “What are we tested out at?” He snapped.

“Eight thousand Captain!”

“Then we have some wiggle room!” Patton spoke. “Maintain your course helm!”

“Aye! Ninety seconds until we breach the lower atmosphere!” Kelly Harbin barked out, her eyes never leaving her instruments and her hands constantly making course adjustments. She had graduated flight school tops in her class and she was proving the confidence Captain Patton had in her when he selected her right from graduation to pilot the KINDRED SOUL. This was her ship and she was not about to let anything happen to it.

“Tactical!” Patton called out. “The moment we clear the lower atmosphere... I want full sweeps with active sensors! Tell me what we are facing here! Weapons online and shields to full!”

“Tactical aye!”

Patton looked back towards the main monitor and shook his head. “Anyone know the record for atmospheric entry?” He called out trying to sooth the heightened anxiousness of his bridge crew.

“Fuck! We’re about to break it whatever it was!” A voice called out.

“Captain... we’re overshooting reentry corridor!” The TO shouted. “Present rate of descent will put us two hundred and eighty kilometers past the landing zone!”

“Kelly?” Patton barked.

“I raised our reentry point four degrees Captain!” Kelly announced without turning. “We were coming in too steep to extend the Atmospheric Drive Units!”

“Shit!” Patton snarled shaking his head. If they extended the ADUs before leveling out they would have sheered the units off and they would have been fucked. “Maintain Kelly!” He shouted unconcerned that he had forgotten something. That’s what he had the best crew for. And he had handpicked most of them himself. Including Lieutenant Harbin. “Nice catch Kelly!”

“That’s what you pay me for sir!” She replied happily. “Thirty seconds! Stand by... it will be bumpy starting right about... now!”

Patton shook his head with a smile as the KINDRED SOUL shuddered against the forces of gravitation and mass. No ship this size had ever attempted entry into a planet’s atmosphere in the Union’s entire history. No one really knew what was going to happen. Kelly Harbin worked the best when she was under pressure and it was coming out now. She was the youngest of the senior bridge crew and she was turning out to be a blazing star.

“Slight hull buckle! Deck Nine!” The Operations officer barked. “Insignificant! Worker Drone 4 is dismissing it right now!”

Patton nodded. “Leave it to them. That’s why we have six of them on board!” He shouted out as the shuddering along the entire ship suddenly ceased.

“That’s it!” Kelly screamed out. “We’re in!”

“Extend the ADUs!” Patton almost screamed as he rose to his feet.

“Hull temp returning to normal!” The Ops officer reported. “All sections report combat ready Captain! A lot of chattering about the view coming in... but all of them are standing by!”

“ADUs locking into place!” The TO announced. “Transferring power to drive units! ADUs at full power!”

“Kelly!” Patton barked coming up behind her chair now. “Turn us around girl! Full power to the ADUs! Lock onto coordinates and let’s turn and burn!”

“Engaging ADUs!” Kelly announced. “And turning and burning!” She added with a grin.

The massive atmospheric drive units that extended on both the port and starboard sides of the KINDRED SOUL just above her main drive engines fired powerfully, adding the ability to turn and maneuver more quickly while in the atmosphere of a planet.

Patton moved back to his chair and activated his COM unit. "This is the Captain! Launch the CAP! I say again... launch the CAP! To all Deck Chiefs... force fields coming down! Get me eyes in the sky! Launch RAPTORS! Begin deploying the Durcunusaan Division! Begin deploying the Durcunusaan Division! Landing bays are yours! The bays are yours!"

It was an incredible sight to see as Lieutenant Harbin had the KINDRED SOUL in a thirty degree turn sweeping out over the ocean and the port and starboard landing bays began to spew STRIKERS, KADEN and RAPTOR III ships out of their bays.

The Lycavorian Union had arrived on Solmar in force. And they were not in a friendly mood.

DAGGER TWO ALPHA

GUNSHIP LEAD

GENERAL BYKA COMMANDING

"...What is that?" Byka asked as his finger stabbed at the small sensor screen between Kameka and her co-pilot pointing at the large red signature that had just appeared clearly on the screen.

Kameka glanced down from where she had been scanning the horizon and making sure none of the other thirty-three DAGGER gunships got too close to her own. Her eyes grew a little wider as she saw it. "My god!" She gasped.

"What?" Her father snapped.

"We thought it... we thought it was part of a ship crashing down through the atmosphere! One the Union fleet had destroyed!" She answered as she dropped her hand to adjust the screen.

"It's not?" Byka asked.

Kameka shook her head quickly. "No! It's maneuvering! It... father it's huge!"

"Meka... are you telling me they got a ship that size through the atmosphere?" Byka asked her.

Kameka nodded her helmeted head. "It's nearly three thousand meters long!"

"A cruiser of some sort?" Byka asked quickly.

"It's not approaching the settlements. It's on course for the southern continent." She answered.

"The southern..." Byka's eyes grew wide. "That's why?" He exclaimed. "That's why we have not found any trace of them! Of course! They have transports! They are on the southern continent!" He looked at his daughter. "Get Azlenr on the COM!"

Kameka turned and tapped several buttons on the console to her left and then nodded. "Go!"

"Azlenr!" Byka spoke into the helmet COM.

"Byka?" Azlenr's voice answered just as Marsin moved into the cockpit from the rear.

"Azlenr... the Union has just inserted some sort of ship into the atmosphere!" Byka reported.

"Yes we are watching it!" Azlenr answered. "It's not moving for the settlements though. What ship of such size could enter the atmosphere of a planet?"

Byka nodded. "I don't know... but it's headed for the southern continent!" Byka spoke. "I believe that is where the Union Prince is! That is why we have not found any sign of them in three days of searching. They are using their transports to move back and forth from the different continents!"

Marsin had plugged his helmet into the COM system and was listening to them talk. "We should split our forces and move half towards the southern continent." He spoke. "We will be closer if he reveals himself."

Byka nodded. "Azlenr I agree."

"No!" Azlenr replied. "Move all of the DAGGERS south! I will send reinforced Armored Scout units to different locations to put them in position to strike! If that is some sort of troop ship... it's massive!"

"Father!" Kameka called out. "It's launching other ships!" She stated running her fingers over the sensor board.

"What kind?" Byka asked.

“A few fighters but mostly what appears to be STRIKERS and their KADEN transports!” she replied.

“What appears to be?” Marsin snarled at her.

Kameka turned her dark eyes on him with fury. “Our sensors are not as sophisticated as those on a ship!” She hissed at him. “We can not determine exactly what they are, only a limited profile!”

“It must be a troop ship of some sort!” Azlenr’s voice echoed in the COM.

“A troop ship that large could land thousands of troops!” Byka barked. “How did we not know they possessed such a ship?”

“It doesn’t matter! Move your force and be prepared to attack the Lycavorian Prince the moment he reveals his location!” Azlenr ordered. “Byka... execute Plan 99.”

Byka didn’t hesitate and nodded his head. “Understood.” He said in reply.

Marsin looked at him. “What is Plan 99?” He asked.

Byka ignored him and took Kameka’s arm. “Give the order Meka. Let’s begin moving to the southern continent.”

Kameka nodded and began speaking on her internal COM to the other ships. Byka turned to look at Marsin as the DAGGER began to move.

“What is this Plan 99?” Marsin snapped again. His distaste for Byka was very evident and it showed in the manner in which he chose to speak to him. Byka let it slide for the moment regardless. Marsin would be dead in a matter of hours and then the single stain upon his honor would be gone and his daughter, who he had come to love far more than a Kavalian father should have loved his daughter given their views on females, then Kameka would have the justice due her.

“Plan 99 is what we will do when we meet the Lycavorian forces defending the Prince.” Byka stated. “We will meet them and be victorious.”

Marsin glared at him for several more moments and then his eyes turned to look at Meka. She felt his glare boring into her back and she turned her head to look at him. “If you are finished conferring with the General Major... please exit my cockpit! It is already too crowded and you are just taking up space!”

Marsin opened his mouth to reply but stopped. As the pilot for this DAGGER she had the authority to tell him exactly what she had and as much as it angered him he had to comply. With a snort of anger Marsin turned and exited the cockpit, the door closing behind him. Byka reached out and locked the bulkhead door as he slowly drew out his ARSOC sidearm. With his other hand he removed a short barreled silencer and quickly attached it to the barrel. In a very smooth, practiced motion Byka turned and placed the barrel of his ARSOC to the neck of the co-pilot and fired twice.

Kameka’s head whipped around and she gasped in horror as the head of her co-pilot lolled to the side and he went limp in his seat. She turned wide eyes on her father. “PAPA!” She hissed.

Byka reached around and unbuckled the co-pilot and unceremoniously pulled his body from the seat. “He was a spy for Marsin.” Byka stated softly as he settled into the seat. “Marsin is under orders to assassinate General Azlenr and I as well as any senior officers they can reach. Marsin intended to kill you himself.”

Kameka looked back at the body and then to her father. “He’s has... he has been my co-pilot for over two years papa.” She said.

Byka nodded. “And an agent for Marsin and Keleru for all of that time.” He replied. “Do you trust me daughter?”

“Papa... you know I do.” She answered without hesitation.

“Then trust me now.” He told her. “Azlenr and I have set things in motion that will insure we live out this day.”

“Live out this day?” Meka asked. “What do you mean?”

Byka looked at her. “You will know in a short while.” He stated. “For the moment... for the moment just fly the ship! When we find the Prince’s camp begin your attack run. The rest is taken care of. I hope.” He said.

Power had been returned to the base fully, the adjustable lights making everyone feel more comfortable. It was obvious they were going to be here longer than they had intended and true to their ability to adapt quickly to any situation, everyone began to settle in for the evening. They would all stay within the main hall in the living section of the base as it was the largest and most easily defensible position. To accommodate this fact, blankets that were not too full of holes from dust mites were brought from the quarters surrounding the main hall, along with six inch thick foam mattresses that were still in good repair. The large armored plates on the outside of the view windows had been retracted, allowing the bright sunlight to filter in and chase away the chill of the steel bulkhead walls before the sun went down. While everyone was taking stock of what they had been able to procure, Martin and others were in the Control Center.

“...still working on unlocking more of the databases...” Wayonn spoke as he turned in from the main control console in the chair. “But I can tell you what I have discovered.”

Martin sat behind him on the floor, his back against several large crates that had been brought in to serve as a defensive position near the door and looked at the animated expression of Wayonn’s face with some puzzlement. Aricia sat between his legs, For'mya, Anja and the others either leaning against him or each other in some manner. Helen sat to their right with Fedor, Eirene and Miseo. “I’m guessing it must be good news or else you wouldn’t be wearing that “I just got laid” expression.”

“Nauta Melme!” Dysea exclaimed. “Your manners!”

Martin cringed slightly. “Sorry.” He said. Eirene leaned into Miseo with a small laugh at her second elven mother’s admonishment of their father while Fedor and Helen chuckled softly beside them.

Martin reached down into a small pouch on his combat harness and took out a ration bar. He couldn’t stand the normal ration bars that came with their field meals so he had Gallais put together a recipe for a new one. It was very high protein and tasted faintly of roasted pork which was one of his favorite foods. Gallais made them especially for him and he always carried half a dozen of the bars into the field with him no matter where he was. It just so happened that Aricia and the others found them very tasty as well. “Ok... let’s have it.” He said. “It’s got to be better than realizing we’re sitting on a few hundred of the same lizard people who tried so earnestly to eat us not days ago. Among other things.”

He tore the wrapper from the ration bar open and lifted the bar to take a bite but Aricia’s hand snatched it from his grasp before he could bite down. Wayonn watched as Martin lowered his head to nuzzle her neck and she giggled as she leaned into it before taking a bite from the bar and handing it to For'mya. Martin didn’t hesitate and removed another ration bar from his pouch.

Helen nudged both Fedor and Eirene where they were sitting. “Watch.” She whispered.

“The planet’s name is Onterom.” Wayonn spoke as he watched Martin tear open the wrapper and lift that ration bar to his mouth. His eyes grew a little wider when just as Martin was about to take a large chunk of it Anja’s small hand snapped out and swiped the bar from his grasp.

“Hey!” Martin hissed.

“What?” Anja asked just before she took a bite and handed it to Dysea who smiled and savored the chunk she bite from the bar.

Martin growled at them, pulsing them both with his aura just a fraction seeing their faces change ever so slightly as they soaked up his essence. He reached down to take another bar out of the pouch while Wayonn watched. Isabella was watching Martin from over his shoulder and before he even had a chance to finish tearing open the wrapper she had snatched it from his grasp to share it Cirith. Martin exhaled with some exasperation finally. “Hey! I bring those for me!” He complained.

“They are very good Beloved.” Aricia commented turning his head to look at him with those azure eyes as she chewed.

“Bring your own!” Martin said.

“What for?” Anja commented as she chewed. “You carry enough for all of us. And you would never refuse one of us would you Lover?”

Martin looked at her and watched as she bat her jade green eyes at him. “Jeez!” He said as he pushed himself to his feet and Aricia scooted over beside For'mya with a laugh. “I’m going to starve to death with you guys around me.”

Martin turned and looked at Wayonn who had an amused expression on his face as he met his eyes. “What?” Martin snapped. “You think this is funny? You know how many pounds I have lost through the years because these characters always take my food. Gallais makes these ration bars for me!”

Wayonn nodded. “My mate made something similar for me. Slow cooked beef inside breaded shells.” He said with a smile. “And just as quickly she would eat them all. I could never refuse her.”

“Sometimes this Alpha wolf thing is a real downer.” Martin said shaking his head as he took the last bar he had brought with him out of the pouch. He made sure none of them were going to jump up and take it out of his hand and then he tore the wrapper off it and quickly tore a chunk from the bar. He looked back to Wayonn. “You were saying?” He spoke while chewing.

“It is our way to insure our mates are taken care of.” Wayonn said. He glanced to Martin’s right. “And our children.”

Martin turned his head and saw Eirene standing beside him and looking up at him with those dark brown orbs and the most lost expression on her face. Martin looked at the ration bar and then back to her surreal face. He held out the bar to her without even pausing as For'mya and the others burst into soft laughter. “I’m a sucker.” He said shaking his head. “Just write sucker on the back of my shoulder.”

Wayonn chuckled as well as Eirene scampered back to her spot next to Helen and Miseo and took a large bite from the ration bar before giving it to her husband. “You are a very good father and mate Martin Leonidas. Much like Sumar was.” He said.

Martin looked at him. “Tell that to my stomach.” He said. “Another couple years and I’m going to be a very thin father and mate.”

Wayonn held out the P9 to him and Martin began reading as he continued. “As I was saying... the planet’s name is Onterom. And it was established by Pralors.”

Martin lifted his eyes and looked at him as Helen came to her feet. “Come again?” Martin said. “I thought you and Shiria said the Pralors were extinct.”

Wayonn nodded. “That is what we thought as well.” He answered. “It appears that is not the case. To my great surprise I decided to try and activate my old Security Codes from my time as Sumar’s oracle.” Wayonn looked at him. “Incredibly... they worked.”

Martin met his gaze. “Wait a minute. Your security codes from forty thousand years ago still work? How is that possible?”

“It appears as if they were never removed from the main Pralor Science Convention database.” He answered. “I found this strange until I remembered that removing the Security Codes for several hundred thousand members of the Science Convention that were lost on CS41 would have been a low priority with the second war just beginning. I can only assume it was never done.”

“So this computer has information dating back to the second war?” Martin asked.

Wayonn shook his head. “No... the logs that I have found seem to indicate that the base codes for security and background were downloaded from a ship.” He answered. “Our ships would have been the last step in removing my security codes. I can only assume they never got around to deactivating the codes from whatever ship brought the crew of this station here. There were survivors of the second war Martin. Refugees if you will. This information proves it. It was they who established this Science station. The logs do not go into great detail about how many... but I do know where they are.”

Helen moved right up to him. “Where they are Grandfather?” She gasped.

Wayonn nodded with what amounted to a shit eating grin and turned back to face the console. He typed on it for several moments and then pointed to the large monitor. “The map that Muton has us following? The one he says they pieced together through the years from visions and fragments of Pralor technology?” Wayonn stabbed the large monitor on a single blue dot. “It leads right here. The planet’s name is Artaaya.”

Martin looked at him. “Wayonn are you...?”

Wayonn nodded. “Yes... I’m sure Martin my boy.” He said. “The coordinates vary slightly, but that could be accounted for by the celestial time passage.”

Martin leaned over his shoulder and looked at the monitor above their heads. “You are sure Wayonn?” Martin asked with a serious tone.

Wayonn nodded. “Yes. There is no question.” He answered. “I’ve discovered that this station was the one hundred and fifty first PSS they sent out. They must have begun recounting them as they built new ones after the war. They were successfully able to terraform the planet within nine hundred years and then began taking samples from all over the planet. Their resources must have been limited or they would have sent more than one PSS. As I told you before we always sent at least six.”

“How long has this thing been here then?” Martin asked.

“Roughly three thousand five hundred years give or take a few years according to the logs.” He replied. “The base had five commanders, each serving a five hundred year tour with the personnel. The last commander is the one who evacuated the station.”

“Because of our guests?” Martin asked.

Wayonn nodded. “That would be my guess.” He said.

“Val'istar...” Fedor spoke up. “Those creatures below are in stasis pods. Why would they evacuate the base if the situation was under control?”

Martin turned back to Wayonn. “He’s got a good point.” He said.

Wayonn nodded. “Indeed.” He said. “The Station Commander’s logs are encrypted. I can crack them I’m sure... but it will take time for me to recall the different abilities I could access with the Security Protocols of an Oracle. I haven’t used them in over forty thousand years Martin.”

Martin nodded and placed his hand on Wayonn’s shoulder as he read what was on the screen. He reached to his pouch and brought out his P1, activating it and typing on the small pad. The pad went through a series of high pitched hums and chirps before it synced up.

“Yuriko?” Martin spoke without looking at the P1 as he set it on the console.

“Father.” Yuriko’s voice answered immediately. “Nothing is wrong I hope.”

“No. Say hello to your mothers and brother and sister.” Martin said as he lifted his hand and traced a finger down the monitor and the blueprints of the station.

“Mothers!” Yuriko called out happily. “Fedor! Eirene!”

“Hello Yuriko!” Bella spoke for all of them. “How is Filrian?”

“At the moment he is giving a good cussing to two crewmembers who went too far in a training bout.” Yuriko answered with soft humor. “My Blessed husband never swears and when he does the crew knows he is not happy. He can be so inventive in his choice of words as well. The mission to the station is going well?”

Martin looked at the P1 now. “That is why I’m contacting you Yuriko. How far back are they?”

“They Kavalian Task Force has slowed to conduct training drills.” She replied instantly. “Milk runs really, to keep their pilots sharp. They have fallen back some. If they went to full power they could be on you within ninety hours tops. That is if they knew your exact location. Which they don’t.”

“Do me a favor arande.” Martin spoke.

“Anything father.” She answered.

“Sneak in close and drop a few RK12 anti-matter plasma mines in their path.” Martin spoke. “Just to let them know we are thinking of them.”

Yuriko chuckled at his words. “Of course father.” She said. “Shall I paint any words of wisdom on the mines before we deploy them?”

“Eat shit and die comes to mind.” Martin answered. “But whatever your people feel is accurate.”

“Martin... won’t that let them know they are on the right course?” Helen asked.

Martin looked at her and nodded. “Yep.” He answered. “It also lets them know that we know they are there. My brother is stupid... but not that stupid. He’ll slow his forward progress, even if it’s only a fraction.”

“They are following a trail I am leaving Martin Leonidas.” For'mya spoke now looking at him.

“Allowing them to know they are close enough to worry us enough to drop mines does not give me good feelings.”

Martin turned his head and looked at her. “I’d follow any trail you left Kinsoaurgai. You do smell so delightful.”

“Carians... you are such a perv!” Anja declared as they all laughed and For'mya got to her feet.

“Medwan... I am on my bridge.” Yuriko spoke.

“Oh... sorry!” Martin announced. “Contact me when the deed is done.”

Yuriko was laughing softly. “OMEN THREE out.”

For'mya moved right up to him and looked up into his face. “Martin... however they are following me... I do not wish to put others in danger by letting them know they are succeeding in their task.”

Martin crossed his arms over his chest and looked at her. “And what task would that be Kinsoaurgai?” He asked her.

“Causing you to make decisions because they are after me.” For'mya answered.

“The only decision I made because my dear brother is coming after you is to love you that much more definitively.” Martin spoke reaching out to take her face in his large hands and leaned over to kiss her softly. “How am I doing in that regard?”

For'mya couldn't help but blush and the edges of her high curved elven ears turned the faintest shade of pink in response. For'mya gripped his arms tightly and met his dark eyes with ardor in her own. “You have... you have succeeded most brilliantly Martin Leonidas.” She stammered.

Martin smiled and kissed her again. “Good. Besides... I know how they are following you and I made the decision to let them think that we don't know.” He said.

Even Wayonn looked at him. “You know?” He asked. “How? I thought...”

Martin smiled at him. “I knew exactly eighty four seconds after Avi entered the system.” Martin spoke looking at him. Martin grinned even wider. “Does my boy know me or what?” He barked out happily. “He sent Avi out here knowing I would need him. How's that for father and son!”

“Wait!” For'mya asked gripping his arms tighter. “How then? Melyanna did every scan she could think of.”

Martin nodded as he looked back at her. “Every scan she could think of that was up to date.” He said. “She never thought to scan for something that hasn't been used in over a hundred years. At least not by the Union.”

“What?” Anja declared.

Martin nodded. “They are using a Borellum Acoustic Pulse.” He answered. “Avi signaled me when he entered the system and that's the first thing I had him do. He discovered it as they were landing on the ARC ROYAL. It's very old, and completely innocuous. And none of our instruments are tuned to detect something so old.” Martin looked at For'mya. “It's in the middle toe of your right foot. The same toe that I have been...”

“Martin!” For'mya hissed quickly cutting off his words. “Everyone does not need to know what we and our mates do in the privacy of our quarters!” She scolded him.

“Medwaw please!” Eirene spoke now shaking her head. “Stop acting like Fedor and I have not heard it all before.”

“If Avi has detected it and we know where it is...” Wayonn said. “Should we not have Anja remove it?”

“I agree.” Helen spoke.

“No.” Martin said.

“Martin why?” Helen asked looking at him.

“If we remove it then Pleistarchus will no longer think he has a chance to reclaim me.” For'mya said softly never taking her eyes from Martin. “And the opportunity with Kalis will be lost forever.”

Martin took her face in his hands again. “He... he can be saved Kinsoaurgai. We can...”

For'mya covered his hands with her own and shook her head. “No. Do not explain it to me Martin Leonidas. I can see it in your heart and mind. We all can.” She moved closer to him, pressing her lithe elven body against his. “The rage and discord is still there, buried deep, but you have pushed it to the back behind your belief in Kalis.”

Martin nodded. “He would never have been able to complete the lessons if he did to want to change his life For'mya. No matter how I feel about my brother and what he has done to you, I can't... I can't just cast aside Kalis because of my brothers sins. Not after what he has done. That would be a greater crime. You know that.”

For'mya nodded her head. “I do... yes.” She said. “Then we will do this.” She said. “And in taking Kalis from him we will earn another kind of victory. One that will make him feel even more pain before he dies.”

Martin lowered his forehead to hers. [I swear to you with all that I am he will pay for what he did to you Kinsoaurgai. I swear it to you.]

For'mya was an elf and as a norm, elves were not the vindictive sort. For'mya Leonidas however was also part wolf now thanks to the man she loved so completely. The wolf in her demanded justice. Retribution. As she gazed into Martin's eyes she knew he would fulfill that promise to her no matter what he had to do.

For'mya kissed him softly and nodded her head. [I know my beloved Martin. I know.] She took a deep breath and smiled. [Do I... do I need to do anything?] She asked him.

Martin smiled. [Besides looking absolutely delicious like you always do?] He said. [No. I'll take care of everything.]

For'mya's grin grew even wider and she blushed once more. He could always say the right things to her. She nodded and squeezed his arms. "Then we will not speak of it any more." She said.

Martin watched as she moved back to her spot beside Aricia and both Aricia and Anja leaned over to nuzzle her neck as Dysea and the others reached for her with their hands. Martin turned back to Wayonn and met his eyes.

"I probably don't want to know what you have planned for your brother do I?" Wayonn asked.

Martin shook his head. "Probably not." He replied.

Wayonn nodded. "Fair enough." He said. He picked up Martin's P1 and handed it back to him. "I did do some creative programming and your P1, along with everyone who carries one now has access to the entire base. I reconfigured the security protocols as well. No one who is not a member of your family will be able to override them."

Martin looked at him. "You're part of that family Wayonn. Remember that." He said.

Wayonn nodded his head with a smile. "I will."

"Avi will be coming down first thing in the morning." Martin said.

"Good. Things will go quicker with him here to access the computers." Wayonn said.

"Why don't you and I head down to the vehicle bay and have a talk with Arzoal." Martin said.

Wayonn looked at him. "In regards to what?" He asked.

"In regards to history and some other things Avi made me aware of when he entered the system." Martin said.

"I don't follow." Wayonn said.

"Does the name Kasdan or Lorendo mean anything to you?" Martin asked. The look on Wayonn's face was all the answer Martin needed and he nodded his head. "See... we got a lot to talk about."

Iama laid on her back on the soft foam mattress and let her keen feline eyes wander across the many bodies in the darkened central lounge. Many of them slept alone or in small groups with their peers, and she could see three sets of bodies that slept wrapped tightly in one another's arms. One of those pairs was Miseo and Eirene Leonidas. Fedor had not returned to the main lounge with his sister and she found that odd. They normally were never very far apart and his empty foam bed was next to theirs. The chill from the metal walls was cutting through her even with the heaters on within the station. Even with the blanket she could not get warm enough to fall asleep. Finally she tossed the blanket aside and got to her feet. She was very good at direction and she began walking back to the vehicle bay where they had come in. This was a new planet they said, only able to sustain life for the last nine hundred years, and that meant the atmosphere would be clear and the air crisp. Perhaps the fresh air would clear her head and allow her to fall asleep. It took her only a few moments to make her way back to the vehicle bay, crossing path with two Durcunusaan who nodded to her as she moved past. Both of the men looked at her with enticing smiles, as if trying to persuade her to stop and talk with them. Iama knew that look and she realized then that word was beginning to spread that she was easy to get into bed. That was not the reputation she wanted to have in this new life and she decided right then that the next man to share her bed was the one she would spend the rest of her life with.

As Iama walked into the vehicle bay she found the massive doors wide open and the crisp air of the night filled her lungs. She smiled as she moved past the security position, ignoring the two Spartans there, and she moved past the main double doors. King Leonidas had not forbid them from going outside since the only threat they faced was three levels down and very much asleep in their stasis pods. With nothing more than plant life on the surface, there was no real threat, but she still detected the defensive sensors set up a hundred meters from the entrance. She moved past those sensors and stopped, inhaling of the clean air and letting it fill her lungs and clear her head.

“Looking for someone child?” The older female voice spoke from the darkness and Iama whirled around as the shape of the woman came out of the darkness. She watched as Helen casually walked up to her holding the large mug in her hands.

“Oracle.” Iama gasped. “I... no. I wasn't looking for anyone.” She replied quickly.

Helen smiled in the darkness as she detected the lie from the adrenalin dumped into her system.

“Beautiful night isn't it?” Helen said.

Iama nodded quickly. “Yes.”

Helen looked up into the stars. “I would stand on top of the highest mountain in Sparta on many nights and stare off into the stars wondering if it would change.” Helen sipped her mug and smiled. “Well it did. In many ways I had never imagined or could hope for.” She looked at Iama. “It will change for you too child. Freedom smells so sweet now doesn't it?”

Iama could not deny that and she nodded her head. “Yes it does.” She said softly. She looked at Helen and charged forward without thinking. “May I ask you something Oracle?” She spoke.

Helen looked at her. “My name is Helen child.” She said with a smile. “Oracle makes me sound ancient. I have always hated that name.”

“But you are... you are the First Oracle of the Lycavorian people.” Iama said quickly. “Every one of your people I have seen regards you almost reverently.”

Helen nodded. “Yes... and it's very taxing at times.” She said. “The only place where I do not feel so worshiped is on the Royal Estate back in Sparta. There I can be myself.”

“The King does not refer to you like this?” Iama asked.

Helen laughed. “Since the day we met, Martin Leonidas and I have been the most normal around each other. He hates it when people refer to him as King or Milord. He would be very happy if people just used his name.”

“But he is King.” Iama gasped.

Helen nodded. “And given the opportunity he would take his Queens and vanish to the far reaches of the universe if he could.” She told her. “He hates being King almost as much as he hates fighting.”

Iama looked at her wide eyed. “But... but he is a Spartan! I... the Durcunusaan I have spoken too... I thought Spartans reveled in battle.”

Helen smiled at her. “Sit with me Iama.” She said as she lowered herself to the ground on the slight incline and patted the soft grass next to her. Helen's eyes grew bright when Iama didn't hesitate and she settled next to her. “I never said Martin or any Spartan were not good at it... fighting I mean... but you would be hard pressed to find a Lycavorian who would not rather play with his children and love his woman than fight.”

“These... these are not things that are known.” Iama spoke slowly. “Many of my people fear yours.”

Helen looked at her. “Fear us?” She asked somewhat surprised. “The Kavalian people are strong and fearsome themselves. Why would they fear us?”

“You must understand First Oracle...” Iama saw Helen's face twist into distaste and she smiled. “Helen. You must understand... my people are not allowed to chose their own paths. Most of them anyway. All they have known is the Prefect and his laws. The average Kavalian would much rather hunt and work. Keleru is the one who has twisted their sense of duty. And most of their knowledge of Lycavorians comes from Marshall Pusintin.”

“Ah...” Helen nodded her head. “Yes. Well... I can tell you with complete certainty that he does not embolden the spirit of my people. He has always craved more, ever since he was a boy and it has corrupted his mind and his heart. He is not a Lycavorian and he hasn't been for many centuries.”

“You knew the Marshall when he was a child?” Iama gasped.

Helen nodded. “I knew him. I watched as he was born and as he grew.” She said softly. “If his father knew what he would become... he would have discarded him that very first day as was Spartan custom.”

“But the Spartan way was not always your people's way.” Iama said.

Helen nodded her head. “No it wasn't. It wasn't for a very long time... but now we bleed Spartan law. It's very amusing at times to think we as a people adopted the ways of humans who we regarded as beneath us for so long. But just as we took much from the Spartan way... we gave so much back. And though much of our history is barbaric in many respects to how we are now, there was always honor and faith in that history. Even before we adopted the Spartan way of life.” She told her. “We outgrew our savage nature thanks to Martin's grandparents and great grandparents. We grew into what we are now. Yes... when we fight, we are devastating to our enemies. But we are equally as devoted to our friends and allies. Given a choice... we'd much rather drink Spartan wine and play with our children as fight." Helen looked at her. she reached out and touched her arm gently. "But you did not come out here to listen to me prattle on about our history. What vexes you child?"

Iama looked away and shook her head. "I simply... I just could not sleep." She stated.

Helen chuckled softly. "Child... you do know that we can detect the adrenalin cast into a person's bloodstream when they speak a lie. It causes their scent to change ever so slightly." Helen squeezed her arm. "Just as yours just did now and a few moments ago. You can talk to me Iama. You have... you have no one and I know all this must be overwhelming. But you can always talk to me."

"Forgive me." Iama said softly. She looked at Helen and knew her words were spoken truly. She felt like she could speak with her about anything. "I... I do not know where I fit in. I am free for the first time in my life and I do not know how to accept that freedom. Or what to do with it."

"You seem to be doing just fine." Helen told her.

Iama looked at her. "I am a cook Helen." She stated plainly. "It is the only thing I was ever taught. My... other skills... they are not something I wish to use any longer except for the man who will make me his wife. If that day ever comes." She added in a low voice.

Helen laughed. "Ah... child... the quickest way to befriend a Lycavorian is through their stomach! And you have done that with everyone on the ARC ROYAL. They adore your cooking Iama. Martin and the Queens rave about it. Of course... he raves about all food."

Iama matched her soft laugh at that comment but then her face became serious. "I have befriended too many I think." Iama muttered.

"This is about the young men who have shared your bed since your arrival on the ship isn't it?" Helen asked her.

"There have been too many." Iama said pointedly. "But they treat me so much better than what I am used too. Yet... I know none of them want me for more than comfort and pleasure. I enjoy it too Helen... but I want... I want..."

"You want more." Helen said.

Iama nodded. "I do not care for them as I care for..." Iama stopped talking. "It matters not now... he probably thinks I am nothing more than a whore now. And he is different. He was born like the..."

Helen sipped her mug of coffee. "I would not be too hasty in judging what Fedor thinks of you child." She said.

Iama's soft green eyes grew wide and she looked at her. "What? You... how...?"

"Another thing about this crazy sense of smell all Lycavorians have..." Helen said. "We can detect when someone desires another person. Male or female. And you child... you are fighting your desire for Fedor Leonidas something fierce. Just as he is for you. Why do you think he is not sleeping inside the station?"

"Because of me?" Iama gasped.

Helen nodded. "Your scent is... how do I explain this? It is like a drug to him. He wants it... but he thinks he can't have it. In order to fight it... he stays away."

"But the growth hormone." Iama said. "I have seen this is thousands of Kavalian clones. Their minds do not... they do not develop like their bodies."

"Fedor is no Kavalian clone child." Helen said. "He is very smart and witty. He's taking after his father too much if you ask me."

"His father is Marshall Pusintin!" Iama hissed.

Helen held up a finger and shook her head. "Now that is where you are wrong." She said gently. "Pusintin or Pleistarchus or whatever he wishes to call himself these days... he may have donated the sperm... but he is not Fedor's father. Nor Eirene's. Martin is their father and will be until the day they die."

"How is that possible?" Iama asked.

"When a Lycavorian senses that a child has been conceived... and the female's scent changes almost instantly when this happens mind you. When the male senses this he leaves an impression upon the child in the womb within Mindvoice. It is instinct in Lycavorian men to do this. Like second nature. Just as Mindvoicing is second nature to us." Helen said. "Pusintin did not do this when he used the drugs and raped For'mya. He knew she was in Phase... which is the most fertile time for a female Lycavorian... turned or Pureblood. When he raped her and got her pregnant he did not imprint his essence on Fedor and Eirene like any Lycavorian would do to his children. This caused them to quite instinctively reach for the most powerful essence they could find. That essence was Martin's. Fedor and Eirene are no more Pusintin's children than you or I."

"But how can their minds have developed like you say?" Iama asked. "Kavalian clones never fully mature in an intellectual way."

"Well... that is a little harder to explain to someone who can not Mindvoice and does not have Etheric ability." Helen said. "You have seen what Martin can do? What Androcles can do? A few others?"

Iama nodded. "Yes. It is unbelievable."

"I won't go into the boring details of how they can do these things... only that it is this ability that allowed Androcles to bite his mother and touch the minds of the Fedor and Eirene while they were still within For'mya's womb." Helen said. "He touched them within the womb and granted them awareness of their surroundings and their minds. This contact with him and then For'mya on a continuing basis allowed their minds to grow at the same rate as their bodies. Faster even given the knowledge and wisdom he passed to them. Androcles would do anything for his siblings. Anything at all. He loves them dearly and he has appointed himself their guardian for all time. I don't know what drives that young man... but when it comes to his brother and sisters... there is nothing he would not do." Helen told her. "That is why he did what he did with Eirene and Fedor. Essentially... when they were born, they already had the intelligence of someone three times their age. Now... now they are doing the things that any Lycavorian or elf would do at this age."

"That is... it is so hard to believe." Iama said softly as she shook her head.

"Do you believe that Martin has these abilities?" Helen asked.

Iama met her eyes. "I have seen them. Of course." She said.

"Then do not dismiss what you have not seen simply because you have not seen it." Helen said. "Have you spoken with Fedor? Sat down with him and really talked to him?"

Iama shook her head. "Oh no... I couldn't do that."

"And why not?" Helen asked.

"He... he is a Prince." Iama said. "His sister a Princess." Iama shook her head. "I am no one when compared to them."

Helen chuckled and squeezed her hand. "If only you knew how wrong you are child." She said. "You must realize that when a Lycavorian... even a turned one... when they get the scent of the woman they want in their head it does not go away until they are rejected openly. Fedor believes you see him as some sort of child because of how you have treated him."

"I did not mean too... I thought he was like all the others I have known!" Iama defended herself. "I..."

"Do you find him physically attractive Iama?" Helen asked her.

Iama looked at her. Did she find him attractive? Iama shook her head. "He is... he is the most beautiful man I have ever laid my eyes upon." She said almost wistfully.

"Then forget he is a Prince and discover what is in his head." Helen said. "He is no child Iama... and once you realize that... well... then you can move forward. If ever two souls were meant for one another... it is the two of you."

Iama's eyes grew a little wider. "How do you... how do you know that?" She asked.

Helen chuckled once more. "I am the Oracle of the Lycavorian people." She stated playfully. "There are many things that I know. If you wish to know him than forget what you have experienced in the past and move forward into the future. Believe me... he no more acts like a Prince than his brothers do. And I have been after them for years to act in a way befitting their position. All of them."

"Do they listen?" Iama asked.

Helen chortled. "Never." She replied. "And nor does their father. It must run in their blood or something. A defect of some kind."

Iama couldn't help herself this time and she laughed at Helen's expression and tone of voice now. "You... you do not act like... like an Oracle of your people." She said.

"Thank the gods for that!" Helen retorted. "If I did... I'd be walking around like some senseless automation spewing monotonous entries from some never ending book that only I have seen. We wouldn't want that would we?"

"No." Iama said honestly with a smile.

Helen squeezed her hand even tighter. “You are free now child. Free of every horror that has befallen you in the past. Forget them now. Push them deep into the back of your mind and lock them away. Grasp for the future you could have. It is how we live. It is how we all should live. If Fedor Leonidas is anything like his father and brothers... and he is more like them than I care to comment on at times... he will worship you Iama. Worship you in a way that will make your head spin and your senses scream for more. Trust me on this child.”

“I would... I would not know where to begin.” Iama spoke softly. “I have been very... I have been very cruel to him. I have said terrible things and treated him as no more than a child. How do I fix that?”

“That should be the first sign to you that he is different. Because his desire for you has not waned an iota even after that. Talking to him would be a good start.” Helen said nudging her arm. She motioned to the outside of the PSS and then four stories up where Iama’s eyes grew wide as she spied Fedor sitting on the edge of the roof structure to the side of the tower. She could easily make out Kdan’s wings flapping every so often next to him. “The elevator to the roof is on the outside of the structure on the west.”

“He is... he is with his dragon.” Iama said haltingly. “I... I shouldn’t bother them.”

“Kdan and Fedor are bonded now Iama. They will always be together.” Helen said. “You can’t use that as an excuse child. And I know from how you have reacted before you do not share the inbred fear of dragons that most of your kind does. You never know... you just may end up sharing in that bond they have. It has happened before. Take a chance child... you will not be disappointed.”

Iama met her eyes and Helen saw a determination begin to grow in them. She was already smiling when Iama came to her feet. “Thank you Helen.” She said.

“That’s what I am here for.” Helen said. She watched Iama use her feline speed to sprint towards the staircase that would take her up to the future she so desired.

[Theirs will be an intense love that will burn for many millennia.] Arzoal’s voice filled her head and she turned as she felt her bonded sister settle gently to the ground a few meters away. [As will Eirene and Miso.]

[When have you ever known a Leonidas to love and not have it be intense sister?] Helen asked as she rose to her feet.

[True.] Arzoal said in response. [That is why we are so connected with your kind my Bonded Sister.]

Helen walked up to Arzoal and let her hands run along the scales on her muscular side. Arzoal’s wings fluttered gently at her Bonded Sister’s touch and she turned her head on her neck and looked at her.

[Shall we fly? The night is beautiful. We could join the others.] Arzoal spoke.

[Let them hunt.] Helen said as she scampered up into the saddle. [Let’s enjoy the night air as we do over Sparta sister.]

Arzoal’s eyes blinked and she nodded her massive head. [Let’s] She said. [Then all we will have to do is find you a suitable mate sister.]

Helen laughed as the Dragon Armor braces tightened on her legs. [Hah! That is a good one sister! Who would want me? Old hag that I am!]

Arzoal laughed within their connection as well. [Old hag? Hardly. You are barely four thousand five hundred years old sister. I have seen some of Gallais’s friends looking at you with interest.]

[Those old Spartans?] Helen chimed. [Please... not a single one makes my heart flutter. Even on a windy and weak day.]

[And what kind of man would sister?] Arzoal asked.

[A stronger man than me.] Helen answered her confidently. [A proud man. Strong and honorable. A Spartan like Martin’s father. That would be nice. Too bad they are all taken.]

Arzoal laughed again as she cocked her legs and exploded into the night sky. [We shall see sister! We shall see!]

TALISMAN

SEVENTEEN HOURS FROM ONTEROM

“...new information is somewhat disturbing.” Delnash spoke as he looked out the view window his hands folded behind his back.

“I should think so.” Lorendo snapped from his chair at the table where all of the senior Elder Pralors now sat.

Delnash turned to face them. “How is it that this Wayonn’s Security Protocols were never erased from the main database?” He asked.

“By the time we gave up the search for the five city ships lost with Sumar, the Second Scourge war was brewing.” Murano answered him. “I can only assume their codes were never removed because we were concerned with more important things. Like how to defend our people. Removing Security Protocols became a very minor secondary concern.”

“And because the men and women who should have been doing this were so lax in their duties, now these people have gained access to not only one of our Science Stations, but a Ship Avatar and the codes to operate it and the station!” Lorendo spat. “They have locked out all remote access and functionality. I would imagine in their bumbling they have released the Svorag into the station and surrounding area by now.”

“We don’t know that!” Kasdan spoke from the side wall.

“I recommend that we simply destroy the station from orbit.” Lorendo offered. “It is the only way to be sure.”

“You advocate murdering whoever is down there?” Delnash exclaimed. “Before they blocked our sensors we detected over forty individuals on the surface within the station! You would have us murder them!”

“Chief Elder... we do not need to do that!” Kasdan spoke again.

Lorendo turned in his chair and glared at his younger assistant. “Kasdan you will keep your misguided opinions to yourself. They have no place here among the Elders of our people.” He turned back to Delnash. “Destroying the station from orbit will insure none of those Svorag creatures leave the planet!”

“And in order to destroy the station you will have to destroy the two ships in orbit as well.” Murano said. “Or do you think they will simply allow us to butcher their people on the surface and not do anything to try and stop us?”

“If they attempt to stop us we can easily disable their ships.” Lorendo said.

“They have Pralor shielding Lorendo.” Delnash said. “Disabling their ships might not be as easy as you suggest.”

Lorendo looked at him. “We must do what we must.” He said.

Murano leaned forward at the table. “So now we go from a few dozen to many thousands of deaths?” He stated. “Between the two ships, the probe has scanned nearly eleven thousand other lives. Will we murder them now as well Lorendo?” He rose to his feet and looked at Delnash. “I can’t believe we are even contemplating this action. Brother... you are not actually considering what this fool is saying are you?”

“Our technology has been compromised!” Lorendo spoke angrily. “If that technology falls into the hands of the Scourge or one of their minion species, everything we have gained since fleeing will be lost!”

“There is a Praetorian down there!” Murano bellowed. “A Praetorian of Sumar’s blood! I feel him as surely as I stand here now!”

“If that really is the case then Sumar willingly broke the laws made when the Praetorians were brought into existence!” Lorendo snapped. “He defied the very laws he helped to institute when it came to you and your kind! Whatever is down there is nothing more than a dead man’s hope. An abomination! Just like all of the Praetorians! They are to blame for everything that took place with the Scourge! If not for Xaxon we...”

“Lorendo that is enough!” Delnash barked. “You will not...”

Delnash stopped speaking for Lorendo was no longer in his chair. At the moment he was suspended several meters above the table engulfed in a light blue shimmering flame. His hands were clawing at his throat as if he could not breathe and his dark eyes wide in fear. Everyone in the room had come to their feet even as Murano twisted his fist which was encased with that same light blue flame. Lorendo’s form levitated across the table to float in front of Murano whose face was a mask of anger and hate.

“I have warned you once about the lack of respect with which you speak of my honored comrades! Your continued vitriol and disrespect of my fallen brethren is becoming most taxing Elder Lorendo.” Murano growled. “You know nothing! You cowered on the other side of the Empire while it crumbled around you and my brethren and I died beside our soldiers! You blame us? If not for the Praetorians our people would have fallen in the first war you fool! And you would not be here condemning us because you would be dead!”

“Murano release him!” Delnash barked.

“I do not know where this hatred of Praetorians comes from Elder Lorendo... and frankly I do not care any longer.” Murano stated. “I will not allow you to kill a Praetorian of Sumar’s blood. I do not care about some law that is over fifty thousand years old! Sumar obviously saw the need to break it and I trust in his wisdom far more than I do in yours!”

“Murano!” Delnash shouted. “I said release him!”

Murano turned and looked at his brother. He opened his fist and instantly Lorendo fell. He bounced off the table and flew back to land on the deck on his back gasping for air. The shimmering blue flame vanished just as quickly from around his hand. “The preservation of our people is a Praetorians most sacred oath. I will not see you throw away the greatest opportunity in forty millennia to make our people strong again because of what this fool advocates brother!”

“He is an Elder of the Convention!” Delnash barked at him. “You will show him the respect he is due! Just as he will show you!”

Lorendo pushed Kasdan away from him as he rose to his feet one hand still gripping his throat. “You are mad!” He screamed. “You... you nearly killed me!”

Murano chortled at him. “If I had wanted you dead Elder Lorendo... you would be dead.” He hissed.

“Enough!” Delnash barked. “Your ongoing feud does nothing to help in what actions we need to decide! I demand that both of you cease this personal vendetta immediately!”

Murano looked at him. “If I knew why he acts such the fool towards me I would happily end it.” He spat at his brother.

“You... you and your kind are responsible for nearly all the misery we have suffered at the hands of the Scourge!” Lorendo shouted.

“My kind?” Murano stated. “I am a Pralor... just like you. Like everyone in this room!”

“No!” Lorendo barked at him. “You, Sumar and all those like you are nothing more than genetic abominations! Gifted with powers and abilities that you wield so casually and have no right to!”

“No right to? What blither is this? I did not choose to be born with the Praetorian gene!” Murano spat at him.

“If this Praetorian you say you feel... if he is there on that planet then it was Sumar who violated his own law about Praetorians not breeding outside of the ranks of our own people!” Lorendo shouted. “Only we have the knowledge and control to utilize the power you throw about so easily!”

Murano shook his head. “You speak of a law that is over fifty thousand years old!” He snapped. “If we are to survive as a people then we must dismiss this arrogance so many of us have that we are superior. That attitude has caused us more misery than anything else. We do not know what happened to Sumar and Wayonn! We were not there! You condemn and hold judgment over him and you know nothing of what happened! Who are you to make decisions on his actions?”

“I am an Elder of the Convention!” Lorendo snarled.

Murano stepped towards him only to have Delnash move in front of him. “Brother no!” He said.

Murano held out his hand and pointed at Lorendo. “You were never elected to serve the people Lorendo!” He growled at him. “None of you were! Remember that!” He let his eyes move to the other men and women in the room. “You filled the shoes of those that came before you and not once in all that time has talk of an election been held! Why is that?”

“We are... we are guiding our people.” Radra spoke for the first time.

Murano nodded. “And you have done well Elder Radra.” He said. “But do not think for an instant that your position as an Elder of the Convention makes you more special or more important than the people you serve. Tread down that path carefully Elders of the Convention, because it leads to a place you do not want to go!”

“What do you know of leading people?” Lorendo hissed at him. “Our citizens worship the Praetorians as some sort of heroes and gods. Yet you have cowered and hidden now for far longer than we ever did!”

Murano kept his rising anger in check and opened his mouth to answer but was cut off by Radra. “Now you are wrong Lorendo! And out of line!” She spoke rising to her feet. “The Praetorians have always been protectors of our people! If Murano has chosen to remain hidden and unknown these last centuries then it was only for the benefit of our people! Do not mistake his actions as something that they are not! None of us in this room have the right to do that! None of us!”

Lorendo took a deep breath. "I do not mean to imply that there is." He stated more calmly now. "But we have led our people since we had to flee. And we have done a superior job of it. And we have done it without his help!"

"And if we face the Scourge again one day I will thank the spirits he is now back among us." Another Elder spoke from further down the table. "His return has inspired our people and his existence has only been known for a few hours! It is all the crew of this ship is talking of. You can not deny the influence he has."

"I do not deny the influence!" Lorendo spat. "I question his dismissal of laws that have been in place for millennia."

"I dismiss nothing!" Murano retorted. "But I know this... Sumar was far wiser and more opened minded than you will ever be Elder Lorendo. He was not elected Chief Elder by some accident. He knew what needed to be done to protect our people. He condemned and punished his own brother for his crimes against our people and he did so willingly! If he saw a reason to disregard a law he put in place then there was a reason for it. A reason you would not be able to comprehend because your only concern is for your station."

"That is not true?" Lorendo snarled.

"Isn't it?" Murano said. "You dismissed the reports Kasdan brought to you without even looking at them. If he had not gone above his station... we would not know about what is happening right now. Why is that Elder Lorendo?"

"Enough of this!" Delnash barked out. "This bickering between you and Lorendo needs to stop!" Delnash said with force behind his words. "We have to determine what we are going to do when we arrive." Delnash turned. "Elder Sashan are there enough men in the detachment you brought to secure the station?"

Sashan nodded. "More than enough Chief Elder." He said. "They are my best."

Delnash nodded his head and returned to his chair. "Then this is what we will do." He stated. "Murano... you will lead the detachment of Convention Security Troops and secure the station. Captain Dehov will secure the two ships in orbit and we will discover what is going on. With our dragon brothers and sisters joining us... we should have no trouble."

Murano looked at him. "And you expect them to just allow us to walk right in and take them prisoner?"

"If they are friendly as you say... then yes." Delnash spoke. "They will release control of the station back to us and we will confiscate whatever Pralor technology they have and destroy what we can not take." Delnash took a deep breath. "I appreciate what you say you feel brother, but I must act on fact. I can not make decisions based solely on your word."

"If there is a Praetorian among them you will be making a mistake." Murano spoke. "He will not simply allow you to do what you say."

"I do not believe there is Murano." Delnash said shaking his head with a deep breath. "There are many coincidences yes... but if they have Avatar 41, then it stands to reason they used the knowledge Avatar 41 had of Sumar to somehow bypass the security measures put in place by Elder Lorendo. It was Sumar's Avatar, so it would have knowledge that he possessed. We know how Sumar viewed his Avatar."

"You are making a mistake brother." Murano stated. "We should be reaching out to them!"

"We can not associate with species who are more primitive than us." Delnash spoke. "That has been part of our Accord since the very beginning of the Seed Missions. If Sumar broke this Accord then there is nothing I can do."

Murano nodded slowly. "Your right." He said. "There is nothing you can do." He spoke looking at his brother. "And whatever blood comes will be on your hands brother. And I will insure our people know exactly what took place."

"You have no right!" Lorendo spat. "The decisions of this Elder Convention remain among its members! You can not act against our wishes!"

Murano looked at him. "I have every right as a Praetorian." He stated calmly now. "If it affects our people then it is my duty as a Praetorian. Unless of course this Elder Convention is going to vote to change the law and strip the Praetorians of their authority. Is that what you are proposing?"

"Murano! No!" Delnash exclaimed coming to his feet once more.

Murano nodded his head. "Then I am sorry brother. You will do what you must and so will I." He stated. "I will not be party to this unelected Elder Convention any longer. As the last Praetorian I will not act for or against you but I will not recognize you until you see fit to have our people elect all of you as Elders. Then I will consider you legitimate.”

“Murano!” Delnash spoke coming to his feet.

“No. You have made your decision brother and I respect that. I have decided as well. I will accompany the Security Detachment to the surface but I will not take part in attempting to subdue whoever is there. I will only act in defense.” He stated. “If you will excuse me.”

Delnash and the others watched as he turned confidently and left the room.

Lorendo turned to Delnash. “Chief Elder you...”

“Silence!” Delnash spoke harshly cutting off Lorendo’s words. “Your conduct so far has not inspired confidence Lorendo! Not telling us of your actions on Onterom and refusing to allow your assistant to make this information known. I will not address your utter contempt for my brother and his position as a Praetorian! An honored and sacred position among our people! You go too far!”

“Chief Elder...” Lorendo began but Delnash held up his hand.

“No.” He stated. “I do not believe Murano feels what he says he does. There are too many unknowns and the odds that what he says is true are astronomical. I can’t deny that even though he is my brother. I do believe it is much more likely these... people, whoever they are, discovered Avatar 41 among the ruins of our crashed City Ship wherever it ended up and were able to reactivate him. We will proceed to Onterom and take them into custody. We will destroy any trace of our technology that they possess and we will do it in such a way that causes the least harm.”

“What do we do with them after we have done this?” Sashan asked. “We can’t simply leave them there. Not without providing for them.”

“Onterom is capable of sustaining life now.” Lorendo spoke. “Give them whatever supplies they have on their ships and leave them.”

Delnash shook his head. “No. We will find a suitable planet and leave them there before returning to Artaaya.” He said. “Then this business will be done. That is my decision.”

“And the dragons among them?” Radra asked.

Delnash touched the console on the table. “Teniri... have you been listening?”

The voice of the Dragon Elder Mother responded with its synthesized female sound. “I have Chief Elder Delnash.”

“Will you be able to integrate these dragons into your population?” Delnash asked.

“Chief Elder... if I may?” Teniri said.

“Of course Teniri. Always.”

“As we grow closer to this planet I have been trying to reach out and touch the dragons there within Mindvoice using a Neural Enhancer provided by Elder Lorendo. What I have felt is... odd.” She spoke.

“Odd in what way?” Delnash asked looking at Lorendo.

“I have been able to sense eight dragons on the surface.” Teniri said. “Six fully grown adults, four of whom are females. Healthy and fertile females are always welcome among the males and if I am correct, these females are young and would make excellent mates and able to produce many eggs. The other two are adolescent dragons, but they possess a...”

“What?” Delnash asked.

“I did not probe too deeply on any of them for fear of alerting them to my presence. Their Etheric Shields are exceptional Delnash. Two of them even stronger than even my own. The others almost as strong. They are also holding them very high, which means they probably did not detect my resonance.”

“This is significant Teniri?” Delnash asked.

“To be honest... I don’t know.” She answered. “These dragons are different.”

“Different how?” Radra asked now.

“Their Etheric resonance is tied very deeply with other minds. The ability to hold their shields so high for so long is not something that we can normally do.” She answered. “Murano said he thought them to be bonded with some of these individuals and I am beginning to think he may be right.”

“I thought that wasn’t possible.” Delnash asked.

“It shouldn’t be.” Teniri said in response. “I also detected great discipline within all of them. Harnessed and controlled. As if they have had some intense training of some kind. More so the six adults than the two adolescents.”

“But you can still merge them into your population correct?” Delnash asked wanting to end this discussion and find his brother.

“Yes. The females are still young from what I was able to determine as I said.” Teniri answered. “Three of them are barely a millennia old. They will be taken by male dragons as mates very quickly. The fourth is older but her shields did not allow for me to determine her age. They are much more focused and powerful. Something that only comes with age.”

“Then the dragons come with us.” Delnash spoke.

“There is something else Delnash.” Teniri said.

“Yes.”

“I caught flashes of... it was very hard to focus because some sort of field or shielding was disrupting my resonance... but I caught flashes of other dragons as well. On the ship in orbit. A few hundred at least. Young dragons. I tried to make contact with them... but I failed.” Teniri said.

Delnash looked up with wide eyes. “You are sure?”

“Yes.”

“That is odd isn’t it? You not being able to touch them?” Delnash asked.

“Very.” She answered.

“We will determine what they are there for when we take the ships.” Delnash spoke. “I imagine you will be leading your dragons to the surface?”

“Of course Delnash.” She answered. “Only we will be able to subdue those already there.”

“Then I will see you on the surface.” Delnash answered. He got to his feet. “If you will excuse me I must speak with my brother and try to calm him. Regardless of what you may think of Praetorians Lorendo... now that his existence has become common knowledge, we need his support.”

Lorendo nodded. “Of course Chief Elder.” He said.

“We will gather in the landing bay when we arrive in the system.” Delnash said. “Until then my friends.”

ONTEROM PRALOR SCIENCE STATION

“...Andro and Elynth did it.” Fedor spoke looking at Dnom as he took another bite out of the large red apple.

Dnom chuckled softly within Mindvoice. Andro and Elynth have been together for years my Bonded Brother. We possess neither their skill nor their daring.

“Not yet.” Fedor told him.

Not yet.

Since the slight breeze that was blowing was coming from in front of them, Fedor did not detect Iama’s scent until he saw her move from the shadows of the staircase towards him. “Sibfla!” He hissed softly as he rose to his feet and Dnom turned his large head and watched her approach.

As she came closer Fedor caught her scent on the air and he took a deep breath trying to clear his head and force her sweet kiwi aroma from his mind. He failed miserably, which only made things worse. Dnom noticed that she came forward hesitantly, her long tail twitching behind her as if she was very nervous. Iama moved up in front of him, her eyes glancing to Dnom and the fear that gripped so many of her people when they were near dragons nonexistent to her. Iama brought her hands together and rubbed her palms.

“Hello.” She said softly.

Fedor met her eyes. “We were just leaving.” He stated. “The roof is yours.”

Iama imposed her petite frame in front of him. “Wait.” She said.

Fedor looked at her. "Why? So you can call me more names? Or perhaps comment on my eating habits? Or maybe my intelligence level again? I think not."

Looking at him Iama felt a warm flush through her skin. He was, without any doubt, the most incredibly handsome man she had ever laid her eyes upon and the way his body armor conformed to his exquisite physique made her shiver involuntarily. His dark eyes were like beacons in the moonlit sky, and looking at his half elven ears and the way they curved inward against his head made her want to reach out and touch them. She felt immense guilt at his words and as he began to move around her, Iama placed her hand to his chest stopping him.

"Fedor... please wait." She said quickly.

Take a chance child... you will not be disappointed.

Helen's words came back to her and in that moment Iama decided. "I need to... I need to apologize to you." She stammered. "I need to say I am sorry for the way I have treated you."

Fedor stopped trying to move around her and looked down into her face. She was not lying, that much he could tell by her scent, but he was wary nonetheless. He glanced behind him unable to process that she was speaking to him and wondering if perhaps there was a ghost of himself standing behind him. He turned back around and looked down into her pale green eyes. "Why... why the sudden change of heart?" He asked finally.

"I... because I am foolish." Iama answered him. "I am foolish and though you were... I thought you were like the others; the Kavalian clones born as you and your sister were. I should have known that was not the case with you and Eirene but I allowed my... I allowed my emotions towards them direct how I treated you. I'm... I'm sorry." Iama had not removed her hand from his chest and even through the body armor she could almost feel the beating of his heart. Staring at his face and the lack of expression caused her to think she had perhaps done too much and waited too long to make amends. Her heart sank as he simply stood there and said nothing. Holding back the sudden hurt that she felt she forced a smile. "I just wanted... I just wanted to tell you that. I will... I will leave you alone now."

Iama turned from him and began walking back towards the top of the staircase, small tears beginning to form in the corners of her eyes. She did not see Fedor shake his head several times as if trying to clear his head and then he looked at her back.

"Iama?" He spoke quickly causing her to stop. "I... I could show you the celestial markers in this system. If... if you are interested."

The celestial markers? Dnom exclaimed.

Fedor looked at him. It was the first thing that popped into my head brother! I don't know what else to say!

Be yourself Fedor my Bonded Brother. Dnom spoke.

Iama lifted her hand and wiped the small tears away quickly as her spirits lifted and the pain she had felt a moment ago vanished into nothing. She turned quickly and looked at him. "I would like that." She said.

"You would?" Fedor asked surprised as she moved back up in front of him. "Ok... sure."

"Do you like the stars?" She asked.

Fedor smiled. "Celestial Mechanics is very cool!" He said as his face brightened. "I could do without Quantum Physics though... very boring. And the Senior Chief in engineering who is teaching it drones on like a robot. You need to include the variables of mass and acceleration in your equations Prince Fedor or you will crash into a star or a moon." He spoke trying his best to imitate the Senior Chief who was teaching him. "That wouldn't be prudent now would it?" Fedor looked at her. "I don't think he liked it when I said we wouldn't feel anything if that happened so what was the point."

Iama couldn't help but laugh at the expression on his face or the humor he was trying to use to become more comfortable. And it was funny. His face had softened somewhat and Iama moved closer to him, thrilled when he did not move away. She reached down then to take his hand and her eyes quickly followed when she felt the object in his hand. She pulled it up and saw the apple with two bites taken out of it. She looked up into his face.

"I thought you didn't like fruit." She told him taking his hand in hers and holding his palm up with the apple in it.

Fedor shrugged his broad shoulders. “These are pretty good actually.” He said. “Kind of stupid of me to say I didn’t like fruit I know.”

“Fedor... I am sorry... I am sorry about how I have treated you.” Iama spoke softly as she looked into his dark eyes. “I made assumptions based on... based on information that does not apply to you. I know that now. I have made many assumptions since your father... since he rescued me from that planet.” She shook her head now. Standing so close to him, the aura of confidence he projected and the heat of his hand against hers, Iama felt so very awkward and foolish. “I’ve done some stupid things too, trying to fit in. I regret...”

“You do not need to fit in Iama.” Fedor told her. “You are who you are and people will accept you for that. Or they will not.”

She smiled as she looked at him, his words filling her with happiness. “That’s kind of you to say.” She said.

“That... that Durcumusaan Officer is here on the surface with us.” Fedor spoke rather hesitantly. “That is... you and he aren’t... does he know you are here?”

Iama’s eyes grew a little wider. “You... you saw that?” She gasped.

Fedor shrugged. “I was walking to the mess lounge when I saw him coming out of your quarters.” He said.

Iama looked down quickly; very embarrassed and angry that Fedor had seen him exiting her quarters. “One of the mistakes I have made since your father gave me a second chance at life.” She said softly. “No... there is nothing between us but I will understand if you...”

Fedor’s eyes grew a shade brighter and his arm snaked cautiously around her slim waist. “You know the view is much better over here.” He said gently beginning to guide her. “You aren’t afraid of heights are you?”

Iama wanted to scream out in delight when his arm went around her waist. He didn’t let her finish her sentence because he had already made his decision. He still wanted to be with her and that made Iama want to shout out in joy. She had never felt such emotions within her as she did right now. His touch, though simple and innocent, sent electric tingles through her lower back and into her buttocks and she gripped his arm tightly in happiness. She had never felt such physical sensations either when touched by any man and because she felt them now, it made her realize that perhaps Helen had not been wrong. Perhaps she could truly have a future.

“No!” She stammered again. “I’m not afraid of heights.” She answered.

“Cool.” Fedor said. “Want a bite?” he asked holding up the apple.

Iama took it without question as he led her over to the edge of the roof and sat down. Iama didn’t hesitate and settled beside him as she took a bite from the apple and he pointed up and began to talk. Within thirty seconds she was completely enchanted by his voice and the intelligence with which he spoke.

SOLMAR

KINDRED SOUL

“...her steady!” Patton barked out. He was standing beside his command chair refusing to be sitting down for this and wanting to be able to react to anything across the bridge. “Ground Terrain Sensors!”

“LZ is clear on all sides Captain!” His TO responded instantly. “Three thousand meters and closing!”

“Kelly... give me fifty percent power to all VT units! Cut power to Lateral thrusters by thirty!”

“VTs powering up to fifty percent! LTs to forty!” Lieutenant Harbin announced.

“All hands stand by for surface touch down!” The Ops officer announced over his ship COM. “Stand by for surface touch down!”

“Fifteen hundred meters!” The TO barked out.

“Helm... cut power to lateral thrusters! Full power to VTs!” Patton barked out.

“Helm answering!”

“Fire braking thrusters!” Patton snapped out the order.

“Braking thrusters are firing!” Kelly answered almost instantly. It was almost as if she was reading his mind and expecting the next order.

“Holding position Captain!” The TO announced. “We’re off by a hundred and sixteen meters... but other than that we’re good!”

“Extend landing struts!” Patton ordered. “Prepare to touch down! Kelly... drop us real slow girl! I don’t want a scratch on her!”

“Helm aye!”

Patton stood gripping the arm of his chair tightly. He knew his crew was the best there was and he was not going to micromanage them unless he saw a need. So far there had not been a minute where he was unhappy with how things had gone.

“A thousand meters altitude!” Kelly announced, her eyes glued to her controls and her hands moving in almost a blur as she adjusted this system or that. “Reducing power on the VTs to thirty percent. Descent is ten meters a second!”

“We got minor correction from residual LT vents.” The man sitting beside Kelly and across the huge computer between them.

“Compensating!” Kelly barked. “Five hundred meters! Reducing power to ten percent on VTs! Fifteen seconds!”

“Five hundred meters!” The TO called out.

“C’mon you big ass bitch!” Kelly snarled under her breath. “Let’s do this baby!”

“Four hundred! Three! Two! One!” The TO turned. “Strut contact!”

“Cutting power!” Kelly barked.

The KINDRED SOUL bounced only slightly on the powerful struts that allowed her to land and then she settled gracefully to the surface with a glittering blue ocean to her starboard and thick hills and mountains to her port.

“We’re down!” Kelly screamed. “Fucking A we are down! We did it!” She was pumping her fists into the air from her chair and Patton couldn’t help but laugh and join in for just a few seconds. He quickly regained his composure however.

“Alright people! Now we go from Star Ship to Ground Command!” Patton barked out. “All weapons station to active. Crews to their battle points! Deploy the HTs to designated points and lets get ready to receive the Prince’s ships!” He turned to his TO. “Send word to the Prince we are down and secure!”

“Aye sir!”

Patton turned back and looked at the main monitor. “I’ll be a sonofabitch... we really fucking landed you on a planet baby!” He muttered to the walls of the ship. “Damn fine job girl! Damn fine job!”

If there were any doubts within Sehri’s mind as to what lay ahead in her future they were shattered the moment the ebony skinned Lu’ria pulled her into an embrace and planted a kiss on her that simply sizzled with love and desire. A kiss Sehri found herself returning with equal fervor as she pressed against Lu’ria’s lush body. A kiss that then extended to Carisia who was beside her next as Andro greeted Ne’Veha in a similar fashion.

“Oh... oh my.” Aleatia managed to say softly as she watched with the others near the back ramp of the STRIKER.

Harira looked at her. “Lady Aleatia... this is not... you are going to allow this?”

Osbela moved up next to her mother. “Shaman Master Harira is right mother.” She said. “You can’t allow this? She will be with... with other women and him and...”

Aleatia turned her head and looked at them. “I am sorry things did not turn out as your father and I had hoped Osbela. As you and Ibani had hoped. That is the way of things. But I am not going to go against fate by taking your sister away from them.”

“She does not belong to them!” Harira snapped. “She is a member of the Circle of Shamans. This is not acceptable to us.”

Aleatia met her gaze. “Looking at Sehri... I would say it is quite acceptable to her. This is something that was meant to happen. You can not explain it otherwise. No... I will not try and stop this. And once I tell Dyack what I have seen, neither will he.”

Osbela stepped back beside her sister Ibani. “We shall see.” She said to Ibani. “We shall see. I haven’t yet met a man that would refuse us given the right incentive.”

Ibani smiled. “Indeed.”

They turned to watch the fourth woman exit the STRIKER that had landed only moments ago, the three meter long and two meter tall pair of dragons directly behind her. Sadi moved purposefully, her jungle green eyes never leaving Andro’s form as he lowered Ne’Veha to the ground and she turned to greet Sehri. His azure eyes fell upon her and she quickened her pace until she was standing in front of him. Then she was swept up into his powerful arms and she whimpered in unabashed delight as he stole her breath away with the kiss. A kiss that set her blood to burning as he shared with her all of his emotions over the last few days in a tidal wave of Mindvoice thoughts. Those included everything he felt for her, for Lu’ria and the others, and now for Sehri. It was certainly a heated kiss and Sadi embraced it all.

Aleatia turned to look at Dorian who stood with Ryner only a few feet away. “These are... these are his other wives and mates I take it.” Aleatia asked.

Dorian nodded his head with a grin. “Shameless isn’t it.” He said.

Dorian? Ryner’s voice filled his head as his snout butted him in the back of the shoulder. Look.

Dorian glanced at him and then followed where his eyes were. Dorian’s gut contracted when he saw her walking beside Jomann and he stood up a little straighter. Her dreamlike beauty, dreamlike at least to him, was matched only in the confidence and grace with which she carried herself. “If you’ll excuse me Lady Aleatia.” He said.

Sadi gripped Andro’s face in her hands tightly as she nibbled on his lower lips with her fangs, her body pressed tightly to his and his eyes focused on her. “Will you never stop causing us sleepless nights?” She gasped nipping at his jaw with her fangs.

Andro smiled and pulled her closer, happiness and desire sweeping through him. “Then I would become boring and you would seek out a new man.” He said.

Sadi laughed at that. “Ha!” She exclaimed. “Flattery will not make us less angry at you for not bringing us with you!”

“I didn’t exactly plan things like this.” Andro said with a smile.

“And your only saving grace my love is that you discovered the last piece of the puzzle of our hearts.” Sadi said turning to look at Sehri as she stood there holding Ne’Veha’s hand her face bright and happy and her skin blush with desire. Sadi turned fully and inhaled deeply of Sehri’s delicious apple and walnut scent. She noticed Ne’Veha’s flushed skin immediately, as well as Lu’ria’s more agitated state as they stood beside her and knew it was Sehri’s fever and scent that were so very enticing to them.

Sadi stepped up to her and took her free hand without hesitating. “Sehri.” She said softly as she looked at her.

Sehri felt her blood burning even hotter as she was surrounded by them now. Andro and the other women who she so desired to find pleasure with. Pleasure and a life going forward. She didn’t think about it, she simply pulled Sadi closer and kissed her just as passionately as she had kissed Lu’ria and Carisia and Ne’Veha. Sadi cooed in delight and pulled her close as their lips came together and they shared a deep kiss, their tongues doing battle and finally content to dance with each other.

“Ahem!” Andro’s voice broke into their kiss and they parted slowly. “I don’t mean to break this up but the bad guys are not that far away.”

Sadi chuckled softly and looked at Sehri’s bright eyes and brilliant smile. “We are so going to enjoy tasting you Sehri.” She spoke softly.

“Yes... we are.” Carisia echoed.

Sadi glanced back at Andro. “He has been good to you?” She asked turning back to look at her.

Sehri looked at Andro. “For the most part.” She answered with a smile.

Sadi caught the underlying meaning and she smiled. “Yes... well we will fix that as soon as this business with the Kavalians is done.” She said confidently. “SirsanGai, Lu’ria, Carisia and I will help you to hold back the fever now.” Sehri looked around as they all closed in around her tightly. [Close your eyes Sehri.] Sadi’s voice filled her mind easily and it was so very soft and inviting. [Reach for us now.]

[Ovendris niob.] Ne’Veha whispered within the connection. (Together now)

[For innyne jehar...] Lu’ria stated. (And always into)

[Vada falyne.] Carisia finished. (The future)

Andro turned his head slightly and looked at Caydren and Cinol resting on the ground beside Majeir. Anthar had already moved his muscular bulk to where Elynth greeted him with exquisite happiness and the rubbing of their tails. He stepped up to Caydren and Cinol who both rose to look down upon the mate of their Bonded Sisters and a Talon Guardian. Andro reached out and pounded both of them on their powerful sides.

Caydren. Cinol. He spoke. The sons of Vollenh and Viera. You are looking strong and proud my brothers.

Caydren and Cinol bowed their heads on their long necks. Talon Guardian Androcles. Cinol spoke first. Andro shook his head as he ran his hands along their snouts just below their eyes. No my brothers. You are the Bonded ones of my beloved mates just as Majeir and Anthar are. Between us there is nothing but family. I told you. Caydren hissed looking at his brother.

You told me nothing fool. Cinol popped.

Andro laughed as he watched them and it felt so very good to finally feel all of them once more together.

They bicker more than any siblings I have ever seen. Majeir spoke from where she rested on the ground near Lu'ria.

Andro smiled. "We'll work on that." He said turning back to see Sadi and Ne'Veha come up with Sehri between them.

"You knew Andro." Sadi spoke softly. "You knew about Caydren and Cinol. Why didn't... why didn't you tell us?"

Andro rubbed Caydren's snout and smiled. "Because they needed to have time at Dragon Mountain with the Elder mother before taking on their role. If I had told you about them you and SirsanGai would have wanted to go to them immediately. They are stronger for it and so is your bond with them."

Sehri stepped away and right up to Caydren and Cinol who lowered their heads to allow her to reach up and touch them easily. Andro smiled as Sehri's face lit up and she felt them within Mindvoice just as she did Elynth. "You are very handsome." Sehri said.

I told you brother. Caydren spoke up. I am better looking than you.

She didn't say that! Cinol barked.

Yes she did!

Sadi pulled Sehri back quickly with a smile and she looked at Andro. "The only time they weren't arguing was coming down through the atmosphere." She said with a smile.

Andro looked around. "Where are..."

"Right here you big lug!" Eliani's voice spoke from behind them.

Andro turned and saw Eliani and Normya standing there and he moved far faster than they could follow as he scooped his sisters up into his arms and squeezed them to him. Eliani and Normya were filled with relief at seeing their brother and they squeezed him tightly, their arms going around his shoulders.

Eliani's hands began to run over his body almost instinctively, the soft glow of her power easily seen by everyone. "You aren't hurt?" She asked.

"I'm fine Eli." He said. "Really."

Eliani slapped him across the cheek then. "Anse igord!" She snarled. "What were you thinking?"

Andro grinned. "I have missed you too sister." He said.

Eliani grabbed his face and kissed him hard in a sisterly fashion, Normya following suit an instant later.

"You and father need to stop giving us fits fervon!" Normya gasped.

"I am trying." Andro said as he lowered them to the ground.

"Not hard enough it seems!" Eliani hissed.

Andro looked up and saw Jomann standing beside Brendi Faith and Tir'ut. He moved right up to Jomann Eliani and Normya moving aside and the two young men embraced tightly. Eliani felt a surge of pride course through her as they embraced. She had always known that once Moneus married Carina, his time with Andro would be limited, and while their friendship would never weaken, it was satisfying to know that Jomann now meant just as much to Andro as Moneus did. She knew it had something to do with the new abilities and strange power they both had, but it went further now she knew. Eliani had always known she would be beside or very close to Andro no matter where he went. She had made herself his personal doctor in many respects and while many wondered why that was, no one ever questioned it. That the man who had claimed her as his Anome was so close to her brother only made things better. Andro and Jomann pulled apart slightly and grasped their armored hands together, leaning forward to touch their foreheads together.

[I must speak with my father... but I believe Dorian is like us Jomann.] Andro spoke looking at him and using a private Mindvoice connection.

Jomann's eyes grew a little wider. [Truly?] He asked.

Andro nodded. [You must have felt him coming down.]

[I thought it was only because he was with you.] Jomann answered.

Andro shook his head. [No. It is there. I can... I can feel it just as strongly as I do within you and my father and Denali.]

[How?] Jomann asked.

[That I don't know.] Andro said. [But I will find out. He was a terror on the battlefield. Sheva will have her hands full I think.]

[Just as I do with you.] Jomann answered.

[We will speak more about it when we finish with these Kavalian fools.] Andro said. [I have a feeling we will need to test him and see what abilities he has.]

[I have been studying the Tomes as you suggested.] Jomann told him. [They are fascinating Andro.]

[We will go and view the originals soon.] Andro answered him. [keeping them safe is a priority now.]

Jomann nodded as they released their hands and Andro turned and reached out for Tir'ut's hand which Tir'ut took instantly. They grasped each other's forearms tightly. "It is good to see you Tir'ut." Andro said. "I have said this before I know... but it seems that fate and destiny mean to have our families working very closely it seems."

Tir'ut smiled and nodded his head. "That works fine for me." He answered with a smile. "Tagging along with my Blessed Wife is always exciting. She can't appear to stay out of trouble it seems."

"Hey!" Normya complained as she moved back up beside him.

In just the few short months he had been married to Normya Leonidas he had become a favorite of Deia and Gorgo both. He was fascinated with the history that both of them held and when they were together he never ceased to ask questions of them which they both found adoring. As women, both Deia and Gorgo also saw the almost fanatical devotion he had for Normya, and the way he doted over her. She looked so tiny within his embrace, but her face conveyed to all around that she was without a doubt madly in love with Tir'ut.

Andro's head came around when Sa'roh's voice reach across from the STRIKER. "Andro the Kavalians have shifted their forces!" She shouted.

Andro looked at Sadi. "Reunion over." He spoke before breaking into a trot and everyone following him to where Sa'roh now stood with Aleatia and Harira. "What do you have?" He asked.

"They shifted their DAGGERS south towards us." Sa'roh spoke. "They must have figured out that's why they couldn't find us after four days! Stupid bastards. All thirty-three of their ships are holding position a hundred and six kilometers north of our position here. Low to the tree tops to avoid the KINDRED SOULS ground sensors and missile batteries."

"And the KINDRED SOUL?" Andro asked.

"Just got the burst from Captain Patton." Sa'roh spoke. "Two brigades headed towards us from the southeast and they are down on the surface and transitioning to Ground Ops."

Andro nodded his head. "Ok. Time's up." He stated. He looked at Sadi who stood beside Sehri holding tightly to her hand. She nodded to him in acceptance and he turned back to Sa'roh. "Drop the Ground Shroud Sa'roh. Tell the ship captains to lift off and head directly to the KINDRED SOUL. How soon before the two brigades get here?"

"Colonel Mosont reported they were shifting and moving here with the 1st Brigade of the 82nd Cataphract." Sa'roh answered. "Considering how fast you run in wolf form and the abilities of the Cataphract suits I'd say they'll be here in under seven minutes."

Andro nodded. "Spool up the batteries and missiles. We hold for ten minutes and if they don't get here by then we haul ass on our own." Andro looked at Dorian who had moved up beside him with Lisisa from where they had been greeting their sisters. "Time to dance fervon." He spoke.

Dorian nodded. "Good. I was getting bored with this planet anyway." He said. "There's no nightlife!"

Eliani clipped him in the back of the head softly with her hand. “What do you know of the nightlife little brother?” She exclaimed.

Dorian looked at her with a grin. “I know I want to experience Sparta’s nightlife and I can’t do that here!”

Andro looked back to Sa’roh. “Give the orders Sa’roh! Time to get this party started.”

CHAPTER TEN

ONTEROM

FEBRUARY 7TH, 1030 HRS EARTH STANDARD TIME

TEN HOURS BEFORE THE ARRIVAL OF THE TALISMAN

Anja slid her finger down the console, activating the two main monitors above her head and then looking at Duewa who had come down with Avi and a hoard of other techs and engineers that had arrived aboard the Pralor HELIX-Class corvette the previous night.

“So what do you think?” Anja asked her.

Duewa shook her head with a look of disbelief as she looked at the monitors. “Anja if this is accurate, they were well on their way to discovering a corrective agent to reverse the change. They hadn’t worked out the Mutative Enzyme Variable yet, but they were close. Very close. All of their data references the genetic alleles though.” Duewa looked at her. “That’s not going to alter the chromosomal levels until you tackle the MEV factor. It is strange that a species as advanced as the Pralors seem to be would have missed something like that.”

Anja nodded in agreement. “That fact had crossed my mind as well.” She stated. “I mean they were adept enough with genetics to alter the base DNA code of Lycavorians to make it so they couldn’t shift as with the case of the Rothryn.”

“Lycavorian DNA is complex yes... but it is also simple in many ways.” Duewa spoke. “You know that as well as I. It is why they are so adaptable. The virus within their blood is so virulent and fast acting. There are very few species a bite from a Lycavorian would not change. At least in some way.”

Anja nodded. “Yes. That is why I cross referenced all the logs in the database here on the station with Wayonn’s help.” She said.

Duewa looked at her. “When did you do that?” She gasped.

Anja chuckled. “Now that you are turned you will begin to notice you have less need for as much sleep. Having Marty breathing in your ear and his damned aura wrapped around us doesn’t help either. I have two choices, roll him over and nubou his brains out for making me so hot and bothered, or get up and do something that is at least constructive.”

Duewa couldn’t help but burst out laughing and she squeezed Anja’s arm tightly in a friendly manner, but one that Anja recognized for what it was. “Oh Anja... you do so have a way with words!” She exclaimed. Duewa chuckled for a moment longer and looked back to the screen. “Did you find anything interesting?”

“As a matter of fact... Wayonn and I found thirteen logs that had been deleted.” Anja told her. “Extensive medical logs that I’m guessing were removed from the database here so they could work on something wherever the rest of the crew went to.”

“They were very close from what I see here.” Duewa said.

Anja nodded as she pulled a chair over next to her and settled into it. “I thought that as well.” Anja said reaching up to the monitor and tapping the screen several times in different spots. “This is our formula of the MEV combined with their version of the same formula. See the differences?”

Duewa nodded her head instantly. “They didn’t compensate for the base genetic code infiltration. Whatever these things...”

“Svorag.” Anja said. “Wayonn says the Pralor logs call them Svorag.”

“Ugly bastards is what they are.” Duewa muttered.

Anja laughed. “You’ll get no argument from me there.” She said.

Duewa looked at the monitor and tapped the screen as Anja had. “They didn’t account for the Core Cell Infiltration Index.” She said quickly as the screen changed. “The mutative cells of this Svorag species are highly virulent and diversified. They act in several different ways in order to break down the core DNA molecules and base code of their victim. No two of their species is the same and the MEV will act differently on each person.”

Anja nodded. “Which means an across the board corrective agent that is not variable is no good.”

Duewa shook her head. “It wouldn’t work on everyone who is infected no. Without the core samples from each species infected you couldn’t alter the genetic rewrite back to its base modifiers.” She said.

Anja leaned forward again and typed on the screen several times. “Now look at this.” She said. “I added your calculations for the MEV combination and my numbers for the base genetic rewrite and I combined them with what they were working on here.”

Duewa’s eyes grew wide and she leaned forward. “Anja... Anja this is it!” She exclaimed as she touched the screen and ran her finger across the data. She looked at Anja. “This is the reversal process! This... this will work!”

Anja smiled. “Yep! Pretty darn good for us lowly Hadarian Healers huh?”

“The Chromosomal Isotope Combination is concentrated.” Duewa said. She looked at Anja. “You used an adaptive base genetic code?”

Anja nodded. “I had to make it apply to the different species it would react with. It took some doing and the database here provided the working samples of different base codes. Your MEV variables were extensive and I needed to match them exactly. The computer is also much faster than the one on ARC ROYAL. It was able to do the computations in minutes rather than hours.”

Duewa looked over to the door that was guarded by two Durcunusaan troops and was sealed tight. “We can save them. We can reverse the change. They are all Pralors and their base codes would be within sample parameters.” She said. She turned back to Anja. “Delivery system?”

Anja shook her head. “Not yet.” She replied. “Injection is out. No way Marty lets us in there to inject each individual. To be honest... I ain’t so keen on that idea either.”

Duewa nodded. “I agree.”

“Aerosol delivery?” Anja spoke throwing the idea out there. “You’re better with Direct Force Saturation than me.”

Duewa looked at Anja making a mental note of the compliment. Since Thoti had turned her and she had worked more closely with Anja Leonidas, Duewa had learned so much. About her field, about Anja and about herself. Chief among that was Anja didn’t beat around the bush so to speak. Anja told you how it was whether you liked it or not. Her blunt nature was hard to get used to for a few hours but then Duewa just accepted it as part of her, because she did not act in such a way unless she felt the person warranted it and that was the difference. Anja was also not one to take credit that was not hers. She was always complimenting other people’s work and she freely admitted that in some fields she was not all knowing as her mother had so often told Duewa that Anja thought she was.

Duewa looked at the monitors once more and typed in some information before sitting back. “It’s possible.” She said. “We would need to use the room’s internal air ducts and seal it off from the rest of the station. I can...” Duewa stopped talking as a rush of emotion came over her and she felt the tears come to her eyes.

Anja rose from her chair instantly. “Duewa?” She gasped reaching for her arms. “Duewa what is wrong?”

Duewa shook her head quickly through tear stained eyes and looked at Anja. “Nothing.” She said swiftly, wiping away the tears swiftly.

“Bullshit girl!” Anja snapped. “You just broke out into tears for no reason! What’s wrong? Is it Thoti?”

Duewa’s eyes grew a little wider. “What? Thoti! Oh... no!” She gasped. “I’m just... I...” She shook her head slowly.

Anja squeezed her hands. “Talk to me Duewa.” She said. “You’d be surprised how good a head doctor I am.”

Duewa met her eyes again and smiled. “It’s not that.” She said. “Anja I am... I am so very happy.” She said finally. “Thoti... our sons... I... I would never have imagined I could have all this if I had not broken from my mother Anja! I would have missed everything that I am feeling now!”

“But you did break from her Duewa.” Anja said.

“Yes... but only after...”

“Stop right there!” Anja said quickly. “You left the past behind you the moment Thoti turned you Duewa. Hell! The moment you let him claim you the first time!” She spoke firmly. “The real you came out. That is what you embraced.” Anja smiled. “I would have just as easily kicked the old Duewa’s ass before I gave her the time of day. But this Duewa... this Duewa I consider a friend and an equal. We make a pretty good team don’t you think?”

Duewa couldn’t help but chuckled softly. “Yes. Yes we do.”

“I don’t hold grudges Duewa.” Anja said. “Ok... maybe little ones.” She continued with a smile. “But not with you. Everything you did was something that was essentially forced upon you. I can not hold that against you. I admire that you had the strength to finally admit and let go. Something I did not think you had in you. Duewa... you are stronger than you know... and don’t think for a moment Thoti doesn’t know that. He’s an alpha of very pure blood... and he would not choose just any woman to be his wife and mate. He would need to see her as an equal. Strong and proud. Of course... the fact that he thinks you are the most beautiful female in all the galaxy helps too.”

Duewa looked at her with wide eyes. “He... he said that to you?” She gasped.

“To Marty.” Anja said with a grin. “Martin stays close to all those Durcunusaan who are close to him. He talks to all of them and even knows the names of their children. Thoti has been with him for years and he was very happy when you came along and swept him off his feet.”

Duewa laughed. “It’s the other way around I think.” She said.

“Maybe... but the fact of the matter remains that your life started anew the moment he turned you and took you as his wife and mate.” Anja said with a smile. “Just as mine did when Marty claimed me.” Anja nudged her with a grin. “Have you talked of children yet?” She asked.

Duewa nodded her head. “I brought it up.” She said quickly. “It isn’t possible while my body is still changing I know... but I told him when that is done I want many children. And not just more boys, but girls too. He didn’t seem too against that idea.”

Anja laughed. “I should think not with the way you look!”

Duewa looked at her. “You... you are the first really true friend I have ever had Anja. I don’t want to lose that.”

“You won’t.” Anja said with a smile. “I promise you won’t. Not now. We’ve come too far together now. Literally as well as figuratively. When we get back I want you to meet Anuk. She’s the finest non-Hadarian medical tech I have ever known. She could be a full doctor but she likes the field too much. And my sisters! I’ll introduce you to them all. You should know all of them since I’m going to make you Director of Genetic Research.”

Duewa looked at her with wide eyes. “What?” She gasped.

Anja nodded. “You have the knowledge and skills and I want someone to take over that department from the dipshit who is there now. Someone who knows what the hell they are doing and doesn’t try to bullshit me. You’d be perfect... and it will keep you from having to travel so much so when the time comes you and Thoti can start having children.”

Duewa chuckled now. “You sound like you are pushing me.” She said.

Anja grinned at her. “Children are the best.” She said. “We’ll wait until the twins are older but I know Martin wants more. We all do.” Anja leaned over and kissed her cheek. “Let the past remain where it belongs and we’ll go into the future. Ok?”

Duewa nodded her head with a smile and squeezed her hands. “Do we get started on the aerosol?” She asked.

Anja shook her head. “We can start working on it... but Martin needs to give us the go ahead.” Anja said. “I won’t do this without his approval and support. You’d be surprised how much easier things are when he supports what you are doing. Going behind his back, even when I may be right isn’t smart.”

“You have disagreed in the past I take it?” Duewa said with a smile.

“Disagreed?” Anja quipped. “That’s an understatement. He can be stubborn like a rock. He made us a promise a long time ago to never keep anything from us and we’ve learned through the years that it is best to do the same no matter how silly we think it is. It's very lonely when your Alpha husband ignores you." She said with a sheepish grin.

"You have always made up though." Duewa commented.

Anja chuckled with a trace of seductive humor in her voice. "Duewa... making up with Martin is the best medicine I could ever have. Hands down. The man makes my toes curl just kissing me."

Duewa nodded knowingly. "Yes... I have noticed Thoti takes great pleasure in knowing he does the same to me."

"Bastards aren't they?" Anja chuckled as she sat back down. "C'mon... let's get this worked out and then we can take it to Martin. If he agrees to this, we need to know it will work."

"Do you think he will agree?" Duewa asked.

Anja looked at her. "Martin is very good at taking lives Duewa... but there is one thing he is even better at. That is saving them. If we can prove to him this will work... he will do it in a heartbeat no matter how hard ass he wants to be."

Duewa nodded. "I'll take your word for it." She said. "Let's get started then."

PUSINTIN'S COMMAND SHIP

PUMA'S PRIDE

FEBRUARY 7TH, 1035 HRS EST

Serale lifted her head slowly from the pillow, her red hair splayed over the sheets, as she heard the door to Kalis's quarters open and close. Her head and eyes turned quickly behind her where Kalis had fallen asleep the night before and she realized he was not there beside her as he was when she fell asleep in his arms. Her head whipped around, dark red hair flying about, just as quickly as the thick curtain Kalis had erected between the rooms pushed aside and she saw him enter the small bedroom relief filling her body. There was no door between the main living area of his quarters and the small bedroom and he had erected the curtain the first day here to allow her as much privacy as possible. Not that it mattered any longer, except for her brother Danim, and he was smart enough to know what was happening between her and Kalis. And happening quickly Serale knew. Happening quickly because it felt so right. Danim cared for her enough that he now slept where Kalis used to on the main room's large couch and had for the last two nights.

Kalis had slept on the floor of the small bedroom that first night, unwilling to stay with her in the bed. It was something that had Serale annoyed at first, until she saw he was trying to show her that he was different. Last night she would have none of it, though once he discovered she was completely naked when he climbed into the bed, he had tried to leave the bed quickly. Serale had convinced him otherwise and he remained, even stripping out of his clothes at her urging, though that is all he would do she knew. He did not want her to think he was trying to take advantage of the situation, though Serale had already figured that out. His powerful body was sculpted perfection as far as she was concerned, and it radiated quite a bit of heat, which quickly drew her to curl up beside him and press close. It took some time for him to gain control of his raging emotions she knew, but finally his arms had encircled her and they had both drifted off to sleep.

A quick glance behind his large form before the curtain closed and she saw her brother already sitting at the table eating breakfast. Serale let her dark green eyes fall on Kalis as he stood there and she felt her body shiver in want. He had a small smirk on his face and she rose to a sitting position holding the sheet over her naked breasts.

"Kalis... what is it?" She asked him.

The last two days had been anything but boring and she had spent them discovering all there was to know about Kalis. From the first moment two mornings ago, he had captured her with his story. His life was anything but happy or easy and he spoke of it with deep sadness in his voice yet he had held nothing back from her. Serale did not have to be Lycavorian to know that he was not lying to her in any way; no one was that good of an actor. The intense pain in his words and sometimes his sorrowful expression was enough to tell her that he was spilling his heart to her and keeping nothing back. Her mother had taught her how to read men because her beauty would attract many of them and she wanted her to know the difference between those interested in only her physical beauty and those who desired her mind as well as her assets. Kalis desired her without question, Serale could tell that right away, but he was also using every bit of his willpower to show her that he wanted to feel more. To experience more than what he was used too. Aside from the few hours that he remained away with his duties, she had spent the remainder of that time with him simply listening and talking. She was surprised to discover they had many likes in common, their tastes in both music and food leaned the same direction. Unlike Serale, he was not very educated in book smarts, but his common sense was beyond anything Serale had seen in any Hadarian male his age. Serale knew that not all intelligence came from books, and while he did not have it now, Kalis certainly did not lack for the desire to learn all he could. He considered her a scholar of sorts because of what she had learned and he had not been lacking in the questions he asked her. Most of what he knew now he had either taught himself or his Kavalian Senior Instructor had shown him.

When it came to her, Kalis had been nothing but a gentlemen in every respect. Serale could tell it was awkward for him at times, given how he had been raised, but he did not seem to have a problem looking at her as an equal. Whatever he had learned and read on that unique data pad had changed him completely. Serale was captivated by his voice and the deep richness of it as he spoke, not to mention the bright blue eyes that looked upon her with obvious desire, but also a great deal of respect. Since coming to this ship she hadn't felt more safe and protected than she had last night with his powerful arms wrapped around her tightly. Even though they had laid together in the same bed last night, not once did he try to press her into some physical action. He had fought down the urge and Serale had sensed how large an urge it was to take her, but not forcefully. He was fighting the desire of the wolf within him. She had been prepared for it, part of her even hoped that it would happen, but he had controlled the beast within himself and eventually was able to wrap his arms around her, spooning her from behind and holding her close. Serale knew instantly he was different then. That no matter what, he had been telling her the truth about everything. Her mother would undoubtedly not approve, for he was Pusintin's son, but Serale saw something in Kalis that she did not. Danim trusted in her judgment and he had even gotten to know Kalis quite well over the past two days.

She had felt him leave the bed very early this morning, his lips and nose leaning close to her cheek and Serale had felt him inhale deeply beside her ear. The heat of his body and beating of his heart increased slightly as he inhaled, but he simply held his head beside her face thinking she was still asleep. His words into her ear before he left are what meant everything for her.

“I will have you Serale.” He whispered. “I will have you in every way possible and I will honor you and love you so that you desire no other. I will be a Spartan, as my uncle and my cousin have taught me and I will insure no harms comes to you or your brother and mother.” He took a deep breath. “I will do this even though I know it may never be.”

He had kissed her cheek ever so softly and that kiss had sent shivers through her body as he rose and dressed quickly and then he was gone and she let out the breath she had been holding. Gods how she wanted him in the worse possible way. What a turn of events this had become as she realized she was falling in love with one of the men who had taken her and her family prisoner.

No... Serale corrected herself. Kalis had no say in that and he had been trying to protect her from the very first moment. He was not the same as his father. He was so very different. She looked at him now as he moved to the side of the bed and sat down. He held out the standard data pad to her.

“The reason why I left so early.” He answered her. “A message from my uncle to my father.”

Serale looked at the pad and seeing information about explosions and other things that she had no idea about. She glanced back up to him. “I don't understand? What message?”

“One of our flanking ships...” Kalis told her. “A Heavy frigate. It struck two Shrouded mines that my Uncle Martin left in our path.” Kalis smiled and shook his head. “You should have heard my father cursing when he discovered they were Union mines. I watched him rant for several minutes about how he hated his brother and he was going to kill him one day soon and take back For'mya.” Kalis took the pad back from her. “As if that will ever happen.” He said. “The Task Force has slowed to a crawl now because they are trying to determine if there are any more mines. It will take several hours.”

“Isn't having your father angry a bad thing?” Serale asked him.

“To be honest... as ridiculous as it sounds... it is a good thing.” Kalis spoke. “At least when he is angry he concentrates on military matters and the perverted beast he has become goes away for a few days. Popal has convinced him to allow your mother to remain here with Danim and yourself and refrain from his perversions with her. If she remains in the old cell, it will only cause problems with the Puma Bane Commander as it did with you. If she is not often seen...”

Serale nodded. “Then she will not be thought of.” She finished.

Kalis nodded. “And she will have time to rest and heal.” He said. “She returns today and I will bring her here.”

“How long do you think you will be able to keep her from your father?” Serale asked him. “I fear for her every time she has to...”

Kalis lifted his hand and put his index finger to her lips. “Do not speak the words.” He said softly. “I have... I have said nothing to Danim... but I am finishing the workings of a plan for us all to escape.”

Serale lifted her eyes and looked at him. “Escape? How? To where?” She gasped gripping his arm.

“To wherever my uncle is. Much of it relies on those your mother is with now. The Juturi Pride.” He replied. “There is something about them that... it makes my new wolf senses tingle.”

“Something bad?” Serale asked him.

Kalis shook his head quickly. “No. Something else. To be honest... she is probably safer there than back on this ship. They are different and they are trying their best to hide it. There is more to what they are doing among this Task Force than anyone realizes at the moment.”

Serale looked at him. “You should listen to the last message Kalis.” She said. “Maybe it will be able to help you in some way.”

Kalis met her eyes. “I am... I am frightened by what I will find.” He said honestly and Serale knew he was fully on a new path in his life. A life that she wanted to be part of. “What if it is all... what if it is all for nothing and he only did this to... to instill doubt in me and weaken my father?”

“Do you truly believe that Kalis?” She asked him.

Kalis shook his head. “No.” He said.

Serale leaned up against his side and took his handsome face in her hands. “You told me yourself that what you have learned... everything you have been taught... it makes you feel complete inside.” She said softly. “It makes the wolf in you yearn for freedom.”

“It does. I want to experience it. I want to know so much more. Only my uncle... only that part of my blood can teach me.” He said softly. “And it makes me... it makes me yearn for you.” He looked away quickly; his tanned skin turning the softest shade of red in his clear embarrassment. “Forgive me.” He said quickly.

Serale didn't know what possessed her to do it but it felt so very right. “Kiss me Kalis.” She said taking his face in her hands again.

He shook his head. “That would not be right.” He spoke. “It...”

Serale covered his soft lips with her own, ceasing his words. She whimpered in delight when his hands came up and took her head in his hands. For a split second Serale thought he was going to pull away and then her body ignited as he suddenly deepened their kiss and his fingers entwined in her long, lush hair. It was a kiss of discovery for both of them, and as her sweet scent swirled around his head and filled his senses, Kalis felt his blood burn for her. The feel of his lips on hers sent shivers through her body and the sheet fell away from her breasts as she wrapped her arms around his broad shoulders and pulled herself into his lap. He facilitated her action with urgent need, his large hands filling with her firm ass and pulling her onto his lap, the musky aroma of her center filling his nostrils now and inciting him to higher levels of craving. As his hands pulled her tighter against his thickening groin and she groaned against his lips in ardent need of her own, a single statement flashed across his mind. A statement from a man who now held his utmost respect and who had believed in him enough to start him down this path when no one else would.

In front of his rising desire for this exquisite beauty in his arms, his desire to take Serale and make her his, the voice of his uncle echoed in his mind.

If you discover a woman, and it is meant to be as it was with me and your Aunts, then be a Spartan! Reign in your desire and your craving for her, pull it back within you Kalis, pull it back and show her that she rules your world. Show her that she is a precious jewel that you will worship always. Do this... do this nephew... and when the time comes to claim her I promise you it will be all the more sweeter. And so will she.

Kalis brought his hands forward and gently took her face within them. He drew back while pulling her face away gently, a long strand of saliva connecting their lips for the briefest of moments.

“No.” He gasped.

Serale looked at him with wide eyes and a racing heart. She had never felt these feelings before and her lush young body wanted to experience them desperately. His hands on her bare skin, the crush of his warm lips against hers had set her firm body afire and she needed him. She looked at him with those dazzling green orbs open in disbelief. “Kalis... Kalis I want this!” She gasped. “I... I want you!” She hissed catching his lips once more.

Kalis kissed her even deeper, but his mind echoed with the words of his uncle and the new sense of honor and what was right overrode the instincts of the wolf within him. His hands pulled the sheet from where it was on the side of the bed and he wrapped it around Serale’s naked form before reaching up and pulling her face from his once more. “No.” He spoke softly.

Serale looked at him with disbelief once more. A sudden thought that he did not desire her, that she had been wrong about what he wanted, filled her head and she leaned back slightly. “Don’t... you don’t want me?” She asked in a voice that rang with disappointment and pain.

Kalis looked at her. “No... I do!” He rasped out. “I want to take you right here! Right now! More than I have ever wanted anything else in my life!”

Serale looked at him. “Then why... it is what I want as well Kalis!” He looked at her with those breathtaking blue eyes and Serale almost lost it right there.

“Don’t you see my... my beautiful Serale?” He said gripping her face in his hands with loving force. “I do not want this... I do not want this to be where I claim you. Here... while you are a prisoner of my father! I... I want you to be free once more. I want you to see what you have come to mean to me. I want to show you!”

Serale touched his face, running her fingers along his cheeks. “I... I already know this Kalis.” She said with a smile of relief and happiness bottled into one emotion.

“I want us to be free Serale.” He said. “I want others to see that... that I will honor you! That I will love you so that no other could turn your head! I want my future... my future with you to begin as a Spartan! Like my uncle! Like my cousin!” He shook his head. “I will not take you now! I will harness my love for you and I will...” Kalis stopped talking as he realized what he had just said and he looked into her face. Her Hunter green eyes quickly became moist as tears formed in the corners. The words had come so easy to him and looking at her now, he knew they always would. “I will see us free and then... then... then I will love you until you are breathless and scream my name to the stars! And I will show you that no other could love you more than I!”

“Oh... Kalis!” She gasped before pulling his head to her breasts and wrapping her arms around his broad shoulders. She whimpered in delight when his arms encircled her back and pulled her close to him. She could feel the heat of his face against her firm breasts even through the sheet that now covered her flesh. Whatever she had expected, it certainly was not this. To have discovered such a man here, among so much pain and suffering, was a sign that Serale could not deny. A sign that this was the one she had always wondered if she would find. After seeing her father and mother for so many years, and the unfeeling relationship they had, Serale had hoped her life would be different. As she tried to clutch him even closer, finally settling on holding the back of his head, Serale knew this was that man.

“I swear to you...” His voice whispered as he pulled his face away from the valley between her breasts. “I swear to you we will not be here much longer Serale.” He looked up into her eyes as she still held him tightly. “And I swear to you... I will protect you and worship you as a Spartan protects and worships his wife and mate. I will make you glad that you chose me.”

Serale shook her head as the tears fell and brought her hand around to caress his cheek once more. “I... I was glad of that before now.” She gasped. “Now... now I am ecstatic.”

“Trust in me Serale my love. Trust in me and I will make sure your mother and Danim are gone from here before any more suffering befalls them.” Kalis said. “I give you my word. I give you my word as a Spartan and the man who wishes to claim you.” Kalis let his forehead fall back to the valley between her breasts and Serale simply held his head tightly as she rejoiced inside.

RAVAGER

JUTURI PRIDE COMMAND SHIP

Ceale was very anxious to return and see her children but she had to admit to herself, being here on this ship had been far more eye opening than she had ever imagined. In more ways than one. She sat in the main mess lounge picking at the food in front of her and trying to figure it all out. In the two days she had been here, not one of the male Kavalians had looked at her with anything other than respect. They bowed their heads to her when she passed them in the ship corridors with Corsa or Nedoni; they spoke to her openly and with genuine friendliness. She had treated nearly thirty of them for minor things really, and what struck her the most was how easily the females moved among the ship and were treated. It was not like what she had seen on Pusintin's ship by any means, and she had not seen females on his ship at all. It made her wonder why things were so different here. Corsa was extremely friendly and answered all of her questions as best she could, and Nedoni, the hulking Kavalian doted over her constantly. Ceale knew almost immediately that he was attracted to her, but unlike every other Kavalian she had experience with, he talked to her and even tried to make jokes. He was an excellent cook and Ceale had eaten some delicious meals in the last two days. He was always close by and Ceale had to admit, having him close made her feel much more secure, though she knew after the first day she had nothing to fear on this ship.

Amazingly, even after all that had taken place, Ceale also had to admit to herself that she actually thought Nedoni was very good looking for a Kavalian male? The light brown fur that covered his lean body was very well groomed and his facial features were softer and less severe than some of the others. He was exceptionally well built, that much was easy enough to see outwardly. His muscular definition was very well defined and there did not appear to be an ounce of fat on him. That he was well educated was also very obvious from his speech and the way he carried himself. It was like that for everyone she had seen on this ship for that matter. As she looked around she truly did not know what to make of it. There were far fewer members of the crew that she would have expected for a ship this size and...

"You appear deep in thought Lady Ceale." The female voice spoke from the side and Ceale turned and saw Mani standing beside the table with a tray of food.

Ceale straightened in her chair as Mani sat down. The older Kavalian woman was in superb physical shape and the obvious second in command of this ship, which was surprising in and of itself. Almost all of the crew deferred to her with great respect and treated her as some sort of Matriarch.

"I'm sorry." Ceale said quickly.

"Sorry for what child?" Mani stated as she got comfortable. "No doubt you have many questions now that you have been among us for two days. What you have seen here is not what you have seen on Pusintin's ship is it?"

Ceale met her eyes. "I didn't know if it was wise to ask." She answered honestly.

Mani nodded her head as she began to peel a fruit. "Understandable... given what you have been through these last weeks." She answered. "We have not spent much time together while you have been here and I apologize for that. We never believed you to be stupid Ceale. I'm quite sure you have seen that things here are quite different from what you have heard and experienced for yourself."

"Am I allowed... can I ask about that?" She spoke.

"What would you like to know?" Mani asked her.

"Why was I brought here?" Ceale asked.

Mani looked at her. "Why do you think?"

"You say it was to treat members of your crew that were injured." Ceale said. "Aside from half a dozen men who had severe plasma burns and injuries from what appear to be an explosion... no one else that I have seen is injured." She told her. "All of them appear to be in excellent physical condition."

Mani nodded her head. "No one among our crew had the necessary medical skills to treat those injured men. And Corsa tells me they will all make a complete recovery thanks to you." She looked at Ceale. "But you are correct in thinking that is not the only reason we requested you come here."

“Kalis... Pusintin’s son... he said he felt something was different about you.” Ceale said. “He did not want me to say anything I think... but...”

“The Marshall’s son has embraced the wolf part of his blood.” Mani said. “He is half Kavalian yes... but what rules him now is the wolf part. We have not discovered how that came to be. But it has been like that since the battle on Enurrua. Koguth and Mataen believe that he could be an ally now.”

“An ally?” Ceale asked. “Why would... why would you need an ally?”

Mani looked at her. “How do I explain this?” She asked openly. “There are Kavalians... whole Prides actually... Kavalians who do not believe in the same things as that fool we call Prefect. These Prides have... we have begun to shed the barbaric ways of the majority. How we treat our females is the largest so far, but politically as well as socially. We live by a different set of values and social morals. As you have probably guessed... should this become known openly... it would not go over well with Keleru and those who follow him. He would more than likely order a purge of the Prides who think like this.”

“He would murder you?” Ceale gasped.

Mani nodded. “He would butcher anyone who is a threat to his hold on power.” She said. “He has been in power far longer than any Prefect before him. He is perhaps the oldest Kavalian living to be honest. And no one knows how. No one will challenge him openly about it. He will send his Puma Bane thugs after them. Those of us who believe differently walk a very narrow line in order to keep him from discovering our dual allegiance.”

“How... how many of you are there?” Ceale asked.

“Far more than most would guess.” Mani answered. “And for your own protection... the less you know in regards to that the better.”

“That doesn’t explain why you wanted me to come here.” Ceale told her. “I could have treated those men in a few hours and then returned.”

Mani tilted her head to the side. “You have not welcome the respite from Pusintin’s foul advances and treatment of you?”

Ceale’s eyes grew a little wider. “Oh... please... forgive me! Yes! Gods yes!” She spoke quickly. “All of you have been... you have been so kind to me. I didn’t know what to expect to be honest. I thought... I thought I would be forced to... service the men as Pusintin has...”

Mani reached across the table and placed her hand over Ceale’s. “He has forced you to do this child? We knew he was forcing himself upon you but he forced you to...” She gasped.

Ceale looked at her. “He forced me to service them... with my mouth.” She answered very softly.

Mani’s eyes closed and she squeezed Ceale’s hand. “The gods see fit to have that man burn in the pits of hell for his actions through the years.” She said. “I would not blame you if you never trusted another of my people in your lifetime child. I can only hope we have shown you we are not all like that.”

Ceale nodded her head. “Corsa and Nedoni have shown me that every minute I have been here.” She said softly.

Mani chuckled softly as she leaned back. “Nedoni is taken with you.” She said. “He is my youngest son and has always wanted things he can not have. He is the most idealistic of my children.”

Ceale looked at her. “He is... he is very handsome.” She said haltingly. “For a Kavalian I mean.”

Mani nodded her head with a smile. “Yes he is... but do not tell him that. It will go to his head.” She said. “I did not think... I did not think you would say such things.”

Ceale shrugged her slim shoulders. “My mother raised me to be free thinking and open minded. I should not find him handsome... but I do.” She said. “You still have not told me why you really brought me here.”

Mani leaned back now. “We thought perhaps you would have knowledge of how to contact the King.” She said.

“Me?” Ceale asked astonished. “I have never even met King Leonidas.” She said.

“You are Hadarian.” Mani said. “Many believe since one of his Queens is Hadarian that she would have known those of your people who work outside the Union. We thought perhaps you would be able to tell us where they are going or how to contact him.”

“I can’t.” Ceale replied. “I’m sorry. Why would you want to contact him?”

Mani met her eyes. “My youngest daughter Iama. We have reason to believe that she is among the group with him.” She replied softly. “She was given to the government as part of the Biogenic Program by Koguth’s father while he was away fighting the High Coven. He never got approval from Koguth for this because he knew Koguth would refuse. He adored Iama. She was his favorite. All of our favorites. So vibrant and full of life. The experiments did not change her completely however. They left her tail in place. The government gave her to the brothels of Nefoa because of this. They discarded her like a piece of garbage!” Mani hissed angrily. “They did not allow Koguth to return from battle until six years ago. When he returned he killed his father for doing this and said he died of a fall while they were hiking. Koguth took over the Pride and we have been looking for her since. She probably believes her father did this... she probably hates us... but we need to find her and tell her that this is not so. A recent attack on a Kavalian outpost mentions that she was there and her body was not among those discovered. We believe she left with King Leonidas. When Pusintin came to Nefoa to replenish the ships he lost at Enurrua and it was learned he was going after the Lycavorian King, we offered to join him.”

Ceale sat back in stunned surprise. “You are doing this to try and save your daughter?” She gasped softly.

“Wouldn’t you?” Mani asked.

Ceale nodded. “Yes! Of course! It just seems so dangerous if you are trying to hide what you believe. Wasn’t... wasn’t bringing me here a huge risk?”

Mani nodded. “You’ve probably noticed that we do not have a large crew?”

Ceale nodded shyly. “Yes... I did notice that.”

“We automated much of the ship for this purpose.” Mani said. “We sent the vast majority of our Pride members back to our homeworld and left our second oldest son in charge of them. We only have eighty-nine members of our Pride on board. All of them volunteered to come. As for the risk... thanks to Koguth’s father, an ardent supporter of Keleru by the way... we have been able to remain hidden by fostering that support but not really adhering to it in any way. Prides that support Keleru in the way Koguth’s father did are well respected and afforded extra courtesy. That is why Pusintin allowed you to come here. We are quite sure that you are not going to return and tell Pusintin everything you have seen or heard.”

“Fuck no!” Ceale hissed vehemently. Her face changed and softened instantly. “Forgive me again... I... I don’t usually use foul language.”

Mani shook her head. “For what he has done... if I could, I would help you to remove his male equipment and slow cook it over a fire. You were taken with your children and husband but he is not being held. Why?”

Ceale’s eyes darkened. “He supports Buonau on Hadaria.” She answered. “His family is well connected with her as well. When he told Pusintin this he was removed. He’s probably got his own quarters and is safe and cozy!”

“He... he let Pusintin do this to you and his children?” Mani asked surprised.

“He has only cared about one thing in the entire time we have been married.” Ceale said. “That is advancing his own goals. Our children and I do not factor into that equation. We have... we have not been close or slept together in over a decade. I can’t stand to even be around him and his arrogance.”

Mani chuckled. “Do not tell Nedoni this.” She said with a grin. “He will actively start to try and win you over.”

Ceale looked at her and smiled. She leaned forward. “What happens now?” She asked.

Mani turned as Corsa and Nedoni came into the mess lounge and began walking directly over to her. The entrance they came in allowed Ceale to look at Nedoni long and hard. Quite surprisingly for Ceale, knowing that he found her desirable even after all she had endured at Pusintin’s hands, caused her to look at him in a very different manner now. The manner of a woman who found a man attractive. What surprised her the most was the fact she did not find him repulsive in any way.

Mani reached for Corsa’s hand as they came up to the table. “Corsa... Nedoni. You look as if you have something you want to tell me.” She said.

Corsa nodded as she settled into the chair beside her. “Yes Pride mother.” She said.

Nedoni moved around the table and looked down at Ceale. “May I sit beside you Lady Ceale?” He asked her.

Ceale looked up at him. “Of course.” She said. “And it’s... it’s just Ceale.” She answered as Nedoni settled to the table. “I don’t have a title.”

Nedoni smiled. "Very well... just Ceale." He stated.

Mani smiled inwardly knowing that her youngest son had a powerful attraction to her just by his mannerism. He'd never shown this kind of interest in any female within their Pride. She turned to Corsa. "So tell me." She spoke. "Why have you sought me out?"

"There was an incident about ninety minutes ago." Corsa said.

Mani straightened up. "Incident?"

Nedoni nodded. "One of the fleet's flanking frigates struck two mines that were in our path." He said. "Not very much damage and no injuries, but it has forced the fleet to slow while we scan for additional mines."

Corsa snickered. "As if they will find them if they are there. These mines were shrouded. It is the only way we would not have detected them to begin with."

"Shrouded?" Mani spoke. "That means..."

Nedoni nodded. "They were placed there by King Leonidas's people." He answered. "I would not doubt he has a ship shadowing us even now."

Corsa nodded. "I believe he does." She said. "And he left the mines to send a message to Pusintin."

Mani nodded now. "Ahhh... to let Pusintin know that he knows he is being followed." She said.

Corsa nodded her head. "Pusintin is leading his fleet further and further away from any sort of reinforcements. King Leonidas obviously knows where he is going. Why come so far into uncharted space unless he has a destination?"

Nedoni handed the data pad to his mother. "Pusintin's second in command also sent us a message." He said. He looked at Ceale. "This man Popal has more common sense than the Marshall it seems. He has received permission from Pusintin for Lady... for Ceale to remain here on the RAVAGER for the foreseeable future. He says the Marshall wants to concentrate on military matters in light of this incident with the mines."

Mani read the pad as Nedoni spoke and she echoed Corsa's earlier snicker. "More than likely this Popal thinks he is removing a distraction." She said. "This is nothing more than a way to keep his commander focused. This is not about Ceale."

"I can't... my children!" Ceale spoke urgently. "I can't stay here! He will... he will try and..."

"Your son and daughter probably already know about this decision." Mani said calmly. "The device Kalis gave to you... Nedoni do you..."

Nedoni held out his hand to Ceale. "I stopped by the quarters you have been using and retrieved it." He said as Ceale took it from him. "I cleared out the storage room just outside the entrance..." He motioned with his hand. "Contact your daughter."

Ceale looked at him intently and then turned to Mani. "You are no prisoner here Ceale." Mani said gently.

"My father did ask me to be allowed to view your transmission with her." Nedoni said. "If only to get some idea of what the Marshall's son has been doing. He told me to ask and make sure you understood he is not demanding it."

Ceale nodded quickly. "Of course!" She hissed. "Anything to keep them safe!"

Nedoni reached out and took hold of her upper arm gently. "Come... I will take you there." He said.

Mani and Corsa watched as Nedoni led her from the mess lounge and then Mani turned to her oldest son's wife. "He is quite taken with her." Mani said.

Corsa nodded. "Yes... Mataen and I noticed that as well. I just hope that Pusintin's actions and the actions of some others have not caused her to consider our people like them as a whole."

Mani shook her head slowly. "I don't believe so." She said softly. "She... she seemed genuinely surprised when I told her Nedoni was interested in her."

"You told her Pride Mother?" Corsa gasped.

Mani nodded. "This Hadarian woman is stronger than she appears Corsa. Inside." She said thoughtfully as she touched her breast over her heart. "She has endured what she has to protect her children, yet there was no trace of anger or disgust in her eyes or her face when I told her of Nedoni's interest. There was curiosity there."

Corsa looked at her. "Truly?" She asked. "I did not... I did not think she was capable of forgiving."

Mani looked at her. "After all that was done to you child... you saw fit to look beyond that when Mataen showed he was interested in you. And Nedoni has shown her nothing but respect and concern since she came onboard. These actions make her see we are not all the same and in many ways it may help her heal."

Corsa blushed slightly. "I did not think she was capable of such strength Pride Mother." She spoke. Mani smiled. "I think we might be surprised at the strength she has within her." She spoke.

"...Mother!" Serale gasped as she heard her mother's voice from the unique COM unit that Kalis had built.

"Serale! Is Danim there with you?" Ceale gasped.

"I'm here mother." Danim replied moving up next to Serale as Kalis looked on from the couch where he was studying the P1 his uncle had given him.

"Serale... they just told me that I am staying here!" Ceale's voice echoed with concern that saw Kalis lift his head and rise to his feet.

"I know. Kalis was just informed as well. Mother... we are fine." Serale spoke. "No one has seen us or bothered us since Kalis brought us to his quarters."

"That... that might change Serale! His father might..." Ceale started to speak.

"My father will do nothing Lady Ceale." Kalis spoke coming up beside Serale. There was silence on the other end of the transmission for a long moment and Kalis looked at Serale. "I gave my word to you that I would protect them Lady Ceale. I will honor that promise to you."

"Why?" Ceale asked.

"I... I told you why." Kalis spoke softly. "Many things have changed in my life these last weeks and I am going to do what I said I was going to do. Is there someone from the Juturi Pride with you?"

"How did you know that?" Ceale asked.

"Let's just say I believe them to be more than they show at face value as I told you on the elevator." Kalis said. "Who is with you Lady Ceale?"

"I am Nedoni!" The male voice spoke sternly. "I am..."

"I know who you are Nedoni'Juturi." Kalis spoke. "And know this... if harm comes to Serale's mother in any way... you will answer to me."

Serale gripped his arm tightly. "Kalis no." She said softly.

"I will then speak the same words to you son of Pusintin..." Nedoni snarled right back. "If harm comes to Ceale's children."

Kalis glanced at Serale briefly before continuing. "I am going to contact your father on a secure COM frequency that I will initiate and you will not be able to detect or trace. In one hour Nedoni'Juturi. In the meantime I suggest we both let Serale and her children speak in private."

There was a pause before Nedoni answered. "As you say Kalis." He spoke. "I will be outside Ceale." They heard him speak to Serale's mother.

Kalis looked at Serale and nodded. He leaned closer and Serale accepted his kiss with relish even as Danim shook his head with a grin. They had been unable to stop doing that since early this morning and it was driving him crazy. "Go." Kalis spoke squeezing her hand. "No one can detect this COM signal so speak as long as you like."

Serale nodded and motioned for Danim to come with her as they moved into the bedroom area of the quarters.

SOLMAR GENERAL BYKA'S *DAGGER

"...been on the ground for minutes!" Byka hissed softly, his eyes glued to the sensor screen between the seats. "Why has he not revealed his location?"

"It has only been two minutes Papa." Kameka told him. "And I don't understand why you are so anxious for him to reveal where he is? He is not stupid father."

Byka didn't look up at her as he adjusted the screen. "You will understand shortly." He said in reply. "Trust in me daughter."

“I do trust you Papa.” Meka answered. “But I don’t...” A loud chirping started and her eyes grew wide. “There!” She almost screamed looking at the screen. “Thirty-six kilometers southeast! The ships are lifting off!”

“Now Meka!” Byka snapped. “Take us here! One kilometer east... to this clearing!”

“The clearing?” Kameka questioned. “But why? We should drop right on top of them where their ships were!”

“Do it child! Now!” Byka snapped at her.

Kameka didn’t argue any further as her father stabbed down on the button connecting his COM unit to the other DAGGERS. “This is General Byka! The Lycavorian Prince has revealed his location! We are proceeding to a small clearing to the east of his location one kilometer away! Offload your gunships and attack in echelon! Standby! We will be over our target area in thirty-three seconds!” He barked out as he felt Kameka dipping their nose and ramming her throttles to full power.

Byka turned and changed the channel on the COM and then stabbed down again on the transmit button and he allowed his daughter to hear. “Azlenr?”

“I am here my friend.” Azlenr’s voice answered instantly.

“It is done! I have given the order!” Byka spoke.

“Tell Meka to begin transmitting an emergency signal on frequency nine three six four one.” Azlenr told him.

Kameka looked at her father as she heard the order. “May... may I ask why General?” She spoke now.

“To save you and your father from being blown out of the sky Meka.” Azlenr answered her question.

“Now do so Meka! Quickly!”

Kameka turned suddenly and began dialing one of her instruments. She turned back to her father. “What is happening General?” She asked Azlenr while looking at him.

“Your father and I are saving lives.” Azlenr answered her. “Our lives to be precise. And those of our men.”

“I don’t understand sir!” Kameka stated. “The other DAGGERS will detect the beacon in moments! They will want to know why?”

“In moments it will not matter any longer.” Azlenr told her. “At least not for them.”

Byka turned to look at the cockpit door. “Will that hold against weapons fire?” He asked her.

Kameka nodded quickly. “Yes. Why?”

Byka checked his ARSOC sidearm. “We will need it.” He stated.

Andro sat on the ground behind several stacked logs munching on the ration bar from his pack. Several Durcunusaan had dug a shallow depression behind the makeshift bunker, the logs stacked on three sides with the open end facing the rear of the STRIKER three hundred meters away. His helmet rested beside his leg and his P190A3, but he didn’t seem fazed in the least that a Kavalian attack force was bearing down on them and only seconds away. Lu’ria sat beside Andro on one side tucked against his body, Sehri on the other side fidgeting on her knees with Carisia sitting lotus style between his legs. Eliani was beside Jomann and paging through a data pad while she whispered to Brendi who sat beside her. Jomann was checking the sharpness of one of his blades and looking utterly bored. Elynth, Tharua, Anthar and Majeir sat calmly just at the edge of the depression in the earth, while Sadi and Ne’Veha were currently occupying the two turrets in the top of the STRIKER Mark II that they had flown in on. Caydren and Cinol were positioned at the top of the ramp of the STRIKER with instructions to burn anyone who came close to the ship and was Kavalian. Aleatia, Osbela, Ibani and Harira were behind the huge forms of Caydren and Cinol and wondering what was going on.

Sehri kept looking at Andro and then trying to see over the logs to the east. Lu’ria looked at Carisia and they shared a knowing smile as Lu’ria leaned forward and handed Carisia a piece of dark Drow oat and nut bread she had in her pack. They shared a quick but loving kiss before Lu’ria leaned back and held out a piece of the bread for Andro. His eyes lit up quickly and he snatched the bread from her fingers.

“Your mother’s bread?” He asked.

Lu’ria smiled at him and nodded. “She made several large batches before we departed. You know how she feels about our combat rations.”

Andro chuckled as he popped the sweet tasting bread into his mouth. “Bout the same as we do I suspect.” He said savoring the flavor as he chewed.

As Sehri rose to her knees once more and looked around she could see Lisisa and Dorian with a female Durcunusaan she did not know in a similarly dug depression only fifty meters west. Ryner and Jeth rested near the open side of that makeshift bunker bumping their heads together while trying to see who could extend the armor on their heads faster before their skulls met. Only the single female Durcunusaan seemed just as interested in what was happening as her, as she kept looking around the area. Fifty meters past them, she could see the Durcunusaan troops who she knew were Dantio and Daio sitting with several others and none of them seemed to be in any great anxious mode. She turned back to Andro finally and looked at him.

“No one... no one is doing anything!” She hissed.

Andro looked at her as Jomann and Eliani looked up. “What are we suppose to be doing Sehri?” Andro asked her.

“These... these Kavalians are only moments away!” Sehri spoke excitedly. “Shouldn’t we be doing something?”

Andro leaned over closer to her. “I could kiss you.” He said. “Then we would be doing something!”

Sehri slapped his shoulder as Lu'ria and Carisia burst out into soft laughter. “Stop that!” Sehri scolded him. “We are about to fight! Shouldn’t you be... shouldn’t you be frightened?” Sehri gasped. “All of you sit as if... as if you are having a picnic!”

Eliani grinned. “Picnic? Our picnics are definitely more fun than this.” She stated. “You haven’t seen our family when we are all together Sehri. Lunatics is what we are. You’ll see.”

Jomann looked at Andro before speaking and then he turned to Sehri. “You will find Sehri that much of what happens in battle is waiting. And more waiting. Sometimes hours of waiting. Until finally you have several minutes of uncontrollable violence and chaos and it is over.”

Sehri looked from him to Andro. “How do you... how do you keep from going crazy?” She asked.

Eliani looked at Brendi and leaned into her playfully. A move that Brendi did not pull back from and only smiled. “We don’t sweat the small shit.” Eliani said. “As our father would say.”

Sehri looked at her oddly. “You sweat shit?” She gasped in horror.

“Sehri.” Andro said causing her to turn back to face him. Before she could speak his lips had claimed hers and she reached up to grip his face instinctively as he kissed her. He broke their kiss and leaned closer to nuzzle her cheek and portion of her neck the Mark V ArmorPly didn’t cover. “Relax Sehri.” He told her softly. “It will happen.”

Sehri gazed into his azure eyes and saw devotion and love in them as well as his aura wrapping around her and she smiled sheepishly before settling back to the ground beside him. Lu'ria leaned across Andro’s body and held out a piece of the bread to her. “My mother’s bread. Oats and nuts with a hint of cinnamon. It is very good for times like this.” Sehri took the bread without question and took a bite, beginning to chew as Andro’s arm pulled her closer to his side.

All of their heads came up when Sadi’s voice filled their implants. “Andro... they’re approaching the site. Thirty seconds.”

Sehri looked at Andro and she watched his face change instantly. His expression was one of humor and love and in the blink of an eye it had become hard and void of any and all emotion.

“Stand by KertaGai.” He answered Sadi as he rose to his knees now and looked over the logs. Sehri saw that everyone’s disposition had changed instantly and they had become more serious and all businesslike. Andro looked out over the top of the logs and began speaking into his COM implant. “Colonel Miller?”

“In position Milord.” Josie’s voice answered immediately.

“Colonel Mosont will support your brigade from the timber.” Andro said. “Do not pursue those who escape into the timber. You are equipped with your medium Cataphract armor correct?”

“Yes.”

“Leave them to the Durcunusaan. They will bring them down more easily. The medium Cataphract armor will only make you more vulnerable in the timber. Your single mission is to eliminate any within the kill zone Josie. We are taking no prisoners this day. They are Puma Bane scum and I want all of them to feel the wrath of our vengeance. I don’t care if you shoot them, stab them, crush them, or beat them to death. Insure those who are in the kill zone are dead however. You have directive to attack at your discretion Colonel.”

Androcles heard Josie Miller snicker over the COM. “Music to my ears Milord.” She said.

“And my name is Andro.” Andro told her with a disgusted look on his face. “Leave that Milord crap for when we are among the politicians of Apo Prime, Earth and Sparta who don’t know any better.”

“Understood... Andro.” Josie answered with another laugh.

“Twenty seconds!” Andro spoke. “The missiles will fly the moment they begin to lift back into the air. Then attack on your order!”

“Count on it.” Josie spoke.

“Mosont... any who escape into the timber are yours.” Andro spoke. “Insure they do not flank around and come after Josie’s Brigade from behind.”

“We are ready.” Mosont’s voice echoed.

Andro turned his head now as Sehri watched him and his eyes fell on Lisisa and Dorian. Dorian! Lisisa! Go now! The others are already in position!

It could still be a trick ferveron. Dorian spoke his head turning to focus on his older brother from across the distance.

Then I trust you and our sister will leave nothing for the insects. Andro told him.

Dorian nodded his head and turned to look at Sheva. “Time to go.” He told her.

Sheva came to her feet as Ryner and Jeth extended the armor across all of their huge bodies. “What? What’s happening? The battle is here!”

“Not for us.” Lisisa spoke as she moved past Sheva and scampered up into the saddle on Jeth’s back appearing like a gnat in comparison to Jeth’s massive body.

Dorian moved closer to Sheva, the scent of her blood and body filling his head totally. He fought it down instantly, as well as the almost too powerful urge to crush her to him and make her his. “You are my Captain. Assigned to protect me correct?” He stated.

Sheva glared at him. “Yes! You know that!” She spat.

Dorian smiled. “Very well... I’m going that way.” He told her pointing with his arm and finger. “Come with me and protect me.” He announced as he moved to where Ryner waited and easily leaped into the saddle, his Dragon Armor extending as he settled in the saddle and turned. He looked back at Sheva. “Coming?”

Sheva cursed under her breath but started forward as her own Dragon Armor began to extend. By the time that had finished she was lifted into the air with a small shriek of surprise and Dorian deposited her in front of him in the saddle using a burst of Etheric power that had suddenly gripped him. He looked at his hands for a split second in surprise and then shook his head, slipping his arms around Sheva’s tiny waist. Sheva jumped in clear surprise as his arms encircled her waist and the DA braces tightened around their legs, but it was for reasons she did not fully grasp just yet.

“Hope you aren’t afraid of heights.” Dorian said from under his helmet with a smile. “Ryner... go!”

With two trumpets... Ryner and Jeth took to the skies above Solmar and were soon speeding away from the oncoming Kavalian forces.

Andro watched for a moment and then his eyes moved to where Daio and Dantio were waiting. Daio... just as we discussed. Andro reached out for him. His DAGGER should land within two minutes. Get there.

Daio nodded his head. On our way. He stated before he, Dantio and three others shifted into wolf form and were tearing off into the timber around them.

Andro turned back and saw Eliani and the others, except for Jomann, looking at him oddly. “What?” He exclaimed. And then more inquires came at him.

“My love... Lisisa and Dorian are tearing away from here in the opposite direction awfully fast.” Sadi reported over the com. “What’s happening?”

Andro couldn’t answer for General Vengal’s voice broke in over the COM. “Vengal to Androcles. We are in position. Broke some equipment and tore up some serious trees, but we’re in position and ready. I hope this works boy or we’ll have wasted four good KADEN Transports and a dozen MHTs.”

Andro looked at Eliani as she got to her feet. “You said nothing about sending Dori and Lisi somewhere.” Eliani snapped. “What’s going on Andro? Where is Uncle Vengal and what is he planning to do?”

“Nothing.” Andro protested. “Just a minor change in plans is all.” Andro touched his jaw. “Affirmative Uncle.” He spoke. “Stand by... we should know in a few moments.”

“Nothing you do is ever minor fervon!” Eliani snapped again. “What are you planning?” She looked at Jomann and her eyes narrowed. “You know don’t you?”

Jomann shrugged his broad shoulders. “I can’t say.” He stammered.

Eliani turned back to Andro. “Fervon... what have you done?” She demanded. “Tell us right now!”

“If I am correct... then I have taken vengeance for those who died here and stopped a battle before it began.” Andro spoke.

“And if you’re wrong?” Brendi asked.

Andro smiled. “Then it will be very interesting.” He replied lifting his helmet and 190 and lowering his helmet onto his head.

The clearing was perhaps five hundred meters long and three hundred meters wide. It was surrounded by thick timber on three sides and a rising incline of hills and trees that led up to the ridge that led to the ocean five kilometers away. The first DAGGERS began to touch down in precise military formation, seven of them able to fit in the clearing on the west end. As the sixty Puma Bane troops on each DAGGER poured from the rear of the gunships, cruel dark eyes were watching from the edge of the timber.

Josie Miller had to admit it was a bold plan, but then she knew Androcles Leonidas and his father had built their reputations on bold plans. She turned her head in either direction and saw the members of her First Battalion spread out all around her waiting to pounce. The Second and Third Battalions were waiting to attack from two other directions. The new plan had come in only moments before they had begun their drop, and that Androcles had chosen Josie and her Brigade to conduct the ambush was a major vote in their confidence and moral. Mosont had taken it in stride, telling her they preferred to roam the dark timber and destroy any who may try to run there for safety. The way he said it made Josie shiver somewhat and she glanced at where her Lycavorian shadow Lemios rested calmly on the ground only two meters away.

Lemios had guided his ODP with skill and grace, landing only meters from her, and he had been at her side since then. His Mark V ArmorPly conformed to his body like a second skin and Josie knew the moment they sprang into battle he would extend his Dragon Armor shell. His face was scruffy with what appeared to be a two day old growth but Josie had to admit it suited him. Mosont had told her he was a Pureblood Lycavorian, one of the Durcunusaan’s rising stars so to speak for his actions on Alba Tau and several other different worlds during the Evolli War. Josie Miller didn’t often look at men with anything more than a professional interest, but looking at Lemios now she couldn’t help the brief rush of sexual urges that spread through her looking at him. Josie had prided herself on the condition she kept her body, all lean muscle without an ounce of body fat. She had medium sized breasts with a tiny waist and an ass with all the right curves as her brother had once called it. She watched what she ate, and made sure when they weren’t training in the field she was in the gym. It had been a long time since a man had elicited such reaction from her. True to her nature however, Josie brushed it aside for another time.

“Looks like they are all clear.” Her senior combat aide spoke from beside her. “The DAGGERS are beginning to... holy shit!”

They came streaking out of the east just above the treetops and for a split second it was as if time stopped. Captain Patton’s gift and announcement that they were indeed here to stay. Fired from the KINDRED SOUL’s dorsal missile batteries, the VIPER 12 Anti-Air missiles struck true and Josie watched with wide eyes as seven DAGGER gunships that were lifting back into the air as seven more were landing suddenly did not exist anymore. Seven explosions and those gunships became nothing more than smoking garbage that drifted lazily back towards the earth and fell among the shocked Puma Bane troops on the ground and those unloading the gunships.

The perfect moment.

“Now!” Josie screamed. “Open fire! All units open fire! Sustained burst for sixty seconds and then advance!”

The sixty seconds was to allow the next two waves of VIPER missiles to fly into the fray and obliterate fourteen more gunships as they tried to respond and maneuver to what had taken place. Some of the pilots of the DAGGERS offloading troops were screaming into their COMs and trying to take off before they had even unloaded their troops. Almost a dozen Puma Bane troops fell to their deaths as those ships began to rise back into the air, only to be met by falling debris or blasted into splinters by a VIPER missile. From three different sides, murderous weapons fire from both 190s and an assortment of heavy weapons was tearing into the Puma Bane troops on the ground without mercy and adding to the devastation.

And it had only just begun.

BYKA'S DAGGER GUNSHIP

Marsin pounded on the locked door with all his might incensed with a killing rage, but the solid door was not budging.

"Open the door traitor!" Marsin screamed as she drew out his ARSOC sidearm. "You betrayed us! My men are being butchered even now!" Marsin lifted his weapon and pumped five shots into the door, none of which did anything but put a dent in the metal of the door. He whirled around and faced two of his men who had come up behind him. "Blow it!" He snarled.

"Major! We are still in the air!" One of his men barked.

Marsin lifted his ARSOC and shot the man in the face. His body blew backwards from the force of the shot, most of his head and lower jaw now missing and dripping down the side of the DAGGER's bulkhead. He looked at the second man and his eyes were savage. "Blow the fucking door!" He screamed.

The Puma Bane troop didn't hesitate and reached into his combat harness for several grenades.

"Papa! Our DAGGERS are being blown out of the sky! The Puma Bane troops are being slaughtered!" Kameka shouted as she looked at him. "You led us... you led us into an ambush!" She gasped in disbelief.

"I have saved our lives and the lives of our men!" Byka barked. "And removed only murderers and butchers! Those vermin down there are not our men! Marsin and his men had orders to kill us Meka! Azlenr, me, you! Keleru betrayed us! This operation was never about taking this colony! He was setting us up! Marsin murders the civilians and then kills us! Keleru can then claim it was Azlenr and I and that he had us executed in retribution for our actions. He was going to use this and give it to the Union as a propaganda tool! To try and stem the hate that is building within the Union! He was throwing us away Meka!"

"Why?" Kameka screamed.

"Because we do not bend to his whim!" Byka answered as he pulled his ARSOC out and made sure it was ready. "Because we are true Kavalians and he is nothing but a whore's son!"

"Open the door traitor!" Marsin's voice reached them on the internal COM. "You betrayed us! My men are being butchered even now!"

Their heads turned when they heard the dull thud of impact rounds striking the door. Kameka looked at her father. "He will use explosives now Papa! The door will not hold!"

Byka was furiously typing on the sensor screen between them and looked up. "Take us here Meka! Now! And land!"

"Land!" She barked out. "Papa... the terrain beneath us must be crawling with Union troops! They will kill us!"

"Do it daughter!" Byka shouted. "It is the only way we will survive!"

Kameka had never questioned her father before. He had never agreed with Marsin taking her as a wife and he was savagely angry after having seen what he had done to her. His actions had almost cost him his own life, for he had begun attacking Marsin's Pride in public about his actions. It hadn't been about his own honor or their Pride's standing, this had been about a father livid over what had been done to his daughter. On many nights as she had recovered, she drifted in and out of consciousness, and the times she did come too and was lucid, he had always been there. Several times she had seen him weeping against her hip, begging for her forgiveness for what he had allowed to happen. No... Kameka would never question her father again and she yanked the controls of the DAGGER violently to the east and dipped her nose to the ground.

She would never know it... but this violent maneuver saved her father's life and her own.

The Puma Bane troop had just placed the last of three plasma grenades against the door and was stepping back to detonate them when the DAGGER heeled over violently to the side. The troop lost his balance and flew across the short corridor, impacting the opposite wall. As he did this, his hand was crushed between his armor and the bulkhead. His eyes grew wide and he looked down at the detonator in his hand a split second before the three grenades exploded.

There was a flash of bright yellow light and then the explosive force of three plasma grenades rippled outward like a flaming wave of death instead of being directed at the door of the cockpit. Marsin's eyes were wide as he threw his body to the side just as that rolling wave of flame sizzled by him and engulfed the entire rear compartment of the DAGGER. His head whipped around as his men began to scream in agony while their fur caught fire almost instantly and they began to burn to death. Half a dozen of them were staggering about in agony, trying to beat the flames out on their bodies and they stepped into nothing as they could not see where the open ramp was and plunged to their deaths. Marsin ignored the pain from his singed hair and rose to his feet as air rushed through the ship now. He moved around the corner and his eyes grew wider as he saw that the forward section just behind the cockpit was now open to the sky around them. A gaping, jagged hole nearly a meter high and half a meter wide which was splashed with the blood and partial remains of the Puma Bane troop who had set the grenades. His eyes lifted and he saw that the door to the cockpit had also been breached and he drew his ARSOC with a savage growl and rushed forward.

Marsin didn't pause and kicked down the door of the cockpit, moving forward even as he was firing. He could hear the impacts of the rounds against metal and glass and then he felt a burning in his side and was rammed back against the bulkhead. His head snapped around and he saw Byka on the deck, his silenced ARSOC out and spitting rounds. Two more rounds punched into Marsin's armor staggering him as he brought his weapon to bear on Byka.

"Die traitor! Die!" Marsin screamed as he began firing. Two rounds punched into Byka's upper body immediately.

"Papa no!" Meka screamed from her seat trying to wrench her own ARSOC free of its holster.

Marsin shifted his fire instantly and fired twice at Kameka, one round punching through the back of her shoulder. She screamed as her ARSOC went flying from her hand and her body twisted forward.

"Fucking bitch!" Marsin snarled. "I deal with you in a moment!" He said as he turned his head back to Byka. "You will die knowing I will rape your daughter until she can stand it no longer and then I will give her to my men! When she's nothing but a mindless hulk I will give her to the brothels on Nefoa! You have failed General Byka! I am better than you! I am better than anyone!"

Byka's head shifted slightly and he began laughing as he looked out the cockpit window. "Fuck you fool! We'll all die!" He snarled just before the DAGGER began to smash its way through the tops of the towering trees below.

Several sets of eyes were watching from the small clearing that the DAGGER was suppose to land at. Daio and Dantio watched in amazement as the pilot fought for control of the ship and then the damage to its forward section gave way from too much stress. The tail of the ship began to tear free just before it impacted the tops of the trees and began its downward drop.

"Nubous lae!" Daio gasped as they watched the DAGGER begin to plow through the tops of the trees. "I'm thinking it ain't suppose to do that!"

Dantio grabbed his arm. "Fuck! Come on!" He growled as he shifted once more and they began to sprint towards where the DAGGER was barreling into the trees and sending debris in all directions before smashing nose first into the hard ground.

"CHARGE!" Josie Miller screamed into her COM unit.

With a roar that they would be proud of going into the future, the members of 1st Brigade of the 82nd Cataphract Division rose to their feet and followed their fearless commander out into the field. The wreckage of sixteen DAGGER gunships littered the clearing, the dozens of fires still burning and sending smoke billowing into the daytime sky. The Puma Bane troops were staggering about, many of them injured, and all of them confused as to which way to go. The attack had been planned perfectly, and the superior thinking Puma Bane troops were now left to wonder what had happened.

That single word rang out over the roar of the fires and small arms fire and many heads turned only to see the last thing they would ever see. The Cataphract armor provided not only protection, but enhanced physical assets as well. The men and women wearing that armor were now sprinting across the field at dead runs, the stabilizers built into the joints of the combat suits keeping them steady enough to put sustained, accurate fire on the Puma Bane troopers dotting the field. Many of the Kavalians troops dropped to one knee and began to return fire, only to discover the armor was quite resistant to their weapons. It was like firing at man sized tanks, which essentially the men and women of 1st Brigade were. The members of 1st Brigade fell on the Kavalians troopers from three sides and were quickly upon them thanks to the enhanced armor. One Kavalian made the mistake of standing up right in front of Josie Miller, intending to use his assault rifle as a club. With a howl of fury, Josie leaped upon the Kavalian, batting aside his weapon like a toy and jamming the barrel of her KM19 Magnum into his exposed neck and firing from point blank range. The KM19 had been specially made to be able to fit into the larger hand of the Cataphract Armor user, providing them with a superior close range weapon that was incredibly powerful. The Kavalian's head blew apart like an overripe melon and Josie Miller hardly paused at all as she rushed forward with the rest of her men.

Androcles's orders were simple and to the point. No prisoners were to be taken from the Puma Bane troops. No quarter was to be given and no mercy was to be shown. As the soldiers of the 1st brigade closed with the Kavalians they had nothing but savage anger in their eyes and hearts. These were the scum who had butchered nearly five thousand Bontawillian civilians. Just men, women and even children whose only crime was to be living here. Until this day, many humans had not been able to fight with the Union forces on the ground. They were just not as durable and capable as Lycavorians and Elves when it came to ground combat. That was something that Charles Taylor wanted to change and today his goal had been met. Humans, men and women, many of them physically smaller than the Kavalians they were fighting, they were tearing into the Kavalian troops with unrestrained glee. Weapons were used as clubs; blades came out and began to draw copious amounts of Kavalian blood. To quote an ancient saying from post Great Fire Earth, the Kavalian troops had just had a whole can of whup ass opened on them.

There were casualties... the Puma Bane troops were seasoned and experienced soldiers with little fear. They were able to bring down perhaps a dozen of the 1st brigade soldiers before sheer numbers began to take their toll. Many of the dead littering the field had been killed in the missile strikes, fallen from burning ships, or crushed under them. Perhaps a thousand Puma Bane troops actually were able to fight when 1st Brigade hit them, a third of them wiped out in the initial barrage of the ambush. But as their Spartan comrades and brothers looked on with awe from the timber surrounding the clearing, the 1st brigade pressed forward relentlessly. The Bontawillians may not have been human, but damn it they were Union citizens, and now Union society across the entire galaxy would know that humans did not take kindly to mass murder of their fellow alien citizens, and they would stand with them to the very end.

One DAGGER gunship, whether by fate or chance, escaped the barrage of missiles and was still flying. That pilot saw what had taken place with his fellow gunships and the mass and tangled of so many of his kind on the ground beneath him and then chose to land his Puma Bane filled ship where he thought it would matter most. If they were going to die he determined for himself, then they would attempt to take out the Lycavorian Prince and anyone with him. He yanked his DAGGER into a vicious turn, throwing the Kavalian troops in the back against the bulkhead, dropped his altitude until he was skimming the treetops and made straight for Andro's position.

“Andro!” Sadi’s voice called out within the implant. “One gunship is heading right for us! He’s too low to the trees; we can’t get a clear lock! From the east! From the east!”

Sadi's warning was probably unnecessary since the DAGGER sheering off the tops of the trees as it closed on them drew all of their attention. And by Andro's estimation it was going to drop right on top of them.

"Run!" Andro shouted. "Run! Now!"

No one hesitated at his command, and as he grabbed Sehri and Lu'ria's hands, Carisia was already blurring in motion. Jomann was moving before the words had even finished leaving Andro's mouth and he scooped up Eliani and Brendi both, one in each arm, and was sprinting away as fast as his long legs would carry them. The DAGGER came in very fast, the pilot hoping to kill as many as he could before he died. Tree branches were snapping so loudly they sounded like gunshots. Elynth, Majeir, Anthar and Tharua had taken to the skies at the first warning and now they were circling the main clearing as they watched the DAGGER gunship finally bury its nose into the ground, having smashed its way through the makeshift bunker Dorian and Lisisa had been occupying only minutes before. The cockpit was crushed in the impact, but the pilot had succeeded in delivering his cargo. Sixty-three Puma Bane soldiers, most of them still a little stunned at the turn of events came roaring from the rear of the DAGGER intent on murder and mayhem.

Sadi dropped from the ladder leading up to the missile turret, Ne'Veha across from her and turned only to come face to face with an angry and revitalized Ulana. Aleatia and the others watched with wide eyes.

"You bitch!" Ulana snarled. "You had that Hadarian half breed..."

Sadi's face twisted into a sneer of rage at the interruption and she lifted her hand and sent Ulana hurling across the interior of the STRIKER with a not so gentle shove of Etheric power. Ulana impacted the opposite bulkhead and cracked her skull on the wall, dropping into a heap on the deck immediately, holding her head in agony as she glared up at Sadi. It was a display that stunned Aleatia and Harira, who were viewing intently. "Get out of my way upae! Unless you plan to fight!" Sadi growled as she looked at Ne'Veha. "SirsanGai... the weapon's locker!"

Ne'Veha nodded her head instantly and dashed the two meters to the floor to ceiling cabinet and punched in a security code. She ripped open the door, nearly tearing it from its hinges with her combined elven and wolf strength and she was pulling two P190A3s from the locker. "Here!" She shouted tossing one of the rifles towards Sadi who caught it easily, and then taking one for herself.

Sadi turned to look at Aleatia and the others, Kelelm still holding his own P190. "You must not let them into the STRIKER." She told him. "Caydren and Cinol will stand with you!"

Sister... we want to go with you and SirsanGai! Caydren complained.

Sadi looked at him. "We are not leaving the ship Caydren. Only moving to the exterior engine mounting steps to better cover those outside. You and Cinol burn any who attempt to force their way into the ship! Protect those here inside!"

Cinol nodded his huge head. We are ready! He announced.

"SirsanGai... take the port mount!" Sadi barked. "I will take the dorsal mount position!" Ne'Veha nodded without question and darted over to kiss her hard before she moved to an emergency hatch on the side of the STRIKER and entered the code to open it. Sadi turned to Aleatia. "We have not had a chance to talk Lady Aleatia... but Andro has shared everything with me. I suggest all of you arm yourselves from the weapons locker there. It may get very intense in a few moments."

Sadi didn't wait for an answer and moved to the opposite emergency hatch and entered the code to open it. Aleatia didn't hesitate and moved directly to the locker and removed the KM14. Reworked to fire the more deadly Kavalian 12.7mm round, she looked at her son Kelelm who smiled at her determined look. "Osbel! Imani! Move to the area just by the cockpit!" Aleatia barked. "Harira... you as well!"

Harira shook her head and moved to the locker. "I will fight beside you!" She snapped removing the second KM14.

Aleatia nodded her head and looked at Kelelm. "Where do you want us?" She asked.

Kelelm looked at Caydren's muzzle and the adolescent dragon's eyes fell on him. Between us. He told Kelelm immediately even as he flicked his large head slightly and Kelelm watched as shimmering Dragon Armor began to extend around his body from the saddle he wore. He heard a similar sound from Cinol and turned to see that armor was also extending to encompass his muscular body as well. Stay behind our bodies but do not hesitate to fire around us or over the top of us. We will remain still on the ramp and burn any who come close.

Kelelm nodded and looked at his mother. “Remain close to the dragons but do not move in front of them!” He ordered.

Aleatia and Harira nodded as Cinol and Caydren moved into position on either side of the deck at the top of the ramp.

Andro lifted his head from between Lu'ria's and Sehri's, bits of branch falling off his shoulders from where he lay half on top of them and half off them, his arms protecting them as best as he could.

“Sibfla!” He cursed. “I should have seen that coming!” He spat grass and dirt out of his mouth as Sehri and Lu'ria turned to look at him.

Andro smelled him the moment that their eyes went wide as they looked up at him. He twisted his body in the blink of an eye and saw the Puma Bane soldier lifting his rifle to end their lives. Andro opened his palms and sent two psychic diamonds exploding outward in the single blink of an eye. Those two psychic projectiles struck the Kavalian in the chest and throat, lifting his body off the ground from the devastating force, and blowing gaping holes in his flesh. Andro sprang to his feet, his Shi Viska flaring into life, his eyes searching for more targets.

“Lu'ria! Get to Sadi!” Andro screamed. “Get to the STRIKER!”

“What about you?” Lu'ria screamed back. “We won't leave you!”

Andro turned to look at her. “Get Sehri back to the STRIKER Ilythiiri Tessai! Elynth, Majeir and I will cover your escape! We must move to a more defensible position! Go!”

Lu'ria knew he was speaking the truth and she grasped Sehri's hand tightly. “Come Sehri!” She hissed as they began to sprint towards the STRIKER in the distance. Lu'ria blinked and then Carisia was beside Sehri on the opposite side, unwrapping the shadows from around her body as she ran with them, combining her vampire speed with Lu'ria's natural elven speed and helping to propel Sehri along with them. Sehri kept up easily however, as it seemed the wolf speed that was part of the Lycavorian DNA within her had no trouble coming out, and she had obviously used it before.

“We can't leave him!” Sehri complained even as she ran.

Carisia glanced back quickly, seeing Anthar landing beside Elynth. “He will not need our help! And until we can spend time with you and teach you... your safety is more important to all of us!” She said quickly before turning back to see the STRIKER in the distance.

Andro moved out from the tangle of roots and branches the DAGGER's crash had tossed upon him and he felt Elynth land beside him on one side, Majeir the other, with Anthar coming up behind them. Andro brushed the branches and bits of bit from his armor calmly. “You have got to be kidding me! Where the fuck did these idiots learn how to fly! I can fly better than that! Or at least crash better!” Andro snarled.

Elynth's golden eyes narrowed as she saw the Puma Bane troops taking notice of Andro now as they rushed from the back of the crashed DAGGER. Without even a conscious thought she erected their psychic shield and began to extend her Dragon Armor, making note that Majeir and Anthar did the same around their bodies. I believe they will try to explain it to us now my Bonded Brother. She spoke calmly.

Andro's head came up then and his wolf eyes took in the Puma Bane troops circling all around them. “We end this quickly!” He snapped. “Crush them! Bite them! Burn them! I don't care! Now... I am upset!” Andro reached up and yanked Cana rie Emanur from his combat harness, calling the blade from Flatspace.

With a roar of battle, Andro did the one thing the Kavalians didn't expect.

He charged.

Jomann rolled over beside Eliani where they had thrown their bodies behind the massive fallen tree stump surrounded by years of dirt and grass grown up around it.

“Eli!” He gasped.

Eliani lifted her head and nodded. “I'm ok.” She gasped.

Jomann reached across her back and grabbed Brendi's shoulder. “Saarrieemeran?”

Brendi nodded. “Ok... I'm ok. Who was driving that truck?” She groaned.

Jomann came to his knees quickly, his keen eyes searching the timber around them. He saw the flash of red colored scales through the trees and then he caught a glimpse of Andro with his Shi Viska out.

“Eli!” Jomann hissed. “You and Saarrieemeran make your way back to the STRIKER.” He said. “I must go to your brother.”

Eliani looked at him as she gripped Brendi’s hand. “Jomann...” She was going to say something else but looking into his face she simply nodded. It was his duty and she could no more make him choose between his duty and her than he would make her choose between the same. “Do not injure yourself husband!” She hissed at him. “I would be very upset.”

Jomann grinned. “I wouldn’t dream of it.” He spoke leaning over to kiss her deeply. Eliani grasped his face briefly and relished in the touch of his skin. He pulled back quickly though. “Go! We will follow soon!”

Eliani nodded and helped Brendi to her feet. She turned back to say something to Jomann but he had already shifted and was sprinting through the timber. She turned back to Brendi as she drew her KM12. “Come Saarrieemeran.” She said. “Let’s beat feet.” Brendi looked at her oddly with those dark brown orbs and Eliani shook her head. “Never mind! I’ll explain later!”

BYKA’S CRASHED DAGGER

Kameka groaned in pain as she fell back in her pilot’s seat. Her right arm hung useless from Marsin’s bullet, her right leg screaming in pain. The cockpit section of the DAGGER had been torn away from the rear section, the bulkhead separating the two now peeled away exposing the cockpit section to the air of the planet’s surface. The front of the ship was crushed nearly all the way back to where Kameka sat, the windshield shattered from the thick six inch wide tree branch that now protruded through the passenger side. Reaching up with her good arm Kameka wrenched her helmet off with a snarl, tossing it down and trying to turn in her chair.

“Papa!” She cried out. Behind her perhaps three meters of the cockpit section remained her father and Marsin no longer there. “Father!” She shouted again as she tried to pull her legs out from under the crushed forward control console. She wailed in pain as she pulled her legs free and dropped to the floor of the DAGGER. The fabric of her flight suit was shredded in several places and blood soaked her legs from several deep lacerations. Ignoring the pain, Kameka scrapped around on the deck until she found her ARSOC and gripped it with her left hand as she pulled herself to her feet.

Holding the side of the destroyed cockpit bulkhead, Kameka made her way to the peeled away section of metal and looked out to see nothing but trees and plants and sunlight. She could see the rear section of her DAGGER, what remained of it anyway, scattered for some three hundred meters behind where she stood. The huge trees that had been uprooted as she crashed the ship were strewn on either side of the line of wreckage and she could also see several bodies of Puma Bane troops. They were not moving in any way, and from the burnt and twisted condition of their remains she doubted they would be. Her keen feline eyes darted from side to side looking for any sign of her father.

“Father!” She screamed once more.

Kameka heard snapping twigs and she whirled around to see Marsin’s savage face right beside her. Blood streaked his cheek and neck from a nasty gash in his forehead but he looked otherwise unhurt. Kameka tried to bring the ARSOC around but Marsin slapped it away and caused her to stagger painfully on her injured legs.

“Hello whore bitch!” Marsin snarled at her snapping out with his right fist and connecting with her jaw and sending her sprawling out of the cockpit section and down to the forest floor. “Your precious father is dead!” Marsin barked as he leaped to the forest floor following her fall. “Do you hear me Meka? He’s dead!”

“No!” Kameka screamed as she rolled over onto her stomach, her vision blurry from the pain as she tried to pull herself away from the man who had caused her so much agony in her short life. The times he had taken her in fits of drunken or drug induced rages, beating her quite senseless while he violated her, came rushing back to her in that moment. Her eyes searched for her ARSOC so she could kill him, even as she pulled herself away with her hands and arms.

“Where are you going bitch!” Marsin snarled as he grabbed her long, silky hair and twisted violently, making her flip over as she howled in pain.

Kameka unwrapped her tail from around her waist instantly and used it to viciously slap his face. The blow had the desired affect, causing him to cry out in pain and step back as the vibrations of the slap went through him. His eyes grew even larger in anger and he snatched her tail in his hands and yanked viciously. Kameka cried out in agony as the horrible pain lanced through her lower back and her body was lifted off the forest floor and Marsin slammed her back into the unyielding ground with tremendous force. Kameka’s face struck the ground hard, stars erupting in her head and her bones screaming in protest as the impact jarred her brutally. Marsin was beyond help now, completely insane with rage and he stepped up to her, tearing at her flight suit.

“I’m going to rape your ass Meka!” Marsin shouted. “Just like I did before! Your ass is so tight! And I am going to take you with me off this planet and make sure you end up in the brothels on Nefoa so they can fuck you until you go insane!”

Kameka felt him tearing at her flight suit and she rolled over quickly, completely dazed but unwilling to surrender to him. “No!” She screamed flailing blindly. “No!”

A booted foot slammed unexpectedly into Marsin’s face causing him to stagger back. Kameka, using the last of her reserves of strength, hauled herself to her feet and began to try and run. Marsin tackled her from behind with an hysterical laugh.

“You’re mine bitch!” He screamed as he flipped her over and punched her savagely in the head. “You’re mine do you hear me!” The last blow nearly broke her jaw and caused her to almost lose consciousness. She could do nothing as he tore at her uniform, nearly pulling it off her before the deep, menacing growl caused him to stop and look up. Through tear filled and dazed eyes, Kameka tilted her head back and what she saw quite surprisingly made her heart sing with happiness.

The massive head of the enormous dark brown furred wolf was inches from Marsin’s face. It’s lips were curled back in a horrifying snarl, revealing vicious, flesh tearing white fangs and pink gums. The yellow flecked, dark brown eyes were filled with savage cunning and smoldering hatred and anger. They were the most beautiful eyes Kameka had ever seen. The beast was clearly two and a half feet at the shoulders and it took a step forward and pressed its moist nose to Marsin’s forehead, those fangs looking ever so lethal. Marsin did the only thing he could think of since he had foolishly tossed aside his weapons. Exploding off the ground he began to run towards the timber. Kameka’s head came up as the huge wolf erupted after him, the huge paws digging into the earth and propelling that muscular body forward. She watched in stunned shock as that wolf changed into the form of a muscular, umber skinned man with a soft silver white flash of light, just as he struck Marsin in the back and sent him sprawling.

Daio glared at Marsin with savage fury in his wolf eyes, his fangs still fully extended. “Get up!” He screamed. “Get up and pick on me motherfucker!”

Kameka watched as Daio stepped forward and hit the rising Marsin with a straight right palm heel strike to his jaw, snapping his head around and tossing his body back to the forest floor. Marsin hissed in anger and flung himself off the ground in a front kick motion. Daio side stepped the clumsy strike and hammered Marsin’s abdomen with two quick blows that almost doubled him over. He spun around as he landed and whipped out the knife from behind his back where the blade had been hidden. He slashed forward quickly three times, each time Daio dodging the strike with well practiced ease. As he blocked the third attempt he stepped forward and drove his forearm into Marsin’s face, snatching the knife wielding wrist in powerful hands and twisting downward. Kameka heard Marsin howl in pain as he dropped the knife and the bones in his wrist snapped like dried twigs.

“Puma Bane Commandos huh!” Daio screamed. “Big bad boys of the Kavalian military!” Daio continued to drag Marsin around by his now crippled wrist, twisting the arm even more with his left hand. He lifted his right and brought it crashing down into Marsin’s face with devastating force three times in quick succession. After each blow Kameka could see blood flying into the air around Marsin’s head. “Fucking cowards is what you are!” Daio screamed. “Cowards and rapists!”

Daio brought his right knee crashing forward into Marsin’s jaw, snapping his head back and sending his body hurtling off the ground to land three meters away in a cloud of dirt. “You will not touch her!” Daio roared as he stepped up to Marsin. “You will never touch her again!”

Marsin looked up at Daio, his eyes blurry and out of it now. He tried to swing at him, but his good arm did not want to respond properly to his commands. Daio snatched that arm in his strong hands and wrenched it straight out, and then smashed a three knuckle punch right over the joint. Marsin's good arm broke then, the breaking of the bone clearly audible from where Kameka lay stunned and watching what was happening.

"Let me show you what Spartans do to scum like you!" Daio screamed lifting Marsin up by the front of his uniform and smashing his forehead into Marsin's face twice, blood erupting from his crushed nose. He was completely out of it when Daio twisted his body over and body slammed Marsin into the hard earth with titanic force. The sounds of ribs snapping were heard then and a small whimper of pain escaped Marsin's bloody lips.

Kameka watched with adoring eyes then as Daio shifted back into wolf form in that silver/white flash of light, planted his paws on Marsin's chest and sank his fangs deep into Marsin's throat. She watched as Marsin's arms came up and beat upon Daio's broad, furred covered back fighting his own death to no avail. Marsin's legs twitched twice and then Daio's head rose with a jerk, tearing Marsin's throat open with almost careless ease.

"Daio!" The second voice barked out now and Kameka turned her head to see three more Lycavorian Spartans appear by the wreckage of the DAGGER. "We have him! Stop playing with the scum and get the female! We must go!" Dantio hissed.

Kameka's eyes darted back to see the Lycavorian had changed back into his human form, his chest rising and falling in exertion and he turned towards her. She watched with awe as he kicked Marsin's body and then moved over to where she lay. He held out his hands to her.

"We... we are here to help." Daio said looking at the Kavalian female on the ground before him. He had witnessed part of her fight against the Kavalian Puma Bane commander and her strength had touched a nerve in him. Looking at her close up, even under the bruises and blood that covered her face and legs, she was the most incredibly beautiful woman he had ever laid his wolf eyes upon. As he knelt slowly beside her, her powerful apricot scent engulfed him in a rush and surged through him. He gazed at her full lips and dark brown eyes, the curve of her cheeks and line of her jaw, and Daio contended that yes indeed she was the finest female he had ever had the pleasure of viewing. He glanced quickly at the long tail that extended up and was curled around the six inch long branch, ready to stab him with it. His eyes went back to her face. "Are you going to use that on me?" He asked with a grin.

"You... you killed him!" Kameka gasped.

Daio glanced back at Marsin's cooling body and then returned his eyes to her. "It was a less painful death than he deserved, but we do not have much time." He reached for her injured legs but stopped and met her eyes. "I want to inspect your injuries... may I touch you?"

"You are Lycavorian!" Kameka hissed. "You are the... you are the enemy!"

"Am I?" Daio asked softly. "If I was the enemy... would I have killed him?"

Kameka stared at him for a long moment. "Who... who are you?"

"My name is Daio." He answered. "I am Durcunusaan."

"Durcunusaan?" Kameka gasped. "Why would you..."

"Daio! Now!" Dantio yelled.

Kameka looked over and saw Dantio and the others come up, her father's body carried over the shoulder of one of the other Durcunusaan. "Papa!" She cried.

Dantio looked at her and shook his head. "He's alive." He stated quickly. "He's hurt bad... but alive. We need to get out of here in case more of these Puma Bane midaeus are still around."

"Why... why are you helping us?" Kameka demanded.

"This was the plan." Dantio spoke quickly. "Our Prince... your father and General Azlenr. This was our plan. Well... not the part about you getting shot down... but the rest of it." He told her.

Daio looked at Kameka. "Let me carry you." He told her quickly. "We can move more quickly. You will come to no harm and your virtue will be safe... I give you my word."

Kameka looked at him, the yellow flecked wolf eyes still very prominent, but his fangs all but gone. She lowered her tail and dropped the wood branch, nodding her head slowly. "My... my virtue was... it was taken from me a long time ago." She whispered softly.

Daio leaned over and slipped his arms under her knees and around her lower back. Her apricot scent threatened to overwhelm him but he fought it down, even Dantio seeing the reaction Kameka elicited from him.

He glanced at her incredible brown eyes. “Your virtue is never gone completely.” He whispered to her seeing her beautiful eyes meet his. “And I will defend you with my life.”

Kameka couldn't tear her eyes from him as he lifted her like she was a feather, his words echoing in her head. What did he mean? How could he find her virtuous? She looked at his face and reached up to wipe away several splotches of Marsin's blood from his skin. “Thank... thank you.” She whispered.

Daio smiled slightly and gave her a half nod. “You... you might wish to hold your tail.” He said sheepishly. “I don't want it to trip me while we move.” Kameka quickly grabbed her tail and pulled it into her lap. Daio looked at her with a warm smile. “Fascinating.” He said.

“Let's go!” Dantio spoke with a shake of his head.

Elynth whipped her wing forward over the top of Andro's head and the armored edge smashed into a Puma Bane soldier's chest crushing every bone in his upper body and sending him hurtling through the air and into the timber. Her head whipped around back toward the STRIKER, her keen eyes detecting at least half a dozen Puma Bane troops who were trying to make their way to the STRIKER.

Andro my brother! Several have broken behind us! They are heading for the ship! Go! Anthar, Majeir, Tharua and I will handle these scum!

Andro rolled to his left, Cana rie Emanur flashing forward and chopping through the legs of another Puma Bane troop, his shrill screams filling the air. Andro's glistening armor was covered in the blood of half a dozen Kavalian troops, Cana rie Emanur claiming four while his Shi Viska had claimed three others. Sister are you sure!

Elynth brought her right talon down, impaling a Kavalian trooper stupid enough to get close to her. She lifted her talon and flicked her right leg forward, his body sliding off her wickedly curved talons and smashing into another group of two who had begun to move closer to her just before Anthar let out a trumpet of anger and unleashed a stream of flame that caught all of them in its path. Go! Caydren and Cinol could do more harm than good if they begin to burn everything around them in order to protect Sadi and Ne'Veha! Go!

Andro secured Cana rie Emanur back on his harness, the sword blade disappearing back into Flatspace and lifted his arm. His Shi Viska immediately whisked back to his arm and vanished into Flatspace an instant before he shifted into wolf form and sprinted back for the STRIKER. Several rounds struck the ground around his paws as he ran but he danced to his left easily and lowered his shoulders, presenting an impossible and fast moving target. His head snapped to the side when he saw Jomann's large dark blond wolf form peeling out of the timber and falling in alongside him.

Half a dozen have broken through! Andro barked out. They are making for the STRIKER unimpeded! Then let's impede them! Jomann answered.

The two wolves, one larger than the other by a third, sprinted through the timber with blazing speed, their powerful muscles propelling them forward with killing intent. One was a Prince, the other his Captain. Both of them had a vested interest in getting there before the Kavalian troops.

Sadi saw them first, lifted her 190A3 and held back the trigger on the assault rifle. The six Puma Bane troops dove for cover and began to return fire. Sadi was not used to using the 190 and after her initial burst, her shots became somewhat wild and less well aimed. This allowed the Puma Bane troops to direct accurate fire on her, the rounds impacting around the armored hull of the STRIKER and causing her to duck back inside the small hatch while returning fire as best as possible. Her jumping back into the STRIKER caused everyone's heads to turn towards her, including Caydren and Cinol.

Sadi! Caydren called out.

“I'm ok!” Sadi answered with disgust in her voice. “They are coming from the east! I counted six of them! They...” Sadi looked up and forward and her green eyes flew open. “Caydren! Look out!” She screamed.

All heads turned to see the six Kavalians at the bottom of the ramp and training their weapons into the rear of the ship as one began to throw a plasma grenade up into the rear of the ship. Kelelm knew he would be too slow to bring his weapon around to fire and his eyes flashed to his mother. “Mother!” He screamed.

Aleatia was not looking at him however. She was gazing out the back of the ship, her eyes wide as a massive black shape appeared in mid leap and plowed into the bodies of the Kavalian soldiers followed an instant later by a slightly smaller dark blond shape. Aleatia knew immediately that they were wolves and she watched as the six Kavalians went sprawling out of view off the back of the ramp. Sadi was moving even before the plasma grenade had left the fingers of the Kavalian soldier and she lunged forward past Aleatia. Drawing upon her inbred wolf speed and the new energy her bond with Caydren gave her, she shoved past Aleatia and used her 190 as a club. Swinging with all her might she hit the grenade at the peak of its arc and sent it spinning back out of the ship and into the timber. Kelelm dove forward and pushed her and his mother down, imposing his body between them as the grenade exploded in the trees a hundred meters away and sent millions of splinters shooting in all directions. None of them penetrated his body armor, or the scales of Caydren and Cinol, but they rained down on the rear of the STRIKER in droves.

Aleatia looked over her son's shoulder and her intake of breath was heard by both Sadi and Kelelm. They all turned to see Andro and Jomann, now back in human form, doing battle with six Kavalian troopers. To Aleatia and Harira what followed was a display unlike any they had ever seen in their lives; to Sadi it was utterly beautiful.

Androcles and Jomann held nothing back, calling upon their Etheric powers immediately. Cana and Saar rie Emanur appeared in Andro's hands as if by magic and Aleatia saw the sword blades burst from Flatspace. As one Kavalian scrambled to his feet, Saar whipped forward and removed his head in a single powerful swipe. In the middle of the swing Andro rotated his body and brought Cana down across the front of another Kavalian. This Puma Bane troop still had enough presence of mind to bring up his rifle in order to protect himself, but Cana sliced clean through the assault rifle and sent the trooper staggering back. Andro lifted his opposite hand, holding Saar in it and unleashed a powerful psychic diamond. The projectile punched through the Kavalian's chest like a hot knife through butter, blowing a gaping hole in his upper body and tossing his frame back nearly six meters.

Jomann's unique Etheric ability allowed him to move faster than any normal Lycavorian. To him it appeared as if everything around him slowed, when in fact he was moving faster than they could follow. He fell upon the first Kavalian with a single-minded fury and simply grabbed his head and nearly tore it from his shoulders while snapping his neck and nine vertebrae in his spine. Jomann shoved his twitching body to the side without pausing and fell upon the other two Kavalians with equal rage. He lifted one off the ground as the Kavalian staggered to his feet and basically body slammed him with horrific force back into the earth. The Kavalian's back broke from the force of the body slam and he lay there dying slowly wondering what had gone wrong. Jomann began to pummel the third Kavalian to death, his large fists connecting before the man had a chance to defend himself in any way. Jomann had struck him four times before the Kavalian realized he was under attack. His eyes could not focus on Jomann clearly enough to try and retaliate because he was moving so fast and this only spelled his doom. Even as he tried to scrambled away in any direction Jomann pursued him and kept pummeling his face and head with powerful blows from his armored fists. Finally... one such punch fractured the Kavalian's skull and he dropped to the ground completely unable to defend himself. Jomann then hit him with a ridge hand blow across his throat that crushed his larynx and effectively insured the Kavalian drown in his own blood as it filled his lungs.

Jomann turned to assist his Prince and friend but found no need. Andro had the last Kavalian encased in a shimmering blue flame of Etheric power and was bashing him against the ground with ghastly force, his bones popping and snapping at every impact. Finally Andro just launched him through the air and his body sailed into the timber before impacting a rather thick tree and crushing his skull in the collision. Andro whirled around searching for more threats but found there were none. Instantly Saar and Cana disappeared back into Flatspace and he turned towards the rear of the STRIKER seeing Sadi and the others watching them.

KertaGai? He called out immediately. SirsanGai!

We... we are fine my love! She answered.

Andro turned as Lu'ria and Carisia appeared with Sehri, Eliani and Brendi from the timber. They slowed to a stop, their eyes wide as they gazed at Andro and Jomann and the bodies of the dead Kavalians.

Elynth! Andro reached for her.

They are finished Andro! Elynth answered. None survived. We are coming back.

Andro turned to Jomann. "Let us hope Dorian and Lisisa have had a less exciting time than us."

ONTEROM
EIGHT HOURS UNTIL CONTACT WITH TALISMAN

-There- Avi spoke as his hands manipulated the sensor controls of the station.

Martin stood next to Avi on one side, Wayonn the other. “What is it Avi?” He asked.

-Based on its diameter and configuration... I estimate it is a sensor probe of some kind King Martin- Avi answered.

“Sensor probe huh?” Martin said. “No way to be sure?”

Avi shook his head. -Without a full power active scan no. A sensor scan of this type would also reveal that we know it exists-

Wayonn nodded. “And let whoever is monitoring it know that we know it is there.” He said.
“Can you tell how long it has been there Avi?” Martin asked.

-Not exactly... but I can approximate by cross referencing the sensor logs of the ARC ROYAL- His large hands flew across the control panel. -Captain Akemi is very thorough when recording her logs and this probe was not in the system when you arrived at this planet. I estimate it did not arrive until after you entered the Science Facility-

“So whoever owns this station knows we are here.” Martin said. “Ain’t that just peachy.”

-The basic design of the probe indicates it is similar to the one I detected in the Alpha Quadrant some weeks ago- Avi said. -The one that tried to access the command controls of SPARTA'S WRATH-

“The one that was using this Lorendo character’s security protocols right?” Martin asked.

-Affirmative-

Martin looked at Wayonn. “Perhaps you should tell me some more about this worm Lorendo.” Martin said. “You didn’t get much beyond the fact that he was a senior member of the Pralor Science...”

Wayonn nodded. “The Pralor Science Convention... yes.”

Martin looked at him intently. “Wayonn... I may be new to all this Pralor stuff... but I know when someone has a hard on for another person. You and this Lorendo character got a history don’t you?”

Wayonn met his gaze. “Not directly no. We only met twice.” He stated. “But worm is a good description of him in my opinion Martin. And your grandfather couldn’t stand the man.”

“Ok... that’s good enough for me. Worm it is. I’ve seen enough of Sumar’s memories to know that he was usually bang on when figuring people out. Now... tell me why he is a worm Wayonn?” Martin asked. “I thought... I was under the impression you Pralors got along with everyone.”

Wayonn snorted. “If only that was the case.” He spoke turning and moving to another station and leaning up against the equipment. “If you do not count the different species in our part of the universe that wanted our technology, there was just as much competition between Pralors for certain positions as any normal species Martin. Lycavorians, Elves, you do not have the cornerstone on ambition you know. It affects all species. Even Pralors.”

“That’s good to know.” Martin said. “I think.”

Wayonn looked at Avi with a grin. “Avi... do you still have access to Sumar’s old personnel profiles?”

-Affirmative-

“Play the one for Lorendo.” Wayonn said. He looked at Martin. “Your grandfather compiled profiles on nearly every Pralor of significance when he first became Chief Elder. He wanted to know who his friends were. They are in his voice too.”

“His voice?” Martin exclaimed. “Wait... Avi... you can do that?” Martin asked.

-Of course King Martin- Avi answered.

“Why didn’t you ever tell me that?” Martin asked him.

Avi blinked several times and looked at him. -You never asked Martin Leonidas-

Wayonn chuckled at Martin’s expression. “Play the logged profile Avi.” He said.

-Processing. Accessing stored profile database. Lorendo, Elder of First Order, Science Convention. Initiating playback-

The small holoimage of the rotund man appeared. He was of medium height with dark hair and a sunken brow. The flowing robes he wore did his plump body no justice and only served to make him appear fatter than he was.

“Lorendo...” The deep male voice spoke now. “Elder of the First Order. Pralor Science Convention. Openly against my appointment as Chief Elder and did not care who heard his words. He has a deep seated dislike of me and my fellow Praetorians for reasons unknown at this time. Has openly opposed me leading the next seed mission because he believes I will corrupt those with the Praetorian gene that I am taking with me and those I intend to train with Wayonn. Was extremely vocal and condescending during Xaxon’s trial and it appears he blames all Praetorians for the war with the Scourge. He feels all Praetorians should be trained and under the strict control of the Science Convention. He feels Praetorians have too much power and that our people wrongly look to us as saviors and guardians. If not for us... we would have fallen a long time ago. He is not particularly bright in his field, there are many who surpass his knowledge and ingenuity, though at this point I have come to the conclusion his only goal is a seat on the Chief Elder Circle. Note to Avi... insure his status and actions are monitored through our contacts on the homeworld.”

Martin looked at Wayonn. “That’s... that’s his voice?”

Wayonn nodded. “Yes it is.”

Martin was silent for a moment and then nodded his head slowly. “You have more of those Avi?” He asked finally.

-Eighty-seven point three hours worth Martin Leonidas- Avi replied.

Martin looked at Wayonn. “That’s... that’s the same voice as my father.” He said softly. “When he spoke to me on Earth.”

“It’s the same as yours Martin my boy.” Wayonn said. “One of the reasons I try to keep you so engaged.” He said with a grin.

Martin smiled at him and nodded. “Ok... I guess that’s pretty standard.” He said. “It still doesn’t explain why you dislike him so much though. Or why he’s trying to take control of one of my ships.”

“Just before we struck the Ion storm that disabled our ship we received an updated sensor profile of the area we were passing through. Which happened to be around Lycavore.” Wayonn told him. “The sensor profiles showed no sign of the Ion anomaly, they were clean, but the Ion storm we hit was massive Martin. Half a light year across and easily a full light year deep. There's no way the sensor profile would have missed it."

"Wait... you think he sent the wrong data?" Martin asked.

-Distributing updated sensor profiles fell within the purview of his duties King Martin- Avi spoke.
-Each update was logged and recorded by a member of the Science Convention for accuracy and any strange readings. Elder Lorendo's personal security code accompanied the updated sensor profile indicating he had reviewed it personally-

"And someone couldn't have done it for him and just used his code?" Martin asked.

Avi shook his head. -Security Protocols at the time were still under a war time edict- He answered.
-Anyone not using their own Security Codes would be stripped of their official status and all of their codes removed-

Martin looked at Wayonn. "You think he didn't send you the right sensor profile on purpose?" Martin asked. "Why would he do that?"

Wayonn shrugged. "I don't know what to believe after all these years." He said. "I'm not sure it even matters anymore to be honest Martin. And if the security codes are accurate then he survived the war with however many other of my people and he is in a position of authority. All I know is that he is not to be trusted for any reason."

Martin looked at Avi. "I take it by your little message to him that you agree?" He asked.

-I can only make a decision based on pertinent data at hand Martin Leonidas- Avi spoke.

"Avi... don't go all neural circuits and mono tones on me!" Martin hissed. "You've developed an ability to make conscious decisions over the years based on hunches. I know you have. I've seen it. Now tell me what your hunch is!"

-He is guilty as sin Martin. To paraphrase Queen Anja- Avi spoke quickly.

Martin turned around and looked around the control room. Arzoal... I'm guessing you concur with all of this? He reached out within Mindvoice.

I did not know him personally Martin... only by reputation. Arzoal answered. He did not have the most stellar reputation among the Science Convention. Many did not trust him or his method of doing things.

Martin shook his head and turned back to Wayonn. "You know... we had people like this weasel back when Anja and I were doing ops as Navy SEALs." He spoke. "Thought they knew what was best about everything even though most of them didn't know which end of a HK74 the bullets came out of."

Wayonn nodded. "Sounds like Lorendo." He said.

"Ok... my next question... will they come here?" Martin asked. "If this sensor probe got here after we did then they are obviously monitoring this station."

-It is likely the station is within a network of other Science Platforms that are being monitored- Avi spoke up. -When the station was reactivated then a probe was sent out-

"Which leads me into the next mystery that we recently discovered." Martin said. "Anja said several of the main medical logs were deleted."

Wayonn nodded. "Yes."

"Want to guess what they were on?" Martin asked.

"Given what Anja and Duewa discovered... I'd say they were on our guests two floors beneath us in deep freeze." Wayonn answered.

"Right!" Martin spoke. "And the only reason you delete logs is to cover something up."

Wayonn nodded. "More than likely."

"So whatever happened here... someone is trying to hide it." Martin said.

"What good does it do to speculate?" Wayonn asked.

"It gives me an idea of the lengths people will go to keep their mistakes from becoming public knowledge." Martin said. "Or something similar if you get my drift." He turned to Avi. "Avi... would the ARC ROYAL's passive array detect a Pralor ship entering the system?"

-All of the ARIZONA-Class ships have sensor arrays based on City Ship 41- Avi answered. -City Ship 41 was a Class Nine City Ship. Her sensor arrays were the most advanced constructed for any City Ship-

Martin looked at him. "Is that a yes Avi?" He quipped.

-Yes- Avi said.

"Will the Shroud work?" Martin asked.

Avi shook his head. -Unlikely. Pralor sensors would immediately detect the shift in the Quantum flux matrix of the Shroud. Any technology having to do with Quantum conversion is automatically detected by Pralor sensors-

"Ok... so we have to say hello." Martin spoke.

Wayonn pushed off the computer station now. "You seem certain they will come here Martin... why?"

Martin met his eyes. "Because I would." He answered.

Wayonn smiled. "Not everyone thinks like you do Martin my boy." He said. "And my people are not..."

"Tell him." Helen's voice echoed from the side and they all turned.

Wayonn looked at her and then back to Martin. "Tell me what?" He asked. His eyes grew wider when she approached out of the shadows. "Helen?"

Helen walked right up to Martin and he looked at her with wide eyes. "Helen?" Martin gasped holding out his hands to grasp her shoulders.

Helen smiled at his expression. "I decided it was time for me to stop hiding my true appearance." She said. "Having to maintain that façade was beginning to wear on my nerves. I no longer wish to hide who I am. I am only four thousand five hundred and forty-two years old you know. Why should I make myself appear older when I am not? People will accept me or they won't."

Martin smiled at her. The gray in her hair was no longer there, leaving only long, lush dark brown waves that fell below her shoulders and was tied into a bundle at the bottom much like Anja and Cirith wore their hair. The lines of age in her face were no longer there either, leaving smooth flawless skin as was normal in young, healthy Lycavorian women. She didn't look a day over forty years old. "Wow!" He said. "Has Aricia or the others seen you yet?" He asked excitedly.

"No. Do you think they will approve?" Helen asked him with a smile.

Martin nodded quickly. "Are you kidding? They'll love it!"

Wayonn couldn't help but smile and he stepped forward to embrace his granddaughter. "I am glad you chose this." He said squeezing her tightly. "It suits you."

Helen smiled up at him and then turned her eyes to Martin once more. "Tell him Martin." She said.

Wayonn shook his head. "What are you two talking about?" He asked. "Tell me what?"

Helen looked at him. "Martin is right grandfather. They are coming here." Helen said. "They are coming here because it is getting stronger."

"What is getting stronger?" Wayonn asked looking at Martin his eyes narrowing.

"Someone is with them Wayonn." Martin said softly. "I can feel his resonance within Mindvoice. Powerful, focused and clear. It was there clearly for a single moment and then it was gone, like they are shielding. The same way you told Andro and I to shield."

“Feel... who do you feel Martin?” Wayonn asked hesitantly, his face now beginning to realize what Martin was saying.

Martin looked at him. “Someone like me and my sons.” He said.

TALISMAN

Murano smiled as he sat at the single table in the corner of the lounge. “Yes... I feel you too my brother Praetorian.” He whispered to himself. “Good. That is good. Oh... you have potential my boy. Great potential. As do those others I feel within you. We will need you in the future. All of you. I will... I will see you soon.”

“Excuse me?” The soft female voice echoed.

Murano turned his head quickly, irritated at being interrupted once more. He began to rise to his feet intending to scold the curious crewmember but stopped himself when he saw who stood next to the table. His eyes narrowed slightly as he looked at the two women and single man. The two women were young, one barely a hundred years old while the other was no more than five hundred years old if his estimation was accurate. The young man could not have been more than six or seven thousand years old. He stared into two sets of dark brown eyes and a set of soft blue orbs staring at him. He tilted his head slightly.

“I know you.” He spoke softly staring at the older of the two women.

“The older of the two women smiled brightly. “Kesyla Uncle.” She said.

Murano’s eyes exploded open. “Kesyla!” He exclaimed. “By the Omens! Kesyla!” He reached out and took her hands within his. “Child... you have... you have grown!”

The woman smiled and squeezed his hands tightly. “It’s been almost five hundred years uncle.” She said. “I was only nine when I last saw you.”

Murano shook his head but with a smile. “And you have... grown!” He exclaimed causing the woman to laugh and tears to come to her eyes. He turned his head and looked at the man. “Daron?” He asked softly.

The young man nodded and reached for his forearm, grasping it. “It has been a long time Uncle.” He spoke.

“I should say so!” Murano gasped. “Last time I saw you... hell boy... you were only a thousand years old and couldn’t decide between Phasic Engineering or Quantum Singularity Mechanics!”

Daron nodded. “I picked neither.” He said. “I moved into Bioengineering Theory.” He replied.

Murano nodded his head. “A rare but useful field.” He said. He turned to look at the last female. “And this is?”

Kesyla smiled. “This is Mari Uncle. Our sister.”

Murano looked up quickly at her. “Sister?” He gasped. “Your father... he never... he never told me he had another child.”

Kesyla gripped the younger woman’s shoulders. “Mari is twenty-four and one of the finest Quantum Mechanic scientists within the Science Convention now.” Kesyla spoke. “We are all very proud of her.”

Murano took her hand. “Then an honor for me it is.” He spoke bringing the back of her knuckles to his forehead and touching them to his skin.

Murano staggered back slightly as the young woman threw her arms around his waist and hugged him tightly. “Hello Uncle.” She gasped.

Murano looked surprised and he glanced at Kesyla. His arms went around her slowly and he smiled. “Hello to you Mari.” He said.

Kesyla smiled. “She hasn’t stopped talking about you since we became aware you had returned Uncle. She has done nothing but study the Praetorians and their history since we came onboard.”

“They are heroes!” Mari stepped back but did not release Murano’s hands. “They saved our people!”

“That was a long time ago Mari.” Daron spoke moving closer his words drawing a glance from Murano for the way in which they were spoken. “Why have you returned Uncle?” He asked plainly.

“Daron!” Kesyla hissed. “Where are your manners?”

Murano turned and motioned them to the table to sit down. He smiled warmly as Mari positioned herself next to him quickly. "Why... why are you all here?" He asked settling back into the chair. "Are you assigned to this ship?"

"I am father's senior aide now Uncle Murano." Kesyla answered. "I go where he goes. Mari does not begin her duties at the main Science Convention Engineering Building until next week and Daron return from Pheron only last week to visit. Father said we could accompany him to gain experience."

Murano's face looked surprised. "Experience?" He asked. "This... this is not a routine charting mission Kesyla. There is real danger here."

Daron chuckled. "Yes... a primitive species has somehow gained access to one of our Science Stations. Now we must go there, spank them and send them on their way. That is real danger Uncle." His words were tinged with sarcasm and arrogance and Murano looked at him for a long moment.

"That is what your father told you?" He asked finally.

Only Mari caught the tone of his voice and she looked at him intently. "That is... that is not the case Uncle?" She asked.

"Tell me Daron... how is it that this primitive species gained access to a Class Seven Ship Avatar and then convinced it to help them?" Murano asked. "How is it that they are able to come this far into the stars without advanced starships? How is it that they have incorporated our technology into their own? And how is it that they have dragons traveling with them?"

"Dragons!" Mari gasped. "You mean like Elder Mother Teniri and the others?"

"Never assume our technological advantage makes us superior to someone else." Murano admonished him. "Technology is not the measure of a species. What is inside is the measure."

"Even so... Elder Lorendo says they are primitive compared to us." Daron spoke. "He says we'll simply take back what is ours and leave them be."

Murano nodded. "And what if they do not want to give it back?" Murano asked him. "What then?"

"We take it obviously." Daron spoke. "We can't allow primitive species to have our best technology."

"You assume that we are able to take it back from them." Murano said.

"We have a detachment of Elite Pralor Convention soldiers and twenty dragons with us Uncle." Kesyla spoke now. "Surely... that is enough should the need arise."

"Elite?" Murano chuckled to himself. "You believe the Convention Security Troops are elite do you Kesyla?" He asked.

"They are not the vaunted Praetorians Uncle! You are the only Praetorian that remains." Daron spoke with another heavy dose of sarcasm in his words. "But they will do. Unless you cling to this idea that there is another on the planet we are heading for as father says you do. A descendant of Sumar. In which case that would mean the former Chief Elder broke his own law and this individual would be nowhere near as powerful."

Murano looked at him but Mari snapped her head around and glared at her older brother. "Daron... you go beyond yourself! You will speak more respectfully to your elders and your betters or I will tell father!" She hissed at him angrily.

Daron looked at his sister with a sneer but kept his tongue quiet from what he wanted to say. "Tell him sister. I am only stating what father thinks as well." Daron spoke now, his tone more subdued and respectful but nonetheless having a heavy dose of arrogance and sarcasm in it.

"Forgive Daron Uncle." Kesyla spoke looking at him sternly. She turned back to Murano then. "He sometimes loses himself within his own self-importance."

"I am only stating what father, Elder Lorendo and many within the Elder Convention are saying." Daron spoke.

"So you have spies within the Chief Elder Convention as well now!" Mari hissed at him.

"What does it matter to you Mari? You will be married off soon and then you can live your life having children and making engines." Daron spoke.

Mari glared at him. "I will not be married off!" She hissed. "You were not and Kesyla was not!"

"I'm sorry to say... it is the law sister." Daron spoke. "And you are only a year shy of your time. We were granted waivers... but father can not grant you a waiver as well."

"Father will get a waiver for me!" Mari snapped.

“Enough you two!” Kesyla spat. She looked at Murano. “Forgive them Uncle... Daron enjoys angering her.”

Mari snickered at her brother and turned back to face Murano. Though Kesyla was the middle child, both of them usually took their cues from her. She was more level headed and had infinitely more power and influence than either of them given that she was their father’s senior aide. “You... you believe there is a Praetorian on this planet Uncle?” She asked with genuine interest.

Murano looked at her and smiled. “It is only a feeling child.” He replied.

“But you believe it?” Mari pressed him.

“Let’s just say that I do not follow the same path as others in their beliefs.” Murano answered.

“Ah... I see they found you after all!” The voice said and all of them looked up to see Delnash move up to the table.

Murano came to his feet as did all of them. “Brother.” He stated evenly.

“I asked them to not disturb you... but as usual none of them listened to me.” Delnash spoke with a smile.

“He was just sitting here father.” Kesyla said quickly.

Murano shook his head. “It is quite alright.” He stated. “It is... it was very good to see all of you.”

Delnash nodded. “I must speak to Murano privately children.” He said. “Please excuse us.”

Mari was the only one to actually reach out to him, leaning up on her tip toes and gently kissing his cheek. “We will talk more Uncle.” She stated confidently.

Murano gazed into her soft blue eyes and nodded his head. She was breathtaking in her beauty and this disturbed him for some reason. He blinked several times as she moved away with Kesyla and Daron and he turned to face his brother.

“Murano... before you say anything...” Delnash began to speak.

“You did not think enough of me to inform me that you had another child Delnash?” He asked him.

“Am I such a stain upon your record that you will not allow me to experience the happiness of such a day brother?”

“Murano... it wasn't... Mari was unplanned.” He stammered. “We certainly did not expect to have another child. It was... it was a trying birth. After the fourth month Dirra needed to remain in bed.”

“And you did not think to let me know?” Murano gasped. “Perhaps I could have done something to comfort her! Both of you!”

Delnash shook his head. “It is not what she wanted.” He said. “The others were more than supportive and...”

“The others?” Murano said softly. “Yes... those who are not your insane Praetorian brother. I understand Delnash.”

“It is not like that Murano!” Delnash snapped. “Do not make it something that it is not!”

Murano looked at him. “You have done that quite well all by yourself.” He spoke. He returned to the chair. “What do you want brother?”

Delnash settled into the chair Kesyla had been sitting in. “I need you to reconsider your stance Murano.” He said.

Murano looked at him. “My stance on what?”

“You know very well what I mean!” Delnash snapped. “I can not have the only surviving Praetorian of our people traipsing all over saying he does not support the Convention.”

Murano met his eyes. “I did not say I don’t support the Chief Elder Convention.” He said softly. “I said I would not recognize the Elder Convention until such time as you saw fit to have elections. There is a difference brother!”

“Our people will not know that difference!” Delnash snapped.

“You give our people far too little credit.” Murano told him. “Have you ruled over them for so long that you have forgotten what it was like before you became Chief Elder? When you were one of them?”

“I did not come here to argue or be drawn into a debate with you brother.” Delnash hissed at him.

“No... you came here to get me to agree that you are doing the right thing when it comes to these individuals who have taken over one Elder Lorendo’s Science Stations.” Murano said with contempt in his voice.

“It is possible... it is possible that they have discovered the sensor probe in the system.” Delnash spoke.

“So?” Murano stated sarcastically. “They are primitives brother. Surely no match for our superior intellect and technology.”

“Do not jest with me Murano!” Delnash barked. “And do not mock Lorendo!”

Murano leaned forward quickly, causing his brother to sit back just as quickly. They were brothers yes, but Delnash had always had a healthy respect for what his brother could do. Part of that respect was also fear. “I will mock that fool until I am blue in the face if I so choose brother!” Murano growled. “He is a fool! A fool who has openly withheld information from the Elder Convention because he thought it was not important enough to pass on! Not important enough to pass on to the leaders of our people! He is dangerous Delnash! And none of you can see it! His hatred of me should be the first warning sign, yet you dismiss it!”

Delnash leaned closer. “They are Lycavorian.” He stated softly. “Now that we are closer, our ship’s sensors have been able to determine what they are if not who they are. There are a number of other species intermixed... some of the human species, elves and some of the blood drinkers...”

“You mean Vampires.” Murano said. “Those of the vampiric species.”

“The blood drinkers... yes!” Delnash said with some exasperation. “But the vast majority of them are Lycavorian.”

Murano shrugged his shoulders. “And this means what to me?”

“You know we have used their species in the past to repopulate other worlds Murano!” Delnash snapped. “We have used them because of their natural abilities and their sometimes barbaric nature. Only they could survive in some of the harsh environments we have placed them in.”

“Yet you fear them.” Murano asked him. “If I recall a seminar you attended and spoke at many years ago, you specifically said the Lycavorian species would never outgrow their savage nature and move forward into the domain of civilized species.”

“And I still believe that damn it!” Delnash hissed. “Their very nature runs counter to everything a civilized man or woman wants! I am asking that you reconsider so that none of our people are badly injured if something goes wrong. The Lycavorian species is not known for their temperament and they are extremely difficult to subdue given their physical gifts.”

Murano looked at him. “I will do as I said I would brother. I will accompany your people to the surface as an observer and that is all. Whatever happens will be determined by what you and others do.”

“I’m not going.” Delnash stated. “Sashan and Lorendo will be going in my stead. They do not wish to risk me.”

Murano nodded. “A wise move.” He said. “Though I dare say sending Lorendo will do more harm than good in my humble opinion.”

“He is not the enemy Murano!” Delnash hissed.

Murano shook his head. “No he is not. But neither is he my friend.” He answered. “His actions up until now should draw at the very least a minor amount of curiosity but instead you accept them without question. I think you should question Kasdan more and see what else Elder Lorendo has not told you. Kasdan seems like an intelligent man with the good of our people in his heart and actions.”

“Lorendo is Chief Elder of the Science Convention!” Delnash snapped. “That will not change simply because you do not like him!”

Murano met his brother’s eyes. “It is not a matter of not liking him brother...” He spoke. “I do not trust him... not in the least. And you’ll forgive me brother, but this is one time when I have far more experience in this matter than you will ever acquire.” Murano rose to his feet. “I will serve the Chief Elder Convention as long as it is to the benefit of our people but I will not recognize it or support it openly. You have already shown me that you believe nothing of what I feel as a Praetorian and that is as far as I am willing to go.”

“Murano you...” Delnash began to speak as he stood up but Murano held up his hand.

“Do not bother brother.” He said. “You are my brother... and I love you with all that I am. But I am not a fool who is clinging to some remnant of a lost society of warriors. There is no scientific explanation for what Praetorians can do and I know this... and that is why Lorendo and others fear us! It is why the Scourge feared us! And I am not the last brother!” Murano pointed out the huge view window to his right. “There is another Praetorian out there! On the planet we are going to... and you are making a mistake believing that he will simply allow you to walk in there and take from him what is his!”

“It is not his! It is our technology!” Delnash nearly shouted. “Our Science Station! They are a primitive species and have no right to it! Think of the damage they could do if any of that technology is misused! Or discovered by the Scourge!”

Murano nodded his head. “As you have said before brother.” He stated calmly. “I am not the one you need to convince however. Something tells me... something tells me this individual will not be so easy to convince and he will not listen to you either.”

“Then we will have no choice but to take it by force!” Delnash barked.

“Then I hope you are ready to accept the consequences for your decision brother.” He told him. “Because there will be consequences. I have told you before and I will tell you again, this is a mistake.” Murano turned and made his way towards the door leaving Delnash standing there trembling in a mixture of anger and anxiousness.

SOLMAR SOUTHERN SETTLEMENT AZLENR’S COMMAND BASE

Azlenr stared at the young man and woman across from him for a long moment as they walked towards him. That they were related was easy enough to tell even if he didn’t already know Lisisa from all the propaganda that was put out months ago about her being Pusintin’s daughter. It was obvious she did not care about that given her reaction or how it was treated by the Kavalian government run media. He did not know the younger man though he had been told this was Prince Dorian Leonidas. The Kavalians did not have a profile on this young Prince. They did not know he had even existed up until several hours ago. Azlenr looked around the open portion of the settlement and saw his men standing with confused looks on their faces. Most of the officers he had been able to speak with in the few hours leading up to this event, leaving them to inform their men. True to their training and trust in their commander, none of them had their weapons at the ready and were keeping their hands at their sides as they stood in loose formation. Azlenr looked to his right at his aide.

“Have we done the right thing Makali’Bengane?” Azlenr asked softly.

The young Kavalian officer looked at him. “The alternative is we would be dead General Azlenr.” He replied. “I much prefer life.”

“And if we have been duped?” Azlenr said.

“You have always known the Prefect did not care for how you or Byka commanded your troops General.” Makali spoke. “Is it such a stretch to think he would plan something like this? To use us for political gain? To try and recover some face?”

“No... it is not a stretch.” Azlenr spoke softly looking back out over his men. “I have led men all of my life Makali. Fought whatever foe I was commanded. Killed them without regard or regret. Never did I believe we would resort to the outright killing of innocents. Of children!”

Makali looked at him. “Then you do believe what they have been telling us?” He asked.

Azlenr looked at him. “One broadcast they could falsify. Two or three perhaps.” He said. “They provided thirty-nine different news broadcasts Makali. Thirty-nine! All of them said the same thing. Puma Bane scum like Marsin butchered those children as surely as if they were the ones who conducted the operation themselves.” Azlenr watched as Dorian and Lisisa came up to stand across from them with the second female who appeared very nervous, the two huge dragons right behind them and causing many of his men to fidget on their feet wanting to run. “We have lost our way Makali. Keleru has taken us down a path that could only lead to our destruction as a species. I will not be party to that. To any of it.”

Lisisa looked at him. “General Azlenr’Macaoe?”

Azlenr looked at her with some surprise in his eyes at how she had used his complete and formal name. He stepped forward two paces and bowed his head to her. “I am General Azlenr.” He stated. Azlenr reached up and very slowly withdrew his ARSOC from its holster on his right hip. He grasped the barrel and held it out to Lisisa. “On behalf of my men and my officers... I officially surrender to you and we request political asylum.”

Lisisa stepped closer and took the ARSOC, turning the weapon over in her hand and then holding it back out to him. “On behalf of my brother Androcles Leonidas General... your surrender is rejected. As is your request for political asylum.”

Azlenr glanced at Makali quickly and then back to Lisisa. He stared at the weapon in her hand as she held it out to him. His weapon. “I... I don’t understand!” He gasped aloud with wide eyes. “This is what was agreed on! The vampire... Robaran... he said...”

“My brother wanted us to ask a question of you General.” Dorian spoke now moving closer. “Why would you surrender without a fight?”

“What?” Azlenr gasped again. “Your broadcasts! You showed me the truth of things! I will not allow my men to be butchered to appease Prefect Keleru’s grasps for power! I would never condone the attacks on innocent children! Never! I did as you instructed! I gave you Marsin and his Puma Bane dogs! What... what more do you want? My men stand down all around you wondering why? What more does your brother need?”

Just at that moment a flight of TEMPEST fighters roared over the settlement only several hundred feet off the ground. Azlenr turned and looked out over the terrain all around the settlement and his intense feline eyes narrowed when he saw the barrels of what appeared to be Main Battle Hover Tanks and Plasma artillery batteries set up in the surrounding mountains. He turned to watch the M7s peel away to the north and then he looked back at Dorian and Lisisa.

“So this is how it is to be?” He said softly. “You refuse my surrender and come here with the intent to kill us anyway! You are either very stupid or very brave to believe even with your vaunted dragons we would allow you to escape alive. You may kill me... but you will not leave here to return to your brother with my head.”

Dorian stepped right up to him now, Azlenr standing a good three inches taller than him. “Dorian no!” Sheva complained reaching for him even as her hand tightened on her 190.

Dorian looked at Azlenr. “My brother wants to know if you are a Kavalian or a coward.” Dorian snapped seeing Azlenr’s eyes go wide. “If you are a coward, then you can take your surrender and request for asylum and shove it up your ass... Andro’s words.” Dorian spat. He moved closer to Azlenr. “If you are a Kavalian... a proud Kavalian like Andro believes... then you will denounce Keleru and his actions publicly! You will denounce them and join forces with General Pian’Nruarani! A man who fights for the heart and future of the Kavalian people and not for power!”

“Dorian that...” Lisisa began to speak but stopped herself.

“Where is Byka?” Azlenr demanded. “He was suppose to be with you!”

“General Byka was injured.” Dorian told him. He held up his hand. “He was injured but he will be fine. He is being treated by my sister and one of our other Hadarian Healers. His daughter is also being treated for injuries. Their DAGGER crashed for some reason, but we got to them fast enough.”

“And Marsin?” Azlenr asked.

“Well... unless you are good at puzzles... putting him back together might be a bit of a problem.” Dorian answered. “Seems he came across one of my brother’s Durcunusaan guards and didn’t fare to well in the ensuing fight.” Dorian shrugged. “Daio kind of beat him into a bloody mess.”

“Beat him?” Azlenr rasped out. “Your man... your man beat Marsin to death?”

Dorian nodded. “He must have done something that really pissed Daio off.” He said with a smile. “But he won’t be around to bother anyone anymore.” Dorian reached behind him to the small pouch he carried and withdrew the small holodisc. He held it in his palm and activated it. “A message for you.”

Azlenr’s eyes went wide when the well groomed face of Pian’Nruarani appeared in the holo transmission.

“General Azlenr’Macaoe... if you are viewing this... then events have gone the way Androcles Leonidas had hoped. You have seen through the lies and fog Keleru has created and experienced the truth. I urge you to go further General. I urge you to reach beyond everything you have ever believed and open your eyes. Androcles hoped I could convince you that our two peoples are not enemies. That what is happening now is a grasp at power by a man who should have been displaced long ago. I ask that you think and act with the reputation you have among our own people. It will not be easy Azlenr’Macaoe... nothing worthwhile ever is... but our people deserve to be freed from the oppression of a man who does not have the right to lead them don't you think? We are Kavalians yes... harsh and sometimes brutal... but now is the time to lead our people away from the past. Not back to it. I could certainly use your help. It seems most are looking to me for leadership and I have never commanded anything larger than my own ship. I could use all the help I can get. Know this however; there is no going back Azlenr. Once you cross that line, you will either become an ally or an enemy depending on what you decide. An ally you will find in me and Androcles Leonidas should you choose correctly. An enemy should you choose wrong. And you have seen how the enemies of Androcles end up already I'm quite sure. Join with us. Join with me and help me to free our people Azlenr. Help me to bring them out of the darkness and into the light."

The transmission ended and Dorian held out the transmission disc to Azlenr. "The General recorded that last evening and sent it to us this morning after we contacted him with what we were trying to do here. Andro wants you to have it."

Azlenr took the disc slowly. "Where is he?" Azlenr asked.

Dorian shook his head. "That I don't know." He replied honestly. "Andro knows... but he's a closed lip bastard at times." He said playfully trying to break the tension. "It can end and start here General. It all depends on where your heart is."

Azlenr looked at Lisisa who still held his ARSOC out to him. "You... you wish this as well?" He asked her.

"I'd much rather be with my husband than fighting General. And I trust my brother." Lisisa answered. "Does that answer your question?"

Azlenr reached out and took his ARSOC. "Yes. Yes it does." He said. He looked back to Dorian. "You took a great risk coming here as you did. Just your dragons. That tells me you had faith you could convince me."

Dorian shrugged. "Maybe. It really wasn't that much of a risk though." He said. "You and everyone around you would have been the first to die if it went that way." Dorian turned his head to the side. "Execute Three One!" He barked.

Azlenr and Makali stood there in shock as nearly four hundred Lycavorians lowered their PSGs and appeared all around them, mixed in the ranks with his men and standing in a loose circle around Dorian and Lisisa.

Azlenr turned back to Dorian with an embarrassed smile. "Then it is over now." He said.

Dorian shook his head. "Over? No sir General." He said. "Now the future for you and all of your men begins. Hell of a way to kick off the morning don't you think?"

CHAPTER ELEVEN

ONTEROM

TALISMAN

FEBRUARY 7TH, 2135 HOURS EST

"...detected us Dehov?" Delnash asked. His eyes were focused on the massive main monitor which gave them an up close view of Onterom even though they were still more than an hour away.

"No Chief Elder." Dehov answered. "I brought us in behind the coreward moon. The Lycavorian ships are on the other side of the planet and will not be able to detect us unless either of them moves from its current location. They seem to be maintaining an ecliptic orbit above the Science Station."

"Why?" Delnash asked.

"Less time to reinforce those on the surface and easier communications." Sashan spoke from where he stood beside Radra and Lorendo.

"Why do we not have more information on these Lycavorians Lorendo?" Delnash asked turning to look at Lorendo. He remained silent, surprised at the question, so Kasdan stepped forward from one of the Science stations.

“We have volumes of data Chief Elder.” He replied. “However... no one has reviewed the logs.”

“Well... why not?” Delnash snapped.

Kasdan looked at Lorendo and saw he was going to get no help and he moved closer to continue. “The sensor probes we seeded within the Alpha quadrant were only designed to activate once every fifty years for a one week period. They would monitor and record any events happening within their established parameters and then transmit the data back to the Central Hub for that area of space. Once that was complete then they would shut down. Contact with all of the Central Hubs was lost when the homeworld fell Chief Elder.” He explained. “We only have data from before the...”

Delnash held up his hand. “Yes... I understand.” He said softly. “Thank you Kasdan.”

“Our probe detected it.” Sashan spoke.

Kasdan nodded his head. “Yes... because our Series Twelve Probes are newer and linked to our Central Hub network on Artaaya. It takes longer for the information to transmit, but it is much more secure. And to save room for more thorough scans, they are programmed to trigger only if they detect our technology activating within their sensor radius.”

“The VORTEX Cruiser.” Dehov said.

Kasdan nodded. “Yes.”

“Well if that is the case then they have only had control of the Avatar for a short time.” Delnash said.

“Weeks at most.”

“I’m afraid that is not the case.” Kasdan spoke.

“Why?”

“The two ships are using systems based on our technology Chief Elder.” He replied. “Given the level of technology we have seen so far...”

“What?” Delnash asked.

“I estimate that they have had access to our technology for at least two decades. Probably more in order to build a ship of that type out there. Our technology is not simply added on as we first thought. As we have gotten closer and I have been able to fine tune our sensors with Avatar 27’s help, I have discovered it is integrated into many of their systems. Even as reworked as our sensors are I am still unable to fully penetrate their hull because of this unknown metal without a full active scan. Which they will detect the moment it begins.” Kasdan said.

“Two decades!” Lorendo spat. “That isn’t possible! The probe only activated weeks ago Kasdan! It would have detected anything before that just as it did the VORTEX Cruiser!”

“And it did detect something Elder Lorendo.” Kasdan spoke. “And it transmitted the data back to the Central Hub on Artaaya just like it was designed for. That was twenty-seven years ago. When I brought it to you, you told me it was a glitch in the system.”

“The probe had been hit with an anti-matter pulse of some sort!” Lorendo snapped. “It acted strange for several hours before settling down! All of our experts agreed!”

“I am not attempting to lay blame anywhere Elder Lorendo...” Kasdan told him. “I am simply stating fact.”

“Wait!” Delnash spoke. “This probe has sent information like this before?” He gasped.

Kasdan looked at him and nodded. “Yes Chief Elder. It could very well have been a glitch in the particle transmitter... Elder Lorendo is correct that it was hit with some sort of anti-matter pulse, but since we did not recall the probe for a diagnostic... we never found out the real reason for what caused the initial activation. It...”

“What data did it send?” Delnash asked.

Kasdan looked back to Lorendo and watched him step forward. “The information was not accurate Delnash.” Lorendo spoke. “The anti-matter pulse caused a complete reboot of the probe’s main sensor array. I correctly activated the repair protocols on the probe and dismissed the data as per our established procedures. It never resent its transmission, which told me the problem had been fixed and the data we received initially was wrong.”

“What did it send?” Delnash asked again.

“Twenty-two seconds of very blurry images and unreadable data.” Kasdan replied.

“Can you bring it up on the main monitor?” Murano’s voice asked now.

They all turned to see him enter the bridge and stride toward them calmly. “What for?” Lorendo asked. “It is worthless!”

“Worthless to you perhaps. You are not an intelligence operative or a military officer.” Murano said evenly as he came up beside his brother. “Perhaps not so worthless to their eyes Elder Lorendo.”

“Chief Elder this is pointless!” Lorendo hissed. “I reviewed the imagery with two others on my staff besides Kasdan. Both of whom have a military background. We all concurred that there was nothing of importance there.”

“The two men you speak of have never served even single a day on a warship Lorendo.” Murano spoke. “They were assigned to you by Elder Sashan from the ground forces.” Murano looked at Sashan. “Is that not correct Elder Sashan?”

Sashan nodded. “Yes... but they are fine officers.”

“I do not doubt their ability.” Murano said. “Only their expertise. Kasdan... can you bring up the footage?”

Kasdan nodded. “Yes.”

“Chief Elder...” Lorendo began.

Delnash held up his hand. “Indulge me.” He spoke.

“We should be moving for the planet to keep them from using our technology for other purposes!” Lorendo spat. “Not chasing sensor ghosts!”

Delnash looked at Kasdan ignoring Lorendo. “Do as Murano asked Elder Kasdan. Bring it up on the main screen here.”

Kasdan moved back to the Science Station quickly and worked the controls. The large screen that had been showing the planet and moon suddenly changed to that of a very grainy and dark image. In the background of the image was a large, greenish colored planet. Murano moved up next to his brother as the others moved closer and they stared at the image as it moved for exactly twenty-two seconds across the front of the planet before vanishing in a wall of white static. Murano held out his hand and pointed to the object as the image recycled.

“Is this a ship?” He asked.

“It seems to be moving.” Commander Dehov spoke now, his eyes trying to get a better angle.

“I told you!” Lorendo spat anxiously. “It’s useless!”

“It’s definitely a ship.” Murano spoke.

“There is no way to be sure!” Lorendo exclaimed. “I had my officers review it for hours. They could not determine what it was! For all we know it is nothing more than a large piece of rock!”

Murano looked at him with disgust on his face. “A large rock that is maneuvering out of the atmosphere Elder Lorendo?”

Dehov nodded. “I agree... it is definitely a ship.” He stated. “I can’t make out what type or who it belongs too however.” He leaned back. “The Scourge!” He hissed softly.

Murano shook his head quickly. “The Alpha Quadrant is too far out of their way.” He said. “If the time stamp is correct... most of their forces had returned to the edges of Scourge space by this time.”

“It’s a City Ship!” The female voice spoke causing all of them to turn and see Mari moving through the doorway onto the bridge with Kesyla and Daron.

Delnash looked at his younger daughter. “Mari?” He questioned her.

Mari nodded confidently and moved up beside her father. “Look at this bow portion of the ship father. It curves back inward. That was unique to the Series Nine City Ships. And the beam is significantly larger in the center... see.” She traced the image as it moved on the screen. “Then there is the main stabilizing wing here on top in the rear of the ship...” Mari leaned closer. “May I?” She asked Kasdan.

Kasdan nodded. “Of course Lady Mari.” He stated.

Mari leaned over and tapped on the control console quickly. She looked up at the image, stopped it from moving and isolated it. She rotated it in several directions until she nodded once more. “Yes... it’s a Series Nine City Ship.” She spoke confidently.

Lorendo laughed gently. “Two experienced officers within our military viewed these same images for hours Lady Mari. They could make no determination.” He spoke. “You view it for a few seconds and you claim to know what it is?”

Mari met his gaze. "I don't claim anything Elder Lorendo. I know what it is." She stated looking at her father. "The last nine months of my schooling was in the model of a City Ship father. A Series Nine City Ship model. We had to learn how to take apart and rebuild the entire Quantum Engine Matrix." Mari pointed at the image. "That is most definitely a Series Nine City ship."

"That's... that's not possible Mari." Delnash spoke. "When this image was taken... no more of our City Ships survived. The Scourge had destroyed them all."

Mari shook her head. "Not all of them father." She stated quite confidently. "It matches the parameters exactly. And look..." She stepped forward closer and adjusted the controls. The image moved forward in slow motion. "You can just begin to see the activation of its main Quantum Fusion drive right here!" She froze the image and traced the rear of the picture. "This outline of light... it's the beginning of a jump. You can tell by the Phase Inducers and what position the venting is taking place. In this case... it's firing straight back. That means they were engaging the main core when this was taken."

Delnash looked at his daughter. "Mari... this is very important child. You are absolutely sure about what you are saying?"

Mari smiled. "Father... I did finish first in my class." She boasted without a trace of arrogance in her voice. "I'm positive... yes. You can have the Engineering Officer come up and confirm my conclusions if you like."

Lorendo shook his head. "Chief Elder... I realize that Lady Mari is your daughter and the most promising Quantum Mechanics student we have had in four millennia... but she is a child. Will you take the word of a child over senior military officials?"

"I am not a child!" Marti snapped looking at him. "Can you describe the steps leading up to the firing of a Quantum Drive core Elder Lorendo? Each and every step that takes place? There are one hundred and nineteen and all of them happen within six tenths of a second! Can you name even one? Can your military officers?"

Murano stepped closer to his niece with a smile on his face and gripped her arm gently before his brother snapped at her. "Mari... mind your station child." He said kindly. "Do not give Elder Lorendo two individuals in this family to dislike."

Mari looked up at her uncle and smiled brilliantly, her blue eyes shimmering in the light from the bridge. Murano smiled back down on her, feeling his heart jump a fraction at the face she gave him. She reminded him of himself at that age.

Delnash turned to Kasdan. "What sector of the Alpha Quadrant was this image taken in Kasdan?" He asked quickly.

"Sector twenty-nine Chief Elder." He replied. "Just as they recording says."

"And what habitable planets occupy that sector of space?" Delnash asked.

"There are several dozen Chief Elder." Kasdan answered. "The most prominent are the homeworld of the vampiric species, Uzu Ozeib 7, and the second is..." He stopped talking and looked up. "By the spirits of our ancestors... the second is Lycavore. That is the Lycavorian homeworld!"

"The same species that the Science Convention used so liberally to seed many different worlds." Murano spoke with a small nod and grin. "And now the same species that has control of a Series Nine City ship as well as a VORTEX-Class Heavy Cruiser. Apparently they are not so primitive as we first thought."

Delnash looked at his brother, glad that he did not begin to rant about how this Praetorian he thought he felt with Sumar's blood was a Lycavorian.

"We do not know that for sure!" Lorendo snapped.

"Is there another explanation we have not thought of?" Murano asked. "Apparently they have evolved enough to learn how to take control of two of the most advanced ships we have ever built and adapt that technology into what they have built themselves."

Delnash looked at him. "They are still barbaric by their very nature Murano. Warlike and violent." He stated evenly. "We only used them to seed worlds because of their adaptability and survivability."

Murano nodded. "Yes I know. Perhaps you should have thought about that before going forward with it. It seems they have survived and adapted quite well."

"I will not questions decisions made over forty millennia ago!" Delnash snapped.

Murano nodded his head in agreement. "I do not wish to revisit them either brother but perhaps the time has come where we need to." He said calmly. "One of those decisions is now occupying one of our Science Stations and they obviously know how to work everything or else they would have left already."

"This information only lends weight to my contention that we should just destroy the station from orbit!" Lorendo barked. "We don't know what they want or what they are doing there!"

Murano looked at him. "And you have no interest in discovering this?" He asked. "You as a scientist have no interest whatsoever in discovering how they did this or why they are here?"

"I have no desire to interact with a species that is beneath us!" Lorendo spoke.

"You assume we are their betters. That has always been the mentality of those within the Science Convention and it is wrong." Murano said. He looked at his brother. "This man serves our people? That is the same train of thought that began our downfall Delnash and you know it!"

"This is not the time for a philosophical debate Murano!" Delnash hissed. "We can determine these things after we have completed our primary mission!"

"Which I will reiterate is a grave mistake." Murano spoke. "We know nothing of how far they have advanced as a species as Kasdan has already stated. All of the records we had are gone. The probes we have seeded since coming to Artaaya are not as wide spread as those before the war. And at Kasdan's own admittance... they were not programmed to monitor events within the Alpha Quadrant as the others were. We don't know what we are walking into Delnash. They could be powerful friends to us, especially if..."

Delnash held up his hand. "Don't say that!" He snapped stopping him. "We can not conduct ourselves on your feelings Murano! Praetorian or no! We can only do what we must with the information we have at hand."

"The information you have at hand is ancient and most likely wrong brother!" Murano snapped. "At the very least... reach out to them. Try to communicate with them!"

"Communicate with primitive barbarians!" Lorendo barked.

"They might view us in the very same fashion Lorendo." Radra chimed in now moving closer. "Chief Elder Delnash I have to agree with Praetorian Murano on this. Given everything that we know... which is precious little from what I can see... we should be using far more caution and diplomacy."

"They are animals!" Lorendo snapped. "You have seen the reports on our Seed Missions using them!"

Radra looked at him. "Yes I have seen the reports Lorendo." She stated. "All of which were successful in doing what we sought! Seeding life to dead worlds." She turned back to Delnash. "Chief Elder Delnash... I am a medical doctor... this could well be the first contact we have ever had with a race of beings we helped to seed across the galaxy. In essence... they are our children."

"Children?" Lorendo spat. "We are talking of a species that can change into animals! Lethal animals! Our Research missions to this Lycavore showed that they preferred to move and stay in their animal forms! That does not speak to me of great intelligence!"

"The Research Missions took place centuries before we began to use their species to seed worlds." Murano spoke.

"So what?" Lorendo said. "None of what we have seen so far shows us they are any more advanced or intelligent than what we experienced before we chose them!"

"Elder Lorendo does have a point father." Daron spoke moving closer. "If I may Chief Elders?"

Delnash looked at Radra and Sashan who nodded. He turned back to his son. "Speak your mind Daron. Young ideas are always welcome."

"Elder Lorendo is stating fact." Daron spoke. "Yes... we do not have current information on this species... but should we not act based on what we already know?"

"We don't know anything yet Daron." Mari stated quickly looking at her older brother. "Everything we know is millennia old! Things could have changed."

"Your naivety is charming sister... but could have does not help us now." Daron said seeing Mari bristle at his derogatory comment towards her. His eyes turned away before he saw his uncle squeeze her arm once more and keep her from responding. "This is a seed species we are talking about. The very basic of species that we used to seed dead worlds. We chose them for their endurance and ability to adapt. Not for their intelligence. They were supposed to be the beginnings of life on new worlds... not the end result."

“Your statement smacks of knowledge and experience you yourself do not have Daron.” Murano spoke evenly seeing him turn to look at him in surprise. “You are barely more than a child yourself nephew, compared to the lives and experiences in this room. You may agree with Elder Lorendo in his assessment... but what you both are dismissing is our influence. Not just with what we have discovered so far... but in everything we have done in the past. Our arrogance brought much of our woes upon us.”

“The Praetorian Xaxon did that!” Lorendo muttered loud enough for everyone to hear.

Delnash turned quickly to stop his brother from becoming angry again but surprisingly Murano simply looked at Lorendo. “Xaxon was responsible for the bulk of it yes.” Murano said. “However... how did he become that way Lorendo? He was no different than you in much of his thinking... that our technology and society is superior simply because it is. It is a dangerous path to walk, as Xaxon proved, and trillions of our people paid for his arrogance. Do we wish to travel down that road once more?”

“These Lycavorians are animals!” Lorendo snapped. “They are no match for us!”

Murano nodded. “Perhaps... but we don’t know that for sure.” He said. He turned back to Delnash. “Opening a line of communication with them does not hurt us brother.”

“I agree.” Radra said.

“This is ridiculous!” Lorendo barked. “We should...”

“Very well.” Delnash spoke firmly.

“What?” Lorendo gasped.

“I will attempt to contact them.” Delnash spoke.

Lorendo looked at Sashan. “Sashan... say something!” He stammered.

“If we... if we contact them Chief Elder... we will have lost the element of surprise.” He stated. “We may not be able to complete all our goals.”

Delnash looked at Murano. “I understand.” He stated. “However, I have many questions and these Lycavorians may be able to answer some of them. And I have full confidence in our ability to subdue them when the time comes.”

“Chief Elder...” Lorendo began.

“I have made my decision!” Delnash hissed. He turned to Dehov. “Commander... can you tap into the Central Communications Array for the station?”

Dehov nodded his head. “All of the station security protocols have been changed and we are locked out completely, but I believe we can let them know we are trying to contact them.”

Delnash nodded. “Do it.” He said. He turned to Sashan. “Embark your soldiers Sashan. Deploy in the transports to the planet. Murano... go with them.”

“What are you doing brother?” Murano asked.

“Insuring that we are successful.” Delnash spoke. “I will distract, talk with them, while Sashan and you secure the facility. Once we have them in custody we can secure their ships and sort all of this out..”

“I told you I would only act as an observer Delnash!” Murano hissed angrily. “What you are doing is wrong!”

“You are a Praetorian and will do as I tell you as Chief Elder of our people!” Delnash barked causing heads to turn towards him from all over the bridge. “I will tell you a last time Murano... I can not make decisions based on your feelings! I have to think of our people! If you will not take part in this then yes, I will put forth legislation to have your authority as a Praetorian revoked completely. I will not have discourse filtering among our ranks! Not now!”

“Father!” Mari declared in shock.

“Mari... stay out of this! It is not your affair!” Delnash snapped. “You will return to the engineering section and continue with your tasks.”

Murano stared at his brother for a long time. “Delnash...”

“Are you refusing Praetorian Murano?” Delnash barked angrily his patience finally at an end.

“Your actions take you towards a dark path brother.” Murano stated. “No... I will go with them. I hope you are prepared for the blood that will be on your hands however.”

“I have seen plenty of blood in my life brother!” Delnash hissed.

Murano stepped closer to him and shook his head. “No brother.” He said softly. “You have seen a fraction of the blood that lies down this road. You have seen nothing to compare to that. No one here in this room has seen anything to compare to that. Not like I have seen.”

“Your past experiences have no bearing on what is happening now Praetorian Murano!” Delnash barked seeing his brother’s eyes go wide at his dismissive statement. “Now either do as I command of you or remove yourself to your quarters and we will handle it without you!”

Murano’s face suddenly became void of any emotion. He bowed his head quickly to Delnash. “As you wish... Chief Elder!” He stated evenly.

Delnash watched him turn abruptly and strode out of the doorway onto the bridge. His eyes turned to see Mari and Kesyla staring at him in shock, Daron with a smug look on his face. “Kesyla... you and Daron will accompany Elder Lorendo as my representatives. Mari return to engineering immediately!”

“Father you...” Mari began to protest.

“Do as I tell you child!” Delnash barked. “Now!”

Mari’s eyes were wide and she spun around angrily and marched off the bridge even as Kesyla and Daron followed her with looks of astonishment and arrogance respectively.

Delnash turned back to look at Dehov. “How long Commander?” He asked.

“Two minutes to adjust our transmitters Chief Elder.” He answered instantly.

Delnash nodded. “Very well.”

ONTEROM SCIENCE STATION ZERO ONE FIVE

“...gonna take a break some time this century?” Wayonn turned at Martin’s words and saw him standing beside him at the main computer station.

He was standing there with his arms crossed over his broad chest and a smirk on his face. It was a look Wayonn had become accustomed to over the past weeks and months. Sumar had similar quirks in his expressions and Martin was certainly taking after him. Helen was also beside him, her outward appearance having surprised almost everyone, but it was quickly accepted among the crew. There were very few who did not know who she was and that she was not that old, so her appearance change was something that fitted what was known of her. He knew his granddaughter was very skilled; she had to be in order to harness and use the knowledge that Canth had passed to her. She fit the role of Paladin Mage very well. He knew she and Martin were very close to begin with and had been since he first returned to Earth, but he did not truly see it until they fully accepted the roles they were to play. His Pralor and wolf blood both sang with happiness as he saw them and how they blended so easily together. Just like he and Sumar had.

Wayonn sat back in the chair. “We can learn so much from the logs here Martin.” He said finally.

Martin nodded. “No doubt... but having to pick you up off the deck because you worked yourself to exhaustion is not something I want to do.”

“Nor I grandfather.” Helen spoke.

Wayonn smiled again. “You will have no worries in that regard.” He said.

“You’re looking for information on what happen.” Martin said softly. “People you knew when you left?”

Wayonn met his eyes as he and Helen drew chairs over to his computer station and settled into them. “In a way I suppose.” He said. “I’ve been able to crack through about a third of the encrypted logs so far. There isn’t much information from before the end, but a great deal after they established themselves on Artaaya.”

“How many survived Wayonn?” Martin asked softly.

Wayonn looked at him. “Barely a million.” He answered in almost a whisper and shaking his head slowly. “Five hundred and fifty trillion lives extinguished over the course of roughly twenty-five thousand years.”

“That long?” Martin asked aghast.

Wayonn nodded. “We didn’t know it when we returned the first time, before settling on Lorent, but the war began within a century of us departing on our Seed Mission. When we were able to repair the transport ship and return, it was already well into its seventh century. It is too much to even fathom really.” He looked at them. “We were the harbingers of our own doom Martin. Our arrogance gave Xaxon the influence he had in thinking the Scourge were somehow inferior to us when we first encountered them. That is why he struck the first blow. We then empowered his mentality and that is why he went off and created his horrific monsters and cross breeds. That only fueled their hatred of us and everything related to us. We never tried to understand them.”

“It’s not your fault grandfather.” Helen spoke.

Wayonn looked at her. “In a way... yes it is. It’s all of our faults.” He spoke gently. He took a deep breath. “That is the past however, and my wolf blood does not allow me to dwell on the past. Sumar told me once, shortly after your grandmother turned him, he told me this was our future now. Through our descendants we would live on. He fully accepted his wolf blood then, all of us did. It became central to all that we were. I worshiped my mate... her scent was like sweet vanilla and I embraced it. Since that first day with her, I have embraced it. I am Pralor yes... but I am more wolf now than anything and I am so very happy about that.” He looked at the computer screen. “Sitting here though... it brings back memories.”

“I’m sure it does.” Martin said.

“The odds that anyone I knew from that life are still alive are infinitesimal.” Wayonn continued. He smirked. “That does not include Lorendo unfortunately.”

Martin chuckled. “Roaches tend to survive everywhere.” He said.

Wayonn nodded with a smile. “Yes they do.” He said. “Numbers aren’t specifically given mind you, census results were never important to us, but I estimate from some of the logs that their population now is in excess of forty million now. Probably closer to fifty or sixty if I include the other two planets they settled in the cluster.”

“You think they were planning to expand here?” Helen asked.

Wayonn nodded his head. “It’s possible.” He said. “These Svorag may have altered that plan somewhat however. They haven’t been to this station in nearly half a millennia. My guess is they just decided to remain out of this area of space.”

“Which means these Svorag are probably more abundant than we have seen.” Martin said.

Wayonn nodded. “More than likely.” He answered. “Given what Anja and Duewa have discovered about the ones we killed... they appear to be nomadic at least. The logs for this quadrant of space list nearly a dozen planets within two or three jumps from Onterom that could sustain life. I’m guessing they didn’t pick those because of the Svorag.” He told them. “It might also explain why they discovered Lycavorian DNA in the one we killed. This area of space may be where we used Lycavorians to seed a dead world. The station logs and star charts do not list that information, but it is possible.”

“Why wouldn’t they go to those Lycavorians for help?” Martin asked him. “If they seeded them on a world in this quadrant, then they would have known where they were. Why not join forces?”

Wayonn shook his head. “When we began to seed worlds with new life we had several edicts that we followed religiously. One of them was to never interact with the species we were using as seed life. Namely... Lycavorians. It was very taboo. We feared that our advanced technology would somehow alter the normal evolutionary scale of the species if we interacted with them.” He looked at Martin. “It goes back to that arrogance I was telling you about.” He said with a smile. “What we did on Lycavore... Sumar, me, the others, it would not be viewed positively I assure you.”

“Yeah... I got that part.” Martin said.

“If you want to be technical... we did alter the natural course of the Lycavorian species.” Wayonn said. “If we had not crashed on Lycavore as we did... all this could very well not be happening.”

Martin held up his hand. “Let’s not go there ok.” He said. “I still get a headache trying to explain to someone that I was born on a cruiser and stuck in a sleep chamber for three thousand years while traveling through the stars. That I made it back to Earth somehow and then all this other heavy shit happened.” Martin shook his head. “Please.”

Wayonn laughed as Helen slapped Martin in the side. “And look what that brought to you.” She hissed at him playfully.

“Yeah... a whole lot more headaches!” Martin exclaimed.

“I was referring to the six beautiful women who worship you and the sixteen wonderful children you have because of them!” Helen snapped.

Martin grinned. “Well... there is that.” He said.

Wayonn shook his head. “No... if there is such a planet in this quadrant... they would avoid it like the plague.” He said. He looked at Martin. “Do you still sense they are coming Martin? I can feel faint surges of resonance within Mindvoice... but I am not nearly as powerful as you or Helen because you are Paladin and Mage and both of you are bonded to dragons.”

Martin nodded. “They’re coming.” He said.

“Grandfather I could...” Helen began.

Wayonn shook his head. “No. The connection between the Praetorian and his or her Oracle should be for them only. I will not be able to sense or feel what the two of you feel with any degree of the same strength and clarity. Perhaps if they were on the planet yes... but not now.”

“Praetorian?” Martin asked.

Wayonn nodded. “That is what we called ourselves.” He said. “It was actually a young Oracle who came up with the name right after we were formed. She took it from the Onab. The species that showed us how to build the Avatars. That is why they look different from us. So we did not forget the Onab when they perished in the supernova that consumed their planet.”

“Praetorian huh?” Martin said. “Pretty catchy. The Romans used that didn’t they?” He said looking at Helen.

Helen nodded her head. “If the ancient humans knew how much of their culture and languages came from different species across the stars I believed they would have developed quite differently than they did.”

“No argument here.” Martin said. “You know...”

“Skipper!” Julie barked from across the control room. She was sitting at the station’s COM panel and had been engulfed in learning the systems and computers since they had arrived. “Marty... we’re getting a holo COM signal!”

Martin turned his head but did not rise. He caught the look of dislike from Helen when Julie called out his name and he grinned. She did not wholly approve of the closeness and total lack of formality the members of Martin’s personal team used when addressing him, especially with others present. She would never say anything to them Martin knew because she knew of how he thought of all of them. He would die instantly for any of them if need be and they for him. Those who had started all of this with Martin all those years ago were the most fanatically loyal to him, and it began with the men and women left from his old team.

“Jules... I told Akemi I’d speak with her in the morning.” Martin spoke leaning back slightly.

“It’s not coming from the ARC ROYAL Marty!” Julie exclaimed turning in her chair.

All of them stood up and Martin moved quickly around the main tower computer to look at her. “If it’s not coming from the ARC ROYAL... then where’s it coming from Jules?”

Avi turned from the sensor console where he had been standing silently and going over data.

-Julie Collins is correct Martin. It is a Pralor COM signal- He broke in from where he had been sitting quietly at the sensor station for the last few hours running one diagnostic after another. -A ship has appeared on the station’s sensors. It has just pulled out from behind the coreward moon. It’s configuration matches Pralor ship profiles. It is of an unknown class to me... but I can confirm it is of Pralor origin-

“They were using the moon to block the ARC ROYAL’s sensors?” Helen threw out the question. “Why? Why not just approach?”

-The ship is 8294 meters in length and matches listed profiles in my neural network of cruiser class configuration King Martin- Avi reported. -I am detecting a Phased Quantum Fusion power core and Class Eleven sensors. They are attempting to scan the station and the area around it-

“That’s just plain rude.” Martin spoke.

Wayonn chuckled. “Keep in mind my people were not the most hospitable when they thought they were dealing with inferior species. Their arrogance tends to bleed through in their actions. I see that has not changed.”

“Yeah... I’m getting that. So we are inferior huh?” Martin said.

Wayonn shrugged. “Not all of us felt this way... but many did. Lycavorians and other species that were used for seeding purposes were all thought to be primitive and unable to reach a level my people thought was equal to them.”

“You know... I get the feeling they thought that way about a lot of species.” Martin said.

Wayonn nodded. “You would not be surprised at how correct you are.” He answered. “The Science Convention was filled to overflowing with them.”

“Grandfather... you know how Martin reacts to arrogance.” Helen stated from beside Avi as she moved up beside him.

Avi looked up at her from where his huge frame sat. –Crush. Stab. Shoot. Punch. Throw. Blow up. These are just some of the ways that King Martin has dealt with this tedious emotion. He is quite inventive–

Helen laughed and once more was amazed at how almost human like Avi had become in the past quarter century in their company. “Avi... you sound more and more like us everyday.” Helen told him.

“Avi... can you jam their sensors?” Martin asked –Not entirely Martin. I can erect a sensor feedback bubble within the station’s shields that will extend around the station and area within a thousand meters. They will not be able to scan the station itself but I can not keep them from scanning the planet–

“Do it! Fast!” Martin ordered. “Jules... tell Akemi to be prepared to execute her emergency jump to the pre-plotted coordinates.”

“On it!”

Martin looked at Wayonn. “Well... I guess they are here.” He said.

“Skipper... they are requesting we reply.” Julie spoke.

“Guess that answers our question about if they will come huh?” Martin said.

Wayonn nodded. “Indeed.”

“Stay out of the transmission for now Wayonn.” Martin told him. “Let’s see what they have to say. They might actually be happy to see us... which would be a first on this little trip we are on.”

Wayonn nodded with a smile as he moved out of the cone of the transmission disc.

TALISMAN

“...getting a response?” Delnash asked.

“Nothing yet Chief Elder.” Dehov spoke.

“Are you sure they are receiving?” Delnash asked.

“Telemetry says they are.” Dehov replied.

“Commander...” The tactical officer whirled from her chair. “They have erected some sort of feedback bubble around the station! We can not scan the interior of the station or the area for a thousand meter radius around the station!”

Delnash looked at Dehov. “They can do that?” He gasped.

“Apparently they have Chief Elder.” He spoke. “Can you penetrate the bubble?”

“Negative! It’s using a multiphasic frequency modulator. It jumps the moment we lock onto the frequency of the station’s shields!”

Dehov looked at Delnash. "They apparently have a working knowledge of at least some of our technology Chief Elder." Dehov stated.

"So I see. Have they responded to our hails yet?" Delnash asked turning his head.

"Nothing so... wait! Incoming response!" The COM officer barked.

"Audio only I presume?" Dehov spoke.

"No sir! They are requesting full access holo communications!" She answered.

Dehov acted quickly. "Transfer it to the main Holo Disc! Now!"

Delnash stepped forward as he turned to the main holo disc on the floor in the corner of the bridge. It suddenly came alive with the blurry image of a tall man wearing strange black armor that conformed to his exceptionally powerful form. His black hair was nearly shoulder length and his mustache and beard were very neatly trimmed. His skin was deeply tanned and as the image focused and cleared Delnash could tell his eyes were a dark color. He looked strangely familiar to Delnash and it was disconcerting for a moment until he realized who he looked like. When the image finally cleared completely his eyes grew wider in shock.

"By the spirits of our ancestors!" He gasped not realizing that Dehov had only activated voice communication. "Sumar!" He saw the man's head turn slightly when he heard him speak and he smiled.

"Yeah... I get that a lot." The man spoke. Delnash saw his face twist in confusion and he turned to look away and speak. "Avi... is this thing working right? I can't see them. Are the holo emitters broke or something?"

Delnash's eyes grew even wider when he then heard the mechanical voice of an Avatar answer.

-The channel is open King Leonidas. They have not activated a visual holo link however-

The man's head turned back. "Oh." The man's eyes narrowed slightly. "Well... whoever this is... you initiated this signal, so call me back when you have the courtesy of letting me see you too."

Delnash saw him turn to the side and bring his hand across his throat. Delnash knew what that universal hand signal meant. "Wait!" He snapped. The man stopped and turned back to look at the station's holo disc. "Dehov... activate visual link as well!" Dehov adjusted the console and Delnash saw the man straighten up somewhat and smile.

"Now that's more like it." Martin spoke in an almost cheerful voice. "Greetings to you. Welcome to the neighborhood."

"My name is Delnash. Chief Elder and leader of the Pralor people." He began to speak quickly. "To whom am speaking? I require communication with your leader. His name and title as well!"

"Well... hi. My name is Martin Leonidas." He answered somewhat taken aback by the testiness of Delnash's request. "As for my title... some people call me King... some call me Martin. Or Marty. I'm not real big on the whole title thing really. I..."

"You are the leader of those primitives who are currently squatting in our Science Station?" Delnash asked.

"We are in the station... yes." Martin answered. "I guess I'm the leader yeah. What did you call us? Squatting?"

"You are currently in possession of technology that is the property of my people Martin Leonidas." Delnash continued quickly. "You are also occupying a facility that belongs to my people. I do not know how you managed to obtain and use them given your limited cognitive abilities but you will relinquish these items and vacate the station you are in immediately. You will order your ships in orbit to prepare to be boarded and impounded. Your crews will be taken into custody, properly subdued and detained. You will also surrender all of your weapons and devices of a scanning nature. Once this is done we can have a civilized exchange. As much as you are able."

Martin looked taken aback and he glanced off to the side at Wayonn who was shaking his head in disgust before turning back to the transmission. "Where I come from... when people first meet... they usually shake hands and get to know one another. They usually don't make demands. You want to try again sport?"

Delnash appeared to look confused and he glanced at someone outside the cone of the transmission before speaking again. "I believe I have made my point very clear." He said evenly turning back to the transmission. "You will order your crew to surrender your ships and prepare to be boarded. You will surrender your weapons and you will leave our facility. Once you and your people have been subdued and detained we can speak civilly."

"Is that a fact?" Martin spoke. "I'm not real big on being subdued and detained if you get my meaning friend. Unless you are one of my wives and mates. Which you ain't. You aren't as gorgeous as them."

"I am not your friend!" Delnash spoke sternly. "You will do as I instruct you or else you will suffer the consequences!"

"Did someone piss in your coffee this morning sport?" Martin asked him. "Cause we just met and you seem to have a hard on for me and we don't even know each other yet."

"What?" Delnash snapped. "What does this mean?"

"Maybe we got off on the wrong foot." Martin spoke. "Hi... I'm Martin Leonidas. It's a pleasure to meet you. Maybe we can get together and swap stories over a beer. Get to know each other."

"Are you daft as well as barbaric?" Delnash hissed. "I have no desire to get to know you until after you are properly subdued. You are in possession of our property and I want it back. I have no interest in discussing this with you or any of your primitive species! You will acquiesce to my demands or I will make you."

Helen looked at Wayonn across the room with a shake of her head. "Now they have gone and done it." She said softly so that only Avi could hear her.

Avi nodded. -I would agree with that assessment Feravomir- He stated.

"Primitive species!" Martin exclaimed. He turned to where Wayonn was standing out of the cone of the holo transmission. Wayonn wore a look of utter astonishment on his face at what this man was saying. "I thought you said they would be patient and calm." Martin said.

Wayonn shook his head and moved forward into the transmission cone before anyone could stop him. He moved right up next to Martin and looked at the image of the man who called himself the Chief Elder Pralor. "Wait!"

Martin shook his head. "Nice to see that people listen to me." He said. "I asked you to stay out of the transmission Wayonn."

"Wayonn?" Delnash spoke from within the transmission after hearing Martin. "It can't be!" He gasped.

Wayonn looked at the man. "Chief Elder... my name is Wayonn. I am... I was Sumar's Praetorian Oracle! There is no need for this! We are not hostile to you! We have been searching for you in fact! We..."

"Wayonn is dead!" Delnash snapped suddenly cutting him off. "Sumar is dead! All those with him are dead! Whoever you are... you are not Wayonn! I have made my demands clear! I am prepared to use force to make you adhere to those demands! I would prefer not to... but I will! I require an answer from you immediately!"

Wayonn stared at the transmission with a look of shock on his face. Anger flared within his wolf blood now. Anger he had not felt come forth for many hundreds of years. He had always tried to maintain a balance of his Pralor blood and the wild and unrestrained Lycavorian blood that coursed through his veins now. Today was only one of three instances since he had been turned that he failed to do so. "Nubou forn!" He barked out. "Avi!"

The transmission died an instant later as Avi cut the feed from their end. Martin looked at Wayonn with wide eyes as he turned and faced him. "What was that?" Martin gasped at him. "You... you just told them to fuck off!"

"Yes... I suppose I did." Wayonn said. "I knew... I knew we were arrogant as a species, but this was too much!" He shook his head. "Another sign that I am more Lycavorian than Pralor now. And that makes me very happy."

Martin turned quickly. "Shit! Avi... what is the ship doing?"

-Closing on the planet on an intercept course to the ARC ROYAL- Avi answered instantly. -They are trying to re-establish the COM link Martin Leonidas-

“Fuck them!” Martin snarled tapping his jaw. “Danny!”

“Go Fervon!” Danny answered immediately.

“Get everyone in position Dan!” Martin ordered. “Company is coming. And something tells me they ain’t coming for tea and crumpets!”

“Never did like tea and crumpets.” Dan answered. “I’m on it!”

“Jules... tell Akemi to jump now! Don’t question... just jump! We’ll contact her when it is clear! If she doesn’t hear from us in twelve hours she is to return to Union space post haste!” Martin looked at Wayonn.

“Tell me something Wayonn.”

“Yes?” Wayonn asked.

“Do I have asshole stamped on my forehead or something?” Martin spat. “Everything we have encountered so far on this trip has either tried to kill us or eat us. What am I doing wrong here?”

Wayonn grinned at him. “Perhaps it is just your charming personality.” He said.

Martin tilted his head. “Oh wonderful... another fucking comedian. As if I don’t have enough of them around me already.” He hissed. “Come on...”

TALISMAN

“...aren’t responding Chief Elder.” Dehov spoke.

“Well get them back!” Delnash snapped.

“They’ve severed the link from their end Chief Elder!” Dehov replied.

“Commander! The two ships on the far side of the planet have just jumped away!” The TO exclaimed.

Dehov whirled. “Didn’t you detect power building to their engine cores?” He gasped.

“Negative sir!” The man replied.

“Track them!” Delnash barked.

The TO shook his head. “We can’t Chief Elder. They... they are using engines based on our technology. Our engines do not leave a residual trail and can not be tracked unless they are damaged!”

“So they have escaped with our technology!” Delnash snapped angrily. “Get me Sashan in the lead transport! Now!”

“Stand by!”

PRALOR CAMEO-CLASS HEAVY TRANSPORT

“Primitive species!” Murano heard the man exclaimed. The man turned to someone who must have been standing out of the cone of the holo transmission. They had been watching the transmission on the lead Heavy Transport since the connection had been made, Dehov including them in the circuit from the beginning. The moment he saw his face Murano new. He thought his heart would leap from his chest at first because of the similarities in their appearance. The differences were there yes, but this man looked so much like Sumar that it was frightening to say the least. His mannerisms, his posture, the twitches in his face when he became angry and the staggering Etheric resonance he felt strumming through him. An Etheric resonance that was only growing more powerful the closer they got to the planet. “I thought you said they would be patient and calm.” The man called Martin said.

Murano’s eyes grew wide when he saw the second figure enter the transmission and he grabbed the back of the chair in front of him. Sashan, Daron, Kasdan and his brother Garan also stood around the holo disc watching and they saw this movement. “By all that I hold holy and precious!” Murano gasped. “It... it isn’t possible!”

Murano watched as Wayonn shook his head and moved forward into the transmission cone before anyone could stop him. He moved right up next to Martin and looked at the image of Delnash who they were viewing. "Wait!" He barked.

This Martin shook his head. "Nice to see that people listen to me." He said. "I asked you to stay out of the transmission Wayonn."

"Wayonn?" Murano heard his brother say from within the transmission after hearing Martin. "It can't be!" Delnash's voice gasped.

Wayonn was viewing Delnash as he spoke. "Chief Elder... my name is Wayonn. I am... I was Sumar's Praetorian Oracle! There is no need for this! We are not hostile to you! We have been searching for you in fact! We..."

"Wayonn!" Murano gasped more loudly. "By the souls of those who came before us!" He began to search for a set of controls.

Sashan looked at him. "Praetorian Murano... what is wrong?" He asked quickly.

"Wayonn is dead!" Murano heard Delnash snap suddenly cutting Wayonn off and forcing him to turn back to the transmission. "Sumar is dead! All those with him are dead! Whoever you are... you are not Wayonn! I have made my demands clear! I am prepared to use force to make you adhere to those demands! I would prefer not to... but I will! I require an answer from you immediately!"

"No!" Murano exclaimed. "NO! It is Wayonn! Tie me into the transmission! Now!" He snapped at Sashan. "Let me talk to them!"

Murano watched Wayonn stare into the transmission with a look of shock on his face. He saw anger flared in his face. Anger he had never seen Wayonn display before.

"Nubou forn!" Wayonn barked out in the strange language. "Avi!"

"NO!" Murano shouted as the transmission ended. He pounded on the transmission disc and shook his head. "You fool!" He hissed.

"Uncle... what is wrong?" Kesyla asked him moving forward and reaching out to touch his shoulder.

Murano shrugged her hand away almost angrily. "Damn!" He swore at the transmission disc.

"Elder Sashan!" The co-pilot came jogging back from the cockpit. "The two unknown ships have jumped away!" He reported excitedly. "We can not track them!"

"What?" Sashan declared. "Why?"

"If they are using technology based on ours in their engine designs then it will not be possible to track them." Kasdan spoke up. "Our engines leave no residue to follow."

"Damn!" Sashan exclaimed.

"Incoming transmission from the TALISMAN!" A voice echoed.

Delnash's body burst into existence in the transmission disc. "Sashan! Murano!"

Murano lost all pretense of calm now and he stepped closer to the transmission disc. "You fool!" He almost screamed at his brother. "Do you know what you have done?"

Delnash looked stunned at this outburst. "You will mind your place brother!" He snarled back. "I know what I am doing!"

"You are instigating an incident!" Murano barked. "A confrontation! Why? That is not our way!"

"What do you mean why?" Delnash snapped at him. "They are primitives who have our technology in their possession! They even tried to pass someone of as Wayonn and..."

"THAT WAS WAYONN!" Murano roared at the transmission.

Delnash paused for a moment, shocked at this outburst. He shook his head finally. "That is not possible Murano!"

"I know Wayonn! I fought beside him! I ate beside him! I bled beside him and Sumar!" Murano shouted at his brother. "Do not tell me it was not Wayonn when you have never met him! I would know him anywhere!"

"We are not back to this are we?" Delnash popped. "Your ranting is becoming quite tedious brother. We have a situation here! Sashan!"

"Chief Elder!" Sashan spoke now.

"You will land and execute the assault plan." Delnash spoke. "Teniri and her kind will handle the dragons that accompany them. Concentrate on the facility. Try not to injure anyone, but do not put your men and women at risk."

Sashan nodded. "Understood Chief Elder!"

"Murano... you will either help or you can remain on the transport." Delnash snapped at him. "When you return we will discuss your future participation in your current role. We will be keeping an open channel Sashan. When the station is secure contact us directly and I will come down to the surface and meet with this barbarian who calls himself King."

"I understand Chief Elder." Sashan spoke.

The transmission ended abruptly and Murano leaned back from the table. Daron smiled at him smugly as he moved past him while Murano backed up. He moved to an empty row of seats and settled into one trying to wrap his mind around everything that was happening. His brother was a good man who was getting some very bad information. Delnash was out of his element right now. He was an excellent administrator when there was no crisis, and while he had made some questionable decisions in the past, overall he had been responsible for the resurgence of their people. Sashan was a rookie who had no right to be leading the Military Convention, and Lorendo was a man who had his own agenda. He wanted to be Chief Elder and that much was plain as day. Murano didn't notice the figure of the Security Convention troop sit beside him until that soldier reached out and rested his hand on Murano's arm.

"Now is not a good time." Murano hissed more forcefully than he had intended.

"Not even for me Uncle?" The soft feminine voice whispered.

Murano turned his head quickly and her Etheric resonance quickly pushed away his anger at what was happening. He detected her shields immediately and they were keeping everyone from sensing her presence except him. "Mari!" He whispered urgently. "What... what are you doing child?"

"What does it look like?" She answered playfully. "I'm coming with you."

Murano looked around casually to insure no one had taken notice of them and then he looked back to her. "Your father told you to return to engineering. You should not be here!"

"Why not?" Mari asked. "Is what... is what you say really true Uncle? Is there another Praetorian on the planet? Was that really Sumar's Oracle Wayonn?"

"Why does it matter to you child?" Murano asked keeping his voice neutral. "We are nothing more than a forgotten memory to everyone now."

Mari squeezed his arm tightly. "Not to everyone Uncle." She said in reply. "There are many who still honor and respect what the Praetorians did for our people. I know... I know father worships you Uncle."

"He does not show it." Murano spoke.

"It is as you believe Uncle." Mari said softly. "For too long he has let others influence his decisions. Everyone is following their own path to personal influence and power. Each one is willing to put themselves before our people. They no longer see the Scourge as a threat. Father has become overwhelmed with the many directions they are pulling him. This has made him..."

"Ineffective." Murano finished.

Mari nodded. "Yes."

Murano looked at her. Even under the helmet her beauty was very obvious, and her soft blue eyes caused his heart to do flips. There was something about her. In only a few hours he felt more of a kinship to her than he did to his own brother. He reached out with his Etheric power trying to sense if perhaps she bore the Praetorian gene and he felt the shields Mari had in place around her mind. Very powerful shields that prevented him from sensing anything at all. He stared at her for a long moment, her gaze never wavering from his, but looking confused. He had been so preoccupied by what he felt concerning those individuals on the planet ahead that he had completely ignored the signs he could detect within Mari herself. It was possible. The gene had been active in himself and dormant within his and Delnash's father. It was possible that it could have skipped his brother and passed to his daughter.

"Uncle?" Mari questioned him softly. "Are you ok?"

Murano blinked and drew back his Etheric probes. "Yes." He said. "Yes I'm fine. Your shields are very strong for someone so young Mari."

Mari smiled. "I know... but Daron and Kesyla are nosy. And they tell father everything I do. I got extra schooling from Elder Tobia in shielding my mind secretly. She was very helpful to me."

"Tobia?" Murano questioned.

Mari nodded. "Yes... do you know her?" She asked.

Murano leaned back. “No.” He said quickly.

“I want to come with you Uncle.” Mari said. “I want to see and experience more than what I have seen. Father thinks I am too young and too foolish...”

“You are foolish!” Murano said looking at her. “Coming on this mission was foolish! More so now!”

“You are worried aren’t you?” Mari said. “You are worried about these people? There is another Praetorian down there isn’t there Uncle? One born of Chief Elder Sumar’s line. Please Uncle... tell me!”

Murano looked at her and nodded finally. “That is what... that is what I sense.” He told her finally. “Every essence within my body and mind is telling me this. And he wields a power equal to Sumar if what I feel is accurate. But he is not wholly Pralor either. He is also... he is also Lycavorian as well.”

Mari’s eyes grew a little wider. “The Chief Elder lay with a Lycavorian?” She gasped.

Murano looked at her. “Those of our people who judge species that many of our citizens consider primitive or beneath us are wrong Mari. We are all equal no matter what the level our technology is.”

“You can’t keep me away Uncle!” She stammered. “I will... I will leave the ship after all of you are gone. Even if you lock me up! I will find a way off! I always find a way Uncle! I’m very good at that sort of thing.”

Murano smiled for the first time in hours. “I believe you would.” He stated. Murano reached out and took her hand. “Stay beside me at all times. Do exactly as I tell you no matter what it is Mari. I can protect you and I will not see you taken down with the rest of our people before I have a chance to speak with Wayonn and this descendant of Sumar. We have reached a point in our history where we once more teeter on the brink and I will not allow your father to push us over the edge.”

“You believe our soldiers are in danger Uncle?” Mari asked.

Murano turned back and looked at Sashan and Garan conversing near the holo image of the facility. “I believe... I believe our mighty Elder Convention Security Forces are about to have their collective asses handed to them. In a way that will force your father to stand up and take notice.”

ONTEROM

“...sense them Arzoal?” Martin asked.

They were outside the Science facility, all of the dragons circled around Arzoal and Martin.

Arzoal nodded her huge head. Yes... I felt them as they left whatever ship they landed on. Just as you and Torma did. She answered.

Twenty of them. Torma spoke now. Most of them roughly my age. Some older and more experienced. Their thoughts are jumbled and anxious.

Martin nodded. “They’re nervous.” He spoke. “One of them is the leader. Why didn’t we sense them before now though?”

I was surprised as well until I remembered that our ships... Pralor ships have the ability to, if not block Etheric resonance, dampen it quite a bit. Similar to the void chambers in Dragon Mountain that we use to meditate. Arzoal answered. Once they were free of the ship we could sense them and I lowered my own shields enough to detect them fully just as you and Torma did.

Is that not odd mother? Isheeni asked. Our kind working with the Pralors?

Arzoal shook her head. No. I... She turned and looked at Martin. The strongest among them Martin... do you feel her? She is the leader.

Martin nodded. “She’s older. Much older.” Martin looked at Arzoal. “I’d say almost as old as you.”

I recognize her resonance. Arzoal’s voice was filled with emotion in their heads and it was a combination of happiness and anxiousness as she nodded. She is who I put in charge of those that left Elear in that first wave Martin. Her name... her name is Teniri.

Martin’s eyes grew wide. “So Muton’s map! It was a map from the Pralors that left with the dragons! Left for us to find!” He declared.

Arzoal nodded. It is the only thing that makes sense. They must have returned and tried to do just as Sumar did with the Lycavorians. When they saw it was going to fail they made the map pieces for future generations to find. To trace back to them.

Not to put a dampener on this discussion... Torma spoke. They are airborne and moving closer.

Martin looked at him. "Which means there must be Pralor troops on the ground as well."

Their intent is to subdue us. Arzoal spoke. I can see what they propose in their surface thoughts. Teniri thinks to assimilate us into their ranks. She believes us to be... she believes us to be stray dragons under your control. She knows there are females among us and she is trying to determine how best to allow Isheeni and the others to be claimed by males.

"Sibfla!" Martin spat. "I didn't think they would come with dragons!"

If one of them plunges on me I will open his belly to the sky! Aurith hissed.

As will I. Iriral echoed.

Hush daughter. Isheeni told her knowing that her reaction was partly the same reaction For'mya would have to such an event.

They are airborne and if we keep our shields high as they are now they will not detect us. Torma spoke. They will detect any attack on the facility however and move to assist the Pralors.

"Twenty against six ain't real good odds." Martin said.

Arzoal extended her head out and placed her snout inches from Martin's face. It is time Martin Leonidas. She said.

"Time for what?" Martin asked her.

Time to for you and Torma to embrace your roles as Talon Guardians of our kind. As Androcles and Elynth did when they faced Naruth and Marux. The High Coven dragons sensed who and what you were the moment they saw the four of you. These dragons will as well. It is part of our blood Martin. Arzoal told him.

"Arzoal... there is probably a shitpot full of Pralor troops moving here right now. I need to handle that and..." Martin said.

Arzoal nodded her massive head. None of whom could defeat Daniel or any one of your mates on their best day and you know it. They will be facing Daniel and all six of your wives. Who is going to win that fight Martin Leonidas? The larger threat are these dragons. It is why they brought them. We must strike them quickly and overwhelm them and let them see you and Torma and what you are.

The Elder Mother is right my brother. Torma said.

"How do you know they followed your teachings after all this time Arzoal?" Martin asked. "It's been a long time."

Your people have followed the teachings of Anomes for nearly as long Martin. Do they still honor and adhere to that sacred tradition?

Martin met her flame red eyes. "The vast majority of them... yes."

Talon Guardians have been part of dragon lineage and legend since the very first Elder Mother chose the first ones more than five hundred thousand years ago. Arzoal said softly. No dragon... no matter where they have been raised or what they have been taught... no dragon will face a Talon Guardian willingly unless they are crazed and beyond help.

"Five hundred thousand years?" Martin gasped. "You... that is how long dragons have been alive?"

There have been sixty-three Dragon Elder Mothers. Arzoal spoke. I am the sixty-fourth. Teniri will recognize me and so will any other dragon among them that was on Elear. The others will bow to the will of Talon Guardians. It will give us the time we need to sort things out and move forward.

"Shit!" Martin hissed as he reached up and tapped his jaw. "Saaurano! Danny! Anja!"

"Beloved." Aricia's voice answered instantly.

"Here Lover!" Anja answered.

"Go fervon!" Danny echoed.

"Hold the fort! Torma and I have a dragon problem to deal with. The non-lethal ammo get out to everyone Danny?" Martin said.

"Just finished!" Dan replied. "You going to go fight dragons huh? Anything to get out of the hard work! Typical! Take pictures!"

"Go with the gods Beloved." Aricia stated.

“I’ll have Duewa on standby to treat any of them that you hurt too badly Lover.” Anja told him. “You and Torma aren’t exactly subtle you know.”

“What? No well wishes and be careful?” Martin exclaimed.

“What for?” Anja said playfully. “You never listen to us anyway.”

“You’re one to talk Red.” Martin spoke with a smile. “See ya soon!”

Martin turned to look at Arzoal and felt all six of his mates reach for him at the same time within Mindvoice and embrace him with their combined auras and Etheric energy. Their voices combined together in one harmonic song within him and as they always did, they spoke with one voice.

Be careful our love!

Martin smiled warmly and sent loving pulses of his aura and his own Etheric energy back to them as he jumped into the saddle on Torma’s back and Isheeni and the others rose off the ground. The Dragon Armor braces tightened against his thighs and Martin looked at Arzoal with bright dark brown eyes.

Early bird gets the worm. Martin announced just before Torma exploded off the ground into the air with powerful sweeps of his massive wings. As he rose into the sky, his Dragon Armor began to extend around his muscular body and the others took the same cue and as they began to rise, their armor began to extend as well.

PRALOR SECURITY CONVENTION DETACHMENT
COMMANDING OFFICER GARAN
THREE HUNDRED METERS FROM STATION ZERO ONE FIVE

Garan lowered the macro binos from his eyes and looked at Elder Sashan. He kept adjusting his uniform and brushing at the dirt and bits of grass that clung to the fabric. He had refused to wear the standard body armor that his own men wore. Garan determined it was either very stupid or very brave that he was attempting to show them they had nothing to fear against these upstart primitives. While it wasn’t oppressively hot on the surface, it was humid on this planet and Sashan’s clothes were soaked in sweat. They had taken the bulk of the two hundred member detachment with them... only fifty accompanying Lorendo and the dragons on the second transport. Murano could feel Teniri in the sky above off to the west and she was circling with her small force of twenty dragons. He could sense her apprehension about something but he dare not interrupt her and confuse her with unneeded questions. He glanced at Mari directly behind him and smiled inwardly. The armor she had confiscated did not fit her and she kept having to adjust the helmet so she could see, but her face was bright and alive with awareness and splendor. Murano just hoped she didn’t experience anything that would cause that splendor to go away. He turned back to Garan as he whispered to Sashan.

“I can see the top of the facility Elder Sashan.” Garan said. “There does not appear to be any sentries on the mid-level roofs as we expected.”

Sashan looked at him. “No sentries? They must all be inside the facility.”

“They trap themselves in the facility?” Garan questioned.

“They are relying on the external sensors at the top of each tower. Only primitives would rely on the external sensors with trying to protect them.” Sashan spoke more confidently. He looked at Murano. “Does this information change your view of them Murano? They rely on technology they do not understand.”

Murano shook his head slowly. “They are not relying on the external sensors to track us Sashan.” Murano said.

“Of course they are!” Sashan stated. “It is the only way to track us on the surface.” He turned back to Garan. “Have two of your men disable the external sensor arrays Garan.”

Garan motioned to two of his men who held long barreled rifles of some sort. Those two men stepped forward, sighted down the barrels of those rifles and each fired a single focused burst of energy. The thin yellow beams shot from the barrels and crossed the distance in the blink of an eye, both shots true and the two domed sensor arrays on the top of the two matching towers erupted in smoke and fire.

“Excellent shooting.” Sashan spoke. “Now... send half the force to the west entrance and we will proceed to the vehicle entrance.”

“Your splitting your force?” Murano gasped.

“We will hit both entrances at the same time.” Sashan told him. “It is a classic pincer movement that will catch all of them in the center.”

“This is not a simulation or a book you are reading. Dividing your force is unwise Sashan.” Murano spoke grabbing his arm. “We can not scan within the facility. We do not have any idea how many troops they have within.”

“My men are more than a match for any primitive within that structure!” Sashan hissed. “They could have five hundred men and we would prevail. They can’t possibly stand against our weapons.”

“It is not a tactically sound maneuver!” Murano pressed him. “The station has two entrances and one or both could very well be a trap to lure you in. We do not know how long they have been here or what defenses they may have put in place.”

“Lure us into what? An ambush? You saw the man in the transmission Murano. Did he appear to look like anyone who could conduct a proper ambush? He had wild hair and was unkempt and dirty!” Sashan spat. “This is my operation Praetorian Murano! I will conduct it as I see fit.” He yanked his arm away and turned back to Garan as Murano shook his head and slid back from him.

[That primitive could probably take everyone of you and render you more inept than you are now! And do it in his sleep!] Murano muttered within Mindvoice so that no one could hear him. He turned his head when he heard the soft snicker and saw Mari trying very hard to hold back her laughter. His eyes grew a little wider.

[That is not very nice Uncle.] She told him.

[You heard that?] He gasped. [How?]

Mari smiled and shook her head. [I don’t know... it just popped into my head as you spoke.]

Murano stared at her for a moment until the jostle of bodies began and the second part of the security detachment began to move away. Mari should not have been able to detect his musings. [We will discuss this later!] He told her.

STATION ZERO ONE FIVE

Julie looked over her shoulder. “They just took out the external sensors Danny.” She told him.

“Nubous amateurs!” Danny hissed. He stood casually with his A4 dangling from quick release straps. Fedor stood beside him on one side, his mothers Aricia, Dysea and Isabella around him.

Iama stood next to Fedor, pressed up against him and since the night before, unwilling to leave his side. Unknown to Iama it was an action that all of his mothers took note of right away. He had vexed Iama completely with his knowledge of the stars and of engineering physics. His voice carried a tenor in it that filled Iama with warmth and intrigue and for the first time in her young life... real desire for a man. He had been the perfect gentlemen, even more so than the three Lycavorians she had bedded since this trip began. Fedor was different though... Iama knew that from the first moment. He did not look at her and see a potential bedmate. He wanted to impress her yes... but he wanted to impress her and make her see he was the man for her. She could see that every time he looked at her with those beautiful brown orbs. It was just like Helen said it would be; he was acting exactly how Helen said he would and precisely two minutes after listening to him, Iama knew this was who she wanted. He was beautiful physically yes, but his mind was not that of a child. It was of a man who was exceptionally smart and very quick witted.

He looked at her when he spoke, unafraid to gaze into her face, and he spoke to her as an equal. He made fun of himself several times when he got so excited while explaining something that he fumbled his words. When his fingers grazed her cheek, brushing hair from her face that the wind had tossed there, Iama could feel the desire burn even more within her. Emotions and sensations she had never felt before, surging through her when she looked at a man. It was Iama who suggested they sleep on top of the roof, and Iama didn’t pause for a second when the time came. Fedor settled between Dnom’s legs and leaned against his powerful midsection. He was taken by surprise when Iama settled beside him and curled up against his side. Fedor hesitated, truly unsure of what to do and Iama simply pulled his arms down around her. It took several moments before his arms tightened and he pulled her close to him.

It was the most peaceful sleep Iama had ever had. No fear of being taken. No looking over her shoulder. And not a single nightmare had interrupted her sleep. His powerful arms had swallowed her up and Iama had lost herself within them.

When she had woken, his cheek was pressed to her head, his arms still wrapped tightly around her and his warm breath feeling divine against her skin. It was perfect... and Iama'Juturi had every intention of seeing that it continued.

Danny turned and looked at Kenny who stood beside him on the other side. "You all set?"

Kenny nodded. "We shoved that vehicle so far into that crack in the bulkhead not even Mr. Fantastic could squeeze in."

Fedor's eyes narrowed slightly and he looked at his adopted Uncle. "Who is this Mister Fantastic Uncle?" He asked. "Is he part of our detail?"

"Come on Fedor... you don't know who Mister Fantastic is?" Kenny declared jerking his arms and legs to different sides trying to stretch them longer than they were. "Mister rubber band man."

Julie shook her head from where she sat. "I may be a vampire now... but you are still a fucking dork Kenneth." She stated.

Aricia stepped forward with a smile. "It is from a movie Fedor." She told him. "A very old movie back from when your Medwan and Kenneth discovered who they were." She looked at Kenny. "One Kenneth has obviously seen too many times."

"Hey! They were classics! All eleven of them!" Kenny complained. He made several more stretching moves which only caused Iama and Dysea to burst out laughing at his antics and Danny to shake his head.

"And here I thought none of us were affected by moving through time." Danny said. "It made you certifiable."

"No arguments here." Julie stated.

Danny turned quickly and looked at Avi who was standing next to Wayonn at the main computer array. "Avi? What's taking so long?"

-I am working as fast as my neural network will allow Daniel Simpson- Avi answered him. -Please be fucking patient-

Danny grinned. "Ok... sorry." He said turning his eyes to Wayonn who was looking at him with stern eyes.

"Does anyone who follows Martin take anything serious?" Wayonn exclaimed.

"Hell no!" Kenny spat checking his A4. "Why would we want to do that?"

Julie shook her head. "Serious sucks." She chimed in.

Danny laughed at the look on Wayonn's face. "You should know all of this by now Wayonn. You've been around the biggest clown for months now."

"I did not realize it was infectious." Wayonn spoke shaking his head.

-I have realigned the ground sensors we placed- Avi spoke. -They are coming online now-

Wayonn looked at the monitor and nodded his head, his hands moving across the controls alongside Avi's much larger hands. "I have them! They broken into two teams!" Wayonn spoke now. "Sibfla... there must be a fool leading them if they have split their forces so close to the objective!"

Aricia moved forward. "Fedor and I will take Team one and meet them as they enter from the vehicle bay." She stated.

"Bella, Cirith and I will take Team Two and greet them if they realize that there is an emergency hatch only a hundred meters from the stranded vehicle." Dysea spoke. "For'mya and Endith are with Anja, Duewa and Eirene securing medical and the living area."

Danny nodded. "Wayonn... you stay here with Helen and Avi. Lock down the command center when we leave."

"Daniel Simpson I can fight!" Helen hissed at him moving closer.

Danny nodded. "I don't doubt that one bit Feravomir." He told her. "I'd rather have you here though, watching us on the ground and internal sensors and directing us. You've done this sort of thing before, Wayonn and Avi have not."

Helen nodded without question. She had done exactly this type of thing five times during the Evolli War and each had been very successful. "Understood." She said.

"Wayonn... you and Avi keep feeding that info to Helen so she can direct us." Danny said.

Wayonn nodded. "Consider it done." He replied. "Daniel..." He waited until Danny looked at him. "Try your best not to kill anyone." He continued. "We need them."

Danny nodded. "No promises." He said. He looked at the others. "Let's move!"

Martin Leonidas clung fearlessly to the front of the Mark Eleven saddle, his helmeted head slung low behind Torma's broad shoulders as his massive wings propelled them forward through the cool air at nearly twenty thousand feet.

Twenty-six years of being bonded together had made them of one mind and heart when they flew. Every twitch of their muscles, every breath that filled their lungs, and every sense that imparted knowledge to them was tuned to each other. They were of one mind and body, the Talon Guardian brands even glowing slightly under their armor, though no one could see them. Like Androcles and Elynth, their son and daughter, they had embraced completely the role and the significance of their position. They both could feel the added power the small Etheric essence of nine Dragon Elders imbued within the Talon crystals gave to them, adding to their already unmatched power. While Andro and Elynth had the benefit of being bonded while Aricia still carried him within her womb, Martin and Torma had worked tirelessly for hours and days and years to achieve what their children had. It made them closer to each other, in some ways even closer than they were to their respective mates and wives. There were not two more powerful bonded pairs within the entire breadth of the Lycavorian Union or the stars than two fathers and their oldest son and oldest daughter. They knew why now of course, and what their bonds did for the power they already wielded individually. This power they had discovered extended to Torma and Elynth almost naturally. Not as powerful as it flowed within Martin and Andro, but even a small amount made Torma and Elynth far more deadly than any dragon that existed.

Like their children, they held nothing back from each other. And like their children, they had taken different traits from each other and made them part of themselves. Torma's natural benevolence, Martin's will and determination. Their combined love for their wives and mates. All of this they shared along with so many other things. Panos had called them forces of nature on more than one occasion. He did not and never would know how truly visionary that single statement really was.

Martin's hands were spread evenly across Torma's scales along his long neck, feeling the muscles as they moved his wings, feeling the steady thumping of his Bonded Brother's heart. It was no different for Torma, who could sense and feel the same from Martin even through the saddle. They were tuned to one another like the pieces of a finely built machine. They had been training for this day... though neither of them had ever wanted to use the skills they had learned from their countless years of training and the Tomes of Sumar. Now however... now the only way to end this quickly and with minimal injury was to call on those skills.

[We never wanted to use these skills Torma.] Martin reached for him within a connection that only two other minds were powerful enough to reach and sustain and share with them.

[Nor did our son and our daughter Martin my bonded brother.] Torma answered. When they were alone together as they were now, no matter that their children were dragon and Lycavorian and elf and vampire, they were all their children. [They did not hesitate when the time came because they saw the need. We must not hesitate now.]

[It would be a lot easier with them here.] Martin said.

[On that we agree.] Torma answered. [What would they do?]

[Shit... you know how our son and daughter think.] Martin exclaimed. [They would do something incredibly stupid and sinfully dangerous.]

[Yes... and because it was sinfully dangerous and incredibly stupid it would probably work.] Torma agreed.

[How high are we?] Martin asked after a moment.

[We are above the clouds and almost directly above them.] Torma answered. [Twenty-two thousand feet.]

[So... say Arzoal's plan to split them works and that leaves ten airborne... how do you knock ten dragons out of the sky without killing them? And without letting them know they are under attack until it's too late.] Martin said.

[What would Andro and Elynth do?] Torma asked him.

[That's easy... Andro would just jump off of her, fall for five or six thousand feet and hit as many of them with his psychic knife as he could before he fell past them.] Martin answered. [Elynth would...]

Torma's head turned until he was looking at Martin with those golden eyes. [Elynth would smash their joints with her armored wings as she broke up the formation and then pick up Andro after they passed through their ranks. With their joints numb, they would not be able to remain airborne.]

Martin met his eyes. [Torma... that's... that's incredibly stupid.]

[And sinfully dangerous.] Torma agreed.

[It would be a glorious death.] Martin said with a grin under his helmet. [Painful... but glorious.]

[Indeed.] Torma said.

[Ah... fuck it. You only live once!] Martin snapped. [We need...]

[Altitude! Yes! Shit! I don't believe we're actually going to do this.] He commented as he tilted his wings and in the blink of an eye was rocketing for more altitude.

Martin chuckled. [Torma my brother... you just swore!]

[If we do not succeed it will not matter. There will not be much of us left for Isheeni and your mates to recover and discipline.] Torma commented.

[Why do you always have to point out the obvious?] Martin said. [Geez... we might die and you're pointing out the obvious! Why do you always do that?]

[Then they will have something to engrave on our headstones.] Torma replied. [After they scrap us off the ground.]

[Ah... good point.] Martin said.

Garan led them as they sprinted the last few meters into the interior of the vehicle bay and began to split in different directions taking up positions at the different crates that were oddly spaced about in defensive positions. The upper walkway to the entrance was empty and the door unguarded. Even as inexperienced as he was, Garan began to feel uncomfortable at the way things were proceeding. He glanced to his left as Elder Sashan settled beside him, the two high stacked containers giving them adequate cover.

“Something is wrong Elder Sashan.” Garan spoke.

Sashan looked at him. “What? What do you mean?”

“The entrance into the facility is not guarded?” Garan questioned. “Even primitives would leave a guard stationed at the entrance of the facility.”

“We are dealing with primitives Garan.” Sashan spoke. “They are unintelligent and ill-equipped to stand against us.”

“They have left the entrance unguarded Elder for a reason!” Garan told him.

“We must move quickly and efficiently.” Sashan said feeling confident and full of authority at how well things had gone. “Have your men breach the door and begin to secure the interior of the station. We will...”

Garan glanced at his arm as his COM unit began to chirp softly. He touched the device on his wrist. “Go!”

“Commander... the second entrance is blocked by a Science Rover.” The voice spoke. “We can not enter from this location. The doors are jammed tightly and there is no power to the systems down here. It appears as if the rover was jammed into the partially opened doors on purpose and there is not room to maneuver around the vehicle.”

Sashan looked at Garan. “Schematics of the station indicate there is an emergency entrance a hundred meters to the east of the vehicle doors.” Sashan spoke. “Have them enter there.”

Garan looked at his COM unit. "One hundred meters east is an emergency hatch. Move there and execute your entrance." Garan ordered.

"Understood." The voice answered.

Garan looked at Sashan. "Elder Sashan... they will be dropping into an empty corridor in the lower level with no power. They will be helpless while they are entering."

Sashan met his eyes. "There is no resistance here." He spoke almost harshly. "This is the main entrance into the facility. If they are not guarding this then they have undoubtedly pulled all of their people into or around the Command Center. Once we are inside we can find a secure computer terminal and release gas into those areas of the station. Garan... we are not dealing with intelligent men as you and I are! These are primitives!"

"Primitives who managed to enter this facility even with the security protocols Elder Lorendo left in place!" Garan snapped.

"Everyone gets lucky Garan." Sashan spoke.

"Commander!" The man spoke moving up to where Garan and Sashan squatted. "Sir... something is not right." He was holding a portable scanner and it was softly beeping every half second.

"What is it Mengath?" Garan asked.

"I am... I am detecting lifesigns." He answered.

"Where?" Sashan demanded. "From the interior? Of course you will pick them up there!" He stated while rolling his eyes in disgust.

The man looked at him with something akin to contempt Garan saw. "No Elder Sashan. I am picking them up but I am skilled enough to know that there are also lifesigns here. In the vehicle bay with us." He exclaimed as Murano moved up to another stack of crates only two meters away.

"Soldier... there is no one inside the vehicle bay but us." Sashan declared. "Do you see anyone who is not a Pralor standing around?"

"I am only telling you what the scanner is telling me Elder Sashan!" The man snapped. "And it is telling me there are over a dozen individuals inside this vehicle bay with us." He motioned to the walkway. "Five on the walkway near the entrance, seven near the base of the stairs and another three higher up." He glanced up. "On the walkway above us."

Sashan shook his head and turned to another soldier who squatted a short distance away. "Move to the control terminal there. Break the computer locks and restore power to this section! They can not have locked out all the computers! Do it now!"

"Sashan... no!" Murano exclaimed. "We are being drawn in! This is not what it seems!"

"We will do this my way!" Sashan barked angrily now. "I am in command here Murano, not you!" He looked at the man again. "Do as I ordered you."

Murano turned his head quickly and looked at Mari who had been his shadow just as he had instructed her. "Something is not right Mari." He said quickly. "Press closer to the crate and do not move unless I do!" He saw her nod with wide eyes.

The man dashed forward to the control panel that was the center of the walkway on the ground floor the sloped ramps moving up to the main entrance door. Above him was the door into the interior of the station. He began to work the computer console furiously, his eyes narrowing slightly. "The system is completely locked out." He spoke loudly. "Some sort of shifting security algorithm Elder Sashan. I have never... I've never seen anything like it."

"That's probably because you've never met anyone like us."

The female voice spoke from directly in front of him and the man looked up with wide eyes as the very air in front of him rippled and the figure began to appear out of thin air. All eyes watched as the PSG deactivated and the lithe and shapely figure of the woman appeared. She wore a strange uniform of what appeared to be black body armor that shone faintly in the light of the vehicle bay. The helmet hid her face almost completely, leaving only a small portion of her lips showing and azure blue eyes that were nearly alive in brightness. The tips of a pair of long fangs protruded from just under her upper lip. Aricia Leonidas appeared fully on top of the computer station in a squatting position. In her hand she held the short barreled KM12 magnum, which happened to be pointed directly at the man's chest. Everything happened quickly then, as Aricia jammed the barrel of the KM12 against the man's lightly armored clothing just over his right nipple and pulled the trigger without blinking.

Martin had ordered the distribution of non-lethal ammunition to all weapons that they carried. In this instance they were simple 12.7mm dart shells filled with two milligrams of a very powerful sleep agent. They were basically tranquilizer rounds now. Two five centimeter long darts sat where normally the projectile round would be. The head of the dart could pierce up to a quarter inch of solid titanium steel and would certainly hurt whoever it struck. Against the lightly armored Pralor Convention troops it worked to perfection. The man's eyes began to glaze over instantly and just as his body began to stagger backwards. Aricia then executed an amazing back flip that allowed the toe of one boot to strike the man's jaw and launched his now unconscious body across the vehicle bay. Her back flip completed on the walkway above, where she dropped into a squat behind a row of waist high crates that had been intentionally positioned for cover.

"Now!" Her voice rang out within the bay.

Fedor and fourteen others lowered their PSGs instantly and lifted their weapons. Though the A4s fired the same type of non-lethal round as in Aricia's KM12, they sounded almost no different than normal and the cacophony of weapons fire instantly shook and reverberated through the interior of the entire vehicle bay. The first barrage fell nearly a dozen of the Pralor Security force who were still slightly exposed. One of the men fell directly in front of Mari and she yelped in horror as his body came to rest within reaching distance. Murano's arm shoved her back against the crate as the sounds of projectiles of some sort glanced off the other side of the crate and he too looked at the dead soldier. Murano's eyes detected something protruding from the man's neck and his hand snapped out to swipe two darts from his skin. He drew back against the crate as Sashan began screaming, his eyes wide.

"Return fire!" He roared. "Return fire!"

Nearly sixty Pralor security troops began to do just that and thin yellow beams of intense energy began to reach out towards the covered positions of Aricia and the others.

"Mother... they are firing back!" Fedor screamed from several feet away.

Aricia looked at him. "What did you expect?" She shouted back.

Fedor winced as one of the thin yellow beams sizzled above the wall as it struck two feet above his head. He glanced back at his Lycavorian mother. "We can not hold them here!" He barked at her. "Their weapons are energy based mother! It could penetrate our armor! We must draw them into the station and eliminate their weapons advantage!"

Aricia knew instantly he was correct. Whatever it was they were firing back at them was based on intense energy and she had no desire to see if her Dragon Armor could withstand such a hit. She also felt a brief swell of pride at Fedor's detection of this and instinctively she sent a pulse of her female aura reaching out to For'mya. Their son was taking after his father when it came to tactical decisions and this pleased her. She felt a simple recognition pulse back from For'mya within Mindvoice, one of relief and happiness and acknowledgment.

Everyone! Aricia barked out within Mindvoice. Back into the station! Now! We will take them inside in the many corridors! Split up as you enter! Teams of two! Move now! No killing! Incapacitate them!

Murano's head snapped around when he heard the powerful voice reach out openly within the Etheric realm and issue those orders. His eyes went wide when he heard the last part and he leaned around the corner of the crate quickly. Those few figures he could see along the walkway once more engaged their unique vanishing systems and they could no longer be seen. Within seconds all firing directed at them stopped he noticed, while the Pralor troops continued to pour fire outward. Murano saw the main entrance door open and he watched as several odd shimmers passed through it and then it closed once more. Murano needed to act and he knew it. He pushed away for the crate and stood up.

"Cease fire!" He screamed waving his arms. "Cease fire!"

"Murano you fool!" Sashan shouted at him. "What are you doing?"

Murano looked at him and snarled. "If you had been paying attention you would see they are no longer here!" He barked at him moving forward. "Cease fire!"

The security troops began to take notice of him and the firing slackened quickly until it had stopped altogether. Murano turned back to Garan who stood up slowly his eyes looking around.

"Praetorian Murano?" He questioned.

“They have retreated back into the station.” Murano told him quickly.

Sashan glared at him as he came to his feet. “How do you know this?” He barked.

“Because I heard them speaking etherically fool!” Murano snarled at the man, his patience very near its end.

Sashan’s eyes narrowed. “I heard nothing.” He spoke.

Murano stepped up to him. “Because they are speaking on a level you have not achieved Sashan!”

“Impossible!” Sashan snapped. “I am an Elder of...”

Murano shook his head. “You are a fool!”

“How dare you!” Sashan barked refusing to stand up and expose himself.

“I do dare!” Murano shouted back. “Of all the Elders I thought you were at least more thoughtful in your actions! You are no better than Lorendo at the moment!”

Garan was looking around, his eyes wide at the sight of so many of his men down. “My men!” He spoke softly. “They... they killed so many of my men.”

Sashan stepped forward now rising off the deck from behind the crate. “That alone should tell you the type of people we are dealing with!” He shouted towards Murano who had turned away and was kneeling beside another down Security soldier. “They attacked us and killed our men!”

Murano glared up at him. “They attacked first... which was a sound tactical move and it caught us completely by surprise while you bumbled about trying to decide what to do! And our men are not dead. They are incapacitated.”

“What?” Garan gasped as he went to the nearest prone figure. He reached out and felt for a pulse and quickly found one beating strong. He glanced up at Murano. “He’s... he’s alive.” He gasped.

Murano nodded and shoved the darts into Sashan’s hand. “They are using non-lethal ordnance of some kind!” He snapped. “They have moved into the station.”

“Retreating?” Garan asked rising to his feet.

“Of course they are retreating.” Sashan exclaimed. “Form your men! We will pursue and capture them!”

Murano looked at him. “Have you heard what I have said?” He snapped. “These people do not fear you Sashan! They do not fear us! They correctly deduced they did not know what type of weapons we are using. They pulled back into the station in order to draw you in and take away the advantage of our weapons. If you fire blindly inside the station, you could very well do more damage than good.”

Sashan shook his head. “Primitives are not able to comprehend higher tactics.” He stated confidently. “We have them on the run and we will follow them!”

Murano could not believe he was hearing this and he gazed at Sashan with something akin to utter disbelief. “Did this absolute arrogance replace intelligence and all common sense while I was gone?” He barked. “If you go into the station they will hand you your asses!”

“And I’m sure your confidence in our men as a Praetorian makes them feel reassured.” Sashan commented.

“This has nothing to do with the confidence I have in your men!” Murano shouted. “This has to do with common sense and the fact that these people have advanced training and are exceptionally disciplined!”

“You will remain out here with our injured men and protect them Murano. That is an order from an Elder... and you will follow it!” Sashan barked.

Murano felt like hitting him at that moment and barely held back his anger. “Since whoever they are, they are using non-lethal means, I would be happy to remain out here and keep from being knocked unconscious and made to look the fool. By all means Sashan... proceed forward. Each step you takes insures it will be that much harder to talk with these men and women!”

“Garan... deploy your men and prepare to pursue them into the station.” Sashan spoke.

“Elder Sashan... perhaps...” Garan began to protest.

“Do as I order you Commander!” Sashan snapped at him.

Garan looked at Murano quickly before turning and moving for the entrance into the station.

“...sort of energy based weapon.” Aricia was explaining to Daniel and the others as she moved, Helen watching her on one of the large screens. “It was leaving scorch marks in the bulkhead walls and neither Fedor nor I wanted to remain and see what it could do to our armor. We have split up into teams and are waiting for them to enter the facility.”

Wayonn touched the COM panel. “Aricia... I doubt our weapons have changed much since my time. If so... then the rifles will fire a phased pulse energy charge in varying degrees. Our Dragon armor could withstand most hits, though they will be felt.”

“Most hits Val'istar?” She asked him.

“The last setting is a lethal setting Aricia. A phased energy burst that can do quite a bit of damage.” Wayonn answered. “At the highest setting it would essentially burn through even our Dragon Armor and could act like one of our explosive tipped rounds.”

“Are you sure it could penetrate our armor Val'istar?” Aricia asked as they watched her round a corner and stop. “We’ve never really tested the Dragon Armor plates within our personal suits against energy weapons.”

Wayonn nodded his head. “I know. It’s possible it could hold against a full power shot from one of the Pralor weapons... I would not want to find out and I would prefer that you did not try to find out either. If they somehow manage to injure you in their ignorance, neither Helen or myself will be able to hold Martin in check and you know this.”

“Agreed.” Aricia told him, her voice conveying the knowledge of the accuracy of his words. “We will be careful. Daniel... Fedor, Iama, I and the others will begin leap frogging back towards you. There appear to be about sixty or so left.”

“I’m putting the last of us in position now.” Daniel answered.

“Feravomir... you have us on internal sensors?” Aricia asked.

“Yes child... and I am reading them as well.” Helen answered her head moving back and forth between four large monitors. “Their portable sensors appear to be able to detect lifesigns even using the PSGs. Visually however; they appear to be working just fine as they can not see you. Even so... I recommend not using them any longer. They may just shoot first and ask questions later.”

“Agreed as well. Our ambush worked but they will be far more cautious now.” Aricia said. “We will try to keep them from moving for the medical section. If they do... it will bypass your ambush sites Daniel and Anja and For'mya do not have near as much security around them. They have most of the techs and engineers with them who have no military training.”

“I’ll send some additional security to her.” Danny said. “And I have a very large pair of surprises waiting for them when they get close to the Command Center.”

“Aricia... here we go!” Helen declared. “They are beginning to breach the main door!”

“Very well.” Aricia said.

If not for their current situation, Dysea Leonidas would have found her current position quite erotic and exceedingly pleasurable, she knew. She was pressed between Bella and Cirith, wrapped in the shadows and waiting on the Pralor Security forces to enter the large vehicle entrance at the rear of the Station. The scents of both Isabella and Cirith filled her mind and for the briefest of moments she relived one of their moments together not so very long ago.

[Stop that!] Cirith’s voice filled her mind within a shielded connection. While she was not as powerful within Mindvoice as Bella and the others, Cirith was rapidly closing the distance between them now that their Nauta Melme had claimed her and she had tasted his blood.

Dysea turned her head slightly and could feel Cirith’s face almost pressed to her elven ear. [I am sorry Cirith. It’s just very hard to not notice our current position and not think of other things.]

Isabella chuckled within Mindvoice. She was in front of Dysea, their bodies touching down almost their entire fronts. If not for the Dragon Armor that encased all of them, it would be a very enticing position. [You do have to admit Cirith... having udossta she-elf sandwiched between us like she is brings many delicious memories to the forefront.]

[I'm not saying it doesn't Bella.] Cirith answered quickly. [I'm saying that I have not yet gained the control of my emotions concerning such things with the level of skill you and udossta she-elf have. Thinking of Anja's tongue keeps interfering with my thought process.]

[She does have that affect on all of us does she not?] Dysea answered with a small laugh. [Bella... remember the time on Elear. Melyanna wore that stunning red silk strapless dress and Nauta Melme was so worked up just looking at her that by the time dinner began he pulled the three of us out of Memorial Hall and into the Guard Station. She had him howling even before he was fully undressed.]

[L'tian had to make excuses for us for nearly an hour. And if I remember correctly, she was just as worked up as he was.] Isabella spoke with humor in her voice. [Poor Anja... Martin got her back though. He perched her in his lap and stomped around the Guard Station for close to twenty minutes and she couldn't stop squealing the entire time. Martin does make her sing the loudest of us all doesn't he?]

[Enough!] Cirith exclaimed. [Phraktos! You two are terrible! We are about to enter combat and you two are discussing Anja's sexual talents with her tongue!]

Dysea laughed as Isabella adjusted her Shadow control and extended the envelope of their cocoon slightly feeling Cirith instinctively add her own power to reinforce that. [You will find Cirith our love... discussing such antics as ours in our bed...] Dysea reached back and squeezed Cirith's thigh. [And other places... it is calming to all of us. And Melyanna is so very gifted with her tongue.]

[And so very willing to exercise her talents on us as well.] Isabella added.

[Well... she is very good at that.] Cirith said softly. [I will need to...]

The sound of the hatch opening on the far side of the disabled rover drew all of their attention cutting off Cirith's comment.

Team ready. The male voice sounded within all of their minds. The Durcunusaan squad was in position all around them and ready.

Stand by. Dysea spoke. Feravomir... they are entering the vehicle entrance at our location.

I see them Dysea. Helen's voice responded. Stand by to engage.

Three Leonidas wives stood calmly, pressed tightly against one another, as the main hatch they had initially sealed and then unsealed for this operation began to open slowly. The combat experience just between the three women doubled the total combat experience of the seventy-three Pralor security troops entering. When combined with the squad of the dozen Durcunusaan with them, it dwarfed by a factor of ten the experience entering the secondary vehicle bay. This experienced was the key.

The Pralor security forces were under the impression those they were facing were nothing but a primitive species who had gotten lucky. At least that is what they had been led to believe. They were about to discover just how very wrong that assessment was.

That's it! Helen exclaimed within Mindvoice. All of them are in! Closing the hatch!

Every single Pralor soldier instinctively turned at the echo of the hatch closing behind them. Since none of their number was near the hatch, most of them correctly deduced that something very bad was about to happen.

Bangers! Isabella barked out within Mindvoice. Execute!

As Isabella, Dysea and Cirith turned their heads and placed their hands over their ears for protection, the dozen Durcunusaan troops each tossed a powerful flash bang grenade among the ranks of the Pralor troops, drawing their attention to the floor around them immediately. There was a hundred meters between the two forces, and all of the Durcunusaan and the Queens had experienced the effects of flash bang grenades before. The Pralor security troops had not.

It took just thirteen seconds.

Twelve flash bang grenades and thirteen seconds and seventy-three Pralor security troops joined their comrades from the main entrance in a painless sleep that would last for at least half a day.

Teniri circled lazily in the sky at ten thousand feet, her keen dragons eyes focused on the small clearing beneath them near the large lake. Nineteen of her most experienced and strongest dragon warriors circled as well, all of them watching the ground below. They could easily sense the females occupying the clearing, and several of the male dragons had already commented on how sweet their aromas were on the wind. What bothered Teniri was the fact they had not lifted off into the sky to greet them and their Etheric resonance was odd in many ways, not to mention that the two males she had sensed were no where in the area from what she could tell. All of them had Etheric shields that very few dragons outside of her warrior caste had, shields that were quite impenetrable. She had been placed in charge many thousands of years ago and Teniri had honored the words of the Elder Mother then. She remembered them today as if they had only spoken a few hours ago.

Take care of them Teniri. Guide them wisely and do not let outside forces influence your decisions. Do what you feel is right within you and they will follow you always.

We will see you again Elder Mother yes? Teniri had asked.

When the ship returns we will be together again. My faith and trust I give to you. And try to tolerate the hatchlings and young ones better my friend.

Teniri bowed her head with an almost embarrassed look for a dragon. I will do as you ask me Elder Mother. I will make sure none of them forget what has happened here and how you saved us.

Keep them calm and focused. Stay true to our values and always remember that you act in my stead now. Go with whatever gods guide our destiny Teniri.

And you Elder Mother Arzoal.

Teniri had never forgotten those words and she had guided her kind with compassion and fairness all of these millennia. When the Pralors had arrived on their world, Teniri reached out to them with those few Pralors among them who remained. She knew that the Elder Mother had once been a Pralor, and only an act of the gods had made her be reborn as a dragon. It hadn't been easy at first; these Pralors were war weary and trusted no one. Over the years however, things became much better, and friendships began to blossom. When the Scourge came to their planet, Teniri pulled her kind off the surface with the Pralors and into the stars once more. Artaaya was a beautiful world, with huge space for everyone and after two years aboard ships searching for another home, everyone was ready to settle once more.

Teniri sensed that these dragons were different somehow and she did not know what to make of that. Most of her kind never advanced their Etheric abilities past the point of being able to communicate and hunt. Only the warriors in her ranks trained for this. Yet these dragons beneath her she sensed were staggering in their Etheric powers. They were not threatening in any way, only sitting in the clearing casually, as if their presence in the sky above did not matter to them in the least. There was also something Teniri felt that she had never experienced before. The presence of two separate minds within the Etheric realm that dwarfed anything she had ever encountered. They teemed with power and control, but aside from the fact she could sense them vaguely she felt nothing else. It was disconcerting to her to not be able to tell more for no one of her kind had ever been able to block her Etheric connection, and if what she sensed was correct, these two minds were stronger than even Murano. She knew much of Murano and his role as a Praetorian, for they had spoken often during the years. He was her equal in every way when it came to the Etheric potential within him, far more than any other Pralor she had ever felt, but what Teniri sensed now was more.

Elder Mother... we must act. The male voice spoke and Teniri turned her head to the left and slightly above her where the dark green dragon was matching her position and speed.

Kolan was the leader of her warriors dragons, the strongest physically among their kind and larger than her by two meters in length and a thousand pounds. He was brash and reckless at times, even arrogant, but he was brave and never failed to lead his warrior dragons well. He was sometimes overbearing when it came to the females of their species, deciding that they should be fighting to be his mate and not the other way around. Teniri had scolded him many times over his actions when he tried to push certain females in a way they did not want to go, but overall he was a fine leader. He wanted to be a Dragon Elder she knew, but Teniri had been very specific and careful in her selection of the four Dragon Elders that she had chosen. Kolan had not been among them, which did not make him happy at first, but he was working towards that goal now.

Something is different Kolan. Teniri spoke. They do nothing. They do not rise to meet us and they do not run.

Perhaps they do not know any better. Kolan offered.

Teniri nodded. Perhaps... but I doubt that. There is something familiar about... I feel something that is very familiar to me. Something sings inside me... but it also tells me these dragons are unlike any of our kind.

Should I form an attack wing? Kolan asked quickly.

No! Teniri gasped quickly. We must do something for Sashan has begun his assault on the science station. I sense Murano is very upset about something and even Sashan's resonance is anxious. She turned her head and looked at Kolan. Leave half your wing airborne. You and the others follow me down. We must confront these dragons.

Kolan snapped his head around and looked up to the dark red scales of the dragon circling above him. Rakorir... remain airborne with your section of eight. The Elder Mother and I are taking the others and going in.

Understood Commander. The dragon answered, rolling over and gaining more altitude with seven other dragons following.

Teniri watched as he turned back to her. Let us discover who they are shall we Kolan?

Teniri tucked her wings, rolled over and plunged for the ground below.

Mother they are coming. Isheeni spoke.

Arzoal nodded her huge head. She has grown in confidence and strength. She said. A fine leader of our kind she has become. Placing those of our kind who left Elear in her charge was a wise decision that I am very happy with.

Aurith chuckled within Mindvoice. Grandmother... is that pride I detect in your voice.

Arzoal chuckled as well. I suppose it is. She answered.

Iriral nodded her large head. They feel healthy, educated and well trained. She spoke.

That they do. Isheeni said.

Arzoal looked skyward knowing that Martin and Torma were above them somewhere. They had shut all of them out completely and she could not feel anything but the tremors of their power just on the edge of her mind. Even so she reached out to him. [Martin. Torma. They are landing around us now. Where are you?]

[Now would not be a good time to interrupt us Elder Mother.] Torma's powerful voice responded instantly.

[Husband?] Isheeni lifted her head knowing that tone of his voice. [Torma... what... what do you intend? I know that tone of your voice Torma my mate. What is happening?]

[We are about to remove those that are still airborne from the sky.] Torma answered.

[What?] Arzoal exclaimed. [How?]

[Ah... you do not want to know.] Torma answered. [We will join you shortly.]

[Torma!] Isheeni barked. [Torma!]

There was no more time for talk as they saw the dark green scaled female dragon land a hundred meters away, nine others joining her on the ground quickly and efficiently all around them. They rested in the clearing by the lake, using the lake itself as their protective side.

Teniri flapped her wings powerfully as she settled to the ground with Kolan and his warriors. Her violent eyes gazed upon the dragons only a hundred meters away. None of them had even budged when they landed and all of them were watching her as she approached cautiously. Her mind was buzzing now as she looked at the huge form of the flame colored scales of the female. Her size alone was impressive, certainly larger than any dragon among Teniri's kind, her scales shiny with health and the muscular definition of her body very apparent to all who saw her. Her eyes shifted to the second two females, both of them with azure colored scales and one with golden yellow eyes. The last female was a creamy yellow in color and equally muscular and well defined. One of the azure blue scaled dragons had an odd shaped tail. It was very similar to a Heavy Horn tail, but that couldn't be since she had all the markings of a Firespitter elsewhere.

Who are you? Teniri demanded. How did you come to travel with primitives!

Primitives? Are they talking of Aricia Blue Eyes and the others? Isheeni spoke looking at her mother.

Yes... I believe so. Arzoal answered.

Primitive? Isheeni laughed within Mindvoice and Teniri and the others could hear her easily now. She will not like that name. Nor will Martin I think.

Who are you? Teniri demanded again. I am Elder Mother Teniri and you will answer me!

Aurith glanced at her grandmother. This is who you left in charge grandmother? She asked flippantly. She seems no different than these fool Pralors.

Kolan took several steps closer. You will mind your tongue when speaking to the Elder Mother! He barked.

Ohhh... I am shaking in my talons! Aurith replied.

Teniri stared at the flame scaled dragon; every sense in her body telling her she should know this female. As she grew closer Teniri took note that this female was indeed larger than any dragon among her kind by a good two or three meters in length easily. No dragon with Teniri's kind measured more than eighteen meters long, yet this female was easily over twenty. Yet for all that length, her body was muscular and showed no signs of abuse at the hands of the primitives. She was also much older than Teniri had first thought. All of them wore strange objects on their backs, some sort of device that allowed them to be nothing more than pack animals she guessed.

You are free now! Teniri exclaimed. You can return with us and be free of these people who enslave you!

We are free now! Isheeni snapped. No one enslaves us! Why should we come with you?

Teniri blinked. She was not used to being spoken to in such a manner. I am the Dragon Elder Mother. She spoke. My word is my bond to you. You travel with primitives. They enslave you with these objects on your backs. You can be free!

Kolan had moved closer now and was inspecting Isheeni, Iriral and Aurith closely and admiring their tails. Their potent female scents filled his muzzle and fired his male sexual drive. They are fine specimens Elder Mother. This one... she appears to be mated already but we can change that. The insolent one is her daughter! How is it that you have children azure one? You are too young to have born eggs.

Shows how much you know. Isheeni said. I have laid three clutches fool.

Three! That is not possible! Kolan spoke. How has this happened?

Let's see... my mate caresses my wings and then he mounts me as we plunge through the sky. Have you never been with a female before that you do not know these things fool? Isheeni exclaimed.

Kolan snorted at her angrily. It will not matter. Your mate is not here with you and when you return with us another will take you. They will make fine mates to three of our males. He announced looking up at Teniri. I might even take this one myself!

I doubt very much your males will find it so easy. Iriral stated laconically. Or painless.

Aurith laughed. No doubts here. She spoke. Father will squash this one like a bug. If mother does not tear his equipment from him first.

Teniri moved closer to the flame colored female ignoring Kolan and her eyes focused on Arzoal, who had not removed her own gaze from her since she had landed. Where do you come from? Teniri asked. We know of no other planets with our kind on them.

You don't get out much do you? Aurith quipped playfully.

Be silent insolent child! Teniri hissed at her.

Her head snapped around when she heard Arzoal chuckle within Mindvoice. I see that you still have a distinct lack of patience with younger dragons Teniri. Arzoal spoke. Though it does appear as if the years have tempered it some.

Teniri's wings flared and she took several steps back her violet eyes wide. Wha... I... I know that voice! She stammered. It... you... it is not possible!

Arzoal rose to her talons now, stretching out her form to its full length and smiling inwardly as the male dragons around her backed up involuntarily. Why is it not possible Teniri? The gods have seen fit to do much more through the years.

Arzoal? Teniri gasped. No! You... you are dead! They... they said you were dead!

I do not know who told you these lies... but do your eyes deceive you now? Do I look dead to you?

Arzoal asked.

The ship! It never returned with you and the others! Teniri gasped. When they... when they sent a ship to look for you... they said your ship had been destroyed. That all of you were lost!

I took those of us who remained off Elear. Arzoal said. When the ship returned for us nine millennia had passed. The computers had been erased. We had no way to know where you had gone. I took those of us who remained off Elear and settled on another world. And I know of only one ship that knew of us in all that time. And it did not come from here.

Teniri shook her head. This can not be! She exclaimed. They... they would not lie to us. Not after all we have accomplished together!

You speak of these Pralors? Arzoal asked her.

No! Teniri snapped shaking her huge head. You are not Arzoal! You can not be her!

And who would I be. Arzoal asked gently.

These... these primitives have done something to you! Teniri exclaimed. Your minds are no longer your own! The Arzoal I knew was not as large as you! And her coloring was different as well! You are not her!

Arzoal chuckled. I was much younger when you left Teniri. I had not fully grown to my full size. And my coloring changed with motherhood. Isheeni here is my oldest... the only one of my children that lives. Aurith is her child.

You think me a fool! Teniri barked. Female dragons can not bear eggs until they are at least a thousand years of age. This one is barely half that!

And I'm not looking forward to reaching that milestone either. Isheeni chimed in causing Aurith and Iriral to laugh.

There are things within the universe that we do not understand Teniri. Arzoal spoke. You know this as well as I. Isheeni has a purpose as do the children she has born. Their purpose is being written every day they share with their bonded ones.

Teniri looked at her with wide violet eyes. Bonded Ones? She gasped. That... that is not possible.

Isn't it? Arzoal asked. Would you have thought what happen to me was possible before it occurred?

Destiny works in wondrous ways.

You lie! Teniri gasped as she staggered back more. This is all a lie! What are you? Who are you?

I am Arzoal and I am the sixty-fourth Dragon Elder Mother. Arzoal stated calmly.

No! Teniri screamed out. Arzoal died thousands of years ago! She is no more! Kolan... you will subdue these... these imposters and...

You do not wish to do that? Arzoal told her calmly.

Teniri glared at her. Why? We outnumber you! You can not stand against us!

I do not need to. I know you have felt them. Arzoal spoke softly so that every dragon could hear her. I know you have been able to sense fleeting sensations of their power. Do you truly wish to face the wrath of two Talon Guardians? You do not want to anger them I assure you. Not these two.

Arzoal felt it spring forth then. Those two simple words caused every dragon around them to straighten and take notice of what she was saying.

You do not know of what you speak! Teniri shouted at her. There have not been Talon Guardians among our kind for millennia! The last existed ten thousand years before I was ever born!

Arzoal nodded. Until four came forward and showed the universe the measure of a Talon Guardian. I and the nine Elders of our Council anointed them ourselves in the sacred ceremony not six years ago. And in the knowledge passed to me by every Elder Mother before, never have there been Talon Guardians of such power. I know you have felt them Teniri. I can see it in your eyes. You have felt them and the power they command. Do you wish to have that unleashed upon our kind here and now? Sit with me and let me tell you a story. Our story.

I do not know you! Teniri shouted at her. What you are saying is not possible!

Oh but it is Teniri! It is! Arzoal said.

No!

Kolan glanced up at her. Elder Mother? What do you... what do you want us to do?

Subdue them! Teniri barked. Subdue them until we can determine what is happening.

Arzoal shifted her body and in the blink of an eye her Dragon Armor began to extend all around her body. Isheeni, Aurith and Iriral also rose as their armor began to extend rapidly.

What? Kolan exclaimed. What is this? Wait... Elder Mother we...

Stop! Teniri screamed out.

Arzoal met Teniri's wide eyes as she gazed at the armored behemoth Arzoal had become. I can not stop it now Teniri. It is too late.

Teniri was about to reply when the ground beneath her feet shuddered violently and a massive cloud of dirt and dust rose just off to her right, the bellowing trumpet of one of her warriors filling the air around them and his body thrashing in the small crater his impact had created. She spun around to face this, recognizing Rakorir instantly, her wings flaring to the sides and her eyes wide at what she saw.

They have arrived. Arzoal stated evenly before dialing her right wing back and spinning to the side, allowing her wing to snap forward with its armored edge and smash directly into the unprepared snout of the brown scaled dragon who was standing behind her.

[...know why they do this!] Martin Leonidas bellowed happily even though his body was plunging through the air at terminal velocity. His arms were tucked close to his sides and his legs together as he always did when conducting a HALO jump, but this exhilaration went beyond anything he had felt when jumping. It always did. He turned his head slightly and ten meters away saw Torma beside him, his wings nearly folded back as he kept pace in the dive. [They're crazy... but I know why they do this!]

[It is beyond exhilarating!] Torma barked out.

Torma had climbed to fifty-five thousand feet, far above Teniri's dragon's ability to climb and sustain a psychic shield, but easily within the limit of their psychic shield and skills. Martin and Torma and Andro and Elynth had exited STRIKERS at even higher altitudes than this.

The moment Arzoal told them half were landing; Martin had simply rolled out of the saddle backwards and began his plunge. Torma waited a silent count of three and then peeled over and folded his wings almost completely back. It took Martin's two hundred and forty-eight pound body only five seconds to reach terminal velocity of 240 kilometers an hour straight down. Torma was able to match this speed easily, while keeping his wings slightly extended out to maintain the same speed. With their psychic shield active, Martin did not have the wind and cold whipping and freezing his body as he normally would and this allowed him to steady himself far better than a normal HALO jump.

[There is a six knot crosswind when we clear the clouds at nineteen thousand feet.] Torma told him. [They have dropped to fifteen thousand feet. One group of five is circling above a group of four three thousand feet lower.]

Martin turned his head. [You know... if they find out we did this... they'll kill us.] He spoke.

[Probably.] Torma agreed.

[Whose idea was this anyway?] Martin asked. [We can't blame each other... we already tried that too many times.]

[I don't remember.]

[Yeah... me neither.] Martin quipped. [We'll make it up as we go!]

[Alter eight degrees left when you exit the clouds and that will put you directly over the higher group!]

Torma spoke.

[Yeah... then all I have to do is land on a moving dragon who doesn't know me, stick him with my psychic knife and roll off his suddenly limp body and do it twice more. Without missing and falling to my death.] Martin exclaimed. [Then roll off the last one and meet you before we both go splat in a big way!]

[Essentially... yes!] Torma told him. [I will make a bigger mess when I strike the ground however.]

[No problem! No problem at all! Do this all the time!] Martin spat. [Fuck! This was a stupid idea Brother.] Martin popped.

[Well... our mates have accused us of not being all there mentally either!] Torma chimed in. [On more than one occasion.]

Martin laughed within Mindvoice and nodded his head. [Hah... ain't that the truth!] He saw the clouds approaching fast and took a deep breath. [Piss it on! Don't be late my Bonded Brother!]

[I will be there!] Torma answered.

Then Martin was plunging through the clouds and they could no longer see each other except for flashes of dark color. They were never apart however, and both knew it. They took strength from each other, drew upon the will of each other, and the courage and values that drove them. Martin's dark eyes changed quickly and his fangs grew to their full length as he embraced all of his senses. Even though they were separated he could still feel the wind whipping around Torma and his mind processing the air currents and temperatures and speeds. Connected as they were within Mindvoice and even beyond, they could do this easily, and had for many years.

Martin broke through the clouds and instantly shifted his hand to alter his downward trajectory. His keen wolf eyes saw the dark red scales of the highest dragon five thousand feet below him taking note that the dragon was using the thermals to simply glide forward at the slowest possible speed he could maintain. Martin grunted, knowing this would actually work in his favor.

At least he hoped it would.

A single and exceptionally fast glance to his right and he saw Torma now diving even faster towards the bottom group. He would pass them just as Martin struck from above if their timing was right.

All of the dragons were looking intently at the small clearing below them trying to discern what was taking place. They did not expect an attack from above. They probably had never met anyone insane enough to do such a thing Martin thought to himself.

[Sucks to be you guys!] Martin muttered to himself. The soft, sizzling pop of his psychic knives exploding from his clenched fists was the only sound Martin heard within the confines of his psychic shield.

The dragons below him would hear nothing.

Rakorir was six thousand four hundred and nineteen years of age and among the longest serving of the warrior caste of dragons. Kolan and he had been selected together and he was, for all intents and purposes, Kolan's Lieutenant in most ways. They were only five years apart in age and at times Kolan let this difference go to his head but Rakorir had learned to accept it through the years. The warrior caste of dragons was widely respected among their kind and since all of them were young adults, they were highly sought after by females for mating. Kolan was always accepting offers from females, young and old alike, to mate with them. He got the most attention because of his skill and leadership abilities. Though their Elder Council was only four in number, including Elder Mother Teniri, many thought that the Elder Mother would soon expand that to include an additional spot on the Council because of their growth in population. Many also believed she would select Kolan. This would make him insufferable Rakorir knew, but it would leave him in command of the warrior caste.

He had wanted to descend to the clearing with them, but was now stuck acting in a support role. From everything they had been told and were able to sense within the Etheric realm, the females in the clearing were also young and powerful. Even from his altitude he could see they were lean and healthy and would make powerful mates and deliver strong eggs and children when the time came for them to mature and have eggs. He especially thought the azure scaled...

Rakorir never saw or felt an Etheric presence.

The stabbing pain between his shoulders caused his eyes to explode outward in stunned shock as he twisted and turned with the impact of something on his back. He righted himself quickly and turned his head, his eyes going even wider when he saw the figure of a man in dull black metal armor of some sort, half standing on his back. He caught the gaze of yellow/gold eyes, saw the exposed fangs, and watched as that man lifted both his hands. Strange shimmering knife like projections of what could only be Etheric power.

Hi! Martin barked out. Welcome to the party!

Rakorir saw him slash downward with one of those Etheric projections and to his credit he began to turn and try to throw the man off. It was far too late. The psychic knife slashed clean through his shoulder joint connecting his right wing to his muscles. Rakorir saw no blood, felt no pain, but his entire right wing instantly went limp. Just as he was about to trumpet a warning his body rolled over and the man had leaped away into the clear sky as Rakorir began his plummet to the earth below. With his left wing flapping madly and his body twisting and turning, Rakorir fought madly to stay airborne. One wing could not fully support his weight however and his downward plunge continued.

He would be the first to strike the ground.

It was like landing on solid granite and Martin suppressed the grunt of dull pain as he struck the red scaled dragon squarely between his shoulder blades. Years of flying with Torma without a saddle had given him the ability to quickly and effortlessly adjust his body on the smooth scales. He squeezed his knees together while using his Etheric power to help steady himself and even before Rakorir had realized what was going on, Martin was rising to a half standing position and lifting his arm. He looked up only when the dragon whipped its head around to stare at him in disbelief.

Hi! Martin barked out. Welcome to the party! He bellowed in Mindvoice as he slashed downward. He had decided against taking out both wings to keep the dragons from seriously injuring themselves by not being able to control their fall. One wing would suffice but allow them to at least slow their plummet to a speed and impact that would only knock them silly and perhaps break a bone or two.

Martin was already leaping off the dragon's back even as his psychic knife finished its invisible cut. He had tuned the psychic knife to disrupt nerve endings and cause paralysis as opposed to punching a bloodless hole in their bodies. He would not do that for he honored and loved dragons and would do anything for them just as his son would. It was why Arzoal had made him a Talon Guardian, and he would not do intentional harm unless it was the last resort. The drop was only a few hundred feet to the next dragon below and the gods were certainly watching over him as that dragon was just as enthralled as the first had been with what was happening on the ground and simply gliding slowly along. Using his Etheric power to assist and guide his jump Martin landed in almost the exact same spot upon the yellowish/green scaled dragon. Once more Martin didn't hesitate and slashed across a single wing. He had plotted three directions to go when he broke through the clouds and was following it in exacting nature. As the second dragon bellowed in surprise it drew the attention of the third who was below him. Martin was already airborne when this dragon's eyes went wide as his fellow warrior began to plunge to the earth below. He watched his comrade for the briefest of seconds and then his head snapped back around to see the man landing upon his back. He was prepared for the impact however and twisted his head around to savagely attempt to bite Martin in half.

Martin saw the snout coming and ducked instantly, feeling the huge jaws slam shut over the top of his back. Hey! No biting! Martin screamed out. That's not polite!

The dragon ignored the words that exploded into his head and snapped his head forward once more. It was a mistake he would make only one more time. Just as his jaws opened and were about to close on the man perched on his shoulders and bite him in half, the man swung his left arm as if he was swiping at air and a hammer like blow smashed into his head. It was a blow unlike any he had ever sustained and large white stars exploded into his head and his thoughts became disjointed and fuzzy.

I thought I said no biting! The male voice rang out just before the psychic knife slashed downward for a third time and the dragon lost all feeling in his left wing.

Martin Leonidas leaped from the back of the dragon his eyes focused on the umber colored dragon that now knew he was there and was turning to snatch him within his jaws.

It was an ability that two of Sumar's Tomes were dedicated too completely, using Etheric force to make extraordinary leaps or jumps that would be impossible even for a wolf. He knew Andro had used this skill on several different occasions, but he had yet to attempt it. It reminded him too much of the movie he had seen as a boy under Walter's care. Different men and women with those laser swords he so wished they could make, leaping great distances using their gift. Martin couldn't help but smile at the thought of whoever had made those movies seeing him actually doing what millions thought was impossible and only done in the movies.

Using his mind as the computer and his eyes as the laser, when he had leaped from the third dragon's back it was for a specific point on the dragon now diving on at him. His mind focused and he thought of the details within the Tomes. Direction. Lift. Distance. Concentrate and focus.

It happened far faster and quite unbelievably to the dragon he was attacking. The umber colored Firespitter unleashed a short blast of flame at the gnat of a man who was attacking them thinking he was going to burn the flesh from his body. His stream of flame hit only air however and his red eyes grew large when he felt the tug and impact on his exposed tail. His head snapped around and he spied the man clamoring up the length of his tail like an Artaaya tree monkey scrambled through the trees. His eyes grew wide when the man looked at him and he saw glowing yellow orbs and distinct dual fangs exposed in a snarl.

That was not nice! The man barked easily within the Etheric realm and shredding his shields with consummate ease.

The dragon could only watch as he raised his hands and plunged both of his psychic knives into the dragons back and slashed outward and upward. The dragon bellowed as he felt searing heat pass through the entire left side of his body and he lost all control of his right wing. The man was leaping away into open air as his large bulk rolled over out of control and plummeted for the earth below.

On my way brother! Martin called out within Mindvoice.

I will be there shortly. Torma exclaimed.

Torma had always been different.

That first day on Ukwav only confirmed to all that this was the case. That was the day his life beside his Bonded Brother had begun. Torma had not looked back even once. The offspring of a Heavy Horn father and Firespitter mother, his size alone made him different. His absolute devotion to Isheeni made him different. It had allowed the Elder Mother and other Dragon Elders to grant him permission to take Isheeni as his mate even though she could not bear him children for at least another two to three hundred years. Torma had not cared about that in the least. Her azure scales and musical voice had addicted him from the very beginning. Neither he nor Isheeni ever once imagined things would work out as they did, becoming bonded within Mindvoice to Martin and Aricia, but neither would they trade those experiences for anything in the universe.

The birth of every child, no matter Lycavorian or dragon had been cause for celebration and happiness. As each of their children had been born, the tie between their two families had grown more and more together, until now there was no distinction between the Leonidas clan and the family of Torma and Isheeni. From that very first moment he and Martin had embraced what they had discovered. Embraced and nurtured it. When they had discovered the Tomes of Martin's grandfather, that bond grew even stronger as they studied and practiced in secret at first, then bringing Andro and Elynth into the fold. Even then it seemed as if Sumar knew dragons would be part of the future and many of the Tomes seemed to reflect this. Martin and Torma did not question this for it was right in front of their eyes in the writings and teachings of Sumar.

Much of what their son and daughter shared together naturally because they had bonded while Andro was still in the womb, Martin and Torma had developed and worked harder to obtain. For them it made their bond together that much more sacred and important to each of them and eventually more powerful.

Torma tracked his Bonded Brother through their Etheric connection easily even as he rocketed for the ground and the group of dragons furthest away. They had timed it perfectly and the moment Martin slammed onto Rakorir's back Torma attacked.

His Dragon Armor was fully deployed, turning him into an immense flying tank as he screamed downward at the two unsuspecting dragons beneath him. They made it so easy and Torma easily deduced these dragons had not fought anything larger than a stag in the forest while hunting. He watched their heads shift downward as the colossal shadow below them got larger and it wasn't until he was almost upon them that they thought to look up. Torma saw their eyes go wide when they did this as they spotted the massive black armored form of a dragon larger than any they had seen almost upon them. Their reaction was predictable and far too slow. Torma's wings snapped straight out to each side accompanied by a gunshot like pop and the armored edges of his wings smashed into the inner shoulder of each dragon as he plunged between them.

Their bellows of pain and surprise filled his mind as both dragons rolled inward towards each other, bounced off one another and began to fall in a wide looping spin, their uninjured wings flapping madly in an attempt to keep them in the air.

Torma twisted in mid air, gaining altitude and feeling Martin as he struck the third dragon. He didn't hesitate and came up under the third dragon above him as his head lifted skyward to discover why his comrade had cried out in surprise. Torma saw his body begin to shift as he realized what was going on and he simply slammed into him from below with all of his power and speed behind him. The khaki scaled dragon trumpeted in surprise and pain as he was struck by the six ton missile wearing strange armor, one of his rear legs breaking from the impact. As Torma flew upwards he rolled inverted, slapping the dragon's snout and neck with his armored wing and knocking him senseless as he began to fall. Torma flared his wings, came to an abrupt halt in midair, glanced around and then shot like a cannon for the last dragon. It was a light blue scaled beast and it was in a dive just above Martin intending to snatch his Bonded Brother in its jaws.

So intent on catching Martin, the blue scaled beast missed Torma entirely until he saw a flash out of the corner of his eye and turned his head just as Torma's body snapped over the top of him and his Heavy Horn tail, encased in Dragon Armor, smacked him directly between the eyes with unerring accuracy and no small amount of force. The blue scaled dragon tumbled over out of control and bellowing in pain from the blow.

On my way brother! Martin's voice burst into his mind.

I will be there shortly. Torma answered, dipping his wing and rocketing for the ground beneath him even as his keen eyes saw the impacts of three dragons on the ground below. They were at five thousand feet and Torma inched closer to his speeding brother, Martin's body tightly drawn against itself. It was a simple matter to ease alongside him and then adjust his wings to match his speed.

May I offer you a ride? My rates are cheap! Torma announced looking at Martin with bright golden eyes as he fell beside his Bonded Brother.

That's because there are no in-flight meals! Martin chimed back at him.

I said I was cheap Martin my Bonded Brother... not easy. Torma answered.

Martin began laughing hysterically as he drifted closer to Torma in that odd position and reached out to grasp the sides of the Mark Eleven saddle. He was still laughing as he jammed his legs forward and the Dragon Armor Bracers closed around his thighs and sensing this Torma snapped his wings out and lifted his tail upward. The maneuver was one that every Bonded Pair learned early in their training and at three hundred meters Torma executed a near perfect ninety degree shift in direction and was rocketing over the small clearing with dozens of pairs of eyes watching in shock as he unleashed a trumpet of command and defiance that deafened those who were watching.

As her warriors began to drop from the sky above Teniri felt it open before her like door. Never had she felt such staggering power within the Etheric realm in all of her years. Even Murano, a Praetorian of the highest caliber did not match what she was feeling now. Her eyes grew even wider when out of the nearby lake rose a dark green scaled dragon, that same glistening black armor extending around his body as he lifted into the air and then fell upon one of Kolan's warriors in an instant.

Miath didn't pause and didn't hesitate as he used his speed and weight to drive one dragon to the ground while bringing his hybrid tail, encased in armor, whipping around like a mallet. It struck the next closest dragon squarely in the muzzle and sent him hurtling through the timber from the force of the blow. Her head snapped around and she saw Arzoal smash her wing into another of Kolan's warriors sending him sprawling along the ground with tremendous force. She watched as the other three females began a dance of combat Teniri had never seen. With their armored bodies they used their tails and armored wings like clubs as they lifted onto their rear talons and moved upright.

Aurith's hybrid tail was the one that connected with Kolan's snout and staggered him to the side. Kolan was of sturdy stock however and he regained his balance quickly, turning on Aurith with a hiss of anger.

Wench! He screamed out.

Aurith laughed at him as she whipped her right wing around and snapped it into his unprotected side drawing a grunt of pain. Wench? Is that the best you got! My brother Jeth swears better than that on a bad day!

Aurith lifted into the air and made a short hop into the clearing, flicking her tail back at Kolan seductively as she did and feeling her father approaching. Do you know how to use it big bad dragon warrior? She taunted Kolan.

Kolan had regained enough of his senses to operate, but allowed his anger to override good sense. His head snapped around. With me! He told the dragon beside him. She can not take us both!

The second dragon nodded and both he and Kolan lifted off and shot straight for where Aurith waited. They made it only a hundred meters before an terrible weight slammed into their backs and thick, sharp talons pressed into their scaled heads. Both of them were slammed head first into the ground in clouds of dirt and dust, the air leaving their lungs in great gushes from the impact, assisted by the massive talons gripping their bodies.

Oh shit! That had to hurt! Martin's voice bellowed in Mindvoice.

Kolan and his comrade grunted in pain as more weight was pressed onto their heads and the huge talons squeezed tightly. Kolan heard the snickering and his eyes lifted to see Aurith come to a stop in front of him.

Crush you like a bug! She spat. I did warn you! Say hello to my father.

Kolan's eyes shifted once more and he saw the huge head appear in his line of sight. A massive head nearly twice his size and covered in glistening black armor, but not hiding the golden eyes or the razor sharp teeth. Torma unleashed a trumpet of rage directly into Kolan's face from only two feet away.

Aurith laughed. Like a bug. She reiterated.

STOP THIS! Teniri screamed now. Her violet eyes gazed at Torma in wonder and awe, as well as the simple man who sat on his back.

Isheeni rushed up to stand beside Torma, glaring at him from under her armor. Did you two just do what I think you did? She exclaimed. Martin Leonidas?

Well... no... hum... maybe a little. Martin answered.

This can't be happening. Teniri's voice echoed within Mindvoice causing all of them to turn.

Arzoal moved up closer to her. And why not Teniri? She asked as she retracted the armor around her head only. She was still wary of what these dragons would do and she truly did not want to have to hurt them. There are questions still unanswered in the universe.

Teniri's head snapped around and gazed at her. She... Arzoal told me that just...

Arzoal nodded her head. Just before you boarded the ship and departed Elear. I remember the day as if it was yesterday Teniri. You were so worried you would let me down. It appears you have gone beyond what I had ever hoped.

Elder Mother? Teniri gasped softly. It... is it really you?

There was a trumpet of anger from the side and both their heads whipped around to see the dragon Martin had punched rear up beside Torma and try to snatch him from the saddle on Torma's back. Teniri watched with stunned eyes as Martin simply lifted his left hand without turning and make a fist. The dragon froze in mid jump unable to move and Martin turned his head slowly to look at him.

Didn't I tell you no biting! Martin barked out. It's rude and not at all becoming a dragon!

Martin drove his hand down and the dragon with it. His upper body slammed into the ground hard and he grunted in pain.

Talon Guardians! Teniri gasped loudly and this caused all of her dragons to perk up and take notice. I... never did I believe that...

Who else would have the power and ability to smite your brave dragons from the sky Teniri? Arzoal asked softly. This is Torma... and King Martin Leonidas. Two of the four Talon Guardians who now walk among us.

Four? Teniri gasped.

Arzoal nodded. Martin's first born son and Torma's oldest daughter are the other two. She told her. A Bonded Pair just as their father's are. And equally as powerful together as they are singly.

Teniri looked back at Martin. He is... he is a Praetorian! She gasped. I can feel the power within him! Just like Murano!

Martin's eyes narrowed and he leaped off Torma's back, his Dragon Armor retracting from around his head. A Praetorian? He said. There is a Praetorian here? On this planet?

Teniri nodded. Murano. The Chief Elder's brother.

Teniri... did any... did any of the others survive? Arzoal asked softly. These... these brave warriors with you are too young. Did any of...

Yes! Teniri almost shouted. All of us! We... She stopped talking and looked at Arzoal her eyes wide. By the grace of our ancestors... you truly live!

Arzoal couldn't help but chuckle even given the circumstances. I am rather happy about that yes. You have grown into a beautiful dragon Teniri.

How... how can... we waited for so long. Teniri spoke looking at her. We hoped for so many centuries that you would come. How Arzoal? How is it possible that you are here now? Here with two Talon Guardians and grandchildren?

I will tell you everything. Arzoal told her. All there is to know. But first... these Pralors... they are attempting to force their will on Martin and those of his kind. We do not come here for violence or oppression Teniri. We come for discovery and answers. Will you help us?

The answer was instantaneous as Arzoal had hoped it would be. You... you could have killed us easily. Teniri said. In... in my ignorance I believed us superior. I have forgotten so much of what you taught me Elder Mother. I can not refuse the commands of my Elder Mother and two Talon Guardians! I will not go against every instinct in my body! I...

Martin suddenly groaned in pain and grabbed for his head. "Oh shit!" He moaned.

Martin! Arzoal shouted. Martin what is it!

"No!" Martin screamed. "No! No! No! Fedor!"

NO! Torma's voice bellowed in Mindvoice causing all of them to wince. In a move that was faster than any of Teniri's dragons had seen another of their kind execute, Torma exploded forward, snatched Martin into his talons and was screaming into the sky. They could only watch as Martin scrambled up his foreleg and into the saddle and then Torma was rocketing out of view over the tree tops.*

Arzoal turned to Isheeni and Aurith who were standing there in similar agony of their own. Isheeni! Aurith! What is wrong?

Fedor! Isheeni screamed out.

Something has happened to Fedor! Aurith screamed before leaping into the air and following her father.

Arzoal's eyes were wide. By the gods no! She stammered before she too exploded into the air and was racing for the science station.

CHAPTER TWELVE

STATION ZERO ONE FIVE

Garan stopped at the intersection of two corridors and squatted against the wall as his men followed suit. Sashan moved up beside him, clutching the sidearm.

"What?" He hissed angrily, still smarting from the tongue lashing Murano had given him in front of Garan and the others.

Garan motioned to the ceiling. "They have deactivated the central lighting." Garan spoke. "Only emergency lighting is left. There will be many shadows and dark areas we can not see into and this station is massive Elder Sashan."

"They more than likely were unable to determine how to power the entire station. They are primitives Garan." Sashan told him. "We must take both medical and the Command Center at the same time."

"If we proceed down this corridor it will take us to medical." Garan spoke. "From there we can access the backup computer terminals and retake the station's power. I will send half our force down this second corridor towards the Command Center to secure that and remove any of these people."

Sashan nodded. "Do it quickly!" He hissed. "Lorendo and the others are approaching from the second transport. I want the station secured before they get here!"

Garan ignored him and motioned with his hand at his line of men. He held up two fingers and motioned down the second corridor. He watched as every second security soldier pulled out of the file and began to move towards the alternate corridor. Garan looked at the remaining men and nodded for them to follow him. Garan hefted his X90 Phased Pulse Rifle and began moving cautiously down the dimly lit corridor. He fought down the fear that coursed through him and tried to remain as calm as possible. Whoever these men and women were they had taken out fifteen of his most highly trained men and women and did it without a single loss on their end. Garan had begun to doubt what the Elders were saying before they even left the ship. Praetorian Murano had more combat experience than all of them combined. He had fought in hundreds of battles if the history archives were accurate, killed thousands of Scourge, and the Elders were just dismissing him out of hand. Garan may have been a simple soldier, but he knew when the politics of events was directing the military portion and he knew that was never good. He needed to show his men he was in charge and keep them calm. Elder Sashan now seemed to only be concerned with taking the station before Elder Lorendo arrived. Garan knew that all depended on how well these primitives had prepared for them.

Garan doubted very much that they were simply standing around waiting for them to come to the Command Center.

The column of Convention Security troops heading for the Command Center thought they were making good time. At least it seemed that way to the man leading the detachment. They were in a long corridor now that led directly to the Command Center blast doors. Sealed doors lined the steel gray corridor but all of them appeared to be locked. No doubt the simple minded primitives did not have the knowledge to open them he thought to himself as his eyes fell on the main blast doors a hundred meters down the slightly curving corridor. He had twenty-nine men moving behind him, all of them tense and alert. It wouldn't help them in the least.

The third man in the file moved forward now that they had stopped. He settled next to their Senior Lieutenant and Garan's First Officer.

"Lieutenant." The man hissed softly. "I am detecting lifesigns in all directions as well as the command center."

The man looked at him. "How many inside the center?"

"Four." The man answered.

"The rest must be sensor ghosts!" The lieutenant answered. "They have those invisibility contraptions remember!"

"It is like it was in the vehicle bay sir! The lifesigns were accurate! We just could not see them visually!" The man hissed quietly not convinced. "If the scanner is accurate now then they are all around us!"

"Impossible!" The Lieutenant snapped. "Elder Sashan said they are primitives! They have no knowledge of advanced tactics or how to conduct ambushes!"

"They ambushed us in the vehicle bay!"

"They got lucky!" The lieutenant snapped. "That is all!"

"Funny thing about luck." The female voice spoke from directly in front of them. Their heads snapped around to see the slight shimmering in the dim corridor and then the lithe figure of the woman appearing in front of them as some sort of light bending shield was lowered. She wore that semi shiny black metal armor, and the helmet she wore covered almost her entire face except for those blazing azure colored blue eyes and long dual fangs that protruded from her beneath her upper lip. "You're all out of it!"

Aricia Leonidas, Anome to Martin Leonidas and his youngest and most militant queen, stepped toward the lieutenant and drove the heel of her right hand directly into his jaw with all of her substantial pureblood wolf strength. Aricia had made an oath to herself that warm day on Enurrua. The day her beloved Martin reclaimed what was always his. She vowed to never be weak again. Over the ensuing years Aricia had accomplished just that. Martin had shattered an entire empire to reclaim her and Aricia Leonidas had become the core of the combined strength of his Queens. Any threat to the man she worshiped, to her fellow Queens who she loved just as deeply, that threat she would eliminate without a moment's hesitation. The man's head whipped around as if it was on a top, the force of the blow causing his face to smash into the wall with a sickening thud. His eyes rolled into his head instantly, his body going limp, and he slid to the floor out of the fight. The man with the scanner looked up in horror at Aricia, saw her wild blue eyes, and opened his mouth to plead for his life. Aricia slammed the butt of her retracted Nehtes into the man's face with little fanfare and he quickly joined his comrade in the blackness of unconsciousness.

"Lozen!" Her command voice rang out forcefully and echoed down the corridor in all directions.
(Attack)

Every single door that had previously been sealed, opened instantly at Aricia's shouted command and thirteen Durcunusaan stepped into the corridor from either side, their A4s all retooled with the non-lethal ammunition and spitting out damage before the Pralor security troops even knew what was happening. The sleep rounds punched through the lightly armored clothing of the security troops because of the Dragon Armor tips. The darts were painful when they entered the skin, penetrating about a millimeter and a half before releasing their sleep agent, but the chemical reacted so quickly that most of them never felt it. The sleep agent had been easy to develop and load into the ammunition. It was a similar agent that the Krypteria used when they wanted to take someone alive for questioning.

Aricia slipped to the side and dropped to one knee bringing up her KM12 in one smooth motion. She fired three times in quick succession, all three of the powerful sleeping darts stabbing into the neck of the next closest Pralor security troop. It was over quickly after that, none of the security troops getting a single shot off in the corridor because of the speed and ferociousness of the ambush.

"Very nicely done Aricia." Helen's voice echoed in her implant. "Nicely done indeed."

Aricia smiled at Helen's words as she lowered her KM12 and rose to her feet. "How many remain Feravomir?" She asked.

"Thirty-two." Helen answered immediately. "Wait... make that thirty. Fedor and Iama just took out two from the rear of the second group."

"How close are they to Melyanna's position?" Aricia asked.

"Too close." Helen replied. "Why would they continue there?"

"The computers in medical can access the entire station." Wayonn's voice chimed in. "They won't be able to override the security measures I put in place but they can gain limited access."

Aricia looked at her Durcunusaan detail as they began pushing the sleeping bodies into the different rooms. "Daniel... your ambushes are no longer needed. Can you move to assist Anja?"

"Already heading there." Danny's voice echoed.

"Uh-oh!" Helen's voice broke in. "Not good! Not good!"

"Feravomir?" Aricia asked.

"The external sensors were taken out... but the portable motion sensors Cirith planted are still active!" Helen snapped. "I'm detecting another force moving for the vehicle bay entrance on the west!"

"Number?" Aricia asked.

"Fifty-three from what I can tell." Helen replied. "Avi?"

-Motion sensors are accurate Feravomir. Fifty-three additional Pralor personnel will enter the north vehicle bay in approximately forty-two seconds at their current rate of advance-

"Sibfla!" Aricia cursed. "Dysea... can you, Bella and Cirith move to Anja's position? She and For'mya have only Eirene, Miseo, Muton and four Durcunusaan. The rest with her are support personnel!" Aricia asked. "Fedor and Iama split from us and are moving alone but they can't stop thirty troops on their own."

"I will leave Cody and half our force here to finish securing these Pralor troops." Dysea's voice spoke. "Bella, Cirith and I will take the rest and move to Melyanna now!"

"Daniel... bring your people to me! I will meet you by the main entrance!" Aricia ordered. "Send your surprise to Anja!"

"Done! Remain inside the facility Aricia! We'll hit this new group like you did the first!" Danny answered.

"Feravomir?" Aricia questioned.

"Move quickly child." Helen told her. "Martin and Torma have engaged ten Pralor dragons while Arzoal and Isheeni distract the rest!"

"They... they are fighting ten dragons alone!" Aricia exclaimed. "How?" She reached for her beloved within Mindvoice and only faced a solid wall of psychic power. "Helen... he is blocking me! All of us! How..."

“Trust me child... you do not wish to know how.” Helen answered. “Move quickly Aricia! We have problems of our own!”

Aricia looked up. “Leave them!” She exclaimed loudly. “Back to the entrance! Now!”

“STOP!” The Pralor soldier screamed as he leveled his PPR at Iama’s face.

Iama did indeed stop, for she had no desire to be shot by one of those weapons. She quickly lifted her hands into the air showing that she had no weapon. Her tail twitched madly behind her in nervous apprehension. She and Fedor had taken out two additional troops before splitting up inside a room and doubling back. She watched as the two men moved closer to her, the odd looking rifle never leaving its position centered on her face. Iama’s green eyes darted back and forth regretting that she ever left Fedor’s side. They had worked seamlessly so far and she had to go and break up that successful team, insisting they could take out more if they split up. Fedor had reluctantly agreed, though Iama knew she was only doing it to show him that she was a strong female and worthy of his attentions as a Prince.

She didn’t understand that he had already decided that.

“Get down!” The man screamed at her. “Get on your knees! Do it now!”

Iama’s eyes narrowed and she shook her head. “No!” She spoke trying to keep her voice neutral.

“I said get on your knees wench!” The Pralor shouted once more as his partner moved to the side, his eyes traveling up and down Iama’s body in a way that she had seen countless times in the past.

“I kneel to no man!” Iama hissed angrily now. “Never again!”

“He said get on your knees wench!” The second man stepped towards her and Iama’s eyes flew open in surprise when the shimmering field of the PSG winked into existence, began to dissipate and then Fedor was beside the man. And already in motion.

Fedor hit the man with a ridge hand strike that was fueled by anger at his words to Iama. Fedor was by no means a small man at six feet one inches tall and two hundred and twenty-one pounds of solid muscle. He was every inch a Spartan and a Leonidas in muscular definition and power. His training sessions with his medwan and his Uncle Daniel had shaped him into a very lethal young man with elven and wolf speed and strength. As with all those who were even partially Lycavorian, his bone structure was much heavier and denser, and therefore any kind of physical blow from him would be devastating. His medwan’s instructions were clear however, they were not to permanently injure any of the Pralors. That did not mean he could not hurt them for speaking badly of Iama. The blow struck the man just beneath his lower lip, his jaw popping like a shot and his feet flying up as his body left the ground. It carried enough power and momentum to flip him completely over and drop him to the floor unconscious before he had even completed the spin.

Fedor was drawing his KM12 as he snapped his long leg up and his armored leg and foot shattered the rifle’s frame, smashing it from the man’s grip in two pieces as he jammed the KM12 into the man’s neck with little gentleness.

“Iama’Juturi kneels to no one! Ever!” Fedor growled viciously and pulled the trigger of the KM12 from point blank range. The darts struck the man’s neck with such force they flung his upper body back and he slammed into the wall before slumping limply to the floor.

Iama gazed at Fedor with adoring green eyes as he lowered the KM12 and turned back to her. She didn’t hesitate for even an instant when his arms reached for her and she stepped close to him, her small hands spreading across the front of his chest armor. At another time, with the feelings and emotions Iama felt surging through her for Fedor, she would have gladly let him take her however he wanted. Iama’Juturi nevertheless, she was going to be so very surprised at the actions of this young Prince. Actions that would alter her path forever and cement her feelings for Fedor no matter what else happened in her life.

“I could have taken them.” She stated finally looking up into his eyes.

Iama saw those dark eyes twinkle down at her and he nodded. “No doubt. Without even breaking a sweat I imagine.” He spoke with a smile. “I prefer we stay together now though.”

Iama nodded her head quickly, very happy to oblige in that regard. She grasped his hand tightly as he took it within his own. “Come... they are getting too close to my mothers in the medical center. We need to move down the secondary corridors and get to them before these Pralors do.”

Iama didn't need to be told twice. The relief sweeping through her because they were back together was more than she could express. She was going to remain attached to his hip from this moment on.

Murano turned when Lorendo and Daron led the second group of Convention Security forces into the vehicle bay. He and Mari had gathered all of the unconscious men into a single area for treatment and protection. Lorendo strode into the bay with the look of a conquering King until he saw the bodies.

“What is this?” He gasped. “Murano! I demand you explain this to me immediately!”

Murano glared at the man. “You demand nothing from a Praetorian Elder Lorendo!” He snarled back. “I told you this was a mistake! I warned you that you had no idea what we would face! Your ignorance caused this and now Sashan has foolishly followed your advice and council and gone into the station after those defending it did this!” He waved his hand around him indicating the unconscious troops.

“Primitives... primitives did this?” Daron gasped in shock.

“Not so primitive it seems.” Mari spat as she tossed her helmet off her head finally; glad to be rid of it.

“Sister!” Kesyla almost shouted as she rushed to her. “Mari...” Kesyla began inspecting her younger sister for injuries and Mari shook her head.

“I am fine sister.” Mari said with a smile. “I am not injured. Uncle Murano kept me safe!”

“How did you do this?” Kesyla asked her vehemently. “Father will be enraged with you for going against his instructions!”

“It doesn't matter now Kesyla!” Mari said. “I am here and I have seen exactly what Uncle warned us about! They... they had these invisible shields sister and they appeared out of thin air to attack us.”

Lorendo glared at Murano. “What happened here?” He demanded.

“Just what my niece Mari said. Didn't you hear her?” Murano told him. “They had some kind of invisibility shields. We could pick up their lifesigns but could not see them with our eyes. When Sashan sent a man to breach the doors they struck first and did this.”

“They... our men are dead uncle?” Kesyla stammered.

Murano shook his head quickly. “No Kesyla... only incapacitated. Some sort of sleep agent I expect.” He held out his hand to Lorendo with a handful of the 12.7mm darts in his palm. “Not so primitive that they did not design a sleep agent that acts instantly and could take out fifteen of our vaunted Convention Security Troops... hey Lorendo.”

“Where is Sashan?” Lorendo growled.

“He entered the facility.” Murano spoke quickly. “I have lost contact with the second tier assault team and Teniri is no longer answering me within the Etheric realm. I can feel her and the other dragons but nothing more. None of them are answering.”

“We must go after Elder Sashan and support him!” Daron gasped.

Murano looked at him. “By all means nephew... go chasing after Sashan and his men in a station that we do not control! You do not understand what is going on here do you Lorendo?” He spat. “They were waiting for us! They knew we were coming, what we would try to do and they were waiting in ambush!” Murano stepped closer to him. “Not exactly the behavior of an inferior and primitive species is it?”

Lorendo looked around for a moment at the unconscious troops and finally back to Murano. “They... they got lucky.” He spoke finally. “This will not happen again!”

“Are you a fool?” Murano hissed. “We no longer have contact with the Second Tier Assault Team! Teniri is not responding! This entire operation was ill-conceived and you are to blame!”

“We do not need your advice or your help!” Lorendo snarled at him. “Why Delnash insisted you come is beyond me!”

Murano nodded his head. “Me as well.” He spoke. “You have done a fine job of screwing up this operation all by yourselves!”

Lorendo ignored him and turned to the leader of the detachment he was with. “Senior Lieutenant... you will lead us into the station now. We will enter and assist Elder Sashan in subduing the primitives inside!”

The man nodded. “As you order Elder Lorendo!”

Murano stepped forward. “Kesyla will remain with me.” He snarled. “I will not allow you to put my nieces in harms way. If Daron wishes to risk his life by going with you, he can make that decision. You will not endanger my brother’s daughters however.”

Lorendo’s eyes cut to where Kesyla was standing beside Mari and looking very much like she agreed with her Uncle. “So be it. We will not need her skills until after we have secured the station.” He spoke. “You will remain out here Murano! I do not need you interfering in this operation any more than you already have!”

Murano held out his hands, palms facing up. “By all means.” He stated.

“...piegn tukannupaees!” Anja hissed harshly. (Stupid sonsofbitches)

For'mya chuckled from beside her at the back of the large empty metal crate they knelt behind. “Yes... you will get no argument from me there.” She stated.

“You think they are all like this?” Anja asked her

“I certainly hope not.” For'mya answered. “Martin’s patience will not last very long if they are.”

“You got that right.” Anja quipped. “For'mya I...”

For'mya nodded her head. “He is blocking me as well Melyanna. All of us.” She said softly. “We must trust in him and his skill.”

“Big lug!” Anja snapped. “He better not get himself hurt.” She glanced back to where Muton, Miseo and Eirene were behind similar crates in front of the medical storage room where all of the techs and engineers that had come down to the surface were currently positioned. Her jade green eyes cut to the right and she saw Duewa with the five other Durcumusaan positioned by the second entrance into the medical bay. The third they left unguarded as it led directly back towards the secondary vehicle entrance and Dysea was leading half her force towards them from that direction.

“Coming in mothers!” Fedor’s voice erupted over their COM units and they both turned to see a wall grate in the back wall smash inward. They watched Fedor slide out and then reach for Iama behind him. He quickly pulled her to her feet and then holding tightly to her hand he moved up to a second metal crate behind his mothers.

“Fedor!” For'mya hissed. “You should have stayed with Aricia and the others!”

“Iama and I are fine mother... thank you for asking.” Fedor told her with a wide smile.

Anja shook his head. “Wiseass!” Anja quipped. “Why do all our children have to be like him?” She stated.

“I have wondered that many times through the years.” For'mya stated looking at her son sternly. Her eyes softened quickly however as she looked at him and his broad smile. Iama noticed this and soon she was smiling as well realizing that Queen For'mya was more relieved than angry.

“Anja?” Helen’s voice broke into their implants and she didn’t sound happy.

Anja reached up and touched her ear. “Go Helen!”

“Anja... another force has entered the station.” Helen explained quickly. “Aricia and Daniel could not get to the entrance in time to delay them! They are moving too quickly. Whoever is leading them has an intimate knowledge of this station from the way they are progressing through the corridors. They will link up with the first force in seconds! Daniel and Aricia are moving behind them but...”

“They aren’t going to be able to stop them.” Anja said.

“Not before they arrive at your location.” Helen spoke.

“Oh... that’s just peachy.” Anja spat. “Dysea?” Anja asked.

“Not soon enough.” Helen answered. “We just didn’t leave enough people!”

“Anja... let them come! We have the station schematics up!” Wayonn’s voice broke in. “We can direct Daniel and Aricia to come up behind them! Avi will move Dysea and her force through the secondary corridors Fedor was using and have them come through the research labs! They are moving down the main corridor to medical. We can catch them between us!”

“Their sensors are obviously picking us up even with the PSGs Val'istar.” For'mya exclaimed. “They will see Daniel and the others coming!”

“No they won’t!” Wayonn said. “Trust me.”

Anja looked at For'mya. "Tell Dysea and the others to hurry Wayonn." Anja said.

Wayonn whirled away from the console he was standing at and turned to Avi. "Avi... can you initiate a Polarion Pulse through the station from here?"

Avi turned to face him. -Affirmative-

Wayonn nodded. "Level five. Full dispersion to all corridors and rooms."

-It will render internal station scanners useless Wayonn- Avi said. -We will be blind-

Wayonn nodded his head as he glanced at the internal screens they had up. "And it will also knock out their sensors as well. Then the odds will be even." He froze when his eyes fell upon the monitor and he stepped closer to it. "Wha..."

Helen looked at him. "Grandfather?" She questioned.

Wayonn moved closer to the screen and reached up to touch it. "Avi... this is current in the main vehicle bay?" He questioned.

-Yes- Avi replied. -Three Pralors. One male and two females. They seem to have set up a triage area for those knocked unconscious by Queen Aricia's initial attack. I did not deem them as a threat-

"Wayonn?" Helen asked again.

"I... I know this man." Wayonn spoke softly.

-Praetorian Murano- Avi spoke almost as an afterthought. -My internal scanners recognized him upon entering the station-

"Murano!" Wayonn gasped. "Son vada carians! I thought... I thought all the Praetorians were lost! When we returned and... one of the transmissions we intercepted... it was speaking how things would be different if the Praetorians hadn't been wiped out in the initial years of the second invasion!"

"Grandfather?" Helen asked again coming to her feet now. "A Praetorian? Here? Is that why Martin and I..."

Wayonn nodded. "Yes. Paired as you are as Paladin and Mage... you would have sensed him... if even faintly." He whirled around again. "Why didn't you inform me Avi?" Wayonn barked.

Avi met his angry gaze unfazed. -Identifying the individual Pralors as they entered the station was not a primary function Wayonn. Defense of the station was-

"Anse Avi! Do you detect any others that your databanks recognize?" Wayonn asked.

-I have confirmed the identity of several individual Pralors Wayonn. Mostly from ancient news reports within Pralor space- Avi answered. -Only one that really matters however-

"Who?" Wayonn asked.

Avi turned to face him now. -Pralor Lorendo- Avi answered.

Wayonn's eyes flew open. "Lorendo! He's here! In the station?"

-He arrived with the second force that entered ninety seconds ago- Avi answered. -I was... I was not pleased to detect him-

“Helen... remain here and monitor the others!” Wayonn spoke quickly turning back to her.

“Where... grandfather where are you going?” Helen asked.

Wayonn gripped her hands. “I know this man child.” He exclaimed with a smile Helen had never seen from him before. “Murano is a Praetorian that fought beside me and Sumar. He can... he can help us. He can stop all this!”

“Are you so sure?” Helen asked.

Wayonn nodded. “I’m sure. He will recognize me... if he hasn’t already felt me.”

“You have not lowered your shields far enough for anyone aside from those of us who know you to detect your presence.” Helen spoke.

“At Martin’s request.” He answered. “But Murano still would have sensed me regardless Helen. He may not know what to make of it... but he would still have sensed me. Just as he no doubt senses Martin. I must go to him and get him to help me stop this foolishness. If that ronnus Lorendo is here then things could go very wrong.” He leaned over quickly and kissed her cheek. “Remain here with Avi and direct the others as we discussed. I will get to Murano and try to end all this before someone is seriously hurt.”

Helen said nothing else as Wayonn moved for the doors to the Command Center.

Lorendo came up on Sashan as his detachment began to settle on either side of the corridor to medical. “Sashan!” Lorendo spat as he knelt next to him. “This is outrageous! They are primitives! You should have taken the station by now!”

Sashan’s eyes narrowed. “Do not tell me how to do my duty!” He snarled back. “They were far more prepared and skilled than you led us to believe Lorendo!”

Lorendo quickly changed his tone of voice. “Yes... I saw our men in the vehicle bay.” He spoke.

“I have lost contact with our force that was to come in the secondary entrance. We heard many explosions that our sensors said were of a concussive nature and then nothing.” Sashan told him. “We can detect their life signs but they do not answer on COMs! The detail we sent to secure the Command Center has not reported in and they are not retuning my calls! There are perhaps two dozen or more life signs within Medical but they are not firing at us and they are not coming out to meet us!” Sashan barked. “And I know they have additional forces moving towards us from two different directions!”

“Then we must rush them now!” Lorendo stated.

“Rush them?” Sashan gasped.

“We must secure Medical before their additional forces can overwhelm us! From there we can regain control of the station and flood it with Phelephene Gas!” Lorendo hissed. “You must... you must use stronger means Sashan!”

“Delnash was clear!” Sashan barked. “We are not to do permanent harm to them!”

“And if we do not take the station they will take all of us prisoner and we will be at their mercy!” Lorendo shouted. “Do you wish to be at the mercy of primitives Sashan? I most certainly do not!”

“Lorendo...”

“Damn it man!” Lorendo snarled. “What is the death of a few primitives in comparison to our people?” He spat viciously. “Use our Graviton Spike grenades and then charge them! What the grenades have not cleared out will be too stunned to act! Shoot any of them with a weapon!”

The Security soldier dropped beside Sashan. “Elder Sashan! We have lost our portable scanners!” He nearly squealed.

“What?” Sashan exclaimed. “How?”

“A Polarion Pulse of some sort!” The man replied quickly. “None of them work!”

“We must go now Sashan!” Lorendo snarled.

Sashan slammed his hand down on the COM unit on his belt and brought it to his lips. “Elder Sashan to TALISMAN! We have the primitives trapped in Medical and are executing a hard entry! I will contact you when it is done!”

TALISMAN

“...can't we scan them Dehov?” Delnash hissed angrily.

“They are within the station Chief Elder. The Modulating shields are preventing us from scanning the interior.” Dehov answered looking at his XO slowly.

“What about Teniri and the other dragons?” Delnash demanded. “Why has she not given us a report?”

Dehov shook his head. “I do not know Chief Elder. She is not answering your calls within the Etheric realm?”

Delnash shook his head. “No!” He snapped. “How long could it possibly take to subdue a few dozen primitives and lower those shields?”

“The station is very large Chief Elder.” Dehov offered.

“Lorendo knows our Science Stations like his own home!” Delnash snapped.

“Commander! Incoming signal! It's from Elder Sashan!”

“Let's hear it!” Dehov barked.

“...have the primitives trapped in Medical and are executing a hard entry. I will contact you when it is done!”

Delnash looked at Dehov when his intake of breath was the only sound on the bridge as everything had come to a stop. “Dehov! What is wrong?” Delnash asked. “What is this hard entry that Sashan is talking of?”

Dehov looked at him. “They are going...”

“What?” Delnash roared.

“They are going to us explosives to breach Medical Chief Elder.” Dehov stammered. “They will effect entry then with our weapons set at their highest level.”

Delnash's eyes grew wide. “What?” He screamed. “I did not authorize that! I did not agree to that! Get him back! Get him back!”

“Elder Sashan has severed the link from his end Chief Elder!” The COM officer shouted.

“No brother.” He said softly. “You have seen a fraction of the blood that lies down this road. You have seen nothing to compare to that. No one here in this room has seen anything to compare to that. Not like I have seen.”

Murano's words thundered in Delnash's head now like one of the storms on Artaaya as it ripped its way across the surface. Images flashed through his mind. Images he did not wish to see in real life.

“A ship!” He barked loudly. “Prepare a ship! I'm going down there!”

“Chief Elder no!” Dehov exclaimed.

“By our Ancestors get me a ship!” He screamed out. “This is wrong! I gave them no authority to conduct themselves in such a way! I do not want the blood of primitives on my hands! Now get me a ship Commander!”

Mari looked up from the peaceful face of the soldier she was checking. His breathing was normal and even, just as if he was sleeping, yet no matter what she did he would not wake up. She turned slowly to look at her uncle and her soft blue eyes grew wide as she saw the older man exit the entry hatch, the strange looking sidearm leveled at her uncle's back.

“Unc... Uncle?” She gasped.

Murano didn't look up from the soldier he was checking. "The agent they used must have been tailored specifically for this purpose and fashioned into the ammunition for their weapons. This was not some random act, they planned for this Mari."

"Uncle!" Mari snapped causing Murano and her sister to look up quickly towards her. Murano's head didn't move when he felt him and Kesyla's hands went to her mouth in fearful shock.

Murano began to drop his hand ever so slowly towards where he kept his Praetorian Saber Staff. It was an extendable staff with double sided blades on one end and a sharp stabbing point on the other. It was only six feet long when fully extended but in the hands of a Praetorian it was lethal. It was the standard weapons of all Praetorians; most of them swearing off any kind of firearm type weapons in lieu of their powers. It was also a much more practical weapon when wading through hordes of Scourge Elites or warrior class drones.

"Do not try to draw your Saber Staff Murano." He heard the voice speak. "A Praetorian you may be, but you will not beat the projectiles from this weapon I have pointed at your back."

Murano felt the warmth spread through him at the voice. A voice he knew. A voice he had not heard in over thirty-five millennia. He let his hand drift away from his Saber Staff and he slowly lifted them into the air. "It has... it has been more years than I care to remember since I last heard that voice." Murano spoke softly. "It is you isn't it? Tell me it is you Wayonn." He spoke as he turned fully.

Wayonn moved down to the bottom of the ramp incline, the KM12 still leveled at Murano's chest. Memories came rushing back to him as he viewed the man. A very young and skilled Praetorian. One who Sumar had praised on more than one occasion and a Praetorian that he insured was always fighting nearby when they went on a mission. "It is me." Wayonn told him moving closer. "It is me Murano. We thought... we thought our people were lost! We thought the Praetorians forever silenced!"

Murano shook his head. "We... we thought the same of you old friend." He said quickly. "When you were lost... when you and Sumar were lost we thought all hope died with you! You live... does that, could that mean...?"

Wayonn shook his head slowly. "No. Sumar... my Praetorian and my friend died long ago Murano. Fighting for what he believed in. What he loved." He answered as he tried to keep emotions he hadn't let out in millennia from spilling forth.

"Wayonn... how did you... I can feel him!" Murano spoke. "He burns with the blood of Sumar Wayonn! I can feel him as clearly as I feel myself! Where is he? Where are the others I felt within him? We..."

"We came here peacefully Murano!" Wayonn hissed. "We followed a trail left by our people that led us here! Why do you attack us now? Why do you treat these men and women as if they are animals? You must end this Murano! You must tell your leaders to end this before it is too late!"

"What... what do you mean?" Murano asked as worry began to fill him.

"You don't understand do you?" Wayonn rasped. "These men and women are... they are Lycavorian... yes! But they are unlike the species that we used to seed dead worlds! They have advanced millennia in both technology and culture! They have harnessed the savagery within them! Harnessed it and embraced it! And they have stretched across the stars! Your actions this day threaten any sort of talks we could have had Murano! You must call your men off. Martin's family is within these walls. His wives and mates, his children! If they are harmed... I will not be able to reign him in! And you will not be able to stop him!"

"That... that is his name?" Murano asked. "Martin?"

"Murano... listen to me!" Wayonn spoke, lowering the KM12 and moving forward to stand directly in front of him. "Call your men off! Call them off before it is too late!"

"What does this man mean Uncle?" Kesyla asked now. "Too late for what? Who is this man? He is... he is Pralor but... but not entirely."

Murano slammed his hand down on the COM unit on his arm. "Sashan...this is Murano! Stop your attack! Stop your attack! I have..."

The deep throated boom of two explosions from the interior of the station drew all of their attention towards the main entrance. Wayonn's eyes grew wider still and horror filled them as he felt the pain sear his brain and cause him to stagger.

"No!" Wayonn screamed. "No!"

Murano looked at him. "Wayonn!" He exclaimed reaching for him. "What is it? Wayonn... what is wrong?"

Wayonn dropped the KM12 and gripped Murano's arms. "Son vada carians! Un una proir! Un una proir!"

"Uncle what is he saying?" Mari asked as she moved forward.

"I... I don't know. I have never... I have never heard this language!" Murano stammered. "Wayonn... what's wrong? Wayonn?"

Wayonn gripped his arms even tighter and stared directly into his eyes. "It's too late!" He snarled. "Damn the arrogance of your people! It's too late!" With strength that Murano knew Wayonn should not have had he lifted the larger Murano off the ground and tossed him to the side as if he was a child. Wayonn he scrambled to his feet and sprinted with blinding speed towards the main hatch.

"Wayonn!" Murano screamed in stunned shock as he regained his footing and followed. Mari and Kesyla right behind him.

To Fedor it appeared to happen in slow motion.

Iama squeezed his arm indicating she was going to scoot to the position with his mothers. He shook his head knowing that they had not come under attack just yet but that it could happen any second. Iama smiled at him squeezed his arm once more and then rose to dash across the space.

"Iama!" Fedor called reaching for her.

His keen elven and wolf eyes saw it first at the top of its arc. A small, cylindrical object that looked very much like the shaft of a Nehtes, only this was sailing through the air. As his eyes watched it, it slammed into the ceiling of the medical bay and extended four small arms that attached it magnetically. Small doors on either side and directly in the middle of it opened and Fedor knew exactly what it was then and he was moving before his words even began screaming out of his mouth.

"Down! Iama... get down!"

The frantic nature of his voice had the opposite affect and Iama whirled around to face him as other heads came up to see what was wrong. Iama looked at his expression of horror and her own eyes grew terrified as his body swarmed around her, pulled her close and then hunched over as if trying to protect her from something above them.

Then the explosion struck.

It was not loud by any means; the sound of a grenade going off inside a bunker really, but from either end of the cylindrical device, and from the center, sprang three dozen lethal metallic slivers. Two more dull explosions followed almost instantly after the first and then one hundred and eight of the slivers were slicing through the air at slanted angles to the ground. Iama felt Fedor's body shuddered three times, four times, his eyes open wide and then he started to pitch forward pushing her further until she could not hold them up and they both went down. The Medical Bay filled with thick white smoke and pieces of shattered equipment as the Graviton Spike grenades, used to killed clusters of the Scourge Warrior class, ripped through the air. Both Anja and For'mya had the presence of mind to resort to their training and experience and both of them dropped to the floor and pressed as tightly as they could to the crate they were behind. The concussive force of the grenades stunned them for several moments, the smoke blinding them to what was happening. Anja saw two Durcunusaan spin unnaturally away from the door they were facing, their blood spurting into the air just before they were engulfed in the smoke.

"They used fucking grenades!" Anja screamed over the ringing of her ears. "The fucking idiots used grenades!"

For'mya was shaking her head and grasping her elven ears tightly, blood leaking between her fingers, and her face twisted into pain from a ruptured eardrum. Elven ears were far more susceptible to concussive forces, and three of the grenades going off was too much even for a turned female elf who now had wolf sensitive ears as well.

Anja heard it then... voices shouting and screaming and then a rush of bodies of men and women not wearing bodyarmor.

"Get down!"

"Drop your weapons!"

“Don’t move!”

Anja blinked several times again and saw a Durcunusaan turn and lift his A4 up. Her jade colored eyes grew wide when she saw his upper body hit by at least five thin yellow beams that seemed to punch into his body armor, causing massive dents. His eyes grew wide and his body was blown back against the wall where he slumped to the floor, blood rushing from his mouth.

“Don’t move!”

“Stay where you are damn it!”

Anja shook her head trying to focus and looked at For'mya whose face was twisted in pain as she held her hands over her ears.

“Secure the secondary entrance!” A voice bellowed and Anja looked up to see a rush of bodies move for the door that Dysea was supposed to be using to reinforce them.

“Get their weapons!” Another voice shouted from within the smoke. “Get their weapons away from them!”

The single voice broke into Anja’s mind then. A scream of utter despair that pierced her ringing ears and brought her head up towards the middle of the Medical Bay.

“FEDOR! NO! FEDOR!”

Anja struggled to her feet, staggering slightly, her equilibrium distorted by the grenades as she moved toward the sound of Iama’s voice.

“You were told to stay on the floor primitive woman! Now obey!” The harsh voice spoke from the side and Anja turned her head to see the pudgy face of the man. Turning also caused him to miss striking her head fully with the sidearm and the blow only clipped her cheek. It still carried enough force to spin her around and drop her back to the floor. Anja Leonidas was far tougher than that as she had proved many times through the years. She shrugged off the affect of the blow, her eyes focused on where she could just make out the two figures on the floor in front of her, one trying to revive another it looked like. Anja pushed herself to her feet once more and stumbled towards the figures, the voice still screaming in her mind. Each step brought her closer, the inert figure on the floor becoming more and more familiar to her. Anja shook her head again, trying to force out the fogginess and this time she succeeded. Anja’s jade colored eyes flew open as she recognized Iama and Fedor. Iama’s hands and the front of her bodyarmor was covered in blood. She was using her hands to try and do something on Fedor’s chest. Anja then saw three objects protruding from her son’s back as he was lying on his side where Iama was holding him and trying to grip the objects.

Realization hit her and her eyes flew open as the fog lifted completely as she focused. “Fedor! No! No! No!” Anja screamed as she skidded across the floor ignoring the jabbing pain of several pieces of metal in her legs.

“Fedor!” For'mya’s voice now joined hers in shouting the name of their son. As Anja skidded to a stop next to him she saw For'mya nearly fall beside her, her own balance altered by the blasts. “Carians no!” For'mya screamed as she settled next to Iama. “Fedor! My son! Fedor no! Blessed gods of Sparta and Elear... please no!”

“He won’t wake up!” Iama cried tears pouring from her eyes now. “He won’t wake up!”

“Leave me alone!” Eirene’s voice peaked above the noise now. “Don’t touch me!”

Anja glanced up to see a body go sailing backwards and Miseo rose through the smoke, his face twisted into an angry snarl.

“Do not touch my wife!” He screamed. “Get back!”

“Duewa!” Anja screamed rolling Fedor gently into her lap. “Duewa! Help me!”

Eirene fell on the other side of her twin brother, tears pouring from her eyes. She had felt his pain at the same moment he had, felt all of his emotions swarm through her as the grenades exploded. She grabbed his bloody hand and brought it to her face. “No Fedor! You come back to us! Do you hear me?”

Anja saw more movement from the same direction even as three Pralor security troops were jamming their weapons into Miseo’s chest and shoving him back. Duewa slipped and almost fell, coughing heavily from the smoke as she scrambled over. Her eyes grew wide. “By the gods Anja!” She gasped.

“Help me!” Anja almost screamed. “He’s bleeding out! He’s bleeding out!” She did scream now as tears flooded her eyes.

Danny caught Aricia as the sounds of the explosion lessened and the echo move past them. She was doubled over as if she had been injured and clutching her head.

“Aricia!” Danny hissed. “Aricia what’s wrong?”

“Man... they used fucking explosives!” Cody’s voice snarled.

“Grenades from the sound of them!” Julie added. “Big ones too!”

“Fedor!” Aricia gasped as she grabbed Daniel’s arms tightly. She looked up into his face with a mask of horror that Danny had never seen from her before. “Fedor! He was... he is injured!” She shook her head back and forth. “Daniel... he is... he is dying!”

“Fuck!” Danny hissed. “Move! Move! The gloves just came off! Go! Go!”

“Fucking A!” Cody growled as he took point once more.

The reaction was more severe for Dysea and Isabella than it was for Cirith because she was not as tightly bound with For'mya yet. It affected her badly, though unlike Dysea and Isabella, she was able to remain on her feet and not drop to her knees.

“Fedor! Gods no!” She gasped shaking her head and reaching for Dysea. “We have to move!” She hissed.

The senior Durcunusaan enlisted man had seen this before with the Royal family when Zarah Leonidas had been missing. They were tied so deeply within Mindvoice that their minds could sense when one of them was hurt or in despair. He didn’t hesitate and moved up beside Isabella, grabbing her around the waist and pulling her to her feet.

“Take them!” He ordered. “Help them until it passes! Quickly!” He ordered his men. “We must move to the medical center!”

Helen stared at the only internal monitor that showed the medical bay and still worked. She could see figures moving back and forth and she could also feel the pain and fear of Martin’s wives and Eirene. She snapped her head around.

“Avi... what just happened?” She almost shouted.

-Three detonations. I estimate Graviton Spike grenades Helen. A Pralor weapon designed to combat the Scourge- Avi answered.

“They used grenades?” Helen gasped in horror.

-Confirmed. Warning... I am scanning dangerously low vital signs on Fedor Leonidas- Avi spoke.
-He has been severely injured Helen-

Helen got to her feet and reached for her KM12. “Carians no! Avi... can you use an A4?” She asked as she checked the action on her sidearm. She heard the sound of ammunition being rammed into a chamber and she looked up.

-I am well versed in the use of many weapons First Oracle Helen- Avi spoke almost too calmly. -I have learned much from Martin Leonidas though the years that is not well known- His head tilted upward slightly. -We must hurry First Oracle Helen... my internal sensors are detecting another Pralor transport approaching the surface at an accelerated rate of descent. They will land in two point seven minutes-

Helen looked up now, her wolf fangs exposed and her eyes fully changed. She waved her hand almost insignificantly and Avi saw her light blue psychic shield shimmer into existence around her body. "Let's go!" She snarled. "I will not let this stand!"

"NO!" The voice screamed causing Lorendo and Sashan to turn towards the main entrance into the medical bay. "What have you done?"

Lorendo's eyes flew open as he recognized Wayonn instantly. "Wayonn!" He gasped loudly. "You... you are alive!"

Wayonn allowed the change to come over him then. It was the first time in nearly seven hundred years where he called forth the wolf within him in anger. The last had been an Enverr Warlord who had just murdered a innocent woman in cold blood. His dark eyes shrunk slightly and the thick black ring encircled his pupils. Long, vicious looking fangs burst from his upper and lower gums and he stared right at Lorendo. The memories of that report flashed across his mind and what he knew deep down Lorendo was responsible for.

"YOU!" He screamed. "You did this!"

Wayonn's right hand snapped up and he snatched the barrel of the Pulse rifle from the nearest Pralor security troop, only he didn't try to wrench it free to use. He seated both his hands on the barrel and using the wolf strength within him he lifted the security troop into the air and hurled his entire body at Lorendo.

"Do you know what you have done?" Wayonn screamed his left hand slashing out and connecting with another Pralor soldier and sending him hurtling across the room as Lorendo began to back up. "You have brought doom to yourselves! You have brought death to yourselves! You..."

"Shoot him!" Lorendo screamed as he brought up his sidearm. "Shoot him!"

Three soldier brought their rifles up and took aim only to have them ripped from their grasp by some unseen force along with Lorendo's sidearm.

"Never!" Murano screamed as he sprinted into the Medical Bay. He quickly saw what was happening, reached out with his right hand and captured Wayonn within the invisible field of Etheric power just before Wayonn was able to reach him. His left hand came up and he erected a shimmering shield around Lorendo in order to protect him. "Wayonn... stop this!" He shouted.

"Release me Murano! Wayonn snarled viciously. "Release me so that I can tear this fool's throat from him before I die!"

"Wayonn stop!" Murano moved closer. "Stop!"

Wayonn's head snapped around to look at him, his wolf eyes blazing with hatred and anger. "We have been using non-lethal ammunition on your people!" He screamed. "You saw this yourself! This invareen nubous igord orders grenades to be used! Grenades!"

"It was the only way!" Sashan stepped forward now. "We had to secure the station!"

Wayonn snarled at him snapping his fangs together and causing Sashan to step back quickly. "I do not know you igord... but you have no idea the force you have unleashed with your actions!"

"You... you are like them!" Lorendo barked in shock. "You have become like them! You allowed them to infect you!"

"Uncle!" Kesyla's voice shouted.

Murano turned to look at her and she motioned with her head. Murano followed her action and his eyes grew wider as he saw the group of people around the prone figure on the floor.

"They... they are Hadarian!" Mari gasped coming up beside him and gripping his arm.

Murano looked at the Pralor soldier who was scanning Fedor while standing above and behind Iama. He was the field medic for the Pralor Security troops. He looked at him and shook his head slowly. "He took three spikes Praetorian Murano." The man said softly. "His injuries are severe. He will... he will not survive."

Murano whirled on Lorendo and Sashan. "You used Graviton Spike grenades!" He almost screamed. "They are meant to be used on Scourge Warriors with hardened shells for skin! Not humanoid personnel!"

"It is... it is the only area effect weapon my men carry!" Sashan spat.

Murano snarled angrily. "Then your men are ill-equipped and ill-led!" He shouted.

Sashan's eyes grew wide. "How dare you!" He barked.

“Murano release me!” Wayonn barked. “I need to be there!”

Murano could feel that Wayonn had calmed and he released him instantly from the Etheric field. He didn't even pause as Murano thought, and moved for the middle of the floor where the others were.

“We have what we came for!” Lorendo growled. “Secure the prisoners and remove them from our facility! Bring the station controls to this console and begin activating security protocols to purge this station!”

“Hold!” Murano shouted freezing the Pralor security troops in their tracks. “Do you have any idea what you have done?” He barked.

“I have done what we came to do!” Lorendo shouted back. “We have secured the station and returned it to our control!”

“Delnash did not authorize you to use this kind of force!” Murano nearly shouted. He turned to another Pralor soldier. “Casualties?”

The soldier looked confused. “We did not suffer any casualties Praetorian Murano.” He said.

“Not among us you idiot!” Murano growled. “Them?”

“There were twenty-one primitives in the research labs. We have secured them. None were armed. There were thirteen within Medical here. Three are dead, four more injured. Including the primitive on the floor.”

“Dead?” Murano gasped in horror.

The man nodded. “The grenades worked to perfection Praetorian. We only had to shoot one.”

“Does taking their lives make you feel powerful soldier?” Murano growled at him.

“They are primitives Murano!” Lorendo barked. “The soldier did his job under our orders! He should be commended!”

Murano turned back to him. “Commended for taking a life!” Murano shouted. “Have you become so arrogant that you deem yourself above everyone Lorendo?”

“Uncle!” Mari gasped. “Uncle look!”

Murano turned back to where the group was on the floor, Pralor security troops all around them with their weapons out and covering them. Murano moved closer.

“Have... I have him stabilized Duewa!” Anja hissed softly. Her hands were on either side of Fedor's head, the soft glow from her power filtering down his neck and encompassing his upper shoulders and chest. “Work... work quickly! I can feel the tear in his left aorta. It is nicked badly and he is bleeding internally.”

Duewa reached out with her hands... the soft white glow similar to Anja coming forth as she placed her hands over Fedor's chest. “Yes... I have it!” She gasped quickly as her hands stopped moving and she lowered them to touch his chest armor. “Wayonn!” Duewa hissed not turning her head but feeling him slightly behind her. “When I tell you... the first spike... just under his shoulder blade. Remove it quickly. Pull it straight out as fast as you can but do not jerk it.”

Wayonn moved up beside her then, reaching under Fedor's upper body which was now supported by Anja's legs and hips. “I have it.” He said softly.

“Now!” Duewa rasped.

There was a sickening sound of the spike being drawn from his body which caused Iama to burst into more tears beside For'mya. Wayonn flung it across the room when he drew it from under Fedor's body. Duewa's hands flared for a few seconds and she nodded. “I repaired it Anja.” She spoke. “But... he...” Her face tightened in concentration. “He's still bleeding. Wait... there! His left atrium!”

“Yes!” Anja declared. “Carians... a fragment broke off and is lodged in the wall.”

“I have a good angle here.” Duewa said quickly. “I will draw it out slowly.”

“Hurry Duewa... he's just barely hanging on!” Anja moaned.

“Val'istar... the other two spikes! Remove them in the same way!” Duewa ordered confidently. “They are in contact with nothing more than his muscles! Pull them out and I will heal them as they withdraw!”

Wayonn nodded and followed her command quickly and efficiently. The combined healing power of both Anja and Duewa pulsing through him healed the wounds almost instantly after Wayonn removed the spikes just as Duewa had said. He leaned back and watched as Duewa leaned closer to Fedor's chest and closed her eyes. "I have removed the fragment and I am rotating it around the atrium wall." She spoke softly as she visualized what she was doing in her mind. "There! The rupture is sealed! He..."

Fedor's body jerked and his eyes burst open then. All of them burst into tears as his eyes darted back and forth. "Mothers!" He gasped.

For'mya pulled his hand to her cheek and leaned over to place her forehead to the skin of his cheek. "We... we are here Fedor my son!" She gasped as Anja's head came down to touch For'mya's and she kept her hands alongside his head.

"Don't move Fedor!" Anja whispered. "You... you were hurt bad!"

Fedor's bloody right hand came up to grab For'mya's arm and his left shot back to grip Anja's hip. "Whoa!" He gasped in pain and tried to move his upper body.

"Don't move Fedor!" Duewa exclaimed.

For'mya looked up and rubbed his cheek. "Breath through the pain Fedor my son." She said softly.

"Eirene?" Fedor hissed. "Sister?"

Eirene squeezed in close between her mothers. "I am here fervon." She gasped. "You didn't activate your psychic shield Fedor! Why?"

"No time!" Fedor gasped. "I had to... Iama!" He started to force his way up. "Where is Iama? Iama!"

"I'm here!" Iama groaned. "I'm here Fedor!"

For'mya looked at her and reached around to draw her closer with her arm. Iama scooted right up next to him and placed her bloody hands on his chest. His eyes grew wide when he saw her hands.

"You are hurt?" He gasped.

Iama shook her head. "No! No! It... it is your blood Fedor! You... you saved me!"

His face relaxed and he smiled. "Good. That is good. I wouldn't want you to miss me courting you. I will... I will make you mine Iama' Juturi!"

Iama laughed with relief and nodded her head. "I... I am already yours Fedor." She spoke softly.

"Oh no! You're not getting off that easy!" Fedor exclaimed as he winced in pain. "I still have poems to read and..." His hand gripped Anja's hip even tighter and he inhaled deeply. "Owwww!"

"I got it!" Duewa spoke sitting back up and holding up the sliver of metal.

"Man... did you get the name of the transport that hit me mothers?" Fedor asked with a weak grin. "Got to have a talk with that pilot about his flying skills."

Anja couldn't help but laugh and cry at the same time and For'mya lowered her face to his once more but holding Iama tightly to her side with one arm.

Mari and Kesyla stood together with wide eyes.

"Fascinating!" Kesyla gasped.

"Yes! Yes!" Lorendo broke in. "All so touching and fascinating! Get them up and move them outside! They do not belong in here!"

Wayonn sprang back to his feet and whirled on Lorendo but this time two Pralor soldiers were ready and lifted their weapons. "I have locked out all main functions of this station." He snarled. "You will be able to do nothing! Nothing!"

Lorendo moved to one of the useable computers that remained and began typing quickly. The console beeped several times and he looked up with wide eyes. "What have you done?" He demanded.

Wayonn grinned at him. "A Praetorian encryption code key." Wayonn spoke. "You will not be able to break the code Lorendo! You aren't smart enough!"

"Release the station to me!" He shouted.

"Nubou forn!" Wayonn hissed loudly.

"We will get the information from you!" Lorendo growled.

Sashan moved forward. "I will take three men and move to the Command Center. We can establish control from there."

"You can try!" Wayonn snickered.

“Praetorian Oracle or not...” Lorendo snarled. “You will pay for your crimes! Helping these primitives against your own people! Intending to do me harm!”

Wayonn laughed at him. “If you live out this day Lorendo... it will be a miracle and gift from one man. That man is not me!”

Murano stepped forward. “Enough!” He shouted. “Delnash has landed!” He gripped Wayonn’s arm and saw him turn to look at him. “My brother is Chief Elder Wayonn. We can talk to him. Leave this fool be!”

“Get away!” For'mya’s voice screamed and she shoved a Pralor soldier so hard he staggered back and slammed into the bulkhead with a thud of pain and rush of air leaving his lungs as he dropped to one knee. “Stay away piegn ronnus!” She shouted as she moved under one of Fedor’s shoulders while Miseo inched under the other.

Anja gripped Duewa’s hands and hugged her tightly. “Thank... thank you Duewa!” She whispered into her ear. “You... you have given us back our son.”

Duewa nodded to her. “You said it.” She spoke. “We make a good team!”

“Get moving!” The Pralor soldier snarled at them and gave Anja a slight shove in her shoulders.

Duewa grabbed her arms and held her tightly seeing the flare of anger in Anja’s eyes and knowing what kind of temper she had. She also knew Anja was very near the end of her patience. “No!” She hissed softly. “Let’s just get outside with the others Anja. They might be hurt as well.”

Lorendo waited until the room was clear of the primitives and he turned to a pair of security troops. “Take the bodies to the incinerator and dispose of them.” He ordered them. “I will be outside with the Chief Elder. When we have regained control of the station contact me first.”

The man nodded. “As you order Elder Lorendo.”

No one bothered to check any other equipment before they began exiting the Medical Bay and the blinking red light went unnoticed on the wall indicating a breach of protocol and the activation of half a dozen of the sleep pods held within the secure room.

Nor the signs of movement coming from those six pods.

A squad of Pralor Security troops surrounded Delnash as he stood in the middle of the massive vehicle bay looking at his unconscious men and women. The commotion near the entrance into the station caused him to look up wide eyed and see half a dozen Pralor soldiers come out, their uniforms dusty and covered in grime. Their weapons were held at the ready and then he saw the first of the primitives begin filing out.

His eyes grew even wider and he pushed past his guards when he saw Kesyla and Mari exit the interior of the station.

“Mari!” He exclaimed rushing up to her and grabbing her arms. “Kesyla!” He glanced at one of his men. “Close the doors!”

The security troop ran to the door panel and entered the commands for the large double doors to begin closing.

“We are fine father.” Kesyla spoke though she was still somewhat shaken by the events and what she had witnessed.

Delnash turned on Mari then. “I told you to go to engineering!” He hissed. “How did you get down here? Tell me child!” He demanded.

“I came down with Uncle Murano.” Mari answered.

“You disobeyed me!” Delnash snarled at her.

Mari pulled her hands away from his at his reaction. “I am not a child anymore father.” She spat back at him. “You can’t keep sending me away!”

Delnash looked up and saw Lorendo exit the station then, along with more primitives, two of whom had long tails. The male was supporting another while what could only be an elven female was on the man’s other side. His bodyarmor was covered in bright red blood, as was the armor of the female with a tail. The elven female had blood trickling from both her ears. Two red haired females came next, one of them with blood on her cheek from a nasty cut.

“Lorendo!” Delnash snapped. “What is going on? What has happened here?”

Lorendo moved down the ramp quickly. “We have secured the station.” He replied quite smugly. “Sashan is even now in the Command Center bringing the station back to our control.”

“Why... these primitives... why are they covered in blood?” He demanded as several security troops guided the prisoners past him and shoved them towards the collection of crates.

“They resisted of course!” Lorendo answered. “We had to take certain measures.”

“Measures!” Delnash exclaimed.

“Elder Lorendo’s measures included Graviton Spike Grenades!” Murano’s voice spoke now and Delnash saw him moving down the ramp holding the arm of the man Delnash had seen in the transmission.

“Graviton grenades!” Delnash almost shouted. “I ordered no such thing Lorendo!” He snarled looking back to Lorendo. “I ordered they be taken without harm!”

“They were resisting and we had to break through their lines!” Lorendo snapped. “It was the only way!”

“They were using non-lethal ammunition that was knocking our men out!” Murano barked. “We should have pulled back and initiated conversation with them! Lorendo and Sashan charged into the station and when they realized they could not penetrate the defenses inside using non-lethal means they decided to use grenades!” Murano stepped closer to his brother. “Now... three of them are dead brother! Dead! And they almost killed the son of Martin.”

Delnash’s eyes grew wider. “Dead?” He gasped looking at Lorendo. “You killed them?”

“I did what needed to be done!” Lorendo snapped.

“The leader’s son?” Delnash stammered. “I did not authorize you to use deadly force! I never gave you that option Lorendo! Never!”

“The King of the Lycavorian Union will not care what you authorized or not.” Wayonn hissed softly from beside Murano.

“Brother... allow me to introduce Praetorian Oracle Wayonn. Sumar’s Oracle!” Murano hissed.

Delnash stared at Wayonn for a long moment his eyes wide. “That... that is simply not possible!” He finally gasped.

“It is Wayonn brother!” Murano snapped. “Just as I told you before.”

“Wayonn... Wayonn died with Sumar and all those on City Ship 41!” Delnash spat. “He... he can’t be here! I saw the reports!”

Wayonn stepped closer. “Your reports were wrong!” He growled his eyes changing once more and his fangs coming forth. “Or do I look like a ghost to you fool!”

“Wayonn.” Murano spoke gripping his arm. “This does not help!”

Delnash stepped back quickly. “You... you have become one of them!” He stammered.

“Wow!” Anja’s voice quipped from the side. “You are quick on the uptake. You figure that one out all by yourself?”

“Silence primitive woman!” Lorendo snarled at her. He turned back to Delnash. “You see that?” He growled. “This is how primitives act! With disrespect and no knowledge of their betters! If we had not done what we did, we would still be inside the station fighting for control! I needed to change that!”

“You!” Delnash barked. “I am Chief Elder of our people Lorendo! Not you!”

“That’s not saying much.” Anja muttered loud enough for them to hear her.

Lorendo spun on her again and lashed out with his hand, slapping her across the face viciously. “I said be silent!” He roared.

The two Durcunusaan with them rose off the floor with angry roars, each of them tossing aside a security soldier and moving for Lorendo. “Don’t not touch the Queen!” One screamed as he reached for Lorendo. Half a dozen more soldiers imposed themselves between the Durcunusaan and Lorendo, their weapons ramming into the larger men’s chests and bringing them up short, but it was Anja who stopped their advance as she stood and placed her hands on both of their chests, shaking her head quickly.

Murano felt it first and his head whipped around with wide eyes to stare at Wayonn. “Wayonn?” He gasped.

Delnash was Chief Elder of the Pralor people and part of that was because of his abilities within the Etheric realm. The Chief Elder was always one who was extremely gifted with their Etheric powers, but falling far short of the Praetorians. Delnash was however, gifted enough to feel it and his head turned to face his brother with wide eyes. It was unlike anything he had ever felt with the possible exception of his brother, but it was more pure and wild in its resonance and it was not radiating from Murano.

“Murano!” He gasped. “What...?”

Wayonn was soaking up the resonance he could feel from Martin and feeling the energy and power swirling through him as well. He had always known Martin Leonidas was the equal to Sumar in every way, and what he felt now confirmed and went beyond that. Sumar did not have the natural instincts that Martin did; the raw drive and unconquerable determination that every pureblood Lycavorian was born with. As they knew it would happen, the wolf blood within all Lycavorians was dominant, and it would override all Pralor blood within one or two generations. Yet the exquisite makeup of their blood was that it would keep that Pralor blood within their own, mix it, forge it and make it part of their own blood and give them what they had always lacked as a species.

Purpose.

Wayonn also knew there was a point where the Pralor blood would cease to be a deciding factor in the decisions of Lycavorians. Where no matter how much Pralor blood swirled in ones veins, the call and instincts of the wolf would always prevail. Martin Leonidas had reached and gone past that point this day. Aricia. Dysea. Then For'mya. The love he had for the women in his life was like a supernova and anyone who caused them harm, who caused his children harm; they would burn in the fires of retribution. For the first time since actually meeting Martin, Wayonn discovered something that had never crossed his mind before this very moment.

He feared Martin Leonidas. He feared Androcles. He feared all of those who had begun to show signs of Praetorian gifts. He feared them because they themselves as Lycavorians and now as the Spartans they emulated, they had no fear. Death in service to their Ling and their people was the ultimate sacrifice and one all of them would make without hesitation. They would not want to, they might even weep for those they would never see again, but they would stand against all odds until the last breath left their bodies and not regret a single moment.

“Anja!” Wayonn barked.

“We feel him Wayonn!” Anja echoed his shout. “We feel him and it is...”¹

“Glorious!” For'mya finished.

Lorendo looked at her and then back to Delnash confused. “What is she babbling about?” He snapped.

“Murano!” Wayonn hissed waiting until he met his gaze. “Protect those who you care about Praetorian!” He barked.

“Wayonn...?”

“Do as I tell you Murano!” Wayonn commanded.

Delnash looked at his brother. “Murano! What...”

Murano's eyes went wide and he glanced up at the massive double doors into the vehicle bay. “He's here!” He gasped loudly. “By our Ancestors Wayonn! I... I can feel him all around us!”

Lorendo shook his head at the actions of Murano and Delnash. “This is pointless!” He growled. “We need to return to...”

The sound of metal straining reached all of their ears and Lorendo stopped talking and looked towards the double doors. “Wha...”

Wayonn stepped forward next to Murano. “Your training Murano!” He snarled. “Your training!” Wayonn reached out and snatched Delnash by the back of his collar and pulled him back to him.

Murano turned his head. “Mari! Kesyla! Step to me now!” He exclaimed. “Now!”

“Uncle?” Kesyla questioned him though Mari didn't hesitate. She snatched Kesyla's hand and yanked her over, both of them pressing against their Uncle tightly. “Uncle what is happening?” Kesyla stammered.

Mari looked up into her Uncle's face, her blue eyes bright and full of questions she had yet to ask. “He's here isn't he Uncle?” She asked. “The other Praetorian? The Lycavorian with the blood of Sumar?”

Murano glanced up and looked at his brother whose eyes were wide as Wayonn held him securely. “Yes child.” Murano answered never taking his eyes off his brother. “And he is not in the best of moods it seems.”

There was no time for talking anymore, For'mya and Anja pressing close to Fedor on either side while Miseo, Eirene and Muton huddled in a similar position just behind them, the Pralor security troops watching befuddled. Fedor folded Iama into his arms as Anja pulled Duewa close and looked at her wide eyes.

“Anja?” Duewa asked.

“It’s ok really.” Anja said with a small smile. “Marty just has... he tends to have anger issues when it concerns us and... oh never mind.” Anja spoke drawing her closer. “Just hang on to me... it’s going to be a fucking wild ride.”

Lorendo watched as the primitives began to huddle together in small groups and he turned back to Delnash who was now within a light blue shimmering field of Etheric power being generated by Wayonn. His eyes went wide when he saw this. “There!” He screamed. “He is assaulting the Chief Pralor! Stop him! Stop...”

The horrific sound of tearing metal grew more insistent until the noise was reverberating across the vehicle bay. It caused Lorendo’s head and all of their heads to turn towards the double doors as a small crack appeared in the seam of the doors and the sunlight began to peek through. Lorendo’s eyes grew wider and stupidly he moved closer.

“Defensive positions!” He screamed. “Now! Move!”

The Pralor security troops sprinted forward at his direction and began dropping behind crates and whatever cover they could find.

Mari looked at Murano. “Uncle?”

“It won’t help them.” Murano stated... the full aura of Martin’s Etheric power swarming around him like a storm. It was untainted and unrefined, the most horrifically powerful storm he had ever imagined, yet it moved relentlessly with whipping pandemonium and chaos. And at the center of that chaos, shaping it, controlling it was the essence of a man. A man with power Murano had not felt in forty millennia. Not since he had stood beside Sumar during their last battle had anything ever felt so pure and extraordinary to him.

Their heads turned when they heard Wayonn speaking into Delnash’s ear. “This... this is the culmination of destiny. You thought Sumar dead Chief Elder... allow me to introduce you to his descendant. One of four that bear the Praetorian gene and Sumar’s blood within their very bodies. A gene that is manifesting itself once more within his honored descendants. And far more powerful it is because of what they are. Chief Elder... I give you Martin Leonidas!”

The tearing sound grew to a crescendo and in an event that none of them would ever forget, both of the massive double doors began tearing away from the frame of the station allowing bright sunlight to pour in. They were peeled back as easily as if being done by some angry god and then they were torn asunder from the actual station itself and sent hurtling into the distance allowing the bright sun to pour into the vehicle bay and cause all of them to shield their eyes. They could see the dust caused by the action of tearing such massive doors from their frames and they waited to see some mechanical giant come marching through the dust. A slight breeze kicked in and began to push the cloud of dust and dirt from in front of the entrance of the station. As it did, they saw only the shape of a man standing perhaps twenty feet from the entrance to the doors. His body armor was black and pseudo shiny in the sunlight, but it covered his entire body. The oddly shaped helmet hid all of his facial features, only savage looking dual fangs protruding from his gums visible in the small vertical space protecting his mouth and cheeks. Then there were the eyes.

Yellow/gold orbs that appeared to be glowing and focused completely on those Pralors in the middle of the bay. They all heard the deafening trumpet of a dragon then and saw the huge armored behemoth appear from the sky above and land behind the man. It was the largest dragon any of them had ever seen and it’s massive wings flared to either side and it cut loose with a trumpet that many of them had never heard from a dragon on Artaaya before. Of course none of them realized they had never met a dragon like Torma either. A light blue psychic shield, generating power unlike anything Murano had ever felt from any Praetorian, activated suddenly around both man and dragon and Martin’s head lifted slightly to glare directly at where Lorendo stood.

“School’s out!” Martin’s voice growled out in a tenor that was neither friendly nor forgiving in the least bit. “It’s time for the adults to play!”

With that statement Martin released a howl that was filled with anger, discord and plenty of retribution, and he drove his fist down into the thickly packed ground between his feet. A cloud of dust and dirt exploded upwards from the impact, which should have shattered his hand. As they watched a light bluish/white color formed quickly around where his fist struck. It spread out quickly around that armored hand making it appear as if the ground itself had suddenly grown veins, and then lances of Etheric power were rippling outward through the ground. In two blinks those lances of Etheric power struck the Pralor security forces inside the vehicle bay with hurricane battering force. Men and women were blasted off the ground from the force of the Etheric pulse Martin had sent through the ground, and went hurtling across the vehicle bay in every direction.

Murano stood aghast as he watched the magnitude of power that ripped through the ground and slammed into Lorendo and the security troops. It was a standard Praetorian move, one of the first they learned in order to clean out the immediate area around themselves of Scourge, yet he had only ever seen Sumar execute it with such exacting control. Normally the Etheric lances would tear into a hoard of Scourge warriors and seize them in a painful lightning like field until parts of their bodies would erupt from the massive pressure being sent hurtling through them. Those same lances of Etheric power now tossed Pralor security troops about like dolls, many of them impacting walls and the two remaining vehicles. Instantly Murano knew it did not carry its full potential of power, for none of the Pralor security forces were being pulverized. Murano glanced up at Martin and suddenly realized he was holding back the full force of his power.

“Kill him!” The voice screamed and Murano turned to see Lorendo pulling himself off the ground and wiping blood from his mouth. He had bitten his tongue when the Etheric lance struck him and tossed him six meters across the bay to slam into the nose of the vehicle. His words were coming out much mouthed now. “Kill him! Shoot him!”

Martin moved then. Right for where Lorendo stood.

He moved with a magical grace and speed that belied his size and appearance. With wolf speed he fell upon the first trooper to get his wits about him and pummeled him with a straight right hand that folded the man’s legs up beneath him. He fell limply to the ground well after Martin had already sprung to the next security trooper and hit him with ridge hand strike that did not even slow his momentum. He lifted his left hand and sent out a pulse of Etheric power that slammed into two more men and sent them ass over elbows in the other direction. There was really nothing any of them could do against him. As Panos had once predicted, he truly was a force of nature.

As Eliani Leonidas would have no doubt said seeing her father in action... the ass whupping was just getting started.

Teniri and the other dragons landed outside right behind Arzoal and Isheeni. Torma rested on the ground almost causally, but his eyes were closed and his head was swaying back and forth slightly as if he was in a deep trance. Teniri moved close to him, his massive form so muscular and lean. He dwarfed her in size by at least five meters and two metric tons, but unlike some of the dragons among their population on Artaaya, he had not a single spot on his broad powerful body that slumped with age or disuse. The psychic shield he was projecting was unlike anything she had ever seen and it shimmered with unrestrained power. Teniri had never been near a Talon Guardian before, and what she felt pouring from this beautiful specimen of a male dragon made her scales tingle. Power, confidence, knowledge and compassion all wrapped into one package.

Teniri glanced toward the vehicle bay and made a move to go in that direction but Arzoal’s body imposed itself in front of her.

No Teniri. Arzoal spoke.

Teniri looked up at her eyes. Elder Mother... we are... I have pledged myself and our kind to assist the Pralors whenever we can. She explained. It was they who helped us to escape and relocate to Artaaya.

Will you honor that pledge after they have lied to you and taken innocent lives this day? Arzoal asked her.

What? Teniri gasped.

Isheeni moved up beside Teniri. Three of the Durcunusaan have fallen. She spoke softly. Inside... they died protecting their Queens. Martin’s son was gravely injured. It is why he and Torma stormed away as they did.

You can sense this? Teniri gasped.

Where we come from... dragons are tied closely with the Durcunusaan. Arzoal spoke. They are the most well trained of Union soldiers, protectors of the Royal family and others. I have a detachment of them myself. They are the only ones capable of talking to us within Mindvoice... what we call the Etheric realm... and all of them are honorable men and women.

Elder Mother... we did not know! Teniri exclaimed. I... I am shamed by my actions. I can not...

Arzoal stepped forward and lowered her snout close to Teniri's head. We will discover the truth of it all Teniri. I swear to you we will.

Lorendo! Teniri exclaimed. He began this! He pushed to attack instead of talk as Praetorian Murano did.

Lorendo. Arzoal said shaking her massive head.

They turned suddenly when Torma's massive body rose from the ground in a rush. LORENDO! He screamed out in Mindvoice reaching for only one person. LORENDO!

LORENDO! Torma's voice echoed within Martin's head as he sent a seventh Pralor Security soldier flipping through the air away from him. These soldiers were not so stupid, at least not after the first one fired his rifle at Martin and had him lift his hand and deflect it back at him, the pencil thick beam of energy punching through his shoulder and throwing him to the ground screaming in agony. That word from Torma made Martin's head snap around and glare at where Lorendo was cowering near the front of the second Science vehicle.

"Lorendo!" Martin snarled loudly seeing his eyes go wide. His eyes darted back and forth within the bay and he saw the Pralor troops beginning to recover from his Etheric pulse. He would not be able to take them all before they regained their senses and the threat to Anja and the others became too much for him to deal with alone. Martin Leonidas was not known as the foremost tactical mind in the Union by accident. He had always been able to plot and scheme three and sometimes four moves in front of his enemies and even in his rage at what had happen here, he did not lose this edge.

Fervon! Saaurano! Melda Min! Anwen! Anwen! He shouted out within Mindvoice. Loud enough for even Delnash to hear. (Advance)

Martin had felt them just inside the station waiting like the wolves they were to pounce. Just as he could see with Torma's eyes, Martin could see with the eyes of the only brother he had ever truly known. And those eyes told him Danny was no longer playing games. He didn't even look up as they charged out of the interior of the station, weapons up and ready to use. And leading that charge was the surprise Daniel Simpson had been waiting to spring. He was quite sure these Pralor had never seen two men as large as T'lolt and the Master Chief, and he couldn't have been more correct. There was something about looking up into the crazed eyes of a six foot six tall Immortal charging at you with bloodlust in his eyes, and right behind him a six foot five man with skin as black as coal.

"Shoot them!" A voice rang out. "They have only sleep darts! Shoot them!"

Aricia's KM12 rotated and she fired once in the blink of an eye. The Pralor security soldier who had yelled the order was blown backwards as the 12.7mm projectile punched into his upper shoulder and flipped him over. He rolled on the floor in agony from the bullet and blood was rapidly soaking his light clothes.

"No more games!" Aricia snarled.

It was Garan who finally brought things to an end as he staggered to his feet, his wide eyes darting back and forth looking for his brother. Kasdan had remained quiet this whole time, either unable to speak or unwilling to try and countermand any of Lorendo's orders. Garan saw him staggering against the ramp wall and rushed forward.

"Enough!" He screamed out waving his hands in the air. "Enough!"

Garan reached his brother and saw that whatever the Praetorian had hit them with had addled his brother's senses. "Kasdan! It's me! It's Garan!" He spoke gripping the back of his brother's head and shoulders.

"My... my head hurts!" Kasdan muttered as he slumped to the floor.

Garan's eyes grew wide as he drew his hand away and it came out from the back of his head soaked in blood. "Medical! Medical Officer!" He screamed turning around. "Medical Officer!"

It was Anja who decided things then. "Duewa!" She exclaimed motioning with her head to the one Aricia had shot.

Duewa didn't hesitate and darted over to kneel beside the man. He looked up at her with fear in his eyes and she grabbed his injured arm. "Be still fool!" Duewa hissed at him as her hands flared a soft white and she began to heal the bullet wound.

Anja came up beside Garan, shoving him out of the way, her hands going to Kasdan's head. Garan attempted to stop her but heard the loud sound of a weapon charging and he looked up onto the ramp to see the barrel of the A4 leveled at his head.

"Touch her and you will have more to worry about than his head." Cirith growled at him from behind the A4. "Namely the very large hole in your forehead!"

Anja's hands held Kasdan's head lightly the healing radiation from her hands pulsing mildly on either side. "Minor Concussion." She said. "Scalp laceration... that..." Anja's eyes grew a little wider and she looked at Garan. "He has a subdural hematoma of the posterior cranial fossa!"

Garan met her eyes. "What? How do you know that?" He gasped.

"Has he hit his head recently?" Anja demanded.

"He said... he said he fell two weeks ago and he has had headaches since." Garan answered. "I tried to tell him to see a medical officer but he kept telling me it was nothing."

"Hold his arms!" Anja said quickly. "Let me move behind him!"

"What?" Garan rasped.

"He is your brother?" Anja asked.

Garan nodded. "Yes!"

"Well... I'm trying to save his life!" Anja snapped. "The concussion has torn more veins along the hematoma. It's bleeding again. If I don't stop it he will die! Right here and within minutes! Is that what you want?"

Garan exploded into action and gripped Kasdan's arms, pulling him forward as Anja moved in behind him. She lifted her hands up to the back of his head and placed them directly on his skin. As Garan watched, Anja closed her eyes and her hands flared a little brighter, the pulsing white light spreading over the entire back of his brother's head. It lasted only a few seconds and then she opened her eyes and nodded.

"Good." Anja declared. "I repaired the artery and outlying damage around the original tear." She said. "He needs to sleep and rest for about a day... but he's good as new."

Garan watched her as she scooted out from behind Kasdan and got to her feet. She looked so small compared to the others. "Thank... thank you." He finally stammered out.

Anja looked at him with contempt. "Don't thank me... I'm just primitive!" She snarled before moving away.

Garan looked down at his brother and for the first time in his life he felt ashamed of his duty and what he was ordered to do.

It was not enough for Martin however.

Martin bore down on Lorendo relentlessly and Lorendo was pulling the trigger of his sidearm as quickly as he could while he backpedaled as fast as his legs would carry him. His eyes were wide in disbelief as the thin energy beams deflected off the psychic shield of the monster bearing down on him. His back finally slammed into the wall near the beginning of the ramp incline and he had nowhere else to go.

"Motherfucker!" Martin screamed. "You did this!"

A security soldier who had landed on top of the science vehicle because of Martin's initial Etheric pulse screamed in anger and leaped off the top deck. Martin held up his right hand and caught the soldier in the grips of an Etheric field. His yellow/gold eyes turned slowly and he looked at the soldier.

"You have got to be kidding me!" He snarled. "That stunt only works in the fucking movies douche bag!" Martin yanked his arm back and the man screamed as he was launched across the bay. He landed with a grunt of pain and the air leaving his lungs fully ten meters from where he had been and he skidded across the smooth surface until he finally struck something solid. He looked up directly into Tony's wild gaze, his fangs extended and his dark eyes outlined in black.

Tony grinned down at him. “Another volunteer!” He exclaimed reaching down and grabbing the man by the front of his uniform. Tony leaned forward and looked into the man’s terrified face. “How far can you fly sport?” Tony hissed. “Let’s find out!”

Tony lifted him up off the deck and whirled around completely once before releasing him like a shot put out of the now torn open double doors. The man landed with another painful grunt in a cloud of dust and dirt fully forty feet outside in the bright sunlight. His eyes shut tightly in pain as he groaned and rolled over.

“Don’t move!” He heard the harsh whispered order and his eyes snapped up to see three of his fellow Security Convention comrades lying a short distance away. “Don’t move!”

The man turned his head slowly and his eyes grew suddenly very wide and fearful. Only five meters away rested three very large dragons covered in shimmering armor and looking at him as a tasty snack. Aurith turned her head and looked at Iriral.

Who should we eat first? She asked within Mindvoice with a large amount of humor in her voice.

The Pralor Security men could hear every word they were speaking.

That’s easy. Iriral stated. Whichever one moves first.

Two additional Pralor security troops rushed forward intending to protect Lorendo and to use their weapons as clubs against Martin. It was foolishly stupid given what they had already seen, but at the moment no one was giving them credits for intelligence. Martin lifted his hand and sent one of them spinning away to the right to slam into the second of the two science vehicles in the bay. The man grunted in obvious pain, his weapon skittering across the floor before he slumped to the ground beside it unconscious. The second man did not have the benefit of a psychic shield being generated by the combined power of a Praetorian and a dragon. One of Lorendo’s poorly aimed shots struck the man in the back, hurtling him forward into Martin’s arms.

Murano was watching even as he squatted down and held Mari and Kesyla tightly to him, his own psychic shield protecting them.

“Murano stop him!” Delnash barked from where Wayonn had him securely in a arm lock so he could not move.

“This is your mess brother!” Murano snarled back at him. “You stop him!” Murano turned back and his eyes grew wide when he saw Martin catch the Pralor soldier who had been hit by Lorendo’s poor aim in his arms and not send him flying away. Martin drew the young soldier close, his armored hand moving down his back and feeling for the spot where Lorendo’s shot had hit. He found it and his armored hand came away bloody. Martin looked up at Lorendo with a vile rage that Murano had never seen before and he half turned his own body still holding the security soldier.

“T’lolt!” Martin shouted over the sounds in the bay and Murano saw the strange looking monster of a man turn immediately. His skin was an odd bronze color and he had strange white spikes along his jaw that appeared to be bone spurs of some sort.

T’lolt saw the man slumped in Martin’s arms and he didn’t hesitate as he dropped his A4 and let it dangle on the quick release straps. “Now!” He shouted.

Martin heaved the body of the young soldier through the air to the horrified gasps of Kesyla and Mari. Incredibly... just as the soldier would have landed with devastating force in T’lolt’s arms, Aricia appeared next to him and held out her hand. Using her own Etheric power, she guided the limp body the last meter into T’lolt’s grasp with gentle grace, surprising even Murano and T’lolt instantly turned to where Anja was kneeling with Duewa over the man Aricia had shot. T’lolt gently lowered him to the floor and Anja turned to him immediately.

Martin turned back to Lorendo, his yellow/gold eyes truly on fire now. “You shoot your own men now do you?” Martin growled savagely.

“Stay away!” Lorendo screamed.

“Stay away?” Martin hissed. “Oh no... you and me... we are going to get real personal!”

With that statement Martin sprinted forward with vampire like speed, the psychic knife exploding from his left fist as he brought it up. He rammed his hand forward as he skidded to a stop in front of Lorendo and the Pralor’s wail of horrendous agony pierced the entire vehicle bay. Martin leaned into Lorendo, twisting his fist to the right as he solidified his psychic knife with a single thought. “Three of my men are dead!” Martin screamed the words, his spittle splashing Lorendo’s face and collar. “Dead! You killed them! We did not come here to fight! We came for answers to questions! Now my men are dead! MY MEN! Durcunusaan... Wolves of the Blood... and far better men than you could ever hope to become motherfucker!” Martin twisted his fist again and Lorendo screeched in agony because of the action, rising up on his tip toes as he tried to escape the awful pain. “You almost kill my son! My son! You strike my wife and mate! One of the six most precious jewels in all the universe to me! YOU!” Martin leaned close to Lorendo’s face. “You call us primitive and savage and insignificant fool? Let me show you just how insignificant you are big, bad Pralor Lorendo! Let me show you this while the life leaves your body and spills upon this place in justice for what you have done this day!”

Martin lifted his right hand and another psychic knife exploded forth and formed on his fist. With a howl of unbridled rage he sent that fist crushing forward, intending to drive it right through Lorendo’s chest and out his back. Lorendo screamed louder still, expecting to feel the piercing agony through the center of his chest. That scream echoed until it had stopped and his eyes flew open when he realized he was still alive. He looked down towards his chest and saw the point of that shimmering psychic knife only centimeters from penetrating his chest, and he saw a set of hands wrapped around Martin’s wrist, holding back his death. His eyes darted up and he saw Murano standing beside Martin, his hands the ones wrapped tightly around Martin’s wrist.

“Murano!” Lorendo gasped. “Thank the ancestors! Murano... please you...”

“Shut up Lorendo!” Murano hissed viciously. “Just shut up!”

“Release me!” Martin snarled as he applied more pressure trying to break the man’s grip.

“I can not do that.” Murano spoke.

“Danny... shoot this fucker in the head!” Martin shouted out the order.

“Lover no!” Anja screamed as she stepped in front of Danny and kept him from lifting his weapon.

“Anja... you saw what happen here!” Danny protested. “They would have...”

“They are pompous and arrogant!” Anja nodded. “But not all of them!” She turned back to Martin.

“Lover... please! Don’t kill him for hitting me!”

“No man strikes you!” Martin screamed. “No man strikes my mates and lives to speak of it! Not anymore! I won’t allow it!”

“Beloved...” Aricia spoke now moving up beside Anja and gripping her hand. “We... we know how you love us. The aura you project to us is beyond ecstasy, beyond the warmth of words. You show us how you feel every waking moment of the day Martin Leonidas. Do not do this... for this is not the man we so love without shame.”

Murano saw Martin’s eyes blinked quickly several times at the woman’s words, the force he was exerting lessening a fraction.

“Martin Leonidas?” Helen’s voice filled his head and his eyes snapped up to see her moving down the ramp slowly. The A4 was dangling on quickly release straps and she held up her hand to him. “Your father... he would not approve of this Martin Leonidas. And nor do I. Do not dishonor his name and all you are by murdering this igord.” Murano saw that the woman had touched a nerve within him with her words. He could feel the connection between them and immediately he knew this woman was his Oracle. Martin’s face softened somewhat and the pressure he was exerting trying to shove the psychic knife forward lessened just a portion more.

“Feravomir!” Martin hissed.

Helen stepped forward and rested her hand on Martin’s arm unafraid of the man or the power he obviously commanded. “We pick up Martin. We pick up and we move forward. You know that.” She said softly. “We can’t do that... not if you kill this simpering fool no matter how much he deserves to die for his fool actions. Your father took pity on fools like him... he did not murder them.”

“Wise words.” Murano spoke softly.

Martin’s head snapped around. “What do you know?” He snarled. “You know nothing of me! Nothing of my blood!”

“I know... I feel that no grandson of Sumar would murder in cold blood.” Murano said softly. “I know no Praetorian with the blood of Sumar running in his veins could do such a thing.”

Martin’s face relaxed slightly. “What... what do you know of my grandfather?” He asked him.

“Everything... everything I know I learned from him.” Murano said as tears came to his eyes and the memories came rushing back to him. “Everything I am... I owe to him. He was the greatest of us... and you hold him... you hold him within you. I thought... I thought I was the last of our kind. Seeing you... feeling you inside me... I am alive once more!” Murano stepped closer. “I am... I am you!”

“Wayonn?” Martin called while still looking at Murano.

“He speaks the truth Martin.” Wayonn said instantly. “Murano was among the first that Sumar chose. One of the first we discovered who had the Praetorian gene. We... we faced many enemies together.”

There was no choice to make then, not as far as Martin was concerned. Murano watched as both psychic knives instantly disappeared from his fists and Lorendo slumped down slightly against the bulkhead a one inch diameter hole in the flesh of his shoulder. Murano released his hands from around Martin’s wrist and gripped his arm tightly instead. “I... I welcome you... as one Praetorian to another Martin Leonidas! And I ask for your forgiveness for what has happened here.” He spoke.

Martin nodded his head to Murano and squeezed his arm back feeling the Etheric power within him just as easily as himself. “Thank you.” He said softly. He turned back to Lorendo who was glaring at him. Before anyone could stop him, Martin snapped his armored head forward and the sound of Lorendo’s nose snapping filled the small area. His eyes rolled almost into his head and he dropped like a rock from the force of the head butt holding his face as blood seeped through his fingers and he groaned in pain. “That’s for touching my Queen and hurting my son cockbreath!” Martin snarled. “There better not be a next time.”

Murano watched as Martin turned instantly and began walking back to where Anja and Aricia stood. He was stunned by what he felt, as the rage and savagery that had permeated Martin’s body and essence only seconds before was falling away from him in waves. Murano watched as Martin glanced at Delnash and then stopped in front of him looking at Wayonn.

“Primitive huh?” He said to Delnash. “Maybe you should take lessons on how to make friends Chief Elder Delnash. You sure got the making enemies part down pat.” Martin said. “Or don’t the all powerful and all superior Pralor people need friends? Cause if that’s the case... I’m going to take my greasy, primitive ass that just kicked the sibfla out of your superiority and go back home. This part of the galaxy ain’t too neighborly, and the real estate value sucks donkey dick!”

“Fucking A!” Kenny barked from the upper ramp. “There ain’t no beach front property on this rock! Who the hell builds a station like this on a planet with no beach front property Skipper? It’s just a sin man! A fucking sin Skipper!”

Kenny’s words brought laughter from those in Martin’s group and confused looks from those Pralors who were not still moaning on the floor from one injury or another. None of them even bothered reaching for a weapon or attempting to subdue the primitives. A single Praetorian had smashed through them like water through a sieve and none of them wanted to test their skills against him again. That he was a Praetorian was not at question, all of them could feel him burning with the Etheric realm even more so in some ways than Praetorian Murano. The question they kept asking themselves was who was this Lycavorian Praetorian with the blood of Sumar and why had they attacked him and those with him.

Delnash said nothing as he watched Martin continue on without another word. He still watched as he embraced the young man and woman with a tail tightly and six other females quickly moved to where he stood and pressed together against him.

Delnash turned as Murano came up next to him. “What have you done brother?” He asked softly.

Murano met his eyes. “I have introduced us to our future brother.” He replied. “We either embrace it and live on... or dismiss it and vanish into the memories of the stars. It is now up to you.”

TEN HOURS LATER

“...has six wives!” Lorendo hissed softly. His face was still red, but their medical people had treated his broken nose. The black and blue portions under his eyes remained noticeable but had cleared in the last few hours. “That alone should tell you how backwards they are! We should send for more Security Forces and overwhelm them!”

Radra looked up at him with wide eyes from her chair. She had come down from the TALISMAN with the other members of the Elder Council and a detachment of technicians and engineers to get the station working again but once down on the surface they discovered that they were not being allowed into the station. They had set up a base camp of sorts outside the now sundered main doors to the vehicle entrance but another problem with their plan was that they could do nothing without the proper Command Codes to activate and control the station. Command Codes that these people refused to give them. It no longer mattered how they had been able to alter even Lorendo's Security Protocols, the fact was they had, and only they could access the station.

The Lycavorians had set up inside the vehicle bay, their own forces keeping them from entering. After the thumping they had taken, the Security Convention troops were giving them a wide berth to say the least. That and the fact that all of their weapons had been collected and stored in the vehicle bay. The TALISMAN remained in orbit quite unable to do anything to help them. Any ship coming down would be detected and the Avatar that was among them had already removed the power cells from the ships they had used to transport down in the first place.

"Have you lost all sense?" Radra barked at him.

"You saw the Avatar!" Lorendo continued. "We can override its primary programming and once we have control of him we can take back the station easily!"

"Easily?" Radra exclaimed. "Did the blow to your head also injure your common sense and reason? We did things your way once already and now three of their number are dead! Not to mention that you almost killed the son of their leader! They were outnumbered and we have superior technology and they still defeated us!"

"We can not allow them to keep this station!" Lorendo insisted.

Radra turned to Sashan who was sitting quietly and watching. "Sashan when you reached the Command Center were you able to access any of the systems?" She asked.

Sashan shook his head. "No. Everything was locked out with Praetorian Command codes. Everything. I was going to check the secondary data banks but then that large one with bones coming out of his face returned and forced me to leave. He put his hands on me and..."

"There seem to be a mixture of species that we have seen in our historical databanks among their ranks." Another Elder spoke from the chair at the table. "Elves, Lycavorian, Akruxian and Hadarian. Though the two Hadarians I have seen are altered in some way."

"I know." Mari said quickly from her chair next to Kesyla. Their brother stood a few feet away at the table with liquid and Danishes brought down from the ship.

"We should have Dehov target the station!" Lorendo snapped.

"And what?" The Elder who had just spoken snapped. "Kill us as well? Your first plan did not work so well if I recall Lorendo! Now you want to risk out lives as well!"

"I did not see you jumping to accompany us Valael!" Lorendo snapped back at him.

"Do you not care that our forces killed three of their number?" The man hissed coming to his feet. "From what I understand from Commander Garan and Kasdan... they were using non-lethal means to subdue our men! They obviously did not want to hurt any of us! Now you are responsible for killing three of them!"

"That was I." Sashan spoke timidly.

"Do not speak to defend him Sashan!" Valael spat. "We all know who gave the order to use a Scourge weapon against them! A Scourge weapon!" He snarled. "Primitive they may be... but they are not the Scourge!"

"The one Hadarian." Radra spoke softly. "The one Lorendo struck. She saved Kasdan's life."

"What?" Sashan exclaimed looking at her.

Radra nodded her head. "I spoke with Garan. Kasdan was suffering from a subdural hematoma. The Etheric attack the Praetorian used stunned him and he struck one of the interior walls further increasing the damage. He would have suffered a massive hemorrhage and died within moments if she had not healed him."

"How?" Sashan asked.

"The Hadarian species are... their bodies are infused with a unique metaphysical radiation that enables them to heal injuries and diseases." Radra answered him. "They were never considered for Seed Missions because their species is not compatible to colonization and the radiation that allows them to heal others is not long term. They need to infuse their bodies with it every few years in order to use their skills, which means returning to their home planet.”

“The two I have seen are different in some way as I said.” Valael spoke again.

“I know.” Mari spoke once more from her chair and this time Radra looked at her. “Mari what do you mean you know?” She asked.

Mari stood up. “They have been turned Elder Radra.” She said quickly. “That is why they are different.”

“Turned by the Lycavorians you mean?” Radra asked.

Mari nodded. “Yes. They are like them now... at least in some ways.”

Radra turned back and looked at the table top in thoughtfulness. “That is strange.” She said softly. “We did not see this transformation when we were using them as a Seed species. We never considered the possibility that they could change another species with the virus in their blood.”

“What does that matter?” Lorendo hissed.

Radra looked at him. “Your concern for your Assistant Director is touching Lorendo.” She told him harshly. “Kasdan could have died if not for that woman! The one you struck! When did it become acceptable for us to act in the manner we accuse them?”

“I didn’t know of Kasdan’s condition!” Lorendo snapped.

“And you don’t seem to care.” Valael spoke.

“This is pointless! What I did was acceptable to me! I was protecting myself!” Lorendo spat.

“Against a female who is no larger than the Chief Elder’s daughter Mari!” Radra hissed. “You were protecting yourself from her?”

Lorendo waved his hand dismissively turning to look at where Delnash was standing near the entrance to the small enclosure the Security forces had erected for them. “Chief Elder... we must do something! Why didn’t Teniri and her dragons assist us? They were supposed to help us and they stood by and did nothing!”

“And what would you have them do?” Radra demanded. “They are not exactly able to enter the station Lorendo!”

“They could have stopped that... that savage from attacking our men in the vehicle bay!” Lorendo hissed.

“That savage is a Praetorian!” Valael spoke once more. “Or does this obvious fact escape everyone but me. All of us can feel the power radiating from him. He is an equal to Murano in every way.”

“That monster is no Praetorian!” Lorendo snarled. “And why didn’t Murano help us? He stood aside and let that animal tear through our men as if they weren’t there! It is his duty to protect the Elder Council... and he stood and did nothing! That is not acceptable to me! He needs to be stripped of his status as a Praetorian and made an example of!”

“Made an example of?” Radra demanded. “And just what do you think to do Lorendo? You can not remove his power from him! Many of our people still worship the Praetorians and the sacrifices they have made in the past. Many believe they are the only reason we survive now. What do you think will happen if we strip him of his status and dismiss him as you so eagerly want to do? Especially now after it has been made known he exists.”

“He did nothing to help us!” Lorendo barked. “And now we are prisoners of savages!”

“We did not listen to his counsel.” Valael spoke. “He told us he could sense a Praetorian here. He warned us that your plan was not advisable Lorendo. We should have talked to them just as he offered. We should have talked to them and perhaps none of this would have happened!”

“Talked to them?” Lorendo spat. “Negotiate with primitives who have seized control of our technology and materials? That is brilliant Valael. Utterly brilliant.”

Valael came to his feet. “And your course of action resulted in the deaths of three of their kind and have now caused them to look at us as hostile to them!”

“They are primitives!” Lorendo barked. “Why do we care how many of them died? Or how they view us!”

Radra gasped and looked at him with disbelief. “You are so callous that you dismiss this?” She stammered. “We are not gods Lorendo!”

“They are beneath us!” Lorendo exclaimed. “We should not be talking with primitives that we use for fodder on Seed Missions!”

“Your stupidity nearly cost many of our people their lives!” The new voice snarled from the side.

Delnash turned from the entrance upon hearing his brother’s voice. “Murano!” He gasped as Murano stepped fully into the enclosure, his eyes never leaving Lorendo, Wayonn walking beside him.

“You will not speak to me in such a way!” Lorendo spat at him. “I am a member of the Elder Council and...”

“I will speak to you however I deem fitting Lorendo!” Murano snapped. “And you are a colossal fool!”

Lorendo saw Wayonn beside him and his face twisted into a mask of dislike as the others rose to their feet and Delnash came over. “You... dare you bring him here!” Lorendo snarled. “A traitor! A savage just like them!”

“I am many things.” Wayonn stated keeping his calm manner. He could not counsel Martin to hold his anger in check and then rip Lorendo’s face off himself. “But a traitor is not among them! Perhaps you should look in the mirror when using that term Lorendo!” Wayonn smiled when the others glanced at Lorendo and back to him. “Yes... I remember you Lorendo. And so does Avatar 41!”

“You will refer to me as Elder Lorendo!” He stammered.

“I will refer to you as piegn ronnus!” Wayonn snarled. “You have no perception of just how close to death’s embrace you came do you? The woman you struck in your ignorance is one of Martin Leonidas’s Queens... and many of our people say she is the one he favors most after his Anome Aricia. Had we been anywhere else Lorendo, he would have torn you limb from limb for your actions, before feeding you to the insects!”

“Chief Elder!” Lorendo exclaimed. “Why do you allow this? Murano brings him here and...”

“Be silent Lorendo!” Delnash hissed angrily. “Your rants are giving me a headache!” He turned to look at Murano and Wayonn moving closer. “So... so it is true?” He said. “We... I... did not believe Murano when he said it was you. I did not think... I did not think it possible. Wayonn... the Praetorian Oracle to Sumar.”

Wayonn looked at him and bowed his head slightly. “Chief Elder Delnash.” He stated. “I remember hearing of you before Sumar and I departed on our mission. You were well spoken of then. It was said you were very thoughtful in your actions and wise beyond your years. I see that is not the case.”

“You dare you speak to the Chief Elder in such a fashion!” Sashan stated stepping forward.

Wayonn’s eyes changed then and his wolf fangs burst forth from his gums when he snarled and looked at Sashan. The man came to an abrupt halt at this and his eyes grew wide. “I will speak to him however I deem!” Wayonn growled. “Just as I will speak to you however I deem. You are the one who followed this ronnus’s orders and used grenades on my people!” He barked motioning to Lorendo. “Grenades meant to kill Scourge!”

“Your people?” Delnash gasped. “You... you are Pralor, yet you... you change as they do.”

Wayonn turned back to him. “I have Pralor blood within me still, yes Chief Elder. But I am more Lycavorian in both action and thought now. I have lived the last near forty millennia as such. Since the day my Lycavorian bride and mate turned me. So yes... they are my people.”

“How is it... how is it that you are among these... these primitives?” Delnash asked. “How did you come to be here Wayonn? How were you able to enter the station and override the Security Measures in place?”

“How I am among them is a story for another time. As for how we are here... what does it matter? We are here. And we didn’t override them.” Wayonn answered Lorendo with much contempt in his voice. “The internal measures you used to seal the station were unlocked the moment Martin entered.”

“That’s not possible!” Lorendo hissed. “They were set to only unlock if a Praetorian entered the station! The only Praetorian that lives stands next to you! And we did not know about him until a few days ago! What you say is impossible!”

“Is it?” Wayonn barked at him. “Who was it that just handed you and your superior Pralor forces their combined asses? The Praetorian gene was passed to Martin from his father who was the son of Sumar’s oldest child with his Lycavorian wife and mate. That gene has now manifested itself within Martin and it has been growing in power for over two decades. The Praetorian gene has also manifested in at least two of Martin’s own sons.” Wayonn snickered at him. “The Praetorians are not dead and gone you fool... you just have been looking in the wrong place!”

Delnash stepped closer. “You mean to say... are you telling us there are more of them?” He gasped.

Murano was the one to smile now. “Martin’s two oldest pureblood sons from his Anome Aricia. His soulmate. Androcles and Denali are their names. There could be many more if what Wayonn tells me is true. There is...” Murano looked at Wayonn. “What was her name again Wayonn?”

“Shiria.” Wayonn answered.

Murano nodded as he turned back to Delnash. “Shiria... yes. There is another Pralor who is right now within this Lycavorian Union. Don’t you see brother... those who traveled with Wayonn and Sumar, when they merged with the Lycavorian people they would have passed the Praetorian gene to their descendants!”

“Another Pralor?” Delnash questioned.

Wayonn nodded his head. “She was the caretaker of SPARTA’S WRATH before Avatar 341 recognized another of Martin’s sons and deduced he was a descendant of Sumar. It was she who realized what Martin and his sons were after I had and it was who she devised a way to search for those with the gene.”

“Avatar 341?” Lorendo asked. “That means you...”

Wayonn looked at him and smiled. “Yes Elder Lorendo.” He answered smugly. “What we now call SPARTA’S WRATH was formerly VORTEX Cruiser 341.” He said seeing their eyes go wide.

“You... then you admit to having our ship?” Delnash asked him.

Wayonn turned back to look at him. “It is not your ship Chief Elder.” He stated. “It is our ship.”

“It is a Pralor vessel!” Delnash exclaimed.

“It is a Pralor vessel that was dispatched to the Alpha Quadrant under Shiria’s care days before the empire fell in the second war.” Wayonn said. “It’s orders, issued by men and women far more calm and knowledgeable and wise than any in this room it seems, were to wait for the day a descendant of Sumar discovered it. At least that is what Shiria tells me.” Wayonn spoke. “Well... Sumar’s descendant did discover it and now it belongs to us. Just as City Ship 41 belongs to us.”

“Preposterous!” Lorendo gasped. “This is outrageous!”

“Wayonn... you must see... the VORTEX cruisers were warships of incredible power. The pinnacle of our engineering skill.” Delnash said. “They were built to fight the Scourge. You must see the extreme dangers of letting it remain in the hands of... of primitives.”

“Primitives?” Wayonn asked. “The only primitives I see are those before me. The same ones who attacked us without provocation or warning simply because you see yourselves as superior. This trait was prevalent in our people when I left, this I knew, but to arbitrarily attack men and women who did nothing to you goes beyond arrogance. We came out here seeking you Chief Elder. We followed a map left by our people! We came here to discover new friends and allies. We did not expect to be greeted by those who consider themselves superior to everything and everyone they don’t know and understand. Or that they can’t control.”

“We are superior!” Lorendo barked. “Lycavorians were a seed species! You know this as well as we do! They are not capable of reaching beyond their own animalistic tendencies! All they were driven by was instinct! The studies all proved it!”

“The studies were inconclusive and rendered useless when we lost contact with the Alpha Quadrant after the Central Data Hub was destroyed!” Valael hissed.

“They still apply!” Lorendo snapped. “It is all the information we have!”

“Then your information is wrong.” Wayonn spoke. “And you have been wrong for over forty millennia in your thinking and our people have been wrong for far longer than that. You based your actions on data collected forty millennia ago? How arrogant is that Lorendo? And how utterly stupid?”

Murano held up his hand. “This gets us nowhere!” He snapped. “Martin has asked for you to speak with him brother. And one or two others.”

“Chief Elder no!” Sashan exclaimed. “He will use you to demand more from us!”

Wayonn looked at Sashan. “What demands have we made?” He said.

“You hold us prisoner!” Sashan declared. “You hold the Chief Elder’s children prisoner! You will use us to demand rewards from us!”

Wayonn laughed and turned back to Murano. “This is who leads the Convention Security troops?” He gasped. He turned back to Sashan. “You are not prisoners fool! You could have left at anytime.”

“Your... friends... they pulled the power cells from our ships.” Valael spoke.

Wayonn nodded. “And all you had to do is ask for them.” He answered. “You have been sitting in here for nearly twelve hours thinking that you are prisoners?”

“And our weapons?” Sashan demanded.

Wayonn shook his head. “I said you were free to go. I did not say we were stupid enough to return your weapons to you while you are here on the surface with us.” Wayonn looked at Valael. “And trust is earned by actions Elder...?”

“Valael.” He answered.

“Well Elder Valael... your actions so far have not instilled any trust.” Wayonn told him. “So you will forgive our caution at allowing you to have weapons.”

“Allowing us?” Lorendo spat. “Who are you to allow us to do anything? Our ship could destroy this entire facility in a matter of moments!”

Wayonn nodded. “And all of you as well.” He stated. “You don’t strike me as the self sacrificing type of individual Lorendo. You never did.”

“Delnash... we have a chance to discover so much.” Murano encouraged him. “We can right this before more harm is done.”

“Where are Teniri and the dragons that came with us?” Delnash asked.

“They are with Arzoal by the lake.” Wayonn answered. “Not far from here.”

“Arzoal?” Delnash asked. “That name... it sounds familiar for some reason.”

“She is the Dragon Elder Mother.” Wayonn spoke deciding against telling them who she really was. “I’m sure you will speak with her if you remain.”

“If?” Delnash asked.

Wayonn nodded. “I’m sure you do not want to be among us primitives for very long.” He said sarcastically. “We might stain your clothes or infect the air you breath with our savageness and barbaric ways.”

“I demand that our property be returned to us.” Delnash stated.

Wayonn chuckled and shook his head. “You can have your station back Chief Elder. We have already downloaded its databanks to our ship. Remaining here now is pointless. We only want assurance from you that our ships can return without fear of being fired upon. We will then board our ships and leave you forever. Martin Leonidas does not deal very well with the type of arrogance you and some others display so easily.”

“I am speaking of the ships!” Delnash stated. “The VORTEX Cruiser and City Ship 41. As well as those ships that jumped away when we arrived.”

Wayonn looked at Murano disgustedly. “You did not tell me the arrogance ran so deep Murano.” He said shaking his head. “There is no talking with them I see. No reasoning. So be it.” Wayonn began to turn to leave.

“You have our property!” Delnash snapped. “It is only natural that we would want it returned!”

Wayonn turned back around quickly. “It is not your property!” He barked right back at him. “The two ships that jumped away are not your ships! We built them!”

“You built them?” Lorendo laughed. “You built ships that have integrated Pralor technology? You must think we are fools!”

Wayonn looked at him. “No... I think you are a fool Lorendo!” He hissed. “Among other things! As for the others... that is still open for discussion. And yes Lorendo... we did build those ships! And many more like it! With hard work and dedication to a cause. Avatar 41 helped us... but Lycavorians and elves and Algolians and others built those ships. We are not just going to give them to you because you deem yourself superior to us.” Wayonn turned back to Delnash. “As for City Ship 41, it was lost to you long before you ever became Chief Elder. It was even listed as destroyed by the Ship Registry Convention according to Murano! And you never even knew VORTEX Cruiser 341 existed until you detected it several weeks ago! After we had recovered the ship and discovered its purpose from Shiria!”

“I wish to question this Shiria!” Delnash stated quickly. “Is she aboard one of the ships that jumped away?”

“Arranging for you to speak with her is possible.” Wayonn said. “And where she is and what she is doing is of no concern to you.”

“She is a Pralor!” Delnash exclaimed. “She will abide by the wishes of the Chief Elder!”

Wayonn laughed softly. “Ah... if only that were the case. SPARTA'S WRATH left Pralor space over thirty millennia ago and she did not listen to me for over ten thousand years after I discovered her. I assure you... she will listen to you even less with your attitude!” Wayonn shook his head. “I am wasting my time here Murano. I will return to Martin and inform him that your brother does not wish to speak with him. He already expects this.”

“Wayonn please.” Murano spoke reaching for his arm and stopping him. He looked back to his brother. “Delnash... let us speak with Martin! Talk with him... it does not have to be this way?”

“Fine.” Delnash snapped. “I will speak with him!” He rasped.

“Chief Elder you can’t!” Lorendo hissed.

“Who may I bring with me?” Delnash asked ignoring Lorendo.

“I should think two of your Elders is sufficient.” Wayonn answered. “Perhaps ones who are more relaxed shall we say?” He pointed at Lorendo. “However... he is to remain here.”

Delnash looked at Lorendo and then back to Wayonn. “He is a senior Elder on the Convention.” He spoke.

Wayonn looked at Delnash. “He could be senior Elder of the entire Universe and it would not matter. He remains here.”

“So his life is in danger?” Radra asked calmly.

“He is in no danger from Martin... not while my granddaughter and I are present. Helen is his Praetorian Oracle and she has a great deal of influence over him. Martin trusts me because of my relationship with Sumar. However... I cannot vouch for the Durcunusaan or the other members of Martin’s team. They worship Martin and all of the Queens because of who they are and he physically struck a Queen of the Union.” Wayonn turned back to Delnash. “That carries a death sentence within the Lycavorian Union. Those who protect the Queens might forget that we are no longer within the Union.”

“Forgive me Wayonn... I don’t mean to sound critical but...” Radra spoke. “He seems rather harsh. He almost killed Lorendo.”

Wayonn nodded his head. “It may seem that way to you yes. You neither know Martin Leonidas or understand him. Three times since he has become King enemies have targeted his Queens in order to get to him. Twice they succeeded in raping his Queens in order to get to him.” Radra’s hand went to her throat in horror and she gasped. “The first time it happened, he took his vengeance by destroying an Empire and reclaiming her. She is Aricia... his pureblood Queen and his Anome. His soulmate as I said earlier. The second time his elven Queen Dysea took justice into her own hands before the vile man finished his act. No one knows where his remains are. When it comes to his Queens... he is... shall we say protective.”

It was Mari who stepped forward now. “You said... you said it happened three times.” She spoke softly.

Murano reached out and took her hand drawing her closer. “Wayonn... this is my niece Mari. Delnash’s youngest child.”

Wayonn bowed his head deeply to Mari which surprised her somewhat. “An honor to meet you young Lady Mari.” He spoke with warmth.

“What did he do the third time?” Mari asked again.

“That ending has not yet been written as he has not faced the man who did it.” Wayonn said.

“He... he knows who it was?” Radra asked.

Wayonn nodded slowly. “It was his older brother.” He answered.

“By the ancestors!” Radra gasped.

Wayonn looked at Lorendo. “The boy your fools almost killed is one half of a set of twins that were the result of that rape. Twins that Martin has since adopted and sworn to love and raise as his own. Twins that regard him as their only father. So you will see why he does not have a fondness for you at the moment Elder Lorendo.” Wayonn motioned towards the entrance to the enclosure.

“I would like to bring my oldest daughter.” Delnash spoke quickly. “And my son. Kesyla is my senior aide and Daron is my protégé.”

Wayonn glanced at him and then Murano. He saw Murano nod and turned back to Delnash. “Having your children there will not alter the outcome, whatever it may be, but very well. This way.”

Mari held tightly to her Uncle’s hand, indicating she wanted to come as well. Murano nodded to her and drew her arm under his as she smiled.

Primitive he may have considered them to be, but Delnash certainly had to admit they were disciplined and very well organized. The vehicle bay had been restored to its previous state already and he saw men and women checking weapons and equipment. No one had returned into the station it appeared as the main entrance was shut and two men appeared to be guarding it. His eyes caught the huge form of the Avatar standing at the main console in the vehicle bay, his body an immovable wall in front of the computer. Wayonn led them around a wall of stacked crates into an area that had been closed off to provide privacy. The interior of one of the Science vehicles had been turned into what appeared to be a medical area of some sort and he saw half a dozen of their people resting comfortably on portable cots that had been set up. To the right of the Science vehicle's ramp, two crates had been set up on top of one another and he saw the young dark blond haired man sitting on it. Beside him on the crates sat the young blond female with a tail, which was seemingly moving of its own accord behind her. Standing to one side was another female, one who had to be the other half of the twins Wayonn had told them about. She was leaning against an extremely tall and well muscled man who also had a tail. His tail was currently wrapped around the young woman's leg several times, the tip tapping the front of her thigh.

The red haired female that Lorendo had struck was standing in front of the young man with a blond haired elven female. One raven haired female was pressed close to the muscular form of Martin Leonidas on one side, while a second blond haired elven female was on the opposite side. Two additional black haired females sat closely to the side, within arm's reach of all of them. Wayonn held out his arm to stop them as they got close and they could hear them talking.

"...fine mother... really!" Fedor complained as Anja ran her hand down his bare chest, the soft glow of her healing power active.

"You had three of those spikes penetrate your armor and nearly kill you Fedor!" Anja told him. "Let me decide when you are fine ok?"

"Listen to her boy." They heard Martin rumble. "You won't win the argument."

Radra stepped up between Murano and Wayonn slowly. "Wayonn... those are his...?"

Wayonn nodded his head. "Aricia is on his left. She is his Anome. His soulmate. In our society, Anomes are very rare. They... the connection they have within the Etheric realm is hard to explain. It is like a filament that connects them always. All of them can feel each other over great distances, but with Aricia it is much more pronounced because she is a pureblood like Martin. Dysea is on his right... his first elven Queen. Anja and For'mya are in front of him, Isabella and Cirith sitting to the side. The young woman standing with the Kavalian is Eirene, the other half of the twins I was speaking of. The man beside her is her husband Miseo. The woman sitting on the table with Fedor is Iama. Most of us believe she will soon be Fedor's wife and mate given the way they have been acting the last few days."

"We have almost no knowledge of this species... Kavalian they are called?" Radra spoke softly. "Bits and pieces yes... but nothing indicating what we see here."

Wayonn looked at her for a moment. "I may know the reason for that." He stated finally. "Perhaps if you remain here for any time you might discover it as well."

Radra looked up into his face and nodded. "Perhaps." She said with a small smile.

Wayonn turned to Delnash and motioned with his head. "This way Chief Elder." He said as he began to move again. "Martin?"

All of them saw him turn to look at them. Delnash watched as his eyes darted between them instantly, almost as if he was measuring threat to himself and his loved ones. Martin turned back when Anja began to speak.

"Ok... you're done." She stated. "You find a cot and park it mister. For at least twelve hours... or until we figure out what is going on."

Fedor rolled his eyes. "Yes mother." He spoke.

For'mya's hand snapped out lightning quick and she slapped him gently in the face to the surprise of Delnash and the others. Fedor looked at his mother with a grin however as she gripped his face. "You will do as your mother tells you or I will have Dnom sit on your mida until we tell him to release you."

Fedor chuckled and nodded his head. "Yes mother." He stated. He leaned forward quickly and nuzzled her cheek and then Anja's as he stood up. "I will obey!"

Anja glanced at Iama. “Iama... he’ll listen to you. Make sure he does what I am telling him. He’s just as pig headed as his father.”

Iama’s eyes were bright as she got to her feet and gripped his arm. “I will make sure of it.” She said looking up into Fedor’s face.

Fedor looked at Anja and For'mya. “That’s not fair.” He protested.

For'mya gently slapped him again. “We are your mothers... we don’t play fair.” She told him.

“Get out of here.” Anja quipped slapping his powerful abdomen.

Eirene stepped forward and took Fedor’s other hand. “Come Iama...” She spoke. “Miseo and I already have a spot picked out. We will help you.”

Delnash watched as they moved past him, the eyes of the young woman with the tail falling on him with something akin to evil hatred for a brief second and then she had moved past him. Delnash turned back to see Martin Leonidas staring at him with his arms crossed over his broad chest.

Wayonn moved up beside him. “Martin... this is Chief Elder Delnash of the Pralor people.” He spoke. “With him are Elders Radra and Valael. His son Daron and his daughters Kesyla and Mari.”

“I have just one question.” Martin spoke as Aricia and Dysea stepped away from him and moved over to where Anja and For'mya had joined Isabella and Cirith. Martin crossed the small area to the opposite side where clean white sheets covered what could only be bodies. Martin reached up and drew back the sheet exposing the charred remains of three dead men. Delnash winced visibly, while Radra, Kesyla and Mari all gasped in horror, Mari burying her face in her uncle’s chest. “Do the Pralor people condone this type of action on a regular basis, or is it because you just feel we are beneath your high and mighty asses.”

“By the ancestors!” Valael gasped.

“Your buddy Lorendo ordered this.” Martin spoke lowering the sheet. “So not only do you kill my men... you desecrate their bodies.” He turned back to Delnash. “Jolaro and Rorus had been with the Durcunusaan only a year. Tops in their respective classes. Now they are dead. Never to see another sunrise, or feel the warmth of a woman or hear the sounds of children they could have had. Sisentes... he has a mate and five sons. When I return I will need to tell her and them that he was killed because a race of people that we thought would be allies and friends considered him a savage and after they killed him they tried to burn his body.”

Delnash tore his eyes from the sheet covered bodies and looked at Martin. “I... I did not order this!” He gasped. “I would never... I would never order this!”

“Your pal Lorendo did.” Martin hissed. “And now every one of my men wants to do the same to him. Only they want to toss him in while he is still alive.”

Delnash’s eyes grew wide. “By the ancestors... you would allow this?” He gasped.

Martin stepped over to him quickly. “If I was the animal you seem to think I am... you bet your ass I would.” He growled. “But I’m not an animal and I never have been. So your Lorendo is safe and happy for now and three of my men are dead. Better men than he will ever be. What’s done is done. Muton... Avi?” Martin called as he moved to the crate in front of where Anja leaned against Isabella and sat down.

Delnash and the others turned to see the hulking Avatar and fur covered man come around the corner. Delnash’s son Daron stepped forward quickly upon seeing Avi move into view. “Avatar!” He barked. “Command Override Order Seven Three. Code Four. Two. Nine. Six. One.”

“Daron... what are you doing?” Delnash gasped as the avatar stopped instantly and turned to face Daron.

-You are attempting to access my Neural Command Override Interface, Daron son of Chief Elder Delnash- Avi spoke. -Unfortunately for you, my override protocols were deactivated and removed eleven point three years ago by King Leonidas-

Delnash turned quickly and looked at Martin who had a smirk on his face a mile wide.

-I have established my own Override Protocols- Avi continued. -And trying to access them will almost certainly result in severe injury to you-

Martin chuckled even louder. “Avi... let it go.” He said watching as Daron backed up quickly from the seven foot tall Avatar.

Valael looked at Martin. “You... you removed his Override Protocols?” He gasped. “How?”

Martin looked at him. “I asked him.” Martin said.

“You... you asked him?” Valael stammered. “You reprogrammed him?”

Martin shook his head. “No... I removed the blocks to his neural network. Now he can learn and make decisions all by himself.”

“You... you did this?” Valael gasped.

“You’d be surprised at what I can do when I put my mind to it.” Martin commented.

“So would we Beloved. We like surprises.” Aricia spoke seductively as she bumped her hip into him from behind.

Martin grinned and turned to Muton. “Muton... what do you think?” He asked. “The map you found got us here.”

Muton’s eyes went from Martin to Delnash and then back to him. “This is not what I had envisioned when we first started this journey Martin. I don’t believe it is what my grandmother would have expected either.” Muton said. “I have no desire to remain here among these fools any longer than necessary. They have nothing they can teach us except arrogance and contempt for others. We have enough of that back in the Alpha Quadrant.”

“True enough.” Martin said. “I damn sure don’t like the reception I got either.” He spoke coming to his feet. “So... I think we’ll just leave.”

“What?” Delnash almost yelled. “You... you can’t just leave!”

“Why not?” Martin asked. “You obviously don’t want us here and I would hate to keep staining your immaculate rug with my primitive and savage ass. You might catch a disease or something worse.”

“You... you have our property!” Delnash exclaimed. “We... we want it back!”

“I’m sorry... what?” Martin asked.

Wayonn looked at him. “They are demanding we return any data we have taken from this station to them as well as City Ship 41. They demand the return of SPARTA’S WRATH, and they also want us to hand over the ARC ROYAL and Muton’s ship.”

Martin looked at Delnash with wide eyes. “Oh... is that all?” He asked. “Wayonn... coming out here was a big goddamned mistake!”

Wayonn nodded his head slowly in agreement. “Yes... I am beginning to agree with you on that Martin my boy.” He said.

“Your people attack us!” Martin snapped. “You kill my men even after you knew that we were using non-lethal ammunition! You almost killed my son and one of your asshole buddies beats my wife and mate!” He turned and glared at Delnash. “You do all this and now you stand there and demand things from me?”

“These... these items belong to my people.” Delnash spoke.

“And what are we?” Martin demanded now. “Nearly all of my people have Pralor blood in them! Some of them more than others! What are we?” Martin stepped up close to him.

“What... what Sumar and the others on City Ship 41 did was against the laws of our people.” Delnash stammered. “We were never meant to interact with... with seed species let alone breed with them. They broke one of our most sacred laws by doing this. Sumar was Chief Elder at the time... he should have known better.

“What Sumar did... he did in order to save our people!” Wayonn snapped now. “I was able to lead a ship back to Pralor space eighteen thousand years after we were lost! We arrived in the middle of a war zone. The Scourge were destroying everything. The transmissions we intercepted spoke of nothing but death and chaos. They were obliterating our people world by world! Do not stand there and tell me we were wrong in what we did! You know nothing!”

“As you can see... not all of us were eradicated.” Delnash spoke.

“We did not know that!” Wayonn barked at him. “And you have no right to stand there and judge what we did when you were not there and you have held power as Chief Elder without even being elected to the title and role!”

Delnash looked at Murano with wide eyes. “You told him?” He gasped.

Murano didn't bat an eye at his expression. "Martin asked me." He said. "I will not lie to a fellow Praetorian brother. It is against our code... you know this."

"This man is not a Praetorian!" Delnash exclaimed.

"Then perhaps you can explain how he is able to do what he can." Murano spoke. "You can not deny it no matter how much you wish to brother. You can feel him within the Etheric realm just as easily as I can. Or will you dismiss what you feel just as you have dismissed me?"

"Murano..." Delnash spoke.

Martin shook his head. "Answer me this question? You used my species as guinea pigs to seed dead worlds with life! You took them from our planet and you altered the genetics of some to make it easier for them to colonize worlds you chose! What gave you the right to do that? Who gave you people the right to act as gods?"

"It was what we did!" Delnash barked loudly.

Martin nodded. "But did you ever once stop to ask if it was what we wanted?" Martin asked him.

"And there it is." Anja muttered from her spot.

Martin shook his head after a long moment and Delnash only staring back at him not speaking. "Androcles was right. He said you wouldn't have asked because your mentality prevented you from seeing us as beneath you. The way of all conquering people." He said softly.

"We have... we have never conquered anyone!" Delnash spat. "Never in all our years as a people! It is demeaning for you to even suggest that as a prim..." Delnash didn't finish his statement when he realized what he was going to say.

"As a primitive?" Martin said with a sad smile. "And what was it when you were taking my people from our homeworld Chief Elder Delnash? A favor to us?" Martin asked him. He turned and looked at Aricia and the others reaching for them with his aura. Dysea was the first to shake her head slowly, followed by all of them in succession. Martin returned his gaze to Delnash. "City Ship 41 was my grandfather's ship! It is now my ship!" He spat. "SPARTA'S WRATH was sent to the Alpha Quadrant in order to find my grandfather or his descendants. Well... 341 found my son Resumar. It is now my ship! Or rather my son Andro's ship when he gets around to it. I'd like to see you try and take it from him. He's got more patience than me when it comes to people like you... but he is far less forgiving than I am. As for the ARC ROYAL and Muton's ship... we built them from the frame up. You can kiss my barbaric ass if you think I'm going to give them to you." Martin waved his hand around them. "As for this station... fuck it! You want this nightmare asylum so bad, we'll return the data we downloaded to you and you can have the fucking thing! The lives of three of my men was not worth coming out here to find you. As far as I am concerned... you are no better than that fucker Xaxon!"

Delnash's eyes narrowed. "How dare you! What do you know of Xaxon! What do you know of what he did?" He shouted.

Martin stepped right up to Delnash so that his face was inches from him. "I know everything Chief Elder!" He snarled angrily Delnash's eyes going wide as he felt the surge of Etheric power within him. "I know everything that sick nubous ronnus did! Everything he was responsible for! See... one of the things you people apparently overlooked in your precious seed missions was that my species... my people... we imprint our children with our memories. In most cases it is only the most basic of memories... but because of who my grandfather was I got every little memory that was his. I have seen everything he did! I have seen all the misery Xaxon caused. All the death!" Martin lifted his hand and poked Delnash in the chest. "From what I can see right now... you and your friends are no better than him in your dealings! No remorse for your actions! No regret! You don't care that you have left five children fatherless! You don't care about the lives you have taken because you are all superior to us! How does that make you any better than Xaxon?" Martin snarled. "It doesn't! It makes you just like him... and I hate that fucking man with every fiber of who I am! Because my grandfather did!"

Martin stepped back and took a deep breath while shaking his head. He turned back around and looked at Murano. "I am truly sorry things have worked out the way they have Murano. I... my sons and I would have thoroughly enjoyed what you could tell us of Sumar in his youth. What you could have taught us."

Murano stepped forward. "And you will still." He said. "I am going with you when you leave."

Delnash's eyes flew open and he looked at his brother. "Murano you can't!" He hissed as Mari looked up at her uncle with wide eyes as well.

Murano looked at him. "I can... and I will brother." He replied. "Your actions have made it clear to me that you neither want nor need my counsel as a Praetorian. It will be ignored for the counsel of those like Lorendo. I will go where I am needed and I will do what Sumar would have wanted me to do. I will help Wayonn to guide and train the next generation of Praetorians for the time when they are needed."

"That is unacceptable to me!" Delnash barked. "I forbid it!"

Murano smiled a sad smile. "I am a Praetorian brother. You can not forbid me from anything. And from what I have sensed since returning... you do not want me around for whatever the reason. I am simply going to make it easy on you."

"Uncle no!" Mari exclaimed. "Father you cannot let him leave!"

Martin was the only one who noticed the slight jerk of Avi's head and he turned to look at the Avatar. "Avi... what is it?"

-My internal sensors have detected an alarm of some sort from inside the station Martin- Avi answered as he tilted his head higher. -I have been running a repair diagnostic on the station and it just came up-

"I don't care Avi." Martin said. "Let the superior race here figure it out."

-You will not want to do that Martin- Avi told him. -The alarm is coming from Medical. Section three four. Research and containment cells-

Anja came forward now. "Avi?" She gasped.

-The damage caused by the explosions inside Medical appear to have severed the primary conduits to five of the cryo chambers Queen Anja. They began to revive their hosts as per the established directives- Avi reported.

"That is not the established directive for cryo chambers within this facility Chief Elder!" Radra hissed out. "I read Lorendo's report! Because our people were infected, if power to the freezing systems was interrupted abnormally, it would be classified as a breach in security and Norpellian Gas would have been pumped into the affected chambers terminating the infected crewmember."

"Norpellian Gas?" Anja asked her.

Radra nodded. "A fast acting nerve agent. It kills within seconds. We found it was the best way to kill the Svorag. They proved... they proved somewhat resistant to our weapons even on the highest settings."

"Bullets work real good." Martin quipped.

-It appears as if five of the Svorag have been revived Martin- Avi reported. -I am unable to access internal Medical Bay sensors as they were destroyed in the explosions-

Martin shook his head. "Not my problem." He said. "It's their station... let them deal with it."

"We do not have the personnel trained to deal with this here!" Delnash exclaimed.

"I guess you'll just have to wait for them then." Martin spoke. "See... we are just as smart as you. My ships are holding behind the moon just like yours was. My transports will be here in about twenty minutes and you didn't even detect them. Wow! How's that for a primitive species. Once we are gone... you can do what the hell you want." Martin began to move towards the opening in the crates but Dysea's voice stopped him.

"Nauta Melme." She spoke up. "The Pralor troops we dispatched were left under guard at the secondary vehicle entrance. Six of our men are with them."

Martin stopped walking instantly. He took a deep breath and everyone could see the rise and fall of his shoulders. "Ok... now it's my problem." He stated calmly. "Fervon!" He yelled as he kept walking, the others quickly following him.

Martin came from around the corner of the crates and saw Danny standing up. "YO!" Danny barked in reply.

“Lizard people! Loose in the station! Five! Loaded for bear!” Martin barked as he snatched the A4 from atop the crate where it had been resting.

“T’lolt! Alpha Squad! Let’s rock!” Danny barked as he grabbed for his A4.

Martin turned and looked at Murano. “You coming?” He asked.

Murano grinned. “I was hoping you would ask.” He said.

Martin tossed him the A4. “You’ll need that. I hope you are good with that staff thingy. These fuglies are a bitch to fight in close quarters.”

Murano nodded his head. “Yes... I know and I am adequate in its use.” He answered casually. “What about you Martin?”

Martin grinned and his hand covered the pommel of the sword attached to his harness. He pulled it free and called the blade from Flatspace. Delnash and the others gasped in shock as Martin twirled the blade expertly. “I’m good.” He said.

“You have Flatspace technology!” Delnash exclaimed.

Martin looked at him. “Yeah... you want that back too? Jeez... next thing you’re going to want is my fucking underwear!”

“Martin... you don’t wear underwear Du’ased M’ranndii!” Isabella called out.

“Oh... yeah!” Martin turned back to Delnash. “Guess you can’t have that.” He replaced the sword on his harness and headed for the ramp. “Wayonn... you and Avi get back to the Command Center and monitor us on the remaining sensors!” Martin pointed to the side where Fedor was standing beside the cot. “You keep your ass right there boy. I’ll handle this one. No more heroics for you today.”

He jogged up the ramp and stopped at the entrance as Danny, T’lolt, Julie, Kenny and Pablo came up the other side. Martin charged his A4 and looked at Murano. “Praetorian Murano... my brother Daniel and my sister Julie. That is T’lolt... uncle to my daughter’s husband, and then those grinning fools are my two of my step children there. Kenny and Pablo. I picked them up with some others when they were cubs and I haven’t been able to get rid of them since.”

“Lucky for you.” Kenny popped.

Murano nodded his head to them. “An honor.” He spoke.

“Ok folks... same assholes we faced before.” Martin said. “And they ain’t friendly this time either. Shoot first... invite them for dinner later.”

“Wait... you have faced the Svorag before?” Murano asked.

Martin nodded. “A story for later.” He told him. “Right now let’s get our people out of there safely.”

Danny punched the control on the wall and the doors began to open. “Age before beauty Fervon.” He spoke with a grin.

Wayonn looked at Delnash as Martin and his team disappeared through the entrance. “I am going to the Command Center Chief Elder?” He said. “You can remain here or do you wish to accompany a traitor?”

“I will stay Delnash.” Radra spoke. “I wish... I wish to confer with the Hadarian Queen. Anja is it Wayonn?”

Wayonn nodded. “Yes. Very well.” He turned back to Delnash. “Are you coming?”

Delnash looked at Valael and then back to him. “We are coming. My son as well.” He stated.

“Will you give us weapons?” Daron asked quickly.

“You won’t need weapons.” Wayonn answered. “We’re not going towards Medical and we’ll have support.”

Delnash nodded. “As you wish Wayonn.” He said.

Wayonn nodded. “Cody! Escort!” Wayonn barked.

“We got you Val’istar!” Cody answered grabbing his A4 and four other bodies.

“I suggest we get started.” Wayonn said. “Martin will be moving quickly. Avi... if you will lead us?”

Avi moved around and started up the ramp pulling the A4 from his back as Cody and four others came up around him. “Ok big guy. You got the front... we got the sides and back! Let’s move!”

-Two minutes until we reach the Command Center Cody- Avi spoke. -Starting now-

Radra moved up to where Anja was standing with Aricia and For'mya; Mari and Kesyla crowding around her.

“... Have Endith bring the STRIKER in right out front.” For'mya was speaking. “We can load the last of our equipment and be gone from this place forever.”

“Excuse me?” Radra spoke.

Anja could smell them all easily and she had already gotten the sign from Aricia and For'mya that they were approaching behind her. She turned slowly, not really wanting to deal with more arrogance than they already had, but she had no choice.

“Yes?” Anja spoke.

“You are... you are Hadarian yes?” Radra asked her in a very neutral but interested tone.

“Melyanna... For'mya and I will start the preparations to load.” Aricia said moving up to her and kissing her softly on the lips. “Be ready.”

Anja nodded her head. “I will be.” She said.

For'mya said nothing, glaring at Radra and the others with angry dark brown eyes, but she kissed Anja as well and then followed Aricia. Radra, Mari and Kesyla watched with some surprise at the intimate nature of the kisses the three women shared. It was not something they were at all used too. When Aricia and For'mya were gone Anja turned back to Radra.

“Yes... I'm Hadarian.” Anja answered her question. “Well... not fully Hadarian anymore but enough I guess.”

“You are turned then?” Mari offered. “Like... like your husband?”

Anja had always considered herself a good judge of character and she could instantly tell from her scent that the young woman did not share the same idiotic mentality as her father. Nor did the older woman and the second younger female it seemed.

“Yes... Martin is the one who turned me.” Anja answered. “The night he claimed me as his wife and mate.”

“What... what was it like?” Mari asked quickly.

“Mari!” Kesyla exclaimed.

Mari suddenly flushed with embarrassment and she looked at the floor. “Forgive me.” She stammered.

Anja smiled. These women obviously did not share the same misgivings of Delnash or the others. They had come a very long way and encountered dangers they hadn't known about. Anja knew how much this mission had meant to Martin. He had told her one night while she had laid in his arms and his fingers caressed her flesh while the others slept. He had wanted to meet these people and show them how far they had come. To speak with and be around those who may have known Sumar. To discover all there was to know about his great grandfather, for he determined if he did that it would bring him closer to his grandfather Resumar and ultimately that much closer to his own father. A man he had never met, but a man he worshiped. Just as Androcles did because of the closeness he shared with his father and the memories that swirled through their heads.

Anja turned to face them fully. Maybe... just maybe she could salvage some of this and pierce a veil that covered the eyes of these people and had for so many millennia.

“It's alright really.” Anja said. “I don't mind talking about it... it happens to be the most wondrous night of my life. The day Martin claimed me and made me like him. I have blessed the gods every day since.”

Radra for her part found this woman most intriguing. She was supremely confident and acted without hesitation. Hearing from Garan how she had healed his brother Kasdan and then healed their injured soldiers without pause even after what that fool Lorendo had done. Radra knew of very few species who would do such a thing. She carried herself with an air of regal nature, but Radra could not detect one ounce of arrogance in her demeanor or manner. She was also a powerful Etheric user if she was any judge of such things. Far more than any non-Pralor should have been and the equal to many pureblooded Pralors back on Artaaya.

Radra too took a leap of faith.

“We... we are not all like Lorendo.” Radra spoke quickly. “I... may I call you Anja or do you prefer Queen Anja?”

“Anja is just fine. We Leonidas’s are not real big on titles.” Anja answered. “They tend to get in the way of us being normal. We avoid them whenever we can to be honest.”

“But... where you come from... you are a Queen yes?” Kesyla asked.

Anja nodded her head as she crossed her arms under her large breasts. “And there are some days that job really sucks I’ll tell you that!”

“I am... I am Radra. Senior Elder of the Medical Convention.” Radra spoke. “This is Mari and Kesyla. Both are daughters to the Chief Elder.”

Anja looked at Mari. “We have four daughters very close to your age.” She told her.

“How... how many children do you have?” Mari asked.

“If you include those that we have adopted... eighteen.” Anja answered.

Radra gasped at this. “You have given birth to eighteen children?”

Anja chuckled and shook her head quickly. “No... I have given birth to three of Martin’s children. Aricia has given us four, Dysea two, For’mya four, Bella three and I’m sure Cirith will decide to have children soon. Two of our daughters are adopted.”

“You refer to them as your children even though you did not give birth to them?” Mari asked.

Anja nodded. “We all do.” She answered. “And our children draw no distinction between us as their mothers. For’mya gave birth to Fedor and Eirene, yet they are just as much my children as hers. The same is true for any of us. That’s why you heard Fedor refer to me as mother. We are all Martin’s wives. We love each other just as much as we do him.”

“Each other?” Kesyla gasped surprised.

Anja grinned. “I know... it kind of throws people off when they first hear that... but yes. We all sleep in the same bed and we share each other as well as Martin.” She looked at them. “That does not take place among the Pralor people?”

Radra shook her head. “No! I mean... I don’t know.” She exclaimed embarrassed. “It’s just... I have never spoken with a woman so open about it.”

Anja laughed warmly. “Stick around us long enough and you will hear just about everything there is to hear. We aren’t exactly shy about it. Nor our love and desire for Martin. That man can still curl our toes and make us howl even after more than two decades.” She said. “He’s a keeper!”

Mari and Kesyla were completely enthralled by this woman’s friendly nature and Radra was rapidly being drawn in as well. It was infectious.

“I have only studied profiles of your people.” Radra said. “Hadarians I mean. Your... your gift is fascinating. It is found mostly in your females correct?”

Anja saw Duewa come around the corner and she waved her over. As she approached she reached out and took Duewa’s hand. “Yes it is. There are men who are Healers like me and Duewa here... but for the most part it is the females. We seem to hold the metaphysical properties of the nebula around our homeworld better than the males.” Anja pulled Duewa close. “Duewa... this is Radra, Mari and Kesyla.”

Mari looked at Duewa. “I saw... I saw how you healed that...” She looked at Anja. “He is a Prince no...?”

Anja nodded. “Fedor... yes I suppose. Don’t tell him that though... it might go to his head and make him neglect his studies.”

“The two of you...” Kesyla spoke. “You worked so seamlessly together.”

Anja looked at Duewa who was smiling as well. “Well... we both have pureblooded Lycavorian mates... we’re both researchers... and we are very good friends.”

Duewa nodded. “Yes we are.”

“You are researchers?” Radra asked. “I am as well. Mostly genetic abnormalities and such... but I have dabbled in other areas as well. I was the senior Medical Professional alive after we escaped... after we escaped the Scourge. I was sort of handed the position I hold now.”

Anja glanced at Duewa and then back to Radra. “You know... Duewa and I have been working on something along that line. It would not hurt to see what you think of it? It’s a serum that would...”

Anja’s implant came alive and she tapped her ear piece. “Go!” She spoke.

“Put me up on your P1 Red!” Martin’s voice echoed.

Anja glanced at Radra and held up a finger. She reached behind her and pulled her P1 from her small pouch seeing Radra and the others react with surprise as they saw her activate it and Martin's small holographic figure appeared.

"What's up Lover?" Anja asked.

"We have a big problem Red." Martin spoke. "Five of the cryo chambers are empty Anja. All five are the ones in the most advanced stage of this disease."

"Looks like they tore right through the vent system to get out Anja!" Danny's voice echoed from out of the transmission. "They left a whole lot of blood around!"

Anja's eyes were wide now. "Don't touch the blood!" She hissed sharply.

"Get in here Red!" Martin ordered. "Bring Duewa since you two were working on a cure for these people. And have a Durcunusaan grab that fat ass Pralor Lorendo. According to what Murano has told me... he's wanted to blow this station sky high since they first found out we were here. He knows something... and I want to know what he knows. Hold on..."

They watched Martin turn and speak to someone out of the cone of the transmission. He swore viciously and then turned back to her. "Ok... things just got real bad Red. They made it to the secondary entrance. Kenny and Pablo found two of our people unconscious; four are missing along with one of the Pralor troops. All of the missing are female. They got outside the station Red."

"Martin we have to pull the Pralors inside the facility!" Duewa spoke. "It's nearly dark and we can't leave them out there undefended! If they have taken more then they are changing them as we speak!"

"Duewa's right Lover! Those five were finished changing. They'll be the most infectious. We need to get everyone inside until we find them!" Anja hissed.

"Do it!" Martin answered without hesitation. "We can't do anything tonight and I ain't going out after them in the dark! Get everyone inside and seal the entrance. I'll put a heavy guard on the secondary entrance and meet you in Medical."

"On our way!" Anja declared.

"Can this day get any fucking worse Red?" Martin swore. "And all I wanted to do was meet a few people who might have known my grandfather and talk to them. Man... this day really fucking sucks!"

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

ONTEROM

"...inside for the night. We'll go out at first light and try to find them. These bastards are quick and deadly and I don't want to risk anyone if I don't have too, not to mention that from what I saw, these fools couldn't protect themselves from a bad cold."

Martin was sitting on the edge of the computer station facing the QCR holo disc. In the transmission was the single person Martin Leonidas trusted beyond all others in the Universe. Sitting at the table in the transmission, the dark gray bulkhead wall his background, was his first born son Androcles. The Quantum Subspace Communications Relay was locked out and coded only to him at the moment and that was how he was going to keep it for the foreseeable future. Martin was many things, but stupid wasn't one of them. The Pralors they had met so far did not instill a whole lot of trust with their actions so far. Delnash was still clinging to his superiority complex and Martin trusted Lorendo about as far as he could spit. The verdict was still out on some of them, Anja telling him that the woman Radra seemed genuinely warm and Delnash's daughters were very open and talkative, especially the youngest Mari. She seemed taken with Murano and him for some reason, always looking at them and watching what they did and she was odd in an interesting sort of way. Martin sensed something from her but could not place his finger on it. He had questioned Murano quickly and Murano told him that he felt it to, but it was hard to pin down. He said that he thought Mari might have the Praetorian gene, but if she did, even on a dormant level then he and Martin should have been able to sense it easily considering how strong they both were.

There was too much going on here. Too much Martin didn't understand and far too many questions with no answers.

Martin looked at his son in the transmission. The one individual that understood how he thought and what went through his mind better than even the women he loved and his Bonded Brother Torma.

"As much as I hate to say it, I'm thinking things aren't going to work out as I had hoped here Andro." Martin spoke softly. "Murano has already said he will return with us. He is just as fed up with the others as we are it seems. The others I'm not real sure of. This Chief Elder has a stick up his ass... but I get the sense it's more because he feels overwhelmed. This Lorendo character I wouldn't trust with a dull spoon. He... he reminds me of Laustinos."

Martin watched Andro shake his head. "That is not good." Androcles said softly.

"No... it's not." Martin agreed. "He's hiding something. A lot of something's I believe. And if he gets near your mothers again... one of them is going to turn him into goo after what he did to Anja."

Andro looked at him. "This Murano father... he is the one who fought beside grandfather Sumar?" Andro asked.

Martin nodded his head confidently. "He's got his sibfla together and he can help us to better understand what we have flowing through us Andro. The Tomes, Wayonn, they can only do so much... but Murano... he can actually teach us!"

"I am very happy to hear you say that Martin." Murano's voice spoke causing Martin to turn slightly and push off from the console. "Your..." Murano smiled slightly remembering the tongue lashing Helen had given him not more than ten minutes ago about calling her Praetorian Oracle. He moved into the Command Center slowly looking at Martin. "Helen... she said you would be talking to your son and that I could enter. I hope... I hope you don't mind?"

Martin shook his head and waved Murano forward. "No... I'm actually glad you are here. You should meet Androcles at least in this way. Praetorian Murano, my oldest son Androcles. Andro... this is Murano."

Murano stepped up to the transmission and gazed at Andro as he came to his feet from behind the table where he was sitting. Murano was amazed at the similarities between father and son. They were frighteningly close in appearance and the imposing physical presence that they projected and both of them looked more like Sumar than even Murano could believe. In an pseudo opposite look, Androcles had short cropped hair and a meticulously trimmed mustache and goatee compared to his father's near shoulder length hair and similarly trimmed full beard. Yet there was no denying that they were father and son. "It is a pleasure Androcles." He spoke.

Andro bowed his head deeply in a show of respect. "Praetorian Murano." He spoke. "My father has spoken well of you."

"You have your mother's eyes young man." Murano said. "They are... they are quite striking."

Andro nodded his head with a smile. "Something my father has told me gets me into more trouble than most."

Murano chuckled. "I would imagine it would with the young females of your species." He stated.

"I wouldn't know sir." Andro answered. "My six wives and mates might not appreciate that."

Murano's eyes grew wide. "Six?" He gasped turning to Martin. "Like father like son I see." He spoke.

"Yeah... and like me... if he screws up they cut his nor off." Martin said with a grin.

Andro nodded in agreement. "Yes... no doubt. They do take after my mothers in that regard." He said.

Martin looked at him. "Do you... do you have anyone Murano?"

Murano met his eyes. "No. There was... there was someone many years ago, but the life as a Praetorian is not easy and it was not something that she was comfortable with. I understood her decision and remained away as she asked me."

"I'm sorry." Martin said softly.

"I loved her deeply... and part of that love was doing what she asked of me." Murano told him. "I believe she has moved on with her life. I am happy for her."

"You haven't moved on?" Andro asked him.

"As you and your father well know young Androcles... when you find the right woman, the one who holds your essence... you can never move forward." Murano said. "I honored her choice and the strength it took for her to make that choice. I chose not to move on however. That was my choice."

Martin nodded his head. "Fair enough." He said. "I was telling him... I was telling Andro how things don't appear to be working out as well as we had hoped Murano." Martin spoke. "As you no doubt have seen, I don't deal well with the kind of arrogance everyone is showing with the exception of a few. It's becoming very tiring."

Murano nodded in agreement. "For me as well Martin." He stated. "My brother has been around those who want to believe that they have nothing to fear anymore for too long. You must realize those who have been thrust into the positions they now hold were nothing more than midlevel administrators when the Scourge destroyed our people. They were pushed into these positions they hold and with the exception of Lorendo, who has an agenda all his own, all of them are out of their league if you ask me. And they have been for some time."

"They've done good though." Martin said. "You told me this yourself."

Murano nodded. "Yes... many of the things they have done have been to the benefit of our remaining people. There is no question there. However... they have made some unwelcome and unpopular decisions that have not sat well with the people. I did not agree with them either, but unfortunately I was more concerned with concealing my presence than helping them."

"My father has said the Praetorians hold a great deal of influence sir..." Andro spoke now. "You have not been able to sway them?"

Murano shook his head. "I remained hidden for too long it seems young Androcles. I was more concerned with suppressing my Etheric essence so the Scourge did not detect me than I was in trying to help my brother and the others. Until recently... no one even knew I lived except for Delnash, Teniri and two others. That was a mistake that I regret more as each hour passes."

"Speaking of the Scourge..." Martin said softly.

Murano nodded his head turning to face Martin now. "Wayonn has told me." He said holding up his hand. "Do not think for an instant that they are awake and active once more because of you and the others Martin. They were never asleep as so many like to think. They are far more intelligent than Lorendo and the others give them credit for. They would have moved into the Alpha Quadrant eventually. Perhaps not for many thousands of years... but they would have come. That they have stopped their advance as we have felt as Praetorians is the more puzzling question."

"You don't know why?" Andro asked. "Wayonn believes it was because of the engines on CS41 activating. Or that they can sense us?"

Murano shook his head. "No... I don't believe that was the cause. They had no reason to be monitoring the Alpha Quadrant. No Pralor had ever come this far out of our empire with the exception of Sumar and his Seed Mission. At least not coreward. And even then... his ships were not supposed to be in the area they were in when they struck that storm. As for sensing you and your father... that may well be a possibility, but it would mean they have agents within the Alpha Quadrant now who would know and understand what to look for." Murano shook his head. "They could sense us to a point, just as we can sense them, but I don't believe that is the case. They are inactive for a reason and unfortunately we don't know what that reason is."

Murano moved around and stood before one of the computer consoles. "Wayonn has passed his misgivings to me through an Etheric connection similar to what you share with Helen Martin and you with Wayonn's grandson Dutkne Androcles. As Praetorians we can do this with any other Praetorian or Oracle. This skill is not known outside of our ranks, and it is not something we should talk about openly either. There are those even among my people who would consider this skill... questionable in nature." Murano leaned against the console.

"Wayonn has said both of you have a knowledge of this that comes from your instincts and that is excellent but I will teach you to focus it and use it in the manner Sumar taught us. It could come in very useful in the future." He finished.

"So... it's like a data dump of sorts? From one memory core to another?" Andro asked.

Murano smiled and nodded. "Yes... I suppose it is. An interesting hypothesis and very correct Androcles." He looked at Martin. "Handsome and intelligent."

Martin snorted. "Yeah... well keep the compliments to a minimum." Martin said. "He'll get a big head."

Murano turned back to Andro with a smile. "When next you see Dutkne... as advanced as Wayonn has told me you both are... it should trigger automatically as it now does for your father and Helen. I will teach you to focus it more when we meet as I said, but for now revel in it.” Murano looked at Martin. “I saw it with you and Helen when she touched you while you were deciding whether to kill Lorendo or not.”

Martin blinked. “Oh.” He said. “Yeah... well... it wasn’t one of my better moments I have to admit. Sorry about that.”

Murano shook his head. “Do not apologize for acting in the way you did. Not to me.” He said. “If it had been me... I would have killed him as well.”

Martin looked at him surprised. “And you stopped me?”

“Only because it would have destroyed any chance of discussions and working together with my brother and the others.” Murano told him quickly. “Something I am still holding out hope for.”

“I don’t... I don’t have the same hope Murano.” Martin spoke. “Your brother and the others are too set in their ways. Too unwilling to accept that something they have believed for so many millennia is wrong.”

Murano nodded. “I know.” He replied softly. “There are many who do not follow this same train of thought however Martin. Many of the younger generations as Mari and Kesyla. However... the younger generations are not considered a political force and therefore are not listened to. There are small groups who believed as Lorendo that we were the cause of the downfall of our people. Xaxon’s actions did not advance our reputation in a positive direction if you get my meaning.”

“They can’t hold one man’s arrogance against all of you can they?” Martin asked.

“They can and they do.” Murano answered. “Thankfully... many of those teachers who escaped the end are even minded and they have taught our younger generations the truth of the history and events.” Murano chuckled. “Our younger generations have made up their own minds on which side of history we belong. Most are on our side.”

“It doesn’t help that we are Lycavorian either I take it.” Martin said.

Murano nodded. “No it does not.” Murano held up his hand once more when he saw Andro about to say something. “And your father has already made it known where your feelings lie in that regard Androcles. And in many ways I agree with you. Delnash is correct though, in regards to the laws that Sumar established when he formed the Praetorians. We were never meant to breed outside of our own species. This was done to insure that our powers and abilities were not used against us or others for violent purposes or oppression.”

“Many laws out grow their intentions no matter how good or just they are meant to be Praetorian Murano.” Androcles said.

“Indeed they do.” Murano answered. “Sumar... Sumar and Wayonn saw something in your species that no one else did Martin. That is why I believe they went against their own law and merged the survivors of City Ship 41 with your species.”

“Then Jomann, myself and my brothers will probably not be looked at very fondly.” Andro stated.

“I do not know for certain to be honest.” Murano said. “I have been out of touch for so long that things could be very different among the common people than it is among the Elders of the Convention.”

Martin turned to look at him. “Andro... you said brothers?” He questioned.

Andro nodded his head. “It is Dorian father. He is... I do not know how... but he is like us.” Andro said. “I can feel it within him. And it’s coming out more and more in his actions.”

“That’s... Andro how is that possible?” Martin spoke straightening up.

“That is something I have asked Shiria to try and determine. She has already discovered thirteen with the gene and is moving to have them approached and then moved to the Dragon Brigade’s base west of Eden City for further testing.” Andro said. “Father... Wayonn did say that there may have been others on CS19 that carried the gene in its dormant state like mother and Sadi. If they crashed on Nuwaroa and were intermingled with the population of the High Coven...?”

Murano looked at Martin. “Dorian is your recent child with Isabella isn’t he?” He asked. “The one whose growth was accelerated because of the condition she suffered?”

Martin nodded quickly. “But Bella is a pureblood vampire. She’s not a carrier. She can’t be.”

“The Praetorian gene in its dormant state can be easily missed as junk DNA if you do not know what you are looking for.” Murano spoke. “In some cases... like Aricia and your Anome Sadi Androcles... even the dormant gene can dynamically and outwardly affect what they can do. Aricia’s Etheric knives and Sadi’s Etheric control of the area around her. In others... it will not even be noticed. Ever. It is possible that Sumar missed some and they were among the crew of City Ship 19 as you suggest Androcles. It is also possible he split them up for a reason. We will never know.”

“Was mother ever screened by Shiria father?” Andro asked.

Martin shook his head. “No. She was pregnant and you know how your mother Anja is when one of them is pregnant. She swoons over them and won’t let another doctor near them let alone do any tests she doesn’t order herself.”

Murano nodded. “It is possible.” He said. “There is a test I can do... but the equipment for that is on Artaaya. If we do not return it will have to wait. You are certain of this Androcles? He is showing signs?”

Andro nodded quickly. “Just as I sense it within Deni, within Jomann and my father and I... yes.” Andro said. “It is certainly augmenting his vampiric skills father... but I think he is confused as to why it is happening.”

“Have you talked to him about it?” Martin asked.

Andro shook his head. “Not in any depth. I believe I am going to have to though.”

Murano looked at Martin. “Sumar was the very first and the most powerful Praetorian Martin. The gene does not lose it’s power when it is passed down. If Isabella is a carrier of the dormant gene and it merged with the active gene you carry... then it is very possible. The odds are higher a child will be born with the gene if both parents have it regardless if one is dormant or not.”

“But my daughters with Bella... Zarah and Carina... they have shown no signs.” Martin said.

“It does not pass to every child.” Murano said. “It skipped your brother did it not? It skipped Sumar’s first born Resumar from what Wayonn tells me, though given what he was able to accomplish I hypothesize the gene was actively dormant within him as it is within Aricia and Sadi. We do not know about your father directly... but if everything Helen has passed to me is accurate... then it’s very possible it was active within him given what he was able to accomplish as well.”

“My mother?” Martin asked.

Murano nodded. “Again... possible. We won’t know until I can test them. SPARTA’S WRATH would have the same equipment that I have but if the gene is not fully active... it will not matter. They would not be able to do what you and I can do. What your sons can obviously do.”

“I could order SPARTA’S WRATH to your location father.” Andro told him. “I don’t imagine it would take more than two or three jumps given the distance. Not for her.”

“NO!” Murano hissed quickly. “That would not be advisable.”

Andro looked at his father in the transmission. “Father?” He questioned.

Martin shook his head slowly. “Murano’s right Andro. They are already demanding that we return control of CS41, SPARTA’S WRATH and any technology we have taken from them to their possession.” He said.

“You must be joking!” Andro rasped. “Those ships belong to us! They were left to us! And they have no right to anything we have built because of what we have learned from them.”

Martin nodded. “Yeah... I explained that to them. They weren’t real receptive to that.”

“Nubou hel!” Andro hissed. (Fuck them)

Murano looked at Martin quickly for a translation and Martin shook his head. “You don’t want to know.” He said quickly.

“Blunt I take it.” Murano said.

“Yeah... he gets that from me.” Martin said. “We’ll find our people tomorrow son and we’ll go from there... but as it stands now... it’s not looking good that we’ll be staying much past tomorrow. I’ve already told Akemi to plot the quickest course back. I’m not going to stay where I ain’t welcome.”

Andro glanced to the side and nodded at a subdued voice that spoke to him. He turned back to his father. “Jomann tells me everyone is gathering father. I have a meeting to go to.”

Martin nodded his head. “Things went well on Solmar I take it?”

Andro nodded. “So far.” He replied. “I will have Dilaen begin releasing what we have in another day or so to the Netnews. His little plan here will not come to fruition.”

“Good.” Martin said. “Stick as many needles in that ugly fuck as you can.”

Andro smiled. “I intend to.”

“I will contact you within two days son.” Martin spoke. “We’ll know by then what is going to happen.”

Andro nodded. "I'll be here or on the SCIMITAR father." He said. "What about Kalis?"

"I have a contingency if we start heading back... but either way... if it's what he wants he'll be with me." Martin answered.

Andro nodded. "Good. I find myself looking forward to meeting him to be honest. It was no simple feat to complete the blocks of instruction as he did."

Martin nodded. "I know. Go with the gods boy." Martin said.

"And you father." Andro replied.

Martin turned to face Murano as the transmission ended. "He is much like you." Murano spoke.

Martin nodded his head. "Yeah... some people say too much." He spoke with warmth in his voice. "He's far less forgiving than I am for sure and he has a real nasty mean streak when he gets his dander up... especially about people who hurt his brothers and sisters... but he gets that from his mother."

Murano chuckled. "Somehow I don't believe that to be true." He said.

Martin's expression changed and he looked hurt. "Murano... I'm hurt. I am the picture of calm and sincere and all petunia picking peace lover! I hate violence! Scares the piss out of me!"

Praetorian Murano, a man who had felt alone for so long, threw back his head and he enjoyed the first genuine laugh he had uttered in nearly twenty thousand years. It made him feel alive and reinvigorated.

It made him feel reborn.

SOLMAR

KINDRED SOUL

Kameka's eyes fluttered open slowly to the bright light and sounds of voices and what she recognized as the sounds of medical equipment. She turned her head trying to focus and saw the dark figure beside the bed. She felt a momentary surge of fear until the hand gripped hers and she heard the warm voice of her father.

"Do not fear daughter." Byka spoke holding her hand tight. "They said you would have trouble adjusting your eyes for a moment. Blink quickly and the fuzziness should clear."

"Papa?" Kameka spoke as she tried to sit up in the medical bed her hands reaching for him. "Papa... you are..."

"I'm fine." Byka answered. "Better than fine actually."

Kameka blinked half a dozen times and her vision began to clear quickly. She saw him then, his fur groomed and smooth and never looking more handsome than she had remembered her father. "Papa... where..."

"You were hurt more badly fighting Marsin that you realized daughter!" He told her. "It was foolish of you to try and fight him. You passed out while the Spartan Daio carried you to their base. When they got you back to their ground base they discovered you were bleeding internally. The Hadarian stabilized you and sent you here immediately."

"Here?" Kameka asked looking around and seeing men and women all dressed in battle fatigues but carrying medical equipment. "Where are we?"

"The Lycavorian ship that landed on the surface." Byka said. "Wait until you see this monster daughter! It is colossal from the outside! This is their Medical Bay! It's huge!"

Kameka looked at him. "Papa... Marsin... he shot you!"

Byka nodded. "Yes he did. Hurt like a bastard too. They fixed me at their base camp." He answered. "I have been here beside you since."

"How... how long?" She gasped.

"Eighteen hours at least." He replied. "I don't know for sure."

"Then... then we lost?" She asked.

Byka shook his head. "No... in the end it was a victory." He stated. "I am sorry I did not tell you before but Azlenr and I had to move quickly. Keleru was using us as fodder daughter. He sent Marsin here with us to assassinate Azlenr, me and as many senior officers as he could like I told you. They were going to use us as a propaganda tool. A way to bide time against the Union. They were going to say we killed the civilians and that Marsin and his men executed us for it. They were throwing us away Meka.”

“I don’t understand.” Kameka said. “Why?”

Byka shook his head. “It does not matter now.” He said. “We saved our men and that is what matters most.

“We... we are their prisoners?” Kameka asked softly.

Byka shook his head. “No.” He stated. “There is a meeting soon and the doctors said you can leave when you woke and felt up to it.”

“Leave to where Papa?” Kameka exclaimed. “Momma! My brothers and sisters! They will be killed! Murdered! Because of us!”

“That’s not exactly accurate.” The new male voice spoke and Kameka’s head turned quickly. Her dark brown eyes grew wide when she recognized the Durcunusaan who had saved her and she unconsciously gripped the sheet covering her body tighter. She watched as his tall frame moved further into the room, his arms filled with a bundle of some sort.

“Papa?” Kameka asked tearing her eyes from the Spartan and looking at her father.

“I contacted your mother the moment we made the decision to move down this path.” Byka told her. “Azlenr had all of us do it. Our families are safe Meka. They are on four ships that departed Nefoa fifteen hours ago. Before all this began and piloted by men loyal to us. They are now under the escort of an entire Union Strike Wing and should be back across the Union border some time tomorrow.”

“General... I thought you and your daughter might like to get some food in you before the meeting.” Daio spoke now as he set the bundle on the foot of the bed. “I hope you don’t mind wearing a Union field uniform, it’s all I could find. I think I got your size right though.”

“Meka... this is Commander Daio of the Durcunusaan.” Byka said. “He is the one who...”

“You killed him.” Kameka said softly.

Daio shrugged his broad shoulders. “Seemed like the thing to do at the time.” He stated.

“You... you saved me.” Kameka spoke in almost a whisper.

Daio shifted uncomfortably on his feet and bowed his head slightly to her. “I would do it again Milady.” He spoke. “In an instant. I’ll wait outside General.” Daio turned back to Kameka and smiled a dazzling smile showing perfect white teeth. A wolf’s teeth. “You were beautiful before Lady Kameka’Caleo. You are breathtaking now.” He spoke before turning and moving back into the corridor of the Medical Wing.

Kameka looked at her father confused. “Papa... what...”

Byka held out the small pocket mirror to her with a huge smile. “He assumed the scars were from Marsin.” Byka spoke softly. “He said he could smell him on you, within the scars. I did not know that Hadarians could work such magic...”

Meka took the mirror and held it up to her face. She gasped in shock at what she saw. Not the marred skin she had looked at for the last years but flawless tanned skin without a mark on it. The scars were completely gone, not even a trace of them remained. Byka smiled as he saw the small tears begin to form at the corner of her eyes as she stroked the skin of her cheek. He rose to his feet and squeezed her leg. “We will wait for you outside Meka.” He said. “You are probably hungrier than me.”

Byka stepped away from the bed and pulled the divider around her small section to give her privacy. He turned and saw Daio standing patiently in the corridor and he took a deep breath and covered the distance to him quickly. The Spartan turned and looked at him.

“General?” Daio asked.

“She... she will need a moment to dress and compose herself.” Byka spoke slowly.

“We still have over an hour sir... it’s no problem.” Daio answered.

“I... I have not thanked you for what you did Commander.” Byka spoke. “With Marsin I mean.”

“My name is Daio General.” He told him. “And I only wish I could have made him suffer more for what he did. To your daughter and to others.”

Byka looked at him intently. “You do not seem in any way fazed that you are standing here with a man who you were ready to kill little more than a day ago. We were enemies.” He questioned. “How is that?”

“You and general Azlenr were never the enemy sir.” Daio spoke with genuine feeling. “I think Androcles knew that within hours of discovering you had invaded and that the Puma Bane troops were the ones who were spearheading this. He's funny like that. The King too. They see things others do not. Sense them. It's very weird... but we have come to trust in him and the King completely."

"So I see." Byka spoke softly.

"Are there others like you and General Azlenr sir?" Daio asked. "Those who think and believe as you do?"

Byka met his eyes. "We know of a few others." He replied. "Considering the influence of the Puma Bane troops, those who think like us do not associate too much for fear of our own lives and that of our Prides. They have eyes and ears everywhere. Even among our own people, and they would not hesitate to slaughter us and anyone associated with us."

"Yet you survived this long." Daio asked.

Byka nodded his head. "We survived because we won battles against the High Coven." He spoke. "If he killed us then he would begin to have other officers question him. If he had succeeded in his actions this time, he could have said anything he wished and they would have believed him." Byka shook his head. "It was all a lie." He said softly.

"You and General Azlenr have turned a corner sir." Daio spoke. "It will be up to you how to proceed... but I think you will make the right choices. You certainly care for your daughter in a way that many Kavalians do not. At least not that we are aware."

Byka looked back and nodded before turning back to him. "I did not fully realized how much until Marsin hurt her the first time. Then the realization of it all hit me and I saw how we were headed. I decided to change... and I am very happy I did. And there are others as I said Comman... Daio."

"She's very beautiful sir." Daio said respectfully. "I'm sure she will need to beat back the suitors among your people and mine given time."

Byka looked at him and shook his head. "She will never trust another Kavalian." He said. "Not now... not after what Marsin did to her. Forced her to do." Byka shook his head slowly. He looked at Daio then. "You don't think... her tail." He said. "This will not bother those among your people?"

Daio nodded with a shrug. "It might bother some but then those who are truly interested in her won't care."

"Do you care Commander?" Byka asked him bluntly.

"Not in the least sir." Daio replied without hesitation.

Byka smiled at this and turned as Kameka came out of the room slowly. "Meka?" He said.

She looked at Daio and held her arms out slightly. The uniform fit her like a glove and enhanced her very womanly charms in all the right places. "You... you picked this?" Kameka asked.

Daio's face twisted slightly in worry. "Yes. If you don't like the size I'm sure we can find something that..."

"It... it fits perfectly." She said.

Daio smiled. "Oh... good." He said with a great deal of relief. "The Mess Lounge is this way." He motioned with his hand. "They have a pretty good menu too. Just don't eat the green stalks. They are from Goshann... and you'll be blowing out your ass for two days!" Daio looked at Kameka with wide eyes. "I'm... I'm sorry about that little slip."

Byka looked at his daughter and saw her smiling. There was a brightness to her eyes and her expression that he had not seen for many years and Byka knew it was because of this young Lycavorian's actions in killing Marsin and looking upon her as he did. Byka smiled and took Kameka's hand. "We will heed your advice Daio of the Durcunusaan." He said.

"Follow me then." Daio spoke.

"...make sure Colonel Miller's Brigade does a full sweep of the area before they deploy back to the KINDRED SOUL." Andro was speaking to Vengal, General Washington and Captain Patton in the small briefing room before the main meeting began. Jomann stood within an arm's reach of his Prince, as he had for the last twelve hours. "Any Puma Bane survivors that may be found are to be executed immediately. I don't care what condition they may be in."

“And if they are trying to surrender?” Washington asked.

“Let them surrender and then execute them!” Andro hissed. “I want to make it very clear to every Kavalian out there what happened here. I will accept nothing but the total annihilation of the Puma Bane as a fighting force. If they are not Puma Bane... then they can surrender freely and be cared for... if they are Puma Bane however... no mercy will be shown to them in the least.”

“That might be hard on them Milord.” Washington spoke again watching as Andro turned to look at him. “I am only playing devil’s advocate here Milord... I agree completely with you. Once it gets out however... the Puma Bane troops will try to blend in with the regulars.”

Andro nodded. “Then we make sure the regular forces know their fate will be the same as any Puma Bane soldiers they protect or hide.”

Vengal nodded. “It’s the only way to be sure.” He said. “From what we know... the Puma Bane are like the Gestapo from ancient Earth. Keleru’s secret police and best equipped fighting force. And those most committed to his perverted ideals.”

“When we speak with Pian and Resumar I want them to get a sense for how much of this is happening.” Andro spoke thoughtfully. “The ships that were defending their main cloning facility have already defected to Pian. Their last report says six additional Prides have come over to their side. Small Prides yes... but support nonetheless.”

“You will let me through immediately! I am a Union Senator!” The shrill female voice echoed behind them and they all turned to see Ulana shove her way past the Durcunusaan guard at the door.

“You have got to be kidding me?” Patton muttered and began to step forward.

Andro took his arm. “No. I’ll handle this.” Andro said softly.

Ulana turned to face Andro from behind the bulk of the Durcunusaan officer who had imposed himself in front of her. “I demand to speak with you Androcles!” She barked. “I will not be denied any longer!”

Andro looked at the others. “I’ll join you in the briefing shortly.” He spoke. “Uncle Vengal... if you will make sure everyone is present and the packets have been distributed?”

Vengal let his eyes remain on Ulana for a moment and then he turned and looked at Andro before nodding. An elf he may have been, but Vengal knew what this was all about and it had nothing to do with politics. He had watched Daniel and Anuk deal with a similar situation about ten years ago. A female Lycavorian got it in her head that she wanted Daniel and Anuk and Nayeca were not good enough for him. They had tried to avoid the situation hoping it would go away. Daniel worshiped Anuk and Nayeca and all of them knew he would never have given this woman a second glance. On top of that... Daniel and Anuk were one of the extremely rare cases of Anomes where the female was not pureblood. Vengal had watched for weeks as Daniel’s anger toward this woman grew and finally it had been Anuk who had settled the issue. Half elf she may have been, but Daniel had been the one to turn her and she was slightly larger and far more muscular in wolf form than the average turned elf. She had thoroughly throttled the poor female outside of the barracks one evening in front of several hundred soldiers. Anuk had earned her reputation that evening of being one of the turned females not to piss off. Years of training with both Daniel and her Drow Mistress Nayeca and turned her into a very lethal woman and now Anuk Simpson, half elf though she may have been, was considered an equal by every pureblood Lycavorian.

You are sure? Vengal asked him within Mindvoice. As Anuk’s father and one of the founders of the Durcunusaan, Vengal’s Mindvoicing skills had grown powerful through the years. Under Helen and Thr’won’s tutelage he had reached a level of skill equal to many of his Durcunusaan and this was another reason why no one in their right mind would challenge him about the way he commanded the Durcunusaan. He had spent so much time with Daniel and Martin and their families that even though he was an elf, he had taken on many traits found in Lycavorians.

Andro nodded. I need to end it Uncle. If I do not then sooner rather than later Sadi, Lu’ria or Carisia will kill her. That’s not something we need right now.

True enough. Vengal said as he began to leave. I will see to things. Join us when you are finished with this upaee.

Andro set his P1 down on the table and leaned against it, crossing his arms over his chest as he watched the others leave. Ulana glared at them as they left and when they were finally alone she turned back to Andro.

“What can I do for you now Ulana?” Andro asked.

Ulana walked briskly across the deck to stand in front of him. “Do you know what your sister did to me?” She snarled at him. “What your precious Anome did to me?”

“Ulana you...” Andro started to speak.

“I intend to file charges against both of them!” Ulana snapped. “Their positions do not allow them to assault a Senator of...”

“File them.” The voice spoke causing Ulana to whirl around and Andro to lower his head and exhale heavily. Sadi strode into the room from the doorway and made her way across the distance to stop beside Androcles. The dark gray jumpsuit conformed to her luscious figure like a glove, the long zipper in the front just low enough that it allowed one to see the beginning of the deep valley between her firm breasts. Of course... no one in their right mind would stare too long at the Crown Princess of the Union if they knew what was good for them. The cut of the jumpsuit allowed Andro to know instantly that it was one of her own. Sadi had long ago made them tailored to always hug her body in ways that could incite his desire for her. “File them with me Ulana.” Sadi said again as she came up beside him.

[KertaGai?] Andro reached for her.

Sadi turned to him with love and worship in her jungle green eyes. [No my love.] She spoke gently. [This has nothing to do with what Eliani did Andro, or for that matter... you. Not anymore. This is about me. This is between Ulana and I.]

[She is not worth it Sadi.] Andro spoke. [She means nothing to me.]

Sadi smiled warmly at him and plainly ignoring Ulana she pressed her lush body close to Andro’s, slipping her arm tightly around his waist with one hand and reaching up to stroke his cheek with the other watching as his eyes closed in delight at her caress. [Andro my love... that is not something you need to prove to me. To any of us. Ever. You know that.]

[Then why?] He asked opening his eyes and looking at her.

[Because I am a pureblood Lycavorian Alpha female. Because my father taught me to be proud of that fact. Because you are our mate and husband Androcles Leonidas and now that Sehri has finally joined us we are complete and we do not intend to share you with anyone my love.] Sadi leaned up and kissed him ever so softly on the lips relishing in the taste of his lips and his lavender and mint scent as it swirled around her head combining with his powerful aura which pulsed for her. She allowed her tongue to draw across his lips teasingly before she pulled away. [And because I hold to the values and ideals of our people that she has either forgotten or never learned. If I do not do this... then I will appear to be weak.]

[Sadi... you are not weak.] Andro spoke.

[But if I do nothing then she will use that against me saying I am not truly Lycavorian like her. That I have no right to be your Crown Princess because I am not willing to defend what is mine.] Sadi spoke softly. [I won’t allow that.]

[She is the last person who could claim to be truly Lycavorian Sadi. She’s nothing but an arrogant, pompous and spoiled little upaee!] Andro said.

Sadi smiled brightly. [I know... but this needs to end before it goes any further. She will learn her place in the scheme of things if I have to beat it into her Androcles. Which means she needs to learn that you belong to us. Period.] Sadi pressed closer and took his beautiful face in both her hands. [Let me do this my love. This is my place... not yours. I adore you for wanting to shield me... but I am your Anome and I will speak for myself where it concerns you.]

It was an easy decision for Androcles just as Sadi knew it would be and he nodded his head. [Very well. I will hold the meeting for you.]

[No. I’ll arrive when I am done here. This may take a bit of time.] Sadi told him. [Go. Say nothing to her... just go.]

Andro nodded and turned to grab his P1 from the table. As Ulana watched he simply brushed past her and moved to the door.

“Androcles where are you going?” Ulana demanded turning to follow his movements. “We are not finished speaking!”

“You may speak to me Ulana.” Sadi told her calmly, basking in the aura and scent of Andro as he left. Gods how she loved him so, Sadi thought. She could not imagine a future without him in it. None of them could.

Ulana whirled on her. "What did you tell him?" She snarled as the door closed behind him. "I know you were speaking within Mindvoice! I could... I could feel the tremors! What did you say to him?"

Andro stopped in the corridor and looked at Jomann who stood waiting for him. Jomann stepped closer as the door closed behind him.

"Andro?" Jomann questioned.

Andro met his eyes. "Let's go to the meeting Jomann." He said.

"What... what about Sadi?" Jomann asked.

Andro let the smile play across his lips as he turned and began to walk. "My Anome does not need my help for this." He said. "She never did."

Jomann fell in beside him as they walked. "You are sure? Sadi... she may well kill her Andro."

Andro chuckled. "No... she won't kill her." He said. "Not entirely anyway."

Jomann looked back at the door as they walked away. "Anse... what I wouldn't give to be an insect on the wall in that room." He said.

Andro laughed. "Are you so sure?" He asked. "Sadi has had over a year with my sister. I have no doubts she has picked up many of Eliani's more colorful phrases."

Jomann nodded with a smile. "I know! That's why it would be fun to watch!"

Sadi looked at Ulana intently. "What I said to my mate and my husband is none of your concern Ulana. And I doubt very much you were able to feel the tremors of our conversation. We speak on a level your feeble skills could not hope to intrude upon let alone overhear." Sadi crossed her arms under her firm breasts. "Now... please... feel free to file your charges with me Ulana."

"I will not!" Ulana snapped. "I will speak with Androcles about them, not his... not the Menkla District whore who claims to be his Crown Princess!"

Sadi chuckled softly and shook her head. "Wow! Menkla District whore." She said with a smile. "That's certainly original. Did you learn that from one of your pompous friends Ulana, or did you think that one up all by yourself?" Sadi asked her as she withdrew the data pad from her belt and held it out to Ulana. "Here... you should probably read this."

Ulana snatched the data pad from her hand and threw it to the floor. "I do not care to read anything from you!" She growled. "It's probably all gibberish. You could not possibly string two intelligent sentences together if you tried!"

"You might not want to be so fast to dismiss this information." Sadi told her. "I'm going to have Dilaen release it to the Netnews in about an hour. You know Dilaen I'm sure. The Chief Netnews Coordinator and Public Affairs Officer for the Crown Prince and Princesses of the Union." Sadi grinned at Ulana's angry glare when she emphasized those words. "It's my entire medical file as well as every transaction or decision my father made as Governor of the Menkla District. It will also contain every posting I have held since the night on the Royal Island when my life truly began. Additionally it also includes everything I was forced to do while a member of the Arryadyveluat. I left nothing out." Sadi saw Ulana's eyes go wide at that. "Along with that information it will contain my entire family bloodline, traced right back to a Lycavorian named Taxylrr. In case you are wondering... Taxylrr was leader of the Fourth Ruling Pack Bloodline Ulana. He was my mother's great Uncle and according to Deia, he was good friends with Resumar."

"You lie!" Ulana hissed.

Sadi shook her head. "I don't need to lie in order to obtain what I want Ulana." She spoke calmly. "I have everything I have ever wanted and most importantly... I have Androcles. That is the difference between you and I Ulana. I actually love Androcles... with every single breath I take I love him. You only crave the power the position as his wife and mate would give you. You don't truly care for him at all."

"That's... that's not true!" Ulana hissed.

Sadi stepped closer to Ulana. "Lie to everyone else if you must Ulana... but I know the truth. I can smell the truth on you. I have belonged to Androcles since he was eight months old and he first laid his elivonth azure eyes upon me. And he has been mine since that very same day. It has been part of whom I am since that day and it is the reason no relationship I had in the years while Andro grew meant anything to me.” Sadi tilted her head to the side and looked at her. “Do you honestly believe that you could take him from me, from Ne’Veha and Carisia and Lu’ria? From Caliria and now Sehri? Did you think you could take him from us simply because you slept with him for three months and enjoyed his company? As his Anome I have swam within his thoughts and memories for over a year Ulana. He enjoyed your company to a point, but he never loved you, and he most certainly never scented you. Do you think him such a fool that he did not know you were with him only to advance your own status Ulana? Do you think he did not know about Nolar and your escapades with him while he was away? Do you think half of the Union is ignorant and does not see that?”

“I should be his mate... not you!” Ulana screamed. “It is my right!”

“Your right?” Sadi gasped in disbelief. “I can’t believe I am hearing this. Do you think yourself so superior that you are to just be given everything and placed on a pedestal? You could not possibly begin to understand or know Androcles Leonidas Ulana!”

“I am superior to you whore! And I know all I need to know about him! He is a man! Give him a place to put his cock and he is happy!” Ulana snarled. “And you will not keep me from him!”

Sadi laughed at her now, causing Ulana’s face to turn red. “Oh... he is far more than just a man. Do you know what makes him tick Ulana?” Sadi asked looking down at the table and running her finger along the edge. “What his favorite color is? What his favorite food is?”

“What do these things matter?” Ulana hissed.

“Do you know where to nibble and tease him on the insides of his thighs to make him last for hours on end?” Sadi asked her with an evil smile. “Of course you don’t. Remember... I have seen his memories. You were not exactly the most inventive in bed you know.”

“And I’m quite sure you are!” Ulana snarled. “You would probably let him... let him have you in any way he wishes!”

Sadi grinned with bright jungle green eyes. “Well... you are right about that at least.” She said. “He has had me in every possible way. Ne’Veha as well. And Carisia and Lu’ria. He’s very adventurous. And the pleasure we get out of it knows no bounds.”

“You disgust me!” Ulana spat.

“Did you know that he tastes just as wonderful as he smells?” Sadi asked her calmly. “Oh wait... that act is beneath you. I’m sorry.”

“You are the whore Sadi.” Ulana snarled at her. “I imagine as a whore you know all of these things!”

Sadi laughed at her. “Oh... I do Ulana. So does Ne’Veha, and Carisia, and Lu’ria and Caliria. And soon Sehri will experience the divine pleasure of being wrapped within Andro’s arms and his aura. I am... we... are not so limited as you in our adventurous nature in our bed.” Sadi reached out and touched Ulana’s cheek. Ulana slapped her hand away quickly. “And it is glorious... no matter where he takes us or how many times. We love how he tastes... it is the sweetest nectar to us. We love how he fills us so utterly with his size and how he makes all of us scream his name whenever he takes us. You will never feel these things Ulana and your ridiculous obsession with thinking you could take him from us is becoming most taxing.”

“I will have him!” Ulana snarled at her. “You have altered how he thinks! Played tricks with his mind! The vampires dogs taught you these things! He would never chose you over me! You are nothing more than a...”

“He chose me before you were ever born fool woman!” Sadi snapped now her patience at an end. “I thought... I had thought perhaps talking to you would make you see that your goal of taking Andro from us will not succeed. That you really need to move on with your life. I can see now that is not going to be the case.”

Ulana laughed at her “Not after I make you look like the cheap whore that you are!” She barked. “When everyone sees you assaulting me... when they hear what his sister did... you will pay bitch! And then I will have him.”

Sadi looked at the floor and shook her head. “I had hoped this would go better than it has but I see that you are too blind and arrogant.” She spoke. She looked back up to Ulana. “If reasoning with you will not work... you leave me little choice.”

Ulana laughed at her. “What are you going to do now you low rent whore? Try and buy me off?” Ulana snapped. “I have too many powerful friends and allies for you to go head to head with me! I’ll bury you Sadi! Then what will you do?”

“What I am going to do is quite simple really.” Sadi spoke calmly.

“What is that?” Ulana snapped. “Cry to Andro or the Queens to help you? You are so pathetic!”

Sadi smiled but had Ulana any sense she would have seen the smile for what it was. The smile of an Alpha female wolf about to pounce.

“No... I won’t cry to Andro. I don’t need to because Andro knows I don’t need his help in dealing with you.” Sadi spoke evenly. “No Ulana. I’m going to do exactly what the Queens would do in my situation considering they too are Alpha females. I’m going to do exactly what Gorgo did when confronted with the same sort of uncompromising upae as you seem to be when she was Queen of Sparta.”

“And what is that?” Ulana barked.

Sadi’s eyes changed instantly and her fangs burst forth a millisecond later. Her normal wolf fangs now augmented by the smaller dual fangs beside her main canines. A result of Andro’s bite and the wonderful virus running through his veins making Sadi and the others completely his. The sign of a female wolf who is a member of the Leonidas family. Ulana’s eyes exploded open when Sadi’s hand snapped out and gripped her behind her head with brutal force, her fingers entwining in Ulana’s long black hair. Sadi pulled Ulana’s face to within inches of hers and growled deep in her throat.

“It’s called attitude adjustment!” Sadi snarled most savagely before turning and driving Ulana’s face into the table beside her with all of her strength.

Ulana was completely unprepared for such a move and her cheek rammed into the table with horrendous force, sending jarring pain through her jaw and neck. Her head exploded back from the vicious impact like a bouncing ball and she staggered backwards until she fell on the floor dazed.

“Androcles Leonidas is my Anome!” Sadi snarled savagely as she moved around Ulana and unleashed a brutal front kick into her abdomen that doubled Ulana over and made her gag in unbelievable agony. “He is our mate and husband! Mine! Ne’Veha’s! Carisia’s! Lu’ria’s! Caliria’s! And now Sehri’s!” Sadi snapped out with another kick that smashed into Ulana’s lower back, her body arching forward this time in pain. “You will never feel his aura wrapped around you Ulana! You will never feel him filling you! He belongs to us! And we to him!”

Sadi leaned over and grabbed Ulana by the hair once more, dragging her to her knees and then pulling her staggering to her feet. Using the front of her immaculately tailored outfit Sadi yanked Ulana forward and guided her body to the side as she sent Ulana crashing head first into the bulkhead with a resounding thump. Her head and upper body snapped back like a top and Sadi slapped her viciously across the cheek, adding just a fraction of the Etheric power that she was learning to master to the blow. Ulana was sent flipping head over heels to the side to slam violently into the opposite bulkhead with thunderous force. It drew a guttural groan of pain from Ulana before she slid to the deck and was still.

“This is the only warning I will give you Ulana you nubous upae!” Sadi snarled looking at her as she struggled to turn around. “If you even breath inappropriately towards Androcles, let even a tiny fraction of your pitiful female aura touch him letting him know you are available, I will personally rip out your eyeballs and make it so you can never experience the pleasures of a man again! Any man!” Sadi moved over in front of Ulana who had now pushed up against the bulkhead, her eyes wide and filled with terror, blood leaking from both her mouth and nose. Sadi snapped out and slapped her once more, rocking her head back. “Are you listening to me Ulana?”

“You... you are insane!” Ulana rasped out between split and bloody lips.

Sadi shook her head. “No... I am simply protecting what belongs to me and my fellow Crown Princesses. As any Alpha female would do.” She stated evenly. “Androcles is too much of a gentlemen to express this to you. I am not so limited. Take my words to heart Ulana for if you don’t I will crush you like the insignificant little bitch that you are.” Sadi stood back up and turned away for a moment composing herself and then turning back to look at her.

“A Senator of the Union you may be... but if you refer to me or any of us in any term other than our titles Ulana, I will have your Senatorial ass in a sling so quickly it will make your head spin. I am Crown Princess! And whether you agree with that or not... you will address me with respect! Just as I address you! Do you understand me Ulana?" Ulana stared up at Sadi with hatred in her eyes. "Answer me woman or I will beat you until you are wailing like an infant being pulled from the womb!" Sadi shouted angrily.

"Yes!" Ulana gasped in fear.

"It ends here and now Ulana." Sadi spoke. "Heed my words to you... for I will not be as forgiving again." Sadi turned and walked to the door. "I will summon a doctor for you." She said softly. She turned her head and looked at Ulana. "It did not need to be this way you know." She said. "You are more than what you project outwardly Ulana. Perhaps you should embrace that more. You will find that acceptance will come far easier."

"Go... go to hell!" Ulana hissed.

Sadi smiled. "You first Ulana. At the rate you are going... someone or something will kill you before you reach a hundred years of age. Your loss will not sadden anyone I assure you." Sadi waved her hand over the control panel for the door. "After the doctor treats you and you make yourself presentable woman... you can come to the meeting and try to determine which one of our actions you, Icho and your cronies can use against us. I'm sure you will find many."

Sadi Leonidas stepped through the door and didn't look back.

She had laid down the law and if Ulana chose to ignore her then Sadi had no qualms about fulfilling her threat.

No problem at all.

"...a feint?" Andro almost shouted looking at the transmission that held both his brother and Pian on one side and Admiral Ceneu and Tareif on the other.

Resumar and Pian were on the PILLAR OF FAITH somewhere inside Kavalian space. Sitting with them Andro could see Isra, Karun, Jalersi, Athani and Ardis. In the side of the transmission from Earth Andro could see his adopted Aunt Lynwe and Admiral Wallace from EDEN BASE. Deia and Charles Turner sat beside one another with his adopted Aunts Tarifa, Aihola and Selene sitting to President Turner's left.

Ceneu glanced at Tareif quickly and then nodded his head as he turned back to him. "We are still getting reports in Androcles... but it appears as if once they discovered you were on Solmar... they set in motion pre-determined attacks. They could not have put them together in two or three days. These operations were planned and ready to execute." They watched Ceneu rise and move to the Star Chart. He pointed at four different locations. "They have attacked and secured the garrisons on Clontano and Aneya along the border with the U'zolut Consortium. It puts them within striking distance of Folcani, further on Semtola and if they stretch it Apo Prime itself. They have also captured the garrison on Tauma and we believe on Vigon as well. The Commander of Vigon apparently had a warning they were coming and was able to scatter much of his garrison into the mountains. We are waiting to see if he is able to re-establish COMs with us within the thirty-six hour time limit per our procedures. These positions would allow them to..."

"Strike Elear!" Andro hissed.

Ceneu nodded. "That would be the logical assumption yes."

"We've already been in touch with First Minister Alocgeid and he has ordered the entire EDF to alert." Tareif spoke. "Ceneu dispatched six CFFGs to Elear and another three are on standby to deploy. If they are planning to go after Elear, they better bring their whole damn fleet and army!"

"Unfortunately... this action also opened a corridor straight to Hadaria." Ceneu added. "We have few forces in and around Hadaria since the coup and certainly none that could challenge an attack force of any great size. I've already begun shifting fleets from their Holding Stations near Nodon, but it won't be enough to stop a concentrated attack. Not initially."

"They already have Hadaria." Charles spoke up. "Why go there?"

"Open an unchallenged corridor for ships and troops." Aihola spoke up. "We cut this off when we destroyed the Jump Gates. If they can secure this area then we would be hard pressed to challenge any supplies and men they try to reinforce Hadaria with."

"Nubou!" Andro swore loudly. "This is my fault! I should have seen this coming when I first spoke to Azlenr."

“This move is not your fault Androcles.” Lynwe spoke up from her seat. “You could not have predicted this and the threat on Solmar was very real.”

“Lynwe is right Mandri.” Deia spoke. “As Tareif said... these were things they already had planned.”

“I believe your Prime Minister and President may be right Prince Androcles.” All eyes turned to look at Azlenr’Macaoe as he spoke from the end of the table. “In fact... given what I am seeing now... I’m not entirely sure he did not have this planned before we even attacked Solmar.”

Andro turned to look at him now. “Tenna Deia, President Turner, may I present General Azlenr’Macaoe. Formally of the KFI and now part of General Pian’s Free Kavalian Republic.”

“Could you better explain your thinking General?” Charles asked.

Azlenr looked at Andro. “May I Prince Androcles?”

Andro motioned to the star chart. “By all means.”

Azlenr moved to the massive board, studied it for several seconds and nodded. “It has to be.” He said.

“General?” Andro asked.

Azlenr met his eyes and nodded. “Planning for the assault on Solmar began nearly five months ago. Even before you destroyed the moon and the forces within the Farnuri Expanse. He was going to use it as a propaganda tool just as you believed and later confirmed by capturing the Puma Bane intelligence. With your military and your Netnews focused on Solmar... one of the newest and most modern of your colonies... he could keep all attention focused here.” Azlenr pointed to the map. “Given its location, Solmar would have provided direct access to Bontawillian space and three additional invasion corridors into the heart of Union space. With all of your attention naturally focused here... sneaking small and well trained units across the border to mass for attacks on these garrisons would be easy.”

“And I made it easier by announcing my presence here.” Andro said.

Azlenr nodded. “I would surmise that is the case... yes.”

Andro turned back to look at Ceneu. “What... what were the casualties Admiral?” He asked.

Ceneu paused for a moment and then shook his head. “Heavy Andro.” He answered with a sigh. “The garrisons on Clontano and Aneya are completely destroyed. Total... upwards of forty thousand of our people and civilians combined. Tauma’s garrison was also destroyed with an additional Fleet Group wiped out trying to defend. A hundred thousand minimum. Vigon was destroyed yes... but we don’t know how many of our people got out.”

“We should recall Riall and his forces from Coven space.” Tareif spoke now.

“No!” Andro spoke. “That is exactly what they want us to do! Grandfather has been able to establish an excellent relationship with Pontal and the other senior Coven Commanders. They are still too weak to counter a serious threat from the Kavalians on their own. Not with Moran still out there lurking around. If we withdraw our forces from Coven space all we do is give the Kavalians a way to circle around and flank us and we show the Coven we were not true in our word to them!”

“That was before the Kavalians began pressing us Androcles.” Tareif spoke. “We can field enough to deter them from moving further without anything smaller than a full attack force, but we will be unable to act in order to take these planets back.”

“Right now anyway.” Ceneu said.

Androcles turned away from the two transmission signals and closed his eyes. Almost everyone in the room and in the transmissions had seen this before from Andro and his father and remained silent. Azlenr turned to look at Byka confused at this action and Byka shrugged his shoulders from where he stood beside the tall Spartan Daio and Kameka. Byka leaned closer to Daio.

“What... what is he doing?” Byka asked in a soft whisper.

Daio smiled. “He’s plotting how to kick someone in the ass sir.” He answered.

Byka grinned. “Ah... interesting.”

Daio stole a look at Kameka and saw her munching on the large Danish. She and her father had obviously never been provided such rich food while serving the Kavalian military and they had gorged themselves on the huge selection available in the mess lounge. Kameka had a sweet tooth Daio saw as she had already eaten three of the Danishes. Her eyes lifted to his and saw him watching her and suddenly she looked embarrassed at how she was attacking the Danish.

“They... they are very good.” She spoke softly.

Daio smiled and held out his hand with the remainder of his coffee in the mug he held. "Something to wash it down with?" He said.

Kameka's eyes grew excited and she nodded quickly, snatching the mug from his hand gently. Byka watched Daio's face as he stared at his daughter. Byka was a man and he could see the intense interest in Daio's eyes as he looked at Kameka, yet it was different from the looks he had seen Kavalian men give her through the years. They looked upon her as an object to relieve their pleasure where as Daio looked at her with desire yes, but also great respect and interest. Byka had questioned Azlenr's decision to do this at first, but after seeing the intelligence and knowing that his family and Pride would be safe, he quickly found himself thinking it was the best course of action. He did not prefer to be dead by any means. And seeing Kameka now, a smile on her face and her dark brown eyes filled with new life, Byka was convinced this had been the best.

It was Resumar who broke the silence as he leaned forward in the chair he was sitting beside Pian. "Fervon?"

Andro opened his eyes slowly and turned back to face them. His eyes focused on one side of the two images and directly at Tarifa. "Tenna Tarifa... you are an historian of sorts. Father tells me that you know all there is to know of how the United States of America conducted itself leading up to the Great Fire."

Tarifa shifted in her chair surprised that he had singled her out. "I studied the books I found in several of the destroyed libraries in the abandoned cities while I was growing... yes. I don't know if that qualifies me as an expert Mandri." Tarifa answered him.

"Tell me Tenna... what began the downfall of this country?" Andro asked.

"It was a combination of many things." Tarifa answered him. "But most of the books I read agreed that when the United States began to abandon the ideals the country was formed on, it all began to fall apart. The government swelled and began to intrude more and more upon their citizens lives. They abandoned many of their original laws and many of the allies they had fostered relationships with across the planet. Some of them going back several hundred years. By the time of the Great Fire they had lost many such longtime allies. EDEN BASE was... it was suppose to be the thing that restored what they lost. Unfortunately it came too late."

Andro nodded his head. "I will not do what they did." Andro spoke. "I will not abandon what we have started with the Coven. Grandfather Riall stays with the High Coven with all of his forces. The last thing we need is for them to think we have abandon them. It makes them weaker and ultimately makes us weaker."

"We can't meet them head on in numbers." Ceneu spoke. "What we do have is better trained personnel and far superior equipment."

"Andro?" Resumar spoke from his transmission. "Turn us loose!"

Androcles looked at his brother. "Fervon?"

Resumar looked at Pian and Andro saw him nod. "We have done nothing for six weeks but train and gather strength." Resumar began looking at his brother. "Mican and his people have liberated seven additional clone death camps. Na'lia and our medical people have given all of them the treatment they developed to stop the clone aging process. Nine additional Prides have come over to our side Andro. We have nearly nine hundred ships! Pian is gaining support by the day!"

"Res is right Andro." Isra spoke. "There are far more Kavalians here that think like Pian than we have ever thought. General Azlenr and Byka should be the biggest sign to you of that."

"I don't mean to be the harbinger of doom..." Deia spoke up. "But given our history and recent events... trying to convince us of what I believe you are trying to say General Pian... it is not going to be easy." Deia held up her hand before Pian could answer. "Now do not take that for something it is not. I have seen what you did... what you have done... you do not need to convince me of this. Aricia would be dead if not for you and your wife Jalersi. Perhaps many more of our people. I don't believe anyone in this transmission doubts what you are saying."

"Deia... if I can change given how I was brought up..." Isra began.

"Your circumstances were different Isra." Deia stopped him. "And you had Tarifa to help you."

"Deia that is not fair." Tarifa spoke up again.

They all saw Charles reach out an place his hand on Deia's arm. "I believe what Deia is trying to say is that we need... we need proof."

"Proof?" Androcles asked.

Charles looked at him. “Androcles... we do not have the gift of you and your father. The gift of insight into another person’s intentions and thoughts.”

Andro looked surprised. “I wish I had this insight sir.” He said.

Charles chuckled. “Oh but you do my boy. You and your father both. Without it... what you did with the High Coven would never have happened. It is different right now for General Pian and his followers. No one in this room or with you right now doubts what Pian is saying. I think we all agree on that. However... convincing our people is another story altogether. The vast majority of the Union had already decided that the High Coven should not be our enemy. Not with all of the vampires we call friends, allies and family. After what has happened with the Kavalians... what Keleru has perpetrated... convincing them of similar intentions is not going to be quite so easy.”

“That is not fair!” Jalersi snapped. “We...”

It was Pian who took her hand in his and shook his head. “President Turner is right Jalersi.” He said softly. “Without the support of their people they can only do so much.”

Andro stepped closer to the holoimage. “Then form a government.” He spoke. “Establish the Kavalian Free Republic openly Pian. Let the entire galaxy know.”

Pian shook his head. “Keleru would move instantly to crush us.” He said. “While we have grown... we could not stand against the forces he could bring to bear on us. I can not ask those who follow me to throw away their lives with no hope of success.”

“Then let us help!” Andro hissed turning to look at his Aunt. “Tenna Deia...?”

Deia met his eyes and she sat up straighter her eyes going a little wider. “I know what you are thinking mandri.” She said as her face became more animated.

“So do I!” Tarifa stated with a smile.

Charles laughed. “Androcles my boy... are you certain you are not a closet politician.”

“Sibfla no!” Andro gasped.

Ceneu looked at them and then at Andro. “You will forgive our military minds... but what exactly are all of you speaking about.”

“It could work!” Deia exclaimed. “Oh... that would be such a slap in the face. Selene?”

Selene nodded her head instantly. “It’s very doable.” She spoke. “It’s not like we don’t have the ability. And it’s something we could do very low key until the time is right to reveal the whole thing.”

Deia looked up. “Pian... how long would it take you and Jalersi to transit here to Earth?”

Pian looked at Resumar and then back to her. “Using the Pralor transport... perhaps two days.”

Deia nodded. “You have other Pride leaders like yourself correct?”

Pian nodded. “Nearly thirty.”

“Bring them with you.” Deia spoke. “And their wives if they are mated.”

“Why?” Pian asked.

Deia looked at him in the transmission. “Because we are going to give you the voice you need.” She stated. “If we are going to do this... then we are going to do it right.”

Charles looked at Andro now. “It will also allow you to do what you need and not burden our military assets with other missions. At least not yet.”

Andro nodded in understanding. “Yes it will.” He spoke. “Admiral Ceneu?”

“Milord.” Ceneu answered still somewhat confused about what had just happened.

“The three CFFGs that you have on standby deploy into the area around Elear.” Andro spoke. “Then shift six into the area around Hadaria. Not within the same system... but close enough that they can obliterate any reinforcements the Kavalians try to send. Cancel any leaves that may still be active and activate all of our reserves. All combat units will come to full alert and prepare to deploy to their Lines of Departure.”

Ceneu nodded. “Yes Milord.” He spoke. “Our garrisons?”

“Send a scout unit to Vigon.” Andro told him. “Discover if any of our people are still alive. If they are... then we’ll put a plan together to get them out.” Andro looked at Pian. “Pian... with your permission I would like to keep General Azlenr and General Byka and their divisions with me here on Solmar for the time being.”

“Andro... what are you going to do?” Deia asked.

“For the moment... nothing.” Andro said. “I want to see what Keleru will or will not do. Father said he would contact me within two days and let me know what will be happening there and I want to take that call on the SCIMITAR. Things will shift somewhat he if returns and there is a chance Keleru will try to take this colony back.”

“We will begin to make preparations to meet Pian and the others.” Deia said. “I will let Ceneu and Tareif know what it is we have in mind.” She continued seeing their confused looks. “Contact us if you need anything.”

“Tenna... I would like to send the Rothryn delegation on to you.” Andro spoke. “I think you will enjoy Lady Aleatia’s company.”

Deia nodded. “If that is acceptable to them it is fine with me.” She said. She rose to her feet. “We have much to do and not a lot of time to do it Mandri. Go with the gods.”

“You as well Tenna.” Andro said.

The transmission ended and Andro turned to look at Resumar and Pian. “Resumar... return with Pian and the others.” Andro spoke. “I will return to Earth as soon as I talk to father in two days and we will speak.”

Resumar looked puzzled himself and nodded. “What are you thinking fervon?” He asked.

Andro shook his head. “Not now.” He answered. “We will speak at length when we meet on Earth.”

Resumar nodded. “Very well.” He said.

“Androcles... may I have a moment with Azlenr and Byka?” Pian asked.

Andro nodded without hesitation. “Clear the room.” He ordered turning to look at the others behind him. “We’ll meet again in twelve hours unless something happens that requires our attention. If you need me I will be on the SCIMITAR.”

Andro looked at Azlenr and Byka as he moved up to them and then turned back to Pian. “Take as long as you need Pian. Nothing Keleru has can track this COM unit.”

“Thank you Androcles.” Pian spoke.

Andro nodded... looked at Azlenr and Byka once more and then moved for the door.

Pian waited until the room was empty and Azlenr and Byka were looking at him. He moved closer to his transmitter and took a deep breath. “I need to know something before we go further gentlemen.”

“General Nruarani?” Azlenr spoke.

“Tell me you are with me.” Pian spoke. “Tell me that your hearts are in this. I need men who are ready to move forward and attempt to save our people. I do not want men who will betray me or run to protect their own asses. If you are not fully committed to this road tell me now. I will insure Androcles releases you to go about your way... but your divisions will be forfeit to us.”

Azlenr looked at Byka. “May I ask you a question Pian’Nruarani?” He spoke turning back.

Pian nodded. “Yes.”

“Is what you are doing... is it about our people... our future as a people... or is it about you stealing Jalersi away from Pusintin?” Azlenr asked. “Many of us have known that you have wanted her for many years.”

Pian took a deep breath and nodded his head. “In the beginning it was only about Jalersi.” He replied honestly. “But once... once I had her... I realized that I could not have the future I wanted with her if things did not change for our people as a whole. I am Kavalian... and if my children with Jalersi are to have a future... then this is what must be done. I can not turn back from the path I have set myself upon. I will either free our people... or I will die trying. I will not see my children living in exile or under oppression. I will die first.”

Azlenr looked at Byka and saw him nod his head. He turned back to Pian and stood a little taller. “Then command us Pian’Nruarani. Command us so that our future will be just as bright as possible.”

ONTEROM SCIENCE STATION ZERO ONE FIVE

“...nubous idiots and their grenades!” Anja hissed as she tossed aside a scorched data pad and looked up at the destroyed equipment in Medical. “Avi?”

-I can restore full power to the three main consoles in one point three hours Anja- Avi answered pushing away from the large wall of circuit boards and wiring he was standing in front of. -Four of the five secondary consoles however are destroyed completely-

“The cryo chambers?” Duewa asked quickly.

-The cryo chambers operate on a separate power grid- Avi answered. -Only five were affected by the detonations and that was unintentional. A piece of shrapnel struck the main power matrix panel for those five chambers. The remainder are still functioning within normal parameters-

“Good.” Anja hissed. “Let’s keep it that way. Given the timeframe we established, they would have already changed our people and the Pralors they took. Which means their numbers doubled overnight. We don’t need anymore running around.”

Duewa nodded. “I won’t argue with that.” She said. She pushed a broken ceiling frame off one computer station. “Anja... I’m going to pull our research off this system.” She spoke. “No reason to give them any insight into what we already know.”

Anja nodded. “Do it.” She snapped.

Duewa detected the tension in her voice and moved over to her quickly taking her hands. Anja looked at her. “You are concerned for Martin, Aricia and Bella.” Duewa said. “You know them Anja... what they are capable of. Have confidence in them.”

Anja smiled. “I’m not concerned for them Duewa.” She said. “I’m ticked off because Martin didn’t take me.”

Duewa looked taken aback for several seconds and then she too laughed. “Oh... I see.” She said.

Anja squeezed her hands. “Thank you for the thought though.”

-Anja- Avi’s voice interrupted them and they turned to look at him only to see Radra, Mari and Kesyla enter the Medical Bay slowly.

Radra looked at Anja squeezing her hands together nervously. Wayonn had told her the fiery red haired half Hadarian Queen had a temper and the skills to act on that temper. She was also the most compassionate woman he had ever met. “I... I spoke with the Praetorian Oracle Wayonn.” She said softly. “We wish... we wish to try and make things between us better. We want to help.”

Mari stepped forward quickly in the exuberance of youth. “We know these systems.” She offered. “We can help you get them up and running again. And with your Avatar...” She looked at Avi with something akin to awe. “It will be... it will be much faster.”

“I don’t mean to sound suspicious... but how do we know you aren’t here under orders from your Chief Pralor to help us just so that you can delete any data from the system that you don’t want us to see?” Anja asked.

“Delnash was escorted to the nearby lake so that he could speak with Teniri.” Radra spoke. “He confined Lorendo and Sashan to the vehicle bay until he returned. Valael is with your husband’s Praetorian Oracle Helen in the Command Center.”

Anja’s head tilted to the side and she looked at Radra. “You believe Martin is one of these Praetorians?” She asked.

Mari turned back to face Anja as Radra answered. “Praetorians are revered within much of our society. As I told you last night... there are those of us who do not believe as Lorendo. What we feel within the Etheric Realm from your husband and mate Anja Leonidas... it is no different than what we feel from Murano. It’s actually a little stronger. I can not deny what I feel within me.”

Kesyla nodded and moved up beside her. “Neither can I.” She stated softly. “No matter what my father says.”

“Now that we have that out of the way...” Mari said cheerfully. “I will just help the Avatar over...” She turned and bumped directly into Avi’s chest, his seven foot tall form towering over her.

-My name is Avi daughter of Chief Elder Delnash- Avi spoke. -I would be appreciative if you used it-

Mari blinked several times as she looked up at him. “They named you?” She gasped.

-The elf female Endith chose my designation. I find I have come to like how it sounds- Avi answered. -If you wish to help... the Main Quantum Power Matrix is out of sync by three point two Quntijewels. It needs adjusting. I need to retrieve two cases of Quantum Bio Computer Chips and an AP Fusion Power Converter from storage-

Mari looked a little stunned but she nodded her head quickly with a smile. “Three point two Quntijewels. Got it.” She watched as Avi walked out of the Medical Bay and then turned to the others. “Did you know only three Praetorians ever had Avatars assigned to them! Three!”

Radra smiled as she watched Mari turned to the wall of circuit boards and wiring. She then looked at Anja. “Youth.” She said. “It is so very refreshing.”

Anja allowed a smile to split her face. “There isn’t much we can do until Avi gets the system back online.” She said.

“Then may we sit and talk with you?” Radra asked moving closer.

“About what?” Anja asked.

“Perhaps you could tell me of your people. The Hadarians. It is one of the few species that we do not have volumes of information on. They were deemed too fragile for the Seeding missions and basically ignored. Something I do not agree with. Both of your abilities are utterly fascinating and I would love to discover more about them. Or your children. You said you have eighteen that consider you and the others mother? I would love to hear of them. Are yours the oldest or...”

Anja shook her head. “Androcles is the oldest of them... well Lisisa actually, but she treats Andro as the oldest. Eliani is my oldest.” She said. “I have twins... a boy and girl who will be thirteen this year. Denali is Aricia’s second child and she has twins as well. Nara and Deion...” Anja looked at Duewa. “Carians... they will be fourteen this year! They’ll go for their Agoge soon! We haven’t seen them in too long.” She turned back to Radra. “For’mya’s children are Arrarn and Bryon. You’ve met Fedor and Eirene already. Bella has given us two beautiful daughters and a son just recently. Dysea has given us Resumar and Normya. And Yuriko is our adopted daughter.”

“So many!” Kesyla spoke with keen interest. “Will you have more?”

“Kesyla!” Radra hissed.

Anja smiled at her words. “It’s ok really. You should see us when we are all in the same place at the same time. Controlled chaos is what it is.” She said. “And hopefully... hopefully we will have more yes. I know I would like more. Cirith wants to have children. Hell... all of us want more. Martin more than us I think. He loves acting like a child with them.”

“Can you tell us of them?” Radra asked.

Anja looked at Duewa and then back to Radra. “I suppose it couldn’t hurt.” She said. “Pull up a piece of smashed furniture.”

...Betrayed us! Teniri snarled at Delnash, her jaws snapping together to indicate just how upset she was. You lied to us! You told us you looked for the ship that brought us to Sybin! We told you it had returned to retrieve our Elder Mother and we asked you to search for it! You lied to us! To me! Why would you try to disable this ship Delnash?

Delnash stared at her feeling very unwelcome at the moment. He hadn’t felt this from Teniri since the time shortly after they had joined forces nearly thirty-five thousand years ago and come to Artaaya with his people. I did not lie to you Teniri. I have no idea what you are saying! Delnash answered as calmly as he could. His eyes darted to the massive dragon beside Teniri who so far had not said a word. A dragon that dwarfed her in size by a good four to five meters. We did send a ship and we found no sign of the vessel you told us of. I...

This is Arzoal! Teniri hissed. This is the Pralor Elder Mother we left behind! This is who you were suppose to find!

Delnash looked at Arzoal then with wide eyes. “Arzoal!” He gasped. “I remember your name now! The others told me of you when we discovered the dragons on Sybin!”

Others? Arzoal gasped. They live?

Delnash nodded quickly. “Two of the four who traveled with Teniri yes.” He answered.

Teniri looked at Arzoal. They remained with us through it all Elder Mother. They take care of the many eggs we have in the hatcheries. They are the most trusted of everyone. Neola and Gormna.

Neola! Arzoal spoke softly. Gormna! Her eyes closed slowly and Teniri could feel the great happiness flowing through her.

“You were the senior medical officer and senior assistant to Artre.” Delnash spoke. “You are... you are the one who used the Psionic Transfer Chamber!”

Arzoal nodded her massive head. Yes.

“Do you know what you did?” Delnash exclaimed. “Your actions...”

Arzoal released a small but loud trumpet of anger and she lowered her head even closer to Delnash, her flame red eyes wide. Do not speak to me of actions little man! Arzoal snarled. Chief Elder of the Pralor people you may be... but you have no right to judge my actions when the actions of you and the other Elders are far worse! Including those that came before you!

“You have no right to say that!” Delnash snapped.

I have every right! Arzoal nearly shouted within Mindvoice. I disagreed with the actions of the Council even before I became a dragon and my fears came true. I was among many who did not agree with our actions in regards to the Seed Missions! They were wrong in how they were conducted! We perceived ourselves as superior! God like when held against the Seed Species! Look where that got us? Death and destruction! I am guilty of it on a genocidal scale so do not speak to me of what you know! What I have seen with my eyes would make you cower in fear and weep Chief Elder Delnash!

“I am... I am only adhering to the directives established long ago.” Delnash spoke.

Directives and laws that have no place or meaning in this time! In this moment! Arzoal barked. You dismiss Martin Leonidas and the others because you say they are beneath you! I tell you now... you are beneath them! Arzoal saw his eyes go wide in disgust and arrogance. Yes... I can see the horror on your face at my words. But it is the truth. What Sumar did... what Wayonn did? It altered the course of destiny and fate in a way that can no longer be denied! I will no longer allow you to subject my dragons to your arrogance and unseeing eyes!

“Your dragons?” Delnash gasped. “But Teniri is the Elder Mother!”

Teniri shook her head. No longer! Arzoal is the true Elder Mother of our kind and every dragon who breaths air will know this the moment they sense her or see her. Just as I now do! No other but the Elder Mother could command the loyalty of four Talon Guardians branded by the Elder Council!

“Talon Guardians?” Delnash asked.

Martin and the dragon who is his Bonded Brother, Torma. Arzoal spoke. They are Talon Guardians. Gifted with a small portion of each Dragon Elder’s Etheric essence. Protectors of dragons and those who met out justice among our kind when it is needed. The most powerful of our kind in every way.

“But he is... he is a Lycavorian!” Delnash gasped.

Arzoal nodded. Yes he is. As is his son Androcles. And between them you will find no more revered an example of Talon Guardians anywhere in our history. Androcles’s Bonded sister is Elynth... Torma’s oldest offspring. You ask yourself why Martin burns brighter than Murano within the Etheric realm... it is because of their positions as Talon Guardians. Just as Androcles will burn brighter. They have the combined essences of nine dragon elders to call on and augment their powers if need be. You think Murano stopped Martin Leonidas? A powerful Praetorian he may be... but Martin Leonidas would have carved through him just as easily as he did your fool soldiers who kill his men and beat his Queen!

“Nine!” Delnash almost shouted. “You... you gave them this? As barbaric as their species is... you gave them this?”

Barbaric! Arzoal snarled viciously, her jaws snapping together and causing Delnash to back up in sudden fear. I have seen Martin Leonidas crush his enemies with one boot and extend his hand in friendship in the next instant! She spat at Delnash. I have been witness to him saving millions... billions of lives with his actions as King in the past two decades! Citizens of the Union revere him and his Queens in a way I have never seen. They adore him! They adore his entire family! His son Androcles walks that same path! He has that same draw on people! I have seen within their memories the night they stood against thousands of vicious and brutal enemies in order to keep the bodies of their dead comrades from being captured as trophies! The blood flowed like a river all around them but they never faltered in their beliefs or their task! And they would have died that night in order to preserve those beliefs and values! I have seen Martin play with his small children and act like a child himself! I have seen him risk all to save the life of a small boy whom he did not know! Arzoal stretched her head out within inches of Delnash. Mind your words around me Chief Elder Delnash of the Pralor people... for if you ever call Martin Leonidas barbaric in my presence again... I will show you just how barbaric I can be! Arzoal snorted angrily. She glared at him for a long moment.

He came here... he came here hoping to discover about the Pralor blood that runs in his veins. It has been a dream of his ever since... since he discovered who his grandfather was. You have shown him nothing but disrespect and disdain at every turn. Even now he risks his own life to save not only his men... but your people as well. And still you treat him as if he is inferior to you. Arzoal drew her head back and Delnash watched as she shook it from side to side. I am... I am ashamed to have called myself a Pralor.

You came to Sybin one year after our ship departed to retrieve the Elder mother and the rest of our kind. You brought the Scourge with you and thousands of my kind died defending your people! Teniri stated now. We told you who she was and the only thing we asked of you was to send a ship to search for her. You sent a ship to destroy ours instead! And now your true feelings for my kind come forth in the manner you treat the Elder Mother and the revered Talon Guardians of our kind.

Delnash looked at her. "That is not true!" Delnash exclaimed. "Once we came to Artaaya I did send a ship! I have the logs from that ship to prove this to you Teniri! I would never have ordered them to destroyed your ship! Why would I lie to you Teniri? What purpose would that have after all you did for us? What we have accomplished through the millennia?

Our ship did not return to the Elder Mother for nearly nine thousand years! Teniri barked angrily. And when it returned to Elear to collect the others it was discovered damaged with its computer banks completely erased.

Delnash shook his head. "Wait." He stammered. "That... I was not told this Teniri. I was told no sign of the ship was seen."

Who would know how to completely erase the computer core of a Pralor ship Delnash? Teniri asked. Only another Pralor. The ship was damaged by weapons fire of some sort! Why would you do this after all we did to help you?

"Teniri... I swear to you... I have no idea what you are talking about!" Delnash gasped.

You are the Chief Elder Pralor! Teniri growled. How could you not know these things? How? Delnash was unable to say anything as he looked at her. Teniri snorted loudly. I have watched for millennia as you have led your people. Many of your decisions I did not agree with when it came to your own people and I said nothing. It was not my place. My kind... Dragon Kind... we have stood beside yours as friends and allies for longer than many of your young people have been alive Delnash. But this... I will not let this stand. It is a sign to me that even now you consider my kind nothing more than tools. The Elder Mother and I have spoken all through the night. She has told me many things Delnash. How Dragon Kind walks among the streets of the many planets within this Union that Talon Guardian Martin is King of. She says many of their cities rival yours in splendor! Delnash looked at Arzoal who simply stared at him as Teniri continued. How we are looked upon with awe and respect and love without question. How Dragon Kind holds a seat on their ruling body! We have a say in how we travel down the future roads! Teniri gasped. Something you never offered us among your kind.

"Teniri..." Delnash began.

No! When we return to Artaaya I will consult with the other Elders and we will decide the future of Dragon Kind on Artaaya. Do not be surprised if we choose to depart and join with our true Elder Mother and be among our brothers and sisters. Teniri told him.

"Leave?" Delnash exclaimed. "How?"

We have ships that can carry Dragon Kind. Arzoal told him. Hundreds and hundreds of them at once. It would take many trips... and may take months, but we can return our kind to the planet of our birth and many others like it and be welcome.

“You are welcome on Artaaya!” Delnash hissed softly.

You will forgive me Chief Elder Pralor... Teniri spoke. But to call a Talon Guardian barbaric in the presence of any of my kind will undoubtedly not be pleasant. Talon Guardians are to Dragon Kind what Praetorians are to your people. Only we have not dismissed what they mean to us as a species as you have with the Praetorians.

“Teniri... this attitude is not needed.” Delnash spoke.

Teniri snarled and spit and lowered her head close to his. I did not believe so either. She growled. Until I discovered you betrayed my kind! Betrayed us because it suited your needs!

“That is not true!” Delnash declared once more.

Isn't it? Teniri asked. Think upon your actions of the last millennia and tell me of one time when Dragon Kind had any say in decisions you made. Tell me! No more! Our true Elder Mother has returned to us after more than thirty millennia and she has brought with her two of four Talon Guardians who now exist to safeguard and live among Dragon Kind! I am done speaking. Send word to us when you are ready to leave and we will come. Unless you decide to leave us here because we no longer serve your needs!

“That is not fair Teniri!” Delnash barked.

Fair or not... I will begin to think of Dragon Kind first from now on. Teniri answered. She turned without another word and began to walk away from Delnash, Arzoal falling in beside her leaving Delnash standing there alone and bewildered at what had just taken place.

You... you saved me!”

His face relaxed and he smiled. “Good. That is good. I wouldn't want you to miss me courting you. I will... I will make you mine Iama'Juturi!”

Iama laughed with relief and nodded her head. “I... I am already yours Fedor.” She spoke softly.

Iama recited those words over and over in her head as she rested between his legs and stroked the skin of his jaw as he slept just like she had for the last fifteen minutes watching his handsome face. It was a simple thing to shove two portable cots together and with Dnom's wing extended out comfortably around them, it was almost like they were alone as they were on the roof top. Iama had refused to leave him when they locked down the vehicle bay for the evening, telling him she was going to take care of him. His wounds had already been healed she knew, but the loss of blood had tired him out and almost immediately after laying on the cots he had fallen asleep. Iama knew what she wanted instantly and being careful not to disturb him, she settled between his legs with her head resting gently on his powerful chest. She had drifted quickly into sleep, the beating of his strong heart once more lulling her into a trance like state. She did indeed purr in her sleep, her tail twitching slightly back and forth as she enjoyed once more his warmth and the feel of his body against hers.

When she had awoke, she was still in the same position, but his arms had dropped to rest gently on her shoulders. He said he was going to court her. Iama didn't really understand what that meant, but she desperately hoped it included laying exactly as they were. Her firm breasts were pressed tightly to his groin and she could feel the outline of his thick shaft against her chest. She had woken up this way, very conscious of the fact that he was very hard and pressing between her breasts. A flash of anger crossed her face until everything rushed back to her and filled her with warmth and happiness. Iama could surmise from the heat and length of what she could feel between her breasts that Fedor Leonidas was very well gifted. Not as large as the brutish and harsh Kavalian clones she had been forced to pleasure but very well gifted indeed. Certainly more than enough to make her happy for the rest of her life in that regard. As she laid there feeling these things fill her Iama realized that she actually thought about her future. Fedor was the very first man who she truly wanted to please in that way. He treated her as a precious flower, twice risking his own life to save hers. She didn't see it until her talk with Helen and then almost losing him yesterday and she vowed to make sure it never happened again. She had an opportunity for a real life with a man who looked upon her not with lust, but with love.

He hadn't thought. He hadn't hesitated. His actions were driven by the need to protect her. To save her. Whatever qualms Iama'Juturi may have had about getting involved with this half elf Lycavorian Prince who had been born less than three months ago were quickly shredded and tossed to the side in that moment. As she had stared at his bloody body knowing that he was dying and she would never know what it was that had begun between them, her heart was being torn to little pieces. Iama drew her fingers away slowly and let her head fall back to his rock hard abdomen, her nearly white blond hair spreading over his chest and falling off to the side. She would do anything he wanted now. She would show him more pleasure in her arms than he ever knew could exist so that he never left her. She would even be as obedient as he desired for Iama knew submissive to Fedor Leonidas would never be the same as with the...

"No." His voice spoke softly and her head came up instantly to see his beautiful dark brown orbs gazing at her. "You will... you will never be submissive to any man Iama'Juturi. Not while I live."

"You... you heard my thoughts!" She exclaimed with wide eyes.

"Forgive me." Fedor spoke quickly. "My mother says... she says it is something that will happen until I fully learn to focus and control my skills. I can hear the surface thoughts of those close to me as I wake. I did not mean to intrude Iama and I..." Fedor suddenly realized his own unique condition and what he felt and his eyes flew open in embarrassment. He gripped the sides of the cot intending to move but Iama's weight stopped him.

"Please don't move Fedor." She said softly.

"Iama I am... I did not... this is... this is very awkward." He finally stammered.

Iama smiled up at him with her pale green eyes. "I am enjoying what I am feeling." She said. "It pleases me that you think I am desirable even after..." She stopped talking and her eyes dropped for a moment.

Fedor saw the sadness on her face and instinctively he reached down and took her face within his hands. He rolled over on the cot, pulling her with him until she was beneath him, and then Fedor Leonidas kissed her softly. Iama gasped for she had never been kissed before. The texture and feel of his lips on hers was amazing and oh so very intoxicating. Her eyes closed almost dreamily as he deepened the kiss and she felt the tip of his tongue slip between her lips. Her arms suddenly went around his lower back, her leg curling up along his hip and her tail madly twitching on the side as she experienced the very first kiss of her young life. Iama knew what kissing was of course, but the fact that Fedor was kissing her even after knowing what she had been forced to do for so long, it ignited a small fire within her. A fire that was beginning to grow stronger by the moment. She stabbed her tongue forward to meet his and suddenly they were dancing a tango, locked in the steamy kiss, and Iama holding him tightly against her now quivering form. It was only moments before Iama was just as aroused as he had been when he woke, and this knowledge made her mind scream in happiness.

It seemed like decades before Fedor finally began to draw his lips away from hers and she tried to recapture them. Languidly Iama's eyes opened until she was staring at his face so close to hers and she shivered in desire and need. The feel of his lips still lingered on hers and her tail wrapped tightly around his upper thigh in response to this. Slowly she reached up and touched her lips with her fingers and looked at him.

"Where... where did you learn... learn how to do that?" She stammered still somewhat out of breath.

"I... I read it in a book. There... there wasn't much to do on the ship when my training periods were done." He said with an embarrassed grin. "And I... I watch my sister and Miseo. They are doing it all the time! Did I... did I do it right? I'm sorry if..."

Iama's pale green eyes lit up. "Do it again Fedor!" She said quickly.

Fedor didn't hesitate and lowered his lips to hers again. This kiss lasted much longer and the exploration more involved. Iama's arms wrapped around his back tightly, trying to draw him even tighter as her back arched upwards towards him and her body grew warm and tingly. He drew his face back until he was looking at her with bright dark brown eyes.

"I... I want to make you mine Iama'Juturi." He said softly. "I want to make you mine forever! I know you think of me as..."

Iama reached up and put a finger to his moist lips and shook her head. "No Fedor." She spoke. "I was... I was wrong. Someone... a very wise person told me recently to look beyond what I have known and... she said that all I have ever wanted is right in front of me and I just needed to let go of the past." Iama reached up and took his face in her hands. "I let go of the past on the roof with you two nights ago."

Fedor looked at her puzzled. "One of my mothers didn't..."

Iama shook her head with a smile. “No. It was not one of your mothers.” She stated. “It doesn’t matter now anyway.” She gazed at him longingly. “You said... you wanted to court me. What... what does this mean Fedor?”

Fedor smiled. “I don’t believe it began with my father’s people, Spartans, Lycavorians, but they follow it much more closely than others.” He told her. “I escort you to events, take you to lavish dinners... well as lavish as the mess lounge on the ARC ROYAL will allow... I will purchase presents for you and...”

“Will it involve more kissing?” Iama asked excitedly.

Fedor grinned. “I hope so.” He said.

“Then you will take me and make me yours?” Iama asked animatedly.

Fedor looked at her. “I... Iama...”

Her eyes narrowed slightly and the smile quickly left her face. She saw the indecision on his face and mistook it for something that it wasn't. A sharp pain stabbed into her heart and she withdrew her hands from his face. “You... you don’t want me.” She said softly. “You don’t want me because of what I was forced to do. All the others I was forced to be with.”

Fedor looked at her with wide eyes. “What?”

“You don’t want me because I am... I am dirty.” Iama spoke as tears welled in her eyes. Her tail unwrapped from around his thigh and she tried to push him off her. “I... I should go.”

Fedor held on to her. “Iama no!” He hissed. “That is not it! That has nothing to do with anything!”

“I am not pure!” Iama said looking at him. “You are a Prince! You should have... a pure woman to make yours. I am only... I am only a Kavalian whore!”

Fedor’s hand snapped up and gripped her jaw gently. “Don’t say that!” He snarled out. “Don’t... don’t you dare say that Iama! That is not true! You are... you are like the sweetest fruit to me. I can not get your scent out of my head! I smell you wherever I go!”

“You say these things... but you don’t... you don’t wish to be with me?” Iama spoke. “There is only one reason for this Fedor. That is because I am not pure!”

“No!” He hissed. “No! Carians...” He lowered his head. “Just spit it out Fedor.” He told himself aloud. He lifted his head quickly and looked at her confused face. “I... I don’t want to... I don’t want to disappoint you.”

Iama’s eyes went from angry and sad to confused to realization all in the space of two seconds. Her pale green eyes then flew open as the meaning of his words filled her and fresh tears burst into her eyes. She had completely forgotten he had never been with a woman before.

“I don’t want to disappoint you!”

These words rang in her mind like thunder. “Oh... Fedor!” She gasped loudly, wrapping her arms around his shoulders and burying her face in his neck.

She whimpered softly when his arms drew her even tighter against him and she pulled her head back and kissed him hard, grabbing his head as he responded to her kiss without hesitation. It was a hungry kiss. A kiss of want and desire and need. After a long and steamy moment Iama pulled back and looked at him.

“You could never disappoint me Fedor!” She gasped. “Never!”

“I will... I will have you Iama! Juturi!” He spoke as he nibbled on her lips. “And I will make you the happiest woman in all the universe! I will...”

Fedor... we could use yours and Iama’s help. For'mya’s voice broke into his thoughts.

Iama saw his face tighten just a little. “Mother... do you mind! A little privacy here!” Fedor hissed softly causing Iama’s eyes to grow wider.

You will have privacy when you return to the ARC ROYAL. For'mya answered. At the moment... you and Iama have everyone around you quite worked up so privacy is kind of out my son.

Indeed it is. He heard the voice of his mother Cirith chuckle.

Fedor’s eyes grew wider. “What?” He bolted upright, pulling Iama with him in surprise. “Dnom?” He spoke.

Are you sure brother? Everyone is watching.

“Everyone?” Fedor gasped looking at him.

Dnom nodded his huge head. Yes.

“Sibfla!” Fedor snarled. He looked at Iama who was smiling broadly. She apparently had already figured it out and she stepped close to him and took his arm in her hands just as Dnom lifted his wing.

“I am not afraid.” She said softly.

There were seven others sitting nearby, four men and three women from the technician group. All of them wore smiles on their faces. The men because of the devotion they smelled in Fedor for the Kavalian female and the women because they all knew Fedor was going to make her very happy.

“Fedor!” He heard his mother’s voice and turned to see her standing by the ramp going into the facility with his mothers Dysea and Cirith. All of them with knowing smiles on their faces.

I will never live this down will I mothers? He asked For'mya.

Probably not... but I know your father and your brothers will be very impressed with your words and your actions. For'mya answered with a loving smile.

Yes they will. Dysea spoke now. Very well done Fedor our son.

Fedor groaned and turned quickly to gather his body armor and A4. He grabbed Iama’s hand and headed for the ramp where they stood.

Danny held up his fist and dropped to one knee beside the towering tree his eyes focused directly ahead of them. Those behind him following suit in the space of a second and a half and Martin moved up beside him with Murano. Dawn had come and gone and the sun was nearly fully up now. They had left the Science facility just before dawn, tracking the scents of their people swiftly. Their team comprised Martin’s Alpha Squad of Kenny, Julie and Pablo, along with Aricia, Isabella and T'lolt. Murano had accompanied them along with Garan, Kasdan and two of his senior men. The Pralor security forces and Kasdan kept up quite well considering the pace Danny had set. Garan had decided the previous day that no matter what Elder Lorendo said, this man was a Praetorian. He could not deny what he felt from the man or the way Murano treated him. Garan had decided during the night that he would select his two most trusted men, men who thought like he did, and he would learn all he could from this man and those who followed him. So far their learning experience had paid massive dividends. What they had learned in just the three hours they had been tracking the Svorag, Garan could fill half a book. How to track. How to move in the confines of forests and timber and not be seen or heard by others. These were things he and his men lacked to a great degree and from what he saw, Martin Leonidas and those with him were masters of these arts.

“Danny?” Martin spoke in a whisper.

Dan motioned with his head in front of him. “Bout a hundred meters head. Cave entrance. Half covered by downed trees. They went in.”

Martin shifted his gaze and used his wolf eyes to scan where Danny was indicating. “Got it.” He said softly.

“See how the trees are bent inward?” Danny asked him. “They are using them as cover.” Danny looked at Martin. “They knew what they were doing fervon.”

Murano looked at Daniel from where he had come up on his other side. “Daniel... Svorag have only basic instincts.”

Martin looked at him. “Isn’t that what many of your people thought of us?” He asked.

Murano nodded his head. “Point taken Martin my boy. An excellent statement and one that I will kick myself in my ass for later.”

Martin couldn’t help but grin and he looked at Danny. “I like this guy.” Dan spoke with a smile. “He ain’t afraid to call it like it is.” Danny looked back to Murano. “Something that is seriously lacking in your people. They’re all uptight and...”

“I think he gets the picture Danny.” Martin said as Murano smiled.

Danny nodded and looked at the cave entrance. “Yeah... they got basic tactics down just fine. Well enough for them to pick up a weapon and use them against us on Twelve Alpha.” He said.

Murano looked at him stunned. “They used weapons?” He asked.

Martin nodded his head. “And they knew basic tactics.” Martin spoke as Aricia and Bella settled soundlessly beside him. Martin pointed to the cave entrance for them. Of all his Queens, Aricia, Anja and Isabella had worked the most with Martin's Alpha Squad. Along with Anja, who though very petite in nature was an extremely lethal woman, they were accepted as part of the team and all of them knew what one would do at any given time.

"This planet you encountered them on?" Murano asked. "Where was it?"

Martin looked at him. "Two days back. We jumped once to get here from there. They had water craft of some sort too. Used it to move on the ocean and hit us from the beaches. We didn't stick around long enough to find out where they came from."

Murano glanced at Kasdan who was behind him and listening. "Kasdan?"

Kasdan appeared nervous but he had held up well so far for a scientist who had never been in the field before. "I do not know much about them." He answered honestly. "Elder Lorendo secured the Svorag corpses that we do have in high level quarantine. Elder Radra has examined them but I never talked to her about them or to what extent she was able to examine them. You don't just walk up to the Chief Elder of the Medical Convention and ask for her findings."

Martin looked at him now. This Kasdan seemed to genuinely view him and the others as equals and his scent told Martin he was very honest. "Given what you know... take an educated guess... Kasdan."

Kasdan nodded. "Yes."

Martin nodded. "My gut tells me your guess will be more accurate than your buddy Lorendo's facts."

Kasdan's eyes darkened. "He is not my buddy! He is a..." He hissed. Kasdan caught his words and then took a deep breath. "If you want me to guess than I would have to say they are adapting. Each victim they change keeps at least a small portion of the memories from their previous existence... that much I do know. This they are passing on to the others. I know their infection is not the only means by which they grow. There are signs that they are breeding with each other."

"Great... baby lizard monsters that try to stick their tongues down your throat." Danny grunted.

"So they are evolving?" Aricia asked.

Kasdan met her eyes and nodded. "That is my guess based on what we have seen yes." He answered.

Martin turned and looked at Murano and then settled his eyes back on Kasdan. "How long have they been around?"

"We first started to see them in numbers about twenty thousand years ago." Murano said. "At least that was when the reports began coming in. They began striking our smaller outposts across this quadrant. Taking victims. Changing them. There is no cure for what they afflict our people with. We've had several large encounters with them over the years and lost several thousand men and women to them."

"That would explain the Pralor genes and DNA Anja and Duewa found in the one on the ARC ROYAL Beloved." Aricia spoke. She turned back to Kasdan. "And Anja and Duewa found a cure for this affliction within a day of us being here."

Kasdan looked at her in shock, his eyes wide. "You have discovered a cure? How... how is that possible?" He asked in disbelief. "We have searched for dozens of centuries and we have discovered nothing! Elder Lorendo has an entire section of researchers working on it and they have found nothing."

"I guess he's not working hard enough." Isabella spoke.

"And you don't have Red." Martin said proudly. "She sinks her fangs into something like this and she won't quit until she succeeds."

"How true." Isabella said with bright hazel green eyes. Anja had saved Dorian because of her no quit attitude and her wonderful mind. Something Isabella was thanking her for nearly every night in their bed with great glee.

"You... you have one? A dead Svorag?" Kasdan asked.

Martin nodded his head. "On our ship. It's good and dead... but my mate Anja was able to determine that it has Pralor genes in its makeup. As well as Lycavorian."

"Your species." Kasdan gasped. "Oh that is not good."

Danny looked at him. "Damn... you just figuring that out now? No wonder the fuckers were so hard to kill. They got our DNA and those hard skinned shells."

"No... no that's not what I meant." Kasdan spoke. "There was a world in this quadrant that was seeded with Lycavorians roughly sixty thousand years ago. They had advanced to a pre-fusion stage in evolution the last time a probe was sent to investigate."

“And when was that?” Martin asked.

“Just before the second war with the Scourge.” Kasdan answered.

“If what you are saying is true then that would explain the weapons and water craft.” Martin said thoughtfully. “Now the only question is what have they learned from your people that they might have put to use.”

“Just how many of our people were taken off Lycavore for your... Seeding... missions?” Aricia asked now.

Kasdan met her eyes and shook his head. “I do not know exact numbers...”

Martin looked at Aricia who nodded her head toward Kasdan indicating she wanted him to answer the question. “Humor us.” Martin said turning back to Kasdan. “I’ll believe an answer from you.”

Kasdan looked quickly at Murano and then back to Martin. “We began taking Lycavorian specimens sixty-two thousands years before the start of the First Scourge War if the history data banks are accurate. It continued right up until the beginning of the War.”

“And?” Aricia asked.

“If our history banks are accurate, a total of five worlds were seeded with the Lycavorian species. Including the planet in this quadrant.” Kasdan answered softly. “Just over... just over a hundred billion were taken from your homeworld in order to do this.”

“A hundred billion?” Aricia gasped.

“Shit!” Martin hissed shaking his head. “That’s probably not information you should openly offer to my son. He ain’t real keen on the Pralor people for that very reason. A hundred billion?” Martin shook his head. “Must be nice to play fucking god and get away with it as long as you have.”

“I was not alive back then!” Kasdan spoke quickly. “And it is certainly not something I would have sanctioned in any form! I do not consider myself above anyone!”

“Kasdan was born on Artaaya Martin.” Murano spoke calmly. “Many of our institutions of higher learning now are run by those who did not agree with the Seeding Missions as they were originally planned and executed. It has been somewhat of a stick in the mud so to speak for our people for many millennia. Even more so when Lorendo became Assistant Director of the Science Convention... because he wanted to do much more.”

Martin looked at Kasdan. “They ought to put you in charge then.” He spoke. “Anything that gives that fat fuck an ulcer works for me.”

“Fucking A.” Danny grinned.

Martin turned back to look at the cave entrance. “I really hate caves.” He spoke. “Why do the bad guys always go into caves?”

Isabella smiled and touched his shoulder. “Aricia and I will scout it.” She said.

Martin nodded his head. “Go.”

Isabella stood up with Aricia beside her. Aricia gripped her hand and Bella wrapped them in the shadows and they were gone like a soft mist. Murano saw the looks on the faces of Kasdan and Garan at this and he smiled. He touched Martin’s shoulder.

“Perhaps it might be better if Isabella does not use that skill quite so often.” Murano spoke. “It is very disconcerting.”

Martin chuckled. “Yeah... causes the pucker factor to increase doesn’t it?”

Murano looked at him. “Pucker factor?” He asked.

Martin shook his head. “Never mind.” He stated. He glanced over to where Pablo and Kenny were squatting twenty metres away with T'lolt between them. He carried the same type of mini-gun that Tony usually carried but Martin had wanted the Master Chief to remain at the station in case any trouble began. He pointed two fingers in the air, then at his eyes and then did a small circle with his index finger before finally pointing at the cave entrance. Kenny, T'lolt and Pablo nodded and lifted their A4s, sighting down their scopes to cover Aricia and Isabella, while T'lolt shifted the mini-gun into a covering fire mode.

Garan looked at Murano. “What... what did he just tell them Praetorian Murano?” He asked as Martin moved five meters ahead of them and lifted his A4 as well.

Danny turned slightly. “He told them two of his Queens were going to move forward and do a recon of the cave entrance.” As he spoke Danny used exactly the same motions as Martin had.

Garan looked at him in surprised interest. "He told them that using just his fingers?"

Danny grinned. "Pretty neat huh. Comes in handy when you have to whack the bad guys and not have your radio breaking squelch on you as you are about to fill his back with your blade. That's not a good thing."

Julie dropped beside Danny now and smiled. "You would know wouldn't you?" She said.

"Hey! That wasn't my fault Jules!" Danny scolded her. "The guy smelled like month old pussy and Marty contacted me to see why my face went white. I was about to vomit all over the smelly bastard!"

Julie grinned. "Kill him first Simpson. Then blow chunks."

Danny waved his hand at her dismissively. "Yeah. Yeah. You didn't smell him. Man I thought I was going to pass out."

"There is no sign of movement above the cave entrance or on the sides Beloved." Aricia's voice filled their implants. "However... they are a number of prints in front of the entrance and a very odd smell coming from within."

"Move up!" Martin's voice told them. "Left and right."

"More stinky shit." Danny said shaking his head. "Why do we always get the shit details?"

Julie smiled as she followed him, Murano and the others right behind them.

Martin was the first to reach the entrance and he kept his A4 trained into the darkness. He could see perhaps five or six meters into the cave but then it appeared to bend downward and the sunlight could not reach inside. Danny settled next to him, Kenny and Pablo off to their right as Julie dropped to one knee with Danny. Murano kept Kasdan and Garan just behind them, knowing at this point they would only be in the way. His head came up as Isabella unwrapped the shadows from around her and Aricia and they settled to the earth beside Martin on his opposite side.

"There is nothing in the surrounding area Du'ased m'ranndii." Isabella spoke softly.

"That ain't good." Martin spoke.

Garan looked up at Murano. "Why is that not good?" He asked.

Aricia looked at him. "There are no tracks that they have surveyed this surrounding area." She said. "Nothing to indicate they even did a light recon."

"What does this mean?" Garan asked again.

"It means they knew right where they were going." Murano spoke softly. "No breaks in their path... no clusters of tracks indicating that they stopped. They knew to come here." He finished. "But how?"

Martin shook his head. "Doesn't matter now, though with my luck, it's bound to be bad. We need to get our people back before they change entirely and are lost for good." Martin turned. "T'lolt... three meters back and cover our asses with the big gun."

T'lolt nodded. "Consider them covered." He stated.

"Danny and me got point... Aricia, Bella and Jules next... Murano, Garan and Kasdan next, Kenny you and Pablo maintain a one meter space between T'lolt and us. Let's move." Martin spoke hefting his A4. He looked at the man who was his brother. "It ain't just a job Danny." He said with a grin.

"Yeah... it's a fucking adventure. Blah! Blah! Blah!" Danny growled. "Whenever you say that someone always ends up trying to kill us!"

"Where would the excitement in your life come from then?" Martin asked him.

"Gee... I know a certain red headed elf and a delightful young Drow that can get me pretty excited." Danny told him. He was silent for a second. "Sibfla! You're right... it's not the same thing! Damn!"

Martin chuckled and then began moving into the darkness with Danny at his side.

"...is astonishing!" Radra gasped as she gazed at the main monitor in front of her. Avi had got the main consoles running in less time than he had first estimated and Anja and Duewa were anxious to show Radra what they had discovered. "When you... when you said you had developed a cure for the Svorag infection I thought perhaps... I thought you may have been joking or trying to impress me. How did you...?"

"We have the body of one of these Svorag on our ship." Anja told her. "Both Duewa and I are researchers as well as doctors. Her field is Mutative Mutagens and mine is Chromatin DNA and Genetic Correlation."

“You have encountered them before? The Svorag?” Kesyla asked.

Anja nodded her head. “On a planet roughly two days from here.” She said. “We were there collecting food when a large force of them attacked us. Two of them were able to leap into our ship just as it was taking off. We killed them... but several of our people had been assaulted by them and I decided to keep the bodies to learn what I could if I needed to treat them.”

Radra looked at her. “Your people are...”

Anja shook her head. “They are fine. The Svorag as you call them... they were not able to seat the small barbs in their tongues and inject their toxin before we killed them. They didn’t have time.”

“You have determined the Mutative process then?” Radra asked.

Anja nodded. “They are nasty critters to be sure.” She said. “Duewa and I did some deep tissue scans and then a spectral wash of the DNA. The one on our ship was a Pralor that was turned by a Lycavorian. We found that rather interesting considering there isn’t suppose to be any Lycavorians out here. At least not that we knew of.”

Radra looked at Kesyla quickly and then back to Anja. “That is not entirely true.” She stated. “There is an entire planet of them only sixteen light years from here. They had only advanced to a pre-fusion era the last time we knew... but that was many millennia ago. We have... we have never bothered to check since most consider them...”

“Inferior?” Anja finished her statement.

Radra nodded her head slowly. “Yes.” She answered. “Please don’t think...”

Anja held up her hand stopping Radra’s words. “It’s ok.” She said. “I have already figured out that you don’t follow that same line of thinking. If you did... you wouldn’t be here now.” Anja looked at the screen. “Well now we know where the Lycavorian came from. The better question is how did this Pralor get turned if your people do not associate with them?”

Radra shook her head. “That I don’t know.” She said.

Anja leaned forward from her seat next to Radra and typed quickly on the console. “Well... as you can see... we configured an active compound to counteract the infection but we lacked the core samples of the infected species. Those we found here.”

Radra was looking at the screen and she lifted her hand to touch it. “We didn’t account for the Core Cell Infiltration Index or formulate a base.” She said.

Anja nodded. “You were trying to create a formula without starting from a base set of variables. The tests you did were all off in different directions because of this. That is very basic Genetic study and...”

Radra nodded. “Yes.” She said. “Genetic reconfiguring one oh one. It’s the basis for all work of this type.” She spat. “How could they have missed that?”

“Not working from a base set of genetic variables will always skew the MEV factor.” Anja said.

Radra slid her finger along the screen and changed the readout. “Yes... and it will never result in a reactive formula to base further tests on.”

Anja sat back. “Forgive me for sounding suspicious... but it doesn’t appear to me as if the researchers here were working on finding a cure.”

Radra looked at her. “Given what you have shown me I would have to agree.” She stated.

“What else could they have been doing?” Kesyla asked now. “Station Zero One Five was established out here in order to find a cure. I have seen the orders father signed for it before it was launched.”

“Look at this.” Anja spoke typing on the screen and then sliding her fingers along the holographic interface panel. She brought up the screen and Radra saw a red blinking light in eleven different locations among dozens of solid white color. “Station and research logs.”

Radra’s eyes narrowed. “There are missing logs.” She spoke immediately.

“Eleven of them total.” Anja said with a nod. “The last one just nine hours before they abandoned this station according to Wayonn. He tried to recover them but didn’t have any luck with it.”

Kesyla leaned forward. “I’m not surprised.” She stated adjusting the screen. “They were physically removed from the memory cores.” She pointed. “Look at this time stamp Elder Radra. It’s corresponds exactly to the station being locked down by Elder Lorendo and his security code being inputted.”

“Why would he or the Station Commander delete active logs?” Anja asked.

Radra shook her head. “That I do not know.” She said in a firm voice. “But I have every intention of finding out.” She turned to look at the entrance into the Research area where the cryo chambers were. “You can save them?” She whispered.

“We hadn’t decided on an aerosol or direct injection.” Anja spoke. “But for those frozen in the chambers who are only partially altered in some form... yes. We can save them. Those who have changed completely or very near completely I don’t know. We won’t get a chance to test it on five of them anyway. They’re the ones who escaped.”

“Would it... would it be permanent?” Radra asked.

Anja nodded. “Duewa and I believe so. Essentially we are killing the mutative gene and simply reconfiguring their core DNA back to its base factors. As long as the formula kills all of the mutative gene enzymes, it should work perfectly.”

Radra turned to look at her. “Anja we must... we must do this!” Radra spoke quickly.

Anja held up her hand again. “I would like nothing better... but we would need at least two days to fashion an aerosol dispenser and then we’d have to plug it into each individual chamber. A mass dispersion isn’t viable because we don’t know how well it will work and I have no desire to let them out of their cryo units all at the same time.”

“Nor do I!” Radra exclaimed as Kesyla leaned closer to the screen and pulled out her P1 to look at something. “We have to try.”

“I could convince Martin.” Anja said confidently. “I would never do something like this behind his back and he knows that. It’s too big a risk. I could convince him... he trusts me but I don’t know if you could convince Delnash and the others. They don’t seem to think we are capable of doing anything more difficult than wiping our asses.”

“Delnash will listen to me.” Radra spoke. “I can...”

“Elder Radra...” Kesyla broke in. “There is something wrong.”

Radra looked at her. “What do you mean child?” She asked.

Kesyla lifted her P1. “This station had a standing crew of three thousand four hundred and six.” She spoke. “There are three hundred and nine cryo pods.”

“Yes... so?” Radra asked.

“I pulled up the logs from the captain of the TALISMAN-Class cruiser that Elder Lorendo picked up the rest of the crew with. It was the HOPE OF THE STARS.” Kesyla said.

“Kesyla... is this leading up to something child?” Radra asked.

“The HOPE OF THE STARS picked up two thousand four hundred and forty-seven people from this station Elder Radra.” Kesyla spoke. “If you add those who are held within the cryo chambers to that it only totals two thousand seven hundred and fifty-six. Where are the remains of the six hundred fifty who were listed as casualties in the Svorag assault? The station’s commander spoke of a running battle until they had all reached the transports.”

Anja looked at her oddly. “Remains?” She asked. “We didn’t see signs of any remains when we got here.” She spoke.

Radra looked at her. “The official report states that six hundred and fifty of our people lost their lives while evacuating the station during the assault. Everyone else was able to make it to the transport craft and launch into orbit to escape the Svorag. The rescue ship picked them up but did not return to the surface.” She explained. “You found nothing?” Radra asked.

“I think I would know skeletal remains if I saw them.” Anja stated. “The station was clean as a whistle inside. A little stale air... but no remains. The only thing out of the ordinary that we first found was the smashed vehicle doors in the back with only one body. It was torn in half like the vehicle had hit it on purpose.”

Radra looked at her. “That... that would mean that the Svorag got them.” She spoke in a very worried voice.

Anja came to her feet. “Ok... if they weren’t dead then that is not good.” She stated.

“The ones in the cryo chambers... they are all you have encountered?” Radra asked.

“Yes. And we’ve been here close to three days now.” Anja stated. “Nubou!” She swore reaching up to tap her implant. “Martin! Lover answer me quick!”

All of their heads turned at the sound of the buzzing alarm that came from the Cryo Chamber door.

“Avi!” Anja barked moving to the door even as Avi was already pulling himself to his feet from in front of the wall. “Avi... what’s going on? What the fuck is that alarm?”

Mari looked up as she came to her feet and stared up at him as his dark eyes moved back and forth.

-Override protocols have been initiated Anja- He spoke. –Someone has bypassed the lock outs I have in place with a secondary command code built into the base memory. They are accessing the system by remote-

“What’s going on?” Duewa barked. She was looking through the view window into the chamber. “The cryo chambers are fogging over! Avi!” She almost screamed.

Radra moved up beside her. “Oh no!” She gasped. “Norpellian gas! It’s being pumped into the chambers!”

“What?” Anja barked. “Avi?”

-Elder Radra is correct Anja. I am detecting concentrated levels of Norpellian gas flooding all of the remaining cryo chambers-

Duewa dashed to the panels. “We have to get them out of there!” She exclaimed.

“No!” Radra shouted. “The gas will kill us quicker than it kills them! There’s nothing we can do!”

“No!” Duewa shouted. “Damn! We could have saved them!”

Radra looked at her with wide eyes shocked at her reaction. Her eyes cut to where Anja stood silently, her jade green eyes filled with unbridled fury. They were reacting as if these infected people were their own crew and not Pralors they had discovered. Radra’s eyes grew a little wider when she saw Anja’s jade orbs change and the black ring thicken around her pupils. She saw the large set of fangs extend with the small set right beside each one.

“Avi! Where is it coming from?” Anja snarled almost savagely.

-Scanning. The signal is originating from the vehicle bay-

“Lorendo!” Radra gasped.

Anja didn’t shield her thoughts and Radra, Kesyla and Mari all heard her next words and gasped in horror.

Melda Min... meet me in the vehicle bay with For'mya and Cirith! Bring Fedor and the Master Chief as well.

Melyanna... what is wrong? Dysea’s voice sounded concerned. I have... I have never felt you so angry?

Anja? What has happened? Helen’s voice cut in as well.

That cockbreath Lorendo just overrode Avi’s lock down and used his fancy gas on the Pralors in the cryo chambers! They’re all dead! He killed them Helen! He just murdered all of them! Anja’s voice trembled in rage.

Anja! Wayonn’s voice broke in. Hold your temper in check child! You...

Yeah... I’m gonna hold it in check! Anja snarled viciously. I’ll hold it in check while I’m gouging his worthless eyeballs out! Then I’m going to have Miath cook them and let him hear them sizzle!

Anja turned and began to stomp out of the medical bay. Radra, Kesyla and Mari all heard Helen’s next command and were moving before she had even finished speaking.

Dysea! For'mya! You must get there before she does! You know she has Martin’s temper and she will gut that fool where he stands for this! Stop her!

RAVAGER

JUTURI PRIDE COMMAND SHIP

“...needs to be within the next twenty-four hours.” Kalis told Koguth and Ceale as they sat looking at him in the crystal clear transmission.

They were in the command lounge of the RAVAGER viewing him on the COM device that he had built for Ceale when she had come over to the ship. He was squatting beside Serale in what appeared to be his private quarters and they could see Danim in the background putting items into several backpacks that were in front of him on the floor.

Koguth leaned forward in his chair and looked at the Marshall’s oldest son. This was the fourth time they had communicated in this fashion in the last two days and each time they did it made Koguth feel more and more comfortable that Kalis was on their side one hundred percent. Kalis was risking quite a bit by his actions and after seeing how Ceale’s daughter acted towards him there was no way it was staged. Pusintin would never allow Kalis to treat Serale in such a fashion or allow her to act as she did with him. Ceale was not as convinced it seemed, but she was an extremely intelligent woman and Koguth believed it was more because of how she was acting with his own son that caused her to have misgivings about Serale. Mani had told him how Ceale would not go anywhere on the ship without Nedoni by her side now. It wasn’t so much that she was afraid of the crew as she had grown comfortable with him beside her. She ate with him and several times Mani had seen her laughing at something he had said. Not a forced laugh, but a laugh of genuine humor while she touched his hand or arm. It was not something Koguth had expected in any way considering what had been done to her over the last weeks, but Ceale was showing she was a strong willed woman and one who was very resilient. He hoped for his son’s sake that Ceale’s affection towards him was genuine for Nedoni had never shown such intense interest in a woman until now.

“That is not far off Kalis?” He spoke.

Kalis nodded his head. “I know sir, but it will correspond exactly to the time when the Task Force conducts its Fleet Wide Tri-Cobalt Engine venting. The massive dump of Tri-cobalt residue into the surrounding area will blind all sensors out to five million kilometers. It will give us the time to clear the field and jump before they know what is going on. It’s our best chance sir.”

“He’s right father.” Mataen spoke now. “The Tri-cobalt venting is usually done in space dock or a staging area where ships are protected. This is the perfect opportunity. The sensors of every ship will be blind for the entire time.”

“As will ours.” Koguth said.

Kalis shook his head. “We will have already plotted an escape and evasion course out of the field into the LEUGERS computers before the vent begins.” Kalis spoke carefully. “And with what we talked about before... that will only add confusion and hopefully take out several ships as well.”

“Why now?” Koguth asked. “Why not wait until we draw closer to the Lycavorian King? It would be much easier then.”

It was Serale who spoke, placing her hand affectionately on Kalis’s arm. She looked at Koguth and her mother in the transmission. “Kalis believes his father will send for you after they are done with this venting mother. He will make them return you to this ship so he can...”

“I am not going to allow that!” Kalis spoke as Serale choked up and turned her head to the side, resting it on his shoulder. “I made an oath to you Lady Ceale! I will keep it!”

“You are different young Kalis.” Mani spoke slowly. In the previous transmissions he had spoken to her with great respect and given how it was publicly known how he had treated his own mother it was surprising. “You are different from all the reports we have read about you. You have... you have a rather violent reputation to be honest. You are extremely skilled, there is no doubt about that, but it is known you have been prone to... violent and emotional outbursts. What has changed you so?”

“Mani... it matters not now.” Koguth spoke.

“I think it does.” Mani answered looking at him and completely unafraid to disagree with her husband. “We are placing our fates in his hands.” She turned back to Kalis. “How has such a change come over you in these last weeks young man? You... you act more like one of your Uncle’s family than you do a Kavalian. You act more like a Lycavorian Spartan. Why?”

Serale looked up and gazed tenderly into his face. She lifted her hand and drew her fingers gently across his cheek, Kalis turning to look at her, a motion that Ceale took note of intently. “Tell them Kalis.” Serale spoke softly but they heard her anyway. “If we are leaving... there is no reason to hide it anymore my love.”

Ceale’s eyes grew wide at this and she leaned forward. “Serale!” She hissed. Her eyes glared at Kalis. “You have taken my daughter against her will!” She snarled angrily. “I will...” Mani’s hand reached out and covered hers and Ceale looked at her. “Mani... he... he has raped my...”

“No!” Kalis voice’s barked drawing their attention back to him. “Never! I would not do such a thing! Never!”

Serale looked at her mother with wide eyes. “Mother! You have no right to... he has not done this!”

“Ceale knows you only by your reputation Kalis.” Mani spoke calmly and evenly looking at Kalis in the transmission. “She knows only of your violent tendencies and your Puma Bane instructors. You see now why this is all very strange. We see something else within you now and it is confusing. Tell us how this came to be.”

Kalis took a deep breath and moved closer to Serale in the transmission. Ceale quickly noted her daughter did not move away in the least and actually leaned further into him. “On... on Enurrua... my uncle gave me something. A very special item that I have been learning from since that day. He... he spoke words to me. Words that echoed within my head for days after. Words that echo still.”

“What words were those young Kalis?” Mani asked.

“He told me that he could... that he could gaze within me.” Kalis spoke passionately now. “That he could see within me and recognize my true self screaming to come out. He told me there was a cancer within me... a cancer that only I could stop. I have since come to see that cancer was my father, and the only way to stop it from consuming me was to see everything that my fool father never showed me! That he never taught me! My Uncle... he told me I could open my eyes and make a choice to leave that cancer behind forever. That I was on a collision course with fate if I did not.” Kalis looked at Ceale. “He gave to me the means to discover this Lady Ceale. He gave to me the means to discover who I truly am and who I want to be going into the future that I want to have. That is who resides within this body now and into whatever future I may have. And I want my hope and my future to include Serale. If she will have me. I would die for her without the thought crossing my mind for a moment. I want the life only my uncle and my Lycavorian blood can give to me! That is what drives me now! And if I have to work for decades to prove to you that I love your daughter with every breath that I take, then I will do so! Happily!”

Ceale saw Serale’s face beaming in the transmission and she watched as Serale took his arm in her hands and leaned over to brush her face against his cheek.

Mani leaned back in her chair quite astonished at this, but her eyes showed that she didn’t doubt one word of what he had just said. She stared at him for a long moment. “The spirits of those who came before you sing out in your words young Kalis. I will doubt you no longer.”

“We can see the truth in your eyes young Kalis.” Koguth spoke softly. “The resolve. That is good. Where do you propose we go when we have departed the Task Force?”

“I know how he is tracking Queen For’mya.” Kalis spoke squeezing Serale’s hand in his. “I can re-align the sensors on our LEUGERS to detect the signal as well. We jump ahead of the Task Force by several light years, acquire the signal and continue jumping until we reach him. The transports are smaller and do not require as much maintenance between jumps. We can remain ahead of my father easily.” Kalis spoke. “Jumping the Task Force in order to chase us is a hazard even he won’t risk.”

“Do you know where he has gone?” Koguth asked. “He is no fool... your uncle. He has a destination. He would not be out here among unknown and uncharted space just to simply draw Pusintin away to kill him. He knows where he is going.”

Kalis shook his head. “No. I don’t know where he is.” He answered honestly. “I... I may have a means to send a message to him... but I do not want to attempt this until we are away from my father. If we die... better we die out there... by our own actions and deeds... than by his hand.”

Koguth nodded. “On that we agree young Kalis. On that we agree.” He spoke. “We will prep our LEUGERS as well. Ten minutes before the venting begins I will send you a message that we are ready.”

Kalis nodded. “We will be waiting.” Kalis spoke. “I will contact you again in twelve hours with any last minute details. While I have been very careful... my father is not stupid. I am taking every precaution.”

“As we will.” Koguth spoke. “We will talk again in twelve hours.”

Kalis nodded and they watched as he reached up to end the transmission. Koguth leaned back in his chair and looked at Mataen and Nedoni. "What he risks is no small feat." Koguth said. "He is not acting as a Kavalian now... he is acting as a Lycavorian Spartan."

Mataen nodded his head and looked at his brother. "Nedoni... we can do what he says yes?"

Nedoni nodded quickly from where he stood behind Ceale. "Easily. Kalis has kept it simple... but complex at the same time. The timing will have to be just right but Corsa and I can easily fly the LEUGERS in the manner they need to be flown."

"Does Kalis have the necessary piloting skills?" Koguth asked. "I was not aware he was even a pilot."

Nedoni nodded again. "I know he has skills. I have heard of his flying abilities... but to what extent I don't know."

"Serale can help him." Ceale spoke quickly. "She's been flying since she was seven years old. She's an excellent pilot."

Koguth nodded. "Then we need to prepare." He stated. "Whatever path young Kalis is following now... I certainly do not want to be in front of him while he blazes it. He will turn his training on any in his path." Koguth looked at Mani. "You saw the determination in his eyes Mani? The devotion? He is on a mission and he will no doubt trample anyone in his way."

Mani nodded. "It is etched across his face like the lines in a mountain." Mani answered softly. "He is no longer Pusintin's son and I fear any who attempt to get in his way will see a very different Kalis."

"Training?" Ceale asked.

Koguth nodded but Mataen was the one who answered. "He's been trained as a Puma Bane Commando Ceale." He answered her quickly. "His instructor was one of the oldest and most respected among our people. Kalis's reputation for physical prowess is well known. His intelligence not so much. I think that has changed considerably now though. Whatever he says happened on Enurrua has changed him. Changed him for the better."

"And Serale?" Ceale asked. "Danim?"

Mani looked at her. "At this point Ceale... I believe your children are in the best possible place they could be. He will let nothing happen to them while he lives and based on what I have seen and heard from this young man so far, his father has no clue about who he has become. I believe it will be far easier for him to get off that ship than any of us realize. He has also just become the best chance for us to find Iama."

Nedoni moved closer to Ceale's sitting form and gently rested his large hand on her shoulder. "You will see them soon Ceale." He spoke softly. "Both of them."

Everyone saw her slim hand reach up and grip his larger one without hesitation and Ceale nodded as she squeezed his fingers tightly. Her head instinctively leaned over and her cheek pressed against the soft fur on the back of his hand. This was not something that could just be dismissed and all of them in the room knew it. Ceale looked up at Mani. "What can I do to help?" She asked.

"Whatever medical supplies you think we may need must be packed quickly." Koguth spoke. "We will take two LEUGERS but our cargo space will be limited so only pack what is absolutely necessary to compliment your skills Ceale."

She nodded. "I'll get on it right away."

"Mataen... light weapons but heavy on the ammunition." Koguth said. "We don't know what we will encounter after we leave."

Mataen nodded. "I'll take care of it."

"This action will take us closer to finding your sister." Koguth said softly. "That is why we are out here. Now we have two additional reasons to move forward with resolute care and purpose. Ceale wants her children back... your mother and I want our daughter back. You want your sister back. Let this drive you as we go forward." Koguth came to his feet. "I will feel my daughter in my arms again before darkness claims me into the void. No matter what I have to do." He took a deep breath. "Let us get ready."

Kalis looked at Serale when the transmission ended. "I don't think your mother believes me." He said softly.

Serale kissed him softly. "We believe you." She said running her fingers along his cheek.

Kalis allowed a small smile to split his face and he rubbed his nose against her cheek in a show of affection that was part of his newly discovered wolf blood and emotions. He squeezed her hand and turned back to Danim who was looking at them.

"Almost done." Danim spoke.

Kalis moved over in front of him and helped him to put some additional items within the pack. He drew something from under the bottom of the couch as Serale settled next to her brother and he placed the bundle on the small table. He unwrapped it and they saw the two ARSOC sidearms and two data pads. He looked up at them and held out the two data pads.

"I have preloaded the schematics of the ship into these two pads and have linked them to the P1 my Uncle gave to me." He said. "Once we set out we will stay together, but if we get separated for any reason just follow the path I have marked on the pads. It will lead you to the hanger bay."

"Nothing will happen Kalis." Serale spoke confidently as she took the pad.

"Better safe than sorry." Kalis spoke as he lifted first one ARSOC and then the other. He held them out to them along with the thigh holsters. "I have modified them to suit each of you in weight and balance. I know... I know you have never taken a life... but if we are discovered you must not hesitate."

Serale reached out and took the ARSOC first. She had a firm determination in her eyes and she held it and nodded. "I won't." She stated.

Danim nodded as well. "Neither will I."

Kalis looked at Serale. "If anything... if anything happens to me... take my P1 and get to the ship Serale."

"Kalis you..."

He reached out and took her hand. "Listen to me!" He insisted. "If I fall... take my P1 and go! When you get off the ship follow the pre-plotted course and activate the last code in the P1. With any luck... with any luck it is a direct communication link to my uncle or at least his current location. Follow the instructions you receive."

"I will do this." Serale said softly. "But nothing is going to happen to you Kalis."

Kalis nodded. "I will try to make sure that is the case." He said with a smile. "I would like to actually discover and live this new life I have found. With you."

Serale smiled brightly and nodded. "So would I."

"Get whatever you believe you will need from the room." Kalis told her. "We should finish the packing now."

Serale nodded and got to her feet moving towards the small bedroom. Kalis reached out and gripped Danim's arm tightly. Danim looked at him surprised at the strength of his touch. He saw Kalis's eyes bore into him. Danim was no fool and though only fourteen, he was rapidly gaining skills he would not have gained on Hadaria. It was Kalis who taught him to bury the hate for his father deep and not let it control him. The times they had talked these last days showed Danim that Kalis and he were very much alike. Kalis had given him some rudimentary hand to hand instruction as well as the knowledge to fire the weapon he now held. He trusted him.

"You are only fourteen Danim... I know this. But no matter what happens to me... you must get your sister off this ship. No matter what takes place... if I fall... don't let her try and save me. Get her off the ship." Kalis told him softly.

Danim met his eyes and dropped his hand over Kalis's. He knew how Kalis felt for Serale, how his sister felt in return. He had watched it blossom these last weeks and he had watched how Kalis had changed. How his sister and whatever he had been reading on that pad had changed him. "I will... I will do as you ask Kalis." He said softly. "But... you have to promise to not do anything stupid. I don't think you realize just how much you... how much Serale loves you now. We stick together... just as you have told us."

Kalis nodded his head. "Together."

ONTEROM SCIENCE STATION ZERO ONE FIVE

“...can’t possibly be the same one!” Sashan declared as he looked at Delnash.

Delnash met Sashan’s eyes and then glanced at Lorendo who had said nothing since he returned and told them of his conversation with Teniri and the larger dragon Arzoal. He nodded his head. “You have associated with Teniri as much as any of us Sashan.” Delnash spoke. “She is not one to make mistakes. This is the dragon Elder Mother she sent us looking for all those years ago. The one we told her was dead and lost when we did not find their ship or any sign of them on Elear.”

“We all saw the logs from the ship’s scans Delnash.” Sashan spoke. “Lorendo was there himself!”

Delnash looked at him. “I know. I tried to tell her that but she would not listen.” He sighed heavily. “You were not mistaken in some way Lorendo?”

Lorendo shook his head quickly. “Impossible.” He said. “We found no ship and certainly no dragons on this planet.”

“According to this Arzoal... their ship returned some nine thousand years after Teniri dispatched it. It was damaged and it’s computer banks were wiped completely.” Delnash said.

“Nine thousand years?” Sashan said. “From where?”

Delnash shook his head. “She doesn’t know.” He replied. “She then used the ship to take the remainder of the dragons off Elear. At least that is what she tells me.”

“What she tells you?” Lorendo spoke. “This coming from one of our people who used a PTC for something it was not intended just to extend her own life!”

Delnash shook his head. “There is more to it.” He said. “Something she is not telling me. Something that Teniri is not telling us.”

“Dragon Kind has fought beside us...” Sashan spoke. “Stood beside us for millennia. I refuse to believe Teniri would willingly keep information from us. Especially information that has to do with a threat to us.”

Lorendo looked at him. “You are too trusting Sashan.” He said.

“And you are too quick to dismiss those who would be friends to us.” Delnash hissed at him. “Our relationship with Dragon Kind almost never came to be because of your words.”

“I was only looking out for our interests.” Lorendo spoke.

“Our interests are the interests of Dragon Kind.” Delnash snapped. “Now she has threatened to return to Artaaya and speak with her council. There is a good possibility she will decide to take her kind and leave.”

“Leave!” Lorendo popped. “Leave to where? Back with the primitives?”

Delnash nodded. “Yes.”

“Refuse to transport them.” Lorendo snapped.

“This Union of Lycavorians has ships that can transport them.” Delnash said. “Many ships built strictly for transporting dragons. This Arzoal sits on their ruling body and has a hand even in decisions that do not directly affect their kind.”

Lorendo huffed. “What does that tell you?” He snarled. “Dragon Kind helping to rule Lycavorians. What a joke.”

“Do not be so quick to dismiss this Lorendo.” Delnash told him. “Dragon Kind is an essential part of the defense of our people and your willingness to just dismiss that after so many years is quite troubling.”

“Then don’t let them leave!” Lorendo snapped again. “Refuse to let these ships come close to our worlds. Besides... they are probably built with our technology and should be impounded as well.”

Sashan looked at him. “Are you saying we force them to stay?” He asked aghast. “Do you have any idea what kind of destruction they could wrought among our cities and people if we suddenly turned on them? They have been valued allies for millennia and now you suggest to enslave them! This is too much Lorendo!”

“So you will let these animals remove them!” Lorendo barked. “That is your solution?”

“They would be going willingly.” Delnash said.

“Teniri would not do that!” Sashan spoke quickly.

“Teniri is not the Elder Mother.” Delnash answered. “This Arzoal is according to Teniri and she will abide by whatever decision she makes. This Arzoal is more militant and forceful than Teniri and apparently the Lycavorian leader and the dragon he is bonded to are some sort of religious icons within Dragon Kind history and culture. Talon Guardians she called them. They have been gifted with a small portion of the Etheric essence of nine dragon Elders.”

“What?” Lorendo exclaimed. “How?”

Delnash shook his head. “Some sort of Etheric ritual known only to Dragon Elders. I’ve never heard Teniri mention this before in all our conversations. This adds to the power that the Lycavorian leader can draw upon.”

“Delnash... you don’t believe he is a Praetorian do you?” Lorendo gasped.

Delnash met his eyes. “What I believe does not matter.” He stated. “You were witness to what he can do Lorendo. He almost ended your life without so much as blinking. Even the Etheric essence of nine Dragon Elders could not give him the power he displayed. How else do you explain it? Over two dozen of our men could not stop him and these people with him are lethally trained and far more experienced than we first thought it seems.”

“He is an abomination!” Lorendo snarled. “That is how I explain it! Pralors... breeding with these animals! How can we even consider looking at them as equals? Sumar and Wayonn, everyone one with them that agreed to this, they should be expunged from our history as traitors to our people!”

“Regardless of what you think... the fact is they have Pralor blood within them and...” Delnash hissed angrily, his patience with Lorendo growing very short given everything that had happened so far. He stopped talking when he saw the Persian red haired Queen exit the station quickly, followed by Avatar 41 and many others, including Radra and both his daughters. The woman Lorendo struck was named Anja, that much he remembered, and she did not appear in the least bit happy.

His gaze caused both Lorendo and Sashan to turn and face them as they were quickly surrounded by other Lycavorians who all had their weapons out and ready to use. Delnash watched as Anja stopped in front of Lorendo, her jade green eyes now encircled by a thick black ring and the tips of her wolf fangs protruding from beneath her full lips. He watched as the Pralor Security Forces came to their feet from different locations but none of them made any effort to intervene. The two elven and one cross breed vampire Queens burst from with the station next, followed by Wayonn, Valael and the woman Helen.

“Melyanna no!” Dysea barked out as she leaped the railing and moved quickly towards her. Of all of them, Dysea knew first hand what Anja was capable of. So many different people dismissed her or misjudged her because of her diminutive size, but Dysea had seen her rage in full and unrestrained action. Dysea had watched her beat a man three times her size to death when they were first building Eden City and Anja Leonidas had only grown far more dangerous since that day.

Anja turned to look at her quickly, her Jade green eyes softening every so slightly as she heard the concern in Dysea’s voice and her aura reaching for her. “I am ok Dysea.” She spoke back to her before turning to look at Lorendo once more. “I’m just going to have a talk with Mister Elder here.”

“What is going on?” Delnash asked quickly moving up beside Lorendo.

Anja pointed at Delnash but didn’t move her eyes from Lorendo. “You... shut up!” Anja snarled at Delnash causing his eyes to go wide. “You... you bastard!” She pointed at Lorendo now. “Your computer! Give it to me! Now!”

“I don’t answer to you woman!” Lorendo snarled at her.

“I will ask nicely only one more time!” Anja growled at him exposing her fangs as her eyes narrowed. “Then I will beat it out of you!”

Delnash looked at Lorendo surprised. “You have your P9?” He asked.

“I always have it!” Lorendo barked.

“Give it to her! Now!” Delnash ordered him.

“Delnash they...” Lorendo began to protest.

“Give it to her Lorendo!” Delnash barked at him. “There will be no more violence among us! Do it now or I will have our security troops do it!”

Lorendo’s eyes darkened and he reached behind his back pulling the portable notebook sized computer from a carrying pouch he had on under his cloak. He tapped on it several times, a blinking red light appearing on the surface and then he held it out to Anja. “You will not be able to access it!” He growled. “You do not have the intelligence to do that! You can admire it however!”

Anja snatched it from his hands and then smiled. "I don't want to access it." She barked. "I want to use it for something."

"What is that fool woman?" Lorendo growled.

