"Her analytical skills are beyond impressive. She absorbs information like a sponge and she comes at problems from outside the box first. Armetus told us what Androcles did, touching them as he did. If anything, it increased whatever inherent talents she already had thanks to your mother's latent abilities." Kimtia answered. Everyone within the Kryperia who was close to the Leonidas family knew of the latent abilities of all the Queens, and while it wasn't spoken of openly, Armetus and others knew these skills could be passed to their children. "She's a natural Eli. Armetus is going to love her."

As with all of the Leonidas Royal Family, there were very few who were allowed to refer to any of them by their given names or nicknames. There were those whom, for one reason or another, were expected to call them their names because of what they had endured and then experienced together. Though they were very few in number, Kimtia and her husband and mate Arusk were two of those individuals. Nearly a full year of savage battles and planning those same battles had formed a bond between Kimtia, Arusk and the four oldest Leonidas children. A bond that would now never be broken.

Eliani nodded her head. "Andro suspected as much." She said softly. "I don't know how much our mother is going to like hearing that though."

“Well, if anything, she already has what most of our agents don’t have at the start? She has a walking around tree as her security and she is a nubous natural at what she does. I’ve seen the way her husband and mate looks at her. He would die before ever allowing anything to happen to her.” Kimtia said.

“Let her make her own decision Kimtia.” Eliani said. “I agree with Andro and you both in your assessment, but let it be her decision. Working for the Krypteria is no small affair and my father would not let Armetus put others at risk because of Eirene.”

Kimtia reached out and squeezed her arm. “Don’t worry. I know the risks and what the sacrifices are. It is not for everyone. I’m just telling you she is a natural and no doubt Armetus will see this the first time he meets her.”

Eliani nodded her head. “He is scary like that.” She agreed. “Being able to sense who will be a good agent or not. He scares my father sometimes.”

Kimtia laughed. “I can’t imagine your father being afraid of anything.” She said.

Eliani grinned. “You might be surprised.” She said. “Inamarno and Cvea are putting the last touches on the triage center in the next chamber. We’ll be able to effectively treat up to twenty before we run out of space and need to begin shuttling people to SPARTA’S WRATH.”

“That’s another one there.” Kimtia spoke. “This Cvea has picked up a lot more than you first thought she would hasn’t she?”

Eliani nodded her head. “I will have to look at the data my mother compiled during her research of the Kavalian Biogenic process, but I’m beginning to think that, at least for certain individuals, the Biogenic processes have the unintended side effect of making that person far more intelligent, at least in the sense of being able to obtain and then retain knowledge. She has already read through eight of the texts I have given her and committed everything to memory.”

Kimtia was thoughtful for a moment. “Interesting. That might be something Armetus would be interested in.” She said. Kimtia glanced over to the side of the room. “The Pralor woman, Mari, she is set up over there with that P9 that she always carries. She’s tied into the entire Mydala City network and can manipulate nearly anything if we need it. I didn’t realize that Deion had scented her.”

Eliani nodded her head. “They have been drawn together since they first saw one another. They are both Praetorians and that might have something to do with it, but she is part of our family now.”

“No arguments here. She seems more than competent even for being such a tiny thing. It’s a wonder your brother doesn’t break her.” Kimtia answered with a smile.

Eliani nodded her head with a smile. “Well... her howls the first night she and Deo were together kept most of us awake but Mari helped us to take Moran’s ship and she has already proven that her skills are invaluable. I will put together a report for Armetus when this is all over concerning Cvea and Mari.” She said. “But we also don’t want to do what the Kavaliens and the OSG have done.” She looked at Brendi beside her when she said that.

Brendi nodded her head. “No it was not my choice.” She said softly. “But I would not change it now.”

Eliani squeezed her arm and nodded. “Perhaps not... but that the choice was not yours to begin with is what makes it important. We must not make the same mistakes if it ever comes to that.”

“I don’t believe your mother or you would ever make that mistake Eliani.” Brendi said confidently. “Not if you are any indication of what your mother is like.”

Kimtia chuckled. “Oh... you haven’t met Queen Anja yet?” She asked with a smile. “Trust me when I tell you, she will blow you away.”

Eliani couldn’t help but smile and nod her head. “She does have that effect on people doesn’t she?”

“I remember when she went up against that Folcani Researcher at the symposium on Elear.” Kimtia said. “Wow... she...”

“I have something!” Eirene’s voice interrupted her and brought everyone in the room to full alertness.

Kimtia and Eliani quickly moved up behind Eirene as her hands moved across the two computer consoles. Miseo and Arusk also moved up behind them.

“Talk to me Eirene.” Kimtia spoke softly.

“I thought I saw movement on the street just north of Coren Re Mydala’s Estate.” Eirene said softly though her voice carried a sense of urgency to it, almost as if she was terrified of failing. “I’m moving the cameras to compensate.”

Miseo reached out and placed his large hand on her shoulder and Eirene immediately relaxed with the warmth and gentleness of his touch. This did not go unnoticed by any of them and Kimtia tossed a knowing look at Eliani. "Your heart races my wife." He spoke to her in a soothing voice. "Be calm. We are all here. As your brother has told you... you have nothing to prove."

Miseo's voice had the desired effect Kimtia saw, and Eirene's body instantly lost all of the tenseness from seconds before. That told Kimtia quite a bit of things in fact, the foremost being that Miseo was an anchor for Eirene and perhaps the one thing that she had no fear of in any way.

"There!" Eirene snapped as she focused on one camera and lifted her finger to point to it, touching the image as she enlarged the. All of them could clearly see the shadows of at least a dozen men moving deftly through the deserted storefronts and café tables. They were moving efficiently and very much like well trained soldiers. "They are remaining among the shadows and staying out of the minimal lighting on the side street!"

"They are well trained." Arusk spoke softly.

"There!" Eirene declared once more as she pointed to a single figure in the middle of the column. "He just signaled to someone across the street!"

"Eirene are you certain?" Kimtia asked as she moved up next to her husband.

"Yes... his eyes and hand moved." Eirene replied adjusting the light level and trying to retexture the image for better clarity. "I have seen father and Uncle Danny use similar hand signals."

"Is there any way to turn the camera and see what we have?" Arusk asked.

Eirene shook her head. "The few cameras in this section are all on one side of the causeway. We can only see one side of the approach."

Arusk nodded his head. "Then we figure an equal number on the opposite side." He spoke.

"Here!" Kimtia hissed as she pointed to the back of the image. "...Another group behind the first!"

"Then they are coming from the northeast just as Andro and Dorian figured they would." Eliani spoke up.

"It would definitely look that way." Arusk said as he typed on the data pad. He looked at his beloved wife and mate. "Let Andro know Kimtia." He spoke. "Tell him this thing is about to kick off."

"...Have them." Cowen spoke softly in reply to Arusk's warning as his exceptionally keen feline eyes focused and he spied the approaching Lycavorians with the scope. "They are nineteen degrees east Sherice."

Sherice shifted her macro binos slightly and then the fast moving figures sprang into view. "I got them!" She hissed softly. "Range 3100. Two thousand meters from the northeast entrance and closing. Ninety seconds before they breach the wall."

Cowen's sight shifted slightly and focused on movement above and to the right of the advancing Lycavorians. He adjusted the focus of his scope and brought them into clarity. "Archangel Team Two to Base. I have three targets on the rooftop of the apartment building in grid two. They appear to be setting up what looks to be like some sort of launcher."

"Base confirms."

Sherice shifted her binos. "Sibfla!" She gasped. "Cowen it looks like a portable mortar or something like that."

"Base... it appears to be a mortar of some type." Cowen spoke calmly.

"Archangel Two!" This was a female voice. "You will initiate contact the moment they breach the estate walls! Do not let that mortar fire down onto the estate! I say again... do not let that mortar fire!"

"Archangel Two confirms!" Cowen spoke once more.

That is when they all heard it over their COM implants.

"Base to Archangel! The party is set! Forty-five seconds until it starts!"

"Archangel confirms!"

Unnel watched as his lead team halted just outside the entrance to the Re Mydala estate. The steel double doors were secured at the moment but that mattered not. In twenty seconds those doors would no longer be there. He watched as they proceeded to place their explosives while his second in command settled soundlessly next to him on the ground.

“No security Unnel.” He whispered softly. “That is odd.”

“They feel secure.” Unnel answered. “This boy Prince is not as combat savvy as they say. He is probably entertaining himself with his mates. Royalty breeds sloppiness. He does not feel the need for security. He believes they have already accomplished their task. A major mistake on his part.”

“Set.” The voice chimed in over their own COM units and Unnel looked at his second. “Let’s help to shape the future shall we.”

“Execute!”

Cowen’s Shan did not let the flash of the explosion deter his aim or his concentration. Even as the double doors of the estate wall blew inward he focused his crosshairs on the single man behind the portable mortar. He watched him lift the portable mortar shell and prepare to initiate the bombardment. Cowan centered his crosshairs and allowed his finger to caress the trigger of the CHAOS and Sherice felt the heavy recoil of the biped equipped rifle beside him well before the soft boom of the silencer. Anyone more than twenty meters away would never hear the retort of the rifle, but next to him as she was it sounded like thunder. Cowen’s voice filled her head as he smoothly ejected the spent round and slammed home another with hardly any effort.

“Mortar team is dead.”

Sherice’s eyes went wide and she lifted her binos as the massive explosion above the estate blossomed into the night sky above them.

The single Dragon Armor encased round sped across the distance in less time than it took to form a thought. As the Lycavorian prepared to drop the plasma mortar into the tube, the large CHAOS round struck the plasma shell dead center and it suddenly blossomed into a fireball in the man’s hands and exploded. The night sky was lit up with the explosion and the subsequent follow on explosion of the forty additional rounds that were neatly stacked beside their position. The entire roof of the apartment building shuddered violently and the frame of the ten story structure shook right down to its anchoring beams as flames reached for the night sky and lights began to come on all over the street seconds later.

The few remains of the three men manning the mortar would be found over the course of the next two days scattered over several hundred meters and seared into the surface of the roof from the intense heat. All that remained were several blood red stains upon the once shiny metal surface mixed in with blacken metal and melted seams and the tattered remains of three limbs.

Unnel was rushing forward with his team when he heard the explosion and the frantic call over their COM units.

“Overwatch team is gone! Overwatch team is gone!” The voice echoed.

“What?” Unnel hissed.

“Something took them out!” The voice answered. “The entire roof of the building they were on just lit up the sky! Their position is gone!”

“Team Two move to designated coordinates!” Unnel rasped out. “Hit them now before they figure out what is going on! Move! Move!”

Eirene’s head twisted when she heard the garbled communication and she adjusted the cameras while typing madly on her console.

“Eirene? What is it?” Kimtia asked moving closer.

“I just... the cameras all have minor audio sensors in them!” She spoke. “The one closest to that first team just picked up some sort of transmission! I’m trying to focus on the signal. It’s still active!”

Kimtia turned slightly and looked at Mari who sat a short distance from Eirene. “Mari, boost the audio sensor output on all the cameras. Override the Vanari preset controls and reset their filters!”

“Bypassing Vanari presets! Boosting signal enhancers! There!” Mari called out in seconds.

“I have it!” Eirene declared as she hit a single key on her computer and the new voice erupted from their speakers.

“...Hit them now before the figure out what is going on! Move! Move!”

“That’s him!” Eirene barked. “That’s the leader!”

“Trace that signal!” Kimtia exclaimed.

“Transmission is being beamed to a location in the southern river market area!” Mari spoke quickly. “Localizing now!” She was stabbing keys on her P9. “I have it! It appears to be some sort of office building. Sub-Basement level!”

“It has to be their command and control center!” Arusk gasped. “Sibfla! We could take out their entire network on Austrova!”

“We don’t have anything to hit them with Huor!” Kimtia exclaimed. (Husband)

“We have the QRF.” Arusk spoke calmly.

Kimtia shook her head instantly. “They are in support and we’d announce to the entire planet that we are here playing war!” She stated. “Andro wanted this contained to the estate! We can’t attack them! We...”

“Are they coordinating this attack?” The new voice spoke and they all watched as Caliria moved gracefully into the room and came up next to Eliani. She was dressed in the new Mark VI body armor and it hugged her lush frame like a second skin it seemed. Her long black hair was tied into one thick braid and draped over her left shoulder.

Kimtia turned to Eirene. “Can you confirm the location Eirene?” She asked.

Eirene turned in her chair. “I already have!” She stated. “All intercepted COMS from the mercenary ronnus are being beamed to this location and the replies are originating from this location. No relays or repeaters.”

Kimtia turned back to Caliria. “I guess that answers that.” She said.

“Wait!” Mari called out. “I just detected another signal on the same carrier wave to a different part of the city! It’s mobile! Tracking it!” Mari looked up suddenly from her P9. “It was sent to a receiver within a hundred meters of Lisisa’s location!”

Eliani didn’t hesitate. [Lisisa... is everything alright at your location?] She reached for her sister within the shielded Mindvoice connection.

[That depends on your definition of alright.] Lisisa answered instantly. [We have what appear to be several unfriendly Lycavorians about to assault the First Regent’s home. Coren believes it is an attack against the First Regent and not related to us being here. We are preparing to kill them now.]

Eliani couldn’t help but smile at the calm and confidence in her sister’s voice. [Then I will not trouble you any longer. Contact us as soon as you are secure.]

Eliani looked at Kimtia who appeared puzzled. “What?” Kimtia asked.

“Another team of Lycavorians is preparing to assault the First Regent’s home where Lisisa and Arduri are.” Eliani stated. “They don’t know Lisi and the others are there so we can only assume they are after the Vanari First Regent. This is a simultaneous mission to take out whatever and whoever they feel is a threat to them.”

“Then you have my authorization to kill them!” Caliria stated calmly. “Take out this Command and Control center. It is obviously being run by the OSG!”

“Princess, an attack by the QRF on this position could very well set off a firestorm within the Vanari government and do exactly what we don’t want them to do!” Kimtia stated trying to remain objective while her very nature screamed for her to do exactly as Caliria told her.

“They are coordinating an attack against my father’s estate and visiting dignitaries Kimtia... with the expressed intent to kill them. Now we are discovering they are going after the First Regent as well!” Caliria told her. “We are simply doing what is necessary to insure our people remain alive.”

Kimtia looked at her husband and mate quickly. The two of them thought so much alike that it sometimes frightened their parents when they were all together. Arusk nodded his head to her. “It is your call my wife and mate.”

Kimtia decided rather quickly. “Nubou un!” Kimtia hissed. “Commit the QRF! Establish a patch to them and send them the data Mari! High Priority encryption! Instruct Prince Fedor that they are to eliminate or capture any OSG agents at that position and insure their ability to use that location is destroyed.”

Mari nodded her head. “Initiating the patch!”

Kimtia looked back to Eliani and saw her shrug her shoulders and smile. “Now it gets interesting.” Eliani stated. “Never a dull moment around my brother. “Eirene... use your link with Andro arande. Let him know what is happening.”

Eirene nodded and closed her eyes as she reached across the distance for her brother.

RE MYDALA ESTATE

STORAGE SHED WEST OF ENTRANCE TO LOWER LEVEL LIVING QUARTERS

“...Hit them now!” Kalis hissed softly, his blue eyes watching as the shadowy figures were rushing right by the shed not more than a hundred meters from their position.

Ridor glanced and Daio and smiled. “Daio?” He spoke.

Daio looked at Kalis as he turned back and met their eyes. “You will come to learn Kalis my friend, just as we did, that when Andro says he has a surprise for the enemy, they will be very surprised. He wanted us to wait until the signal.”

“We don’t know what the signal is!” Kalis complained.

Ridor smiled once more revealing the tips of his long wolf fangs. “We will know it when we see it.” He stated. “Of that there will be little doubt.”

“How can you be so sure? We are letting them move unopposed into the estate!” Kalis asked anxiously. He wanted to prove to Androcles and to everyone that he had indeed turned the corner on his life. He had proven this to his uncle he was sure, but Androcles was truly the one he wanted to convince, especially after the way he treated Sadi on Hadaria all those months ago.

“Trust us.” Daio told him. “And trust Andro.”

Kalis took a deep breath to calm his nerves and he felt Serale reach for him within Mindvoice ever so gently to sooth him. She had adapted to the changes his bite had caused in her body much quicker than they had determined she would and his Tenna Anja told them it was because of her Hadarian genes and the potency of the Leonidas blood that flowed through them both now. At first Kalis had cursed that blood because it belonged to his father and not his uncle, but it was his Tenna Aricia who had told him the blood was the same no matter his father but it was how Kalis choose to emulate that blood and the history it held which would make the difference.

“I will be ready.” Kalis spoke softly.

“Kalis...?” Ridor spoke waiting until his eyes focused on him. “Do not hold back, for Andro will not.”

Kalis nodded his head. “I don’t intend too.”

Ridor reached up and touched his jaw activating his COM Implant. “Ryana... have your sniper teams get ready. This is about to begin.” He ordered Rinel’s second daughter who was situated somewhere on the estate with four other Vanari sniper teams waiting for the attack to begin.

“Standing by.” Ryana’s voice answered.

“Ryana... we don’t take prisoners.” Ridor spoke once more. “The only one who survives this attack is the leader.”

Ridor heard the long moment of silence and then Ryana answered with firmness in her voice. “It is about time.”

They shared a very unique bond because of the way they were born and it was this bond that allowed them an uncluttered Mindvoice channel to each other. It was not something that others had, but because Androcles and Dorian were born fully aware and Eirene and Fedor very nearly fully aware thanks to Androcles, it was as if they had a single channel within the Etheric realm that was dedicated strictly to them. It was not something Androcles would have done under any normal circumstance, biting his mother For'mya as he did in mock rage and hatred and reaching for the twins she carried within Mindvoice. He had actually carried a great deal of shame for acting in such a manner with one of the women who had helped to raise him and loved him without question; one of the women that he called and loved as mother. It was the only way that he could act to insure that For'mya did not give up all hope and to let her know that her family loved her without question.

Under any other context Androcles' actions would have been considered a vile sin to most Lycavorians and Elves, yet nearly all of the Union now knew why he had done this, and their respect for him had increased tenfold for having the courage to act in such way to save his family. Though the vast majority would never know the effect this action had concerning Fedor and Eirene, it still served to enhance the legacy Androcles Leonidas was building for himself and not even realizing it. Androcles had carried that shameful burden within him until just this very morning when he held both Eirene and Fedor in his arms and they shared with him all that they were within this special etheric connection. All that their mother For'mya was and what they all felt about what their brother had done to insure their survival. There was no anger, no distrust, and no hate; there was simply an overwhelming sense of love and gratitude for what he had done and the overwhelming courage it had taken for him to go against the very core of his beliefs in order to do it.

...Mari is sending the information to Fedor now! Fedor had the QRF already airborne in low orbit and they will try to time the assault with your retaliation but he and Famus make no promises. Eirene's voice echoed softly in both Andro and Dorian's minds. It was an Etheric connection that not even their father would have been able to breach and therefore they did not shield their conversations.

Understood. Andro answered her. What about Lisisa? I did not want to reach for her when I felt her emotions spike.

Eli spoke to her within Mindvoice. She did not seem concerned about what they were facing Andro. And they will have complete surprise on their side not to mention a few Vanari Commandos loyal to Inamarno's father. Eirene answered.

Androcles glanced at Dorian and saw him nod his head slightly. Very well arande. He spoke. Continue to monitor things as best as you are able. You have far exceeded mine and father's expectations in so short a time. Both of you have. Do not feel it is necessary to do more.

We are Leonidas. Eirene stated firmly. We expect no less of ourselves.

Indeed. We... Dorian began.

Andro... Dorian... they are about to breach the lower levels! Eirene exclaimed.

Then we will speak later. Andro answered her. This is about to kick off.

Go with the gods! Eirene told them before they felt her slip from the connection.

Dorian met his brother's azure colored eyes with his own multicolored orbs. "It's time fervon." He said softly.

"Yes... it is."

They both turned to see Murano, Jomann, Denali and Deion watching them.

"Problem?" Murano asked.

Androcles shook his head. "No. Not that Lisisa and Arduri can't handle."

"That's my Lisi and Duri!" Denali proclaimed happily. He was concerned about them yes, but his faith in their combined abilities was absolute and he knew what they were both capable of. "Beautiful and deadly."

"They are about to breach." Dorian spoke to the others.

"Then hold nothing back, any of you. Use all of your power and ability. There is much all of you still need to learn but you are far more advanced than any other Praetorian in history at this stage of discovery." Murano spoke now. "We are Praetorians but you are also Lycavorian! Now... now we will kick their asses back into the dark ages!"

Andro chuckled softly. "Murano... you have been hanging around our father and our mother Anja far too much." He stated.

"And Sarlana it seems." Dorian chimed in.

"Jeez! You think." Deion echoed.

Unnel heard the soft boom of breaching explosives from below and to the right signaling him that his second assault team was entering the lower living areas.

“Now!” He grunted loudly. “Blow it now!”

Unnel watched his man mash down on the triggering device and there was a brief flash of intense light and then the rush of air as they blew the doors inward. “Go!” He hissed in a frantic voice as the feeling in his gut began to turn cold. He couldn’t place it, but something told him that things were not going as he had planned. Something told him they had gotten involved in something that was far more than Franklin Adams and the OSG had led them to believe.

They had done this many times before and we experts at their jobs. Most of them were former members of the Protectorate military who thoroughly enjoyed having the extra credits and perks of being involved in the Vanari slave trade. Many of them even had female Vanari slaves that they used at their whim secure in locations outside Protectorate space. As a unit they had conducted several dozen raids themselves through the years in order to secure more Vanari females for the OSG slave auctions. None of them had any desire to see things change from the way they were and all of them were fully onboard with the OSG and those Vanari involved in the Slave Ring. They had the finest equipment and training that their culture and society could offer, as well as many Intelligence contacts still within the Protectorate military. None of that would help them this day for they truly did not comprehend who and what they were fighting.

Three minutes passed by in a blur, but to the men and women of Unnel’s assault team it seemed like three months. Their training guided them as they moved with precision through the lower living quarters with catlike speed and grace. As they cleared each room, the apprehension in each of them began to grow. There were twenty-four of them in the lower level of Coren Re Mydala’s estate, all of them with looks of surprise on their faces now as they reached the last room. The lower living quarters had primarily bedrooms and two different gathering rooms for guests and others to mingle. There was one small kitchen station against the north wall but aside from that it was not a complex operation and very straightforward. The leader of this assault team glanced around quickly as his men took up guard positions in the largest of the gathering rooms and he opened his COM unit as he dropped to one knee.

“Clear!” He hissed into his shoulder mounted COM unit. “We are clear! No targets! I say again no targets! We got nothing! What the fuck is going on Unnel?”

“Clear!” He hissed into his shoulder mounted COM unit. “We are clear! No targets! I say again no targets! We got nothing! What the fuck is going on Unnel?”

Unnel heard this within his own COM unit and felt his apprehension become barely controllable. He had known something was wrong when no one in his own twenty-eight man team was firing their weapons and they heard no gunfire from the lower levels.

“...rooms are empty!” Unnel’s head snapped around as the Lycavorian spat out the words while he and his team came back into the main room and took up guard positions.

“Our rooms as well!” Another group chimed in as they moved back into the main room of Coren Re Mydala’s home. The night sky was clearly visible through the massive glass doors and windows, the lights of Mydala city on the horizon. He glanced around the sunken main portion of the room where all the furniture was and that feeling of dread began to grow at an alarming rate. Their entry had been perfect. Their Intelligence had been perfect. The estate was quiet and their OSG spotters had given the ok for entry into the main estate. Coren Re Mydala’s security measures were child’s play. Unnel would have thought a ranking Senior Board of Regent’s member would have heavier Cadre Commando security. The OSG Intelligence did not indicate this nor did they put much stock in the military capabilities of the Union forces or this young Prince everyone seemed so concerned about. Indeed, their Intelligence stated he was not as skilled as others made him out to be and preferred instead to play with his mates rather than make war and learn tactics. Something was very wrong here and Unnel felt the hairs on the back of his neck begin to stand up and take attention.

“Assault Team to base!” Unnel hissed into his COM. “The Estate is empty! Adams... the fucking estate is empty!” He snarled.

“What?” Franklin Adams’ voice echoed in his ear. “That’s impossible! We have had eyes on the estate ever since the Union Prince arrived! No one has left!”

“I’m telling you the estate is empty!” Unnel growled. “There is no one here!”

“Actually... that is not quite accurate.” The unfamiliar voice echoed from all around them causing Unnel and his men to lift their weapons and begin searching the main room for the source of the voice.

There was a brief shimmering of yellowish/white light to their front and Unnel and all of his team whirled around to face it, their eyes going wide in disbelief, their weapons wavering as the shapes of six men appeared as if out of thin air and took substance only five meters away from where they were. Six men dressed in strange looking body armor and all of them with nearly glowing multicolored eyes in the darkness of the room. The voice that reached them was clear and powerful and reeked of confidence. It also carried with it one thing that made the blood in their veins go cold.

It carried the finality of death.

“Looking for us!” Androcles Leonidas snarled before he lifted his hands and they saw the wave of Etheric power swell in front of his palms.

That was when the pain began.

He had been recruited by Sumar nineteen years after his birth, his mother and father joyfully allowing this, knowing that their son was so very different. They lived with him within the confines of the expansive Praetorian facility on the homeworld, watching as he was taught so many things that they would have never been able to teach him. His family visited him often and all of them were beyond proud of what they now knew he was. He was one of the first Praetorians and through the decades and centuries that followed he became one of Sumar’s closest and most trusted leaders and friends.

Murano could remember every detail of every battle that they had ever fought together even to this day. Sumar was an inspiration to each and every living Praetorian, not to mention the most powerful and charismatic of them. He learned more things than he could imagine just by watching Sumar operate and this only allowed his own skills to grow stronger and more focused. They had stood on uncountable battlefields across hundreds of worlds and faced the Scourge down in every instance. They had not won all of the battles to be sure, but even those where they had to retreat the Scourge paid a dear price. Sumar had told him something during a lull in a battle on some world Murano no longer remembered the name to. It was something Murano had forgotten until only a few days ago, and it was a memory that he now knew was triggered by those he associated and fought with at this moment.

“There will come a day Murano my friend, a day far into the future when everything that has happened and will happen will become clear. You will feel lost and helpless then, probably for many centuries before that day comes, but only you will be able to survive that crucible Murano. None of our brothers has the fortitude or the will.”

“What... what will happen that day Sumar?” Murano had asked him.

“That will be the day the fog around your mind and heart will be lifted my boy.” Sumar spoke. “The day that you will see why I will have done what I will have done.” He finished his statement with a smile knowing it sounded odd.

“I don’t understand.” He has asked him. “What have you done?”

Sumar chuckled. “Nothing just yet... but I will. It is confusing I know Murano, you’re your faith must never waver. Others will see it and not understand. They will question what I have done. You must be the one to show them the purpose Murano. Only you will be able to do this.”

“Why?”

“Because only you will understand.” Sumar spoke. “Only you will understand.”

Murano did understand now. He understood everything.

Meeting Martin first had been the start of it, and now these last days with Androcles and the others had brought clarity to his mind that he had been lacking since Sumar had left him behind. He now understood what Sumar had told him all those years ago. And he understood why Sumar did what he had done. He had gone against the most sacred tenets of the Pralor people and the Praetorians when he merged the survivors of City ship 41 into the Lycavorian people. It was a mandate that he himself had put in place and then dismissed. Sumar had seen something within these people that no one else had. He had seen beyond the savage nature and sometimes brutal exterior and he had seen deep within their hearts and their very blood. In the memories that Martin had allowed him to see within his mind, Murano had seen a devotion to the beautiful young Lycavorian that had become Sumar's wife that was just as powerful as the one Martin had for his wives and mates. That was just as powerful as his sons Resumar and Martin's father had held for their wives and mates. Just as Wayonn had told him, Sumar was very different at the end. He was still a Praetorian yes, but through the millennia he had learned to balance the nature of the Praetorian with the sometimes wild and savage nature of the species with which he was now one of. He had embraced the emotions that he had often told them to push aside and repress in order to make the right choice. In the end Sumar had made the right choice. He had embraced his emotions and instincts unlike any other time in his long life and in doing so, he had released all the blocks to the power that a Praetorian could wield.

This showed now in his descendants. Martin, Androcles, Denali, Jomann and Deion were far more powerful because they embraced their emotions and their code and allowed it to direct how they used their gifts. Wayonn, Nara, Helen, all of them were so much more powerful and focused because of this fact. Murano knew that Deion Leonidas and his niece Mari had begun a relationship. He could sense their Etheric connection burning brightly. He could almost feel the complete and utter devotion to his niece that swirled through Deion Leonidas. He could feel the same emotions resonating from Mari as well. So open and without doubt or concern. The old Murano would have taken her aside and discouraged such a relationship immediately. He would have counseled her not to enter into an intimate union with him because of the ramifications of such a bond. That was the old Murano...

This was the new Murano.

He had felt it growing within him from the first moment he had sensed Martin out among the stars. New life. Rebirth. The passion to never back down and always see the good in things. He had felt it even more once meeting him on Onterom, and then it had fully blossomed on Twelve Alpha in their battle with the Svorag. Almost without thinking he had been swept up in that passion and honor. It was a rebirth as far as he was concerned. He could feel his love for Tobia even more pronounced now. She was everything to him, and he had let her slip through his grasp like a fool. When he returned he would try and contact her and try to explain it more than he did when he left her. He knew she was angry with him, and while part of himself cried for allowing her to turn to another for comfort, another part was sincerely happy that she had found the love he could not return to her. He would never love another as he loved Tobia, of that he was sure. He was content now to at least be beside Martin and his sons and any other Praetorians that they could find fighting for the greater good once more.

Murano had led troops on the battlefield before and he was no stranger to this. It was different now however, as he was filled with the same resolve and passion that cascaded over those surrounding him. Even his short association with Martin and the others had changed him for the better. His connection to his powers was so much more focused and cleared than ever before. He felt more powerful than he ever had and Murano knew it was because he had let go of the old and embraced the new. He stood among the first of a new breed of Praetorians and they would be so much more than anyone ever believed. He could feel their individual resonance echoing within him brightly, more so Androcles and Dorian, but all of them were like shining beacons of light within the Etheric realm and when he mingled his own resonance with theirs it was staggering to behold. He was filled with a confidence that was beyond anything he had ever felt, and an equally powerful attitude that they would not fail no matter the odds. Murano intended to embrace that emotion from now until the day he passed into the next life and joined so many of his brothers within the Rift of Time.

Until that day however, Murano intended to live with no more doubts and no more holding back.

Androcles and Dorian stood in front of them all, Jomann on his left, Denali and Deion to his right, while he stood behind all of them and took it all in. Androcles had told him he was to lead them for all of them were still very new to their abilities though they had been using them for years. It was a responsibility Murano willingly grasped onto as he felt all of them join their Etheric resonances together and they heard Androcles' words.

“Looking for us!”

The new Praetorian Murano acted instantly.

“Jomann! Now!” He barked out the words clearly. “Denali! Deion! Execute!”

Five words sent all of them into action. Using the unique Praetorian power within him and feeding off of his brothers in arms, Jomann moved. Since his power allowed him to move in short bursts far faster than others could follow with the naked eye, Jomann moved to the side of the group of Lycavorian mercenaries even as his Shi Viska burst from Flatspace. The shield was leaving his arm even as he took up a position to the side of the mercenary scum and was bringing his KM12 up with his right hand. He watched as his Shi Viska streaked forward, not at the bodies of the mercenaries, but at their weapons. Since only Jomann felt as if he was moving at normal speed, his eyes watched as his shield sliced through the weapons of the front row of mercenaries as if they were butter, finally imbedding itself into the wall across the room as he brought the KM12 up and loosed two perfect rounds.

All of their KM12s had been retooled for the Kavalian 12.7mm high velocity penetrating round in order to cause more damage upon impact. This was certainly the case as Jomann watched both of his rounds strike the closest mercenary to him and the farthest away, both of the men outside the cone of Etheric power that Androcles and Dorian were about to unleash. As he turned his head after firing he saw Denali and Deion about to slam their fists into the floor of Coren Re Mydala's home and felt a momentary pang sadness at the damage they were about to wrought. That passed instantly as he reigned in his Etheric power and normal time once more took shape for him.

It was almost comical to see the expressions of the Lycavorian mercenaries when their weapons splintered in their hands and fell away leaving them utterly defenseless. That single expression lasted only a split second as Deni's and Deion's fists slammed into the floor and sent a devastating wave of Etheric power directly at the men and women even as the two men on the ends of their lines flew back and their blood splattered wetly on the wall behind them. Jomann watched like it was in slow motion, though he knew that was not the case, as the floor buckled and crumbled before his eyes, lifting up and rushing at the remaining thirty men and women that were crowded into the main room. Their training was not as good as they thought for no Union Strike team would ever bunch together in the same room as they had done, providing a group of targets so close together. None of them could do anything to stop the wave, nor could they avoid it. It smashed into them like an out of control lifted, rising their bodies off the floor, their arms and legs wildly flailing about as they fought to keep their balance.

And that is when the crushing surge of Etheric power left the hands of Androcles and Dorian.

It was not something either of the brothers expected, for neither Andro nor Dorian had truly unleashed their abilities without some form of control. This time however, driven by the emotions within them and guided by Murano's calm resonance and Sarlana's echo within their hearts, Androcles and Dorian Leonidas allowed their Dahakoan blood to guide their Praetorian power. The effect was devastating to say the least.

It did not appear spectacular in any way, just two young men standing shoulder to shoulder and releasing what could only be described as a wall of light blue Etheric power. Yet this wall of Etheric power took solid form within milliseconds of Androcles and Dorian releasing it. It crossed the short distance between them and Unnel's Lycavorian mercenaries in a single heartbeat and none of them could have foreseen the outcome. The Etheric wall was roughly six meters wide and three meters tall and it struck the mercenaries as they were still flailing about suspended in the air from Denali and Deion's Etheric Wave attack. Fueled by the incredibly passionate emotions within both of the Leonidas brothers, the Etheric wall became a runaway locomotive without mercy or remorse. As their father had done on Enurrua and then on Onterom, they let loose all of the chains that had bound them up until this point. The Etheric wall struck the group of mercenaries with unforgiving force, propelling the mercenaries back at terminal velocity. What followed was something no one had expected.

The entire north wall of Coren Re Mydala's main living room buckled outward, groaned in protest and then metal bent and twisted in protest, glass shattered and the north wall blew outward as if torn from the foundation by the hand of an angry deity. The bodies of Unnel's two dozen mercenaries were launched into the darkness while being peppered with razor like glass and pieces of the wall's building materials as they disappeared into the night in front of them. Andro's azure orbs went wide, as did Dorian's multicolored eyes and quite comically, both of them looked down at their hands in shock. It was Murano, ever the calm warrior, who shook aside his disbelief first and reacted.

"Upon them!" He bellowed out. "Hold nothing back! Go now Praetorians!"

His voice struck all of them like a slap, wrenching them from their shock at what they had just done and then the Spartan warriors that all of them were came rearing forth. Without question or pause, all six of them leaped into the darkness before them to press their attack.

None were in the mood for games.

"Saoi Sibfla!" Sherice gasped aloud as she and Cowen watched the north wall of Coren Re Mydala's house blow outward in a shower of steel, granite and glass.

Cowen didn't removed his eye from the scope of the CHAOS. "That... that would be an understatement Sherice!" He spoke.

"That's it!" Sherice exclaimed. "That's the signal!" She lowered her macrobinos and tapped her jaw. "All teams this is Archangel Team One! The signal is given! I repeat! The signal has been given! Execute!"

Her directive was not questioned.

"Son Vada Carians!" Kalis muttered openly as his eyes took in what had just happened.

"All teams this is Archangel Team One! The signal is given! I repeat! The signal has been given! Execute!"

"Go!" Ridor exclaimed. "We hit the lower level now!"

Kalis surged forward from where he Ridor and Daio had been hiding within the small work shed. Ridor was the first out of the shed and he felt Daio and Kalis break to either side as they sprinted across the thirty meters to the side of the lower portion of the living estate. They covered the thirty meters in less than ten seconds using their wolf speed and slammed against the outer wall of the lower level living quarters.

"Bangers!" Kalis called out yanking the Flash Bang grenade from the combat harness he wore. He mashed his thumb down on the trigger and turned slightly to send the flash bang grenade smashing through the plate glass window of the first floor. Ridor and Daio quickly followed suit into the second window and Ridor into the main hall that led down the rows of large rooms.

The team of Unnel's mercenaries on the lower level were already addled because of the force of the structure being very nearly torn apart above their heads. All of them heard the single word echo out and the breaking of more glass but none of them saw the three flash bang grenades enter the lower living quarters. It really would not have mattered had they seen the grenades. Most of their ears were already ringing from the explosion like sound of the north wall being blown from the main building and all of them were still confused as to why their targets were not where they were supposed to be.

The three flash bang grenades, still very potent even after centuries of redesign and use, went off within two seconds of each other and sealed the fates of the twenty-four men and women that had entered the lower living areas of the estate. With ear plugs protecting their own wolf ears, Ridor led Daio and Kalis into the lower level, their chopped down versions of the venerable P190 hissing out death with every trigger pull. The grenades did their jobs perfectly rendering all twenty-four of the second mercenary team completely helpless as they reached for shattered eardrums in pain and began to stumble about completely disoriented. Kalis didn't hesitate and neither did Daio or Ridor. All three young men had seen the results of slavery and rape up close and personal. Cvea and Kameka with Ridor and Daio and his precious Serale's mother Ceale for Kalis. In truth Kalis had seen far more of such things for he had grown up in a society where this was commonplace. Now, after the events with his Tenna For'mya and his rebirth he held a particularly powerful hatred for such things. None of the three young Spartans were in a forgiving mood as they began to send out lethal bursts from their P190 A5s. Ridor and Daio may have questioned Kalis's experience before this day, for they had never seen him work, but they would not question him now. They also did not question his commitment to the values and morals taught to him by the King for one only had to view how he doted over the young red haired Hadarian female who was his wife and mate now. They would not question anything about him after this night for Kalis did not pause or stutter in his actions. Every four round burst from his A5 left a dead mercenary in his wake as the three men swept mercilessly through the lower living quarters. Most of the mercenaries were on their knees still trying to regain their senses when the black clad apparitions appeared and ended their miserable lives. Most would never know or see the men who ended their lives for they did not understand the way Spartans fought.

Kalis heard the boom of the side arm echo even with his ear plugs and his head shifted instantly to the far door into the living quarters on the other side of the building. He saw the flash of blue skin and then the dark hair of the Vanari woman they knew as Ryana as she led one other Vanari, or Lycanari as they preferred to be called, out of the last room near the far door. The man with her carried a short barreled sniper rifle in his hands as Ridor motioned her forward.

Ryana didn't hesitate and sprinted the short distance to where they were. "Stupid fools all crowded into a single area!" She almost screamed, her own ears still ringing somewhat.

"We take no chances!" Ridor barked out. "Sweep back and double tap them! Make sure they are dead! Go!" The tone of command in his voice was obvious and Ryana deduced quickly that he knew his stuff. Leadership was in Ridor's blood because of who his father was and he didn't even think about it as he naturally took command of the situation.

Ryana didn't question the brutality of the order and simply nodded as she grabbed her fellow troop and turned back. Ridor turned his head just as he saw Kalis fire a last burst into one of the mercenaries on the ground. "Daio! Kalis! Check them all! No mistakes my brothers! If they even cling to life, end it permanently! There will be no reprieve from justice this night!"

That was all the order they needed and Ridor saw them both turn to comply. Ridor reached up to tap his jaw.

"Archangel Team Four to Angel base! Lower level is secure!"

"No prisoners Hyperetes Ridor!" The female voice spoke in reply.

Ridor nodded. "Already moving to insure this!" He spoke.

"Secure the lower entrances and stand by! Kill any who try to escape through the living areas!"

"Understood. Team Four clear!"

Ryana Val Ardwor and her teammate took up position by the opposite entrance of the lower level and looked out into the now smoky and dust filled night air. She tapped her jaw and activated the new implant she wore. This was something that the Protectorate had never thought of and Ryana was stunned at the clarity the internal COM units gave them. Being part of the Union definitely would have its advantages going into the future and Ryana knew that the vast majority of the Lycanari that called the former Protectorate home were simply overjoyed at the merger taking place. The Lycavorian Union was far larger than the Protectorate and there would be so much more to experience and see once things began to settle and they had taken care of business. The Lycanari also knew, as did Ryana, that they would never have to tolerate slavery ever again in their lifetimes.

"Team Three Lead to Team!" Ryana hissed. "Do you have shots?"

"Negative!" The first voice echoed. "Too much dust! What the hell did they use on the wall Ryana? Explosives of some kind?"

"No joy here. No visual on zone!"

"Same here Ryana. No visual!"

"All elements Team Three! Move to secondary locations and secure objectives!" Ryana ordered instantly. "Let Team One handled the long range shooting! Go! Go!"

"Moving!"

"Same here!"

"On our way!"

Ryana could almost see her three other sniper teams moving from their primary locations in her mind. Each of them would move to their secondary location and secure the three other entrances onto Coren Re Mydala's estate. Their job would be to keep any Vanari who let their curiosity overrule their brains from entering the killing zone that the estate had now become. They would also insure that those Vanari who worked for Ardan would not set foot on the estate for any reason. Whatever else she took away from this night Ryana would never question the planning or skill of the Union Spartans in any way. Their plan had been daring and they were executing it to utter perfection.

Just as her Vanari father and Lycavorian mother had always taught her and her siblings.

SPARTAN QRF STRIKER

“Three hundred meters!” Tir’ut called out from the co-pilot’s seat.

Normya concentrated intently as she swept the STRIKER in low over the tops of the buildings. This was not something they had planned for, but Normya knew they were nothing if not adaptable. Normya shifted her head slightly, glancing out the side window and seeing the urban terrain all around them. It was still too early for most Vanari to be up and about she knew and this would allow them to move quickly and decisively.

“Target building in sight!” The voice of the female elven Flight Engineer who sat behind them echoed out, her eyes glued to the screens in front of her as she monitored the cameras that were mounted in the nose of the STRIKER.

“Tir’ut... reduce power to thirty percent and prepare to drop the Shroud!” Normya called out.

Tir’ut’s hands flew across the three consoles that surrounded his massive frame. He was an Akruxian warrior yes, but he was a far better pilot than most and once the engineers aboard the SCIMITAR had first realized this they had quickly redesigned Normya’s STRIKER so that he could better fit his large body in the co-pilot’s seat.

“Thirty percent power!” He echoed his beautiful wife. “Preparing to disengage the Shroud.” He turned his head slightly and looked at his Blessed Wife. “They will know we are here once the Shroud comes down Normya my wife. They will undoubtedly have spotters on the tops of buildings.”

“Can’t be helped!” Normya exclaimed. “We have to get them in as close as we can so that none of the ronnus escape!”

“Normya!” The female elf called out turning her head. “Let me get in the nose turret! I can cover their exit!”

Normya didn’t hesitate for even a second. “Go Ke’rai!”

Ke’rai Jenal was moving even before Normya finished her sentence. She was one of Ne’Veha’s closest friends and had jumped at the chance to become part of Normya’s flight crew. She was also among the new breed of elven females from Elear; those that allowed their sexuality and poise to reside out in the open and not be reserved about it any longer. Her father and mother were among the first elven families to take a second name when Queen Dysea and Queen For’mya began to use Leonidas as their surname so long ago. Both of her parents were ardent supporters of the elven Queens and all they had accomplished. Ke’rai Jenal also had an ulterior motive about accepting this position, one that she hoped would come to fruition in the future.

“Fedor! Famus!” Normya called out on the small headset she wore. “Ramp coming down! Thirty seconds!”

Fedor Leonidas waited in the rear of the STRIKER with the sixty member QRF and Famus. His heart was racing yes, but he had seen battle before beside his father and mothers and he was not afraid. He looked at the weathered face of Famus beside him as the ramp began to open.

“You are a Prince, a Leonidas and a Spartan!” Famus told him. “You have already proven yourself in battle, so do nothing foolish! Lead as your father and brothers would lead young Fedor! We will follow!”

“Shroud coming down!” Tir’ut called out. “Prepare to exit!”

“Let us send these slaving ronnus into the abyss Famus!” Fedor shouted over the roar of the engines. Thoughts of his beautiful wife and mate Iama filled Fedor as they felt the STRIKER shift slightly. No longer would she have to tolerate the life she had endured for so long, and this gave Fedor a personal stake in this mission. Iama had spoken to him just before they launched and whispered to him to insure that no woman, no matter their species was left behind to languish in that life. He had swept her into his arms, kissed her with intensity and passion and swore to her that he would see to it.

Fedor saw Famus smile brilliantly at him hearing his words. “Spoken like a Leonidas!” Famus told him. “Let us make it so!”

“And we... are... down!” Tir'ut's voice chimed out clearly as they felt the STRIKER touch down lightly. “Go! Go! Go!”

In the split second before his boots left the deck of the STRIKER Fedor felt his brother reach for him in their private Etheric connection. He and Dorian had been stimulating this Etheric bond with him and Eirene since they had come to the surface, strengthening it to insure they would always be connected. Being born almost fully aware of everything around you did have its advantages. The message was short and needed to reply Fedor knew. He would also try his best to make it so.

Fedor my brother. If you find Franklin Adams among those cowards, you save his vile carcass for me. I have a present I wish to bestow upon him.

OSG BUNKER

“...What!” Franklin Adams screamed.

“I don't know sir!” The agent stammered. “One of their ships just landed right in the fucking street! The spotters were screaming that they were offloading troops before they went silent! They have found us!”

“That's not possible!” Adams exclaimed.

“Colonel Adams! We have lost contact with our ground teams!” Another voice rang out in the bunker. “Our COMS are being jammed!”

Franklin turned. “We have the most sophisticated communications in the galaxy! No one can jam our transmissions!”

“We have lost contact with Team Two assaulting the First Regent's home! They went off line just after they entered his home! All COMS with Team One ended the moment their mortar support team was killed!” The man answered. “Colonel... we have been made! They were fucking waiting for us!”

Franklin Adams had not risen within the ranks of the OSG for being stupid. He made his decision quickly.

“That's it! Shut it down! Immediate evac to secondary location! Now everyone! Move!” Adams ordered with force.

It would not save them.

Of the thirty-two mercenaries under Unnel's command that were blasted from the inside of Coren Re Mydala's home, only twenty-seven of them survived the devastating Etheric blast that had sent them slamming painfully into the interior wall, only to have the wall blow outward driven by some unseen and crushing power. Two of the mercenaries struck the wall at odd angles and their necks were snapped instantly, mercifully killing them before they ever knew what had happened. Two more were tossed through the air being peppered by granite and glass fragments that sliced through the light armor they wore and nearly shredded their bodies into tiny pieces. When they did eventually land in the courtyard below, they did not feel the pain of impact for they were already dead. The glass fragments had severed most of the arteries in their bodies as they flailed about and they bled out in seconds. The fifth mercenary was alive when he landed, however he did not survive the three eighteen inch long decorative steel spikes that adorned the top of Coren's estate wall. All three spikes impaled him through his chest, spearing his heart and lungs clean through and the third puncturing his kidneys and liver. He died within seconds of landing.

The remaining twenty-seven mercenaries landed quite painfully on the courtyard expanse below them, some of them suffering shattered limbs and nearly fatal internal injuries, but all of them still alive and able to fight.

It truly didn't matter, for none of the surviving men and women had any idea of the enemy they had awoken or what they were capable of.

Sherice did know however, and she swept her macrobinos across the expanse of the courtyard searching for the one man that she knew Androcles wanted alive.

“Cowen?” She questioned.

“Searching.” He answered without removing his eye from the scope. “Still somewhat obscured because of the debris.”

“Find him husband!” Sherice urged him. “That is the one Andro wants alive. He will have the answers we need!”

Cowen knew she was correct as he swept his scope across the courtyard trying to spot the man. He had gotten a good look at him just before they had breached the estate’s upper level and was sure he could find him again.

“Nine to the left as they land Sherice!” He spoke calmly. He was no stranger to combat and remained calm and methodic. “Nine to their front! Hold on!” Cowen zoomed in his scope on one man who was still on his back but trying to regain his feet among the many flower planters where he had landed and shattered dozens of them. He was bloody and cut up badly but... Cowen zoomed in and got a clear picture of his face. “I have him! He is among the flowers directly to west! Near the river entrance!”

Sherice didn’t hesitate even though this was her first taste of actual combat. She had been involved in the Evolli War as had most her age in the military, but she had been part of a Command and Control Team as Intelligence Officer and had not seen actual ground combat.

“Androcles!” She announced over her implant. “Flower garden! Near the river entrance!” She spoke knowing that he would hear her but not respond. “Cowen... lessen the odds some my husband!”

Cowen nodded his head. “Done!” He spoke as his finger caressed the trigger of the CHAOS rifle once more.

Sherice felt the slight recoil and then the silenced boom of the rifle as he sent another round downrange. She had no doubts that whatever he had just aimed at was now dead. Sherice didn’t pause and shifted her macrobinos to get a better idea of where the rest of the mercenaries had landed within the courtyard. Her blue eyes grew wide when she saw the six of them land, their bodies encased in shimmering white/blue Etheric armor that surrounded each of them individually. It was unlike anything she had ever seen before and what followed Sherice would remember for the rest of her days.

Part of the power of a Praetorian was the conforming Etheric shield that all of them could project around their bodies. Essentially it was another layer of body armor to protect them for it would take massive damage for it to fail completely. It did not make them invulnerable to be sure, but it could and had saved many of his brethren from Scourge attacks through the many battles they had fought centuries ago. Murano also knew that the Etheric shields those with him could project were far superior to those of his or any Praetorian in history simply because of the Etheric bonds that all of them had with their dragons. It would protect them from all but the heaviest weapons that could fire projectile rounds as well as many of the lighter energy based weapons that the Pralor people used. This did not deter Murano from landing among them as an equal for he knew what he was capable of. All of them had been stunned at the force of the Etheric shockwave that Androcles and Dorian had unleashed. None of them expected to blow out the entire section of wall within the estate, for they had hoped to end things quickly in the confined space of the main room. That had quickly been tossed aside when Androcles and Dorian had blown a gaping hole in the house that you could have easily driven two heavy lifters through. As their superb training and instincts took over however, they adapted instantly.

“Pairs!” Murano shouted out. “And split!”

Deion didn’t waver as he broke with Murano to the right while Denali and Jomann broke to the left. Dorian and Androcles went straight ahead towards the flower garden where Sherice’s excited cry had directed them.

The Lycavorian mercenaries under Unnel began scrambling painfully to their feet as they too began to react. Most of them were several hundred years old and as with all members of their species, their regenerative healing systems began to work quickly. These men and women were not cowards by any stretch of the imagination. Many of them had faced the harshest and toughest opponents in the Beta Quadrant and come out on top. It would not matter in the least now for they had never faced anything like the six men advancing on them. Deion and Murano struck first and did so without mercy or reprieve. As the man closest to Deion saw him advancing he rose fully to his feet and lifted the sidearm he carried. He began pulling the trigger, watching in horror as the projectile rounds began to impact Deion's Etheric shield and simply stop. His eyes could not believe what he witnessed as the rounds caused Deion to stagger only slightly from the force before he stepped into the main thrust and drove his Nehtes through the man's sternum. The spearhead burst out his back showering the ground behind him with blood as his fingers suddenly became useless. Deion lifted his left hand and let loose with two Etheric diamonds that crossed the distance to the next mercenary in the blink of an eye as he tore his Nehtes free from the first man's chest. Both of those Etheric diamonds punched into the next man's torso, his body doing a macabre dance as most of the left side of his frame was literally crushed from the force of the impact. The small Etheric diamonds entered his upper body cavity below his pectoral muscle and took most of his internal organs with them as they exited out his lower back. He was dead before he even fell back to the ground.

Murano saw another trying to bring his weapon to bear on Deion and Murano reached across the distance with his Etheric power and seized the man's arm. He screamed in agony as Murano twisted his hand downward and the man's arm and shoulder could be heard popping and shattering from the unseen force. Murano brought his Saberstaff up in a precise cross body thrust and removed his head, silencing his screams forever. His time among Martin and now Androcles and the others insured Murano did not hesitate. Until this night he had never fought anything other than the Scourge or Svorag. There had been a few disagreements with other Pralors through the many centuries of course, but he had never used his powers against those like him. His time with Martin and the others showed him that there were just as many very bad people among the stars and when dealing with them, you could not hold back. Once he came to this realization, Murano understood what his place was to be. The fight was anything but fair he knew, but these men and women had chosen their course in this life and now they would answer for their decisions. Murano reached out and grasped another within the grips of his Etheric power and squeezed his fist tightly together as the man wailed out his agony. It lasted only a few seconds before the pain overloaded his brain and he mercifully passed out before what little life remained in his body was crushed from him. Murano dropped his body and whirled to see Deion Leonidas smashing another man into the hard ground with no pity or remorse encased as he was in Deion's Etheric grip. The sounds of his skull cracking open were clearly audible in the night air even as Deion swept further to his left and brought his Nehtes around in a blistering circle strike. The razor like head of the spear, forged from pure dragon armor, bit into the necks of the last two mercenaries who had been foolish enough to stand shoulder to shoulder unable to really comprehend what was happening. The spear head opened their throats to the night air even as Murano sent forth two focused Etheric waves that struck both of their legs at the knees and snapped them like twigs. As they fell Murano turned quickly and took stock of what was happening. Denali and Jomann had dealt harshly with their group of mercenaries. Denali and Lisisa Leonidas had taken a Vanari woman as their wife and mate. A woman that they loved just as intensely as they loved each other. Denali would show no mercy to the men who had a hand in enslaving his mate's people. Murano had seen the signs with Jomann and Eliani almost from the outset. The Eridiani woman Brendi affected them intensely and being the wolves that they were, they pursued that until Brendi had admitted to wanting the same thing. Jomann would defend his wives and mates without question or regard. Between the two of them, they had more than enough power and skill to dispatch whatever mercenaries survived the fall from the house above.

It was then that Murano felt the massive surge in Etheric power and his eyes turned towards where he knew Androcles and Dorian would be. What he felt within the Etheric realm was utterly beautiful as far as Murano was concerned. It was so focused and pure and it radiated with unblemished clarity. It was also then that Murano got the first glimpse of the power that Sarlana had told him all Dahakoan possessed. A unique and uncanny ability to foresee what their opponents would do. Dorian Leonidas was a blur as he used his ability to wrap the shadows around him and blur to dance between the seven men arrayed in front of him. It was unlike anything Murano had ever seen as the youngest Leonidas in terms of years fought like a man with thousands of years of experience. He was never in one spot for more than a split second, the dual blades he carried slashing viciously into flesh each time he appeared. Each wound was fatal Murano took note, and he would blur to another who seemed to be ready to attack him or Androcles. It was completely unfair in many respects Murano thought to himself, Dorian's ability to blur and use the shadows and Andro's overwhelming strength effectively canceling any advantage the mercenaries might have had. As Murano watched in awe, it was like a perfectly choreographed dance between the two brothers. Murano could feel the staggeringly powerful connection between them and their bonded ones, Elynth and Ryner. It was similar to what he felt between Martin and Torma on Onterom and that moon, but it was also much more focused and pure.

Andro's had pulled his two swords from Flatspace and as Murano watched they moved with a speed and power the likes of which he would never forget. Three times Androcles had used one sword or the other to actually turn aside projectiles fired by a mercenary at either himself or his brother. How he was able to do this was far beyond Murano's ability to even understand for he had never seen anything like it in his life. Their Etheric shields were putting off an eerie white/blue color brighter than the rest of them, and it caused the ground around them to glow unnaturally. As Murano watched, a mercenary to Andro's left raised the large sidearm he had managed to pull from its place and center it on Andro's back. Murano was about to scream a warning when the mercenary's chest suddenly erupted in a shower of blood and bone as his body was flung back from Androcles by the force of the impact. Murano cut his eyes quickly to the tall building across the river and knew that the Kavalian Cowen'Shan was also keeping a close watch on the battle below him. It went on like this for what seemed like hours but Murano knew it was only seconds. Androcles and Dorian dancing among the mercenary forces as if they were playing with them. Always sidestepping or shifting at the last moment before an attack and then brutally ending that mercenary's life with a swipe of their blades or a devastating Etheric attack.

Until there was only one.

Murano turned quickly to Deion who was making sure those they had taken down were indeed dead. "Deion... come." He hissed softly.

Deion looked at him and nodded as they began to move for where Andro and Dorian were standing before the lone mercenary. Murano noticed that Jomann and Denali were also stepping among the bodies of the dead and making their way to where their brothers stood.

Unnel held the sidearm centered on Androcles' chest as he watched him stab down with one sword into the chest of one of his men, hearing his man groan in pain as death took him into its embrace. Androcles pulled the sword free and spun it gracefully in the air before turning to face Unnel as Dorian approached from the other side. Unnel could only gawk at Androcles and Dorian as they stood there in front of him. Six men. Six men had decimated his entire team of fifty plus men and women. A team Unnel had spent years putting together for their skills and the beliefs they held. Unnel had witnessed two of his men blown backwards during the fight so he knew that there was a sniper out there somewhere with a very large rifle and the skill to use it so well. Above all else Unnel took note of the way the eyes on both young men appeared to be nearly glowing. The azure blue orbs and then the multicolored cobalt blue eye of the second man. Their armor was splashed with blood in numerous spots. The blood of his men.

"Don't come any closer!" Unnel screamed at them.

Androcles ignored him for the most part and reached out within the Etheric realm for his sister. Lisisa?

We're secure here Andro. Lisisa answered him confidently. No casualties.

Andro smiled for he had expected no less from his sister. Behind only Yuriko, himself, and their father, Lisisa Leonidas was perhaps the deadliest of hand to hand fighters in their entire family.

Fedor my brother! Andro spoke next.

We shut them down fervon! Fedor's excited voice answered almost instantly. It looks like the mother lode here Andro. Plans. Computers. Everything.

Franklin Adams? Andro asked.

He left his people to die fervon. He was gone before we hit the main bunker. Coward. Fedor hissed in reply.

He is a rat and we will eventually catch up to him. Secure the facility and remove everything that we may find useful brother. Then get out of there before the Vanari arrive. Andro told him.

Already on it.

Gods speed to you fervon.

And you.

Andro lifted his eyes to Unnel as Murano and the others came up on either side of him and Dorian. It was Murano who lifted his hand and using his Etheric power he ripped the sidearm from Unnel's grasp and guided it into his own.

"This will not help you." Murano stated flatly before tossing the weapon off to the side.

Androcles looked at Unnel. "Tell me... what the going rate is for selling out you own people and seizing Vanari females as slaves to your whim."

"I won't tell you sibfla boy!" Unnel screamed out. "Nothing!"

Andro moved with amazing speed and was suddenly only centimeters from Unnel's face. Andro bared his fangs in defiance and smiled at Unnel with absolutely no mirth in his angry expression.

"Oh... that is where you are wrong." Andro spoke. "You will tell me everything I want to know. Everything."

Andro sent his helmeted head rocketing forward into Unnel's face, crushing the man's nose instantly, blood erupting from the torn skin and splintered cartilage. Unnel dropped to the ground like a limp noodle from the blow as his eyes rolled into the back of his head and he passed out from the intense pain.

"Too easy." Dorian muttered softly.

"We had the advantage of surprise from the outset." Andro told him. "It will not always be as easy fervon."

"No it will not." Murano echoed. "As long as we keep that in mind then the learning never ends. I fear there are bigger battles coming to us in the future."

"No bets here." Androcles stated. He turned and looked back and above them at the wall to Coren Re Mydala's house. "I wonder how I am going to explain that." He said with an impish grin.

Jomann and the rest of them chuckled. "That one is all you and Dorian Andro. Leave us out of it."

"Coward." Dorian hissed.

Murano couldn't help it and then he was releasing a booming laughing from deep within his chest. A laughter that was soon infectious as the others joined in even among the death all around them.

And the fickle Gods of Fate looked on in silence for they knew that it had only just begun.

CHAPTER FORTY-THREE

AUSTROVA

WESTERN HEIGHTS RESIDENTIAL SECTOR

HOME OF VANARI FIRST REGENT ALRERIN SHA HARAEL

They were a team of Lycavorian mercenaries in the employ of the OSG, or themselves depending on who you asked. Their target had been a bold one for sure. The boldest plan they had yet undertaken for the OSG, and they had several dozen missions under their belt in the employ of the OSG.

The Vanari First Regent.

Take out the Vanari First Regent and butcher his wife and any who were on the estate with him in as brutal a way as possible. They were given older Lycavorian Union uniforms and weapons to accomplish this task in order to make it seem like the Union was trying to subvert the Vanari government and rid itself of the First Regent who was a known Lycavorian hater. The OSG and their Vanari supporters, namely Ardan and Galar, could then claim that Prince Androcles and his minions were behind it and forever put an end to any kind of future that the Vanari and the Union may have had together. The Vanari government might even try to arrest any Lycavorians who were on the planet, further making the situation worse, knowing that Androcles would not allow his people to be held for anything when they did not commit any crime. It was an audacious plan to be sure, and one that could have very well succeeded, had Ardan and the others within his organization known of Alrerin Sha Harael's true allegiance and the purpose behind his actions through the years.

And if they had known of the visitors that Alrerin was currently entertaining.

These two facts combined to make the operation a complete and utter failure in more ways than one. As with their comrades attacking Coren Re Mydala's estate, these Lycavorian mercenaries breached the main floor through a side entrance with a small amount of explosives, but did not use stun grenades for they did not expect any opposition. This was the first of three mistakes they made.

The second mistake was underestimating the fighting prowess of Ma'nia and the Vanari Security detail assigned to protect Alrerin. The third mistake was the most severe for they had not obtained any current intelligence on the man or his home and no one had scouted the estate before the attack. If they had, they may have taken note of the two dragons that were circling high above.

The leader of this assault team charged into the lower level of the estate with barely a pause after the explosive blast, his entire team following him close on his heels. It spelled their doom that much quicker. With Jeth and Tharua providing them all the intelligence they needed from high above, Lisisa and the other quickly piled some large pieces of furniture near the side entrance of the home to protect against the blast. When the leader cleared the smoky hallway into the main room, Lisisa struck first and without mercy. She blurred past the man, her dual blades flashing briefly as they opened his throat to the night air. The man dropped to his knees, his hands dropping his weapon and lifting to his neck as blood fountained from the two fatal slashes. As the others piled into the room and ran into the body of their soon to be dead leader, Arduri, Ma'nia and Nyosa led the other two Vanari Cadre Commandos over the top of the stacked furniture and fell on them with savage fury. Rinel and Riordian leaped over the furniture and dropped upon the three men and one woman at the rear with no hesitation. Arduri and Ma'nia and the other three Vanari knew they were no match in a prolonged fight with a Lycavorian so they used their speed and agility to their advantage and struck exceptionally fast. Arduri buried the single blade she carried into the thick neck of one Lycavorian and in a stunning move of agility and control, she used her feet to walk up the body of another Lycavorian as she struck. Denali had requested the ARCH DEMON's Weapons Master to craft Arduri a combat blade that she could carry and use until such time as a proper Dragon Armor forged blade could be made for her. He had succeeded in making the lightweight but razor sharp curved angled blade. It was matt black in color and the pommel was made of solid oak from an Algolian High Oak tree, one of the strongest non-metal materials known to exist in the Union. The blade sliced through his neck like a hot knife through butter, severing his artery instantly. Arduri released the blade, knowing she had killed the man and that even if he shifted, he would not be able to stem the flow of blood from the wound. As she reached the apogee of her climb Arduri twisted her legs around the second Lycavorian's neck and wrenched her body to the side. Her momentum caused the man's body to twist in the same direction and his feet flew out from under him as his body did a complete flip and he landed painfully on his back with Arduri's legs securely wrapped around his neck. She hooked her heels together and twisted her body further on the ground, savagely snapping the man's neck without pause.

Nyosa was half Lycavorian and thus a bit more sturdily built than Arduri and Ma'nia. She simply kicked one Lycavorian's rifle from his hands and then proceeded to beat him into submission with quick, savage blows from her hands. Her wolf fangs were fully extended and her eyes changed and she did not hesitate in her actions. A back ridge hand chop finally ended the man's life as the force of the blow crushed his throat and dropped him to the floor gagging for air until the life left his body. Ma'nia stepped in close to a woman and used her sidearm to pistol whip her face causing the Lycavorian female to stagger in shock. Ma'nia stepped even closer, jammed her weapon into the woman's throat and pulled the trigger three times. This is how it went in those seconds. No mercy or remorse was shown.

Riordian and Rinel, far more experienced in combat and physically able to stand with the Lycavorians, made short work of the stunned men and woman they fell upon, all of them ending up on the floor with grievous wounds. Three of them would die within seconds while the fourth, a woman, was the only one who would survive the night. Riordian couldn't bring himself to kill a woman and he simply broke her collarbone and both arms before smashing the butt of his sidearm across her face and dropping her into unconsciousness.

The attack was over far quicker than the OSG funded mercenaries had ever expected, and not at all in their favor.

"Nubous fools!" Nyosa hissed angrily.

"Everyone clear?" Lisisa barked out the question.

"All of them are down!" Riordian called out as Rinel began to secure the woman. "I have one prisoner!"

Lisisa blurred up next to him and looked down at the woman. "You spared her?" She asked.

"I could not... she is a woman Princess. I could not..." Riordian stammered.

Lisisa touched his arm and nodded. "I understand." She told him. "Colonel Rinel... please insure she cannot escape. I will call for a Med Team from the ARCH DEMON."

"Lisisa!" Coren's voice echoed and they all turned to see him leading Alrerin down the last few stairs and into the main room holding the sidearm tightly but very much like he was prepared and knew how to use it quite well.

"Coren... you should have remained out of harm's way until we called for you." Lisisa scolded him.

"I am done remaining out of harm's way!" Coren snapped. "This attack is too much! The OSG strikes at our leader now! I am seriously pissed off at this moment!"

Coren didn't notice the look Alrerin gave to him over his shoulder, nor did he see the new hint of respect in those same eyes.

"We have one prisoner." Lisisa told him. "I will send for a STRIKER from our ship to remove her before more Vanari arrive to secure the grounds. We must discover everything she knows."

Coren looked at Alrerin. "First Regent?" He asked.

Alrerin was looking around his now violated home, seeing the destruction and the death and feeling the burning anger begin deep in his own gut. For centuries he had stood to the side and did nothing in order to protect his family. It had torn him apart inside to see the pain that other families had to endure, but in his mind it kept his family safe. Now Alrerin Sha Harael was discovering that was no longer the case, if it ever was. And now Alrerin had reached the end of his ability to tolerate the injustice to his people and his honor. He turned back to Coren and then to Lisisa. "You will discover everything she knows?" He asked in a voice filled now with conviction and strength.

Lisisa nodded her head. "Oh... yes sir." She answered.

"Then move quickly Princess Leonidas." Alrerin spoke. "It will be between seven and twelve minutes before more Commandos arrive to secure the grounds. Once they breached my estate in this manner, an automatic alert would have been sent to the local garrison. They will be moving now."

Lisisa nodded. "I will have Tharua and Jeth take her and meet the STRIKER in the sky." She said. "Do... do you want us to leave?"

Alrerin shook his head firmly as Riordian watched him. "No. I am done with the games I have had to play all of these years. You arrived with Coren to try and conduct discussions with me in a civilized and respectful manner and then these men attacked. They are obviously not your men correct?"

Lisisa snorted in disgust. "These fools?" She quipped. "They bumbled into the most basic of ambushes and were unprepared. It is not something Spartans would have done. Ever."

"Then as far as I am concerned... we were all targets." Alrerin spoke.

"You realize that everything will come out in the open medwan Alrerin." Riordian spoke now moving closer to Alrerin and referring to him as father in the Lycavorian language. When he had begun doing this after Narlei and he were mated it had moved Alrerin almost to the point of tears and had drawn them ever closer together. "About Narlei and all of us."

Alrerin met his eyes. "It is past time Riordian." He answered. "I may not have the power I once had as First Regent but I will no longer sit idly by while our people are offered up to the OSG and their minions and yours bear the complete blame. Not any longer."

"Ardan will try and crucify you among the other Regents." Coren said. "Minimize you just as he has done with me. Perhaps even make a play to become First Regent."

Alrerin met his gaze just as Narlei came slowly down the stairs holding their youngest child in her arms while her mother held the hands of their other children. "I have done nothing all of these centuries because I was protecting my own family. Look what that has wrought us Coren my friend. Nothing but more killing and enslavement of our young women. More distrust between our people and the Lycavorians. I can no longer tolerate this. I would not be able to look my grandchildren in the eye knowing I did nothing."

Jokros moved back into the home from through the breach point holding the weapon in his hand. "The area outside is clear. Additional Vanari Commandos are already moving up the hill road. Their reaction time is far better than I had thought possible."

Alrerin nodded his head. "Then they knew the attack was coming." He stated slowly. "Which means Ardan has control of far more than I had first thought." He looked at Coren and moved closer to him. "I believe it is time that you and I began to meet him at every turn Coren Re Mydala. And take back our people's freedom!"

Coren smiled widely. "I believe you are right." He stated. "I believe you are right."

MYDALA CITY OFFICE OF ARDAN VU LAMURRION

"Failed?" Ardan gasped. "How could they have failed? Everything was perfect!"

The face of the older human shook his head in the encrypted transmission. "I do not know." William Adams replied. "Franklin was able to report only briefly before their position was assaulted as well. He has gone into hiding and will contact me when he is secure. At the moment all I know is that they were waiting for our force on Coren Re Mydala's estate. They used some sort of power we have never seen before and they devastated the team that conducted the attack. The same power we saw the oldest one use in the transmission from Earth. All of my men are dead if my information is correct."

"What power?" Ardan snapped at him. "How could half a dozen men kill your entire assault team?"

"We don't know." Adams answered. "I was hoping you could tell me. You did not tell me that there were others who could do what the oldest son did. Others who had similar powers to what he displayed in that transmission weeks ago."

"I... I didn't know." Ardan rasped out the words. "Others had this same power?"

Adams nodded his head. "That is what Franklin reported. There were at least five others with him if the cameras on their equipment are accurate." He answered. "Our men stood no chance. Have your people been able to discover anything?"

Ardan shook his head quickly. "Cadre Commandos loyal to Coren have sealed off his estate and several blocks all around. They are not allowing entry into the area unless ordered to by Coren himself or his aide Jokros."

"They had people waiting to secure the area?" Adams commented.

Ardan nodded. "My Commandos began to move in the moment the attack began but they were stopped and kept from entering. They could not press the issue further for they were badly outnumbered and Vanari fighting Vanari would have drawn far too much attention and was not something I felt we needed."

"An excellent decision." Adams commented. "We have another problem however, as we have lost contact with the team directed to assassinate your Alrerin Sha Harael as well." Adams stated.

Ardan's head came up. "What?"

"Their last report had them about to breach his estate and we have heard nothing since." Adams answered him. "We must assume they are lost as well."

Ardan came to his feet now. "This is a disaster!" He almost yelled.

"You must remain calm Ardan." William spoke softly. "We have lost nothing."

"You said they assaulted your command base!" Ardan barked. "Your main listening and intelligence post in Mydala city. They will have access to all of your computers and files!"

Adams shook his head. "They will not be able to break the encryption on the files or any of the computers." Adams told him. "They are not intelligent enough to do this. No one who is not OSG could even begin to break the encryption. We are safe."

"Are you sure?" Ardan hissed. "You told me this attack would succeed as well! They did not manage to kill even one of Coren's children or the others?"

Adams shook his head. "Franklin tells me only this group of six and a smaller team of well trained men was in the lower estate. They had snipers deployed at distance he was sure, but no one else was present. They must have been removed to somewhere else. I have others in my employ looking into this now. There is nothing to tie them to us Ardan. All anyone will know is that a rogue group of Lycavorians attempted to kill the boy King and others because they are against this foolish merger."

"And the attack against Alrerin?" Ardan asked.

"They were also upset about Alrerin's views of Lycavorians." Adams stated casually.

Ardan looked at his face in the transmission. “You realize that this is not what he actually believes?”

Adams nodded his head. “Of course... but he is also maintaining a façade just as we are. Only now we can use this against him where he has no proof against us. You have discovered that he has a daughter who is now married to a Lycavorian and has children by this man... that will destroy his credibility with the other Regents. You can use this information to further usurp his rule and eventually take his position as First Regent. This is what we have been working towards regardless. We can just make it happen sooner now.”

Ardan nodded his head. “Yes.” He spoke.

“You must remain in control at all times.” Adams told him. “They have nothing to tie us to these attacks, and we can just as easily turn it all on the Lycavorians. Act as you have always acted and we will be safe.”

Ardan looked out the window of his office and could see the light of the flames across the city from near Coren’s estate. “I must begin to inquire of what has happened.” He stated. “It will look odd if I do not announce something.”

“I will be in contact soon Ardan.” William told him. “Keep your wits about you and we will be fine.”

Ardan nodded once more and turned back to the transmission. “You know of course that I will do this William.” He spoke. “I will inform Galar and the others of what has taken place and we will speak again in three days. That should be sufficient time for us to get full reports on what has taken place.”

Adams nodded. “Agreed.” He answered. “We are still secure Ardan. Do not worry.”

“I must begin to make inquiries and contact the other members of the SBR.” Ardan said. “Until we speak again William.”

Ardan turned as the transmission ended and he remained in front of the window looking out over the city. They could make this failure work for them if he played his hand correctly. He could use this as just another sign that Lycavorians were savage animals and untrustworthy. Yes he could make this work. He turned quickly to his desk and activated his COM unit there.

“Send for Galar and Cruor.” He spoke. “Have them meet me in my office in half an hour. I do not care what they are doing.”

“Should I activate the security measures here Regent?” The male voice asked.

“No.” Ardan answered him. “The attacks are over with. We need to discover what has happened however. Send out investigators to both locations. I want their initial reports on my desk in three hours. And begin contacting all the members of the SBR. I want them in the meeting chambers in six hours! No excuses! This is a planet wide call.”

“As you order Regent.” The voice answered.

“And have someone bring me tea and Danishes.” Ardan said. “I will be remaining here.”

“Yes sir.”

Ardan’s senior aide quickly rose to his feet and made his way over to the computer console and began typing furiously. He did not take notice of the slight figure that stepped silently from the shadows, watching his back.

The Vanari female quickly made her way across the small hallway and through the open door to the stairwell. Her long black hair cascaded around her stunningly beautiful face as she hurriedly moved down the stairs with no sound in the least. What she had just heard shocked her right down to her very core and she was shaking in a mixture of rage and horror. The man she had been working for all of this time, a man she had respected and admired for twenty years now, he had just taken part in an assassination attempt of a fellow Regent on the SBR and the First Regent of the Vanari people. He was working with the Eridiani in the taking their people and selling them into slavery. He was betraying his own people for profit. And he had been doing this for longer than she obviously knew.

Ardan Vu Lamurrion had been like a father to her. He had taken her under his wing all those years ago when her own parents were killed in an OSG attack on a transport. Dark haired though she may have been, he had taken her into his family with no questions. He had schooled her in the fine arts of Vanari politics, taught her so much about how things worked. She had been loyal to him all of this time and she had never questioned the how of things. She had never questioned how he could know so much or how he had become so wealthy through the decades. And she had never questioned when he asked her to join him in his bed or endure the sometimes vile things he asked her to do. She had never questioned when he asked her to use her womanly skills to discover things from other Regents or Vanari businessmen in order to advance his own agenda or status. She only thought it would make her more important to him and encourage him to raise her above the simple status she had now, or to help her improve the status of all dark haired Vanari females across the Vanari Empire.

Now she knew how. Now she understood how it had all worked. His personal aide recorded all transmissions the Regent took in order to protect him and this one was no different. She had stood in the shadows and recorded it all herself while her lush body shook with nearly unrestrained anger and new hatred.

Kinryn Aal Samaur was only twenty-nine years old but she was about to become one of the catalysts for change that the Vanari people, or their leaders really, had been avoiding for so many centuries. She was Cadre Commando trained and like the vast majority of Vanari females, she was exquisitely beautiful. Her five foot seven frame was lean and muscular and she kept herself in excellent physical condition with a demanding regime. Her status as Ardan's aide allowed her many perks that others did not have. Kinryn had been working for her own goals all of her life and what she had just heard had changed all that. There were many things that were about to change in her life and though she did not know it just yet, so many doors that had forever been closed to her would now be tossed open.

Kinryn Aal Samaur would walk through those doors holding the hand of the individual that she would come to love and cherish more than her own life. One soul that would show her that true love could lead her to so much more in the future ahead and finally restore to her the meaning of the word family that had been taken from her so long ago.

AUSTROVA
ERIDIANI EMBASSY
SUB-BASEMENT

Franklin Adams looked across the desk at his father silently as the transmission ended. He had escaped within seconds of the Lycavorians storming their Command and Control Facility, leaving his people to fend for themselves. He knew the Lycavorians would not be in a very forgiving mood. He had used his personal escape route to move quickly through the city streets undetected even as more of Mydala City began to wake at the sounds of battle in their area. He was still somewhat unsettled by the ferociousness of the attack and the speed with which the Lycavorians had moved. He did not know how they had discovered their location but it was something he was going to find out. He didn't care that he had left twenty-three others to face the Lycavorians and that none of them remained alive for all of them had chosen to fight. He considered himself more important than those technicians and engineers. Now he sat shaken in the chair and watched as his father rose from his own chair and moved to the wet bar behind his desk. He poured two glasses of ancient human whiskey, each three fingers deep and turned to face his son as Franklin rose to his feet. He handed the glass to him and watched as his son took an immediate gulp to calm his still frayed nerves.

"Are you alright Franklin?" William asked his oldest and most experienced son. He was a son who knew almost as much as he did and had operated magnificently through the last years and one who William trusted above reproach.

Franklin nodded his head. "It just happened so quickly." He spoke. "I've never seen such a thing father; the savageness of the attack, the surgical precision. It was beautiful in a way to be honest. They had to have known where we were this entire time father. It is really the only explanation as to how they found us so quickly." He wrongly deduced.

"I thought our Command and Control Facility was too well hidden for anyone to find?" William said.

"So did I." Franklin spoke.

"It is going to come apart son." William Adams spoke.

Franklin looked at him. "What do you mean Father?"

“Ardan will not be able to control it any longer.” William spoke moving back to his chair. “It’s all going to come apart.”

“Father no one can tie us to the attacks!” Franklin insisted. “As far as any Vanari will know it was conducted by Lycavorians against their own kind!”

William nodded his head. “And that fallacy will last all of a few hours before the truth begins to come out.” He said settling into the chair. “We have seriously underestimated these Lycavorians from the Alpha Quadrant Franklin. They do not act as those from the Protectorate act.”

“What do you mean?” Franklin asked as he too settled back into his chair.

“I did not see it at first.” William said thoughtfully. “They follow a code Franklin; a code of honor and respect that died a very long time ago. They will not relent and they will never retreat. They fear nothing. And with more of them having these special powers than we first thought, we are even more seriously outmatched than any of us truly understood.”

“I have never seen anything like it father.” Franklin spoke. “Imagine what we could do if we had such power; if our men had such power.”

William shook his head. “Trying to obtain this is out of the question, at least for now.” He stated evenly. “We do not understand it or where it comes from. We thought him to be some sort of oddity. That is obviously not the case and so far we have been several steps behind this Lycavorian Prince Androcles Leonidas.”

“He is an animal father!” Franklin spat angrily.

William met his son’s eyes. “An animal he may be, but he has just bested you by a very wide margin and utterly destroyed a critical asset we controlled. Unnel’s team was by far the most experienced and well trained. Better than even our own OSG teams. He just got done turning them all into hamburger.”

“He got lucky.” Franklin hissed as he downed more of his drink.

William shook his head. “No... this was not luck. What he did tonight was by no means luck. They are far more skilled than we first imagined and...” He stated calmly sitting back in his chair. “...And there is something about him and the others. Something we don’t understand. And until we do, we will not be able to stand against him.”

“So we do nothing?” Franklin rasped in shock.

“No my boy.” William answered. “We will be doing plenty, just not what you think. I need to discuss this with the OSG Regional Governors and the Home Council. And we will need the Eridiani government to act for us.”

Franklin leaned forward. “What are you thinking father?”

“We need to pull back our operations until such time as things settle here.” William told him. “These attacks are going to create a firestorm that not even Ardan will be able to contain. We should have just killed the dark haired daughter and been done with it. Selling her to slavers in the Alpha Quadrant was stupid. We thought to be rid of her and all we did was make it so that boy Prince could find her more easily. If we had killed her than these Lycavorians would never have come here.”

“Do we know that for sure father?” Franklin asked. “The merger happened almost immediately when they discovered each other. Something else must have happened to cause this. We did not know this was going on or that talks were even under way.”

William nodded. “You may be right there, but that is no longer an issue we can influence. We have never been able to politically direct the Protectorate in a way that was advantageous to us. Their sensibilities about slavery are too ingrained and their leaders too loyal to old ideals. Unnel and those with him were an peculiarity. You can be sure that now that these events have taken place, others of Unnel’s mindset will be flushed quickly from the ranks of the former Protectorate and dealt with harshly.”

“You are suggesting we run?” Franklin asked surprised.

“I am suggesting we cut our losses,” William spoke. “...At least for the time being. An attack against Coren Re Mydala, a senior member of their SBR and this young woman Caliria’s father we could have brushed aside. An attack against him and an attack against their First Regent in the same night we cannot just dismiss?” William shook his head. “Ardan is not going to be able to bury that. And the counter agent that Caliria Re Mydala and the Hadarian witches have made will become public for sure now. Ardan won’t be able to stop that either. No... the time has come for us to reign in our teeth and sit back and watch how things play out.”

“We should unleash our missiles now and punish them!” Franklin spat.

William Adams shook his head once more and looked at his son. “The Vanari may not have released the information about the counter agent but you can be assured that the Union has it. And they are ready to use it. They will move no matter where we send our missiles, and then they will come for us directly because of this blatant attack.”

“Androcles Leonidas does not care for the Vanari people father.” Franklin said. “His feelings for Caliria aside, he will not go to war over this.”

William looked at him intently. “Are you so sure?” He asked. “This boy is an enigma even to his own people if all the reports I have seen are correct. We know nothing about him except what we have been able to retrieve from their own news reports. He obliterated a recognized government in retaliation for them supporting the slavers who bought Caliria Re Mydala Franklin. This is something his father has done in the past. You have not read Corbin Faith’s report to the Home Council son; if they bring the full weight of their military against us... against the Eridiani... we would not survive. In truth... it would be a very short battle and we would lose everything.”

“Then we should prod the Kavalians to do more.” Franklin spoke. “Have the mercenary groups we control in the Alpha Quadrant align against them.”

“The Kavalians have their own problems at the moment.” William said. “This rebellion that has sprung up is far more than what they are telling us. And these rebels are supported by the Union. Keleru has his own problems and he will not help us with ours.”

“So we just give up!” Franklin came to his feet now. “We can’t! We are OSG! We are Eridiani!”

“No one said we are giving up.” William spoke. “We are going to realign our assets to insure that they survive. We already have an operation in hand to learn more of these new Lycavorians and how things are run within the Union.”

“Father we...”

William got to his feet once more. “No!” He stated firmly. “Begin to inform all of our assets they are to go to ground and cease all operations here on Austrova and anywhere within Vanari space. We must use our superior intellect now son. There is a storm coming and in order to survive a storm, you must prepare for it. This attack is going to become common knowledge very shortly.”

Franklin wisely kept his mouth shut and said nothing. He did not agree with his father on this at all. They needed to be proactive in order to succeed. His mind tuned his father out as he continued to talk as he began to formulate his own plans. Great plans. Plans that would cause him to rise to great heights within the OSG and the Eridiani people as a whole. He was going to be a star.

The thing he did not take into account was the fact that most stars burned out long before they actually ever accomplished anything.

AUSTROVA
CITY OF CARNA
TWENTY KILOMETERS EAST OF MYDALA CITY
HOME OF ASAY VA ELDOST

Asay Va Eldost was blissfully unaware of any attack and had been for the better part of two days now. Upon returning to Austrova she could not get Nellian Tyrine out of her thoughts no matter what she had tried. After several hours of being home she gave up and used the COM frequency he had given to her.

Using her status as a member of the SBR, Asay had been able to quietly get clearance for him to come to the surface and thirty minutes after he had arrived at her home, she was in his powerful arms and reliving the night in the quarters on his ship. Only this time it was far more pronounced and incredible. Asay wanted this man as she had never wanted another man in her entire life. This led her to be far more aggressive and passionate in her desires and what she wanted. While this might have turned the vast majority of Vanari men off, it only served to make Nellian love her that much more intensely.

Asay had begged him to make her his only hours into their lovemaking and Nellian had willingly done just that. His fangs had sunk into the succulent flesh at the base of her neck and almost instantly Asay had felt the virus in his saliva sear its way into her veins. The pain had been intense for a few seconds and then what followed Asay could only now describe as utterly glorious. For the next twenty-four hours Asay had been swallowed up by this man's love and desire for her and her alone. He didn't just make love to her; he made her the center of the universe. Nellian made her feel things that she never thought were possible to feel, and as each moment passed, Asay Va Eldost fell deeper and deeper in love with this man who had made her his. He worshiped her for hours until she was collapsing onto her large bed exhausted. His stamina was incredible and she discovered her Alkay only served to increase this endurance. He could not get enough of her and he made it known to her very quickly that she would forever be his.

And for Nellian Tyrine it was no different.

This Vanari woman had stolen his essence the moment he first met her. Their first night together on the ship had been the beginning and now Nellian knew he would never be satisfied by another. When she had contacted him, he had remained calm outwardly as she spoke shyly, but he rejoiced inside. He was cautious at first, until Asay made her intentions known, however Nellian had made his decision long before she had begged him to bite her and make her his where this road was taking him. Her scent was heaven to him, her skin like fine silk and her taste like the sweetest wine. That any children they had in the future would not be able to shift their forms was not something that bothered him in the least. They would be part Lycavorian and they would be his children and they would be raised to honor both of their parents and their ancestry.

Asay was more than adventurous in their bed and she had feasted upon him more times than he could remember. This adventurous nature brought out more of the wildness in Nellian and was the reason both of them had cried out to the heavens in the grips of mutual release. It had gone on for hours and hours, neither of them able to get enough of each other; until they both were so spent they could hardly move. Then Nellian began to show her and tell her what would happen, and Asay relished in this knowledge to no end. She rested in his arms listening intently as he explained so many things that would change about her, her senses being just the beginning. It wasn't until very early this evening that they had finally drifted into a blissful sleep on the wildly disheveled sheets of her bed. Asay was wrapped within his powerful arms, their legs entwined together and she could say without a moment's hesitation that she had never felt more safe and loved in her entire life.

Asay finally lifted her head from Nellian's broad chest as the insistent noise of her COM kept breaking into her delicious dreams. She heard the deep rumble of his breathing as he chuckled softly and she lifted her head further until her eyes rested on his beautiful face.

"Answer it Asay my love." He spoke softly. "It may be important."

"You are more important to me." She stated with a blissful smile as she kissed his ebony skin and snuggled closer to his extremely warm body.

"I do not wish to see you get in trouble for ignoring your duties." He told her as his fingers stroked the skin of her shoulder. "I have no intention of going anywhere."

Asay let out a disappointed sigh and lifted her head once more to look at him. "I do not intend to let you go anywhere Nellian Tyrine." She told him confidently.

Asay tossed aside the sheet that covered her legs and rolled quickly away from him completely naked. She rose beside the bed and watched as his eyes drank in her naked form sending a warm flush through her skin. She didn't bother to pull her robe on and she moved to the desk in her room and stabbed down on the COM panel.

"Yes." She spoke.

"Regent Va Eldost!" The female voice echoed loudly. "Finally!"

Asay turned to look at the panel when she heard the excited voice of her senior aide. "I did ask to not be disturbed Fenia." She said.

"Regent... haven't you been watching the Networks?" The woman asked.

"No. Why would I?" Asay asked.

"Regent... there has been an attack on Regent Re Mydala at his home by Lycavorians! An attack on the First Regent's home as well!" Fenia exclaimed. "Regent Ardan is calling for an emergency meeting of the SBR!"

"Fenia... is this a joke?" Asay asked as she saw Nellian slide over to the edge of the bed. His eyes were equally as wide as hers at this information and Asay knew there was no way he could fake that.

“It is all over the Networks as I said Regent Va Eldost!” Fenia answered. “Information is still coming into the Networks, but the attacks have been confirmed by dozens of witnesses. Regent Ardan has dispatched a heavily armed Cadre Security force to Regent Re Mydala’s home and another to The First Regent’s estate in the mountains. He is ordering all Lycavorians found outside the Embassy to be arrested and questioned.”

Asay’s green eyes focused on Nellian then. “What else?” She demanded.

“There is still much confusion.” Fenia told her. “All we know for certain now is that Regent Ardan has ordered the SBR into session in the capital in four hours.”

“Coren? The First Regent?” Asay asked quickly.

“No word yet on their location or what their condition might be.” Fenia answered. “Many... many fear the worse.”

“Fenia... send my transport for me!” Asay ordered as the Regent in her came out. “I will be waiting. Bring everyone into the office and have them begin making inquiries as to what has taken place!”

“Regent Ardan has ordered a complete security lockdown on all information.” Fenia told her.

“A lockdown?” Asay asked. “Why?”

“He did not specify the reasons. Only that all information gathered is to come through him first.” Fenia answered.

“That is not normal procedure in a crisis!” Asay spat. “We have rules and procedures that need to be followed!” Asay didn’t hesitate in her next order. “Fenia you will tell our people to ignore this lockdown. I want our people gathering information outside of those assigned to Regent Ardan.”

“We are to ignore Regent Ardan’s directives?” Fenia asked.

“Ardan is not in charge!” Asay hissed. “Procedures in a situation like this explicitly direct that all information gathered be presented to a select Board of Security Regents! I am on that Board and Ardan is bypassing us against our laws! Do as I direct you Fenia and make sure our people know that it is I who ordered it.”

“As you order Regent!” Fenia answered. “Your transport is lifting off now. It will be to your home in twenty-six minutes.”

“I will be ready.” Asay told her before ending the transmission.

Asay turned to Nellian as he stood beside the bed just as completely naked as she was. Her eyes glanced down almost involuntarily, taking in all he had shared with her in the last hours before she lifted her eyes and met his gaze. She stepped up to him without fear.

“Nellian...?” She asked softly.

“I have no knowledge of this in the least Asay.” He told her. “Caliria Re Mydala is a Leonidas now; a Crown Princess of the Lycavorian Union! There is no way Androcles would ever sanction an attack against her father! He would die to prevent such a thing! He has never considered your people the enemy Asay! None of us do! We may not like the way we are treated but this is not something we would ever do!”

Asay didn’t hesitate in her actions and she folded herself into his arms, pressing her face to his bare chest and relishing in the feelings his powerful arms encircling her gave to her. His words were far too sincere for her not to believe him, not after what they had shared these last two days.

“What is happening Nellian?” She asked softly as she felt his hands stroke her back and hair. Her arms tightened around his waist and his six foot four frame swallowed her up protectively.

“I do not know Asay my love.” He told her. “I can tell you that Prince Leonidas would never do what these people are saying. I can only surmise that what he feared has finally taken place.”

Asay drew her head back and looked at him. “What do you mean? What did he fear?”

Nellian gripped her arms gently. “Begin to dress my love. I will explain as you ready yourself for your ship. I will return to the SCIMITAR and...”

“Nellian... no!” Asay exclaimed. “You will be arrested on sight. You must stay here until I can reach someone on your ship and have them send one of your ships. The invisible ones.”

Nellian thought about that for a moment and then nodded. His men knew where he was and if Admiral Sa'sur was not already acting then she would certainly move quickly when Asay contacted her. “Very well.” He said. “Come... I will tell you everything that I know while you dress.”

COREN RE MYDALA'S ESTATE

"... Downloaded everything that was on their computers fervon." Fedor spoke from within the transmission from the STRIKER as they were returning to SPARTA'S WRATH in orbit. "And we have one prisoner."

Andro looked oddly at his brother. "Prisoner?" He asked surprised.

Fedor nodded his head. "He was hiding under a terminal when we conducted our entry. He was unarmed and..."

Andro lifted his hand. "I will not second guess you Fedor my brother. You were on site and made the decision. Make sure he is kept apart from the prisoner Lisisa took and from the one we took here."

Fedor nodded his head. "Understood. He was screaming that this pig Adams left them all to die." He said.

"Franklin Adams is a coward and nothing more." Androcles stated. "He will answer to me for his crimes." He looked at Fedor. "You did well fervon."

Fedor smiled slightly and nodded his head. "I only acted as father and Uncle Danny taught me."

"Have Famus prepare your QRF for immediate turn around and have Normya load for ground support. We may need you later." Andro said.

"You suspect something?" Fedor asked.

Andro shrugged his broad shoulders. "I don't know. This obviously did not go as Ardan and the OSG had hoped. There is no telling what will take place now. Lisisa is returning here with the First Regent and Coren. I'm locking Coren's estate down tightly in order to protect them both. Just be prepared to come in and pull our asses from the fire if the need arises."

"I will be ready." He answered.

Andro nodded and turned his head as Ryana moved into the main room with another Vanari beside her. He looked back to Fedor. "We will speak again soon fervon. Again... well done. Well done indeed."

The transmission closed and Andro turned as Ryana Val Ardwor moved up beside him with no fear. Androcles and the others had made it very clear to them that all of the Lycanari were considered citizens of the Union and there would be no question in that regard. She found the young Prince to be very intimidating, but extremely intelligent and knowledgeable. He had also made it very clear that she, Nyosa and their father Rinel were to call him by his given name and dispense with any pretense of royalty.

"Androcles... this is Commander Entia Al Dasmal." Ryana spoke. "She and her team have been guarding Caliria since she returned."

Andro nodded. "Yes... I remember you from the University." He answered. "And I have not thanked you for helping to keep her safe. I thank you now." Entia seemed somewhat taken aback and she nodded her head.

"Entia and her team are the ones who secured the immediate area outside the estate. They also kept Regent Ardan's security forces from entering." Ryana continued.

Andro looked at Entia. "How long before they arrived once the attack began?" He asked her.

"Far too quickly to suit my tastes." Entia answered with disgust in her voice. "They had to have known the attack was coming. There is no other explanation for they arrived within moments of the first shot being fired."

Andro nodded. "We assumed as much." He said. "What is the problem now?"

Entia glanced at Ryana who nodded her head. "Tell him." She said.

Entia looked at Andro. "I just got word from a friend within Cadre Headquarters." Entia said. "Regent Ardan has dispatched another section of Commandos to secure the area and they are under the command of a Cadre General. Someone of the same rank I can bully... but..."

Andro nodded his head. "I understand." He spoke. "How soon?"

"They'll be here in roughly thirty minutes." Entia said. "The leading elements will begin arriving within fifteen if I had to guess. My... my loyalties are to the Vanari people Prince Leonidas and I can't keep a Cadre General from entering the estate and once they get here. No matter how much I want to."

"Who is this General?" Andro asked.

“General Ranter Ale Kimer.” Entia answered. “He is... he is a political appointee really. Regent Ardan selected and then pushed his promotion through nearly two decades ago. He... he will be under orders to arrest everyone.”

“So he works for Ardan?” Andro said. “And more than likely is part of what is going on?”

Entia moved closer to Androcles. “Do you... did Caliria really make a counter agent to the OSG chemical Prince Leonidas?” She asked. “Is that all true?”

Andro nodded. “My mothers and Aunts were able to finish the final components of the counter agent, but Inamarno is the one who made it possible with her work. Yes.”

“And Regent Ardan and the others have had this since your brother arrived months ago?” Entia asked.

Andro nodded once more. “Yes. We did not give them the complete formula until I arrived for we suspected something like this would happen. Ardan has seen the counter agent work however, so he has no reason to keep it hidden unless he himself is hiding something.”

Entia made her decision right there though she had known for some time now what she believed. “I will delay him as long as possible but...”

Andro shook his head. “You will not get involved Commander.” Andro told her. “I will not have you risk reprisals from others within your ranks for your actions.”

“He will be under orders to arrest all of you as I said.” Entia told him.

“No doubt.” Androcles said with a smile. “Do not worry. We will handle it.”

“What do you want me to do?” Entia asked.

“He is a General of your people.” Andro spoke. “You will follow his orders.”

“Even if I don’t agree with what he is coming here to do?” Entia hissed.

“Especially if you do not agree with what he is coming here to do.” Andro told her. “We will not be arrested Commander, of that I can assure you. I do not need you making enemies in order to protect us however. You are one of the few who knows what is going on for the most part Commander. I’d rather have you out there able to move around freely as opposed to in trouble yourself.”

Entia looked between him and Ryana. “This isn’t over is it?” She asked softly.

Andro shook his head. “Not by a long shot.” Andro told her honestly. “And when the time comes when we find and move on the OSG and send their vile corpses to the abyss, I would much rather know the Vanari are on my side.”

Entia took a deep breath and nodded her head. “We will be ready for that.” She stated confidently.

“Good.” Andro told her. “Because it will be happening much sooner than you think.” He told her seeing Kalis and Ridor enter the main room of the estate. Ryana saw this as well and took Entia’s arm.

“We’d better get you back to your people before this fool General arrives.” She said. “There is no sense in making anyone suspect you or others.”

Kalis and Ridor moved up beside him just as Murano moved into the main room with Deion, Dorian, Denali and Jomann. They came up to Androcles as well.

“Daio is just finishing up Androcles...” Ridor reported. “...But we have stripped the bodies of everything but uniforms.”

“They are wearing old Union uniforms Andro.” Kalis said.

Andro nodded his head. “We suspected this as well. It just confirms to us that they have more connections to the Alpha Quadrant than we first thought.”

“The uniforms are easy enough to get at any surplus supplier in The Wilds.” Denali spoke. “It doesn’t really mean anything.”

“But it is undoubtedly something that Ardan will try to use against us.” Andro said. “Elynth, Anthar and Sehri took the prisoner?”

Ridor nodded his head. “They took off a few moments ago to meet Sadi in the skies.”

“Cvea, Serale and the others are still secure?” Andro asked.

Jomann nodded his head quickly. “I just spoke with Eli. They are still monitoring all the camera feeds and watching as the city comes awake. Kintia has her people monitoring Vanari news sources right now. Trying to get a feeling for how it will begin to play out in public.”

“Fedor took a prisoner as well.” Andro told them. “Am’mur and my Drow father Teya are going to be busy.”

“Lisi and Arduri?” Denali asked him.

“They should be landing here about the time this Vanari General arrives.” Andro said. “Coren and the First Regent will be with them as I said. Armen is sending down a team of engineers to repair the wall and a team of Durcunusaan to secure the Estate. They should be here within five to six minutes.”

“Did you tell Coren yet?” Dorian asked with a grin looking at the wall.

“I haven’t figured out how I am going to tell him we blew the side of his home into the yard below... no.” Andro answered.

“You’re not actually thinking about letting them arrest us are you?” Jomann asked him.

Andro looked at Jomann. “And listen to my wives and mates, not to mention Eliani, Mari, Sheva and Onera call me the stupidest man alive? Not a chance.”

“There would be much more colorful in their descriptions however.” Jomann said with a smile.

“Mideaus comes to mind right away.”

“Sibfla!” Denali gasped. “That would be on the mild end Jomann... especially for Eliani. You’ve never seen her get really wound up. Man what a sight that is. She’s almost as bad as our mother Anja. You just do not want to be in the same sector of space when that happens.”

“So true.” Deion muttered with a laugh himself. “Nara is beginning to take after them.”

Jomann laughed softly. “I hope I never have reason to see it.”

Murano couldn’t help but shake his head with a smile at the obvious lighthearted tone of their conversation. The high of combat was bleeding off and all of them were using humor as a means to let the rush of the battle leave them. The Praetorians of his age would have gone directly for their Mages after a battle in order to connect and share their experiences and allow the combat action to filter from them. Murano was learning that this was not needed with these young men or Martin. It was a gift they all had and Murano had been swept up in it for he too was beginning to relax and allow the anxiousness and battle senses to return to normal all on their own. It seemed he was learning just as much from them as they would learn from him and once more Murano sent a silently blessing to his friend and mentor Sumar for allowing him to be here and experience this.

Andro reached out and grabbed Kalis’s shoulder seeing his smiling blue eyes focus on him. Kalis could not put into words the amount of pride and honor he felt standing among them and to know he might have never experienced it made it all the more important to him. “Kalis, when Daio is finished, I want the three of you to use the tunnels and link up with Eli and the others.”

“You’re sending us away?” Kalis asked confused.

Andro shook his head. “No... I’m giving us an ace in the hole.” He replied. “When you get to their position have the Durcunusaan team already there prepare for an extraction Op. The three of you will lead them.”

“Extraction?” Kalis asked even more confused. “Who will we need to extract?”

Jomann chuckled now. “Us.” He stated.

Kalis’s eyes lit up as he understood what Andro was doing and he nodded with a smile. “I get it.” He said as understanding came to him. “An Insurance policy as Uncle Martin called it once.”

“Exactly.” Andro told him. “Cowen and Sherice have pulled out of their location and will meet you there. Between the five of you and the Durcunusaan team you should be able to handle anything. Non-lethal ammunition is to be used. Ridor and Daio will coordinate things for the simple reason that they know the personnel better. At least right now. You will need time to get to know everyone and for them to know you.”

The old Kalis would have protested vehemently about taking such a position, but this Kalis knew the wisdom of the move. He was still an unknown to many and as he proved his loyalty and skill in the coming days and weeks he did not doubt Androcles would turn him loose. Uncle Martin had told him as much before he left and Kalis knew this to be true.

“I understand Andro.” Kalis said.

“And you need to calm Serale.” Andro told him. “I can feel her resonance echoing from here with worry for you. She is Hadarian and is now part of a family and life that view these things as almost normal. She will need to get used to it.”

Kalis smiled and nodded once more. “I feel her too.” He said.

“That’s really sick you know.” Dorian spoke. “That we consider this even remotely normal is just plain sad.”

Even Murano laughed at this and he reached out to put his hand on Dorian’s shoulder. “As I have heard your father say in the past Dorian... think of how boring things would be otherwise.”

Dorian met his eyes and smiled. “Good point.” He said with a grin.

“Kalis... you and Ridor get moving.” Andro said as he was still smiling. “There is no sense in having you get caught here when this Vanari General shows up.”

Kalis nodded as Ridor grabbed his arm and they both moved quickly for the exit. Andro turned back to the others as they looked at him.

“How do you propose to keep this Vanari General from arresting us fervon?” Deion asked now.

“Deo... I’m hurt.” Andro stated. “You have no faith in my diplomatic skills brother?”

“Which diplomatic skills would those be fervon?” Deion asked with a knowing twinkle in his dark eyes. “The ones where you stab them or shoot them when they try to arrest us?”

“I’m hurt Deion.” Andro spoke.

“You?” Denali spoke now. “Hurt? Rensibfla.”

Once more Murano could do nothing but shake his head and join in the laughter of his fellow Praetorians. If the others that Shiria and Deia were able to find were even remotely like Jomann and the brothers then perhaps things were not as dire as he first thought. Once more he found himself silently thanking his mentor and dear friend Sumar for leaving him behind and allowing him to be here at this moment and stand with these young warriors and the man who commanded them all. They were just like their father in every way Murano decided. And this laconic nature was rubbing off on him and freeing his soul in the process.

General Ranter Ale Kimer looked around the interior of Regent Re Mydala’s estate with wide eyes. Entia had been correct in that he was a political appointee. He had never served a day on board a Vanari ship or within a Cadre Commando posting. While he had gone through the training, he was for all intents and purposes untested and unbloodied. He had the support of Ardan Vu Lamurrion for the vast majority of his career and essentially owed him all of the influence and power he now had. Ranter commanded all Vanari Cadre forces in Mydala city and the fourteen surrounding provinces. This was a senior position of very high importance and influence within Vanari society and one he owed to Ardan Vu Lamurrion. Ranter Ale Kimer was also a man who was known to crush others beneath his boots if they did not agree with how he wanted things done.

Ranter had to make a conscious effort to hold down his dinner from earlier at the sight before him. Bodies were strewn across the estate grounds to include the lower courtyard. Many were still leaking blood onto the granite where they had been killed and some were even missing limbs. There were primarily four groups of bodies where it appeared battles had taken place on the grounds, but he could see no weapons or equipment. His eyes darted upward and he saw six figures watching him and his men enter the estate from above. They were all visible in the blown out portion of the wall of Regent Mydala’s home, allowing him to look into the interior. None of them seemed particularly concerned that he was there and he began to make his way towards the home’s stairs and upper level entrance in order to show them just how wrong they were.

“Have your men secure the grounds Lieutenant!” He barked out as he walked, moving swiftly and confidently and causing the Vanari Cadre Lieutenant to fall in beside him quickly. “A full team with us!”

“Yes sir!” The man spoke as he motioned with his hands to his officers and they began to spread out across the estate. “General... we should secure the grounds first to insure there are no other enemies.”

“The only enemies I see are those inside regent Mydala’s home waiting for us to come to them.” Ranter hissed as he moved up the outdoor steps.

“General... there are dead Lycavorians all over the estate!” The Lieutenant exclaimed. “Surely we should use more caution!”

“What is needed now is action!” Ranter brazenly replied as he drew his sidearm.

The Vanari Commando had no choice but to follow him through the door into home of Regent Re Mydala. Ranter brought his weapon up and leveled it at the first Lycavorian he saw, which happen to be Androcles, as the men and women of his team rushed into the room now as well. Their weapons were up and leveled at the six men in the room, all of them extremely nervous given what they had seen outside.

“None of you move! You are all under arrest!” Ranter shouted in a voice that carried fear and anxiousness.

Deion, Denali and Jomann were kneeling on the floor with Dorian and Murano standing beside them. None of them moved and Jomann even shook his head in disgust at the way they had entered the main room of the estate without securing the grounds or more confined areas of the estate. Andro turned slowly from the gaping hole he and Dorian had created and looked at the Vanari General.

“General Ranter Ale Kimer I presume.” Androcles spoke calmly.

Ranter seemed taken aback that the Lycavorian Prince knew who he was. He of course knew who Andro was and he stepped even closer to him, lifting his weapon and focusing it on Andro’s chest.

“I said do not move!” He screamed out. “Drop your weapons now!”

“General Kimer... I am...” Andro began to speak.

“I know who you are boy!” Kimer barked out. “And do not think I will not shoot you dead where you stand for what you have done this night!”

Andro blinked. “What we have done?” He asked. “We defended ourselves. This is not something we are allowed to do?”

“I told you to drop your weapons!” Kimer shouted the order again.

“You told us not to move.” Dorian commented.

“Get on your knees now!” Kimer shouted.

Andro’s eyes narrowed. “Excuse me?”

“I said get on your knees Lycavorian scum!” Kimer snarled stepping right up to Androcles and pressing the barrel of his weapon into Andro’s armored chest. “I will not hesitate to cut you down like the animal you are!”

“This is how you treat a political delegation after they have been attacked?” Andro asked calmly.

“Do not take us for fools!” Kimer growled. “We know what you have done this night!”

“General!” The female voice echoed loudly. “What are you doing?”

Kimer turned his head and saw Entia enter the main room with two of her men. “I ordered you to remain outside with your unit Commander!” He barked. “We will secure the prisoners!”

“Prince Androcles and those with him were the ones attacked General!” Entia gasped. “They are the victims here!”

“They are Lycavorian!” Kimer spat with a large amount of distaste in his tone. “They will be arrested and interrogated just as Regent Vu Lamurrion has ordered!”

“General I protest!” Entia exclaimed. “We were here! We saw what happened! What you are doing is wrong!”

“Commander I order you to return to your post outside or I will have you arrested as well!” Kimer snarled turning back to Androcles. “I told you to get on your knees!”

Andro shook his head. “I have done nothing but defend myself.” Androcles spoke. “As have we all. I do not intend to kneel to you or to anyone. None of us do!”

As if on cue, Denali, Jomann and Deion rose slowly to their feet causing the Vanari Commandos close to them to raise their weapons higher. All of them knew that Lycavorians were hard to kill and none of them were going to take any chances.

Kimer then did something that he would regret for many decades to come. He brought the barrel of his weapon whipping across in a vicious blow that connected with Andro’s face and rocked his head back slightly. “I said get on your knees dog!” He screamed the words. “Or I will shoot you where you stand! All of you! You are criminals by order of Senior Regent Vu Lamurrion and you will be held accountable!”

Andro lifted his hand slowly and brought his fingers up to his face to trace the open cut that now resided on his cheek. He pulled his fingers back and looked at the few drops of blood there and then at Ranter Ale Kimer.

“What is going on here?” The voice roared from the side causing Kimer’s head to snap around and his eyes to nearly explode out of his head as he saw first Coren Re Mydala enter the main room from the side, followed quickly by his senior aide Jokros and several other Vanari. Lisisa came in behind them and broke to the right quickly as she saw what was happening and readied herself to attack.

“Regent... Regent Re Mydala!” Kimer gasped aloud.

As with Alrerin Sha Harael, Coren Re Mydala had reached the end of his tolerance for what was happening to his people. He stepped right up to Kimer and moved in front of Andro, batting aside the weapon in the man’s hand.

“What the fuck do you think you are doing you incompetent fool?” Coren screamed now.

Kimer was very much unprepared for the arrival of Coren and it showed on his face. “We... Regent Re Mydala... we were ordered to... we were ordered to come here and arrest any Lycavorians on the estate! The order has gone out across the city. All Lycavorians are to be detained and interrogated if they are found outside the Restriction Zones!”

“My home is not a Restriction Zone General Kimer!” Coren snarled at the man.

“Regent... there are dead Lycavorians all over your estate grounds!” Kimer protested. “You... I did not know you were here! We thought... we thought they had killed you Regent! The First Regent’s home was also attacked by Lycavorians! We have not heard if they managed to assassinate him as well! Regent Vu Lamurrion ordered that...”

“That you come to my home and assault the man who kept those dead Lycavorians from succeeding in their task!” Coren screamed.

“Our information stated that this...” Kimer glared at Androcles. “That this animal and those with him are the ones who conducted the attacks Regent!”

Coren stuck his face closer to Kimer, his eyes angry and not at all forgiving. “Crown Prince Androcles Leonidas is the reason we stand here unharmed you idiot!” Coren shouted.

Kimer blinked several times. “Regent Re Mydala I am...”

“A colossal idiot in every sense of the word!” Coren snarled at the man.

“We did not know you were safe Regent Re Mydala!” Kimer barked back at him refusing to be demeaned in front of these men. “We don’t know if the First Regent is alive! All our information told us that these... that these Lycavorians were responsible! We...”

“What information would that be General?” The new voice spoke and even Androcles turned his head as Alrerin moved confidently from the corridor now with Ma’nia and two other Commandos on either side of him protectively. Andro noticed right away that he seemed utterly comfortable and confident and he glanced at Lisisa who nodded her head discretely.

If Kimer’s eyes could have grown wider they would have as he saw the Vanari First Regent enter the room. “First Regent!” He exclaimed as he bowed his head. “You are... you are alive! You are safe!”

“Yes General Kimer I am.” Alrerin answered. “Due in part to the man you just struck in the face with your weapon! You sound surprised General.”

Kimer’s head whipped around to glance at Androcles and then back to Alrerin. “First Regent... no I am... we were told you were dead.”

“Who gave you your orders General Kimer?” Alrerin asked calmly.

“They came directly from Regent Vu Lamurrion First Regent.” Kimer stammered.

“And did those orders tell you to assault a recognized representative of a sovereign government?” Alrerin asked moving closer to the man as Kimer’s eyes shifted and he saw several more men and women push into the room now.

“First Regent we were told the Lycavorians were responsible for this attack!” Kimer spoke. “There are dead Lycavorians all over Regent Re Mydala’s estate grounds!”

“Did you stop to consider that those dead Lycavorians are the ones that conducted the attack and perhaps those in this room stopped them?” Alrerin demanded.

“I... I was under orders First Regent!” Kimer stammered. “We acted only with the information given to us by Regent Vu Lamurrion.”

“Information that is sorely lacking in substance and truth.” Alrerin spat angrily now. “Where is Ardan now?”

“Regent Vu Lamurrion is at SBR Headquarters First Regent.” Kimer answered quickly. “He has issued a recall for all SBR members to meet in a few hours. His orders have locked down the planet and any Lycavorian outside the Restriction Zones are to be arrested and held for interrogation.”

“Who is First Regent of the Vanari people General Kimer?” Alrerin asked the man in a low, menacing voice as he moved even closer.

“You... you are First Regent.” Kimer stammered his reply.

“And I am very much alive General.” Alrerin snarled softly at the man. “No thanks to your bumbling attempts at protecting me. If not for Ma'nia and those on my personal Cadre Detail; if not for Princess Leonidas and those that came to my home with Coren Re Mydala I would be dead! My wife would be dead! My daughter and my grandchildren would be dead!”

Alrerin’s words finished several octaves higher than when they began for he was seriously upset now. They had tried to kill his beloved wife. His daughter. His grandchildren. Things had gone too far and now he would no longer stand back and allow them to continue.

“You and your contingent of Cadre Commandos will withdraw from Coren’s estate and pull back outside the perimeter that Commander Entia has established.” Alrerin spoke now.

Kimer looked at him wide eyed. “First Regent... you can’t be serious!” He gasped. “You must be protected at all costs! More attacks could be coming from these...” He motioned to where Androcles had stood silently.

Alrerin held up his hand quickly. “Speak that word in my presence again General Ranter Ale Kimer and you will find yourself commander of the most desolate outpost that the Vanari Empire maintains. There you can allow your false hatred to fester and boil and destroy you.” Alrerin glared at him for a long moment before continuing. “You will withdraw your unit from Coren’s Estate and secure the outer perimeter while Commander Entia and Ma'nia secure the inner perimeter.” Alrerin turned and looked at Androcles. “Prince Leonidas... would you be able to provide an additional force of security?”

Kimer looked aghast at this. “First Regent you cannot!” He almost shouted.

Androcles nodded his head. “I can have a section of our Durcumusaan on the ground within minutes First Regent.” He replied. “I would be happy to provide this. And if I may offer this as well... you can leave the order to have any Lycavorian outside your Restriction Zones arrested in place. My people would know not to be out where they are neither welcome nor accepted and any Lycavorian outside these Zones is not part of my crew.”

“First Regent I cannot allow you to entrust your security to these... these Lycavorians.” Kimer protested.

“You are not in a position to tell me anything General Kimer.” Alrerin stated looking back to the man. He turned his head and looked at Coren. “Coren... you have room for all of us here?”

Coren stepped forward. “First Regent... given everything that has happened in the last few hours I believe it would be better if we moved to my Summer Estate, Ember’s Cove, on the coast. It is large enough and provides for better security. I’m sure Androcles can shift his people there with Entia and Ma'nia’s direction.”

Andro nodded his head. “Of course.”

Alrerin nodded. “Then that is where we will be.” He replied looking at Kimer. “We will transport to the Re Mydala Summer Estate via secure transportation provided by Prince Androcles if he can offer this.”

Andro nodded. “Easily sir.”

Alrerin looked at Kimer once more. “There will be no meeting of the SBR unless I call for it!” Alrerin spat. “Ardan Vu Lamurrion is not the First Regent! I am! In twelve hours the members of the SBR Security Board will convene at Coren’s Summer Estate. We will decide what to do from there! Is that very clear to you General?”

“I must protest First Regent!” Kimer hissed vehemently.

“You may protest all you like General!” Alrerin snapped at him. “Things are about to change General Kimer, and Ardan is not going to like those changes. Nor any aligned with him.” Alrerin stepped closer. “When you pick your side General Kimer... pray it is the right one. I will not abide a traitor to our people any longer. No matter their position!”

Kimer was unaware of the smiles from Narlei and Alrerin's wife as they stood in the background. Smiles of immense pride and respect. Alrerin turned from Kimer and looked at Coren. "Coren we need to do some things before we depart for your Summer Estate. We will need your COM array."

Coren nodded and motioned with his hand. "This way First Regent." He spoke looking at Androcles.

Kimer could only watch as Alrerin and Coren moved out of the room with Ma'nia and the unknown Vanari female and male that Kimer didn't recognize. He turned back and looked at Androcles who was still staring at him. A small trickle of blood stained Andro's cheek as he stood there stoically and smiled at him. It was Denali who stepped forward slightly and looked at Ranter Ale Kimer.

"Man it sucks to be you!" Denali spat.

Even his dark blue color could not hide the flush of his skin and anger flooded Kimer as he watched the Lycavorians in the room begin to chuckle softly. He spun around and marched out of the room in order to keep at least some of his dignity.

At least for a time longer.

ECHO QUADRANT VENTORI UNION ADHOC BASE

The first thing that Sovereign Regent Saydia Daret noticed when she exited the rear of the ship was the level of organization. Four other ships like the one she had just ridden in were parked nearby in the huge clearing, men and women alike moving in and out of them efficiently and quickly, loaded down with many boxes and crates of supplies. Most of them appeared to be Lycavorians but there were other species that Saydia had never seen before mixed in among the Lycavorians. These supplies were swiftly put into the rear of several ground vehicles with open backs and six large, black tires. Once one vehicle was full it departed the landing area and the next backed up to the ship they were unloading. In all her life, nearly one hundred and eighty years, Saydia Daret had never seen ships like the one she had just exited or those on the ground around them. These ships were quite obviously much more advanced than any ship within the Tasmor inventory, as were the enormous ships that they had seen in orbit around Ventori as they approached the planet. Saydia Daret now knew why the Kintaur cruiser had been so easily crippled. The Kintaur were not as technologically advanced as the Tasmor, perhaps fifty years behind them in discoveries, and just from what she saw here on this landing field, they would be no match for any ship flown by these Lycavorians. It was clear to her that these Lycavorians had been out and traveling among the stars for far longer than the Tasmor or any species she knew of with the exception of the Pralor people.

Saydia had met and spoken to several of the Lycavorian Chief Justices from Ventori when they had been transported to one of the refugee worlds. They were an intelligent group of men, though Saydia was disgusted that there were no females among these so called leaders. She felt it beneath her to meet with male leaders considering how the Tasmor viewed men and it had taken all of her self-control to even listen to them. They were a different species and Saydia knew she had to be tolerant of their cultures and ways. What they had offered her in mining the Polyplast mines had been too good to ignore and they had been very sincere in their offers, and for the last three years their agreement had turned great dividends for both of their peoples. The Lycavorian females were not mistreated in any way Saydia knew, they were actually revered and well-guarded among the Ventori Lycavorians, but none of them held positions of power which is how it should have been in Saydia's mind. The Tasmor had been raised to believe that males just did not have the same control, intelligence and composure when in positions of power. Their intellect was limited and their ability to motivate people was almost non-existent. Since the dawn of the Tasmor, and their separation from the Kintaur, nearly five thousand years ago, no male had ever held a position of governmental power. There were many who had served and commanded the many Tasmor fleets and soldiers, but their number was few and they were not often put in harm's way because of their breeding potential.

Saydia watched as the raven haired Queen called Aricia stepped up to a tall male and spoke in whispers and then he pointed to the two similar vehicles that were behind him. Saydia also took note of the half dozen men and women who stood a short distance away from them and were watching them intently. All of them wore armor similar to the Queen Aricia and all of them were armed, though their weapons were not pointed at them, and they were not taking part in the unloading of the nearby ships. Saydia felt the comforting presence of Anthylea come up behind her and she turned her head slightly.

“Anthylea... what... what do you see?” She asked in a soft whisper.

“I see extremely well organized individuals Saydia.” Anthylea answered. She saw Saydia nod at her response. Anthylea never used her title when they were alone or talking in whispers as they were now. Saydia had forbid her to do so considering what existed between them. “They have done all this in only a few hours!”

“They are motivated and confident.” Saydia spoke. “You can see this in their gait and their body language. They do not... they do not view us as a threat to them.”

“There is good reason for this from what I have seen Saydia.” Anthylea told her softly. “What we could do with just one of their ships is...”

Saydia nodded. “Yes... it is mind boggling.”

“Was this wise Saydia?” Anthylea asked her now. “Coming here when we know nothing about them? They are Lycavorians yes... but they are unlike those Lycavorians we have grown used to. They are...”

“They are much more dangerous.” Saydia finished her statement for her. Saydia turned and looked at her beautiful face, gazing into her stunning dark eyes. “Do you sense danger around us?” She asked softly. “Your... your skills would permit this Anthylea.”

Anthylea shook her head. “No.” She answered instantly. “It is strange really. There is... a sense of dedication and urgency in the air but none of danger. I cannot detect enough to make a determination that is useful to you.”

Saydia reached back discretely and took Anthylea’s hand in her own. “I am sorry that we ever...” Saydia spoke.

Anthylea shook her head quickly cutting off her words. “You have nothing to be sorry for. I volunteered for the enhanced treatments and I do not regret what they allow me to do. Or what they allow us to share.”

Saydia stared at her for a long moment and felt a faint tug in her lower abdomen as she always did when gazing at Anthylea like this. “Nor do I.” Saydia said squeezing her hand. “Nor do I.”

“We should remain aware and vigilant at all times.” The voice spoke from behind them and Saydia closed her eyes in disgust.

Perlyea Kalrr had insisted she be allowed to accompany them as Chief Counsel of the Tasmor people and Saydia could not really refuse her. Perlyea was, after all, head of the Tasmor Science Division as well as being Chief Counsel to the Tasmor people and essentially the third in line for power according to their Government Mandate. Her authority as head of the Science Division was far reaching and influential among the other Tasmor Counsel Ministers, though this influence was also tempered by the fact that she was a hard liner among the Tasmor. One of those who believed the Tasmor were the superior species among the stars and did not need allies or friends.

Saydia turned and looked at her. “We are well aware of what we should do Perlyea.” She whispered softly. “And you should be mindful of your place as well.”

“Saaurano... Martin is waiting for us with Anja and the others. They have set up a CIC building with tables and refreshments.” The female voice spoke from behind them.

Saydia, Perlyea and Anthylea turned to see the obviously female figure move past them quickly. They had not yet seen this female and Saydia quickly deduced she had been one of the pilots since she wore what appeared to be some sort of Flight suit with a similar sidearm and tubular object as the Queen Aricia did. This was attached to her right leg and on her waist which Saydia quickly took note of. She had long legs for her height, a small waist and the flight suit hugged an obviously deliciously sculpted ass. She carried a helmet under one arm and they could see For'mya’s four inch high elven ears in full view poking out of her long, golden blond hair. Saydia looked at Anthylea with wide eyes.

“Anthylea her ears are...” Saydia gasped.

“Yes!” Anthylea hissed. “They are pointed!”

They watched as Aricia reached out and took For'mya’s hand when she got near and they pressed intimately close to one another. Saydia and the other Tasmor with her all saw this and looked between one another as Aricia and For'mya shared a soft kiss. They watched as Aricia nodded to the man once more, who didn't seem fazed in the least by their show of obvious affection and then they turned back to Saydia and moved the few steps back to her with For'mya holding her hand openly.

"It appears that our husband and mate has moved much faster than we thought. The welfare of our people has always been a large motivator for him." Aricia told her with a smile. "We have set up portable buildings in a clearing by the river not far from here. We can take these Lifter trucks and be there in a few minutes."

Saydia, Perlyea and Anthylea were staring at For'mya with clear surprise and For'mya smiled at their expressions. "I am an elf Sovereign Regent Daret." She spoke evenly, her voice like chimes on the wind as was usually the case. "I am one of the many different species within the Union that Aricia told you of on your ship."

"You... you know of what she said?" Anthylea gasped.

"You can hear each other's thoughts and words!" Perlyea echoed her.

Aricia squeezed For'mya's hand. "This is For'mya Leonidas Sovereign Regent." Aricia told her. "She is a Queen, wife and mate to Martin Leonidas just as I am. Just as we all are."

"We?" Saydia asked.

"There are six of us." For'mya told her. "All of us are Queens and all of us love Martin with every breath that we take. We are connected with our minds as Aricia explained to you briefly on your ship. Most of our people can speak in this fashion, as well as many who have been turned by Lycavorians such as myself and Anja, who you will meet shortly."

"Your... your King forces all of you to share his bed?" Saydia asked in shock.

This was unheard of in Tasmor society and in actuality it was the complete opposite. In Tasmor society the woman chose who she would bed and who she wouldn't. It was not at all uncommon for an older Tasmor woman, the head of a family clan, to have two or sometimes three female concubines that served her physical needs and when she decided to bed with a male she usually had several within her employ that gave her different options. Tasmor males did not have the same rights and privileges as Tasmor females among their species and for the most part were considered second class citizens, though they were not looked down upon or mistreated in any way. Tasmor females had always outnumbered the men by a huge margin in their society, something within their genes that usually produced female children as opposed to male children and most Tasmor males did not reject a female when they were chosen to be bed partners.

"Martin does not force us to share his bed Sovereign Regent." Aricia spoke with genuine passion and desire in her voice which Anthylea quickly detected. She glanced at the female For'mya and saw the same look in her eyes and on her face. "All of us do that very willingly. And with great relish and happiness."

"Yes we do." For'mya agreed with a wistful smile as they both felt Martin's aura reach for them across the distance and caress their senses now that they were back on the planet's surface.

"We can use these two Lifter trucks to move to where we have set up our headquarters." Aricia said motioning to the vehicles. "You will find Namiri's troops there. Emylea... I believe your ships landed several kilometers north of us but I can arrange for a vehicle to take you to where they have landed if you like."

Saydia shook her head. "My daughters will remain with me for now." She spoke quickly as both Namiri and Emylea moved up beside her.

Aricia nodded and stepped to the side motioning with her hand. "Very well. If everyone will climb into the vehicles we will move to where we have set up our base camp. I do ask that you keep your weapons shouldered however. There will be less chance of any type of accident occurring. I have ordered our men and women within the secure perimeter to do the same."

"You ordered them?" Anthylea asked as Perlyea kept herself from commenting.

Aricia nodded her head. "Yes. Please... Martin and our fellow Queen and wife Anja are waiting for us. It will only take a few moments to cover the distance there."

Saydia looked at Namiri and Emylea and saw the looks of fascination and interest in their eyes as they were taking everything in. She turned to Anthylea and then nodded as she looked back to Aricia.

"Of course." She said.

TWENTY-SIX KILOMETERS FROM THE CITY OF JORLARI

Saydia and her people were led into the building by Aricia and For'mya still in a state of shock at what they had seen as they approached. There were at least a dozen buildings that had been erected all around the area and now hundreds of Lycavorians and elves and other species they did not recognize were all over. The Lycavorians from Ventori they could see receiving what could only be medical treatment from one building while others sat outside another and were eating the first hot meal many had had in months. None of them looked in the least bit concerned and many had what would be the first smiles of years on their faces. They could see positions in the distance that were manned by troops and what appeared to be heavy weapons, but like Aricia had told them, anyone within the area around the buildings had their weapons slung over their backs as they moved about doing one task or another.

The portable building inside was much darker and very large and as their eyes began to adjust to the different lighting they all heard the deep male voice.

“...Start sending them out in the morning Manda.” Martin was speaking to the holoimage of Miranda being projected from the circular disc on the floor of the building. “We’ll begin with Jorlari while you work up a plan for the others. I don’t want to spread us out too fast so start dropping COM buoys across the planet. We can transport them here more easily than trying to go to them in force.”

Saydia felt Namiri press close to her side and take her hand. “That is him mother.” She whispered to her. “That is the one I told you about on the ship. The Alpha Lycavorian King. His name is Martin Leonidas.”

Saydia could only stand there in shocked silence as Martin ignored them and continued with his transmission. Saydia was taken aback by his size alone. The vast majority of Tasmor men didn’t reach her height, let alone the height of this man in front of her. There were a very few exceptions who had excellent breeding genes, but the vast majority of Tasmor men never reached taller than five foot eight or nine. This Lycavorian was easily over two meters in height and if she had to guess well over two hundred pounds, a good deal larger than any Lycavorian male she had seen before. As she thought about it, most of those Lycavorian men she had seen moving about outside were of similar builds and height. The strange body armor that he wore conformed to what could only be an exceptionally powerful body. His raven black hair, the same color as the Queen Aricia, was shoulder length but tied into a short pony tail behind his neck, and she saw the sides of the neatly trimmed beard and mustache that covered his deeply tanned skin. Saydia Daret had to admit, he was an incredibly handsome man and one she would not hesitate to take to bed had he been Tasmor. And she was only looking at him from the side.

Saydia’s keen eyes also detected the small splotches of what could only be Kintaur blood on the right side of his body armor. An small effort had been made to wash it off, but nothing too detailed obviously. Saydia saw the very petite form of the woman step up beside this man and press close to him without any thought. The top of her head barely reached his shoulder, but she wore similar body armor and weapons as Aricia and the elf For'mya Saydia saw. Her long, Persian red hair was tied into a single pony tail and fell to the middle of her back. Saydia could not see her face, but the body armor wrapped around what could only be a very lush, enticing and power packed figure if she was any judge.

“Manda... have Ceale use the QCR on the HORNET and contact Eurin back on Earth tonight.” Anja spoke as she leaned against Martin’s side. “I want another five million tons of medical supplies from our stores moving for Manne within thirty-six hours. Base serums and vaccines; the entire medical works. Eurin will know what I want. Have her select another hundred volunteers and have them deployed as well. Half to remain with Ceale on Manne and the other half to move onto our position here.”

Miranda nodded from within the transmission and then looked at E'dira beside her chair, Zaala occupying the area on the opposite side of the command chair. E'dira looked up from the data pad she was typing on. “Do you wish them to come with additional security Anja?” E'dira asked her.

Anja looked up at Martin and he shrugged his broad shoulders. “Your call Red.” He told her.

Saydia looked at Namiri with wide eyes. “He lets her make the decision?” She gasped softly.

Namiri smiled. “That is Queen Anja mother.” Namiri answered just as softly. “She is a doctor and I...”

“What child?” Saydia asked.

“I saw her working on Lycavorians from Ventori mother.” Namiri told her. “She is... she is almost magical in nature. A glow... it extends from her hands and around her body and she heals their wounds with no effort. It is almost like they were never hurt.”

Perlyea took note of this and moved closer. “You are certain of what you saw Namiri Daret?” She asked. Namiri looked at her. “Oh yes Chief Counsel.”

Anja looked back at Miranda. “Have Eurin make that call E'dira.” Anja finally spoke. “But tell her the direct threat to our Healers out here is negligible.”

E'dira nodded her head. “As you wish.”

Saydia watched as Anja reached into a small pouch on Martin's armor and withdrew something before she turned and moved directly to where Aricia and For'mya now stood. As she had seen Aricia and For'mya act outside the ship on the airfield, she now saw them greet this much shorter woman in the same fashion. And Saydia had been correct in her assessment, there was no mistaking that this new Queen had a lush figure under the body armor she wore and she was breathtaking in her beauty with her silky and radiant hair color and incredible looking jade green eyes and full, soft lips.

“We're secure up here for the immediate future Martin. We detected small objects in low orbit that appear to be satellites of some sort. None of them have power anymore and most are in a degrading orbit. They will cause no issues, though you might get a pretty decent light show in the next few days. We expect they will all begin to enter the atmosphere in the next 48 hours and begin to burn up.” Miranda spoke evenly as she leaned forward in her command chair on the ARIZONA. “Zaala is sending down the generators with the last supply run as you asked. There are twenty of them in total.”

Martin's eyebrows lifted slightly. “That many?” He asked surprised.

Zaala grinned from her spot next to Miranda's chair. “We have become quite proficient at putting them together Martin.” She told him. “It was especially easy with Avi and the Drones helping us to configure them to upgraded specifications.”

“Outstanding!” Martin declared happily.

“I have three RAPTORS out on the edges of the system.” Miranda said. “We...” Martin held up his hand stopping her.

“Manda... I have told you over and over through the years I don't need reports from you!” Martin declared. “That is your realm up there and you are to control it how you see fit. Jeez! How many times do Ben and I have to tell you that?”

Miranda chuckled and E'dira and Zaala grinned beside her chair. “I guess I'm just hard of hearing.” She spoke.

“More like pig headed.” Martin muttered under his breath.

“Captain Nemoa is requesting additional orders Martin.” Miranda said with a smile. “Her words and I quote... Admiral Lorian... I am getting tired of having this stinking, Kintaur hunk of junk attached to my ship by tractor beams. Can't I just blow it the hell out of the stars and be done with it?” ... End quote.”

Emylea Daret could not contain the laughter that burst from her lips at Miranda's words and this caused many heads to turn and look at her, including Martin. Saydia looked horrified at her daughter's actions and was turning to reprimand her when Martin smiled and turned back to Manda.

“Are they a threat Manda?” Martin asked.

“The radiation from their core has dropped to minimal levels.” Miranda answered. “We have hours of sensor scans and our people are going through it now. They have no engine core Martin. Even if they manage to repair their sublight engines, which I doubt, they aren't going anywhere without a main power core.”

Martin nodded his head. “Tell Nemoa to drop a tractor mine on it just to be safe and then take up an orbit of Ventori. Have her keep an eye on it though Manda. They got Emylea Daret off her ship by boarding it and if that ship so much as farts in the wrong direction, tell her to send them to whatever asshole gods they pray to.”

Manda nodded. “Will do.” She said. “I'll let Nemoa know.”

Anja looked at Aricia and For'mya and rolled her eyes. “He has such a wonderful way with words doesn't he?” She muttered causing them to laugh softly and Martin to look at her with a stern expression, which bounced right off her. Anja stuck her four inch long tongue out at Martin, which caused Aricia and For'mya to clutch her tighter and laugh even more.

Saydia Daret saw this and was stunned at the casual interaction between them in front of strangers and underlings.

Martin shook his head and turned back to Miranda. "We're going to lock it down for the night here Manda." Martin told her. "Hold all other resupply runs until morning. We'll hold the last ships here until then. We should be in a better position to know what we really need by then. Danny, Anuk, Kesyla and Nayeca have our team and Kasdan with him on the outskirts of Jorlari so keep a twenty-four hour sensor lock on their position just in case."

"Understood." Miranda said.

"And if my hard headed son ever gets around to contacting us and letting us in on what is going down with the Vanari, please let us know." Martin growled softly.

"You know Andro..." Manda told him with a smile. "He won't report anything until he has the situation well in hand."

"Simparrayr riad con." Martin muttered. (Stubborn rock head)

"Gee... I wonder where he gets that from." Miranda spoke just before she ended the holo transmission.

Martin shook his head and looked at Aricia, Anja and For'mya. "Everyone has to be a comedian." He complained.

Saydia watched as first Aricia and then Anja and For'mya moved up to him and pressed their bodies against his. Aricia and For'mya were on his sides and the petite Queen Anja directly to his front. He didn't hesitate and obviously didn't care who was watching as he lowered his head to nuzzle their cheeks and their ears and Saydia saw an expression of exquisite delight fill all of their expressions. Aricia finally turned and looked at Saydia and the others with those incredible azure blue eyes.

"Beloved... this is Sovereign Regent Saydia Daret." She said.

Martin didn't hesitate and stepped up to stand in front of her and held out his hand. "It's an honor to..."

Martin never got the chance to finish his statement as Perlyea interposed herself in front of Saydia with an angry scowl on her face. "The Sovereign Regent of the Tasmor people allows no foul man to touch her person!" She snarled. "You are beneath her!"

Martin drew his hand back quickly and looked at her with wide, dark brown eyes. It was Aricia who kept the two senior Durcunusaan in the building from moving forward at the blatant disrespect of their King as she stepped in front of them and stopped their movement with a raised hand. These two men were from Martin's 1st Spartan Division and she knew they would brook no disrespect of the King they all so adored.

"Beloved we..." Aricia began to speak but the different female voice interrupted her.

"Now would be a very good time to put aside your inbred and petty arrogance Perlyea Kalrr!" Tobia hissed with a good deal of heat in her voice from the distaste she felt within her. "It will not serve you well here and now."

Saydia turned when she heard that voice for she recognized it instantly. "Tobia!" She almost shouted as she moved from where she was to stand in front of Tobia with wide eyes and a huge smile. "Tobia!"

Saydia embraced Tobia tightly, drawing her close and squeezing her as hard as she could. Tobia was smiling as she returned the embrace and the memories of their nights together came rushing back. To say they were exceptionally pleasant nights in Saydia's arms would be an understatement. They were a much needed distraction at a time in her life when Tobia needed the companionship and warmth. Saydia had been dominant of course, as all Tasmor were, but Tobia had welcomed the new sensations and feelings until she had found her center. She would always love Murano, no matter what happened. She would always crave his touch and his eyes upon her and when she finally came to realize that, Saydia seemed to take note right away. They had parted on extremely friendly terms all those years ago and Saydia did not look any different now. She was still as beautiful now as she had been then.

Tobia looked at her as Saydia held her at arm's length. "You are looking as beautiful as ever Saydia." Tobia told her. "It is so very good to see you once more. I have seen Emylea and Namiri, but did not have the time to ask of your other daughters. Faydia, Kelale, Inara and Rena are well I hope."

Saydia's face was beaming as she embraced Tobia once more. She alone among the Pralor people they had met held Saydia's trust and respect. Tobia had always been honest and forthright with her, even to the point of telling her things that she should not have regarding the history of the Pralor people. "They do what all daughters do and test me and my patience all of the time." Saydia answered and finally pushed her back gently and gazed at her with her brown eyes. “You look radiant Tobia.” She said finally. “Your face... it... happiness has returned to you?” She questioned.

Tobia squeezed her arms. “In a manner of speaking, yes, you could say that.” She replied. Tobia knew Martin and the others were allowing her to act now since she knew the Tasmor and she followed typical Tasmor custom and turned to Anthylea next. This took Aricia by surprise somewhat considering who she knew this Perlyea woman claimed to be and she watched as Tobia stepped up to the taller, dark skinned woman and held out her hands. She would have to inquire of Tobia about this when they were able. “Anthylea Tomar... your presence is very welcomed and honored.”

Anthylea smiled and took her offered hands as she lowered her forehead to Tobia’s. “It is pleasing to be among you once more Tobia of the Pralor people.” Anthylea said softly and with genuine warmth. There had been a point when Anthylea had wanted to kill Tobia for what she shared with Saydia, but Tobia had set her straight on that when she had allowed Anthylea to join her and Saydia. After that night Anthylea knew where Tobia stood and a friendship had quickly taken hold.

Tobia turned then to Namiri and Emylea and gave the same greeting before once more looking at Perlyea. “I see that you have not changed Chief Counsel.” Tobia stated as she saw Helen move up beside Martin from the corner of her eye.

“I am Chief Counsel of...” Perlyea started once more and Tobia held up her hand.

“Yes... I am well aware of who you are Perlyea Kalrr.” Tobia told her with more than a fair amount of disgust in her voice. She turned back to Saydia. “You should not have brought her Saydia.” She spoke.

“How dare you woman!” Perlyea almost screamed.

Tobia turned back to her with real anger in her eyes now. “I do dare because you are a fool!” Tobia snapped right back at her. “Had Saydia acted as you wanted her too, as Aricia told me you wanted too, all of you would be dead now! Do you hear me woman? Dead! And I would be mourning a friend and those she loves!” Tobia spat. “You have no concept at just how close to death you all came, do you Perlyea?”

Saydia moved up beside her. “Tobia what... what do you mean?” She asked.

Tobia turned to look at her. “Martin Leonidas and those with him came here searching for their people Saydia.” Tobia explained. “When we discovered the Kintaur and what they were doing, he didn’t hesitate to rescue Emylea from the Kintaur ship. He didn’t hesitate to have his people here on Ventori help Namiri and her forces trounce the Kintaur. He could have blown you and all of your ships into atoms and to be honest he would not have lost a bit of sleep over it for what he perceived was happening to his people.”

Saydia glanced quickly at Martin who had crossed his arms over his chest and allowed Tobia to take the lead for the moment. He smiled at Saydia and lifted his hand to wave at her. “That would be me.” He stated.

Tobia took Saydia’s hands making her turn back to face her. “I have told Martin and his Queens all I know of the Tasmor people Saydia. Your honored culture and values. Now is not the time for the superiority that many Tasmor seem to think they have to come out. Martin Leonidas does not deal well with the type of arrogance that Perlyea carries within her. None of his people do. They honor and respect the Tasmor for what you have done for his people, but now it is time to sit down and act as the even minded leader that I know you can be. You do not want these people for an enemy Saydia. You want them as your friends and allies. You saw what they did to the Kintaur ship. Namiri told you what they did to those Kintaur here on the surface yes?”

Saydia nodded her head and looked at her daughter before turning back to Tobia. “Yes.” She said finally.

“Then let us sit down.” Tobia spoke. “Martin may be a male Saydia... but he is King of the Lycavorians and he is not unreasonable.”

Martin’s eyebrows rose and he looked at Aricia, Anja and For'mya with surprise in his eyes. Aricia took his hand and Anja patted his chest so that he would say nothing. [Just go with the flow Lover.] Anja told him.

[I am not unreasonable!] Martin exclaimed as For'mya smiled and pressed closer to him.

[You can be rather imposing and unmoving Martin our love.] She told him.

[I am not unmoving!] Martin complained further.

[Martin Leonidas...] They all turned to look at Helen who stood just to their right. They had been shielding their conversation on the off chance that the Tasmor could Mindvoice, but they did this with everyone they didn’t know. Helen, Tobia and the Durcunusaan were among those they did not shield their words from however. [Outside of your son Androcles, who has become far too much like you in that regard, you are the most obstinate and pig headed man I have ever met!]

[What is this? Gang up on Martin day?] He announced loudly which caused the two Durcunusaan officers and even Tobia to look at him and chuckle softly.

Saydia glanced back and forth between them. "Tobia...?" She questioned.

Tobia squeezed her hand and looked at Martin. "Martin... please." Tobia said. "I know what is in your heart and cooperation is needed now."

Martin looked at his wives and mates and then at Helen. He took a deep breath and nodded his head. "Nubou un. I'm game."

Saydia did not understand why Anja reached up and slapped his face and the older woman beside them simply shook her head.

"Son vada carians." Helen muttered out loud. "Now I know where his children get it." She said. "It's a defect in their genes! It has to be."

As soon as Benjamin O'Connor arrived, their happiness factor, already extremely high at the return of their dearest friend and fellow pilot For'mya, went through the ceiling. Endith and Tina O'Connor had no qualms about loving each other as fervently as they loved their husband, but it was always so much better when he was with them, or at the very least nearby as he was now. He and Avi had set up a unique alternate Research Lab on the ARC ROYAL and they knew Ben was in his element when it came to figuring stuff out and designing new things. He hated being in an office and that was also one of the reasons Martin had sent for him. He wanted his intelligence and his ability to see outside the box with him out here and not buried in some office on Apo Prime. Benjamin also never missed a chance to talk with them and his voice filled the interior of the cockpit now as Tina was underneath the center engineering console with a selection of tools laid out around her body and Endith sitting in the pilot's seat going over calculations.

"...Talked to Konalye and the children are all doing fine." Ben's voice echoed in the cockpit from the ARC ROYAL.

Endith's mother and father had practically jumped at the opportunity to have their three grandchildren around them on Earth and when Ben had dropped them off before departing from Earth they were already spoiling them. It did not matter to them that three of their grandchildren were part human and part vampire, and three were human, elf and vampire. They loved them all the same. The man and woman who Endith had chosen to spend her life with had long ago won over Endith's parents and their actions over the years had proven that well beyond doubt. That Ben and Tina had chosen to have Isabella change them so that they could be with their daughter always was the first and largest sign of their love. They knew that one day one of them would change their daughter as well, but that did not matter to them in the least.

Their grandparent's home in Eden City was like the O'Connor children's second home and always had been. And given who their parents were, the O'Connor children were never lacking for men or women to look out for them. They had Drow and Dragoon security, as well as male and female pilots from Earth always willing to help Endith's parents if it was needed.

"They had no problems with the school transfers?" Endith asked as she lifted the data pad and typed on it while looking at the three consoles that surrounded her body.

"Your mother took care of it Endy." Ben's voice answered with a soft chuckle. "She wouldn't let me touch the transfers."

Endith heard Tina chuckle from under the engineering console and smiled herself and looked up at the small speaker above her head. "That's because the last time you tried it took us three weeks to straighten it out Ben." Tina spoke from beneath the console.

"You are not very good with paperwork Benjamin." Endith agreed with a smile.

"Yeah... yeah... go ahead and mock me." Ben spoke. "What are you two doing in your STRIKER anyway?"

"For'mya and I thought we detected a slight vibration in the lateral thruster controls while we were landing." Endith answered. "And the power flow dropped to ninety-three percent during our descent."

“Did you check the D14 Capacitor Board Endy? Damn things are acting up in all our STRIKER birds.” Ben asked.

“Tina is under the console now.” Endith replied. “We do know our own ship Benjamin.” She stated. “I know. I’m only trying to help.” Ben answered.

“You can curl our toes when we return.” Tina echoed from under the console. “How’s that for helping?”

“I can do that.” Ben spoke.

“And you do it so well Benjamin.” Endith said with a wistful smile. She turned when her main console beeped softly and her eyes scanned the instruments in front of her. “That did it Tina. Power flow is back to one hundred percent.”

“Damn board was completely fried.” Tina spoke as she gripped the edge of the console and slid her body out from under the console. “We should probably check the entire batch of spares Ben.”

“I’ll get on it.” Ben spoke up.

Tina began to get to her feet and looked up towards the entrance of the cockpit area and was staring down the barrel of a strange looking weapon being held on her by one of the Tasmor technicians that had come down with them on the STRIKER. There were two of them standing in the small corridor, one of them with her weapon leveled at Endith’s back.

“Ah... Endy. Baby, you had better turn around.” Tina spoke softly as she rose to her feet slowly.

Endith’s head whipped around and her blue eyes grew wide when she saw the two Tasmor behind them.

“Make the fool male be silent.” The taller of the two Tasmor hissed at Tina in a whisper. “And no tricks or we will fire on you.”

Tina lifted her hands slowly, keeping them in front of her. “Ok. Just relax.” Tina lifted her head slightly and looked at the internal COM panel above her head. “Benjamin... we need to let you go now. And if you don’t stop hitting on us I will inform Internal Security and have you arrested.”

“Tina... wha...”

Tina lifted her right hand keeping it in plain view. “Goodbye Colonel O’Connor.” She spoke just before she flipped off the open COM channel. “Ok... it’s closed.”

The second Tasmor dropped something on the deck at Tina’s feet. “You will download everything on your computer and memory cores to this drive. Do so quickly and we will not kill you.”

Tina looked at the small drive at her feet and then at the Tasmor female. “You’re joking right?” She asked.

The Tasmor female stepped into the backhand blow that caught Tina directly across the cheek and staggered her back. “Do I look like I am joking stupid woman?” She snarled. “Do as I say now!”

“You will not get away with this.” Endith spoke now. “There is no place for you to go where we won’t find you. And you won’t get off the planet.”

“Pick it up and give it to her!” The Tasmor female growled at Tina. “Do it now or I will shoot both of you dead and do it myself!”

“Ok. Ok. Relax!” Tina said as she bent over slowly and retrieved the small computer storage drive from the floor. She returned to her feet and slowly held out the drive to Endith. “Take it Endy.”

“I grow impatient!” The Tasmor woman hissed. “These are Kintaur weapons! They are crud weapons at best but very effective. They will think the Kintaur came here and killed you if we shoot you! Now do as I tell you!”

Endith took the small computer drive and looked at it. “This is... this is Pralor tech.” She spat. “Where did you get this?”

“No questions you stupid alien female!” The first Tasmor woman snapped. “Do it now!”

“Listen... just relax and we can...” Tina began to raise her hand in order to try and show that they were not threatening. Tina had already sent a Mindvoice call to the Durcunusaan troops who were guarding the airfield and they were seconds away. Unlike Ben, Tina had not trained with Isabella and the Drow in order to learn how to use and control her new vampire abilities. All that mattered to her was that they would be together with Endith for eternity. What happened next would make her reevaluate that position.

The taller of the two Tasmor females jammed the barrel of her weapon into Tina’s chest and pulled the trigger. The muffled sound of the weapon was barely discernible but to Tina it was as if she got hit in the chest by a fast moving lifter. She slammed back into the bulkhead violently, her head smashing into the unyielding metal as she felt her blood begin to go cold. She heard Endith's scream, saw her beautiful elven wife and lover begin to rise from her pilot's seat, and she saw the second Tasmor female ram her weapon into Endith's chest stopping her.

"Stop!" The Tasmor snarled angrily. "Download the contents of your computer and memory cores onto the drive now or we will shoot you as well!"

"Nubou forn!" Endith screamed as she continued to try and struggle out of her seat. "Tina my love! Tina no!" She screeched as she watched Tina begin to convulse on the deck where she had slumped.

The second Tasmor smashed her weapon across Endith's head with enough force to drive her the remaining way out of her seat and to the deck. "Plug it in quickly!" The first Tasmor spat aloud as she kicked Endith in the head viciously, knocking her back up against the rear of her seat. "Do it now!"

"Hey bitch!" The male voice roared from behind them.

The two Tasmor females whirled around, bringing their weapons up, but they were far too slow.

Admiral Benjamin O'Connor had chosen to have Isabella turn him and Tina because of their combined love for Endith yes, however unlike Tina he was not afraid to learn about and use the new found abilities this transformation had given to him. Ben already knew that he and Tina were very different from other humans, that they were both the products of parents who they now knew were the Eridiani. Genetically superior humans. It was the only explanation for their skill and intelligence through the years of flying and being together. It was also one of the reasons that he and Tina had such a strong attraction to each other even before Endith had come into their lives. Benjamin had embraced this knowledge and had trained for a full decade under Isabella or one of the personal instructors she had assigned to him and he had become just as lethal on the ground as he was behind the controls of any ship within the Union.

Upon hearing Tina call him Colonel, Ben knew instantly that something was wrong. It was a personal code the three of them had worked out decades ago and never used. It was one of things that Martin had taught them that they took to heart. Ben, Tina and Endith loved Martin almost as much as they loved each other and if he offered this knowledge to them to protect themselves, then it was something they would use. Once Tina had spoken that code phrase, Ben was contacting Avi and had him use the ARC ROYAL's new teleporters to transport him directly to their ship on the surface. Ben appeared directly in front of the two Durcunusaan as they were rushing up the ramp of the STRIKER, neither man pausing in their movement and Ben blurred in motion the moment he fully materialized.

When the two Tasmor whirled around at Ben's angry words he was already upon them far faster than they had seen anyone ever move before. Using his enhanced Eridiani genetic structure, now altered by Vampire DNA, Ben hit the larger of the two Tasmor females directly in the face with a powerful closed fist, sending her rocketing backwards to smash against the center computer console of the STRIKER. She was out before she hit the deck, Ben's perfectly aimed blow crushing her cheek as if it was paper. This stunned the second Tasmor enough that the two larger Durcunusaan were upon her before she could react and they held nothing back because she was a female. The two men pummeled her to the deck of the ship, ripping her weapon from her hands and one simply dropped his six foot two, two hundred and thirty pounds of muscle and bone directly on top of her while the other moved to secure the first Tasmor.

Ben gathered Tina into his arms as she continued to seize, foam now coming from her lips. Endith had gathered her wits enough, blood leaking from her lips and the side of her head, and she staggered slightly to slide over beside them and grab Tina's arms. "Tina!" She shouted in desperate panic. "Tina!"

Ben looked up at the senior Durcunusaan. "Have Avi teleport Anja directly here!" He screamed. "Do it now! She's dying!"

"No!" Endith screamed aloud.

Martin Leonidas knew something was wrong when he felt the urgent Mindvoice tremors within the Etheric realm. He didn't react right away because of the conversation that they were having with the Tasmor Sovereign Regent and her people, however the moment he felt Ben's resonance spike and suddenly come so much closer he knew something was very wrong. He was about to rise to his feet when the light yellowish/red flare of light and the soft whining of the teleporter noise engulfed Anja from her chair on his left and she disappeared.

Saydia and the other Tasmor at the large table came to their feet and staggered back in shock at this as Martin tapped his jaw.

“Avi! Lock onto me and send me wherever you just sent Anja!” He barked out the order without thinking. No wife and mate of his would ever go anywhere where there was danger without him again.

Aricia and For'mya also knew something was wrong, as did Helen and Tobia as they could all feel Ben's frantic resonance within the Etheric realm now and they came to their feet just as Martin vanished in that same flare of yellowish/red light and whining noise. Helen was the first to put it together because of her connection to Martin as his Praetorian Mage and she stepped forward tapping her jaw as well.

“Avi... teleport Aricia and For'mya as well! Then issue a Fleet Wide Code Alpha!” She barked out the order and then turned to the two Durcunusaan officers who had stepped forward.

-Initiating now- Avi's voice filled her ear implant and Helen saw Aricia and For'mya vanish from sight and she met the eyes of the Durcunusaan as the door opened and half a dozen more burst into the room. They had been moving the moment they heard their King's order within their implants.

“Lock them down!” Helen snarled angrily pointing at Saydia. “Take their weapons and disarm every Tasmor on the planet! If they resist... shoot them!”

Saydia looked shocked. “What is... what is the meaning of this?” She shouted.

Tobia grabbed her arm. “Helen! What is going on?” She yelled.

Helen glared at Saydia from across the table, her dark eyes full of anger and distrust now. Helen may have been the calm counterbalance to Martin's Leonidas' more instinctive nature as his Praetorian Mage, but she was also Lycavorian. “Two of your people just tried to steal the computer storage and memory cores from the STRIKER you came down on with Aricia and For'mya!” Helen spat at her. “And in the process, one of your people shot a woman that Martin has known for more than thirty years! A woman who has been one of his dearest friends for all of that time! A woman who has saved his life more times than your feeble mind could imagine. She is dying!”

Saydia's eyes were wide. “I do not know what you are speaking of!” She stammered.

Helen stepped right up to the taller woman unafraid in the least and her eyes changed and her fangs burst forth causing Saydia to try and move back but only right into the unmoving bulk of the Durcunusaan trooper behind her. “Your scent tells me you are lying upae! I can smell the lie that you spill from your face!” Helen looked at the Durcunusaan. “Put them in a Lifter and take them to the airfield! I want every Tasmor on this planet disarmed in the next three minutes! Inform Manda what is happening and have her de-shroud all of our ships and go to Code Alpha Alert! Any Tasmor ship that tries to leave the system is to be crippled immediately! I do not care how many are hurt!”

“Helen!” Tobia almost shouted.

Helen looked at her. “If ever you have prayed to your gods Tobia, now would be a good time. If Tina dies... then every Tasmor on this planet will follow her into death.”

Helen took Tobia's arm and began to usher her out as Saydia and the other Tasmor were disarmed without care or status. When Anthylea tried to stop them from touching Saydia one Durcunusaan simply smashed the butt of his A5 into her head without regard and dropped her to her knees. Namiri and Emylea could only stand and look at their mother in shock for she was glaring directly at Perlyea.

Martin knelt on the hard packed ground several meters from the STRIKER's ramp, his eyes focused on where Anja was straddling Tina's now inert body while Ben and Tina were on either side of her clutching her hands, Aricia and For'mya behind each of them trying to provide comfort and support. The glow around Anja's body was at its full brilliance now as she worked to save one of her dear friends. Martin ignored the two Lifter trucks as they screeched to a halt nearby, Helen and Tobia quickly exiting one while half a dozen heavily armed Durcunusaan troops began to pull Saydia and the others from the rear of the second truck without politeness. The ADHOC base was now on full alert and four minutes after Helen's order had gone out, every Tasmor on the planet had been disarmed without an incident. All of them were shocked at this action, not knowing what was going on, but all of them were smart enough to know that these Alpha Lycavorians were not in a mood to be denied. Nalmos had shifted to his wolf form when he saw the Sovereign Regent and those with her forcibly put in the back of the truck and he began sprinting for where he saw the trucks heading. The thought did not occur to him as to why no Lycavorian Alpha tried to stop him as he ran. He did not know that his King's orders were very specific and very direct to the Durcunusaan.

“These men and women are our people! This was their home! They will be afforded every comfort we can provide to them no matter what we have to do!”

Martin watched as another, smaller Lifter truck appeared from over the horizon and kick up dirt as it skidded to a stop on the other side of where Anja was. His dark eyes took in Thoti as he lifted Duewa from the rear of the Lifter before it had completely stopped. Duewa didn't miss a single beat as she sprinted uncaring to where Anja was and fell to the ground beside her.

“Anja?” She gasped.

“Duewa... get under her head!” Anja hissed softly. “She was shot with some form of weapon that introduced a massive dose of neutron radiation into her body. We need to stop the breakdown of her cells and repair the damage. I am holding her stable now, keeping it from her heart and brain.”

Duewa didn't hesitate scooted back to a position where she gingerly lifted Tina's head from the ground and arranged it gently in her lap. She dropped her hands to either side of Tina's head and then her body began to glow nearly as brightly as Anja's. “I have her now as well.” Duewa spoke softly. Her eyes widened as she sensed the amount of poison within Tina's body. She also knew what neutron radiation could do to a vampire. “Gods Anja!” She gasped.

“I know!” Anja spoke. “Work quickly Dee! I will purge the radiation, just keep her heart and brain shielded.”

Duewa closed her eyes and reached within herself as she spread her healing powers out through Tina's upper body. Since becoming wolf and being around Anja Duewa had become much more instinctive in nature. Her love for Thoti and her blossoming and powerful friendship with had given her new strength and confidence. Duewa called on that confidence now as Anja's new nickname for her echoed in her head. Anja had taken to calling her Dee these last weeks and Duewa found she adored the nickname, mainly because it showed her just how far she had come.

The soft white glow encompassed Tina's entire body now as Anja and Duewa combined their powers once more. Anja was widely recognized as the single most powerful Hadarian Healer to have ever lived, eclipsing even her own father and mother, and over the last months Duewa had learned so much from her it didn't compare to anything she had learned in the years before and Duewa had now become quite powerful in her own rite. A much more powerful and confident Healer than she had ever been before and now they both worked once more to save a life together.

“I have her now.” Duewa stated softly. “Go Anja! And work quickly!”

Anja nodded and closed her eyes, concentrated intently, and she released the full force of her healing abilities. The Metaphysical Radiation within her body pulsed outward, becoming a cleansing wave as it engulfed Tina completely. The speculation that the virus in Martin's blood had somehow increased her natural powers to higher levels was something that Anja knew to be very true. She did not speak of it with anyone except her daughter Eliani and Eurin for obvious reasons of security, but she knew it to be true. Eurin had already suspected this was happening from the moment she had met Anja, simply because of how quickly she had mastered the skills it took decades for normal Healers to learn. None of this mattered to Anja Leonidas now. Her love for Martin and her fellow Queens was absolute and this love only served to make her that much more powerful and willful.

The neutron radiation was like a thin yellow stream to Anja's senses within Tina's body and her blood and Anja Leonidas attacked it as she would any other enemy trying to hurt her or one she cared for. With extreme prejudice. With Duewa's powerful healing essence, almost as bright as her own because she had come so far, shielding Tina's heart and brain from the poison and keeping it from insinuating itself into her vital body systems, Anja began. Starting at her toes and then slowly moving up her entire body, Anja localized the neutron radiation poison, exceptionally lethal to any vampire no matter their blood, and she began to eradicate it.

Martin ignored the Durcunusaan as they forced Saydia and the others to their knees beside the Lifter truck, their eyes wide as they witnessed what very few had ever seen. The full force of Anja Leonidas' incredible healing abilities. A dozen more Durcunusaan appeared from all around the area and instantly they surrounded their fiery and petite Queen, their Shi Viska's erupting from Flatspace and forming a near impenetrable barrier around her.

It seemed to last forever, but in actuality it was only slightly more than a minute before Anja slowly lifted her hands from Tina's chest and opened her eyes. Her jade green eyes were fully changed to her wolf persona by now and her fangs were fully extended, adding to the ferociousness of her appearance. This did not frighten anyone in the area for all of them had seen her like this before, though the gasps from the Tasmor were quite obvious and loud.

"Anja?" For'mya gasped as she held tightly to Endith.

"Duewa... back off slowly now Dee." Anja spoke looking at her.

Duewa nodded knowing what she meant and slowly she began to withdraw the healing radiation shield from around Tina's heart and brain. Her hands glowed brightly beside Tina's cheeks until she too lifted them clear of her body.

The reaction was almost instantaneous as Tina's eyes flew open and she groaned out loud. "Ohhhh!"

"Tina!" Endith almost screamed as she leaned over and placed her lips to Tina's cheek and gripped her shoulder and hand tightly. "Tina our love!"

Tina's blue eyes fluttered open slowly and came into focus. She looked very dazed and confused and then she saw Anja straddling her chest and blinked several times in puzzlement. "What?" She gasped. "What... Anja? What is going on?"

It was then that Ben let go of the breath he was holding and dropped his head to Tina's chest beside Endith's in happiness.

Tina looked above her and saw Duewa's smiling face, her head still resting in her lap. Her blue eyes once more focused on Anja. "Anja... I have been telling you for years that I am already spoken for and you can't have me." Tina muttered. "What are you doing sitting on my chest?"

Anja burst out laughing and quickly moved to her knees beside Tina and leaned over, kissing Endith's head and gripping the back of Ben's collar as For'mya and Aricia moved closer as well, tears of happiness in their eyes.

Tina looked up once more at Duewa. "Jesus... what the hell hit me?" She gasped aloud.

Martin felt the worry leave him in a wave as Tina asked that last question of Duewa and he exhaled ever so slowly. He turned his head as Helen settled beside him, her hands going to his shoulders and her forehead dropping to his shoulder. The Data Dump, as Andro had coined it, happened immediately between them and Martin saw all that Helen had done and what she thought they should do now. She also saw the savage anger within his mind that this had happened at all given how they had treated the Tasmor since arriving here. She nodded her head to him, acknowledging this anger but cautioning restraint. They needed no words between them and she squeezed his shoulders before rising to her feet once more and turning to Tobia. Martin got to his feet as well just as Colin stepped up to him with the Kintaur weapon in his hand.

Though a part of his team, Colin had been selected to remain with Martin pretty much all of the time now because of his vampiric skills and because he was the finest tracker any of them had ever seen at work when he had been wolf, and now he was even better as a vampire.

Colin held out the rudimentary looking Kintaur projectile weapon. "It's similar to our old HKs Skipper." He spoke. "Crude by our standards now, but it's loaded with hollow points that are filled with a neutron radiation based poison. That why Tina began to seize. These two shit heads must have hid in storage closet sometime on the flight down. Tina wouldn't have smelled their blood because Tasmor blood is already too faint to detect. Must be because of their DNA, but even standing here I can barely smell the blood within them."

"They almost killed her Colin." Martin muttered softly.

Colin nodded his head. "But they didn't Skipper." He said standing in front of the man who had saved his life more times than he could remember through the years. He held up the Pralor Data Storage unit. "They had this as well."

Martin took the unit and turned it over in his hands. "This is Pralor technology Colin." He said. "Where did they get it?"

Colin shrugged his broad shoulders and motioned with his head to where the two Tasmor females were kneeling at the foot of the ramp with three Durcunusaan surrounding them. One was bleeding from the mouth and nose, and the entire right side of her face was heavily bruised. "Ben hit her." Colin told him. "He wasn't real nice about it either."

Martin took the Kintaur weapon from Colin and turned his head to look and Saydia kneeling on the ground. His eyes changed then and his fangs extended instantly, the savage looking dual fangs causing Saydia's eyes to grow wide as he moved the few meters to where they knelt. Martin stopped in front of her and squatted down his now yellow/gold eyes glaring at her intently. Saydia had never seen a Lycavorian in this state before, his dual fangs, the outer set long than the inner set, looking as if they could tear her flesh to shreds in seconds.

"Why don't you explain to me exactly what you thought you were going to accomplish by doing this?" Martin asked her too calmly. "Nalmos speaks highly of the Tasmor and I have thanked both of your daughters for what they were trying to do for my people. I honor that. Then you do this?"

"Say nothing Sovereign Regent!" Perlyea hissed. "We do not need to explain ourselves to a man!"

Martin held up the Pralor storage unit. "Where did you get this?" He asked.

Saydia looked at the piece of equipment with wide eyes. "I do not... I do not know what that is." She barked.

"No?" Martin asked her once more. "This is a Pralor Computer Storage Unit." He spoke aloud, Tobia's eyes going wide when she heard him and this caused her to move closer to him. "Your two assassins had this on them. They were going to try and download the memory and computer core of our STRIKER weren't they?"

Martin smelled Nalmos finish sprinting into the clearing and shift back to his human form. A Beta Wolf he may have been, but his keen wolf sense of smell told him instantly what had occurred here. Nalmos moved promptly up beside Helen who took his arm and shook her head.

"Do not interfere Nalmos." She said softly.

"Feravomir I am..." Nalmos began but again Helen shook her head.

"This has nothing to do with you or our people any longer." She told him.

Martin turned as Tobia came up beside him now and he held up the Storage core to her. She took it in her hands with wide eyes, gazing at it for several seconds before lifting her head and looking at Saydia.

"Saydia... this is a portable storage unit." She said. "We make these on Artaaya. How did you...?"

"Sovereign Regent we are Tasmor and we do not need to tell them anything!" Perlyea spoke.

Martin looked at her now. "You do if you hope to get off this planet alive." He told her.

"You would not dare do anything!" Perlyea snapped at him.

That is when Aricia's head came up from where she still rested beside Benjamin. They were helping Tina gather her strength and wits about her once more as both Anja and Duewa were examining her. For mya and Anja felt it first, then Helen and Tobia. This time Tobia did not try to intervene in any way for she instinctively knew to do so would be quite painful to attempt. Aricia Leonidas crossed the distance between the two groups in three blinks and when she reached Perlyea; her azure blue eyes were burning brightly in anger, her own wolf fangs fully extended. She grabbed a handful of Perlyea's long blond hair and savagely yanked her head back causing Perlyea to cry out in pain as Aricia practically bent her body back and lifted her right hand. The Etheric knife exploded from her closed fist and she barred her vicious dual fangs.

"Our Beloved husband and mate may not wish to strike a woman, but I am not so limited upae! The woman your fool soldiers attacked is one who we consider our family! Our family! When you attacked her, you attacked us!" Aricia screamed at her, her fangs displayed so very prominently as were her black ringed azure eyes. Perlyea's own eyes were wide in real fear now as she saw the point of that Etheric knife inch closer to her face. "You will tell us what we want to know you stupid, arrogant fucking woman! If you do not, then I will plunge this into your brain and leave it so that you to babble your way to death on this ground beneath us! And you will have brought doom to all of your people!"

"Mother!" Namiri exclaimed from beside Saydia on the ground.

"I ordered it!" Saydia barked finally glaring at Martin. "I gave the order to them to take what was in your computer banks!"

Martin looked at Saydia and knew instantly that she was lying. The adrenalin dump that Lycavorians could detect when someone lied was even more pronounced in Tasmor it appeared. That adrenalin dump rushed through Saydia now but Martin remained silent and rose to his feet.

"Saaurano..." Martin spoke softly. "Release her."

"Beloved she is..." Aricia began for she had smelled the same adrenalin dump as well.

“I know.” Martin spoke reaching for her and touching her arm. Aricia turned to look at him. [Something else is going on here Little Wolf.] Martin told her in the shielded connection. [She is protecting her but she did not know this was going to happen.]

Aricia glanced quickly at Saydia and then back to him. [Why?]

Martin shook his head. [Did you see the surprise in her eyes when I showed her the Pralor storage unit?]

Aricia’s wolf eyes grew slightly wider. [Elder Valael said the Kintaur knew they would be here.]

Martin nodded his head. [Do you smell it Little Wolf? Breathe real deep and search for it. I will guide you.]

Aricia didn’t hesitate for an instant for she knew just how sensitive their Beloved’s nose was when it came to detecting scents. Whether it was because of their Praetorian bloodline or not, both Martin and their pureblood sons Androcles and Denali had senses of smell that were far beyond anything ever recorded among their people. Aricia inhaled deeply then allowing Martin to guide her with his mind, sifting through everything around them, including the smell of Tasmor blood which, while faint even to them, was still discernible. Her azure colored wolf eyes grew slightly wider as she finally detected it and she looked at him.

Helen knew they were speaking about something entirely different yet very important and she moved closer to them and reached out to touch Martin’s arm. Her own dark eyes grew wide when they passed to her what they smelled and within seconds of touching him Helen’s head immediately snapped around to look at the dark skinned Tasmor Anthylea.

“Son vada carians!” She gasped aloud.

Helen staggered slightly back and Tobia reached for her quickly. “Helen? What is it?” She gasped as Helen gripped her arms tightly, Nalmos coming up behind them to reach for Helen as well.

“Feravomir?” He stammered.

“You have no right to do this?” Saydia finally barked out. “I demand you release us! Your pilot is alive and you stopped us from taking your precious information! Now I demand you release us!”

Martin looked at her and shook his head. “I’m thinking not.” He stated calmly. “You have some questions to answer and you are not going anywhere until I have those answers!”

“We do not have to tell you anything!” Saydia snapped at him. “You have no reason to hold us any longer! I will discipline my people for their actions!”

Martin chuckled softly and had Saydia Daret known Martin Leonidas in any way she would have wet her pants right there. “I am Lycavorian.” Martin spoke calmly. Too calmly to suit those around him who knew what he was capable of doing. “Ventori is a Lycavorian planet. Which means it is my planet. These are my people and the one thing I swore to the spirits of my father and grandfathers when I became King was that I would find and protect all of my people. No matter what I had to do.”

“Your threats mean nothing to me!” Saydia hissed at him.

“Threats?” Martin said. “I’m not threatening you Sovereign Regent Daret. What I am doing is telling you exactly how it will be. You have over three million of my people scattered across your little toy empire. I want them back. All of them. And you will tell me where I can find them and where you got that Pralor tech.” Martin squatted down in front of Saydia again. “Then you are going to tell me what kind of sick experiments you and your people have been running on my people. Every single detail.”

Saydia’s wide eyes looked at him. “What... what do you mean?” She gasped.

Martin rose to his feet. “I want to know why your protector there has Lycavorian blood within her.” He said pointing at Anthylea. “I can smell it in her veins and you are going to tell me how and why.”

“How dare you threaten me?” Saydia screamed. “Who do you think you are? You are nothing but a savage, brute of a man!”

Martin moved far faster than anyone could follow and he shifted his body to the left. His right hand filled with the K14 Kinetic Magnum that always resided there and he leveled it at the Tasmor female who had shot Tina. The single boom echoed across the area, causing Saydia to jump in horror as she saw her soldier’s body flung back several feet from the impact of the devastating close range weapon.

“I am a man who is out of patience with the arrogance that seems to ooze out of the pores of everyone who lives in this fucking quadrant of space!” Martin turned back to her as he spoke. Saydia looked at him with shocked eyes at what he had just done, real fear now showing on her beautiful face. “I want answers to my questions.” Martin told her as he lifted the K14 once more and leveled it directly at Namiri’s stunned face.

“I suggest you start giving these answers to me.” Martin growled. “You don’t want to see what I will do if I lose my temper lady.” He said. “And that temper is just about ready to explode. I suggest you start talking within the next five seconds. You won’t like the result if you don’t.” Martin jacked back the hammer on the K14. “Your time starts now.”

CHAPTER FORTY-FOUR

AUSTROVA

EMBER COVE

EASTERN COAST, 49 KILOMETERS FROM MYDALA CITY

RE MYDALA FAMILY SUMMER ESTATE

Alrerin stood on the balcony of the second floor, holding the steaming mug of tea in his hands as his eyes gazed upon the rising sun over the expanse of the teal ocean surface in the distance. He had never been to Coren’s Summer Estate, Ember Cove, and now he knew why he had heard so many speak fondly of it. It was slightly larger than his estate in Mydala City, with an incredible view of the ocean and the distant mountain ranges on both sides. The beach below the estate was large, extending as far as the eye could see in either direction and covered in fine white sand. A beach that was now occupied by his daughter, his grandchildren and men and women that he had once considered beneath him.

Alrerin Sha Harael knew the exact moment when his distorted views began to change on everything, and it was because of the man below him on the sand. Riordian’s devotion to Narlei had been nothing short of absolute. The man simply did not question who or what his daughter was and he loved her with everything that he was. They sat beside one another on the beach now, their youngest child in Narlei’s lap while their other children sat in and around Riordian as they watched the massive black wolf chase its tail in front of them. All of them were laughing hysterically at what Andro was doing. Caliria sat with Sadi and the other wives and mates of Androcles Leonidas, Coren’s next oldest daughter Arduri snuggled close to Androcles’ brother Denali and the exotic young woman Lisisa Leonidas who had a hand in saving his very own life not hours ago. It was Androcles who was in wolf form however, and chasing his tail in circles as Alrerin’s grandchildren laughed, merriment that even Narlei and the others were echoing. It was not often that you saw a wolf the size of Androcles Leonidas chasing his tail in circles and they were thoroughly enjoying it. Alrerin had seen many wolves when visiting the Protectorate homeworld, Riordian himself was as large as any wolf he had ever seen there, but Androcles was beyond massive and easily over three feet tall at the shoulders. Alrerin estimated he was close to, if not over, three hundred pounds as well. He had heard Riordian’s father once say that size ran within the bloodlines of Lycavorians and if Androcles was this large, Alrerin truly did not want to see the size of his father.

Alrerin turned his head slightly when he felt Coren come up beside him with a similar mug in his hands. This mug held a dark liquid in it that smelled rich and heavy with a faint walnut tinge to it. His eyes narrowed somewhat and Coren smiled as he lifted the mug slightly.

“It is coffee.” Coren answered. “Apparently it originates from Earth and there are many different blends. This blend is one of the most popular according to my daughters. Androcles’ mother created it while she carried him within her. It is the single most popular brand within their entire Union now it seems and it has made his mother exceedingly wealthy. All of their family really. I put walnut flavored cream in it and it is simply delicious.”

“It smells very good.” Alrerin stated as his head turned back at the sound of his youngest grandson’s excited squeal and the high pitch of laughter.

Androcles had apparently twisted himself into such a position that he had fallen over onto the sand on his side and his grandchildren and the others thought it hilariously funny.

“Were you able to get any sleep Alrerin?” Coren asked.

Alrerin turned and met his eyes once more. “Were you my friend?”

Coren shook his head with a smile. “No.”

“I was reviewing the information you gave to me when we arrived here.” Alrerin said. “The message that young man left for you even when he believed you hated him and his people.” He spoke indicating Androcles below them. “What made you begin to change your views Coren? In these last weeks and months your entire outlook has altered to a new course.”

Coren nodded his head. “Yes it has.” He answered. “I believe it was a combination of many things really, but none of it really made any sense until Denali told me something that I had never even considered.” Coren took a sip of the coffee before continuing. “He told me that perhaps I had misinterpreted what the Gypsy woman had told me all those years ago. That what I thought her words meant was wrong; that they meant something entirely else. When I stopped to consider this Alrerin, I discovered that he was right. All of these years I believed she meant one thing, when in fact, her words to me that day meant the complete opposite. I lost Devra and Tastia because I believed something entirely different. I will not lose Nyosa because I wear blinders. Not now. Not after what Caliria has been through and what she and Arduri and even Naesta have found. What Nirilo discovered so long ago about these people.”

Alrerin nodded his head as he turned to look out on the beach once more. “He calls me father you know.” Alrerin spoke softly. “Without hesitation or doubt. And his love for Narlei and their children knows no bounds. He truly does not care that they cannot shift their forms. Only that they are children of his blood; of Narlei’s blood.”

“You know of course that our scientists have been wrong for centuries.” Coren spoke. “We as Vanari may not be able to shift our forms if the virus within them is introduced into our systems, but it does change us Alrerin.”

Alrerin nodded his head. “Oh yes.” He stated. “Nyosa has bitten you?”

Coren nodded slowly. “I was shocked at first.” He said. “Angry even. Until I realized why she had done this. And what it means.”

“So you have become like Narlei. Like you daughters?” Alrerin asked.

Coren shook his head. “Not on as large a scale... no. Nyosa is not fully Lycavorian as Androcles and Denali and even Riordian. The virus within their bodies is so much more potent from what Caliria tells me. But I have embraced even the small changes within me that are beginning to take place Alrerin.”

“I cannot remain as First Regent Coren.” Alrerin spoke softly. “Not after what I have allowed to happen for so long because of my own selfishness.”

Coren looked at him. “Do not make that decision just yet Alrerin. We need you now more than ever.” He told him.

“How many have I allowed to be taken because of my inaction Coren?” Alrerin spoke. “How can I ever look our people in the eye and live that down.”

“You can do that by helping us to bring Ardan and those aligned with him down.” Coren said. “You have not seen all of the information that Dutkne and Jokros have discovered just in these last months Alrerin my friend. When we show it to you, when you see what Androcles has planned, then you may look at things differently.”

Alrerin met his eyes. “What do you mean?”

Coren smiled now. “Let us just say that even I was stunned at what he is going to do. And that was before I came to see what I believe now Alrerin. Now...” Coren sipped his coffee once more. “Now my friend, now justice will be ours for thousands of years of pain and humiliation. And we won’t have to lift a finger.”

“I don’t follow.” Alrerin said.

“Everything changed Alrerin.” Coren said. “The moment Androcles discovered Caliria, the moment Denali began to love Arduri, everything changed. And that change will very soon come storming to the front, and there is nothing Ardan will be able to do to stop it.”

Coren and Alrerin turned as they heard Jokros move quickly onto the balcony. Coren knew immediately that something was wrong.

“Jokros? What is it?” He asked.

Jokros held out the data pad to him. “Coren... we may have a problem.” He said as Coren took the pad.

Coren’s eyes grew wider as he read. “By the prophets!” He exclaimed. He looked up. “Does Androcles know?”

Jokros shook his head. "This Admiral Sa'sur asked that I inform him. She is too busy trying to arrange some sort of mission to get them back."

"How long before the other SBR members arrive?" Coren asked.

"Three hours exactly." Jokros answered as Coren handed the data pad to Alrerin.

"My god!" Alrerin gasped as he read.

"Get Androcles and the others Jokros." Coren told him. "Bring them into the main lounge in the basement level. All of us need to be there and we need to act quickly before Ardan discovers this."

"You think Ardan doesn't know?" Jokros gasped.

Coren shook his head. "No... this was done by the OSG." Coren said. "Ardan is not brave enough to do something like this alone. It would be too easy to tie it back to him. After last night he will not over reach his bounds. He thinks he is in excellent position."

"Coren is right Jokros." Alrerin stated now as he looked up. "And I may have a way to confirm that. Coren... I need your secure transmission codes."

"...My fault Andro." Dutkne spoke as he stood next to Andro while he read the data pad. "I thought it might look better if they used one of our ships instead of a STRIKER. I should have known better and..."

Andro looked at him and shook his head immediately. He reached up and placed his hand behind Dutkne's neck. "This is not your fault." He spoke firmly while squeezing his neck. "Put it out of your mind Dutkne. You are not responsible for this."

Everyone was in an upbeat mood as they began to enter the basement lounge even after the events of last night and Coren and Alrerin could once more only marvel at how quickly these men and women recovered and rebounded from dealing with different dire crisis. Their own daughters now acted in this way. Sadi was the first to detect that something was wrong as she walked into the lounge with one of Narlei and Riordian's daughters between her and Ne'Veha and swinging back and forth between their bodies hanging by their hands. Her jungle green eyes narrowed as Andro turned to face her and she instantly felt his resonance reach for her and Ne'Veha and then the others. As their laughter faded quickly, Denali and Dorian and the others began to take notice and it was Murano who stepped forward and spoke first as Sadi, Ne'Veha, and Sehri moved to Andro quickly, Lu'ria, Carisia and Caliria right behind them.

"Androcles... what is wrong?" Murano asked.

It had been Mari who had pestered him to take his boots off and enjoy the warmth of the sand and Murano was now very happy he had. He had sat beside Deion Leonidas and took note of how Mari sat between his long legs and her fingers stroked his arms and leg as they rested there watching Androcles. They were very possessive of each other and Murano knew well how Deion would now view Mari. He should have been upset about it in some manner; angry with himself for not cautioning Mari against such a relationship, but Murano found he was extremely comfortable with their relationship and even very happy. Deion was cut from the same mold as his father and brothers and it was already obvious that he worshiped Mari to no end. And Murano could not deny the brilliance of Mari's face or the happiness that permeated her Etheric resonance.

Andro turned to meet him and the others as they came into the lounge. There were chairs and couches spread all around the massive room and Andro could tell Coren had used it for meetings before.

"Everyone grab something to sit on." Androcles told them. "Our timetable has just been advanced."

Denali and Dorian stood beside one another while Sheva, Onera, Lisisa and Arduri settled on the couch directly in front of them. Eliani and Brendi squeezed onto a chair that Jomann stood behind, Kalis standing beside him with Serale. Eirene and Miseo moved to a single chair and Eirene sat casually on Miseo's leg when he sat on the foot rest, ignoring the chair. Cowan didn't ignore the chair however, and he pulled it out for Sherice, who settled into it without question. Ridor and Daio stood along the side wall closest to them with Kameka and Cvea tucked against their new husbands. Deion now stood beside the door into the lounge with Mari leaning up against him.

Androcles stepped forward and withdrew his P1 from the pouch at the small of his back and set it on the table in front of all of them. He tapped it once and the split holographic image of Sa'sur and Armen appeared.

"Sa'sur... we're all here now." Andro spoke. "Why don't you and Armen bring everyone up to speed?"

Sa'sur didn't hesitate and shifted her position on the SCIMITAR's bridge. She moved over in front of the huge star chart on the bridge and motioned to a sector of nearby space with her finger. "It appears that the OSG grew a set of nor while we were kicking their asses last night." She spoke. "Well... at least part of their organization did. As most of you know, our small political delegation left for Amanuce yesterday morning. They were going for a meeting in the capital of Lorent with the former Protectorate Council to sign the initial merger documents on Deia's behalf and then begin the main transition. They were traveling in Protectorate H9 Heavy Civilian Transport, the equivalent to our MENKLAs. Thirteen hours into the flight, just about the time the OSG began their attacks here on Austrova, they were attacked in open space and disabled by what appears to be a short squadron of Enverr Tactical Assault Craft."

Riordian sat forward now in his chair. "The Enverr?" He exclaimed.

-The pilots were able to compile a short emergency burst transmission- Armen spoke now from the bridge of SPARTA'S WRATH. -They sent it three point two seconds before the main power core was disabled-

Dutkne lifted the data pad in his hand from beside Andro. "This was received at the Vanari Embassy on Amanuce six hours ago. We provide security to their embassy there and this was given to one of the exterior guards."

Dutkne set it on the table beside the P1 and activated it.

The crude holotransmission appeared to be taking place inside a dimly lit ship of some sort. All of them saw the tall figure, his dry, brownish skin very evident. With the exception of three tendrils of flesh that extended out on either side of his large head there was no hair on his face or head. He did not appear to have ears either. His reddish color eyes were large and widely spaced in the center of his head. He had no lips to speak of but a very blunt and flat nose was visible just above what was his mouth.

"I am Commander Rotaxe of the Unified Enverr Consortium." The gravelly voice began. "We have taken control of your ship and everyone on it. They are alive... for now." The Enverr stepped to the side and there were several gasps as they all saw Senator Ya'sur, Senator Pyath, and the Folcani Senator Rhauf and Ulana kneeling on the deck of the ship with their hands secured behind their backs. "As for your soldier..." Rotaxe motioned to the left and they saw another Enverr shove Torian into the transmission cone. His hands were securely bound as well and he appeared to have been severely beaten, his face bloody and bruised. "He killed four of my men before we subdued him. His life is now mine."

"Torian! No!" Cowen barked aloud as he stepped toward the transmission.

It was becoming common knowledge among those on Andro's team that Cowen and Torian had struck up an unlikely friendship that was growing by leaps and bounds. Sherice reached out as she came to her feet and took his hand within both of hers.

"Cowen..." She spoke softly. "Be calm Cowen my love."

Cowen turned to look at her quickly and everyone saw him instantly relax as Sherice's hand reached up to stroke the soft fur on his face.

"I speak to the boy Prince now!" Rotaxe continued from the transmission. "You will not act against the OSG assets any longer. We do business with them and you have disrupted this. This will cease immediately. We enjoy the Vanari females they sell to us and this will continue or I will execute each of your people here. After I have tortured them for all the information they have within their heads and then I will give the female to my men as a prize and let them fuck her until she goes crazy. The information they give to me I will sell to the OSG."

They watched as another Enverr stepped into transmission and bent over Ulana, his large hand squeezing her firm breast hard. Ulana cried out in pain and tried to move away but the Enverr grabbed her long, dark hair and yanked her head back as he continued to feel her up.

"Leave... leave her alone!" Torian screamed as blood and spittle flying from his lips as he turned.

Rotaxe also turned and savagely punched Torian in the side of the face so hard all of them heard Torian groan in pain and more blood splashed wetly on the deck as he dropped face first to the hard metal.

"I want one hundred million Vanari credits, for each of these poor excuses for flesh. Your actions have robbed me of profit so I will take it from you instead of the Vanari." Rotaxe continued as he turned back to the transmission. “I also want six of those special ships that the Union likes so much... STRIKERS they are called. All of them fully fueled and fully loaded with their standard weapons. You can fill these ships with two dozen Vanari females and all of the medical supplies and Union ground weapons that can fill these ships, to include three of these Hadarian Medical Computers that you so covet.” Rotaxe chuckled now. “I will give you three days to gather these things and contact me so that you can deliver them to me. If you do not... then I will kill each of them just as I have killed the pilots. They were useless to me anyway.”

Two more Enverr dragged the inert forms of the two Lycavorian pilots into the transmission and unceremoniously dumped their bleeding and broken bodies on the deck. It was easy enough to see that they were dead as each of them had no less than three holes in their heads from large caliber weapons, as well as several other wounds on their bodies.

“Three days boy.” Rotaxe spoke again. “If you do not cease your actions against the OSG and give me what I want then I will send each of them back to you in pieces. Do not doubt my willingness to do this. Three days.”

The transmission ended and vanished and the room was silent.

Murano moved around everyone as they sat there shocked and he stepped right up to Androcles and Dutkne. He didn't hesitate and erected an Etheric shield around the three of them for he knew Dutkne was Andro's Praetorian Mage. Andro looked at him.

[I will not allow this to stand Murano.] He spoke slowly and Murano could easily detect the distinct flavor of deep seated anger welling within him; within them both.

[Nor will I.] Dutkne hissed in anger.

Murano shook his head knowing he had to defuse the situation quickly or Androcles would act on instinct alone and that is not what they needed now.

[Nor should you... but I can sense the anger within you both. The others cannot... but I can. And so can Sarlana, even aboard SPARTA'S WRATH as she is.] Murano squeezed their shoulders. [I have that same anger within me Androcles. In the short time I have been among you and the others I have been reborn and I have come to view all of you as the family that I never had. We were always taught to not give in to our emotions, that once released we would not be able to control them. That way of thinking is now wrong and I see it clearly within me. Your grandfather knew exactly what he was doing when he merged your people and ours Androcles. Embrace the emotion that burns within you... allow it to feed both of you... but do not succumb to it. That is what my time with your father and now you has taught me so far. And I welcome it. Let us keep our focus however.]

Andro nodded his head and reached up to squeeze Murano's arm. [Thank you Murano.]

Murano tightened his grip on their shoulders and nodded his head to them both. [Work as you are supposed to work now.] He told him. [Praetorian Warrior and Praetorian Mage. Use the strength this bond gives to you, to your brothers and Jomann. And let's retrieve our people.]

Murano gave their shoulders one last squeeze before he turned and returned to his spot beside Mari near the wall. He noticed that Nara had moved over beside her brother now and as he looked quickly he saw that all of them had moved into an almost instinctive order. Lisisa, Eliani and Sheva were touching Denali, Jomann and Dorian in some fashion just as Nara was holding her twin's arm. They were The Praetorian Mages to their Warriors, and while Murano did not doubt that Arduri, Brendi and Onera played some role in this as well, it was the three sisters and Sheva who were the base of support.

It was Sadi who broke the silence in the room. “Andro we have to do something.” She spoke keeping her voice calm.

“How the hell did they know what we call our STRIKERS?” Ridor asked from the side. “It took the Coven a thousand years before they discovered the designation of those ships. This spacer scum did not just discover this by accident in a few weeks! We have never even seen them before now! Have we?”

“They have remained out of the overall scheme of things.” Dutkne answered. “At least until now.”

“And the Hadarian Medical Systems?” Eliani spoke up.

“Eliani is right. Hadarian Medical Computers are not spoken of openly Androcles. You know this as well as we do.” Serale spoke from where she stood beside Kalis. “How did they get such information?”

“My brother.” Brendi blurted out now watching as all eyes focused on her. “Corbin has used the Enverr in the past Andro. The Regional Commanders and the Home Office gave him complete autonomy in running operations within the Alpha Quadrant. He had contacts with the Kavalians in the Alpha Quadrant and as long as he was in charge and had people on Earth, he would have discovered these things and passed them to the OSG. And his Enverr contacts obviously.”

“Brendi, could you break the decryption on the computer cores that Fedor downloaded from the OSG Command and Control center in Mydala City?” Andro asked her.

Brendi nodded her head. “Each OSG had their own encryption Algorithm, but given enough time I could probably dismantle Adams’ and find out what is on those drives.” She answered confidently.

Alrerin stepped forward before Coren could stop him. “Prince Androcles... I am not...”

Coren reached for his arm. “Alrerin no.” He stated too late.

“...I am not very comfortable with allowing a former OSG Operative access to these computers.” Alrerin spoke.

Eliani came to her feet and was about to tear into the older man but Brendi’s hand took hers and squeezed. “Eliani don’t.” She stated.

“I will not let anyone speak nonsense about you!” Eliani snapped. “Not when they don’t know you. I...”

“He is right.” Brendi said causing Alrerin’s eyes to grow wide at her words. She rose to her feet and looked at Alrerin. “I would feel the same in your shoes First Regent... but I was an Analyst and not an Operative. I was not given a choice in what I did because I was only trying to protect my parents and sisters. You can have someone assist me if you like, someone from Vanari Intelligence that you trust, but I can do this. I want to do this.”

Alrerin was taken aback somewhat by her honesty and it showed on his face but he looked at Androcles quickly. “I have someone in Vanari Intelligence that I trust implicitly.” He said as his keen political mind began to work. “If Brendi Faith is willing to do this then Ardan and his cronies would not be able to use this against us.”

“Andro they got the flight plan somehow.” Carisia said from the couch. “Which means someone from the Lycavorian Embassy told them. Not even the Vanari had that information.”

Andro held up his hand. “Everyone stop!” He barked out the words bringing silence to the large room. Alrerin looked taken aback by this display but this time Coren was beside him and took his arm.

“Wait Alrerin.” He spoke in a whisper. “I have seen him like this before. Give him a few moments to arrange his thoughts.”

“Coren we must act.” Alrerin protested softly. “This is... this must not go unpunished or left alone! Ardan could very well be part of this as well! We do not even know where they have taken these men and women.”

“I know exactly where they are.” Andro’s voice echoed softly and Alrerin looked at him in surprise.

“But how?” Alrerin gasped. “The space that the Enverr control is huge Androcles. Even I know that.”

Andro moved over in front of him and met his eyes. Alrerin had to admit to himself that he looked even more imposing without the unique Body Armor that he was wearing when they first met at Coren’s home in Mydala City last night. Alrerin wanted to step back when those bright azure eyes focused on him but he held his ground without fear. He would not be intimidated by anyone anymore. There was far too much at stake now.

“The past no longer matters First Regent Alrerin Sha Harael.” Andro spoke softly. “What matters now is how we move forward in the next days and into the future. Coren showed you the message I gave to him when he left Earth?”

Alrerin nodded his head. “He did.”

“I keep my word First Regent.” Androcles said. “I will not abide how things are right now. How my people are treated by the Vanari. I will do what I have told the others I will do sir. My father and mothers would expect it of me. What your people have had to endure for so long however...” Andro looked at where Caliria sat beside Carisia and Lu’ria and then back to Alrerin. “It sickens me Alrerin Sha Harael and I will insure that it does not continue for one day longer than needed regardless of what the Vanari people choose. These Enverr wish to stick their hands in the cookie jar as my mother Anja has said in the past, then so be it. I will give their hands back to them... gnawed off at the nubous elbow.” Andro turned away from him. “Armen?”

-I am here Androcles-

“Establish a secure QCR link to General Tarnie please.” Andro ordered him.

-Stand by-

“This fool Rotaxe has given us three days.” Andro said. “I only need two to bring their world down around them and get our people back. Sa'sur?”

“We are ready Andro.” Sa'sur answered him.

“Brendi... you will return to SPARTA'S WRATH and begin decrypting the computer cores taken from the OSG Command Center. Work quickly Brendi.” Andro told her meeting her gaze.

“I will.” Brendi answered confidently.

“First Regent... if you can send for your man or woman to assist her... they have thirty minute to get here.” Andro told him.

Alrerin turned his head and found Ma'nia standing quietly by the door near Deion and Mari. “Ma'nia... contact Colonel Yhis Ahn Urnuss at Cadre headquarters. Tell him he is to report here immediately and tell no one where he is going.”

Ma'nia nodded her head. “Yes First Regent.” She answered before leaving the room.

-Androcles I have General Tarnie secure- Armen's voice echoed from the P1.

Andro turned back to where his P1 rested on the table. “General Tarnie?”

Tarnie Val Ardwor appeared within the cone of the secure holotransmission. “I am here Prince Leonidas.” She spoke now and Andro saw her image appear.

“Your status with Denali's plan General?” Andro asked as he moved back to stand in front of the P1.

“All forces involved are standing by Milord.” Tarnie answered. “They are chomping at the bit to go.”

Andro nodded. “And OPSEC is intact?”

Tarnie nodded her head. “Completely Milord.”

“Then give the order and have all forces deploy to their LODs.” Andro told her. “I want you in your command ship directing operations from a central location. Denali, Lisisa and Arduri will rendezvous with you in the ARCH DEMON in eighteen hours. Admiral Sa'sur and the SCIMITAR will coordinate from their location here.”

“Understood Milord.” Tarnie answered.

“General Tarnie Val Ardwor... you are now officially the overall Commander of all Union forces within the Beta Quadrant. The order has already been signed and ratified by the Union Senate, the Prime Minister and my father. I was going to tell you when we met, but now is just as good a time, considering what we are about to do.” Andro told her seeing her eyes go wide. “Nothing that happens here in the Beta Quadrant happens without your approval. Is that clear?”

Tarnie nodded her head quickly. “Yes... yes Milord.”

“You have all targets confirmed?” Andro asked her.

Tarnie nodded once more. “We have been gathering this data for over a hundred years Milord. It's about as perfect as it gets. We already have eyes on nineteen objectives and I will issue the orders to begin recon of the remaining twelve as soon as we are finished here. Two hundred and nineteen thousand Lycanari are prepped and waiting with full back up. Twenty-three Vanari Heavy Cruisers, thirteen of their heavy Destroyers and thirty-three thousand Cadre Commandos have been in position for a week, hidden within the Pelkor Asteroid Belt. We have ample amounts of the serum that Princess Caliria and your mother devised and the last portion of your contingent of Hadarian Healers arrived two days ago. They are standing by at their kick off points with your two medical ships. Those ships will be located in pinpoint areas so as to make it possible to get wounded or critical care patients to them in one jump from all target locations. It is a solid plan Milord. With the additional Union forces we will have no trouble in executing it to perfection.”

“Additional Union forces?” Alrerin spoke as he looked at Coren in confusion. “Coren... what does he mean. Twenty of our cruisers and over thirty thousand Cadre Commandos! What is going on?”

Coren held up his hand as he listened to Androcles and then looked at Caliria and Arduri. Their faces were beaming in adoration, as were Nyosa and Ryana. Rinel's eyes were brighter than he had ever seen them and Coren knew this was the moment. This is when all of his fears would be crushed under the boot heel of justice.

Andro took the pad from the table and typed on it quickly. "You have this target on your list?" He asked.

Tarnie looked at something on her end of the transmission and then turned back to him and nodded. "Yes Milord."

"Reallocate whatever team you have going here." Andro told her. "This is where they have taken our people. My team and I will deal with this target personally."

Tarnie nodded without questioning. "Understood." She echoed.

"General... you have sixty-six hours." Andro told her. "In sixty-six hours we will act. Denali's orders stand. I want nothing left of these facilities or the horrors that they perpetrate upon others. Is that clear?"

"Pen iado forn aur aero Milord Prince." Tarnie stated confidently. (I give you my word)

Andro nodded his head. "Then I will leave you to your work General. Good luck and go with the gods."

"All of you as well Milord." Tarnie spoke.

Andro touched the P1 and her image disappeared. He turned his head and looked at Rinel. "Colonel Rinel... when we return to SPARTA'S WRATH you can either rejoin with your wife and mate or help us to coordinate here."

Rinel smiled slightly. "Tarnie would expect our daughters and I to remain and see this through to the end Milord."

Andro nodded. "Then you and your daughters will accompany us. We will need you."

Rinel nodded his head. "Yes Milord."

"What is going on?" Alrerin finally roared out the words unable to comprehend what was going on. He looked at Coren. "Vanari ships! Cadre Commandos! Coren how...?"

Androcles turned to look at him as Coren smiled. "I have known about this plan for many weeks now Alrerin; ever since we went to Amanuce those weeks ago." He saw Alrerin's eyes widen. "I have been in contact with Cadre and Fleet Officers who I knew were loyal to our people and not to some ideal that Ardan and others like him profess. They all jumped at the chance to be part of this."

"Part of what?" Alrerin asked though a part of him already knew for he could feel a weight lifting from his heart that had been there for so very long.

Andro stepped back over to him. "In sixty-six hours First Regent... I am going to fulfil the promise I made to my Inamarno and her father. In sixty-six hours I am going to tear into the OSG and their Eridiani protectors and end the centuries of agony and pain they have caused the Vanari. When I am done, the gods willing, there will be little left of the OSG or their minions. Those that remain will get the message I am sending to them."

"What message?" Alrerin gasped as his eyes grew wide in disbelief.

Andro smiled at him, his azure eyes bright and alive and then he turned to Dutkne and the others. "We leave for SPARTA'S WRATH in twenty minutes folks. Time for us to go to work." He said watching as they all began to get to their feet.

"It's about time!" Dorian announced. "I was getting bored already!"

Andro was smiling as he saw both Sheva and Onera punch his brother in his chest at his remark. He turned back to Coren and Alrerin. "We may not meet again First Regent Sha Harael. No matter what your people decide, know that you personally will always have a direct line to me sir. Always."

"What are you going to do about this fool's demands?" Alrerin gasped.

Androcles bowed his head to him in a show of deep respect. "I'm going to give to him everything he is asking for First Regent; everything and so much more." Andro smiled once more but had Alrerin known him better, he would have taken note of the cruel way those azure colored eyes twinkled in the light. Androcles turned and reached for Sadi's hand. Sadi took it, pulling Ne'Veha and Sehri with her while Caliria took his other hand, pulling it tightly to her chest in happiness as Carisia and Lu'ria crowded around him.

Alrerin was stunned and turned to look at Coren who also had a smile on his face as the others walked out. "Coren what is... what is happening?"

Coren met his eyes. "Change is coming Alrerin my friend. Change for all of us. Whether we want it or not."

"If Ardan discovers what he is planning..." Alrerin began.

“Do you wish our people to be free Alrerin?” Coren asked him gently.

“What?” Alrerin gasped in reply. “By the Prophets you know I do Coren! It is the only way my... it is the only way my grandchildren will ever be free! The only way they will ever have a future.”

Coren nodded. “Then we must now act.” He said. “We cannot stop what is to come Alrerin Sha Harael. That has already been decided my friend. What we can do is to insure that it is shaped in a way that benefits our people.”

Alrerin met his gaze and once more felt the weight lifting from his soul a little more. He didn't have to think about this, not any longer. He was committed to this action and now he intended to see it through right to the bitter end. No matter what happened to him. He took a deep breath and nodded his head.

“We must prepare for when the others arrive but tell me this plan Coren.” He spoke firmly. “Tell me what we can do to help even more.”

Coren shook his head. “Their battleground is out there Alrerin. That is what they do best. That is who they are. Ours is going to be far more civil, but I fear no less as bloody.”

Alrerin turned to face him fully. “Then I will insure we have a good supply of bandages my friend.”

VENTORI ECHO QUADRANT UNION ADHOC BASE

Perlyea's head rocked back a second time in five seconds and this time she spun to the side, reaching for her face where Saydia's open handed slap had struck her. Saydia Daret was a tall and powerful woman, the epitome of what all Tasmor females wanted to be, and Perlyea had never felt the full force of her anger until this very moment.

At this moment Saydia Daret was livid with rage.

“...What you have done?” Saydia screamed at Perlyea. “I am Sovereign Regent of the Tasmor people and I gave no such orders! You have made me debase myself before a man in order to save your pitiful life and those of my daughters and our people! How dare you woman! How dare you act without my direct orders against these people! Who do you think you are?”

Perlyea whipped her head back around in anger while still holding her cheek. Scarlett colored blood leaked from the corner of her mouth from Saydia's openhanded slap. “I am the Chief Counsel of the Tasmor people!” She snarled right back.

“So help me... if they had not taken our weapons you would be dead!” Saydia shouted at her. “If they injure so much as one millimeter of Anthylea Tomar's body Perlyea, I will hold you personally responsible and I will execute you myself!”

“You wouldn't dare!” Perlyea barked. “And they will not hurt your bed partner!”

“Argh!” Saydia growled and unleashed another open handed slap that connected with Perlyea's face and staggered her once more. “You arrogant fool! What is that thing they took! Where did you get it? Answer me now or I will kill you right here and leave you to rot!”

“It is exactly what they said it was!” Perlyea hissed angrily holding her face once more. “A Pralor Computer Storage and Memory Core.”

“You stole it from them?” Drenia gasped from where she had stood silent for the entire exchange.

“I did not steal it!” Perlyea barked. “One of our teams evacuating the Lycavorians from this foul planet two years ago found it aboard one of the Svorag ships that the Lycavorian air defenses shot down in the beginning of the invasion! They removed it and returned it to me, just as they have done with countless other pieces of technology we salvaged from the monster's ships. I have seen Tobia use one of these units before so I knew how to activate it! It was still fully functional and I have been working with it these last months! I determined it would be a perfect time to use it.”

“By using it to try and steal whatever is in their computer banks? By having your people shoot and almost kill one of their own? Wars have been started for less!” Drenia spat.

“The information in their computers banks and data cores is invaluable!” Perlyea barked. “Think of what we could learn! The power we could have as a species!”

“Why use it here, after what my sister and I told you?” Emylea asked now. “Why now? Namiri and I tried to tell you we should be open and friendly with these men and women! We tried to tell you they were not the same as those Lycavorians we are accustom too!”

“You know nothing child!” Perlyea barked at her.

Saydia moved to strike her again but this time Namiri grabbed her arm gently. “Mother... it will do no good.” She stated. “She acted stupidly and now we must try to repair the damage.”

“Do not speak to me in such a way!” Perlyea growled.

Saydia could feel nothing but pride as Namiri stepped right up in Perlyea’s face with Emylea by her side. Her two youngest daughters and they were unafraid and obviously much more informed about what was going on.

“I am one of six Regent Daughters!” Namiri spat at Perlyea. “As is my sister Emylea! We will speak to you in whatever way we wish! Especially now after what you have done and the danger you have put us in! Put our people in!”

“I have looked out for the interests of the Tasmor people!” Perlyea shouted. “More so than your mother herself!”

“You know nothing stupid woman!” Emylea hissed at Perlyea from beside her sister. “They saved my life! They saved Namiri! They asked for nothing in return except open talks and friendly relations! Your tactics may still get all of us killed!”

“We are Tasmor!” Perlyea barked out. “We need nothing from them! Only what they can give to us! We take what is deserved!”

“You stupid, egotistical woman! You deserve nothing! Have you grown so drunk with power as Chief Counsel that you deem our people superior to others who have already proven they can smash us under their boots? Do you remember nothing of what Tobia shared with us when she was here? You travel down the same path as the Pralor people did and look where it led them? They are a shadow of what they once were! Because of the same sense of self-worth and superiority that oozes from your pores” Namiri screamed now. “He put a gun in my face and would have killed me had not mother intervened! You have no idea who you are dealing with! None!”

Perlyea glared at Saydia now. “You stand there and allow your daughters to speak to me in such a manner!” She snapped.

“They speak the truth... so why not.” The female voice spoke from the side and all of them whirled around to see Tobia enter the portable building through the double doors. Three armed Durcunusaan encircled her, one of them a woman and they parted for a fourth to carry the inert form of Anthylea into the building.

“Anthylea! No!” Saydia cried out and rushed forward only to be stopped by one of the Durcunusaan and his rifle.

Tobia looked at Saydia. “She is unharmed Saydia. She would not allow herself to be examined her as her training dictates so Anja put her to sleep. She will awake in a few hours no worse than when she went to sleep.”

The Durcunusaan gently lowered Anthylea to one of the couches in the building, Namiri and Emylea the only ones to notice that he was very careful and respectful in his actions and then he backed up as Saydia knelt beside her and took her hand within her own.

“What have they done to her?” Saydia hissed angrily as she ran her fingers across Anthylea’s cheeks and across her lips. “You have betrayed me Tobia!” She snarled turning to look at her.

Tobia’s eyes narrowed considerably. “No... it was you who betrayed me Saydia Daret!” Tobia spoke evenly but her voice held no kindness to it now. None of the happiness that had been there earlier when they had first seen each other. “I never lied to you Saydia. I answered every question you put to me over the months I was among you as best as I was able. I never held back unless it was something I was not allowed to share. I was a friend and a lover to you and Anthylea both, and I enjoyed each and every time. I shared things with you that I have never shared with anyone! And now you sanction this foolhardy action in order to obtain technology that you would never have gotten off the planet with, let alone determined how to use.”

“I would have discovered how to use it!” Perlyea hissed.

Tobia turned to look at her. “You would have attempted to learn how to use it and in the process gotten yourself and whoever was helping you killed.” Tobia growled at her angrily, not holding her emotions in check any longer. “The Lycavorians that follow Martin and the Queens are not like Nalmos and the other Lycavorians you have met up until now! And they are nothing like my people! The moment you removed any data from that ship without the proper bio-scan and codes, every Durcunusaan on this planet would have descended down upon you like the plague! Had your two people even made it to your ships and managed to leave the system, the moment you accessed that data it would have triggered a failsafe within the data itself and erased itself before short circuiting every system on the ship carrying it. Essentially you would have killed everyone on that ship.”

“You lie!” Perlyea snapped.

Tobia reached for the small pouch on her belt and withdrew the Computer Memory and Data Storage Core. She held it out to Perlyea. “Then please Perlyea, by all means, see for yourself.” Tobia set the storage core on the nearby table. “There is a computer terminal in this very building. Go ahead and attempt to download what is on it. You will not succeed Perlyea, and you will kill everyone in this building with you in the process. You believe yourself more intelligent than everyone around you when in actuality you understand and have knowledge of so little.”

Saydia kissed Anthylea’s hands softly before resting them on her chest and rising to her feet. She turned and looked at Tobia and spoke before Perlyea could reply. “Tobia you must...”

Tobia took a step back from her now. “No.” She stated evenly meeting Saydia’s eyes. “I must do nothing Saydia. I owe you nothing and I will do nothing. My support of you and our friendship ended the moment you tried to steal information you have no right to have. I see now that it is not technology you have earned the right to have. It ended moment you so casually almost killed a woman who you did not know and has never done anything to your people.”

“How dare you speak to the Sovereign Regent in such a way?” Perlyea exclaimed.

Tobia turned and looked at her. “Save your blustering and banter for someone who does not you better Perlyea Kalrr.”

“My people Tobia? Are they...?” Namiri asked coming closer to her and speaking before Perlyea or her mother could respond.

Tobia looked at her. “Your troops are fine Namiri, as are your ships and personnel Emylea. Aside from being disarmed, they are not being treated any differently than before this happened. They were helping to defend them against the Kintaur and that is not something that Martin or the others will forget. Ever.”

“He was prepared to murder the Sovereign Regent’s daughter!” Perlyea snapped. “He held a weapon to her head! He is nothing but an animal and a male!”

Tobia looked at her. “At this moment Perlyea Kalrr, that male is the only thing standing between you and certain death. Were he to order it... or any of his Queens... all of you would be dead within seconds of that order leaving his lips. You have no concept of what has occurred with Martin and his people in the last months. And you would not understand it for you have no idea what honor is.”

“How dare you speak to me of honor?” Perlyea shouted moving forward. She stopped when the Durcunusaan to Tobia’s left lifted her K14 and pressed it to her forehead.

“Take another step and they will be scrapping your brains off the wall behind you.” She growled savagely, showing her fangs and changed wolf eyes.

“What you have done is inexcusable.” Tobia spoke after a moment as Perlyea backed up slowly. “Anthylea has Lycavorian blood inside her! Their blood! And that is not natural! How many other Tasmor have you done this too? How many Lycavorians have you experimented on in order to do this?” Tobia looked at them and when they did not answer she continued. “I do not know what Martin will do. I will speak to his Queens on your behalf, for they hold much sway over him, but ultimately it will be his decision what to do. And that decision can only be helped if you are honest and forthright in the answers that we now seek. Now is most certainly not the time for the Tasmor arrogance to come shining forth. You have seen how he reacts to such things.”

“You help this man?” Perlyea demanded. “This man who threatens to execute all of us?”

Tobia met her eyes. “I would gladly allow him to execute you Perlyea.” She stated flatly. “You are nothing more than a cancer among your people. You espouse bigotry and hate using your advanced education when what is needed is common sense and knowledge. You are far too much like others among my own people who think that they are better than others simply because they are. Do not let your self-importance override your common sense woman. You will last all of half a second against even the most ill-trained among Martin's people. There are many species among the stars that you have no knowledge of Perlyea Kalrr, and they could swat the Tasmor down like children! They could eradicate your entire species in hours and yet you still cling to your idiotic sense of pride." Tobia looked back to Saydia.

"Martin's people could have been the ally you have sought for so many years against the Kintaur Saydia. Your actions this day have quite possibly destroyed that forever. What will happen now I cannot say; but I do know that if you make an enemy of this man, he will utterly grind you under his boots without remorse or hesitation." She stepped closer to her. "Do you remember the history that I told you of my people Saydia? It was the first night that Anthylea joined us in your bed. Do you remember what I told you of the Praetorians among my people?"

Saydia nodded her head quickly. "The ancient warriors of your people that could wield physical powers manifested from this Etheric realm that allows you to talk to each other with your minds."

Tobia nodded. "I told you then they were long extinct because that is what my people thought at the time." She said. "It turns out that we were wrong. Martin Leonidas is descended from the first and most powerful Praetorian to have ever lived among our people. In only a few short weeks I have seen what he and his sons are capable of."

"Sons?" Saydia gasped with wide eyes.

"Martin has seventeen children with his six Queens." Tobia told her. "His pureblooded sons with Aricia are just like him. They all command the same powers as the Praetorians of old among my people. He is not a man to be trifled or played with. His Lycavorian blood runs too strongly within his veins for him to allow that."

"What... what are you saying Tobia?" Saydia asked.

"No harm will come to you tonight." Tobia told them looking around. "They will bring food and drink for you shortly. You will remain locked in here for the duration of the night. Tomorrow, tomorrow however, I suggest you think about answering the questions that we are asking of you. He will get his people back Saydia. And make no mistake, if he has to obliterate everything that stands in his way he will. And that includes the Tasmor, who at this moment in time have shown they are not his friend, only another enemy. You do not wish to see what happens to the enemies of Martin Leonidas Sovereign Regent Saydia Daret. I saw what happens to his enemies only a short time ago and I will tell you he does not take prisoners or show mercy to those who wish to fight him."

"Tobia you..." Saydia began but was cut off as Tobia turned quickly and walked through the door without another word. The three Durcunusaan followed her out and the double doors were resealed immediately.

"...Can tell you how they came to have it Martin." Kasdan spoke from within the holotransmission. The floor of the corner of the Command Building was awash in the well-lit transmission and they could see Danny, Anuk, Nayeca and Kesyla sitting a short distance away with Julie and T'lolt.

Martin, Helen, Wayonn, Aricia and For'mya were in the ADHOC Command Building, five Durcunusaan occupying the various consoles in the building around the large room. Three more were posted outside each of the building's two entrances. Martin had decided against sending Wayonn to Honelze for he felt he could be of more use out here with him now that Murano was gone.

"Let it rip Kasdan." Martin spoke as he sat back in the chair. Martin Leonidas truly liked Kasdan for many reasons everyone knew, chief among them was that the man was nearly as smart as Anja in his eyes. The second and most reflective reason was because he had no pretense of arrogance within his body and this is what endeared him most to Martin Helen and his Queens knew.

Kasdan dropped a piece of equipment onto the ground in front of him so that they could all see it and Martin leaned forward quickly as he saw it. "This is a Pralor engineered Y19 Portable Quantum Power Generator. We build these on Artaaya Martin. The outskirts of this city are littered with the wreckage of ships your people must have shot down as they were trying to land."

"Svorag troop ships?" Martin asked.

Kasdan nodded his head. "We have already determined that they have taken our ships and people in the past. Anja and Dueva discovered this very thing. Given the amount of wreckage in the area, this is undoubtedly where the Tasmor found the Portable Memory and Data Storage unit. Or areas similar to this one near another city perhaps."

"They had people searching the wreckage even as they were helping our people to escape?" Wayonn spoke now looking at Kasdan.

Kasdan nodded his head. "Yes. At least several teams of people if I had to guess. And they were looking for technology. Any type of technology that they could use."

Martin looked at Danny in the transmission. "Fervon?"

"Kasdan, T'lolt and Pablo have been through every piece of wreckage in our immediate area." Danny spoke now. "Anything of use has already been stripped bare Marty. There are other fields of wreckage on the outskirts but I shut them down when it started to get dark."

"Whatever ground weapons our people were using appeared to be very effective in reducing the transport ships to rubble Martin." Kesyla spoke up now, everyone noticing her choice of words. "Given what we know already, if they came in without shields and with only a rudimentary knowledge of how to operate the ships after being altered by the Svorag, then it does make some sense."

"Nalmos said there were hundreds and hundreds of ships." Helen said.

Kasdan nodded his head. "Kesyla is right however. Most of the ships were probably not even designed to enter the atmosphere. I have seen pieces of escape pods forged together with crude engines and operating controls among the wreckage here. It appears they used whatever they could in order to put as many Svorag on the ground as possible."

"Kasdan and Kesyla say they probably found a lot more equipment that they took from the battlefield fervon. The vast majority of it is probably useless, but small items like the storage unit would have been salvageable." Danny said.

Kasdan nodded. "I have never met the Tasmor before now Martin, but I have read the contact reports. As arrogant as they appear to be, they are very intelligent and quite capable. If they had found technology that they could use and implement into their ships and culture they would have done so by now."

"Avi has done a full sensor sweep of their ships Martin." For'mya spoke now looking at Martin. "He has detected no Pralor based tech in use on their ships in the system."

"This supports Kasdan's theory that they haven't been able to figure out how to work whatever they did find Marty." Danny spoke. "Though we don't know if they have something that we haven't seen, or how close they might be to building something."

"That does not mean that they won't." Kesyla echoed Danny quickly. "They are a very resourceful people Martin and the most technologically advanced species in this quadrant after the Pralors. Given enough time they would be able to devise how a piece of equipment works and then implement something that they can use."

"Just like we did with CS41." Martin said softly nodding his head. "Well... I can't fault them for trying to better themselves, but just as we learned, it's better to figure it out for ourselves and then build things based on what we have discovered."

"Yes." Helen said. "But we had Avi and precedent had already been established by Shiria when she left the technology on Earth."

"Kesyla... you are Pralor." Wayonn spoke up unable to keep the smile from his face now.

Kesyla shook her head with a similar smile of pride and confidence. "Not any longer." She told him. "And I embrace that Wayonn with all that I am, just as you have done."

Danny grinned from ear to ear. "Am I good or what?" He quipped.

All of them heard Julie speak now from beside T'lolt. "Please... give me a moment while I vomit."

This caused everyone to chuckle softly.

"Elder Valael?" Martin spoke looking up slightly as if talking to the air.

"I have been able to decipher almost the entire set of logs from the Kintaur ship Martin Leonidas. They go back four months." His voice entered the conversation now from the ARC ROYAL above them in orbit and then the holotransmission shifted slightly and his image joined the others on the floor. "I am now very certain that the Kintaur were led here in order to capture Namiri and Emylea Daret. That is stated clearly in several of the logs. Along with the Sovereign Regent's daughters, they were to take as many Tasmor prisoner as they could hold within their cells on the cruiser."

Martin turned his head as the door opened and he saw Anja and Tobia come in together. He waited for a few moments while they moved to the table and sat down. For'mya leaned over and nuzzled Anja's cheek and ear affectionately and Anja smiled and returned the loving nuzzle before they kissed each other softly. Aricia pulsed both of them with her female aura and they instantly returned that aura of love and warmth to her.

"What else?" Martin asked.

"I cannot yet determine the origin of the original message the Kintaur received. Whoever sent it hid their identity and position very well." Valael continued calmly. "I can tell you that the message is less than a week old however, and whoever sent it used Pralor Communication Protocols."

"Which means what exactly?" Martin asked.

"That they have at least a rudimentary knowledge of Pralor COM signals and how to manipulate them." Tobia answered now. "Which most likely means one of two things. That one of the objects they discovered was an intact Pralor COM relay and they already knew how to use it from watching or spying on me when I was among them. It would allow them to hide their transmitting origin even with a very basic knowledge of communications channels."

"That's just nubous wonderful." Martin exclaimed out loud as he sat back. "So not only did these Kintaur douche bags know Namiri and Emylea were going to be here..." Martin said. "... They had orders to take them prisoner along with our people. Boy, someone out there really doesn't like this Saydia Daret too much."

"Given their level arrogance and attitude I do not find that surprising in the least." Aricia chimed in now.

"It's Perlyea." Tobia said softly.

"Tobia I know you spent time with these people..." Wayonn spoke now. "But you can't expect us to believe..."

"She's right." Martin spoke up now.

Wayonn and Helen were among the few who knew of the senses that Martin commanded and they both looked at him. "Martin... what did you sense?" Helen asked.

"When Saydia Daret admitted that she is the one who gave the order to steal the tech from the STRIKER, I detected a huge adrenalin dump from her." Martin said. "She was lying. She had no idea that was going to happen, though she did know that this Anthylea Tomar had Lycavorian blood within her." Martin turned to Anja now. "What did you find Red?"

"She wouldn't let me examine her willingly so I had to sedate her." Anja answered. "She definitely has Lycavorian gene strands in her body, and lots of them. Obviously they are not natural so they were introduced into her body somehow. If I had to guess, I would say by some sort of gene therapy treatment."

"But why?" Tobia asked.

"For the same reasons we used Lycavorians as a seed species Tobia." Valael spoke once more. "Forgive me for using the term Martin."

"No worries from me Elder Valael. Just make sure to use a different term when around my son or our daughter Eliani. Neither of them is too happy about that." Martin told him. "Even less so considering what happened when we first met."

"I take it your daughter does not agree with what we did either?" Valael asked from the ARC ROYAL.

Anja snorted softly. "Eli has been around her brother since she was old enough to crawl and spit up." She said evenly. "She is closest to him in age and nearly as reckless. She has also taken on more of his mentality when concerning things having to do with our history and what we know the Pralors did. No... she does not agree with how things were done Elder Valael."

"You will find many of our younger generations have embraced the essence of what it means to be Spartan and Lycavorian much more completely Elder Valael." Helen spoke now looking at him in the transmission. "I dare say perhaps even more than the older generations of our people. We at least may understand why it was done, we don't agree with it, but we understand."

"There are far more among our people who do not agree with it either Helen." Valael said.

Helen nodded. "I know. And that is why the younger generations of our two peoples will embrace each other much more quickly than the older ones." She answered.

“Your longevity; your endurance and strength...” Tobia spoke now. “...And your healing abilities.”

Anja nodded her head. “It makes sense really. Lycavorian genetic codes are very easy to manipulate and they adapt almost instantly to changes. It’s why the Pralors did what they did to the Rothryn. They simply removed the genetic strand that allows us to shift our forms. Once Andro bit Sehri, he returned this strand to her body and now she can shift. It works the same on those they turn. When this big lug bit me and changed me, it altered my genetic coding.”

Martin grinned at her. “You were tasty too.” He stated.

“Pervert!” Anja hissed at him while everyone couldn’t help but laugh softly. “Anyway... the average lifespan for a Hadarian is roughly ten thousand years. Give or take a few centuries.” Anja told them as she continued. “When Martin bit me... his Lycavorian DNA overrode that part of my Hadarian DNA and now I will outlive normal, unchanged Hadarians by a factor of a hundred. I will be alive a hundred thousand years from now and...” Anja’s jade green eyes grew wider. “Did I just say that?” She gasped. “Sibfla!”

Even Tobia joined in on the laughter around the table this time and For’mya leaned into Anja. “Think of the centuries of pleasure we will have Melyanna.” She said.

Anja glanced at Martin and saw him waggle his eyebrows at her. “Well... I guess that is ok.” She said with a loving smile.

“Ah... hello!” Danny’s voice echoed in the room. “Can we get back to what we were talking about please?”

“Be quiet chrome dome!” Anja hissed playfully. She leaned forward as everyone laughed again.

“Anthylea is unique. If what I found when I examined her is accurate, and I am always accurate, then she has some of our abilities, at least on a much smaller scale.” Anja looked at Tobia. “What is the average lifespan of a Tasmor?”

Tobia blinked at the question. “I was never allowed to be present for an examination by Tasmor doctors but I have to say at least several hundred years minimum. Saydia herself is just under two hundred years old and she is still considered young among the Tasmor. She told me of a few that lived to be well over six hundred years old, but based on what I heard in casual conversation I can’t imagine their lifespan is more than a thousand years, if that.”

Anja nodded. “Well Anthylea will live far longer than that.” Anja said. “Not as long as one of us but if I had to guess, probably twenty thousand years at least. Perhaps more.” She looked at Martin. “And she is also like Lynwe and Akor’dris.”

Martin met her gaze but didn’t blink. “Is that because of this gene therapy?” He asked.

Anja shook her head quickly. “No, and unlike Lynwe, Akor’dris and the other Drow altered by the Coven, this is a very natural occurrence Lover.” She turned to look at Tobia. “How many of the Tasmor are like this?”

Tobia’s cheeks turned a bright red at the question as she blushed and she looked down at the table, her long, dark hair hiding her face. Anja reached out and took her hand.

“This is not something that is uncommon to us Tobia. We know of it and have many within the Union who are like this. They were altered by insidious High Coven experiments but they are the same.”

Tobia nodded her head slowly and looked up after taking a deep breath. “Perhaps one third of the female Tasmor population is like this.” She answered. “Most of those like Anthylea are the Matriarchs if you will; the most wealthy and influential within Tasmor society. It is part of the reason why men are considered a lower class but are not mistreated or oppressed in any way.”

“Come again?” Martin asked.

Anja looked at him. “Only the Tasmor males are fertile Lover. And from what I can determine, they are genetically inferior to the Tasmor females in many ways and that is why their female population is far more than the males. I can’t know for certain unless I examine one of their males and an unaltered Tasmor female and compare the results but I’m pretty sure.”

Tobia nodded her head in agreement. “Female genes are dominant among the Tasmor. There are so few men that there are not really marriages as our people know them Martin. Male and female couplings are usually planned and they generally result in a female baby. The ratio is like nine out of ten. Males are considered a lower level of society but they are still protected after a fashion. Most are not allowed to serve in the military or any position that puts them at risk.”

“This is done in order to protect the future of the species as a whole.” Helen said softly.

Tobia nodded her head. “Yes. It has been like this since their birth as a species according to Saydia.”

Anja nodded her head and sat back in her chair. “This leads me to my next discovery.” She said. “I compared Anthylea’s DNA to the Kintaur pukes that we wasted during the fight here. She has nineteen different DNA strands that match perfectly with the Kintaur.”

Tobia looked at her astonished. “You are joking!” She gasped.

Anja shook her head. “Nope.”

“Lady Anja... are you saying that the Tasmor and the Kintaur are the same species?” Valael’s voice asked.

“Not exactly Elder Valael... no” Anja said. “At one point along the evolutionary scale they may have been, but if what Duewa and I saw is accurate, the Tasmor evolved normally and the Kintaur didn’t, which may account in some part for their hatred of each other.”

Martin looked at Tobia. “Does Saydia know this?” He asked.

Tobia met his eyes and shook her head. “I do not know. She told me she did not know much of the history of the Kintaur. Only that they had been at war for centuries before she was ever born.”

“Nice.” Martin moving around the edges of the table. “I come to get my people and I stick my size elven boot into the middle of conflict between the same species that’s been going on for how many millennia?” He muttered as he moved around the table. “Why does this shit always happen to me? Man... you couldn’t make this stuff up! Nothing is ever easy.”

“The only easy day was yesterday fervon.” Danny spoke up from the holotransmission, reciting one of the age old SEAL phrases from their days back in The Teams.

“Hooyah!” Anja muttered.

Martin shook his head as his mind raced with scenarios. “Red... she is back with the others right?” He asked.

Tobia nodded her head. “I went with them while Anja studied the results of her exam. Saydia and Anthylea are... I guess the best definition of a term to use is a couple. They deeply love one another and I wanted to insure Saydia knew she was alright.”

“You have a history with them?” Martin asked.

Tobia didn’t blush this time and she nodded her head. “It was brief but very pleasant. At least until I realized that I could never love anyone but Murano. The three of us parted as very good friends. It is why I greeted Anthylea as I did when they first arrived.”

“I wondered about that.” Aricia spoke now.

Martin nodded his head. “Well it’s good you feel that way... because he loves you too.” He told her, watching her eyes grow wide in shock. “What about the one I shot?” Martin asked Anja before Tobia could ask him to elaborate on his words.

Anja looked at him and her beautiful eyes narrowed. “The upae will live.” She spat. “Ungrateful bitch is what she is! She’s lucky I didn’t send her into the long goodbye by sticking her with a poison or something.”

Tobia shook her head clear of the thoughts Martin’s words had triggered within her. “Martin you... would you have shot Namiri?”

Martin met her eyes. “Tobia I am many things, but I am not a monster.” He said calmly answering her question.

“Thanks the gods.” Tobia muttered.

“I would have offed that upae Perlyea in a New York minute... or whatever the hell her nubous name is.” Martin continued which caused both Danny and Julie to erupt into laughter in the transmission.

Tobia looked around the table quickly and then at Anja. “What is this New York?” She asked.

Anja smiled. “It was a city on Earth many hundreds of years ago.” She replied. “Martin just used a slang that means he would have killed Perlyea without thinking. This is how most people who lived in New York did things.”

Danny shook his head as he continued to laugh softly. “Same old Skipper... you’ll never change fervon.” He said aloud.

“Damn straight!” Julie added.

“We’ll let them sleep on things.” Martin spoke once more. “I got a sneaky feeling that this Perlyea character is a lot more than she wants us to believe. Or she knows a lot more than she is letting on.”

“I would have to agree.” Valael spoke.

Martin nodded his head. “Fervon... lock it down for the night on your end. Torma and Isheeni are certain that the Kintaur who survived our encounter are out of the area around you but post security just in case. Miath and Aurith will return in about an hour and I’ll update you but Torma is probably right on. They’ll find them tomorrow.”

Danny nodded his head. “That’s a done deal. You want us to enter the city tomorrow?”

Martin shook his head. “No... do a sweep of the area you didn’t cover today and recover any and all tech that Kasdan and Kesyla thinks might still be useable in any way. I’ll send out other teams in the morning to coordinate with you and then you can enter the city proper.”

“What do we do with the equipment we find Martin?” Kesyla asked.

“Package it up so Elder Valael can return it to Artaaya and have it examined.” Martin said. “It might give us a better idea of the Svorag and their capabilities. I’ll let Delnash know so he can keep it under wraps. Whatever the Tasmor already got is all they are going to get.”

“I’ll buzz you in the morning.” Danny spoke.

Martin nodded. “Watch your six fervon.”

“I always do.” Dan said just before he terminated the transmission.

Martin looked at the others around the table. “Elder Valael... continue with your work on those Kintaur logs. See if you can figure out where the origin message came from and who sent it.”

“I will try.” Valael said. “I thought you would want to keep whatever you find on the surface Martin.”

Martin shook his head. “No offense Elder Valael, but at this moment in time, I trust you, Delnash, Tobia and Kasdan. Anything else having to do with Pralors will probably try and kill me thanks to the fat fuck Lorendo.”

Valael could be heard chuckling as the others in the room smiled at Martin’s comment. “Very well.” He said.

Martin looked at Anja. “Tina is ok Red?” He asked.

Anja nodded. “She’ll be fine by tomorrow.” Anja answered. “Though I wouldn’t ask her to fly any Tasmor anywhere, she might kick them out of her ship at thirty thousand feet and see if they can fly.”

Martin grinned. “Noted.” He said.

“What are we going to do Martin?” Helen asked.

“Well... I’m going to curl up with three lovely ladies and get some shuteye. Maybe some sleep will get rid of this urge I have to kick someone’s ass.” He said. “In the morning, Tobia and I are going to have a long talk with Sovereign Regent Daret, after I apologize to Namiri and Emylea.”

Helen nodded her head with a small smile. Martin liked Namiri she knew. The young woman had spunk and was quite fearless. “Martin since they would appear to be more inclined to react better to females, having Aricia, Anja and For’mya get the information we want might work better.” She said.

Martin looked at his Queens and saw all of them nod their heads. “Ok... I’ll go along with that.” He answered.

“Then what will happen Martin?” Tobia asked.

Martin met her eyes. “I want my people back Tobia.” He told her. “If we can’t figure out a way to do that peacefully, then I will take them back! Especially after we have discovered the Tasmor are experimenting on them.”

“I did not... I was not aware of this Martin.” Tobia said.

Martin shook his head. “I never thought you were Tobia.” He told her and looked at Anja. “Red... how long?”

Anja shrugged her shoulders and shook her head. “I can’t be exactly sure without a more detailed examination of Anthylea and other Tasmor like her Lover, but I’d say within the last two years at least. The changes within Anthylea are nearly complete as it stands now.”

Tobia looked at her. “Complete? What do you mean Anja?”

“When someone is turned by a Lycavorian it takes anywhere from eighteen months to two full years for the changes to be fully complete at the molecular and cellular level.” Anja answered her. “The genetic changes within Anthylea, regardless of how they came to be, are nearly complete now.”

“And it has been three years since the Tasmor began helping our people.” Wayonn spoke.

Anja nodded her head. “Yep.” She looked at Martin. “One more thing Lover; when the changes are complete, Anthylea and anyone like her who underwent these treatments, they will be fertile and able to produce children.”

Martin’s eyes grew a little wider. “Really?” He said softly. “Now that would explain a thing or two.”

“Yes it would.” Helen echoed his words. “Yes it would.”

“Do they know that?” Martin asked.

Anja shook her head. “Doubtful... they don’t have technology capable of discovering that and they don’t have Duewa and I.” She answered with a smile. “It wouldn’t show up in any exam that I know of.”

“Anja you are certain of this?” Tobia asked.

Anja nodded her head. “Oh yes.” She replied. “It goes back to the Lycavorian genes being so resilient. Trust me, if it wasn’t for our Mindvoice abilities, all of us would be walking around pregnant all of the time. He isn’t helpful at all if you get my drift.” Anja said jerking her thumb towards Martin.

“And whose fault is that?” Martin snapped.

“Yours!” Anja, Aricia and For'mya all replied at the exact same instant.

“...Has that sleaze ball Lorendo been doing?” Martin asked the image of Delnash in the transmission cone aboard his STRIKER. He had been awake for an hour now and held the mug of coffee in his hand as he sat in Tina’s Engineering Station seat. His first mission was to check in with Delnash and fill him in on what they had discovered so far. He hadn’t wanted to extract himself from the arms, legs and scents of his mates but he knew he had a lot of work to do.

Aricia, Anja and For'mya were still curled up together in the smallish sleeping quarters of the STRIKER DT, Endith and Tina now onboard the ARC ROYAL with Ben at Anja’s orders. While the sleeping quarters had been built with the seven of them together in mind, it still was very small compared to what they were used to. Torma, Isheeni, Miath and Aurith had chosen to sleep beside the ramp of the ship and no one in their right mind would attempt to slip past four dragons to board the STRIKER.

Delnash smiled from his office chair and he lifted the glass of juice in salute to him. “Your interview and the one with your wives have made him change his tactics because he was caught in several lies. I commend you Martin.”

Martin grinned. “Happy to help screw that bastard over any way I can.”

“Election preparations are proceeding well and...” Delnash began but Martin leaned forward in his chair.

“Chief Elder... don’t hold anything back from me.” Martin spoke calmly. “Not after all we have been through in such a short time just to get here.”

Delnash looked up at met his gaze in the image. “That is not something I will do Martin.” He answered. “Not now.”

“What is it?” Martin asked him.

“I am fearful of what will happen.” Delnash spoke.

“I don’t follow.”

Delnash rose to his feet in his office and the image followed him as he moved to stand in front of the massive balcony window that allowed a stunning view of the city below him. “All of the projections Two Seven and others have done have me winning this election by a landslide Martin.” He spoke turning to meet his gaze again. “Nothing Lorendo has done have altered the polls either way in weeks.”

“I never had much use for polls.” Martin spoke evenly. “My Tenna Deia loves the damn things though I think. She has people who poll the pollsters.”

“I am fearful of what he will do when he comes to realize that he will not win Martin.” Delnash spoke. “There is so much we don’t know about what he has done in the past or what he is doing even now. We have not begun to scratch the surface of what sinister ideas he has been working on. What if a victory by me causes him to react in a way that we can't predict?"

"I think we have always known that would be the case sir." Martin told him. "You may have done some things that your people did not like or agree with Chief Elder, but according to Murano this never stopped your people from supporting you."

"I took your advice in regards to Two Seven." Delnash said. "I removed all of the blocks to his neural net. He is certain about the people he has already vetted, but there are so many that even he cannot vet them all before the election."

"Then don't try." Martin said. "Have him begin to formulate plans to counter everything he thinks Lorendo could do. Begin to prepare."

"What if we miss something?" Delnash asked.

"Then we roll with the punches and react as best we are able." Martin said. "Lorendo is a scum bucket, but he isn't stupid sir. Whatever he does, you can be assured he will always make sure his fat ass is safe and sound. That is how we beat him."

Delnash looked at Martin in the transmission. "Take away his escapes." He said.

Martin nodded. "Or watch every possible way he could leave Artaaya. When he makes his move then we can act to squash him."

"Do you think he may be involved in some way with the Tasmor and what they attempted with your ship?" Delnash asked.

"It's too early to say right now." Martin answered. By Martin's order Delnash was now included in the daily reports that went out and he had read that report this very morning before Martin had contacted him.

"They were very persistent about obtaining our technology." Delnash said. "Some would say to the point of hostility. It's one of the reasons I allowed Tobia to be our conduit to them. To try and maintain and openness so as not to have this happen. I never suspected that they would strip Svorag ships and equipment while they were relocating your people."

"Well... they certainly have no qualms about how they obtain their tech." Martin said. "Which kind of makes me believe that they need it for some reason."

"They are already the most advanced species in that region of space." Delnash said. He returned to his chair. "Could they want it to come after us?"

Martin shook his head quickly. "No." He answered. "Their society and culture may not be something I would want to live in but they don't strike me as conquerors Chief Elder. I think it has to do with these Kintaur assholes. We don't know for sure and I don't want to guess without more information."

Delnash nodded his head. "I will have some of my people investigate what we have on them in our archives." He said.

"Anything would be useful at this point." Martin said.

"Martin... I need to ask you about your brother, his wives and Kesyla." Delnash began looking at him.

"What do you want to know?" Martin asked.

"Kesyla is our... by now I'm sure you know that Mari is not our child. That she is Murano and Tobia's child?" Delnash said.

"I do." Martin answered.

"Kesyla is my only daughter Martin. She has always been intuitive and adventurous." Delnash said. "Oddly I am not concerned that Daniel turned her. I find myself welcoming that to be honest. But I worry for..."

"Sir... Danny and I have been together since we were ten months old." Martin said. "He is the only brother I have ever known. The only true brother I will ever have. We have spilled the same blood in the same mud on more occasions than I care to remember. He asked me before he claimed Kesyla. He asked me if he was doing the right thing. I can tell you two things sir." Martin sat forward in his chair. "Daniel Simpson will love Kesyla just as breathless as he loves Anuk and Nayeca. Anuk and Nayeca will love her just as breathless as they love Danny. Anuk and Nayeca wanted this just as much as Danny did sir; just as much as Kesyla did. It was meant to be."

Delnash nodded his head slowly and Martin could see him relax slightly. "And what is the second thing?" He asked.

“As he lives and breathes sir, my brother would gladly endure all the pain in the galaxy if it meant that his wives and mates were safe from harm.” Martin said. “That now includes Kesyla. Did she tell you she was happy?”

Delnash nodded instantly. “Twenty-two times in the message she sent to me.” He replied with a small smile. “What I see on her face and hear in her voice is something I have never experienced and it makes her mother and I very happy.”

“Danny may act like a nut job Delnash... but he is anything but.” Martin said. “You’ll see this when you get to know him sir.”

“I can’t leave right now, too much is going on here, but my wife would like to travel to your location to see her.” Delnash said. “If that is alright?”

“That is a question you never have to ask sir.” Martin told him.

Delnash nodded his head and returned to his desk once more. “There is something else I need to tell you Martin.” He said.

Martin became more attentive as the tone of Delnash’s voice altered slightly. “You make it seem like I am not going to like this.” He said.

Delnash met his eyes. “Actually... quite the opposite.” He told him. “I had Two Seven run some searches when we first returned to Artaaya. He discovered something that no one ever imagined.”

Martin tilted his head in puzzlement. “Ok. I’m listening.”

“I hesitated at first not knowing how you would react.” Delnash said. “I decided I had no right to keep this information from you.”

“Keep what information from me?” Martin asked.

“Martin... Sumar’s mother and sister are still alive.” Delnash blurted out suddenly. “Your great, great grandmother and aunt are still very much alive.” Delnash saw Martin’s eyes widen at this information and he suddenly came to his feet.

“Alive?” He gasped loudly. “How? Where?”

“Martin they are... they are living on Honelze.” Delnash spoke.

HONELZE MAIN PRALOR COLONY FORTUNE

The twenty-two thousand meter mountain reached well into the clouds above the main colony as it did every day. The rising sun beat down across the snow covered peak and cast great swaths of near golden light across the valley and the colony far below.

Fortune.

Named because of the generous amounts of minerals and ores that kept the Pralor people busy and safe. Most of the ores were used in some way in building new ships and defenses to protect their people, while the minerals were a mainstay of the medical care provided by the many hospitals on the three planets the Pralor people now called home.

The largest of the colonies on the planet by far at nearly two and a half million men, women and children. Situated right at the base of the massive mountain and surrounded by the six meter high, two meter thick wall of steel and rock. While they were the only humanoid life on the planet, the indigenous animal life was very abundant, large and could sometimes be very dangerous. They had learned over the years here how to avoid confrontations with the animal life and there had not been a serious attack in over a century. There were half a dozen smaller settlements within a hundred kilometers of Fortune, mainly the work and mining camps, but all of them called Fortune their home. Most had grown up here and while they were all Pralor, this was their home and not Artaaya. It was a much slower pace on Honelze and had been ever since its inception. Though Fortune was large as colonies go, everyone seemed to know everyone. They had schools and hospitals and shopping districts. All of the luxuries they could provide for themselves but still keep a much more level and calm way of life away from the bluster of Artaaya and the capital. The Governor of Fortune had been re-elected to another fifty year term by the vote of the people just two years ago. He had been at the head of this colony since they had laid the groundwork and foundation nearly ten thousand years ago. He was extremely well liked for his sometimes gruff, yet friendly personality and he held the interests of the men and women of Fortune before all others. His own wife and seven children lived within the colony walls and all but two of his children had been born in Fortune.

The Merchant Center occupied the middle of Fortune, hence its name. This is where most of the stores and eating establishments resided. Outdoor cafes that were almost always filled because of the incredible temperate climate of Honelze. Nine months out of the year the mean temperature hovered in the low eighties with almost no humidity in the air. For the other three months of the year, the temperature remained in the sixties, but eighty percent of the days were filled by sun and warm ocean breezes that swept in from the western seas only four kilometers to the northwest.

It was in the Merchant Center where their restaurant was.

It was the largest of the eating establishments in Fortune, yet the combination of modern and historic décor insured that its tables were always full. Not to mention that it offered the widest and most delicious pieces of Pralor cuisine as well as countless other types of food and all of it was home cooked. The staff was large, it had to be with the establishment's size and reputation, but they were very polite and always with a smile. Most of it was due to the two women who ran the restaurant. A mother and daughter team that had become among the most popular and loved of Fortune's residents. And even though the vast majority of men and women on Honelze were miners and researchers, no one got out of line in Jezima and Meral's place. It was almost as if there was an unwritten law that all disputes and difference were left at the door when they entered here.

Not one person had violated that unwritten rule in all the years they had been here.

Jezima and Meral had come to Honelze with the first settlers and had been a mainstay ever since. Jezima did the vast majority of the cooking with three other chefs that she had personally trained, while her daughter Meral handled pretty much everything else. To see them together you would think they were the best of friends as well as mother and daughter and this in fact would have been very correct. Both of them always had kind words for everyone, and they had helped several other establishments get started in Fortune with financial backing and assistance. Most of the merchants in Fortune, no matter their field of business, came for advice from Jezima. She was among the oldest Pralors on Honelze at nearly eighty-five thousand years old, and still as spry and active as a woman half her age. Meral herself was nearing forty-two thousand years old and since she was still single and exceptionally beautiful, many of the men on Honelze were vying for her attentions, though she usually paid them no mind. Her interests laid with a man she had seen only on the VID News reports at different times. He was the head of the Chief Elder's Security Force and his eyes had swept her off her feet the first time she had seen them. She was working up the nerve to travel to Artaaya and meet him at an event in three months where he was going to be one of the Speakers.

Fortune was large yes, but there wasn't much that happened that did not make its way around the colony very quickly. The talk of strange new visitors to Honelze had been the topic of conversation for two days now. Meral knew that there were now over two dozen ships in orbit, none of which were Pralor, but neither she nor her mother paid any mind to the news. As far as they both were concerned, their people needed allies and friends more than they needed to remain hidden. Though they had half a dozen large monitors within their restaurant tuned to the different News channels across Pralor territory, neither Jezima nor Meral ever watched them.

"Meral?" The male voice reached out to her from the side and she turned her head quickly, looking up from the data pad she was typing on. Her long black hair and deep, dark brown eyes were very evident and gave her an exotic look not often seen in Pralor women since many of them were fair skinned.

Meral's face broke into a wide smile and she set the data pad on the counter she was sitting at. "Roneh!" She exclaimed as she rose to her feet and embraced the man. "This is a surprise!" She continued as she held him at arm's length. "What brings the Governor's most trusted aide here? It's been some time hasn't it?"

The man nodded his head with an embarrassed smile. "Almost a year." He answered. "Tending to twin newborns can be quite taxing."

Meral laughed. "I bet." She said. "How are Oceera and the girls doing?"

"Growing faster than we can keep up really." He answered.

"Tell me... what can we do for you?" Meral asked him.

“Governor Menep wanted me to arrange for a large gathering tonight for our guests. A dinner to welcome them.” Roneh answered.

Meral blinked several times. “Guests?” She asked. “What guests?”

Roneh looked shocked. “Haven’t you been watching the News Channels Meral?” He asked. “It has been all over them for over a day now. Everyone is talking about them.”

“Talking about who?” The new voice asked and they both turned to see the older woman step from beyond the counter wiping her hand on the towel at her waist.

“Jezima.” Roneh spoke warmly and embraced the older woman tightly.

Jezima hugged him tightly back and lifted her hands to his face. “How are Oceera and the twins?” She asked.

Roneh nodded with a smile. “All of them are very well.” He said.

“Good. Good. I will send over some of them stuffed biscuits and green leafs that she likes so much.” Jezima told him. “It has been some time since we have seen you here. What brings you today?”

“As I was telling Meral.” Roneh spoke. “The Governor wanted me to arrange for a larger dinner tonight with our guests. A welcoming dinner I suppose.”

“What guests?” Jezima asked him.

Roneh rolled his eyes. “You are almost as bad as your daughter Lady Jezima. Don’t you ever watch the news?”

“What for?” Jezima exclaimed. “To listen to more rants from the stupid, fat man who is trying to unseat the Chief Elder?” Jezima hissed. “Bah... who needs news like that?”

Roneh shook his head. “No... not about Elder Lorendo.” He said. “About the nearly three dozen ships now in orbit filled with Lycavorians.”

Meral’s eyes perked up. “Lycavorians?” She asked. “You mean... the same Lycavorians that we used in the Seed Missions?”

Roneh nodded his head. “Not from the exact Seed Missions but from the same species.”

“Are we back to doing such things again?” Jezima declared. “It was wrong then and it is wrong now!”

Roneh shook his head quickly. “No Lady Jezima.” He replied. “These Lycavorians came out here in search of us. You truly need to watch the news more to remain up to date.” He reached behind her and tapped the control panel on the counter, activating the large monitor above their heads. “This is one of the interviews that were done with their King and his Queens only days ago.”

“Queens?” Jezima spoke up.

“Watch Lady Jezima.” He told her as the screen shifted to the image of six stunningly beautiful women all seated on a couch together and very intimately leaning into one another. All of them had such beautiful eyes and each of them looked radiant in their own unique way. Three of them had incredible colored eyes, one of a breathtaking azure blue, one with dazzling jade green eyes and another with riveting emerald green eyes.

“Mother... look... look at those two!” Meral exclaimed. “They have pointed ears.”

Roneh nodded his head. “They are elves.” He stated. “Listen.”

“...You tell us how each of you met Martin?” The female voice asked.

Jezima looked at Roneh. “That is Tinra!” She exclaimed.

Roneh nodded. “She is the one who did both interviews.” He answered. “Watch.”

“That could take some time.” The red haired woman answered. “How we all met Martin doesn’t really matter to us anymore. What is important to us is how we all came to be together. Aricia, For’mya, Bella, Dysea and I have been together with Martin for over twenty-five years now, but we weren’t fully complete until Cirith joined us.” They watched as the blond elven female with emerald eyes leaned over and nuzzled the dark haired woman’s cheek and neck.

“How very true.” The female with the azure eyes spoke.

“And now she has some catching up to do.” The red haired woman spoke again causing the dark haired woman who the blond elf had nuzzled to look at her with wide eyes.

“Anja!” Cirith exclaimed.

They watched as all of them laughed together. Jezima stared at the monitor almost as if she saw something no one else did. She ignored what was being spoken of as she gazed intently at all of the women. Each of them was confident and powerful, that much was easy enough to see just from their actions and how they spoke. The red haired female was quite humorous in her words and whenever they laughed they always seemed to lean into one another with a great deal of affection. Jezima also noticed that they were always in physical contact with each other no matter how they were sitting on the odd looking couch. There was an enormous amount of fondness between them, almost as if they knew each other quite intimately in some fashion. Their natural beauty was exceptional and Jezima noticed that none of them wore a great deal of makeup, if any at all.

Jezima nodded her head in approval as she reached for the small stack of plates on the counter. "It is about time we began to reach out to others." She stated simply. "We are not all powerful."

"Jezima wait." Roneh spoke. "They have been showing the interviews in segments and after each one they show this Lycavorian King. He is the one everyone is talking about."

"I have work to do young Roneh." Jezima said with a warm smile. "I will let you and the Governor deal with the politicians. Just give me the details to what you would like tonight and I will make it happen."

"I am them and they are me." The deep voice from the monitor caused Jezima's head to snap back around.

It was a voice from beyond time and it shook Jezima right down to the very core of her being and flooded her with sensations of love and warmth. It was a voice she never expected to hear ever again. Her dark eyes grew wide and she dropped the stack of plates as Meral's gasp of shock echoed loudly and caused heads to turn towards them from all around the interior. As the plates shattered against the floor, Jezima's hands went to her face in equal shock and disbelief. The voice and now the face caused mother and daughter to reach for one another in disbelief.

"By the Ancients within the Rift of Time! Mother look...? The Ancients forgive me... look at him!" Meral rasped out the words with utter astonishment in her tone and demeanor.

Jezima was looking and her dark eyes were rapidly filling with tears that she had shed long ago in a different time and place.

Roneh looked at them not understanding why they were reacting in such a way. Both of them appeared as if they had just seen a ghost. "Lady Jezima? Meral? Is everything all right?" He asked quickly.

He looked up as the image changed to the face of Lady Tinra who all of them knew so well from the major News Channels. She was the owner and operator of the five largest News channels within Pralor space.

"This is the last of our segmented interviews with the six Queens of the Lycavorian Union." Tinra's image spoke. "As all of you can see, each of them are not only breathtaking in their beauty, all of them are incredibly intelligent and well spoken. I had wanted to do another interview with them but their duties did not allow them to allocate more time. They graciously have promised me future interviews and I intend to hold them to their offer." Tinra shifted items around in front of her. "I came here TO Manne at the behest of Chief Elder Delnash not really knowing what to expect. We once used Lycavorians as a Seed Species and all of the information that we have in our archives is so very old and so very wrong. I should know, for I checked before I left Artaaya to come here to Manne. What I found upon arriving here is so far removed from what our history scrolls tell us of this species. A species we once thought beneath us in every way and look at them now. They have reached into the stars and have traveled all the way from the Alpha Quadrant to find us. Led by one man. A man every single person I have talked to since arriving here adores in every sense of the word. It should not surprise me but it does, for many different reasons. He is the direct descendant of the Chief Elder so many of our own people loved and adored so long ago. His name is Martin Leonidas and he is the Great, Great Grandson of our beloved Chief Elder Sumar.

My segment with him tomorrow night will begin to detail the history of how that came to be, at least what Martin knows of that history. It is the main reason he has come all this way from the Alpha Quadrant. To discover his history.

Which also happens to be our history, for he carries within him the blood of our people as well as his own.

Roneh did not understand why Jezima collapsed to the floor wailing as tears splashed from her eyes and Meral held her tightly to her body, her own eyes flooded with tears and not allowing her to see anything. Roneh reached for the COM on his belt and began to call for medical support.

HONELZE FORTUNE MINING COMMAND AND CONTROL BUNKER

Menep had seen much in his life but nothing had prepared him for this.

The moment Chief Elder Delnash contacted him and told him what was going on Menep knew that his life was going to become so much more interesting. He loved his duties here and had long ago vowed to insure that the men, women and children of Fortune and the other six mining sites here on Honelze would be safe and secure under his care. He had no political ambitions outside of what he already had. He was a man dedicated to this colony and everyone on it. He was also a man who was somewhat of a historian, dating back to the very beginnings of the Pralors as a people. The last two days among these men and women had showed him that perhaps history as he knew it was not entirely accurate.

Lycavorians. Elves. Vampires.

Species that his people had long considered inferior now roamed the stars and led great empires. He had been aboard one of their ships in orbit and to say he was astonished would be an understatement. Their ships and personnel were just as advanced as his own people. The Lycavorians especially impressed him. They had once been used as a Seed species, and no one thought they would advance past the primal stage of evolution. That Pralor historians had been wrong did not surprise Menep. That they had been so excessively wrong is what stunned him.

He stood with three Queens of this Lycavorian Union. An empire that was now vast and diverse in every way. An empire that, while much smaller than the Pralor empire at its peak, was growing and expanding and doing so in a way that encouraged other species and cultures to join them. And they were doing it peacefully for the most part, which is what stunned Menep the most. All of the records and history on these Lycavorians indicated that they were warlike and violent and savage in their ways. What he had seen in these last two days had blown that preconceived notion right out of the quadrant. Of course all of their records were over forty thousand years old and obviously so very wrong to begin with. No doubt written by idiotic members of the Science Convention who thought the Pralor people were the pinnacle of evolution. Menep chuckled gently to himself and wondered if those fools were looking down now and seeing just how incredibly wrong they had been.

“Governor, is everything alright?” The warm female voice asked and Menep looked up into the stunning face and shining emerald green eyes of the elven Queen Dysea.

Menep of course knew now who the Lycavorian King was, Delnash had hinted at it and these three stunning women had confirmed it for him within hours of being with them. He had been anxious and a little frightened when he had first boarded their massive ship, but these three women had quickly put him at ease with their calm and charming demeanor and the Etheric resonance that they all radiated. He could sense a much more powerful essence within each of them, swirling around them and embracing them, staggering in its power yet so very pure and focused. Menep knew that Delnash had been very correct he now knew.

So very correct indeed.

“Forgive me Lady Dysea. My thoughts wandered for a short time.” He spoke in an almost reverent tone of voice as he looked at her. He was speaking to one of the six wives to a Praetorian of their people; and not just any Praetorian, but the one who descended from the first and most powerful of them.

It was Isabella who smiled and looked at Dysea and Cirith before answering. "Governor we have asked you to not do that." She told him. "We are not all powerful beings and neither is Martin. He would be the first to tell you this."

"In much more colorful terms too." Cirith chimed in with a smile.

Dysea laughed and nodded her head. "Yes he would."

Menep looked at them and nodded. "I know, but to discover that the Praetorians are not dead. To know that they live on in the descendants of Sumar, the most powerful and revered of the Praetorians... it is awe-inspiring."

"You might change your tune when you hear Martin Leonidas cuss like a drunken sailor and throw a fit about something that has gone wrong." Isabella spoke.

Menep looked at them and moved closer to the Star Chart Table they were all standing around, his smile genuine and infectious. "It does not surprise me that our historians were so wrong about Lycavorians and so many other species. That they got it so utterly wrong is what strikes me so deeply. I always thought the Seed Missions were barbaric in a way, as many of our people now do, but to know that those stuffy fools who thought they knew everything could be so wrong... frankly it is hysterical."

Dysea, Isabella and Cirith all laughed with him now. He was quite unlike the Pralors they had first met on Onterom, for he did not have an arrogant bone in his body. He was like Elder Radra and Elder Valael and now Delnash himself as their eyes were opened and they began to realize that they were not all powerful.

Menep looked at them as they stood there side by side. "If I may ask... what is he like? The descendant of Sumar."

"You do realize that you are asking that question to three who love him beyond words." Dysea said. "Our answers would be bias in every way."

Menep smiled. "Those are the best kind." He told them.

"Nauta Melme is... he is far more intelligent than he lets others see." Dysea said. "He is passionate about what he believes. He strives only for the advancement of his people. And he positively hates being King."

Menep looked stunned by this. "You jest." He gasped.

Isabella shook her head. "No. Given the chance, Martin would scoop all of us up in his arms and disappear into the stars and leave it all behind. Of course, our son Androcles would not be very happy about that for it would leave him in charge. He hates titles almost as much as Martin does."

Dysea nodded her head. "Yes he does."

"I can sense his Etheric resonance within all of you." Menep spoke softly. "All of you are powerful alone, but your resonance echoes with him in the background and it is so pure and focused. He loves all of you without question or doubt, like the burning of the sun."

Cirith leaned forward slightly. "You can sense that?" She asked.

Menep nodded his head. "One of my rather odd quirks if you will." He told them. "I can detect the echo of someone's Etheric resonance within others. With the three of you, and your fellow Queens within you, I sense a devotion that surpasses anything I have ever felt. It is refreshing."

"Well... our devotion to him is equal in every way. As is our devotion to each other." Isabella said.

Cirith leaned into Dysea. "Yes it is."

Dysea looked at her with bright emerald eyes and they shared a soft kiss before Menep looked once more at the table before them.

"Forgive me for distracting us." He said. "We must continue."

"As Martin would say, distractions are not a bad thing unless they addle your brain and leave you unable to function." Cirith spoke up.

"Yes... like he does to us on so many occasions beast that he is." Dysea echoed her words.

"They are extremely pleasant distractions Dysea." Isabella said.

Dysea's smile grew larger. "Oh yes. No doubt about that."

Isabella moved back beside her and leaned over to touch the table. She was about to speak when the door to the Control Center slid aside and General Koguth, Garan and Lexi entered speaking with two of Menep's security force.

"General... we were just going to call you and ask for your report." Isabella spoke.

Koguth'Juturi moved right up to the table without hesitation. Menep looked at him intently for he had never seen a Kavalian before two days ago. The dark brown fur that covered his body was well groomed and dotted with spots of gray but he was an extremely large man who looked to be in superb physical condition. He apparently held the complete trust of Dysea, Isabella and Cirith so Menep did not doubt him in the least.

Koguth leaned over and touched the screen bringing up the schematic of the entire wall that surrounded Fortune. "Lexi, Garan and I have just completed walking this entire wall my Queens." He stated. "It has been some time since I have gone up and down so many elevators and steps."

"Did it wear you out General?" Isabella asked with a smile.

Koguth chuckled. "Mani would say yes." He answered referring to his wife. They watched as he and Garan adjusted the schematic and then stood up fully. "I think will begin doing this every day. It is invigorating. And now that Iama is returned to us and we are free, Mani and I can think of having more children to stop the snide remarks from my sons."

"Have you spoken to Iama since she returned with Fedor?" Cirith asked.

Koguth nodded. "Right after she arrived on your son's ship." He stated. "Never have I seen her face so animated and happy. She was telling her mother of the size of this ship and the cooking she would have to do and all of the other things..." Koguth raised his hand. "I was forgotten after the first five minutes."

Dysea, Isabella and Cirith laughed. "Yes... we have been scolded by Martin for doing that very thing with our children as well. Hogging the COM time as he called it." Bella spoke.

Koguth smiled. "Seeing their happiness is all that matters." He said. "Now... on to our report." He set his data pad down and touched the screen. "I must commend you Governor Menep; the upkeep of your wall has been impeccable."

Menep nodded his head. "Considering the size of some of the predators on this planet, it seemed like a prudent thing. Though all credit goes to the engineers assigned to that task."

"Garan?" Koguth spoke.

Garan leaned over now. "Akor'dris and Bae'diraz are finishing the sweep of the exterior portions of the wall with Governor Menep's Security Team and a detachment of General Koguth's men. They should be just about done but their preliminary report was excellent as well."

Isabella nodded. "Good... the wall was our biggest concern." She stated.

"We should begin installing the heavy turrets every hundred meters." Garan spoke. "A mix of your projectile heavy weapon guns and Pralor heavy energy turrets. We can also add a few of the mortar turrets that General Koguth said the Puma Bane were going to use on Manne."

Dysea looked at Koguth. "Koguth?" She asked.

Koguth nodded his head. "Popal is sincere in his wishes Queen Dysea." He told her. "The path Pusintin was guiding them down led only to death and despair. He now knows that in order to truly live this is what we must do."

"And you trust him?" Cirith asked now.

Koguth nodded. "He and those engineers from Manne were never really a threat to us." He said. "To begin anew they are willing to do anything to show you they are true in their intent. This could be the start of what they need to build a future. We have already confirmed that Pian and those aligned with him have begun moving the families of those who defected from Pusintin out of Kavalian territory. This is much easier since they have no contact with Pusintin or his ships. We are not so limited. If their families and Prides are safe then these men will fight for the chance to see them again."

Dysea nodded. "You know them and we will not question you." She said confidently. "We will need every advantage."

"Indeed." Koguth spoke. "Captain Neloy has air patrols scouring every portion of the valley and beyond looking for approaches that the Svorag can use. So far all we are seeing is a direct frontal assault through this valley."

Garan nodded his head. "The mountains are too high for them to traverse. They would freeze before they found a way through the many passes."

"Mine them anyway." Isabella stated. "Airdrop as many mines as we can through all of these passes. We must make certain there is no other way they can come at us. When it is over we can deactivate and retrieve them."

“We will need escape tunnels. Exits for the civilians if things go bad.” Garan said.

Menep leaned forward now. “The old mining tunnels.” He spoke pointing to the area along the base of the massive mountain. “They were what we originally began with when we first settled here. All of them have been deactivated but they are still maintained. Five tunnels, each of which lead directly to a large clearing roughly between six and eight kilometers in all directions from the mountain itself.”

Dysea nodded. “Nauta Melme will want to see them but yes.” She said. “Have a squad from the 1st EB work with Menep’s engineers to insure they are stable and clear whatever they need to clear to allow for transports to set down and extract large amounts of civilians if it is needed.”

“We should lay traps all along this area of the valley.” Lexi spoke now as she moved closer to Dysea. “Dig defilades and shallow trenches and fill them with mines and traps.”

Koguth nodded his head. “The more we slow them down the better off we are.” He stated. “And if we can kill them by the hundreds it may make others pause.”

Dysea looked at Menep. “Governor, we have instructors with us that can train your people in basic tactics. We can arm them and...”

Menep met her eyes. “The vast majority of the citizens of Fortune are engineers and miners Lady Dysea. They are not fighters. I must ask... when do you plan to tell them that the Svorag are coming?”

“This is your colony Governor Menep.” Dysea told him. “When you tell them is entirely up to you. The more they know; I believe the better off we will be. You must know that even with every transport ship the Pralor fleet has, that we have with us now; we will never evacuate everyone here in time. We could remove possibly a third of them, but then the Svorag would be upon us, and we will have to fight.”

Menep nodded his head. “I understand.” He told her. “There are others coming to help us yes?”

Isabella nodded now. “Martin and all of our forces in this Quadrant now will be coming here as soon as they finish securing the safety of the Lycavorian people on Ventori. Some may even choose to help us to fight. Martin could inspire rocks to fight for him.”

“Our children are also coming.” Dysea told him. “They will arrive in a few weeks with hundreds of ships and perhaps another fifty thousand Spartans. Our son is also bringing his 1st Dragon Brigade and Elder Teniri has already begun shifting dragons here from Artaaya to assist.”

“With so many engineers among your people...” Cirith spoke as she leaned across the table. “Could we not establish safe haven within the colony itself, enough to fit every citizen? We have time Dysea. General Koguth? We could turn many of these large holding facilities into complete fortresses with reinforced steel and rock and then connected by underground tunnels so that we can reinforce each other.”

Isabella looked at her. “Like the barracks on Ukwav.” She exclaimed.

Cirith nodded her head. “Yes.”

Dysea looked at Garan. “Is this possible with the equipment we have here Garan?” She asked.

Garan was looking at the map of the colony now and he spun it in several different directions. He nodded his head slowly. “Yes.” He answered. “Yes it is.”

Dysea looked at Menep. “Governor?” She asked.

Menep nodded his head. “We have a plan.” He said softly. “Now that I know what we will do I can tell them tomorrow. Tonight I would like for all of us to have dinner together. I sent Roneh to the finest eating establishment that we have. There has been much talk among our people about all of you since you arrived. Speculation and questions. With your permission I would like to try and put that to rest.”

Dysea looked at Isabella and Cirith. “A good meal sounds very nice.” Cirith spoke.

Dysea turned back to him. “We would like that Governor.”

Menep smiled. “Excellent.” He said cheerfully. “Excellent. I will have Roneh make the arrangements and we can continue here with our plans.”

“This is what I propose...” Koguth began.

Alive.

They were alive. Words that Martin imagined he would hear.

Since Delnash had told him this, Martin had kept his Etheric shields locked down very tightly in order to not alarm anyone. He felt such joy within him at this news. Joy and anxiety for he did not know if they would accept him for who he was. The first person he had spoken to was Wayonn. He had known them and he would know what to do and what to say. Wayonn for his part was ecstatic and filled with disbelief at the news. He had boarded a ship to take him to Honelze only ten minutes ago with a message Martin had recorded for his ancestors. He hadn't really known what to say but he had tried at least.

Now he was standing on one of the high ridges near the ADHOC base with half a dozen Durcunusaan from his Spartan Attack Division encircling him at a respectful distance. All of them knew their King's mannerisms and habits. He was deep in thought and when he was like this, he preferred to be alone to ponder whatever was on his mind. Only General Simpson, Helen or one of their Queens would dare interrupt him when he was like this. They saw him turn to watch as two of their comrades led Namiri and Emylea up towards their King. Martin tried to adjust the new body armor since he was still getting used to it and then he watched as Namiri and Emylea approached cautiously. They were hesitant and he was the one who had given them reason to be. Namiri was the ground fighter and he saw her dark eyes move back and forth all around them as they stopped in front of him.

Martin looked at the two Durcunusaan. "That will be all." He said evenly.

The two men nodded their heads and turned without question and headed back down the ridge a respectful distance. They did not fear for their King for he could squash both of these females without as much as a deep breath.

"Thank you for coming." Martin told them.

"Did we have a choice?" Namiri asked but she kept her voice calm and neutral.

"You do not have to be afraid of me." Martin said.

Emylea looked at him and her pale blue eyes narrowed. "You held a weapon to my sister's head!" She spat at him. "You threatened to kill her!"

Namiri took her sister's hand quickly. "Emylea you..." She began to speak but Martin's words cut her off.

"And now I am apologizing for that." He said softly. "After what you both did for my people, it was wrong of me to do that."

Emylea and Namiri both looked at him with wide eyes shocked that he would admit such a thing. Namiri tilted her head to the side as she looked at him for a long moment. "You... you had no intention of harming me did you?" She asked finally seeing Emylea look at her with wide eyes.

"Namiri what are you..." Emylea began to say.

Martin looked at her as well for a long moment. He liked this young woman for she reminded him of Eliani. She had a fire inside her that she would let no one distinguish. He shook his head finally. "No." He told her finally. "I was angry at what had happened. Tina has been... she is someone who I have considered family for a very long time. Even before I took this job." He looked directly at Namiri. "No... I would not have hurt you Namiri Daret, any of you. Not after what you have done for my people."

"Our mother did not know what the Chief Counsel did King Leonidas." Emylea told him realizing very quickly that this man was speaking true words. "They argued about it when your people brought us to that building. She was livid."

Martin nodded his head. "Yes, I know."

"You... you know?" Emylea asked shocked once more.

"My people can detect the chemical released in a person's body when they lie." Martin told them.

"When someone lies your body secretes a unique chemical into your bloodstream to help you attempt to cover up that lie. The scent of that chemical is very pungent to us, and we can detect it in just about every species we have ever come across."

"You smelled this in our mother?" Namiri asked.

"I did... yes." Martin answered. "My sense of smell is more keen than most. It's very uncomfortable sometimes, but very handy in others." Martin looked at them and motioned at the ground as he sat down. Namiri and Emylea glanced at each other surprised but after a moment they both settled to the ground in front of him. "I have four daughters very close to your age you know." He told them. "I do not want you to view me as a monster because, had I been your mother, I would have tried to do the same thing and I would have been just as angry as she was that someone had gone behind my back. I am more concerned for the experiments that have been done on my people by yours. I asked you both here to apologize yes, but I also think you are more even tempered."

"We will not go against our mother!" Namiri stated quickly. "We..."

Martin held up his hand. "I'm not asking you to go against your mother Namiri." He told her. "This Perlyea person seems to have a real problem with me personally and men in general. Fine... that is her problem. I have no intention of doing anything to the Tasmor. I respect and honor what your people have done for mine. I just want them back. They are my people and I did make that vow to the spirits of my ancestors."

"You... you believe in faith King Leonidas?" Emylea asked.

Martin smiled and nodded. "Some would say no, but I have my own ways that I talk to whatever gods may be up there looking down on us."

"Is it also true that you have Pralor blood within you?" Namiri asked now.

Martin nodded once more. "Yes. As do many of my people who come from the Alpha Quadrant. That is one of the reasons we came out here. To try and find out about that part of our history. It didn't begin very well but it's not turning out so bad now." He replied thinking about what Delnash had told him only a short time ago.

"What do you mean?" Namiri asked truly interested now.

"Let's just say that I was informed this morning that it is very possible I may have living family among the Pralors. Family that I am descended from. That my children are descended from." Martin told them. "I did not come out here for conflict and I certainly do not want an incident with the Tasmor. How you live your lives is your business... but when it means that you experiment on my people I cannot..."

"We asked your people King Leonidas." Namiri blurted out.

"Namiri!" Emylea protested as she took her arm.

Namiri met her sister's gaze. "They will discover the truth sister, you know this." Namiri spoke. "Mother is being mother and all she wants is to protect our people and see them become better. Sometimes she is just too stubborn to see what is in front of her."

Emylea was silent for she agreed with Namiri completely. They had both told their mother the same thing over the last few years. She turned back to Martin. "We asked... we asked your people to allow us to take their DNA. To use it and to try and improve ourselves. Your healing factor alone could save millions of Tasmor over the years because of your resistance to diseases. It could extend our lives."

"No one was forced to do this?" Martin asked them.

Namiri shook her head quickly. "We thought your leaders would refuse the request but days after it was made, all of them came forward and said they would help us. Hundreds of your people volunteered and came forward to donate. Our doctors and scientists have been able to use your DNA to improve the Tasmor."

"Like Anthylea?" Martin asked.

Namiri nodded almost shyly. "But not just Anthylea and those like her." She told him. "Very soon we will be able to make it so the vaccines and serums made with the DNA of your people can be combined with the DNA of our people and diseases that have ravaged our species for millennia will no longer hang over our heads." She dipped her head and Emylea squeezed her arm in support.

"What?" Martin asked softly.

Emylea looked at him. "We are a proud people King Leonidas." She answered. "We do not hate males, nor are they mistreated, but because of the way our species has evolved there are few options open to us. We do not... we do not normally talk to our males as we are talking now."

Martin smiled at them. "Yes, I noticed that. You are talking to me now though. Why?"

"To be honest... many of them are not intelligent enough." Emylea answered. "There are exceptions yes, but many of our males have deficiencies when they are born. Our doctors and scientists have tried for centuries to discover why this is but they have had no success."

"The Pralor people have very advanced doctors and medical equipment." Martin told them. "Did you ask them for help?"

"They refused." Namiri said instantly.

“Did you ask or did you demand?” Martin asked them. Namiri and Emylea both were silent and after a moment they both looked away embarrassed. Martin nodded his head. “That’s what I thought.”

“They know of our plight.” Namiri spoke once more. “This information was given to them by our doctors. They refused to help us.”

“I have gotten to know Chief Elder Delnash pretty well over the last weeks and I find it hard to believe he would refuse such a request.” Martin told them.

“You... you know the Pralor Chief Elder?” Emylea asked stunned.

Martin nodded. “Yes.”

“Could you speak to him for our people?” Namiri stammered.

Martin looked at her oddly. “No one in your government has met with Delnash?” He asked.

“My mother herself sent a message to him.” Emylea said. “We both saw it. We witnessed as Tobia transmitted it. The reply did not come until after her and the other Pralor... Valael... it did not come until after they had left our people. It was refused.”

Martin reached back behind him and pulled his P1 from the small of his back. Namiri and Emylea both watched with wide eyes as he activated it and tapped on the screen several times. Their eyes grew wider when they saw the image of the older women appear within the small holotransmission.

“Martin?” Radra exclaimed surprised. “What? Is something wrong?”

Martin shook his head. “No... I have a question for you though.”

“Of course.” Radra answered.

“Who would receive an official transmission from a species requesting medical aide or assistance?” Martin asked.

Radra blinked. “I am the Medical Convention’s Lead Elder. It would have come to me. Why?” She asked.

“Has Delnash or the Elder Council ever refused a request for medical aide here in the Echo Quadrant? Regardless of that species technological capabilities?” Martin asked.

Radra shook her head instantly. “No. Never. And we have helped several in just the last three centuries alone. The only species we refused to assist were the Kintaur because they held several dozen of our explorers as their prisoners. We told them if they were returned to us unharmed then we would talk. We never heard from them again.”

“Nothing from the Tasmor?” Martin asked.

Radra shook her head. “No.”

Martin held up his hand quickly keeping Emylea and Namiri both from shouting at the holoimage of Radra. “You are sure?”

“Martin... my people may be arrogant and stupid in many cases, but we are not fools.” Radra told him. “We would have jumped at the chance to help the Tasmor in any way we could. Especially in a medical sense. Their temperament and self-absorbed attitude aside, having them as friends could have led to many things that we do not have now. If such a request had come to me, I would have taken it to Delnash immediately. He would have jumped at the chance to secure at least friendly relations with them. I assure you... nothing ever came to me from the Tasmor. Official or otherwise.”

Martin nodded. “Thank you Radra... I just wanted to be sure.”

“Certainly.” Radra answered just before Martin tapped the P1 once more and ended the transmission.

“She lies!” Emylea protested. “We saw Tobia and our mother do this! We were in the same room! Anthylea as well!”

Namiri was more astute when it came to the Lycavorian people and after hearing what he had told them only a few moments ago she looked at Martin carefully. “She was not lying was she?” She asked.

Martin shook his head. “No she wasn’t.”

Emylea looked shocked. “You... you can determine this even when she is aboard your ship?” She gasped.

Martin shook his head. “She’s not aboard my ship. At this moment she’s here on the surface with my wife and mate Anja.” He told them. He tapped his jaw implant. “Red?”

“I’m here Lover.” Anja answered instantly.

“You clear?”

“I just left the medical building.” Anja spoke.

“Did I miss something?” Martin asked.

“No. Not even a touch of adrenalin entered her system.” Anja answered. “She was telling the truth.”

“You heard everything else?” Martin asked her.

“Every word.” Anja said.

Namiri put it together then and her eyes grew wide. “She has... she has heard everything we talked of!” She gasped.

Martin met her eyes. “I don’t keep secrets from my wives and mates.” Martin told her. “Anja?”

“Based on what they told you Lover, I would have to say it is some sort leveled enzyme deficiency while within the womb. If not that then definitely something along the lines of Darpia Syndrome with Bella, but this disease attacks the synaptic patterns of the brain functions and not the mineral components of the mother’s womb. It’s probably hereditary too considering not all of their male babies are affected.” Anja answered. “Dee and I could probably figure it out in a few hours if we had their doctor’s research.”

“Are you headed to the meeting?” Martin asked.

“I’m going to pull For’mya off the STRIKER now. Atropos and Thoti brought them to the ADHOC right before you asked Namiri and Emylea to join you.” She answered.

“Ok... the two of you run with that for now.” Martin said.

“Do you care how?” Anja asked him.

“Anja?” Martin asked with a roll of his eyes.

“Ok. Ok. I just wanted to ask.” Anja answered with a small laugh.

“Aricia and I are going to take Namiri and Emylea for a little ride.” Martin said. “Let me know if you discover anything Red.”

“Always Lover.” Anja answered.

Martin rose to his feet as he tapped the implant once more. He held out his hands for them and after only a few seconds both Namiri and Emylea took his offer and he helped to pull them to their feet.

“I have one more question for you.” He asked. “Do the Kintaur know your names?”

Namiri looked at him keenly now. “The one... the one that you killed. He knew my name. That is why... that is why I froze. I was shocked.”

“So that is a no right?” Martin asked.

Emylea shook her head now. “Those we associate with know our names yes, but even our news people refer to us as the Sovereign Regent Daughters. That is our official title among our people.”

“So how did the Kintaur know that you two were going to be here and how did they know your names?” Martin asked them.

“They would not!” Namiri declared.

Martin held up the data pad and held it out to Namiri. “This is a transcript of their ship logs.” He told them. “Elder Valael decrypted and translated them. The Kintaur came here because they knew both of you were going to be here running the operation to help my people. And they knew you by name.”

“By the gods... how?” Emylea asked.

The gust of wind startled both of them and they looked up to see Torma’s massive body land only a short distance away, Isheeni right beside him with Aricia already in her saddle. Namiri and Emylea gripped each other tightly in fear.

Martin smiled as he walked up to Torma who lowered his head and butted Martin gently in the shoulder. “There is nothing to be afraid of.” He told them turning back and looking at them as he scratched the underside of Torma’s massive snout. “I have a proposition for both of you. This is Torma and Isheeni and they found the Kintaur pukes who escaped our little ambush this morning. They are hiding on the southern edge of the city. Five of them. I don’t suppose you would be interested in finding out how they got this information would you.”

“Yes!” Emylea and Namiri spoke at the same time.

Martin and Aricia chuckled at their reaction. “Then one of you can ride with Aricia and one of you can ride with me.” Martin told them. “See... I really hate traitors. And these traitors or traitor not only put you in danger, they put my people in danger. That just burns my ass to no end.” Martin nimbly leaped onto Torma’s back and settled into the saddle before turning and looking at them.

“How bout we find out together.”

Namiri and Emylea paused for only a microsecond before they were moving.

CHAPTER FORTY-FIVE

SPARTA'S WRATH ORBITING AUSTROVA

Androcles Leonidas squatted at the foot of the ramp leading up into the PREMONITION, both of his hands filled with the pommel and blade of Cana rie Emanur. The Hope of Eternity. The Light of Eternity was still attached to the combat harness he usually wore over his Mark VI ArmorPly, the blade hidden within Flatspace. The upper portion of his body armor rested on the deck next to the ramp waiting for him to rise and put it on.

The Dragon Armor forged blade of Cana rie Emanur shimmered in the bright light of the landing bay of SPARTA'S WRATH, allowing him to see his own reflection in the flawless blade. Nehtes, the High Elven Union Weapons Master, had done a masterful job with both swords, as he always did. They were extensions of his own body in every possible way, perfectly weighted and balanced for his own unique style of fighting. Nehtes and his three assistants, his two sons and daughter, were the only four individuals in the Union who could craft such weapons. They were the only ones allowed to manipulate the Dragon Armor in its raw, unrefined state. The four of them and the factory they ran in Eden City produced nearly eighty percent of all bladed weapons in the Union now. It wasn't so much the Dragon Armor blades they crafted, they were the only ones within the Union allowed to do such a thing, but their forging process had become legendary and blade crafters from across the Union had come to them to learn this technique. Since the Dragon Armor forged weapons were carefully controlled and only issued to Drow combat units and the Durcunusaan, the forging process they used had become the finest in the Union and now every bladed weapon forged used this same refining process no matter the material of the blade. Nehtes store and factory in Eden City was perhaps one of the most well-guarded and secure facilities anywhere in the Union now.

Andro ran his fingers along the side of the blade almost reverently, the bustle of activity in the landing bay shut from his mind completely. The one mind that had free reign within his thoughts besides his precious wives and mates reached for him now, filling him with peace and happiness even considering what was going on.

This is not your fault Andro my dear dragon brother. Elynth's soft and warm voice filled his mind.

Isn't it? He spoke now but with an undercurrent of anger or anxiousness. My actions, my orders are what made this take place sister. They are what caused others to react in such a way. They are what brought Torian and Ulana together.

Torian did not question what you tasked him with Andro. Elynth told him. His feelings for Ulana aside, he knew this was important. And she is no longer the same pompous young woman she was a few short months ago. Her eyes have been opened to so much more that she never knew existed.

I know. Andro replied.

Do you doubt yourself now? Elynth asked.

No. Androcles answered instantly. That is not something I will ever do again sister. I need to make it right though.

And we will. Very soon. Do you fear for Torian's life?

Androcles shook his head. They will not kill him. He answered. He is too important to them alive no matter what this fool Rotaxe boasts.

That is what I believe as well. We proceed as we have planned Andro and we will retrieve them. Elynth said.

Sister... do you ever regret what we share? He asked her.

Never. Elynth answered instantly. It makes much more sense now that we have learned what Sarlana has told us. And we will learn so much more when we join with Laren and Ladur. We will have the answers that we have sought for so long Andro. That Dorian and Ryner have sought since joining this life.

We knew that we would be different before we ever joined this world Elynth. Andro spoke softly. That we would never lead a normal life. Part of me wishes Dorian and Ryner did not have to experience that.

How do we know that the life we have now is not normal? Elynth asked him with some humor in her tone. You know as well as I do that Dorian and Ryner have embraced what we are now that they know the answers are so close. Elynth paused for a moment and then asked the question. Do you regret it Andro my brother?

Andro shook his head as he looked up to stare at the ceiling of the hanger bay so far above. Not for a single moment.

Whatever destiny that the gods of fate have planned for, us we will meet it together Andro. Just as we promised each other all those years ago. Elynth said.

Yes we will. He echoed her words.

Then we will talk no more of this. Sadi and the others are behind you and now you will do what you have planned for weeks. Elynth told him. They are your strength my brother, just as Anthar is mine, as your mothers are for your father and my mother for my father. It is the way of things. How it came to be is of no matter now.

No it is not. Only that it is. Andro said as he rose to his feet but didn't turn as he smelled them behind him.

We will join you shortly. Elynth spoke as Andro turned and saw them moving up behind him slowly. They could feel the tremors in Mindvoice and knew he was talking to Elynth, but he also saw the looks of concern in their eyes and on their faces for he had been blocking them for over an hour now and they did not know why. Sadi and Lu'ria walked side by side, Carisia and Caliria to Lu'ria's right, Ne'Veha and Sehri to Sadi's left. All of them were holding hands and pressed tightly to one another. Andro twirled Cana rie Emanur in his hand gracefully and the blade disappeared into Flatspace just before he returned it to the harness on the deck opposite Saar and stood back up.

Andro gazed at them with his azure eyes and he smiled as they stopped in front of him.

"Saradasaar...?" Sadi spoke softly. "You wanted us to come down before the others. What is wrong Andro?"

"Nothing." Andro answered. He motioned to the ramp. "Sit... all of you please."

The questions in their eyes did not go away as they moved around him and settled to the deck ramp, scooting close to one another as he knew they would. They were now tied so tightly together within in the Etheric realm it was next to impossible to tell their resonances apart, just as it was with his mothers. Once more it made Andro wondered how they were all his, part of his mind and his soul. He had resisted it at first, but the pull had been too strong and he had finally surrendered to the emotions within him just as his father had. Sadi would always call to him just a little bit more because she was Lycavorian, his Anome and her sugar plum and spice scent was so sweet to him, but what he felt for Ne'Veha and Lu'ria and Sehri and Carisia and Caliria was without question or doubt.

Andro squatted in front of them and looked at them, drinking in their scents and their beauty.

"We thought... we thought you were angry with us for some reason." Carisia spoke first. "You have been blocking us since we returned to the ship."

Andro nodded his head. "It is not you Enylarcopri, none of you. I just had to think some things through and center myself."

"We can help you Androcles." Sadi said. "You know this."

Andro nodded his head. "And all of you did." He told them.

"What is it our love?" Ne'Veha asked him reaching up to stroke his cheek with her slim fingers.

Androcles smiled and reached around to the small of his back and withdrew the long, velvet and silk encased box. "I had wanted to wait and do this when we were in more comfortable and private surroundings but as is usually the case with my life, I am not going to get that chance." He told them with a smile. "That is why I had all of you come down here before the others."

"Andro what is going on?" Sehri asked.

Andro lifted the box in the palm of his hand so that they all could see it.

"I do not know where this journey we have begun will end..." Andro spoke softly as he looked at them. "I do know that it began the moment the darkness lifted and revealed to me six beating hearts that were one; your hearts. I do not care how it came to be anymore... only that it is. I love each of you with every beat of my heart and every breath that I take and I want you to know that no matter what happens through the years... no matter what... I will come for you. Even from beyond the veil of death itself if need be.”

Andro lifted his other hand and unwrapped the long, thin box from within the silk cloth and then flipped the box up slowly. Six pairs of eyes grew wide in astonishment and six gasps of disbelief echoed softly in the immediate area around the ramp.

Positioned perfectly in the thin box were six teal green rings. Each of them stuck into the velvet like interior of the box firmly, each with a glittering coral red center jewel, the jewel surrounded by white/gold leafs and delicate inscriptions. The rings were nearly translucent in nature, allowing for the color of the coral red Heart of Dragon jewel in the center to permeate the entire ring and give off an almost surreal glow.

“I had... I had these made for each of you...” Andro spoke softly. “...To symbolize my love and devotion to each of you.”

“Andro... they are made from Auramite!” Sadi gasped in shock.

Andro nodded his head. “Yes, for that is the depth of my love.” He lifted the first ring out of the box and held it out to Sadi. “Eternally...” Sadi’s hands were shaking as she took the ring. “Our...” The next one went to Carisia. “Hearts...” This one went to Ne’Veha. “Are...” Lu’ria took hers next. “Bound...” This went to Caliria. “Forever...” Sehri’s eyes were wide as she took the ring. “Kertal duon gais wen roton elly.”

Andro’s own heart was racing as he watched them stare at the rings, tears spilling from their eyes, holding them almost reverently. “You are supposed to put them on.” Andro told them with a small smile.

None of them hesitated in the least, all of them sliding the rings onto the ring finger of their left hands. Each ring was a perfect fit for each of them even though none of them had been measured for it. Though he knew of the custom of wedding rings from ancient Earth, Andro would not realize the significance of this until months from now and it would only confirm to him that indeed all of them had been meant for each other from the moment they entered this life. He looked at each of their faces, their scents and their beauty long since burned into his mind and his soul.

Sadi finally looked at him, tears spilling from her jungle green eyes. “Andro we... we have nothing to give to you.” She gasped.

Androcles Leonidas smiled and his azure colored eyes shone in their brilliance. “You have already given to me all I will ever need Kertagai. All I have ever wanted. All of you have. That is your love for me.”

Sadi reached out quickly and took his face in her hands. “You will always have that Androcles Leonidas our love! Always and forever.” She kissed him hard then, his lavender and mint scent beyond glorious to her.

All of them brought heads forward, moving around him in such a way so that they could all shower his face and lips with kisses. They were kisses that Andro returned with zealous fervor, drinking in their sweet scents and their Etheric resonance.

“Ahem!” The female voice echoed from behind them after a long moment and all of them turned quickly to see Eliani and Brendi standing in front of Jomann a few feet away with the others of their team all standing around her. Eliani had her arms crossed under her ample chest and her head was canted slightly to the side. “While the thought of watching you assault your wives and mates in the landing bay is not something I care to picture, gross would be a good word to use, could you please get a room!” Eliani blurted.

Denali, Lisisa, Dorian, Deion, Nara and all of the Leonidas siblings burst into instant laughter at Eliani’s statement for it was almost the exact same thing Androcles had told her and Jomann a few months ago when Eliani had surrendered to her feelings for Jomann in the landing bay of the SCIMITAR. While Fedor, Eirene and Kalis had learned of this event after only a few hours among them, since they were members of their family and all was shared with them, they now felt like they had experienced it as well. Andro was chuckling as he rose to his feet, Sadi and the rest of them crowding around him, wiping tears from their eyes but beaming with huge smiles and looks of adoration. Andro let his eyes linger on them for a moment longer and then looked up to the others.

His brothers and sisters, their wives and mates, Dutkne, Murano and Sarlana standing in the rear of the group. Androcles had never seen a more diverse group of men and women with such a large age difference, but damned if they did not work so very well together.

“Carians... we are such an unorthodox and odd bunch.” Andro said shaking his head.

“We emulate our leader!” Lisisa chimed in with the comment and this brought more laughter from everyone.

Andro shook his head with a smile, all of them sensing the happiness in their older brother easily now. It was a happiness that he had kept hidden from the eyes of everyone ever since the nightmare of Alba Tau. Slowly but surely it was reaching for and then breaching the surface of his demeanor, exposing more of the brother they had all grown up with.

“I have spoken with Coren and Alrerin.” Andro finally began. “We were going to try and move this along a little slower but we all agree recent events have taken away that option from us.” Andro looked at him. “In fifty-three hours we are going to unleash our brand of warfare on the Beta Quadrant. We no longer have the luxury of playing with these fools, for events with father and our mothers are growing tenuous. They are encountering far more obstacles and unknowns than we are and I will no longer play nice.”

Dorian grinned. “Kick ass time!” He quipped playfully.

Andro nodded his head. “A good choice of words fervon.” He said. “We are going to retrieve Torian, Ulana and the others first. We will then return here and I will present to the Vanari Board of Regents what will take place. How they chose to act I do not know and at this point I do not care. Once that is complete we will drop Ulana and the other Senators off on Amanuce where they will finish what they have begun. Armen has already deployed the deep probes to Laren and Ladur’s location. From Amanuce we will proceed directly there, while Sa’sur and the others remain here to support Coren and Alrerin. I believe both of them are angry enough now to do it without our support, but they will have it nonetheless. Tenna Deia is already arranging things from back home. She has officially moved her home to Sparta and that is where she will now be located.” Andro moved away from Sadi and the others a little.

“We are going into the unknown my family...” He stated. “...Further than we have ever gone before. Now is the time to make it known if you wish to remain behind.”

“That’s a joke right?” Denali asked now. “Jeez fervon... we really need to teach you about punch lines.”

Normya pushed away from Tir’ut’s comforting bulk and looked at Androcles. “We doubted you once fervon.” She said softly. “We will never doubt you again.”

“Avoi.” Lisisa echoed softly.

“None of us are going anywhere. It is far too exciting around you.” Kalis spoke now stepping closer as all eyes turned to him.

Eliani rolled her eyes. “Wow! We’ve corrupted him already.” She stated. “Father is going to be so pissed.”

“I say we stop all this mushy sibfla and get to the ass kicking part!” Deion called out.

Mari looked at Deion with wide eyes in mock outrage. “Deion Leonidas!” She exclaimed loudly. “Your language!”

Deion’s face turned slightly red. “Oops!”

Eliani Leonidas had no such compunctions about her choice of words. She was too much her mother’s daughter.

“Let the ass whupping begin!” She barked out.

AUSTROVA EMBER’S COVE

“...Had no right!” Ardan barked angrily at Asay from across the table.

Thirteen members of the Vanari Board of Security Regents sat around the table, all of them appearing flustered and confused at what had happened over the last few hours. None of the other Regents really seemed to know what was going on and this alone gave Coren and Alrerin a great deal of information that they did not have before. Ardan and Galar they did not trust in the least and both men had sat there watching as Alrerin’s senior aides disseminated the information they had to this point, the vast majority of which came from Androcles and his people, the rest coming from Asay Va Eldost’s office.

This was a surprise for both Coren and Alrerin as had they believed Asay Va Eldost was, if not part of the conspiracy, then at the very least aware of it. This did not seem to be the case as she presented the information gathered by her staff before coming here and they correctly reasoned that this is why Ardan was beginning to try demean and browbeat the junior Regent into silence. Something that Asay was having none of Coren and Alrerin saw.

In truth Asay Va Eldost seemed to be downright angry and it showed in her expression and mannerisms. There was also something about her that Coren detected after a few moments. Asay Va Eldost was different than when they had last met before the Lycavorians had arrived. During that meeting she had been very tentative and had allowed Galar and Ardan to dismiss her words; an event she was obviously not going to allow this time. Nyosa had given a brief introduction into her world as they laid in bed the night before, neither of them really able to sleep, yet intimacy hadn't entered either of their thoughts. They had been content to simply hold each other and Nyosa told him of the changes that he would begin to experience. One of which Coren was detecting right now. Coren finally noticed it after she had been speaking for several moments but he said nothing. Two, barely discernible marks at the juncture of her shoulder and neck that now looked almost completely healed. They were nearly identical to what was very nearly healed on his body, in almost the exact same location.

"I had every right!" Asay snarled back at him. "You cannot just circumvent the security procedures that we have in place Ardan! No one can!"

"The First Regent was believed dead!" Ardan spat. "I was acting with my authority as his Second!"

"We did not know anything, and that authority does not apply unless his death can be confirmed by the Board of Security Regents! You know this!" Asay spoke undaunted. "You may be the Second Regent but having all information gathered by our forces in regards to these attacks funneled through your office is against our policies! And you know it!"

"I did what I felt was in the best interests of the Vanari people!" Ardan snapped.

"Did you?" Asay questioned him. "Ordering a blanket lockdown across the planet and having any Lycavorian who was outside the Restriction Zones arrested and interrogated like they were common thugs is in the best interests of our people?"

"The Lycavorians attacked Coren's home!" Galar shouted now. "They attacked our First Regent's home!"

"The Lycavorians from the Union did not!" Asay snapped right back at him. "They were the ones who saved lives last night! The lives of Coren and the First Regent, and how many untold members of our Vanari Security forces? Or does your hatred of them blind you to the facts presented here today?"

"They are all Lycavorians!" Ardan protested vehemently waving his hand dismissively at her. "How do we know that this was not some elaborate plan to make it appear as if they are innocent?"

"How do we know they are not?" Asay barked.

"They wore Union uniforms! The boy Prince had his people take their weapons before we could gather them! They conducted a military operation within our own city and they stole computer information from what they say was an OSG Safe House! Why have we not seen any of these things? Why?" Ardan demanded.

"Perhaps Ardan, perhaps because there is some truth to what they have been saying since they arrived! There is no record anywhere within our Intelligence Community of a Vanari safe house in the location they struck! The sub levels of that particular building were supposed to be sealed shut seven years ago!" Asay spat. "You and other Regents have given free passage to the Eridiani to wander our cities for decades with your votes! Why suddenly is it, that when there is someone who is openly aligned against the OSG and dares to fight against them, do you balk?"

Ardan glared at her. "What do you accuse me of?" He shouted. "I will have you removed from this meeting for such words!"

Asay Va Eldost was made of much sterner material it seemed for she leaned across the table and pointed her finger directly at Ardan. "You will not dismiss me Ardan Vu Lamurrion!" She snarled at him. "And you will no longer dismiss those on this Security Board!"

Galar stood up from his chair. "You will mind your place at this table Asay Va Eldost!" He growled at her.

"Or what Galar Arn Del...?" Asay asked angrily. "You will remove me? I dare you to attempt this! I challenge you to try!" She spoke loudly. "If you do, I will go right to every Vanari News Channel and give a briefing about what has happened and how you and Ardan are trying to cover up the truth of these attacks!"

“What truth?” Ardan barked. “The Lycavorians attacked the heart of our government! What more is there to know?”

“We have their bodies dressed in old Union uniforms! Nothing more! Androcles admitted this to me freely! The weapons they collected I saw personally and he has sworn to me they are outdated and haven’t been in use in over thirty years!” Coren spoke now.

“You believe them Coren?” Another Regent asked.

Coren nodded his head. “Androcles would not lie to me. He and Denali have taken my daughters as their wives and mates. That is not something they would do now.”

“So you say?” Galar spat. “You have been among them for too long!”

“And you have not been among them enough!” Coren snarled at him. “Not one of the Lycavorians that arrived with Androcles Leonidas has worn a uniform even remotely similar to the attackers since they came here. It will not be hard to determine where these men and women came from and I am having our doctors do just that.”

“What?” Ardan gasped.

“At this moment they are comparing the DNA and cellular structure of the Lycavorians who attacked my home and the First Regent’s home to those Lycavorians who come from the Alpha Quadrant.” Coren told him. “They will tell us where these terrorists came from.”

“You had no right to do this without consulting me! I am the Second Regent!” Ardan exclaimed.

“I gave that order, not Coren.” Alrerin spoke now. “He simply carried out my instructions to him. Or are you telling me that, as First Regent, I do not have this authority Ardan?”

Ardan paused for a moment his eyes blinking before he shook his head. “No... of course not First Regent, I did not...”

“I received full assurances from Androcles Leonidas that his people would supply to us any information we asked for within reason.” Alrerin told them.

“You believed him as well First Regent?” Galar looked at him in disbelief.

“His own sister Lisisa and Arduri Re Mydala took part in saving the lives of my family and me.” Alrerin told him. “If they had wanted me dead why not just do it themselves? Killing close to a hundred of their own people to assassinate Coren and myself? You think they would do this?”

“They are animals!” Ardan spat angrily. “We do not know what they are capable of First Regent!”

“Is this why you have not released the full information on the serum that Caliria Re Mydala... forgive me... Caliria Leonidas discovered, worked on and eventually had a hand in creating?” Alrerin asked. “You saw it work for yourself and yet you keep the knowledge of this serum bogged down in procedure. No one outside of this room knows for sure that it even exists Ardan. There are rumors all over, yet you have done nothing. Why is that?”

“Our doctors cannot confirm the viability of this so called serum!” Ardan snapped at him. “How did they know to create it? My personal physician tells me the only way they could have developed a serum is if they are the ones who developed it to begin with! They refused to even give us the full so called cure until their boy Prince arrived here!”

“And we all know the reason for that.” Coren spoke evenly.

“Bah!” Ardan rasped. “Telling us that our own people are involved with the OSG when Vanari Intelligence can produce no corroborating information? You will believe them over our own Intelligence people?”

“I believe what my eyes tell me!” Coren barked. “Over two dozen of our young women were rescued by Androcles and his people, three of whom had been prisoners of the OSG and their minions for over a year! I watched as these broken young women, our people, I watched as the hours passed and these young women grew stronger and more confident as the OSG serum was purged from their body. To include my own daughter! That is what I saw Ardan!”

“Did you see any of them injected with this so called serum?” Ardan popped right back. “I did not! They supposedly injected our females before they brought them to that ship! That was very convenient for them!” Ardan glared at him. “You shock me Coren Re Mydala. You have hated these animals for decades and suddenly you are on their side! Why?”

“My eyes have been opened Ardan.” Coren answered him.

“Your daughter broke our laws by even attempting to develop a cure!” Galar Arn Del snarled. “And then your former wife and your remaining children took it upon themselves to break even more of our laws in order to retrieve her!” Galar waved his hand at Coren.

Coren glared at the man from across the table. “Be very careful of where you tread with your words Galar Arn Del.” He spoke menacingly. “I have been on this Board for far longer than you and I have forgotten more about my Cadre training than you ever knew.”

“And now you threaten me!” Galar popped. “Devra Re Mydala refused to return to face punishment for her crimes! His daughter Naesta refused to return! His daughter Arduri mocks us openly with her presence on our planet when she should be in chains in a cell! All of your children should be! Devra Re Mydala too! And your former lover Tastia who now consorts with one of those dark skinned elves! Even now you have over a dozen Lycavorians on these very grounds when they should be in chains!”

Coren nodded his head. “They are coordinating with my own Cadre Security force in protecting those who are currently staying here. Apparently... this is required by Union law when it concerns the parents of a Crown Princess of the Union as Caliria is now recognized.”

“Caliria Re Mydala is a criminal!” Galar barked out the words.

“My daughter Caliria is a Crown Princess of the Lycavorian Union.” Coren spoke more calmly. “My daughter Arduri another recognized Princess of the Union. If you are feeling full of yourself Galar, then by all means, please try to arrest either of them.”

“Enough!” Alrerin shouted as he came to his feet. “I will hear no more!”

“First Regent you...” Galar started to press Alrerin but saw the older man glare at him angrily.

“I will hear no more of your drivel Galar!” Alrerin shouted at him. “None!”

“We will do nothing?” Ardan gasped in mock shock hoping that this is what Alrerin would say.

“Oh no...” Alrerin spoke. “We are going to do quite a bit.” He looked at Asay. “Regent Va Eldost... you and your office will take lead on this investigation. I want no stone unturned Asay, no matter where it may lead! You will operate with my authority as First Regent!”

Asay looked stunned but she quickly nodded her head. “As you wish First Regent.” She stammered.

“First Regent... you can't be serious?” Ardan spoke. “Asay is a junior member of the SBR and she was only appointed to the Security Board a year ago!”

“She also has an advanced degree in Vanari Statutory Law. Something no one else at this table does.” Alrerin spoke calmly. “She will lead this investigation and all efforts will be made to assist her.” He turned back to Asay. “You have three days Asay.”

“First Regent...” She gasped. “Three days is... the scope of such an investigation could take weeks! Months!”

“You have three days.” Alrerin repeated to her. “In three days the entire Vanari Board of Regents will assemble and you will present what findings you have at that time. I will draw up the order myself and you will have the full weight of the Cadre Commandos at your disposal. I have already received personal authorization from Prince Leonidas to conduct searches of his ships in orbit and the questioning of his people if our investigation leads us there. You will coordinate with this Admiral Sa'sur, who commands his ships. Pull what manpower you feel you need and make this happen. Is that clear?”

Asay nodded her head quickly. “As you... as you wish First Regent.”

“And will this boy Prince submit to questioning as well?” Galar asked. “He is not here on the grounds. He should be arrested for assaulting a Vanari General Officer at the very least!”

“You forget I was there Galar.” Coren spoke up. “Androcles was unarmed and he was the one assaulted by General Ranter Ale Kimer. Not the other way around.”

“Why assemble the entire Board of Regents?” Ardan asked now. “Surely there is no need to involve the entire Board of Regents. This Security Board can manage.”

Alrerin shook his head. “No. This matter is for the entire Board of Regents and any of them not present will be summarily stripped of their position and title. I also want every news channel we have in attendance. Everything will become known at that time.” Alrerin told them. “Everything will be exposed to our people and we will let them decide our course of action. Nothing is to be left out.”

Then Ardan Vu Lamurrion made his final and most damaging mistake.

“Will you also tell our people of your daughter First Regent?” He hissed. “How she is still alive and has been the wife of a Lycavorian for over seventy years! How she is even now preparing to assume a position on the former Protectorate’s Senate?”

“If my father will not... then I will.” The female voice echoed in the room and caused all heads to turn towards the doorway.

Narlei stood there proudly, holding her youngest son in her arms, her changed wolf eyes and fangs very evident to everyone in the room. This display brought gasps of disbelief from all those in the room except Alrerin and Coren and they all came to their feet. Alrerin watched with a father’s pride as she strode into the room without fear.

“I will tell them how I was captured by the OSG!” Narlei spoke. “I will tell them how they discovered the course of our ship! I will reveal everything to our people, but most of all I will tell our people how they have been lied too for centuries! Since the first moment we made contact with Lycavorians from the Protectorate so long ago!”

“What nonsense is this?” Galar barked.

“I can see the disbelief on all of your faces! The shock! Yes... we can be affected by the virus within Lycavorians.” Narlei told them as she moved up beside her father. “I am only one of over five hundred thousand examples!”

“By the Prophets!” One female Regent gasped in shock.

“This is my son.” Narlei spoke with a mother’s pride as she held her son. “His father is a pureblood Lycavorian. I have six children with my beloved husband, each of them healthy and exceptionally smart. Each of them looks like me but they carry their father’s blood within their veins as well as mine. They are Lycanari. And there are more of us than any of you can possibly fathom!” Narlei looked at her father as Alrerin took his grandson from her arms. “I am not afraid of what others think of me. Nor are those Lycanari who now currently live within what was once the Protectorate and is now the Union. We embrace our lives and each of us chose to not return here after we discovered the truth!”

“What truth?” Ardan stammered. “What gibberish is this?”

Alrerin took Narlei’s arm. “Everything will be revealed when the Vanari Board meets in three days.” He spoke.

“I cannot allow this Alrerin!” Ardan exclaimed quickly. “This is preposterous! You have obviously been influenced in some fashion by these... these animals! I will call for a vote of no confidence before the entire Board of Regents!”

Alrerin smiled as he looked his grandson in his arms and everyone saw the little boy reach for the familiar hair on his head with a baby’s cooing. “That is your right Ardan Vu Lamurrion.” He spoke evenly. “But until that vote is taken and I am removed as First Regent... we will do as I say! Anyone who refuses to cooperate in this investigation will be arrested and held for questioning Asay. Is that clear?”

Asay nodded her head quickly still in a state of shock. “Yes... yes First Regent.” She spoke once more.

“The truth of everything will come out Ardan Vu Lamurrion.” Alrerin spoke now. “And then our people will decide what our path is to be. Asay Va Eldost has my full authority and anyone who attempts to impede her will answer to the law. Any harm that may befall her or anyone working for her will answer to Cadre Commandos under my office’s authority. I am no longer afraid of what will be made known to our people Ardan Vu Lamurrion. Are you?”

“I... of course not!” Ardan stammered once more as Coren looked on with a smile.

Alrerin nodded. “Good... now if you will excuse me... I have five other grandchildren to play with. I have not seen enough of them for far too long. Regent Asay... Coren and I will be here ready to answer any questions that you or your staff may have.”

Asay nodded her head. “As you wish First Regent.” She spoke as her senior most aide came up beside her and began to whisper into her ear urgently. Asay turned to look at her with wide eyes. “Where?” She hissed.

Ardan and Galar were left to ponder what that was all about as Asay quickly left the room following her aide.

The future of both men had become very bleak indeed.

And they did not know the worst of it.

Asay looked at her senior aide as she directed her into a small foyer room within Ember's Cove. Two other Vanari were in the small room, one obviously a Cadre Commando as he was armed, the other a young dark haired Vanari woman standing behind him. Asay focused her gaze on the woman recognizing her from somewhere as her aide looked quickly out of the foyer and then closed and sealed the door.

"I know you." Asay spoke as she gazed at the young woman. "You are..."

The young woman stepped around the larger Commando and bowed her head slightly. "I am Kinryn Aal Samaur, Regent Va Eldost." She spoke.

"You work in Ardan's office." She stated. "What are you doing here? No junior aides were allowed here... Fenia what..."

"She came to our office not an hour ago Asay." Fenia spoke as she came up beside her. Asay had demanded that Fenia call her by her first name when they were alone together. Fenia held out the data pad. "She gave our people this."

Asay took the data pad. "What is this?" She asked.

Kinryn Aal Samaur did not hesitate and took her first steps into a future that she had never imagined.

"It is everything you will need to prove that Regents Ardan and Galar have been working for or with the OSG in the kidnapping and imprisonment of our females for profit for decades at least. Perhaps much longer. They are the only ones mentioned in the transmission but there are no doubt more." Kinryn spoke calmly.

Asay stepped closer to her and saw she did not back down or flinch. This young woman had chosen a path and she was determined to see it through. "You have worked for Ardan for..."

"Almost twenty years Regent Va Eldost." Kinryn spoke. "And until this very day I never believed that he could do such a thing. Until I saw it for myself."

"Saw what?" Asay asked.

Fenia reached out and activated the data pad. "This." She spoke.

Asay was taken aback and horrified in the six minutes of the message and this showed on her face even after it ended. She finally looked up at Kinryn as her racing heart began to calm somewhat and her mind battled with options of what to do.

"Why?" She asked Kinryn.

That is when Kinryn lost control of the emotions she had been holding in and she burst into tears and slumped to the floor. Asay acted more quickly than Fenia or the Commando and caught her lithe figure in her arms and the young woman folded her body against Asay's in what could only be terrible shame and hurt.

Asay looked at Fenia as she stroked Kinryn's silky, black hair in her hands. "Fenia... tell Coren and Alrerin I need to speak with them both right now!"

"Asay... they will want to know why." Fenia told her.

"There is something much more going on here than an assassination attempt Fenia!" Asay hissed softly. "Something tells me that Alrerin and Coren know exactly what it is. Go! Quickly! And insure we are not disturbed here! No one must know Kinryn is here! No one!"

VENTORI TWO KILOMETERS SOUTH OF THE CITY OF JORLARI

To say it had been the most incredible thing she had ever experienced in her young life would be a massive understatement as far as Namiri Daret was concerned. She had scrambled up onto Torma's back and settled to the saddle behind Martin without so much as a second thought, Emylea doing the same with Aricia and Isheeni. Unsure of what to do next and not really ever having been this close to a male before, Namiri was suddenly anxious and unsure. Until she felt Torma's muscular legs propel them into the sky and then a very feminine cry of surprise echoed in the morning air and she had wrapped her arms around Martin's waist in fear without thinking. It was a fear that was replaced by wonderment within five minutes as they swept across the landscape below. The thin metal that encased their legs insured she was not going to fall out no matter how they turned, and this knowledge gave way quickly to Namiri's adventurous nature.

She felt the Etheric Shield encompass her as they rose into the air and she sat there stunned as she could feel the wind whipping by them as Torma's massive wings accelerated them away from the Union base. Wind that should have been tearing at her skin was nothing more than a light force against her body now as they sped over the treetops for a short time and then climbed high into the sky. She glanced quickly over to see Emylea looking around with wide, excited eyes as she held lightly to Aricia's body armor. Namiri quickly shifted her own hands and held to the back of Martin's armor knowing she would not fall. His hands rested on his thighs as they flew, not a care in the world it seemed, and when she saw Aricia flying in the same fashion, she removed her hands completely and did the same.

They covered nearly twenty kilometers in just over five minutes and Namiri was stunned at how fast these dragon beasts were. She didn't know that Martin, Torma, Aricia and Isheeni had been talking within Mindvoice the entire trip commenting how on quickly the two young women reacted to new things and how fearless they both seemed to be.

It was Aricia who had taken notice of how Martin acted around Namiri and Emylea and she, Anja and For'mya had quickly deduced what it was. Aricia turned her azure eyes on him as Isheeni and Torma flew side by side. Unless going into a known combat situation Martin never wore his Spartan helm when flying and today was no different.

[What do you feel beloved?] Aricia asked from across the distance of perhaps ten meters, Isheeni flying slightly higher than Torma because his wingspan was so much larger than her own.

Martin turned his head and looked at her. [What do you mean?] He asked.

They both heard Anja and For'mya's snort of disgust within their connection and Aricia smiled. Since For'mya had returned to them, they had sworn to each other that none of them would block the other in any discussion unless it was absolutely necessary. Their connection and their love was more open and focused now than it had ever been and that is how they would move forward into the future.

[Nice try you big lug.] Anja's voice echoed.

[We can all sense that there is something about Namiri and Emylea Daret that affects you Martin Leonidas.] For'mya stated now. [You sense something within them don't you?]

[It is a gift that only you and our son share Beloved.] Aricia continued. [You don't need to keep it from us.]

Martin's gaze didn't waver. [They will be part of our family one day.] He told them without pause. [I don't know how... only that it will be. Emylea will welcome this without so much as a second guess.]

[And Namiri?] Anja asked.

[Not at first.] Martin spoke softly shaking his head slightly. [But eventually yes. Very much so.]

[Something we need to be concerned with?] Aricia asked.

[No... I don't believe so Saaurano.]

[Good.] Anja echoed. [She's got almost as much spunk as me. I like her.]

[As do I.] Aricia echoed Anja's words.

[There will be a lot of pain that comes with that though.] Martin told them. [Pain of the heart and soul.]

This made all of them go silent for a moment. They knew that Martin and their son Androcles were special in that way. Like Dysea and For'mya with their skills, they could not actively control this pseudo Foresight ability, but for Martin and Androcles this perception also gave them extra fits because they could not understand it most of the time and they hated that.

[Pain of the heart and soul we can help her to deal with and get through.] Aricia said first.

[You like these Tasmor don't you Lover?] Anja asked him.

[They are... they are a lot like us.] Martin answered. [Just too much the arrogance. Saydia is a powerful leader. She exudes confidence and intelligence and that sometimes borders on arrogant, but she is also hiding something that troubles her very deeply. Something about her people.]

[A threat?] Aricia asked.

[Possibly.] Martin answered. [She knows something the others do not, something that she carries within her.]

[And that foul upaee Perlyea?] For'mya asked instantly. All of them could detect the anger and downright hatred coming from For'mya in regards to Perlyea. For'mya Leonidas was widely recognized as the most tolerant and patient of the Union Queens, but the vast majority of Union citizens also knew in order to anger her you had to have done something very bad. And if it was bad enough to get on the wrong side of For'mya Leonidas, that usually meant there was no recovering from it. For'mya may have been a female elf and now Lycavorian, but she was all Spartan in her heart.

Martin shook his head. [She despises that woman deep down. That comes out in her scent easily, but no, this is something else entirely. Speak to Tobia and find out if there is anything else she can tell us about them.]

[How much do we let her know?] Anja asked.

[Everything.] Martin answered. [It will be a bit bumpy at first but she and Murano will reunite and then they will be complete. She is also a Praetorian and while she may not act like Murano, that fact cannot be denied. We can all learn a lot from her. Hold back if you feel you need too, but I have never questioned how you have done things and I won't start now.]

[Smart man.] Anja quipped playfully and Aricia and For'mya chuckled.

Martin turned his head and saw them approaching where Danny had set up his small camp. [You will not need what I am going to do distracting you...] He told them. [Red... you and For'mya block mine and Aricia's resonance for the next hour.]

[Understood.] For'mya spoke.

[We love you big guy.] Anja told him softly. [Keep him from doing anything stupid Little Wolf.]

Aricia laughed gently now as well. [I will certainly try.] She turned her head back over her shoulder and looked at the wide eyed and smiling Emylea. "Hold on... we will be landing shortly!" She spoke.

Emylea nodded her head and gripped the back of Aricia's body armor once more as Isheeni dipped her wings and they plummeted towards the ground below.

There were five of them and as far as Martin was concerned none of them were any better looking than those he had killed on the field near the river. All five had their hands bound securely with unbreakable flexi-cuffs, two appeared to have been wounded, and none of them looked happy in the least.

"...Caught them napping." Danny was speaking as he stood beside Martin. Aricia stood slightly back with Namiri and Emylea on either side of her. "The two stupid ones tried to go for their weapons. Pablo and Cody ended that little movement."

"Find anything on them?" Martin asked.

Danny nodded his head. "Oh yeah... and you ain't gonna like it." He said as he motioned for Kasdan to come over from where he stood beside Tony and Kenny.

Martin chuckled softly as he watched Kasdan walk towards them quickly. "That seems to be the case about everything ever since we came out here fervon." Martin said.

"Ain't it though?" Danny agreed. "It has to be your charming personality."

Martin smiled as Kasdan came up to them. "King Leonidas it is..."

Martin held up his hand. "What have I told you about that Kasdan?" He said. "Don't do that. However it came to be, you are part of my team now."

Kasdan nodded his head and smiled. "Martin." He said.

Martin smiled back. "Good. Now hit me with it."

Kasdan looked at him confused and Danny smiled. "Tell him what you told me and the others Kasdan." He said.

"Ah... yes." Kasdan spoke. "Elder Valael sent down the core of their language syntax and I uploaded it to our implants last night. It is very similar to the Tasmor language with minor grammar and wording differences but they seemed to have smoothed out the harshness of the sounds for lack of a better explanation. Daniel says you do not like to hear fluff."

Martin looked at him with a smile. "He would be right."

"He also added some other things to my personal P9, schematics and such that he found within the logs of the Kintaur ship." Kasdan continued.

“Anything good?” Martin asked.

Kasdan nodded his head. “Information wise yes. Activity wise... no.”

Kasdan pulled his P9 around from the small of his back. Julie had shown him how to situate and place the P9 in such a way that it was within easy reach when he needed it and out of harm’s way when he did not. She also notched his combat harness to better be able to move with the P9 open and working which allowed him to pull up information even on the move. He had become very good at typing on the run. He did not know that Martin’s team had conducted several missions through the years with different Tech Heads in their ranks but he alone had been among them the longest and therefore all of them were looking out for him and making sure he remained alert and even picked up a few things along the way. Kasdan did not have a single arrogant bone in his body and this is what endeared him to Martin’s team. A team that he was now considered part of.

Martin looked at him. “What do you mean?”

Kasdan typed on his P9 several times. “These fools have been here to Ventori before.” He said causing Martin’s eyes to widen just a little bit at Kasdan’s choice of words. Danny laughed softly.

“He’s really taken to our more colorful way of expressing ourselves.” Danny told Martin.

Martin grinned. “So it seems.” He looked at Kasdan. “So they have been to Ventori before?”

Kasdan nodded his head. “Three of them had personal journals or logs among their gear or on their bodies. I have reviewed all of them in their entirety and afterwards I wanted to vomit. Some of the things they say they took part in were...”

Martin nodded and placed his hand on Kasdan’s shoulder. “No need to give me the details Kasdan. I’ll take your word for it.”

“Each of them have been to Ventori at least twice.” Kasdan said. “The War Master that you killed at the beginning of the ambush... he had been here four times. The Captain in command of the ship we disabled four times as well. All within the last eight months.”

It was Namiri who came forward now, stepping up beside Martin without fear. “That cannot be possible.” She gasped. “Only a handful of our senior leadership knew this planet was here. Most knew we were relocating your people, but not where they were coming from. It was not made public for this exact reason; to keep the other species in this sector from coming here and exploiting them.”

“Exploiting them how?” Martin asked her. Namiri looked at him as if she did not want to answer the question. “Namiri... I told you already you have nothing to fear from me. Neither you nor your sister are in danger.”

“My mother?” Namiri asked him.

“I will hurt no one who does not try to hurt me first.” Martin told her. “I’m not a monster Namiri.” Martin blinked several times. “Well... some might debate that with you but...”

Namiri gazed at him for a few moments and then shook her head with a smile at his attempt at humor. “No... you are not a monster.” She said taking a deep breath. “There are two other species within this sector that take slaves and use them as forced labor at the very least. The Kintaur are only the largest species in terms of numbers. These other species, the Naltur and the Aser, they are aligned with the Kintaur but nowhere near as advanced or powerful. Tasmor do not even consider them a major threat though they have taken a few of our people in the past.”

“Our information said there were seven species total within this sector, including the Tasmor.” Martin said.

Namiri nodded her head. “That is accurate.” She told him. “The other three species are pre-space flight. Two are still within the industrial stage while the third has just discovered fission.”

“You know a lot about them.” Martin said.

Namiri nodded once more. “Emylea and I have scouted all of them.” She answered. “All of them fall within Tasmor territory but our mother has ordered them off limits because they are still maturing. We do not want to interfere in their normal evolutionary cycle. We have secure locations from which we view their societies every few years, but we insure that we are not discovered.”

“Dang! We do that too.” Martin exclaimed. “How about that... something else we have in common.”

Namiri met his eyes thinking that he was mocking her but she saw the twinkle in those dark brown orbs and then she found herself smiling as well. She glanced at Emylea and saw that her sister was also smiling.

“I suppose we do.” She said finally looking back to Martin.

“The Kintaur do not target these pre-space flight species?” Aricia asked.

Emylea shook her head. “No.” She answered. “We do not know why but they leave them alone. Perhaps they don’t see them as a resource that they can exploit. At least not yet.”

Martin nodded his head as he turned back to Kasdan and Danny. “They say anything?” He asked.

Danny shook his head. “Aside from a few choice words about Kesyla... nothing. They knew she was a Pralor Marty.”

Martin met Danny’s eyes evenly. “Did they now?” He said. “Interesting.”

“Nubian about carved his eyeballs out because of what he said but Anuk stopped her.” Danny continued.

“Where are they?” Martin asked.

“Anuk took Kesyla and the first team that got here from the ARC ROYAL to the closest debris field. She said if she stayed any longer she would use their entrails to string them up.” Dan answered.

Martin cringed. “Ouch!”

Danny nodded. “Tell me about it. I haven’t seen Anuk that angry in a lot of years.” He turned to the side. “Nubian is just checking that hunk of junk over there with T’lolt.” Danny motioned with his head to a large pile of debris that appeared to be a section of some kind of ship about two hundred meters away from where they were.

“Which one is in charge?” Martin asked.

“They won’t tell us openly, but the one of the left was giving the orders when we woke their asses up.” Danny told him motioning with his head to the Kintaur on the far left of the line where they were all kneeling.

“Let’s see if we can change that.” Martin said as he began walking towards where they were.

Namiri made to follow him but Aricia reached out and gently took her arm. “Namiri no.” She said.

Emylea and Namiri both looked at her. “I thought you brought us to help you interrogate them?” Namiri asked.

Aricia shook her head. “We brought you to listen to what they had to say and tell us if they are truthful. Not to take part.”

“These men knew we were here!” Emylea spoke now. “We need to find out how they knew that! They took me...” Emylea stopped and Namiri stepped up to her sister, pressing her body close and taking her arms.

Aricia saw this show of affection and couldn’t help but smile. Maybe the Tasmor were not so different after all. “Emylea, did they assault you on their ship? Did they force themselves upon you?” She asked softly as she came closer to them. “You can tell me. It will not reach past my lips to anyone.”

Emylea looked up and met her gaze. She shook her head slowly. “Not like that.” She finally said. “They told me what they were going to do as they pawed my body but they never did anything. I... I think the Captain of their ship was saving me for himself.”

Namiri saw Aricia’s jaw twitch ever so slightly at this knowledge and her azure colored eyes narrowed somewhat. She squeezed her sister’s arms tightly in support. “Tasmor do not allow males to touch females openly in any way.” She explained to Aricia. “It is considered a very large crime and males have been punished severely for this. And some females.” She finished with distaste.

Aricia looked at her oddly. “Something in your history?” She asked. “We have many species within the Union back home but this action is not among the different cultural ways that we have seen. There is a reason for this I take it.”

Namiri nodded her head. “It dates back thousands of years.” She told Aricia. “I do not know exactly what this event was, most Tasmor do not, but it has been this way for centuries. A Tasmor female who allows herself to be taken and... and used by men without fighting it to the death is... she is considered weak and stripped of all her authority and status. It is why I reacted as I did when I discovered Emylea had been taken.”

Aricia reached out and took one of Emylea’s hands in hers and then took one of Namiri’s hands. “This is your way.” She stated. “We do not judge another on their culture or what they believe. This act... it is not something that we allow in within the Union. To take a woman, any woman, against her will is considered one of the highest crimes that there is. It is not tolerated in any way, nor is slavery of any kind, and if it is discovered, those who conduct themselves in such a way are usually executed.”

Namiri and Emylea looked at her suddenly with wide eyes. “Touching is allowed in public though?” Namiri finally asked.

Aricia nodded her head. “Between men and women who love each other, yes. Between friends and family, yes. There are some species that see touching as the primary source of communicating with others. Lycavorians, we are among those. We need the physical contact that those we love and call friend provide to us. It is a greeting as well in some forms. But it is never allowed to be forced upon another.” She finished with a hint of anger in her tone.

Emylea looked at her then. “You... you have experienced this?” She asked softly.

Aricia met her questioning eyes and nodded her head. “I have.” She stated simply. “It was... it was not pleasant.”

“What... what happened?” Namiri pressed her.

Aricia looked over to where Martin stood between Danny and Kasdan and a small smile came to her lips. She looked back to them. “My husband and mate rescued me.” She said wistfully. “And he destroyed the man who had done this with his bare hands. Then he destroyed this man’s society and government and he freed our people. It is a long story really.” She said. “Our son has done something very similar just recently. We do not tolerate such actions as I said.”

Namiri glanced over to where Martin stood and then back to Aricia. “You and the other Queens are...”

Aricia nodded her head. “We love each other almost as much as we love Martin. We share each other just as easily as we share him. There is no competition between us and Martin is more than capable of taking care of all of us I that way. Sometimes he can be a beast.”

“This is accepted in your society?” Emylea asked surprised. “That you share yourselves with each other and him?”

“Oh yes.” Aricia answered. “You saw our daughter Zarah briefly. She and the young woman with her are deeply in love. One day they will find a man to love them and who they will love, but they are very happy together right now.”

“But I heard... the red haired Queen.” Namiri said softly. “She said there were six of you.”

Aricia smiled. “Yes.”

“And all of you...” Namiri almost could not believe it.

“Yes we do.” Aricia answered with a wide smile. “You should see it when all of us are together and how we can drive him crazy. But as you both must know, females no matter their species, we always seem to last longer than the males.” Aricia saw both of them smile at her words and nod shyly.

“There are many among the Tasmor who...” Emylea began to speak.

Aricia squeezed her hands. “You see... we really are not so very different.” She said. “We can talk of this later if you wish. It would be so much more entertaining with Anja with us. She has such an amazing way with words.”

“What is he going to do?” Namiri asked.

Aricia shrugged her shoulders. “He is going to get some answers.” Aricia replied. “Our husbands and mates, they worship the ground their wives and mates walk upon. They are treated as precious jewels, for our men know that we can carry the future of our people in our wombs. We fight and command just as they do, just as you have seen, but only we can give them more Spartan sons and daughters. And that is why we are looked at as the bearers of our future.”

“And your children are like this?” Emylea asked.

Aricia chuckled. “Some more so than the others, but yes. Our oldest son Androcles, he is like his father in every way and even more fearsome in many respects.” She squeezed their hands once more. “Come... you can see for yourself.” She paused and looked at them. “It will not be pleasant I must warn you.”

Namiri and Emylea looked at each other and then back to her. “Whatever they get they deserve a hundred times over.” Namiri spoke forcefully.

Aricia nodded and held tightly to their hands and motioned with her head. “Then let us watch what Martin will do. I think you will find it is nothing that your own people would not do in a similar circumstance.”

Atropos walked in first, followed by Saydia and Anthylea and then Perlyea and then the last Tasmor, a woman named Drenia. Tobia had told them this was the commander of Saydia’s flagship in orbit and probably one of their most experienced commanders. She was equally as intelligent as she was capable commanding her ship Tobia had said and Saydia relied on her input when it came to many things.

Anja and For'mya stood on one side of the table with Tobia and Helen as Atropos moved to the side.

"Please... sit down." For'mya spoke motioning to the chairs on the opposite side of the table.

Saydia was looking around the interior of the building and discovered that none of the sophisticated stations that were occupied yesterday were active. The computer screens were dark and the chairs were empty. She looked at For'mya and then at the red haired woman who had supposedly been the one to examine Anthylea. Her eyes narrowed somewhat in anger when she looked at Anja, but the look bounced off the much shorter woman.

"Where is he?" Perlyea growled softly.

For'mya looked at Anja and then back to the four Tasmor women. "Our husband and mate has gone to interrogate the Kintaur that we captured early this morning." She told them. "We told him we would speak with you in his stead."

"You have captured Kintaur?" Anthylea asked suddenly coming very much alert.

For'mya nodded her head. "Early this morning. Survivors of the ambush we set for them when we first arrived. Our mate has some questions he would like them to answer."

"They will tell you nothing!" Perlyea snapped. "They are Kintaur!"

Anja chuckled softly. "Martin can be very persuasive when he wants to be." She said. "He will get the answers he wants."

"And then he will release them back to their foul masters on their ship no doubt." Perlyea continued. "As any male would do."

"If they survive the interrogation..." For'mya spoke seeing them all look at her with some surprise. "Then they will be executed for their actions against our people. Against your people as well it seems."

"You... you will kill them?" Saydia asked.

"If we had not arrived they were going to enslave Lycavorians." Helen spoke now. "Our people as well as yours. Martin Leonidas does not like it when others enslave and commit atrocities against our people. They are lucky they have survived this long. Though it will not help them in the end."

"Please... I ask that you sit down." For'mya spoke once more. "Since it appears your people are more comfortable interacting with females, we told Martin we would speak with you and try to come to an understanding."

"You told him?" Saydia asked as she stopped in front of the chair. "I thought he was the King of your people. Your leader." She spoke with a touch of contempt in her voice. All of them saw Tobia shake her head slightly.

"He is King." For'mya said calmly. "We are his Queens. Well... three of them anyway. Our fellow Queens are leading an expedition somewhere else at the moment. We speak with Martin's voice and he with ours."

"So he will listen to you when you tell him to release us?" Saydia spat.

"He would..." For'mya answered. "If that is what we told him. However... we are not going to tell him that. At least not yet. We have questions of you Sovereign Regent Saydia Daret. Questions that we would like the answers to. Only then can we discuss your departure from here."

"I do not have to tell you anything!" Saydia hissed. "You hold my people against our will! You forcefully conducted a medical exam on Anthylea without her permission and against her wishes! Why should we believe anything you say?"

"Your people attempted to steal technology that is not yours!" Anja snarled right back. "Then you almost killed one of our people without as much as a second thought! Trust me when I tell you had Tina died, we would not be having this conversation."

"We do not fear you!" Saydia hissed.

"Then you are a bigger fool than I ever thought you to be Saydia." Tobia spoke now and seeing Saydia's eyes widen in disbelief as she looked at her. "I have told you before that there are other species out there among the stars that make the Tasmor appear as children Saydia! This branch of the Lycavorian people are one of those! They are not like the Lycavorians that you know! They are equally as advanced as my people Saydia and unlike the Pralor people, they will not hesitate to eliminate a threat to them! Any threat! At this moment you and your people are a threat! You have lied to them, experimented on their people and tried to steal what is not yours! What would you do if another species you did not know acted in such a way towards the Tasmor people? Would you not act in a similar manner? Especially after you have shown nothing but a willingness to be friendly and open. Martin and his people saved Emylea and Namiri! They saved your youngest daughters Saydia! They did so without question and then they held them in a position of honor for what they were trying to do! You repay this by nearly killing one of them and trying to steal what is not yours to have!”

Saydia was silent for a moment as she looked at Tobia. She opened her mouth to answer but Perlyea cut her off.

“We are Tasmor!” Perlyea barked. “We bow to no one and we take what is rightfully ours!”

“Does this woman speak for you Sovereign Regent?” For'mya asked.

“She is Chief Counsel to the Tasmor people.” Saydia answered hesitantly.

“So be it.” Anja stated. “Then we have nothing to discuss it seems. Our husband and mate does not deal well with arrogance or ignorance.”

“You call us ignorant?” Perlyea shouted.

“I'd call you as dumb as a nubous rock!” Anja snarled right back at her. “We had a team of our people do a little sightseeing last night. They walked across the hull of your flagship until they found your main computer core and then we downloaded the information we wanted from it.”

Saydia's eyes grew wide in shock as did Drenia's. “Impossible!” Drenia declared. “There is no way you could have done this without being discovered!”

Anja tossed the Tasmor COM unit onto the table. “Check for yourself.” She spoke. “Go ahead.”

“Drenia... do it!” Saydia demanded as she glared at Anja once more.

Drenia scooped up the COM unit and turned away to move into a corner of the room.

For'mya looked at Saydia again. “You seem to have issues with any male that you meet.” She said. “Whatever the reason for this we do not care. All we want is our people back. Martin Leonidas is many things, but he is also unlike any male you have ever met. Had you conducted yourselves in this way without the benefit of your daughters and your people helping and fighting to save our people here on Ventori, Martin would have had all of you executed already and disposed of your bodies in the pits with the Kintaur. We want nothing from you. In truth you have nothing that we could possibly need. Perhaps in several millennia when you outgrow this childish arrogance, perhaps then we can speak. Now however, now you can wallow in your self-worth and arrogance. If it does not destroy you from within, then someone will come along who is not as patient as we are.”

“Sovereign Regent!” Drenia gasped turning back to look at her. “Our... our main computer core was accessed last night! The intrusion was undetected until my XO did a targeted search just now. All files on the Lycavorians from Ventori and their locations were downloaded and copied to an external system! She reports that... she says that no foreign life signs were detected on the ship at any time through the night. The breach was... it bypassed all of our most secure computer locks as if they weren't there!”

Saydia looked at For'mya and Anja with disbelief very evident in her eyes. Anja smiled at her astonished expression. “You wanted in with the big boys of the universe Sovereign Regent Daret. Welcome to the big leagues.”

“Justice Nalmos has already been in contact with the other Justices of our people on the three planets you have relocated them too.” For'mya continued. “All of them have expressed a joyous desire to return to Ventori and rebuild what the Svorag destroyed and they will inform our people of this fact. Word will then spread quickly among our people on your planets that Martin Leonidas, their King, has come to reunite them with their people after so many generations. You will find there will be very few who will choose to remain among you once this is discovered.”

“You lie!” Perlyea almost screamed.

“We don't need to lie in order to achieve what we want.” For'mya stated confidently. “I have already sent for several dozen of our largest transport ships from Union space in the Alpha Quadrant.”

“You?” Anthylea gasped.

For'mya nodded her head. “One of my duties as Queen, aside from the obvious, is that I command all of the logistical ships within our fleets. They will begin arriving in just over a week, along with five complete Fleet Groups of our most modern warships. At that time we will begin removing our people from the planets you relocated them too and returning them here.” For'mya looked at Anja. “Along with those ships will be a dozen medical ships under Anja’s command since it is she who has control over them as Chief Medical officer of our people. They will be well cared for and soon after those ships arrive any medical problems that they might have will be gone.”

“You cannot do that!” Saydia exclaimed.

“We can and we will.” For'mya told her.

Anja leaned forward over the table and looked at Saydia. “We will not take any action against the Tasmor people but be assured, should any of your ships or your soldiers attempt to stop us then Martin or one of us will give the order to obliterate every warship in your pitiful little eight hundred ship fleet. You will not hold our people hostage and should any of them be harmed as a result of our actions, well let’s just say you will not be happy with the result.”

“When we have secured our people and they are returned here to Ventori then you and those with you will be allowed to return to your people.” For'mya spoke once more. “At that time, any and all contact with the Tasmor people will cease. Any intrusion into Ventori space by Tasmor ships or personnel will be considered hostile and we will take appropriate action. Within one year Ventori will become the most heavily defended planet in this sector and quite possibly this quadrant of space. We will leave you and Perlyea Kalrr to lead your people as you see fit.”

“You will hold us prisoner?” Drenia gasped in shock.

“Is that not what you were going to do?” Helen spoke up now. “Hold our people hostage unless we gave you what you demanded?”

“The Tasmor people will never accept this!” Perlyea barked.

Anja nodded her head and reached for For'mya’s hand. They stepped close to one another intimately and looked at Saydia. “Then you will have to explain to them why so many of your people will die if you want to keep our people hostage.” Anja said.

“Tobia!” Saydia exclaimed. “You will allow this?”

Tobia met her eyes. “This is purely an internal affair between the Lycavorian people and the Tasmor Saydia. I’m sorry but my people will not interfere on your behalf... no. I told you one day you would attempt to overstep your station and you would anger a species that could swat your people from the stars Saydia. That day has now come and there is nothing I can do for you.”

“Oh boy... that was the single dumbest thing I have ever seen anyone do!” Julie’s voice echoed from where she stood beside Kenny and Pablo.

“Oh hell yeah!” Kenny commented. “Now you have gone and done it!”

It happened almost faster than Namiri and Emylea Daret could follow and they could only watch in unabashed awe as Martin Leonidas struck. All he had done was ask the Kintaur soldier one question. His show of bravado ended up being his last breath in this life.

He made the mistake of spitting at Martin.

Namiri and Emylea could only watch as that soldier was snatched up in some sort of bluish white field and lifted six meters into the air. His body was smashed back into the very unforgiving ground once, the sounds of his bones shattering very evident in the calm air all around them. Martin swung his arm over and they watched as the Kintaur soldier was lifted once more and smashed unmercifully into the ground twice more in quick succession, until his limbs were flailing about like limp noodles. Upon the third impact with the ground he lay still and they watched as Martin stepped up to him, drew his Nehtes from its thigh holster, spun it gracefully in between his fingers and then drove it down with a mighty plunge. Half of the Nehtes extended in a blink and the spearhead drove through the left eye socket of the Kintaur pinning his head to the ground. Whatever life remained in his body was instantly snuffed out.

Martin stood back up calmly and looked at the cooling body of the Kintaur on the ground. His head lifted and both Namiri and Emylea could see his eyes were wide and changed into a yellow/gold color. His dual fangs were fully extended and his expression was one of vicious anger.

“Any of you other stupid sonofbitches want to spit on me!” Martin shouted.

Namiri and Emylea could only look on in astonishment as Julie and the others chuckled softly to themselves and shook their heads in pity.

Martin stepped right up to another Kintaur. "What's wrong big man?" Martin snarled. "You can't talk!" The Kintaur glared at Martin. "Release me Lycavorian dog! I will show you what I can do!"

Martin smiled at him. "Well... one of you has got nor after all!" He spoke. "Ok... tough guy..." Martin looked at Tony. "Master Chief... cut this igord loose."

Tony lifted the large blade and stepped up behind the Kintaur with a huge smile. Julie shook her head once more and this time she leaned into Kenny. "They got almost as much brains as you Kenny." Namiri heard her comment.

Kenny nodded his head as he and Pablo laughed. "Yeah... but I'm much better looking." Kenny said with a wolfish grin, showing his wolf teeth.

Martin watched as Tony sliced through the Kintaur's bindings and then shoved him forward. "It's your funeral asshole." He muttered.

The Kintaur stood up fully and looked at Martin. They were equal in height, but the Kintaur was easily fifty or sixty pounds heavier than Martin. This did not seem to bother Martin in the least Namiri and Emylea saw and they watched him intently.

"C'mon tough guy!" Martin taunted him. "What's the matter... can't decide what to do when you ain't beating up on helpless men and children or raping women!"

"I will crush you Lycavorian fool!" The Kintaur shouted.

Martin held out his hands to the side. "Here I am pretty boy!" He stated.

"Argh!" The Kintaur howled out his rage and charged Martin intending to grappled with him and use his superior weight to bring the Lycavorian down and pummel him to death in front of his own people.

He was fast for such a large figure, but not even in the same league as Martin Leonidas. Martin simply stepped to the side and hit him in the side of his large forehead with a heel strike. The Kintaur staggered drunkenly to the side away from Martin, almost losing his footing from the incredible force of the blow. He grabbed for his head as bright stars filled the background, yet he managed to stay on his feet. He whirled back towards Martin, shaking his head to clear his mind.

"You will pay for that!" He growled. "I will kill you!"

"Get in line motherfucker!" Martin spat at the man. "There are a lot of people better than who want me dead! You are just a lot uglier than them!"

At the sound of laughter from Martin's team the Kintaur charged once more in anger, reaching for Martin with his hands. At the last possible moment he halted his movement and shifted directions, attacking from the side, intending to catch him off balance as Martin moved to counter. This would have worked had he been fighting one of his own kind or one of the Tasmor. It didn't work on Martin.

Martin ducked under his outstretched arms and brought his own arm whipping forward in a ridge hand strike. The knife edge of Martin's right hand hit the Kintaur squarely under the two slits that passed for his nose with enough power to lift the three hundred pound Kintaur off the ground, his feet flying up into the air and over his body. The crack of breaking bone echoed in the air and he slammed viciously into the ground face down in the dirt, his heavy body having careened a hundred and eighty degrees around from the force of the impact.

"WHOA!" Danny shouted in response to this. "Nubou lae! Sibfla... that had to hurt!"

Martin didn't hesitate and stepped over the body. He reached down and grabbed the Kintaur's head. "You fucked with my people!" Martin screamed. "No one fucks with my people!"

Martin Leonidas twisted savagely with all of his tremendous wolf strength and the Kintaur's neck snapped and popped in three different locations. Martin dropped the upper body back to the dirt and Namiri and Emylea saw that the Kintaur warrior's head and been twisted nearly all the way around in the opposite direction. His eyes were frozen open in death because it had happened so fast. They watched as Martin moved with incredible speed and was in front of the three remaining Kintaur, all of them with looks of shock and fear on their faces.

"Now which one of you is going to tell me what I want to know?" Martin snarled openly, revealing his long, dual wolf fangs. "My patience is just about gone!"

“Our Captain!” The Kintaur on the left shouted. He was the one who Danny had said seemed to be in charge. “Our Captain knows what you want!”

Martin stood up without pause and turned as Namiri and Emylea watched. He reached up and tapped his jaw implant. “Avi?”

-I am receiving you Martin- Avi answered instantly.

“Can you determine which one of the scum bags on that Kintaur piece of shit is the Captain?” Martin asked.

-Yes, easily. Captain Nemoa’s scans were quite thorough-

“Good.” Martin spoke. “Lock onto that ugly fucker and teleport his fat ass to my location on the surface!”

-Stand by. Locking on- Avi answered. -Teleporting now-

Namiri and Emylea watched in nothing short of adoration as the yellowish/red flare of light appeared directly in front of Martin and the form of the Kintaur ship Captain, First Warrior Gars, fully materialized.

“Hi there!” Martin bellowed. “Welcome to Ventori motherfucker!”

Gars’ eyes grew wide but he could not stop the crushing blow that hit him squarely in the jaw and sent him flying.

Saydia Daret was beside herself.

This was not going as she had thought it would. She thought perhaps she could bluster her way through this encounter in order to get what she wanted. Perlyea Kalrr had told her these Lycavorians would acquiesce without resistance considering their people were spread over three Tasmor planets far from here. This was not what she had imagined happening. Saydia was not a fool and she knew without thinking that these men and women could do exactly as they said they could. Her people would die by the thousands if they tried to keep the Lycavorians as some sort of bargaining chip. She had thought when they first entered the building and the man was not here that she could intimidate the female Queens. They were made of far sterner material and not in the least bit afraid of using their authority. And they had quite a bit of authority if what they had told her was true.

Saydia looked up as she saw the red haired female Anja shake her head and motion towards the door. The elven female For'mya nodded and still holding hands they began to move around the table towards the exit. Tobia and the fourth woman began to follow without words.

“Wait!” Saydia exclaimed turning to face them. Anja and For'mya stopped just short of the door and looked at her. “I wish... I wish to talk.”

“Sovereign Regent no!” Perlyea hissed. “Do not debase yourself to these...”

Saydia glared at her. “I have listened to you too often!” She snarled. “Be silent now!”

“I will not allow this!” Perlyea shouted. “We are Tasmor and we will not bow to these people!”

“No one has asked you to bow Perlyea Kalrr.” Tobia barked.

“What do you call what they are doing?” Perlyea demanded.

Tobia ignored her words and moved closer to Saydia. “Were you not prepared to steal from these people? Did you not almost kill one of them in order to obtain something that is not yours? Were you not prepared to use the return of their people against them in order to force concessions? What reaction did you expect you fool woman?” Tobia turned her eyes on Saydia. “You are smarter and wiser than this Saydia. I know you are. Would you risk your people over some fool notion from Perlyea that you are so much better than others? Even those who have proven they could destroy you easily.”

Saydia looked at her, the memories of their nights together coming back to her briefly. She knew Tobia spoke the truth for she had never lied to her. Saydia made her decision then, for the future of her people meant more to her than anything else. She turned to Anja and For'mya.

“What do you want from me?” She asked softly.

“Sovereign Regent no!” Perlyea barked moving towards her.

It was Anthylea who acted, stepping forward and imposing herself between them. With a powerful and quick movement she unleashed a heel strike directly into Perlyea’s jaw. Perlyea Kalrr was no warrior and her eyes rolled into the back of her head as her legs buckled and she fell unconscious. Anthylea caught her before she hit the ground and lowered her gently to the floor before rising back to her feet beside Saydia.

Saydia looked at Anja and For'mya once more. “I will do whatever you want to protect my people.” Saydia told them.

“We do not want anything from you Sovereign Regent Daret.” For'mya told her causing Saydia’s eyes to grow wider. “But we are willing to sit and talk with you in regards to what we can give or do for you because of what you and the Tasmor have done for our people.”

Saydia looked at them in disbelief. “You jest!” She stammered.

Anja shook her head now. “Not at all. We are not unreasonable Saydia Daret. We came out here looking for friends and allies, not enemies.” She answered. “We just don’t take kindly to threats to us or our people.” She told her.

“We have... we have nothing we can give you except your people.” Saydia told her.

“That’s not true either.” Helen spoke now as she came up beside Anja. “You have answers to questions that we want to ask. Beginning with these experiments on our people.”

Saydia shook her head. “There were no experiments.” She replied quickly. “We asked your people for samples of their DNA in order to help us eliminate several diseases common to my people. Diseases that your healing systems can destroy easily. They gave us these willingly. With these samples we looked for ways to improve our people and make them healthier.”

“And Anthylea?” Anja asked.

Saydia looked at Anthylea with loving eyes. “As I said...” Saydia spoke turning back to Anja. “We only wanted to improve our people! Anthylea and hundreds of others like her underwent the gene treatments our scientists developed willingly. Your people even helped us to develop it. We did it in the hopes that we could advance the Tasmor as a whole. There was never any nefarious intent! Never!” Saydia looked at them. “My people are dying and I am trying to save them!”

This statement caught Anja and For'mya by surprise as well as Tobia. She stepped forward and took Saydia’s arm. “What do you mean Saydia?” She gasped. “How could the Tasmor be dying?”

Saydia was unable to respond as the doors to the Command Center opened and half a dozen Durcunusaan came in followed immediately by Thoti. The Durcunusaan moved to their stations and began to power on their equipment as Thoti stepped up to them.

“Thoti?” Anja asked.

“We have a situation.” He told them. “Admiral Lorian is waiting on the COM.”

Anja moved instantly to the table and activated the holodisc. Manda’s body appeared in the flash of light on the floor and then cleared. “Manda... what is wrong?” Anja asked her.

Miranda turned from the station she was standing behind and they saw E'dira speak to someone near her Tactical Console. It was obvious that the ARIZONA was at full alert.

“Anja... long range sensors have detected a Kintaur fleet closing on our position.” She told them. “Thirty-three ships ranging in size from Heavy Cruiser to Frigate. They are in an attack formation and will enter the system in just under an hour. They are going all out... or as fast as their backward engines will drive them at least.”

“You... you can see them that far away?” Drenia asked in shock.

Miranda ignored her and focused on Anja and For'mya. “I have Steven already launching fighters and they will take up station to hit them from behind they moon.”

Anja looked at For'mya as she moved closer. “Manda... how many of our ships de-shrouded before the alert order was cancelled?” For'mya asked.

“Nineteen.” Miranda answered. “The rest are still hidden.”

“Weapons?” For'mya asked.

“Our sensors indicate primary laser based weaponry, rudimentary plasma turrets and high explosive missiles. Nothing that will touch our shields... but they could put a serious hurting on the Tasmor ships.” Miranda answered.

Saydia was about to implore for them to allow them to escape, but For'mya's next words halted her plea. She stared at the elven Queen with wide eyes.

“Manda... form a protective ring around the Tasmor fleet.” For'mya said. “Prepare to defend them.”

Miranda didn't hesitate in her answer. “Will the Tasmor allow us?” She asked. “We can cover them no problem with the ships we have currently de-shrouded, but they need to maintain a tight formation.”

For'mya looked at Saydia. “Your ships will not be able to escape before they arrive.” She said. “Allow us to do this and you will see for yourself that our husband and mate is not a monster. That we do not want conflict with the Tasmor.”

Saydia Daret was no fool. The Tasmor ships would be heavily outnumbered and no match for the Kintaur ships entering the system if they had been alone. She didn't question this knowledge in the least and she turned to Drenia. “Drenia... give the order immediately.” She told her. “Pull our fleet in tight and allow them to face the Kintaur ships.”

Drenia nodded. “I will need to use a COM.”

Anja looked at Thoti. “Thoti.”

Thoti nodded and looked at Drenia. “This way.” He stated.

“Anja...” Miranda's voice drew their attention back to the transmission. “You may want to let Martin know. Once they see their ship is crippled, they probably won't be real happy.”

Anja nodded her head. “He's already on his way back with Danny and the others.” Anja looked at Saydia. “Namiri and Emylea are with him and Aricia.”

Saydia's eyes went even wider but she remained wisely remained silent. For'mya took note of this and met her gaze while moving closer to her. “Your daughters seemed to be more open and accepting of things that are different.” She explained. “He only wanted to apologize to Namiri for what he did and perhaps have the two of them talk to you.”

“Apologize?” Saydia asked.

For'mya nodded her head. “Martin Leonidas is a male yes... but he is not a monster and he is King Saydia.” She told her. “He could no more hurt one of your daughters than he could injure one of his own children. He only wanted to talk with them and tell them what we are seeking is not conflict.”

Saydia didn't say anything for a moment. “They... they are returning with him?” She asked finally.

For'mya nodded her head. “Aricia was with them the entire time because he knew it would have been inappropriate, at least to the Tasmor, to have them accompany him without a woman present.”

“He knew this?” Anthylea asked now stunned at For'mya's words.

Anja smiled at them. “He may look rather wild at times, have all sorts of muscles and crazy delicious body parts...” Anja said. “But he is far from stupid and he is the most honorable man we have ever met.”

Tobia took Saydia's arm now and she turned to look at her. “Anja is right Saydia.” She said gently. “Trust what your instincts are telling you Saydia. They have never steered you wrong before. Listen to them now... and not to Perlyea's words of hate and arrogance.” Tobia squeezed her arm. “In all the time we have known each other, the time we have shared, have I ever lied to you. About anything?”

Saydia shook her head. “No.” She answered instantly.

“Then trust me now.” Tobia told her.

Everyone turned when the doors to the building slid aside and the Durcunusaan moved aside for their King. Martin Leonidas strode into the building without pause, Danny and Kasdan right behind him. It was Anthylea who noticed it first. Gone was the savage anger from the day before and in its place was a very powerful man who was coldly calculating in his actions and intent. He was so unlike the Tasmor men that Anthylea knew. All of the males among him were the same. Most of them were taller than the average Tasmor by several inches and all of them were much more thickly muscled and appeared in excellent physical condition. For the briefest of moments Anthylea thought how they would pass on exceptional genes to any children that they fathered. They were easily a match for the Kintaur foot soldiers and combined with the superior weapons she had seen them carrying, it was no wonder that the Kintaur War Platoon here on the surface when they had first arrived had not survived for very long against them.

Namiri and Emylea entered the building with Aricia right after Martin and Danny and they moved quickly to their mother's side. Saydia hugged them both tightly and then held them at arm's length while trying to put on a stern expression.

"We will talk later of this." She told them both.

Aricia stepped up to them now. "Do not blame them Sovereign Regent." She said softly. "I sent for them after you and the others left."

"Mother we are fine." Emylea said. "You should have seen it mother! It was..."

Namiri looked confused and turned her head around. "Where is Chief Counsel Kalrr?" She asked.

Saydia motioned with her head towards the rear of the building and they saw Perlyea stretched out on a single couch. "She was ranting like an insane woman. Anthylea ended her words of hate. At least for a time."

"And saved us from having our ears hurt for days." Drenia muttered from Saydia's other side.

Saydia smiled and gripped her daughter's hands even tighter. Her eyes flew open when two other Durcunusaan dragged the inert body of the Kintaur soldier into the building. His face was a mass of bruising and bleeding heavily, his arms secured behind his back tightly with restraints that did not appear could be broken. One of his eyes was swollen shut, his thin lips broken and split, leaking the pinkish color Kintaur blood.

"Gods!" Anthylea gasped as she looked at him moving instinctively to stand in front of Saydia in order to protect her. "A First Warrior!"

Namiri nodded her head quickly. "The one commanding the ship that attacked us!" She exclaimed. "King Leonidas had him... his people used some sort of teleportation device and took him from his ship. He..." Namiri looked at her with wide eyes.

"What?" Saydia asked. "Took him from his ship? How can such a thing...?"

"Mother, he... King Leonidas was beating him like he was a child!" Emylea stated the disbelief still evident in her voice.

Kenny and Pablo were the ones dragging the Kintaur in and Kenny looked at Martin as he moved around the table. "Where you want this piece of garbage Skipper?" He asked.

Martin turned. "Drop his shit sorry ass in the corner Kenny. Stick a K14 in his ear and tell someone to get in here with a bucket and soap and douse him! He stinks to fucking high heaven and if I gag anymore I might vomit on him."

Helen was standing beside Tobia now and she turned to Saydia and Anthylea who had looks of utter disbelief on their faces. In all the years they had fought the Kintaur, not one single First Warrior had ever been defeated in single combat. In fact, the only one to have ever been killed was by five Tasmor warriors who had teamed up on the much larger and violent man. He had still managed to cripple two of them before he fell.

"Forgive him Sovereign Regent Daret." Helen told her. "Sometimes he forgets that he is King and he reverts to the base Spartan within him."

"Manda... what do you got?" Martin's commanding voice stopped all conversation as he looked at Miranda's image in the holotransmission.

"Thirty-three Kintaur ships that are nine minutes out." Miranda answered him. "The Tasmor ships have closed into a tight formation and we have deployed around them. If we need to, we can extend shields around their individual ships. The Kintaur pukers are trying to scan us but they aren't succeeding. Must be driving them nuts too!"

"They are trying to hail us I take it?" Martin asked.

Miranda nodded her head. "Oh yeah, and their ship too. They keep mentioning some happy horseshit about how; if we do not surrender and prepare to be boarded, they will open fire on us. Same shit they shoveled with Nemoa. Not real high up in the overall intelligence factor to be honest from what I've seen and heard. I've been ignoring them."

Martin grinned at her cool attitude. Like her mentor and pseudo adopted father Benjamin O'Connor, there was very little that could get Miranda Lorian to worrying. One also had to take into consideration the ship that she now commanded and the crew that she had put together. The number of things that could make her worry had definitely dropped significantly. Confidence oozed from her pores now, because of her ship and her crew, and what she knew they could do.

“Configuration?” Martin asked.

“Looks like four Heavy Cruisers, a little larger than the Tasmor Flagship, nineteen medium cruisers and the rest destroyer or frigate class.” Miranda answered. “Not really sure since their ships are uglier than sin.”

Martin chuckled openly now and turned his head as Zarah and Lucia unwrapped the shadows from around themselves and Radem. The Tasmor in the room, to include Namiri and Emylea gasped in shock when they just materialized out of thin air beside Martin and he did not flinch.

“Zar?” Martin asked.

Zarah nodded her head. “All positions are manned and ready Alvva.” She answered him, unafraid to call him by the name she had grown up calling him. Papa. All of his daughters did the same thing and Anja, For'mya and Aricia simply smiled knowingly for they knew he loved when they called him that. “If they decide to do something stupid like try and land troops they won't be very happy about the greeting they get.”

Martin smiled at her. “I'm going to have to have a talk with your brother about the time you spend with him. You are becoming very unsociable you know.”

Zarah laughed happily and leaned up on her tip toes to kiss his cheek. “And where did my brother learn that I wonder?” She told him.

Martin grinned and slapped at her bottom as she laughed and blurred out of his reach and right up beside Anja. Lucia moved over beside her as Radem stepped to the side in order to better be able to watch over them both as was now his mission in life.

Saydia could not believe they were acting in such a way and her eyes narrowed in anger as she stepped closer to the table in order to mention this but she felt Tobia's hands take her arm and draw her back while shaking her head. She leaned close to Saydia and looked at her as Anthylea also stepped closer.

“You once told me that you wished for allies Saydia.” Tobia whispered to her as Saydia met her gaze. “You wished for powerful allies that you could trust to stand with you against the Kintaur and whatever threats came in the future. These are the men and women you seek. Just watch Saydia. You will see for yourself.”

“Here we go!” Miranda announced. “They are hailing us again. They're nothing if not persistent. And they have begun to scan the surface of Ventori Martin.”

“COMS?” Martin asked.

“Doesn't look they have developed holoimaging like the Tasmor yet.” Manda answered. “Standard VID COM.”

Martin nodded his head and motioned to the female Durcunusaan at the nearest computer station. “Find the channel and put it up on the big monitor please.” He told the young woman.

“Transferring now.” She spoke.

Martin turned to the massive three by three monitor that hung on the wall of the building. It flickered and came to life with the image of the large Kintaur. This one had a lighter brown coloring to his skin though his features were very similar to those they had already seen. His nose was more fully formed, though still very small. He also had large blue eyes which were odd looking on his face.

“...Sector General Sulos of the Kintaur Hegemony.” The man spoke. “You are within Kintaur Hegemony space! You will stand to and prepare your ships to be boarded!”

Martin and the others turned when they heard Saydia gasp slightly. “Something wrong Sovereign Regent?” Martin asked her.

Saydia looked at him but Anthylea was the one who answered for her. She could sense Saydia's still lingering anxiousness and distrustfulness of males because of the relationship that they shared but Anthylea knew Tobia was right. The Tasmor needed allies and if what she had seen so far was any indication, these Alpha Lycavorians were just what they had hoped would come along for centuries. Perhaps the Tasmor needed to change and set aside some of the more rigid disciplines they followed.

“Kintaur Sector Generals do not normally leave controlled Kintaur space unless they are planning to do battle.” Anthylea answered his question. Martin's dark brown eyes narrowed somewhat and Anthylea thought he was going to ask why Saydia did not answer him. Instead he met her own eyes evenly.

“First Colonel Anthylea Tomar right?” Martin asked her.

Anthylea bowed her head slightly in recognition of this though she was surprised that he knew who she was. She glanced briefly at Aricia and remembered she had used her rank and full name on their ship and that his Queen must have told him as they were speaking with their minds.

“Yes.” She answered finally still somewhat taken aback herself at how casually he was speaking to her. No Tasmor female was used to a male speaking so openly to them in public and in some ways it was very disconcerting.

For'mya detected this right away and she moved closer to Anthylea, pulsing Martin with her female aura and feeling him pulse her back knowing what she was going to do. “This rank is significant in some manner?” She asked.

Anthylea looked at For'mya and nodded her head much more easily. It was obvious she was more comfortable talking to another woman.

“Kintaur ranks show how far up the chain of command they are. First Warriors are the senior ground commanders and senior ship commanders.” Anthylea looked at where Gars was unconscious in the corner. “Like him.” She spoke with distaste. “Kintaur Planetary Generals control individual planets while Sector Generals lead entire Sectors, including all the fleets and ground armies within that particular sector.”

“And this man being here is not normal?” For'mya asked.

Anthylea shook her head. “Sector Generals almost never leave the Sectors they control unless, as I said, they plan to do battle. They do not conduct raids as the First Warriors and others do. They also would not come to investigate why one of their ships has gone missing.”

For'mya looked at Martin and he nodded his head. “So he knew some high value targets were going to be here and he came to collect them himself.” He spoke.

“No one knew of Namiri and Emylea Daret’s mission here.” Anthylea insisted. “And they certainly did not know we would be here! We did not know we would be here until Saydia ordered us to leave.”

Martin motioned with his head to the screen. “This guy knew. He’s acting too confident and calm.” He spoke confidently. He turned to point at where Gars laid on the floor. “And he knew.”

“It’s true Saydia.” Tobia spoke now. “Elder Valael decoded the Kintaur logs from the ship we disabled. They knew Namiri and Emylea were coming here to Ventori. That is why they showed up so soon after they arrived.”

“How many people among your forces knew that they were coming here?” For'mya asked Anthylea.

“The Chief Counsel ordered the mission.” Anthylea replied. “I do not... I do not know how many within her office would have known of the mission.”

“Perlyea is many things...” Saydia spoke now. “She is not a traitor or a spy! Not for the Kintaur! She lost her mother and two sisters to those monsters!”

“One problem at a time.” Martin spoke turning back to look at the monitor. “Let’s see what ugly here has to say.” He motioned to the female Durcunusaan officer and she touched her computer console.

“Active.” She spoke.

“Good morning Sector General Sulos.” Martin spoke crossing his arms over his broad chest. “What can I do for you today?”

KINTAUR BATTLE CRUISER

SUN ARROW

COMMAND SHIP FOR KINTAUR SECTOR GENERAL SULOS

“...Can detect nothing?” Sulos asked.

“Our sensors cannot penetrate their hulls General.” The man to his left replied. “There appears to be some sort of localized jamming field around each ship. I cannot determine the type of metal in the ships either. I have never seen it before sir.”

“These ships are not Tasmor. No ships like these exist in our databases.” Sulos said. “Tactical report!”

“Two of the ships are nearly four thousand meters long General. Nearly double our size.” Another man answered now. “Seven others are equal in size to the SUN ARROW, while the rest are under a thousand meters long. Sensors cannot penetrate their hulls but our high resolution image captures indicate what appear to be gun turrets all over the ships. They are deployed in what appears to be a defensive formation around the Tasmor ships.”

“Can we scan Saydia Daret’s ship?” Sulos asked.

“Negative sir. Whatever is distorting our sensors from the unknown ships is also hiding the Tasmor ships. Visual identification is confirmed however.”

“What about the BRIGHT STAR?” Sulos asked.

“Main power is offline, emergency power is active and keeping the repair shields in place. She has been heavily damaged sir. I’m detecting two massive hull breaches dorsal and ventral. It appears as if someone blew her main engine cores right out of the ship! There are several smaller hull breaches that could be from residual explosions.”

“Life signs?” Sulos asked.

“It’s hard to tell with all of the core radiation in the area but at least three hundred.” The tactical officer answered.

“A Tasmor frigate could not do that type of damage to one of our cruisers.” Sulos spoke. “The intelligence said only two Tasmor frigates would be in this area initially.” He turned to the Kintaur who stood off to the side and had remained silent up until now. “Political Officer Dynv, do you have anything to add? Was our intelligence accurate?”

The Kintaur pushed away from the empty science station he had been standing next too. “All the information we had was correct General. The two Tasmor frigates were here to remove a group of Lycavorians that had been found. Our plan was to secure these two frigates, which carried two of Saydia Daret’s daughters; the two youngest ones to be exact, Namiri and Emylea Daret. We correctly deduced the Sovereign Regent would respond with the force that she has once they received the distress call we allowed the frigates to make. Contact with the BRIGHT STAR was lost once this distress call went out.” Dynv reported.

“So we know nothing.” Sulos spat.

“None of the information provided to us indicated unknown ships were even in the area.” Dynv spoke. “As you said yourself... these ships do not exist in our databases. KIP is certainly not aware of them.”

“Was this information vetted Dynv?” Sulos asked.

“Of course.” The man answered.

“General...” The sensor operator spoke up. “...Sir we can detect slight power readings from many of the ships but...”

“Talk to me!” Sulos exclaimed.

“While it is very different sir, I would have to suggest that these ships are powered by technology based on Pralor equipment.” The man answered.

Sulos looked at him with wide eyes. “Pralor?!” He gasped.

“Yes sir.”

“How is that possible?” Dynv asked. “The Pralor people have repeatedly refused to share their technology with anyone! They guard their technology obsessively! Are you saying they have something to do with this?”

“I’m saying that the power readings we are detecting are based on Pralor technology sir.” The man repeated. “It is most definitely not Pralor engineered however. At least it doesn’t match any past scans we have made of Pralor ships.”

“You are certain of this Lieutenant?” Sulos asked.

The sensor operator nodded his head. “Yes sir.”

Sulos looked at Dynv. “Then we are dealing with another species.” He spoke softly. “They are another branch of Lycavorians that have found their way here.”

“We have never seen any intelligence that indicated there were other factions of their species General.” Dynv said. “Even the Tasmor have no such records and they have been helping those from this planet for three years now.”

Sulos nodded his head. “Perhaps... but what other explanation is there.” He said. “What is on the surface?”

“We can confirm that the two Tasmor frigates have landed on the surface.” The sensor operator spoke again. “Several hundred Lycavorian life signs but they are... they are different somehow from those we have in our database.”

“Different... different in what way Sensor Lieutenant?” Sulos asked.

“Our sensors are not calibrated precisely enough to intensively scan surface contacts General.” The man answered. “I cannot be completely accurate with our sensors but they are different from other Lycavorians that we have scanned in the past according to our medical journals. There are several hundred on the surface, localized twenty-two kilometers southeast from the city of Jorlari. Sensors also detect over a dozen Tasmor within this same concentration of Lycavorians. It appears to be some sort of camp. High resolution scans are showing at least a dozen intact buildings where none should be according to previous sensor scans.”

“The cities on this planet are in ruin! They have been since the Svorag left!” Dynv hissed. “Are you saying there are new buildings?”

“Yes sir.” The man replied.

“This is very strange as well General Sulos.” Dynv spoke. “Kintaur Internal Police is unaware of any new buildings or Lycavorians in this entire Sector. Our probe information is only one week old. How could anyone build buildings in only a week?”

“Well they are on the surface and we must assume the unknown ships belong to them.” Sulos said. “I do not like this Dynv... we risked much to put this mission together and...” “General! They are replying to our hails!” The new voice echoed across the dimly lit bridge.

Sulos looked at Dynv. “Now maybe we will get some answers.” He spoke. “Engage the communications grid.”

“Good morning Sector General Sulos.” The Lycavorian in strange body armor spoke from the surface. “What can I do for you today?”

“I don’t know who you are but you are occupying...” Sulos began to speak.

“...occupying Kintaur Hegemony space! I demand that your ships in orbit power down and prepare to be boarded for inspection! Your weapons and ships will be impounded and your personnel will be detained until such time as I determine what to do with you.”

Martin turned to look at Tobia and Helen who were standing outside of the visual cone of the transmission. “Is this guy for real?” He asked.

Tobia shrugged casually. “I did try to warn you Martin.” She spoke causing Saydia and the others to look at her in surprise at how casually she referred to him.

Martin nodded his head. “Point taken.” He said before turning back to the monitor. “Is this an open transmission?” He asked his Durcunusaan Lieutenant.

The woman nodded. “Yes Milord.”

Martin nodded his head. “Good.” He looked at the Kintaur General on the monitor once more. “As I told your First Warrior Gars when we got here, this entire area of space, to include the planet of Ventori, is Lycavorian space. All of the information that we have indicates that the Kintaur Hegemony borders do not extend this far out from your recognized area of control.”

“Then your information is wrong! We claimed this planet!” Sulos spoke angrily. “That makes it ours!”

“Wrong or not General Sulos, you cannot claim something that does not belong to you.” Martin told him. “This is a Lycavorian planet, which makes it my people’s planet, which means it is my planet!”

“I do not know who you are!” Sulos barked. “We claimed this planet after the Svorag left it in ruins! It is now a Kintaur planet!”

Martin shook his head. “My people are still on Ventori General.” He spoke. “They have been here for almost a hundred thousand years. I know for a fact that is far longer than you have been out trolling among the stars.”

Zarah and Lucia were among the first of those in the room who chuckled softly at his words. Zarah knew her father could get very colorful in his choice of words when he was wound up and he was certainly getting wound up now. Helen merely shook her head with a smile as Anja’s face beamed in delight.

“Who are you?” Sulos snapped. “I demand you tell me what is your title or rank? Are you in command of the ships in orbit and those forces on the ground?”

“You demand an awful lot for someone not in a position to demand sibfla. I’ll humor you though, this time. My name is Martin Leonidas.” Martin answered him. “My military rank is Star Admiral, but most people just call me King Leonidas though.”

Saydia watched Anja lean into Aricia beside her with that beaming face. “He is feeling his oats today Little Wolf.” Anja whispered just loud enough for Saydia to hear her.

Aricia nodded her head with an equally animated face. “Yes he is.”

Martin saw Sulos’s eyes grow larger on the monitor. “King?” He continued. “There was never a Lycavorian King! Not on this planet!”

“Well, as you can obviously see, I’m not from this neighborhood.” Martin answered him. “But I am Lycavorian and I am King. And you seem to know a lot more about my people than you are telling me if you know that there was no King on this planet. That doesn’t matter to me. What you and your people know doesn’t matter to me. Ventori and the Lycavorians on it fall under the protection and realm of the United Lycavorian Union. You can’t claim something that does not belong to you as I told you before. Now, if you would, please state your intentions for entering this system.”

“We are responding to our ship’s distress call!” Sulos answered almost too quickly.

Martin shook his head. “Want to try again sport?” He asked. “Your ship did not send a distress call. Your ship was in orbit of my planet and your troops were on the surface attempting to capture my people and the Tasmor forces here helping them in order to use them as slave labor, among other things. I don’t take kindly to others trying to enslave my people.”

“I demand that you hand over all of the Tasmor currently on the surface!” Sulos spat with some anger. “Do you have the war criminal Saydia Daret among you? We have confirmed her Flagship is in orbit of the planet! You will hand her and her daughters over to me, as well as any other Tasmor and all of their ships! You will do this immediately!”

Saydia Daret closed her eyes slowly. This is the moment she knew would come one day. This was the moment that would decide her future and whether she lived or died. She gripped Anthylea’s hand tightly in one of hers while Namiri and Emylea pressed close to her. This man’s words would decide their fates and so far nothing they had done since being here had shown him that the Tasmor could be trusted. Martin Leonidas had no reason to protect the Tasmor, not after what Perlyea had attempted to do, and when she heard his next words Saydia Daret’s eyes flew open in shock and she knew instantly where the future of her people lay.

Martin shook his head slowly. “I’m thinking not.” He answered Sulos. “The Tasmor people have been providing care and assistance to the surviving Lycavorians here on Ventori since the Svorag attack. They have relocated many of them to safety on their worlds. Given them shelter and care. Sovereign Regent Daret is indeed here on the surface and is conducting negotiations with my Queens in order to see that my people are returned here to Ventori as quickly and efficiently as possible. What you want doesn’t even register on my radar sport. Not after what I have seen.”

“You have seen nothing!” Dynv spat now from beside Sulos.

Martin rolled his eyes. “Another country heard from... great!” He spoke before turning and looking at where Kenny and Pablo stood. He motioned them forward and they lifted the still unconscious form of Gars between them. “What I have seen is the entirety of the logs from your ship... and from this shit bird here.” Martin motioned to the Kintaur that Kenny and Pablo held between them. Martin reached out and pulled the Kintaur’s head back so they could see his face. “You wouldn’t happen to know this douche bag would you?”

Sulos’s eyes grew a little wider. “That is First Warrior Gars! You will release him and any Kintaur you illegally have in your custody and you will do so immediately!”

“That ain’t gonna happen.” Martin said. “I’ve read the logs from this smelly fool and his ship. He likes to brag about what he has done to Lycavorian men and women in them! My people! Lycavorians from this planet! His personal logs go into great, disgusting detail about Lycavorian and Tasmor females he has assaulted! What he planned to do to Emylea and Namiri Daret and even their mother. You let twisted assholes like this command ships often do you?”

“They are war criminals!” Sulos barked out. “They have committed crimes against the Kintaur people for decades! You will turn them over to me and your ships will stand down! My men will board your ships to inspect them for any Tasmor you attempt to hide! That is what you will do boy! I have you outnumbered in number of ships and troops! I will crush you and take them by force if need be!”

Now it was Helen who snorted softly and shook her head. “Oh my.” She whispered so that Tobia and a few others could hear her. “Now they have gone and done it.”

“General Sulos is several hundred years old.” Anthylea spoke softly looking at her.

Helen nodded her head. “I’m sure he is. Martin Leonidas is over three thousand years old however.” She told her seeing their eyes go wide in disbelief. “And he positively hates being called boy.”

“Are you really as utterly stupid as what you just let come out of that hole in your face?” Martin asked him shaking his head and drawing their attention back to him. “Admiral Lorian!”

“Standing by Milord.” Manda’s voice echoed in the background.

“Manda... please order Captain Nemoa to remove the Kintaur eye sore currently drifting near our planet.” Martin spoke calmly. “And don’t spare the expenditure of power.”

“Acknowledged.”

Martin stepped closer to the monitor. “Let me explain something to you oh great and mighty ugly one.” Martin snarled now his eyes changing and his fangs extending to their full length. “This is my planet! These are my people! The Tasmor people have shown themselves to be friends to my people and no one fucks with my friends. I’m not usually an unforgiving ronnus, I leave that to my son, and he does it far better than I ever will. I’m going to make an exception in your case lard ass!” Martin growled. “Manda!”

“Captain Nemoa is standing by!”

“Tell her to blow that ugly, hunk of nubous junk out of the stars please!” Martin barked.

“With pleasure.” Miranda echoed.

SUN ARROW

Nothing seemed to happen for the first half a minute, which led General Sulos to doubt what the Lycavorian on the surface had just said. That thought changed instantly when there was a massive flare of bluish white light from the port side of the ship closest to where the BRIGHT STAR was drifting.

The entire port side of the REPULSE flared brilliantly as 15 Type 1 Hyper Matter Plasma turrets, 15 Type 2 Hyper Matter Plasma turrets and six of the twelve Mark 22B Anti-ship Missile Batteries all erupted at the same time. Though Sulos would never know it, Captain Nemoa had opted not to fire her entire portside battery of missiles in case the Kintaur did something stupid.

What the REPULSE did fire was quite enough to do the job however.

With 4, Class Six Hyper Matter Fusion Cores providing the power, the beams of plasma were bluish white in color and carried with them horrific energy and destructive capability. The Type 1 Batteries did most of the damage, impacting along the entire hull of the BRIGHT STAR and ripping open the ship like it was an ancient soda can. The Type 2 Batteries continued the onslaught, automatically compensating for the shifting of fire and hitting pieces of the ship that were larger than a transport. The Mark 22B missile launchers fired normal RU22 Hellion high explosive Anti-ship missiles in this volley, Nemoa not wanting to expend her complement of ZMF missiles. The RU22 Hellion missiles were becoming the standard Anti-ship missile in the Union fleet for its superior performance and unerring accuracy. Not to mention the power that the missile could carry.

All of the weapons arrived at the BRIGHT STAR in just under three seconds and quite simply blew the ship from existence.

Sulos and those on the bridge of the SUN ARROW could only gape in shock at their large view monitor.

“General Sulos!” The sensor operator stammered. “General... the BRIGHT STAR is... General she is completely gone!” The man couldn’t believe his own words. “The only... the only wreckage that remains is no larger than two meters across!”

“Impossible!” Dynv gasped. “There must be more than that!”

“No sir!”

“Check your readings again!” Dynv snapped at the man. “General... we must prepare and execute a counter attack! They have destroyed one of our ships! We must...”

“That would be the single, most ignorant thing you have done today!” Martin’s voice filled their bridge for the monitor still had an open COM channel active with the surface of Ventori. “Manda... do it!”

They all heard the female voice then. “Sections Two and Three! Execute! Execute!”

Not two seconds later Sulos and Dynv heard the sensor operator inhale sharply.

“General!” He almost screamed. “Unknown ships are appearing all around us!” He screamed. “They match the size and configuration of the ships protecting the Tasmor fleet! Another twenty-four ships General! They have us surrounded!”

Sulos glared at the monitor and saw the Lycavorian staring back at him. “I’ll give you two choices.” Martin spoke. “The nanosecond one of my ships detects one of your buckets of bolts powering their weapons I will send all of you right straight to hell. And I won’t spare the bullets to do it. You just saw what one of my smaller ships did; go ahead and test me and find out how much patience I have left.” Martin told him. “Your second choice is to pull your ships out of my system and carry your asses back to whatever fucking hole in the ground you crawled out of!”

“That ship had over three hundred men on it!” Sulos screamed.

Martin nodded his head. “And they paid the price for trying to enslave my people. I won’t lose any sleep over their deaths!”

“You have signed your own death warrant by your actions this day!” Sulos shouted at him.

VENTORI

“You have signed your own death warrant by your actions this day!” Sulos shouted at him.

“I don’t know what problems you have with the Tasmor pal.” Martin spoke undaunted. “But they were trying to help my people, which to Lycavorians, makes them friends. When you enslave and hurt my people and my friends I get a really nasty case of the red ass and I want to kill shit!” Martin snarled. “You see those ships around you? One word from me, from one of my Queens, and all of you die! I will kill you so fast you won’t have time to shit your pants let alone think about it!”

“You have killed Kintaur soldiers! Kintaur citizens!” Dynv shouted now.

“And how many of my people have you taken off Ventori?” Martin shouted right back. “How many more have you killed trying to take them from Ventori? I can’t help those you have already taken, not yet anyway, but you will not take one more while I live and breathe! Don’t fuck with me Sector General Sulos or whatever the hell you call yourself! Your bluster and blathering doesn’t scare me in the least! I got bigger guns and bigger ships and I won’t hesitate to kick your sorry ass right back to the fucking dark ages! I’ll give you twenty seconds to alter your course and carry your ugly asses out of this system or my people start shooting!”

“And the Tasmor criminals?” Sulos barked. “You align yourself with our hated enemies! The Kintaur will not forget this!”

“I am aligned with myself!” Martin snapped. “But so far the Tasmor people have shown themselves more trustworthy than you and your people! We greeted them as friends and they did the same, which is more than I can say for you! They will be treated as friends, which means while they are here they are under my protection. You want them... you come through me! You’re running out of time.”

“I want Gars back!” Sulos yelled. “You will return him to his people!”

Martin looked at the Kintaur on his knees between Kenny and Pablo. He nodded his head. “Fair enough!”

Martin Leonidas’s hand closed around the hilt of his sword and with a snap and hiss the blade appeared instantly from Flatspace the moment he yanked it free of his harness. He didn’t hesitate and spun the blade gracefully in his hand before launching the sword the seven meters across the room with exquisite precision. The sword tip entered just below his right eye socket as Kenny and Pablo released the body and the force of the throw tossed the Kintaur back as the sword skewered his skull and anchored itself into the wall of the building behind him, pinning his now very dead body half off the floor.

The Tasmor in the room could only gape in unabashed shock at the callousness with which he had just killed the Kintaur soldier. Not one of them cared that he was now dead, the Kintaur had perpetrated far more atrocities upon far more Tasmor in the past. None of them had ever seen anyone dispatched a Kintaur First Warrior with such ease and total conviction. Saydia Daret looked quickly at Anthylea, gripping her hand tightly and seeing the same look in her beautiful dark eyes that no doubt occupied her own blue orbs. A look of utter shock yes, but also a look of what the future could hold with such men and women as their allies. Not one Lycavorian had even blinked at what Martin Leonidas had just done and even Tobia had stood stoically and showed no emotion.

Martin turned back to the monitor and saw Sulos and Dynv staring at what had just occurred with similar expressions of disbelief. Martin's voice brought the attention of everyone in the room once again.

"You wanted him back...?" Martin spoke. "Well he's back. Back with those of his crew who tried to take my people! And he has been punished for the crimes against them that he had already committed!"

"You will die for this!" Sulos screamed now from his ship. "I will see you skinned alive and your body put on display for..."

"You have ten seconds now asshole!" Martin barked. "Manda... order all ships to prepare to fire! I want nothing left of these dick wads except memories!"

"Acknowledged." Miranda's voice echoed.

"Reverse course!" Sulos shouted. "Reverse course!"

"General we cannot let them..." Dynv began to protest but Sulos ignored him as he looked back to Martin.

"I will see you dead Martin Leonidas!" Sulos spat vehemently. "I will find you and I will see you dead for what you have done!"

Martin nodded his head. "Get in line motherfucker!" Martin snarled. "I got way better men than you in this universe who want my ass dead and I'm still here! You're nothing but a bully! I hate bullies! Manda...?"

"The Kintaur ships are altering course and beginning to move away." Miranda answered.

"Detail a section to escort them out of Ventori space." Martin spoke. "If they flinch... blow their miserable asses to atoms."

"Done." Miranda answered.

"We will meet again!" Sulos barked savagely.

Martin smiled at him. "I look forward to that day." He said. "Then I can kill your sorry ass myself! Have a nice life cockbreath."

Martin reached out and killed the communication before Sulos could reply and he stood there for a moment letting the anger flow out of him. Saydia watched amazed as Aricia, Anja and For'mya immediately went to him, pressing their bodies against his in very intimate fashion and the tenseness that had been showing on his body simply vanished into the air around them. She watched Helen step up to him and stand in front of him. Martin met her eyes and she saw Helen nod her head slowly. Martin smiled at her before lowering his head and nuzzling all three of his Queens, Saydia watching as their faces became animated and almost aroused in nature.

Saydia Daret blinked quickly for suddenly Martin Leonidas had moved and was staring at her from across the table.

"I accept your culture and your customs Sovereign Regent Daret." Martin told her. "Many of your ways are foreign to us but we adapt pretty well. Everything you told my Queens I know as well now." He said seeing her eyes grow wide. "I am not the Pralor people, nor do I follow their way of thinking. Your actions in helping my people will not be forgotten and I am willing to offer you and the Tasmor people whatever I can within reason for doing what you have done." Martin stood up straight and took a deep breath before he continued.

"Anja and For'mya want to continue speaking with you Sovereign Regent Daret and to carry on conducting whatever negotiations you like. We may be different but I think you will find we can be very good friends. I like friends. We need friends out here." Martin told her. "I have only one condition."

Saydia looked at Anthylea and Namiri before turning back to Martin. "And that is?" She asked.

"Be honest with me and I will be honest with you." Martin told her. "Attempt what your friend there did again... and all gains that we could make as two species working together will come to a very abrupt end. You will find that I can be the best friend the Tasmor ever had, but try and fuck me over and you will learn that I can be the worst nightmare of an enemy you have ever come across. That means you need to keep your Chief Counsel under control and find out what else she has been cooking in her head when it comes to my people."

Saydia looked at him. “You would... you would give us your technology?” She asked not really wanting to believe him but his tone and his words were too sincere not to believe him.

“That can be discussed but as I said... it has to be within reason.” Martin told her. “Anja and For'mya know what I will and will not allow, but you might be surprised if you really want to have a relationship with my people. We can teach you and others quite a bit.”

Saydia Daret was dumbfounded. For the first time in her life she did not know what to say. This was almost beyond imagination. She glanced quickly at Anthylea, and then Namiri and Emylea. Their eyes were bright and full of promise at what the future could hold and that is what ultimately pushed Saydia over the top in her decision.

Saydia Daret, Sovereign Regent of the Tasmor people, then did something she had never done before in her entire life.

“I give you my word that this will be done King Martin Leonidas.” Saydia spoke.

Martin grinned and stood to his full height. “Outstanding! I love it when a plan comes together!”

“Plan!” Anja barked now looking at him. “What plan you big oaf! You were flying by the seat of your pants the entire way!”

Martin nodded his head. “Hell yes... but that is the fun part!”

Helen could only shake her head in disbelief. “The gods preserve us, he has truly lost his mind now.” She muttered.

CHAPTER FORTY-SIX

AUSTROVA EMBER COVE

“...Trust her?” Coren asked Asay where she sat across from him and Alrerin. “She has worked for Ardan a very long time Asay.”

Asay nodded her head in agreement. “Yes she has Coren, but you did not see the look in her eyes. She broke down in my arms. Everything she has been raised to believe has been a lie. The man who was supposed to be a surrogate father to her has only used her, forced her to do things that she would not have done otherwise! All because she thought she was helping him. Because she thought he cared about her!”

“Asay there is far more going on than you realize.” Coren spoke.

“Then tell me!” Asay demanded. “I cannot conduct a full and thorough investigation without all of the facts! What are you holding back Coren? What are you not telling me?” Asay looked at Alrerin who had so far been silent. “First Regent I have to know what is going on if I am to determine what took place last night and who is responsible. This communication that Kinryn copied is pure fire! If this is true then...”

Alrerin lifted his eyes to her and met her gaze. “We already know who is responsible.” He told her. “And there are a great deal more facts than what this communication reveals.”

Asay looked at him in shock, her eyes going wide. “You already...” She gasped. “But what you said in the meeting? You...”

Alrerin got to his feet cutting off her words and he moved to the large double glass doors that looked out over the beach from Coren’s office. He could see his grandchildren on the beach once more, sitting with their mother while she schooled them in the classes they were missing being away from home. They sat attentively and listened to her without question. Alrerin had learned long ago that Narlei and Riordian were taskmasters when it came to the education of their children. Their children knew well the punishment for not listening to their mother or any of their teachers back home when in school. Their father had tanned the backsides of his two oldest children more than once for fluffing off in school. They had ample time for play and to do what children their age did, but all of them had learned the lessons that education came first. Alrerin glanced to the right and then to the left and saw several Durcunusaan alertly patrolling the beach on either side of his daughter and grandchildren. They may have been here to protect Coren, but Androcles had made it clear that anyone within the boundaries of Ember Cove was to be protected at all costs. Alrerin knew for a fact that that were at least a dozen other heavily armed Durcunusaan patrolling the grounds and equal that number of Vanari Commandos loyal to Coren and himself. Androcles had left both of them direct COM links to this Admiral Sa'sur in orbit. She was an elven woman who he trusted with his life and some of the most sensitive secrets within the Union. If Androcles Leonidas felt this way then Alrerin knew he could trust her as well.

Alrerin turned back to Coren. "Coren?" He asked.

Coren turned from where he sat on the couch. The changes within him were progressing rapidly just as Nyosa had told him they would. While the Lycavorian virus in her blood was diluted somewhat, her mother had extremely pure blood and this made the virus even more powerful. He could feel Nyosa's resonance faintly from the next room as she worked on the details of the security for Ember's Cove with the Durcunusaan Officer and Senior Cadre Officer in the next room. Though several hundred years his junior in age, Nyosa Val Ardwor had opened his eyes to so much that he had been missing. She had shown him what true love and devotion was and Coren had embraced that completely. He could also detect that Asay now had the Lycavorian virus coursing through her own veins and Nyosa had told him that whoever had bitten her was of very pure blood just like her mother.

"Given how deep we believe this goes Alrerin, we could use all the help we can get." Coren told him.

Alrerin nodded his head immediately. "I concur." He answered as he returned to the couch.

Asay looked at both of them. "What exactly is going on here?" She demanded holding up the holomager. "Just with this communication alone I could begin a full investigation of Ardan Vu Lamurrion! I could..."

"No." Alrerin said.

"First Regent this information is... it is explosive! If this ever came out to the public it would..." Asay began.

Alrerin nodded his head. "It would cause untold chaos." He said. "It would essentially tear apart the very fabric of our government from the inside. That is not something we can allow to happen."

Asay looked between Alrerin and Coren quickly, her keen mind working rapidly. She leaned back in her chair. "By the Prophets... you knew!" She gasped. "You knew this was going on!"

Alrerin shook his head slowly. "I have suspected for some time but I have never been able to produce any credible evidence to support this. Ardan and those helping him have been extremely careful in their actions, and I have been preoccupied with keeping my daughter and grandchildren safe from the OSG and their agents. Coren discovered what was going on only a few months ago and with Androcles' help, he has been able to obtain a substantial amount of intelligence to support this. However this communication..." He looked at Coren quickly and then back to Asay. "...This could and will change everything."

"Are you willing to hear it all Asay?" Coren asked her.

"What do you mean?" She asked.

"You are different now." Coren spoke. "Just as Narlei is; just as I am. You have been bitten haven't you?"

Asay looked at him with wide eyes. "How could you... how could you know that?" She gasped.

Coren tapped his nose gently. "It is one of the first things that develops in those bitten by a Lycavorian and the virus is introduced into their system." He told her. "The sense of smell. Nyosa told me I would be able to detect others with the virus inside them first. I am not nearly as advanced as Nyosa is, she was born like she is, but I did detect something within you. She only confirmed it for me."

"A Lycavorian has claimed you Asay Va Eldost? He has made you his wife and mate hasn't he?" Alrerin asked her.

Asay couldn't meet their eyes and she lowered her face as her blue skin flushed ever so slightly. "I..." She began.

"A Lycavorian claimed my daughter and has loved her shamelessly for more than sixty years Asay Va Eldost." Alrerin said softly. "The brightness of her eyes and the sound of her laughter are because of him. Riordian taught me the true meaning of devotion. You have nothing to be ashamed of."

Asay looked up at them. "I will never be ashamed! Asay spoke confidently. "His name... his name is Nellian Tyrine." She spoke softly, her voice filled with newfound love. "I met him on the ship in orbit. He was so polite and smart and so very handsome." She shook her head quickly. "I do not know how it happened so quickly but it did. I... I wanted him within the first hour of meeting him. What he makes me feel is... I can't put it into words."

Alrerin shook his head now. "And no words are needed." He told her. "If it is anything like what Riordian shows to my daughter every day then I already know."

"As do I." Coren spoke. "Androcles, Denali, and now Nyosa; believe me I understand completely."

Asay looked at them. "Why does this matter?" She asked. "What Ardan and Galar and others are doing is insidious! They..."

"We should probably give you the short version." Coren spoke. "The full file we can make available to you on a secure server. It will be Bio Encoded so that only you can access it."

Asay looked at him. "Coren we do not use Bio Encoded security protocols." She told him.

"We do not... but the Lycavorians do." Alrerin said. "It was the only way to keep what we know from falling into the hands of Ardan or the OSG. Riordian set up a computer server and file for me in this fashion. I have added Coren to it and now I will add you to it. You can go through it at your convenience, but right now we will give you a summary of what we know."

Asay nodded her head quickly as she sat back in her chair and Alrerin began to speak. It took nearly an hour as both of them would add things at different times, and most of the information was not substantial until Coren began to tell her what he had discovered since returning to Austrova with the help of Denali and Praetor Dyack of the Rothryn people. Coren had refilled her tea twice during this time as she listened attentively and the scope of everything began to sink in.

"By the Prophets!" Asay exclaimed as she came to her feet when they finally finished. She moved around behind the chair she was sitting in as she tried to wrap her mind around everything they had just told her. "How... how long has this been happening?" She finally gasped out the question. "How long have they been selling our females to the OSG!?"

Alrerin sat back on the couch. "That we do not know for sure." He answered her evenly. "I would guess several hundred years at least; probably far longer than that. The Lycavorians have been aware of it since my predecessor held office from what Riordian tells me; however they never acted on this information because of the status of our relations with them. At least not until the last century when Dutkne deemed it was happening far too often and too close to their own borders."

"Lies!" Asay hissed angrily. "So much of what we know has been based on lies!"

Coren nodded his head. "Yes they have been. First and foremost among those lies are the facts that the virus within a Lycavorian cannot affect Vanari. I think the three of us now know that is completely untrue, as are the reports that any children born from such a union would be deformed in some way. You have seen Nyosa and Alrerin's grandchildren; their existence alone proves that our scientists and doctors were wrong. They cannot shift their forms and any children born from the union of a Vanari and a Lycavorian will always have blue toned skin, but they will also have all of the traits of a Lycavorian as well."

"Wrong or told to be wrong." Alrerin said with a nod. "That doesn't matter now. It will all come out in the end."

Asay looked at them. "The Lycavorians...?"

Coren nodded his head. "Some of them are working for the OSG." He answered. "That is who attacked Alrerin's home and mine. We do not know exactly how many but Dutkne and his people have identified at least several dozen within the former Protectorate. They will be very surprised when they are arrested and brought to us for justice."

"And Prince Androcles?" Asay asked. "Can we trust him?"

Alrerin shook his head now. "Trust him?" Alrerin asked. "At this moment in time, I find myself trusting him more than many of our own people. Whatever elements of this slavery ring that existed within the Alpha Quadrant is now dead." He stated plainly meeting her gaze. "All of the major players were caught and quickly executed. Their leader died by Androcles' own hand. It appears that the Union, the Alpha Quadrant branch of the Lycavorians, has a particular and very nasty distaste for slavery in any form. Riordian tells me it is because of their years of slavery to this High Coven. Those that survived this purge will pose no problem for us, if they ever show their faces again that is."

"How can you be so sure?" Asay asked.

Coren got to his feet slowly. "Because I was there the day he rescued my daughter Asay. I saw what Androcles Leonidas and his siblings are capable of." He told her evenly. "I watched him destroy an entire government Asay. He wiped it out completely because they had allowed what happened to Caliria." Coren shook his head. "Never have I seen such power and death as I did that day. Until now that is."

"Now?" She asked. "What do you mean Coren?"

Alrerin also rose now. "There is a reason why I ordered the entire Board of Regents to gather in three days." He told her. "When we meet in the Regent's Hall, the attack will have been underway for twelve hours."

Asay's eyes flew open. "Attack?" She almost shouted. "What attack?"

"The attack that will free every Vanari female currently being held by the OSG and their minions."

Alrerin finished the statement. "The attack that will finally and forever set our people free."

Asay was stunned into silence as she stood there and she watched as Coren stepped up to her and took her arms. "Are you with us Asay?" He asked softly.

Asay looked at him and the answer came with no hesitation in the least. "Prophets... yes! Of course I am!" She exclaimed.

Coren nodded his head and looked at Alrerin. He turned back to Asay. "I will inform Admiral Sa'sur of this and she will arrange for you to work off the SCIMITAR. Kinryn is not safe on Austrova. Ardan will discover what she has done and he will stop at nothing to kill her to hide his involvement in this. He will also come after you I'm quite sure given what Alrerin has tasked you with. Especially when he discovers that Kinryn took that communications. And he will find out, sooner rather than later I'm sure. He is many things but he is no fool."

Asay shook her head quickly. "Nellian would... he would never allow anything to happen to me. Not now." She stated.

"Can he provide protection for you?" Alrerin asked. "It would look odd if Androcles were to provide this?"

Asay nodded quickly. "He is a Durcunusaan Captain." She answered. "Yes I...?"

"He gave you his COM channel?" Coren asked.

Asay nodded again. "Yes."

Coren turned and retrieved the secure Union COM unit that Androcles had left for him. He held it out to Asay after typing on it quickly. "Contact him now."

Asay took the COM unit with shaking hands and entered the COM code that Nellian had told her to use if she needed anything from him. He had returned to his ship in orbit and she had talked to him only briefly but his voice and his handsome smile was all she needed to put her at ease.

The small holo image of the tall, dark skinned Lycavorian appeared almost immediately when she activated the transmission. He appeared to be in some sort of corridor on the ship, men and women passing him by in the background, but he stopped the moment he saw her in the transmission.

"Asay?" Nellian gasped. "Asay my mate, what is wrong?"

Coren glanced at Alrerin and both of them knew. Even in his short experience with the Lycavorian people, Coren knew that no male would refer to any woman this way if he was not sincere and felt the same way.

"Nellian I... I think I may need your help my love." Asay stammered the words because she was rattled to some extent but not because she did not love Nellian Tyrine with every fiber of her being.

"Anything Asay! You know this! What is wrong? Are you in danger? Asay where are you? You are calling me from a secure Union COM unit! Where did you get this?" Nellian spoke.

Coren motioned to Asay to allow him to speak and she nodded. He tapped the COM unit once and then saw Nellian's eyes grow wider as he saw Coren and Alrerin in the transmission cone.

"Coren Re Mydala." Nellian spoke with a great deal of respect in his voice, though his eyes grew slightly wider. "You are Princess Caliria's beloved father. It is an honor sir."

Coren nodded his head. "Captain Nellian... it is my honor." Coren told him. "Your wife and mate is here with me and First Regent Alrerin at Ember Cove. You know of my summer estate?"

Nellian nodded his head. "Yes sir. Admiral Sa'sur briefs all of the Durcunusaan. Three of my men are helping to provide your security even now."

"Captain..." Alrerin spoke moving closer. "You know of course what is taking place in a few hours?"

Nellian nodded his head. "Yes sir."

"We have just briefed Asay on everything that we know is going on and what has taken place in the past." Alrerin said. "She had a young Vanari woman come to her this morning with information that could... it will be explosive knowledge. This young woman needs protection and though it shames me to admit it, Asay will need additional security as well. Security that we cannot provide because we don't know who we can trust. This disturbing information will very likely make her a priority target by those we will be attacking. In order to try and keep it from becoming common knowledge that she knows these things, I would like to request she be allowed to work off your ship and conduct her investigation from there with your security guarding her."

Nellian Tyrine nodded his head without pause. "She is my wife and mate First Regent! I will protect her with my life!"

"Nellian... Kinryn is... she has gone through so much." Asay told him. "She is... she has been forced to do many things. I need her protected far more than myself."

"Asay you are my wife and mate! I will allow no harm to come to you!" Nellian told her.

Asay nodded her head. "Yes, and I bless the prophets for this every hour my love." She told him. "But Kinryn is..."

Nellian shook his head. "I will be on a STRIKER with two of my finest men in fifteen minutes. I will pick you and this young woman up at Ember Cove."

Coren smiled knowing that this man would do what he said. "Thank you Captain." He told him.

"You are father to a Crown Princess of the Union sir." Nellian told him. "I will protect Asay with my life and my men will protect this woman. My Prince would expect this of me; of any Durcunusaan."

"Then we will see you shortly Captain." Coren said. "And we have some additional Intel that you may pass to Androcles when you return to the ship."

Nellian nodded his head. "Understood. I will be to your location in thirty minutes."

Coren's P9 went dark as the communications ended and he looked at Asay. "We have thirty minutes to brief you of what attacks." He said. "You must tell no one what we tell you and continue with your investigation like you know nothing."

Asay nodded. "I understand." She answered.

"You realize your relationship with Captain Tyrine will become public knowledge very soon after it is announced you will be working from their ship?" Coren told her. "Are you prepared for that Asay? Ardan will no doubt come after you in public and try to demean you. He will attack you personally in public."

Asay Va Eldost met Coren's eyes with steel in her gaze and her jaw set in stone. "Then let him." She spoke forcefully. "Nellian has shown me more love and devotion in just a few short days than I ever thought possible. If Ardan wishes to attack me... he will not find so meek a lamb."

Coren grinned. "Good." He said.

Alrerin moved up beside her now and took her arm gently. "We will brief you on what Androcles and our people are going to do." He said. "It will steal your breath away with the scope of this operation Asay. And it will succeed!"

CLASS M MOON UNION DESIGNATION DELTA FOUR ONE FOUR ENVERR BASE OF OPERATIONS

Ulana sat on the dirty floor not caring in the least that she had never been filthier in all of her young life. She had led such a sheltered and arrogant life thanks to her father; a life she had flung aside completely just over two days ago. Looking back on events Ulana knew without question that her entire outlook had begun to change after her confrontation with Sadi Leonidas.

Ulana had never been physically assaulted in any way as she grew, no one daring to even attempt such a thing because of the standing of her father. Ulana had been pampered and doted over her entire life with the exception of the short time that she dated Androcles. Ulana wrongly assumed that since he was Crown Prince and royalty that those who worked and lived on the Island Palace of Apo Prime would treat her like royalty. To her astonished surprise, this was forbidden by order of the Royal family ever since his father had come to power. Those who lived and worked on the Island Palace and the Spartan Royal Estate on Earth were treated as dear friends in all things. They did not cater to the Royal family in any way or form and this had initially exposed Ulana to things she had never experienced growing up.

It had become even more obvious when her father had died in the attack on the Senate building and she had basically moved into his position without even trying. Ulana really had no idea what a Senator of the Union did, and she mistakenly thought her position granted her some status above others. She had quickly found out that this was not the case. Most of the other Union Senators looked down upon her for her ideals and her arrogance, which is what had gotten her tied up with Icho so quickly. He had taken her under his protective wing because he had worked with her father, and Ulana had accepted this without really knowing their history together. She had surmised she would make sweeping and radical changes to how the Union did things when she took her father's Senate seat but she quickly came to the realization that she was far out of her realm in this world. She had allowed Icho to play her like a puppet master.

That was until her confrontation with Sadi.

Ulana had known in the first seconds that she was no match for the much more powerful Sadi in any way. Her Alpha female pride and arrogance had made her think she could somehow steal Androcles away from Sadi and the others he had claimed as wife and mate. Ulana knew now deep down that she could never have done this, but her father's lingering upbringing and her own pride hadn't allowed her to admit this openly.

That was until Sadi had thoroughly kicked her mida that day.

Ulana allowed a brief smile to curl across her lips at that thought for there was really no other way to explain it. Her confrontation with Sadi and the conversation with Thr'won that had come a few days later when they had returned to Earth had finally and forever torn the blinders from her eyes. It was only then that Ulana had stood up and finally began to take notice of things around her. Not the silly and utterly unrealistic things she had been raised believing, but the true reality of how things were. Ulana was not unintelligent by any means, she excelled in school no matter the subject and it was this intelligence that finally shattered the façade she had always projected. Ulana sat up and began to take notice of everything around her and how they really worked. She began to listen when normally she would have been forcing her opinions to the forefront. She watched as other Senators besides Icho talked and moved within the halls of power, even those close to her own age, and she began to learn. She was quite shocked that Androcles had allowed her to come on this trip, but she knew the moment Icho approached her and wanted her to send him any information she could gather, that he had a different agenda far from her own. And it was an agenda she found she was not at all comfortable with.

And then there was the one thing that had tipped the scales for her forever. One person who had made it very clear to her what emotions she could feel if only she allowed herself to feel them.

Ulana looked down at Torian's inert form resting in her arms and she stroked his dirty hair and badly bruised face once more as she held him close to her body. Even in her wildest imaginations Ulana had never considered she could fall so quickly and so hard for any man, let alone a Beta wolf. Ulana had fallen however, and it was because of this man, a wolf and man that she would never have even glanced at a year ago. She was an Alpha female and Torian was a Beta male. While such a relationship was not by any means uncommon within the Union, it was not something her father would have ever accepted and honestly not something Ulana would have ever considered.

That was until Torian had selflessly and quite savagely protected her from their captors. Even though he was much smaller, Torian had used his superior training to kill four of the vile Enverr before they had taken him down. They had beaten him badly and were about to kill him when they were ordered not to by their leader. Ulana had tears in her eyes as she had watched him take the savage beating without uttering a single sound of pain. He had done this to protect her and the others. That had opened her eyes even wider, but what he had done after was what caused her to admit her feelings to herself and look at him in a new light. After they had arrived here, he had attacked another Enverr who had attempted to rape her in the dark of night, and even as beaten and broken as he was; he had managed to nearly kill him before being pulled off by two others.

Another, even more brutal beating had taken place and as Ulana screamed for it to stop she saw his eyes look at her with nothing but unabashed love. When their leader had finally stopped them, Ulana had ignored her other Senators' pleas to not interfere and she gathered Torian into her arms as if she could protect him. He had been in her arms ever since and she refused to let him go. Ulana had never felt the emotions flowing through her as she held Torian in her arms. Even as badly injured as he was, just feeling his hard, lean and muscular body against hers caused her female wolf instincts to kick in and expand. His scent tickled her nose unlike any male who had ever courted her, even more than Androcles, and Ulana knew then where her path lay.

Ulana glanced up when she saw the movement and she watched Ya'sur settle to the floor in front of her on one knee.

"How are you holding up?" He asked her softly.

Ulana nodded her head slowly. "I... I will live." She stated with firmness in her voice that had never been there before. Ulana had never been this filthy in her life and now she didn't care. The smells of unwashed bodies and blood assaulted her wolf senses but she pushed them down as she continued to stroke Torian's face. He was quite handsome she decided, even under the blood and bruises. Her own face was bruised where the Enverr had slapped her, her long dark hair askew and unkempt and dirtier than it had ever been, but her brown eyes were still bright and alive. "I... I worry for him Ya'sur."

Ya'sur nodded and looked down at Torian. "He is a strong wolf Ulana..." He told her. "Have faith in him." They both looked at Torian's face when he coughed just then, a small dribble of blood leaking from his lips. Ya'sur watched as Ulana didn't hesitate for a second and wiped the blood away gently with a piece of cloth she had torn from her shirt.

"He is bleeding inside." Ulana told him. "He is too weak to shift and I think if he did it would only make it worse. He has internal injuries."

Ya'sur rested his hand on Torian's shoulder and nodded his head. "I know." He said softly.

"Are they coming Ya'sur?" Ulana asked. "He will die without medical treatment. I... I don't want to experience that after what he did. He saved us all! He saved me!"

Ya'sur nodded his head. "He loves you Ulana. He has for many years. It is one of the reasons Androcles assigned him to protect you. He knew no other would or could protect you as Torian has."

Ulana didn't hesitate for a second and shook her head. "I... I don't want to lose that Ya'sur." She spoke softly. "I have never felt these things within me and I don't want them to stop!" She looked at him again. "Will they come?"

Ya'sur shook his head. "I don't know Ulana. You know as well as I do that the Union does not negotiate with men such as these. We kill them. And they don't know where we are. I don't know if the fool here contacted Prince Androcles after that first time."

Torian coughed gently once more and this time he let out a haggard laugh which caused both of them to look at him and the pain he was in. He was indeed smiling however, blood staining his lips and chin, but a smile it was. "El... Eliani." He rasped out the words.

Ulana stroked his cheek once more. "Yes... she could help you Torian... but she isn't here." She answered him with an almost frantic tone of voice.

Torian forced a smile once more and shook his head slowly in Ulana's lap. "Already... already here. Eliani is... she is with him." He stammered.

Ya'sur's eyes grew a little wider when he said that and he leaned closer to Torian. "What do you...? Torian what do you mean?" He asked.

Torian reached up with his left arm, his right arm broken and useless and he touched his forehead. "Andro... Andro always knows." He said softly. "Already... he is already here. He will... leave no one behind. You must... you must be ready."

"Carians!" Ya'sur gasped aloud. He was one of only a few thousand elves who could speak the ancient Lycavorian language fluently, though there were thousands more who were taking it in schools across Elear. "You are serious?"

Ya'sur glanced at the timepiece he always wore, a gift from his mother. "We have two hours before the deadline." He spoke. "I will tell the others."

Moon R26.

Known only to this particular Enverr Clan. Or so they thought. It was a Class M Jungle moon, with thick vegetation and towering mountains. Their Camp was built near the base of one such mountain and couldn't really be considered a simple camp. It resembled more a small town than anything else. There were over a dozen large buildings that had been built through the years, and a massive stone and steel wall that blended into the jungle all around them to protect from the jungle predators, which were many and very deadly. Those who were brought her to the slave auctions were transported in black ships so that they did not see the moon from orbit and did not know where they were. Rotaxe and his clan were well known and considered one of the most brutal Enverr Clans. No one who did business with them wanted to cross them and they had never had any problems.

Of course, none of them had ever been hunted by the lethal predators that currently were positioned on all four corners of the compound and silently waiting to begin their attack. They were hidden in the deep vegetation and trees, their eyes deadly and their weapons ready to spill blood.

"Carians!" Eliani hissed softly where she lay on the moist jungle floor. "I forgot how much I hate jungles."

Jomann lowered his macrobinos and then lowered his body down behind the massive downed tree only a hundred and fifty meters from the west wall of the compound. He settled to his back and looked at her laying there in her body armor beside him, a layer of light and dark green camo paint splashed across her cheeks and exposed skin to break up the outline of her features. Her burgundy red hair was tied in a tight ponytail and actually blended with some of the more vibrant colors of the jungle around them.

Jomann smiled at her. "They do not rank among my favorite vacation places either." He said.

"Sibfla I hope not!" Eliani complained. "It will take me a week to get all this nasty dirt off my body now!"

"I will gladly bath you with my tongue and insure you are clean." Jomann told her.

Eliani looked up into his face, her fern green eyes growing bright and a smile splitting her face. "Every nook and cranny?" She asked.

Jomann smiled. "Every one." He told her.

"Hmmm... that sounds kinky." Eliani said with a smile. "What else will you do while you are licking me clean?"

"God!" Brendi's voice echoed softly and they both turned to see her lift her head from Jomann's opposite side where she had been dosing. "Is everything always so sexual between you two?" She asked.

"Yes." Jomann and Eliani answered together.

"If I recall... you didn't complain the other night." Eliani stated with a brilliant smile.

Brendi Faith couldn't help but grin as she looked at them, for Eliani was very correct. Brendi had never, even in her wildest dreams, imagined herself in such a situation. That had made it all the better as far as she was concerned. She had experienced pleasure beyond her craziest fantasies with Eliani and Jomann and it had left her wanting more and more. Jomann was by far the largest man she had ever bedded but he was so very skilled and willing to make her scream out in desire and passion. Eliani's naked body was utter perfection and Brendi had spent many hours just exploring that body to her heart's content. Brendi Faith had embraced this new life she now had with Eliani and Jomann and nothing was going to take it away from her now. None of them had gotten much sleep that night, but none of them were complaining about it either. "Well... that was different." She said trying to maintain her composure. "Do I get included in this tongue bath by the way?" She asked.

Eliani leaned over Jomann's broad chest and smiled at her. "We will make sure you are squeaky clean Saarrieemeran." She said. "Trust me."

Jomann lifted his hand and touched his jaw implant. "All teams report." He spoke softly.

"Team Two in position." Dorian's voice answered softly.

"Team Three ready." Cowen answered.

"Team Four sitting on go." Denali answered.

"Team Five set." Deion's voice was the last to echo in Jomann's ear.

Jomann nodded at Eliani. "Andro is eight minutes out. Be sharp everyone. We go the moment he enters the compound. Deo... you need to get Mari and Eirene plugged in quick."

“Oh really... no pressure Jomann.” Deion answered him over the implant and it caused all of them to chuckle softly.

The plan was simple but precise. Each of them would breach the wall of the compound closest to one of the four, three-story structures housing the Vanari prisoners. General Tarnei’s intelligence, gathered over weeks of painstaking recon, had confirmed that the Vanari were held on the second floor with at least five guards on the first floor and five more on the third. Four of their breach teams had sniper support being provided by Colonel Rinell and eight of his finest shooters situated high in the jungle tree canopies to provide pinpoint direct fire. Jomann, Eliani, Brendi, Ryana Val Ardwor, and three members of the permanent Durcunusaan detachment from SPARTA’S WRATH would strike the three story building closest to them as Team One. Denali, Lisisa, Arduri, Fedor and two Durcunusaan were Team Four. Dorian, Sheva, Onera and Caliria with two more Durcunusaan made up Team Two. Team Three consisted of Cowen, Kalis, Ridor, Sherice, Daio and four Lycanari Commandos from Rinell’s command. Team Five was made up of Deion, Mari, Murano, Nara, Eirene and three Lycanari Commandos.

Deion’s team would move and secure the Enverr Command Center, or what passed for one anyway, while the other teams would take the buildings. Mari and Eirene would tap into their computer systems and take control of all defenses and automated processes within the camp so the Enverr could not surprise them.

Murano rested six feet from Deion, Mari between them. Nara and Eirene were on Deion’s opposite side as they lay in the eight inch high thick grass only twenty meters from the wall. The wall looked imposing until you were up close to it and then the years of decay and no upkeep could be seen. There were metal, cell like doors all along the exterior of the wall that led into the compound, none of them being guarded. Murano’s trained and experienced eye could see that these Enverr had gotten sloppy in their upkeep and no longer patrolled the wall from the outside or they would have detected the decrepit shape of the exterior wall’s condition. Many of the doors were barely hanging onto their hinges and were rusted beyond repair. Not that it would matter for Murano had seen the strength of a Lycavorian and he had no doubts Deion would rip the door open with little problem.

Their insertion had taken place an hour ago via three Shrouded STRIKERS and had been perfect. To their credit, the usual banter that took place between the Leonidas siblings was kept to a bare minimum for all of them knew they needed to be alert and ready for anything. Their entire demeanor had shifted to one of calculated precision and Murano could once more only feel immense pride and awe at this, emotions that had been sweeping through him for many days now. With several thousand Praetorians trained in the fashion that Martin and his children and the Lycavorians were trained, the Pralor people would never have fallen. Sumar’s decision to merge their species together all those millennia ago was so far turning out just as he no doubt envisioned.

Murano watched quietly as Deion took something from his side, tore open a wrapper and held out the ration bar to Mari. His niece didn’t hesitate and took a bite from the bar and began to chew. Deion then offered it to his sisters on his other side and they bit chunks off before he put the rest into his own mouth. Mari and Nara had become very close over the last days and weeks and it was Nara who was insuring Mari learned everything there was to learn. Murano knew it was only a matter of time before Deion fully claimed his niece, and the changes that had already begun within her would be completed. Mari was already sporting wolf fangs, though they were less pronounced than someone who was fully turned, but they were definitely the dual fangs unique only to the Leonidas bloodline Murano knew. She had begun to use her senses more and more with Nara’s tutelage and her Etheric resonance had become much more focused and very powerful. As it had been since he had first seen her, there was something about Mari that he could not place. Her resonance was closely guarded and shielded with Etheric shields that he had felt only from other Praetorians. She guarded her resonance tightly and her Etheric aura was minuscule in nature. Someone had taught her how to do this and Murano knew it could have only been Tobia. Only she had the skill and power to shrink her Etheric resonance to levels that were very nearly undetectable. It surprised him that Delnash would allow Tobia to give Mari such schooling, but his brother was different now as well.

Murano watched as Deion shifted his head and gently nuzzled Mari’s cheek and ear with his nose and he saw her eyes close in what amounted to blissful delight. Mari, Murano knew, had utterly accepted what was happening to her. If she was not with Deion, she was with Nara or one of the other Leonidas children all of the time now. He was amazed at how seamlessly she had blended into her role and her life into Deion’s life, almost as if she was meant to be here among them doing what she was doing now. Delnash would not be able to alter that course for Mari now, no matter what he attempted. Her Etheric resonance told everyone that she was exactly where she wanted to be and that she was delightfully happy with that. Murano also doubted strongly that Deion would allow anyone to take Mari from him based on what he saw between the two of them and what he knew Martin and his brother Androcles had done in very similar circumstances.

Murano had once heard Helen talking with Wayonn and something she had said that night stuck with him now. The Leonidas family bloodline loved completely and without any hesitation. Anyone who thought to come between that love; they would find nothing but pain and death in its most savage form.

Murano's thoughts drifted briefly to Tobia and he could not help but smile. Her reddish brown hair was so soft and long, her dark eyes incredible. Mari reminded him quite a bit of Tobia actually in both looks and...

Murano looked at Mari now his eyes growing slightly wider. That could not be. It was not possible. She was Delnash's daughter and...

"Heads up folks!" Jomann's voice echoed in their implants. "The STRIKERS are inbound. Time to go to work."

STRIKER 21

NORMYA LEONIDAS'S STRIKER

Andro knelt on the deck between Normya and Tir'ut watching as his sister guided them in over the landing zone carved out of the jungle below. Mated life agreed with his sister he took note. Tir'ut and she were never apart for very long, and they had become a superior flight crew because of their love for each other. They could almost predict what the other would do in almost any situation now. Andro glanced back at the female elven engineer sitting behind them and smiled to himself. Ke'rai Jenal did a very good job at hiding her feelings from his sister, but she could not hide it from him. Her scent called for Normya and Tir'ut both in a very powerful way and though they did not know it right now, Normya and Tir'ut would come to see it in the future and embrace it without question.

Andro turned back before Ke'rai noticed him watching her and he glanced at Normya. "Arande?" He asked.

"It's plenty big enough." Normya answered him instantly. "Not much room to maneuver with all six of us on the ground but that won't matter."

"No it won't." Andro said turning his head as Carisia, Lu'ria and Sehri moved into the cockpit from the rear of the STRIKER.

"We're ready." Carisia told him.

"All the other ships report the same thing Andro." Sehri told him.

"Sadi and Ne'Veha?" He asked.

Lu'ria nodded her head. "Holding position at thirty-two thousand feet above the clouds." She told him with a smile as she remembered their conversation with Sadi only moments ago. "The ramp is open they are standing by. Elynth and Anthar are challenging Caydren and Cinol to a contest on who reaches the ground first."

Sehri looked at Andro. "Elynth said they were talking smack." She said puzzled. "What does this mean Andro?"

Andro chuckled and pulled her close to him as he stood up. "It means the brothers are brash and confident."

Carisia laughed softly now as well. "Challenging Elynth and Anthar to a dive is not the brightest thing to do. No one catches them when they dive."

"Majeir and Marux are staying out of it." Lu'ria spoke looking at Andro. "Why did we bring him our love? He has..."

"Marux has his part to play in the future and it is with us." Andro said. "In order for him to fully heal and put the past behind him we must show him trust. He is not as skilled as the others but that will come in time and with the proper influence."

“You trust him?” Carisia asked.

Andro nodded. “Yes.”

That was all they needed to hear and Carisia nodded her head. “Then so shall we.” She said.

Andro looked at Sehri. “You are ready?” He asked.

Sehri nodded and her blue eyes shone brightly in excitement. “Yes.”

“Do not hesitate Duangai.” Andro told her. “Your part is critical for the others to act.”

Sehri set her jaw and nodded. “I won’t.” She told him.

Andro leaned over and nuzzled her cheek and then turned to Normya. “Take us in arande. If they are not intelligent enough to get out of the way, land on them.”

Normya laughed. “I like that plan!” She quipped as her hands flew across the three consoles and the STRIKER dipped slightly. “Here we go!”

PREMONITION

THIRTY-TWO THOUSAND FEET ABOVE THE ENVERR CAMP

Marux was silent as he listened to Caydren and Cinol playfully boast about their skills. He rested on the deck with his talons under him waiting to spring into action. He had been very surprised when Androcles asked him to come on this mission, but it was an opportunity to show everyone that he was very different. He had been training and sitting with Elynth and Anthar nearly every day now, learning all they could teach him, schooling him in things that he had never learned and should have. He was a different dragon now he knew, now it was just up to him to show that to all. Marux’s head tilted slightly when he felt the tingling against his Etheric shields and the now familiar resonance surrounded him. He lowered his shields immediately, just enough to allow Androcles to speak with him. Instinctively he reinforced the shields of the Talon Guardian who had believed in him the most, insuring no one would hear their private conversation.

[Talon Guardian Androcles?] He queried.

[Marux my dragon brother, you seem nervous.] Andro spoke from the other ship as it neared the surface.

[I will do my duty Androcles.] Marux answered.

[I have a different job for you Marux.] Andro told him.

Marux tensed his body slightly so that no one would notice. [You are taking me off the mission?] He asked.

[No.] Androcles answered. [I’m just changing things around a little.]

[You do not trust me.] Marux stated evenly though he felt shame fill him. What else could he feel? His actions in the past did not garner trust and he knew this.

[No Marux my brother.] Andro told him. [You are different Marux. You are more like me than others think.]

[I don’t understand.] Marux spoke.

[You have darkness within you Marux.] Andro told him. [Just as I have darkness and just as my father has darkness. The events in your life have allowed you to see things others do not.]

[And that is bad.] Marux told him. [I don’t want this darkness in me.]

[We all have darkness Marux my brother.] Andro said. [It is how we use this darkness that makes us who we are.]

[What do you mean?]

[This Enverr fool thinks he is going to outsmart me.] Androcles said. [Dorian and I have seen what he intends. He is not doing this by himself Marux. He is receiving his instructions from someone else. He intends to try and take Sehri while we are distracted. That is what this is all about Marux. It has nothing to do with the Vanari.]

[But why ask for the things he did?] Marux asked him quickly. [Why... it is a ruse!] He exclaimed quickly.

Marux felt Androcles smile in the connection. [You see... you, Elynth and I are not so different.] He told him. [Do not let on that we are talking. No one else can know.]

[But why let him do that Androcles?] Marux asked. [He could... he could injure one of those who you worship.]

[There are two reasons.] Andro told him. [The first is because Sehri would never let me leave her on the ship. She would find a way, with Sadi and the others helping her no doubt, to accompany us on this mission. I won't do that for her skills are very much needed as well. Only she can project her shields as she can and protect so many.]

[And the second reason?] Marux asked.

[She will never be alone Marux.] Andro said. [You will be protecting her.]

Marux was almost unable to keep his eyes from flying open and his wings from snapping out to the side in shock. [Me!] He gasped.

[Once you exit with the others I want you to break off and move to Sehri's location.] Andro said. [They will be approaching from the north. I want you to stop them.]

[I don't understand.] Marux said again. [Why not one of the others? Why me?]

[Because like me Marux my dragon brother, you will savagely protect what you feel to be yours.] Andro said softly. [Or did you think I would not know?]

[I thought... I thought I was...] Marux stammered.

[You thought I would never trust you to assume such a role.] Androcles said. [That could not be further from the truth. It is not time just yet, but that will come Marux. Both of you need time to grow more, but it will happen. You are just more attuned to the Etheric flow as we are. Sehri is still learning how to use her skills and while she is powerful she is also inexperienced and sometimes reckless.]

[How did... how did you know?] Marux asked.

[I knew the moment Elynth and Anthar returned with you Marux. Elynth too.] Androcles replied. [I believe it is something to do with what Sarlana calls us. Dahakoan. We can... we can sense things. See them almost within our minds. I saw you and Sehri together just as Elynth and I. As Bonded Ones. You are not lost Marux my brother... you never have been. When the time is right it will happen and then you will know the meaning of being bonded so deeply with someone that it will fill you with happiness. Dante did not destroy you Marux... it prepared you for the future.]

[Can she...? I do not want my past to influence the future Androcles.] Marux told him. [If... if it is as you say I...]

[Do you trust me Marux?] Andro asked him.

Marux's answer was without hesitation or conflict. Given everything that had taken place up until now it was the only answer that came into his mind. [Yes.]

[Then trust me now brother. Trust me now.] Androcles told him.

[What do you want... how do you want me to act?] Marux asked.

[See within my thoughts Marux.] Andro told him and Marux closed his eyes, reaching through their connection until he saw what Androcles was projecting to him. [See what Dorian and I saw. How they will act. They have never seen or fought anyone like you or I Marux. That is your advantage.]

[And when I confront them?] Marux asked.

[They are working with others, taking orders from someone that I will eventually find.] Androcles said. [You know how I feel for my wives and mates Marux?]

[They are your purpose for living.] Marux answered instantly. [Your strength and your core.]

[Yes, and I will allow nothing to harm them. Ever.] Androcles told them. [When you confront them Marux my brother, insure that they know fear before you send them to the pits of jorbhe.]

Marux paused for only a second. [It will be done.] He answered. [On my heart, it will be done.]

Rotaxe stood on the corner of the airfield as he watched the six STRIKERS begin to make their descent into the airfield. These six ships would make him the envy of all the Enverr clans out there and force them to recognize him as their leader. He would unite the Enverr and have all of them under his control. His contacts had told him these ships were the premier ground attack and support aircraft in the Lycavorian Union's Fleet and were almost always piloted by elven females. He did not really need the elven pilots, his contacts said the females would be more trouble than they were worth. They were not like the Vanari females and they would fight viciously to keep their dignity and honor intact. So far everything they had told him was true. He did not think the boy Prince would capitulate so easily to his demands, but what choice did he have. The dark haired female was one of his chosen wives and mates and Rotaxe had been told he would do anything to keep her safe. Besides, as tough as Lycavorians were, he doubted she would submit as easily as the Vanari females did, for they were almost conditioned to not fight when they were taken Rotaxe turned slightly when the Enverr soldier moved up beside him. "The assault team is in place." He reported.

Rotaxe nodded his head. "Good. As soon as we have drawn the boy Prince into the compound to retrieve his people they are to strike. The young one is to be taken alive. The rest must die."

"Are we certain he will bring her?" The second Enverr asked.

Rotaxe nodded his head. "He considers her one of his wives, just as the one we hold. Our contacts say they go wherever he does. She will be among those with him and whether she remains with the ships or comes with him the team will be prepared to act."

"This act will make you famous Rotaxe." The Enverr told him. "It is said that this boy is a warrior unequalled. That he has never been defeated. You will be the one to end him."

"This act will propel our clan to the forefront Hemtar." Rotaxe said. "We will finally have what we deserve." He looked at him. "Has payment been received?"

Hemtar nodded his head. "Fifty million Vanari credits in advance. It has already been deposited into our account on Austrova."

"Five men per ship to confirm the females are on board." Rotaxe spoke. "They will secure the ships when we leave."

Verbal communication became almost impossible as the engines of six STRIKERS drowned out all sound in the immediate area. Rotaxe watched with some admiration at the skill it took to land the ships in a clearing this size and he felt immense pride at what he was going to accomplish. It was only a few moments before the engines were powered down and the sound began to drift away. Rotaxe motioned forward with his hand and then began to walk to the first ship that had landed. This would be the one that the boy Prince was on he was sure. The six men with him spread out slightly as they approached the STRIKER and once they got within six meters they heard the whine of hydraulic servos as the ramp in the rear of the ship began to come down.

Rotaxe let his eyes drift upward and he saw the tall, muscular young man standing at the top of the ramp with a dark skinned, elven female sporting shimmering white hair on his right and a very petite, dark haired female on his left. Rotaxe had to admit, whoever this boy Prince was, he had fine taste in women. The elven female was particularly enticing with her ethereal beauty, her four inch high ears curving elegantly alongside her head and her white hair framing a flawless face and soft pink lips. The armor they wore did not hide the fact that both of them had lush, young bodies.

"We cannot take his women and use them Rotaxe?" Hemtar asked now. "The dark skinned one is a wonder."

Rotaxe shook his head quickly. "No... our instructions were clear. If we violate the contract in any way we will not receive the balance of the credits. They are to be killed as if in battle. That is what we must do."

Hemtar nodded his head. "That is a shame." He stated. "Think of what we could do with her."

"When this is over and we have received payment, you can buy as many Vanari females as you want Hemtar." Rotaxe spoke. "Let them service your every need."

"I intend to." Hemtar answered.

Andro looked at the Enverr near the bottom of the ramp, his azure eyes emotionless. His senses were fully alert and he could detect dozens of different scents in the immediate area, his eyes drifting but his head remaining still as he saw Enverr troops moving to the backs of the other STRIKERS that had landed. He turned his head back briefly and looked at the thirty Vanari and Lycanari Commandos that were in the rear of his STRIKER. Commander Entia met his gaze and they shared an imperceptible nod of understanding. Entia had volunteered for this mission and she had complete command of the three hundred Vanari and Lycanari Commandos taking part in this operation. She had made it clear that she would follow Andro's orders no matter what they were however. At the moment all of the Vanari and Lycanari females were dressed in skimpy clothes, their uniforms and weapons stowed under the seats just behind them.

[Andro... we are in position.] Jomann's voice echoed within all of their minds heavily shielded so that only someone on a Tier Six or higher level would be able to hear them.

[Our people are not here Jomann. He must plan on having us return to the compound with him.] Andro told him.

[He's no fool. He has about a hundred soldiers within the compound, not including those he brought there to meet you.] Jomann spoke in reply. [We have eyes on all target buildings in the compound Andro. Give us the go and we can secure them before he brings you back here. We'll be in position to cover the three of you once you get here.]

[Where are the others?] Andro asked.

[Looks like a main barracks building.] Jomann answered. [According to General Tarnei's intelligence, it is across the street from his so called audience room.]

[Sister... do you see it?] Andro asked reaching out for Elynth who was flying above them within the clouds.

[We see it Andro.] Elynth answered instantly.

[Marux?] Andro asked.

[He has broken away just as you instructed.] Elynth told him.

[Androcles was it wise to...?] Anthar began to ask the question.

[He will do what he must to protect the future he could have Anthar. Just as you would. Just as any of us would.] Andro said without pause. [And he wants that future more than anything right now. And he wants your approval and confidence.]

[He had that the moment we discovered him and saw what he had suffered to survive by himself.] Anthar replied.

[Yes... he did.] Majeir echoed.

[If he needs help, Kdan or Dnom can leave the PREMONITION to help him. I doubt he will need help however.] Andro said.

[Andro our love...] Sadi's voice broke into the conversation from the cockpit of the PREMONITION. [General Tarnei just updated us. She said that two of the OSG bases are prepping to move their operations! She has advanced the attack three hours! We have twenty-two minutes before the assault begins across the entire sector.]

[Then our issue of time is solved. I will buy you as many additional minutes as I can.] Andro said. [Execute Jomann!]

Andro looked at Carisia and then Lu'ria. "When this kicks off Carisia, you and Lu'ria take down the Enverr next to this Rotaxe fool. Leave the ugly one for me."

"They are all ugly." Luria whispered to him, her expression bland so as not to give away her humor.

Andro was laughing inside but his face remained plain and he nodded his head. "Very well... let's get this over with."

Andro began to move down the ramp, Carisia and Lu'ria beside him. The Enverr had halted about thirty feet from the bottom of the ramp and they crossed this distance slowly until they were only ten feet from him. Rotaxe was much wider than Androcles, but the years had not been kind to him and he was overweight, the extra pounds most easily seen along his sides and upper legs. He still looked incredibly solid and powerful and Andro would take no chances when the time came.

"So you are the boy Prince everyone is so frightened of." Rotaxe began with bluster, pushing out his chest and trying to make himself appear taller than he actually was. "You don't look like much boy!"

Andro made a show of looking around. "I don't see my people." He spoke evenly returning his gaze to Rotaxe. "Where are they?"

"I have them in a safe place." Rotaxe answered. "Don't worry; I haven't killed any of them. Not yet anyway. And no one has touched your woman, though she is a fine piece. Many of my men wanted to take her and feel her legs wrapped around them."

[What is this fool speaking of?] Carisia exclaimed in their shielded connection.

[He thinks Ulana is one of my wives and mates.] Andro spoke with some surprise.

[He must be stupid to think you would ever choose her as a mate!] Lu'ria hissed softly.

"How do I know they are unharmed?" Andro asked quickly.

Rotaxe grinned and motioned to Hemtar. "Show him." He ordered.

Hemtar lifted the small, portable holo disc and activated it in his oversized palm. It flared to life instantly and showed them an image of Ulana holding Torian in her arms while the other Senators were crowded around slightly to her right. His trained eye detected three Enverr in the background and one who was obviously holding the holo transmitter.

[Jomann... there are four in the room with Torian and the others.] Andro said.

[Understood.] Jomann answered. [We're moving. Almost to breach points.]

"Now you have seen them." Rotaxe spoke as he pushed away the portable holo disc with his hand and stepped closer to Androcles. "Now what do you have for me boy?"

"Six STRIKERS just like you asked, all with full payloads and avionics packages." Andro answered. "There are thirty Vanari females on each ship. The credits are dispersed between the ships. The computers, weapons and medical supplies as well."

"And just how did you convince the Vanari government to give you so many of their females boy?" Rotaxe asked.

Andro met his eyes with cold death in his azure orbs. "I didn't ask them." He spoke. "My people are more important to me than a species that hates us. Now bring my people here."

Rotaxe held up his hand. "Not so fast." He said. "My men will verify what you say."

Andro nodded his head. "As you wish. You may send one man per ship." He stated.

Rotaxe growled at him. "I make the rules here boy!" He snapped.

Andro shook his head. "If you want these things you will only send one man onto the individual ships to inspect them. My people will insure he sees what he needs to see. If that is not acceptable to you then we will turn around and leave."

"And what makes you think I will let you leave boy?" Rotaxe snarled.

"You have no choice." Andro told him.

Rotaxe was silent for a moment and then nodded his head. "Hemtar... check the boy's ship." He stated.

Hemtar nodded and moved around him quickly, making his way up to the ramp of the ship. His eyes grew slightly wider when he saw the scantily clad Vanari females on the seats, their hands obviously secured behind their backs and most of them looking drugged in some manner. He lifted his eyes when he saw the nearly white blond hair of Sehri descend from the cockpit and motion him forward. Like the other females beside the Prince, this Lycavorian female was very lush and exquisitely beautiful. He wondered briefly what could cause their contact to pay such an enormous amount of credits to have her kidnapped and taken from the boy Prince. They were risking a war to be sure. He watched as she tossed back the canvas cover of a large grouping of crates, his eyes growing even wider and all other thoughts leaving him when he saw the weapons and medical supplies. A single large computer was against the wall, and five large chests of Vanari credit stacks in five dozen denominations of a hundred.

"Everything is here and on the other STRIKERS." Sehri told him.

Hemtar gazed at her for a long moment. "So it is." He stated with an unnatural smile that Sehri did not understand. He turned quickly and looked at the Vanari females once more before moving to the edge of the ramp. He lifted the small COM device in his hand.

"It is here Rotaxe." He spoke.

"It is the same here." Another voice echoed from the next ship and then four more echoed their affirmative as well.

Rotaxe looked at Androcles as Hemtar made his way back to him. “Your woman must be a really good fuck for you to give all this to get her back.” He said with a toothy grin.

“My people?” Androcles asked once more.

“I have them in my compound.” Rotaxe spoke. “It is a short walk from here.”

“When I have them... your men may begin moving onto the ships.” Andro told him. “Not before.”

“You are giving us your transportation out of here.” Rotaxe spoke with a smile. “How do you intend to leave this moon? You will have no ship.”

Androcles grinned. “That’s not entirely true.” He said. “You don’t need the details but know that if you break your word, you and every living thing on this moon will be destroyed by an orbital bombardment. Keep your word and you will live. Break it and you will be dead within thirty seconds.”

Rotaxe’s eyes narrowed. “You are threatening me?” He growled.

Andro shook his head. “Just telling you how it will be.” He said.

Rotaxe glared at him for a few seconds longer and when Androcles didn’t back down from his gaze he looked away and motioned with his hand. “This way.”

Had Rotaxe of the Enverr people been more intelligent he would have killed Androcles and the others right there and taken the young woman. He was not that intelligent however and he blindly began to lead the wolf into the sheep’s den without even knowing what he was doing. He thought he had succeeded in getting everything he wanted and this had clouded his mind with illusions of grandeur. In another few minutes he would have the target of his contract since there were minimal guards among the ships and it would be a simple matter to subdue or kill any who fought his men. His spirits began to lift as he walked back towards his compound. Their ground shield could withstand any sustained orbital bombing and the boy Prince’s boost was for naught.

At least that is what he thought.

SPARTA’S WRATH IN ORBIT OF R26

-Bring Category 1 Port Ventral batteries one through twenty-three to bear on the Enverr compound- Armen ordered as he stood on the bridge of SPARTA’S WRATH. -When we have received the all clear from Androcles we will initiate a saturation barrage and destroy the compound-

“Powering port ventral batteries one through twenty-three.” The elven female called out from her weapons station.

Armen stood stoically and watched the bridge crew work. While he could have done these tasks far more quickly because he was tied directly into the ship, at Androcles’ request he had begun to allow the crew he now had to do the duties they had been assigned, and for him to begin to act more like a ship’s captain. If needed he could assume control of any of the ship’s systems almost instantaneously, but Armen now understood why Androcles had made this request. As with Avi, he was not looked at as a cyborg or advanced robot. He was the Captain of this ship and these men and women from nineteen different species were his crew. He was an individual, just as Avi had now become and Armen found himself becoming more and more accustomed to this situation.

While he could not process emotions, Armen was advanced enough to become quite comfortable in a situation. He knew the limitations of his entire crew, their lives, family and even how fast they could do their jobs. The bridge crew that manned First Watch while he was on the bridge was made up of eight elves, nine Lycavorians, three vampires and four Algolians. He did not have to second guess these men and women for they knew their jobs. He had been training with them for the last three months now.

-Lieutenant Molar begin preparations for Second Squadron of APOC drones to launch as soon as we fire our first volley. They are to target the Enverr Assault craft currently trying to hide their position on the far side of the moon in the gas rings-

“Like we wouldn’t see them there!” Someone called out.

“Powering Second Squadron and moving to launch tubes.” The Lycavorian replied as his hands moved across the three tactical screens laid out around him.

-Inform Medical Clinic Three to be prepared for any Vanari wounded and freed prisoners. They are the closest clinic to Landing Bay Four where the ships will be returning. Princess Eliani and her people will have them loaded and sent to us in the order of needed care. Serale Leonidas will coordinate from the clinic- Armen spoke. -Insure activity in this section of the ship is limited to necessary personnel until the operation is completed-

“Armen!” The elven COM officer barked. “Prince Andro has sent the signal! They are entering the compound!”

Armen nodded his head. -Very well. Then the party is about to begin. Let’s make sure we do not disappoint-

The bridge crew of SPARTA’S WRATH could only smile amongst themselves and know that they had the best job in the entire fleet. How could you find fault with serving on the most advanced warship within the Union Fleet, under the command of an android that actually acted more like a human being than a robot.

MOON R26 TEAM FOUR

It was ridiculously easy to breach the door, all Denali had to do was yank on it very hard with his pureblood wolf strength and the thick metal door gave way almost instantly. The building was only twenty meters from the door and the streets and allies were practically empty with everyone’s attention now on the audience room where he knew Andro and the others had entered seconds before. They were using the same version of the cut down P190 A4 that those with their father had, only these were the silenced version. Their ammunition had been chosen specifically for this mission to do maximum damage upon impact but not penetrate through the bodies. To that end the armorer on SPARTA’S WRATH, an older human gunsmith, had hand loaded each and every round with a tiny explosive charge. The round would explode on impact, maximizing damage in a ten degree spread and blowing a one inch wide hole in the target but not penetrating completely through the body of its target. It was a devastating round and would put a hurt on even the Enverr with their size.

Denali and Fedor led Lisisa and Arduri into the first floor of the building their weapons leading them. The layout was simple and completely open, more of a barracks style setup than anything else and just as their intelligence had told them, five Enverr occupied the first floor. The two closest to Denali and Fedor died first, the brothers firing five round bursts into their backs as they were sitting in the chairs and watching something on the monitor from six meters away as Lisisa and Arduri swept to the side of them. The two Durcunusaan troops immediately entered after them and broke directly to the right side while Lisisa and Arduri moved up the left. The two Enverr pitched forward without a sound, five massive wounds in each of their broad backs and explosive leaking blood on to the floor all around their inert bodies. They never knew what hit them.

Lisisa and Arduri moved shoulder to shoulder down the left side of the ground floor holding silenced KM14s. The Kinetic Magnums were loaded with the same explosive rounds as the silenced A4s. Each of their weapons was custom made to fit their individual hands. Since both of them were very petite, neither of them reaching past five foot three, their hands were not as large and the grips were custom made to absorb the recoil of the powerful handgun without robbing them of power. It really wouldn't have mattered anyway for both Lisisa and Arduri were superior marksmen. As they moved up the center of what appeared to be the bunk area they had a clear view of everything around them, their combined wolf senses encompassing all that there was around them.

They came upon the Enverr halfway across the expanse of the ground floor among what appeared to be a sleeping and recreational area. The first thing they saw was one large Enverr practically smothering a squirming and crying Vanari female on one of the bunks while his two buddies sat at a small table and were playing some sort of card game. Neither Lisisa nor Arduri were in a forgiving mood. The KM14s came up almost in the same thought and both of them squelched out fire and death. The heads of the two Enverr sitting at the table came up with enough time to register that they were not alone and see the flame from the barrels of both weapons and then their heads exploded like overripe melons as three rounds apiece blew apart what little brains they had all over the table and cards they were now done playing and knocked their bodies out of the two chairs.

The sound of the bodies of his fellow Enverr hitting the floor caused the third Enverr to turn his head from the Vanari female beneath him. It took four seconds for his addled brain to register that they were dead. Four seconds was an eternity for two trained women as Lisisa and Arduri Leonidas. As his head turned he saw the flash of both barrels and then felt the hammer like blows as three rounds punched into his upper chest, the explosive rounds doing maximum damage as well as tossing his body off the now stunned Vanari female. Lisisa blurred in motion without hesitating and came upon him as he hit the floor and rolled to his right in agonizing pain. He opened his mouth to scream out but never got the chance as Lisisa lifted her K14 and fired twice more directly into his mouth and blew his head apart.

Lisi! Denali's voice screamed in their heads as Arduri moved to the young woman's side, her eyes wide in disbelief. Duri!

We are fine Deni! Lisisa called back as she came up beside Arduri next to the woman. Three down here and we have one of the prisoners!

Fedor! Deni hissed as he turned to look at his brother. Secure the third floor with the others!

Prisoners? Fedor asked.

Nubou joa! Denali told him. We are sending a message this day and Andro will take the only two prisoners.

Fedor nodded his head. Done.

Duri... inject her quickly and then we need to move to the second floor! Deni ordered as he kicked away the weapons from the dead Enverr and under a far table just to be certain. Eli says the faster we act the better off we will be and they will be able to move more quickly!

Already on it! Arduri answered him as she looked at the Vanari female and held up the portable injector. She saw the woman's eyes go wide and she began to back away on the bed but Arduri took her hand.

"Listen to me." Arduri gasped. "I am Arduri Re Mydala! We are here to save you! To save all of you! This is a serum that will counteract the OSG drugs in your system! It will act quickly but I must inject you now!"

"A cure?" The young woman rasped out the question with wide eyes.

Arduri nodded her head. "Yes! And then we need to go upstairs and do the same for the others! How many are with you?"

The Vanari female scooted closer on the bunk. "There are thirty-nine of us in this building." She answered. "An equal number in the others! We must help them all!"

Arduri nodded her head as Lisisa knelt beside her and she pressed the injector to the young woman's neck. "We have other teams securing them as well." She stated.

"The Enverr will... their leader is a monster! He will not let you just take us." The young woman spoke.

Lisisa smiled and reached out to squeeze her hand. "He will not have a choice in the matter." She stated.

"You are... you are from the Protectorate?" The young woman asked her.

Lisisa smiled. "In a manner of speaking yes." She answered.

"How long have you been here?" Arduri asked her.

"Almost... almost a year."

"Many things have changed in that time." Arduri spoke.

The Vanari woman's eyes grew wide when Denali suddenly appeared from the side and knelt between them. "My beautiful wives and mates... time is wasting and we need to move now." He spoke while watching the door they had entered from far across the ground floor. "Bring her... we need to secure the second floor."

Deni began to move back toward the stairway that would take them upstairs and the young Vanari looked at Arduri. "He... he called you wives." She gasped.

Arduri smiled brilliantly, exposing her smaller, dual wolf fangs and willing the change to come upon her as the black ring encircled her green eyes. "Yes... he did." She answered and she began to help the woman to her feet. "Come. We need to get to the others."

Still somewhat shocked at what had just happen, the woman allowed Arduri and Lisisa to prop her body between them and begin to lead her across the ground floor towards the stairs.

TEAM TWO

Team Four secure!

Acknowledged! Andro's voice answered.

The call had gone out within Mindvoice from Denali's team and she knew the fight had begun.

Caliria had wanted to remain with Androcles on the ground but she knew where her skills were best used, and fighting was not one of them, at least not yet. Carisia and Lu'ria were far more deadly than any Cadre Commando she had ever known or seen and Caliria knew that as time passed she would become like them. They had already begun to train her alongside Sehri, Sadi and Ne'Veha and that would continue into the future she knew.

Caliria had covered their entrance into their target building with one of the Durcunusaan assigned to their team while Dorian, Sheva and Onera hit the Enverr on the bottom floor. Seeing how the three of them blurred across the room with such violent grace was amazing as they took down the three Enverr on the ground floor with precision and absolutely no mercy. As she and the Durcunusaan officer covered the entrance into the second floor, Dorian led Sheva and Onera and the other Durcunusaan up to the third floor where they found most of the remaining nine Enverr either sleeping or relaxing. Once more, none of them showed mercy or paused in their actions as they eliminated the threat in seconds.

Now Caliria! Dorian called out to her within Mindvoice. We are secure up here! Go!

Caliria didn't hesitate in the least and though her heart was racing, she triggered the door locks on the second floor and burst into the open second floor without doubt. The second floor looked much like a barracks with rows of bunk beds spread out on one side of the expansive floor, while the other side appeared to be some sort of lounging area for the Vanari prisoners to sit and rest. Many heads turned at the sound of the door opening, all but one of them Vanari and female. The lone Enverr soldier sat in the chair roughly five meters from the door, his duty to watch the Vanari females while they went about different tasks during the day. Caliria Leonidas to her credit did not pause in her actions. Her own dual wolf fangs burst forth, the black ring encircling her eyes and she lifted the K14 in a practiced motion.

Caliria let loose with four rounds even as she was jogging towards the Enverr and he began to rise. Two of the explosive tipped rounds impacted just above his abdomen and blew gaping wounds in his midsection. His face showed his surprise and the massive pain he felt until Caliria shifted her aim and sent two rounds into his oversized head. As his head exploded, his body flipped over from the force, thankfully shielding the view of his brain matter and bits of bone spraying the wall behind him from being seen by the majority of the Vanari females in the room. The Durcunusaan officer, a senior troop who had served within the Prince's unit for nearly a decade now, simply grinned. He would pass on to his fellow Durcunusaan and others that Caliria Leonidas was not to be trifled with for her aim was precise.

Caliria didn't wait for the Enverr's body to fall completely before she was turning to the Vanari females who were now all standing and watching her with wide eyes. Some of them held each other tightly for they did not know what was going on, only that Caliria was a fellow Vanari but also that she was very different.

"I am Caliria Leonidas...!" She hissed out the words. "...Daughter of Coren Re Mydala! We are here to take you all home!"

“Regent Re Mydala’s daughter...!” A voice called out. “Thank the Prophets!”

That was all that was needed to hear as they began to move towards her while Dorian and Sheva entered the second floor with Onera beside them.

“We have a serum to inject you with!” Caliria told them. “It will reverse the effects of the OSG drugs and release you! Who has been here the longest? I must treat them first!”

The Vanari females all pointed to half a dozen females who had not risen from the beds where they were resting.

“All of you... lift your sleeves and then gather whatever you can carry.” Caliria told them. “These men and women are my family and we will need to be ready to move!”

One Vanari female looked at Dorian standing with Sheva and Onera as they began to pull out their injectors. “It is true then?” she gasped aloud causing Caliria to look at her.

“What?” Caliria asked.

“You... you are a Princess of the Lycavorian people now!” The young woman spoke as Caliria lifted the injector and gently depressed it against her neck.

Caliria smiled brightly as she nodded. “Yes it’s true.”

“You are... you are taking us home?” Another asked.

Caliria nodded her head. “Yes we are.” She answered “All of you! Sheva! Onera! Split up and go among them! Insure you inject them in their neck. It will speed the flow of the counter agent more quickly and allow them to move when Andro calls for us!”

Dorian looked at the two Durcunusaan officers and nodded his head.

Team Two is secure! He announced in Mindvoice. I say again we are secure! Beginning to treat the prisoners now!

Understood. Dorian recognized Andro’s voice as he acknowledged his call.

TEAM FIVE

Team Three secure! Beginning injections now! No casualties! Deion recognized Kalis’s voice in Mindvoice as he moved along the side of the building. Denali and Dorian had already reported in and within seconds Deion heard Jomann’s calm voice echo Kalis.

Team One secure! Fourteen hostiles down. Beginning injections now!

Understood. Andro answered.

They had the furthest distance to cross, but only one floor to deal with. Intelligence stated that the Enverr Command and Control facility had a standing complement of eight inside that monitored the electronic sensors that did work, as well as all of the compound’s defensive systems. Deion and Murano would conduct the initial breach into the building, followed by the Lycanari Commandos and then Nara with Mari and Eirene. Though only weeks shy of his eighteenth birthday, Deion Leonidas, as with most Lycavorian males, had seen more action than many people realized. Though he and Nara did not officially finish their Agoge, it would be stated in their official personnel jackets that their training was finished on Operational Duty with their brother. Operational Duty with the Crown Prince was neither easy nor casual. The Crown Prince of the Union did nothing second rate, just like his father, and their Operational Duty was worth far more than normal training.

Deion only needed to glance at Murano when he reached the door. Murano nodded as he held the A4 in his hands. It had been many years since he had held a weapon like this but as with most things, you never forgot. Deion stepped in front of the door and drove his Shakur fighting knife into the locking mechanism of the metal door. The traditional Wood Elf fighting knife was still widely used among Lycavorian forces across the Union. The size and balance of the hand crafted weapons was nearly perfect, and when forged from pure Dragon Armor, in the hands of a powerful person, the blade could cut through practically anything. The locking mechanism sizzled and sparked quietly as Deion twisted the blade and then sliced outward, severing the wiring controlling the door locks with almost no sound. Murano touched his shoulder instantly and Deion lifted his A4 and slammed into the door with his shoulder and his full weight behind him.

Deion and Murano broke to the left upon entering the large command and control center, the three Lycanari commandos right on their heels and breaking to the right. None of them hesitated in their actions. There were eleven Enverr in the control room and all of them turned at the sound of the door breaking inward. None of them were prepared for such an event happening and their weapons were either out of reach or holstered. The room was large, but with the A4s it did not matter. The customary spitting sound of the weapons at high velocity filled their ears as Deion, Murano and the five Lycanari Commandos fired in short, controlled bursts with unerring accuracy. The heads and chests of the Enverr soldiers in the command center were easy targets, and the explosive tipped rounds did all the work for them. All of the Enverr fell within the space of six seconds with massive wounds in their bodies and venting blood at a mortal rate. Seven of them died instantly from head shots while the remaining four were dead within another ten seconds as the special operations rounds made certain there was no saving them from the devastating damage.

“Clear!” Three Lycanari voices echoed within milliseconds of one another as the two females and one male moved quickly to insure their targets were dead.

“Clear!” Deion spat half a second after that as he stepped over the Enverr who seemed to be the one in charge.

Murano lowered the barrel of his A4 and turned just as Nara led Mari and Eirene into the command center. The moment he saw his niece Murano began to relax. When her bright blue/green eyes fell on him and she smiled Murano nodded his head. “Clear here!” He called out.

It was then that the Pralor Praetorian Murano heard the word he never imagined himself hearing in his lifetime because of who and what he was. It was a word that would forever alter his life going forward from this day and thrust him into a position of some importance in the most influential family now residing within several different known quadrants of space. It was a word that would also allow the last vestiges of a troubled man, one who blamed himself for events that were out of his control, to fall by the wayside. A word that would allow him to grasp onto the one thing that had held his heart from the first moment he had seen her.

Murano was looking at her as Mari entered right behind Nara, Eirene on her hip. He was always looking for her to insure she was safe and it made Mari love him even more. As everyone began to echo clear she saw him turn to see her before he also spoke the word aloud. She watched as he began to let his A4 drop from the ready position and that is when the side door behind and to Murano’s right opened with a creaking sound that was deafening in the now silent room.

“Father!” Mari screamed looking directly at him with those stunning blue/green eyes. “Father... no!”

Murano froze in his spot when he saw and heard Mari utter those words looking directly at him, his blue eyes going wider than they had ever gone before in his life. His brain tried to process everything and he could not react fast enough as he now sensed the Enverr come out of the small closet and bringing his rifle to bear on the back of his head. Murano knew he would never be able to turn in time and he looked up at Mari so that he could see her beautiful face one last time.

It all happened as if it was taking place in slow motion. It was something he would always remember for it announced most spectacularly what Mari was and just how tightly she was now tied to the descendants of the man he had honored most in his life outside of his own father. Deion Leonidas sensed it instantly within their private connection, everything Mari saw and everything that was flashing through her mind. Since the first time they had made love and shared their minds with each other they held nothing back from one another. It had stunned them at first how deeply their connection went, and not just physically. They seemed to know exactly what the other liked and did not like in and out of their bed. Though Deion knew they were not anomes by the Lycavorian definition of the term, that could not be because Mari was not wolf, yet they were soulmates in every other sense of the word. Even though she was not yet fully wolf, Mari had embraced the changes that were happening within her completely and this allowed her to act almost without thought. Deion did not pause in his action and he used every bit of his strength and speed as a pureblood wolf to twist his body and leap towards Murano’s legs. He saw what Mari intended and acted on that intent, knowing his beautiful wife and mate would not miss and the fact that he would not allow her father to die this day or any other if it was within his power to stop.

Murano saw Mari lift her hands after she shouted and his own eyes went wider still when he saw those hands flare with bright, bluish/white Etheric power and form two glowing Etheric diamonds. Murano felt his legs swept out from under him even as Mari launched those two diamonds directly at him. He felt himself fall onto the powerful body of Deion Leonidas just as those two diamonds sizzled over the top of where his head had been only milliseconds before. One of those diamonds struck the Enverr just above his jaw and punched clean through his face and head, effectively ventilating his large brain cavity all over the wall behind him. The second Etheric diamond struck just below his sternum and punched a fist size hole into his upper body that erupted out his back, taking most of his internal organs with it. The weapon in his hands was useless the moment the Etheric diamond had blown open his head, but his hands and arms still held the weapon in a firing position for several long seconds until the fact that he was now dead caught up with the rest of his body. Deion was rolling away, pulling Murano with him as the Enverr began to fall and struck the floor hard, his weapon clattering across the floor useless to him now.

Deion stopped their roll, coming up in a squatting position and he felt Andro reach for him and him alone.

[Deo! What is wrong?] His older brother barked and Deion smiled for he felt Andro's aura flow to him through the Etheric realm.

[We're fine!] Deion reported quickly. [Command Center is secure. I will have Eirene and Mari online in three minutes!]

[What happened ferveron?] Andro asked more calmly now, sensing Deion's resonance easily.

[Well... ah... Murano just found out what all of us have known since he and Mari arrived.] Deion told him.

[Sibfla!] Andro hissed. [Their timing sucks!]

[I have it ferveron. Mari couldn't help it... she...] Deion told him. [Trust me.]

[Understood. You are clear then?] Andro asked him.

[Give me three minutes and these igords will have no support from their defensive systems and you can act.] Deion told him.

[I'll give you four minutes. We are just entering this fool's audience chamber.] Andro told him.

Deion nodded his head but did not answer. He looked at Eirene and Nara. "Eirene get on their computers!" He ordered and then turned to look at the Lycanari Commando. "Sergeant, you and your people cover the entrance. Anything tries to enter, let them. Then kill them."

The female Lycanari nodded her head. "Done!" She spoke motioning to her two teammates.

Deion turned back as Murano scrambled to his feet staring at Mari in awe. Mari, for her part, was staring at her hands not really believing what she had just done. Murano moved closer to her slowly.

"Mari...?" He spoke softly and watched as her eyes came up to meet his.

"Father!" Mari gasped and threw her arms around his waist and buried her face in his chest.

Murano was taken aback and really didn't know what to do, but as her slim arms closed around his waist, he felt her Etheric resonance open up to him in a way that it never had before. He gasped himself when he felt the power within her, and the resonance of Deion Leonidas so deeply embedded in her psyche. He felt so many things pouring forth from her; foremost in his mind however was that her Etheric resonance echoed of him. It didn't just echo, it boomed of him and of... Tobia!

Tobia!

There was no mistaking what he felt within her and himself. Mari was his daughter. She was of his blood and his Etheric imprint; his and Tobia. She had lowered all of the shields she had held in place so tightly for so long and Murano could not help but bask in the love her resonance projected for him and for Tobia. He gripped her arms and slowly pried her away from him and he stared at her. She had small tears in her eyes as she met his gaze and she smiled brilliantly.

"Mari... I..." He stammered.

Deion stepped up to them. "I am truly sorry but we don't have time for this." He stated evenly.

Mari quickly wiped the tears from her eyes and nodded her head reaching for the P9 that was secured to the small of her back. "Yes." She spoke as she took a deep breath. She looked at Murano and smiled once more. "We will talk papa." She told him. "We will talk soon."

Murano watched her stunned as she reached out and ran her hand down Deion's exposed cheek before darting towards one of the computer stations. The poise with which she had just acted was incredible. Deion looked at Murano. "Sir... are you with me?" He asked.

Murano met his eyes. "You knew?" He asked in disbelief.

Deion nodded his head. "I won't lie to you Murano. We have known ever since the two of you arrived with us. It's in your scents."

Murano's eyes narrowed. "You did not think to tell me!" He asked him harshly. "Your brother did not think to tell me?"

Deion didn't let his reaction faze him and he shook his head. "It was not our place to tell you." He spoke. "And now is not the time to discuss this either. When we return to the ship you can yell at us all you like. It won't do any good, but if it makes you feel better, then you can yell at us."

Murano looked down and his hands tightened on the A4 as it dangled from the quick release straps. "I will have words with you and your brother when we return Deion Leonidas! And then I will have words with your father!"

Deion nodded his head. "Fair enough."

"I'm in!" Eirene called out from the computer station she sat at.

Deion turned and moved over behind her chair. "Shut down all of their internal sensors and any defensive systems arande." He told her. "Can you make it appear as if they are still active?"

Eirene nodded as her hands flew over the computer console. "I'm rerouting control from local stations to the main hub here." She stated. "All the systems will look as if they are still powered, but will not activate unless a series of fractal codes is used."

"You are locking them out with a Rotating Variable Encryption Algorithm?" Deion asked.

Eirene nodded her head. "Yes."

Deion looked up. "Excellent arande! Excellent! Mari?"

"Their encryption was childish." Mari replied instantly. "I'm downloading everything to my P9 now."

"How long?" Deion asked.

"Six minutes." Mari answered.

Deion turned and looked at Murano who nodded his head, his eyes still on the back of Mari's head where she sat. "That is more than enough time for us to extract back the way we came before Androcles brings the existence of this place to an end."

Androcles let his eyes wander around the inside of Rotaxe's audience chamber. It was a large, circular room with what appeared to be bleachers of some sort along one side of the chamber. On the other side was the massive transmission monitor and a dozen of the more senior Enverr within his clan apparently. All of them had Vanari females beside them wearing restraining collars, exceptionally skimpy clothes that barely covered their bodies and in some cases even light weight chains. Many of them appeared to be drugged as they were docile and their eyes distant. He felt Carisia and Lu'ria squeeze his hands in anger when they saw this and he sent a soothing pulse of his aura through the Etheric realm so that they knew this would not continue for very long.

Andro stopped walking when Rotaxe began moving for the large throne like chair against the wall. There were perhaps thirty Enverr in the audience chamber now, and that did not include the ones who were sitting along the sides. All of them were armed in some fashion and Rotaxe's guards were looking at him with hate in their eyes and lust for Carisia and Lu'ria. He could also smell their fear Andro took note. Rotaxe may not have been intelligent enough to act accordingly, but there were a few in the chamber who were being extra cautious.

Andro looked at Rotaxe as he settled to the chair. "My people." He stated. "Where are they?"

"In due time boy." Rotaxe spoke now. "We have other things to discuss."

Andro shook his head quickly. "I have brought you everything you required to obtain their release. I want them brought here now as you agreed so that we can leave this place."

Rotaxe shook his head. "I want more." Rotaxe spoke. "Spare parts and extra weapons for the ships. At least a dozen of these Hadarian Healers in order to treat my clan and run those wonderful computers you brought me. And I want the formula for the armor on those ships." He said leaning forward. "What do you call it...? Dragon Armor. I know it cannot be taken from ships already armored with it, so you will give it to me so that I can put it on my other ships."

Carisia turned her head quickly and looked up at Andro. [How does he know that?] She gasped.

[Andro... the forging process for our Dragon Armor is known only to the MENKLA Manufacturing Company.] Sadi's voice filled their minds from the PREMONITION in orbit. [No one who does not work in their Special Projects Division knows how it is done. How could he know this?]

[The file General Tarnei had on this individual spoke of deep contacts with the OSG.] Caliria joined in now. [They have been embedded on Earth for at least a decade.]

[And we know that they have proven ties to the Kavalians Andro.] Ne'Veha chimed in.

[And Laustinous worked for the Kavalians and we're pretty sure he has ties to Icho as well.] Lu'ria added.

[Laustinous would not have had access to what is entailed in the entire forging process Mistress.] Sadi spoke evenly. [Even pilots are not told.]

[No we are not.] Ne'Veha added.

[This is bad I take it?] Sehri asked.

[I believe then ladies that we are of the consensus that he is better informed than we first thought.]

Andro spoke. To most the rush of voices within the Etheric connection would have been overwhelming, even those who were powerful Tier Six Etheric users, but for Andro and the women of his life it was the most natural thing in the world. As with his father and mothers and a few dozen others, they were bound so tightly together that it was actually a gift for them.

[Carians yes!] Sadi exclaimed.

[Duangai... have Commander Entia and our people remove the Enverr blight standing by to take possession of the Vanari females.] Andro spoke to Sehri. [It's time we brought this little operation to an end.]

Andro shifted his Etheric connection. Cowen?

I am here Andro. We have succeeded and are standing by.

Cowen... take Kalis and Daio and move to the building where they are keeping Torian and the others. Leave Sherice and Ridor in charge of the others. Andro told him. I will buy you several minutes but wait for my signal to act.

What will that be? Cowen asked.

Andro chuckled in their connection. You will know it my friend.

[Lu'ria and I are ready.] Carisia spoke up.

"Are you paying attention to me boy?" Rotaxe barked.

"These are not the terms I agreed to." Andro spoke looking at Rotaxe.

The Enverr shrugged his shoulders. "I am changing the terms." He stated. "And to insure that you comply with these terms and don't try to back out on our deal, you will leave your red haired sister here to supervise the other Hadarian bitches while they treat my people."

"And if I don't agree to these new terms?" Androcles asked.

"You will agree." Rotaxe said. "You want your woman and the others back don't you? Or should I just tell my men to start using your woman as a fuck toy? They have wanted to stick it in all her holes ever since we captured her. Letting that happen is against the code of your people isn't it?"

"You seem to think that you are well versed in what I will do and not do." Androcles told him. "Indulge me for a moment. Your contacts with the OSG seem to run very deep if you have all of this information."

Rotaxe laughed. "Who said anything about the OSG boy?" He snapped. "They are just one group that I work with! I am not as stupid as some of the other Enverr clan leaders. I like to keep all of my options open."

Andro nodded his head. "So it seems." He said softly. "So it seems."

"I hold the entire deck of cards boy!" Rotaxe stated. "I have your woman, and now I have your ships and your weapons. I have three times the number of troops here and you have no choice but to agree if you want to leave here alive."

"What if I do not agree to these new terms?" Andro asked.

Rotaxe grinned savagely and rose to his feet. He crossed the small distance between them until he was standing in front of Androcles. "Well then boy... I will just kill you and take what I want. I will personally fuck all of your women before I give them to my men. Or did you think I didn't know the dark skinned elf and the vampire bitch beside you are not your wives as well?" He leaned closer. "Or the little blond bitch at the airfield. I understand she is Rothryn. I have never fucked a Rothryn woman before."

Andro's nose wrinkled somewhat at the foul stench of his breath but he didn't draw away. "You should probably know something first." Andro told him.

"There's nothing you can tell me that I don't know already boy!" Rotaxe stated. "I know all about you and your vaunted reputation. I'm more than prepared."

Andro met his eyes. "Really...?" He asked. "Then I'm sure that you know the woman you are holding... Senator Ulana... she isn't my wife and mate."

Rotaxe's eyes narrowed slightly. "You must take me for a fool boy!" He snarled.

Andro shook his head slowly. "A fool... no, but you are one of the most incredibly stupid motherfuckers I have ever had the displeasure of smelling. And you stink something fierce my friend."

Rotaxe blustered quickly and puffed out his chest in anger which really had no effect on Androcles. "What did you just say boy?" He growled.

"I recall a phrase from ancient Earth history that my father and my mother Anja liked to use on occasion as my brothers and sisters and I were growing." Androcles told him calmly. "It explains your situation quite well at the moment."

"And what is that?" Rotaxe demanded.

Androcles met his hard gaze with one of his own, his azure blue eyes becoming solid, black ringed emotionless orbs as Andro allowed the wolf within him to come out.

"You my friend... you are Fubar." Andro spat just before he moved. Marux! Now! All teams! Now! Andro screamed out within Mindvoice.

MARUX CIRCLING THE AIRFIELD

Androcles was right of course Marux knew.

Marux could feel Sehri's bright resonance from the airfield below him and it called to him more powerfully than anything he had ever felt with that monster Dante. It echoed within him like a drumbeat, pounding in his chest rhythmically, soothing him in a way he had never experienced before. She was far more powerful than Dante ever was, even before that monster took control of him. Marux had known Xaxon had taken control of Dante but there had been nothing he could do but sit by and let it happen. When Xaxon convinced Dante to banish him, Marux had been terrified at first. The planet they had sent him to was barren and nearly without any life at all. It had taken all his skills just to stay alive for those days until Elynth and Anthar had found him. Initially he thought they were there to kill him, but he quickly found out just how wrong he was. Elynth's calm and soothing demeanor as a Talon Guardian quickly put him at ease, for his instincts alone screamed at him to obey the Talon Guardian at all costs. He thought returning here would be a mistake, that perhaps they should have just killed him on that planet.

That was until he had arrived on their ship and felt her. She was like a beacon of brilliant light on a savage and dark night. He kept his shields clamped down very tightly around himself, not really believing that it could possibly be happening to him, but the moment Androcles had stood before him he had known. Marux should have figured it out sooner, for Androcles was a Talon Guardian and he would have sensed this right away. Marux did not know if Androcles struggled with this knowledge at first, knowing that Sehri was one of the six who he worshiped more than life itself, but if he did he never showed it in his actions with Marux. If anything it seemed to drive him to spend more time with Marux. Working with either Elynth or Androcles was enlightening for Marux. He had learned everything they had taught him at SODRAG, even excelled at it to some extent, but until Dante's dark influence was gone from him forever, Marux had never embraced that schooling. Marux had rededicated his life, focusing on who he was at his core, and not who Dante had expected him to be. While Marux would always carry darkness within him because of what Dante and he had shared, now he could control it and focus it and not let it control him as Dante had done.

Androcles was right about Sehri. They were meant to be together by whatever powers decided such things, but she was not quite ready yet. She had yet to master the nuances of what her power allowed her to do. Once she had mastered this, then she would be ready to bond with him and be one. When it came to feeling others within the Etheric realm she was the weakest link of Andro's wives and mates, but she was gaining power and knowledge daily and it would not be long before she was truly ready. When that time came Marux knew that it would be the pinnacle of his life. The defining moment that would lay his path before him. A path he would walk proudly. Until that time Marux would protect her viciously from all enemies or those who would do her harm. Marux did not really understand why Androcles was different from so many others. He knew of course that he carried Darastrixi blood within him and therefore this could account for why Marux and other dragons felt such an affinity for him, but the wisdom Androcles carried within him was the wisdom of many lifetimes. He had sat with Elynth and Anthar and Jeth and the others on many occasions since joining them and now he knew the entire history of the Leonidas family and the first born son of the King. Androcles had spared him for a reason Marux decided and that reason he also now knew was Sehri. That he would trust him after what had taken place was all Marux needed to know. Marux knew this was where he belonged and he would prove that to everyone beginning this day. In the future he would go to Andro's sister and beg her forgiveness for being part of that past. A past that was no longer his.

As he circled among the thin clouds, lazily riding the thermal currents to stay within the cloud cover Marux waited patiently. His keen dragon eyes could see the twenty-two Enverr that had moved close to the side of the airfield. They were there for the purpose of taking from him the only hope for his future; a future that could hold so much promise and happiness.

Marux! Now! All teams! Now!

Andro's words were like a release as they boomed within the Etheric realm. A release from the shame and the pain he had endured in his life up until now.

Marux would step through that door now. And he would do so in spectacular fashion. He dipped his wing and dove for the ground with a single minded purpose.

AIRFIELD

Commander Entia had experienced many things in her life up until now. She was among the new breed of Cadre Commando that were coming up in the ranks. Those that called out to fight the OSG at every turn whenever they could. She had jumped at the chance to protect Caliria Re Mydala when asked by her father. Caliria had become a very public figure to those Vanari, young and old alike that did not like how their people allowed the OSG to do what they did. Even before she had become a Crown Princess to a Lycavorian Prince, Caliria Re Mydala had been a polarizing voice. Knowing what she did now, Entia had no qualms about accepting this mission the moment Androcles approached her on it. It was easy enough for her to rally almost a hundred Vanari Cadre Commandos who felt the same and were ready to be part of this historic day. They had been told what was going to happen across the entire Quadrant when they had gotten underway and to a person, not one of the Vanari females Commandos among the ranks looked unhappy in any way. That it was Lycavorians and Lycanari that were leading these charges was all the more important for it showed them that the Vanari were not alone. They had never been alone. Only their elected leaders had held them back from having what the Lycanari had.

Entia had been waiting patiently for the signal from Normya Leonidas. The Enverr had left the ships and the ramps had been raised once more in order to wait for the final word from Androcles that they had their people and the prisoners. It also insured the Enverr who were on the airfield did not know what was happening within the ships. The instant the ramps had come back up all of her people and begun pulling their gear from under the benches on the STRIKER. Within five minutes all of them were prepared to go into combat. The moment Normya stepped from the cockpit and motioned to her, Entia went to work. Entia signaled to the two Cadres who had taken up residence by the ramp entrance and nodded her head. All twenty-six of the Cadre Commandos took up position and got ready. The Enverr were in for a very big surprise when the ramp finally came down. They were going to discover just how lethal a pissed off Vanari could be.

Entia's hands tightened on her weapon, all of them now carrying the chopped down version of the Lycavorian P190 A4. The weapons were loaded with the same ammunition as the teams now in control of every Vanari prisoner within the Enverr compound. The tenseness was a palpable thing as the ramp slowly began to open once more. The groups of Enverr waiting outside the STRIKERS began to rise to their feet as they had not received word from Rotaxe that they should take possession of the ships yet. The ramps should not be coming down, yet they were. Not really knowing what to make of it, none of the Enverr reached for their weapons in their confused state and this was all the opening the Vanari needed.

A single group of five Vanari Commandos burst from the interior of each STRIKER, their A4s spitting death with unerring accuracy and a large amount of hate. Enverr soldiers began to dance across the hard packed dirt as their bodies were on the receiving end of the explosive tipped rounds and the wounds they suffered were instantly fatal. Entia followed her team down the ramp at a jog, her green eyes sweeping over the now dead groups of Enverr.

“Finish them!” She barked into the implant she now wore under the skin of her jaw. She needn’t have given the order for she saw her people already moving among the dead Enverr and pumping killing shots into their heads to insure they were in fact dead.

“Realia!” Entia barked out watching as the head of the Vanari female closest to the road looked over to her. “Take your team and secure the approach! Kill any Enverr that you find!” Entia saw the young Commando nod her head and then turn to motion to her full team of twenty Commandos. Seconds later they were sprinting off into the distance.

“Section Two!” Entia ordered as she turned. “Put one each in the top turrets! Weapons free!” She ordered as she saw Sehri moving down the ramp towards her quickly. “Establish defensive positions around the ships!”

Sehri finished sprinting up to her and took her hand. “Denali and his team are bringing the first two groups of Vanari back through the timber to the east!” She hissed. “We need to be...”

The deep throated roar spun all of them around to the north of the airfield and they saw a massive burst of flame and the unmistakable roar of a dragon and then the screams of dying Enverr.

“Normya!” Sehri screamed.

“I don’t know!” Normya barked back on her COM. “There weren’t supposed to be any dragons to our north! I’m calling Jeth and Tharua to investigate!”

“That is a dragon that is fighting!” Sehri barked out. “There must be Enverr to our north!”

Entia tapped her jaw implant. “Section Four! Reorient your direction to the north! You hear the fighting! Make sure no Enverr come out of the timber to the north.”

“Sehri!” Normya bellowed from the cockpit. “Jeth and Tharua are coming down!”

Sehri Leonidas nodded her head, feeling the blood pounding in her veins, her fangs and eyes fully changed now. It felt amazing to her at this moment, so invigorating and full of life. The pureness of Andro’s blood had accelerated the process within her so that she could change to her wolf form at will. She felt so alive and empowered when in her wolf form and it was divine to say the least. The potency of the virus in Andro’s blood increased her own wolf blood to proportions not seen in any Rothryn in history. Sehri Leonidas now had wolf blood that was almost as pure as Sadi. Rothryn was just a name to Sehri now. They were Lycavorians by anyone’s definition and she intended to insure that all of their people knew what they could discover in the future.

At the moment Sehri felt a powerful surge of emotion through her that wasn’t coming from Androcles or any of the women she loved so completely. It was something else entirely and it was swarming through her senses as the resonance of a powerful mind swept around her defensively; a mind intent on keeping her safe and insuring that no harm came to her. This shocked Sehri to some extent as she had only ever felt such a thing from Androcles. It was very powerful but it held a different kind of emotion than Andro’s love in it. It was almost as if it was a sisterly love that swept up within her. Normya’s voice brought her out of her thoughts.

“Sehri! Deni is three minutes out!” She exclaimed. “They have no pursuit but Denali says be prepared to erect a shield around the airfield!”

Sehri nodded her head and looked around quickly until she spotted where she wanted to go. She sprinted to a point roughly in the center of the six STRIKERS, and came to a halt as she looked around. Sehri Leonidas was powerful, she knew this, but she also knew that Andro and Sadi and even Ne’Veha were stronger than her right now. She doubted she could ever match Sadi in power or will, but she would certainly insure that she reached the pinnacle of her power and abilities by training every day with those she so loved. They had told her to never hesitate and reach for them if ever she needed their strength and determination. Sehri did so this very moment without hesitation or doubt and felt their love and warmth fill her as they all reached for her without question.

Sehri slapped her palms together hard and closed her eyes just as the bluish white Etheric bubble formed around her hands and then extended down her arms very quickly. She had been practicing as much as she was able with Androcles, learning to control and direct her shielding power and that was now paying off. He had told her that while the virus within him did not carry the Praetorian gene of his grandfather, it carried the blood that gene had altered to some degree and this is what allowed him to pass added skills and power to his wives and mates. It was the same for his father and mothers and now it allowed Sadi to do what she was able to do and it would permit her to better control her unique and wonderful gift. It came much easier now with the practicing she had been doing as she warped the Etheric shield outward into an even larger bubble that first engulfed her, then the STRIKER next to her, followed quickly by the other STRIKERS and then the entire airfield. At its peak the shield was thirty meters high and extended for two hundred meters all around. This would be the largest shield she had ever projected, but so far there was very little strain as she pushed it outward enough that it provided a barrier no Enverr would be able to pass through as long as she maintained her concentration.

“By the Prophets!” Commander Entia gasped aloud as she saw it, her eyes encompassing the area around them.

It was quite the sight as Entia looked up and all around at the bluish white barrier that now protected her and her troops. A normal ground shield would have done the same thing but she learned that a normal shield would not have prevented the Enverr from entering the shielded area. Sehri’s Etheric shield would do just that.

“Commander!” The shouted voice got her attention.

Entia turned quickly and her green eyes went wide as she saw the first group of female Vanari prisoners beginning to appear from the timber to the west led by Denali Leonidas and his Vanari wife and mate Arduri Leonidas. Their group had been closest to the area given where their target building was within the Enverr compound and Denali had wasted no time it seemed in getting them out.

“Go! Go!” Entia shouted out as Denali stepped right up to the Etheric shield and reached out his hand to touch it.

Seconds later, with his own Etheric resonance mingling with the shield and providing even more power and control for Sehri, an entire section of the shield dropped to allow access to him and the Vanari females with him. By now Lisisa was also free of the timber helping several Vanari along and then Fedor Leonidas was free of the timber carrying one Vanari in his arms while another clung to his combat harness. More were behind him helping one another as they left the timber and saw what was waiting for them. Entia could feel the tears rolling down her cheeks even as she sprinted towards them. This was really happening she determined. This was really happening and she only wished that her people could see this. She had no idea what was happening across the quadrant, but she would soon see for herself.

The Enverr who led this small twenty-two member team was third in command behind Rotaxe. They had been instructed to take the Rothryn female from the airfield the moment he sent the signal to them. His instructions had been clear, take the blond haired Rothryn female and kill any who got in their way.

The Enverr Goulán and his men would never get the chance to do anything like that.

Glimmering golden armor and dark green scales came plummeting through the jungle like canopy above them with a vicious tooth filled maw of teeth leading the way and before anyone knew what was happening, Marux’s three and a half metric tons of weight had landed upon three of his men and instantly crushed the life from them with barely a pause. With a roar of defiance and anger at what these men were attempting to do to the one who would be his salvation, Marux held nothing back. His right wing whipped forward almost without thought the moment his talons touched the ground and the dragon armor encased front ridge of his wing impacted two Enverr who were closest to him with the velocity of a gunshot. Their large bodies lifted into the air and rocketed through the thick tangle of trees and vegetation, but not before every bone in their upper bodies was instantly and forever crushed.

Marux spun nimbly around on his powerful hind legs, almost as if he was doing a dragon dance and his right front foreleg slashed out next and his Firespitter talons gauged flesh from two other Enverr, carving six inch long furrows across the Enverr's chests and abdomens and their screams of agony echoing in the air all around them as their internal organs began to splash wetly on the ground before them.

Goulan was screaming for his men to shoot the terrible beast that had appeared within their midst and as they got their weapons up and began to fire, their eyes filled with even more fear. Marux's glimmering Etheric shield became peppered with the projectile rounds that bounced harmlessly off into the timber all around him. A group of four Enverr lowered their weapons just as Marux turned to face them and opened his muzzle. A stream of three thousand degree fire erupted from his maw and engulfed the Enverr in a fiery cloud as the ten meter long stream of flame reached for them and incinerated their bodies almost instantly. None of them had time to even scream before their lungs were seared shut and their bodies were reduced to near ashen piles of smoking flesh and what remained of their bones.

That is when the Enverr broke and began to run in all directions.

Androcles' instructions to him were clear. None of these monsters were allowed to survive and Marux instantly calculated the directions the remaining two groups of Enverr moved. He smashed through the thin trees around him chasing Goulan and his group of seven first. They had unwittingly headed towards the airfield in terror and Marux had no intention of allowing them near his precious Sehri.

There was something to be said for the sight of a three and a half ton dragon encased in armor smashing through small trees and bushes as he chased you. Marux was terror incarnate. All that he had learned while at SODRAG now came rushing back to him in this moment. All of the training about close quarters combat that Dante had ignored but Marux remembered filled his head now; terrain and direction, the feel of the earth beneath you and the awareness to sense the breeze across your scales and know what direction the wind was blowing. Marux felt truly alive at this very moment. The knowledge of what the future could hold for him made him draw upon all of his willpower and skills. As he sprinted forward he cut loose with a searing stream of flame off to the left. It sliced through the thick foliage as if it wasn't there and engulfed four of the Enverr who had split from Goulan. They died in the same fashion as their comrades as Marux dismissed them and increased his speed as much as he was able. He had long legs and a powerful body and he quickly closed the gap between himself and the Enverr who were running for their lives.

At the last moment before they would have broken onto the airfield Marux leaped forward with a powerful surge from his hind legs. A single flap of his immense wings carried him over the top of the remaining four including Goulan and he landed perfectly ten meters in front of them. His armor encased head whipped around and he snatched up three of the Enverr within the grips of his Etheric power and smashed them back into the hard ground with horrific force. Goulan skidded to a stop as his men impacted the ground in front of him and he heard the gruesome sound of their bones snapping and breaking before they lay still. Goulan looked up into the terrible maw of the beast before him, his eyes wide in fright and panic. They darted left and right trying to see if there was a way out for him but finding none. He turned his head back to Marux and saw those savage teeth barred under the glimmering metal helmet that adorned the top of his head and extended down his long, thick neck. Goulan had all of three full seconds to contemplate what he had done in his miserable life before Marux's muzzle snapped forward with lightning like speed and his jaws clamped shut on Goulan with a sickening crunch.

Goulan's muffled screams were only heard for half a second before Marux's jaws bit down and severed the Enverr's body in half. The lower half fell away almost immediately and Marux turned his head to spit out Goulan's upper body. He heaved several times and then spit twice more to get the foul taste of the Enverr out of his mouth before turning back to make sure he was dead. He needn't have bothered for Goulan's eyes were open in death, frozen in terrible pain at the moment when Marux bit him in half.

Marux! Jeth's voice thundered in his head and Marux whirled around to see Jeth's massive body settle to the ground along the path he had smashed through the timber. Tharua settled beside her beloved mate and they both looked at him.

The others! Marux barked out.

We caught them from above. Tharua told him as she moved closer. Rest easy Marux.

I was... I needed to protect Sehri. Marux muttered aloud. Androcles told me that was my mission! Protect Sehri at all costs.

Tharua looked back at Jeth with wide eyes. She watched as her mate maneuvered his massive body nimbly up to Marux who did not shy away from his enormous size. Jeth lowered his armored head to stare at Marux. Andro told you to do this? He asked.

Marux met Jeth's gaze without fear. He no longer had to fear those he was among. She is... she is to be my Bonded One.

Tharua moved up beside him now. Sehri? She gasped.

Marux nodded his head once more. Androcles felt it. I have known since... I have felt her since I returned with your sister. He told Jeth. I will allow no harm to come to her Jeth! Not now! Not ever!

In a move of surprising grace for a dragon of his immense size, Jeth moved even closer to Marux and butted him gently in the side with his huge head. Be at peace my dragon brother Marux. Jeth spoke. You have done well this day! You have done very well!

Tharua looked back down the path that Marux had carved through the timber and shook her own head slightly. I'd say he just took out a large section of timber and a whole bunch of bad guys.

Jeth turned to look where Tharua's eyes were lingering. His own eyes grew slightly wider at what he saw and he chuckled softly. I may have to amend my earlier statement. He looked at Marux. Did you think before you decided to bulldoze fully four acres of timber while chasing them?

Marux shook his head. I assumed my armor would protect me. And the trees were in the way.

Tharua laughed now as she turned back and looked at him. Come Marux! I saw a nearby stream where you can drink and wash the foul taste of these idiots from your mouth, and sooth your muscles in the process. You will be bruised after your jaunt through the timber.

Jeth brushed his larger body against Marux's with affection. Trust me... it is best not to argue with her. She always wins... or she tells Eliani and then you have to suffer a full medical exam from Talon Guardian Androcles' sister.

I have only done that once! Tharua spat at her mate. And I was right!

Jeth nodded his head. Trust me on this Marux.

Marux glanced back towards the airfield which he could just see through the timber. She will be safe? Denali, Lisisa and little Arduri have arrived. Tharua answered him gently. Whatever threat these fools may have presented is now over. Dorian is fast approaching. She will be safe Marux. You have seen to that.

Marux nodded his head. Then that stream sounds very inviting indeed. He spoke.

Does Sehri know? Tharua asked him.

Marux shook his head. Androcles says she is not yet ready. But she will be soon and I will protect her until that time.

Jeth nodded his massive head. Then you will have us beside you Marux my friend. He told him. From this day forward.

Marux! Now! All teams! Now!

All of them heard Andro's call within Mindvoice and Deion whirled around from his spot to look at Mari and Eirene.

"Mari! Arandel!" He exclaimed. "It's time to go!"

Eirene pushed away from the console she was sitting at. "Done!" She quipped. "All of their defensive systems are now offline! These fools won't be able to do anything!"

Deion stepped up beside Mari as she was typing furiously on her P9. "Mari?"

Mari stabbed down on one key of her computer and then looked up. "I have it all!" She exclaimed. "I also sent a mutating virus back through their network that will infect all computer systems connected to this system."

"Connected?" Deion asked.

Mari nodded as she rose to her feet. "I detected three other networks that were linked to this system that are not on this moon. Most of the information was encrypted but I downloaded all of it anyway. In about three minutes those systems will begin shutting down and deleting all of the information stored on them." She told him with a brilliant smile.

Deion leaned over and kissed her hard on the lips. "You beautiful, devious creature you!" He hissed at her in delight.

Mari beamed at him as his aura swept across her senses. "And don't you forget it." She told him as she slapped his face playfully.

"Let us go!" Murano spat from where he stood by the door. "We can join with Jomann's team as they extract! Move!"

Deion took her arm and reached for his sister. "Time to beat feet as Andro says!" He hissed as he pulled them for the door.

Rotaxe was so far out of his league that it wasn't even funny and he knew this within the first three seconds. He saw those savage looking dual fangs burst forth, saw the black ring encircle those odd colored blue eyes and he saw Androcles' hands come up to his harness in a single blink of an eye. What followed was unlike anything Rotaxe had ever seen in his lifetime and it would be something he remembered until the last breath of life left his body.

That would be far shorter than anyone would have guessed.

Andro's hands closed around the hilts of his swords and he was pulling them from his harness even as they began to appear from Flatspace. Two things happened almost at the same time. One of moments would stun even the women that loved Androcles so much.

Carisia and Lu'ria both whirled inward and hit Hemtar with vicious dual ridge hand strikes to his throat and face. What passed for his nose crumbled instantly and blood spurted from his nostrils as his eyes instantly became filled with tears at the intense pain. Half a second after that Lu'ria's blow struck his throat like a hammer and his hands came up to grasp his throat unable to catch a breath. Lu'ria spun in motion as Carisia leaped into the air catlike and wrapped her thighs around Hemtar's large head. As she twisted her body, Lu'ria's powerful kick struck the back of his legs and took his feet out from under him. Hemtar grunted painfully as he fell and he reached for one of Carisia's thighs but found his wrist gripped by two incredibly powerful hands. Those hands were attached to Carisia's body and she twisted brutally, using all of her pureblood vampire strength, snapping the bones in his lower arm and wrenching it to the side. As Hemtar opened his mouth to scream, Lu'ria's knee fell into the center of his chest, all one hundred and twenty-eight pounds of tightly packed muscle dropping directly over his heart. His eyes bugged open even further in pain until he felt the cold steel of Lu'ria's glaive jammed against his throat and her amber colored eyes, now encircled by a similar black ring glared at him from atop his chest.

"Continue to resist and she will snap your neck with her legs while I open your foul innards to the air on this moon!" Lu'ria snarled viciously, leaning close to his grotesque face and pressing her glaive even tighter to his flesh, drawing blood.

Hemtar knew he was beaten and he ceased all his struggles to get these two polecats off his body.

The howl of excruciating agony drew the attention of all of them.

Rotaxe could not move fast enough to get away from Androcles and as dozens of pairs of eyes watched, Cana and Saar rie Emanur struck downward in front of Rotaxe's body. The swords sliced through his clothes and light armor as if they weren't there and left five inch long gashes in his chest area that instantly began to spill blood profusely. Androcles didn't stop there, twisting Cana and Saar in his hands and slashing upward. This time the swords bit deeply into the flesh of Rotaxe's inner thighs, instantly severing the tendons and ligaments that allowed him to use his legs. His body dropped to the floor of his audience chamber like a wet noodle, his legs no longer able to support his body. What followed next Carisia and Lu'ria had never seen Andro do before and it was utterly devastating in nature. His hands whipped back and with a singular heave of immense strength he sent Cana and Saar rippling through the air in a wide bending arc. Each sword curved to a different side, aimed directly at the two groups of Enverr who had been sitting on either side of the audience chamber.

As stunned eyes watched Cana and Saar blazed through the two groups of Enverr and suddenly, six heads flopped to the ground around the bodies as they fell. Stunned eyes watched as those swords curved back around with blinding speed and slapped back into the hands of Androcles Leonidas.

Then he launched himself into the attack.

Androcles completely ignored the group of Enverr to his left and leaped for the group on his right without hesitation. He let his instincts and Dahakoan senses guide him in his actions. His movements were so graceful and smooth that one could almost see him dancing in a ballet until you took into account the copious amounts of Enverr blood that was splashing across the floor and other bodies as Cana and Saar claimed victim after victim. The swords were moving so fast that it was impossible to really keep track of them. Andro landed among the five remaining Enverr on the right, Saar plunging completely through the head of the only Enverr who seemed to be trying to react. As Andro twisted his body in motion he reversed Cana in his hand and slashed the sword to his left. An Enverr fell away screaming as both of his arms dropped to the bloodstained floor no longer attached to his body. He would die in seconds from massive blood loss. As he yanked Saar free of the Enverr skull, blood and brain matter came with it and Andro twisted the sword in his hand, leveling the hilt at another two Enverr. Two bright yellow flashes from the hilt of the sword sent two highly concentrated bursts of energy punching through the midsections of two more Enverr, leaving smoking holes that one could actually see through.

Andro executed a backflip away from the remaining Enverr troops stunning them with this move as he was suddenly gone from their weapons sights. He landed in the center of the audience chamber and with a powerful motion drove Cana directly into the floor of the chamber. The wave of Etheric power swelled up on the floor and then burst like a dam, rushing to all sides like a runaway lifter. The floor buckled and flew upward as it struck anything solid, including the fool Enverr troops who were too stunned to turn and run. As the Vanari female prisoners began to scream in fear at that onrushing wall of Etheric power coming at them, their eyes went wide as the bluish white light simply passed them by or curved around where they huddled leaving them untouched and without an Enverr anywhere in grabbing distance of them.

“Now sister!” Andro screamed aloud. “Now!”

Elynth heard Andro’s call even from five thousand feet above the compound and she reacted instantly. We go! Now! She barked out.

Elynth dipped her wing, rolled over and dove for the surface with Anthar and Majeir in hot pursuit. It took her only five seconds to swoop in over the Enverr barracks and her golden eyes began to see them exiting. Elynth screamed in and unleashed an unearthly roar before she opened her maw and let loose with a perfect stream of flame tinged super-heated breath. Two seconds later Anthar landed to one side and Majeir the other and added their own pure streams of Firespitter flame to the conflagration.

Thirty-two Enverr died in that initial incineration and three dozen more would follow as their barracks building instantly burst into out of control flames.

“Caydren! Cinol! Now!” Andro screamed from inside the audience chamber.

There was perhaps a millisecond pause and then the main chamber doors that they had entered through burst inward under the brutal combined power and weight of the dragon sons of Vollenth and Viera. Caydren and Cinol were fully grown for their age now and soon Sadi and Ne'Veha would begin riding them, but now the brothers acted as one and the usual competitive nature between them was lost as they worked together seamlessly. The brothers were not neat or concerned about their entrance and they split to either side of the huge, splintered hard wood doorway, crushing any Enverr who happened to be too stunned to move.

The female Vanari prisoners looked on in awestruck disbelief as two dozen Vanari Cadre Commandos burst into the chamber behind Caydren and Cinol. Directly behind them moved Dorian Leonidas who blurred in motion to where his older brother was, his dual knives flashing out once and nearly decapitating an Enverr soldier who was just beginning to rise to his addled feet. Sheva and Onera stepped into the doorway then with Caliria and all of them began to motion frantically and shout for the Vanari females to run. Most of them needed no further urging and broke into sprints for the doors. Three of the Vanari females could not move as quickly because they had been prisoners for far longer and it was these women that Sheva and Onera blurred to in an instant, gathering them into their arms and then blurring out of the main room. Carisia and Lu'ria scrambled to their feet, roughly dragging Hemtar between them as they moved for the doors knowing what their beloved Androcles and his brother planned to do.

“Go! Go! Go!” Carisia screamed aloud, pulling the Enverr by his collar even as he screamed in pain from his wounds.

Androcles turned and looked down at where Rotaxe lay on the ground in his own blood and unable to fully move. His azure blue eyes were nearly glowing as he gazed at the foul man beneath him.

“Now you will feel Spartan justice!” Andro snarled at him. “Now you will experience how the Lycavorian Union deals with scum such as yourself!”

Andro turned as Dorian stepped up behind him and the brothers stood back to back. They stepped away several feet from Rotaxe and he watched with wide eyes as the bluish white Etheric power engulfed both of them. It surrounded Rotaxe as well though he did not know why and then he began to feel the shuddering of the ground beneath him. His eyes darted back and forth as the ground began to shake violently and the terrible screeching sound of tearing metal and snapping wood began to reach his ears. He looked all around and he watched awe struck as pieces of the building began to rise apart from the floor, walls snapping and breaking, steel beams bending at the hand of some unseen force. He glanced back at the two Lycavorians and his eyes filled with real fear as he saw both of them suspended off the ground by nearly a foot, the bluish white glow around their bodies blazing brightly enough to nearly blind him.

It was all Rotaxe would remember as he finally passed out from the pain and blood loss.

It was something that the freed Vanari females and those Cadre Commandos who had come on this mission would remember for the rest of their days. It would also begin the legend of the Dahakoan brothers and the diminutive sister that would soon join them.

They were gathering by the now sundered gates of the compound, Caliria, Eliani and other Vanari medics moving among the former prisoners and injecting them with the counter agent. Jomann was directing them entire operation and moving groups of Vanari females off to the airfield as they were injected. He turned his head as Kalis, Cowen and Daio approached from the direction of the prison building.

“Eli!” Jomann barked. “Torian!”

Eliani lifted her head and immediately sprinted to where Cowen gently lowered Torian to the ground, Ulana clinging to his hand tightly.

“He has internal bleeding Eliani!” Ulana gasped. “Five broken ribs that I could detect, and I think his lung has been punctured!”

Eliani settled beside Torian who looked up at her with a grin. “Princess.” He rasped out the word.

Eliani lifted her hands and they instantly began to glow with white healing power. “Are you about done getting your ass beat Torian?” She exclaimed as she lowered her hands to his chest.

Torian laughed somewhat, coughing in pain and nodded his head. “I think... I think perhaps I will say no next time Androcles asked me to do something like this.”

Eliani smiled brightly at him. “Smart move.” She told him. “Now hold still. I’m going to stabilize you and then get you off this stinking moon.”

“Nubou Lae!” Kalis’s voice rang out causing all of them to turn back towards the audience chamber.

Even Kalis, who was not as attuned to Etheric power because he had been apart from what was within himself for much of his life, even Kalis could feel it now. The vibration of the ground all around them as it shook. The building was folding in upon itself as pieces of it began to twist and ripple and shatter. The bluish white Etheric wall of power was center on the Enverr audience chamber and it appeared as if there was a small earthquake going on within that Etheric globe. There were gasps of shock as one entire wall was suddenly peeled away and crushed into oblivion, revealing the two brothers hanging motionless a foot off the ground in the center of what was once the audience chamber and standing back to back. The Etheric glow of their power was shimmering brighter than at any time in the past that they had seen as they literally were bringing the building down around themselves. The vibrations through the surrounding ground were very real and reverberated through all of those now watching what was taking place. All of them had seen Androcles do some wondrous things in the past, things that even he could not explain, but none of them had witnessed anything like this before.

It was Sarlana's voice within Murano's head as he and Deion and the others ran up that answered the question all of them had. They had established a unique connection between the two of them in order for them to better communicate ideas and direction of how they would help Andro and Dorian and the other Praetorians among them train.

Murano you must move everyone back to the airfield! Quickly! Sarlana's voice echoed in his head as his eyes took in what was taking place.

Sarlana? Murano questioned.

I have been monitoring them throughout the mission. Sarlana told him. I have felt it building within them.

What do you mean? Murano asked her.

It is a Dahakoan move Murano! Sarlana spoke to him. I have read about it within our history texts. It is similar to the execution of what your Praetorian warriors used to do in order to clear an area around them of Scourge. Only this is much more powerful than anything I have ever read. You must move everyone away from them. Back to the airfield. When they release the power building within them, it will obliterate everything around them that is standing Murano. Nothing will remain of this Enverr place. It will flatten everything!

Murano didn't hesitate for an instant. He had come to trust Sarlana in so short a time for she had not lied to him about anything. In their talks she had been honest about all that had taken place in the past. At least that she knew of. Murano could feel that she had the best interests of Androcles and Dorian and all the others foremost in her mind and nothing else mattered to her. "Everyone back to the airfield now!" He barked out the order seeing them all turn to look at him.

"Murano what...?" Jomann questioned.

Murano shook his head. "Trust me... we do not want to be here when they release the power building within them!"

"Release it?" Carisia stammered. "What do you mean?"

Murano didn't hesitate once again and he bent down beside her and Lu'ria and hauled the unconscious Enverr Hemtar up to his shoulder. We must go! Now!" He spat. "They will join us when it is done!"

"When what is done?" Lu'ria screamed.

Murano met her amber eyes. "They are going to destroy this entire compound! They are going to bring it all down!" Murano explained letting his eyes sweep around to all of them now. "We must get the Vanari out of here and back to the airfield! All of us!"

Go! Andro's voice boomed within their minds and all of them turned to look at where he and Dorian were still hovering there off the ground. Go my family and friends!

We will join you soon enough! Dorian's voice echoed his brother.

"Sibfla!" Deion spat. "That's good enough for me!"

"Hell yes!" Daio exclaimed as he and Deion and others began scooping Vanari females into their arms in order to move quickly.

Cowen looked down at Torian on the ground. "Forgive me my friend." He spoke.

Torian shook his head. "Hell yes! Help me get out of here!" Torian stammered as Cowen pulled him painfully to his feet. Ulana had not left his side and she wrapped her arms around his waist not really understanding what was going on, but certain that she was where she was meant to be.

"Move!" Jomann shouted as he grabbed Eliani's hand. "All of us! Now!"

"Jomann they are my brothers!" Eliani protested. "I won't leave them!"

Do not fear for them Eliani Leonidas. Sarlana's voice echoed loudly within her mind and Eliani's eyes grew wide. Fear for those who will stand against them now and in the future. You are your brother's right hand and will Eliani. You and your sister Zarah alone hold sway over Androcles, Eliani Leonidas, even more so than his beloved mates in many respects. Never doubt him for he has never doubted you. Any of you.

Sarlana? Eliani gasped.

He is being born again this day Eliani. Sarlana told her. Both of them are. Do as he asks you child.

Eliani glanced back at the crumbling audience chamber and then looked at her beloved Jomann. She gripped his hand tighter and nodded her head as she reached for a Vanari female who was slow in getting to her feet.

“Let’s haul ass!” She exclaimed seeing Jomann grin and follow her while scooping up two Vanari into his arms.

It swirled around them seamlessly, building in intensity as it did. They had come to accept what they were long before they even realized it and now they were about to take the first step down that road. Elynth and Ryner rested on the ground only a short distance away, their own Etheric resonances combined with Androcles and Dorian. It filled their beings, their blood, and their physical bodies. A power unlike anything they had ever felt before. It coursed through them and felt so natural and wonderful, but also so dangerous and foreboding. The strands of Etheric power glowed brighter still, building wave upon wave. They were the channels of this power and the four of them reached for each other to direct and channel it.

Dori? Andro spoke the word.

Let’s bring it down.

Forever. Elynth and Ryner answered together.

Forever! Two other voices joined with them from across the stars and they were complete.

PREMONITION

ORBITING ENVERR COMPOUND

“Carians! Sadi look!” Ne’Veha exclaimed as she looked outside her cockpit window at the compound below them.

“Son vada carians!” Sadi exclaimed.

They were the only ones to actually see what took place and it would remain with them forever. The glowing bluish white Etheric bubble seemed to expand quickly and then it suddenly blew outwards. What followed Sadi would only be able to describe to others as something from one of the old videos they had watched in the academy science classes. The result of a fusion explosion to surrounding areas. It was as if some giant unseen hand came down and violently swept aside all in its swath of destruction. The entire Enverr compound seemed to heave off the ground and then steel and granite and other building materials simply shattered in place and became dust as it raced outward like an explosion of tremendous power. The cloud of dust and debris quickly obscured their vision from high above but only they were able to see and witness as what was once a large compound of buildings and defensive emplacements and walls became a thing of the past.

Sadi and Ne’Veha felt the enormous surge of love and warmth from Androcles then, his aura swirling around them tightly, caressing their senses and their minds and both of them nearly broke into tears at the strength and commitment that they felt within that aura. Towards them. Towards Carisia and Lu’ria and Sehri and Caliria. It was almost overwhelming to be able to experience it and they reached for reached other’s hands and basked in the emotion that swept through them. Sadi and Ne’Veha could feel the same reaction from their fellow princesses and lovers on the surface and both of them nearly began to weep at the sensations. They could feel the same things echoing loudly through Sheva and Onera as well, both of them holding one another on the surface and experiencing the total and absolute love of the man they both adored.

Then it was gone.

Fading from their minds but leaving the remnants of that emotion trembling through them.

It was something none of them would ever forget in their lifetimes.

The airfield was jammed packed with Vanari prisoners as Cadre medics went among the former prisoners and insured that no reaction to the serum was happening. The Vanari females and the few males that had been rescued were sitting on the ground stunned at what had just occurred, the elation of being rescued after so many years beginning to set in.

“Where is he?” Carisia demanded as she and Lu'ria stood beside Murano on the edge of the airfield looking back towards the compound.

All of them had heard the deep booming noise and then the massive vibrations through the ground before the dust cloud had rose above the trees in the distance.

You worry too much Enylarcopri. Andro's voice resounded in her head and they turned as Elynth and Ryner swept in over the airfield and landed only ten meters away.

Carisia and Lu'ria broke into a sprint just as Andro tossed the body of Rotaxe from the saddle in front of him and leaped down himself. Carisia and Lu'ria practically leaped into his arms as Dorian dropped from Ryner's saddle with a broad smile. He only had a moment to blink before Sheva and Onera blurred to him and almost knocked him over as they crushed themselves to him in happiness.

Murano simply smiled as he moved up to where Andro was sharing a sizzling kiss with Lu'ria and Carisia's head was buried in the side of his neck. This day had brought about many new discoveries that they would all have to deal with in the future. And so far, as far as Murano was concerned, not one of those discoveries was a bad thing.

“Well done!” Murano exclaimed to the brothers. “Well done indeed.”

As Murano knew it would be, Andro's first question was about others. “We got them all?” He asked.

Murano nodded his head. “Every single one.” He answered. “Some minor wounds were suffered by Commander Entia's people during the brief fight here but it seems a trio of dragons somehow knew of a group of Enverr who were ready to assault the airfield from the north and they stopped them. Well... annihilated them to be more precise.”

Andro nodded his head with a smile and looked at Dorian. At the moment he was holding a very stunned Onera and kissing her with every bit of desire and passion in his young body. Something that Sheva was enjoying with immense glee.

“We will need to move quickly.” Andro said. “The attacks have begun across the sector and I want to be back on Austrova with Coren and Alrerin in order to witness what happens.”

“You still think this action will flush their enemies into the open?” Murano asked.

Andro turned as Caliria and Sehri moved up to him and he swept them into his arms with Carisia and Lu'ria, kissing them just as intensely as he had them. When he pulled away he looked at Murano. “I'm betting on it.” He spoke.

“What then?” Carisia asked as she looked up into his face.

“Then we will see just how open the Vanari people are to change.” Andro said looking at Caliria.

Jomann moved up to him with Eliani at his side and they embraced like brothers. “Nice... if a bit overdone.” Jomann spoke.

Andro chuckled until Eliani's hand snapped out cat like and slapped him across his face. “Next time asshole... warn us about what you have planned!” She barked.

Andro reached up and rubbed his cheek where she had slapped him as Carisia, Caliria, Sehri and Lu'ria looked on with grins from ear to ear. “Sorry about that.” He answered finally.

“No you aren't!” Eliani hissed just before she threw her arms around him and hugged her brother.

Andro squeezed her back tightly as his eyes drifted all around. He found who he was looking for and gently moved Eliani from his embrace and crossed the distance to where Torian was quickly. Ulana looked up as he approached and tried to smooth out her appearance, but Androcles noticed that she did not release her grip on Torian's hand as he knelt down.

Torian held out his other hand which Andro gripped tightly and squeezed, bringing it to his cheek. “I am sorry fervon. I came as soon as I found out.” Andro whispered to him.

Torian nodded his head. “I knew you would.” He answered.

“Are you...?”

“I'm fit for duty!” Torian told him and Andro saw Ulana's eyes widen.

“No you are not!” She exclaimed. “Eliani says it will be at least two weeks before you are fully recovered!”

Andro smiled and nodded his head. “A true Spartan.” He spoke. “But we will have a while before you are needed my friend.”

Andro rose to his feet and let his eyes drift over the entire airfield seeing Vanari and Lycavorian moving among each other, helping one another and working together without pause. He nodded his head slowly as Murano came up beside him once more with Carisia, Lu'ria, Sehri and Caliria. Andro pulled Sehri close to him on one side and Caliria on the other as Carisia and Lu'ria squeezed up against them.

“Armen is sending down two additional transports.” Murano told him.

Andro nodded his head. “Have Denali and Lisisa see to getting everyone off the surface. I want to go back to SPARTA'S WRATH and check in with General Tarnei before we return to Austrova.”

“Why?” Carisia asked him.

“Something tells me that we have kicked a hornet’s nest with our actions here and there are going to be some very pissed off Eridiani to contend with.” Andro answered.

“Nubou them!” Caliria almost yelled.

Andro and the others laughed. “No thank you Inamarno.” He said leaning over to kiss her. “I would much rather play with you and the other loves of my life.” He whispered in her ear.

Caliria pushed him away with mock indifference. “You pervert!” She exclaimed as the others laughed.

“What’s your plan Androcles?” Murano asked.

“My plan?” Andro answered. “I intend to fulfill what I came here to do.” He spoke. “Then I have a sister and brother to collect.”

Murano shook his head. “Not you.” He said. “Us.”

Andro nodded. “And you are very welcome and needed Murano.”

Murano nodded his head. “Then let’s get off this rock. The stench is starting to get to even my not so sensitive nose.”

Androcles nodded his head. “That’s the best idea I have heard all day.” He said.

CHAPTER FORTY-SEVEN

SPARTA

OFFICE OF THE PRIME MINISTER

Deia Leonidas

It certainly had a ring to it that felt wonderful to her ears and she chastised herself for not taking the name as her own sooner. Martin and his wives had been pestering her for over a decade to do this very thing and she had kept refusing, saying that it was a conflict with her position as Prime Minister of the Union. Now Deia realized just how utterly stupid that attitude had turned out to be.

Deia stood looking out the huge plate glass window at the Eurotas River as it wound its way through the center of Sparta. The city had grown since Martin’s return, now nearly five million men, women and children called this city home. The city limits had expanded several kilometers in all directions that allowed for expansion, but the city had remained true to its history and culture. The architecture remained almost unchanged from hundreds of years ago, though with all of the modern amenities and knowledge they now had, the city and its buildings and surrounding facilities were stronger than ever.

Deia should have been the one to see it right away upon Martin returning to claim the throne of his father and grandfathers. Sparta was where his heart and soul resided and nothing would ever change that. His wives and mates, his children, this was their home. Sparta was the heart of the Union now. Apo Prime may have been the capital planet, but Sparta here on Earth was their spiritual core. It was here that the famed Spartan lore was born so long ago, it was here that it thrived even when the Union did not know they existed, and here is where it was at its strongest. She should have seen it the moment word reached them of the death of Martin’s father and the Union military quickly adopted the Spartan way of life to honor a King none of them had ever met or even seen. It became so ingrained within the rank and file that within five years after the death of Martin's father, she would never have been able to change it even if she wanted too. When Martin returned to them, that Spartan way of life took on even new meaning, for he embodied everything there was about the name Spartan. Nearly three thousand years of that Spartan training and mentality had allowed them to survive against the High Coven when they should have been crushed like insignificant bugs. When Martin returned that mentality tripled; that faith became unquenchable. Even many of the species within the Union who were not suited for combat were swept up and training programs specifically suited to their species and cultures were adopted, all based on the Spartan mentality. It was too big now, too ingrained in the psyche of so many across the Union, and now it would never die even if only one citizen of the Union remained.

Since Martin's return the Union had grown and prospered in a way it never had in its three thousand year history before him. Most thought of Martin as King and not really adept in any form of politics, and his Queens were who he spoke through. Many would never know that he liked it this way, and it was actually he who had secured the entrance into the Union of species whom had previously had reservations about becoming members. It was Martin who went to each of these leaders and over a period of years he had hammered out iron clad treaties and political agreements that strengthened both cultures and species and brought them even closer, while making the Union even more powerful. Very few knew of his role in these discussions and inclusions and he liked it that way. He hated the spotlight and he hated politics even more. She smiled as she remembered the battles she had with him through the years over one thing or another and it was only one of his Queens or Tarifa and Aihola or Selene and Charles who had made him see it was the right thing to do. He trusted those three women and Charles just as much as he trusted Deia, and through the years she had also come to trust and rely on their input in many matters. If all else failed, they would get Gorgo involved, for they all knew Martin would never refuse his mother. Gorgo always had a way to break it right down to the basics for him and he would finally see what they were all telling him. Martin was no fool however, he was perhaps one of the most intelligent and cunning men Deia had ever met. He took after his grandfather Resumar in that way, always thinking three and four steps ahead, though she could safely say that it was his son Androcles who inherited Resumar's darker nature when it came to defending his people and what was his. Resumar was willing to do almost anything to safeguard their future and the future of his people and while both Martin and Androcles had shown the same willingness to do everything in their power to continue this, Androcles was the one willing to take more chances and risks.

Part of that she now knew was because of who her great, great nephew was.

He had dragon DNA within his own blood, and this is what set Androcles apart. And now Dorian as well. She had only listened enraptured as Shiria had explained to her what she had discovered from Wayonn concerning Androcles and Dorian. Deia and Shiria had become fast friends over these last months and it was her Deia turned to for explanations into anything having to do with their Pralor history. Deia shook her head with a smile and lifted the steaming mug of Aricia's coffee and sipped the strong, smooth liquid.

"Something amusing?" The male voice asked and Deia smiled for she would recognize that voice anywhere. Not to mention his unique scent which she had detected several minutes ago when he entered the building.

Deia turned and looked at Armetus as he moved slowly into her office in the temporary Senate Building. This building was normally reserved for the local Spartan Convocation and all high level delegations to Earth. Since the bombing of the original Senate Building and the rapid but ongoing project to rebuild the old facility better and stronger, they had taken over this large complex of smaller buildings and offices. It was also now one of the most secure locations anywhere within the Union and would remain so for the foreseeable future. No one could just walk in off the street unless the Durcunusaan, the eight Hybrid dragons and the Elven Dragoons who viciously guarded the building knew who you were.

This man they all knew quite well.

"I was just thinking of the twists and turns on the path my family has taken in order to get here Armetus." Deia told him.

Armetus was Director of the Krypteria, the Union's Intelligence Organization and perhaps the most feared grouping of men and women anywhere within the confines of space. The Krypteria had grown since Armetus had been given the reins by her nephew so long ago. The Krypteria was now more feared than the High Coven's Venorik Elghinn, their Silent Death Division, ever was and not because of the torture and killings as the High Coven used to do, but because the Krypteria had vast amounts of knowledge.

And knowledge was power.

Armetus nodded his head as he moved to the chair across from her desk. He walked with a special cane now to assist him as he was not fully recovered from the injuries inflicted upon him by the Kavalians, but he could still shift his form and that is what mattered most to any Lycavorian in the end. "Yes... no doubt it has been a "Wild Ride" as Martin and Anja are so fond of saying."

Deia smiled and nodded her head. "Yes it has." She stated. Armetus had been at her side since almost the very beginning and outside of her own husband and mate and her family, she trusted him with her very life. "How are you old friend?"

Armetus looked at her as he settled into the chair. There were no secrets between him and Deia, well except for those the King did not want her to know in order to protect her Armetus thought with a hidden smile, and he never held anything back from her.

"That Hadarian Medical Officer Anja left in charge of the hospital here must be cut from the same mold as her." Armetus spoke. "She is a taskmaster who knows no mercy."

Deia chuckled as she moved to her own chair. "Anja would be no different and you know it my friend."

Armetus nodded his head. "I know." He spoke with a smile. "I am getting stronger every day Deia. Pretty soon I won't need this silly stick, though I might keep it, Marci says it makes me look distinguished."

Deia laughed at this as she sat down. "She would be right."

"We shall see." Armetus spoke.

"Would you care to tell me why you wanted to meet with me before our usual morning briefing with the others?" Deia asked him.

Armetus smiled and reached into the small pouch he always carried with him. It held his personal P9 computer, one of the first batch that Avi had built and Martin had authorized for distribution, as well as several data pads, one of which he gave to Deia.

"Andro has just sent a brief report. They conducted the rescue mission of our Senators and Vanari people being held prisoner by the OSG and the larger mission is now underway. They suffered no casualties and he will update us when more is known." He told her.

Deia nodded as she looked at the pad briefly. Dilean Roan had already contacted her directly and passed this information to her. The young female elf that Andro had appointed as his Information Officer was quite thorough. "This would not cause you to want to meet with me Armetus." She said returning her eyes to his face. "What is wrong?"

Armetus shook his head. "Nothing is wrong. At least not yet."

"I don't follow." Deia told him.

"If you scroll down to page three you will see what I am referring to." Armetus replied. "Androcles seems to think that the OSG and these Eridiani have more of a foothold here in the Alpha Quadrant than we first gave them credit for. They were able to download the contents of several computers that they liberated and I have my people in the process of decrypting them, but some things that were said openly has Andro on edge."

Deia lifted her eyes and met his gaze. "On edge?" She spoke. "Andro is too much like his father Armetus. If something has him on edge, then it usually does not bode well for others who might be around him."

Armetus nodded. "I agree. That is why I came here to see you." He stated. "We need to decide what to do about these discoveries."

Deia looked up suddenly. "Is this... is this accurate?" She gasped.

Armetus smiled and nodded his head. "She shot him four times at point blank range. Right in front of Androcles and Jomann as they were escorting him to the brig on SPARTA'S WRATH. Thankfully her aim was not very good. The scum, Rotaxe I believe Andro called him, he will survive."

"Carians!" Deia rasped as she sat back in her chair. "I would never have imagined that. Once they discovered she had been taken, several of her idiot colleagues demanded I put them on a ship and send them out there. I did, just to shut them up."

Armetus nodded his head. "Something tells me they will find a very different Ulana." He said. "According to Andro's report she has not left Torian's side. He kept her from being raped several times and the beatings he took keeping this from happening were quite severe. I would hazard a guess and say that Ulana's eyes have been opened to a whole new world and she likes this world."

“You mean reality.” Deia spoke.

Armetus shrugged. “However you wish to describe it, yes. I believe Androcles will have a very powerful ally in Ulana when all is said and done. And he won’t even realize it.”

Deia shook her head. “His father, his mothers, Daniel Simpson, all of them are the same way.” She spoke. “They inspire near blind loyalty in conducting actions that to them are totally unrelated.”

Armetus nodded his head. “That they do.”

Deia held up the pad. “You think Icho is involved in this in some way don’t you?” She asked him.

Armetus met her eyes. “Let’s just say I do not believe they are unrelated.” He answered. “This OSG appears to have contacts back here within the Alpha Quadrant with much more information than they should have. It would appear that most of these contacts are limited to those among the human population for the moment, but I do believe that is slowly changing in many ways. The humans under Charles’ leadership have made huge strides forward since the end of the High Coven occupation, and far more of them are reaching outward to other worlds and even other cultures. They are almost as adaptable as Lycavorians are.”

“You think this is a concern?” Deia asked him. “That we have Eridiani among us?”

Armetus quickly shook his head. “Doubtful. We have already determined that Ben and Tina are the descendants of the humans that left Earth and came to be called the Eridiani. How this came about is still somewhat of a mystery, but we can only assume that at least a small portion returned to Earth after undergoing the genetic enhancements. Several thousand at least. I doubt we will discover the true story of how this took place unless we can access an Eridiani library archive of some sort. Those that did return apparently were not happy about the ways things were progressing wherever they were and they came back and blended back into normal human society. Ben and Tina and others are their descendants, as are several hundred others that we have discovered. Once the existence of the Eridiani in the Beta Quadrant and the their OSG lapdogs became common knowledge and it was discovered what they were involved in, all of those like Ben and Tina came forward to either my people or the Durcunusaan in order to let us know they were not involved in any way and nor would they tolerate such things as the OSG were obviously supporting.”

“And your people believed them?” Deia asked.

Armetus nodded his head. “There are only a few hundred of them that still survive as I said and like Ben and Tina, most of them are actively involved in the Union military or the government. They all check out.”

“You are certain?” Deia asked him.

“Ben and Tina have been with Martin for over thirty years Deia.” Armetus said. “From before he ever discovered his true history. There were quite a few of them assigned to EDEN and all of them are totally loyal to Martin. I’ve had my people studying reams of scrolls and information dating back to a hundred years before the Great Fire here on Earth. Aside from three dozen that managed to survive in bunkers after the Great Fire, all of these former Eridiani were assigned to EDEN Base. All but six of them are involved with the military or government. Charles is one of them Deia. Ben, Tina, Charles, they have always known what they were, if not the details to how that came to be. They have saved Martin’s life on more than one occasion. He has done the same in return.”

Deia nodded her head. “I know... I just want to be sure.”

“The six who are not involved with the military or government work for me Deia.” He told her. “Each and every one of them came forward when the Eridiani and the OSG were discovered and every one of them is loyal to us.”

Deia nodded her head once more. “Then I will trust your instincts and information on that.” She said.

“My people believe the OSG are working with normal humans here on Earth and in other places in order to obtain the information they have gotten; humans who are not descended from these Eridiani and who are not happy with how the things worked out after Tarifa, Aihola and Selene took charge when the High Coven were forced off.” Armetus explained.

“And you think Icho is also involved with them?” Deia asked.

“There are many things that Nessa and others cannot explain about Icho and his rather mysterious background.” Armetus said.

Deia met his eyes. “Please tell me you have not discovered he is not some distant relative to Chetak.” She spoke.

Armetus chuckled softly. "If only that were true." He said as he shook his head. "Dealing with him would be far easier and much more final."

"Your theory then?" Deia asked.

"I am not entirely convinced myself but..."

"Armetus... it is me you are talking to." Deia told him.

"There is almost no information on Icho prior to him getting elected to his original seat on Tuya's local council almost five hundred years ago." Armetus said. "What we have been able to discover is very basic and completely normal."

Deia leaned back in her chair once more. "I don't like the way you say normal." She said.

"And you shouldn't." Armetus told her. "It's too normal. His history is so unremarkable that it set off alarms within both Nessa's head and mine." Deia knew who Nessa was and she also knew that if there was a more intuitive or resourceful analyst working for Armetus, they had not yet been discovered. Nessa had been in charge of his Intelligence Gathering Team for decades now. "We have to be very careful in how we proceed however, if he were to discover that we are investigating him, it could cause you to lose a lot of support." Armetus continued.

Deia shook her head. "I do not care about support!" She snapped. "This man is dirty Armetus! You know it and I know it! There are far too many coincidences for it to signal anything else! And I trust my oshye mandri's instincts." (Great Nephew)

Armetus nodded his head. "As do I." He told her. "What we have to realize is that he has been doing this for far longer than we know. At least that is what I believe. He has been able to hide his activities for centuries and no one has even caught a hint of what he is involved in. He is very careful and we need to move carefully in response. Martin made that very clear to me once Andro gave him the full report on what happened here after they left. We are not to move on Icho unless we are certain and have proof to back it up. In Martin's words, and I quote him... "When we string that fucker up by his balls I want to know he is getting what a traitor really deserves."... End quote."

Deia chuckled. "That is my Mandri." She said softly. She looked at Armetus. "You have a theory don't you?"

Armetus nodded his head. "I do... but I have no information to support it however. I believe he is part of the group of arrya who sided with the High Coven after the Black Day. The Arrya rie Cafna. Or at the very least descended from those who did." (Traitors/Traitors of a people)

Deia thought about that for a long moment and sipped her coffee once more. She was out of her realm when it came to things like that and she knew it. "The Arrya rie Cafna. I thought the last of them died out centuries ago Armetus?" She asked.

"So did we." Armetus told her. "I could be very wrong Deia."

"And you could be very right." Deia said.

Armetus nodded his head. "Yes. In which case we need to proceed carefully, as I said. Especially you Deia."

"I agree." Deia said finally getting to her feet and moving around the side of her desk. "The latest polls by my staff have me with a two thirds advantage in any rating and he is not happy about that from what I have been able to hear from different sources."

"Yes... eighty-four percent to his sixteen percent." Armetus said looking at her surprised expression. "Martin asked that I keep him informed." He said simply.

"What else has Martin asked you to do?" Deia quipped.

Armetus smiled at her and shook his head. "For all intents and purposes Deia, you and Gorgo are now the Matriarchs of the Leonidas family. You and she are the connection to the past that all of them revere. Since Gorgo is out there with them, Martin and Androcles both have insured that you will be safe no matter the cost."

"I suspected as much." Deia said. "Who?"

Armetus shook his head once more. "I do not know and even if I did, I would not tell you." He answered her honestly. "All Martin has told me was not to be concerned with your security and to concentrate on my job. He said Andro and he had it covered. I could guess and say that you are perhaps the most well protected individual in Union history. Most of it black."

"Black?" Deia asked.

Armetus nodded. "You will not know they exist until something happens that puts you in danger. Then all bets are off."

Deia was silent for a moment as she thought about that. "I do not like knowing that Armetus." She said softly.

"Perhaps not Deia, but now you do." He told her. "You have to know that you are now very synonymous with the Leonidas name. With their history. You are their Tenna and they will protect their family no matter what. Especially if what I believe is indeed true. It also means that this election will be a referendum on not only you but the entire Leonidas family."

Deia met his eyes. "Our people love them Armetus." Deia said. "You know that. Ever since he returned, no matter what he has done, what Aricia and Anja and the others have done, they have always had overwhelming support."

Armetus nodded his head. "Yes. But they have always had enemies as well. You know this better than anyone. Those who did not want him to return to begin with. And now that you have made your history and connection with Martin public knowledge, their enemies will become yours. Where Icho and others of his ilk could only guess at, now they have proof and they will use this against you."

Deia nodded her head in acknowledgment as she leaned against her desk now. "Going after Andro and what he has done in regards to Ne'Veha and Cranae Island."

Armetus nodded his head. "Those things are just the beginning Deia. Icho no doubt has people investigating everything Androcles has done, even back to before the Evolli War. That will now include Sadi, Ne'Veha and even Carisia. He won't go after Lu'ria, Caliria or Sehri... not enough is known about them, but the others are fair game as far as he is concerned. And I have no doubts he is using his position as a Senator to try and gather information on everything that the Queens and Martin have done since he took the throne. He will attempt to twist all of these things to make you look bad. Given the latest poll numbers, I expect things will begin to get very dirty, very soon."

"I agree." Deia said. "What do you suggest?"

"Me?" Armetus chuckled. "Deia I am no politician. I will leave that to you and Tarifa and Charles and the others more suited to that role. Personally I would do what Martin and Andro no doubt want to do."

"Which is?" Deia asked though she knew the answer already. "Though I dare say I probably don't want to hear this."

Armetus met her eyes. "Make the man disappear, never to be heard from again. Period."

Deia sat back with a smile now as well. "I will pretend I did not hear that." She said. "I will worry about Icho and his cronies. You continue to do your job, which you do so well, and leave him to me."

"That was my plan." Armetus said with a grin. He held out two more data pads for her to take. "Resumar's report on the ongoing operations Pian and his people are beginning to conduct within Kavalian space."

"Your insight?" Deia asked as she took the pads and set them on her desk.

"Keleru is unstable and becoming afraid." Armetus answered her. "After our very public announcement that we will be supporting Pian and Jalersi in every way we legally could get away with, Resumar says that an additional nine Prides have since contacted Pian and sworn their support and allegiance to a new Kavalian government. His government. Three of those Prides are among the largest within Kavalian culture it seems."

"Can they be trusted?" Deia asked.

Armetus shook his head. "Pian is no fool and he is very good at vetting his people." He told her. "He is also very good at inspiring others to see his views. According to Resumar, the younger Kavalian Prides are flocking to his banner faster than they can keep up. The older Prides are slower to react but they are coming around as more information that Keleru has kept hidden is being revealed. It appears that even Martin has one of these Prides with him. Fedor's young wife and mate comes from the Juturi Pride and her father has been working against Keleru for decades. Ortellian, the planet we designated as their safe zone, it is fast becoming flooded with Kavalian non-combatants. Families and older civilian Pride members while the younger men gather to fight. The Ortellian Militia Commander has reported that most of the Kavalian females are delighted to finally be free, and their husbands equally so. They are having to conduct daily runs to the Kavalian refugee camps to deliver transmissions from mates that are now standing against Keleru."

"The camps?" Deia asked.

“Hastily set up but quickly getting better and able to accommodate those who are now arriving.” Armetus answered. “Pian has people among the camps forming work groups and such and maintaining the coordination and laws that Pian has put in place. I have several teams helping them with the efforts just to insure that there are no traitors among the many refugees. Nothing so far Deia.”

Deia looked up from the pad. “Then it is working?” She asked.

Armetus nodded his head. “Once more you were correct.” He stated. “The Kavalian people as a whole were much more fed up with Keleru and his rule than they were allowed to show publicly it seems. His military is deserting him and his public support from the older Prides is eroding quickly. With any luck, if Resumar and Pian can string together several large and important victories once the fighting does start in earnest, then Keleru will be out of a job.”

“You sound very optimistic my friend.” Deia said to him.

Armetus met her eyes. “What was done to me was not done by the Kavalian people.” He told her. “If not for Pian and Jalersi and others we would not know just how deep this rebellion goes Deia. Helping them to remove Keleru from power and give freedom to their people is more than enough vengeance. It’s the best kind.”

“I know you too well to believe that Armetus my friend.” Deia said.

Armetus shrugged. “If you are wondering if I would like to have that nubous igord in front of me, then the answer would be a resounding yes. But it is much sweeter if I can chip away at the persona he has built for himself and tear him down. When we finally come face to face, if we do, then we will see.”

Deia nodded her head. “Fair enough.” She said. “What else?”

“I can safely report that our entire network has been swept and is now clean.” Armetus told her. “Whatever Laustinous was able to do we have discovered it and fixed it. All of the Gates are now on an entirely new network that is impregnable without proper bio-scans and codes. None of which Laustinous has or can duplicate.”

“Nothing is impregnable Armetus.” Deia said.

Armetus nodded his head. “That is why there are several failsafe and trapdoors now built into the system by Avi and those he trained. If Laustinous tries to access any Union system, no matter how low level, we will pick him up instantly.”

“When we find him...” Deia spoke coldly. “I do not want him injured in any way. I want him detained alive and unhurt. Question him all you want, drugs but no torture. I will not resort to that even after the crimes he has committed. Is that clearly understood?”

“I will make sure this is known.” Armetus said. “May I ask why?”

“I intend to give his carcass to Dysea.” Deia answered him firmly. “Anja has told me what she has planned for him and it will be Dysea who exacts the vengeance for all the lives he is responsible for taking. And the pain he has caused.”

Armetus winced slightly at that picture in his mind though he tried to hide it. He knew full well what Dysea Leonidas was capable of. A highly respected and admired diplomat and revered Queen too many she may have been, but Dysea Leonidas was also a warrior. Behind only Aricia and Isabella, she was considered the most physically gifted fighter among the six Queens of the Union. Though personally, Armetus thought Anja was far more deadly. The smallest in physical stature of all the Queens she may have been, but Anja Leonidas was one of the most lethal women that Armetus had ever met. She had an indomitable will and though she may have been Queen of Hadaria and a Healer by nature, she could just as easily slit your throat without blinking. “I will make sure that is known.” He said finally.

Deia looked at him. “Any other surprises?” She asked with a smile.

“No... I believe I have reached my quota of surprises for you today.” He stated calmly as he rose to his feet.

Deia laughed and pulled him into a warm embrace which Armetus returned without hesitation. “Be well my friend.” She told him as she pushed him to arm’s length and looked in to his eyes.

“Always.” He told her. “I will see you in the morning at our regular time.”

Deia nodded as Armetus squeezed her arms and then he was walking out of her office. He moved casually down the short corridor, no rush in his movements, to the elevator lift where two stern faced Durcunusaan moved onto the lift with him as the doors closed.

The instant the doors closed, the shadows shimmered and the half Drow half vampire female unwrapped the shadows from around her body in front of him. The two Durcunusaan did not flinch for they knew she was there.

“Have Aihola assign another squad of Drow Scouts to her Risiha.” Armetus said as the beautiful, short elven female looked at him.

The female Drow elf let her amber eyes settle on Armetus. “We could begin to stumble over those Andro and the King have assigned to her Armetus.” She spoke.

Armetus shook his head. “Unlikely. The team Andro assigned to her as well as those Martin directed to cover her will not be seen or heard from unless it is something you and your comrades cannot handle. Only then will they reveal themselves. They will not be as delicate as you and your sisters.”

Risiha smiled brilliantly. “Perhaps not, but it would be a sight to see.”

Armetus chuckled and shook his head. “That is something we want to avoid as long as possible.” He said. “One is a Zero Squad and the other is part of the Nexus Grid. When they strike it will be neither pleasant nor bloodless.”

Risiha looked at him as her face became serious. You did not assign Zero Squad or Nexus Grid personnel to a project unless you wanted to purge a cancer. “You believe this is bigger than everyone else don’t you?” She asked.

“Let’s just say my gut is telling me we are on the cusp of opening a door that should not be opened.” Armetus said. “A door that has not been opened for many millennia. Coordinate with Sator and Lendal here and advise them of the team assigned.”

Risiha looked at the two Durcunusaan who were in charge of Deia’s personal detail. “I can do that.” She said with a seductive smile.

Both men smiled at her. “You could not handle both of us little Drow.” Sator spoke.

“I’ll take that bet.” Risiha said happily.

Armetus smiled at the banter between them. The Durcunusaan were very comfortable and at ease working with the Drow in any capacity and the Drow were among the few who the Durcunusaan afforded the utmost respect and professional courtesy, especially when it concerned the Royal family or any of their charges.

“I will report when Queen Aihola has assigned them.” Risiha told Armetus just before the doors to the lift opened and she wrapped the shadows around her once more.

Armetus began walking once more as they exited the lift. “Sator... make sure General Vengal knows of the additional Drow I have assigned to Deia. He can adjust his protection to compensate.”

“As you order Director.” The Durcunusaan replied as they walked him to the door of the building and watched as he exited without another word.

Armetus moved directly to the Heavy Lifter parked to the side and he climbed into the armored Lifter. He settled into the soft leather seat and leaned back for a moment as the Lifter rose and merged into the traffic running along the outer borders of the city of Sparta. Lifter traffic was forbidden within the actual confines of the city and the Lifter lanes all along the outside ring of the city had become far busier over the years as Sparta grew.

“Armetus?” The soft female voice spoke and Armetus opened his eyes quickly and watched as Marci leaned forward from her seat across from him.

“I hate not being truthful with her.” Armetus spoke softly.

“You are only doing what Martin believes is the correct path Armetus.” Marci said. “If she were discover what we know...?”

Armetus nodded his head. “I know. We need her to be at her best. Icho will be her largest challenge in centuries and she is going to need to defend herself and her family in more ways than she realizes. She is the only one who can. I worry for her however.”

“You know as well as I do that Andro and Martin will allow nothing to harm her.” Marci said. “They will protect her... at all costs.”

Armetus nodded once more. “I know and that at least gives me peace.” He leaned forward. “Is he ready?”

Marci nodded her head. “He’s standing by at the secure Durcunusaan hanger and chomping at the bit to go.”

“Do we have anything else that may be able to help him?” Armetus asked.

Marci handed over the data pad. “This is everything that this Professor Lidene has been able to decrypt so far.” She said. “Nessa’s people arrived two days ago and hopefully they will have more when he gets there.”

“This stays among the three of us in this car is that understood?” Armetus spoke now. “No one else can discover this.”

“What if it has already been discovered Armetus?” The male voice spoke and Armetus looked at the figure of the man as he leaned forward out of the shadows of the Lifter. “What if the Arrya rie Cafna is back? It took us three hundred and sixty years to purge them from our ranks before and you know this. It cost me both of my parents and countless others, not to mention your first wife and mate when they came after you. If they have control of these clones then the situation is worse than we thought.”

“That is why you are doing what you are doing my old friend.” Armetus spoke. “Only you have the ties to make this work. And I shudder every day knowing the danger I have placed you in.”

The man leaned closer still and met Armetus’ eyes. “We swore an oath all those years ago old friend. An oath that we spilled blood in order to insure. I will not shirk from my duty to our Union or our King.”

Armetus reached out and placed his hand on the man’s shoulder. “And neither will I Icho my friend. None of us will. Ever.”

Armetus watched as the door to the Lifter closed once more and their pilot lifted them into the traffic lanes once more. They had just dropped off Icho in a little visited section of Sparta with almost no Lifter traffic or foot traffic. It was in the process of a long overdue rebuilding and the only personnel within two hundred meters were construction workers. The Krypteria driver had dropped from the Lifter lanes overhead expertly and directly to this position between two six story buildings that effectively hid them from view. Armetus and Icho had said their goodbyes and he left the vehicle to move to the waiting Lifter car fifty meters away. They waited until his vehicle was gone before taking off themselves.

Marci leaned forward then as she held out the pad to him. “Do we trust him Armetus?” She asked.

Armetus took the pad and met her eyes. “The Arrya rie Cafna are very real Marci.” He spoke. “And if they have returned they can cause untold damage to Deia and so many others.”

Marci nodded her head. “I don’t doubt that. I have read all of your reports on them.”

“We fought them together for nearly forty years.” Armetus said. “We knew we did not get all of them, they are a cancer that never seems to go away, but we decapitated most of their senior leadership and assets. It was not easy hunting our own people, but they were traitors of the worse kind. And it tore many lives apart. It changed many of us.”

“Did it change Icho Armetus?” Marci asked softly. “He seems almost fanatical about this now.”

Armetus nodded his head in response. “Something I understand completely.”

“But has it affected him.” Marci asked. “He appeared rather cavalier about going after Sadi and then Andro. He practically tossed Ulana to the wolves, and it does not seem to bother him that he will be butting heads with Deia. That he will be trying to tear down and destroy our Royal family. Our leaders.”

Armetus met her gaze for a long moment. “You think he has turned?” He said.

“You know him better than I do.” Marci answered. “It just seems he is getting some perverse joy out of doing this.”

Armetus nodded his head once again. “There may be some truth to that Marci, but that is what makes him so very good at what he does.”

“What about who we might hurt in the long run?” Marci asked him.

Armetus gazed at her. “Nothing he will do is not something that has not already been done Marci.” He told her. “Others have attacked Deia before, in this very same way. She has been Prime Minister for nearly a millennia and it is foolish of us to believe that others do not think they can do it better. She is not as helpless as you might think Marci and she has very good people around her not to mention very thick skin. She will weather this, as will the entire Leonidas family.”

Marci sat back slowly. “We should at least tell Androcles.” She spoke finally.

Armetus shook his head. "Martin was very specific that we do not tell him." Armetus said. "It was one of the stipulations when Icho and I first brought this to him five years ago that the Arrya rie Cafna could be making a comeback. Once he knew their entire history and what we wanted to do he told us not to inform Androcles. What Icho is doing must be made to seem real and completely legitimate. It is the only way to make sure we get all of them this time. They have possible ties to the Kavalians and to the Eridiani that we know of right now. Marci... Laustinous is only the tip of the iceberg."

Marci nodded. "I understand that but does Martin truly understand and know the risk he is taking by not telling Androcles?" Marci asked. "Given the recent information that we have discovered about Andro and Dorian, what they are, if this gets to a point where Andro feels Icho is more a threat than he is now, he will not hesitate to arrange an accident for him. Or take Icho out himself."

Armetus nodded his head in agreement. "I know." He said softly. "The risk is great. And it grows greater. I have discussed this with Martin and he believes the risks are still acceptable at the moment."

"The risk is unacceptable." Marci said. "Even for us. Especially if Icho has..."

"He makes you uneasy." Armetus said. "Why?"

Marci met his eyes. "He's not like you Armetus." She said. "He almost seems to enjoy the power, and the fact that he is facing the Leonidas family excites him. It almost seems like he wants to tear them down. To prove that they are something they are not. They have never been how he is going to project them. You know that as well as I do. Sibfla... they go out of their way to insure that is not the case. If what you believe is indeed true then he could be making the Arrya rie Cafna stronger by what he is doing and not even know it."

"You don't trust him do you?" Armetus asked.

Marci met his eyes without doubt. "No... I do not." She said.

Armetus sat back and was silent for a long time. He had brought Marci in as his deputy for the expressed purpose that she seemed to have an uncanny knack for this type of work. She was wise beyond her years and had a remarkable ability to think outside of the box. It was why she was so close to Androcles and Carina Leonidas. Armetus trusted her in a way he did not even trust himself. What if she was right? The cost to the Union would be catastrophic. He felt the Lifter begin its descent over the secure Durcunusaan facility outside Sparta and he finally looked up at her.

"Then follow your instincts Marci." He told her.

Marci blinked in surprise and looked at him. "What?" She gasped finally.

"I am not all knowing." Armetus told her. "The largest reason I made you my Deputy was because you brought balance to me. To see things I cannot or will not see. Or do not want to believe."

"What are you saying Armetus?" Marci asked.

"I'm saying that if I am wrong, then I expect you to make sure my blindness does not harm us." Armetus told her. "If Icho has indeed been turned or compromised us in any way, remove him. Permanently. Before any harm he is doing becomes more than we can deal with."

"Armetus I will..." She began to speak.

Armetus leaned over and grasped her head in his hand. He pulled her forehead close and softly kissed her skin. "Do not question what you feel child." He told her softly. "For I do not." He met her bright eyes and smiled. "Now let us see Apollo off and try to find these two clones that the vampire witch Aikiro thought to use against us."

Marci nodded her head. "Apollo has some ideas." She said softly.

Armetus chuckled. "Of course he does. He is me."

SENATOR ICHO'S HEAVY LIFTER

"What did he say?" Aleus asked.

"They are none the wiser." Icho told him as he poured himself a glass of Spartan wine from the side bar in the Lifter. He poured a second glass and handed it to Aleus. "We will proceed as we have laid out our plans."

"When do we start?" Aleus asked as he took the wine.

“Deia and I face each other in the first debate in two weeks.” Icho answered. “I think that should be a very good place to start.”

“I’ll make sure the arrangements are done.” Aleus said. “What about Ulana?”

Icho shook his head as he sat back in the plush interior seat. “Ulana is lost to us. Putting her in that situation and then not knowing about how this Durcunusaan Officer felt about her was a mistake on our part. One we cannot make again.” He stated calmly. “I told the others that dealing with the OSG now would be iffy at best. Coordinating with and then working together with the Rothryn Science Academy was stupid. Arranging for them to kidnap Ulana and then try to force Androcles to hand over his Rothryn mate was foolish and dangerous. They have done more damage to our contacts within the Rothryn and OSG by their actions than anything Androcles would have done.”

“At least she killed that fool Enverr before he could talk.” Aleus spoke.

Icho nodded his head. “Perhaps, but we cannot rely on the OSG any longer. Adams has already begun pulling his people out of Vanari society on a slow basis. He is attempting to save whatever assets they have remaining at the moment. His son will insure that he fails. I told him to keep a better leash on that boy.”

“We could divert some help their way if you wish.” Aleus said.

Icho shook his head quickly. “No. It would be a waste of good people Aleus. Androcles Leonidas has a larger plan. Rescuing Ulana and the others was only the tip of it. They are doing something else and the landscape in the Beta Quadrant will change because of it. Better that the OSG is weakened initially, it will allow them to learn and surge forth later in better position to affect change.”

“And the Rothryn?” Aleus asked.

Icho shook his head once more. “Even we do not want to be associated with those fanatic igord in their Science Academy. If the Rothryn leader does not expose them for what they are soon, then I have an idea that Androcles will remove them from existence himself.” Icho looked at Aleus. “The boy is predictable after a fashion. Much like his fool father.”

“So what do we do?” Aleus asked.

“We wait until events in the Beta Quadrant have played out.” Icho told him. “Once they have we will have a better idea of how to proceed. Have we heard from that idiot Laustinous yet?”

Aleus nodded his head and held out the data pad. “The unrest is growing.” He told him. “Since the public announcement that we would be supporting this new Kavalian government openly as they seek freedom, Keleru has lost much in the way of support.”

Icho took the pad. “Keleru is beginning to worry.” He said softly.

Aleus nodded his head. “He still holds the balance of power in a large way, but you are correct.”

“Where is he now?” Icho asked.

“He is heading to Hadaria.” Aleus replied.

Icho looked at him with wide eyes. “Hadaria? Is he insane? If the Union gets even a whiff of him on that planet he is a dead man.”

“I tried to express this to him but he says right now it is the safest place for him.” Aleus answered.

Icho shook his head. “Aleus my friend, in the future when I entertain the idea of taking the assistance of someone with a perverse and unhealthy obsession of a female Queen of the Union, hit me several times with a stick.”

Aleus nodded his head with a smile. “Only gently.” He stated.

“That fool is going to die a very painful death.” Icho said softly.

“Depending on who finally discovers him, I believe you are right.” Aleus said.

Icho shook his head. “Remain in contact with him but do not divulge any of our plans to him.” He ordered. “Once the fool reaches Hadaria we will be unable to help him in any way. He does not know our real identities and that is the way I want to keep it.”

“If he asks for assistance?” Aleus asked.

Icho shook his head. “His usefulness to us ended when his plan to have Dysea become his slave wife blew up in his face. Once we knew Leonidas still lived, Laustinous became a liability.”

“That is something we did not see either.” Aleus pointed out.

Icho nodded in agreement. “That was because the vampire bitch Armetus made his deputy took over when they did not think he would live. She has practically grown up with Androcles Leonidas and his siblings.

Her loyalty is to him. We escaped a very big explosion when the Kavalians went after Armetus. It was insane to send an assassination team after him. Had they killed him it would have made our lives and their future infinitely harder. Be glad they did not succeed.”

Aleus looked at him. “You sound almost happy when you say that.” He said.

Icho met his eyes. “We may be on different ends of the political arena Aleus my friend, but Armetus and I were once like brothers. We fought the same enemies. At least until I realized we were targeting all the wrong people. I respect him. He has faults, but he is utterly loyal to the Union. His only deficiency is that he plays fair. We do not.”

Aleus smiled. “No we do not.” He said.

“You have the reports about the boy?” Icho asked.

Aleus nodded his head and held out the stack of four data scrolls. “Everything dating back to just before he entered his Agoge. It wasn’t easy or cheap to obtain.”

Icho nodded his head. “I have no doubts of that. Still no luck in recruiting a member of the Durcunusaan?”

Aleus shook his head. “In my opinion it will not happen. You know how they are vetted. To push harder than we already have will only bring the attention of the Hippeis Sedla down upon us. That we do not want.” He said. “They are part of the Durcunusaan yes, but they are also much freer in how they do things if you get my meaning.”

Icho nodded his head. “Yes, I do.” He said. “And you are correct, we do not want them involved until it is too late for them to do anything. Cease whatever plans we have in trying to entice one of them to our cause. We need to start being more careful. Provoking the Hippeis Sedla is not being careful.” Icho looked up from the pad. “Is Captain Tarren on board?”

Aleus nodded his head. “Fully.” He said. “He knows we are the only ones who can protect him once he starts down this path that Ulana set him on. Now that she is no longer an option for him to find protection from the boy Prince, he knows we are his only hope.”

“Fear.” Icho said. “It is a powerful motivator.”

“Yes it is.” Aleus agreed.

“Insure the young Captain has his story straight.” Icho spoke. “He is still sticking to the same one?”

Aleus nodded. “He scented this Ne’Veha and gained permission from her father to take her as his mate, but when the Crown Princess came aboard the ship and talked with her then everything changed. He says she still carried his scent when the Crown Prince claimed her as his. If that is the case then he broke one of our most sacred laws dating back to before the Black Day.”

Icho smiled and nodded his head. “Something that I will point out very soon.” He stated. “And nothing you have found tells a different version?”

Aleus shook his head. “If there is anything that contradicts his story then only the Durcunusaan knows of it.” He spoke. “You saw how quickly he swept it aside as irrelevant.”

“What of the accusations that he was helping the OSG in their attack?” Icho asked.

Aleus shook his head. “Again... nothing that we can find says he did anything other than what he claims.”

“So not only did he steal his woman from him, they are trying to brand him a traitor.” Icho said. He smiled. “We could not ask for a better scenario Aleus. The fool boy handed it to us with his overactive libido.”

“Like father like son.” Aleus stated. “Records indicate that the King did almost the same thing where it involved Queen Aricia.”

“And we will use that as well.” Icho spoke calmly. “Soon my friend.” He said. “Soon we can begin the downfall of the Leonidas family and it will be because of their own actions. Then we can begin to rebuild the Union as we know it should be.”

“And it will be glorious.” Aleus agreed once more.

Twenty-four hours.

It had taken only twenty-four hours for the future and the path of the Tasmor people to be altered in a way unlike any she had ever envisioned. Saydia Daret stood sipping the steaming hot mug of what the Lycavorians called coffee. It was a dark liquid, but extremely rich tasting and quite delicious. After experimentation she had added a small bit of sweetener that they called honey and a dry, white powdered substance that altered the color of the coffee slightly. It also added to the incredible flavor and now Saydia had been drinking it for twelve hours. The sun was rising in the background, bathing the mountain range in an eerie glow of orange light that was exceptionally beautiful to gaze at. She could see dozens of Lycavorians moving around the temporary settlement going about their duty. It was a settlement that they had established in just two days and none of them appeared rushed or haggard in their appearance or their manner. The events of the last two days, fighting the Kintaur here on the surface and then confronting the large Kintaur fleet in orbit had apparently not fazed these men and women in the least. They acted as if this was all very normal to them. Saydia's eyes went to where she knew they had set up the medical facility and she could see a line of men, women and children already forming. Justice Nalmos had been able to bring nearly a hundred more of his people from the nearby surrounding mountains down into their camp last night and now they were beginning to receive the medical treatment that had been lacking for months and years.

Saydia heard the scuffle of feet behind her and she turned to see Perlyea move up behind her holding a similar mug in her hands. This mug was filled with Tasmor Mint tea however, something she had requested be brought down to the surface upon recovering consciousness. Her hands were wrapped around the mug just like Saydia's, as the warmth from the mug helped to chase away the slight chill in the early morning air. Saydia knew Perlyea to be a powerful woman and one not afraid to speak her mind. She was supremely intelligent and had helped the Tasmor Science Department develop many new things over the course of the last fifty years that were a benefit to their people. She expected Perlyea to march up to her and start demanding that Anthylea be brought up on charges. Saydia was stunned when she did begin to speak.

"Sovereign Regent, I must ask for your forgiveness." Perlyea spoke softly as she stopped in front of Saydia.

"Perlyea?" Saydia asked somewhat shocked.

"I have... I have allowed my arrogance and distrust of those who are not Tasmor to almost bring ruin to us." Perlyea spoke softly once more. "I cannot begin to offer enough words to..."

"Perlyea stop." Saydia spoke instantly.

Perlyea met her eyes. "My actions have... I could have brought total ruin to our people Sovereign Regent!"

Saydia turned slightly to face her. "This is not what I expected of you when you came up to me just now." She said honestly. "Is this another of your tests Perlyea? And do not address me formally Chief Counsel. I have never asked this from you and I will not start now."

Perlyea shook her head. "Drenia showed me the copy of the transmission from yesterday Sovereign Regent." Perlyea told her calmly. "This Lycavorian King is... he frightens me Saydia. What he did. The ease with which Namiri and Emylea say he beat the Kintaur First Warrior and seeing him kill him in such a manner. I... I almost brought the wrath of that man down upon our people."

Saydia nodded her head. "Yes you did." She spoke. "But so did I Perlyea Kalrr. We are both at fault because we were both blind. So many years of fighting the Kintaur, of thinking we were superior to all those around us? It made us both blind Perlyea, blind to things well beyond our control, or our ability to grasp."

Perlyea looked at her. "I will resign my position as Chief Counsel to our people." She spoke.

"You will do no such thing!" Saydia snapped at her. "You and I are going to stand together and usher in a new period for our people. We will meet with the King and his Queens in one hour and do just that."

"You would allow me to remain at my post after what I almost did?" Perlyea asked in shock.

"I would be a fool to let you go." Saydia spoke. "Your knowledge is beyond mine in many different ways Perlyea. I am not afraid to admit that. No matter how we have done things in the past, now we must do them differently. If we are to save our people, if we are going to insure that we go forward into the future, we must do that together."

Perlyea bowed her head slightly. "I am... I am in your debt." She said.

"No." Saydia was quick to tell her. "We have always been at odds Perlyea. We have many different views and ideas on how to do things. I believe now we should direct our energy in finding ways to discover common ground between us. We both want the same things Perlyea, now we must find a way to work together instead of against each other."

Perlyea was silent for a long moment before finally nodding her head. "You are correct." She said.

"It appears these new Lycavorians and especially their King; they require honesty in order to see us as friends." Saydia told her. "If there is anything that you have done in the past in regards to the Lycavorians from Ventori please tell me now. If I am right, these women and men could be what both of us have always wanted Perlyea. They could be staunch allies who will honor us and our ways and not look at us as objects of desire or dismissal."

Perlyea shook her head quickly. "No." She stated confidently and without hesitation. "The only research I have conducted is in regards to the gene enhancements. I abhor any type of experimentation Saydia, you know this."

Saydia nodded. "I thought as much." She stated. "And since I know it was not you who told the Kintaur that Namiri and Emylea were going to be here, someone in your department and who is close to you, is working for or with the Kintaur. It is the only way they could have gotten the information."

Perlyea nodded her head. "I agree." She spoke.

Saydia reached out and took her arm, squeezing it gently. "I never doubted you in that regard Perlyea. What happened to your mother and sisters, it would never allow you to work with the Kintaur no matter what they offered in return."

Perlyea met Saydia's eyes and felt relief fill her. She was right of course. Her mother and sisters had been captured and brutally raped and beaten for days by dozens of Kintaur before they were brutally murdered in front of her. She hated them to the extreme and no one could offer her enough to work with them against her own people.

"Thank you." Perlyea said.

"They will want to know how it is you were able to manipulate Pralor technology however." Saydia said. "At this juncture, honesty will gain us the most Perlyea. Surely you see that."

Perlyea nodded her head. "I do." She stated with a newfound firmness in her voice. "I gave the order for our people to extract any Pralor technology that they could find from the battlefields here. And we were able to determine how some of it worked on our own, some of the pieces were very general in terms of what they can do, and my people are very bright."

Saydia smiled, "No doubt." She stated. "What about equipment you could not figure out?"

Perlyea took a deep breath. "I have the COM channel of a Pralor." She told Saydia. "He made me a deal to release to him any equipment that we found on Ventori. In exchange he would provide me with details on lesser technology that the Pralor people hardly ever used. Among what he gave me, was the ability to use their computer storage units."

"What is this man's name?" Saydia asked.

Perlyea met her eyes. "His name is Lorendo, Chief Elder Lorendo of their Science Convention."

"...Lorendo... that fat little fuck!" Martin hissed angrily.

Saydia, Perlyea, Anthylea and Drenia stood silently as they watched him whirl and toss his empty coffee mug across the interior of the command center. The large mug shattered into dozens of small pieces against the interior metal wall and echoed loudly within the room. Anja and Aricia immediately reached for Martin while For'mya turned to the stunned group of Tasmor.

"Forgive him..." For'mya stated quickly. "We have had dealings with this Lorendo fool before and as you can see, our husband and mate is not very fond of him."

"You know... you know this man?" Saydia asked.

For'mya nodded her head. "He is responsible for almost killing our son Fedor when we first discovered the Pralor people in this quadrant. As it was, Fedor was gravely injured and if not for Anja's skill he would have died. This Lorendo also managed to physically strike Anja, which to Martin Leonidas, truly any Alpha wolf among our people, it is an immediate death sentence. He was not happy about these things and the only thing that saved Lorendo's life is another Praetorian like Martin. His name was Murano. He is with our son Androcles and our other children now. They will be joining us in several weeks."

Perlyea's eyes darted back and forth between For'mya and Martin and she shook her head rapidly fear gripping her now. "I do not know what he wanted the technology for! I give you my word!" Perlyea declared quickly with wide eyes as she watched Anja place her smaller hands on Martin's broad chest and Aricia reached up to grip his shoulder. "He never told me what..."

For'mya shook her head and held up her hand. "Our issues with him are in regards to what he did to Fedor and Anja, and other issues that we have since discovered he is responsible for. We did not know he had contact with your people." She stated.

Perlyea shifted on her feet more slowly now. "No one did. He made contact with me directly as head of our Science Division. I never... I never told anyone else."

For'mya glanced at Saydia for a moment and saw her nod slowly. "Perlyea told me before coming here this morning." She said. "She has been working at the same goal of improving our people and their status but doing it from another direction. I believe she knows now that we may need to bend out stringent laws and customs in order to achieve what we both want. I believe that what we both have seen in the last two days is more than either of us ever truly wanted to admit. We are not alone in the universe and we are not all powerful. We are... we are still children among the stars it seems."

"I believe that is true for all of us." For'mya said returning her gaze to Perlyea. "That is not something to be ashamed of."

"But your technology and knowledge... you are equal to the Pralors and they are far more advanced than any civilization within this quadrant of space. They are feared by so many." Perlyea spoke. "I... I only assumed that you would view us as they do; that you would see us as beneath them somehow."

For'mya shook her head. "We are not the Pralor people." She said evenly. "And I believe once they return to their ideals and values you will see a different side to the Pralor people. It will take time but it is already happening on their homeworld."

"That is... it is because of you isn't it?" Saydia asked.

For'mya nodded her head, "Part of it perhaps." She answered. "It would have happened eventually, but I believe our arrival out here has sped things along."

"There is so much you can... so much we can learn from you." Saydia spoke softly.

"Then work with us." Martin's voice spoke now and they all turned to see him standing to the side, Anja and Aricia beside him now. He was much calmer and far less menacing now. Martin stepped away from his wives and moved closer to Saydia. He stopped a respectful distance away, seeing her tense slightly and smelling the slight fear in her scent. "As For'mya has told you, we are not the Pralor people. I want friends and allies. We need them out here. Can we move beyond what has already happened and worked together?" His eyes went to Perlyea now.

She looked at him defiantly for a brief moment before speaking. "At what cost to us?" She finally asked with a neutral voice.

"I have only two questions." Martin said evenly. "Tobia has given us copious amounts of information about the Tasmor people. We have been studying it for days now. I know how your society works in a very rudimentary way. Yours is a female dominated and run society, I understand that. I also understand many of the reasons for this, so my first question is, are the men in your society mistreated or abused in any way?"

Saydia's eyes grew wide, "Certainly not!" She exclaimed. "We may be female dominated as you say, but we are not monsters! Males in Tasmor society may not have the same rights and privileges as females but they are not mistreated! They may have to work harder to achieve something because of their status, but it is not out of their reach completely. We have always been a female dominated species and the females have always held the power in government and our military. The females of our species have just always been the strongest and wisest. That does not preclude males from achieving these things however. They know this and they accept it. They are also the only means by which we can..."

Martin nodded his head. "I understand that part." He told her seeing her eyes grow wider. "Tobia explained a little of it to me. I will not tell you that I approve or disapprove for I have not been to your world and seen it for myself. To be honest it doesn't matter what I think." Saydia's eyes grew even wider at this admission and Martin smiled slightly. "I don't tell other people how to manage their lives. If I don't like it, if my people don't like it, then we just won't deal with them."

"King Leonidas, we have admitted to using your people's natural resistance and healing abilities but we have... I have never sanctioned anything that would intentionally hurt them. All of those who allowed us to use their DNA did so willingly when we asked them. I..." Perlyea spoke quickly but truthfully and this was detected by Martin and his wives immediately.

"I believe you." Martin told her meeting her gaze. "If I didn't, we wouldn't be having this conversation."

Perlyea appeared flustered and Saydia stepped closer to her. "You said you have two questions?" She asked.

Martin met her eyes now. "Do you want to conquer others?"

Saydia looked at him aghast. "Conquer others?" She gasped. "What... what purpose would that serve? I am... my people are not the Kintaur. We only wish to live in peace and be left alone."

This was also a very truthful statement and Martin knew that the moment he smelled it. He turned and looked at Anja, Aricia and For'mya standing together now and he nodded his head slowly. This did not go unnoticed by Saydia and the others and they looked between them not really understanding what was going on.

Martin turned back suddenly and looked at Saydia. "Then this is what I am going to do." He started. "What took place with my pilot never happened."

"But it did happen and I cannot begin to apologize enough for my..." Perlyea began.

Martin shook his head. "No, we're going to act like it never took place." He said. "This is us with a fresh start. Like we just met and none of this ever happened. To honor this, and to show you that I will honor your customs, my wives and mates will sit with you and discuss whatever it is you want to discuss. I believe that is how it is among your species correct?"

Saydia glanced at Perlyea with wide eyes and saw she also had a look of astonishment on her face at this declaration. She turned back to Martin. "You would... you would do this?" She asked.

"I have no desire to conquer, influence or direct what another species and their culture is." Martin told her. "If we get along, then I can be a really good friend, if not then I will leave you alone as long as you leave me alone. What you did for my people, that cannot be repaid Saydia Daret, but I will damn sure try and make it up to you and your people. From this day forward I would like to consider the Tasmor people a friend, and I look out for my friends. These Kintaur idiots want to start something with you because of what I did here, let them. I am not the Pralor people and I'll clean their clocks so fast that they'll wake up in the next century wondering what the hell just happened."

It was Anthylea who couldn't hold back the soft chuckle, for while she may not have understood the words fully, she did understand completely the implication of what he was saying. Martin looked at her and smiled. "See... I made her laugh; I'm not such a bad guy."

"You do not act as any King that I have ever read about." Saydia spoke finally.

Anja came forward now and leaned up against his side. "You have no idea." She said.

Martin smiled once more and looked at her. "Work with me Saydia Daret, be honest and forthright with us and you can expect the same in return from us. That is my promise to you." He held out his hand for Aricia and For'mya and they quickly moved up beside him. "I will leave you in the very capable hands of my wives and mates. They speak with my voice and heart, much better than I do at times. I have some other business to take care of so I will just slip out the door. I hope to see more of you and your people in the future. Let this day begin something that could last for many years to come."

Saydia was taken aback by his heartfelt words and she was even more stunned when he bowed his head to her out of respect and then turned to walk to the door. He was bellowing to someone in the distance as the door closed behind him and she turned back to the Queens. She shook her head quickly.

"Forgive me, he is, your husband is a very different man." Saydia said. "He is unlike any man I have ever met."

Anja looked at For'mya and Aricia with a smile. "That is truth." She said.

“He is quite unlike the brutish and unintelligent person that he projects outward to others isn’t he?” Perlyea echoed and her eyes went wide when she realized what she had said. She had spoken like the scientist she was and didn’t think that his wives were in front of her. “Oh my... forgive me my words.”

Aricia and the others laughed and it was Aricia who reached out and took Perlyea’s hand in hers. “You don’t know how correct you are Perlyea Kalrr.” She said.

“He is our husband and mate,” Anja said now as she came closer. “He has three advanced degrees, two of which he earned after becoming King. He could build you a super computer in a week, or take the engines apart on one of our ships. He also speaks nine different languages fluently and pretty soon he won’t need to use the implants we all have to understand yours.”

“Truly?” Saydia asked with an astonished expression.

Anja nodded her head. “He has this amazing skill that allows him to learn languages very quickly, and acts the way he does because he doesn’t want people to think he is something more than what he really is.”

“But he is one of these Praetorians from the Pralor past.” Anthylea spoke moving closer. “We know what they are for we have heard Tobia talking of them. She told us they had long since died. That none of them remained.”

For'mya nodded her head. “Martin has the blood of Pralors within him; the blood of the very first Praetorian Sumar.”

Saydia’s eyes grew wide once more, “The very first of their Praetorians.” She gasped. “Tobia spoke to me of him. Your husband is descended from his line?”

“Yes... as are all of our children.” Anja answered, “Though only four of our sons and one of our daughters actually have the active gene within them.”

“Namiri and Emylea have told me there are six of you.” Saydia said. “Is this true? Are there really six Queens?”

Aricia nodded in acknowledgement. “Our fellow Queens are on a different planet at the moment.” She replied, “Isabella, Dysea and Cirith.”

“And you... all of you are...?” Anthylea stammered her question.

Anja grinned now. “Yes, we all share Martin’s bed.” She answered with bright jade green eyes. “Very enthusiastically I might add. There is definitely more than enough of him to go around.”

For'mya and Aricia chuckled softly and nodded in agreement. “Oh yes.” For'mya said, “More than enough.”

“And you...?” Anthylea continued.

Aricia nodded once more. “Yes, we are also lovers.” She spoke proudly. “All of us. We share each other as well as Martin and we have for over a quarter century. And will continue to do so for many more years to come, with equal enthusiasm.”

“Avoi,” Anja spoke as she leaned into Aricia affectionately.

“This is normal among your people?” Saydia asked.

For'mya shook her head quickly. “No. It is actually quite rare for an Alpha to claim more than one wife and mate. There are perhaps three or four dozen instances within the entire Union of this happening.”

“And how large... how large is this Union?” Perlyea asked, “If I am allowed to ask that question?”

“There are roughly thirty-one trillion citizens of the Union.” Anja answered seeing their faces show their shock at this admission, “Nearly nine hundred different species call the Union home.”

“By everything we hold holy.” Saydia gasped.

“You are being very... forthcoming in what you are telling us.” Perlyea commented.

Aricia nodded her head. “Why should we not be? We have nothing to hide.” She told them. “Nor do we have ulterior motives regarding the Tasmor or anyone else. And for the most part anything we tell you can be found out quite easily by anyone willing to look.”

For'mya motioned for them to move to the table. “Let us sit please.” She told them. “I’m sure there are many questions you have of us, and many that we have of you. Foremost among them is what Anja wants to ask most of all. How can we help you save your people?”

“This Lorendo lied to me!” Perlyea hissed softly as they moved to the table. “He told me if I helped him he would give me the means to...”

“Do not blame yourself Perlyea Kalrr.” Aricia stated as she settled into one of the chairs. She waited as all of them took chairs at the large table. “He has been deceiving his own people for much longer than any of us knew. I would hazard a guess and say that he is the one who intercepted your transmissions requesting medical aide. That is why the request was never received by the Chief Elder Pralor Delnash or the head of their Medical Division Radra. He has been lying to you this whole time.”

Perlyea looked at her with wide eyes. “He... he intentionally did this?” She gasped.

For'mya nodded slowly in agreement with Aricia's words. “It would appear so.”

“But why?” Perlyea asked.

Anja shook her head now. “That doesn't matter.” She spoke confidently. “His lard ass days are numbered in this lifetime. I am a physician and a Researcher. I have a rough idea of what the issue might be after reviewing the results of my exam of Anthylea; my apologies for having to do that by the way.” She spoke looking at the exotic, dark skinned Tasmor woman.

Anthylea bowed her head slightly in recognition of the apology. “It appears it may have been more helpful to us than anything else.” She answered.

“Regardless... I am sorry.” Anja told her. “I do not like to forcible examine someone who does not want to be examined. It goes against everything I was ever taught. But it did help me to ascertain, at least in part, what the Sovereign Regent was implying. It is part of the reason why you requested the DNA from the Lycavorians on Ventori isn't it?”

Perlyea nodded now. “Yes.”

“I can help.” Anja spoke.

“What do you want in exchange for this help?” Saydia asked hesitatingly.

“Your decision to help our people saved millions Saydia Daret.” Aricia told her now from across the table. “You are responsible for generations of future children yet to be born. That is not a debt that can ever be repaid. Just as Martin has told you, we are not the Pralor people. For what you have done, what your people have done, we will help you to save yours.”

Anja leaned across the table. “Come with us to our ship.” She said. “All of you. You can bring security if you wish. You can then establish a connection from our ship to yours and you can show me your medical files on what you have worked on so far. Let us show you that we want nothing but to be friends.”

Saydia looked first at Perlyea and then and Anthylea. They both nodded their heads when she looked at them and then she turned back to Anja. “If we are going to change then I suppose it can begin with us.” She told Anja.

HONELZE MAIN PRALOR COLONY FORTUNE

They were so much more beautiful in person Jezima thought to herself as she gazed at them from the counter. Their skin was so vibrant and tanned and their hair so lustrous and long. She and Meral had let others take care of them when they first arrived for neither of them knew what to expect or how to react. Jezima's hands had yet to stop shaking for she could sense him in each of them so deeply. He was wrapped within their collective psyche like the strands of a fine tapestry. So interwoven were those Etheric strands that it was difficult to see where he ended and they began and Jezima could sense that is just how they wanted it to be. His Etheric resonance was like a burning beacon within the darkest abyss. It resonated within the Etheric realm, pulsed so beautifully that for a moment Jezima thought it was him. She knew this could not be the case, but there was no doubt that he was descended from her son. There was no doubt that he carried within him that same Etheric spark of Praetorian power. Raw, untamed but controlled power that he held in check by force of will alone. Jezima had no idea how this could be, and she truly did not care.

The gods of fate and destiny had finally answered the prayers she had stopped praying centuries ago. They had given back to her at least a part of what they had taken. His image alone she had stared at for what seemed like hours after first seeing it. She had studied his face, so handsome and strong and it was like she was gazing into her own son's face and eyes. The likeness was unnerving, but it only took her moment to overcome that and then she found her fingers tracing the image on the screen as more tears flowed and she realized that her bloodline had not died with her sons. It had lived on somehow and now it was so very close to her.

Before her were three of the wives he had claimed as his own, three of the six women that shared his heart and his bed according to the reports which she had gone back and reviewed with Meral. They had clutched each other tightly and cried while watching the interview he had given. His voice was the same, the corners of his eyes as he spoke, the way his lips moved when he smiled or laughed. It was him.

It was her son.

It was Meral's older brother.

It was Sumar.

It was easy for her to see him in each of them and the other three women who were his. She could feel them just on the edge of her mind, and she knew they had to be somewhere close by for her to sense them as she did. Their combined ability to shield their Etheric resonance was astonishing to say the least, by Jezima had learned a few tricks of her own through the many years she had been alive. The blond elven female and two of those who were not here with them echoed with Etheric power yet unrealized Jezima took note. One was a raven haired beauty with blue eyes unlike anything she had ever seen before and the other had hair the color of red silk. The three of them carried him within themselves more deeply than the others, but this made no difference apparently. She could feel their devotion to him and to each other in every way. She could feel his utter commitment to each one of them burning within their essence. The depth of the love between them was something Jezima had never felt before in her lifetime and its power was unquestioned.

They carried themselves with an almost regal like grace, talking with others and smiling and laughing softly as they ate. There was no doubt within them; no arrogance in the least though they all held the title of Queen. Jezima wanted to go to them and embrace them ever so tightly; to speak with them and be with them and ask them hundreds of questions that they probably did not have the answers to.

[Mother?] Meral's soft voice echoed within her mind in a tightly shielded connection they had shared and nourished for centuries.

[They are breathtaking Meral.] Jezima spoke in reply as she turned slightly and watched Meral come up beside her.

[Very much so.] Meral agreed squeezing her arm. [Do you feel him within them mother?]

Jezima nodded her head. [Oh yes... so pure and so bright. He resonates as brightly as your brother ever did child.]

[I feel it as well.] Meral said.

[They are very intuitive.] Jezima spoke. [They sensed something when they first arrived you know. They have been looking over here ever since I came into the room.]

[Is it wise to remain mother?] Meral asked.

[We have asked the questions for thousands of years Meral.] Jezima told her. [Before us stand three who could answer some of those questions.]

[They may not even know what blood they carry within them mother.] Meral said.

Jezima shook her head slowly. [They know daughter.] She said. [They know.]

[How though?] Meral asked. [How is it possible they are here? How is it possible Sumar had children? They told us his ship was destroyed in an Ion storm.]

[I do not know daughter.] Jezima said. [Do you doubt what you feel?]

Meral shook her head. [No. Never.]

Jezima looked at her. [Then perhaps it is time to ask these questions.]

[When I saw him on the VID Monitor I... for a fleeting second I thought...] Meral said softly looking away, a single tear rolling down her cheek.

[I felt the same thing Meral.] Jezima said. [But there is one thing I know with complete certainty. If your brother still lived he would have found a way to discover that we too survived. He would have come for us.]

Meral nodded her head. [I know.]

[I have been at peace with your brother's passing for many years.] Jezima said. [Perhaps this is the way the gods in the Rift of Time have seen fit to give back to me. To us. Our blood Meral. It stands before us now.]

[The blond one... an elf she is called.] Meral spoke. [She is more powerful than the other two. At least in an Etheric sense. There are two others as well that are not here but I can sense them. They are equal if not more powerful than she is. The other three are strong in their own right however.]

Jezima nodded her head. [Just as I have felt. These three are tied to him more tightly than the others but their devotion to each other is beyond question, as is their devotion to him.]

[And his to them mother.] Meral said. [I can feel him within each of them, even those who are not here. His resonance echoes deeply within all of them.]

[Yet we cannot sense him.] Jezima commented. [That tells me he knows what he is and he has discovered a way to disguise himself that even we do not know. A way your brother did not teach us.]

[That would mean he knows what he is.] Meral said quickly with wide eyes.

[Yes.] Jezima said.

[Could Murano know?] Meral asked.

Jezima shook her head. [I do not know.] She answered. [I have not been able to sense Murano for weeks now. It is almost as if he just disappeared.]

Meral stiffened slightly. [Mother the blond one has taken note of us.] Meral said. [She is making her way over here.]

Jezima shook her head at Meral's tugging on her arm. [No.] She spoke firmly. [We have hidden for too long and now I will not hide any longer.]

Meral was going to reply but suddenly the elven female was in front of them staring at them with bright emerald eyes. Her four inch high elven ears curved elegantly inwards towards her head but the tips poked through the strands of her silky platinum blond hair. She was tall and extremely well built from what Jezima could see. She was the perfect combination of muscular definition and feminine allure. All of them were to be honest. She had maneuvered through the throngs of men and women who were present in the large room easily, the other two women right behind her, and almost before Jezima could blink they were in front of her.

"Excuse me...?" Dysea spoke as she felt Bella and Cirith come up on either side of her. "Do we... have we ever met before? We feel as if we should know you somehow. Were you part of Chief Elder Pralor Delnash's crew on Onterom perhaps?"

Jezima couldn't help but notice that her voice was like musical notes in its tone, so soft and warm with a slight lilt. She glanced quickly to the two dark haired women on either side of her. All of them were nearly equal in height, and all of them shared exceptionally feminine but equally muscular forms it seemed. The angular faces of the two dark haired females were quite exotic in their own right, one of them with deep dark eyes and the other with bright hazel green eyes. She glanced at Meral quickly and then back to Dysea.

"No child... we have never met." She finally stammered out the words. "Can I get you more tea?"

Isabella pressed close to Dysea. "You are... you are the owner of this establishment aren't you?" She asked.

Jezima nodded her head. "My daughter Meral and I, yes." She replied.

[She is hiding something.] Cirith spoke. [I sensed her heart rate elevate for a fraction of a second.]

[Cirith is correct Dysea.] Bella agreed. [I heard it too.]

[She looks so much like... we should know who these women are. I feel that very deeply. We should know who they are.] Dysea said.

Dysea didn't take her eyes from the older woman as they conversed in the special Etheric connection the six of them had established ever since Cirith had joined them almost a full year ago. It was a special and very powerful connection that allowed all of them to speak with one another shielded or otherwise since none of them ever spoke within Mindvoice below a top Tier Six level. Even Martin would not breach this special connection his wives shared and cultivated just for themselves. They had formed this connection using each of their own Etheric strands within Mindvoice and then blended them together over the course of many weeks.

Jezima may not have been able to hear what they were saying but she knew immediately that they were speaking within the Etheric realm within a connection she could never hope to discover or breach. That fact alone gave her pause as she gazed at them.

[Dysea look at her deeply.] Cirith began as she gazed keenly at the two women and all the training she had undergone with her father came rushing back to her. [Look at her eyes; the corners of her mouth, the shape of her nose. They are related yes but we have... we have seen these distinguishing features before.]

[Mother, they are speaking within an Etheric connection more powerful than any I have ever felt!]
Meral exclaimed while maintaining a blank expression of pleasantness. [Gods it is so...]

[Powerful!] Jezima finished her daughter's sentence.

[Ussta Che do you feel it?] Isabella remarked.

Dysea nodded her head. [Yes... an Etheric connection almost exactly like our own. So powerful and...]
Dysea's emerald green eyes grew slightly wider as realization came to her. She knew those features that Cirith spoke of. They all knew them. And they knew them so very intimately, "Son vada carians!" Dysea gasped aloud now, drawing Isabella and Cirith's eyes to her face.

"Dysea?" Isabella questioned as she moved even closer.

Dysea's emerald eyes were wide in disbelief as she stepped closer to Jezima. "Can you not see it Bella?" She asked softly as she brought her hand up hesitantly. "I have... I have seen their faces before."

"Dysea where?" Cirith asked in awe. While Cirith knew she was loved by Martin and her fellow Queens unconditionally and she returned this emotion without pause, she also knew she was the newest among them. She had not experienced everything they had seen and done before she had joined them, and they were only able to share so much with her over time.

Dysea stared into Jezima's deep, dark eyes and it was like looking into those same eyes she had witnessed so long ago, the same eyes that Martin gazed at her with. "Almost thirty years ago." Dysea spoke almost reverently. "It was the night I stood beside Nauta Melme at Thermopylae and the vision of his father appeared to us. The very night that Martin began to discover who he really was!"

Jezima could no longer contain herself and she reached up quickly and took Dysea's outstretched hand and brought it to her face. As her palm went flat against Jezima's cheek, Dysea's eyes grew wider still as she saw flashes not of the future, but of the past. She gasped slightly, as Meral moved closer to her mother and reached up to place her hand over her mother's hand and the images became even more vivid and real. Isabella and Cirith had seen Dysea's sometimes eerie power in action before and they did not hesitate to move closer to her and press their bodies tightly against hers. The physical contact between them was more than enough and they both inhaled sharply and gasped aloud as those same images flooded their own minds now as well.

The men and women in the dining area began to take notice of what was happening near the counter and who was involved. They were all Pralors and all of them knew from the soft, blue Etheric glow fluctuating between the five women that whatever was going on was far beyond what they were able to comprehend.

Tears had begun to flow in five different sets of eyes as the combined experiences of the five women meshed perfectly because of who they were and what flowed in their blood. Images of childhood and adulthood flashed across the consciousness of the five most powerful Etheric users on Honelze by a very wide margin. No other Pralor could come close to the Etheric ability that these five women possessed and they knew it almost instinctually. It was the reason that their two separate shielded conversations slowly gave way to one, and five minds reached across the divide of time and came together. It was Jezima who reached up with her other hand and grasped Isabella's shoulder, even as Meral moved closer to her mother and used her other hand to draw Cirith closer to them.

Dysea's emerald eyes were wide in shock as she stared at Jezima and knowledge flooded through her. Her heart raced as Jezima's warm skin burned against her palm.

"You... you are Nauta Melme's... you are Sumar's mother and sister!" She gasped aloud seeing the tears flowing from Jezima's eyes once more. "You are our Nauta Melme's beloved family!"

"Show... show him to us child." Jezima stammered out the words. "You are three of the six most precious jewels that he holds dearest of all. Even I can sense that. You hold his essence within you. Show him to us, so that we may see what we had never believed or hoped could be." Jezima burst into a flood of tears and gripped Dysea's hand tighter. "Show him to me child, so that I may see everything that I never dreamed could be."

There was no hesitation or pause, both Isabella and Cirith crowding closer to Dysea, tears now flowing freely from their eyes.

Dysea blinked away her own tears and smiled brightly. "Allow us... see through our eyes who your grandson is; who your son was."

Lexi stood off to the side of the five women who were now clutching each other ever so tightly. She had taken up a position to protect her three charges the moment they moved over to the strange woman at the counter. Lexi soon came to understand what was happening for Dysea and Isabella had never held anything back from her, and now Cirith was the same way. Lexi turned as her small detachment finished gently prodding the other men and women in the dining area to leave. The tall Spartan moved up beside her with the elven female. Both of them, along with Lexi, had been part of Dysea's Durcunusaan detachment since its inception.

"Lexi?" The Spartan asked, puzzlement showing on his face at what he saw happening with his Queens.

"Contact Captain Nelay on the HEART OF FIRE Menal," Lexi ordered referring to the LEONIDAS IIA-Class Strike Cruiser they were using as their Command ship. "I want a full Enomotiai deployed to the surface within the hour. I don't care who they have to scrape together to fill it out, as long as all of them have seen combat. Have Captain Nelay send word back to Manne that we will need additional Durcunusaan forces moved here by the end of the day tomorrow."

"The Durcunusaan who deployed with us are stretched thin Lexi." Menal told her. "Most went with the King to Ventori. There are only a handful left on Manne and Queen Anja's orders were for them to guard Lady Ceale."

Lexi blinked and nodded her head. "I keep forgetting we are not with our full Strike Group." She said. "Menal, return to the HEART OF FIRE and contact General Vengal yourself. Explain what we have discovered and to send more Durcunusaan. I will speak with General Koguth and have him assign a squad of his men to them now."

"Lexi... who are these women?" The elven female asked now.

Lexi turned back to look at the five women now huddled together and were gripping each other very tightly. "They are the King's great, great grandmother and his great, great Aunt." Lexi spoke in reply as she looked back to them. "They are Lord Sumar's mother and sister." She finished the sentence and saw their eyes go wide at this knowledge. "They are the King's family, and they will be protected at all costs."

SPARTA'S WRATH ORBITING AUSTROVA

Murano moved quickly into the large port lounge, his eyes searching the many men and women who occupied the lounge until he found her. Mari was staring up into Deion's face as they stood beside the view window, her arms wrapped tightly around his waist and his arm holding her tightly. Mari turned instantly when she felt him and Deion's eyes followed hers as they watched him cross the distance in long but hesitant strides. Murano could not believe what he felt within Mari's full Etheric resonance now. She had dropped all pretense of hiding who she was and her Etheric resonance burned so very brightly. Just as brightly as many of his fellow Praetorians had so many centuries ago. He could sense how deeply intertwined she was with Deion now and while she did not radiate as brightly as he did, when combined together as they were now, the two of them were beacons. He watched as Deion leaned over and Mari accepted his loving kiss and then he was turning to face him and walking towards him across the room. No words were spoken as Deion passed him and then suddenly he was beside Mari and she gazed at him with stunning blue/green eyes and that almost carefree smile.

"Hello Papa." She said warmly.

Murano blinked several times and shook his head slightly. He met her gaze finally. "Mari I... how... how is this possible?" He finally stammered.

Mari chuckled softly and reached out to take his hands. "It's simple really." She spoke in reply. "You and my mother had a wonderful few weeks together and I am the result."

Murano looked at her evenly. "That is not what I meant." He stated evenly. "Tobia... she never... she never told me! Why wouldn't she have told me about you?"

Mari shook her head. "I do not know what my mother was thinking back then." She answered him. "I know that she wanted me to have the very best life could offer and that is why she let Tenne Delnash raise me as his own. Why she let me believe I was their child."

"Delnash knew?" Murano gasped in shock, not noticing that she had used the ancient language of the Lycavorian people. He didn't realize that Mari's times with Deion were already changing her, though Mari knew exactly what was happening and she embraced every bit of it.

Mari reached out and took his hands. "Papa... you cannot be angry with anyone." She stated to him. Murano looked at her. "Do not call me that." He said softly.

Mari blinked in surprise. "You are my father, why would I not call you that?"

"I am not your father." Murano spoke. "I did not know you existed! I should have felt you! I should have sensed you but..." He shook his head. "I have no right to be your father. You..."

Mari stepped closer to him and squeezed his hands tightly. "You have been and always will be my father." Mari told him. "Sit with me and I will tell you everything I know. Even mother does not know I have discovered everything. Kesyla helped me, but I have known for over five years who my parents are."

"Mari, I didn't know!" Murano gasped. "By the Ancients within the Rift of Time, I didn't know!"

Mari reached up and put a finger to his lips. "And now that you do know, I want to discover everything." She told him. "Soon my mother will know what I have discovered. She will begin to feel it within me. She will feel within me, just as you now do, no anger, no distrust and only love. I want to discover my mother and father and who they are."

Murano looked at her. "Mari..."

"You still love mother, don't you Papa?" Mari asked him.

Murano did not answer for a long moment as he stared at her. She was the image of Tobia, so beautiful and intelligent. Though her hair was similar to Tobia's, the dark reddish tint in it set her apart. "I... I never stopped loving her." He spoke finally, his words like a whisper across the space between them.

Mari smiled brightly. "No more than she still loves you." She said.

Murano's eyes went wide at this. "What? I left her without... I left her without so much as an explanation as to why!"

Mari shook her head. "Mother knew why Papa." She said. "She did not tell you about me because she did not want you to remain when everything within you at the time called for you to punish yourself for what you perceived you had allowed to happen."

"Mari how could you...?"

"You no longer feel that way do you Papa?" She asked him. "Ever since we discovered Deion's father and his family, the weight you carried upon you is gone. The doubt and shame you had within you was never yours to carry father. Never. It was never meant to be yours to carry. That is why Chief Elder Sumar... that is why Deion's grandfather left you behind. He knew what was going to happen in the millennia to come. You discovered this the moment you touch Deion's father. When you made this discovery all the pain and anguish you carried for so long was lifted."

Murano gazed at her with wide eyes for her words described exactly what he felt and what he had discovered since coming to realize and know what Martin and his sons were. "How do you know that?" He finally asked her.

Mari blushed slightly. "There are advantages to being loved by Deion Leonidas Papa." She said with a shy smile. "Their family has such a unique and beautiful connection among them. They share everything with each other. Deion showed me what his father and brother sensed within you when you first realized who they were. He has showed me so much Papa. About you, about mother, about what they have discovered. I want to share that with you now, so that you understand and know, at least partially why mother did what she did. And when we are finally back together... I want us to be the family we should have been so long ago."

Family.

Murano had never once considered himself worthy to have a family. He reached up tentatively and place his large hand against Mari's cheek and saw her eyes glisten with tears. All he had thought lost for so long had never been lost at all. It had only been hidden behind a wall of shame and doubt that had clouded his perceptions for too long. Mari was right. His daughter was right. He now knew that Sumar had never intended for him to carry such a burden.

Murano reached out and pulled Mari into his embrace and squeezed her tighter than he had ever squeezed anything in his life and he allowed the tears to come. Mari was openly weeping in joy as she reached around and hugged him back, and she could feel Deion's aura sweep around her with love and happiness and support. Even now his aura could tell her so much about his mood and he had not fully turned her yet. Mari relished and looked forward to that day, but for now she would spend her time discovering her father, and soon her mother. Then she would have the family that she knew was always meant to be. She closed her eyes in happiness as Murano held her close and buried his face in her hair.

Deion leaned against the doorframe of the lounge and smiled. He could feel Mari's delight and happiness and her love for him. This day had been a long time coming and he allowed the happiness he felt for her permeate his being so that his siblings could feel it as well and share in her happiness. Nara was the first to acknowledge this and he felt his twin pulse him with her sisterly aura from several decks down.

Deion turned when he felt the hand on his shoulder and he saw Dorian beside him. "I am happy for you fervon. For both of you." He said.

"It is long overdue." Deion spoke.

Dorian nodded his head. "Yes it is." He agreed. He squeezed Deion shoulder tightly. "Andro is waiting for us." He said. "Leave them to discover all they can."

Deion nodded and pushed away from the door frame and they turned to head down the corridor. "Something come up?" Deion asked.

"The Vanari First Regent and Coren landed a few minutes ago. They have two Vanari females with them that apparently have additional information about this fool Ardan. He wanted all of us to hear it before the Board of Regents meets tomorrow."

Deion grinned. "That should be interesting." He said.

Dorian nodded. "No bets here." He said.

"Then we go and get Laren and Ladur." Deion spoke.

Dorian looked at him. "Andro and I." He said softly shaking his head. "No one else has to risk themselves."

Deion shook his head quickly. "Oh no brother." He said throwing his arm over Dorian's shoulders as they walked. "If this Laren and Ladur are part of you and Andro, then they are part of us. It doesn't matter a damn about all that that funky DNA sibfla that mother knows so well. Carians, there were times when I would get a headache just listening to her try and explain the simplest things."

Dorian laughed and nodded his head. "I have seen those times remember, in father's memories. Andro's as well." He stated.

"Then you know what I mean." Deion smiled knowing that Dorian would understand simply because those memories were part of him. "This is family business fervon. And we always stick together."

Dorian nodded. "That we do." He said.

"...Moved up the meeting with the Board of Regents to this afternoon." Alrerin was speaking confidently now. The events of the last few days had infused him with new energy and hope for the future and nothing was going to deter him from his goals it seemed. "We cannot hope to hide what is happening for too much longer. The OSG personnel on Austrova will soon begin to reach out to those Vanari who help and support them and they will discover that their entire network is being attacked."

"Agreed." Andro spoke from his chair at the head of the massive conference table. Denali, Dorian and Deion were seated along the length of the massive table but were keeping quiet. Andro wanted them present to understand what was going on but the consensus of the three brothers was to remain silent and observe.

"You were successful I take it?" Coren asked.

Andro nodded his head. "We secured the release of seventy-three Vanari being held prisoner as well." He replied. "Eliani, Serale and Inamarno are still treating nine of them who were held the longest. The remainder are being taken care of in one of the lounges. I will arrange for them to be returned to their families if that is what you wish."

Alrerin shook his head. "No." He said. "Coren, Asay and I have talked of this already." He rose to his feet and moved to the massive view window that now held a view of Austrova that he had rarely taken the time to enjoy. The planet was beautiful from orbit. He turned back to where Androcles sat as his azure eyes remained fixed on him. "If they wish to be returned then yes, however, if they are hesitant in any way and do not want to return just yet they will not be pressured. They have had to endure heinous crimes against them and I will not force them to return unless this is what they wish."

Rinel looked up from his chair where he sat beside Coren and Nyosa. “The Union can provide for them until they wish to make a decision First Regent. There is ample room for them on Amanuce.”

Alrerin looked at Andro. “Prince Androcles?”

Andro nodded his head without hesitation. “If that is what you wish, then yes.”

“Asay is going to present all of the information we have discovered when the Board of Regents convenes.” Alrerin continued.

“How much support does Ardan have?” Andro asked leaning forward in his chair.

“Far more than we first thought.” Coren answered. “However, we don’t know if those who support him are aware of everything he has allowed in the last decades. Or his deep connections to the OSG and how far they extend.”

Asay looked at Androcles from her seat beside Nellian. She was gripping his arm tightly with her hands and hadn’t let go of him since they had first arrived on this ship. “What of Kinryn Aal Samaur?” She asked.

Andro looked at Nellian. “Captain?”

“I have two of my finest protecting her Milord.” Nellian answered. “Twin brothers who were born in Sparta. They have been members of my Durcunusaan detachment for eight years.”

“What she knows we cannot lose.” Asay spoke. “She must not be exposed for any reason. She is already beside herself with grief and shame for what Ardan has forced upon her through the years. Things she went along with willingly because she thought he cared about her. I will not see her dragged through the mud because she had the strength to come to me.”

Andro nodded his head. “Nellian... make room for her here on SPARTA’s WRATH. She will remain under our protection for however long is needed. Transfer your detachment here. We have six decks of living quarters that have not been assigned yet. Make it happen.”

Nellian nodded his head. “As you order.”

“And chose a set of quarters for yourself and Regent Asay.” Andro spoke seeing her eyes grow wider at this announcement. “Coren, I assume you will want her to remain as part of your staff.”

Coren nodded his head with a smile. “Yes.”

Asay glanced between them. “What is this?” She exclaimed. “I will not be hidden away or forced off my own planet Coren! First Regent I...”

“This is the safest course of action Asay.” Alrerin told her. “At least for the immediate future.”

Coren met her eyes. “I will be assuming the role of Vanari Ambassador to the Union Asay.” Coren told her. “You will be my Deputy.”

“Why?” Asay demanded.

Alrerin returned to his chair. “Regardless of what happens later today, you will be in extreme danger.” He told her. “Right now there are four of us who know everything about what Ardan has done. And I’m quite sure that is not everything he is involved in. The OSG and their cohorts may be severely injured after these next few days but they will not be without their means. I will not risk you, Kinryn Aal Samaur or Coren by having you remain here on Austrova to be targeted.”

“We don’t know how deeply our own people may be involved Asay, or to what extent they are willing to go to keep their involvement secret.” Coren picked it up. “We know that the OSG will do whatever is necessary, and there are just too many unknowns right now for us to plan for everything.”

“So we will hide?” Asay asked.

Alrerin shook his head. “Not at all.” He answered. “Coren, yourself and my daughter will be on the front lines of what we must do. You will just be in a place where the OSG dare not tread to go.”

“How long?” Asay asked more sedately.

“That will depend on the outcome of what happens today.” Alrerin answered. “When we reveal all of what we know about Ardan and what he has done that we know about, I am hoping this will be the catalyst for our people to seek the change they we have denied for too long.” He leaned back in the chair. “Ardan is clever and well connected but even he cannot fight an entire people. Today we will begin to erode whatever support he has and we will continue to do so over the coming weeks.”

“I will do what I said I would do First Regent.” Androcles told him. “It is what my father and mothers would expect me to do. What my people would expect me to do.”

Alrerin nodded his head. "I know young man." He spoke. "I would expect no less. Your actions will only serve to show others that we must change or be forever left in the past."

"What about you Alrerin?" Asay asked now. "You will be a larger target than Coren and I. For dozens more reasons."

Rinel nodded his head. "And that is why I will remain and take command of his Security Detail with my daughter Ryana." He explained. "I am Vanari with Union rank and privileges. I am a citizen of both cultures and worlds. That will make the OSG think twice before trying something."

"What can we expect the reaction will be from other species?" Asay asked.

"The Rothryn people will stand with the Vanari." The voice echoed now and they turned to see Dyack enter the conference room with Aleatia on one arm and Sehri on the other. They watched as Androcles got to his feet and moved around the table. He stopped in front of Dyack and the two men embraced tightly before Andro turned to Aleatia and lifted her hands to his lips to kiss her knuckles. Then they watched as Sehri leaned into him and they shared a sizzling kiss of love and passion in front of everyone and did not care who saw. Dyack turned to look at Alrerin and the others with a smile on his face at his daughter's actions. "First Regent, I pledge the support of my people to you in whatever form we can provide."

Alrerin looked surprised at this announcement. "I thought... I thought that many in your government wanted to keep a distance between our peoples."

Dyack nodded his head. "That is true, but after what Androcles and Sehri discovered in rescuing your people, things will change on Lentani much more quickly. And part of that change will mean assisting you."

Alrerin looked confused. "I don't understand." He said.

Dyack stepped up to him, taller and wider than Alrerin by a good margin. "We may be called Rothryn..." He spoke. "But we are Lycavorians by anyone's definition. We will do what our instinct and blood calls for us to do. Standing with those who are our friends among them." He held out his hand to Alrerin. "I have appointed my son Kelelm as our representative to you and Colonel Rinel. Should the need arise, you will be safe among the Rothryn people."

Alrerin took the offered hand. "We may need your help Praetor Dyack." He said.

Dyack nodded. "And you will have it." He spoke confidently. "Without hesitation or doubt."

Alrerin looked at Androcles as he stepped up to them. "This day will... it will be the beginning of a new future First Regent." He said. "We must have patience in our endeavors, but the ultimate goal is unchanged."

"No it is not." Alrerin agreed as Coren and Asay moved up beside him.

"Then let us move forward into the future together." Andro spoke.

Alrerin nodded his head with a smile. "A bright future my boy." He spoke. "A bright future for all of us."

HONELZE MAIN PRALOR COLONY FORTUNE

"...Ancients within the Rift of Time bless me." Jezima muttered softly as she shook her head.

Jezima had not been this happy and animated since the birth of Meral nearly forty-seven thousands years ago. She had also not been able to stop crying in the last two hours as she gripped Dysea's hand tightly in one of her own and Isabella's hand in the other. They sat at the large table where they had been having dinner, most of the plates and glasses still on the table but now moved to one end as the five women sat tightly together, unwilling to move very far from each other. Meral and Cirith were sitting beside one another, their shoulders touching and their hands clasped tightly.

This had been an enlightening experience for all of them, but more so for Cirith Leonidas without doubt. She knew, minus any question that Martin and her fellow Queens loved her as much as they loved each other. However, being able to experience this firsthand and not through the many memories they had shared with her within Mindvoice, it meant more to her than anything else. It brought her closer to Martin in a way nothing ever could and it made her see just how much she loved each of them in return. She may have initially believed that she had been meant for Martin's father and Gorgo, but as each day passed her by she realized more and more that destiny and fate had always intended that she be with Martin and Dysea and Isabella and all of them. This is where she had always belonged.

Cirith looked up at Jezima's words and smiled seeing Dysea lean closer. "This is... we had never imagined this." Dysea spoke softly. "We had hoped... Martin had hoped that we would find someone who knew Sumar. Who knew his grandfather? Someone he could ask all the questions he has held within him for so long. Someone who could tell him what the memories mean."

Meral looked at her through tear stained eyes. "He has Sumar's memories?" She asked.

Isabella nodded now. "When he became, when Sumar took a Lycavorian wife, he became Lycavorian. One of the many traits that Lycavorians have is the ability to pass many of their memories to their children within Mindvoice. Within the Etheric realm using images and different memory engrams." Isabella laughed softly. "Melyanna would be able to explain it better than I but we know that Martin has these memories within him and by virtue of that so do our children."

"All of them?" Jezima gasped.

"They all have these memories within them yes, but only Androcles and our other pureblood children have the ability to actually see them." Isabella answered. "Only they are etherically strong enough to see them and make sense of them. Sumar passed the Praetorian gene to them within their blood."

Jezima's eyes grew wider now. "They are all Praetorians?" She gasped in disbelief.

"Androcles, Denali..." Cirith saw Meral and Jezima turn to gaze at her intently. "Deion, Nara, and Dorian. All of them pureblood. Anja believes that the gene can be passed to those who are not pureblood but it will never be active as it is within Androcles and the others."

"But even in a dormant state," Meral spoke excitedly but evenly. "Even in a dormant state it would allow them to do things that others cannot!"

Dysea nodded her head as her mind flashed with images of Zarah and Eliani. "Yes, this has manifested itself in different forms among some of our other children, and if they are bonded to a dragon it only makes it more pronounced."

Jezima shook her head. "Bonded to a dragon within the Etheric realm?" She spoke softly. "That is something that no one ever believed could happen."

"There is another..." Isabella told them. "Jomann... he is a pureblood who has now taken our daughter Eliani as his wife and mate. They are soulmates, Anomes in our ancient language. Jomann is from another blood lineage that dates back to when Sumar was on Lycavore. He is also Androcles' closest friend right now along with Dutkne, his Praetorian Mage."

"Dutkne?" Meral asked.

Isabella nodded her head. "Wayonn's great grandson."

"Wayonn!" Jezima almost shouted as she sat straight up. "Wayonn lives?"

"It was Wayonn who first put Martin and our children on the path to discovery." Dysea explained. "He has been with us ever since we discovered all of this. Almost a year now."

"By the gods!" Jezima stammered as she gripped Dysea's hand tighter. "How... how many more?"

Isabella shook her head. "We don't know." She answered. "There were two City Ships that crashed on populated worlds. The one on Lycavore and another on a different planet. A planet that held my people."

"You don't speak as if that was a good thing Bella?" Meral asked.

Isabella shook her head. "It wasn't." She replied softly. She looked at Jezima. "The ship that crashed on the planet with my people held the Etheric essence of Sumar's twin brother Xaxon."

Jezima's hands went to her mouth in horror and she shook her head. "No!" She gasped aloud.

Meral shook her head almost angrily. "His Etheric essence was purged from his physical body!" She spoke heatedly. "He was exiled from our homeworld for his crimes against our people! For starting the first war with the Scourge! He was responsible for billions of deaths! He was a..."

"He was a monster." Jezima muttered softly.

"We don't know the whole history of what happened." Dysea spoke now. "It led to thousands of years of war between vampires of the High Coven and Lycavorians. Through the millennia many vampires saw it was wrong and defected to the Union. It was our oldest son Androcles who ended this war only a few months ago."

"Ended it?" Jezima gasped. "How?"

Isabella smiled warmly. “He took a leap of faith.” She said.

Meral choked up slightly when she said that and they looked at her. “That... that is what Sumar would have done.” She rasped.

Jezima gripped Dysea and Isabella’s hands tighter. “I must... I must see him. I must touch him. Where is he child?”

“He is on a planet in another sector that held our people.” Dysea explained. “Ventori. It is a planet that the Pralor people used for one of their Seed Missions that included Lycavorians. Our species is very hardy it seems, and we adapt better than most to different climates.”

“Seed Missions!” Meral hissed in disgust. “They were an abomination no matter their purpose of new life. We had no right to do that. To act like gods.”

Dysea chuckled softly and looked at her. “Our son Androcles would tend to agree with you.” She said. “Though he would describe it in much more colorful and not at all pleasant words.”

“And Martin?” Jezima asked.

“Nauta Melme is...” Dysea looked at Isabella and Cirith. “It is not a topic he likes to entertain shall we say.”

“No.” Cirith echoed her words. “Not at all.”

“We must go to him.” Jezima said. “Meral and I have to see him.”

“I don’t know if he would want you placed in danger.” Bella spoke. “He is sometimes overly protective of those he loves and Ventori is not a secure location.”

Jezima shook her head frantically. “We must see him!” She exclaimed. “I have to... I have to touch him! He is so deeply embedded within all of you... but I cannot... I must touch him for myself to know that my prayers have finally been answered.”

“Jezima we...” Dysea began.

“I will take them.” The male voice spoke now and all of them turned to see Wayonn standing in the doorway of the building. “Martin has secured Ventori quite well. At least for now.” He continued speaking as he moved slowly into the building as Jezima and Meral came to their feet with looks of disbelief on their faces once more. He stopped only a few feet from them.

“Now that you have told them where he is Dysea, if Jezima and Meral are anything like I remember them to be, they would find a way off this planet to go to him and there is nothing any of us could do to stop them.” Wayonn finished. “And I think we all know that Martin would be very upset if we tried.”

“Wayonn?” Dysea gasped as she came to her feet.

It was as if they had been hit by a speeding comet twice in one day as they gazed at Wayonn standing before them. He appeared unchanged from the day they both saw him last standing proudly beside Sumar as they were waving from the lift taking them to City Ship 41.

Wayonn stepped closer to them, his own eyes tearing up somewhat as well.

“And the Ancients within the Rift of Time have once more have shown me that the path I travelled would one day reward me with happiness again.” Wayonn spoke softly. “When I first discovered the descendant and the bloodline of my dearest friend and fellow Praetorian and now he has led me back to you. Back to the one who called me son.”

Jezima lost it then and she wailed out her joy as she threw her arms around Wayonn and his arms went around her waist. Meral was within his grasp an instant later while Dysea, Isabella and Cirith moved closer together with smiles on their faces and tears in their eyes. This was a reunion that they would not interrupt for it was far longer in coming than anything they could imagine.

Dysea pulled Cirith and Isabella close to her, their bodies pressing together intimately as they watched.

[Cirith and I will remain here Dysea. Return with them and Wayonn to Martin.] Isabella spoke softly.

Dysea looked at her. [Bella no.] She declared.

[Bella and I are more suited to what must be done before the Svorag arrive.] Cirith spoke now. [Jezima has an affinity for you. You put her at ease. And for what we must do there is no need for all three of us to remain.]

[Cirith is correct.] Isabella agreed. [And if Wayonn is accurate in what Martin has done on Ventori then you will not be gone long. You know how he secures a situation ussta che.]

[You are certain?] Dysea asked them turning to look at both of them.

Isabella and Cirith nodded as they pressed closer to her. [You are a calming influence on everyone you meet ussta che. Yes we are sure. And you can give Martin a firsthand account of what we are doing here. He will need that, for the Svorag are still coming according to Yuriko's last report.]

Cirith nodded her head as she looked at Wayonn holding Jezima and Meral, tears now streaking down even his stern face. [Yes they are. And then there will be no time for reunions.]

CHAPTER FORTY-EIGHT

SPARTA'S WRATH

SEPTEMBER 1ST 2575

TWO HOURS BEFORE VANARI BOARD OF REGENTS GATHERING

Sarlana moved up behind them slowly as they stood in front of the massive view window in the private lounge. She knew they had smelled her the moment she made her way onto this deck of the ship. This entire section of SPARTA'S WRATH, fully two-thirds of this entire deck really, was now what she had heard many of the crew refer to as Royal Country. This deck held Androcles' personal quarters as well as the personal quarters for Deion, Dorian and their wives and mates. It also held additional quarters for their father and mothers were they to ever be on this ship at the same time. There were also quarters for their grandmothers and perhaps four or five other family members if the time ever rose where they were all together. Sarlana knew that Androcles had intentionally placed his and Denali's quarters in different parts of the ship so that no one attack could claim all of them. Eliani, Jomann and Brendi also had their quarters in a different section of the ship.

This would be the unofficial chain of command on SPARTA'S WRATH for Sarlana knew that Androcles trusted Denali and Eliani more than any others because of the time they had spent together in battle and outside of battle. Eliani and Zarah held a very special place within Androcles heart and mind because of the connection he had to his two sisters, and the quarters directly across from his own were reserved for Zarah and Lucia when they finally came back together as a family. Denali had begun to think and act more like his father and older brother, but he still maintained the often times humorous nature of his personality which his family had come to expect and love.

Sarlana moved gracefully into the large lounge which was on the edge of the secure area of this deck. This lounge was connected to a large mess area through the massive double doors and she could just make out perhaps two dozen men and women sitting at the many tables eating and talking. She knew this was intentional on Androcles' part for it was something he had done on his former ship. They would always eat and mingle with their crew, and Sarlana knew that his father and mothers were the same way. It was the main reason that so many men and women within the Union adored their family. They never acted as if they were better than the next man or woman, and this mentality had earned their family near fanatical loyalty from everyone they came in contact with. Sarlana knew that they hated this sense of devotion from others, but she also knew they would not change who they were at the core of their family.

This entertainment lounge and the adjoining mess lounge were more well-guarded by members of the Durcunusaan she knew, but there was no hesitation on the part of other crew members when entering this area of the ship. The only exception to this was that the segment with their personal quarters was off limits to everyone unless they were family or had a direct invitation.

Sarlana moved up behind them now, both of them towering over her four foot eight height. She had always been much smaller than most she mused with some humor, and both Androcles and Dorian were over two meters in height and this fact made her chuckle to herself.

"It's becoming easier isn't it?" She spoke softly as they turned to gaze at her.

Dorian nodded his head as he reached for her hand. "Yes."

Sarlana took his hand without thought and he drew her between them where Androcles took her other hand. "So tell me." She spoke.

"They are proceeding as quickly as they can without drawing attention to themselves." Andro spoke. "So far they have done a very good job of keeping Laren and Ladur's existence hidden from everyone."

Sarlana nodded her head. “The Livaiji Sulevfu is very good at hiding things when they want to be.” She stated. “But it will not last.”

“We know.” Dorian said.

“The connection to them?” Sarlana asked.

“It grows stronger by the hour.” Andro answered her. “We can touch Laren now without Elynth or Ryner in the connection, but it is much more focused and clear with them and Ladur.”

Sarlana nodded her head in approval. “Good. From everything I have read in the history archives about the Dahakoan, the ability to connect with one another even over vast distances was one of their strongest traits.” She looked up into Andro's face. “You have a plan I take it?”

“We have been refining it with Murano and once our business here is done we will start to execute training on it.” He answered. “Armen is going to launch the probes in twelve hours. They will be filled with equipment and other things that Laren and Ladur need and enough of our standard gear to outfit twenty Darastrixi.”

Sarlana shook her head. “After speaking with them briefly, I got the sense from this Koppentotz Aviel that he is exceptional thorough. Can you send more equipment Androcles? I have a feeling there will be more than just the twenty.”

Andro shook his head. “Not without sending more probes. It took Armen and the crew this long just to break the probes down to the bare essentials to make the trip. How many do you think will be with them?”

Sarlana shook her head. “I do not know. Chalith and Ch'teven I have heard about only through others among the Doraanar; before they were all butchered by the Scourge. This Shalu I have never seen or heard about which means she is much younger than the others. I do know from what I could sense, that they take her safety quite personally.”

Dorian and Andro nodded. “We felt that as well.” Dorian agreed.

“And this is the only place where we can rendezvous with them?” Sarlana asked, “This old Pralor station?”

“It is not the only place but it is the most remote and out of the way.” Andro answered. “The other locations Murano showed us were too far within Scourge space to be of any use to us and it is too large a risk. This station is on the outskirts of what was once Pralor controlled space and it is the closest to the Darastrixi border. This area is now under Scourge control but it is so far out along the outer edges of their borders it is almost never traveled.”

“It's also much shorter a trip for Laren and Ladur to make.” Dorian told her. “The less time they are on board a ship the better. At least until we are with them.”

Sarlana shook her head slowly. “It makes me uneasy.” She said softly.

“You suspect something Sarlana?” Andro asked, “A trap perhaps?”

Sarlana met his eyes and once more shook his head, “No, nothing like that, at least not from the Scourge.”

“From the Darastrixi then?” Dorian asked.

“The impression I took away from speaking with Chalith and Ch'teven was that they feared the government more than the Scourge.” Sarlana told them. “It appears as if the Urkkrisir Mamiss has been appeasing the Scourge for millennia. Allowing them to take Darastrixi Maidens every few hundred years would never have been accepted during my time. If they are willing to do this now then I have to believe that they would not hesitate to give Laren and Ladur to the Scourge if they thought it would keep our people safe. Or attempt to seize her if her existence was revealed to them.”

“They don't see what doing that would mean?” Dorian asked somewhat surprised.

Sarlana shook her head. “I believe they are more concerned with keeping their positions and allowing things to proceed unhindered.”

“Do you think it is because of some other reason Doraanar?” Andro asked her.

Sarlana shook her head quickly knowing of Androcles' intense hatred for traitors. It was a trait that his father shared as well as most of those Lycavorians she had been around even briefly on Manne. “No. My people, the Darastrixi, we are very set in our ways, too rigidly in my opinion. It has always been one of our faults. The Urkkrisir Mamiss are elected for life and by now those who occupy these seats will have been there for far too long.” She squeezed their hands tighter and pulled their arms closer to her. “And I have asked you both to stop calling me that.”

Dorian smiled at her. “It is what you are.” He told her.

“No. Not to you.” Sarlana answered him. “Not to any Dahakoan.”

“Appeasement is never the correct path.” Androcles spoke softly, squeezing her hand in acknowledgement of her words. “It always leads to more and more until there is no more left to give and you have to fight.”

Sarlana nodded. “I agree.” She echoed him.

“Allow me to talk with Murano once we are done here.” Andro told her. “Perhaps there is more we can do or something we haven’t thought about.”

Sarlana nodded. “I will leave that to you and Murano to work out.” She said. “I was able to use that wonderful tool you gave to me, that Mark Two Neural Booster, and I was able to pass on some additional skills for Laren and Ladur to study until we reach them. You do realize that no matter what you have passed to them, they will still be far behind you both in skills. The training regimes that you have developed over the years for your Bonded Pairs, it far exceeds any that the Darastrixi have ever used. It’s incredible to be honest. You will need to teach Laren and Ladur these methods for them to be as effective as the four of you. It should not take long given your ability to pass to one another through the Etheric realm other skills, but insure you do this almost immediately upon seeing them.”

“You are coming with us you know.” Dorian said with a grin and a twinkle in his multicolored eyes.

Sarlana immediately slapped his thick arm in response. She had spoken with Helen on more than one occasion and since being with them on this ship she had spent much time with their grandmothers Gorgo and Dasha. She knew that this is how Lycavorians showed affection and it was almost expected in a way. They may have had dragon blood within them, but they were Lycavorian and Dorian was also vampire. These things were normal to them and Sarlana had quickly determined that she needed to act in this fashion as well. It would allow them to trust and accept her even more, as well as so many other Lycavorians and vampires among their people.

“I know that Dorian Leonidas!” Sarlana snapped at him playfully. “I will not be there when you first greet them however, and I do not wish to scold you as Helen has done in the past when you forgot to do something she instructed you to do!”

Androcles laughed softly. “She has taught you all of our quirks I take it.” He said.

“Not all of them I’m sure!” Sarlana stated. “Even she does not know them all. But she told me enough of them.”

“We will not forget Sarlana.” Dorian said with a warm smile.

“See that both of you don’t.” Sarlana said in a playful but stern voice. She took their hands within hers again and squeezed them once more. “You have spoken with your mother Anja about Laren’s condition?”

Androcles and Dorian both became more serious now she noted. Laren had been very nonchalant about it, only saying that their mother could heal her. She had sensed that both Androcles and Dorian had taken it much more seriously during the conversation and had asked several pointed questions of Nahko. Andro nodded his head. “Yes. It was brief for they are busy with this new species the Tasmor.”

Sarlana nodded her head. “I have heard Nekins and Conlar speak of them, these Tasmor. A female dominated race, very proud and very stubborn. They are unique in many ways. Their males are so few that nature has allowed many of their females to take on male roles but still look female. Many of them are quite beautiful.” She looked at Andro. “Your father did not start something did he?”

“Thankfully no.” Andro said with a small laugh. “They actually have been helping the branch of our people that father found out there. Things became exciting when these Kintaur showed up but father gave them a stern talking to.”

Sarlana nodded. “Yes I know of them as well. The Kintaur are bitter enemies with the Tasmor. They have taken some Pralors prisoner through the years. They are not very pleasant individuals from what I understand. What he told them must have been very stern.”

Andro looked at Dorian quickly and smiled. “It was.” He said.

“And Anja can correct the imbalance in her body?” Sarlana asked once more missing the look between the brothers.

Andro nodded his head. “She sent Eliani a medical technique that she can use that will stabilize her and give us more time. Enough to get her to my mother so that she can correct it completely.”

Sarlana nodded her head. “Your mother Anja is perhaps the most intelligent and gifted doctor I have ever known in all my years.”

Andro nodded his head. “She does not quit that is for sure.”

“I am here because of her and that attitude.” Dorian spoke.

Sarlana looked out the view window at the planet below. “When do you have to leave for this political grandstanding that these Vanari apparently love so much?” She asked.

“We are meeting Coren in just over an hour.” Andro replied. “He will escort us into the SBR Chambers.”

“And then?” Sarlana asked.

“Then a little stop on the Rothryn homeworld before we leave to retrieve Laren and Ladur.” Andro told her.

Sarlana nodded her head. “Good. These different men and women Androcles, they have no idea what you and Dorian can do. What you are capable of. They have no idea of the horrors that reside out there. It must remain that way for now.”

Andro looked at Dorian and nodded his head. “I know.”

“Murano is with Nara, Lisisa, Sheva and Onera. They are reviewing the copy of the Tomes from your grandfather. As Praetorian Mages they too must train.” Sarlana spoke. “I will join him as he instructs me as well. I have much to learn of these Praetorians and their ways and abilities. He seems to think that I can help those who will be your Mages. Return to us when you are done on the surface so that we can fine tune this plan of yours.”

Andro and Dorian both leaned over and planted soft kisses on her scaled cheeks.

“We will prevail Sarlana.” Andro told her.

Sarlana nodded her head. “I have no doubts of that. I just wish to insure that you do not kill those whose only intent is to protect Laren and Ladur now.”

“What do you mean?” Dorian asked confused.

“I will explain it fully when you return but suffice to say Laren is not happy about it. And neither is Ladur.” She said with a smile. “Stand proud and stand strong. Both of you. Dadien and your grandfather are always with you.”

ECHO QUADRANT VENTORI SOUTHERN OUTSKIRTS OF JORLARI

“...Was once a park here.” Nalmos spoke as he motioned with his hand over the area to their front, “Rows and rows of colorful flowers and plants from all over Ventori with a fountain as the center. Hundreds would come here every day just to sit and let the breeze blow across their skin and to smell the blossoms. I came here often myself.”

“It will be that way again.” Martin told him as his eyes searched the barren landscape in front of him. “I give you my word.”

Nalmos looked at him and found he could not keep the small smile from his face. He was rapidly discovering this young King was the epitome of a leader and also quite the optimist. He glanced at the two younger men who stood only a short distance away and were never far from their King’s side. Cody and Colin he had been told were their names. They were members of the King’s personal team and always within a half second from Martin’s position. “It will never be the same Milord.” He said softly.

Martin shook his head. “No it won’t.” He agreed. “But Jorlari will be the start of it.”

“The start of what?” Nalmos asked.

“The future.” Martin answered turning to look at him. “Nalmos there are no more castes among our people. Alpha, Beta, Gamma wolves... it doesn’t exist anymore. It hasn’t for many thousands of years. It began to end when my grandfather and those Pralors who crashed on our original homeworld were turned and brought into the packs.”

Nalmos nodded his head. “I have heard others speaking of him, your grandfather.” He said. “They say he was a great warrior even before he became wolf.”

“He was a Praetorian.” Martin said with a nod, “Like I am; like my sons and daughter are.”

“But I have seen how you treat your mates.” Nalmos told him. “You covet them, all of them. You allow them to eat first, you defer to their judgment. These are all signs of a dominant Alpha. I and others have heard your people talking with those from Ventori. Your people say that you are; that you are the most dominant Lycavorian Alpha among our people. You are the most powerful to have lived since your father over three thousand years ago, and his father before him. That your bloodline is the purest of all bloodlines among our people.”

Martin smiled. “My people talk too much.” He said with some humor.

“But what they say is true.” Nalmos pressed. “All of us can sense it. We sensed it the first time we saw you.”

“That doesn’t make me a god or something.” Martin said. “I’m just a man and a Spartan.” He told him. “There are thousands of Beta wolves who have taken Alpha females as their wives and mates. Thousands more who have taken Beta Wolves as their husbands. My grandfather taught us that we needed to be as one species, one people. The Castes only served to keep the bloodlines constant. Had we not changed, we would have missed out on so much that other bloodlines can offer. And those bloodlines became stronger for it while making the purest of the bloodlines even stronger.”

“Our people in your Union... we are many?” Nalmos asked.

Martin nodded his head. “It is your Union now as well. Lycavorians make up the largest contingent within the Union. Part of it is because of our longevity and part of it is because we integrated the bloodlines as my grandfather suggested. It made us stronger and more vibrant as a people. There are some who still cling to the caste system, and there are differences between Alphas and Betas, but most of our people no longer follow that rule of thought.”

“How many of our people are in this Union Milord?” Nalmos asked now.

Martin shrugged his broad shoulders. “I don’t know exact numbers.” He replied. “My wife Bella would know, she likes to study statistics like that. She can rattle off statistics about the most obscure things. It drives me malda sometimes.”

Nalmos grinned now. “The Queens are, they are breathtaking in their beauty. Queen Anja is... she is the most intelligent person I have ever encountered. Her medical skills are like a gift from the gods. She was able to fix an old injury I had from hundreds of years ago and I watched as she slapped... she slapped a man three times her size in order to get him to allow her to treat him.” He stated.

Martin nodded his head with a smile and soft laughter. “She’s a tiny thing for sure, but she is my firecracker. She doesn’t take sibfla from anyone when it comes to the care of our people.” Martin said. “All of them are like that.”

“I can only assume the three Queens who are not here are equally as stunning.” Nalmos said.

Martin laughed and nodded his head. “Each and every one of them is breathtaking. I never have figured out what exactly they all see in me, but why look a gift horse in the mouth right?”

Nalmos looked at him oddly and Martin chuckled more. “It’s a common expression from the planet I was raised on. It means don’t question things when you don’t need to.”

“Ah!” Nalmos echoed with a smile. “I understand now.” He was becoming more and more comfortable being in Martin’s presence. Their history and instincts would have had him almost cower before an Alpha with the aura and power of the man beside him, but Martin’s nature made that impossible. The most powerful Alpha among their people he may have been, but he was surprisingly normal and had not one arrogant bone in his body. This knowledge was rapidly spreading among the Beta wolves from Ventori and many of them were beginning to converse more openly and casually with the many Alpha wolves that were on Ventori now, male and female Alpha wolves who did not consider themselves above anyone.

“What do you hear from the other Chief Justices?” Martin asked him now.

“The news of your existence and what has happened here is running rampant among our people on the Tasmor planets that we occupy.” Nalmos answered. “It has only been a few days and many are already clamoring to return here.”

Martin nodded his head. “That’s a good thing.” He said.

Nalmos looked at him. “There are also many who are not.” He stated. “I know of several hundred who have entered into relationships with Tasmor females Milord. Namiri has told me of them. They will not want to leave.”

Martin nodded his head. “That is their decision. I’m not going to force them to return here Nalmos.”

“The Tasmor have been good to our people Milord.” Nalmos said. “They did not have to help us as they did.”

Martin shook his head. “No, they did not, but they also had an ulterior reason for helping you.” He told him. “The natural healing properties of our bodies and our longevity will go a long way to saving their species.”

“Saving them?” Nalmos asked. “What do you mean?”

“That doesn’t matter.” Martin told him. “What does matter, and what impresses me the most, is that they asked and did not take. They gave our people the choice to help and we did. I have been told hundreds of our people lined up to help. That says quite a bit about them as a species and speaks volumes about their leadership. It says a lot about our people too.”

Nalmos nodded his head in agreement. “Yes it does.” He stated. “You will help them?”

Martin nodded his head. “Anja is doing that right now.” He stated. “We are not the Pralor people Nalmos. I know that you don’t have a lot of information about them, but let’s just say they were unwilling to help the Tasmor. Anyone for that matter. That has since changed but I am not like them. My people are not like them. We embrace others who want the same things we do. To live in peace. To prosper and see our children play and grow. I have a sense that the Tasmor only became arrogant and insular when they discovered what was happening to them and no one would assist them without wanting something from them in return. Something more than they were willing to give. Now that they know there are others who will help them and want nothing in return, they will begin to see not everything is as they thought. That is my hope anyway. We’ll see what happens over the next few weeks and months.”

Nalmos looked at him for a long moment. “There is something you are not telling me King Leonidas.” He stated finally.

Martin met his eyes and nodded slowly. “Yes.”

“Does it have to do with this Kintaur species?” Nalmos asked. “The ones who were here when you first arrived?”

Martin shook his head. “The Kintaur are not even a blip on my radar at the moment.” He answered. “I could take the ships and troops I have right now and spank their midaeus back into the Stone Age if I wanted to. No... there is something far more sinister and deadly out there.”

“These creatures that attacked Ventori then.” Nalmos spoke. “You know of them and what they are capable of. You knew before you came here for I saw the look on your faces when I told you what had taken place.”

Martin nodded his head. “It is a very long story that one day I will relate to you and the others, but suffice to say, they are the largest threat out here right now.” He said. “They are moving for a Pralor colony world in an adjoining sector of space right now. I believe their intent is to do exactly what they did here. I can’t allow that Nalmos.”

Nalmos was silent for a moment and let his eyes drift over the barren remains of what had once been a beautiful spot in his city that he had come to often. “We will fight.” He said softly.

Martin shook his head. “That I can’t allow.” He said.

Nalmos looked at him once more. “Train us in your ways. Equip us with your weapons. We will fight! We fought them before!”

“You were defending your world.” Martin said. “Anyone would fight for that purpose. But fighting for vengeance is not something I can allow. Those who fight with vengeance in their hearts make mistakes and those mistakes get others killed.”

“Have we not earned the right to seek vengeance?” Nalmos asked softly. “Over three billion of my people dead. I...”

“Our people.” Martin corrected him.

Nalmos nodded. “Our people my King.” He spoke softly. “Fathers. Mothers. Sons and daughters.” He met Martin’s gaze. “Have we not earned the right to seek vengeance and justice for what was done to us?”

Martin nodded his head. “Yes you have.” He answered softly.

“Then allow us to fight!” Nalmos spoke. “To return some measure of pride to ourselves.”

“Nalmos what you did, if what I see around me is any indication, you put up a hell of a fight.” Martin said.

“What would you do my King?” Nalmos asked him suddenly. “What would you desire?”

Martin was silent as he looked at him for a long moment. Finally he nodded his head slowly. “Then pass the word to the other Chief Justices.” He said softly. “If they are willing and able and wish to see true justice done, then I will allow it. True justice Nalmos, not vengeance.”

Nalmos closed his eyes briefly and nodded his head. “I will...”

Martin’s implant crackled in his ear and he saw Nalmos jump ever so slightly. He and those they had since found on Ventori had been fitted with COM implants almost from the outset to better facilitate their treatment and needs.

“Marty?” Julie’s voice echoed clearly in the COM.

“Go Jules.” Martin spoke instantly.

“Martin... you had better come to our position.” Julie spoke evenly but Martin could detect the tremors in her voice.

“What’s wrong Jules?” Martin asked as he gripped Nalmos’s arm. “Where’s Danny?”

“It’s better if you see this for yourself Skipper.” Julie continued. “You had better bring Justice Nalmos too. And Danny says to find Namiri and Emylea Daret if they are close by. This concerns the Tasmor too.”

“Julie!” Martin demanded.

“Just come to our position fervon.” Julie told him. “Now.”

Martin looked at Nalmos briefly for Julie almost never referred to him in the ancient Lycavorian language. She was fluent in the language but she only used it if the situation was bad. And she almost never referred to him as brother even though that is the emotion that flowed between all of Martin’s Team and himself.

“On our way!” Martin snapped turning to motion for Cody and Colin to lead out as he took Nalmos’s arm.

They moved perhaps a dozen city blocks into the city by Martin’s sense until they came up to the side of a half collapsed five story structure. Martin immediately detected several Durcunusaan standing near the entrance of what appeared to be an underground shelter or bunker of some sort and all of them with looks of horror on their faces. His eyes settled on Julie as she spotted him and blurred to his position before he could move any closer.

“Jules?” Martin asked her as he came up short with Nalmos in tow, Colin and Cody right behind them.

Julie held out her hand palm up to Martin and he saw the olfactory blockers. His eyes came to rest on her face now and he saw that her skin was a little whiter than her normally caramel colored skin. “Better take these Skipper.” She spoke. “Your sense of smell is a lot keener than Danny’s and his sense of smell is perfect. He was puking his guts out for the first few minutes. All of us were.”

Nalmos was looking around the area his eyes confused. “This is the Jorlari City Museum Center.” He spoke now. “I have been here hundreds of times but I have never seen that entrance there.” He said motioning to the bunker entrance.

Martin didn’t take his eyes off Julie and she shook her head ever so slightly. “Trust me Marty.” She said softly. “Namiri and Emylea arrived with that Tasmor ship Captain Drenia only a few moments ago. They already went inside.”

“What is going on Jules?” Martin demanded.

“We found something.” Julie told him. “This half of the building was hit pretty hard as you can see, but when it collapsed, it revealed the entrance to this bunker. T'loft was actually the one who found it. He was on our flank with his Havoc.”

“Anse Jules, just spit it out!” Martin snarled.

Julie motioned with her head. “It’s not... it’s not pretty Skipper.” She motioned to the olfactory blockers in his hand. “Trust me you will need them until we get the place aired out. It was vacuum sealed.”

Martin handed a set to Nalmos as Julie tossed Cody and Colin a pair of the scent blockers and she watched as they put them in. She turned and headed back towards the building and the caved in entrance. From first glance it looked like some sort of underground sewer entrance but as they got closer and climbed over the debris that had fallen from above them Martin quickly dismissed that as he saw the large door and computer panel beside it. The entrance was at the bottom of a man made ramp and looked to be like an emergency hatch from their ship. Julie grabbed the handle and yanked on the door, easily pulling open the half meter wide metal door with her vampire strength. There was no power to the computer panel or the door but it slide easily enough on the greased hinges. Martin heard the customary sound of air being released as the door opened and then Julie led them inside.

The stairwell was circular in design and the corridor well lit so they descended quickly to another door where Kenny and Pablo waited. Julie looked at them.

“Where’s Danny?” She asked.

“Still in the room with Anuk and Kesyla. The three Tasmor women are with them now.” Kenny answered. “We had to get out Jules.”

Julie nodded her understanding and looked at Pablo. “Open it.” She said.

Kenny pulled on a handle and the sound of hissing air hit them again and then he pulled on the equally thick door and it opened without pause.

“Skipper it’s...” Kenny began but Martin pushed past him into the corridor beyond the door Nalmos on his heels.

Kenny looked at Julie when she moved to follow. “Nubou Jules... he’s going to want blood in a big way!” He hissed the words softly.

Julie nodded and reached up to squeeze his arm. “Keep everyone else out Kenny.” She said. “We need to try and keep this under wraps for as long as possible. When Anja finds this she is going to blow a casket big time.”

Martin didn’t know what to expect when he moved through the door, but he was prepared for the worst. At least he thought so.

Even with the olfactory blockers in the smell was rancid and he had to fight down the urge to vomit. It smelled of death in the corridor. Rancid, putrid death. The smell of rotting flesh was very nearly overwhelming and had he not had the olfactory blockers in, Martin had no doubts he would have been heaving his breakfast before moving three meters into the tunnel. It was dimly lit compared to the stairwell that they had come down, but the rotting bodies of men, women and even some children were easily seen sprawled upon the floor in grotesque positions of death. The bodies were stacked sometimes three and four high along the walls, many of them missing body parts. The moment Danny and the others had broken the seal into this bunker, the air had caused the rotting flesh on many of the bodies to tear off the skeletal remains and scatter throughout the corridor.

“Son vada carians!” Nalmos muttered softly, his voice carrying in the silent corridor of death.

Martin stopped counting after he reached sixty bodies as he moved gingerly down the corridor being careful not to step on any of the remains. Dried blood seemed to coat the steel walls of the corridor, some of it looking as if it had been sprayed on to the surface. The tunnel grew brighter as they got closer to the first intersection, serving only to allow them to see some of the hideous wounds on many of the bodies. Images of Alba Tau flashed through his brain quickly and Martin had to shake his head to clear his mind, while keeping his Etheric shields clamped down tightly so as not to alert his wives and mates of the racing of his heart and the sick feeling in the pit of his stomach.

“Fervon?” Danny’s voice reached him and Martin turned to see Danny move out of the well lit room and lean back against the wall trying to keep his breathing under control.

Martin moved directly up to him and grasped his arms.

“Dan?” He gasped.

Dan shook his head quickly. “It’s... it’s a nightmare in there Marty.” He gasped. “It’s like... it’s like Alba Tau all over again but...”

“What?” Martin snarled.

Danny motioned with his head into the room behind him. Martin followed that motion with his eyes, his heart now racing. He hadn’t seen Danny so disturbed by anything since that long night and if it did that to his brother than it had to be bad. Martin opened his mouth slightly and took a short breath before releasing Danny’s arms and stepping into the room without waiting.

And directly into a horrific nightmare just as his brother had said.

The large room was extremely well lit with bright white lights in the ceiling like in a surgical room. The ceiling however, that was the only thing not covered in blood. Rotting bodies occupied dozens of tables within the room, most of them not completely there. Huge meat hook like objects hung from the ceiling in one corner and the corpses of half a dozen people were stabbed through their chests and dangling from these insidious hooks. None of those bodies had arms or legs and the decay was so bad it was almost impossible to determine if they were Lycavorian. The floor was awash in dried blood in every corner. There was almost no place you could step without putting your feet down and leaving an imprint in the sometimes inch deep spots of dark blood ash. Almost all of the bodies were without clothes of any kind and all of them bore the telltale signs of unimaginable torture. Martin moved slowly, his eyes changing to the yellow gold of the wolf within him as his anger built. He kept it tightly walled off so as not to have Aricia, Anja or For'mya detect his heightened emotions but he would not be able to keep it from Helen. She was within the camp with Tobia going over information with Avi and Elder Valael and he quickly pulsed her within the Etheric realm to let her know he was fine but not to reveal what his emotions were. Helen pulsed him back knowing that whatever had caused him to react in such a way was not good and that he would let her know.

Martin sensed Danny behind him now as he let his eyes sweep across the interior of the large room. Most of the bodies he saw he knew were Lycavorian but he also detected at least a dozen Pralor bodies as well as five or six Tasmor. It was like walking through hell as he made for the room where he saw Anuk and Kesyla through the clear glass. He kept his eyes focused, not wanting to look at the death that surrounded him and finally he stepped through the door as it slid aside, Danny right behind him. He saw Namiri and Emylea sitting on the ground holding each other’s hands, their expressions one of horror and disbelief. As with all Tasmor it appeared both of them were deeply tanned, but now Martin could see that their skin had become slightly whiter in color because of the dreadful horror they had just walked through. The Tasmor Drenia was standing beside Anuk and Kesyla as they sat at the computer consoles, but the color of her skin was no different.

Danny waited for the door to close and seal behind him and then he nudged Martin to remove the olfactory blockers he wore. Martin did so immediately, he always hated wearing these things, and while he could just barely detect the faint scent of death in the room, the air was clear for the most part. This surprised him and Danny pointed to the ceiling.

“Air cycling ducts are still functioning.” He spoke as he took deep breaths. “This entire facility is being powered by a fusion reactor further down. Tony took Nayeca, T'lolt, Kasdan and the rest of our team down there to secure it.”

Martin nodded as he moved up to where Anuk sat in the chair. He placed his hands on hers and Kesyla’s shoulders gently and squeezed. Anuk glanced up at him and nodded while lifting her hand to cover his knuckles. “We’re ok.” She spoke softly.

Martin looked at Kesyla who finally turned her head to meet his gaze. “Kesyla?”

Kesyla nodded her head now as well. “I will be... I will be fine.” She stated.

Martin looked at Drenia. “Captain?”

Drenia was a different sort of Tasmor female. She was younger than most of the senior officers within the Tasmor military but had earned her position by being daring and fearless when fighting. Drenia was considered extremely well trained and intelligent by all who knew her and since, like Namiri and Emylea, she dealt with far more of their males within the Fleet, she was not as unaccustomed as Saydia and the others in speaking with them more openly.

Drenia took a deep breath and nodded her head. “I will be... I am maintaining.” She stated.

“How many of your people are...” Martin began to ask.

“Seven that I could recognize by what... by what remained of them.” Drenia answered as she swallowed hard.

“Stay strong.” Martin told her sensing that she would not care if he touched her. He took her arm gently and squeezed softly and Drenia nodded her head in thanks.

Martin turned to where Namiri and Emylea sat and moved to squat in front of them. “Namiri, Emylea...?”

Namiri looked at him as she and Emylea seemed to be using a breathing technique to keep from losing their breakfast. She saw the set of his jaw, and the firmness of focus in his eyes and was surprised. “You have... you have seen horrors like this before?” She gasped as Emylea looked at him now.

Martin nodded his head slowly. “Breathe in through your mouth and out through your nose evenly. It will help you to keep the contents of your stomachs inside.”

Drenia watched with keen eyes as he reached out to them with his hands and placed them on their cheeks. She did not know what occurred, but for a fleeting instant she thought she saw a soft glow of light filter from his fingers to touch their skin. This almost seemed to help Namiri and Emylea calm themselves even further. This physical action would never have been accepted within Tasmor society as a whole, but Drenia did nothing. Any Tasmor male who touched the daughters of the Sovereign Regent in such a way would have been very harshly punished and possibly even physically disciplined. Drenia however, was not one to question fate or destiny. She believed deeply in faith and these men and women had come to them for a reason. That reason Drenia believed, was to insure the continued existence of her people as well as their christening into a world among the stars that they had only dreamed of before. The Tasmor had an opportunity right now to step into a much bigger world and Drenia, the Sovereign Regent and even Perlyea were going to play huge roles in that future. Part of that meant that they would have to change somewhat to embrace new ideas and attitudes and Drenia was very comfortable with that.

Drenia watched as Emylea and then Namiri covered his hands with their own for a brief moment and then they both nodded. Martin rose back to his feet and turned slowly.

“Talk to me Anuk. Kesyla.” He said softly as he looked at them. He saw Kesyla reached across and point to something on Anuk’s screen and she nodded.

Martin turned as the doors opened once more and Julie led Nalmos into the room. He was deathly white and held tightly to her arm as he bent over and tried to catch his breath. Julie sealed the doors once more and turned to look at Martin.

“Anja, Aricia and For'mya took Saydia Daret and the others up to the ARC ROYAL about an hour ago.” She said. “T'lolt reports that there are quarters and other labs on the lower levels but nothing like this. They have secured the power source and Kasdan says it is a mini Pralor Quantum fusion core. It is similar to the one that was powering their station on Onterom but not as powerful.”

“There is no way the Pralors did this!” Martin hissed.

“No, we did not.” Kesyla stated from her chair. “But Julie is correct that this is a Pralor facility.”

Martin turned to look at her. “Speak to me Kesyla.”

“This is a Pralor Research Outpost.” Kesyla told him quickly. “My father outlawed their use shortly after we arrived on Artaaya but this facility has been here for far longer. If the timestamp in the data archives is accurate, it was built shortly after the Lycavorians on this planet discovered the Industrial Age. It was built to monitor their progress as a species.”

“So this place has been here from before the war with the Scourge?” Danny asked.

Kesyla nodded her head. “It would appear so, yes.”

“Kesyla please tell me that the Pralors had no involvement in this.” Martin spoke.

“This was not done by Pralors.” Kesyla said. “The computer logs all life signs entering and exiting the facility Martin. The last Pralor bioscan to be registered entering this facility was over nine hundred and seventy years. Nine hundred and seventy-nine to be exact.”

“That’s about the time Delnash said they stopped monitoring the planet isn’t it?” Danny asked looking at Martin.

“Something like that yeah.”

“Kesyla you said this facility was here before the Second Scourge War.” Danny spoke now.

Kesyra nodded her head. "Yes... but someone among my people, those that escaped the Scourge had knowledge that it was here, for it was being used to monitor our people on Ventori and in this system."

"Lorendo." Martin said softly noting how easily Kesyra stated 'our people'. She had fully accepted all there was about being turned and it came out in her actions now.

Kesyra looked at him and nodded her head again. "That would be my guess, yes." She told him. "

"From the decay of some of the bodies, what happened here was done in the last four to five years." Anuk spoke turning to look at them.

"There are Pralor bodies out there." Martin said. "And Tasmor."

Anuk nodded. "And they were dead when they were brought in here or the computer would have registered their bioscan." She answered him.

"Baby, it looks like they were cut up into pieces for a reason." Danny spoke now.

Anuk nodded her head. "They were." She said softly. She turned to the computer once more and touched the control console. The monitor changed to a video image showing several individuals in silver suits using crude objects to carve several bodies into sections. "This is the last entry in the logs that I could find. The rest are encrypted but this one wasn't. I don't know why."

There was only perhaps twenty seconds of video of the individuals severing the bodies and then all of their heads turned suddenly at something outside the video's cone of recording and it stopped abruptly.

"What the hell?" Martin gasped.

"It appears as if this level was used as some sort of processing center." Kesyra spoke softly.

"Processing center?" Drenia gasped. "For what? There are Tasmor bodies out there! We knew nothing of this planet before three years ago when we began helping the survivors!"

"Oh man," Danny said. "When Red sees this she is going to go malda."

"No bet here." Julie echoed his sentiments.

Martin looked at Nalmos. "Nalmos?"

The older Lycavorian met Martin's eyes, his face still pale and drawn at what he had seen. "I have... this is beyond depraved."

"No Lycavorians bioscans are in the computer Marty." Anuk spoke once more. "They didn't know this was here."

"Whatever happened here," Julie spoke. "The cave in of the entire wall of this building wasn't done during any attack. It looks controlled Skipper. Like someone knew this facility was here, where it was, and they brought the building down just enough to reveal the entrance and keep it reasonably well hidden in the rubble. If T'lolt had been five meters more to the east he would have missed it completely."

"The Kintaur?" Martin asked looking at Drenia.

Drenia shook her head as Namiri and Emylea got to their feet and moved up beside her. "I find that impossible to believe. Their technology is two hundred years behind what we have developed. It is one of the reasons they hate us so. This equipment is all, it is Pralor equipment. We have seen and been around more of it because of our interaction with them, but even Perlyea would not know how to use this equipment. The Pralors never associated with the Kintaur for any reason."

"These creatures King Martin?" Emylea asked now. "These Svorag you call them. Could they have done this?"

"Oh man... that is not a thought I want to have right now." Martin said.

"What other explanation is there?" Namiri spoke now. "There are no other species within this quadrant of space with the knowledge to use Pralor equipment. Half the species can barely obtain orbit let alone travel to different sectors."

Martin was silent for a moment and then moved to the console Anuk sat at. He touched the panel.

"Master Chief?"

"Go Skipper."

"Leave two men at the power core and then take Kasdan and the others to sweep the rest of the levels." Martin told him.

"I should stay here with the core Martin." Kasdan's voice echoed over the internal COM speakers. "I would be better suited to track their movements and assist them as they sweep the remainder of the station. I have already gotten three of the computer consoles working."

“Agreed Skipper.” Tony chimed in.

“Do it.” Martin spoke. “And find some way to vent the air in this place. Touch nothing else but I will not have Anja or the Sovereign Regent breathing this stink of death.”

“I will direct them to the ventilation controls Martin.” Kasdan spoke. “We will need roughly two hours to vent the entire facility if what I have seen is accurate.”

Martin nodded his head. “Good enough. I’ll wait to have Anja and the others come down here. She’ll know what the hell they were doing here. And who was doing it.”

“Moving now Boss.” Tony spoke.

Martin looked at Anuk. “You and Kesyla keep at it. Download and decrypt whatever you can. Establish a link with Avi and he can help.” Martin put his hand on Kesyla’s shoulder. “And find out if there are any more of these facilities on Ventori Kesyla.”

Kesyla Simpson detected the inflection of his voice easily enough and she nodded her head. “I already know the answer to that.” She spoke softly. “This facility is linked with the others.”

“How many and where?” Martin asked.

“Four others across the planet. Since Jorlari was the capital there is another on the far side of this city.” Kesyla answered.

Martin looked at Danny. “Prep a team. We’re going to check it out.” He said.

Drenia looked at Martin. “I wish to remain here.” She stated. “We have... Tasmor have Death Rites that...”

Martin reached out and took her arm once more. “I’ll send for more people to do the same. Wait for them.”

“We will go with King Martin.” Namiri said. “In case there are other Tasmor at these other facilities.”

“Yes.” Emylea agreed.

Drenia nodded her head. “Very well.”

“Kesyla... contact Manda and give her the locations of the other sites across the planet.” He said. “I want full teams moving within the hour. Drenia... can you contact your ship and have your people assigned to each team?”

Drenia blinked quickly stunned that he would suggest this so soon after what had occurred between their peoples. “I... you wish to work together?”

Martin nodded his head. “This affects both our peoples.” He said softly. “I’m not going to leave you out of it.”

Drenia nodded quickly. “I will see to it.” She said.

Martin looked around the control room and shook his head. “Man I ain’t going to like telling Anja this.” He said softly. “Whoever did this... she’s going to want their heads on a nubous platter.”

“No bet here Skipper.” Julie hissed in agreement.

“Let’s move people.” Martin spoke.

BETA QUADRANT AUSTROVA SBR MAIN CHAMBERS

The Anteroom was large and comfortable and easily able to fit all of them as they lounged around waiting for Coren to come retrieve them. Two monitors on either side of the room were focused into the huge Regent Chamber and the activity had been boisterous to say the least. Ardan and his supporters had been very active and passionate so far making their case about how the Lycavorians should not be trusted and how they had been lied to over the course of the years in what advances they have made, among other things, and this proved that they could not be trusted in the future.

So far Coren and Alrerin had not made their move, remaining silent for the most part unless another Regent asked a question. Andro could also see Asay sitting patiently in her seat waiting for the moment to pounce. Coren and Alrerin had decided she would present their case before the Board of Regents because of her background in Vanari law and her personal stake in what was going on. In the few hours he had seen and spoken to the woman Andro decided three things about her. Asay Va Eldost was madly in love with Nellian and made no bones about that. She was incensed at what Ardan and other Vanari had been doing to their own people for so many centuries. And Asay Va Eldost was fearless.

A full squad of Cadre Commandos that were loyal to Ardan lined the corridor outside the anteroom they were in to insure that they did not leave. Ardan was the Chief Regent of the Chamber and his security was everywhere. It was not something that they could circumvent now if they wanted to accomplish their task, and Ardan was not stupid enough to try and attack them in their own governmental building. At least that is what Coren and Alrerin said. Andro believed them but took precautions of his own for he was not willing to trust the man and his deviousness. Armen had a sensor lock on each of them from SPARTA'S WRATH and would teleport them off the planet the moment things began to go bad.

Eliani and Jomann sat on a small couch near the door, Brendi between them and soaking up the love that poured from them for her. Her sisters and parents had found happiness and a new life within the Lycavorian Union and Brendi had now embraced fully the feelings for Eliani and Jomann that had been building over the last weeks and months. Dorian sat with Denali and Arduri on another couch watching the proceedings, while Deion and Mari shared a large chair and were speaking in soft whispers with Ne'Veha, Carisia, Lu'ria, Sehri and Caliria. Senators Ya'sur, Pyath and Zarnia were conferring in soft whispers on another couch.

Andro turned his head back to the monitor as he felt Dutkne come up beside him with Sadi. She didn't hesitate and stepped up beside him, pressing her lush body to his right side intimately and wrapping her arms around his waist. She wore the Union's standard Flight Suit now, which she had obviously tailored to meet her own tastes. It hugged her perfectly formed ass and legs and conformed to her full breasts and muscular upper body like a second skin. Ne'Veha wore a similarly tailored uniform while Carisia, Lu'ria, Sehri and Caliria wore the modified light armored version of the new Mark VI Armorpoly.

"Please don't tell me you find this interesting." Dutkne said with a small grin. He wore the same standard Mark VI Armorpoly as Androcles with his ever present Ishon secured on his right leg and the KM12A on his left.

Sadi chuckled as Andro rolled his eyes in disgust. "Carians joa," He hissed. "It makes my head hurt just watching them."

Dutkne nodded his head in agreement. "It is amazing that they have gotten this far and become this advanced given all the squabbling they do in there."

"It works for them." Sadi said as Andro leaned over and nuzzled her cheek and ear and caused blissful lances of delight to cascade through her.

He turned back to the monitor. "I am watching the expressions on their faces. The ones I can see anyway." Andro explained.

Sadi squeezed her arms tighter around his waist. "What do you see Saradasaar?"

Andro shook his head slowly. "Confusion. Disbelief. Shock." He answered her. "I also see questions in many of their eyes."

"Perhaps they are questioning how Ardan knows so much of this." Sadi spoke.

Andro nodded his head in agreement. "That would be my first guess yes." He said. "That works in our favor actually. Though how much support he is getting from what remains of the OSG here on Austrova is unclear."

"You think they kept agents here?" Sadi asked him. "They have to know that the Vanari will begin to question the presence of every Eridiani now."

Andro nodded his head. "Yes. I can't believe all of the Eridiani are going along with what their government and the OSG is doing however. There are undoubtedly some who remain and do not believe in what has been going on. I have to believe that."

"I never thought to ask Dutkne." Sadi continued. "How large are the Eridiani as far as a government and people?"

Dutkne shrugged his broad shoulders. "Their homeworld is Edanon. They have colonized perhaps a dozen worlds and last estimates put their population at roughly six trillion across those worlds. Ompar and Nasmon are their largest colonies. They have grown quite a bit in the last millennia because of forced birth rates."

“Forced?” Sadi asked.

Dutkne nodded his head. “Woman above the age of seventeen are married off quickly by their families. They are required by law to have a child within the first year of the marriage.”

“And if they don’t?” Sadi asked somewhat taken aback by this knowledge.

Dutkne shook his head. “I do not know what the exact punishment is, I have never asked, but if what I have heard is any indication, the penalty is not pleasant.” He replied. “The only exceptions are women who end up not being able to have children. The Eridiani have very strict population laws. You must have two children if you have been married for at least five years. If you have been married for ten years you must have four or more children. It’s all a numbers game with them.”

“Love does not factor into this?” Sadi asked.

Dutkne shook his head. “Not to my understanding of their laws. There have been rumors of those who rebelled against these laws, they disappeared, and we have never been able to discover what happened to them.”

“They do not want a repeat of what took place when my adopted Uncle Ben’s family left the fold.” Andro spoke softly.

Dutkne nodded his head. As Praetorian and Mage, there was very little they did not know about each other for they had shared their histories with each other almost without second thought. “Agreed.” Dutkne said. “That incident, what we know of it anyway, that appears to have cut their population out here very nearly in half.”

“I know father has talked to Uncle Ben and Aunt Tina about it, but they do not remember much of it. Their parents and other elders did not speak of it very often once they returned to Earth.” Andro said. “Most of those who returned to Earth have since passed on and among those Eridiani that remain, this knowledge is spotty at best.”

“Could they be involved in this in any way Andro?” Dutkne asked.

Andro shook his head. “Father and Armetus do not believe so.” He replied. “Most of the Eridiani that survive on Earth serve within the military or government. After the attack by the OSG on Cranae Island they very discretely began to come forward to the Durcunusaan or Armetus’ people to insure that they were not implicated.”

“Are we sure all of them came forward my love?” Sadi asked now. “The OSG seems to have quite the intelligence apparatus and they know far more about us than we do about them.”

“Armetus has taken steps to insure this.” Andro told her. “I don’t know what they are, but if there are any who are still loyal to those out here or the OSG he will eventually find them.”

“I have spoken with General Tarnei.” Dutkne said softly moving the conversation away from what they could not control. “Most of the extracting units are on their return legs now. Many should be returning to their ships within the hour.”

“Casualties?” Andro asked looking at him.

“Six dead.” Dutkne answered somberly. “Twenty-four wounded, three of whom are not expected to make it according to the Hadarian Medical Officer. She is doing all she can, but their injuries were too severe. They are all from the same Assault Force. The OSG facility had apparently been improved from the last intelligence reports that we received. They had set up an ambush. The Ground Commander believes they got a message somehow and knew they were coming. The Vanari Commandos in support acted with incredible bravery and were able to pull our people back and finish the mission. Most of the wounded refused to be evacuated and secured the extraction zone while our remaining forces and the Vanari finished off the OSG.”

“How many have we saved Dutkne?” Andro asked softly.

“At last count... Tarnei says over thirty-two thousand.” Dutkne answered him, “More than twice the number that even our best estimates suggested.”

Andro nodded his head and slipped his arm tighter around Sadi’s waist, filling his lungs with her sugar plume and spice scent and allowing it to calm him. “Then they died gallantly.” He spoke. “And they will not be forgotten.”

“Magar.” Sadi whispered the word. (Never)

They heard soft laughter and turned to see Arduri and Caliria playfully pushing at each other, their eyes changed and their fangs extended. Denali was smiling as he moved up beside Dutkne. “They are debating who will have the largest fangs.” He told them. “I tried to explain to them since we are brothers; the virus within us is identical and it won’t matter. They weren’t buying it. Inamarno started to go all medical on us.”

Andro and Sadi smiled at this. Caliria had certainly blossomed since Andro had bitten her on their first night back together. And she absolutely relished that her sisters were so close to her and were experiencing the same things as she was. They had only spoken with Naesta via secure COMs since she was still on Earth, but they had shared everything as sisters should.

The door to the lounge area opened suddenly and they turned as Coren walked into the room. They could see the half dozen Vanari Cadre Commandos behind him in the corridor, all of them armed but their weapons not at the ready.

“We are ready Androcles.” Coren spoke as he came up to them. “They are asking that you be brought forth as leader of the Lycavorians so that they can hear what you will present. Asay will presenting all of the information we have thus far obtained. She is eager to bring Ardan down.”

Caliria and the others had come up off the floor upon seeing him enter and she and Arduri moved to their father’s side. “What is your sense Papa?” Arduri asked.

Coren nodded his head to her. “They are shocked and confused.” He told them. “Even many of those who we know support Ardan are stunned at what Ardan is trying to convince them has been taking place. He is attempting to discredit everything about the Protectorate and the Union that he can through his cronies. They will be even more stunned when Asay begins to reveal what we have discovered and how it implicates Ardan.”

“Will they believe it sir?” Dutkne asked now. “Or will it become nothing more than a stalemate between sides.”

Coren shook his head. “That I don’t know. And neither does Alrerin.” He spoke. “We are planning for this however. Asay and I will be returning to Amanuce once we are done here, and Rinel has already arranged for more security from his Lycanari to protect Alrerin. He refuses to leave and with his daughter in the position she is now with the Union, Rinel said he had to beat back the volunteers to protect him.”

Andro nodded his head. “Good.” He said. “After today any attempt against Alrerin will expose Ardan for what he truly is.”

Coren nodded his own head in agreement. “And he won’t be able to stop what comes after that.”

“Putting the First Regent in that position is risky father.” Caliria spoke.

Coren nodded his head. “I know and so does Alrerin. But he knows it is the only way to truly insure we are free of the OSG forever.” He looked around and saw everyone waiting for his word and he turned back to Androcles. “You did not bring everyone?”

“The fewer of us here if something goes terribly wrong the better it will be.” Andro told him. “Those of us here now, we are family, and we will know what the other will do in nearly any given circumstance. It is better this way.”

“Androcles...?” Coren began.

“Do not worry Coren, Ya’sur, Pyath and Zarnia are going to handle most of the talking. I will keep my mouth shut unless it is otherwise needed.” Andro answered him with a smile. Coren grinned in response. “If things regrettably become violent and they try to detain us we will not kill any Vanari. I cannot promise that some will not be hurt if they try to impede us from leaving however.”

Coren nodded his head. “Good enough.” He took a deep breath and looked at all of them. “Then shall we get this started?”

VANARI BOARD OF REGENTS CHAMBERS

Andro let his azure colored eyes sweep the men and women sitting all around them in the massive hall. Their chairs rose up at an angle from where he stood, some reaching as high back as thirty rows back. They stood on the presentation platform, the Vanari Regents making up a massive U shape around them in their chairs. It was similar to the Spartan Senate chambers on Earth but considerably larger. Asay Va Eldost was currently speaking to the entire chamber and the expressions on some of the faces present was priceless. To hear that their own people were being accused of such actions was almost too much to believe. Ya'sur stood beside Androcles and he leaned closer to him now as the others stood behind them also gazing around the chamber.

[Are you sure you do not wish to speak Milord?] He asked within the confines of the shielded Etheric connection.

Andro nodded his head as he met his eyes. [I'm no politician Ya'sur. You know that.] He said.

[You are more accomplished than you give yourself credit for.] Ya'sur told him.

Andro smiled. [Carrians I hope not.] He stated as Ya'sur grinned. [What is the consensus among you and the others?]

Ya'sur looked around the chamber quickly and then back to Androcles. [Regrettably, we do not think they will alter their views of us.] He answered. [At least not initially. The perverse mentality that we are somehow beneath them has fermented for too long and allowed to expand into the fabric of their society. While many Vanari that we have had contact with do not have this view, quite the opposite in fact, especially since Denali and the others arrived, those that are in power do unfortunately.]

[And they are who make the rules.] Andro said.

Ya'sur nodded his head. [Yes, they do.] He looked at Andro. [Was this the wisest course of action now Milord?]

Andro looked at him. [My father and mothers made this decision Ya'sur. You know how they are when it comes to situations like this.]

Ya'sur nodded his head once more. [Indeed I do.]

[They were very pointed about what they wanted. If the Vanari do not wish to work with us as equals, then we will not work with them at all. Period. My mother Anja and my father used quite a few colorful metaphors that I will not repeat at this time. My medwaw For'mya simply shook her head in disgust.] Andro told him.

Ya'sur nodded as he chuckled softly. [Yes, that would probably be good. I have heard your father and all of your mothers at different times. They do not mince words.]

[No, they do not.] Andro agreed.

The internal speakers within the chamber cackled loudly for a second ending their conversation and interrupting Asay as a Vanari stood up from his chair. According to the seat he occupied, he was a member of the normal Vanari Board of Regents as the SBR members sat in different colored chairs in a section all their own, that was elevated slightly higher than the others.

“Forgive me Senior Regent Va Eldost, but this is all very hard to believe.” The man spoke now. “This is... what you are saying is completely the opposite of what Senior Regent Ardan has presented to us this day. Are you suggesting that... are you suggesting that Regent Ardan is lying to us?”

Asay looked at the man as Ya'sur leaned close to Andro once more. [This is one of the lower Regents that Coren reports is working with Ardan.] He said.

“I am not suggesting anything.” Asay spoke firmly. “I have presented facts which prove that is the case! Facts that demonstrate Senior Regent Ardan has been working with the OSG for decades at least. Working with them in the kidnapping and selling of our own people into slavery! And he has made a tidy profit in doing so!”

This brought a rush of murmurs from the gathered Regents as they turned to each other and were whispering back and forth.

“You have presented nothing but hearsay and false accusations!” Galar erupted now from his seat as he came to his feet. “You have no proof of anything you have just spouted! None!”

“No proof?” Asay demanded. She motioned with her hand to where Caliria stood beside Carisia and Lu'ria. “The proof stands before you Regent Galar! Caliria Leonidas, formerly Caliria Re Mydala! She herself was subjected to the chemical slavery that the OSG inflicts upon our females so that they can harvest our Alkay! She is free of it as she stands before you now. She is her own self once more! This is because of the counter agent that the Lycavorians from the Union developed! All the young Vanari who were prisoners with her are now free of the OSG chemical! Every one of them!”

“Where are they then?” Galar demanded. “Why have none presented themselves before us? And why have our own doctors and scientists not been able to make this so called counter agent?”

“There is a simple reason for that.” Asay spoke firmly. “They do not trust their own rulers!”

“That is preposterous!” Galar shouted.

“Is it?” Asay continued. “Yssyla Vol Dumor is right now on the Lycavorian Union ship the SCIMITAR in orbit. Her father and mother and her seven brothers and sisters have been with her since she arrived. She is one of those captured and broken by the OSG drug with Caliria Leonidas. She returned here of her own accord to prove that the counter agent developed by Caliria and later refined by the Hadarian Queen Anja Leonidas, does indeed work.”

“Then why will she not come before us?” Galar demanded once more.

“You interviewed her yourself Regent Galar.” Asay said in reply. “On that very ship. She told you and I and the others with us that she would not return to Austrova because she feared for her life. She feared being captured again and taken by the OSG since so many of those in this room are involved in this despicable practice of selling our own people to the OSG!”

“Now you accuse others as well?” Galar barked.

“I will accuse all those who have been proven to be participating in this vile act with the OSG!” Asay barked loudly. “Our enemy! An organization that has taken our females and males and broken them for profit! Hundreds of them! Thousands of them through the decades and centuries before this day! An organization of criminals that we have allowed to dictate to us what we will do!”

“This is absurd!” Eyon Ahn Vernalo spat now as he too came to his feet. “Caliria Re Mydala is the criminal! It is she who broke our own laws when she began trying to make this so called cure! Her sisters and brother are criminals as well for moving well beyond the authorized inclusion areas of Vanari space! Her own mother has allowed herself to become tainted by one of these... these Lycavorian beasts and he has taken her as his wife! She refused to return here and face punishment for her actions! We should be addressing these crimes and not insinuating that others are guilty of something you cannot prove!”

“You yourself have become tainted by these beasts!” Galar shouted now. “Or do you deny that you have taken one of these animals into your bed!”

Asay was prepared for this and she smiled proudly. “I will not deny that!” She stated firmly. “I embrace that! I have discovered a man who treasures me above all else! A man who treats me not as some form of a commodity but as a temple to be worshiped at!”

Andro turned his head and looked back to where Nellian was standing. The tall, ebony skinned Durcunusaan Captain shrugged his broad shoulders with a smile. [She does taste and smell divine Milord. Even more now since I have turned her.] He stated. [We will have strong and beautiful children together.]

Andro smiled and couldn't help but shake his head. [Bravo Nellian. Bravo!]

“You do not repudiate this?” Galar gasped in shock.

“Repudiate it?” Asay barked back at him. “By the Prophets, why would I deny something that I have found I cannot live without? I am proudly his wife and mate now! And we will have many beautiful children!”

Andro saw Nellian's face beaming with pride at her confident statement and he smiled himself as that pride filled him as well.

“You openly admit to violating our laws as well!” Ardan now spoke for the first time.

Asay looked at him from her spot in front of the Lycavorians behind her. “Do not dare to stand there and accuse me of violating Vanari laws Ardan Vu Lamurrion! I have studied and practiced Vanari law for far longer than you! You, who have been selling our people into forced slavery for decades, if not longer, and building your wealth because of that!”

Ardan rose to his feet now in anger. “You will be silent!” He screamed.

“I will not be silent!” Asay shouted back at him. “Not any longer! Not after what I have discovered you have allowed to take place for so many years!”

“You have no proof!” Ardan barked.

“I have all the proof I need!” Asay snapped. “And you cannot deny it any longer!”

“The word of these Lycavorian animals?” Ardan hissed at her vehemently. “These supposed communications between myself and the OSG? This is your proof? Where is Kinryn Aal Samaur? Let her come before us now and accuse me of this!”

Asay smiled calmly now and shook her head. “What she provided to me is more than enough! She is far out of your reach now Ardan.” She replied. “And far from the clutches of your OSG comrades.”

“Where is she?” Ardan screamed.

“You stand there demanding all of this Ardan Vu Lamurrion, but not once have you denied what I am accusing you of taking part in. Not one time have you repudiated what I have been saying?” Asay suddenly spoke. “Why is that?”

Ardan appeared flustered for a moment and Alrerin Sha Harael smiled from where he sat in his chair. Asay had just provided the first crack to the exterior shell that Ardan Vu Lamurrion had placed around himself all of these years in order to protect himself. Alrerin felt it now. He felt that the future was changing even as he sat in this chamber.

“Everything I have done has been for the benefit of the Vanari people!” Ardan screamed.

Asay met his gaze from across the distance between them. “You mean for your benefit.” She stated evenly. “For I am sure I can produce hundreds, if not thousands of Vanari fathers and mother who would dispute that claim fervidly!”

“You dare question me!” Ardan roared now.

“Oh yes, I dare!” Asay shouted right back at him undaunted. “You and so many who are assisting you have been blaming another species for centuries! Blaming them alone for crimes you have perpetrated! You blame others while you increase your standing and wealth! You lie to our people! Devra Re Mydala and her children may have broken our laws, but she was acting as a mother who loves her children! She was working to save her child while it was you who has been selling our children for centuries!” Asay blinked quickly. “And it was you who gave the order to have Caliria Re Mydala abducted in the first place! We have this knowledge Ardan! It was contained in one of the many OSG computers on the ship that was seized by Prince Androcles Leonidas when he freed his Inamarno! Do not blither and blather! Deny this all you like but we have the proof!”

Ardan’s eyes were wide in disbelief. “You lie!” He stammered loudly.

“I don’t need to lie in order to prove that you are a cancer among our people!” Asay spat at him. “And things need to change! Things will change!”

“Enough!” The deep voice bellowed and all heads turned to where Alrerin rose from his chair.

Ardan glared at him. “First Regent you allow this to happen in this very chamber!” He snarled. “You sit there and do nothing when you have been tainted by these beasts yourself!”

Alrerin heard the gasps from dozens of men and women near him and he met Ardan’s eyes unflinching and smiled. “If you have something to say Regent Ardan...” Alrerin spoke. He waved his hands outward in a circular motion. “Please, by all means enlighten those of us in this chamber!”

“Your own daughter is married to one of these animals!” Ardan blurted out in anger. “She has given him children! She has corrupted the Vanari bloodline with her actions! For decades you have sat there and agreed with everything we have done! Not once have you disagreed with how we conducted ourselves with the Lycavorians. And now we discover this!”

Alrerin nodded his head. “All true.” He stated confidently. “The difference however, the difference is that I was protecting my family Ardan.” He plugged a data pad in to the arm of his chair and touched several buttons. “I have just uploaded to the Regent’s Database every fact surrounding my daughter’s abduction by the OSG, as well as her subsequent marriage to Riordian. I have detailed every trip to the former Protectorate’s homeworld that my wife and I took in order to see our daughter and our grandchildren.” This information garnered even more gasps as men and women began to drop their eyes to the small computers on their chairs. “I have six grandchildren, all of them healthy and fit, and all of them Lycanari.” Alrerin smiled as he saw the expressions of the faces closest to him. “That is the name they use for themselves. Half Lycavorian and half Vanari. Something that our own doctors and scientists have said for centuries would be impossible. I stand before you now and tell you it is not only possible, it is a reality! Nearly half a million strong their numbers are now and living wonderful lives within the former Protectorate and now the Union. Men and women who chose not to return to their own people for it was our people that allowed them to be taken!” Alrerin let his eyes sweep across the gathered Vanari Regents. “Yes, I have lied to you and to our people! I have lied to protect those I love! I have allowed this to continue for too long! Too many have lost their sons and daughters because I was selfish and remained silent! I will be silent no more!”

“This is outrageous!” Cruor barked out now as he came to his feet. “I call for a vote of no confidence in the First Regent!”

Alrerin saw many heads bob up and down in agreement and he smiled once more. He nodded his own head. "And a vote we will have Regent Cruor!" He spoke shocking Ardan and Cruor. "But not before all the lies have been laid bare here today! However, right now we have other matters to attend too!" Alrerin stepped away from his chair further and looked down at where Androcles stood calmly. "We are here today, at this moment, to decide what we will do given the intelligence provided to us not only by our own people but by the Lycavorians themselves!"

"How can we trust anything they have given to us?" Ardan screamed as he also moved further away from his chair, trying to refocus the attention of everyone off of himself. "They have admitted to taking part in the abduction of our people! They have admitted to working with the OSG!"

Alrerin looked directly to Ya'sur. "Senator Ya'sur... I understand it is you who will be speaking for the Union."

Ya'sur began to step forward with a nod but Androcles took his arm. Ya'sur turned to meet his eyes. "Milord?" He asked, his voice carrying over the internal COM speakers within the chamber.

"I will address this." Androcles said after taking a deep breath. "I act in the stead of my parents as King and Queens of the Union."

Ya'sur looked at him for a long moment and then smiled slightly. "As you wish Milord."

Andro stepped away from where Ya'sur stood beside him and glanced back to where Sadi and his wives and mates stood. Caliria held tightly to Sadi's hand with one hand, and Carisia the other. All of them stood tightly grouped together, as they had begun to do recently. He saw all of them smile and look at him with adoration and love in their eyes. Andro pulsed them all with a small portion of his aura and turned back to Alrerin.

"I will speak for the Lycavorian people in place of my father and mothers who are King and Queens of the Union." Andro said confidently.

"It was you who gave us the intelligence you gathered implicating your own people in these acts Androcles Leonidas." Alrerin spoke once more, giving the opening to Androcles that they had spoken of in private.

Andro nodded his head. "It was taken from several OSG operatives captured during the rescue attempt of Caliria and other Vanari females from a prominent slave trader within The Wilds in the Alpha Quadrant, yes." He answered. "The information obtained from them led us to a number of individuals of Lycavorian descent that were actively involved in the trafficking of slaves within Union territory. Not just Vanari slaves, but others as well."

"Where are these individuals?" Alrerin asked them. "Why were they not brought here to us for justice?"

"The Lycavorian Union does not tolerate slavery of any kind within its borders. This has been one of the cornerstones since our founding over three thousand years ago. It is a result of our time as slaves to the High Coven." Andro answered him. "The OSG members who were captured were subsequently interrogated and then promptly executed for their actions. The information they provided to us resulted in our government seizing twenty-three other men and women of Lycavorian birth who were charged with crimes that according to Lycavorian law resulted in execution. This was carried out within one week of their discovery."

"Were any of these men and women part of your government?" Alrerin asked.

Androcles shook his head quickly. "No sir." He replied. "They were men and women who chose to live outside our laws and it ultimately cost them their lives. They will not be missed." Andro's words caused many of the Vanari Regents to gasp and stare at him in horror with the callousness of his words.

"And how do we know that they were not killed in order to protect your government's involvement in this?" Cruor barked from his chair.

Androcles met his gaze. "I will not begin to relate to you the history of my people Regent Cruor Ahn Vernalo." He answered. "You obviously do not care and I don't have the patience. I can provide to this body all of the logs made during the interrogations but I will not stand here and attempt to defend my people from someone who has built his wealth and power off the backs and suffering of his own kind."

Cruor rose quickly to his feet. "You accuse me?" He screamed.

"As one of my beloved sisters is so fond of saying, if the shoe fits, wear it." Andro stated bluntly.

"You deny any involvement in the recent attacks on Coren Re Mydala and our own First Regent?" Ardan now snapped out the question.

“The Lycavorians involved in those attacks also targeted me and my family.” Andro answered. “They were assisted by the OSG, who are amazingly allowed free access to your planet and all of your colonies. They are supported and protected by a government that this Vanari governmental body has diplomatic and commercial ties to Regent Ardan. The relatively few Lycavorians involved in these attacks were members of the former Protectorate. Men and women who chose to ignore the former Protectorate’s own laws regarding slavery of any kind. They did not succeed in their task and they paid the price with their lives. The First Regent survived thanks in part to another of my sisters and several Lycanari as well as his own security force of Vanari Commandos. The Lycanari exist, they have existed for over a century, and several of them stand among you right now and you don’t even know it.” Andro let that sink in for a second and saw Rinel and Nyosa smiled proudly out of the corner of his eye. “Dutkne, the former Director General of the Protectorate as you all know, informed me of others within the borders of the former Protectorate who were also taking part in the slavery of Vanari men and women. They have since been dealt with in the same manner as those in the Alpha Quadrant.”

“We are expected to believe this?” Ardan exclaimed.

“I don’t particularly care if you believe it or not Ardan.” Androcles stated bluntly. “My Hadarian mother and Aunts took the work done by Caliria and were able to finish the portions of the counter agent to the OSG chemical that they have used to break Vanari females for so long. A work Caliria herself would have finished had she not been taken by the OSG. You have known this for months, you saw it work for yourself, yet you stand there now questioning the reality of this counter agent. You have kept this knowledge from many of your fellow Regents as well as the Vanari people as a whole. Why is that?”

“Our doctors and scientists were not able to confirm the validity of what you claim!” Ardan shouted. “I trust them far more than I trust a man who kills so wantonly and without provocation. Everyone here saw what you yourself did to that man in the Alpha Quadrant. It was broadcast on open frequencies by your own ships!”

“That man you are referring to was complicit in the kidnapping, enslavement and rape of my elven mother For'mya!” Andro growled loudly. “He got what he deserved according to Lycavorian law and you truly do not want to tread in those dark waters with me Regent Ardan Vu Lamurrion. And you also did not answer my question to you.”

“I do not answer to you boy!” Ardan roared.

Andro stared at him for a long moment across the distance and nodded his head. “No, you do not.” He finally spoke. “Nor do I answer to you, or the Vanari Board of Regents!”

“You are within Vanari space!” Ardan barked. “You are on our planet! You will adhere to our laws on all things!”

Andro shook his head. “No, I will not.” He stated. “Dutkne has provided to me every bit of information and every iota of intelligence that has been gathered from the first moment the Vanari encountered my people. I have read it all. You call my people savage, when it is the Vanari who began the war with my people so many years ago by trying to subvert initial talks using the Alkay secreted by your people. When this incident was discovered by my people, you destroyed a ship with over three hundred men and women on it to protect this secret. That is what began the war between the Vanari and the Protectorate. How many of your own people know that Regent Ardan, or will you try to deny history?”

“That has no bearing on what is taking place this day!” Ardan barked.

“Oh, but it has every bearing on what is happening today and what will happen in the future.” Androcles stated. “Even when the war was brought to an end by brave men and women on both sides, the Vanari Board of Regents looked upon my people as beneath them. You have known OSG agents walking the streets of Austrova even while my people are confined to their embassy. You have dismissed important intelligence and other information given to you by the former Protectorate through the years because your own people did not obtain it. This was Intelligence and information that could have saved Vanari lives, yet you chose to ignore it because it was given to you by a species you consider beneath you because we are different.” There was a flash of silvery white light and then hundreds of Vanari Regents gasped in fear and came to their feet as before them suddenly stood the massive, raven black wolf with rippling muscles and blazing azure colored eyes. Just as quickly there was another flash of silvery white light and Andro returned to his human form.

“Yes, we can change our forms.” Androcles continued quickly. “But if that is how the Vanari judge an individual, not by our actions and deeds, but by the fact we can shift our forms to that of a majestic animal, then that it is not something I will subject my people too. That is not something my father and mothers would subject our people too.”

“Now you threaten us?” Ardan shouted.

Andro smiled sadly and shook his head. “As with so many men and women who do not know the difference between a threat and a statement of fact Regent Ardan, you only confirm my first impression of you when we met on my ship.” He answered him. “I have admitted to members of my species being involved in the kidnapping and enslavement of Vanari men and women. They were not members of my government, and they never have been. All those who were revealed to be involved in this insidious practice, both within the Alpha Quadrant and here in the Beta Quadrant, all of them have paid for that folly with their lives. That is our law.” Andro stepped forward a little.

“I have also provided to your people the intelligence that implicates you and many others from your own species, your own government, who are also involved with the OSG and helping them to enslave the Vanari. You chose to dismiss this fact even after Regent Asay has provided you with the facts and the proof of Regent Ardan’s guilt.” Androcles spoke. “If those of you in this chamber are so blind to these facts that you will do nothing, you do not have the right to sit here and lead your people in any way.”

“How dare you denounce us?” A female Regent barked out as she came to her feet.

“But you have the right to sit there and judge my people because you hold the misguided perception you are somehow better than us?” Andro spoke. “I think not.”

“Prince Androcles perhaps we...” Alrerin began when other Regents began to come to their feet in response to Androcles’ statement. This was the moment they had waited for and now he would seize it.

“No!” Andro barked loudly bringing the entire chamber to silence. “My brother Denali explained to you what would happen when I arrived here if things did not change. He was not joking Ardan.”

“You wouldn’t possibly dare to end relations with our people!” Ardan barked.

Andro met his eyes and smiled. “Then that makes you a fool.” He stated plainly.

“You cannot do that!” Cruor shouted now.

Andro lifted his hand to reveal the small portable holodisc COM unit that fit into his palm. He tapped it with his opposite finger and the holodisc activated revealing the face and upper body of an older Lycavorian.

“Commander Dajyn, have you been monitoring?” Andro asked.

The man nodded his head. “I have Milord.” He stated gruffly.

“How many ships in your flight Commander?” Andro asked.

“Nineteen Milord.” Dajyn answered instantly. “We are fully loaded with trade goods. From spices to computer parts. Sixty-seven billion converted to the Vanari Rynis currency.”

Andro nodded his head. “Commander, I hereby instruct you to turn your Trade Flight around and return to Amanuce. No delays Commander, simply turn around and return to Union space.”

The man blinked several times but nodded his head finally. “As you order my Prince.” He stated. “Our Vanari escort Milord?”

“Inform them of what you are doing and where the orders come from and then execute.” Andro told him. “They need not know more than that.”

“It will be done sire.” Dajyn spoke.

“Thank you.” Andro said before disconnecting the COM unit and returning it to his belt. He looked up at where Ardan and the other Regents stood. “As of this moment, there will be no more trade between the Vanari and the Union.” He spoke. “All upcoming Trade Flights will be cancelled and all profits reimbursed to the Vanari government at the normal exchange. Also as of this moment, the sitting Senate members on Amanuce are issuing a directive to all Vanari within Union space. They will be asked to come forward and depart Union space. All Vanari civilian travel through Union space will cease as of this moment.”

“We have colonies on the other side of your borders!” A Regent exclaimed.

Andro nodded his head. “You will need to find a way to reach them that does not require you crossing Union space, I’m sorry. If you do not wish to change the way you treat and act towards my people, then on behalf of my father and mothers and as Crown Prince of the Union I am issuing these orders. These directives have been ratified by the Union Senate both here and in the Alpha Quadrant. You do not wish fair trade and commerce with my people. You only wish to let the status quo continue. We however, do not.”

“This is preposterous!” Ardan shouted.

“You may think of it however you like.” Andro spoke. “The embassy here on Austrova will be vacated by the end of this day and you may give it to whoever you find to fill the void. The Vanari embassy on Amanuce will remain open and all Vanari personnel assigned to it will keep their diplomatic status. They will not be hindered or restricted in their movements or activities as Lycavorians are here on Austrova. No additional personnel to the embassy will be allowed however, I am sorry.” Andro spoke. “The current Vanari Ambassador will return to Vanari space and Coren Re Mydala will replace him.”

“You dictate to us who we will appoint!” Ardan exclaimed.

Andro shook his head. “I am only stating who will be allowed to occupy that position. The current Ambassador is an operative for your Vanari Intelligence organization and has been for the last two hundred and sixty-three years. Or did you think we would not discover that?” This knowledge was new to many of the Regents Andro saw by the looks on their faces. “Coren Re Mydala has offered his services for this position in the interim and we have accepted. Given his recent experiences we believe he will have the interests of both parties foremost in his mind.”

“You are destroying centuries of work!” Another Regent shouted out.

“I am destroying centuries of a one-sided relationship.” Andro spoke calmly. “You treat my people as if we are beneath you in almost every way, when we have proven we are equal to you, if not more advanced in many areas. We have atoned for the crimes of a few among my people when it comes to the taking of Vanari. Those men and women have been dealt with according to our laws as I have already stated to you. We will not be treated like second rate people any longer. We have given you the means to mass produce a counter agent to the OSG serum that afflicts those Vanari injected with it. You can inoculate all Vanari and end the hold that the OSG has over your people. You have had this ability and knowledge for months and have chosen to not do anything with it.”

“We demand that the criminal Caliria Re Mydala be handed over to us!” Galar shouted quickly. “She must answer for her crimes! All of the Re Mydala children need to answer for their violation of our laws!”

“You consider attempting to rescue your child from a life of slavery a crime?” Sadi demanded now as she came up beside Androcles.

“You understand nothing of what you speak!” Galar barked out.

“I understand enough!” Sadi spat at him. “I understand all of you are fools! You allow a select few to sell your own people into slavery and you do nothing. I understand that action is despicable no matter the reason!”

“You will be...” Galar began to shout back but Androcles stepped forward even more on the platform.

“Do not finish that statement Regent Galar!” Andro snarled loudly. “Not if you wish to remain among the living!”

“You only give credence to what many of us think of your people by your own actions here today!” Ardan yelled now.

“What you think of my people does not concern me in the least!” Andro barked back at him. “You sell your own people into slavery and reap the profits from that in order to advance your own status! And no one in this chamber, save a select few, have the fortitude to stand up and speak the truth about that! How many of you have known this was going on! How many of you have taken part in it!”

“It has been this way for centuries!” Another Vanari Regent echoed.

Androcles shook his head slowly. “And it appears that the Vanari people will have to suffer for it for even longer.” He stated. “Caliria and Arduri Re Mydala are now Princesses of the Lycavorian Union. Caliria is my wife and mate! Arduri is my brother’s wife and mate! Any attempt to forcibly make them do anything by Vanari personnel will be met by force! Do not think that for political expediency we will surrender those we love and honor! Any Vanari who wishes to remain within Union space will be welcome. Any Lycanari who wishes to return here will be welcome to leave. Any Vanari parent who wishes to see their family members again will be granted permission.”

Ardan stepped forward to the railing. “What are you speaking of?” He demanded.

Andro turned to Sadi then and nodded his head. Sadi reached up on her toes and kissed him softly before turning and motioning with her hand to those who had gathered behind them. Immediately the Lycavorians and Lycanari standing behind Androcles began to turn and depart the way they had come in, even as other Regents began to rise to their feet.

“We are not finished here!” Galar screamed.

Andro looked at him. “Yes we are.” Androcles told him. “I have other, more pressing concerns to deal with. You wish to treat us as beneath you, so be it. We do not have to tolerate it however. As of this moment all diplomatic ties between the Union and the Vanari Empire are severed. We will be neither hostile nor friendly. Any attempt to cross into Union space by Vanari forces will be met by equal force. I would not make the mistake of testing us on this issue. You would not like the response you receive.”

“You cannot dictate to us!” Cruor shouted.

“I am not dictating anything.” Andro repeated. “I’m simply stating how it will be.” He turned and saw Sadi and his wives and mates trailing the group as they departed the main chamber and he turned back to them. “As for my earlier statement, have none of you wondered where the heads of your news organizations are? Why are there so few who report your news here in this chamber? I have noticed that many of you have been looking for them.”

“What nonsense do you speak?” Ardan barked.

Androcles shook his head sadly. “It is a shame that the Vanari people have to suffer the likes of you and those like you Ardan Vu Lamurrion. They deserve so much more.” Andro turned and began to walk away while many of the Regents looked on with disbelief in their eyes.

“We are not finished here Prince Androcles!” Ardan screamed. “You cannot just walk out on this Board!”

Andro stopped and those closest to him saw his shoulders rise and fall in a deep breath. Andro turned and reached behind his back to pull out the small globe like item. “I can walk out Regent Ardan. That is exactly what I intend.” He held up his hand, palm up and exposed the small globe like object.

“You turn your backs on tomorrow and the wonders that it could bring to the Vanari because you cannot forget the past and let go of the demons that plague you. Because you are content to sell your own people into slavery and worse in order to line your pockets and give you more power.” Andro spoke evenly. “I will not be party to that mentality and neither will my people. This... this is my parting gift to the Vanari people. This is what we have done to try and right the wrongs of a few. What you do with it is now up to you.”

“What are you doing?” Ardan screamed. “What is that?”

“This?” Andro said lifting the globe higher. “This is how it could have been.” His arm flashed upward and he heaved the globe into the air above him amidst the shouts and screams of the Vanari Regents who thought it was a bomb of some sort. Andro turned once more and began to walk out of the chamber as the globe activated and over a dozen streams of light burst from the globe and formed images.

As Vanari Regents began to regain their composure, they could see vast amounts of activity in all of the holo streams. The globe appeared to be picking up the transmissions of many different events that were taking place. As if on cue, one of the screens centered and became larger than the others and the face of a female Vanari became focused and clear and her voice began to resonate within the chambers own internal communications system. Many of the Regents present knew who she was for they watched her every evening on the Vanari news networks.

“...This is Aori Va Alsul reporting to you from the hanger deck of the Lycavorian Union warship called the SPIRIT OF THE WIND. Four days ago, I and two dozen of my fellow News Anchors were taken in the night by Vanari Commandos and brought to an undisclosed location. We were sequestered away and only told that we were going to be part of an operation that would have wide ranging repercussions across the entire Quadrant. We found ourselves split up and taken to both Vanari ships and Lycavorian Union ships like this one. I have been in contact with each of them in these last hours and what we are seeing happening is... it is simply beyond belief.” The entire Regent chamber became deathly quiet as the roar of a ship entering the hanger bay interrupted her words and she stopped talking. All of them saw several TEMPEST Fighters land in the distance and ground crews rushed forward to meet them.

“Thirty minutes ago I was brought here and just fifteen minutes after that I was told what was happening.” The Vanari reporter continued now. “Roughly nine hours ago, a combined Lycavorian Union and Vanari Cadre Commando Task Force began striking at OSG and Eridiani targets all across the Quadrant. Vanari Commandos and members of the Lycavorian Union’s own elite Durcunusaan forces began to attack OSG holding centers and auction houses and free Vanari prisoners all across this sector of space and the adjoining three sectors. We have been told this is happening across four different sectors of space as I have told you. A huge fleet of Union and Vanari ships are in this fleet alone. We are currently orbiting the known OSG planet of Uardo! This planet is one of the largest OSG held planets and all estimates by Vanari sources have stated that there are thousands of Vanari being held here. This very ship began launching fighters three hours ago and they are now beginning to return from attack sorties on the surface. We have also received word that ships carrying Vanari prisoners have begun to land and... By the Prophets!"

All of them saw the picture change to the large ship in the background as the rear ramp touched down on the deck and a combination of heavily armed Lycavorian Durcunusaan and Vanari Cadre Commandos began to quickly file off the ship carrying other Vanari men and women even as medical personnel from both species rushed forward and began to inject the arriving Vanari with something. The images shifted to another ship in the distance and the same thing was happening, then two more that were even further away across the deck. Most of the rescued Vanari were wearing green and red jumpsuits for some reason. The image shifted back to the woman who had been speaking and she now had her finger pressed to her ear to block out at least some of the noise that was happening all around her.

"This is... it is unbelievable!" She gasped aloud with wide eyes. "I am getting reports from my fellow colleagues on other ships that this is happening everywhere! Union and Vanari ships and Commandos are beginning to return with hundreds of Vanari prisoners! OSG and Eridiani ships that tried to fight were obliterated from the stars and we're getting reports of massive casualties among OSG and even Eridiani ground forces from the surfaces of these planets. This is unprecedented in the history of our people! Combined Union and Vanari forces appear to have struck at every known OSG installation base across four sectors with the intent to rescue Vanari citizens being held by the OSG and destroying their holding facilities! I can count over a hundred freed Vanari just within my own view and there are ships in other landing bays that are arriving as well! I can't... this is amazing! All of these people... our people! By... By the Prophets this is a gift from the gods themselves!"

The Regent Chamber on Austrova was silent as they watched this woman break into tears at what was happening all around her. They could see other reporters urgently speaking in the other holo streams even as the images of returning ships and rescued Vanari were being beamed across the expanse of space.

The Vanari Board of Regents would not discover until later that these transmissions were reaching every Vanari news channel on the planet as well as their colonies. In fact, it was being beamed across the entire breadth of the Beta Quadrant.

They would not be able to contain the future any longer.

ARC ROYAL ORBITING VENTORI

To say that this morning had begun the first day of the rest of their lives would not have been appropriate, at least to Saydia Daret. The moment they had stepped foot on this ship all that her people had ever thought had been tossed to the wind. The ship itself was a wonder of technology that her people did not possess, sleek yet graceful. As Aricia Leonidas explained to her as they moved among the many different types of ships on the flight deck, this was an ARIZONA-Class Strike Carrier, which was its official designation. As she and Anthylea walked with her Saydia could not help but think that with the power of this one ship the Tasmor would never have to fear the Kintaur ever again.

She was stunned as they were received in the landing bay of this ship like visiting royalty. Even after what they had attempted on the surface Saydia could detect no hostility or distrust in the faces or the eyes of those she saw. She and Anthylea were both shocked to see men giving orders to females but then twenty meters away females were giving orders to men. There was no question or doubt among the many different species that they saw as they went about their way to carry out these orders. It was astonishing to say the least. Saydia knew that the Tasmor males who served in the Fleet were granted much more leeway in their actions and words to females simply because of their duties. There were very few male officers within the Tasmor Fleet, but the half dozen she could recall right away were very well respected and had many years of experience. Namiri's own father was a ship Captain, a tall and well-built man by Tasmor standards, even the Tasmor females who served on his ship adored the man.

They had split up upon arriving with Perlyea departing the landing bay with Queen Anja while Aricia and the elf Queen For'mya began to show her and Anthylea around the ship. These Lycavorians were so unlike the Pralor people it was as if comparing night and day. There were parts of the ship that they were not shown understandably Saydia knew, but these two women were forthright and honest in everything else. They answered their questions, and Saydia had asked many she knew, without a hint of arrogance or deception that she could detect. They did not mince words and while For'mya seemed to be the word reserved of the two, Saydia could feel the pride they both felt as they showed off their ship. They were not shy either Saydia soon discovered, as shortly after they began to the tour, they took each other's hands and held them tightly. Saydia did not understand how they could all be the wives of one man. That they were lovers came as no surprise to her, nor was it strange in any way. There were thousands of such relationships among the Tasmor simply because there were so few males. Yet how these three women, and three other Queens that she had not even met, how they could share and love the same man was almost beyond her.

That was until Aricia and For'mya began to tell her and Anthylea about their beloved Martin Leonidas.

ARC ROYAL MEDICAL BAY

Perlyea Kalrr had been brought up believing that the Tasmor were the greatest and most important species within the universe. As she grew older she knew that this was a mentality that all species carried with them, but Perlyea truly believed that the Tasmor people, her people were something special. This is how she had lived her life and in over three hundred and fifty years of that life, nothing had ever made her think otherwise.

Until today.

Perlyea Kalrr felt the most comfortable with a computer and research tools. For the last decades she had been working almost solely on trying to change the Tasmor people's fortunes for the better. She had been trying to save them, and in doing so, Perlyea now recognized she had let so much pass her by. She had become far too focused and directed on that goal that nothing else mattered to her. After the horrendous death of her mother and sisters at the hands of the Kintaur she had turned exclusively to her work. She realized now that had been a mistake for she had dismissed so much that could have actually helped her. She was widely recognized as the most intelligent of their people in anything medically related because of her role and what she had accomplished up until this point, but that single minded focus had very nearly cost the Tasmor people their future and their lives. She had brought them to the brink of destruction at the hands of a species and culture that was very similar to their own in many ways. A species that could wipe them from existence and not even break a sweat. Perlyea always considered herself to be an excellent judge of people and this is why she had asked for volunteers from the Ventori Lycavorians in order to help her. She felt that they would respond positively when others did not and she was right. Hundreds had come forward in order to assist her by donating their blood and DNA in order for her to improve the Tasmor people. Many may have done it as a way to thank the Tasmor for saving them, but many more she sensed did it simply for the reason that they were helping others.

Perlyea now knew her obsession had almost been her undoing.

The moment Anja had led her into this Medical Bay Perlyea knew what path lay before her now. Anja Leonidas was without question one of the most astonishingly beautiful females Perlyea had ever seen before. Her Persian red hair and jade colored eyes were heart stopping all by themselves, but when added to her insanely fit and lush figure, Perlyea was quite sure she had never seen a more desirable female before. She was also far more intelligent than herself and...

"Don't do that." Anja's voice broke into her thoughts.

Perlyea turned to look at her, blinking several times. "Excuse me?"

Anja came up in front of her and held out the mug of steaming hot lightly colored liquid. "It's called coffee." She said. "It's a special blend that Aricia made when she was pregnant with our first son Androcles. It has become the most popular brand across the entire Union now and it is very good. You didn't strike me as being a black coffee person so I added a light sweetener and some cream."

Perlyea took the mug and felt the heat through the material. The liquid smelled delicious and she brought it to her lips and sipped it slowly. Her eyes grew wide at the rich flavor and the way it warmed her insides as it went down her throat. "This is delicious!" She exclaimed.

Anja smiled and nodded her head. "Martin and I drink it by the bucket. Our sons Andro and Denali and our daughter Eliani too." She said as her jade green eyes twinkled in the light of the medical bay. Perlyea was without a doubt a very beautiful woman in Anja's eyes, and given the right circumstances she would undoubtedly have many wolves chasing after her for her warmth. She struck Anja as being a powerful woman of both mind and body and many Alphas would think it an honor to court her for her affections. "Never consider others to be more intelligent than you Perlyea."

Perlyea looked at her with wide eyes now. "How did..."

Anja smiled brightly. "I have been in your shoes." She answered. "On several occasions."

"You?" Perlyea gasped.

"Because you have not learned something or do not have the technology does not make you any less intelligent than the next person." Anja told her. "My dear friend Eurin told me that shortly after I met her. I was being introduced to all of this for the first time, just like you. She told me to embrace it, learn how to use it and then go after more." Anja smiled. "So I did."

Anja turned slightly and leaned against the empty medical bed beside Perlyea. "All these computers and knowledge are all good, but what really counts is what is in here." Anja touched her chest over her heart. "And I can smell that your heart is in the right place."

"You can smell that?" Perlyea asked stunned.

"You pick up on little things once you are wolf." Anja said with a shrug. "My sense of smell is nothing compared to Martin or our son Androcles. Those two can track someone across an entire planet if they wanted to, just by their smell, even if they are thousands of kilometers away when they start. It's scary sometimes what they can do. Aricia is almost as good as them, but I like to consider myself not so bad." She said with a smile. "Like the fact that you are like Anthylea. You took the gene enhancement as well didn't you?"

Perlyea looked somewhat embarrassed but slowly nodded her head. "I did not want to subject my people to something that was unknown. I tested it on myself yes. But it did not do what I had hoped."

Anja tilted her head. "What do you mean?"

"The L-Gene, that is what I called it, it improved my overall physical conditioning, my regenerative abilities, my strength and other things, just as it did for Anthylea and the others like us, but it did not do what I had hoped it would do." Perlyea said.

"Like you?" Anja asked.

Perlyea sighed gently. "Anthylea and I are among those Tasmor females that evolution chose to change. We are called Breeders. It is a stupid and vile term to me, but it is what we are called. It was nature's way, at least in my opinion, of improving the chances for Tasmor females to carry children. We are..." Perlyea looked shyly at the floor, which was saying quite a bit for Anja could smell her embarrassment.

Anja stepped forward and took her arm. "I understand." She spoke gently. "And it is nothing to be ashamed of. We have those within the Union who are like this. We call them Drow. They were subjected to some horrific experiments in order to make them like this, but all of them have found lives and a future. Many have even found wives and have children."

Perlyea looked at her with wide eyes. "Truly?" She gasped.

Anja nodded her head. "Their numbers aren't as large as the Tasmor by any means, and they were never meant to have children, but most of them have adopted children and built solid and lasting relationships and friendships. You will find that we are a very open people and what you have between your legs does not matter in the least to most." Anja blurted out and then her own eyes went wide and she looked embarrassed. "Oh forgive me!" She stammered.

Perlyea couldn't help but smile at this reaction and she shook her head. "You speak your mind and are direct with your words. I prefer this."

Anja chuckled now. "Yes, well if you ask Martin, my tongue usually gets me in trouble." She said with a smile. "And I don't mean when I am using it on him."

Perlyea now couldn't help the laugh that escaped her lips and it felt so very good to feel. She had not laughed in so long and it filled her with happiness. It told her that she was still capable of such feelings. She shook her head as she continued to smile. "You and your fellow Queens are not shy about your desire and love for him." She said finally.

Anja shook her head. "No, we are not." She replied. "He is the center of our world, of our hearts, and none of us could ever desire another like we do him. He may have changed all of us, well except Aricia and Bella, he passed his blood to us, but that isn't why we love him so."

"One day I wish to find love like this." Perlyea said softly.

"Keep the faith." Anja told her. "When it happens, it usually comes out of nowhere and hits you like a ton of rocks."

Perlyea met her eyes. "You bring me here, show me all of this, even after what I did. Why?"

Anja smiled once more. "Whatever your intent, it was never about conquering or hurting others. It was always about helping your people. Am I correct in that?"

Perlyea nodded her head. "I fear this single obsession clouded my intentions and I was willing to do almost anything to accomplish this."

"But you recognize that now?" Anja asked.

Perlyea grinned slightly. "Coming face to face with death usually does that." She said. "Your husband, he would have killed us because of what I did wouldn't he? If your pilot had died, he would not have hesitated and he would have killed us all."

Anja nodded her head. "Without a second's hesitation." She answered honestly. "He can be very protective of his friends and family. He has known Tina for a very long time and they have been through a lot together."

Perlyea shook her head in disbelief. "And I almost brought his wrath down upon my people with my obsession." She said softly.

"That's the past." Anja spoke quickly. "That is how Marty wants it to be. He was right in telling you what he did. We are not the Pralor people Perlyea Kalrr and we honor those who are our friends."

"Are we your friends?" Perlyea asked.

"I think having you here on this ship is answer enough." Anja answered.

Perlyea looked around the Med Bay and couldn't help but agree. What she had seen here so far this day was beyond anything she had ever imagined and to be friends with a species like this would have untold advantages. "Yes, it is." She answered.

Anja nodded her head. "Good." She said. "And I'll let you in on a little secret... you didn't fail Perlyea."

Perlyea looked at her oddly. "What... what do you mean?"

"The L-Gene as you called it is doing exactly what you wanted it to do." Anja spoke.

Perlyea's eyes grew wider now. "What?"

"There is something you didn't know when you began using the blood and DNA of the Lycavorians on Ventori. It's probably something they themselves did not know because they have never encountered different species." Anja explained. "The Lycavorian virus that changes a person, once that virus is introduced into another's bloodstream, certain changes take place almost immediately while others take much longer to complete."

Perlyea looked at her. "I don't understand."

"When did you began administering the L-Gene?" Anja asked.

Perlyea thought quickly. "I asked for the volunteers a month after they began arriving and within two months I had a viable sample to test. Once I realized it worked on me I began to mass produce it for the others like me."

Anja nodded her head. "I thought so. And that's exactly what I would have done. However, what you didn't know is that the Lycavorian virus in their blood works at its own pace. It will speed some changes, like the healing properties and increased stamina and strength and such, but more detailed changes need time. I was fully wolf three months after Martin turned me, but I could not have children because the changes had not completed their alterations to my physiology. That took much longer. Almost two years to be exact."

Perlyea's eyes became wider as she realized what Anja was saying, while Anja smiled as she saw the light of recognition and realized she had found someone just as intelligent as her and Duewa. Someone who thought out of the box just as they did.

"Then it... it will work?" Perlyea gasped finally.

Anja nodded her head. "Oh yes." She said pulling out her P9 and setting her coffee on the bed. She typed quickly on the console. "I ran some additional tests on Anthylea's blood when we first got here. Because of the composition of Tasmor physiology, it is just taking longer for the changes to become complete." She showed Perlyea the small screen and the computer model of the changing genes within Anthylea's body. "By my estimation, given the rate of change and when you say she was injected, the L-Gene will finish altering her DNA within two months. Then the changes will be complete and she will be able to... well, she will be fertile." Anja looked at Perlyea. "We would need to know when you injected the others for a more definitive report on the other Tasmor that took the L-Gene, including yourself, but I'd hazard a guess and say most are nearing that point."

"Gods!" Perlyea gasped as she stared at the computer screen. "I never... I thought it was a failure!"

"It was no failure Perlyea." Anja told her. "It was actually really good work. The protein and enzyme additions were perfect and adding the Tasmor central DNA core modules was brilliant. That will keep the Lycavorian DNA from becoming dominant."

Perlyea looked at her. "This means that..."

Anja nodded once more. "Yep. With a few more tweaks we can make it so this L-Gene works on all Tasmor." She said. "And it will not drastically alter the Tasmor in any way as a species. You will still be Tasmor, just a more robust breed of Tasmor. As will all the children born after the L-Gene has been distributed to your people."

Perlyea looked at her with wide eyes. "I... I never imagined that..."

The internal COM came alive and Anja turned her head as Duewa moved quickly into the Med Bay area where they were from her office.

ATTENTION! ATTENTION! ARC ROYAL IS NOW AT CONDITION TWO! ARC ROYAL IS NOW AT CONDITION TWO!

Anja looked at Duewa as she came up to them. "Dee... what's wrong?"

"Anja, Martin and the others have discovered something on the surface." Duewa told her. "Aricia and For'mya are bringing Saydia Daret and Anthylea to the landing bay. He needs you to bring your gear and Perlyea and then all of you move to the surface."

"Duewa, why do you look so pale?" Anja asked her with concern.

Duewa held out the data pad to her. "You aren't going to like it Anja." She said softly. "Not one bit."

JORLARI WESTERN EDGE OF THE CITY

Martin settled to one knee between Julie and Kasdan as they were scanning the large five story building on the fringes of the city. Most of the structures around them had been reduced to rubble in the fighting it appeared for only the shells of buildings remained now. Danny, T'lolt and Kenny were kneeling behind them with Namiri and Emylea between them. Though she was a ship's commander Emylea Daret obviously had been well trained in ground operations and this showed in her movement and handling of the weapons Kenny had provided to her. Martin already knew that Namiri was very proficient and was unconcerned about her skills. Though not as experienced as the other members of his team, she was very competent and skilled.

"Talk to me Kasdan. Jules?" Marin spoke softly.

"The facility appears to be underneath that five story structure to our front." Kasdan told him. "It is considerably larger than the other one Martin. My thermal ground scans are revealing different portions of underground tunnels but it appears to be intermittent at times. I am overlapping it with the initial scans we took of the surface upon entering the system but the scans are accurate. Julie?"

Julie nodded from beside him as she worked on her own P9. “Same here. Sonic scans are bouncing back in places where the ground either caved in on the tunnels below or was brought down intentionally.”

“Intentionally?” Martin asked.

“The entire area is saturated with explosive residue.” Kasdan spoke once more. “There was a large battle in this area. I’m detecting signs of more Pralor weaponry and traces of Pralor manufactured explosives.”

Martin turned his head as Namiri came up beside him on one side and Emylea the other. Danny settled to the ground just behind them as Kenny covered their rear. “Kasdan are you sure?” Martin asked.

Kasdan nodded his head. “Yes.”

“The Pralor people did this?” Namiri asked with a tinge of heat and anger in her voice.

Kasdan shook his head quickly. “No. Pralor weapons were used but my people did not do this.”

“How can you be so sure?” Emylea asked.

Kasdan turned to look at Martin and he nodded his head. “Show them.” He spoke.

Kasdan didn’t hesitate and shifted his P9 into a position that both Namiri and Emylea could view it. He touched the screen lightly. “Look at the composition of the elements here. This is the formula that is used to make our explosive.” He pointed to one side of the screen. “These are the traces of what I am detecting now.” He motioned to the other side of the screen.

Namiri reached out and ran her finger along the screen. She knew immediately what Kasdan was trying to show them for she had dealt with explosives before. “They are not the same.” She said softly. “Similar but not the same. It is... this formula is much cruder.”

Kasdan nodded his head with a smile. “And once more your people prove why we were stupid to not embrace the Tasmor when we had the chance.” He told her.

Namiri looked at him with wide eyes, Emylea’s face mirroring her sister’s in surprise. Martin chuckled aloud. “I told you not all Pralors are arrogant fools.” He said with a smile. “There are those among them that actually have an open mind.”

Kasdan smiled as he looked at Martin. “Thank you Martin.” He stated.

“Where’s the entrance to this facility?” Martin asked looking at Julie.

“Three hundred meters straight on.” Julie answered. “Looks like it’s a sewer entrance here. Nothing connecting to the building. Looks like a wall in the tunnel is actually a door into a part of the sewer that is not connected to the rest of the tunnel system either.”

“Sibfla Jules.” Danny spoke from behind them. “Haven’t we spent enough time in sewers up to this point in our lives?”

Julie smiled at him. “Can’t be any worse than smelling you twenty-four seven.” Julie spat at him. “I don’t know how Anuk, Nayeca and Kesyla do it.”

Martin grinned as he looked at Danny and he threw Julie the middle finger of his right hand causing Martin to laugh a little louder. “You left yourself wide open for that one fervon.” Martin told him.

“Yeah... yeah, fuck you too.” Danny hissed at him but with no malice in his voice.

Namiri and Emylea simply looked at each other, not believing the interaction between these men and women and the man who was their King.

Martin shook his head with a smile and touched his jaw activating his implant. “Colin?”

“Here Skipper.” Colin’s voice echoed in all of their earpieces.

“Location?” Martin asked.

“Pablo and I are in the shadows about a hundred meters north of you.” Colin answered. “We have eyes on what appears to be the front of this building. No movement or activity in the least that we can see.”

Martin nodded his head. “Sewer entrance to your two o’clock. Jules says that’s our way in.”

“Wonderful...” Colin echoed. “More sewers. I love sewers.”

“Meet you there.” Martin spoke with a smile.

“Moving.” Colin answered.

It took all of them under a minute to converge on the manhole cover that would give them access and almost without thought T’lolt reached down and yanked the cover from the ground with barely any effort. Colin and Pablo dropped into the darkness of the tunnel below with no hesitation followed quickly by Martin, Namiri, Emylea, Julie and Kasdan. Danny, Cody and Kenny were the last and both of them gasped at the stench that hit them when they touched the concrete floor of the tunnel.

“Nubou lae!” Kenny hissed in a whisper. “It smells like month old dead flesh in here!”

Namiri and Emylea were holding their hands over their noses, their eyes watching as the faces of Martin and the Lycavorians among them were twisted into masks of disgust. Julie quickly handed them new sets of olfactory blockers which they promptly put in. She smiled at them as she inserted the second one into her nostril and then they watched as the others quickly followed suit. Due to the fact that they were vampire and wolf, their eyes adjusted to the lighting change much more quickly than Kasdan and their Tasmor comrades. Both vampire and wolf preferred to fight at night anyway. Martin saw Colin and Pablo on either side of the section of wall ten meters further ahead of them, Kasdan running his scanner over the solid face of the granite and steel wall.

Martin looked at Namiri and Emylea. “Namiri you stay close to me, Emylea remain right by Julie! This place stinks and I don’t like it! Something ain’t right!”

Emylea moved closer to Julie as Namiri followed him forward. “What does he mean?” She asked.

Julie looked at her. “The Skipper has got the supreme nose of noses among his people.” She explained quickly. “He could sniff out a rat from thirty kilometers away if need be. He also has the finest instincts of anyone alive today. He senses something that is not supposed to be here.”

“That something is not good I take it.” Emylea asked.

Julie shook her head quickly. “It never is.” She stated calmly. “Trouble always seems to find us no matter how much we try to avoid it. Stay close to me.” She began to move forward down the tunnel.

Martin moved up beside Kasdan and knelt down with Namiri on his left and Danny now on his right. “Kasdan?” He asked softly.

“I have found the trigger to make the wall retract but something isn’t right.” Kasdan said.

Danny shook his head. “Fuck! One person says that and we might get lucky, two people say that and we are well and truly screwed.”

“Indeed.” T’lolt echoed softly.

“Talk to me Kasdan.” Martin said.

“I am detecting three intermittent life signs on the other side of this wall.” Kasdan said. “They are within the facility itself.”

“Lycavorian?” Martin asked.

Kasdan shook his head. “No. I cannot... I cannot determine what they are, only that they are there.” He spoke looking at Martin. “They are neither Lycavorian nor Pralor or Tasmor. They are not even Svorag. I’ve never seen anything like it.”

“Man you are just a bundle of good news.” Martin told him. “How far in?”

“The facility appears to be six levels.” Kasdan spoke looking at his P9. “Perhaps half a kilometer square. I cannot get a lock on them because they are so intermittent, but my best guess is one thirty meters in and on the first level, slightly northeast of our current position. The other two are on the third and the fourth levels. Martin, I am also detecting active Pralor Etheric Security Protocols radiating from one of the doors on the fourth level. It appears to be the elevator down to the fifth and sixth levels. They are deeper than the first four.”

“Etheric? You’re sure?” Martin asked.

Kasdan nodded. “Yes.”

Martin made his decision quickly Namiri noted, and without hesitation. “Open the door. Colin, Pablo you two are with me and Danny. The rest of you hold here.”

“King Leonidas you...” Namiri began to protest but Martin looked at her and shook his head.

“You stay here.” He stated once more. “I’m not risking you or your sister regardless of what we may find. You two have a much larger role to play in the future than you can see right now.”

Namiri’s eyes grew wider at this statement and she looked quickly to where Emylea knelt and also wore an expression of surprise. She turned back to Martin. “What... what do you mean?” She asked.

“Trust me on this one.” Martin said before turning to look at Danny. “Let’s go.”

All of their considerable training and experience was in play now as they moved down the corridor with their weapons at the ready. Over a hundred years of small unit operations experience resided in these four men. They were Operators once more. Not King or General or elite troops. Just operators who knew what the other would do in every given situation. Men who could speak to one another without uttering a word. Colin and Pablo had been the first that Martin and Danny had turned all those years ago, Pablo now holding the distinction of being one of the most gifted turned wolves in the Union. While Colin was a vampire, he retained all of the knowledge being a wolf gave to him back then and he had blended it perfectly with his vampire skills now. Julie and Kasdan were monitoring their progress from their P9s, Namiri and Emylea pressed close to her sides to watch.

“Why did he only take four?” Namiri finally asked in a whisper. “Wouldn’t it be better to enter the facility in force?”

Julie smiled and shook her head. “Back in the day, before all of this now, the four of them always worked together. We were all part of a larger team but we worked better with certain members. Kenny and I, Cody and the Master Chief Tony, we were another team within the team. We just meshed better.” Julie looked at them. “The Skipper, Danny, Colin and Pablo, they were and they are the epitome of entering by force.”

The corridor was dimly lit, only emergency power operating it seemed, but this did not hamper them in any way due to their wolf and vampire genes. Colin and Pablo inched along on one side of the corridor, Martin and Danny opposite them on the other side of the corridor, their chopped down P190 A5s held in the ‘ready’ position for use.

Kasdan? Martin’s voice reached out to them in Mindvoice.

Kasdan was watching them on the computer screen. The intersection you are at, go left. He replied. The signal is still there and still intermittent. You will need to cross through what appears to be two labs and into the secondary corridor, but whoever it is, they are remaining still in that corridor.

Martin looked at Colin, who was in front of Pablo and motioned silently with his finger. Colin nodded and dropped to one knee while extending his head around the corner of the steel wall. His head was exposed for all of two seconds and he pulled back to look at Martin. Using his hand and fingers he gave them the layout of the corridor to their left. Doors on either side twenty meters down the corridor. One sealed and one open. Martin had extended his head around the other corridor and saw in the first half second that it was a straight shot to a doorway with no other points of entry in the corridor. He relayed that same info and then held up four fingers and pointed to the left. They moved then, like four ghosts, completely silent without even a rustle in the stale air. All of their eyes were changed now to that of their wolf personas and Colin’s eyes had become the cobalt blue of his vampire nature now. Their fangs were out and exposed as they moved without even a whisper of noise down either side of the corridor. Martin glanced into the lab area behind Colin and Pablo, seeing nothing, while Colin and Pablo did the same to the room behind them. The glass partitions appeared to be nearly chest high and allowed them to move easily in their crouched positions without exposing themselves.

The corridor ended just past the two doors and Colin and Pablo waited for Martin to nod his head and they shifted to the same side of the corridor on the opposite side of the door. Both Danny and Pablo were facing in opposite directions to cover their rears as Martin and Colin both took a split second to glance into the darkened room with several dimly lit monitors and a sparking console on the wall.

Clear. Colin spoke.

Same. Martin echoed.

Computers appear active Skipper. Colin spoke. And there is definitely power to this level given that the wall is sparking.

Agreed. Martin answered. One door to the left. Five meters. Bunch of tables and all kinds of shit on the floor.

Looks like a struggle but no blood or weapons scoring anywhere. Pablo chimed in now. I’m not liking this Skipper.

Agreed. Martin said. Danny?

I’m not one to state the obvious, but something very bad happened here. Danny spoke. We’re about to step into a pile of shit.

I think we already have. Colin echoed.

That is when they heard it. The deep rumbling of a low growl, like the sound of a bear before it attacked.

What the fuck was that? Pablo hissed.

Whatever it is, it can’t be good for us. Colin commented. Man, the shit just got real deep.

Martin! Kasdan’s voice erupted with Mindvoice. Martin it is right behind you! Move! Move!

The unearthly roar cut off all speech then as the glass and wall section above where Martin squatted exploded outward and two massive, scale like arms wrapped around Martin's upper body in the blink of an eye.

"Fuck!" Colin screamed as he and Pablo staggered back lifting their weapons. "Skipper!"

"Martin!" Danny roared as he grabbed for Martin's arms just before another savage roar pierced the corridor and those scale like arms ripped upwards, carrying Martin and Daniel up and through the glass and steel frame as if they were weightless toys.

Then they disappeared into the darkness of the next room.

CHAPTER FORTY-NINE

LENTANI

ROTHRYN HOMEWORLD

CAPITAL OF LLON

SEPTEMBER 3RD, 2575, 1100 HOURS

He had never been to the Praetor's home in the nearly eight hundred years Dyack had held the position. The differences between the two men were too great. They had once been very good friends, but their ideology was different, and this eventually caused them to drift apart in words and actions. Dyack had many powerful friends who thought like he did, far more than he was able to muster against him. A new mindset had begun to creep into Rothryn society over the course of the last two to three hundred years and while he did not disapprove of this mentality, he was of the mind that things needed to move slower. He was a powerful man and exceptionally intelligent, but he was also very practical. He had done many things in the past that he had come to regret, but these were things that he had tried to make right through the years and they were mistakes that he learned from and never committed again. He did not hold a position of power within the government, he detested politics to the extreme, but he loved his people and what they had accomplished. His six foot two frame was solid and muscular and his dark brown hair was just beginning to gray on the edges, signifying his distinguished age of nearly five thousand two hundred years.

Dyack's home was elegant, yet modest. He knew the man from decades ago when they were close friends and he knew that Dyack hated any kind of pomp. There were half a dozen Security personnel outside the main entrance as his Lifter car stopped and he began to get out. He waited while one of those Security officers came up to his vehicle.

"Lord Barnak." He spoke.

"I do not like being summoned in the middle of the night." Barnak spat. "I am not one of the Praetor's lackeys!"

The security officer didn't blink or show any emotion and he simply motioned with his hand to the entrance. "The Praetor waits for you in his office sir." He spoke. "Please follow the Lieutenant."

Barnak huffed in discord as he began marching towards the entrance and the Rothryn Lieutenant fell in just in front of him. Barnak did not know what to expect to be honest, only that two of Dyack's personal guard appeared at his home and told him that the Praetor requested his presence. They had also told him this was not a request that was to be denied. Barnak had never know Dyack to be pushy towards others and this alone was a surprise. Over the last few months Barnak had been gathering information of Dyack's supposedly secret dealings with the Eridiani OSG. He was very close to discovering what it is that Dyack was trying to accomplish by working with the OSG criminals, and he was going to use what influence he had to bring this information to light and call for an emergency election to replace him. The OSG were nothing more than slavers and scum as far as Barnak was concerned, and the Praetor of the Rothryn people should not have any dealings with them in the least.

As they entered the large home the first thing Barnak noted was the lack of security inside. The six security officers outside were a common fixture and had been for decades, but there were none within the home itself that he could see. As Barnak suspected, the interior was stylishly decorated but there were no extravagant items to be seen anywhere. Dyack was not one for pomp he saw, unlike what some of their news reporters suggested because he refused to allow them into his home. Barnak respected this for he was comparable when it came to his home. It was not for others to see, and while comfortably furnished, Barnak detested opulence in every form and his home was very similar in nature to what he was standing in now. While it did not appear so from outside, the activity within the home was very high given the hour at which it was right now. He glanced up and looked along the balcony that circled the main greeting hall and now he saw both military officers and security forces moving along the walkway. None were watching or making note of his arrival which told Barnak that something else was going on. The lieutenant led him down a side corridor lined with holo images of past events within Rothryn society. Most of them were of great historical importance to the Rothryn people and Barnak was surprised they were displayed so prominently along the walls. They passed through a large set of double doors and into an office area that was massive to say the least.

Dyack's desk was situated on the far side of the room near a set of double glass doors that exited onto a patio of sorts. Along one entire wall was a library of written books and countless scrolls and data pads, some of which looked to be thousands of years old. The center of the room was taken up by a blazing fireplace built into the floor and surrounded by couches and chairs. The opposite side of the office room held a huge chart table where he saw four men he did not recognize discussing something and motioning to the images on the chart table. They ignored him after quick glances in his direction and then Barnak saw Dyack rise from the plush couch where he sat with Aleatia and his son Kelelm. His son Anroth was not present though Barnak didn't question this. Anroth, like his own oldest son Denld, was reckless and more prone to violence in order to get what they wanted. Anroth and his son were very close and Barnak had spent many hours attempting to keep them out of trouble or trying to repair their mistakes. They were not the brightest of individuals and their actions usually resulted in more harm than good.

Barnak moved right up to the center of the room where Dyack moved around the second of three couches and looked at the Lieutenant. "That will be all Niac. Inform Major Tanif that we are not to be disturbed now."

The Lieutenant nodded his head. "As you order Praetor." He spoke before turning and heading back the way he had come.

Dyack looked at Barnak. "Thank you for coming. And welcome to my home." He spoke calmly and evenly.

"I was not given much choice!" Barnak barked angrily. "I am not some person off the street that you can just summon on a whim Dyack! Why am I here? Give me an answer before I turn and leave your home!"

Dyack met his angry gaze. "You are welcome to leave." He answered him. "In which case I will assume your guilt and have my men execute you before you make it to the front door."

Barnak looked at him with wide eyes. "Guilt?" He exclaimed. "What are you talking about? I am guilty of nothing! What is this all about? It is you who are guilty Dyack! Of far more than normal people know! You conspire with known criminals and savages! You dare accuse me of such things when your own hands are covered in the blood of hundreds of Vanari and you are tainted by actions our people consider to be vile! The OSG and their cohorts are a stain of corruption and crime, yet you work with them casually!"

Dyack smiled slightly. "I see you have been talking to my son Anroth." He stated.

"Your son told me of your secret dealings with the OSG!" Barnak spat. "Did you think this would not be discovered?"

"Anroth did exactly as I knew he would." Dyack spoke. "I allowed him to overhear what he did Barnak, I allowed this because I knew he would bring it to you and you would try to use this information to attack me. It was part of my plan."

Barnak blinked in surprise. "Plan?" He snapped. "What plan? What foolishness do you speak now? Once I reveal this information to the Rothryn Council they will call for your head! They will absolve your leadership and elect a new Praetor!"

Dyack nodded his head. "And I'm quite sure there are many on the Council who would jump at this chance! Including you."

"I have no desire whatsoever to be Praetor but many of your policies have catapulted our people into the unknown!" Barnak snapped. "We are moving too fast and dismissing too many of our values for the sake of advancement! This is wrong Dyack and you know it!"

Dyack turned and looked at Aleatia for a long moment and then he turned back to look at Barnak. "In many cases you are right." He stated calmly.

Barnak's eyes grew wide at this admission and he stammered, unable to form a response for a few seconds. He shook his head quickly. "What trickery is this?" He demanded.

Dyack turned and retrieved the data pad that Aleatia held out to him. He looked at it briefly and then held it out to Barnak. "Many events have happened in the recent past that have altered my outlook on things Barnak. Things that you can't begin to imagine. We were friends once Barnak, and it is because of that friendship that I brought you here now. I wish to know if you had anything to do with this..." Barnak snatched the data pad from his hand.

"What is this?" He spat.

"Your response to this..." Dyack told him. "It will determine whether you live through this night or not."

"You dare threaten me!" Barnak barked.

"They tried to take my daughter!" Dyack roared as he stepped right up to Barnak and placed his face only inches from the man. The extreme emotion and anger swelling within him caused his wolf fangs to extend instantly, something that Dyack had not allowed in more centuries than he could remember. "Sehri! The youngest of my children! They tried to kidnap my daughter to murder and conduct their foul tests on! Tell me you were not part of this! Tell me you had no knowledge of this Barnak! For if you did I will take your life from you one limb at a time!"

Aleatia got quickly to her feet and moved up beside him taking his arm. "Dyack my love..." She gasped as she pulled gently on his arm.

Barnak's eyes were equally as wide as the first taste of fear he had felt in decades filled his mouth and senses. He glanced down at the data pad and began to read, a sick feeling of dread filling his gut. His eyes grew even wider as he read, the scope of such an act hitting home for he had three daughters as well, two of whom he had been hiding for they too had begun to show much more talent within the Etheric realm than the Rothryn Science Academy allowed. The more he read, the more nauseated he became and the angrier he became. Everything he had been fighting for all of these years, all that Dyack had been fighting for these years, it suddenly dawned on Barnak that they had been enemies when they should have been friends. He looked up into Dyack's face, his eyes changed and his fangs still extended, the anger surging through him a palpable thing in the air now.

"Dyack, as we were once friends, I swear to you on the life of my youngest daughters who are like Sehri, I had no idea of this!" Barnak finally spoke.

Aleatia's eyes grew wide and she moved closer to him. "Chai and Ueri?" She gasped. "They have developed the same skills as Sehri?"

Barnak nodded his head, his heart and soul telling him that they were at a crossroads as a people now and what was needed at this time more than anything was truth and unity. "They began to show signs six years ago." He answered. "I have been hiding them ever since. They are only a few years younger than Sehri and I..." He looked at Dyack. "On my own life Dyack, I had no part in this! No knowledge of this!"

"You allowed your son to torture Protectorate prisoners Barnak." Dyack spoke. "They died because of this."

"Denld did that on his own!" Barnak snapped softly. "I gave no such orders! I am not a monster! They were injured from their crash and I only wanted to give them treatment in order to question them about their skills. Denld tortured them without my knowledge! I had no choice but to declare they had died in the crash! I was... I was only trying to protect our people by those actions. If the Protectorate had known what my son did they would have called for justice and whatever opportunity we as Rothryn may have had to learn of such things would have been lost forever! We have disagreed on how to bring our people into the future Dyack, I will freely admit this to you, but I have never, I would never sanction such actions! Against anyone!"

Dyack had calmed down somewhat for he had detected no lie coming from Barnak in his scent. Ever since Denali Leonidas had first come to Austrova and Dyack realized what he was, he had been working hard on relearning the skills their people had let fall to the side through the many centuries. This time also made Dyack come to realize that he too had been wrong.

"I should have listened to you old friend." Dyack spoke softly.

Barnak gazed at him with wide eyes. “What?”

“I should have listened to you. I have... I have pushed for change that our people were not ready for.” Dyack answered.

“Dyack, I am not against change!” Barnak declared. “It is a natural way of life and I embrace that, but you were...”

“Pushing us too fast and too soon.” Dyack finished the statement for him. “I have come to realize that Barnak. Much has happened in these last few months that you do not know and it has made me realize that I was wrong on many counts.”

“You have made us stronger as a people as well Dyack.” Barnak spoke. “I would be a fool to not acknowledge that.”

“But my actions have allowed the Science Academy to become much more powerful than I ever envisioned them to be. More powerful than they should be allowed. I allowed them to have that power and now they have twisted it to something evil that they use for their own corrupt purposes. Our people fear those monsters now when they should be looking to them for wisdom. How many of our people’s children have disappeared inside those walls to never be heard from again? Their deaths are on my hands.” Dyack spoke evenly.

Barnak shook his head. “No. Their deaths are on the heads of those monsters who walk the halls of power there!” He hissed. “You don’t think I see what they have become? Why do you think I hide my own daughters just as you and Aleatia have hidden Sehri from them for so long?”

Dyack stepped closer to him now, his eyes back to normal and his wolf fangs no longer exposed. “You know that Sehri has become the wife of Androcles Leonidas. The Crown Prince of the Lycavorian Union.” He said.

Barnak nodded his head slowly. “It has been the talk of the planet for days.” He said. “Many sons among the powerful families were not happy. They had hoped to court Sehri and take her as their mate. There have been calls for you to absolve this joining, you must know that.”

Dyack nodded his head. “I do.” He answered. “That is something that will never happen however. Barnak, my daughter Sehri, she can now shift her form.” Dyack spoke softly revealing something that only a handful of Rothryn now knew.

“What do you mean?” Barnak asked.

“She can become wolf, just as our people were able to do over a hundred thousand years ago. Androcles has given this gift back to her.” Dyack replied.

Barnak’s dark eyes went even wider at this information and he felt his heart leap into his throat. “You... you are serious?” He gasped.

Aleatia nodded her head from beside Dyack. “Andro bit her Barnak. During their initial lovemaking when he claimed her after her fever had passed, he bit her. It is an ancient custom among the Lycavorians from the Alpha Quadrant. A custom that dates back to when our people were all together on the same world. It signifies to all that Sehri is mated and no male will approach her while she carries the scent of Androcles in her blood and scent. No male will ever do this to a mated female within the Union. It is considered a crime of the highest magnitude.”

“I don’t understand.” Barnak said.

“When Androcles bit her, he transferred part of his DNA to Sehri inside the virus within all of our bodies.” Aleatia replied softly. “He returned to her body the part of our DNA that the Ancients removed. The ability to shift our forms. She is beautiful in wolf form Barnak.”

Barnak looked away as he tried to absorb this information. This was not something that had ever crossed his mind, so concerned with gathering as much information on Etheric abilities as he could to push back against the Science Academy. “By the Gods Dyack, I never imagined that this could be so. Not even once.” He turned back to Dyack quickly. “The Lycavorians in the Protectorate could have done this?”

Dyack nodded his head. “Yes, but we pushed them away. We knew we were like them, but because we could not shift our forms we pushed them away. I am guilty of it as was my father before me. As are you.”

Barnak met his eyes. “The Ancients had no right to do that Dyack!” Barnak groused. “No right to change us to suit their purposes no matter the reason! Why do you think I have been trying to discover as much as I could about our Etheric abilities? To one day be able to stand against the Science Academy and free our people from their grip!”

Dyack nodded his head with a small smile. “I know you have.” He answered. “I had my... I had my people break into your server and I have read many of your notes through the years.” He saw Barnak’s eyes go wide in disbelief. “It is why I am coming to you now old friend. And you would be very surprised to discover just who shares that very sentiment Barnak.” He stated.

Barnak did not care about his privacy any longer. If what Dyack was freely telling him was true there was so much more to be concerned about in the future. “Dyack we must explore this!” Barnak gasped. “We must discover more about this! If Sehri can now shift her form, think of what it could mean to our people!”

Dyack nodded his head. “And we will explore it and discover all there is to know.” He answered immediately. “The Lycavorian Union has men and women who make our doctors and scientists look like children in comparison Barnak. They are our brothers and sisters no matter where they come from. Androcles’ own sister Eliani, she is a Hadarian Healer, she has told Aleatia it would be a simple matter to make it so all Rothryn could have this skill given back to them.”

“Simple?” Barnak gasped.

Aleatia smiled. “You have not met Androcles’ sister.” She stated. “I do not think the word failure is even in their vocabulary.”

“Help me Barnak.” Dyack spoke now stepping even closer to him. “Help me to lead our people into the future.”

Barnak looked at him. “Dyack we do not...”

Dyack shook his head. “We do not agree on very much, I know.” He stated. “I dismissed this before but now I believe it is time I embraced it. The Union, the former Protectorate, even the Vanari; change is coming my old friend. Whether we want it to or not. Now I need someone who can help me to navigate that change for our people.”

“As what?” Barnak spoke. “An aide? An Advisor? I am none of these things Dyack! I am...”

“As Deputy Praetor.” Dyack spoke evenly.

Barnak looked at him in stunned shock. “Dyack, there has not been a Deputy Praetor since before your father! The Council voted to remove that position!”

Dyack nodded his head. “They did. One of the old ways that I now see we should have clung to. I am reinstating the position and I want you to take it. The Council will not fight me on it, not after what will take place soon. You and I, we have worked different paths of the same goal Barnak, but both of us with the future of our people in the forefront. I think in one way, you think in another. I think it is time we joined those divergent paths and take them into the future together.”

Barnak looked at him for a long moment. He could see the truth of what Dyack spoke in his eyes. “You are serious?” He finally asked unable to think of anything else.

“The paperwork issuing the order is already done.” Dyack spoke. “We can swear you in tonight if you like. I am not afraid to admit that I need help. I need a counter balance to me. You are that man.”

“What of your dealings with the OSG?” Barnak asked tentatively. “This knowledge has gotten around to many of the Council members but they are just too cowardly to question you on it.”

“That was a diversion in order to help Denali and Coren discover just how deep the corruption with the Vanari Board of Regents went.” Dyack answered. “I can give you all the particulars, tell you all of it, but I need you to agree first. I do not want someone to agree with me on everything Barnak, I want someone who will tell me something is a bad idea and not mince words. And then help me to find another solution. I can do it alone, but I would much rather have you at my side.”

Barnak was not a foolish man and he was a patriot to the core. He could detect the truth in Dyack’s words and he did not doubt them. Dyack may have been many things but he was also a patriot to the core and would do anything for his people. The two of them together could accomplish far more than either of them separately.

Barnak held out his hand after all of two seconds. “And you will have me.” He stated confidently.

Aleatia had been the one to convince him that this was the right course of action going forward. Barnak was just like Dyack but he was also different. He would bring a perspective that others would not. He could be a powerful ally and once more a treasured friend. Dyack reached out and grasped his forearm tightly, ushering in a new era and way of doing things for the Rothryn people.

“That pleases me more than you know.” Dyack spoke warmly as he smiled. “We let... I let our friendship falter because of our differences. I will not make the same mistake again.”

“There is blame enough for both of us my friend.” Barnak spoke honestly. “I say we leave it where it belongs and move forward.”

Dyack nodded his head. “Indeed.”

“We must deal with the Rothryn Science Academy Dyack.” Barnak spoke as Dyack pulled him closer to the couches. “They cannot be allowed to persecute our people any longer. It must stop! And it must stop tonight!”

“I have already signed an Executive Decree abolishing the Science Academy.” Dyack spoke holding out the data pad to him. “It is my hope you will place your name beside my own in unity of this action.”

Barnak didn't hesitate and jammed his thumb down on the pad, putting his name, his influence and all of his power beside Dyack's. He looked at him. “How will we do this?” He asked. “The Science Academy has grown powerful Dyack. Too powerful. They will not simply lay over while we tear them down.”

Dyack smiled at this and squeezed Barnak's arm. “Perhaps my friend, but they made a very powerful enemy with their actions concerning Sehri. After tonight they will not make this mistake with your daughters, or anyone among our people ever again.”

“How do you know this?” Barnak asked him. “Even our combined influence will not be enough to overcome whatever horrors they have within their walls. They have their own army who have become drunk with their power and will not give up so easily. We would need to launch a full assault against their facility and many lives would be lost. How...?”

“You let me worry about them.” The deep voice spoke from the side.

Barnak's head snapped to the left and he stumbled back as his eyes grew wide watching as the shadows unwrapped from around the tall, muscular young man and the dark haired young woman.

“By the Gods!” Barnak almost shouted.

“Barnak, allow me to introduce the Crown Prince of the Lycavorian Union, Androcles Leonidas and one of his wives and mates, Crown Princess Carisia Leonidas.” Dyack said as the shadows fully drifted away revealing Andro and Carisia standing there holding hands. Both of them wore their ArmorPly uniforms and weapons.

Andro leaned over and kissed Carisia gently, her hand coming up to caress his cheek before he stepped away from her and moved up to stand in front of Barnak. At six foot one, Andro was slightly taller than Barnak and considerably more muscled and defined. Barnak took notice of how bright his azure blue eyes were.

“The Rothryn Science Academy conspired with the OSG and other criminal elements to kidnap my wife and mate Sehri Leonidas.” Androcles stated calmly. “Based on the information we received from those who were to carry out this abduction, I know full well what their many intentions were going to be. They were going to... they were going to experiment on her and eventually kill her so that they could dissect here.” Andro held out his hand to Barnak. “Tonight I will show them just how Spartans of the Lycavorian Union deal with such things. They will not be happy to say the least. Nor will any of them live through this night.”

SPARTA'S WRATH
ORBITING LENTANI UNDER SHROUD
SEPTEMBER 3RD, 2575, 1730 HOURS

“...No one can see us?” Barnak asked the question to no one in particular as he stood beside Dyack on the bridge of SPARTA'S WRATH.

Dyack shook his head with a smile. “Amazing isn't it?” He spoke. “Our sensor arrays are not sophisticated enough to detect this ship or the roughly three hundred others that are now in the area.”

Barnak looked at him with wide eyes. “Three hundred!” He gasped.

-Three hundred and nineteen to be exact- The somewhat mechanical voice spoke from behind them and Barnak whirled around quickly to see the towering seven foot tall Avatar occupying the area directly behind them. -Another forty-three of our ships are finishing their missions in securing the Vanari prisoners that we liberated. They will join with us when we depart-

Dyack smiled again at the look on Barnak's weathered face as he stared at the Avatar in total wonderment. He had much the same reaction upon first seeing Armen, but he quickly grew accustomed to him. He may have been the most advanced machine Dyack had ever seen before in his life, but he had many qualities that were very Lycavorian in nature. Aleatia had told him that Armen was one of the Avatars that the Ancients, those they now knew were called Pralors, had used on their ships and that many of them took on the mannerisms of those they were meant to emulate. In Armen's case, it was Androcles.

"Armen commands this ship Barnak." Dyack said. "Armen, may I present Deputy Praetor Barnak."

Armen bowed his head slightly. -Androcles told me you would be coming aboard-

Barnak looked at Dyack. "A machine commands this great ship?" He asked shocked.

Dyack nodded his head once more. "Armen is far more than just a machine Barnak. For all intents and purposes he is this ship as its Avatar. He could run this ship by himself with ease."

-Ship functions operate at two point three percent better with my crew Praetor Dyack- Armen answered him. -I am more efficient with them-

Dyack was the one to look surprised now. "I didn't know that." He stated.

-With only two operational Avatars among the Union fleet this information is not widely known- Armen told him. -As we advance and grow this will undoubtedly change for the better as more Avatars are introduced-

"You are building more of you?" Dyack asked.

Armen shook his head. -Based on information provided to us by Androcles' father, we have determined that twenty-nine percent of the Avatars among the Pralor people within the Echo quadrant are not in use. It is our hope that we can change that-

Barnak looked at him. "The Echo quadrant?" He stammered. "Dyack, they have ships and people in the Echo quadrant? It would take us decades to reach the Echo quadrant with our engines."

-Thirty-nine point six years to be exact- Armen told him. He shrugged his massive shoulders. -Give or take a month or so-

"By the Gods." Barnak muttered. He looked at Dyack. "Dyack, what we could do with such technology is..."

Dyack nodded his head. "Yes, it is boundless. I believe that you and I are of the same mind however, and that whatever we discover must be integrated into our society slowly. There is much out there among the stars that we do not yet understand. The Lycavorians from the Union have been exploring the stars for far longer than us my friend. I have made the mistake of moving us too fast into the future already. You are to be the counter balance to that."

Barnak nodded his head. "You are correct but... will they share what they know Dyack?" Barnak asked.

"You may call yourselves Rothryn..." The female voice came from behind them and they all turned to see Gorgo and Dasha move onto the bridge with graceful movements. "But you are still Lycavorian."

Dyack smiled and motioned with his hand towards them. "Barnak, this is Lady Gorgo and Lady Dasha. They are Androcles' grandmothers."

Barnak bowed his head slightly to them. He did not agree with women being put in harm's way when they were the bearers of whatever future their people had but he was also intelligent enough to know that this was changing even among Rothryn society.

"I am honored." Barnak spoke. "You are mothers to the King And Queen Aricia. I have heard you spoken about on our News channels."

Dasha waved her hand dismissively. "We are the ones who should be honored." She spoke. "To meet you and your people, fellow Lycavorians, out here among the stars is a gift."

"Indeed." Gorgo agreed.

"We are Rothryn." Barnak spoke looking at them. "We are not truly Lycavorian."

Gorgo reached out and took his hand. "You are Rothryn, yes. You are still Lycavorian no matter that you cannot shift your physical forms sir. You call yourselves Rothryn and we will honor that, you should honor that, but we all can trace our heritage back to Lycavore, no matter what we call ourselves now."

"This... this was our homeworld?" Barnak asked.

Gorgo nodded in reply. "Many millennia ago, yes. It is where all of us come from. We have evolved and spread out, and we may be slightly different, but we are all still Lycavorian."

Barnak thought about that for a moment and then smiled as he realized that this woman was correct. "I suppose we are." He said finally.

Dasha took his arm as Gorgo reached out and took Dyack's arm. "Androcles asked that Gorgo and I escort you both to the Command Center for ground operations." Dasha spoke. "I do not know the official name as I have always tried to ignore when our grandchildren begin speaking in terms Gorgo and I do not understand."

"Now that is so very true." Gorgo spoke as they began to walk off the bridge.

"You have asked if we will share." Dasha continued as they walked. "I think you will find that Martin Leonidas and those who follow him have a very special place in their hearts for those who want the same things for their people as we do. Deia is waiting to speak with both of you before this distasteful business with this group on your world begins. We also have several representatives of our government on board and you will be able to meet with and discuss anything you like with them. For now let me introduce you to my daughter's coffee, it is the finest anywhere in the universe."

Gorgo chuckled. "Dasha, you are biased."

Dasha smiled as well. "Indeed I am." She answered. "But it is exquisite and you will be able to meet more of our grandchildren. They drink it by the bucket."

Barnak looked at Dyack with a smile on his face as the two women led them down the corridor and a light of recognition and knowledge passed between the two old friends. They would need to proceed slowly for sure, but their future had found them, and it looked very bright.

SPARTA'S WRATH MEDITATION CHAMBER LEONIDAS FAMILY SECTION, DECK TEN

Jomann and Dutkne entered the Meditation Chamber through the hatch like door, the single Durcunusaan soldier reaching out and closing it behind them. Jomann carried the small, polished hickory wood case under his arm tightly. The interior of the chamber was very well lit to accommodate the ability to read from the many hand written texts that lined the walls from floor to ceiling along the right side as they entered. There were several couches and chairs in the large portion of the library like room, as well as a false fireplace that added to the atmosphere of the surroundings. It was meant to be a place to come to reflect and think and relax without having to maintain your Etheric shields in place. It did this very thing well as both Dutkne and Jomann lowered their shields upon entering and felt nothing. No surface thoughts, no echoes, nothing but peace and quiet. Jomann looked at Dutkne with wide eyes and Dutkne smiled.

"I told you." He said. "These chambers are incredible. It is why Avi enlarged them to some extent and made them into libraries of knowledge."

Jomann looked around at the many shelves. “All these are handwritten texts?” He asked softly.

Dutkne nodded his head. “Many date back thousands of years. I was stunned when he told me how old some of them are. Admiral O’Connor apparently spent a lot of years collecting books and such from the libraries on Earth and other planets. Many of them hand written and now displayed here.”

“The computer pads allow you to access those that are not hand written.” Andro’s voice echoed and they turned to see him come into the main room from the doorway. “Each chamber has four rooms just like this one.”

Andro wore the Mark VI Armorpoly without the crimson cape dragging along the floor, his hand holding the mug of steaming coffee. Dutkne reached out and grasped his forearm and the almost imperceptible contact of Praetorian Mage and Warrior took place as it always did. It was something that most would never detect but Jomann saw it for he too was a Praetorian and this had been happening with him and Eliani over recent days and weeks. Murano had called it a download of information between Warrior and Mage. An event that brought them closer to each other and made them more effective as a pair. It helped that Eliani was his Anome, one of only three known instances within the Union where someone of non-pureblood was recognized in such a way. Eliani’s Lycavorian blood was far more dominant than her Hadarian blood and this fact contributed to it. Jomann loved her and Brendi without reservation or doubt. Brendi had embraced her life with them, and while she knew one day Jomann would change her and she embraced that now after fearing it for so long, all of them were content right now to enjoy and build on what they had discovered.

“Everything is set?” Androcles asked.

Jomann nodded his head and held out the case to him. “This is not something you need to do alone Andro.” He spoke. “It’s not something I should let you do alone as your Captain.”

Andro set the mug down on the small table to his right and then turned back to take the box. “Sehri is my wife and mate.” He stated. “Yes I do.”

“They arrived this morning.” Jomann spoke tapping the top of the box. “Nehtes did an amazing thing here.”

Andro opened the polished box and smiled when he saw the two objects. Two circular Glaives rested on the crimson colored cushion in the box, each with an inverted V in the center. Crimson lines extended outward from the small center, and down across each of the three bladed wings. Andro took one out of the box and depressed the small indentation in the center of the glaive, extending the blades perhaps half an inch outward.

Dutkne watched with interest. “Fascinating.” He finally spoke.

Andro looked at him and nodded. “Lu’ria’s Glaive inspired me to come up with this idea. I wanted something a little less bulky than our fighting knives and more versatile.”

Jomann removed the other Glaive from the case and turned it over in his hands slowly. “It’s forged from Dragon Armor and Paravin Metal? I never thought Nehtes could combine the two.” He asked as he tested the light weight in his hand.

Andro nodded his head. “A very thin coating around Paravin metal forged in the blue fires of their world. Completely indestructible.”

“Impressive.” Dutkne commented as Jomann handed the glaive back to Andro and he secured one on either side of his Armorpoly combat harness.

“Dyack has his men in place?” Andro asked.

Dutkne nodded his head. “The last of them just moved into position. He and his new deputy are waiting to begin the transmission. Once they do, the Rothryn Special Operations teams will breach.”

“We should at least have a small force on the ground Andro.” Jomann stated. “We are trusting the Rothryn troops, who are an unknown.”

Andro shook his head. “The Rothryn have more reason to hate what those inside that building have become than we do. They have suffered under them for too long. Insure that Deni and Deion do not interfere unless it is absolutely necessary or the Rothryn call for aide. This is their fight more than it is ours and they harbor no good will to those within the walls. Sadi and Ne’Veha will be holding the PREMONITION just outside missile range and Dorian and Ryner will have my back as they orbit the facility. I don’t need all of the Praetorians that we have engaging in this. If it goes to sibfla then you move in, not before. Our team is standing by?” He looked at Jomann.

Jomann nodded his head. “Cowen is in overwatch with Sherice. Daio, Ridor, Kalis, Arduri and Lisisa are standing by just outside the west entrance behind the Rothryn troops. Serale and Cvea have medical support behind them. Mari has been masking their sensor readings from inside the facility for the last hour. It was ridiculously easy for her to crack in. If it goes to shit, Deion and Denali will join with them and they will breach the west entrance.”

Andro nodded. “Good enough.”

“Murano doesn’t like this.” Jomann said.

“He understands however, and that is why I asked him to remain here on SPARTA’S WRATH as opposed to airborne with Sadi.” Andro stated.

Jomann nodded his head. “I won’t tell you what Eli thought of this stunt.” He said with a smile.

Andro chuckled and nodded his head. “Good.” He said. “I would not want to have to rinse my ears.”

Jomann reached out and placed his hand on Andro’s shoulder. “Do not hesitate Andro.” He stated softly.

“I won’t.” Androcles told him as he gripped his forearm. “I won’t.”

“Sarlana and I will have the last of the details worked out by the time you return.” Dutkne told him.

“Then we can begin to prep the ship. The probes are all on their way and Armen is monitoring their status. They should arrive at the station in two days.”

Andro looked at them. “We are truly stepping off in to the unknown you know.” He spoke.

Jomann laughed softly. “As if a little fact like that ever stopped us.” He said.

“I like the unknown.” Dutkne echoed. “It’s so... unknown.”

The three of them laughed and Andro shook his head. “My mother Anja would lock all of us up, you do know that don’t you?”

“She’ll have to catch us first.” Jomann answered. “Of course, she has her hands full with your father I’m sure.”

Andro nodded his head. “No bet there.” He stated. “My father and Uncle have a knack for stepping into the sibfla even when they aren’t looking for it.”

LENTANI ROTHRYN SCIENCE ACADEMY SIX KILOMETERS NORTH OF LLON

The Rothryn Science academy facility took up fully two square kilometers, its massive five story structure surrounded by the imposing black wall of granite and steel. It did not appear ostensibly to be anything other than some sort of government building, but most Rothryn knew exactly what went on within its dark walls and they had for hundreds of years. The dense timber surrounded the facility on three sides, the fourth side backed up directly to a large lake. There were four entrances off the wide road that encircled the Academy, each of them with a set of enormous double doors built into the ten meter high wall and reinforced with heavy duty steel supports. There were beautiful tall trees and perfectly planted flower beds around each of the entrances, but all Rothryn knew that they were only for show. The men and women who now occupied this facility were loathed all across the planet and anywhere within all of Rothryn space. They had been around since the dawn of Rothryn society and had set themselves up as the moral conscious of their people. They had spies in almost every aspect of society looking for those who were born with a much stronger Etheric connection than others. These children, men or women were then taken from their homes, many times against their will and most were never heard from again. They were entrenched in Rothryn society and powerfully influential, which had allowed them to remain nearly untouchable to the government. There had been many attempts through the years to close the school and stop what was going on within its walls, but ultimately all of them had failed for one reason or another.

While they had no formal security force, hundreds of former Rothryn soldiers had joined the Academy through the years for one reason or another. Most because they believed in what the Academy did, others because of the luxuries that they were provided. The leader of this Security stood now in the main control center for the Academy looking at all the monitors. His men and women were watching all of the entrances on the many feeds, as well as the lower levels where all of the test subjects and prisoners were held. He was an older Rothryn, just past his thirteenth thousand year, with centuries of experience behind him. As his dark eyes gazed at the monitors and he saw the Rothryn troops massing at the four entrances, he was growing very uneasy. This night was different than times past when the government had sent troops against them. This was being ordered by Praetor Dyack who had never done something like this before. These men and women were forming up in such a way that showed the experience and tactical knowledge of whoever was leading them. He turned his head as the slightly rotund man entered the Command Center, his expensive robes wrapped around his body and an almost casual air about his arrogant body.

“What is so important that you had to pull me away from my chambers Senior Colonel Wilman?” He asked.

Wilman kept his look of disgust from showing. No doubt the man was abusing one or more of the young females that had been brought here through the years. Many of them were quite beautiful and were not etherically sensitive enough to rate being taken. They had been brought here for the sole purpose of entertaining this man and his vanity. There were close to a dozen young women in his stable now and he used them whenever and however he wanted. Wilman did not approve of this in the least, but he kept his council to himself. He had been mated to the same red haired woman for over six thousand years and he was very content with her attentions. She had given him seven strong children who he had intentionally kept outside the realm of the Science Academy in order to protect them and allow them to lead normal lives. Two of his sons and two of his daughters refused to associate with him because of the duties he held and the beliefs they felt were wrong. It was the price he paid for keeping them safe.

“You should probably see this Executor Garnot.” Wilman told him motioning to the screens all around the massive room.

The portly man’s eyes moved across the room looking at the monitors. “What is this?” He asked.

“Rothryn troops have moved into locations at all of our entrances. At least a full battalion at each of the locations.” He stated. “They are at the extreme range of our cannons but they are not advancing. They began moving into position an hour ago.”

“And you waited this long to advise me?” Garnot hissed.

“They have done this in the past Executor, but never at all four entrances. I did not feel the need until their numbers grew.” Wilman answered.

“What are they doing?” Garnot asked.

“Nothing.” Wilman answered. “That is why I am concerned.”

Garnot looked at him. “Concerned about what?” He spat. “They have done this many times in the past and nothing has ever taken place. This is only another show. A way for Dyack to direct attention away from his activities with the Eridiani OSG.”

“I don’t think so Executor.” Wilman told him. “Something is different now.”

“What?” Garnot demanded.

Wilman shook his head. “It is... it is simply a feeling I have Executor.”

Garnot looked at the screens all around the center. He was only a Tier Sixteen Etheric user by the standards that Helen had established, but he did not know that. He was secure in his position and of his power. He had ruled over the Rothryn Science Academy for nearly two thousand years and was just as ruthless as he needed to be. He had personally ordered the deaths of hundreds of Rothryns through the years in order to study their abilities and try to improve the use of Etheric powers in others. Men and women he could control. He had a small force of these advanced users who answered to him, who he controlled, but he knew the moment he saw that Union Prince on the Rothryn news that they did not compare to him. Garnot wanted that kind of power. He wanted to wield it and control it.

He had no idea that this power would be his undoing.

“I do not pay you to have feelings Colonel.” Garnot spoke. “This is nothing more than a show of force by Dyack as I said. Every Praetor has done this for centuries and Dyack has enough problems now within the Council to cause him to pull attention away from the rumors about him circulating. It is nothing.”

“I would agree in most instances Executor Garnot.” Wilman told him. “Except for this.” He reached out and took direct control of a camera and swung it around until it was focused on the Main entrance into the Academy in the north. He zoomed the field of vision until it was focused on something he had never seen before this night. He saw Garnot's eyes grow wider and he moved closer.

"That is... that is a dragon." Garnot spoke softly. He glanced at Wilman. "Only this new branch of Lycavorians have dragons!"

Wilman nodded his head. "Now you see why I am concerned. There is one at every entrance with the Rothryn troops. They are not doing anything, only resting on the ground, but if there is a dragon here then there..."

Garnot nodded his head. "Yes, there must be a rider somewhere. A rider with advanced Etheric skills unlike any we have among our own people."

"Why would they be here Executor?" Wilman asked him. "What purpose would cause this new branch of Lycavorians to suddenly take sides so quickly? And they align against us so it seems. We have not even been formally introduced as governments have we?"

Garnot glanced at him quickly and then looked away. "I don't know." He answered far too swiftly to suit Wilman. "Where is Harira?"

"Director Harira arrived only a few hours ago." Wilman answered. "I would imagine she had retired for the evening."

"Well wake her and get her up here." Garnot barked loudly. "She has dealt with these Lycavorians before and I want to know what they are doing helping Dyack. He has been dealing with the OSG for months and they have been obliterating the OSG for two days now wherever they find them. Surely they cannot be on his side. Get her up here now!"

Wilman looked at one of his people across the Center and motioned with his head for the man to follow Garnot's direction.

"Get me a direct line to Praetor Dyack's office!" Garnot barked out. "I want to know what this fool thinks he is doing!"

SPARTA'S WRATH ORBITING LENTANI CIC

Kelelm entered the CIC holding the data pad in his hand as Dyack and Barnak turned to look at him.

"Kelelm... are we ready?" Dyack asked quickly.

Kelelm nodded his head as he came up to the two men. "Strike Teams are in place and waiting your word father." He spoke.

"Strike Teams?" Barnak asked looking at Dyack. His eyes grew wider. "You are going after those they hold?" He gasped.

Dyack nodded his head. "Two hundred of our finest soldiers trained by Kelelm and several Vanari Cadre Commandos in tactics which we do not normally employ. With our joint command they will silently assault the prison levels and free everyone that worm Garnot is holding. Androcles people are making it so they will not even detect this on their interior security monitors. Both of us have known for centuries that the Science Academy is a blight upon our people Barnak. Separately we could never accomplish this. Together we can end them this night. Are you with me?"

"Are you serious?" Barnak exclaimed. "That is not a question you have to ask me! We should be down there leading our men!"

Dyack smiled and nodded his head. "I agree, but much younger voices overruled any action I wished to be involved in. That includes you old friend. It will be satisfaction enough to witness it from here."

"We have been refining the plan for three years Deputy Barnak." Kelelm spoke. "I can show you the highpoints."

Barnak looked at Dyack and couldn't help but smile. "You have been planning this for a while I see."

Dyack grinned and shrugged his broad shoulders. "Just bits and pieces. Recently we have gotten some incredible intelligence. Plans, troop strengths, patrols of the interior."

Barnak moved closer to him. "A spy?" He asked.

Dyack shook his head. "Someone who has had enough of what goes on within those walls." He answered.

"Who?" Barnak asked.

"He or she would not give us their name, only a code word." Dyack answered. "His information up until now has been thoroughly vetted old friend. This is a legitimate source."

"You have a plan in place if this is all a lie?" Barnak asked.

Dyack nodded his head in reply. "We do. But I have faith in whoever this person is. Their information has been spot on ever since they first contacted us and we have done just as you are now doing. Questioning and testing them."

"You trust this source?" Barnak asked.

Dyack nodded his head again. "We do."

Barnak nodded his head after only a moment. "Then what are we waiting for?" He asked. "Let us do this! We..."

"Incoming transmission from the surface!" The male voice called out from along the wall causing all of the men to turn. "It's being routed through the Praetor's office directly! Origin is the Rothryn Science Academy!"

Armen stepped away from the station he was standing behind as he allowed his crew to conduct their jobs. Over ten thousand years he had laid dormant, leaving space dock without the crew he was supposed to have and carrying the last vestiges of a race and culture that was all but dead now. He had not known of the millions that had escaped until learning of Martin's plan from Avi, but his focus now was on this ship and this crew. The decks were now full of men and women, crew members he was always intended to have, and while none of them were pure Pralors as was the original intent, fully half of his crew carried Pralor blood within them in some fashion.

-You are ready Praetor Dyack? - Armen asked.

Dyack looked once at Barnak and saw his nod. He met Armen's orange hued eyes and nodded himself. "Yes."

-COM Chief, send the transmission to the Praetor's station and bring it up on the holo disc-
Armen told him. -Open frequency Chief-

"Routing to CIC Command Station One." The man spoke almost instantly. "Transmitting in the open."

Dyack turned back to the table as the image of the Science Academy Executor appeared, shimmered for a moment and then became instantly clear. Dyack pulled himself to his full height and folded his hands behind his back.

"Executor Garnot." Dyack began. "It is rather early in the morning, but what can I do for you?"

"Praetor Dyack." Garnot answered with his smug and supremely arrogant voice. "I would like an explanation as to why there are Rothryn troops at the entrances to my Academy? They are trespassing on the Science Academy grounds and they are accompanied by those beasts from this new branch of Lycavorians that have stuck their unwanted noses into Beta Quadrant business."

Dyack nodded his head. "Yes, I believe they are." He answered. "They are here at my request. The request of my government. Your government."

Garnot smiled and shook his head, allowing his arrogance to show through brilliantly to every news monitor that was beginning to pick up the broadcast and just as quickly beginning to show it live.

"I am sure you are well aware that the Rothryn Science Academy does not answer to the government Praetor Dyack. We are a completely autonomous entity. We operate on our own without guidance from the government." Garnot spoke. "It has been this way for centuries. Long before you ever took office. Long before your father."

"I'm well aware of the history of the Academy Executor." Dyack spoke calmly. "The long history of taking men, women and children in the dead of the night because they show promise with what we now know are our Etheric abilities. How, more often than not these men, women and children are never heard from again."

“It is the way of things and has been millennia.” Garnot answered. “To a time well before you were ever born Praetor. This is how our founding members established it and that has how it has always been. You cannot change history, as much as it seems you would like too.”

Dyack smiled and nodded his head. “No, I cannot Executor.” He stated. “However, I can and will change the future. Beginning tonight.”

“Our laws state...” Garnot began to speak.

Dyack let the emotion that he had been holding in for some time finally come out and his wolf fangs burst from his gums and his eyes changed for second time in more centuries than he could recall.

“I am changing our laws you pompous little man!” Dyack barked forcefully and seeing Garnot’s eyes grow large in shock. Dyack held up the data pad. “I have in my hand an Edict of Official Governmental Action! It has been signed and affirmed by every sitting member of the Rothryn Ruling Parliament! The vote was unanimous Executor! Would you like me to read it to you?”

“This is preposterous!” Garnot barked. “The Science Academy has been and will always remain outside the realm of influence of the government! We...”

“Are hereby abolished!” Dyack snapped. “As of this moment, by order of the Rothryn government and the people we represent, the Rothryn Science Academy no longer exists! No longer will our people suffer your existence and what you represent! I should have acted much sooner in doing this, and the blame for that resides solely with me and my predecessors! Now however, now I will make things right!”

“Praetor Dyack you must realize that this means nothing.” Garnot spoke. “Our existence is...”

“An abomination!” Dyack almost screamed. “The moment you began to take our people and twist them to suit your perverted experiments and actions you lost everything. I have been a coward in not acting before now! We all have been cowards and we will have to live with that the rest of our lives! But no more!”

“This is pointless Praetor.” Garnot spoke once more. “The Academy is beyond the reach of you and your government. We know what is best for the people and...”

“You are a power mad fool who has run out of time and places to run!” Dyack barked. “You and your Academy buffoons will no longer terrorize our people! No more will be taken from their homes in the night! No more will be subjected to your insidious experiments and attempts to create only the gods know what!”

Garnot smiled in the transmission. “Is that why you have troops at our door now?” He asked smugly. “Do you think to attack us and take us by force? Other Praetors have tried this and they were shown the error of their ways. Do you truly wish to order men to their deaths this day?”

Dyack smiled now and Barnak moved into the transmission right on queue. Garnot’s face altered significantly when he saw him and his dark eyes began to dart back and forth between the two men.

“Our men will not die this night!” Barnak hissed with equal hate and anger at the man in the transmission. His only thoughts were of his children who he had to hide for so many years and the lives they would now be able to fulfill because of the actions they were taking right now.

“Lord Barnak?” Garnot gasped.

“That is Deputy Praetor Barnak to you Executor Garnot.” Dyack spoke proudly.

“Dep... Deputy Praetor!” He stammered. “There has not been a Deputy Praetor in over four thousand years!”

Dyack nodded his head. “Another item that has changed this night.” He spoke. “I have admitted my faults and turned to an old ally in order to bring our people together! He has accepted his role and he stands with me now with the full backing of the Parliament!”

Barnak grinned and for the first time in nearly a millennia he allowed the change to come over him and the fangs and eyes of his wolf persona burst forth and were easily seen. “And we will see your terror end this day!”

Garnot stuttered for a few moments but then his face hardened. “Your troops will die if they attack us here!” He snarled. “Hundreds of them will die!”

Dyack shook his head. “I don’t think so.” He stated. “Those loyal Rothryn troops are not there to attack the Academy Executor Garnot. Barnak and I are not so foolish. Those loyal and proud Rothryn troops are there to keep you and your minions from escaping.”

“What?” Garnot barked.

“You made a mistake when you targeted my daughter Sehri Executor Garnot!” Dyack snarled at him viciously. “When you ordered her to be captured dead or alive by your Enverr minions so that you could experiment on her and discover just how much her abilities have advanced and how she can now shift her form to that of a wolf! Just as our ancestors were able to do so very long ago! You made the mistake Garnot you fool! Our brothers and sisters within the Lycavorian Union have many ways to gather information from those who do not wish to give it freely.”

“What... you have no idea what you...!” Garnot stammered once more.

“It’s too late Garnot!” Dyack spoke. “We know everything! You have brought about your own destruction and you have chosen the instrument by your actions! My daughter Sehri is now quite happily the wife and mate to a pureborn Lycavorian Spartan! The Crown Prince of the Lycavorian Union! A young man who wields power that you and I cannot begin to imagine! His enemies gave him a name during their war with his people Executor Garnot! They gave him this name for the number of lives he claimed in that war. You chose the instrument of your own destruction Garnot, when you attempted to take my daughter from him.” Dyack’s smile was nothing but pure evil and he said the next words with great emotion.

“His name is Soul Slayer!”

LENTANI ELYNTH AND ANDROCLES ORBITING THE ROTHRYN SCIENCE FACILITY 20,000 FEET

The early morning air here is cool. Elynth spoke as she glided along with her wings at their full extension, catching the thermal layers and using her wings only enough to remain aloft. The natural makeup of a dragon’s scales made them invisible to any known sensors, so she had no worries of being spotted by machines, and they were too high for the naked eye to pick them out of the night sky even with the half-moon that was up. I like it.

Better than Sparta? Andro asked with a slight tinge of humor in his voice.

Elynth chuckled softly. There is no place like our home Andro my brother.

No there is not. He echoed her words.

They both loved flying like this, coasting along on the wind currents and just being together. They had been doing this since they both were small children and at times because of their ages, it gave their mothers fits. They would steal into the night at different times and just fly among the clouds for hours.

Will we see it again soon Andro? Elynth asked.

Andro shook his helmeted head, the multicolored horse hair plume shaking gently. I do not know sister. He answered. After we retrieve Laren and Ladur and then link back up with our fathers, I don’t know what will happen. He has not been entirely forthcoming with me about what exactly is going on out there. There are some things that he is keeping even from us, I can sense it within him.

Perhaps even he does not know. Elynth chimed in. Our fathers can be the most closed mouthed ronnus when they want to be.

That could very well be the case. Andro spoke with small humor in his tone. This new species, the Tasmor, they are an unknown that father cannot predict. He wants to trust them for he says they are like us in many ways, but there are still too many unknowns. And these Svorag are a bigger threat than I think he is letting on. At least to others.

Sarlana says they remind her in small ways of these Scourge that she and Murano have spoken to us of. Elynth spoke as she dipped her tail slightly and changed their direction.

That is what troubles me about them. Andro told her. I don’t think father has shared everything they have discovered about them or the Svorag. Even Murano avoids talking of them when I have asked. It is almost as if they do not want to remember or there is something else going on. And much of this vagueness comes from this man Lorendo that they spoke of. He has killed hundreds of his own kind in order to protect some dark knowledge that he has according to my mother Anja. Some purpose that they cannot yet determine.

I have thought of that. Elynth spoke softly. Someone who is as skilled as your mother in certain ways is a danger that we cannot dismiss.

Those are my thoughts as well. And father hesitates in his actions to some degree because he does not want to jeopardize what they have gained so far. The trust and cooperation. Andro said in agreement. He took a deep breath and shook his head slightly. It is not our concern just yet sister. We have much to do before we form up with father.

True enough. Elynth agreed.

The implant in his ear beeped softly and they heard Denali's voice speak quietly but clearly.

"Phase one is complete. Phase one is complete. Nineteen hostiles eliminated inside. No casualties on our part. All targets accounted for fervon. They got them all. Nothing further." Deni's voice told them, knowing that they would not reply as per their operational plan.

Andro smiled and nodded his head. The Rothryn seem to be far more capable than we first thought. He spoke to Elynth. Good.

Sehri's father does not strike me as a man who does things half way. Elynth said.

No he does not. Andro agreed with her. He is winding up.

Elynth nodded as they both heard Dyack's voice over their receivers. All this drama is really unnecessary you know.

I tend to agree but Dyack wanted to make a point. Andro said.

Andro adjusted the volume of his implant slightly and Dyack's voice became much easier to hear.

A young man who wields power that you and I cannot begin to imagine! His enemies gave him a name during their war with his people Executor Garnot! They gave him this name for the number of lives he claimed in that war. You chose the instrument of your own destruction Garnot, when you attempted to take my daughter from him." Dyack's smile was nothing but pure evil and he said the next words with great emotion.

"His name is Soul Slayer!"

I believe that is our cue. Elynth commented.

Andro nodded his head. Take us in sister. Right through the skywalk.

On our way! Elynth barked out as she folded her wings back and tilted her tail down as she plummeted for the ground beneath them.

ROTHRYN SCIENCE ACADEMY COMMAND CENTER

Wilman and Garnot were staring at the monitors all around the perimeter of the Academy when Harira entered the Command Center still somewhat disheveled from waking up. Garnot turned to her immediately. "Harira... finally!" Garnot hissed.

"What is going on?" She asked as she straightened her hair and came right up to them.

"Dyack has massed troops at all of our entrances." Wilman answered. "Among them he has placed these dragons."

Harira's eyes widened slightly. "Dragons?" She gasped.

"Why would he place them there?" Garnot asked. "Are they as capable as your initial reports spoke?"

Harira met his eyes. "Their dragons are paired with a Lycavorian or other species as a rider." She explained. "They... they are bonded within the Etheric realm. It gives them unique abilities."

"Can they manifest them into the physical realm?" Garnot asked.

Harira shook her head quickly. "Aside from being able to use a form of telekinesis and being able to deploy an Etheric shield around themselves I don't think so." She answered. "I only saw them working together on that planet Solmar, and that was after most of the fighting was already over."

"So you do not know what they are actually capable of?" Wilman asked.

Harira shook her head. "Information about their dragons is closely guarded. I tried to discover as much as I was able from their computers but it was locked behind walls of security layers I could not infiltrate."

"What of this Prince?" Garnot demanded. "The one we saw in the transmission? Can he do these things?"

Harira looked at him. "You saw the transmission Executor." She answered. "The way he killed that poor man. He and several of his siblings have this ability. They can project their Etheric abilities in to the physical realm as weapons. Apparently his father as well. It is within their blood somehow."

"And since he bit Dyack's daughter she would have this within her?" Garnot asked.

Harira nodded her head. "It is why I contacted you when I first discovered she had been changed. I overheard Aleatia speaking of it in whispers and I contacted you immediately. What does this matter now? Did your Enverr contacts not succeed in taking her?"

Garnot looked at Wilman and then back to her. "They did not, they were unsuccessful." He stated.

Harira's eyes grew wide. "I hope they were all killed." She stammered. "They could reveal far too much of our..."

"It's too late for that." Wilman spoke. "Dyack already knows what we attempted. That is why there are now troops outside our entrances."

Harira looked at him. "Surely they cannot touch us in here. Our defenses are state of the art. No one has been able to breach our walls in millennia."

"Dyack seems confident in their ability to do just that." Wilman answered. "I have alerted our people within the walls to take up their security stations and prepare to defend the Academy but they are doing nothing except sitting there. They are making no attempt to enter the grounds and each of these groups has at least one dragon with them."

"Our defensive missiles could reach them even where they are and eliminate them." Garnot spat.

Harira's eyes grew a little wider. "No." She hissed softly.

Wilman looked at her. "What do you mean?"

"Their dragon pairs can project Etheric shields." Harira stated. "They will be able to protect all those nearby, especially if these dragon pairs are Androcles Leonidas' siblings. They are like him, at least in some way. Three of his brothers and two sisters at least. If they are there among the Rothryn troops then your weapons will not do anything."

"They can project Etheric shields strong enough to stop missiles?" Wilman gasped in disbelief.

Harira nodded her head quickly. "It is like an additional skin of armor over what they already wear. I saw... I saw projectiles from weapons bouncing harmlessly away. Your missiles might knock them out with concussive force if they were unexpected but their fragments will not penetrate the Etheric shields they can generate."

"They cannot breach our security!" Garnot spat. "We will simply..."

"Colonel!" The male voice called out causing Wilman to turn and look across the Center. "Incoming Priority Communication from Major Olya in the prisoner wings!"

Wilman turned to the command station beside him and stabbed down on the small control panel. "Major!" He barked out.

"Colonel we have a breach!" The man's voice was excited and out of breath.

"A breach?" Wilman hissed. "No alerts have gone out!"

"Colonel... the prisoners are gone sir!" The major exclaimed. "All of them! Nineteen of our men our down and all of the holding cells are empty!"

Wilman looked at Garnot who had an expression of horror on his face. "Confirm!" He snarled.

"Sir... I came down to the Prisoner Wing to reinforce our men down here!" The Major answered. "We entered the Security Wing and noticed that the power was fluctuating. Our men at the Security Station were down! We swept the entire Wing. All of the cells have been emptied and the prisoners are gone. Nineteen of our men our dead!"

"The security Wing held over two hundred prisoners!" Garnot almost shouted. "Are you saying they are all gone?"

"Yes sir." The Major answered. "It appears they entered through a tunnel that was cut into the supply room floor. It drops into the main sewer tunnels beneath the Academy and lead..."

Wilman looked at Garnot. “Directly out to the river, bypassing the wall and our security!” He gasped.

“How is that possible?” Harira barked. “All of our security measures are in place! How could they have gotten in? How did they know where to go?”

“The Security Wing has all of the research labs in it!” Garnot exclaimed. “All of the data we have acquired through the millennia!”

Wilman turned quickly. “Run a system wide diagnostic!” He shouted. “Look for piggy back signals into our system! And check our video feeds! Do it now!” He turned back to Garnot and Harira. “It’s the only way they could have done this! They blinded us! They got someone into our security system and bypassed our protocols!”

“We have the most sophisticated computer system in the sector!” Garnot barked. “How did they...?”

“Colonel! I found it!” Another man’s voice shouted.

Wilman ignored Garnot and rushed over to where the man was sitting. “Show me!” He snapped.

The man pointed at his monitor. “Here sir!” He stated pointing to the thin wavy line on his monitor. “A low band transmission signal. We don’t use them anymore but the old codes are still active in our computer database. Someone tapped that signal band and took control of all of our equipment with a very powerful computer. I’ve never seen anything like this type of coding Colonel. Whoever is operating this computer is a genius. And the computer is more powerful than anything we have. They have been feeding our system false reports for over two hours now! False security feeds! Everything!”

“Can you sever their connection and regain control of our equipment?” Wilman barked the question.

The man shook his head quickly. “Whoever is doing this has infected all of our systems.” He stated.

“The only way to purge them now is to shut down the entire network and do a reboot from archived templates!”

“Fuck!” Wilman snarled. “What about secondary systems?”

The man nodded his head. “Secondary systems are offline while primary is running.” He stated. “They are still clean as of now, but the virus will instantly take control of them once they come online.”

“How long before that takes place?” Wilman asked.

“Maybe five seconds before they detect the secondary network come online and then another ten seconds for them to target whatever virus they are using to bypass our control.” The man answered. “I think.”

“You think?” Wilman stated.

“Colonel I’ve never seen this type of sophistication!” The man gasped. “It’s like... it’s like a brand new computer code sir! Whatever it is, it is not Rothryn or any other kind of computer code that exists. At least that we know of.”

“Can you control the weapons launchers with the secondary systems?” Wilman asked.

“Yes sir. Until they take the Secondary Network down too.”

“Can you find the origin of this signal?”

“I can tell you it’s not ground based sir.” The man answered. “We’d pick that up right away. It’s airborne! So it has to be a ship of some sort. And it has to be within five kilometers in order to transmit.”

“Find me the source of that transmission Sergeant!” Wilman hissed. “Like yesterday!” He turned and hit a button on another computer console. “Major Ody!”

“Here Colonel!”

“Seal the Security Wing and begin deploying our security force throughout the Academy. All points of access and exit.” Wilman ordered. “Tell your men to prepare for an assault of some kind. I don’t know from where.”

“Understood sir!” Ody answered.

“And Major...” Wilman looked at Garnot. “Deploy the three Containment 567 Protocol Prototypes.”

“Understood sir.” He replied.

Wilman looked at Garnot as he moved closer to him. “They have not yet undergone full testing Wilman.” He hissed.

“It appears that this is the time.” Wilman spoke.

Harira looked back and forth between the two men. “What are Containment 567 Protocol Prototypes?” She asked.

“They are...” Garnot began to speak but the voice of the sergeant stopped him.

“Colonel... I think I have the ship!” he barked out.

Wilman turned to him. "You think?" He snapped.

The man pointed to his screen. "I was able to trace the signal back to here Colonel." He spoke indicating a spot only three kilometers off the east tower. "But no sensor readings and no visual ship is present."

Harira moved up to them. "It is hidden behind one of their invisible fields." She stated. "They call them Shrouds. It renders the ships invisible to sensors and the naked eye."

Wilman looked at her. "You are certain?" He asked.

Harira nodded her head quickly. "I have seen them in action." She stated. "It is amazing technology known to this new branch of Lycavorians."

"Sergeant... target that spot." Wilman told him. "Use the East Missile battery. You will have fifteen seconds once you bring the Secondary Network online. Don't miss."

PREMONITION
FIVE THOUSAND FEET
ORBITING ROTHRYN SCIENCE ACADEMY
TWO POINT NINE KILOMETERS

"...Sadi?" Ne'Veha spoke in almost a whisper as her helmeted head turned back and forth to scan the three consoles of instruments that surrounded her body in the left side pilot's seat.

"Everything is nominal SirsanGai." Sadi answered from the co-pilot's seat, her own head moving between the three massive consoles that surrounded her own body.

Their relationship had provided to them many insights into each other and both of them knew that Ne'Veha was the more instinctive pilot, while Sadi was the more tactically sound. While Sadi adored and loved each of her fellow Crown Princesses, she preferred Ne'Veha's lush, elven body and Sehri's firm lithe figure pressed against hers in their bed. Ne'Veha had discovered since Andro had turned her that she simply could not get enough of first Sadi's and now Sehri's sweet scent or the taste of their lips. Since Sadi and Ne'Veha were both pilots, this only added to their attraction to one another, just as Lu'ria and Carisia were so drawn to one another because they were warriors. Their minds thought very much alike in so many ways, and when Sehri had joined them, it had become even more delightful for each of them discovered something about each other that simply aroused them to no end. While they would deny nothing to each other, Caliria simply drifted towards Carisia and Lu'ria, while Sehri gravitated toward her and Ne'Veha. When they were all together in their bed with Androcles and the mood struck them, it did not matter who they grabbed to quench their desires, for they were never deny each other anything. They had been spending almost every moment together since Sehri had joined them and all of them were the very best of friends as well as lovers now. The delightful soreness of having Androcles love them breathless still coursed through them all and it was something that none of them would change for anything now. Though none of them had given it much thought at all, their lives had paralleled Andro's mothers, since they now almost always traveled in a group of three when away from Andro. Just as his mothers had begun to do when they were away from his father.

Sadi turned her head slightly and looked behind her and Ne'Veha. "Mari?" She asked.

Mari turned her own helmeted head to look at her and nodded. "The signal is holding steady." She answered from the chair.

It had taken Master Chief Ranor all of six hours to install a complete computer station behind the pilot's seat and opposite Kameka at the PREMONITION's weapons station. Since almost all of the instruments on the PREMONITION were based in some fashion on Pralor tech, it was a simple matter for Ranor to removed two computer stations from an unused secondary engineering station and turn it into what Mari currently sat in front of. Two large monitors, with three smaller computer consoles in a slightly circular pattern right at her fingertips. Mari had jumped at the chance to work on the ship and had been simply amazed at what the Dreamland Engineers had built by combining Pralor technology and Union ingenuity.

Mari was also stunned at how easily she had fallen into the role she now held. She was now a Leonidas, Deion's wife and mate, for he had claimed her only two nights earlier during a night of incredibly passionate love making that still made her head spin. The pain from his bite had passed within seconds, the powerful virus within his blood racing through her veins and changing her. It had not been as bad as she imagined, all the times they had been together prior to him biting her having served to prepare her body. Mari had never felt more complete in her life now. The love for Deion Leonidas that she felt was beyond words and now that she was like him, it made that love so much more powerful. She could not imagine herself with anyone but Deion, and the relationships she had been in before meeting Deion no longer registered within her memories. She could not imagine herself not being a Leonidas. It was as if she was always intended for this road in life and she embraced it fully. When she had discovered how much younger Deion was than her, even this knowledge had not deterred her emotions or intent. Had it been anyone else, Mari would have dismissed the relationship just as quickly as she could for it would have been like being with a child. Deion however, even barely eighteen years of age, Deion Leonidas was no child. He held within him the memories and knowledge of his father and grandfathers and his mother and he was the most incredibly intelligent man that Mari had ever met in her life. He was also exceptionally gifted physically in the male department and never ceased to leave Mari breathless before succumbing to his own pleasure. Deion did not fear her intellect either. Other men she had been with were intimidated by her intelligence, but Deion embraced it. He told her that it made her even more attractive to him in so many ways.

It was going to take some getting used to, being called Princess by so many, but Mari was ready for that portion of her life to begin. She had not told her father or mother just yet, she did not know if they would understand what she felt going through her, and they needed to discover each other once more. Deion had begun training her in small things, with the intent to approach Androcles in order to more officially train her. She was a Praetorian and that could not be denied by anyone, even her father. Mari knew that if her father did not wish to train her than Androcles would.

“Meka?” Sadi asked.

“The Rothryn Teams all made it out.” Meka answered instantly, her long tail absently waving back and forth behind her chair. “I wasn’t able to count all of them Sadi, but it appears as if they got all of the prisoners that we knew about, or close to it. Our weapons are hot but in standby.”

Kameka’Caleo was only another sign that Androcles and those around him were unique.

Meka was now quite happily the wife and mate to Daio and she had embraced her new life without a second’s pause. A fact that her father General Byka’Caleo could not brag enough about. Daio had looked beyond all Kameka had endured in her life and found the light buried deep within her. He had embraced that light and made it his and Kameka had surrendered all she was to him without hesitation. It was a decision she would now never regret for it had given her everything she had ever wanted. She was now free to live her life as she saw fit with a man who worshiped her publicly and privately in their bed. While she was Kavalian by birth, Meka now considered herself a citizen of the Lycavorian Union. She was proud of her heritage, but knew that change was needed or her people would fade from history. General Pian’Nruarani had started that change and her father would do his part in that battle.

This is where Kameka’Caleo belonged and she knew it with no doubts.

“Andro and Elynth are moving into position now.” Sadi spoke as she turned back to her own instruments. “In a few more minutes we can drop this charade.”

Mari’s head jerked slightly. “Whoa!” She exclaimed. “Another command signal! It just came on line! Sibfla! It’s their Secondary Command Network! I’m detecting missile activation! They are locking onto the low band signal and tracing it back to us!”

“Launch!” Meka called out. “I have missile launch! Eastern Battery!”

Sadi’s head jerked to look out her cockpit window. “Countermeasures!” Sadi barked out instantly.

“Deploying!” Meka answered as her finger stabbed down on her console.

The entire area around the PREMONITION became as bright as daylight as Kameka deployed both flares and electronic clouds of chaff. While not actually causing the Shroud to falter, the flares and chaff did outline the PREMONITION quite clearly to anyone who may have been watching from the ground. Which just happened to be every Rothryn soldier at the Eastern entrance to the Academy as well as Lisisa and Jeth.

“Nubou this!” Sadi snarled. “Andro is almost on top of the skywalk! Meka, target all of the exterior batteries on that facility and blow them into pieces! Mari!”

“I have jumped their signal and now have control of their Secondary Network!” Mari called out. “They won’t be launching anymore missiles but I won’t know if they have another network until it activates!”

“It won’t matter if they have another!” Sadi growled. “SirsanGai... shift five degrees to port and let’s give Meka a clear line of sight!”

“Five degrees!” Ne’Veha echoed as she caressed the controls.

“Locking them up!” Meka shouted. “I’m killing them now!”

Kameka stabbed down on her console sending out the command to the PREMONITION’s two forward mounted X1 Quantum Matter Pulse Cannons. The Pralor designed weapon, taken from Sparta’s Wrath many spares, dropped slightly from within its recessed compartment on the PREMONITION’s forward hull and unleashed four, controlled bursts of devastating Phased Quantum Matter particles. Each burst of the dual cannons slammed perfectly into the four corner mounted missile batteries that were in plain sight on the roof of the Academy. Each blossomed into a huge fireball as the bursts from the QMPC shredded both launchers and spare missiles into junk in the space of just three seconds.

“Hah!” Mari exclaimed. “Chew on that!”

Sadi touched her console then looked out in to the darkness while reaching for Andro within Mindvoice. Andro our love, they know something is happening now. Go with the gods our beloved. Return to us uninjured and we will shower you with extra attention.

“...Know something is happening. Go with the gods our beloved. Return to us uninjured and we will shower you with extra attention.”

Sadi’s warning was clear, precise and full of seductiveness and Andro felt his wives and mates pulse him with their auras and Etheric resonances as Elynth maneuvered over the top of the Rothryn Academy insuring that she kept clear of the now burning batteries.

A hundred meters Andro! Elynth called out.

Give me two minutes sister! Andro spoke as he released the Dragon Armor braces on his legs. I will open the west wall.

No mercy my dragon brother. Elynth called out.

No mercy my dragon sister. Andro echoed.

Now! Elynth shouted just as she rolled completely over and Andro dropped from the saddle and fell into the darkness below.

ACADEMY COMMAND CENTER

“...Gone Colonel!” The sergeant gasped aloud as he looked at Wilman. “All... all of the missile batteries were just destroyed!”

Garnot looked at Wilman with shocked eyes. “Destroyed!” He almost screamed. “How is that possible?”

Wilman looked at the sergeant. “A ship?” He asked.

The man nodded his head quickly. “It never fully was visible sir, but it cut loose with some sort of countermeasures that threw off our missiles and reflected against whatever shield they are using to hide themselves. I couldn’t track where the weapons fire came from but it is definitely not any weapon that is known to us or the Vanari! Some sort of Quantum Matter based tech!”

Wilman turned his head quickly to where Harira stood. “You did not tell us they have developed Quantum Matter based weapons!” He snarled.

Harira met his gaze. “Quantum Matter is only theoretical!” She barked back at him.

“Quantum Matter weapons just obliterated my missile batteries and their command crews!” Wilman shouted.

“Colonel... the Containment 567 Protocol Prototypes have been destroyed!” The Sergeant exclaimed.

“What?!” Garnot shouted. “How is that possible!?”

“Executor... it appears as if whoever took the prisoners also eliminated the Containment 567 Protocol Prototypes. All three of them were found with slashed throats!” An alarm began sounding in the Command center and the sergeant’s eyes grew wider. “Colonel! We have an intruder!”

Wilman rushed over to the man. "Intruder? Where?"

Garnot moved over as well now, standing in front of the sergeant's station. "How could they have gotten someone inside?"

Wilman looked at his sergeant. "Where?" He demanded.

The sergeant shook his head. "It can't be!" He gasped.

"Talk to me sergeant!" Wilman hissed.

"Colonel... internal sensors are reading a breach of the Skywalk ceiling and the entire Skywalk level!"

The sergeant spoke.

"The Skywalk level?" Wilman stammered. "How could anyone breach the Skywalk level from the ground floor?"

The sergeant shook his head. "They didn't sir." He spoke pointing to the monitor. "Look."

The tip of his finger indicated the image of the shattered glass from the huge Skywalk Skylight. The once decorative glass was now utterly destroyed, with only jagged edges remaining.

"Sibfla!" Wilman coughed. "Do we have feeds on that level?"

"Switching now sir!"

"By the gods!" Wilman muttered as the different camera feeds that the sergeant was cycling through all showed the same thing. Bodies. Dozens of bodies. His eyes lifted to focus on Garnot. "What have you brought down on us with your actions you fool?" Wilman growled angrily. "How many?" Wilman shouted. "Eliminate the life signs of all of our men! Tell me how many got it!"

The sergeant worked feverishly and then sat back in shock. "That can't... that can't be right!" He gasped.

"What?!" Wilman barked. "How many?"

The sergeant looked up at him. "Colonel there is only... there is only one unidentified life sign!"

Wilman's eyes grew wide. "One!" He gasped in disbelief. "One man is not killing our security force by himself!"

All of them heard Harira's sharp intake of breath and they turned to look at her.

"Harira?" Garnot demanded. "What is it?"

"It's him!" Harira stammered as her hands went to her throat in fear. "It's the one who claimed Sehri! It's Androcles Leonidas!"

"The boy Prince?" Garnot hissed.

Harira looked at him. "He is no boy Garnot!" She snarled at him.

SPARTA'S WRATH

CIC

"...Was that?" Barnak exclaimed as they were monitoring the situation from the CIC with dozens of monitors now showing different portions of the Academy on the surface. The monitor they were watching on the wider screen had just flashed in four different locations and they could see the explosions.

-The PREMONITION just destroyed their missile batteries- Armen spoke from the side. -It seems someone inside discovered the low band signal we are using to infiltrate their systems and traced it back to their ship. They fired upon them. Sadi Leonidas responded in a manner consistent with her demeanor-

Barnak looked at him. "By destroying their missile batteries?" He gasped.

-They are lucky she did not bring down the entire structure- Armen quipped.

The doors to the CIC slid open and Sehri led The Cleric Mother Ilossa into the CIC. The older woman had wide eyes as she clung to Sehri's arm, her head swiveling about like a top as she took everything in. Ilossa's eyes finally came to rest of Dyack as Sehri ushered her right up to the Command Table.

“Cleric Mother Ilossa.” Dyack spoke bowing his head slightly. “An honor to see you once more.”

“Praetor Dyack.” Ilossa stammered. “How did you...? She looked around once more. “This ship?”

“Amazing isn’t it?” Dyack asked her as he looked at Sehri step closer to him. She reached up on her tip toes and kissed his cheek.

“Papa.” She spoke softly and with a great amount of affection.

“Cleric Mother, I’m sure you know Lord Barnak.” Dyack said motioning to him. “He is now Deputy Praetor.”

Ilossa’s eyes grew wider at this information and she looked at Barnak. She quickly looked back to Dyack. “Then it has... it has begun?” She asked.

Dyack nodded his head. “That is why I asked Sehri to bring you here.” He reached over and squeezed Barnak’s arm. “The three of us have a decision to make right now.”

Barnak looked at him oddly. “What do you mean Dyack?”

“The prisoners have all been liberated Cleric Mother.” Dyack said. “According to our men, some of them are in rough shape physically and mentally, but they are alive. Androcles has assured me that he can have several of the Union’s Hadarian medical personnel dispatched here along with several of their medical ships and generous amounts of supplies that we just do not have. Once we inform him of our decision, those ships and personnel can depart and be here within three days. Then we can truly begin to pull our people from our past while balancing our future with that same past.”

Ilossa nodded her head. “As it should be Praetor.” She stated. “I do not... I do not know why you sent for me however. I am not... I cannot be a politician.”

Dyack shook his head. “Not a politician.” He told her. “A healing balm for all our people. As the Cleric Mother to the Rothryn people.”

Ilossa’s eyes went wide at this information and Barnak smiled. While he had never met the woman before just now he had heard of her through the many years of trying to hide his own children with Etheric abilities. He knew what his friend was attempting to do and Barnak could not help but agree with his actions.

“The Rothryn Science Academy would never...” Ilossa began.

“They no longer exist.” Barnak stated proudly. “We have absolved them of all their power and influence. It no longer exists. Even now we are seeing to their forces within their walls.”

Dyack chuckled. “In a manner of speaking.” He stated.

“I don’t... Praetor Dyack I don’t understand.” Ilossa spoke.

“We brought you here to answer a question for us.” Dyack said. “Barnak does not know all of the details but I’m sure he has figured it out by now.”

Barnak nodded his head. “Indeed and I approve.”

Dyack smiled and took Ilossa’s hands in his. “We need you to decide what to do with the Academy.” He stated. “Does it benefit us in the long run if we leave the facility intact or do we raze it to the ground and purge it from our future?”

Ilossa’s reaction was almost instant. “So much agony and death.” She stated softly. “All the things that have happened within those walls Praetor... they could never be forgotten if... if the facility remained.” She shook her head. “No. It must be destroyed. Right down to the last brick and piece of steel.”

Dyack nodded his head and looked at Barnak. “My friend?” He asked.

Barnak nodded. “I agree.”

“Then so it shall be.” Dyack spoke. He squeezed Ilossa’s hands tighter. “Did she make it back inside?”

Ilossa nodded her head. “Barely. She has risked much through these years Praetor. You must insure she makes it out.”

Dyack nodded his head. “I intend to.” He turned and looked at Armen. “Armen are we receiving that tapped feed?”

-I will bring it up on both side monitors- Armen answered. -Mari Leonidas was very thorough in her tapping of the system-

“If you would insure it is broadcast openly across the planet Armen. Our News Channels are standing by for your feed.” Dyack said.

“What feed Dyack?” Barnak asked.

“I asked them if it was possible to use the Academy’s own internal security system against them.” Dyack explained. “What we are about to witness will be what our own people will see across the planet.”

“What is that?” Ilossa asked.

“Spartan Justice.” Dyack answered seeing Sehri’s face positively beaming with love at his words.

The two holo monitors to either side of the large chart table came alive and everyone heard Barnak’s massive intake of breath. “By all that we hold holy!”

He had not made an appearance outside of SPARTA’S WRATH for two whole days, ever since delivering his message to the Vanari SBR. He had left all contact with the Vanari to Coren Re Mydala, Asay Va Eldost and those best suited to deal with it. He was no politician and he knew it.

Androcles Leonidas had spent those two days tangled within the arms, legs and sweet scents of his wives and mates during the evening hours and studying with Sarlana, Murano, Elynth, Dorian and Ryner during the day. He had re-committed to memory every single curve and erogenous zone on each of his mates, relishing in their cries of delight and fervor and much fun and pleasure had been had by all. They had returned the pleasure to him tenfold, and done so with great gusto and happiness, playfully fighting with one another on who would have him at that particular time, usually ending in whoever was closest to him at the time. They also were not shy about giving and taking from each other if the tangle of female flesh was any indication. Andro could feel the love for each other that they held as well as for him and this made him even more determined to love them more fervently than they could take. He had succeeded in this endeavor, of that he was confident.

His days were filled with learning, being taught by both Sarlana in the history and skills of the Dahakoan, and by Murano as he related to them more and more of the Praetorians, how they came into existence and the many skills that they had. It was not as difficult as he, Dorian, Elynth and Ryner first thought since Sarlana and Murano had obviously been working together on such a training program. They were seamless in their actions and their thoughts, and while Sarlana told them that they would not be fully complete until Laren and Ladur were with them, she was trying to give them an advantage until the six of them were together. Murano on the other hand had given them several skills to use in order to better harness their emotions and control and then channel that emotion into their abilities. Murano had dismissed the dogma of the Praetorians of his time, realizing and now embracing the fact that these men and women were not like the Praetorians of old. Discovering Mari was his daughter was the first step in Murano letting go of his past and embracing the future. He was pushing all of them hard, but none harder than Deion and Andro knew why. Though he did not yet know Deion had already claimed Mari as his wife and mate, Murano was doing what any father would do and insuring that Deion was worthy of his daughter.

These two days were like a brilliant light had been turned on inside their beings, and the connection and bond he shared with Elynth was so much more powerful and clear. It had been almost seamless before, but now it was as if they were one entity. This connection was carrying over to nearly everything they did and even more so now because of their heightened senses and state of mind. Andro and Elynth held nothing back now and the only ones they could spar with at full speed were Dorian and Ryner. Only Dorian had the same quickness and power that their blood allowed, their Lycavorian, Vampire and Dragon blood. While this was true, Androcles and Dorian made it a point to train with their brothers, Jomann and Dutkne, as well as Nara, Eliani, Mari and Sheva, Lisisa and Onera. All of them were Praetorians, whether it be warriors or mages and they would all need to learn to control and use the abilities that their Pralor blood provided to them.

As he dropped into the darkness below Androcles felt no fear, only a sense of balance and peace.

He felt anger at what the men inside this building had intended for his beloved Sehri yes, but that anger did not control him. It fueled him and his actions with purpose and intent. As he rotated his body slightly while he fell, Androcles prepared to unleash Spartan justice on those inside this building. Murano had taught them so much in so short a time and it was these skills that Andro now brought to bear. Once Murano had come to the realization that it was their emotions that fueled their Praetorian power, he was quickly able to adapt many of the powers he had knowledge of and begin to instruct them. He was also able to allow them to improve their existing abilities and make them much more effective.

And far more lethal.

Androcles extended his legs at the moment he touched the decorative glass of the Skywalk ceiling. His weight easily cracked, splintered and finally shattered the thick glass in a split second and he descended through the glass, focused his power downward and landed on the floor beneath him with enough force to crack the granite floor. The nearly two dozen Science Academy security personnel who had congregated under or near the glass ceiling had no time to prepare for what came next. Andro directed the force of his power down and outward all around him. His Etheric power was propelled outward like the ripples of a pebble being tossed into a calm pond. Only these ripples uprooted the Rothryn security forces, shattering limbs and rupturing internal organs as the concussive Etheric wave smashed their bodies in every direction until all of them came to painful halts with impacts of interior walls. Most were killed by the Etheric wave instantly, the massive concussive force doing all of the damage, and the impacts of smashing into the unyielding walls only adding to the enormous damage done to their bodies.

Androcles looked up quickly, the plume from his helmet still billowing in the wake of the drop and Etheric wave, only his changed eyes and fangs showing through the protective breaks in his helmet. None of the twenty-one men were moving, three of them still imbedded in the granite of the walls they had slammed into because of their proximity to the Etheric wave's origin point. He could hear alarms beginning to erupt all over the building and the shouts and screams of men on the same level as him. Then he heard Eirene's calm voice cut through the noise and fill his head through his receiver implant. She was situated at the West Academy Arch behind the portable P9 console in the rear of the Rothryn version of a Command Heavy Lifter with Miseo and Fedor providing her protection, along with the three other Rothryn techs in the back of the vehicle.

“Twenty meters north fervon!” She told him. “Left at the intersection and then thirty meters to the stairwell. Down one level and the west wall will be directly in front of you.”

Androcles didn't hesitate and turned north while calling forth his Shi Viska and he began to march.

ACADEMY CONTROL ROOM

“...Contact with all forces on the Skywalk level!” The sergeant shouted. “The security station on Level Four isn't responding!”

“What about the Section leader?” Wilman barked out.

“Negative!” The sergeant answered. “All communications on the Skywalk level is being jammed Colonel! Whatever they are using I can't seem to burn through it! It's unlike anything I have ever seen!”

“I need contact with my men!” Wilman roared.

“I'm trying sir!” The man snapped back. “The only team we have contact with is the Southern Defense Unit!”

Garnot stepped forward. “Order them to attack the troops at the South Arch!” He shouted. “Kill their precious troops and they will call this monster off!”

Wilman looked at Garnot. “Without support from our missile batteries they will be slaughtered!” He barked out.

“I don't care! That is what we pay them for!” Garnot screamed.

“I will not send them to their deaths!” Wilman barked out.

“If you do not we are all dead!” Garnot screeched.

Wilman looked at the sergeant. “Are the forces moving for the entrances?” He asked.

The sergeant shook his head. “No sir! They are maintaining their distance just inside what used to be our missile range. Without the missile batteries we can't do any damage to them if they decide to attack!”

Wilman looked at Garnot. “You would order a full scale attack against fellow Rothryn?” He gasped.

“If it keeps me alive yes!” Garnot barked out.

DORIAN AND RYNER ORBITING AT 10,000 FEET

Like his beloved older brother, Dorian Leonidas was an enigma that many outside of his family would never understand. Very little was known about the son of Martin and Isabella Leonidas and to be honest that is exactly how Dorian liked it. Again, like his brother Androcles, Dorian coveted his privacy almost religiously. They now knew that this was caused because of the dragon blood within their veins; the Dahakoan blood that miraculously flowed within them. How this was possible they did not know, and like Androcles once more, Dorian did not care. He had questioned why he was like he was; the reason he came into existence as he had, just like Andro and Elynth. Just like his Bonded brother Ryner. Why were they always so different than others? They now had some of the answers to their questions and they had embraced the answers they had gotten from Sarlana. They had embraced the answers not because they knew them to be true, but because they felt them to be true. Sarlana had revealed to them everything that she knew, providing to them information they would never have gotten had their father and mothers not gone off into the unknown in search of their history.

The youngest in terms of how long he had been alive Dorian Leonidas may have been, but he looked no different than any other twenty-four year old Spartan. And because of who he was, he had the memories and knowledge of his father and grandfathers before him, as well as his mother and her ancestors. He ignored everything about Veldruk her father, and instead took in all he could of his great grandfather Dorian, his mother's grandfather and the man he was named after. Much had happened to him in the year he had been alive, and while it probably would have driven another man insane, it only served to strengthen Dorian's demeanor and will. He was a Praetorian like his brothers Androcles, Denali and Deion, like his sisters Nara and Eliani and Lisisa. Like his father. He was also Dahakoan. All of this combined allowed him to sense and know that Sheva Juconi would be his, even when he was but an infant. The five foot two vampire woman was three hundred plus years older than him, but she belonged to him heart and soul. And now they had found Onera, the half vampire, half Immortal young woman who was born in the same manner as he was in order to save her life. Her birth had been accelerated because of a disease and she had joined this world and grown far faster than any normal child. But she now belonged to Dorian as well, and to Sheva.

They had both claimed her only two nights ago in the midst of a blissful night of passion. While Onera was perched in his lap, his manhood buried deep within her, Dorian and Sheva had bitten her at the peak of their pleasure. This event opened their minds to one another within the Etheric realm like nothing else ever could and the three of them had basked in this knowledge. And then they had basked in the physical pleasure the three of them could have together for the next twenty hours straight, until none of them could find the strength to lift even a single limb from their bed.

Now Dorian and Ryner were riding over watch.

All of their combined skills were being used to insure that no surprises came at their brother and sister from the unknown. As only Dahakoan could do. They had a connection and bond to Androcles and Elynth that no one else had except for Laren and Ladur. They were attuned to their every thought and movement as if they were seeing and acting out themselves. It was certainly not something that they could explain but fate and destiny was guiding them now and that is why they were like this. Something that both of them embraced completely.

So far Dorian and Ryner were in awe of what their brother and sister had accomplished up to now and this made them even more intent to watch and learn and be alert to any dangers that may befall them.

Dorian felt more than saw Ryner's head snap downward and to the right as they cruised slowly above the Academy.

Brother? He asked relying on Ryner's superior vision from this high up.

I have a group of men exiting one of the roof entrances and moving across the surface. It appears they mean to intercept Androcles before he reaches the west wall. Ryner answered.

Dorian tensed in the saddle and nodded his head. How many?

Six. Ryner answered instantly.

Then let us make sure they do not break up the reunion. Dorian told him.

I was hoping you would say that. Ryner echoed as he folded his wings to his sides and dove for the ground ten thousand feet below them.

Androcles reached the corner of the corridor and pressed up against the wall. Just as he was about to take a quick glance down the corridor a Rothryn security force member came barreling around the corner, his weapon held ready. Andro acted before the man had even cleared the corner and his Shi Viska snapped up and struck the man full in the upper body. The Rothryn soldier came to an abrupt halt painfully as Andro smashed the Shi Viska into his body. He could not stop the pain or the cracking of most of his ribs, nor could he stop his body from launching into the air from the force of the blow and tossing him across the eight feet to the solid wall of the corridor where he impacted heavily, driving all the air from his lungs and snapping the remaining ribs in his body. Genetically he may have been Lycavorian, but like many others, he had never been on the receiving end of Lycavorian strength enhanced with Etheric power. It was devastating to say the least. As the man slammed into the wall, Andro looked down the corridor once more and saw a squad of Rothryn moving quickly and efficiently towards him. He moved back and reached down to his side, where he removed one of the glaives he now carried. He extended the short blades, stepped around the corner holding his Shi Viska up for protection and he launched the glaive down the narrow corridor. It happened so quickly that the Rothryn troops never saw the lethal blade as it sliced through the air at neck level and within four seconds all of the seven men were grabbing at their throats, blood erupting from deep and fatal cuts to their throats. Andro began to walk down the corridor towards them as the glaive returned to his hand like a boomerang and he shook it hard once, displacing any loose blood that now decorated the blades. He left the glaive extended and reached a short corridor to his left. He paused only an instant, and that was to turn his body while he walked and he whipped his hand out once more and sent the glaive whispering down the side corridor, completing his turn and continuing down the main corridor until he reached the top of the stairs.

There! Eirene's voice echoed in his implant. You are at the stairwell! Down the stairs and the west wall will be right in front of you! It will be large enough for Elynth to break to the south from there while you continue north.

Thank you arande. Andro spoke as he lifted his hand and the glaive rocketed around the corner and back into his hand, stained with the fresh blood of three more Rothryn troops who had been hiding in the short corridor.

Go with the Gods fervon!

There were thirteen Rothryn security troops waiting at the bottom of the stairs, the voice in the command center telling them that the intruder was at the top of the stairs. Six were in position at the base of the stairs while seven more were standing in different covering positions behind them. All of their weapons were focused on the narrow stairwell, all of them confident that they would shred the intruder with their weapons before he was even halfway down the stairs.

Only two of this group of thirteen would survive the encounter.

What they expected to come barreling down the stairs was not what they received. They heard a metal clang above them and then the armored figure of a man was speeding towards them riding some sort of shield down the stairs and holding his hands out in front of him, a large ball of bluish white Etheric energy residing in each hand. The first rank of six men were so stunned at the sight that they did not fire for the first three seconds after seeing Androcles. It was all the time he would need. Just as the men pulled the triggers on their weapons, Andro's feet snapped up propelling his Shi Viska forward at impossible speed. Using his exacting control of his Etheric power, he settled to the bottom step of the stairs just as he released the two glowing Etheric balls of energy. Only a few of their projectile rounds impacted off of Andro's Etheric shield before the Shi Viska smashed into that rank of men with unearthly precision. It struck the two men in the center of that line of six without the blades extended on the shield and with just the force of its momentum, promptly crushed their skulls before ricocheting off at an angle. The two Rothryn died instantly, but their bodies were also propelled to the sides against their fellow Rothryn which threw them all off balance, allowing Androcles to release the Etheric energy with devastating efficiency.

The Etheric balls of power accelerated right past the seven men behind the first rank and impacted the steel and granite wall of the Academy behind them. The seven Rothryn men could only watch in unmitigated disbelief as the entire section of wall seem to buckle inward, return to its normal position and then it simply erupted outward in an explosive hail of stone and steel slivers, showering them with bits and pieces and filling the foyer area with thick dust and grime. Such was the trust of her Bonded Brother that Elynth had not even slowed down as she barreled toward the side of the academy wall and just as she reached out with her talons to begin a controlled braking maneuver, the wall exploded outward all around her. With a pulse of distinct approval to her beloved Androcles for his timing, Elynth was now in a position to pounce. Since her legs and talons were already poised to land on the wall, she now attacked as the rubble bounced harmlessly off her Etheric shield and she came out of the dust and grime inside the building like some avenging creature from the heavens and fell upon the seven men who had turned to watch.

Two men died instantly when her talons snatched them up and she crushed them as she landed, her muzzle snapping forward even before she was fully stopped and her massive jaws closing on another Rothryn and biting him in half before he really knew what was going on. As Elynth whipped her head to the side and tossed the upper body of the Rothryn to the floor, the screams of the Rothryn began to fill the foyer area as Andro and Elynth made short work of the remaining men, the few bursts from weapons that did get off deflecting harmlessly away from their Etheric shields.

The dust was beginning to clear when Andro stepped up to his bonded sister lifting his Shi Viska back onto his arm.

An excellent entrance sister. Andro spoke as he moved right up to her and Elynth lowered her head to press her muzzle to his forehead.

Your timing was perfect. Elynth told him. Let us end this quickly now my brother.

Andro nodded his head. Agreed. He reached up and touched his helmet activating his implant. Eirene!

Their Command Center is sixty meters north Andro! Elynth, moved forty meters south and then turn right and the entrance to their power facility will be there!

Andro looked at Elynth once more, her golden eyes focused on him. Remember what we are Androcles my brother.

Andro nodded his head. I will sister.

Then let us do this. Elynth echoed before maneuvering her four and a half tons of muscle and teeth around Androcles and beginning a half sprint down the corridor. Andro turned north and looked down the long corridor before drawing Canarie Emanur, the sword blade bursting into existence from Flatspace with a soft sizzling sound.

“Time to finish this.” Andro muttered before he began to run down the empty corridor.

SPARTA'S WRATH ORBITING LENTANI

“...All the gods in the heavens!” Barnak gasped in disbelief as his eyes were riveted to the two large monitors that showed what was happening both inside the Academy and outside.

Dyack had authorized one of their News organizations to release several Vid drones into the hole Androcles had made in the Skywalk and they were now following him, hanging back far enough where they could see everything and not get in the way. The feed from the drones was exceptionally clear and Barnak, Dyack and the others had just witnessed Androcles and Elynth split up after her dramatic entrance into the side of the building. Though they had not heard the words spoken between them, it was obvious that they were communicating on such a high Etheric level that no one would hear their words. Even Dyack, a man who thought he knew what Androcles was capable of after the way Aleatia had explained to him how he had rescued Sehri on Solmar, could only stand there in total incredulity at what they had witnessed.

Ilossa was in utter shock at what she had just seen and was clinging to Sehri in disbelief. She glanced at Sehri's face and saw the tears rolling down her cheeks slowly, her eyes bright however. “Sehri child?” Ilossa asked quickly turning to grip her hands as Dyack and Barnak looked at her.

Sehri shook her head slowly. “I did not... Cleric Mother I did not fully comprehend what he... how much...”

Ilossa smiled then and squeezed Sehri's hands. "You did not fully comprehend just what you mean to this young Prince and your fellow Princesses did you?"

Sehri shook her head again. "No." She stammered.

"Sehri?" Dyack asked his daughter waiting as she turned to face him.

"I never knew he could do these things father." Sehri said meeting his gaze. "I have seen him fight before yes, but this is... it is..."

"It is nubous beautiful!" Barnak exclaimed. "Dyack this is going out to our people?"

Dyack turned back to look at him, his own eyes wide. "I... yes. I authorized RNN to release the drones and gave them access to the entire news network."

"This is an opportunity we cannot let slip us by." Barnak continued. "This is what we need to rally our people! This could be the catalyst for our future!"

Ilossa turned and looked at Barnak from her spot, still holding Sehri's hands. "What do you mean Lord Barnak?"

Dyack nodded his head. "I know what he means." He spoke suddenly. "We use what Androcles is doing to show them a different path."

Barnak nodded his head. "It will not happen overnight, we cannot change things too quickly Dyack, you know that. This is what we can use to finally make our people as one. No more castes. No more segregation. This could make us all one people. Or at the very least begin us down that path."

"And we still keep our connection to the past." Dyack said softly.

"Is this not what this new branch of Lycavorians have done?" Barnak spoke. "They move forward steadily, but they still adhere to their instincts! They still honor and learn and guide by their past!"

"This path will require us to change much Barnak." Dyack said.

"I have already told you I am not against change Dyack old friend." He answered. "But it is change that we can regulate and guide and nurture. Change that is for the betterment of our people and their growth!"

"You know what we will have to do?" Dyack asked him moving closer.

"I do not question what we need to do old friend." Barnak told him. "My only question is will they help us?"

"That is a question you do not have to ask." The new female voice spoke and all of them turned to see the new holo image come to life opposite the chart table. The woman was very regal looking, well dressed and she appeared in excellent health. The cane in her hand was ornately carved and she only leaned on it slightly.

"Tenna Deia!" Sehri gasped as she turned and saw her image.

Deia smiled affectionately as she recognized Sehri. She had met Sehri twice in the short time she had been on Earth with Androcles and the others and she was a beautiful young woman. "You are looking beautiful Sehri. As always. I still wonder what my Mandri did to have all of you fall in love with him." Sehri couldn't help but laugh softly as she wiped the tears from her eyes. "Gorgo contacted me and let me know that events there had begun. I had a few moments and decided to check with Armen. He put me through here."

"Father... this is Prime Minister Deia. She is Andro's Aunt." Sehri explained.

Dyack stepped closer to the image of the woman. "Yes... my wife and mate told me of you." He stated. "I am Dyack... and this is Deputy Praetor Barnak and the Cleric Mother Ilossa. It is an honor to meet you."

Deia bowed her head slightly. "It is more an honor for me." She said with a warm smile. "I have read all the files Androcles gave to me on the Rothryn people and I must say that I am very impressed."

"So you will help us?" Barnak asked her.

"You may call yourselves Rothryn and we honor that." Deia spoke. "But you are still Lycavorians in your history and your hearts. Asking us if we will help you is never a question that needs to be asked. Tell me what you need and you will have it."

It was certainly something new for Murano, but by no means could he say he was not enjoying himself in a perverse sort of way. Had the Praetorians of his time been able to do this, they could have learned and passed so much information to each other in far shorter periods of time. As a Darastrixi Doraanar Sarlana had the ability to “piggyback” as she had called it, the Etheric wave and strands that were Androcles and Dorian and Elynth and Ryner. She could see all they could see and monitor their current emotional state as well as assist them if needed. The Doraanar were limited in what they could do by what the individual Dahakoan allowed them, and how tightly they were allowed to access the Etheric strands of each Dahakoan. Androcles and Dorian had allowed her to see everything about what they were currently doing, and how their emotions fluctuated, but the rest of their minds were like solid black barriers. Sarlana did not care about that, for she already knew how they felt about her and nearly everyone else, and their private lives and emotions were just that. Private.

Murano however, he had never experienced something like this and he found it extremely fascinating. He could feel every ripple within the Etheric realm that was Androcles, Dorian, Elynth and Ryner as they did battle. The ebb and flow of their Etheric streams and emotions were open to him and he could see everything they were doing. Their awareness of everything everyone around them was expanded to such an extent that nothing escaped their notice. It was like watching them from above as they acted out. When Andro and Elynth touched their heads together and then split up Sarlana’s soothing and wise voice filled the connection they shared.

This is what the Praetorians could have been Murano. What they should have been. Sarlana told him. You feel how their emotions fuel their actions yet always remain controlled? How their awareness of everything is expanded?

You are doing that. Murano commented.

Murano could almost see Sarlana shaking her head. No, it comes from them, but when a Doraanar is in the connection with them it becomes even more powerful. It is the primary reason why, even without your Praetorian abilities, the Dahakoan never lost a battle with the Scourge.

It is almost like a form of precognition. Murano stated. It is amazing. They see four or five moves ahead of what they are currently doing.

This is why they are so formidable. Sarlana spoke. This is why their father is equally as formidable and he is not Dahakoan. He is something else.

Something else? Murano asked.

Martin Leonidas is not a Praetorian Murano. Sarlana told him. He wields the power of the Praetorian yes, but he is something much more. I know you have felt it within him. Seen flashes of it.

Are you saying that Martin is like his sons? Murano asked.

No. Androcles and Dorian were chosen to be Dahakoan for a reason. Dadrien chose them for reasons only he and your friend Sumar know. Martin is something else entirely, with a potential equal to if not more than his sons.

I have... I have felt something different within him. Murano admitted. I did not want to press too hard for he would have detected even the most minor intrusion against his Etheric shields.

We must nurture all we can Murano. Sarlana said softly. We must find Praetorian Mages who are powerful enough to act as I do for the Dahakoan. I know they are out there, but we have just not found them yet.

Murano opened his eyes then and dropped from the Etheric stream waiting for Sarlana to do the same and meet his gaze.

“War with the Scourge is coming isn’t it Sarlana?” He asked. “No matter how much we try to avoid it, deflect from it, hope it does not occur. It is coming isn’t it?”

“You ask me a question that you already know the answer to Murano.” Sarlana replied. “I am only four hundred and fifty thousand years old Murano, and the Dahakoan died out long before I was ever hatched. I have never been able to do what I now do with Androcles and the others, but it comes so naturally to me. I understand now why the Scourge wanted those of my kind destroyed. Somehow they must have realized what we meant to the Dahakoan and wanted to insure we were no longer a threat to them.”

“And they were in a perfect position to demand that from the Darastrixi after they had destroyed my people.” Murano spoke softly.

Sarlana nodded her head. “That is why my people acquiesced to their demands. Out of fear. At least that is what I now believe.”

Murano nodded his head slowly. “That would explain quite a bit.” He said. “And it shames me to know how I acted towards you without knowing all the information.”

Sarlana shook her head. “There is no shame you bear Murano. No one is perfect and each of us has to learn this of our own accord. We have time Murano.” Sarlana said. “How much I do not know, but we have time before that war arrives on our doorstep no matter how much we don’t want it to. I believe Martin may have some idea, perhaps even Wayonn, but given how conscious both of them are of security measures and what they are dealing with now, we do not know for sure and they will tell no one. Our purpose, I believe our purpose is to train and guide the next generation of the Dahakoan and Praetorian as I have told you before. We must hold nothing back from each other and that is why I invited you here to experience this.”

Murano got to his feet and stood silent for a long moment, Sarlana staring at him. He finally held out his hand for her and she took it and allowed him to help her rise. He towered over her diminutive frame and looked down into her eyes. “How do we guide those who hold their emotions so close to their hearts and in many cases do not want to be guided?” He asked.

Sarlana smiled as she took his arm in her hands. “Carefully.” She answered. “And by becoming close to those who will always have far more influence over those we serve. Come now... Androcles will deal with the remainder of these fool Rothryn who thought to control Etheric power for their own gains. There are training regimes and skills that we will need to formulate and develop in order to do what we are meant to do.” Sarlana looked up into his face. “And I wish to hear from you how you feel now that you have discovered you are a father.”

“How did you...?” Murano stammered.

“The Leonidas siblings keep nothing from each other.” Sarlana stated with a twinkle in her eyes. “They have known for some time from what I understand. Their sense of smell is astounding isn’t it? Aricia and Helen told me before I departed to join you. I want to know how it makes you feel.”

“It is... it is new territory for me.” Murano told her honestly.

Sarlana chuckled softly. “Yes, I imagine it would be.” She looked at him. “Tell me about it.”

LENTANI ROTHRYN SCIENCE ACADEMY

It was perhaps the most beautiful event that any living Rothryn had ever seen. Brutal beyond measure yes, but beautiful in every regard. Two of the three Rothryn news channel Vid Drones were hovering up near the top of the high foyer ceiling outside the Command center entrance, their cameras focused on Androcles below them and broadcasting their feed to every Rothryn household across the planet that had access to the News channels. This made up about ninety-eight percent of the Rothryn people and word was spreading quickly across the planet about what was happening and more and more people across the many cities were beginning to tune in. It was an unprecedented event and the many News organizations on Lentani were turning to each other for help in widening their broadcast powers.

Androcles’ Etheric shield was radiating brightly as round after round impacted his shield and bounced away. Twenty Rothryn soldiers had descended upon him just as he reached the outside of the Command Center and attacked. They were quick to discern that their weapons were having no effect on the armored figure and most had drawn hand weapons and attacked, thinking to bring him down by sheer numbers. It was a fool’s gambit and this they discovered almost immediately.

The first two Rothryn to reach Androcles were the first to die as he simply bent down, allowed his Shi Viska to take their assault, and then lifted them into the air over the top of his head, adding a bit of force using his TK abilities. Their bodies were tossed almost ten meters down the corridor he had come and both of them landed at odd angles, bones breaking and shattering from the force. The moment Andro had lifted them clear over his head, he spun around to face the Rothryn, sweeping Cana rie Emanur around in front of him. The sword bit deeply into the neck of a single Rothryn, but did not pause and passed completely through his neck and the neck of two others, blood erupting outward and spraying the first rank of Rothryn troops with a fine mist of red. This cleared the area immediately in front of Androcles and he finished this move by sweeping his Shi Viska around from the side and launching the shield in a curving motion. The Shi Viska sped away from his arm as if shot from a cannon, still bladeless along the edges. It was truly the only mercy Androcles showed this night. The Shi Viska stuck one man full in the chest, crushing his ribs and collapsing both lungs before it bounced away and slammed into another man only several feet away. The Shi Viska struck him in the side, instantly shattering his clavicle in three locations and propelling his body away to slam into two other of his fellow soldiers, all of whom ended tumbling away in a tangle of limbs.

Androcles stood there, sweeping Cana rie Emanur in front of his face as his Shi Viska returned to his arm and suddenly the Rothryn troops that remained standing were staring at him from five meters away. Andro willed his Shi Viska back into Flatspace and it disappeared from his arm. He crossed Cana rie Emanur in front of his body once more and then willed the blade back into Flatspace and returned the pommel to its place on his combat harness. The Rothryn were all wide eyed and terrified of this creature before them with blazing azure blue eyes that were nearly glowing inside his skull as they reflected from under his helmet. None of them had ever faced such a thing in battle and all of them knew that dozens of their comrades now lay dead, scattered across the interior of the Science Academy, killed by this apparition in front of them.

Andro lifted his hands in front of him and spread them about equal to the width of his shoulders. “No more of you need die this night.” He spoke slowly. “I have come for justice against those who ordered the attack against my wife and mate! They were going to take her so that they could kill her and dissect her like an animal! You fight for those in charge here, but do you really know what it is they do to your own people within these walls? Do you know what atrocities they commit against your people?”

Andro felt the vibration in the floor announcing the arrival of Elynth as she came up slowly behind him, lowering her body to the floor on top of her talons so that she could attack at any moment, and extending her huge head out to a place directly over Andro’s right shoulder. He saw all of their eyes grow even larger at the monstrosity before them, not knowing that Elynth had dispatched almost twenty of their fellow soldiers as she destroyed the main power grid for the building. There were splotches of blood crisscrossing her dragon armor, even across the helmet portion which protected her head and muzzle. Her wings slowly extended out half way, making her appear larger than she really was but having the desired affect as many of the Rothryn troops fidgeted on their feet and took several steps back.

“You cannot defeat us.” Andro continued. “Over a hundred of your comrades lie dead across this building at our hands. I will slay a hundred more if need be, you included, if you stand in my way. I will have justice and I will bring this vile building down to the ground, but you do not have to die here this night!”

WESTERN ACADEMY ENTRANCE ROTHRYN THIRD INFANTRY BRIGADE

“You cannot defeat us.” Andro continued. “Over a hundred of your comrades lie dead across this building at our hands. I will slay a hundred more if need be, you included, if you stand in my way. I will have justice and I will bring this vile building down to the ground, but you do not have to die here this night!”

“...Is he doing?” The Rothryn Colonel exclaimed in disbelief as they watched the large monitor from inside the temporary command tent.

“I believe he is giving them a chance to surrender.” Denali answered the man as he too watched the large monitor.

“Surrender?” The Colonel almost shouted. “They do not deserve to surrender after all they have been party too!”

Deni looked to his right where Deion and Nara stood with Fedor and Eliani. Kalis, Ridor and Daio were outside with Lisisa and Arduri watching the events with the lines of Rothryn troops poised to assault the Academy.

“Deni we should move now!” Fedor spoke quickly. “He is outnumbered! He needs our help!”

Nara and Eliani looked at their younger brother and grinned. “Outnumbered?” Nara spoke as she bumped her hip against Fedor in sisterly affection. “Andro and Elynth have them outnumbered Fedor. It won’t be much of a fight.”

“But they...”

“Fuck you!” A voice snarled out from the monitor and drew all of their attention.

“Then join your comrades in jorbhe!”

Androcles’ voice was death incarnate and all of them were riveted to the large monitor as they saw his hands flare with Etheric power and the fourteen or so Academy Security troops were lifted off the floor, many of them flailing madly to regain their balance. Andro thrust his hands back and then forward, feeling Elynth channel her own power into him and the Academy Security troops were sent hurtling through several layers of steel and granite walls until they were launched from the side of the building, most of them already dead.

The shouts of shock echoed from outside the tent and the Commander of the Rothryn 3rd Infantry Brigade bolted from the tent just in time to see over a dozen bodies coming sailing out of the side of the building three stories up. The screams of those that were still alive echoed in the night air for a few seconds until they too were silenced forever as the bodies began crashing into the surrounding timber.

“By the gods!” The Colonel declared openly in an astonished shout. His head snapped around as he saw Denali, Fedor and Deion come up beside him almost casually.

Denali turned and looked at Fedor. “Still think he needs our help fervon?” He asked as Fedor met his gaze with a sheepish expression.

“Perhaps not.” Fedor answered.

Denali smiled and turned back to the Rothryn Colonel. “Colonel... I suggest you get your men ready to move in.” He told him. “It’s almost over inside.”

“How... how do you know this?” The Colonel asked.

“Because I know my brother.” Denali told him.

ROTHRYN SCIENCE ACADEMY COMMAND CENTER

“...Do something!” Garnot screamed.

Wilman looked at him. “What do you want me to do?” He shouted back. “Our men are being decimated! He’s already killed over half our standing force! We...”

The tearing sound of metal and granite reached their ears and they all turned to the main door into the command center. Fully two feet thick with reinforcing steel rods and they could only watch in horror as that door bowed inward nearly six inches and the granite frame cracked and began to shatter. In the next instant, the entire door was ripped away as if by the hand of some angry god, dust from outside suddenly filling the vacuum sealed room. As they all stood there frozen in their boots, the dark form suddenly filled the area where the door had been. The sergeant had been closest to Wilman and he flung himself from his chair in order to protect his officer, bringing up the sidearm as he leaped at Androcles. The dust had cleared enough to watch as Androcles reached out with his left hand and caught the man in his left hand, his fingers closing around his throat, just as he was bringing his sidearm to bear on Andro’s head. Andro’s right hand snapped up with the glaive in it and the dual blades extended just before he released the weapon. The glaive whistled through the air directly at where Wilman was tearing at the holster that held his sidearm. He only had enough time to look up in horror, his own weapon barely out of its holster, before the glaive struck him in the left side of his chest with enough force to launch his body into the air and drive it back until he smashed into the wall three meters behind him with enough force to leave an imprint.

Garnot watched as Wilman’s body slid to the floor, blood flowing from the massive wound in his chest, his eyes open in death. He turned back quickly to see Andro gaze at the young sergeant in his grip. The man was clawing at the armored hand that was crushing his throat with each beat of his heart, his eyes bugging out of his head as the air and the life was slowly squeezed from his body.

Andro pulled the young sergeant closer to him and stared into his wide eyes. "You chose the wrong side." He spoke with a trembling anger in his voice. "But you will survive this day." Andro flung the sergeant away from him, tossing his body clear across the Command Center to crash violently into the computer network. Sparks flew as his body smashed the delicate computer banks to junk and he fell to the floor and remained still.

Andro turned and looked at Garnot. "Executor Garnot I presume."

"No!" Garnot screamed as he brought the sidearm up and began firing. "Stay away!" he was back pedaling quickly, not really aiming though it would not have mattered. The four rounds that struck Androcles were like grains of sand against his Etheric shield and the Mark VI ArmorPly that he wore.

Andro dropped his left hand and the second glaive that he carried suddenly appeared in his fist. With barely any effort he launched that weapon across the space between him and Garnot and saw as the glaive curved and bit into the man's forearm. Garnot screamed in agony as his arm was severed just below the elbow and he could only watch as his hand and part of his forearm fell to the floor at his feet, still holding the sidearm. Andro caught the glaive as it circled back into his hand and he promptly replaced it in the small section of his armor.

Garnot gripped the stump of his arm, trying to staunch the flow of blood and his eyes saw Harira moving up behind the wild looking young man, her hand holding the sidearm. "Kill him!" Garnot screamed. "Kill him Harira! Shoot him now!"

Andro didn't seem to flinch at his words and he simply held out his right hand and called his second glaive back. With a sickening sound it tore free of Wilman's chest and zipped back into Andro's hand where he re-secured it to his armor in the same location on the opposite side. His head turned only slightly when he saw Harira move up beside him, her eyes wide and her hands shaking, but holding the weapon as if she knew how to use it.

"Shaman Master Harira." Androcles spoke. "I am glad you are unhurt."

Harira glanced out of the corner of her eyes at Garnot before meeting Andro's gaze. "It is a pleasure to see you again Prince Leonidas." She spoke calmly, though her body still trembled in fear and adrenalin.

Garnot glared at her in disbelief from the floor. "Harira shoot him!" He screamed. "Shoot him you stupid upae!"

Harira glanced at him and then looked at Andro once more. "May I?" she asked.

Andro allowed the small smile to split his lips and he motioned to Garnot with his hand. "Please... I insist!"

Harira didn't hesitate and stepped up to Garnot and using all the strength in her body she whipped the sidearm across his face just as hard as she could. The barrel of the weapon caught on his cheekbone with a resounding crack, shattering the bone and sending him sprawling to the floor.

"I am a Shaman Master of the Circle!" Harira screamed at him as she stood above him. "I am not now, nor have I ever been a member of this insidious institution! I only infiltrated the Academy in order to see this day come! To see the vile things you do here ended and to set our people with Etheric powers free!"

Garnot looked up at her from the floor his eyes wide in disbelief. "You..."

Harira's smile was cruel. "Yes executor. Four decades I have worked my way into your good graces so that I could bring about this day! Four decades I have had to endure you torturing and killing our people! No more! Now I will see you pay for every crime you have committed against our people. And when they find you guilty and they sentence you to death, I pray that all those who have suffered at your hands will find some small measure of peace!"

Harira lifted the sidearm and once more unleashed a vicious blow to his face, this time directly against his temple. It carried enough power to knock Garnot completely to the ground and drop him into blackness. As she heaved in anger, Harira stood back up and looked at the weapon in her hand.

"May the gods forgive all the sins I have been forced to do in order to bring this foul beast to justice." Harira muttered softly, though Androcles was close enough to her to hear every word. She turned and looked at him as his hand gently took her arm. "You had every right to... for what this man attempted with Sehri you had every right to take his life. Why didn't you?"

Andro shook his head. "Rothryn you may call yourselves, but no matter the name you use to describe yourselves, you are still Lycavorian in your hearts." He spoke softly. "I trusted that. My justice will be done because the Rothryn people will see that justice will be done. I cannot ask for more than that."

Harira reached out to steady herself, taking his arm and holding on. "It is... it is finally over." She gasped softly.

Andro looked around the interior of the Command Center, seeing terrified techs cowering in the corners of the room as far away from him as possible. "It will be over when this entire building and everything it ever represented is nothing but a memory." He told her softly. "Then the Rothryn people can truly move into the future."

"The future?" Harira said looking at him.

Andro nodded his head with a smile as he reached up and slowly removed his helmet and his sweat stained skin and bright azure eyes were fully exposed for all to see.

"The future." He said. "It's looking pretty bright right now."

Harira smiled and nodded her head. "Yes. Yes it is." She agreed. She looked at him. "When did you...?"

"That you weren't fully what you wanted everyone to believe?" Andro asked her with a smile.

Harira nodded. "Yes."

Andro shook his head slowly with a smile. "Now that would be telling." He told her. "I couldn't do that."

Whether from his humor, the sheepish look on his face, or the fact that what she had been working towards for over forty years was now complete, Harira didn't know. Perhaps it was a combination of everything, but she broke into a hearty laugh, and it felt so good that tears burst into her eyes as she held Andro's arms. All of this was caught by the Vid Drone that had parked itself in the upper corner above the door into the Command center and had recorded everything that had taken place. She would not discover it for several weeks, but what she had done here, what she had endured and worked towards for so long, all of it combined to make Harira an icon of sorts. It was not a role she had ever wanted, but it was one she would embrace going into the future for the sake of her people. Standing beside Dyack, Barnak and Ilossa, they would become the heralds for change for the Rothryn people. Changes that would be implemented slowly but surely, but changes that had begun this day, here in this building.

Harira had just become part of Rothryn history and future.

She would cherish that every day for the rest of her years.

Her future was at hand as well as her people.

SPARTA'S WRATH ORBITING LENTANI SIX HOURS LATER

Dyack and Barnak stood beside one another in the lounge, Aleatia and Barnak's wife chatting away with Gorgo and Dustha. The lounge was full of off duty personnel and this is something that Barnak was surprised at. A Royal family that did not separate themselves from those they ruled was one of the rarest things a person would see in their lifetime. Barnak was witnessing it now as many of Androcles' siblings had returned to the ship and were mingling with the ship personnel that were here as if they were the best of friends.

"Never in all my years did I ever think I would be alive to see this day." Barnak spoke as Dyack turned to look at him. "The end of the science Academy."

Dyack nodded his head in agreement. "Nor I my friend." He stated.

"We let stupid things pull us apart Dyack." Barnak spoke. "Things that should never have affected our friendship. We let them pull us apart."

"Yes we did." Dyack said. "But that is now the past. We have a chance to lead our people forward into a future that could be very bright Barnak. And we can do it together."

Barnak nodded his head. "Yes we can."

They turned when the double doors to the lounge slid open and Androcles walked in with Sehri clinging to one hand, her face animated and bright. Sadi, Ne'Veha walked beside her with smiles on their faces while on his opposite side holding hands were Carisia, Lu'ria and Caliria. Andro had changed into a standard Fleet uniform now, with a simple gold trimmed crimson red sash around his waist. There did not seem to be any rank on the uniform and Dyack noticed for the first time that Sehri wore one of these sashes as well as all of his young wives and mates. As his eyes drifted over the men and women gathered in the lounge he noticed that his siblings also wore a similar sash and that no one wore any kind of rank on their uniforms. Dyack watched as Carisia and the Vanari Caliria broke off from their group and moved to where his sister Lisisa was standing with Denali and Arduri. Lu'ria grabbed Sehri's hand and Dyack watched them move to where two other male Drow elves were standing, one with a stunning Vanari woman pressed up against him intimately. The older Drow elf embraced Sehri tightly with happy amber eyes and held her hands as they began to converse.

Andro came up to them in several more strides, Sadi and Ne'Veha holding his hands as Ne'Veha had moved to his opposite side now.

"Praetor Dyack." Andro spoke respectfully. "Deputy Praetor Barnak."

Dyack held out his hand, and Andro's hand came out and they grasped forearms tightly. "We owe you... we owe you a great deal Androcles." Dyack spoke now.

Andro shook his head as he clasped forearms with Barnak in greeting. "You owe me nothing." He spoke. "It is I who am indebted to you for allowing me to seek justice for Sehri. And for allowing me to claim her as my wife and mate."

"When it comes to justice for my daughters... never." Dyack answered. "Nor for my people."

Andro smiled and bowed his head slightly. "We will be departing in a few more hours but I wanted to insure things between us were on solid ground."

Dyack nodded his head in agreement. "Barnak and I spoke to your Aunt very briefly and things are already beginning." He told him. "We will speak with her more at length in two days but for now she is sending a full political contingent to Lentani in order to establish an embassy and open full diplomatic relations. I understand the Senators that came with you from the Alpha Quadrant will be remaining here?"

Andro nodded his head. "All but one of them. Senator Ulana is going to remain aboard SPARTA'S WRATH for the foreseeable future. My mother's believe it is best if I have a political appointee onboard in order to keep me out of trouble." He said with a smile.

Barnak chuckled now and looked at Androcles. "Something tells me that does not always work out in the appointees' favor." He said.

Sadi couldn't help but laugh now. "Not by a longshot." She said in reply.

"You do realize that you and Harira have become cult heroes among the Rothryn people here on Lentani." Barnak spoke. "The Vid Drones were broadcasting to far more active signals on the surface than we realized they would be. Over half our population saw the entire event from the time you entered the Academy."

Sadi pulled on Andro's hand before he could answer. "Saradasaar... SirsanGai and I are going to speak with Mari and Meka about the modifications we want to make. We will see you for dinner."

Barnak and Dyack watched as Androcles shared a soft kiss with each of them before they moved off heading for another portion of the lounge. Andro's azure eyes followed them with deep love and adoration and it was something that both men saw. He turned back to them and smiled.

"They call you Beacon of Light." Barnak spoke solemnly. "That speaks volumes young Androcles Leonidas."

"It doesn't sound so good when they are angry with me." Andro stated with a grin, causing both men to laugh.

"Isn't that the case with any woman that we call wife and mate?" Dyack said.

"Mine just hits me in the head." Barnak admitted with a smile.

Dyack saw Andro smile but not as widely as he should have at Barnak's admission. He reached out and took Andro's arm. "You have something you want to say Androcles." He spoke softly. "What is it?"

Andro looked at him and then Barnak. "I spoke with my father before coming here and if things turned out as we hoped he wanted me to pass some information to you Praetor. Now that includes both of you I suppose."

"I'm guessing this has nothing to do with diplomatic relations." Barnak said.

Andro shook his head and held out the two data pads which he took from his belt at the small of his back. “It concerns who you and the Vanari refer to as the Ancients. The ones who are responsible for bringing the Rothryn here from our original homeworld. The ones who removed your ability to shift your forms.”

“They had no right to do that!” Barnak hissed softly. “They have altered the lives of millions by their actions!” Barnak stepped closer. “It is true that Sehri can now shift her form as you and the others do?”

Andro glanced at Dyack quickly, who nodded his head and he met Barnak’s eyes once more. “Yes. It appears as if the Ancients, Pralors as we know them, did not remove this gene from the Rothryn people, they only put it into a dormant state. When I bit Sehri, it became active again.”

“And this ability can... this can be returned to all Rothryn?” Barnak spoke.

Androcles nodded his head. “According to my sister, yes.” He replied. “She is the doctor and it would require intensive initial work, but it can be done by a gene therapy treatment.”

Dyack took Barnak’s arm. “I believe we can discuss that at another time Barnak.” He said. “I think what Androcles wants to tell us is far more important.”

Barnak blinked and then nodded his head. “Of course. Forgive me my boy.”

Andro smiled and shook his head. “I would be excited about it too sir.” He stated. “What my father wanted me to pass on to you is more a cautionary intelligence at the moment. It is something that he wants you to be aware of. Most of it is on the pads I gave to you and you should read them fully. Questions that you might have can be answered by the individuals my Tenna Deia will send or you can contact me directly. I have given my personal COM channel to both of you. I wanted you to hear it from me initially however, and it must not become public knowledge in any way. At least not now.”

The military man in both Dyack and Barnak took over then. “Speak to us Androcles.” Dyack said.

“We should probably sit down.” Andro told them motioning to the table to their right.

SPARTA'S WRATH TWO HOURS LATER

“...Quantum Fusion Drives standing by for full operation!” The elven man called out from the other side of the bridge.

Andro stood with Sarlana and Murano on the bridge of the SPARTA'S WRATH, all of them watching as the crew went about their duties.

“Refractive shielding go!”

“Weapons go!”

“Drone Control go!”

“All stations report standing by Armen!” The burly Lycavorian man barked from the opposite side of the bridge. He was the man that Armen had chosen to be his First Officer. Close to four thousand years old, with nearly a thousand of that fighting both the High Coven and the Kavalians and more recently having commanded an entire Fleet Group against the Evolli. The shift to SPARTA'S WRATH may have cost him a promotion to Fleet Admiral, but he was utterly thrilled to be here on the most advanced and sophisticated warship anywhere in the universe. He had literally jumped at the chance to be on this ship knowing what it would be doing and the places it would be going to. His wife of nearly two thousand years had joined him and had taken over as the head teacher in the single school on SPARTA'S WRATH. A warship she may have been but everyone knew the risks they were going to be taking on this ship and out of all the men and women Armen had conducted interviews with during his three month stint at Dreamland Engineering, only six had refused this posting. There were not many families with children on SPARTA'S WRATH, only twenty-six to be exact, but all effort was made to insure that the thirty-five children who now called the ship home would need nothing.

Armen nodded his head from his spot on the command platform in the center of the massive bridge. His eyes swept all around him and for a fleeting instant Armen would have sworn he felt the emotion of pride sweeping through him. “Very well! All stations prepare to jump the ship!”

Sarlana looked up at Androcles from where she stood between him and Murano. “How long will it take?” She asked softly.

“SPARTA'S WRATH has an extensive array of very powerful sensors.” Murano told her. “We are going to progress slowly so that we can insure that we don’t bump into any unwanted guests.”

“Armen estimates five days to approach the station in this way.” Andro told her. “We could do it in three jumps, but as Murano said, we need to be very careful.”

Sarlana nodded her head. “I understand.” She said. “Laren and Ladur?”

“Dorian has already made contact with her and told her that whatever they intend to do, they need to act on it now.” Andro answered. “Our window allowed for a two day grace period but I’d rather not have to use that.”

“With any luck, they will be moving on their end by the end of this evening or at the very latest by mid-morning our time.” Murano told her.

Sarlana’s brow furrowed and she looked at Androcles. “Wait a moment.” She said. “I was under the impression they thought we had more time. That we would take longer to get there. Another week at least.”

Andro nodded his head. “They did.” He told her. “Dorian and I do not want to take that chance. If they are as efficient as we suspect, they will be ready to go now.”

“But they will reach this station three days before we do.” Sarlana said. “You told me it is only a two day trip from Darastrixi space.”

“It is.” Andro told her with a glint in his eyes. “However, they will not be there before us.”

Sarlana looked between the two of them. “I don’t understand.”

“SPARTA'S WRATH is going to take five days.” Andro told her. “She will be insuring that we don’t have unwanted company. We on the other hand, we are jumping straight in on the station.”

“What?” Sarlana gasped.

“We are taking the PREMONITION and jumping directly to the station. With Mari’s help, Sadi and Ne’Veha have plotted four jumps that will take us right to the station.” Androcles said.

Sarlana’s emerald green eyes were wide in shock. “What? Androcles that is... that is completely crazy!” she exclaimed.

Murano nodded his head. “Something I tried to tell him as well.” He stated calmly. “He didn’t listen.”

Andro smiled. “It may be crazy, but it also gives Dorian and I the best chance to assist Laren and Ladur should anything unknown happen.”

“I won’t allow it!” Sarlana barked. “It’s too risky!”

Andro met her eyes and smiled. “Then you are welcome to stay here.” He told her. “I have already told my siblings this same thing. They all volunteered to go and told me where to stick my idea before I had the chance to finish my statement. Murano as well.”

Sarlana looked at Murano. “You are in agreement with this insane idea?” She asked him aghast.

“No.” He answered her honestly. “However, aren’t you the one who told me we can only guide them? That we will be unable to force our wishes on them. Why fight a losing battle?” He spoke with a straight face. “Besides... I am beginning to grow accustomed to these off the wall tactical moves that always succeed. It feels good to be on the winning side for a change.”

Sarlana looked at him with wide eyes. “You have been corrupted by them!” She gasped in disbelief and watched as Murano could only smile and shrug his shoulders.

“We are leaving the Beta Quadrant in three hours.” Andro stepped away from her and Murano.

“Armen... let’s get underway shall we.”

Armen nodded his head and turned to his XO. “Executive Officer, prepare to execute first jump to our staging area! Final preparations on the PREMONITION are to be finished before we arrive there.”

“Understood! Prepare to jump the ship!” The Lycavorian man barked. “Time to really visit the unknown people!”

“...What can you confirm?” The tall man asked as he stood in the shadows staring out the large window over the lake to the south of his home. While the sun was coming up in the area where the Rothryn Science Academy was, it was long past sundown here. The moon reflected magnificently off the shimmering surface of the lake. He would miss this location.

A man and a woman stood behind him as he gazed off into the night sky, both of them holding data pads. The man stepped forward first.

“The News reports are accurate Revered One.” He spoke swiftly. “But our contacts say much more was accomplished than what the News Channels are actually reporting.”

“How much more?” The Revered One asked again softly.

“It appears that they have at least one Pralor scientist working with them.” The young man answered. “From all accounts, a very gifted one.”

“They are all very gifted.” The Revered One spoke evenly. “Some more than others.”

“He or she was able to infect and then control a computer virus that essentially shut down the entire Academy Defensive Network.” The young man explained. “It was done from a ship that they could not see and controlled by a computer unlike any they had ever witnessed in use.”

The Revered One nodded his head slowly. “A Pralor P9 computer no doubt.”

“Yes Revered One, but we knew the Vortex Cruiser would have had an ample supply of these in storage, as well as the portable P1.” The young man said. “With two Avatars assisting them, learning how to use them would have been child’s play after the advances they have made in the last two decades.”

The Revered One nodded his head. “Yes indeed. But this computer attack was conducted quickly yes? With computer codes and algorithms they had never seen before?”

“Yes. Once their network was infected it happened within seconds.” The young man replied.

“Developing a computer algorithm to specifically target a network is no small feat and it needs to be done by a master.” The Revered One stated evenly. “As gifted as many of these Lycavorians and elves may be, I have yet to see one that could do this in so short a time. This only confirms for me that they have somehow made contact with surviving Pralors.”

“With their own Advanced Hyper Matter Fusion Drives invention and access to pure Pralor Quantum Drives, interstellar travel would be nothing to them now. They could be scattered all over the galaxy searching for them.” The woman spoke.

The Revered One nodded his head. “Yes they could, but only the father would send Pralors to assist the son. Which means he has found surviving Pralor colonies somewhere and they are helping him.”

“The father and his offspring are descendants of Sumar.” The young man spoke.

The Revered One whirled around in place, still shrouded in the shadows, but savage, dark magenta colored eyes flared in those shadows and they glared at him. “Never speak that foul name in my presence again! Never!!”

The young man quickly dropped to one knee and bowed his head. “I beg forgiveness Revered One. I forgot myself!”

Those magenta eyes softened somewhat but there was still a savage nature to them. “What of the son?”

“They have already departed Rothryn space Revered One.” The woman spoke now. “They engaged their invisible shields and we lost them just before they jumped from the system.”

“Even using the sensor advances installed in our satellite?” The Revered One asked her.

The woman nodded. “We were able to track them for several seconds while these Shrouds they used engaged, but once they were full deployed all trace was lost of them even on the advanced arrays.”

“Something that we did not predict or plan for.” The Revered One said softly. “A large advantage on their part.”

“Perhaps he is going to meet the father Revered One?” The young man spoke again now, almost trying to regain favor.

The Revered One shook his head. “Perhaps... but I don’t think so.” He spoke. “This son, he is as unpredictable as an Ion storm. The father as well. No, he came here to accomplish a task, and he did. Now he has something else he is planning to do and it does not concern the Rothryn or the Vanari. Is there any way to get this information from within Dyack’s inner circle?”

The young man shook his head. "It has always been very hard to infiltrate his inner circle Revered One." He answered. "Now with Barnak assuming the office of Deputy Praetor and the events with the Science academy, their security will be next to impossible to penetrate. The price if caught would be higher than we are willing to risk at this time."

The Revered One nodded his head. "In that you are correct Timlah." He said. "We are not ready and nor is the Queen."

"Your directives Revered One?" The woman asked.

"Sharna, you are certain the Prototypes were lost?" He asked.

She nodded her head. "The fool Garnot had them connected to the main network. When the virus infected the system it automatically triggered their self-destruct commands."

"And all evidence of our activity is gone?" He asked.

Once more she nodded her head. "Everything relating to our association with the science Academy was wiped and deleted Revered One. It was done with our technology and far quicker than the virus could detect."

The Revered One nodded his head. "Then our time here is done."

"Revered One surely we can do something?" Sharna spoke.

"No. We did not anticipate the reaction of the son towards the OSG. We did not expect him to intervene in the way he did." The man answered. "It is unfortunate, but we must follow the path of Franklin Adams and pull all of our remaining assets out and go deep." He looked up at her. "Give the order Sharna. I want everything cleansed in twelve hours and all our remaining assets are to rendezvous at the predetermined coordinates and we will regroup with Adams and his people."

"As you instruct Revered One." She told him bowing her head.

"I should like to return to this world when it is over." He spoke turning back to look at the lake. "Once it is eradicated of its infestation it would be a fine world to repopulate with my people."

"A fine world indeed."

CHAPTER FIFTY

VENTORI

CAPITAL CITY OF JORLARI

JORLARI CITY MUSEUM BUNKER

Martin knew his Queens well.

Anja had not gone more than six meters into the underground facility before her wolf blood was screaming out for vengeance. In all her years in practicing medicine, even dating back to before the Great Fire on Earth, she had never seen such a horrible scene as what was arrayed before her this day. Anuk and Kesyla had managed to vent most of the air within the bunker and the smell, while vile, was much fainter and at least tolerable. This did nothing to sooth Anja's famous and now growing anger and by the time Atropos led hers and Aricia's small, four person team of Durcunusaan fully into the facility and declared it clear, she was ready to explode.

No one really knew where Anja's fiery temper came from, the vast majority of Hadarians were exceptionally calm individuals even in the midst of major crisis, and Anja Leonidas was well known within the Union as being one of the most compassionate people alive. Helen had surmised once that the virus within Martin's blood when he changed her had somehow also altered her psyche as well, making her far more passionate about certain things than most of those Hadarians who had been turned. It was said that her father had such a passionate streak about him that he rarely showed and some surmised that this trait came from her father and since she was wolf she allowed it to show more often than he did. Whatever the reason, Aricia and For'mya both knew what was seething through their fellow Queen and lover and while Aricia gripped her arms tightly and held Anja close to her, both of them pulsed her powerfully with their female auras in order to keep her calm. For'mya had remained on their STRIKER in order to respond to any evac order that came from Martin's team, but since they were all of one mind she had seen what Anja and Aricia were seeing.

Anuk Simpson knew Anja as only the dearest of friends and cherished co-workers could and she quickly saw what was happening within her and stepped close beside Aricia to also help to sooth her. Drenia was speaking in soft whispers with Saydia and Perlyea while Anthylea stood with two other Tasmor who had come down from their ship, both of them doctors and they were talking with Kesyla. All of them turned to watch as Aricia and Anuk pulled Anja close to them. Atropos and the Durcunusaan were not happy about what they had seen and all of them were on very high alert mentally and looking for any danger to their Queens and those with them.

With those that she loved more than her own life and perhaps her closest friend outside of Eurin beside her, they succeeded in keeping Anja calm and controlled. Gripping Aricia's and Anuk's hands in her own, her forehead pressed to Aricia's, Anja nodded her head several times while taking deep breaths.

"Be at peace Melyanna." Aricia whispered softly a final time, knowing that her use of the name Dysea had given to her all those years ago would do the trick. It was their way of letting Anja know that they loved her completely and were with her. Both Aricia and For'mya knew that the only aura that would calm her entirely now was Martin's, but there was work to be done and they knew Anja was strong enough to tolerate it until Martin was able to wrap her within his loving aura and embrace.

Perlyea was the only one of the Tasmor in the room to really take notice of this event and her blue eyes watched Anja keenly. The look of peace that had come over Anja's features made her one of the most astonishingly beautiful women Perlyea had ever seen. It was a unique and touching moment. Unlike the Pralor people it seemed, Anja and her fellow Queens and even all of the Lycavorians they had come in contact with, they accepted the Tasmor without question. There were many differences between them yes, the largest being that they were led by a male King, but Perlyea knew these were issues that could be worked around or even accepted by the Tasmor. It didn't seem to bother Martin Leonidas in the least that Saydia Daret led the Tasmor people, he almost seemed to sense that they would respond better to his Queens, and that is how he had left it. This attitude alone set him apart from most males that Perlyea had come across in her lifetime, even Tasmor males, and it spoke volumes about what their future could be. It told Perlyea that this male, this Martin Leonidas, he did not feel threatened in the least that Saydia was a female. That nearly all of the senior members of Tasmor society were female. It told her that he was confident in himself to the point that he did not fear their power and position. It also helped quite a bit that Perlyea found Anja Leonidas incredibly beautiful and desirable and very nearly impossible to resist.

Anja squeezed Aricia's and Anuk's hands one last time and nodded. "I'm good." She spoke in a soft whisper. "I'm good now." She leaned forward and kissed Aricia lovingly on the lips before doing the same to Anuk. "Thank you."

This act surprised Perlyea as she watched until she felt the large man Atropos come up beside her. He seemed to move without any sound and though Perlyea would never know it, Atropos took in everything that was happening in a room where Anja and his sister were. And he had noticed the interest Perlyea had taken in his beloved Queen right away.

"Anuk is the wife and mate to Daniel Simpson. The King's true brother." Atropos told her seeing Perlyea's eyes meet his. "She and Anja have been working together since the very beginning. They are family."

"Do... do your people act this way with all family?" Perlyea asked.

Atropos nodded his head. "It is part of our culture, yes." He answered.

"What do you mean... since the beginning?" Saydia asked now taking interest in their conversation.

Atropos smiled warmly for a man with such a stern demeanor. "That is a very long story Sovereign Regent Daret." He answered her warmly and with respect that all of them took notice of. "If you become the friends that the King hopes you are, then you will probably discover it over time." He told her. "It is a very interesting story."

"You consider the Tasmor friends?" Saydia asked.

"That remains to be seen fully... but you are a proud and honorable species in my eyes." Atropos told her. "It is the hope of Martin that this is so, yes. You would not want to be his enemy, I assure you. He is not kind to his enemies."

Saydia couldn't help the small smile that split her lips. "I have gotten that impression." She stated. "You speak informally of your King. Why is that?"

"He is the husband and mate to my only sister." Atropos told her. "We are family before soldiers."

“I want to know what the fuck happen here!” Anja’s voice barked out now as she pulled away from Aricia and Anuk and caused everyone in the bunker to turn and look at her as she got her bearings once more. “Martin will want to know what happened here! From the top Kesyla!”

Kesyla turned back to the computer station she was sitting at. “Kasden left the main power core at eighty percent when he left with Martin’s team. I have been unlocking internal sensors and bringing systems back online slowly. The data banks are heavily encrypted Anja, but Avi is patched in from the ARC ROYAL and working on them. It will take time however.”

“It’s not Pralor encryption Kesyla?” Aricia asked now moving away from Anja and closer to her.

Kesyla shook her head. “It uses some form of Pralor algorithms, but they are entwined with others that I do not recognize. It would be faster here on the surface if Mari was here, she could access the databanks directly, but Avi is having to filter them so they do not possibly corrupt the systems on the ARC ROYAL.”

“What do we know?” Anja asked moving up beside her as well.

“I can tell you that the facility was last opened seven months and nine days ago.” Kesyla responded pointing to the screen in front of her. “The security protocols all seem to be online and working and that is the last time the hatch we used was opened. The computer however, it cannot determine who the Bioscans belong to. They obviously are not in the database. We don’t know who they were.”

Anja looked at her. “How could that be?” She asked.

Kesyla shook her head. “I don’t know.” She answered. “This is standard Pralor research equipment and would have all known bioscans in its database. I do not know why the bioscans don’t register.”

“This is what your people used to monitor the Lycavorians here?” Anja asked.

Kesyla nodded her head once more. “It is a standard First Contact facility. Built to observe their society but not interact. That is why the systems here are tapped into all of the main public and private networks. Civilian and military.”

“Well, I can tell you it’s definitely some sort of research facility.” Duewa spoke now as she came back into the main room from another side office area. All heads turned to her when they heard her voice as she walked right up to Anja. “This equipment is similar to parts of our lab on the ship Anja.”

Anja nodded her head. “Agreed. But research into what?” She spoke. “It’s like a butcher shop here. What could they have been researching? Who could do this to other sentient beings? What is out there in the corridor isn’t research, it is profane!”

Duewa held out the data pad. “Just from what I have been able to look over briefly, it has to be some sort of genetic research facility. I found this Anja.” She stated as Anja took the pad. “It is mutative in nature and very deadly.”

“Carians!” Anja gasped.

“What?” Perlyea demanded moving closer.

Anja looked at her as she held out the data pad for her to view. “This is Mutative Genetic Bonding.” She said slowly.

Perlyea looked aghast at this information and she looked up at Anja. “My people do not have the technology for such a thing. Is this... is this even possible?” She gasped.

“With the equipment I am seeing just in these rooms, yes.” Anja told her. “How many... how many bodies did we find Anuk?”

Anuk held out another pad to her. “Given the... the pieces that we have found, nineteen Lycavorians, seven Tasmor and at least eleven Pralor bodies are scattered in the corridor and the adjoining rooms.”

Drenia moved forward now and came up beside Saydia. “Sovereign Regent, if I had to guess, we could check our records and discover that the Tasmor here were probably reported as killed or captured.”

Saydia nodded her head. “Yes, but not here.” She stated turning to Anja and Aricia now. “We never lost any personnel helping the Lycavorians on Ventori.”

“They got here some way.” Anja spoke. “Can you identify them with DNA samples?”

Drenia nodded her head instantly. “Yes. It would just be a matter of taking the samples and...”

“Do it!” Saydia snapped.

Anja nodded in agreement. “Duewa, help the Tasmor doctors that came down. Get the DNA samples taken so they can send them back to their ship and check their records.” She looked at Saydia. “I must ask if your people can hold off until those results come back. I know you have burial rights that Captain Drenia...”

Saydia shook her head instantly. “No.” She spoke firmly. “I too wish to discover what happened here as well.” She stated turning to Anthylea. “Anthylea insure that the bodies are... insure that they are treated respectfully, but we must discover what took place here.”

“We have people coming down now to make certain this happens with all of the bodies.” Anja said.

Saydia nodded her head. “I would like one of our religious mentors to come down from our ship as well if that is alright?” She said. “To provide Tasmor Last Rites.”

Anja nodded her head without hesitation. “Of course.” She spoke. “Thank you.”

Saydia shook her head now. “This now concerns our people as much as yours Queen Anja Leonidas.” She said confidently. “Working together will only allow us to discover what has happened here that much more quickly.”

“We need to... whoa!!” Anja staggered slightly, as did Aricia and both of them reached for their heads.

“Anja! Aricia!” Anuk’s voice echoed and they saw her lean heavily to the side in the chair she had returned to. Kesyla was reaching for her without hesitation.

“Anja!” Atropos barked out as he moved forward in a rush. He reached Anja at the same time that Perlyea had instinctively reached out and caught her, Anja’s body pressing up against hers as another Durcunusaan caught Aricia in his arms and steadied her.

“Queen Leonidas!” Perlyea gasped aloud.

“Martin!” Anja stammered.

Aricia looked up with wide azure colored eyes. “Anja... something has happened with Martin! Daniel too!”

PRALOR LONG RANGE CORVETTE

HELIX-CLASS

DESIGNATION

VALISTAR ONE

“...Happen Wayonn?” Jezima asked softly. “Tell us what happened? How did... how did my son die?”

They sat in the passenger area of the HELIX-Class Corvette now assigned to the ARC ROYAL. It was by far the fastest ship that they had within the Task Force and Martin had been adamant about Wayonn taking it to Honelze once he discovered that Jezima and Meral lived. Wayonn sat across from Jezima and Meral, both of his hands holding theirs within their grasp.

Wayonn grimaced slightly but looked at them and shook his head. “I cannot answer that.” He said softly. “Sumar arranged for a mission back to Pralor space once the remaining transport we had was repaired. I led it. What we returned to was a warzone. Wasted planets and death. I can only assume it was after most of our outer defenses had fallen. The few reports that we were able to intercept spoke of Scourge within the core systems of our space. After a run in with a Scourge patrol craft I made the decision to leave Pralor space forever. We took damage from that Scourge ship but were able to jump away. Our ship was too damaged to make the entire trip back to Lycavore so we found a suitable planet to land and do repairs. When we discovered what had happened while we were gone we never returned to our homeworld Lycavore.”

“That is why you are here among us now?” Meral asked.

“I would have given anything to return and be beside him.” Wayonn spoke in a haggard voice. “He was... he was my brother! I...”

Jezima reached up and laid her palm across his cheek as Meral squeezed his hand even tighter. “I... he loved you as such too Wayonn.” She stated with fresh tears. “I did not mean to ...”

Wayonn shook his head slowly. “I know.” He said softly. “By the time we returned from Pralor space it was already over as I said. I sent my... we repaired the ship and I sent my two oldest sons and my youngest son Canth and a few hundred volunteers back with the ship once we had established ourselves on this world. I could not leave. There were over twenty thousand of us and we had families and...” Wayonn stopped talking and took a deep breath.

“So many on a transport?” Jezima gasped. “How did you survive in such a way?”

Wayonn looked at her and smiled gently. "We were all Lycavorian by then." He told her. "Survival is part of our nature."

"You took a bride as well?" Meral asked.

Wayonn nodded his head. "A beautiful young flower. She was three thousand years younger than me, but so willful and intelligent. She turned me our first night together and I never looked back."

"You had children then?" Jezima said.

Wayonn nodded once more. "Thirteen." He replied.

Jezima's eyes grew wide. "So many!" She gasped with a smile.

Wayonn couldn't help but grin. "Neria wanted a large family. That is what we had." He stated. He looked at Jezima. "Canth became to Sumar's oldest son Resumar as I was to Sumar. He was only able to send one transmission back to Amanuce where we had settled. All he was able to tell me was that Sumar died as a Praetorian. He went down fighting to keep his wife and children safe. Canth told me that he and Sumar's son Resumar would carry on in our stead. That they would make us proud and that their legacy would continue for millennia." Wayonn nodded his head slowly. "And they did."

Jezima couldn't hold back the fresh tears and she squeezed his hand even tighter. "Martin Leonidas." She said softly.

Wayonn nodded once more as his eyes grew brighter. "Jezima, he is so much like Sumar. You have seen his image and how much he appears as Sumar, but you have not seen within his heart. You have not seen how much of Sumar's blood pumps within his veins and the veins of his children. Lycavorian blood! Pralor blood!"

"Wayonn, you speak as if you are one of them." Meral said.

"I am Meral. I have been since the day my mate turned me." Wayonn answered her. "I have been Lycavorian for far longer than I was a Pralor and I feel nothing but joy and pride at that knowledge." He looked at her. "I questioned the souls within the Rift of Time for so many years Jezima. Why did they leave me? Why did I still live when so many of those I loved die? Why did I survive and not Sumar? I received the answers to all of my questions the day that I discovered Martin lived."

"Your wife?" Meral asked. "Your children?"

Wayonn shook his head slowly. "She died perhaps two decades after we settled on Amanuce." He answered. "Our children passed through the years from reasons beyond our control. I have only my grandson now. And my granddaughter Helen whom you will meet. They are the last of my family."

"Is he... is he like Sumar Wayonn?" Meral asked.

Wayonn smiled and nodded his head. "So much so that it will cause your stomach to tighten and your heart to believe that those same gods have given him back to us." He told her with a smile. "What they did give us is the next best thing. Sumar's spirit, his blood, his drive and his essence. All of these things are prominent within Martin, within all of his children. His oldest son Androcles more so than the others I think, but it is there in all of them."

"He has... he has six wives." Meral spoke now. "And so many children."

Wayonn nodded his head. "And he loves each of them just as intensely as the other." He told her. "They are what make him who he is. When you see them all together you will see it. Dysea, Aricia, Anja, all of them. They are like one person when they are all together. They speak with one voice." Wayonn gripped Jezima's hands in his. "We came out here looking for what we thought were only a few Pralor people and the dragons they had escaped with. We had no idea that we would discover so many Pralors had escaped the slaughter. How many?"

"Only a few million at first." Jezima replied. "Scattered over hundreds of ships. Delnash was the one who gathered us all together and the decision was made to run. He is a good man who tried to do what he thought was best for our people. He has made mistakes but recently he has reverted back to the man he was in the beginning. We have been watching from Honelze. Many are happy that his true self has returned. He was following the advice of those who have no right to be Elders of our people far too often. I do not know what changed him but..."

Wayonn couldn't help but grin and shake his head. "I do." He said.

Meral looked at him. "What do you mean?"

"He butted heads with someone who has a much stronger will and passion." Wayonn told her. "Someone the others could not control even on their finest day."

Jezima's eyes grew larger. "He knows of..."

Wayonn nodded. "They discovered us several months ago. Our first meeting did not go well for Delnash and those with him."

"I don't understand." Jezima stated.

"We..." Wayonn began.

"You do not need to regale them of Nauta Melme's more base tendencies Wayonn." Dysea's voice interrupted them and they turned to see her approach the table with a tray in her hands.

Both Jezima and Meral's eyes grew happier as she settled to the chair beside Wayonn and set the tray on the table. Neither of them had met an elf before, they had heard or read of them in the many Pralor Science archives, but never had they met one. Dysea's natural intelligence and surreal beauty were stunning to them. She was also a powerful Etheric user, as were the two women who had remained behind on Honelze. Her body was tall, lean and muscular, with what appeared to be many exotic and colorful painted skin designs on her arms and poking just above the collar of the shirt she wore. This Dysea exuded confidence and she radiated peace within the Etheric realm which put them at ease almost immediately.

"I did not know what you would like so I brought a few choices." Dysea told them with a smile. "Elven tea, Aricia's coffee, or just plain Berry juice. All of them are excellent, but if you want something strong and rich then I recommend Aricia's coffee."

Jezima looked at her surprised. "You do not have... you are a Queen! Do you not have servants to bring these things to you?"

Dysea looked at Jezima, her own emerald colored eyes showing surprise. "Servants?" She gasped. "No, Martin and we would never allow others to serve us." She replied. "We do not need men and women to tend to our needs. We are quite capable of taking care of ourselves. Having servants is, it is too much like slavery to many of us and it is not something we would allow given our history."

"Your history?" Meral asked now.

"The Union that Martin is King of, that Dysea is Queen of, they have a long history of being slaves." Wayonn answered Meral. "It wasn't until Martin's own father, another of your grandsons, died in battle some three plus millennia ago for the right to be free that the rebellion truly began. Slavery to anyone who lived during those dark times is an abomination that is not tolerated in any way. This mentality has passed down to even the youngest generations of every species who call the Union home. It is one of their founding principles."

"I did not mean to offend you Dysea." Jezima stated.

Dysea looked at her and that warm, dazzling smile put Jezima at ease immediately. "I did not take offense." She spoke. "There is still so much that we have yet to discover of one another and I welcome it. Besides, Nauta Melme would never allow someone to cook for him. He is a better cook than most of us and it he who has cooked for our family through the years. Cooking relaxes him."

"What is it that you call him?" Meral asked. "Nauta... Nauta Melme? What is that?"

"It is elven for Bounded Love." Dysea answered with a smile. "It is a quirk of our family really. We all have names that we call each other. It brings us closer together. Though I hope you do not have to hear Martin and Anja having a disagreement. Or Androcles and his sister Eliani. Their language can become quite..."

"Colorful." Wayonn finished for Dysea and she looked at him with a laugh.

"Colorful." Dysea agreed.

"You can... you can shift your form as well?" Meral asked her. "Like Wayonn and his other...?"

"Meral!" Jezima exclaimed.

"Mother I was only curious!" Meral stated.

Dysea laughed and nodded her head. "Yes. The day Martin turned me is a day I cherish above all others." She responded. "Aricia is the largest of us in wolf form, then Anja and myself. Though I dare say behind Aricia, Anja is the strongest of us within the Etheric realm."

"And we will meet this Aricia and Anja when we meet Martin?" Meral asked.

Dysea nodded. "And For'mya." She told her. "She is an elf like me, but she is also our peace. A soothing balm for all of us if we ever need it."

"And an exceptionally gifted pilot." Wayonn said. "You will meet them Jezima, but I wish to know why you and Meral were hiding yourselves on Honelze. Why hide who you are from your own people?"

“There were many who came to disavow the Praetorians after our escape.” Meral spoke in reply. “Even on the Elder Council. And they are led by that fool Lorendo. Why Delnash ever put him on the Elder Council is beyond me.”

Wayonn glanced briefly at Dysea and then back to Meral. “Yes. We are well aware of what Lorendo is.” He stated with a hint of anger in his voice that Jezima heard and felt. She leaned forward.

“What is it?” She asked.

Wayonn shook his head. “Our issues with Lorendo are not important right now, but rest assured they will be addressed.” He answered. “What is important is that you will meet Martin soon.”

“Is there more you can tell us of him?” Jezima asked excitedly.

Dysea smiled. “What do you wish to know?” She asked. “I will tell you anything, as long as you are aware that my opinion will be biased of course.”

Jezima laughed softly and reached for her hands, taking them within her own. “Child, those are the best kind of opinions!”

The internal COM unit broke in then and Dysea reached for the wall panel and lifted her head as she touched the controls. “Yes?”

“My Queen, could you and Valistar Wayonn come to the cockpit?” The voice of the female elven pilot spoke.

The Pralor Corvettes, including those that were assigned to SPARTA'S WRATH, were piloted exclusively by elves because of their natural flying abilities and their talent to adapt to almost any given situation. This pair of female elves had been training on this very ship for months now, ever since it was assigned to the King's Task Force by Androcles. Both of them had finished in the top two percent of elven pilots within the Union fleet and both had seen combat in the Evolli War as a flight pair. The pilot had recently become mated to a Lycavorian officer within the Durcunusaan detachment assigned to the ARC ROYAL, while the co-pilot's husband was an Elven pilot assigned to the ARIZONA's Air Wing. The two men had become fast friends because of the relationship their wives shared.

Jezima saw Dysea's beautiful expression alter slightly and her body tensed in an almost imperceptible way. “What is wrong Ma'Lara?”

“You should probably see it for yourself my Queen.” The woman answered. “Balah has detected something on our long range sensor array.”

Dysea looked at Wayonn who was already rising to his feet. “We are on our way.” She spoke.

Jezima stood as well. “May we come with you?” she asked.

Dysea smiled. “Of course.” She answered.

The cockpit of the Corvette was very spacious, as was usually the case with Pralor built ships, and all four of them were able to fit easily behind the two pilots. The stars were passing by them outside at five times the speed of light, causing beautiful light streaks in the cockpit view windows.

Dysea watched as the pilot turned her head when they entered. “What do you have Ma'Lara?” She asked.

“Balah... bring it up on the overhead.” Ma'Lara said.

Dysea moved right up behind the pilot's seat for she knew both of these young females. With the advent of new technology after CS41 had come to Earth, Admiral Ben O'Connor had instituted new Flight School requirements. Any pilot who showed increased aptitude and ability were given the option to enter into a different sort of training. Essentially it was a new school to learn and master most of the Pralor based flight technology that they had discovered and then implemented within the fleet. It was a very rare pilot that was offered such an advancement, and both Ma'Lara and Balah had come out of their respective Flight Classes in the top half percent. When approached, both had volunteered without hesitation. This also meant that these pilots would undergo extensive ground training handled by the Hippis Selda Detachment of the Durcunusaan because all of them would be assigned to fly the Royal family around at some point in their careers. Martin and his Queens, as well as Androcles and Arrarn had gone out of their way to get to know all of the pilots in this program on a personal level.

“Transferring to overhead.” She spoke as her left hand adjusted some controls and the large screen dropped from the ceiling above between their seats and became filled with stars as the small chart appeared.

“Here.” Balah spoke as she pointed to a spot on the chart screen.

“You will have to forgive those of us who are relatively challenged when it comes to reading a star chart Balah.” Wayonn spoke with a smile. “What are we looking at?”

“Our long range sensors are calibrated for everything out to a hundred light years, but every five seconds we also send out a multispectral passive sensor burst within that same radius of our long range grid.” Balah explained. “It is primarily to warn us of any type of space debris that our main sensor grid has not detected.”

“You have multispectral passive sensor arrays?” Meral asked surprised.

The dark haired female elf pilot nodded her head, looking somewhat taken aback at the question. “We finished installing them just before Prince Androcles sent us out here. Why?”

“We stopped using them millennia ago. The power of our sensors grew too great.” Meral answered.

“Multispectral Arrays should never be retired.” Balah spoke. “They can pick up things that normal sensors do not no matter their power.”

Wayonn looked at Meral with a grin. “Let’s just say that all of the information that the Science Convocation gathered in regards to Lycavorians and other species within the Alpha Quadrant was not entirely accurate.”

“So it would appear.” Meral answered with a similar grin.

“What do you have Ma’Lara?” Dysea asked.

“There!” The second elf female spoke, pointing with her finger to the chart. “A contact.” Dysea and Wayonn leaned closer. “Balah, are you sure?” Dysea asked.

“Yes my Queen.” Balah answered her. “It has been on our screens ever since we left Honelze. At first I thought it was just an echo of some sort, or a reflection of us from the long range scans and the large amount of protonic particles in this area of space. Ma’Lara has shifted our course four times since we departed Honelze however and each time this contact has altered their course to remain just at the edge of the long range sensors. The passive array is what got the return hit.”

Dysea looked at the young elven female. “Balah, I am not going to have to report you to General Vengal am I?” She asked with a smile. “Just because we have guests with us does not mean that we act differently than we always do. Lady Jezima and Lady Meral our part of our family anyway, you know this.”

Balah smiled and lifted her hand to brush away some of her dark blond hair. “No Dysea.” She said impishly.

“Good.” Dysea said. Jezima and Meral looked at each other surprised but remained silent. Dysea’s emerald eyes focused on the star chart. “Debris does not shift its course nor match its speed to a ship, so we must assume that it is another ship.” She continued. “Can we identify it?”

Balah looked at Ma’Lara and then back to Dysea. “We already have identified it.” She told her evenly. “Since we are not in the Alpha Quadrant, and no one out here has the level of technology that we and the Pralors do, Ma’Lara had it run through our database of all known Pralor ships.”

“Pralor?” Wayonn spoke.

Balah tapped on her console several times. “Based on the size of the contact and the few scans that we have gotten with the passive sensor array Wayonn, it appears to be a Pralor RONAR-Class Frigate. Five hundred and ten meters in length, crew complement of just over three thousand. That is the configuration that it matches in our data base.”

Dysea looked at Wayonn. “Why would Delnash be using a ship to track us?” She asked.

Wayonn shook his head. “He wouldn’t.” He answered immediately. “He is many things as we have seen Dysea, but paranoid does not strike me as one of them.”

Dysea nodded her head in agreement. “I concur.” She echoed his words. “He and Martin have developed a very good relationship since Onterom. He would have no reason to have a ship tracking us. He would not learn anything that Nauta Melme has not told him of freely.”

“Delnash also would not have known that Martin dispatched me almost immediately after he told him of Jezima and Meral being alive.” Wayonn continued. “Nor what ship we would be on.”

“Then someone was waiting on Honelze.” Dysea said turning to look at Jezima and Meral. “You told no one that you were leaving?”

Jezima shook her head quickly. “No. We did not have the time.”

“Jezima, does anyone else know who you are?” Wayonn asked. “Who you really are?”

Jezima shook her head once more. “No. Meral and I were very careful.”

Wayonn and Dysea both smelled the adrenalin dump into her body when she lied and they turned fully to look at her. “You do not need to keep secrets from us Jezima.” He told her. “Dysea and I are wolf, we can smell the adrenalin that enters your system when you do not speak truthfully. It is quite potent.”

Jezima looked horrified. “You can... you can smell this within me?!” She gasped.

Meral took her mother’s arm. “Mother this is Wayonn.” She spoke. “And one of the wives of your grandson. If we cannot trust them, who can we trust?”

Jezima looked at her briefly and nodded before looking at Dysea and Wayonn. “Forgive me for... only one other knows who we really are.” She answered. “She is the one who taught Meral and I to shield ourselves within the Etheric realm.”

Dysea looked at her surprised. “Tobia?”

Jezima saw the look on Dysea’s face, her own expression matching Dysea’s. “Yes. Do you know her?”

“Tobia has been with Martin and our group for weeks now. She knows who Martin is. She has almost from the first day.” Wayonn spoke. “And she did not reveal to us that you lived. We had to hear that from Delnash.”

Dysea shook her head. “It was not Tobia.” She said. “She is Mari’s mother and her love for Murano burns brightly even after all this time. She knows how Murano felt for Sumar and she would do nothing that would bring harm to his family. Nothing.”

“Murano?” Meral gasped. “Murano is dead. He died many millennia ago near the end of the war. Before we all ran.”

Wayonn shook his head. “Murano is not dead.” He spoke. “At this moment he is in the Beta Quadrant with Martin’s oldest son Androcles and his siblings. Mari is with him.”

“The Chief Elder’s youngest child?” Jezima asked puzzled. “That Mari?”

Dysea smiled gently. “Yes, but she is not Delnash’s daughter. She is Murano and Tobia’s child, and she is now part of our family. She became the wife and mate to our son Deion only a few days ago. She is now wolf like us.”

Jezima and Meral looked at her with wide eyes. “Oh my.” Jezima finally stammered.

Dysea turned back to Wayonn. “Someone else knew who they were and they have been watching them Wayonn.” She stated.

Wayonn nodded his head. “Agreed.” Wayonn reached out and placed his weathered hand on Ma'Lara’s shoulder. “Ma'Lara... can we jump yet?”

Ma'Lara shook her head. “The QF Coils have not fully realigned.” She answered. “I did not think we would be leaving Honelze so soon before the realignment cycle was complete. I did not start the cycle until just before you returned to the ship. Even Pralor QF coils need to realign. We still have three hours and twenty-four minutes before we can jump again. I can bypass some of that and jump us sooner. Just over an hour, but I will need to override the safeties in order to do it.”

“Do it.” Wayonn told her seeing her nod in agreement. Wayonn looked at Dysea. “I do not like it.” He spoke as the wolf within him took over.

Dysea nodded her head. “Nor do I.” She echoed.

“Ma'Lara, how long before one of our ships could jump from Ventori to our location?” Wayonn asked.

“Admiral Lorian has the Task Force spread out in an SDP. A System Defense Pattern.” She answered. “All of our Task Force ships have the new Quantum Fusion Resonance Reactors, but they are not the same as Pralor ships. Or as efficient. We made it to Honelze in one jump because this is a Pralor ship. One of our ships, with the exception of the ARIZONA or the ARC ROYAL, would need two jumps at least, with a minimum of three hours in between jumps to realign. Admiral Lorian won’t release either the ARIZONA or the ARC ROYAL from their patrol stations around Ventori. Not after what happened with the Kintaur.”

“She would for us.” Wayonn protested but Dysea reached out and placed her hand on his arm.

“You have... you have met the Kintaur?” Meral asked surprised. “They are vile monsters who only wish to rape and kill. They...”

Wayonn looked at her feeling Dysea's soothing Etheric resonance flowing around him easily. "We encountered them on Ventori." He told Meral more calmly. "They were trying to enslave survivors of the attack there."

"Survivors?" Jezima asked. "Survivors of what?"

"The Svorag attacked the planet over three years ago." Wayonn told them. "They very nearly wiped out the entire population."

"By the Ancients with the Rift!" Jezima gasped. "We never knew of this!"

"Ma'Lara is correct Wayonn." Dysea said. "The situation on Ventori is still very fluid is it not?"

Wayonn nodded his head slowly. "Yes, more or less."

Dysea closed her eyes very briefly and then opened them again. "I cannot touch Nauta Melme. He is blocking all of us and he only does that if there is a problem. If need be I can touch Anja, Aricia or For'mya, but we have not got to that point yet and something else has Melyanna very worked up. Aricia and For'mya are trying to sooth her as best they are able."

Wayonn met her eyes with questions in them. "Everything was moving along according to plan when I left." He spoke.

"That may well be, but something is going on now." Dysea told him.

"Child, you can reach them from here?" Jezima gasped with wide eyes.

Dysea smiled at her and her emerald eyes sparkled in the light. "If I needed to I could, yes. The distance is too great for us to actually talk, but we have developed other means to let each other know something is wrong. I won't do that to Martin now."

"Your people have... you have built Quantum Fusion Resonance engines?" Meral asked with surprise in her eyes.

Wayonn looked at her. "Meral, you know about them?" He asked.

Meral gave an embarrassed smile. "I have been studying engineering concepts when I am not helping mother with the business." She shrugged. "I was bored."

Wayonn laughed softly. "The Union has built their version of Pralor Quantum Drives based on tested designs they retrieved from CS41. With Avi, Sumar's Avatar helping them to learn, they have developed their own engine designs and put them to working products. As Ma'Lara stated however, they are quite powerful but they are not as efficient as Pralor built engines."

"Dysea..." Balah spoke up now and tapped the chart bringing up another view. "We are actually closer to Manne than we are to Ventori." She told them quickly. "We received a fleet standard update this morning that Admiral Komirri, Admiral Omore and Admiral Thodias have all arrived at Manne with the SPIRIT OF HADARIA, NORMYA'S LIGHT and MJOLNIR'S HAND." She pressed on the chart screen one more time. "If they jumped within the next thirty-seven minutes they could be here in just under an hour. We haven't yet reached a distance that puts them out of range of one jump. All of them have the advanced QRR's updated with data from the ARIZONA's battles in High Coven and Kavalian space. They are just as good as the SCIMITAR now."

Dysea nodded her head. "That's even better." She stated confidently. "Open Command Channel 9679.5 Balah. That is mine and Thodias's private channel. He will answer within seconds when he sees who it is from."

Balah nodded and began working her console. "Opening channel and sending burst." She stated.

Dysea wasn't fooling and within five seconds the communications channel chimed and the incoming message alert sounded. "He's replying." Balah spoke.

Dysea smiled. "Pull him up on the monitor Balah."

Dysea's smile grew wider when she saw the worn but very familiar face of the older Lycavorian Admiral who commanded hers, Isabella and Cirith's flagship. He had commanded their ship since it rolled off the assembly line and she was Guardian to his youngest daughter. A gifted young woman in the field of Astrophysics. "Did I wake you Thodias?" She asked with genuine warmth.

The man's smile was equally as genuine. "Dysea my Queen." He spoke. "It is so very good to finally see you again. And no..." He held up the contents of his hands. "Morning reports." He appeared to have just woken and was holding a large mug of liquid in one hand and a data pad in the other.

"It is good to see you as well old friend." Dysea told him. "I understand you have arrived on Manne with Omore and Komirri and our Strike Wings?"

Thodias nodded his head. "Yesterday." He stated as he rose to his feet from the chair he had been sitting in. "Dysea, what is wrong? You do not contact me out of the blue, a day after we arrive here on our personal command channel just to say hello."

Dysea smiled. "And why not?"

Thodias grinned. "I know you too well Dysea my Queen."

"Indeed." Dysea spoke. "Wayonn and I are returning from Honelze to Martin's position on Ventori. You have been briefed yes?"

Thodias nodded. "Yes."

"Thodias we are being trailed by a Pralor frigate." Dysea told him. "It is remaining far back from us and trying to look like a reflection but our passive sensors detected it. I don't think the Pralors are aware of our passive sensor arrays."

Thodias nodded. "Most are not Dysea." He answered. "What do you require of me? I thought the Pralor people were supposed to be our allies out here?"

Dysea nodded. "That is how we are viewing them yes, but this ship is not acting as a Pralor ship would act. And Delnash would not have one of his ships shadowing our movements. It has... it has caused the hairs on the back of mine and Wayonn's neck to rise."

Thodias's face darkened somewhat. "Dysea, you do not panic." He said.

"And I am not." Dysea answered. "I would just like to be safe. Leave the Strike Wings there and you, Omore and Komirri come to our location. Let's see if we can cause our watcher to do something that would cause him to reveal himself to us. Balah tells me if you jump within the next thirty minutes you can be to us without having to realign your coils."

Thodias was reaching for something outside their view on the monitor. "Transmit your coordinates directly to the bridge in secure mode Dysea. I will have Komirri and Omore link directly to our NAV computer and we will be to your location in twenty minutes!"

"Thank you Thodias." Dysea told him. "And please do come in Shrouded. Just in case."

Thodias nodded his head. "Of course."

Dysea looked at Wayonn as the monitor fell dark. "Shall we surprise them?" She asked with a wolf's grin.

Wayonn matched her smile and the tips of his fangs could just barely be seen as his features changed. "I think we shall." He stated.

Dysea placed her hand on Ma'Lara's shoulder. "Ma'Lara, change course in any direction, proceed on that course for ten seconds then turn to face this ship and come to a full stop."

Ma'Lara smiled as she looked at Balah. "Executing."

Dysea turned to look at Jezima and explain to her what they were doing but she saw both Jezima and Meral with large smiles on their faces. She tilted her head slightly in confusion and looked between them. "What?" She asked.

Wayonn turned at her comment and saw Jezima and Meral. Jezima looked at him. "Tell me Wayonn, did my son's wife act in such a manner?"

Wayonn looked at Dysea briefly and then back to Jezima. "Sateia was headstrong and independent before she turned Sumar." He answered. "She became much worse once they were mated. She became like the man she so adored and loved."

Jezima's face twitched and Dysea could tell she was holding back tears once more. She was about to reach for her when Jezima beat her to it and took her arms in her hands. "Then that is why you act indifferent when the wives of my grandson do the same thing?" She asked.

Wayonn chuckled softly as he saw Jezima grip Dysea's arms tightly. "All of Martin's wives and mates are like Sateia." He told her. "It is one of the reasons that I knew Sumar lived within Martin."

Jezima smiled and this time could not hold back the tears. "Then I would have very much enjoyed her company; as I will enjoy the company of my grandson's wives."

Meral smiled beside her mother. "We both will." She said.

"You might question that when you are with all of them together." Wayonn spoke.

"Somehow I doubt that." Jezima said with warmth in her voice as she stared at Dysea. "Somehow I doubt that."

PRALOR RONAR-CLASS FRIGATE CENTENNIAL OF HOPE

“...Shifting course again!” The female Lycavorian barked out from her sensor console on the left side of the bridge.

The older Lycavorian male looked up from the data scroll that he was reading in the Command Chair on the frigate’s bridge. “Very well, just as before, match course and speed and maintain our current distance. We are a reflection remember, the Pralor pilots will deem us as such and ignore it.”

“Helm answers!” The male Lycavorian spoke now as his hands moved over his console. “We are matching course to 2345.6 and...”

“Sibfla!” The woman barked out once more. “Captain they have turned towards us and stopped!”

This announcement made the Lycavorian male come to his feet instantly. “Helm all stop!” He barked out the order.

“Answering helm all stop!”

The male turned to the side. “Kenia?” He hissed as he moved up behind her station.

The woman shook her head. “I don’t know Captain!” She stammered. “They changed course, stayed on that base course for ten seconds and then turned towards us and stopped almost instantly! I’ve never seen a Pralor corvette do that!”

“Nor have I.” The man agreed. “No Pralor pilot anyway.”

Kenia looked at him. “Captain?”

“Do we still have sensor confirmation on the tracking devices?” He asked aloud.

“Aye sir! Broadcasting signal is clear!” Another voice echoed from across the bridge.

“Kenia?” He asked once more turning back to the young woman.

She shook her head. “I don’t know sir.” She told him. “We should show as nothing more than an intermittent reflection with all of the protonic particles in this sector. I don’t know why they would do this.”

“What did the contact on Honelze report?” The man asked.

“That they boarded the corvette a few hours after Praetorian Wayonn arrived. One other person with them but they were unable to identify that person. They were wearing a cloak and hood. They were certain it was female however.”

The man turned when the door to the bridge slid aside and the attractive, blond haired Lycavorian woman strode confidently into the command area. She looked to be similar in age to the male and she didn’t back away when he moved very close to her and looked into her eyes. “Konlar, what is happening?” She asked.

“The corvette has stopped Lirana.” He answered.

“Stopped?”

The Lycavorian nodded. “They executed another course change and then turned to face us and stopped almost immediately.” He explained quickly. “Take your station and get me some information.”

“Yes sir.” She answered moving quickly to the main Tactical Station to the right of his command chair.

“Status?” Konlar barked out.

“The corvette is maintaining its position.” Kenia answered.

“Why would they stop?” Konlar questioned aloud. “There is nothing in this sector of space of any significance is there?”

“Aside from two Class Three Nebulas, no.” Kenia replied.

“Can you detect any increase in their sensor power?” Konlar asked.

“Negative. No change from flight mode.”

“Could they have detected us?” Konlar asked.

“I don’t know how sir.” Kenia replied. “We have maintained perfect positioning since we departed.”

“Lirana?” Konlar asked turning to look at her.

She looked up from the three consoles that surrounded her body on three sides. “The maneuver they executed was not done by a Pralor pilot.” She spoke. “It was too smooth. Too instinctual.”

“Not a Pralor?” Konlar spoke. “No Lycavorian did that Lirana.”

She shook her head. “No. The reflexive skills required for such a maneuver we do not possess.”

“Then what...” Konlar’s eyes grew a little wider. “An elf?”

“If I had to guess I would say yes.” Lirana answered. “The files we were given on the Elven species specifically mention highly increased reflexive skills and intuition. They would make superior pilots for any class ship.”

“Elves are indigenous to the Alpha Quadrant of space.” Konlar spoke to no one in particular. “If there are elves piloting that ship, then that would mean they have discovered Interstellar travel and have access to Pralor technology.”

“Konlar, elves being out here and associated with Praetorian Wayonn was not in our mission brief or any intelligence that we were given on this mission.” Lirana spoke looking at him from across the bridge.

“No, it was not.” Konlar stated. “Nubou!”

Lirana was adjusting her consoles. “I can also tell you that this is not a standard Pralor Corvette.”

Konlar looked at her now and moved over to where she sat at the Tactical station. “What do you mean?”

“I’m reviewing the few scans we got while it was in orbit of Honelze more closely.” She replied. “The configuration is odd Konlar. It doesn’t match standard Pralor corvettes. The ventral section has several odd bulges on it. Like something was added. It’s not something that would affect flight however.”

“Bulges?” Konlar asked. “Purpose?”

Lirana shook her head. “Unknown.” She replied. “I’ve never seen anything like it.”

“Guess.” Konlar told her.

Lirana shrugged. “If I had to guess, from its location and the slight bulging, I’d say it was some sort of additional sensor array.”

“What kind of sensor array?” Konlar asked.

Lirana shook her head. “Without an active scan of the ship I couldn’t say for sure.” She answered. “Like I said, it’s not something I have ever seen on a Pralor ship before.”

“Captain!” Another voice sprang out from among the bridge crew. “Captain we are receiving an open hail from the corvette!”

Konlar’s eyes grew wide. “Open?” He gasped.

The man at the COM station nodded his head. “Yes sir! It’s not directed at us but...”

“Let’s hear it!” Konlar ordered.

Half a second later the confident female voice with a slight lilting accent filled their bridge.

“...Queen Dysea Leonidas of the Lycavorian Union ship VALISTAR ONE to the unknown Pralor vessel we are now facing. We have detected your presence and would like to know why you are trailing our ship. Please respond to this transmission with your intentions.”

VALISTAR ONE

“...Not moving.” Balah spoke as her hands moved across her controls. “I think they are trying to make like a big empty hole in space.”

Ma’Lara chuckled. “And not doing a very good job of it either.”

“Contact on Long Range sensors is still spotty at best, but passive array has locked on definitively.” Balah continued. “Definitely a RONAR-Class Frigate.”

“How many aboard?” Dysea asked as the military side of her nature came out.

Balah shook her head. “Not a full crew Dysea.” She answered. “I’m only seeing about sixteen hundred lifesigns. Passive array can’t determine what they are.”

“That won’t be needed.” Dysea said. “Ma’Lara, how soon before Thodias and the others arrive?”

“Seven minutes.” Ma’Lara answered.

“If need be, do you think you can out maneuver this ship until they arrive?” Dysea asked her.

Ma’Lara turned her head with a look that amounted to disgust. “Please Dysea.” She spoke aghast that Dysea would even suggest something like that. “That is almost an insult.”

Jezima and Meral both couldn't help but allow short laughs to escape their lips as they sat in the two empty engineering chairs.

Dysea laughed as well and put her hand on Ma'Lara's shoulder. "Good. Then let's do something they won't expect. Open a channel in the clear."

Balah turned. "In the clear?" She asked.

Dysea nodded her head. "Yes."

Wayonn looked at her. "Martin will not be happy you are exposing yourself like this to the unknown." He stated.

"Perhaps, but what would Nauta Melme do Wayonn?" Dysea asked.

Wayonn rolled his eyes. "The same anse thing." He spoke moving for the secondary engineering console. "I'm going to try and contact Delnash."

Dysea smiled and didn't try to stop him. "Yes he would. Balah?"

"Channel open!"

"This is Queen Dysea Leonidas of the Lycavorian Union ship VALISTAR ONE to the unknown Pralor vessel we are now facing. We have detected your presence and would like to know why you are trailing our ship. Please respond to this transmission with your intentions."

Konlar turned instantly and looked at Lirana. "They can see us?" He gasped. "How?"

Lirana shook her head. "I don't know! A Pralor corvette should not have a clear picture of our ship at this extreme range of their sensors." She was working her controls insistently. "They are only calibrated for a hundred light years! Anything at the edge of that range should appear as nothing more than a reflection or white noise of some kind from the protonic particles in this sector!" Lirana's brow furrowed. "Wait!"

Konlar moved up next to her station. "What?"

"I am detecting a multispectral passive wave emanating from the corvette." She told him as she adjusted her controls. "The odd shape of the ventral hull Konlar! It is a Multispectral Passive Sensor Array! Much longer range and nearly undetectable when piggybacked on a standard long range navigation array."

"A Multispectral Sensor Array?" Konlar hissed softly. "Pralor ships don't use them."

"No, they do not." Lirana agreed.

"She said she is a Queen of a Lycavorian Union." Konlar spoke looking up from Lirana's station. "There is no such thing as a Union of Lycavorians!"

"How do we know that?" Lirana asked. "Elves are not indigenous to this quadrant of space but we have already determined that elves are piloting that ship!"

"We don't know that for sure!" Konlar hissed.

"What other explanation could there be?" Lirana stated. "Not even an Avatar could pilot the ship in such a way! Their maneuvers were too smooth, too well executed."

"Lirana we..." Konlar began, but that female voice interrupted him.

"We are not unfriendly, whoever you are, but your actions do not mark you as such." The voice spoke once more. "Please respond to this transmission so that we can speak more directly. Namely why it is that you are following our ship."

"What are the armaments on a Corvette?" Konlar asked immediately.

"Nothing that could hurt us Captain." A man answered instantly from a different station. "Should I power weapons?"

Konlar shook his head. "Not yet." He answered.

"Our employer is not going to be happy they detected us." Lirana spoke softly.

"Nubou him!" Konlar spat looking at her. "He obviously did not tell us everything about this mission!"

Lirana smiled at him with those pale blue eyes. "At least you don't trust him as much as some of us thought you did."

“Trust that fat ronnus!” Konlar spoke aloud causing many on the bridge to laugh gently. “Not on my worst nubous day.”

“We could pull back Konlar?” Lirana said to him. “Reacquire them later when they get to Ventori. We know that is where they are going.”

Konlar turned and looked around his bridge. “No. COM officer. Open the channel. Audio only.”

Lirana’s eyes went wide. “Konlar what are you doing?”

“Trying to get some answers.” Konlar replied.

“Channel open Captain.”

VALISTAR ONE

“...Have to know we have detected them by now.” Balah spoke from her chair.

“They know.” Dysea said softly. “And they are probably very surprised considering they have not moved off by now.”

Dysea turned when Wayonn came up beside her. “Delnash was in a meeting with the Elders supporting his election.” He told her. “Avatar 27 told me that he never ordered a ship to watch us and no Pralor frigates are unaccounted for.”

“A mystery then?” Dysea said. “Balah, this RONAR-Class Frigate is still front line for them isn’t it?”

Balah nodded her head. “Very much so.” She answered. “Mostly Recon and Scouting like our AUTUMN MOON Frigates, but they also make up the flanking screens for Pralor Fleet Groups, or whatever they call them. At least that is what the briefs we got from their officers said.”

The deep male voice boomed through their internal speakers just then drawing their attention.

“This is Captain Konlar of the Pralor Frigate CENTENNIAL OF HOPE. You are in possession of a Pralor Corvette so perhaps it should be you who states your intentions.”

Dysea looked at Wayonn quickly. “Konlar?” She said softly. “That is...”

“A Lycavorian name. An old one.” Wayonn said with a nod. “A very old family name. From our time shortly after we arrived on Lycavore.”

“You are certain Wayonn?” Dysea asked.

Wayonn nodded his head. “There were references to many members of the different packs with this name in the history scrolls on Lycavore. Many with honored histories as well.”

“It was a common name on Lycavore?” Dysea asked.

“Yes.”

“Could they be Lycavorians from Ventori?” She asked.

Wayonn shrugged. “Anything is possible Dysea. I think we all have seen that in recent months.”

Dysea nodded her head. “Yes, we have.” She said. “The better question is what would Lycavorians be doing with a Pralor frigate and how did they get it? How did they learn to operate it?” Dysea asked.

Wayonn met her eyes. “We could just ask.” He spoke.

Dysea snickered at him. “Now who is being reckless?” She stated with a smile. “Balah, have Thodias and the others arrived yet?”

“Ninety seconds before reversion.” She answered.

“Then let’s find out more.” Dysea spoke as she flipped the button above her head.

CENTENNIAL OF HOPE

“Konlar is a very old and strong Lycavorian family name Captain.” Dysea’s voice filled their bridge.

“It is a pleasure to meet another like myself out here among the stars. Perhaps a visual transmission would be permissible so that we can determine where each of us stands?”

Konlar’s eyes were wide at her words and he settled into his command chair. “How... how could she know that?” He gasped.

“Captain?” The COM officer asked.

Konlar looked up. “Activate Holo connection. Narrow beam.”

“Sir?”

“Do it!” Konlar snapped.

“Activating sir!”

Konlar turned towards the disc in the floor of the bridge and came to his feet slowly when the image of the woman shimmered into view. His dark eyes were wide as he stared at her, the Praetorian Wayonn beside her and the two other women sitting in the background behind them. Konlar took in the long platinum blond hair and stunning emerald green eyes, as well as the four inch high elegantly curved and pointed ears. Her face was flawless in its beauty and she almost did not look real.

“You are no Pralor!” Konlar snapped quickly.

He saw the woman smile and shake her head. “No I am not. I never said I was. I am Lycavorian.” She told him. “And nor are you Pralor sir.”

“You are no Lycavorian!” Konlar hissed. “You are Elven!”

“You know of my species? Interesting. Allow me to elaborate.” Dysea spoke. “My husband and mate turned me almost three decades ago. I am an elf female yes, but I am also Lycavorian.”

“Your mate?” Konlar asked.

He saw her nod. “Yes. Martin Leonidas. King of the Lycavorian Union.”

“There is no such thing!” Konlar snapped. “What you speak of is a lie!”

“Pen arne emer.” Dysea spoke almost sternly and Konlar’s eyes grew wide at her use of the Lycavorian language and the fluency with which she spoke it. (I don’t lie)

“Forn echta duan nimerd!” He gasped in shock. (You speak our language.)

He watched Dysea nod her head. “Enhon fon tis inahin” She answered. (Quite well in fact.)

Konlar turned his head when Lirana stepped up beside him and didn’t hesitate to press her body to his side intimately. She too was staring at the image of the elven woman in the transmission with wide eyes.

“You... you are an Alpha female.” She stammered out loud.

Dysea paused for a moment before nodding her head. “We no longer adhere to the caste system within the Union, but I would be considered an Alpha female, yes. As would my fellow Queens.”

“Queens?” Konlar exclaimed.

They saw her nod once more in the transmission. “That would take a bit longer to explain.” She answered with a wistful like smile.

“That cannot be!” Lirana gasped. “There have not been Alpha wolves since... for over a hundred and fifty thousand years!”

“I assure you that is not the case where we come from.” Dysea spoke. “However, I am more interested in why you are following my ship. And how you came to be in control of a Pralor Frigate with the knowledge to operate it as well as you have. Our dealings with the Pralor people since we arrived here in this Quadrant have brought me to the conclusion that they do not share their technology with other species, and most certainly not their frontline warships. Would you care to shed some light on that?”

“That is not your concern!” Konlar answered with more heat in his voice than he wanted.

“I’m afraid it is.” Dysea answered calmly. “I would prefer we talked of different things but I cannot allow you to follow us unchallenged.”

“We can go where we wish!” Konlar barked. “And we do not need to answer your questions!”

“Very true.” Dysea answered. “In that case you will not mind if I make it difficult for you to follow us any longer.” They watched her turn to someone out of the transmission and nod. “Execute.”

Kenia’s eyes went wide when the corvette simply vanished from her sensors. “Captain!” She exclaimed. “Captain I am no longer detecting the corvette! It’s gone!”

“What do you mean gone?” Konlar shouted as Lirana darted back to her tactical station.

“I don’t know Captain. It was there one second and then it just vanished!” Kenia answered.

“Confirmed!” Lirana barked. “It’s no longer showing on sensors!”

Konlar turned back to the image of the elven female in the transmission. “What have you done?” He growled at her.

“As Queen, I am insuring the safety of my people.” Dysea answered him. “And since you are unable to hide your ship as we can, the two ships now on station to your port and starboard will insure you do not attempt to find us again.”

“What?” Konlar gasped.

Kenia’s eyes went wider when her sensors began to sound a loud alarm. “Captain! Son vada carians! Captain, two massive ships are materializing port and starboard! They are appearing out of nowhere! They are huge!”

Konlar rushed to Lirana’s station and his eyes grew wide when he saw the ships taking shape. “Lirana?” He shouted.

“Two ships! Unknown configuration but definitely not Pralor! Each over four thousand meters in length! I cannot penetrate their hulls with our sensors!” Lirana snapped aloud. “Sibfla Konlar, they are monstrous! They aren’t as large as a Pralor cruiser but they are enormous and they have weapons sticking out of every orifice! Hull composition is unknown but I’m detecting some sort of Pralor power source!”

“Pralor?” Konlar demanded. “I thought you said they weren’t Pralor?”

“They aren’t! Well, not exactly Pralor, but something very similar!” She told him.

Konlar looked back to the transmission and saw the elven female still watching him. “We are not an enemy!” He shouted.

Dysea nodded her head. “If you were Captain, your ship and crew would already be space dust I assure you.” She spoke evenly. “I do not know how you obtained a Pralor manufactured ship, but I can think of several options and none of them are good. Since you will not tell us the reason you were following us, and you will not tell me who you are or who you represent, then I can only assume it was not for purposes of making friendly contact. That will not make my husband and mate very happy, especially since you and I assume most of your crew are obviously Lycavorian and he loves his people. It is no matter now. We will take our leave of you Captain Konlar. If we meet again, I sincerely hope it is under better conditions. If I were you, I would not continue on a course for Ventori. You will not be able to outrun the ships you have on your sensors, and they will fire on your ship should you make an attempt to approach Ventori without authorization. If the ships already there do not blow you from the stars first. Those are the orders from my mate and King, and they will be followed. Good day sir.”

“Wait!” Konlar exclaimed just as Dysea’s image faded from the transmission.

“They’ve severed the connection from their end sir!” Kenia told him turning in her chair.

“Sibfla!” Konlar spat. “Helm, reverse course! Come to 4583.9 and go to full power on sub lights!”

“We’re not going to go to Ventori after them?” Lirana asked from her station.

“And risk our ship and the people on it?” Konlar declared. “No.”

“What will we do?” She asked him.

Konlar looked at her. “Contact that fool Lorendo and tell him to meet us at the normal rendezvous. We will be there in three days! And tell him to bring answers!”

Lirana watched as Konlar stormed off the bridge ending any further conversation. She knew well that he would remain angry for a few hours, after all, she had been his mate and wife for over six hundred years.

VALISTAR ONE

“That was interesting.” Dysea spoke as she returned to the couch in the passenger area of the corvette.

“I would call it troubling.” Wayonn said.

“Come Wayonn, where is your sense of adventure?” Dysea asked as Jezima and Meral took spots on the opposite couch where they were sitting earlier.

“I left it with Martin on Ventori.” Wayonn replied sarcastically as he went to the small counter and poured himself a mug of coffee. “He is not going to be happy that there are a group of unknown Lycavorians running around in a Pralor warship. Or that they were obviously following Jezima and Meral.”

Dysea nodded. "That I will agree with." She stated as she touched the COM panel on the wall. A small cone of light appeared and the upper body of Admiral Thodias appeared. "Have they turned to Ventori Thodias?" She asked.

"No. Apparently they took your warning to heart." Thodias answered. "Komirri and Omore will track them but it appears as if they are headed in the opposite direction."

Dysea nodded her head. "Good. Thodias, may I present Lady Jezima and Lady Meral." She said.

Thodias looked at Jezima in the transmission and bowed his head deeply to her. "Vada Medwaw rie cian hote." He spoke almost reverently. "I am honored."

Jezima looked slightly taken aback by his actions but she smiled. "Admiral." She said.

"Dysea, with your permission I will keep you within our Shroud envelope until we reach Ventori." Thodias said.

"Thank you Thodias." Dysea spoke. "I will be returning to Honelze once we are finished on Ventori so stand ready."

Thodias nodded his head. "Always."

Dysea smiled as his image faded and she looked at Jezima and Meral. "Perhaps now would be a good time for us to try and determine who among your people know who you really are." She said.

"Tobia is the only person who we told Dysea." Jezima said. "I swear this."

"We don't doubt that Jezima." Wayonn told her as he sat beside Dysea. "But someone knows who you and Meral really are. These people certainly were not tracking us. They knew you were on Honelze and they knew you got on this ship."

Meral leaned forward. "Dysea... what your Admiral said to mother. What did that mean?"

"It is the Ancient Lycavorian language." Dysea told her. "It almost died out within the Union until Martin returned. I understand the Ventori speak it fluently and many thousands within the Union are now speaking it. Mostly within our military but more and more learn each year."

"But what he said to mother." Meral questioned again. "What did it mean?"

Dysea looked at Jezima. "You must understand, family is dearest of all to Lycavorians. Too many species within the Union. It is beyond sacred to our family, to our children and most especially to our son Androcles. It has already begun to spread among our military that we have discovered you and Meral. Within a few more weeks it will be known even back to the Alpha Quadrant." Dysea reached out and took Jezima's hands in her own. "Sumar is looked at among our people with reverence Jezima. He is Martin's grandfather and the one who began what we all are now. Your lives will change now. If I know my Nauta Melme, then the Hippeis Sedla are already bound for Ventori in order to protect you and Meral."

"What is the Hippeis Sedla?" Meral asked.

"The Spartan Royal Guard. Young men and women whose only purpose is to protect members of the Royal family." Wayonn answered. "You will never see them. Never hear them. They will only act if your lives are in danger. And then their only mission is to protect you. At all costs."

Dysea smiled as she held Jezima's hands. "What Thodias called you... you will be seen as Medwaw rie cian hote Jezima. It means... in our language, the language of wolves, it means Mother of us All."

VENTORI

SECOND SECRET BUNKER

There were very few things that Martin Leonidas feared in his life now. It was not that he was psychotic or without fear, he had just learned how to embrace that fear and use it to his advantage. Martin knew that death came to everyone eventually and this did not alter how he did things. His fear made him more powerful, heightening all of his senses and allowing him to operate in what he called hyper mode. The moment the creature's arms encircled him, Martin went limp. When he heard Danny scream his name and then his arms closed on his waist, Martin clamped an iron like grip onto his brother's arm and felt both of them lift off the floor. As the creature's roar filled the air around them and it spun around, pulling them through the remains of the lab's window and frame, it tossed them from its grasp. Martin and Danny didn't hesitate and pulled each other's body tight to their own. Both of them shifted in such a way as they were flying through the air that their shoulders and backs slammed into the shattered computer console some thirty feet across the lab. Both of them grunted at the pain upon impact, their combined weight crushing more of the equipment beneath them, a few jagged pieces of metal stabbing into their body armor in places where the protection was not as solid. While it did not penetrate the armor itself, both of them would have large bruises if they lived through this day.

Martin grunted again as he hit the floor beneath the computer console and heard Danny echo his sound beside him.

"Fuck that hurt!" Danny hissed angrily.

"Danny move!" Martin roared, falling to his back and kicking out with both feet directly into Dan's shoulder.

The move enabled him to duck beneath the mammoth arms the creature had been lifting to bring down and crush them, and it allowed him to kick Danny to the side out from under the beast. The two massive arms crushed even more of the shattered computer station where they had been just milliseconds before as Martin and Danny rolled in opposite directions.

Martin rolled to his feet, his hand closing around the pommel of his sword since he had lost his rifle in the flight across the research lab room. The blade erupted from Flatspace with a sizzle and hiss and Martin didn't hesitate, driving the blade deeply into the body of the seven and a half foot tall creature just under its shoulder blade, or where he thought the shoulder blade should be. The monstrosity bellowed in agony, and far faster than Martin expected, it whipped its arm around and the massive hand slammed against his chest and sent him rocketing away to slam against the far wall. Pain lanced through his chest and back from the blow and impact and he dropped to one knee. Martin looked up as the creature turned to look at him, exposing its face for the first time, and letting out a sinister roar of rage and pain.

The creature's head was similar to the structure of a Svorag head, with jutting forehead and mandible like jaws that were now open and exposing jagged rows of razor like teeth. The musculature of the creature was beyond anything he had ever seen, thick and bulging with power. The gray white color of its skin was exposed in the eerie lighting of the research lab, and it was covered in scars from what appeared to be some sort of surgery.

"Good Christ you are one ugly motherfucker!" Martin muttered.

The creature took that time to let loose with another deafening roar of anger and pain as it arched its back inward in pain. Martin saw dark colored blood hitting the floor all around its feet and the whishing sound of blades as they cut deeply in to flesh. The creature whirled around swinging its massive arms and Martin saw Danny's body roll under the blow. He saw his opening and dashed forward as the creature turned to face Danny and his fingers closed around the hilt of his sword still embedded in its back. Martin wrenched it free with all of his considerable strength, hearing the creature bellow once more in pain and swing its arm around towards him. He was expecting this however and ducked under the swing, rolling to the side and coming up beside his brother.

"This is your fault!" Danny screamed above the roar of the monster and holding the two Khukuri blades in his hands defensively. The standard weapon of the ancient Gurkha Warriors. Danny had carried these same weapons for as long as Martin could remember. They were slightly smaller than the standard Khukuri, but forged from Dragon Armor Steel by Nehtes himself and honed to razor sharpness. Danny was a Master with these two blades and while he almost never used them unless times were dire, he had apparently concluded times were dire.

"My fault?" Martin screamed back.

"See the stars you said!" Danny roared at him. "Meet new people you said! You didn't say anything about fucking Godzilla looking lizard people and motherfucking space monsters!"

"So fucking sue me!" Martin roared back at him.

"Down!" Danny shouted yanking Martin down as the large chunk of metal table went sailing over their heads.

"Skipper!" Colin's voice reached their ears just as Colin and Pablo came skidding into the corner of the research lab where they were. Martin and Danny looked up to see the white colored creature's chest begin to erupt in bullet strikes as the P190A5s held by Colin and Pablo were spitting out lethal rounds as they strafed to the right and came up beside them.

Martin and Danny watched as the creature staggered under the barrage, bits of its flesh flying into the air and copious amounts of dark reddish blood splashing on the floor and equipment all around the monster. The four of them stood there watching with wide eyes as the wounds began to heal right in front of their eyes.

“Are you fucking kidding me?” Colin gasped as he watched this while slapping in a new magazine.

“Skipper... I’m pretty sure the creature from the Black Space Lagoon was not on the fucking guest list!” Pablo snarled.

“Yeah no shit!” Martin hissed.

“Fucking space monsters!” Danny growled. “It’s healing itself!”

“You noticed that did you?” Pablo barked out.

“Where’s the exit?” Colin snapped. “Let’s bail while the bailing is good and drop a fucking bomb on this thing! Preferably from orbit!”

“The exit is behind the fucking space monster!” Danny barked.

Colin looked up. “Ok. That isn’t good!”

The creature roared once more and chose that time to charge at the four of them with surprising speed.

“Fuck!” Martin barked out as he ducked to the side shoving Danny with him while Colin and Pablo fell away to the other side.

There was a reason why Julie had described them as the epitome of entering by force. All of them were large men, Colin being the smallest at a mere six foot one and two hundred and thirty pounds. Between the four of them they had thousands of hours of combat and over a thousand pounds of muscle and grit. All of which they unleashed on the beast between them. Martin moved first, bringing his sword up quickly and quickly slicing two eighteen inch gashes in the creature’s side. As he twirled his sword defensively and backed away, Danny hit it with four quick but brutal slashes from his Khukuri, opening up several more deep and unforgiving wounds in its lower abdomen. Colin had preferred fighting knives back when he was a wolf and that had not changed even though he was now vampire. Two R4 Elven Hybrid fighting knives, each with five inch long blades appeared in his hands and he used his vampire speed to leap into the air and blur in motion. Two seconds later the creature was venting blood from half a dozen deep cuts at an explosive rate even as Colin rolled out of the way and Pablo struck. Like his Skipper he preferred a sword, a short Katana in this situation, and with powerful sweeps he managed to cut the creature with three deep slashes before the monster let out an inhuman, blood curdling roar and began to swing its arms blindly from side to side in pain. The creature appeared dazed and his movements were uncoordinated and this allowed the four of them to roll back across the room into the far corner away from the exit.

The exit was no longer blocked however.

The four of them could only stare in shock as the creature turned to face them, its near fatal wounds beginning to heal right in front of them just like before.

“C’mon!” Colin yelled. “Those were like our best moves!”

“Gonna need bigger weapons Skipper!” Pablo quipped. “Real big.”

“Fuck this!” Martin snapped. “Colin you got any G24s?” Martin asked.

Colin looked at him. “Does a wolf shit in the woods? Always skipper!”

“That’s bear dipshit!” Pablo spat as he hefted his P190. “Does a bear shit in the woods? I’m gonna tell Jules you fucked that all up!”

Martin laughed aloud as Danny shook his head. They had always been able to do this. Laugh in the face of death. Many people had thought them all crazy back then, but they knew the truth. All of them also knew that Colin and Julie were just beginning a relationship that held promise for both of them. “Then get ready to do your best Chapman imitation.” Martin spoke. “Right into its fucking mouth!”

“And how are you gonna get that thing to open its fucking mouth?” Danny shouted. “You gonna ask politely?”

Martin grinned. “Yes.”

“Marty no!” Danny snarled just before Martin rose to his feet and lifted his hands up.

“Hey Fugly!” Martin shouted as he moved quickly to the side of where Danny and the others were.

Just as the creature turned to face him, Martin formed two Etheric diamonds in his hands and let them fly. The small Etheric projectiles crossed the distance in an eye blink and both blew gaping chunks out of the monster’s lower abdomen. The instant he had released the first two he formed two others and let them go a second later. These two Etheric projectiles struck the creature on the joint above its right leg and blew most of it completely off. Then two more Etheric diamonds struck its upper chest blowing two more yawning holes into its flesh. The creature was on one knee now and it reached for a loose piece of equipment to throw at Martin. He didn't give it the chance and two more Etheric diamonds struck the joint of its thick arm at what should have been its elbow. The arm joint exploded and nearly eight inches of hand and forearm were blown clear away in a spray of blood and flesh. This caused the monster to look at Martin and opened its armor plated mouth to roar out its pain and agony.

“Fuck you too ugly!” Martin roared back. “Colin now!”

Colin Walsh had always been a lover of the ancient game of Baseball on Earth. He could rattle off records and winners like it was nothing and had taken the time to watch all of the World Series games ever played. A man originally from Cuba, Aroldis Chapman, still holds the record for the fastest Fast Ball ever thrown in baseball, at least until the end of the world came. Colin stood up beside Pablo and using all of his vampire speed and strength he let fly with the G24 Tactical Plasma grenade. It was no bigger than a baseball from the game he so loved and had the game still been played, Colin probably would be playing. Though there were no speed guns to determine how fast he threw the G24 and no one would ever know what the actual speed was, the G24 flew straight and true and in the blink of an eye it slammed into the back of the throat of the creature.

The impact of the G24 caused the monster to stop its screaming almost immediately and stagger back even on one leg.

“Down!” Martin screamed just before the G24 blew.

The G24 could be fused for timed detonation and Colin timed it for three seconds. Just as Martin and the others hit the floor, the G24 exploded, taking with it the creature's head and half of its shoulders. Dark reddish blood and scraps of flesh sprayed all over the entire room, showering the four men over their backs and shoulders as they huddled on the floor. The explosion also blew out the remaining portion of the research lab's wall and filled the entire area with dust as well as collapsing part of the ceiling above on the creature as it fell. Its head had been so close to the ceiling that the concussive force had lifted a portion of the ceiling up, cracking its structure and then dropping almost a ton of steel and concrete down on top of it.

Colin rolled over spitting dust and grime out of his mouth. “And he strikes out the last batter and wins the World Series of 2575! Hoorah!!!” He screamed out. “Who's your daddy?! Who's your daddy?!”

Danny rolled over as well and looked at him. “Fucking comedian!” He spat as Pablo began to erupt into laughter and he slumped over on his back.

Danny got to his feet and looked at the deformed creature on the floor five meters away as he moved over to where Martin was rolling over. He bent down beside him as Martin looked up at him. “Fervon?” He asked.

Martin spit a mouth full of dust out and looked up at him. “I really hate fucking smelly ass space monsters.” He growled meeting Danny's gaze. “Fucking stinky bastard!”

Danny looked over at the pile of twisted and torn flesh. “I'm thinking a bath is out of the question now.” He spoke looking back to Martin.

“Not him! You!” Martin snarled.

Danny looked at him and pointed at him with one of his Khukuri. “I should have let that ugly motherfucker eat you asshole!” He barked.

Martin laughed as Danny flipped the Khukuri into his other hand and reached for him. Martin lifted himself up with Danny's help. “I'm bad for the digestion.” Martin chuckled.

Pablo was helping Colin up and looked over to them. “Eating the Skipper would have given that thing a bad case of the runs.” He spoke.

“That's cause he so full of shit.” Danny quipped as they heard the stomping of running feet and suddenly Jules was leading the others into what remained of the research lab.

Julie skidded to a halt, her eyes going first to where Colin was rising to his feet and then back to Martin. “Holy shit!” She gasped.

Namiri, Emylea and Kasdan stepped out from around the bulk of T'Lolt and Kenny, their eyes wide at what they saw.

“I'm thinking holy shit doesn't cover it Jules.” Kenny spoke his eyes looking all around the room.

T'lolt nodded his head. "I concur."

Martin looked at Kasdan. "Kasdan, please tell me that we didn't damage anything and those Etheric locks are still in place."

Kasdan nodded his head. "They are still secure Martin." He stammered. "This... this is what we detected?" He asked looking at what remained of the creature.

"Our P9s recorded the whole thing Marty." Jules said.

Martin looked over to the cooling flesh of the creature. "Yeah, ugly ronnus; what's left of it anyway."

"Fucking space monster!" Danny barked.

"Kasdan can you access the computers in this facility from in here?" He asked.

Kasdan nodded. "I should be able to yes."

"Then I want you to scan the interior and if our contacts are the only thing showing, seal the remaining floors and vent the oxygen that is in there." Martin spoke.

Kasdan met his eyes. "That will kill anything else that may be alive down there Martin." He said.

Martin nodded his head. "I know... but I'm not risking anymore people to take out this thing's brothers. No more space monsters for us today. Do it."

Kasdan nodded. "Very well."

"I'm going topside." Martin said. "I need some air before Anja, Aricia and For'mya get here and give me an earful."

ARTAAYA CAPITAL CITY OF ARTAAYA CHIEF ELDER'S OFFICE

"...Not know of this Dysea." Delnash spoke. "I swear to you."

Dysea had returned to the cockpit of VALISTAR ONE and that is where she sat now. Delnash knew what the interior of a corvette looked like and could tell right away when she contacted him.

Dysea nodded in the holotransmission. "I did not think so and neither will Martin." She told him. "You and he have come too far for such things."

"I had Two Seven run a background check on our shipyards at Nepneu." Delnash began. "All of our ships built there are accounted for. With the exception of those destroyed or taken by the Svorag, not one is missing."

"How many of this class were taken by the Svorag?" Dysea asked.

"Twenty-nine in the last twelve hundred and nineteen years." Delnash answered. "None before that."

Dysea's head tilted sideways in puzzlement. "You have dealt with the Svorag for much longer however, have you not?" She spoke.

Delnash nodded his head. "Yes, but they did not begin to attack or take our ships and people before then." He replied. "That was something new that took us all by surprise when it began."

"Then how did Lycavorians from Ventori come to have control of one of your Frigates?" She asked thoughtfully. "And the skill and knowledge to use it quite well according to my pilot. To be honest, she says if we did not have our multispectral sensor array we would not have detected them unless they had made a mistake."

"You are certain they were from Ventori?" Delnash asked. "I was under the impression we had stopped monitoring the Lycavorians there long before the Svorag began to intercept our ships."

Dysea nodded her head. "Wayonn is certain they are Beta Wolves." She spoke. "I was relatively sure but Wayonn has been wolf for far longer than I and he is certain they are Beta Wolves. They could only have come from Ventori. Could they have taken this ship from the Svorag?"

Delnash looked up as the hulking figure of Avatar 27 came up beside his desk. "27?" he spoke.

-The RONAR-Class frigate does not possess atmospheric capability Queen Dysea- 27 spoke to her image. –The only way to have taken the ship in the manner you describe is while it was in orbit. The Lycavorians on Ventori do not possess space craft capable of this-

Dysea nodded her head. “I assumed as much given what Martin has told us of them.” She said. “They were industrial but pre-space flight.”

Delnash nodded. “Yes.”

Dysea met his eyes. “Then the only explanation is that someone among your people gave them the ship and the training to use it.”

-That would be the likely hypothesis Chief Elder Delnash- 27 answered as Delnash sat back in his chair.

“Lorendo?” Delnash spoke as his eyes grew wide. “But why? He has always purported that Lycavorians were beneath us in every way. Why give them one of our ships and train them how to use it? And why have we not seen them before now?”

“These are questions that need to be answered.” Dysea said. “As well as who else besides yourself and Avatar 27 know who Jezima and Meral were. That will be the largest question that Martin has.”

Delnash shook his head. “Even I did not know who they were.” He replied. “Not until 27 found the data and told me.”

“Well, whoever these Lycavorians are, they were not watching Wayonn or I. We reacted only after you told Martin. They would not have known Martin dispatched Wayonn to Honelze from Ventori. They were already watching them there.” Dysea said. “They were already there or someone on Honelze told them that they got on our ship, which means someone on Honelze told them.”

-The search parameters that I used to discover their existence cannot be duplicated Queen Dysea- 27 told her. –And I deleted all reference to any search I conducted. I was quite thorough in my actions-

Dysea nodded her head. “I do not doubt that 27. This only means that Jezima and Meral were known to whoever is watching them and this person did not need to conduct such a search. Whoever is watching them knew who they were before you discovered them; they knew that they were alive and where they were living. This is something that Nauta Melme will not be pleased with.”

“I am not pleased with it.” Delnash snapped.

“This is not your fault Chief Elder.” Dysea spoke.

“All of this is my fault!” Delnash hissed as he came to his feet. “If I had been doing my job I would have known what Lorendo has been up to all of these years!”

“There is no blame to place here Delnash.” Dysea told him evenly. “It appears likely that Lorendo has far more secrets than any of us realize. And he has had many years to become very good at this. You are not like him and therefore you will not think like him. You are not capable of doing what we believe he has done. He still has people watching you?”

Delnash nodded. “They are trying to be discreet but to Teniri and her dragons they stick out like unwanted warts!” He retorted. “He has been very public these last weeks, mainly using this time to berate and distance himself from every decision we, as an Elder Council, made since coming to Artaaya. The lies he is spewing make me want to throttle him myself!”

Dysea chuckled at Delnash’s attempt at humor but she nodded her head. “That is what worms do.” She spoke. “My apologies about your son Delnash.”

Delnash shook his head and waved his hand. “That I have been blind to his actions all of these years is pain enough.” He said. “I never believed he was like this. Kesyla tried to tell me once but I did not listen.” Delnash looked at Dysea in the transmission. “Anja would have killed him if he had attempted anything wouldn’t she?”

“In many ways Melyanna is just as Spartan in nature as Aricia who is pureblood.” Dysea told him. “She may be Hadarian but she has embraced the Spartan nature of the wolf within her now. Far more than most turned females. Yes..." Dysea told him honestly. "Anja would have killed him for his actions had we not been there with her."

Delnash nodded his head slowly. "And I can't seem to find any part of myself that finds fault in that." He stated softly. "Amazing isn't it?"

Dysea shook her head. "No. I believe it is because of what you have seen and what you have experienced in the past. You buried these things deep when you arrived on Artaaya, but now they are returning. And that is our fault."

Delnash looked at her. "No. Martin's arrival... your people's arrival... that may have hastened it somewhat but I would have seen the light so to speak eventually. The only real difference is that many more would have died until my eyes were opened had you not come when you did. I will forever be in your debt for that."

"Discovering Jezima and Meral as you have, that will erase any debt you may think you owe to us." Dysea spoke.

"Jezima and Meral?" Delnash asked.

"They will be under the protection of the Durcunusaan Hippeis Sedla shortly and it will not matter." Dysea answered.

"Ah... your Royal Guard." Delnash spoke as he returned to his chair. "Martin mentioned them to me briefly in one of our transmissions."

Dysea nodded her head. "They are our finest." She stated simply.

"I don't suppose you would care to elaborate on that would you?" Delnash asked her. "Martin was strangely offhand about it and he changed the subject quickly."

"If Nauta Melme did not than I will not." Dysea told him. "I'm sure you will discover it soon, so I would not let it trouble you. They are no threat to anyone who is not a threat to them first."

"And I would imagine that any threat that does present itself to them would not be one after?" Delnash prodded her.

Dysea smiled. "For perhaps two or three seconds." She replied.

Delnash shook his head. "Gods we have dismissed so much through the millennia." He whispered to no one in particular. "There is so much we could have learned."

"The learning never ends Delnash." Dysea spoke. "And you can be assured we are here for the long run."

Delnash looked at her in the transmission and nodded. "As are we." He stated confidently and with bright eyes.

"I will have Nauta Melme contact you when Jezima and Meral arrive on Ventori." She told him. "For now I believe we should try and discover who these Lycavorians are and if they are a threat to either of us."

"Agreed." Delnash said. "I am meeting with Teniri when she returns from her trip to Manne tomorrow. There is much we need to discuss. I will contact Martin after we have been able to put our heads together."

Dysea nodded. "Then I wish you well until we speak again." Dysea spoke.

"I wish you the same." Delnash spoke as he rose to his feet once more and watched as the transmission ended.

Delnash turned and moved to the wide expanse of the massive doors into his office. He looked out over the city they had built and let that beautiful sight calm him as it always did. He felt more than saw Avatar 27 come up behind him.

-Chief Elder?-

"Too much is happening 27." Delnash spoke. "We are letting Lorendo dictate how we do things. That needs to end."

-Agreed-

Delnash turned to look at him. "After the meeting with Teniri tomorrow inform Elder Sashan that I want a complete inventory of all ships and their crews. Numbers. Readiness. All of it. I don't care how long he has to work but I want it in one week."

-Elder Sashan will not be happy about that- 27 spoke.

"He will deal with it or find a new job." Delnash spoke. "He is the head of the Defense Convocation. It is what he is supposed to do!"

-And once he is committed to this task?- 27 asked.

Delnash looked at him. "You find out how they got one of our ships. With Sashan active and his attention drawn to other matters access to the defense mainframe will be easier. Do what you must but find out how these Lycavorians got our ship. And find out if they are a threat."

-This will require that I bypass several known Defense Convocation authorizations- 27 spoke.

"Whatever it takes 27." Delnash spoke. "I want answers and I want them before I begin to take Lorendo's lies and tear them down one at a time."

VALISTAR ONE

"... You believe him?" Wayonn asked softly as he entered the cockpit fully now.

Dysea turned quickly and saw him leaning against the doorframe. She smiled at him and rose to her feet from the chair. "Nauta Melme was right you know. You do move like a ghost at times."

Wayonn shrugged his shoulders. "It's my age." He stated simply as he held out the mug of Aricia's coffee.

Dysea laughed softly and took the mug. "Yes I believe him." She answered the question. "And so does Martin." She moved up in front of him. "Though I sense that he will need our help."

"How so?" Wayonn asked.

"He will need protection." Dysea answered. "I have a feeling I know what he is going to do... and when he does begin to make his move he will become a much larger target than he is now."

"Now?"

Dysea nodded. "We are still bumbling about in the dark Wayonn." She said. "Lorendo is playing a game of sorts and we are very behind in the score. He is also not working alone. There are others working with him Wayonn, protecting him. When that begins to change for him, he will certainly change his tactics. Part of that will be that he will go after Delnash in more direct ways."

Wayonn nodded in agreement. "We cannot be seen as getting involved in internal Pralor politics Dysea, you know that. Lorendo would turn it completely around on Delnash as soon as he discovered it."

Dysea smiled. "Providing Delnash protection is not involved in politics." She told him.

Wayonn saw where she was going and he smiled. "The Hippeis Sedla?"

Dysea nodded. "I will speak with Martin when we arrive on Ventori, but if he requested them for Jezima and Meral then Vengal will no doubt send more than needed. We might be able to put one or two on Delnash and attribute it to Teniri and the dragons."

"Ah... very smooth." Wayonn stated. "Very smooth."

"Jezima and Meral?" Dysea asked.

"They are still trying to process everything I think." Wayonn told her. "To discover that... after so long to discover that you have grandchildren from a son who you thought died long ago. To know that he led a life you were not aware of and now that life is suddenly saying hello? It is a bit much."

Dysea sipped her coffee and nodded. “No doubt.” She said. “It will be equally as much for Martin. He never once dreamed that anyone from his grandfather’s direct family could be alive. This had never entered his thoughts until Delnash told him. He is... he will be beside himself Wayonn.”

Wayonn nodded his head. “Probably more so than when I discovered he lived.” He said softly. “And I cannot tell you how happy that knowledge made me. It will be a sight to see.”

“Yes. Yes it will.” Dysea agreed.

VENTORI SECOND RESEARCH SITE LOCATION

To say that Saydia and the other Tasmor were impressed with how quickly so many had descended upon this area was an understatement. They discovered within seconds after Anja, Aricia and the others staggered as if in a daze that an attack was underway and their husband was heavily involved. Within moments of them boarding the ship flown by Queen For'mya Leonidas they heard broadcasts on the internal COM system of the STRIKER about dozens of different teams from across the city who were diverting for their King's location. Though it took less than ten minutes to reach their location on the other side of the large city, they could see different teams appearing from within the city and taking up circular positions all around what looked to be an open field with wreckage from a destroyed building all around the area. As spread out as she thought they were through the city, Saydia wondered just how they had managed to get here so quickly. Ultimately it didn't matter as Anja, Aricia, Anuk, Kesyla and For'mya were out of the ship before the engines had even died down and Saydia Daret quickly followed with Anthylea and Perlyea close on her heels.

Saydia discovered something that had not known before about Lycavorians as they made their way from the ship. The natural speed of a wolf apparently carried over at least in small part to their human forms as the Queens quickly outdistanced the Tasmor following them. They were just catching up and Saydia saw the five women split into two groups, the queens to Martin and the other two females to the massive ebony skinned man just to his side. Saydia's eyes grew wide when she saw Namiri and Emylea making their way towards her. She embraced her daughters without question, running her hands over both of them checking them for injury.

“You are unhurt?” She gasped finally, holding them close to her.

“We are fine mother.” Emylea stated. “We were not involved. Only King Martin and his team.”

Saydia looked at Namiri once more and could not help but feel a little saddened by the lost time between them. Saydia's relationship with Namiri's father had not been something Saydia had wanted, but Tasmor tradition demanded it and Saydia had endured his lovemaking so that she gave him a child. Saydia had resented this for most of Namiri's life and had not shown her the mother's love that she should have. Upon coming here and seeing what a beautiful warrior Namiri had become right under her eyes had altered her perceptions entirely. Namiri's hair was now a dark blond color, almost brown in many spots. She could change her hair color almost at will Saydia knew, most Tasmor could, though they very rarely ever did this. Namiri had been one of those few who had chosen to do this but now it seemed as she had chosen to remain with her natural hair color and it made her dark eyes so much more alive and bright.

“What happened?” Saydia gasped. “Were there more bodies of...?”

Namiri shook her head quickly. “No mother. This was something else.”

“Something else?” Saydia asked.

Namiri nodded her head and motioned to where three men were dumping a tarp covered body to the ground a few meters away. “They fought that.” She said with awe in her voice that was easy enough for all of them to detect.

Their heads came around when Martin's voice bellowed aloud in the still air. “...Damn sure they are dead Master Chief!”

Saydia and the others moved closer to where he settled to a large granite and steel barrier that looked to have been torn asunder from the building foundation. Anja and Aricia were pulling at the armor he wore over his upper body and Saydia watched as they finally got it unfastened and lifted it away as he sat down. He wore only a simple, tight solid colored gray shirt under the armor and Saydia had to hold back her gasp of shock at the exquisite definition of his upper body. She watched as Anja lifted the shirt away to reveal something that looked to have been chiseled from marble itself. If Saydia was any judge, there was not an ounce of fat on his muscular form, or the form of the similarly defined ebony skinned man to his side. It also displayed the angry, purple and black bruise that covered the entire left side of his midsection. All of them heard Anja gasp and drop to her knees in front of him as he lifted his arm above his head and turn to look at the same massive form of the man carrying the huge chain gun.

“Kasdan says that he is no longer reading their lifesigns but don’t take any chances Master Chief.” Martin spoke to him around his upraised arm. “Take two grenadiers with you and if they show even a twitch of life you hit them with everything you got.”

“We’re on it Skipper.” The man spoke.

“Tony...” Martin barked. “No chances Tony. Sweep and clear.”

The Master Chief Tony Winston nodded his head in the affirmative. “We hear you Skipper.” He answered before motioning to four others to join him and they headed for the manhole cover in the street a short distance away.

Both of Anja’s hands were pulsing softly with white light as she directed them over his side and this caught Perlyea’s attention right away and she moved closer still. “You have four fractured ribs Lover!” She gasped in what appeared to be disbelief. “What did you find down there?”

“Nubous gartas Llokel.” Martin hissed softly but loud enough for Danny and the others to hear. (Fucking space monster)

“Damn straight!” Danny agreed. “Right out of a bad B movie Red!”

Anja’s hands flared even brighter now as she began to heal the damage to his side. Her small hands were pressed to his skin and slowly she drew them across the entire area almost intimately causing Martin to look at her.

“Anja?” He asked.

“I’m ok Lover.” She answered quickly.

Martin reached for her instantly with his aura and allowed it to swarm around her senses. He could feel her anger and unrest instantly at what she had seen in the first bunker and he knew this had her on edge. He pulsed her with his love and warmth and Anja basked in the sensations that gave to her even as she continued to heal him. It also caused her to move even closer to him and press her petite body tightly to him. This caused Aricia and For’mya to smile from Martin’s other side as Anja looked so tiny in comparison to him.

Perlyea took all of this in intently, watching Anja’s face and how she reacted to him. It was fascinating to witness and she would have to ask Anja about it more when they were alone. This thought stunned Perlyea for a moment for she knew without question they would be working together in the future and that combined with others they would make a formidable team. Almost from the outset Perlyea wanted to be around this small and diminutive woman for she radiated power and wisdom. She also exuded sexiness to Perlyea and she did not know what to make of that. It was something she would have to discover Perlyea knew and for the first time in her life Perlyea did not fear getting to know someone from another species.

“Lover... tell me what you found down there.” Anja told him as she finished her healing pulses and stepped slightly away from him. “What could do this to you and Danny of all people?”

“Fervon?” Martin called out as he began to pull his shirt back on.

Danny nodded as Duewa finished healing his injuries with Anuk and Kesyla watching. “I’m good.” He called out.

Martin looked at Saydia now. “You should probably see this as well.” He told her before beginning to walk to where the tarp covered form was resting on the ground.

Danny, Colin, Pablo and Julie followed with Julie holding tightly to Colin’s hand but both of them trying to hide this. It did no good really for everyone noticed but they said nothing. Martin bent over and threw back the tarp causing all of them to turn their heads and hold back their sudden desire to vomit because of the stench.

“Smelly bastard huh?” Martin said as he stepped back slightly.

“Gods yes!” For’mya gasped gripping Aricia’s arm tightly even as Anja held her hand over her own very sensitive nose and moved closer to the now very dead creature.

“Beloved... you and the others fought this?” Aricia gasped.

“Yeah... but it was about four feet taller than it is now!” Martin replied almost casually.

Anja looked at him. “How did you kill it?” She asked.

Martin chuckled now causing Saydia and the others to look at him oddly. “We got it to eat a G24.” He answered jerking his thumb toward Colin. “Courtesy of our resident Baseball wacko.”

Julie smiled and looked at Colin with desire in her dark eyes. “Nice work.” She told him softly.

Colin grinned. “It’s all in the wrist.” He said.

Namiri looked at her mother’s expression and grinned now. “An explosive mother.” She explained to her. “One that is thrown.”

“Ah...” Saydia said nodding. “I see. I think.”

Anja looked back to the headless monstrosity. “A G24 will certainly do it.” She spoke. She held out her hand and pointed to several other wounds. “I take it other weapons were not working? I count thirteen healed bullet holes and over a dozen slash scars.”

“Slicing and dicing it didn’t do the trick Red.” Danny spoke now. “We had to use more direct measures.”

Perlyea was also looking at the creature, or what remained of it, and something caught her attention. She moved closer to it directly behind Anja, who was squatting next to it, as the scientist in her took over. “Anja?” She blurted out causing Anja to look up at her.

“Perlyea?” Anja queried her.

Perlyea moved around to the other side of the creature and bent down now. She held out her hand and pointed to the portion of the chest that remained on the right side. Her finger was directed at the faint bone ridge across the chest. “Anja this is... this is Tasmor.” She said.

“What?” Anja gasped.

“Perlyea no!” Saydia gasped in horror.

“The slight bone ridge.” Perlyea answered. “This is indicative of Tasmor physiology. It is one of the defining characteristics of our species along with the ridges just above our brow bone structure.”

Anja looked at her across the disgusting form between them. Anja was impressed with her strength and determination to do the right thing for her people. It was her guiding principle it seemed and nothing Anja had noticed detracted from this fact. Even her actions in trying to obtain their technology was directed solely by her desire to improve her people. Just their short time together and Anja had learned she was an extremely intelligent woman and a very beautiful one as well.

“Perlyea... you are certain?” Anja asked her.

Perlyea nodded her head. “Yes.”

“What does that mean Red?” Martin asked now.

Anja rose to her feet and turned to look at him slowly, knowing how he would react to what she was about to tell him. “Lover...?”

Martin shook his head. “No way. I know for a fact that we found pieces of Lycavorian, Pralor and Tasmor in that other butcher shop! And I also know that Perlyea there is almost as sharp as you! What exactly is she saying Red?”

Anja nodded her head and took his arm. “I am relatively certain just from seeing the other lab and the remains here but... it appears as if someone... it looks like they combined the DNA from the three species and made... they made this thing.”

The look of horror and savage anger on Martin Leonidas’ face could not be an act by any definition of the word Saydia Daret knew. His dark brown eyes quickly changed to the yellow gold color of the wolf within him and his fangs lengthened into terrifying flesh shredding tools. Genetic experimentation of any sort was strictly forbidden within the Union and anyone who was discovered to be involved with such things was quickly put on trial and more often than not found guilty and put to death immediately. This mentality was left over from the days of High Cover experimentation on humans and elves on Earth. Martin, Anja and Dysea had seen first-hand what this sort of thing had wrought and the pain it had brought to some of their closest and dearest friends. Saydia looked around quickly at those who were standing with them and she saw the same looks of horror and brutal anger that this knowledge brought forth. Something must have happened in the past to make them hate this type of thing so much, but it was only another sign to her that the Tasmor people’s path into the future was with these Lycavorians who had been such a godsend to them up until now. Saydia could only watch as Anja, Aricia and For'mya quickly put their hands on Martin's chest, arms and shoulders and pulsed him heavily with their female wolf auras in order to calm him. It worked she saw as slowly, his eyes returned to normal and his fangs retracted into his gums once more.

"Anja... Anja you find me who did this." Martin growled in a menacingly low voice. "You find them for me so I can rip their hearts out and feed it to them!"

"I will Lover." Anja answered softly. "I will. I will... Lover?" Anja saw the look on his face change from one of anger to one of surprised happiness and he turned his head.

"Melda Min?" Martin gasped softly with wide eyes as the sweet wildflower smell of his first elven Queen drifted to him faintly from downwind. The wind was blowing away from him but Martin Leonidas' sense of smell was perhaps the keenest of any living wolf within the entire Lycavorian Union. He detected her sweet smell and his dark brown eyes began searching for her as he stepped away from Anja and the others.

"Dysea!" Aricia gasped as she grabbed Anja's hand once more. "Dysea is here!"

They all turned to the direction Martin was facing, his face raised to the air and his nose catching her scent once more. He searched with his eyes even harder and then he saw her come sprinting around the edge of a building perhaps a hundred meters away. Dysea was moving fast and Aricia, Anja and For'mya felt her Etheric resonance wash over them and they gripped each other in happiness as Dysea covered the last hundred meters to their position in roughly four or five seconds.

Then she was leaping into Martin's arms and he was kissing her madly as he held her suspended off the ground and was spinning her around. Dysea whimpered in unabashed delight as his aura washed over her wolf senses and set her body on fire. They had been too long apart she knew and his lips upon hers was almost too much to bear as she met his tongue and quickly surrendered to his ministrations. Her arms were wrapped around his head tightly as he kissed her and then Aricia, Anja and For'mya were pressing up against them and relishing in the combined auras of those they loved so very much. They could feel the happiness and love of Isabella and Cirith even across the stars and this only added to their happiness now, especially at such a time.

After several moments of the toe curling kiss Martin pulled away from her delicious lips and furiously nuzzled her throat and cheeks causing Dysea to gasp in delight even more. A few seconds of this and he was staring into her emerald orbs with those dark brown pools of love and Dysea was barely able to keep herself from becoming wet at her center in her desire for him.

"Melda Min what... what are you doing here?" Martin gasped.

Dysea smiled at him brilliantly as Aricia leaned forward and firmly nuzzled her cheek. "I have... we have missed you so Nauta Melme." Dysea gasped.

"I know!" Martin exclaimed. "I was trying to figure out how I could..."

Dysea took his face in her hands and shook her head quickly. "No!" She told him. "This is where you should be! With our people!"

"Bella? Cirith? Are they with you?" Martin asked as he sniffed the air hoping to detect them as well.

"They remained behind." Dysea told him. "They wanted me to come."

"Why? What is wrong?" Martin asked suddenly concerned.

"Nothing is wrong Nauta Melme." Dysea told him with that dazzling smile of hers. "I... I wanted to surprise you."

Martin looked at her smiling but puzzled. "It's not my birthday Melda Min." He told her.

Dysea slapped him lightly in the face with her joyous laugh. "I know that you brute!" She declared.

"I sent Wayonn to Honelze to..." Martin stopped as he gazed at her face and saw her smile grow even larger.

"I know Nauta Melme." She said softly, her emerald eyes twinkling in the day light. "We had... Bella, Cirith and I had already discovered them when he arrived. They did not want to wait. They..." It was then that Martin and all of them felt it. Martin slowly lowered Dysea to the ground and he moved his head to look around her and his dark eyes grew wide.

Walking towards them and holding tightly to Wayonn's hands were Martin Leonidas' past and his future.

Very slowly Martin stepped away from Dysea as Aricia and Anja drew her into their arms and his hands fell away from her as they watched him. His head tilted slightly as he attempted to pick up their scents in the slight breeze. The woman on Wayonn's right was older and moving a bit slower than the woman on the left, and Martin caught Wayonn's familiar scent just then.

Then the scent of...

Martin's eyes grew wider still and his stomach tightened almost painfully as the scents of Mountain and Ginger mint floated across his nostrils, enflaming his senses and causing the wolf blood within him to scream out wildly with only one word.

Family.

Something deep within Martin Leonidas took over then. Something deep and so very powerful in its drive. He took one step forward and hesitated for only an instant before he began to stride towards the three individuals with more purpose and determination than he had ever felt before in his life. His wolf senses focused and centered on the two women and he walked faster as he saw Wayonn pull up short and beckon them to stop. What was screaming out within Martin was much like what he had felt the day he discovered his true mother buried in that foul prison on their homeworld so long ago. A sense of powerful longing that had suddenly been fulfilled. An intense sense of family that was the true anchor of the emotion that he and his beautiful wives and mates had poured into their children as they grew. The scents grew more intense as he grew closer and with only ten feet between them Martin pulled up short.

In fear.

It was an emotion that was foreign to him in many ways, but now it flowed through him unchecked.

What if they did not accept him? They were his blood, all that remained of his pure Pralor blood and they held the knowledge he had coveted for so long about his history and his Pralor ancestors. His father and his father before him and beyond. What if they did not approve of him or what his Great, Great Grandfather Sumar had done? What he had to do in order to survive. He felt indecision fill him as never before and this was a feeling that Martin Leonidas was very unaccustomed to.

For the first time in his life his instincts failed him in a way they never had before. Martin Leonidas didn't know what to do.

Thankfully for him, it was a decision that had been made millennia before he was ever born.

It was perhaps the longest walk she had ever taken in her extensive life but with each step onward she felt younger. Each foot she put in front of the other only inspired her, drove her to keep moving forward.

Jezima clung to Wayonn's hand almost painfully and she had to stop and gasp when she first felt it, her hand going to chest in disbelief. She felt her only remaining child's heart racing almost out of control, just as hers was. They could both feel it. So beautifully powerful and bright within the Etheric realm. It felt so very familiar to them, so brilliant in its warmth and resonance. Each step brought them closer to something neither of them had ever imagined.

The war had taken so much from them. So much from so many men and women. It had deprived her of a loving and devoted husband. It had taken from her grasp three sons and two daughters in very different ways, but no less violently. Wrenched them from her very clutches without even being able to say goodbye or see their bodies given to The Rift of Time. If not for Meral it would have destroyed her as it had destroyed so many other lives. They had turned inward away from everyone else, both filled with the same loss and longing simply for a closure that never really came. Jezima's eyes were not as good as Meral's and when she heard her daughter gasp and Wayonn tugged on her hand to slow down, Jezima didn't know what to do. She slowed reluctantly until she felt that resonance spike even higher and the image of a tall figure stepped away from the others that were standing far away.

And then that figure began to walk towards them and Wayonn beckoned her to stop.

Jezima turned to look at him and question this but stopped when she felt it. Meral's eyes were wider than she had ever seen them before and they were rapidly filling with tears. More tears than she had seen from her daughter in far too many millennia. She turned back to see the figure moving forward with a confident stride and each step that figure made brought him into better focus for Jezima. Each step that figure made caused her pulse to quicken and as his features began to take shape. Jezima could only watch, her eyes growing wider as first the tall well-muscled body came into clarity dressed oddly in some sort of body armor from his waist down but a simple shirt from the waist up. Then her tears began as the hair came into focus, shoulder length black hair, tied into a ponytail just as she remembered. Then the skin, so deeply tanned and beautifully stretched over that muscular frame. Her hand came to her mouth once more and rivers began to pour from her eyes as she saw the features. So strong and handsome. A confident jaw, masculine cheekbones and deep, dark eyes that caused her to begin to shudder and shake in disbelief.

It was her son.

No, it was not her son, the thought flashed across Jezima's mind.

It was the descendant of her son. So proud and beautiful to her.

Jezima gasped when he stopped only ten feet from them. She felt the indecision in him, the concern that he would not be accepted. He wore these things on his sleeve, unable to hide his emotions in this state. Jezima could feel the unconditional love for his beautiful wives and the children that they had given to him. She could feel the love he held for his people. His entire being was open to her and Jezima could only gasp at the level of emotion channeled through his being. It made him radiate within the Etheric realm like a supernova. The indecision was new to him she felt, something he was very unaccustomed too. Emotions radiated wildly within him and with one simple movement Jezima set free all of the doubts that clouded his mind at this moment.

One simple movement that brought millennia of not knowing to an end for her, and silenced the whispers of doubt from another forever.

Jezima pulled her hand free of Wayonn's grasp and reached for him. She reached for him while stepping forward with the same purpose and determination that had gotten her this far in life after losing so much.

It was such an unpretentious thing.

But it served to finally allow the emotions that had been building since he discovered who he truly was to come bubbling forth like lava from a volcano. His knees became weak and Martin found he could no longer hold his weight up and he dropped to his knees as that hand reached for him. He couldn't contain it any longer. He was unable to hold it in any longer.

And now he didn't have too.

For the first time in his life Martin Leonidas allowed it all to come forth. Unchecked and unequivocally. His dark brown eyes erupted into tears and he looked up into the face of his past and now his future. He looked up into dark brown eyes that matched his in every single way. He felt her hand touch his cheek and everything that Martin Leonidas was came out in one word that caused Meral to finally lose it and rush forward.

Jezima could not contain the emotions any longer and when his arms wrapped around her waist she heard the word that he uttered before his head was pressed tightly to her abdomen and her arms held him so very tightly. Heavy sobs wracked her body and she almost could not even comprehend the emotions that saturated the area around them.

Jezima did hear the word however. The single word that changed everything within her life and would change it going into the future.

It was a change she and Meral would embrace without a moment's hesitation no matter the outcome.

One simple word.

"Grandmother."

CHAPTER FIFTY-ONE

VENTORI

SECOND SECRET BUNKER

The only days that they could remember seeing him so happy were the days each of his children were born and the first birthday of his mother after he had rescued her from the hell she had been enduring. Everything that had been happening all around them suddenly became very secondary to Jezima and Meral. Aricia, Anja, Dysea and For'mya had stood there on the field, clutching each other tightly and watching with tears flooding their eyes as he had dropped to his knees in front of Jezima and Meral and Martin Leonidas had begun to weep.

To those on the field with them who knew Martin and had been with him for so long, it was a moment none of them would ever forget. None had ever seen their King cry before, truly none had ever seen such a display of emotion from the man they all revered, yet now they all held within them a moment in history that they would keep close to their hearts and never tell anyone. It was a day and moment that would forever cement their undying loyalty to Martin Leonidas for he had become normal for that extended moment in time. They had witnessed him sobbing for what he had thought lost and now discovered and he had shown once more that he was no different than them. He loved and cared about the same things they all did. It affected Danny the most, for he had dropped to one knee and silently wept in happiness for the man who was his Mard Fervon. Anuk and Nayeca were beside him, Kesyla kneeling in front of him but not really understanding what was happening as Anuk and Nayeca did. She would come to learn over the next few days and it would make her love the life she had become part of even more. Julie had leaned into Colin without regard for who saw them now, tears in her eyes as he held her close. His entire team had dropped to one knee in happiness and reverence for what the man who had saved all of their lives more times than they could remember through the years had finally found.

When Martin let out a roar of happiness and scooped Jezima and Meral both into his arms and began spinning them around in glee as if they weighed nothing at all, it was Atropos who acted. He sang with happiness within for what his King had found, but he was also a Captain of the Durcunusaan and this area was not entirely secure. He began to silently issue orders to the others who had flooded the area with hand signals and soft whispers into his jaw implant and within minutes this simple field had become the most secure location on the face of the planet. Atropos was the Queen's brother and a senior Durcunusaan officer though still only a Captain in rank by choice. He was well known throughout the Durcunusaan and the regular military and no one questioned his orders in any way. He finally stepped up to his sister Aricia and Anja who were holding Dysea and For'mya between them with For'mya clutching Dysea's waist and whispered to her, prodding them all forward towards where their STRIKER was. Anja nodded her head through tear stained eyes and though it took an additional twenty minutes to finally get Martin to the ship with Jezima and Meral in tow; he kept pulling one of them close to him and speaking animatedly, they were finally able to get him on the STRIKER and two minutes after that it was airborne for the Adhoc base outside Jorlari.

Atropos turned back to the men and women who had gathered and moved directly to where Saydia and the other Tasmor were standing still somewhat in shock. This turn of events was quite eye opening even though they did not really know what had taken place. Anthylea and Drenia did not step around Saydia this time to block Atropos from getting to close to their Sovereign Regent knowing who he was and not wanting to cause a confrontation, but they also took notice that the large man stopped a respectable distance from her and bowed his head to all of them.

“Sovereign Regent I...”

“What... what just happened Atropos?” Saydia asked him directly. Saydia Daret was no longer frightened about what had taken place to get them here to this point. She had already decided her course of action in the coming days and weeks. These Lycavorian people were so very proud and honorable and perhaps the deadliest men and women she had ever seen before in her life. They had treated the Tasmor with respect and honor even after the earlier incident, and Saydia had no intention of allowing this opportunity to pass her people by. It seemed that everyone with her was of the same mind, for Saydia could feel the trust building between their two species as each hour passed. Atropos was slightly surprised that she remembered his name at all and the stock of the Tasmor rose even more in his eyes with this simple action. They were adapting to events that were changing right in front of them almost as easily as Lycavorians. He glanced quickly at where Namiri and Emylea stood and now understood what his King had told Anja and his other Queens. It appeared these Tasmor were going to play a very large part in the future and within their family.

“I apologize for...” Atropos began but stopped quickly. He shook his head with a smile and continued. “It is actually a very long and not entirely happy story Sovereign Regent.” He spoke. “Anja and my sister told you that the majority of my people out here with us can trace a portion of their lineage back to the Pralor people?”

Saydia nodded her head. “Your sister told us this when we were on your ship, yes.”

Atropos nodded his head with a smile. "Martin is... he is over three thousand years old and..." He told them seeing their eyes go wide at this information. It was obviously something none of them suspected or believed until now. "He is the fourth generation descendant of the Chief Elder Pralor who made the decision to merge with our people so very long ago. He is the Great, Great Grandson to Sumar of the Pralor people. We came out here never expecting to find much, certainly not what we have discovered so far. The two women you saw are the mother and sister to the man who we have begun to call the father of us all. Sumar. They are Martin's Leonidas' blood, his family, and there is nothing that is more important to Martin Leonidas than his family."

"He did not know they existed?" Perlyea asked stunned.

Atropos shook his head once more. "None of us did until a day or so ago." He answered. He stepped closer to them as a group but still kept a respectful distance. "Anja asked that I see to it all of you are brought back to the base. They would like you and your daughters, all of you to take part in this joyous time."

"Us?" Saydia gasped in surprise.

Atropos nodded his head. "What all of us have seen in these last hours is distasteful and horrific. Our people and yours with knowledge in these matters can take things from here and do their jobs, at least for now. A strong glass of Spartan wine or my sister's coffee and a few hours away from the death around us will help us to tolerate it and move forward."

Saydia took a deep breath and nodded her head after a moment. "I will agree with that." She spoke evenly.

Atropos nodded his head. "General Simpson has authorized you to bring more of your forces to the surface if you wish. This is now a Joint operation Sovereign Regent for it involves your people as well as ours and the King will not leave you out of the investigation. Not after what the Tasmor did here for our people."

"You are very well spoken for a man who tries to make it seem like he is nothing more than a soldier." Saydia said.

Atropos smiled at this and nodded his head. "My wife and mate Lilika." He said. "She believes education is a gift from the gods and she insisted that our sons and I take advantage of this."

"And you obeyed her?" Saydia asked somewhat surprised to hear his answer.

Atropos chuckled at her question and for a moment he thought he saw a flash of anger in her eyes at his reaction. "You will discover that there are many areas where the females of our species are the ones in charge Sovereign Regent. And in those cases, no, we do not defy our wives and mates. Not if we wish to remain able to move without pain."

Saydia Daret couldn't help the yelp of laughter that escaped her lips and her hand went to her lips in embarrassment but she saw Atropos still smiling at her. She could also see the small smiles of humor on both Perlyea and Anthylea's faces as well. This man was stern faced and looked ready to kill with a single word, yet Saydia found he was far more than his outward appearance projected.

"Forgive me." She said finally.

Atropos shook his head quickly. "There are differences between our peoples, yes." He told her. "However, many of us believe we are not so very different either." He motioned with his hand to one of the Lifters that were pulling up a short distance away. "Please... allow me to escort you back to the base."

UNION ADHOC BASE

When they had returned to the Lycavorian temporary base area Saydia was shocked to discover that it had expanded ever further than she thought possible. Apparently these men and women had done this type of thing before many times. She was also stunned to find out that separate, portable quarters had been erected for her and most of those with her. Large barracks type buildings had been established for the Tasmor troops as well as those Lycavorians who were on the ground. A number that was increasing with each hour it seemed. When they had returned to the ADHOC area as they called it she found King Leonidas, his Queens and their dragons all sitting along the edge of the lake not far from where they were. An open sided Mess building had also been erected closer to the lake shore and Saydia could now see dozens of Lycavorians and her people alike sitting along the lake shore in different locations holding trays of hot food. Based on what she had eaten last night, their food was varied and compatible with Tasmor physiology and in fact it was quite delicious and many of her people were taking this chance to sample the food and drink. As she watched, Saydia saw that most of the Tasmor were younger in age, but there were quite a few older Tasmor females mixed in and enjoying the food and drink as well. It appeared as if her people had already decided they had discovered fast friends and allies and were making the most of it.

“Amazing isn’t it?” The female voice spoke from behind her and Saydia turned quickly to see Tobia step up beside her.

Saydia’s face brightened and it showed in her expression. “Tobia?” She gasped. “I did not... I did not think you would ever speak to me again.”

Tobia met her eyes and sipped from her mug of coffee. “I may have spoken more harshly than I intended before.” Tobia spoke softly. “I apologize for that.”

Saydia shook her head quickly in response. “No.” She spoke firmly. “It is I who should be apologizing to you for my words and actions. I did not heed the words you spoke to me two years ago and it almost cost my people a chance at a future we could not even imagine. I am so very sorry Tobia. I should have trusted you then and I should have trusted you the moment I saw you among these people.”

Tobia knew without question that Saydia spoke true words for she knew the women well enough. She had spent enough nights in hers and Anthylea’s arms to know what Saydia Daret truly desired for her people.

“Yes, you should have.” Tobia told her. “Especially after the times we spent together alone and with Anthylea.”

Saydia Daret looked suitably ashamed and she turned away, her near bronze like skin turning slightly red and her normally dark blond hair turning a noticeably darker shade. Tobia reached out then and took her arm softly. Most Tasmor could will the color of their hair to change within a few shades of their natural color but Tobia also knew that it also changed due to their emotional mood as well. The darker color of Saydia’s hair indicated shame and that is not something she was used to feeling Tobia knew.

“Don’t.” Tobia spoke gently. “You are a strong and proud woman Saydia Daret. That is what attracted me to you in the first place. And what happened is not something that can destroy what we had if we don’t let it.”

Saydia turned back and looked at her. “Your friendship is dearer to me than I allowed to show outwardly Tobia. To Anthylea as well.” Saydia said.

“As is yours to me.” Tobia answered. “Both of you. We can put this behind us and move forward however.”

“Can we?” Saydia asked.

“Do you want to?”

Saydia gripped her hand. “You know I do.” She answered.

Tobia smiled warmly. “I will always cherish the nights that I spent with you and with Anthylea, but I have discovered some things in these past weeks. Some things that have made my heart sing.”

Saydia nodded her head. “I heard whispers among these people that your man Murano had rediscovered himself. That he walks once more with his head held high.”

Tobia nodded her head. “He has.”

“Does Mari know?” Saydia asked.

Tobia smiled and nodded her head. “Many things have happened as I said. Mari had apparently figured it out many years ago. About Murano too. She is so smart.” She looked at Saydia with bright eyes. “She has become the wife and mate to Martin’s young pureblood son Deion. She has become like him.”

Saydia gasped and squeezed her hand harder. “Is... is that even possible?” She asked as so many different ideas and scenarios began flying through her head.

Tobia nodded. “Yes it is.” Tobia answered shaking her head. “The virus within their blood allows this. It is why you have seen elves and others who can shift their forms. I would have never believed it but it’s true. The happiness I have felt from Mari within the Etheric realm is beyond beautiful.”

“They can change someone?” Saydia asked in disbelief.

Tobia nodded once more. "Yes. You have seen this with the Gene Enhancements Perlyea was able to develop. It happens differently for different species, but those most closely like them physically and medically can be "Turned" is the word they use. My people can be fully turned like Mari."

"Are you happy for her Tobia?" Saydia asked her.

"How could I not be?" Tobia spoke. "She burns so much brighter now."

Saydia smiled and pulled her close for a hug. "Then I am happy for you." She said with genuine warmth. "Though Emylea will be very disappointed." Saydia spoke pushing her out to arm's length now. "She has taken no other into her embrace since Mari was among us for those few months."

"I will tell her if you wish. Explain it to her." Tobia said.

Saydia shook her head. "I will make this known to her. She will be saddened but she will be happy for her."

Tobia gripped her arms and looked at her. "These Lycavorians Saydia, they are stern and sometimes very brutal, but they are loyal to a fault to those they consider their friends. They are proud and strong just like the Tasmor. I have only been among them for a few weeks but I can say without reservation that Martin Leonidas will not turn his back on the Tasmor. Not after what you have done here to help his people."

Saydia nodded as her eyes swept back across the field around her where her people were sitting and eating with Lycavorians and elves and many different species they had never seen before, men and women who they were becoming fast friends with. "Yes, I am beginning to see that taking shape right in front of me." She answered.

"And Perlyea?" Tobia asked and Saydia turned to meet her eyes.

"She is a different woman now Tobia. Perlyea's only goal was to provide a future for our people." Saydia spoke. "That was the driving force for all she has done. She let that cloud her judgment and reason for a time but this Queen Anja has helped her to see the falseness of her ways. I do not doubt Perlyea's goals or her genuine desire to see our people grow Tobia. Not anymore."

"Good." Tobia said. "She is another strong woman, just like you and she can do more good if she is focused on things she can influence rather than things she cannot."

"Indeed." Saydia said. "And I believe she has found that balance again." Saydia looked over to where Martin sat once more. "This is... this type of reaction towards these new women. It is foreign to me. It seems like everything we have discovered this day just went away once they arrived."

Tobia shook her head quickly. "Do not worry. It did not." Tobia told her. "Martin's people and your own doctors and scientists are crawling all over the two facilities. It is not forgotten Saydia, Martin has just left this work to those who are trained for it. He is not shy about admitting that he does not understand something, and he allows his people to do their work and stays out of their way."

"And these women that arrived a few hours ago?" Saydia asked. "His family I have been told?"

Tobia nodded her head. "Yes. A family that he never thought he would discover. A family he never knew he had."

Saydia turned to look at her fully. "Tobia... this power Namiri and Emylea have told me he has." Saydia asked her. "It is like what you and your species can do is it not?"

Tobia shook her head. "Not in the way you have seen us use it no." She replied. "Martin, four of his sons, his daughter, a few others among their kind, they can manifest their Etheric power into the physical realm as weapons. It was a skill that was found in my people but on a miniscule scale."

"The Praetorians you told Anthylea and I about?" Tobia asked.

"Yes." Tobia replied. "Out of the trillions of our people, at our height of power, there were only a few hundred Praetorians. The gene was that rare. But within bloodlines it can be and usually is passed down in some form. Martin's ancestor Sumar, he was the first and most powerful of the Praetorians. The gene he carried passed down within his descendants as you have seen. As Namiri and Emylea have seen within Martin."

"Could this gene be passed to my people through the Gene Enhancements that Perlyea developed?" Saydia asked.

Tobia shook her head. "No. The Lycavorians on Ventori were gone from their original homeworld long before Sumar found his way there. The gene is not present in them."

Saydia looked almost relieved at this information as she gazed at where Martin and the others were sitting. "Good." She said softly. "That is not something I want to deal with."

“You can trust them Saydia.” Tobia told her. “Just as I know that you trust me.”

“And I do trust you Tobia.” Saydia said. “Never doubt that.”

Tobia squeezed her hands and caused Saydia to focus on her. “Then tell me why have you avoided joining with Anthylea in a Union?”

Saydia looked embarrassed once more and looked away shyly. “You know why.” She answered.

“Anthylea loves you Saydia.” Tobia told her.

“And I love her equally in return.” Saydia answered.

“Then why?” Tobia asked.

“The Tasmor Parliament would never allow this Tobia.” Saydia answered. “As Sovereign Regent I must remain able to bear children to our males if one presents himself and they deem he is worthy of laying with me.”

Tobia shook her head. “I so dislike that law of your people.” She said softly. “It does not give you the choice.”

Saydia nodded in agreement. “As much as I would like nothing else but to give myself only to Anthylea, even I cannot break that law of our people. I am one of the fertile Tasmor females and this has been our way for centuries.”

“I know but Anthylea is one of the Breeders among your females.” Tobia said.

Saydia nodded in agreement. “Yet none of them are able to have children Tobia. The enhancements Perlyea developed from the Lycavorians who allowed us to take their DNA did not give them the ability to be fertile as we had hoped.”

Tobia nodded her head slowly. “Knowing what I know now, I guess I understand that. You should have told me though. I could have helped somehow.”

“If this Queen Anja is as magical as Perlyea tells me, that time may soon come.” Saydia spoke. “I pray to the stars that it does. Every time I have to give myself to someone other than Anthylea hurts her more than I can put into words. And it takes a small portion from me as well.”

Tobia smiled. “Then go and be with her.” She told her. “Here, away from the prying eyes of the Tasmor Parliament. Here among the fresh air and beautiful scenery. Go and be with her and show her how much you love her.”

Saydia’s dark brown eyes became suddenly very bright. “I... gods I never thought about that.”

“Martin and the others will be occupied until tomorrow at least.” Tobia said. “And we all have people who are doing their jobs to discover the answers we want. Go and be with Anthylea and enjoy this time with her.”

Saydia leaned over and kissed her full on her lips. It was a kiss that Tobia did not shy away from for she had experienced it before. “Will... will you join us?” Saydia asked in a whisper that only she could hear. “I know where your heart lay Tobia, but until you are back within his arms, you do not need to deny yourself physical pleasure and the warmth of those who care deeply for you. Once you are rejoined with Murano then your love will pour forth for him alone I know.”

Whether it was because it had been so long, or because she had seen how Martin and his Queens were with each other, or just the newness and happiness of everything to come about these last weeks, Tobia smiled at her with a sultry upward curl of her lips.

“I think perhaps I will accept your offer Saydia Daret.” Tobia told her as she pressed her body tighter to Saydia’s lush form. “If it is to be our last time together, than we should make it memorable for all don’t you think?”

Saydia’s arm curled around her waist. “Yes I do.” She told her with a seductive smile. “Yes I do.”

“Then let us find Anthylea and then go to these quarters they have built for you.” Tobia spoke confidently. “I’m sure between the two of us we can succeed in tearing her away from whatever she might be doing.”

Saydia laughed heartily as they began to walk arm in arm. “I do believe you are correct in that.” She agreed. “I distinctly remember she could not think correctly when we both lavished her with attention.”

ICARAVA
DARASTRIXI HOMEWORLD
DARASTRIXETHE (DRAGONBLOOD) SPACE
NORTHERN CONTINENT
LIVAIJI SULEVFU FACILITY

Robati and Yokra were just sitting down to a small dinner when the open area beside the table suddenly lit up and both of them came to their feet in shock as the image of Androcles appeared next to their table. The image shimmered for several seconds and then became as clear as if he was standing in the room with them. Robati gripped Yokra's hand in shock and they watched as his head and eyes searched for several seconds and then focused on them.

“Sia Sepa dask vur Opsola...” Andro spoke as he bowed his head slightly out of respect. “Forgive me for causing you such a start.” (My soul mother and father)

“Androcles!” Robati exclaimed softly. “Ithquenti usja! You frightened me half to death!” (Gods lad)

Yokra was quicker on the uptake as a former military man and he knew immediately that something had caused Andro to contact them directly. They had spoken to him several times over these last weeks, Dorian, Elynth and Ryner as well, and he and Robati both had grown very fond of them and done so very quickly. It was as if they had always known them and seen them grow. It felt as if they were part of their family and had been for centuries. Even their sons had commented on how much they felt at ease with the four of them.

“Androcles... what is wrong?” Yokra spoke causing Robati to look at him in surprise. “You would not contact us directly unless something has changed.”

“It is time Sepa Opsola.” Andro told him.

Yokra became instantly alert. And concerned. “Jaka sia sepa deevdru!?” He gasped now. “The plan was to wait another week!” (Now my soul son)

Andro shook his head. “I have concluded what we had to do here and we are already enroute to the station. There is... something within Dorian, Elynth, Ryner and I says for you to move now. We do not question our instincts.”

“Do you think we have been discovered?” Yokra asked.

Andro shook his head once more. “We cannot determine what it is we feel, but we sense that things have changed where you are. If they have not discovered you, then someone is getting close. Closer than we would like. We have spoken with Laren and Ladur already and they are informing Koppentotz Em'morr. I need you and our soul mother to inform the others. You have three hours.”

“Three hours!” Robati exclaimed.

“Sepa Opsola, you must erase any trace that you were ever there before you leave that place.” Andro spoke. “You understand what I am saying yes?”

Yokra nodded his head. “Yes.”

“We have sent probes ahead of our ship.” Andro told him. “They will reach the station in two days. Once you arrive in three days they will be waiting for you in the landing bay closest to the command center. You will also find five Pralor Worker drones already there on site. They will be scanning the station for any devices that someone may have left behind. Leave them to their work.”

“I understand.” Yokra spoke as Robati moved up beside him and pressed against him.

“The probes will have uniforms and equipment inside them for Laren, Ladur, you and our soul mother.” Andro explained. “Also for General Dytin and Dalis as well as Koppentotz Aviel and his mate Nahko. I need you to insure this is given to them for each set will contain specific information for each of them and the armor has been made explicitly for them. The other thirteen sets of armor give to those you trust the most. Bring no more than twenty Sepa Opsola. That is all the equipment we were able to put inside the probes.”

Yokra nodded. “It will be done.” He spoke.

“Anything you cannot carry with you... destroy.” Androcles continued. “You will need nothing once you are among us. None of you will. I cannot stress enough that everything having to do with Laren and Ladur and yourselves must be purged from the facility you are in now Sepa Opsola. Everything. No matter how minor it seems. If it has to do with them or anyone helping them it must be disposed of.”

“You are concerned sepa deevdru?” Yokra picked up on that in his voice.

Andro nodded his head. "As I said, we do not know what it is we feel, but it tells us to have all of you get out now."

"You are Dahakoan." Yokra said. "This is part of what you are Androcles."

"I know..." Andro answered. "I'm still learning how to come to grips with that."

"It is destiny sepa deevdru." Robati spoke now.

Andro chuckled softly. "I do not like when destiny does not give me a straight answer however." He said causing both of them to laugh gently.

Their conversations with Androcles and all six of his wives and mates these last weeks had been enlightening to say the least. They had spoken to all of Androcles' wives and mates but they most enjoyed speaking with Sadi, Ne'Veha and Sehri. The three of them were the most physically beautiful to Yokra and Robati and the most open with their thoughts and feelings. All of his wives were incredibly intelligent and beautiful but they suspected that Carisia, Lu'ria and Caliria were rather introverted and more tightly held to their feelings. It was Sadi and Ne'Veha who were the most open and pleasant and Sehri was simply a joy with her bubbly nature and infectious smile.

"What is it you feel Androcles?" Yokra asked. "Hold nothing back from us hesi sepa deevdru." (Our soul son)

Andro met his eyes evenly. "We sensed death sepa opsola." He answered. "If you do not leave within the next few hours there will be much death as a result. That is all we saw."

"That is enough." Yokra stated holding Robati tight. "We will make it so Androcles."

Andro nodded his head in the transmission. "Then we will see you soon." He spoke.

PREMONITION

FORTY-SIX HOURS FROM PRALOR STATION

Andro slid his finger across the large star chart before them, Deion on his right side and Dutkne and Denali on his left with Jomann and Fedor. Murano stood on the opposite side of the chart table now sporting the Union Mark VI ArmorPly. He was breaking it in and getting used to the feel of the amazing armor. He had seen it in action and it was one of those things he had wished his people had thought up and built.

"...Right where we were supposed to be after our first jump." Andro was speaking. "Sadi and Ne'Veha will maintain a wide, crisscrossed course between jumps that will put us on our location in just over forty-six hours." Andro told them. "Armen is doing the same thing behind us but in a much wider pattern to maximize the sensors on SPARTA'S WRATH and keep us within her sensor range. He is sending the feed directly to us so that we do not need to extend our own sensors so far."

"He can do that?" Dutkne asked.

"He says that he can and I will trust him in areas I have no knowledge about." Andro replied. "Sadi once tried to explain to me how the different spatial variables factored into sensor range and I thought my head was going to explode."

"That's not hard to do." Deni spoke from where he stood. "Trying to fill that oversized hole you call a brain is not hard at all."

They all laughed at this with the exception of Murano. They turned to him when he asked the next question for all of them caught the inflection in his voice. "How... how soon before we actually cross the border into what used to be Pralor space Andro?" Murano asked.

Androcles met his eyes. "Thirty-seven hours until we cross the edge of what was once your border. Another nine to the station itself."

Murano was silent for a long moment and then he nodded his head slowly. "I never really thought... I never thought I would be returning to Pralor space in my lifetime." He stated softly.

"There was... there was very little that the Scourge had not touched in some way when we ran. So many planets burning. So many dead. Running was the only option for us really."

No one spoke as they all looked at him, his blue eyes off in another time that they could not imagine. This man was older than all of them combined and he had seen far more than any of them in this room. Murano may not have known it, but they all looked to him as an icon of sorts. A Living Legend. Murano shook his head finally and leaned over the chart table more and touched the screen.

“Murano?” Androcles asked softly looking at him intently.

Murano met his eyes and nodded. “I am fine Androcles.” He stated confidently. “Thank you for asking. This area of our space was not very well traveled to begin with.” He continued as he cleared his head and took a deep breath. “This particular station was on the far reaches of our space back then and the archives that SPARTA'S WRATH carries indicate it was used only sparingly.” He adjusted the screen slightly. “According to the records on SPARTA'S WRATH, once the Scourge swept through this area in force they did not return for another five hundred years. And then it was only a patrol ship. It is like a finger of our former territory that extended out and met Darastrixi territory on one side and Emual territory on the other. Another species that bordered our own.”

“Do we dare ask what happened to these Emual?” Dutkne spoke up.

Murano met his eyes. “The Scourge wiped them out before invading Pralor space.” He answered. “It took them only a month to decimate their entire species. Forty-four billion lives extinguished.”

“Why?” Deion asked.

“They were our friends and they refused to bow to the Scourge.” Murano answered, his voice soft. “The Chief Elder Pralor at the time the Second Scourge war began tried to get them to distance themselves and disavow us but the Emual were a stubborn species and very proud. The few dozen Praetorians besides myself that remained behind could not leave the sectors we were tasked with defending in order to help them. They refuse to bow to the Scourge demands and they paid the price. Their military was only a few hundred ships, mostly lightly armed frigates. They were wiped out in the first hours of the Scourge attack. Twenty-two planets were glassed from orbit and another sixteen were invaded by Scourge forces. The Emual fought bravely and well, but in the end they were not warriors and could not hold against the tide. All for not bowing to the Scourge. This should begin to tell you what it was we were dealing with. What we will one day need to confront once more. They are the personification of evil. They cannot be bargained with and they do not have allies. If you do not bow to their demands, no matter how vile their demands may be, they will obliterate you and your entire species no matter how long it takes.”

The room was silent for a long moment as they all took in Murano’s words and let it sink in. “Nubou lae.” Deion finally muttered aloud voicing what all of them were thinking.

Murano looked and Andro. “I have spent many hours with Sarlana these last days and weeks. What you and Dorian represent, what all of you represent as Praetorians, this must be preserved. She has made me see this. I did not agree with this mission before, but I do now. It is vital that Laren and Ladur be taken out of Darastrixi space. If they were to fall into the hands of the Scourge given what they can do, it would be the single most devastating blow against every species within the universe.”

“That is our intent Murano.” Androcles said.

Murano nodded his head. “I know... but you must give me your word that once we have Laren, Ladur and the others they arrive with, once we have them, we leave immediately. We cannot remain for very long because the Scourge will eventually detect us in some manner.”

“We have no intention of remaining one minute longer than necessary.” Androcles told him. “On that you have my word.”

“Then we will speak no more of it.” He told them. “I just needed to be sure Andro. We are not ready to face them in force. Not now.”

“Understood.” Andro said.

“The only positive thing we can obtain from this station that we do not have now, aside from Laren and Ladur... are the weapons stored there.” Murano tapped on the screen several times and brought up one section of the station before them. “I have reviewed the archives on what this station had in its inventory and it could very well be a potential boon for us.”

“How so?” Jomann asked moving slightly forward.

“This station, because of its remote nature and distance from Pralor Core Space, had a large Praetorian cache on it.” Murano told them. “Very well hidden within the main engineering section to insure that if the station was ever destroyed the weapons would not be used against us. With the weapons in the cache, and the schematics to build more, the Worker drones that we both use can duplicate them quickly.”

“Are they like the weapons that you used on Onterom?” Fedor spoke for the first time.

Murano shook his head quickly. “Hardly.” He replied with a slight grin. “The weapons we used on Onterom, the ones you faced young Fedor, they are basically antiques. Used mainly by Elder Guards assigned to protect the Chief Elders. Delnash refused to even allow them to be updated or duplicated through the years. Something I counseled him against but he did not listen. I imagine that will have changed and once we can give these to our people on Artaaya, production can begin quickly.” Murano tapped the table a few more times and they saw several images begin to flash across the screens. “These are Praetorian weapons and explosives. X1 Particle Assault Rifles and MX4 Particle Magnums. Military grade and very powerful. They fire a small Vendurium round propelled by a Micro Particle Accelerator. Five hundred round magazines for the rifles and forty-five round magazines for the sidearm. We had just begun issuing them as standard weapons to our troops towards the end of the First Scourge War. It is what helped us to win it to be honest. There were so few of us at the end of that war we needed an advantage. These weapons gave us that advantage.”

“They’ve been sitting there for tens of thousands of years Murano.” Jomann spoke. “Are you sure they will still work?”

Murano smiled now. “Oh yes. And if this data is correct there will be enough weapons and ammunition to outfit the entire Durcunusaan Division you have on SPARTA'S WRATH.” He told them. “With the schematics, it should be easy enough for the Worker Drones, your Master Chief Ranor and Armen to replicate similar weapons with known materials to equip the other units we will have by the time we return to your father’s position. At least until Delnash can get our factories on Artaaya working full time.”

Andro grinned. “Oh... Josie Miller will like that.” He said.

Murano looked at him. “You told them they will be there before us.” He said. “Why? We do not need to broadcast our arrival.”

Andro nodded his head. “Better that they don’t know everything.” He told him. “How fast our ships are for one. We’ll get there roughly twelve hours after them, much sooner than they expect.”

“What have you and Dorian sensed Androcles?” Murano asked him. “Now is not the time to hold back from us.”

Andro shook his head. “We are not holding back.” He stated quickly. “We don’t know exactly what it was Murano. It was an odd echo within the Etheric realm. We have never felt it before, but it was powerful and it carried with it the sensation of death. It only just started a day or so ago, but it became more pronounced as we grew closer to the day they were originally supposed to leave Icarava.”

Murano was silent for a long moment and then nodded his head. “If I had to guess, I would say that it has to do with the Scourge. We are able to sense them to some degree and it was never pleasant.” He looked at Andro. “Whatever you may feel, no matter how insignificant it may seem, let Sarlana or I know from now on.”

Andro nodded his head. “Agreed.”

“So are we sticking with the same plan then?” Denali asked.

Andro nodded as he changed the chart screen now. “For the most part it is unchanged.” He told them. “Murano will lead Deion, Fedor, Kalis, Daio and Ridor to this cache with Mari and Eirene in Engineering. Mari and Eirene can access the main computer core from there with our Worker Drones while they prep the munitions. Eirene will be able to link into the cameras all over the station from there and also direct Armen when he arrives. Most of the station will remain dormant since we won’t be going into it. The less power signature the better.”

Murano nodded his head. “Armen will need to bring SPARTA'S WRATH in very close to the station and lower the Shroud. The Cargo Bay Teleporter Pads will not work through the Shroud and SPARTA'S WRATH will need to be within ten thousand meters of the station due the armoring of the Engineering Core.”

“Ansel!” Deion said. “That’s really close.”

“Without the Cargo Bay Teleporter Units on the ship it would take too long to load the weapons out.” Murano told them. “We would have to do it by hand and that would require hundreds of men and additional equipment. We do not want to remain here for very long after we arrive and have secured Laren and Ladur. We will be mysterious and unseen, for we will have APOC drones out covering our flanks and we will know when the Darastrixi enter the system. The Darastrixi however, they will be an unknown and they may bring company that we do not want to meet.”

“Company?” Dutkne asked. “You mean Scourge?”

Murano nodded his head. “Or other Darastrixi that are chasing them.” He replied. “We will be more than a match for any Darastrixi ship that may be chasing them, even two or three, but we do not want to engage them and make matters worse. And if the Scourge show up in force, we will be hard pressed to defend ourselves and the Darastrixi in any fashion. We should leave within twelve hours after we arrive Andro. Just to be safe.”

Androcles nodded his head. “Agreed. We work fast but we work efficiently.”

“If the Scourge do enter the system, we must take Laren and Ladur and however many others we can and leave immediately.” Murano spoke solemnly. “They were never able to recover the plans for this ship or others like it that we intended to build. When they destroyed our homeworld they were too efficient. They took out our main shipyards and Engineering Development Center before realizing it. The VORTEX-Class cruisers were a complete overhaul of the standard class and were... they are much more powerful. The longer we keep the knowledge of this ship from the Scourge, the better it will be.”

“Could a few Scourge ships hurt us that bad Murano?” Denali asked.

Murano shook his head. “Doubtful... but we don’t want to find out.” He answered. “The standard class of this ship could easily fight off a Scourge Squadron, and the VORTEX-Class would decimate them, but if one of their Heavy Cruisers or one of the Scourge Mother Ships enters the area, it will get very ugly, very quickly. And we cannot afford for them to get even remote scans of this ship before we are ready.”

“Armen understands this.” Andro spoke. “All of the personnel Teleport Stations will remain in standby mode while we are on the station. Worst case scenario, everything goes to sibfla and he teleports us back and we jump away.”

Murano nodded. “Good.” He looked around the table. “My caution has roots. It is not because I do not trust in your skills. Any of you. It is because so much time has passed that we do not know what the Scourge could be like now. That is partly why I agreed with this mission. Aside from rescuing Laren and Ladur, the intelligence we can gain from them is invaluable. And it will help us prepare. That does not mean we stick our noses where we should not.”

Denali chuckled at that but nodded his head. “As much as I agree Murano, trouble and the unexpected seemed to have taken root in our family. We just can’t seem to escape it.”

Murano relaxed somewhat now and nodded his head with a small smile. “Yes, that much I do know from being around your father.”

“Our father and our mothers are hanging out there in the Echo Quadrant without a lot of backup. And these Svorag are no walk in the park as we have all seen the reports from father. We know what our priorities are and what we must do. We are on a timetable with them that we cannot miss.” Andro spoke looking around at all of them and saw them nod. “Denali, Jomann Eliani, Sehri, Arduri and Lisisa will backstop Dorian and me when we enter the landing bay that we told Laren and Ladur to go to.” Andro continued. “That is where the probes will be. If they have not already changed, we give them twenty minutes to change into the armor we left for them and then we start moving to extract. Sadi, Ne’Veha, Carisia and Lu’ria will be with Nara in the Central Control room of the landing bay where we land. They will be monitoring everything we are doing while Anthar, Majeir and Marux cover them. Caydren and Cinol will protect the PREMONITION. Jeth, Tharua and Soren will cover Elynth and Ryner since they are the most experienced in close quarters fighting behind Elynth.”

Murano was impressed. Androcles had put together quite the plan once they had the configuration of the station. It used limited personnel, but also his most experienced people and those who knew what the others would do in any given situation. As with Martin and his team, they made a very deadly group that even the Praetorians of old would be hard pressed to defeat. Combined with their dragons and the way Androcles utilized them, it would be very close to impossible for anything other than a large, full scale assault to defeat them. Murano also knew that everyone was going over their part of the plan wherever on the ship they were and no one would be unprepared.

Andro stood up to his full height. “In and out in less than twelve hours.” He spoke.

“If all goes according to plan.” Deion said softly.

Denali looked at him. “Why do you always have to state the obvious fervon?” He asked.

“I’m just saying!” Deion retorted.

Denali’s hand flashed up and he slapped his younger brother in the back of the head playfully. “Don’t jinx us before we start fervon.”

All of them began to laugh softly as Denali caught Deion in a brotherly headlock and squeezed his head and allowed the humor to calm their nerves and prepare them even more.

All while the fickle Gods of Fate laughed in the background and began to shape the future.

ICARAVA

DARASTRIXI HOMEWORLD

DARASTRIXETHE (DRAGONBLOOD) SPACE

DARASTRIXETHE-CLASS DREADNOUGHT LEVXIERIV (ENCHANTRESS)

The largest Darastrixian warship built and easily a match for the even new Pralor VECTOR-Class Attack Cruiser, though they did not know that ship existed just yet.

The DARASTRIXETHE-Class Dreadnought was nearly nine thousand meters in length and armed with the most advanced weaponry, shields and engines that the Darastrixian had ever developed. Only thirty-four of these ships existed due to an agreement with the Scourge to keep the manufacture limited to a set number. All of the senior Darastrixian military leaders knew that it was only a ploy to keep the Darastrixian as a minimal threat to them and they were stunned when their ruling government had endorsed and agreed to it. To counter that fool agreement, the Darastrixian military poured all of their vast knowledge and skill into building these ships to be able to combat any threat to their people and still survive. It would take a concentrated Scourge attack to think of destroying one of these ships and the cost to the Scourge would be very high indeed.

Much higher than they believed and Inidra Dytin Cadat had made them even deadlier during his tenure as Chief of the Darastrixian military. (General)

Dytin had handpicked each and every officer and crew member of this ship and the three MALAKTA-Class (ETERNAL) Fast Cruisers that were its main escort. He had trained all of the officers and many of the crews had served with him for centuries. They were also solidly loyal to him and followed the same philosophy that he and his blessed wife did. The same philosophy that made them almost outcasts among their own people. A philosophy that billions of their people followed in secret because it was considered old and fruitless in its teachings. Over the last weeks, thousands of family members of his crews had been secreted away to one location in preparation for this very moment. Dytin was a career military officer and always planned for the unexpected. When Aviel contacted him only ninety minutes ago to inform him that the time had come, Dytin did not hesitate. He gave the order that would send thousands of their people into the unknown and quite possibly make all of them criminals.

“...Status of our ships?” Dytin barked out turning his head as the doors to his bridge opened and he saw Aviel move onto the bridge briskly, Nahko clinging tightly to his arm a look of anxiousness on her face.

“All crew members are aboard General.” The voice responded. “They are awaiting our order.”

“And the transports?” Dytin asked.

“All of them have sent the signal and are awaiting the final order.” The voice replied again.

Dytin nodded his head in approval as Aviel moved up beside him. He had chosen his men well and now that was paying off in a big way. The six transports would be departing from six different locations to avoid drawing attention to them. It was not uncommon at all to see the Darastrixian military transports moving thousands of men and women in training drills and this would look to be just that to the unknowing.

“Just under two hours.” Dytin spoke looking at Aviel. “Better than I expected.”

“So we are ready?” Aviel asked

Dytin nodded his head. “Are you prepared for what we are about to do Aviel my friend?” He asked.

Aviel met his gaze evenly. “Are you old friend?”

Dytin took a deep breath and nodded his head without hesitation. “The Lorsvek ar Sepas is upon us. All we have believed for centuries is here. Yes, I am ready. They could very well brand us traitors Aviel.”

Aviel nodded his head in agreement. “Or heroes. Depending on your point of view.”

Dytin looked at him and laughed softly. “Indeed.”

All of them turned when the doors to the bridge opened once more, but this time the two security officers always posted outside the doors were tossed back into the bridge and sent hurtling across the bridge to slam painfully into the bulkhead. Dytin's eyes were wide until he saw the reason for this. Laren strode onto the bridge with barely a pause, her multicolored eyes blazing in anger. Dytin watched her and was once more struck by the almost surreal beauty of this child. She wore a simple tan jumpsuit that did nothing to hide the lush, womanly figure she had, her black hair pulled into a long braid and draped over one shoulder. Many members of his bridge crew were getting their first look at the Dahakoan and to say they were shocked was an understatement. They knew that she existed, but almost none of them knew Laren was a female. She did not appear fully Darastrixi and this was obvious by the soft skin that replaced and then merged with the even softer colored scales along the edges of her face and down her neck. With all eyes upon her, Laren marched right over to where they stood and it was Nahko who broke away and grasped her arms gently.

Dytin Cadat had met with Laren once, traveling to the Livjiai Sulevfu facility under the auspice of an historical records search for the Sand Strider Battalions. At first he was no different than Aviel, but soon he had warmed up to her and after only a few hours of speaking with her he too had become enraptured. Her eyes and demeanor, and that of Ladur spoke of wisdom and knowledge that they should not have had. Her physical appearance aside, her body was a combination of Darastrixi and something else, Lycavorian more than likely Nahko had told him and this was the first thing that others noticed. Besides her breath stealing beauty. Dytin had always believed deeply in the Lorsvek ar Sepas, it was the cornerstone of philosophy that he and his wife had followed and bestowed upon their children. Just as Aviel and Nahko had done. Just as so many others had done. Yet seeing Laren before him now, the rebirth of the Dahakoan, and after speaking with her and Ladur for nearly seven hours Dytin had become a true believer.

"Laren what is it?" Nahko gasped knowing that only she would be allowed to touch her in any meaningful sort of way. Aside from quick greetings with others in the usual Darastrixi fashion, Laren allowed no one who was not female to cling to her for any length of time unless it was something she wanted.

Laren was staring directly at Dytin and he suddenly became very uncomfortable by this. "I do not need a babysitter!" She snarled almost angrily.

Dytin looked stunned and he moved closer to her. "I do not understand." He spoke. "What is a... babysitter Laren?"

"The officer from your Sand Strider unit who met Ladur and I in the landing bay!" Laren hissed. "The pompous one!"

Dytin nodded his head. "Matum Dariel. A Yobhalcho within the Strider Battalions. His skills are unmatched and he is a fast riser within the ranks. Well respected and liked." (Major)

"He is arrogant and pompous!" Laren snapped. "He told me I was to do exactly as he said. That Ladur was to remain in the pens with other Strider Vrrarhoimpa. That he would accompany me wherever on the ship I went. Will he watch while I relieve myself as well? Or while I sleep? I will not be penned in as I was at the Livjiai Sulevfu facility. I wish to explore and see things that I have never seen! And no nubous igord will stop me!"

Dytin looked shocked at Laren's use of another language, one he did not understand, but the meaning was unmistakably clear in her tone. He glanced at Nahko with questions in his eyes.

Nahko grinned sheepishly. "As time has passed and she has grown closer with the others in the Etheric realm, her ability to use their language has improved immeasurably." She said.

"So it would seem." Dytin spoke. "Do I wish to know what name she used to call my officer?"

Nahko shook her head quickly. "Probably not."

Dytin chuckled and moved even closer to Laren now. "And where is Yobhalcho Dariel now if I may ask Laren Ti'shara?"

Laren calmed somewhat and lowered her eyes briefly. "I... I left him with the medical technicians outside the landing bay." She answered almost shyly. "He tried to restrain me and..."

Dytin then did something that Aviel would not have dared do without first asking her. Aviel had spent much time with them since discovering they existed and Laren had grown quite comfortable in his presence. She didn't hesitate now when he greeted her in the Darastrixi fashion and nor did he, but Aviel would always wait an extra second for her to initiate the greeting just to be safe. Dytin reached out and took Laren's hand from Nahko and placed it over his heart while at the same time he placed his large hand over her chest and leaned over to touch her forehead with his own. Amazingly, Aviel saw Laren's body relax somewhat, the tension leaving her lithe frame as Dytin held the greeting until Laren relaxed completely and she looked at him shyly as they parted and their hands dropped lower but remained touching.

“Forgive me Laren Ti’shara.” Dytin spoke softly. “That is my doing.”

“I do not need someone to protect me Inidra.” Laren spoke now, her voice even and calm as she looked at him. Laren had spoken with her brothers and her father before meeting him and all of them had nothing but words of respect and honor for Dytin Cadat, more so her father who had actually served under his command several centuries ago. When they had spoken, after he had gotten over the initial shock of seeing her, he had spoken to her as an equal in everything. This had only confirmed her father and brother’s words and Laren had no doubts that she could trust him in every way.

“You and Ladur are Dahakoan Laren.” Dytin spoke, both of them hearing the soft gasps from many different men and women on the bridge. “You will be looked at differently. Now that you have come aboard, word will spread quickly that you are among us.”

“I am still me!” Laren protested. “Ladur is still himself! We wish to sit and watch the stars as they go by! We wish to walk and see this wondrous ship! I do not need some silly male who thinks he is better than me telling me what I can and cannot do!”

Dytin’s lips curled into a smile. “You did not hurt him too badly did you?” He asked knowing of the skills that she possessed.

Laren smiled shyly once more and shook her head. “More his pride than anything else.” She answered.

“He misunderstood my intent.” Dytin spoke. “I never meant to restrict you while here. I meant for him to escort you so that you did not get lost and so that others did not swarm you with attention. Your disposition when confronted with this is known to Aviel and Nahko and the others, but not those you are now among.”

“I have gotten better!” Laren defended herself and Dytin nodded his head with a small laugh.

“Yes you have child.” He spoke. “And for that I am thankful. I do not need half my crew going to the infirmary to treat their injuries.”

“I do not wish to be treated differently.” Laren told him. “I don’t want others looking at me as if I am an oddity.”

“You are Dahakoan.” Nahko spoke now. “You are different Laren. As is Ladur. That can never be changed now.”

Dytin saw her eyes and the brief sadness in them and he squeezed her hand causing her to look at him. “Once we are gone from here and I am sure that no one follows us, I will give you a tour of my ship.” He told her seeing her eyes light up in delight. “Ladur as well, and your parents if you wish.” He lifted her hand in his and squeezed it even harder. “I will make it so that you have as normal a life as you can while in my care Laren Ti’shara. And I will speak to the major about how to interact with you, but I must insist that he escort you. You can go where you wish anywhere on this ship, but allow him to come with you, if for nothing else, in case you get lost.”

“You would do this?” Laren asked.

Dytin nodded his head with a smile. “I’m sure your father would enjoy it and just being able to walk somewhere besides the halls of the Livjiai Sulevfu will please your mother to no end.”

Laren smiled now and nodded her head. “I would like that.” She spoke.

Dytin matched her smile. “Good. Then give me an hour. Two at most and I will join you in the forward lounge.”

Smiling brightly Laren nodded and turned around instantly and began to walk off the bridge. Aviel stepped closer to him and Nahko and nodded to his longtime friend. “You handled that well my friend.”

“Perhaps.” Dytin spoke as Nahko looked at him.

“She allows you to greet her in the manner of our people with no hesitation.” Nahko told him. “That is no small feat. Only with Aviel and Dalis Sulryn does she not hesitate.”

“Dahakoan she may be,” Dytin spoke softly. “But she is still a young Maiden who wants to experience all that she can. Yet she knows she cannot because of who she is. Of who Ladur is.”

Nahko turned to the doors Laren had exited and then back to Dytin. “It will be better when she is with them.” She said softly. “She will not feel so alone and out of place.”

“Yobhalcho Dariel is the finest hand to hand combatant that I have ever seen.” Dytin spoke once more. “No one has been able to best him in decades. And she defeats him as if he is but a child.”

“I believe she gets that from the other Dahakoan.” Aviel spoke now.

Dytin nodded his head. “And it makes me shudder to know that there are warriors out there who can do these things.”

“Frightened old friend?” Aviel asked.

“Terrified is a better word.” Dytin answered.

Aviel chuckled softly. “Then at least I know I’m not alone.”

Dytin shook his head. “No, you are not alone. We are ready and the unknown awaits, so you are not alone.”

Aviel nodded his head. “Then let us do what we came to do.”

VENTORI UNION ADHOC BASE 1.5 KILOMETERS OUTSIDE JORLARI

Being wolves, sleep was not something that was needed as often or as much so it was no surprise to Wayonn when he found Martin that morning by the shore of the large lake with an ever present mug of Aricia’s coffee in his hand. As with Wayonn, who had been addicted to the beverage ever since being introduced to it, Martin drank the coffee like it was water. He wore only his lower body armor now but Wayonn could detect the recent scent of mild soap in the air mixed in with the scents of honey and lavender and coco telling Wayonn that Anja and Aricia had shared the shower with him. Wayonn knew Martin had smelled him coming long before he got close but waited until he was settled to the ground beside him before speaking.

“Wayonn.” Martin spoke looking at him. “I can’t begin to thank you enough for...”

Wayonn held up his hand with a smile. “You would be thanking me for something which has brought me almost as much joy as it has for you Martin my boy.” He spoke. “Discovering that they lived was a dream I never imagined.”

“Me neither.” Martin echoed softly.

“They could not stay awake could they?” Wayonn asked with a smile.

Martin shook his head with an equally large smile. “Meral was babbling out questions that didn’t make any sense when I finally ushered them off to bed.”

“I wish to thank you for allowing me to be part of that.” Wayonn said.

Martin met his eyes. “You were like a brother to my grandfather.” He said. “There was never a question of whether or not you would be there. You should know by now that I consider you family. That we all consider you family.”

Wayonn nodded his head. “I have not felt this alive in millennia Martin.” He told him. “It is glorious.”

Martin nodded his head. “It sure is.”

Wayonn looked out over the lake. “You have not told them I take it?”

Martin shook his head. “I’m trying to figure out how to do that. It’s not every day you are told that you think a Pralor Elder is the reason they lost a son and a brother. And that you have some pretty good proof to back up that theory.”

“It is not a theory Martin.” Wayonn said. “He is responsible.”

“I know.” Martin agreed. “But I’m still trying to bask in the sensations that they are actually here and alive.”

Wayonn smiled at this and nodded. “I as well.” He replied. “They will have to be told however. About the Svorag too.”

Martin nodded once more. “I know.”

“You spoke with Dysea before she returned I take it?” Wayonn asked.

Martin looked at him and nodded. “Lycavorians from Ventori with a Pralor warship?” He said. “That can’t be good. What was your perception of them?”

“Confused. Shocked.” Wayonn answered immediately. “They were not expecting us to be on that ship. And they certainly were not prepared to see two who had been turned by Alpha wolves. As with those Lycavorians here, they appeared to believe all Alphas were long dead.”

Martin nodded. “That’s what Melda Min said as well. Which means they were expecting the corvette to be piloted by Pralors.”

“We left under cover of darkness and all of us were wearing cloaks. There is no way they could have known who or what we were.” Wayonn spoke. “They were being watched before we ever got there.”

“The question remains... why?” Martin said. “And who else knows who they really are besides Tobia.”

“Tobia would never tell anyone Martin.” Wayonn spoke quickly.

Martin shook his head just as fast. “No, I don’t believe she would either.” He told him. “Someone else knows who they are though and it wasn’t Delnash. We’ve come too far for him to play games now. He knows it and I know it. Our fates are entwined now.”

“To what end?” Wayonn asked softly.

Martin nodded his head. “That’s a good question.” He looked at Wayonn. “Nalmos said they believed that the Alphas had died out over a hundred thousand years ago. If the records you were able to inspect from SPARTA’S WRATH are accurate then the Pralors brought them here around that same time. These Lycavorians you and Dysea saw were shocked to see you for the same reason. What does that tell you?”

Wayonn met his eyes. “That Alphas were among them when they first arrived here on Ventori.”

Martin nodded his head. “And if that is the case, then where did they all go?” Martin said. “If they were here when our people were first brought to Ventori by the Pralors, then where did they all go? They didn’t just pick up and move away. Instinct alone would have made them stay here and protect and carve out a life with the Beta wolves.”

Wayonn nodded. “Agreed.”

“Who trained these Lycavorians to fly a Pralor ship?” Martin asked. “The Lycavorians here were barely into the industrial stage when the Svorag struck. A hundred years at most. There’s no way they trained themselves to fly that ship. And like Avatar 27 told you and Dysea, there is no way they took that ship while it was in space. Not to mention that this ship is one built at the shipyards on Nepneu according to what Delnash sent to Dysea after you spoke to him.”

“You are suggesting that Pralors gave them the training?” Wayonn asked.

“Who else could?” Martin said. “No one out here has the tech that you do, or the know how to use it.”

Wayonn met his eyes. “Lorendo?” He gasped in shock. “But why? For what purpose? He despises our people! This is evident in his actions and words.”

Martin nodded his head. “And more than one despot in history has used people they consider beneath them to accomplish their goals.”

Wayonn thought about that for a moment and then nodded his head slowly. “In that you are correct.” He agreed.

“There are far too many coincidences and they all point back to that fat fuck Lorendo.” Martin spoke. “He has his pudgy fingers in more dirt than anyone knows about.”

Wayonn looked out over the lake. “Murano should have let you kill him on Onterom.” He said softly.

Martin shook his head. “Then we would never have found out what he is responsible for.” He answered. “Or what he is still involved in. We...”

Martin felt the familiar tingle against his shields and recognized Anja’s resonance instantly. Each of his wives and mates had a unique resonance that he had burned into his memory and each of them could enter through his Etheric shields because of this. It allowed them to communicate seamlessly with each other.

Lover?

Anja, what’s wrong? Martin asked detecting the slight inflection in her voice.

Lover you had better come to the MED Building. We have discovered some things that you and Wayonn will want to see.

Martin looked at Wayonn who could detect the tremors in the Etheric realm of their very private conversation but not the content and he was looking at Martin intently. On our way.

“Anja and the others have found something.” He spoke as he rose to his feet.

Wayonn rose instantly. “Why do I not like the way you say that.” He asked.

Martin shook his head. "Something in Anja's voice." He told him. "I didn't like it."

Wayonn shook his head as they began to walk back towards the base. "We just can't seem to catch a break in any way, shape or form." He stated.

Martin grinned. "Welcome to my life." He said.

"...confirm the last DNA sequence Perlyea?" Anja spoke from the terminal in front of her.

The ADHOC Medical Building was standard for Union forces across the board, but the one they were now in had been transferred to the ARC ROYAL by Androcles' order from the stores on the SPIRIT OF HADARIA. Andro knew very well his Hadarian mother loved to tinker and do off hand research and the ADHOC Medical Buildings assigned to the SPIRIT all had an additional section that was used strictly for scientific research and other medical needs. The Research Section had one solid wall of computer stations, several medical beds and a number of different Medical Research Consoles as well as just about every piece of medical equipment that existed. All of them had access to the single Hadarian Combined Core 1200 Series Medical Computer. Perlyea was standing beside Duewa at one of the Research stations while Anuk and Radra were sitting at two different computers a few feet from Anja's main station.

Duewa pointed to one of the smaller screens in front of where they stood and Perlyea glanced at the screen. She ran her finger down the smooth screen, adjusting something and then nodded her head and looked up.

"The last sequence matches! Ninety-nine point six percentile." Perlyea spoke up. "These instruments are amazing!" She declared with the look of a child with a new toy.

Anja spun around in her chair and looked at them. "Then that is all of them." She stated.

Perlyea nodded as she picked up and looked at the data pad and then stepped around the research station. "Yes. All of the Tasmor are confirmed to have come from a Light Pickett Frigate that was lost six months ago. We thought it taken by the Kintaur in an ambush along our border."

"Total crew?" Anja asked her.

"Fifty-three." Perlyea answered.

The main door to the MED building opened and they all turned to see the Durcunusaan officer lead Saydia, Tobia and Anthylea into the main room, followed quickly by Namiri and Emylea. Anja and the other wolves in the room could immediately detect the heavy scent of sex and Anja hid her smile. The three women looked tired and their clothing appeared to have been thrown on quickly, but much to their credit and poise however, none of them appeared ashamed in the least that it was obvious they had been enjoying each other's company. Anja was like most Lycavorians, turned or pureblood, in that it did not matter to them who a person chose to spend their nights with or what they did. Tobia was Mari's mother yes, and her love for Murano was still very powerful, but they were not mated and Tobia had the right to seek comfort wherever she chose to seek it until she could be with the one who her heart called for. Obviously she found that comfort with Saydia and Anthylea and this did not bother Anja in the least. When Martin was not with them, she and her fellow Queens found comfort with each other as often as they could.

The back entrance to the MED building opened now as well and Martin and Wayonn were through the door quickly, followed by Danny and Julie. Anja rose from her chair and moved over to greet him and he leaned over to kiss her warmly as his arm curled around her waist. For'mya had gone with Dysea to the ARC ROYAL very early this morning so that she could requisition more supplies and it left just her and Aricia with Martin this morning. They had shared a very loving few hours after For'mya and Dysea had gone, a few hours that Aricia and Anja were still quivering in bliss over. He could and did love them more thoroughly than they thought possible at times. They then shared a long, warm shower together, a shower where Martin had simply adorned their bodies with soft licks and kisses of love as he washed them. They then they had returned the same action to him, licking and kissing his powerful body all over as they washed him.

Martin drew back from their kiss and Anja ran her long fingers over his bearded jaw in affection while she stared at his handsome face. "What's going on Red?" He asked finally.

"You have to make me a promise first." Anja told him.

Martin tilted his head sideways when she said that. "I'm not going to like this am I?" He asked. "You only ask me to promise you something when I am not going to like what you are going to tell me."

Anja smiled. "No Lover." She answered. "Not by a longshot. Neither are you Wayonn."

"I feared that was the case." Wayonn spoke softly.

"Anja what is this all about?" Tobia asked from where she stood next to Saydia. Anthylea had moved over beside Atropos along the side wall.

Martin detected her scent at that moment but like Anja he didn't outwardly show that he could tell what she had been doing. It was none of his business and she and Murano were not married. At least not yet. Tobia had made it very clear how she felt about Murano and what she intended once they were reunited, but if she could find comfort with the two Tasmor women then Martin and no one else was going to begrudge her that.

"Everyone should sit down." Anja spoke calmly. "This is going to take a little while."

"Where's Aricia?" Martin asked.

Anja held his hand as she led him over to the table. "She will be joining us shortly. She is bringing down the reason that we discovered what we have so quickly." She saw the confused look in Martin's eyes and squeezed his hand. "Trust me."

It was still very early and most of the camp had not even risen yet, so coffee, hot tea and Danishes were already arranged on the large conference room style table. Anja waited until they had all taken chairs and then she sat on Martin's left side, the chair to his right empty for the moment until Aricia arrived. She looked over to Perlyea who sat beside Anthylea.

"Perlyea... you should probably start us off." Anja spoke. She glanced at Martin. "I gave full access to Perlyea to use our equipment and she and Duewa worked through the night on the information that our people were sending in from the two sites."

Martin nodded his head. He almost never questioned Anja when it came to medical matters or what she chose to work on. She could talk circles around him in that regard and he knew it. "Ok." He said with a nod.

Perlyea slid the data pad across to Saydia in front of Anthylea. "We have discovered where our people came from Sovereign Regent. All of them were part of the crew of a light frigate we thought ambush and taken by the Kintaur along our border six months ago. We have confirmed the identity of the seven Tasmor that have been recovered from the first site. King Leonidas' forces only just secured the lower levels of the second site a few hours ago. There are two teams of our people working with the Lycavorians to restore what information we can."

Anja looked at Martin. "Kasdan is working to restore full power to the second site. He had to remotely shut down the power reactor in order to deplete the oxygen within the lower levels. It needed to be restarted cold and that happened an hour ago. He should have it back up to full power by mid-morning."

Saydia looked up from the data pad. "If our people were not taken by the Kintaur then who took them?" She asked softly. "We received the automated emergency beacon but when we sent additional ships to investigate the frigate was gone. No traces of it were ever found."

"We don't know what happened to the ship Sovereign Regent..." Perlyea spoke. "But we do know who took our people."

Saydia looked at her. "Who?" She demanded.

Anja looked at Martin. "The Svorag took them." She told him. "All of them."

"The Godzilla looking lizard fuckers took them?" Danny spoke now leaning forward in his chair with wide eyes.

Saydia looked quickly at Tobia who shook her head just as quickly. "You do not want to know." She told her in a soft voice.

Martin leaned forward in his chair as well now and he looked at Anja. "Red, tell me you are joking." He said. "Taking a ground station on a planet is one thing. Bombing the cities on Ventori and then invading with ground forces doesn't take a whole lot of coordination, but you are talking about a precise, surgical operation to capture a ship while it is in space. That takes planning and the people with the proper skills to execute it."

"Androcles did it." Anja stated confidently. "And he took a ship five times the size of this frigate."

This news brought looks of astonishment from the Tasmor that were present, especially Anthylea, Namiri and Emylea since the three of them were among the finest trained Tasmor ground fighters that lived. Even they knew that to conduct such an operation, the planning and the skills needed had to be utterly perfect.

“You can’t compare what Andro did with this!” Martin protested. “He and I have been working on that plan for over five years. We had it refined down to the last second. We trained countless hours on the execution for it! The Svorag aren’t... they just aren’t capable of that level of execution. At least not from what we have seen.” Martin continued to look at Anja and saw the set of her jaw. “Are they?”

Anja nodded her head slowly. “And I would have agreed with you Lover.” She told him holding out the data pad to him as Perlyea handed one to Saydia and then Tobia. “Until I saw this. Kesyla left her decryption program running last night. It got to the security core data banks about five hours ago. This is what was discovered.”

Martin watched on the small screen as half a dozen Svorag moved through the entrance of what he now knew was the first research site. All of them were walking quite normally, not slouched over as all the other Svorag they had faced, and all of them held Pralor data scrolls and the miniature P1 Pralor computers.

“We were shocked as well Martin.” Kesyla spoke from her chair beside Anuk.

“There are logs as well.” Perlyea spoke now. “Logs detailing the assault and taking of our ship. Among other things.”

“I was right all along Martin. And this time I wish I wasn’t.” Anja spoke once more causing him to look at her. “Lorendo had no idea what he was doing when he made these monsters. And because of his pompous and holier than thou, attitude he lost control of the research being done.”

“I do... I do not understand.” Saydia spoke up now. “The Pralor people are responsible for making these monsters!”

“You encountered them before Saydia. Perlyea told me you have. They have taken your people before?” Anja spoke to her.

Saydia nodded her head slowly. “Almost two thousand in the last decade.” She answered with wide eyes. “This is one... this is one of the reasons that relations with the Pralor people were never truly pursued, aside from their other faults. We suspected that they had a hand in creating these monsters and unleashing them against us. Now you are telling me it is true!”

Tobia was about to answer when Anja shook her head instantly and kept Tobia from trying to defend her people. “No... not the Pralor people Saydia Daret. One Pralor man. One very fat little ronnus with a God power complex.” Anja told her quickly. “Delnash had no idea Lorendo was doing this.” She told her. “None of the other Pralor people did. This kind of work is banned in their society just as it is in ours.”

Saydia looked at Tobia. “Tobia this is true?” She gasped.

Tobia nodded her head relief filling her. “Any type of genetic alteration was banned from our society when we settled on Artaaya. The decision was unanimous.” She explained.

Saydia looked back to Anja confused. “But isn’t that what we did when Perlyea used the Lycavorian DNA?”

Perlyea shook her head. “I did not alter their DNA Saydia. I only enhanced it and made it compatible with our own on a more robust nature.”

“Isn’t that the same thing?” Saydia asked.

It was Anja who spoke first now, speaking up for the woman who she had grown fond of very quickly. In many ways Perlyea reminded Anja of herself and Duewa, and that is why they worked so well together.

“There is a huge difference between altering and enhancing genetic material.” Anja spoke. “It is a thin line I will admit, but ultimately it is the product that determines how it will be seen. I have reviewed Perlyea’s work Sovereign Regent, and to be honest it is brilliant work within the scope of what the Tasmor technological advances can give to her. And it worked.”

Anthylea’s eyes grew wide and she came to her feet now. “It... it worked!” She gasped. Her head snapped around when she felt Saydia grasp her hand tightly her own eyes wide.

“Perlyea?” Saydia stammered. “Is this... is this true?”

Perlyea nodded her head. “I can relate to you the details at a later time Regent Daret, but for now we must remain focused on this problem, for it does involve our people now.”

Saydia nodded her head. “Of course. Yes.”

Danny looked up from the pad that she had given to Martin, who in turn had handed it to him after looking at it briefly. “Anja, these are not like the fuglies we tangled with on Twelve Alpha or Onterom.”

“No they are not.” Wayonn spoke from where he stood just behind Martin. “Anja they are walking fully upright and...”

Anja nodded her head before he could finish. “They have evolved.” She spoke.

“Come again Red?” Martin asked now.

“It’s what Lorendo was afraid of and what he has been trying to hide Lover.” Anja said. “He lost control of the initial experiment, probably due to lax security and medical protocols, but he lost control of it. It may have taken decades or even centuries given the time frame we know the Pralor people have been dealing with them, but the ultimate conclusion is he lost control of at least a major part of the whatever idiotic experiment he was attempting and it got loose. Once he could no longer control it, he tried to cover it up and erase he had any part in it.”

“Onterom?” Wayonn asked softly.

Anja nodded her head. “If I had to guess, after viewing what logs Avi has been able to decrypt from the station, the infected Pralor scientists there had full knowledge of what they were doing. That is why he killed them.”

“Once he discovered Anja and Duewa had revealed the basis for a cure, he could not afford those in stasis on Onterom to reveal what they had been working on.” Radra spoke up now.

Martin nodded his head. “I got all that.” Martin said. “He’s a squirmy, rotten piece of sibfla and he’s so dirty I wouldn’t touch him with a ten foot pole. What does that have to do with this?”

“He admitted that some of the Svorag were showing signs of retaining their memories from before they were infected.” Anja said.

“Yeah so?”

“They haven’t begun to just retain their memories Lover.” Anja told him. “Like I said, they have evolved. They are evolving. And creating more of themselves.”

“Come again?” Martin almost shouted. “How the hell did we find all this out in just the last few hours?”

The soft buzzing sound caused the Tasmor to jump slightly as the soft bluish white light of a Teleporter filled the corner of the MED Center and then was gone, leaving Aricia holding tightly to the arm of the breathtaking blond woman. Jacina held Aricia’s arms and steadied herself while taking deep breaths. Martin stood up from the table and moved to them instantly, grasping both of their arms gently. “Saaurano?” He questioned her.

Aricia looked at him with those gorgeous azure blue eyes and she smiled. “Beloved, you remember Jacina.” She said.

Martin nodded. “Of course I do.” He answered looking at Jacina. Her long blond hair looked healthy and radiant while her dazzling blue eyes were bright and alert. The Fleet uniform didn’t do much to hide her incredible figure, and Martin knew Jacina had drawn the interest of many young wolves on the ARC ROYAL who found her enticing even after what had happened to her.

Jacina looked at him and smiled as best she could. “King Leonidas.” She said in greeting.

Martin grinned at her. “Takes some getting used too, I know.” He told her. “Deep breaths helped me get rid of the nausea pretty quickly.”

Jacina nodded and did just that, drawing in another half a dozen deep breaths slowly that made the nausea all but disappear. She glanced at him with happy eyes then and smiled. “Thank you.” She said.

Martin reached up and placed his large hand against the side of her cheek and hair. “What are you doing here?” He asked.

“I came to help.” Jacina answered.

Since her brazen rescue from the Svorag by these very men and women Jacina had found new purpose in her life with them. She steadfastly refused to return to Artaaya for fear of her life, especially after discovering what Lorendo had done to their comrades and friends. Both she and Recia had elected almost immediately to remain on the ARC ROYAL. Their recovery had been arduous, more so for Recia due to the extent of her transformation, but both of them were completely free of the Svorag virus thanks to these people. While Recia chose to remain alone most of the time, Jacina had spent considerable time with Aricia in these last weeks. They had become very good friends of a sort, both of them feeling a special connection that they neither understood nor cared why it had happened. Spending time with Aricia also meant spending time with Martin, Anja and For'mya and the other Queens before they had departed. When with them all together, Jacina felt an unnatural sense of peace wrap around her. She felt so comfortable with them, almost as if they were her family. Her own mother and father had been to the ship several times to visit her, but overcoming nine hundred years of lost time wasn't easy and they were proceeding slowly so as not to overwhelm their daughter. The love they had for her was still powerful and without question and they spoke almost every day via the QCR, but at this moment Jacina felt far safer and more comfortable with Aricia and the others and both her parents agreed that she should stay on the ship for her own well-being and safety. Jacina had even begun to get back into working in the ARC ROYAL's Research Labs and was thoroughly enjoying the new lease on life that they had given to her.

Martin looked confused and he looked at Aricia. "I don't understand." He said just as Anja came up alongside him.

Anja didn't hesitate and kissed Jacina on her cheek affectionately while taking her hand. "You want to know why we have the answers we do." Anja said. "She is standing right here."

"Now I am really confused." Martin said.

It was Aricia who now snapped out with her hand and slapped his face playfully while her eyes shown on him with love and adoration. "Then sit down Beloved and we will explain it." She told him. Everyone chuckled softly at this action and Helen couldn't help but shake her head from where she stood beside Wayonn.

Aricia had found something unique in Jacina. It was friendship yes, but not on such a deep level as she shared with her fellow Queens. This was different, almost as if Jacina was a member of their family but on a level like Sadi or Ne'Veha. Almost like a daughter in some ways. This emotion had passed to all of them over the course of a few days and it was not something that they had let slip away. All of them felt Jacina had been put among them for a reason, that reason had just not been revealed yet.

Martin returned to his chair still very confused and he looked at Danny who also had questions in his dark eyes. Martin shrugged his broad shoulders as Anja pulled Jacina over to the table beside her and Aricia took her spot to Martin's right.

"Sovereign Regent allow me to introduce Jacina." Anja spoke once more. "She is a Pralor as you have no doubt have guessed. We rescued her and another researcher from Onterom. She had been infected by the Svorag there but we managed to discover a cure for that strain of the virus that helped her to recover fully."

"You and Duewa found a cure." Radra spoke from her chair. "Take credit where it is due Anja."

"Will this cure work for everyone Queen Anja?" Saydia asked.

Anja shook her head. "Unfortunately no. The Svorag virus is very virulent and mutative in nature. In order to consider making a serum that will cure everyone, we would need the base formula that was originally used to create them. That we don't have. What Duewa and I needed to make the serum for Jacina and Recia was in the computer banks on the station. Combined with what we had from our other encounter we were able to fashion the serum. It was luck really." Anja smiled briefly as she ushered Jacina to the chair beside her. "Anyway... Jacina was assigned to the Pralor Research Station we discovered there. Not all of the Researchers that Lorendo had there were privy to what he was really doing, but all of them were working on the project in some manner."

"I was... I am a Botanical Molecular Biologist." Jacina told everyone in the room. "My specific field was Botanical Molecular Genetics and how to improve the genetic structure of different botanical species to make them stronger and healthier."

"Red?" Martin asked now looking at her.

"Jacina was in the MED BAY on the ARC ROYAL last night for a standard checkup." Anja spoke. "Duewa had returned prior and was working on the formulas we discovered in the computer cores at the first Research Site. She happened to see what Duewa was working on and recognized the genetic formulas and enzyme protein codes."

"So?" Martin asked once more.

"My work on Onterom was focused on one plant." Jacina told him. "This particular plant, a flower actually, was discovered to have different healing properties within its genetic coding that were unlike anything we had discovered before. I was tasked with breaking down the core DNA molecules and separating them. I was told it was to infuse the many different species of fauna on Artaaya with a more robust ability to survive and to help crops to grow faster and produce more."

Perlyea nodded her head. “We have done this on Danerav Sovereign Regent.” She spoke now. She looked at Martin. “To improve crops and such. We took aspects of certain plants and added it to the irrigation methods to improve durability and productivity of other plants. It was quite successful.”

Jacina nodded. “That was what we thought we were working for as well.” Jacina said looking at her briefly. “Recia, myself and others like us.”

Jacina felt Anja’s hand on her shoulder and glanced at her to see her smiling warmly. The touch of her hand was warm and it immediately put Jacina even more at ease. She took a deep breath and turned back to look at the others seated at the table.

“We did not know what was happening in the levels below us.” Jacina spoke. “All we were told was that additional experiments were being performed using our information and samples in order to make a viable compound that we could use on Artaaya and our other colonies. One that would work on all the different samples from the three worlds. When I saw what Duewa was working on I asked her about it. When Duewa told me, I realized what was really happening on Onterom and what we were doing.”

Martin leaned back in his chair shaking his head and he looked at Anja. He saw her nod her head in confirmation and he felt the pit of his stomach twist and become hollow. “Same old story Lover. Just different players.” She said softly.

“Fuck me.” Danny hissed knowing just what they were talking about instantly.

Almost everyone at the table were looking at them with confusion on their faces not really knowing what they were talking about or referring too. Perlyea was the one who leaned forward finally and asked the question.

“Anja? What are you referring too?” She asked.

Anja met her eyes. “It is something that humans and vampires from our homeworld Earth were fond of playing with a long time ago.” She replied. “Biological Warfare. Vampires used these weapons on Martin’s homeworld many millennia ago and killed billions upon billions of men, women and children. They brought this knowledge to Earth and humans found many more diabolical uses for it.”

Martin leaned forward once more looking at Jacina. “Jacina... what is so special about this plant you were working on. Why would they need it?”

“Once broken down into the base plant DNA, we called it the Teyalan Flower, it was in three separate components.” Jacina explained. “We were allowed to name these components since it was entirely new to the Pralor people. The first was Hecerkal. This was the medical component, the healing portion of the plant. A hundred times more powerful than anything the Pralor people had discovered before to assist in crop formation and seeding life. Even a plant that was nearly destroyed by fire could be revived and returned to its natural state within hours using this component. The second component was Ledralye.” Jacina leaned forward with worry on her beautiful face now. “King Martin you must understand we did not know what...”

Martin held up his hand quickly. “You are in no way the owner of any blame for what was created from your work Jacina. You, Recia, all of your colleagues, you were all victims and you were used.” Martin tilted his head slightly. “Delnash?”

“I concur completely Martin.” The voice spoke and the heads of the Tasmor whipped around when they saw the holo disc in the corner burst to life and the form of Delnash sitting at his desk appeared, shimmered and then became crystal clear.

“Chief Elder!?” Radra gasped from her seat.

Delnash nodded his head to her. “It is good to see you again Radra.” He spoke.

“And you Chief Elder.” Radra responded.

Delnash’s eyes turned to settle on Saydia. “Sovereign Regent Daret... I cannot begin to apologize to you and to the Tasmor people for the colossal failure of diplomacy that is the fault of the Pralor people. I was not aware of the challenges facing your people because I was never told of them. Radra was never told of them. It was kept from us by others when we should have known better. Please accept my pledge to you that things will be very different moving forward into the future.”

“I...” Saydia’s eyes were wide in shock. “I do not know how to respond.”

“No response is needed.” Delnash told her. “It is the Pralor people that need to make the first gesture and we will. As soon as we discover fully what is happening, for it now seems to concern all of us, which is why Martin included me in this transmission.”

Saydia nodded. "Of course."

Martin looked back to Jacina. "Jacina... keep going." He told her.

Jacina took a deep breath. "The second component, Ledralye. When separated from the other properties of the Teyalan flower, it is a hideously addictive compound and an extremely powerful psychotropic and mind controlling drug. The tests we ran indicated that the addiction rate was over ninety-eight percent after only one small dose. After the second dose, a hundred percent. Recia was working on that but I know she discovered that once in the bloodstream, a constant daily dosage was needed in order to keep the individual from going completely insane. These were only models that she ran, and it is the reason she flagged this component as totally unusable for our purposes. Or so we thought. She was in charge of destroying the samples that were taken from the plants; she would have one of Elder Lorendo's people from the levels below sign for them as pending destruction and then put that in the logs."

"We confirmed this with the logs we were able to recover from the station Martin." Duewa spoke now. "She signed over nearly three thousand five hundred samples for complete incineration to Lorendo's people in the lower levels over the course of six years. The records she kept match exactly the number to which Jacina separated."

"They were using it?" Martin asked. "For what?"

Anja shook her head. "Hold that thought Lover. Jacina, tell everyone what the third component was."

"We designated it as Tintor." She answered. "It is an extremely powerful stimulant. It is what allowed the Teyalan flower to flourish in even the harshest of conditions. It made the Teyalan flower so resistant to many natural forms of what would normally kill flowers of this kind. The extraction and separation of the components took months to fully complete even with our finest equipment because the elements were so tightly woven together. Once completed however, each Teyalan flower could produce over a hundred doses of each compound."

Anja lifted her P1 and typed on it. "Our people tested the space monster you, Danny, Colin and Pablo fought, and the two that were suffocated after Jacina told Duewa about this. All three of them were loaded with this Ledralye and Tintor. There was a self-releasing mechanism inserted into the shoulder of each one these things and each one was on a time delay. Given the amounts that were still within the capsules, had we not killed them, it could have lasted for at least a decade." She looked at Martin. "Their systems were also flooded with this Hecerkal."

Martin's eyes were wide. "I didn't authorize that Red!" He exclaimed.

"No, I did." Anja stated confidently.

"As hard as that thing was to kill, how do you know it was really dead?" Martin snapped. "That fucking Svorag wasn't really dead!"

"Its cells were regenerating Lover," Anja told him. "But it had no brain functions and they were not regenerating. You stick to what you are best at Lover, curling our toes in our bed and killing shit. Let the rest of us do our jobs."

Danny and Helen were the first to burst out laughing at this retort from Anja and that quickly became infectious. It served to release the tension in the room that was building and Martin sat there looking suitably sheepish. It was Wayonn who brought everyone back to reality.

"Anja, while all this information is very informative..." He spoke up. "What does it all mean?"

Anja took a deep breath. "That's the bad news." She stated. "Given what we have now discovered from the Research site logs from both stations we are certain of several things. The Svorag have evolved far more than that idiot Lorendo ever thought. They are retaining the memories and skills they had before they were infected and turned as well as their higher brain functions. They are able to use those skills now. They knew those research stations were here Lover." She looked at Martin. "And there is a reason why they came here and why the Tasmor are involved."

"Shit." Martin hissed.

"The Teyalan Flower is only found on this planet King Martin." Jacina now spoke up. "It cannot be grown off this world and from all the reports it has never been found anywhere else. We tried to grow it in our labs using dozens of scenarios and all the samples died. That is why new samples were delivered to Onterom every month."

“If I had to guess, and I’m pretty sure I would be accurate, many of those who were infected on Onterom were part of Lorendo’s group that knew what they were really doing there in that place.” Anja spoke softly. “Which means that they would have retained the memories and knowledge of their past lives and then passed that down to the next generation of Svorag. As everyone saw, they are walking upright now and obviously are able to use higher their brain functions since they were the ones who were conducting the experiments in these two sites.”

“And how does this affect the Tasmor?” Saydia asked.

Anja looked at Perlyea, who then turned to Saydia. “The Tasmor are immune to the addictive nature of the drug Sovereign Regent. It is why our people were taken as well Saydia, according to the logs we seized. We cannot become addicted to this drug due to our physiology but unfortunately we are not immune to its effects. It is also why so few Tasmor have been taken compared to Pralor and Lycavorian. The blood of one Tasmor could provide thousands of doses to counteract the addictive elements.”

“Gods of the earth Perlyea! They are... they are draining our people of their blood!?” Saydia gasped. “Are you certain?”

Perlyea nodded her head. “Yes.” She answered. “We don’t yet know why, but it has to do with what is being done to the Lycavorians and the Pralor people both.”

“As of right now there are no known Tasmor who have been infected and turned.” Anja said. “At least according to Perlyea. That is why we can only assume there is another reason they need the blood of your people.”

“Why only Pralor and Lycavorian Anja?” Delnash asked.

“I could take a guess.” Anja said. “It would only be a guess.”

“At this moment I would say I trust your guesses as opposed to most people’s facts.” Delnash spoke.

Anja looked at Martin. “Let us have it Red.” He told her.

“If, and I stress it is a big if, Lorendo was trying to develop a species just as vile and abhorrent as the Scourge, a species he could control that would help him to combat the Scourge, perhaps return and take back the Pralor Empire, then he would only use Pralor and Lycavorians as hosts. That is for the natural Etheric ability that we possess.” Anja spoke now.

“But only Praetorians have ever shown the ability to affect the Scourge.” Delnash spoke. “Normal Pralors and Lycavorians do not have the level of Etheric power or control to affect them.”

Anja nodded her head. “Unless he has somehow found a way to harness that Etheric level.” She said looking directly at Martin. “Or he knew of what Sumar did by merging the Pralors with Lycavorians and the benefits that could bring.”

“What?” Martin gasped. “Are you saying he knew where my grandfather was? That he was somehow monitoring him?”

“It’s possible Lover.” She told him. “If he knew what Sumar had done, if he knew that his blood would remain pure and be passed down through the generations? That our emotions are what fuel the Etheric abilities within us. If he knew this and is still trying to find a way, so that he could somehow regain control of what he has obviously lost control of, he would obviously come after the only place he knew where Lycavorians were and where no one would notice he is still playing God.”

“And this is why we stopped monitoring the Lycavorians here on Ventori.” Kesyla spoke softly. “We knew they were here when we arrived in Artaaya’s planetary system but we stopped monitoring them within a decade after settling there. On Lorendo’s orders.”

Anja nodded her head. “I don’t believe in that many coincidences.” She told them. “He was playing God even when you got to Artaaya. Trying to be a hero.”

“Anja are you saying he somehow let those on Onterom become infected?” Radra asked now with a look of horror on her face.

Anja nodded her head solemnly. “Yes, probably.” She replied. “And when he did, that is when he lost control of the overall experiment. Jacina and Recia and the other researchers who were not privy to the whole basis for their experiments probably told him of the danger that this flower represented but he was either too stupid to see it for himself or he chose to ignore their warnings and continue anyway. Now the Svorag are operating all on their own and he is trying to both cover it up and use it.”

“All of this still does not explain how he created the original virus.” Radra spoke. “If he even did.”

Anja shook her head. “He didn’t create this.” She said confidently. “In all of the samples that we took from Onterom’s computers that Duewa and I have studied, whether they were Pralor or Lycavorian, all of them had the same core gene enzymes.”

“What does this mean?” Delnash asked.

Radra was the one who leaned forward as realization hit her. “There is an originating donor species?” She gasped.

Anja nodded her head. “Or a single donor.” She stated. “I don’t care what his many degrees are in, Lorendo is just too fucking stupid to make something like this on his own. He got this from someone or something. And that is part of the reason why he has lost control of it. He’s got a serious God complex and he thinks he is smarter than everyone else.”

“They were creating those things here.” Duewa spoke now looking at Martin. “The three we found were left behind to protect that site. The Svorag plan to return Martin.”

“There are more of those space monster fuckers out there?” Martin snarled with wide eyes.

Duewa nodded her head. “Probably in very large numbers based on the bodies and the data we have been able to recover so far.”

“And they will return because of the flower?” Jacina said now. “When they next bloomed fully. In order to harvest them. Honelze is only a stop in order to take more hosts.”

Martin rose to his feet. “Fuck me!” He shouted loudly.

The room became silent as he paced quickly back and forth. No one would interrupt Martin Leonidas when he was like this for fear of incurring his wrath. Even his wives and mates would not interrupt his train of thought when he got like this. His mind was a beautiful thing and he could process information faster than any of them had ever seen. Anja and Aricia knew, just as Danny, Helen and Wayonn knew, his mind was now working overtime as it processed different scenarios. He turned suddenly back to Anja. “You said there is a donor or something.” He asked looking at Anja directly.

“Probably Lover.” Anja answered. “Something we haven’t seen yet.”

“Man this just keeps getting better and better!” Martin barked. “Is it something out here Anja? Some species here in the Echo Quadrant? Some infection or disease?”

Anja shook her head. “This is not a naturally occurring disease Martin.” She answered him. “This was created. It is a mutative infection designed to do exactly what it does.”

“Aside from the species we have in our databanks, we know of no others that exist in this quadrant of space. It is one of the reasons we chose to settle here.” Delnash spoke now. “We were quite thorough Martin. Sovereign Regent, the Tasmor have been here far longer than us. Have your people discovered or do you know of anything even remotely like this?”

Saydia shook her head quickly. “No. Never. Not in any History Cron that I am aware of.” She answered hesitantly looking almost guilty about something. “But we...”

“It doesn’t matter.” Anja spoke up interrupting her. “The Tasmor are just not capable of making this. Duewa and I have gone over everything with Perlyea the last few days in regards to their abilities Lover. They just do not have the technological capability that this thing would need to be created.”

Martin met her eyes. “Who does?” Anja glanced at Radra quickly and then back to Martin. “Red?”

Delnash leaned forward in his chair within the transmission. “Do not be afraid to answer Anja Leonidas.” He spoke. “As I said earlier, at this moment I trust you more than most of my own people.”

Anja sighed heavily. “This was made by a Pralor.” She answered finally. “Or a Scourge, but I don’t know enough about their scientific capabilities to make that determination.”

Martin looked instantly to Wayonn. “Wayonn?” He asked.

Wayonn shook his head. “Xaxon was very specific in what he was trying to do.” He replied. “He was a monster yes, but he was not trying to create them. We have seen the results of his earlier work and then his final attempts. We fought them both at the end of the first war. None of them resembled these creatures in any way and Xaxon’s Mage, the Scourge Queen, she did not have the knowledge that Anja says this would need to be made.”

Martin noticed it first because Helen was his Praetorian Mage. A slight tilt of her head and shudder of her body. He felt her throw up incredibly powerful Etheric shields around her mind as her dark eyes narrowed.

Aricia noticed it first with Martin and she followed where his gaze was, followed quickly by Anja and then Danny.

“Helen?” Martin asked softly.

Helen’s head turned slowly to look at him. “Martin this... this disease was created by a Pralor.” She spoke slowly and evenly as she met his gaze.

Anja looked at her now. “Helen how can you be so sure?” She asked.

Martin shook his head. “No.” He said softly, his tone of voice one of sadness.

Helen lifted her right hand and waved it off to the side. The Tasmor were the only ones to jump as the entire side of the building they were in with no computers along the wall began to retract quickly, exposing the interior of the building to the exterior. Bright sunlight filled the interior as the figures of three dragons appeared outside the wall now. Martin felt a sinking feeling in his gut when he spied Arzoal’s flame red scales and her bright eyes. Beside her was Teniri on one side and Isheeni on the other.

Arzoal moved closer to the now retracted wall and settled her massive body to the ground gracefully. She wore a dark brown collar like strap around her neck which held one of the devices Kasdan had made for the dragons on Artaaya. She had been practicing with Teniri for days now and had grown quite good at projecting her voice outward through this device. Her eyes settled on Martin as he moved around the table and moved up in front of her without the least bit of fear.

“Arzoal?” He asked her as he lifted his hand up.

“My talks with you and Androcles have done so much to rid me of the burden of shame I carried for so long Martin.” She spoke. The device created a soft voice with a slight lilt in it that reminded Martin of an English accent. “It is you and your son who made me see beyond the shame I accepted. I cannot keep it hidden. I felt Helen’s emotions while we trained with the dragon warriors that came with Teniri. I inquired of her what was happening and she allowed me to see with her eyes.”

“Are you certain?” Martin asked.

Arzoal nodded her massive head. “Yes.”

“Certain about what Arzoal?” Anja asked as she moved up beside Martin.

Arzoal met her jade green eyes. “You are correct Anja.” She spoke. “This vile pestilence was created by a Pralor. It was created a very long time ago and I had thought that I destroyed it forever. I was wrong. I recognized the genetic formula when I saw it through Helen’s eyes.”

Anja’s eyes grew a little wider. “Arzoal how can you be so sure?” She gasped.

“For one simple reason.” Arzoal answered. “I helped to create it.”

Everyone who was not in a command role was politely asked to leave and then Martin and Danny lifted the table and moved it closer to the open air side of the Medical Building. A massive tarp had been thrown up over the top and poles erected so that Arzoal, Teniri and Isheeni could rest and remain out of the direct sunlight. This also served to make Delnash’s image in the transmission much clearer. It took her over an hour to bare her past and her soul to those she considered her family.

“...So now you know.” Arzoal spoke softly. “Everything I told Androcles and Elynth that day on Cranae Island, I have now told you.” Arzoal’s eyes settled on Martin who had been pacing slowly for the last thirty minutes. “Martin?”

Martin stopped and looked at her for a long moment. “What possessed you to tell them that day?” He asked finally.

Arzoal shook her massive head. “I don’t know to be honest. Perhaps because even then I sensed that they are what Sarlana says they are. Dahakoan. Perhaps I could feel the dragon blood within him. That within his chest burns the heart of a dragon. Does it matter now?”

Martin shook his head. “No.” He answered softly. “I suspected much of what you just told us. I just never said anything.”

“Why?” Arzoal asked. “You of all I have known in my years, you deserved to know.”

Martin shrugged his broad shoulders. “I figured you would tell me when it became time for me to know. When you knew I had to know.” He told her. “I didn’t think it would be under these circumstances however.”

“Nor did I.” Arzoal spoke. “This thing I helped to create... it has touched so many lives. Taken so many lives.” Arzoal turned her head to look at Saydia. “I cannot begin to tell you how much I regret that it has now involved your people Sovereign Regent Daret.”

Saydia looked up at her and shook her head. “This is not your doing.” She spoke calmly. “I will not judge you, no one should judge you for decisions you made to respond to events that took place so long ago when we were not there to experience it ourselves.”

“I agree.” Delnash spoke up now as well.

“Arzoal you are sure this is the formula?” Anja asked her now.

Arzoal nodded once more. “Yes. The base formula has been altered in many ways but it still retains enough of its base genetic markers and coding for me to recognize it. How it came to be in Lorendo’s hands is beyond me. The mountain on Elear burned for three days. I sent the strongest Firespitters I had back twice to make sure it burned Anja. Everything was destroyed when we finally returned after the fires were out. Every piece of equipment he used, every data bank, every data storage unit. We destroyed everything Anja. Then we buried it.”

Martin looked at Anja. “Red?” He asked.

Anja looked at Arzoal once more. “Arzoal this was brilliant work.” She said with a touch of awe in her voice.

“Anja!” Helen exclaimed.

“No! That’s not what I meant!” Anja quickly retorted. “The basis for the work was brilliant! Not what he made from it! Not what he did to it! Something like this could have saved thousands of lives. It could have been the basis for any number of cures to any number of diseases!”

Duewa moved up next to Anja now. “She is correct Helen.” She spoke. “Arzoal’s base work could have been the catalyst for so much.”

“But it wasn’t.” Arzoal spoke. “Arete turned it into something so vile that it should be unspeakable. He was brilliant but he was a monster as well. We just did not see that until it was too late.”

“He was a disciple of Xaxon.” Delnash spoke now. “And we all fell under that man’s veil. Even Sumar admitted this during his trial. It is why we punished him the way we did. This is not your fault Arzoal. None of it.”

“Perhaps Chief Elder... but it still does not explain how Lorendo was able to acquire it.” Arzoal said.

“Our ship!” Teniri exclaimed now and all heads turned to her.

“Teniri, what do you mean?” Delnash asked.

“We set it to return to Arzoal and those left on Elear a year before you discovered us but it did not return to her for over nine thousand years!” Teniri spoke. “Long after we had settled on Artaaya.”

“What are you saying Teniri?” Arzoal asked her now.

“What if Lorendo discovered our ship?” She asked.

“How is that even possible?” Delnash asked. “We made countless jumps after we had discovered you on that planet.”

Teniri nodded her head. “Yes we did, but without a crew we were only able to program three jumps into the onboard computers of the ship. Those jumps were to take it back to Elear over a period of two years. The rest of the time it moved at sub light speeds. The four Pralors who returned with us are the ones who set the course.”

“That’s a bit of a reach Teniri.” Martin spoke.

“What other possible explanation is there King Martin?” She asked him.

“Teniri has a point there fervon.” Danny spoke up now.

Teniri looked at Delnash’s image. “Delnash... send one of your Guard to the Dragon Council on Artaaya. Have them speak with Nekins and tell him to retrieve the data scroll from my cave. It will contain the course we set for the ship. Have him bring it to you. If somehow Lorendo was able to speak with the four Pralors who returned with us, he could have discovered what took place on Elear. And how to find our ship.”

“Can’t we just ask them?” Helen spoke now.

Martin shook his head. “No.” He answered quickly.

Delnash nodded his head. “Martin is right. If we approach them directly then he might realize what we are trying to discover. I will send Garan’s second in command. Martin give me thirty minutes to see this done.”

Martin nodded his head. "We'll be standing by sir." He answered just as Delnash's figure disappeared from the transmission. He turned to face Anja. "Can you do anything with this info Red?" He asked.

Anja shook her head. "I'm afraid not Lover." She answered. "Arzoal could give us her work, what she is able to remember, but it would not do us any good without the mutative gene alterations that Arete performed after he tried to kill her and she was still within the egg waiting to hatch. Duewa, Anuk, Kesyla, Perlyea and the rest of us can give it a whirl but I wouldn't hold my breath."

"Give it a try." Martin said.

Anja nodded her head and turned to head out of the MED building through the doors behind them. Saydia took this moment to rise quickly to her feet and moved to follow her. She caught up with Anja by the doors just as the others exited.

"Queen Anja?" Saydia spoke.

Anja turned to look at her as she stopped and she smiled. "Sovereign Regent, I'm not real big on formalities. You can call me Anja." She said.

Saydia smiled in return and became even more comfortable. "Then I am just Saydia." She said.

"What can I do for you?" Anja asked.

"Before you... you did not allow me to finish what I was going to say." Saydia said to her softly. "I just need to make sure that you understand..."

Anja stepped closer to her. "That the Tasmor evolved from the Kintaur?" Anja asked her softly and saw her eyes grow wider. "That the Tasmor chose to go down another path and that is what caused the schism between your people?"

Saydia looked at her with wide eyes. "How did you...?"

"I'm pretty good at reading genetic markers." Anja told her.

Saydia moved closer to her. "No one knows how it happened." She said softly. "Perlyea says it was just the natural evolution of the Kintaur, and we were the result."

Anja nodded her head. "Perlyea is probably very correct from what I have seen."

"It took centuries but eventually those who had evolved into the Tasmor fought to leave." Saydia said. "We succeeded and the Kintaur have hated us ever since. As Sovereign Regent, only I know this part of our history. It has been this way since our inception. Even many of the Kintaur that live do not know the real history."

Anja nodded her head. "And there is no reason anyone else has to know. At least not right now." She told her. "It won't change what we think about the Tasmor people, and it certainly won't change what Martin thinks."

Saydia tilted her head to the side. "What does he think?" She asked softly.

"He wants you to trust him." Anja said. "There are many differences between our peoples but he doesn't care. He thinks the Tasmor are honorable and very capable. I think he has shown that no matter the differences we can still work together."

"He has." Saydia nodded.

"His bark is worse than his bite Saydia." Anja said.

"Excuse me?" Saydia asked with wide eyes.

Anja chuckled. "Forgive me." She said quickly. "It's an expression among our people. It means don't let his outward appearance frighten you. Martin is one of the most compassionate men you will ever meet." Anja took Saydia's hands in her own and squeezed them. "He will want you to remain here for the briefing, but know that this information about the Kintaur will not be made known by any of us. It is something that the Tasmor deserve to know I think. Perhaps not now, but at a time in the future when it will be accepted."

Saydia nodded her head. "You are right."

Anja smiled. "Whatever we are able to find Perlyea will let you know as soon as we find it out." She said.

"Thank you." Saydia said. "Thank you for everything."

Anja nodded and released her hands before continuing out the doors. Saydia turned back to look at those standing by the open wall. Anthylea was talking with the towering giant with ebony skin who they knew as Danny. Martin stood beside the huge dragon Arzoal with Aricia, Wayonn, Tobia and her daughters as they spoke. What Saydia saw before her was inspiring and she witnessed it then in that moment. The change had already begun and if what was arrayed before her now was any indication, the Gods of her people had heard her prayers and this was their answer.

Saydia Daret didn't hesitate and moved back towards them and into the future without a moment's hesitation.

ICARAVA
DARASTRIXI HOMEWORLD
URLKRISIR MAMISS HEADQUARTERS
SULEVFU WOIEWR CHAMBERS

Ten Vrrarhoinpa and ten Jiilhoinpa made up the Commission of Twenty and the Ruling Body of the Darastrixi people. The Urlkrisir Mamiss. None of them had been a member of the Sulevfu Woiewr for less than twenty thousand years, eighteen of the twenty having been members for over fifty thousand years now. All of them were entrenched in routine and this meeting was anything but routine. The last time they had gathered under an Emergency Session had been a time that all of them wanted to forget. It was the time when they decided to betray their Pralor allies and friends under coercion from the Scourge. A time most of them wanted to forget.

There were two co-leaders of the Sulevfu Woiewr, one Jiilhoinpa and one Vrrarhoinpa, both of whom were conferring with each other as the remainder of the Sulevfu Woiewr took their spots around the massive chamber. It was in the shape of a half circle, all of them sitting on one side and leaving the area in front of them open allowing for the hundred or so seats and two different podiums that faced their table. They were becoming impatient and this showed in their mannerisms. They were not used to being summoned to their own chambers. It was a female Jiilhoinpa who stood up and looked at their co-leaders.

"Issver Draque, why have you summoned us here?" She spoke now. "There has not been an Emergency Session in over forty thousand years! What could be so important as to draw us away from our activities? And why is there an Emissary from the scourge in the anteroom?"

Issver Draque was nearing two hundred and eighty thousands years of age and was as intelligent as he was handsome in a Darastrixi manner. He had lost his wife of over a hundred thousand years a decade ago and now there were thousands of young Maidens vying for his attention in the hopes he would make them his next wife. He looked at this Vrrarhoinpa co-leader Tinoz Vors, his deep brown scales shiny and full of life, and his flame red eyes alert and full of intelligence. Tinoz nodded his massive head.

"Let it begin." He spoke in a deep voice.

Issver nodded his head and looked at the data scroll in his hand one last time before moving out in front of the table that held his fellow members. He waited until all of them had focused their attention to him.

"Yes, I called for this Emergency Session." He spoke evenly. "We have a grave situation that has arisen that needs our immediate attention. The implications of this could have dire consequences on the future of our people."

"What has happened Issver?" The woman who had spoken first asked. Her name was Yeren Ir'iss and she had been a member of the Sulevfu Woiewr for the last hundred and six thousand years. She was also one of the most outspoken of the Darastrixi anywhere.

"I awoke this morning to this message being delivered to my home by a senior military messenger." Issver spoke as he lifted his hand and they all saw the data scroll. "He told me it was most urgent and it came from Koppentotz Aviel Em'morr."

"Aviel Em'morr?" Another of the members spoke. "He is the senior Koppentotz under consideration to replace me when I retire next year."

Issver nodded his head. "That is correct. He sent this to my home and it is something all of you need to see. It relates directly to why a Scourge Emissary is now outside these very chambers."

"Issver... what is happening?" Another member now asked.

Issver held up the data scroll and plugged it into the podium. "I will let you all see for yourselves."

The image of Aviel Em'morr appeared in the holoimage on the main floor of the chambers and he began to speak.

“Issver Draque... it is with both a heavy heart and a sense of joy that I leave this message for you. A heavy heart for what I have discovered you and the Sulevfu Woieuwr have taken part in and allowed for so many centuries and a sense of joy for what I have discovered. I did not want to believe it at first, I did not think that our own leaders who are so revered would allow such a thing. Apparently that is not the case. You and the Sulevfu Woieuwr have allowed the Scourge to take our Maiden females for centuries. Allowed them to take our maiden females and conduct hideous experiments on them. Allowed them to be defiled in a way that does not even become believable until you see what I have seen. You and the others on the Sulevfu Woieuwr had to have known this is what they would do. And if you did not, all of you should be ashamed to even call yourselves Darastrixi.”

“What is the meaning of this?!” Another member of the chamber roared coming to his feet. “Issver... you bring this whelp before us immediately! He will answer for these foul and preposterous words!”

Issver looked at him. “If only that was possible right now.” He stated. “Sit down now and continue to watch.”

“The Sulevfu Woieuwr has allowed the Scourge monsters to take our future from us! To degrade them and turn them into experiments so horrendous it cannot be put into words! You and the others have allowed this under the auspice of a political exchange to try and better relations with these monsters, but you never took the time to ask why. Why would the Scourge want our maiden females?” Aviel shook his head in the recording. “The respect I held for you and the Sulevfu Woieuwr was without question. I, our people, we entrusted you to lead us. To make things better. All you have done with your actions is to secure your own positions and to ultimately bring the demise of our people into view without even knowing it.

“The Scourge have been taking our maiden females because they were looking for something. They were looking for something in order to use it against us. To bring about our defeat. All of you are aware of the Lorsvek ar Sepas, the oldest myth among our people. It foretells of the return of the Dahakoan. Wer Arytissi ar wer Zezhuanth. The Warriors of the Ancient.” Aviel shifted slightly in the recording. “I tell you now... the Lorsvek ar Sepas is happening. It is taking place right now. I have known of two of the Dahakoan for several months now, a young Darastrixi Maiden and her Vrrarhoinpa. They are what the Scourge are searching for. They want them in order to experiment on them and find a way to use their gifts against our people and so many others across the stars. I will not allow this. We will not allow this. We have taken Laren and Ladur off Icarava in order to unite them with the other four Dahakoan who now exist, two of which bear the title of Vrelvel Sargti. Talon Guardians of our people. Bestowed to them by a Darastrixi Elder Council made up of those we allowed the Pralor people to seed on other words. Vrelvel Sargti Issver! Those souls given the sacred duty of safeguarding our kind for all time. They are also Dahakoan. I have spoken with them Issver! Seen them! And a more ferocious force I have never seen in all my years! They wield the power of the Pralor Praetorians of old, as well as the Dahakoan of our people! As do Laren and Ladur! That is why the Scourge wanted them! Can you imagine what would have become of our people had the Scourge succeeded? Can you imagine what you and the other Sulevfu Woieuwr would have brought down upon us if this had taken place? Untold death and misery! The same misery and death we allowed when we cast our Pralor brothers aside like so much trash all those years ago! Only this would have been directed at us!”

They saw Aviel shake his head in disgust and look to the side as if he was talking to someone and then he turned back to the recording device.

“I am taking them away from you Issver.” He continued. “I will not allow you to bring about the demise of our people. I cannot. I am recording this for you in the hopes that you will see that the path you have laid before our people is wrong. We have forgotten most of what made the Darastrixi great, and I hold you and the Sulevfu Woieuwr responsible for this. I will take Laren and Ladur to be with their fellow Dahakoan Issver. Do not follow us, do not attempt to find us, for two of the Dahakoan are Lycavorian Issver, bonded to two Vrrarhoinpa that have not been raised among our kind, Vrrarhoinpa that have different values. Dahakoan that are as different from their ancestors as the night is to day and they wield a power we cannot begin to imagine. They will not abide what you and the others allow to continue and one day, one day they will return to set the Darastrixi free. Who will you and the Suleyfu Woieuwr follow on that day Issver? Will you side with your people or will you side with those who only wish to see us destroyed? The choice is yours Issver. Choose well, for the Dahakoan of this time, they will be unforgiving in their justice. Choose well my old friend."

CHAPTER FIFTY-TWO

VENTORI UNION ADHOC COMPOUND

"...Why Martin?" Jezima asked softly. "Why has he done these things?"

Jezima and Meral had woken near the end of the first meeting in the MED building and almost immediately began asking for Martin. Once Delnash broke off his transmission to gather what Teniri wanted Martin had left the building, feeling the powerful pull of his grandmother and aunt calling for him. Since it was still relatively early in the morning, he met them with smiles and hugs and brought them to eat in the Mess building. Jezima and Meral both noticed the looks they received from the others in the building and it was disconcerting for them both. Neither of them had ever been looked at with the obvious reverence they saw in the eyes of so many men and women. Reverence for them, for who they were. They both knew this carried over a great deal for how they felt about Martin, but neither were they fools. They knew that they were now considered icons of a sort among these men and women and so many more that they had never seen before.

It was after they had eaten when Martin drew them over to the lake shore and they settled to the ground on a large cloth tarp that had already been laid out. That is when he began to tell them everything that was happening. It took him nearly two hours to explain to them what had been going on for centuries apparently, and he held nothing back from them, which made it all the more horrific.

Martin shook his head slowly as he held her hand in his. "I don't know Staania." He told her gently but honestly. "I have thought about it. Maybe he wanted to be a hero. Maybe he wanted power. Whatever the reason, it doesn't matter anymore. Now he is simply a murderer of so many lives I cannot begin to count them all. What he created, he is responsible for what they have done. If not for him they would not exist."

"Why doesn't Delnash arrest him?" Meral snapped almost angrily. "Make him face these charges and answer for his actions!"

Martin shook his head. "If only it were that simple." He said. "Lorendo may be many things but he is also very smart. Delnash can't move against him directly because all we truly have in contrast is guesswork and some evidence. Nothing that directly shows he actually has done what we believe he has."

"The logs from the station on Onterom?" Meral gasped.

Martin shook his head once more. "I'm sure he ordered them deleted but we have no way to prove that. All he would need to say is that the commander of the station was working on his own. He was very careful to make sure anything that was found did not tie back to him in any way."

"You believe he has done these things?" Jezima asked him meeting his beautiful eyes. Her son's eyes.

Martin nodded his head without hesitation. "Oh yeah." He answered. "He's guilty as sin in my book. Unfortunately, many of the Pralor people still look at us as inferior to them. He's been adding to that dogma ever since he returned to Onterom. It's one of the major points he has been using against Delnash. And a lot of the Pralor people believe him. Many won't believe what we present because of this mentality, even with Kasdan, Radra, Delnash and others telling them different. That kind of takes away many of my options in dealing with him."

Meral looked at him and took his other hand now. "What would your people have done Martin?" She asked softly.

Martin shook his head. "You don't want me to answer that Tenna." He told her.

“Yes, I do.” Meral pressed him.

Martin took a deep breath. “Given what the evidence we have so far points to, the Union would have had him arrested and interrogated to discover what he had done and what he knew. If it was confirmed, he would have been executed within days of discovering this information. Justice is very swift in the Union. It is very thorough but also very swift and unforgiving.”

“Interrogated against his will?” Jezima asked.

Martin nodded slowly. “If that is what it took, yes.” He replied looking at her. “We have drugs that can be used. They are harsh yes, but they are very effective. Even someone with the Etheric power of Lorendo would not have been able to resist them. We would have tried to talk to him, get him to reveal what he knows, but we would have found out one way or the other.”

Jezima squeezed his hand tightly. “I understand.” She said softly. “The history of a people, what they have had to endure, this shapes their feelings and emotions. It hardens them so that they can do what they must in order to survive and prosper.”

“Our laws are harsh yes.” Martin agreed. “But we are a fair and honest people Staanian. We have no desire to conquer or enslave. We only wish to live in peace and raise our children. The children of the Union, no matter their species, they are taught to respect and honor others first. To look upon others as friends first, not as enemies. We only change our tune if it is shown that a person or a people do not have the same values that we do. Then we don’t deal with them at all. We don’t try to force our ways on them or stop them from living their lives, but we do not tolerate others telling us how we must be in order to suit them.”

“Are there people like this where you come from?” Meral asked. “In the Alpha Quadrant where you reside?”

Martin nodded his head. “Yes, a few. We leave them alone and they leave us alone. For the most part anyway.”

“What of the Svorag Martin?” Jezima asked now. “Our people on Honelze must be warned! We must prepare to fight them!”

Martin nodded his head. “They will be warned.” He told her. “And Dysea, Isabella and Cirith are there to see to the defenses. We have time right now and we are using that time to try and discover all we can.”

Meral tilted her head slightly and looked at him. “You do not like being King of your people do you?” She asked pointedly.

Martin chuckled softly and shook his head. “I hate it with every fiber of my being.” He told her with a smile. There are days when it drives me malda!” He saw their look of confusion and smiled wider. “It means crazy in our language.” He explained seeing their faces change and they both smiled.

Jezima scooted closer to him. “That was my son.” She said. “That was your grandfather. He hated having so many hang on his every word. Even when he became Chief Elder he wanted nothing more than to stay at our home and play with his brother’s children.”

“Yeah I can relate to that.” Martin spoke with a nod.

“What will we do?” Meral asked now.

Martin took another deep breath. “We are trying to determine that now.” He spoke. “I have more forces moving for Manne. That is where we have established our colony out here. I cannot pull too many from the Alpha Quadrant because of events back there, and not all of our ships are equipped with engines that can get them out this far in a few days. At least not yet. We are building more of the Worker Drones in a secret facility using Avatar 41’s specs and we’ll be able to move faster as more are made. My daughter Yuriko is shadowing the Svorag mother ship as it moves towards Honelze and Androcles and my other children will be here in a few weeks with a much larger force than we have now.” He told them looking around the camp. “We did not expect to discover what we have about the Lycavorians here on Ventori, or the Tasmor. These Kintaur thugs pose another problem, more so for the Tasmor than us, but I will not leave them to deal with it on their own. Not after what they did for our people here.”

“Argh! So many things!” Meral exclaimed. “I see what you mean.”

Martin laughed. “You want my job?” He asked her. “I’ll let you have it cheap.”

Jezima burst out laughing at his expression as Meral shook her head almost violently. “By all the souls within the Rift of Time, no!” Meral almost shouted.

Martin's smile was wide and genuine. "No one wants it." He spoke looking at Jezima. "I have tried to give it away dozens of times and no one seems to want it."

This caused Meral to join in the laughter with her mother as they looked at him. Jezima finally put her head to his shoulder gently and squeezed his arm now. "What can we do?" She asked him finally.

Martin shook his head. "I have only just found you." He told them. "I will not put you in any danger. I have men coming that will protect you. Two of them for each of you. They are Hippeis Sedla. The Spartan Royal Guard."

"What of these... these Wolves of the Blood that Dysea told us of?" Meral asked. "Are they not the Royal Guard?"

Martin lifted his hand and moved it back and forth. "In a manner of speaking, yes." He answered her. "The Durcunusaan..."

"Yes, that is what Dysea called them." Meral said.

Martin nodded. "That is part of their mission, yes. However, that is not their only mission."

"What do you mean?" Jezima asked.

"There are no better trained soldiers within the Union than the Durcunusaan." Martin told them. "All Spartans are supremely well trained but the Durcunusaan and the Hippeis Sedla, who are part of the Durcunusaan, they endure much more training than normal. It is more, how do I say this, it is more intensive, more deeply involved and far more dangerous. You must be chosen for the Hippeis Sedla. Of them few hundred that are asked each year, only three or four actually complete the training. The regular Durcunusaan conduct many different missions and varied other jobs within their purview as Wolves of the Blood, but the Hippeis Sedla have only one mission. They protect my family. That is their purpose. It is not something that I wanted or started, but it is what it is and I couldn't change it now even if I wanted too. No one would let me. Four of them should be arriving soon and their mission will be to protect you both. That will be their purpose, above all others."

"I do not wish this Martin." Jezima spoke.

Martin shook his head. "But I do Staania Tenna." He told them softly looking back and forth between them. "I have found you now and the moment I saw you I swore to grandfather's spirit that I would keep you safe. That is what I will do." He smiled as he rose to his feet and pulled them both up. "Don't worry, they are not huge, hulking brutes." He said. "You might be very surprised. Do this for me. Times now are unpredictable and I will leave nothing to chance when it comes to you both. Nothing. You are my past! My children's past! Our past! And our future! That is worth protecting at all cost."

Martin turned as Atropos moved slowly up to them from the side. "Atropos?" Martin spoke.

"Chief Elder Delnash has reestablished his link Martin." Atropos spoke. "They have found something."

Martin nodded and curled his arms around Jezima and Meral. "Then let's go find out."

"...Seems Teniri was correct Martin." Delnash spoke from his office once more. His eyes saw Jezima and Meral now standing beside Aricia and For'mya and he bowed his head slightly. "Lady Jezima. Lady Meral. It is an honor beyond words."

Jezima looked taken aback at this but she nodded her head. "Chief Elder Delnash." She stammered finally.

Martin leaned over the star chart table. The Command Building was also built like the MED building and now one wall was gone to reveal Arzoal and Teniri sitting side by side under another tarp that had been erected. "Ok, what are we looking at?" He asked.

"I have 27 feeding the information to Avi now Martin." Delnash continued from his office on Artaaya. "Your Admiral Lorian is tapped in as well."

"Avi, 27, talk to me." Martin spoke to the thin air.

Jezima looked at Aricia. "Avi?" She asked softly. "Sumar's..."

Aricia nodded her head. "Avatar 41." She answered. "We shortened his name many years ago and we have called him Avi ever since we discovered him."

"Avatar 41... that was... that was my brother's Avatar!" Meral gasped.

Aricia nodded her head with a smile. “Yes he was.”

“He speaks to them as if they are... as if they are alive.” Jezima commented.

For'mya nodded now. “To Martin, they are alive. Just as any of us.”

Jezima turned back as she heard the mechanical sounding voice begin to speak.

-27 was able to download the data scroll retrieved from Elder Teniri's cave Martin- Avi spoke now. -We have overlaid known star charts to compensate for linear and well as stellar drift and temporal shift. The charts before you are as accurate as we can make them-

“So enlighten me.” Martin spoke.

Jezima looked up at Aricia's face again and into her amazing blue eyes. [He is different Aricia.] She said softly speaking in a whisper within the Etheric realm. Jezima had never seen such expressive eyes as what Aricia and the others had and the color was simply amazing to behold, just as it was in Anja and Dysea's eyes.

Aricia smiled and nodded her head again. [This is his element Staania.] She whispered back just as softly. [This is where he is at his finest. Everything else is pushed back and the leader that he is comes out. It is the same with our son Androcles.]

-King Martin you will see the line I am tracing now- 27's voice spoke now. -This is the course that Elder Teniri's ship was to take in order to return to Elear. It was actively compensating for any inhabited systems and avoiding them. That is why it appears the ship is moving haphazard at times. The ship conducted its first jump here...- The Star Chart froze and a large orange dot appeared on the table. -It was a short jump to clear the main systems that were inhabited without drawing attention from those who could detect it. Only the Tasmor and Kintaur at this time-

-Though they had not yet attained space flight, both did have satellite systems that could have detected the jump- Avi added.

“Avi, 27, let's fast forward to the important stuff.” Martin spoke, his eyes never leaving the chart. “It was possible that Lorendo intercepted this ship you said. Where?”

-Here King Martin- 27 answered as he adjusted the chart until the light blue line that was the course of Teniri's ship intercepted with one that was a much darker blue. -The dark blue course is the one taken by a VECTOR-Class Attack Cruiser that departed Artaaya exactly twelve point six years after Artaaya was settled-

“Ok... first question.” Martin spoke. “Teniri, you said the ship left the planet you were on only a month before Delnash and the others arrived with the Scourge hot on their tails.”

“Yes.” Teniri answered from her position.

“Then how did the transport not make it out of the Echo quadrant before the surviving Pralors reached Artaaya?” Martin asked. “How many years before you reached Artaaya after discovering Teniri and the others Delnash?”

Delnash thought about that for a second. “Perhaps eight.” He answered.

-Seven point nine to be exact King Martin- 27 chimed in,

Delnash nodded. “Seven point nine then.”

“So we'll say eight years and then another twelve and a half years before Lorendo left with this ship.” Martin said. “Almost twenty-one years. Where was Teniri's transport for those twenty-one years before Fat boy found it?”

Meral could barely contain the yelp of laughter that she wanted to let out at Martin's words and she squeezed For'mya's hand tightly, who looked at her with an equally large smile.

-Without the ship's computer core to confirm it, there is only one hypothesis- Avi spoke from the ARC ROYAL. -And there is no way to confirm it since the Elder Mother Arzoal says the computers were erased of all data when the ship returned to them-

“What is that Avi?” Delnash asked now.

-Lorendo obtained the transport's Command Codes and was able to pause the automated navigation controls. It would have still been in range of the planet that Elder Mother Teniri and the others were on when they united with the Pralor forces fleeing the Scourge- Avi answered.

“Ok... if I was a mad scientist with a God complex, and I wanted to be a hero, that's what I would do.” Martin said. “Talk to the surviving Pralors, find out what they had done on Elear and discover they had made some really bad monster serum. A serum that could make me a hero if I found some way to use it. Then I would somehow get the Command Codes for the ship and order it to hold in place? Avi, 27, this sound doable to you?”

-There are numerous places within that sector of space where he could have powered down the ship King Martin- 27 answered. -Several nebulas or large asteroid fields that would both protect and hide the ship-

-Until he was ready to use it- Avi echoed his fellow Avatar's answer.

“And being the asshole that I am I wouldn't care about the thousands of dragons that ship was supposed to be saving.” Martin said nodding his head. “Yep... sure sounds like Fat Boy.”

“To a tee.” Anja chimed in now.

“Yeah... I'm not liking him even more than I already hate him.” Martin said. “Avi, 27 keep going.”

-This Pralor ship was under the command of Lorendo. He had been named an Elder only thirteen weeks prior-

Martin looked at Delnash in the transmission. “Why is that significant?” He asked.

Delnash had leaned forward in his chair. “It would have meant that his orders would not have been questioned in regards to anything. At that time we were still operating off of our emergency Protocols, which gave Elders absolute authority.” He stated. “It also gave him access to everything he did not have before that. Ships. Personnel. Everything.”

“Like a kid in a candy store.” Martin muttered.

-We are unable to determine if he boarded this ship Martin- Avi spoke now. -The data suggests that he did and that he is the one that changed its course parameters, but there is no corroborating evidence to what we have-

“Ok, but for what purpose?” Martin asked openly.

“I believe I can answer that question Martin.” The male voice echoed and they turned to see Muton entering the Command building with Anja at his side.

Anja looked at Martin as she moved up beside For'mya and they shared a soft kiss of love. “Muton was able to find the clues that got us out here Lover.” Anja said. “I figured he could probably help us figure all this out as well considering he has Pralor blood within him. Just like Miseo and all the others that came with him.”

Martin turned fully now and faced him. “Nubou lae! I forgot all about that!” He gasped.

Meral looked at For'mya and Anja. “What...?”

For'mya shook her head. “You don't want to know. She answered with a smile.

Meral's lips curled into a smile as she understood the implication and she looked back to Martin.

Muton moved right up beside Martin Jezima saw and no one did anything to stop him. This man was someone that apparently all of them trusted. She watched Martin place his hand on Muton's shoulder affectionately. Anja stood on the opposite side of Jezima and saw her look of puzzlement.

[Muton is the one who protected For'mya and the twins that we told you of. Fedor and Eirene.] Anja told her in that Etheric connection. [He is Miseso's father.]

[The one who married Eirene?] Meral asked now.

Anja nodded her head. [We owe him a debt that we can never repay.] Anja spoke warmly. [He made sure For'mya was returned to us and his son has made Eirene happier than...] Anja smiled as both For'mya and Aricia chuckled, knowing what she was going to say. [Well... he has made her very happy.]

"I don't know all the details of what took place, but during my free time since we began this journey, I have been trying to decipher more and more of my grandmother's journals." He spoke from beside Martin and set half a dozen data scrolls on the chart table with one hand while squeezing Martin's arm affectionately in return.

"Hit me with it Muton." Martin spoke now.

Muton picked up one data scroll and handed it to him. "I believe this Lorendo fool picked several hundred Pralors, mostly scientists, to go to Cabelir." Muton told him as Martin began to read. "At first I thought it was out of some sense of misplaced honor that they would return to try and fix what Arete had created. I was wrong. They went there to study them. To try and determine if they had anything useful within their genetic makeup. Something happened and they ended up being taken by these Kavgart. A few of them anyway. As I studied her journals I came to realize she wasn't one of those original Pralors, she was the child of one of the Pralors and a Kavgart. As time passed and more generations of us were born, we looked Kavalian outwardly but we retained the Pralor gene as well. We avoided the other Kavalians and their violence. We advocated peace."

"Bet that didn't go over well with the rest of them." Martin commented.

Muton shook his head. "No it didn't. However, nothing was done to counter the influence we did have until Keleru took power."

Martin looked at him. "Are you saying Keleru was one of you?"

Muton nodded his head. "I wasn't sure until only a few weeks ago. I did not want to come forward to you so soon after the battle with your brother those few weeks ago."

"You're serious about this Muton?" Martin asked him.

Muton nodded his head. "Almost one hundred percent." He answered. "He is not from my generation, but from a later one. Perhaps a generation or two after me. But his age right now is not consistent with a normal Kavalian lifespan. Normal Kavalians, those unaltered down through the generations and those who have not been subjected to biogenic alteration only have a normal lifespan of perhaps ten thousand years. Twelve at most."

Martin turned to look at Anja. "Red?"

"I would have to review the data that we have collected over the years about Kavalians but I'm not going to argue with Muton on this Lover. He is more familiar with Kavalian physiology than I am and I wouldn't second guess him." Anja answered.

Martin turned back to Muton. "How old is he?" He asked.

"I am sixteen thousand four hundred and nine years old Martin." Muton answered him. "Without the skills that many of us have in altering our outward appearance, our fur does tend to hide quite a bit you know..." He said with a smile. "We would never have been able to pass for Kavalians. Keleru has these same skills but he has also been touting our advances in the medical field that he claims keep all of us healthier. Those who have confronted him directly through the years have simply disappeared."

"My brother knew this?" Martin asked.

Muton nodded his head. "To what extent I don't know, but he had to have known there was something was different about him. He must have..."

Jezipa looked at Aricia once more. [He did not... he did not tell us about this Aricia. A battle with his brother? His brother? Out here? When?]

Aricia looked at Anja and then to For'mya quickly. [They will discover it eventually Aricia. Better it come from us.] Anja spoke softly.

[Melyanna is correct.] For'mya spoke now. She squeezed Meral's hands. [When we are finished here... we will take you aside and tell you. I promise. You have a right to know and Anja is correct, better it come from us than from someone else.]

[It isn't good is it?] Meral asked.

For'mya shook her head as her dark brown eyes fell on Martin. [No.] She answered. [It both broke his heart and healed him for many years of sins. If not for our son Androcles and what he did, what he made sure happened even from across the stars, it may have also taken a piece of our Martin's soul.]

[All of you speak differently about this son Androcles.] Jezima said. [Why?]

[Androcles is the oldest of our children and sometimes it seems that...] Anja began. [It seems like Andro is...]

[A gift from the very Gods themselves.] For'mya finished Anja's sentence with an almost reverent tone in her voice.

[Avoi.] Aricia and Anja spoke at the same time.

Martin's voice drew them back to the main conversation.

"...it's true, and I don't doubt it, it's probably why he's such an asshole, how does all this tie in with the ship?" Martin asked.

"My grandmother's journals say that two thousand went to this Cabelir..." Muton said lifting another data scroll. "But she only speaks of fifteen hundred being captured. I believe, and I stress I have no hard evidence to support this, I believe that the other five hundred left them on Cabelir and returned to Elear to search the mountain for anything they could find."

Arzoal's head came up now as she listened. "Returned with our ship Muton?" She asked him quickly.

Muton turned to look at her. "Yes, Elder Mother."

Martin looked at Arzoal as well. "Is that possible?" He asked her.

Arzoal nodded her massive head. "Yes! I moved our complete living and breeding caves to another continent entirely a year after we destroyed the mountain. The southern continent was the least populated and I forbid any dragon to return to our former caves or even fly over it. No one questioned this Martin, for we all knew the horrors it had wrought."

"So if these five hundred did return to Elear then no one would have known they were there and they could have found anything." Martin said.

"It's obvious they found something." Arzoal spoke again. "Something that we had not destroyed. Some samples or equipment. It's the only way Lorendo could have gotten his hands on the original serum in order to mutate it as much as he has."

Anja nodded her head. "I have to agree with Arzoal." She said. "They had to have found something Lover."

"But we don't know what!" Martin hissed turning to look at the chart once more. The room was silent for a long moment, no one really knowing what to say as Martin stared at the chart table. At first he just lifted his hand to brush aside the overlays that were in front of him, but then Danny saw it first. They had worked together so long he knew Martin's quirks and oddities almost better than his wives and mates. Danny rose to his feet and moved over to Martin's opposite side.

"What you got running through that head of yours fervon?" He asked softly as everyone looked at them.

Martin held up his right left hand but continued to move the overlays around on the table. He looked up finally. "Avi?"

-I am here Martin-

"Knowing that fat fuck like we do... it's safe to assume that he established some sort of facility to work on what they took from Elear right?" Martin asked.

Avi paused only a moment. -Given that they had only just arrived on Artaaya within the last decade and that whatever he would have found he would want to keep secret... yes- Avi answered.

"And he wouldn't have set it up on Artaaya for fear it would be discovered." Martin spoke to no one in particular. "Or that it could infect everyone and ruin his chances at being a savior."

Anja broke away from Meral's side and moved up next to him, squeezing in between Danny and Martin. "I think I see where you are going with this Lover." She spoke.

“What would you do Red?” Martin asked looking at her jade green eyes. “If you had your hands on something that could potentially kill everyone whose eyes you were trying to be a hero for?”

“Establish a base. An outside facility away from mass amounts of people.” Anja replied instantly. “For testing, and as far away from where it could do harm as possible.”

“Of course!” Radra exclaimed.

Delnash leaned forward now as well. “I think I understand as well Martin.” He spoke.

Martin nodded his head. “He also used the time he was gone to scout possible sites to put together this facility.”

“We’re talking about...” Danny looked at the chart. “Christ Skipper... you are talking about a whole lot of territory. Hundreds of light years. Thousands.”

Martin shook his head. “No.” He answered almost excitedly. “Manda you monitoring this?”

Miranda’s cool voice came through the internal speakers and her image fluttered to life from a secondary holo emitter disc. “So far Martin.” She spoke. “And I think I know what you are going to ask.”

“What are the chances they veered off into the unknown?” Martin asked. “A Quadrant of space you have never been in before, with only one ship and almost no chance of any back up getting to you before someone bounced your ass into the next life?”

“If the ship’s commander was any good?” Miranda spoke. “None.”

“All of our warship commanders back then had either fought the Scourge or at the very least out maneuvered them to escape. None of them were beginners Martin, and I find it hard any of them would have done this.” Delnash spoke again.

“Then they would have traced their course back!” Anthylea spoke now coming to her feet.

Martin pointed at her with his finger and a large smile. “Yes! Give that woman a cigar!”

Anthylea looked taken aback, thinking that he had just insulted her, but Tobia quickly took her arm causing Anthylea to look at her. “It is a statement of respect Anthylea.” She said quickly. “A slang that they use to compliment someone.”

Anthylea looked back to Martin quickly who now had a sheepish look on his face. “Sorry.” He spoke softly. “But I’ll hang with the Tasmor anytime. You guys get it!”

“True enough!” Danny agreed.

“That is still a third of the quadrant that he crossed Martin.” Delnash spoke once more. “There must be thousands of habitable planets that he could use.”

Martin shook his head. “Lorendo is a back stabbing, murdering tukannupae, but he isn’t stupid. He wouldn’t have set this up on a habitable planet. Too obvious. He would have used a dead planet, or something that would have killed this thing if it ever got loose.” Martin moved the overlays around once more. “Avi, 27, filter out any planet with even a remote chance that it could support life. Only along the course that Lorendo’s ship took and the transport as well until it left the quadrant. You’ve charted the quadrant right 27?”

-Extensively King Martin- 27 answered. –I am removing all designated planets or moons-

“Manda, how many SPIDER Stealth probes you got on board?” Martin asked.

“Forty-seven.” She answered instantly.

-Parameters met- 27 spoke now as the chart table in front of them shifted. –Three hundred and nineteen worlds match the requirements-

“Three hundred!” Delnash gasped. “We do not have the time or resources to search that many worlds Martin!” He told him. “Not to mention that Lorendo would discover this within days of it beginning.”

Martin shook his head. “You won’t be doing anything sir.” Martin told him. “You are just going to win that election.”

“I don’t understand.” Delnash said.

“Manda?” Martin spoke once more.

“E’dira is plotting the overlay now Martin.” Miranda replied.

Anja looked at Martin now, reaching up to turn his face to look at her. “What are you doing Lover?” She asked.

“I’m going to find this place.” Martin spoke. “I’m going to find where he made this thing and I’m going to blow it into fucking atoms!” Martin snarled passionately.

“Lover you can’t.” Anja said. “If you find it, whatever is in the computers of this place could very well save lives. The original base formula will be there.” Anja took his face in her hands. “With that formula, Radra, Duewa and I can make a cure.”

“What then?” Martin asked her gently. “How many of our people die trying to cure others? How many do we lose to the very disease we are trying to fix? The risk is too great! I’m not willing to make that sacrifice Anja. Are you?”

Anja stared at him for a long moment, the doctor within her struggling with the soldier. Finally she shook her head slowly. “No.” She answered him softly.

Martin pulled her into his arms, crushing her petite frame to his body and Anja wrapped her arms around his waist and buried her face in his chest, inhaling deeply of his delicious mint scent as his aura swarmed around her. She shuddered in the sensations of the unquestioned love for her, for Aricia and For'mya, for all of them that came out in his aura and his resonance. All of the men and women were silent as they watched and realized what this decision meant. They were essentially condemning any who had already been transformed into Svorag to death and all of them knew it. Aricia and For'mya left Jezima and Meral and moved up beside Anja and Martin, pulsing Anja with their female auras. The three of them were the closest of friends as well as devoted lovers and more than anyone, they and their fellow Queens knew just how passionate Anja was about others. She was the one who showed the most emotion in all things, fiery and seemingly out of control at times, but always with purpose. It is why they all loved her so.

Anja looked up into Martin’s face as Aricia and Anja touched her arms. “If you do this, you have to make sure you get it all Martin.” She told him. “Leave nothing to chance. Not even a small portion of this thing can escape.”

Martin nodded. “I’ll take care of it.” He said softly.

Anja reached up on her tip toes and kissed him deeply before pulling back and nodding her head with a deep breath. “Then we will try and work on something from Arzoal’s notes that could possibly inoculate those who have not been infected. Something to delay the infection somehow. At this point anything is better than nothing.”

“Agreed.” Radra said.

“Yes.” Duewa echoed.

Anja looked at Martin. “The SPIRIT is here now. She has a fully equipped Research Lab like the one I have on Earth and Hadaria. This includes the Tasmor now so I want Perlyea and her folks involved as well Lover. Anyone with any knowledge of this thing needs to be part of this now.”

Martin nodded his head, knowing not to argue with her. “Done.” He told her seeing the looks of shock from Saydia and the other Tasmor.

Anja took another deep breath and nodded her head once more. “When this is all over, when that fat ronnus Lorendo is finally cornered and caught, you give his carcass to me! I want to make sure he experiences all the pain and suffering that he has forced on so many through the years.”

“What are you going to do to him?” Martin asked softly almost not wanting to know the answer.

“I’m going to turn him into one of his creations and then I’m going to stick him in an airlock and watch as he changes and the air is drained out of the airlock and he dies.” Anja snarled savagely before spinning around and heading out of the building, Aricia and For'mya on either side of her.

Danny stepped up next to Martin as Delnash spoke from his office on Artaaya. “Martin, why do I sense that you are no longer the largest threat to Lorendo at this moment?”

Martin couldn’t help but smile now as he watched his three Queens move out into the sunlight. “I ain’t.” He spoke calmly. “He’s done pissed off the wrong person now. Anja’s got a mean streak in her that matches my son and Aricia. And she has the skills to make sure it takes him a long time to die.”

“This is... this is not our way Martin.” Delnash spoke.

Martin turned to look at him. “He’s killed my people now sir.” Martin told him with no malice in his voice. “And he is responsible for what happened here on Ventori. How many lives did the Svorag take here?”

Martin shook his head. “No... this is our problem now. We won’t move against him until all the facts are in, but when the time comes, Lorendo will answer to the Lycavorian people. To the Tasmor people and to the Pralor people.”

Wayonn nodded from his spot where he had remained silent until now. “Spartan Justice.” He spoke the words.

“Spartan Justice.” Helen echoed his words softly as she moved up beside him.

“Avoi.” Arzoal’s voice echoed in the air now. “Avoi.”

ICARAVA
DARASTRIXI HOMEWORLD
URLKRISIR MAMISS HEADQUARTERS
SULEVFU WOIUEWR CHAMBERS

Scourge Holy Elites. Disise Ioth Kilnsiri in the Darastrixu tongue. The right hand of their Queen. No one knew how many of them existed, but without fail they acted with their Disise Daariv’s full authority. (Scourge Queen)

Two of them, which was saying a great deal.

Normal communications with the Scourge was done on a regular basis with simple the Scourge Elites that maintained a compound on their largest orbiting station. They remained out of the way most of the time, knowing that the vast majority of Darastrixu hated them. The other species that visited Icarava for trading, pleasure or business hardly ever saw them since they rarely showed their faces outside of their large compound on the space station. This was very different Issver Draque noted to himself. It had been over three hundred years since he had last seen an Ioth Kilnsiri and this could not be good for them, so soon after receiving Aviel’s message.

They stood side by side, both of them reaching 1.7 meters in height easily. Each of them was muscular to an extent on their slim bodies, not an ounce of fat showing anywhere from what Issver could tell. He doubted either of them weighed more than 85 kilos, but it was all very solid. Their double skulls were no longer hidden under the helmets which they held under their arms, their heads in the shape of a curved triangle really, with two black eyes on each upper layer of their skulls. Eyes that were not pleasant Issver knew. Each side of their head had two, small finger like appendages that twitched from time to time. This was something left over from their time as an insectoid race, but it also served to set them apart from the simple Kilnsiri soldiers for they did not have these appendages. Both of them wore a combination of armor and dark reddish robes on their bodies, and while they had areas on their belts that normally held weapons, these weapons had been removed before entering this chamber. This was something that no scourge liked to do and it showed on the faces of the two Ioth Kilnsiri.

Their skin, like all Scourge, was a dark gray in color and very moist on the outside. It was as if they had a sheen of sweat on their bodies all of the time. Whether it was some sort of gland issue with them, or a defensive mechanism, Issver neither cared nor wanted to know. He did not care for the Scourge in the least, nor did he trust them. He had agreed to their arrangement only as a means to keep the Darastrixu from a war that they would eventually lose. Of course the huge amounts of Darastrixu Hrekim (coin) that the Scourge paid him and the other members of the Sulevfu Woiuewr helped to make him exceptionally wealthy even in Darastrixu terms, and this gave him incredible influence. Issver finally took a deep breath and leaned forward in his high backed chair.

“To what do we owe the honor of a visit from two Disise Ioth Kilnsiri?” He asked finally.

One of the Ioth Kilnsiri stepped further away from the other. “I am Holy One Vajol. We are here to tell you that Queen Shara is not happy.” He spoke his voice sounding choppy and his words delivered with somewhat of a hissing noise to them. “She does not believe that you have kept to the terms of our agreement properly.”

“In what way Ioth Kilnsiri Vajol?” Issver asked.

“She believes there are those among your kind that are hiding one of the names on our list.” Vajol answered him. “You provided us this list but when we were escorted to collect this Maiden female after no verbal response was received we discovered that her home is empty. After questioning several of your kind in the vicinity we discovered she had not been there for years. And that her parents had not been living there for almost a decade.”

“This is all news to us Vajol.” Issver said calmly. “Do you happen to have this maiden’s name? Her family name perhaps.”

The Ioth Kilnsiri looked at the data pad he held in his hand. “Ti’shara.” He answered looking back to Issver once more. “Laren Ti’shara.”

Issver kept his face blank and nodded his head. “Perhaps there was some missing information that was not provided. If you would allow us to review this, we will inform you immediately of what we discover.”

“This Maiden belongs to us.” Vajol spoke. “You will discover where she is hiding and you will turn her over to us.”

“As I said, we will review this information and forward it to you immediately.” Issver told him.

“We want a list of all Darastrixi currently assigned to your ships.” The second Ioth Kilnsiri spoke now as he stepped forward.

Issver looked at him. “I do not believe we have ever met.” He spoke to him trying to remain in control of his emotions.

“This is Holy One Rekile.” Vajol answered for him. “His position is one of military leader. He commands all forces within this sector of space.”

“I see...” Issver began. “But as a matter of law, you have no authority to review our military records in any form. Our agreement does not specify that particular area. I’m sorry.”

“You deny us this?” Rekile snapped.

Issver nodded his head. “I believe that would be the word, yes.” He replied. “There is no stipulation within our Charter Agreement that has anything to do with the Darastrixi military. I will certainly forward any information that we have in regards to this maiden to you when we receive it. Is that all?”

“Now you dismiss us?” Rekile almost shouted.

“Do you have additional business with us?” Issver asked evenly. “If so, please tell us, otherwise we are very busy”

“How soon will you be forwarding this information?” Vajol asked now.

“I will have someone discover what the error is and then give you directions to her new location as soon as we have it.” Issver answered.

Vajol nodded his head. “Do not make us wait long. The Queen is already upset.”

Issver nodded his own head. “Of course.” He stated.

“Then we will take our leave of you.” Vajol spoke beginning to turn.

“Wait!” Rekile snapped. “We...”

“Will take our leave.” Vajol told him as he turned. Rekile saw something in his eye and acquiesced to follow Vajol out.

The Scourge Holy Elite left the chamber and walked a short distance away where their voices would not be heard. “Vajol they...”

Vajol nodded his oversized head. “They are hiding something.” He interrupted his words. “Yes... I noticed that too.”

“They know of this maiden and her whereabouts.” Rekile said.

“Indeed.” Vajol agreed with him.

“Queen Shara would...” Rekile began.

“The Queen would want us to do what she put us here to do Rekile.” Vajol told him. “We are her Holy Elites for this sector of Darastrixi space. The dictators and executors of her divine will. Let us do our jobs. Do you have contacts high enough within your Converts to discover anything about this maiden?”

Rekile got a handle on his emotions and thought for a moment. “Perhaps.” He said. “I have never asked them to inform on other Darastrixi however.”

Vajol nodded his head. “Nor have I of my converts. But now we must. Something is going on and we need to find out what it is.” He said. “I hate these monsters but they have never done this before. Their actions warrant a closer look and investigation.”

Rekile nodded. “I will see to it.” He said.

“I will inform the Queen and what we are doing.” Vajol spoke. “We may need her divine guidance.”

Rekile bowed his head. “You will give her my undying love and service?” He asked.

Vajol nodded his head. “Of course, just as I will give her mine.” He replied. “She has gifted us both with fine brood offspring.”

“She has.” Rekile agreed.

“Then let us do what she bade us to do and perhaps we will find ourselves in her embrace for another night of decadence soon.” Vajol spoke.

“There is no greater place or service I wish to have.” Rekile said. “I will return in a few hours with what I was able to discover.”

Issver sat back in his chair and exhaled heavily. “This is not good.” He finally spoke aloud.

“How do the Scourge know more about our own people than we do Issver?” Nyso Mser spoke up now.

Issver rose from his chair. “Everyone remain calm.” He told them. “We do not have any real idea about what is going on.”

“I should think it is obvious!” Another Vrrarhoinpa snapped. Lenrak Letai had been one of the strongest advocates for this agreement for it meant the Darastrixi did not have to go to war and he could enrich himself without really doing anything. “They are searching for the same maiden that Aviel Em’morr took!”

“Calm yourself Lenrak.” Tinoz Vors spoke evenly, his deep voice sounding perfect from a dragon of his size.

“The Scourge will...” Lenrak started to say.

“The Scourge monsters will do nothing!” Another Vrrarhoinpa entered the discussion now. His name was Numalt Denran, the youngest Vrrarhoinpa on the Sulevfu Woiewr at sixty-three thousand years old and a former Sand Strider Battalion member. “This is our world and they dare not anger us while they are here!”

“We warned that this agreement was going to backfire on us.” Nyso commented.

“What were we supposed to do?” Lenrak stammered.

“Not agree to this!” Numalt snapped.

“Enough!” Issver barked out. “We all know where we voted on this.” He declared. “It divided this very chamber for three decades! We must... we cannot have that division again.”

Issver moved in front of them. “I made some personal inquires before we met with the Scourge. Aviel Em’morr did in fact leave this very morning aboard the DARASTRIXETHE-Class Dreadnought LEVXIERIV. If I am to understand correctly, General Dytin was with him as well, for this is his Command Ship. Two other warships departed with the LEVXIERIV as well as six Mark Eight military transports configured for passengers. Those left from six different port facilities throughout Darastrixi space at the same time.”

“The Commanding General of all Darastrixi Forces has deserted us as well?” Lenrak exclaimed.

“This does not help us!” Issver roared now, motioning with his hand to another side door and watching as his senior aide moved through the door into the main chambers. “You all know my senior aide Deit Roel. I had him asking questions of certain people while we were meeting with the Scourge. We all need to listen to him now, for he has information that we need to hear!”

All of them looked at Issver seriously now and even Tinoz took on an expression of surprise and hesitancy. “Issver... what is it old friend?” He asked him. “What have you discovered?”

Issver motioned the young Jiilhoinpa forward. “Colonel... please share with us what you have discovered.” The young male moved into the center of the chambers and looked at the members of the Sulevfu Woiewr nervously. He turned his eyes to Issver and saw him nod his head. “I have never asked you to not be honest and open with me Deit, now I ask the same for all of us.”

The Darastrixi Colonel nodded his head and took a deep breath. “I did not have much time to make the inquires that the Sulevfu Woiewr required of me but I was able to discover much more than what Koppentotz

Aviel's message revealed." He explained. "The Ioth Kilnsiri were correct about her name. Her birth was registered twenty-six point seven years ago by her parents, but shortly after that she disappeared. She was never enrolled for any schooling by any institution nor was she given any medical treatment by any Medical Facility. I was not able to check them all, but I did check those within the district she was born in. Her name is Laren Ti'shara, daughter to Yokra and Robati Ti'shara. And Ladur Peren, the youngest Vrrarhoinpa hatched to Chrap and Jarod Peren."

"What does this all mean?" Lenrak asked now.

"Let him finish Lenrak!" Yeren Ir'iss spoke for the first time.

"Both Koppentotz Aviel and General Dytin were raised together." Deit continued his report. "They were born only a half kilometer apart and lived only three homes away from each other for centuries. They were considered the closest of friends by those I was able to inquire of in so short a time. They were never apart and always getting into trouble together." Deit looked at the members. "They were, and still are from what I can determine at least, part of the Ancient Religious Sect that still worships Wer Zezhuanth. They still honor and believe in the Ancient Scrolls left to us by Wer Zezhuanth."

"Religious fanatics!" Lenrak exclaimed. "Perfect!"

"Simply because they still believe in the ways of Wer Zezhuanth does not mean they are fanatics!" Yeren barked.

"The Scrolls of Wer Zezhuanth have been considered obsolete for millennia!" Lenrak retorted. "No one even studies them anymore!"

The Colonel looked at the much older Darastrixi. "I still believe in the Ancient Scrolls." Deit spoke. "I still follow the teachings of Wer Zezhuanth as well as I am able. Does that make me a fanatic as well Tiichia Lenrak?"

Issver had returned to his chair beside Tinoz and he looked at his senior aide intently now. "Deit... tell us of this Scroll. The Prophecy of the Souls."

Deit shook his head. "I did not study the Scrolls as intently as others Tiichia Issver. I would not be the right one to tell you what the Prophecies mean."

Issver nodded his head. "Indulge us Colonel." He spoke.

"The Lorsvek ar Sepas, the Prophecy of Souls, it foretells of the return of the Dahakoan Tiichia Issver, just as Koppentotz Aviel told you. Wer Zezhuanth will bestow his essence to six individuals from across the stars, they will wield a power unlike any that have come before them, and it is they who will be the heralds of the Darastrixi and what is to come." Deit spoke calmly and evenly. "Now and into the future."

"And how many of our people still believe in these ancient teachings and myths?" Lenrak hissed the questions.

Deit met his eyes. "Far more still believe in the prophecies and myths than you might think Tiichia Lenrak." He stated.

"Then they are fools!" Lenrak shouted. "And fanatics!"

"There are many who would call you a fool for not believing Tiichia Lenrak." Deit spoke.

Lenrak came to his feet in a huff now and he glared at the younger Darastrixi. The look bounced completely off the military officer who glared back at the man unafraid of him. Issver stood up. "No one will question the dedication or honor of Colonel Deit in my presence!" He barked. "Not even you Lenrak. Now sit down!"

"What must we do to stop them and return them here Colonel?" Nyso Mser asked in a much more calm and respectful tone of voice.

Deit looked at him and his face and expression softened somewhat. "Stop them Tiichia Nyso?" He asked.

Nyso nodded his head. "Stop them from leaving yes. We need to speak with these children and discover what they know."

Deit looked confused. "Forgive me Tiichia Nyso, but Koppentotz Aviel's message clearly states that he has taken them to be united with the other Dahakoan. Two of which are known to be Lycavorian. If this happens there will be no returning so that they can be talked too. They will have far more knowledge than any in this room."

"What do you mean?" Nyso asked. "Who are these Lycavorian? I have never heard of such a species."

“They are a minor species from the Alpha Quadrant, but one that is on the military’s threat list because of their strength and warlike nature.” Tinoz answered.

“The Lorsvek ar Sepas states that Wer Zezhuanth has bestowed a piece of his essence to six individuals across the stars.” Deit told them. “When they are united, his essence will be complete and all six of them will receive his blessing and wisdom. His life experiences. They will know what path they will take when they are united together. At least that is what the prophecy states in my interpretation of it.”

“Issver we need to...” Lenrak began to talk quickly and Issver held up his hand to quiet him before he began.

“I have already dispatched three of our cruisers to intercept General Dytin and return these two individuals to Icarava. Yobhakcho Darrod Nilich is an excellent officer and I have worked with him before. (Major) General Dytin trained him. He will not fail us.” He spoke lowering his hand. “Those involved will face justice for whatever crime we deem they have committed when they are returned. Right now I suggest that we quickly discover why it is that the Scourge are so interested in this single maiden female. I want scholars from every branch of the government gathered and I want the offices and computers of Koppentotz Aviel, Chalith, the head of the Livaiji Sulevfu and all of his senior staff seized and gone through by these scholars for whatever information they can find. We will meet again in twelve hours’ time and go over what we have discovered, for at that time we will need to tell the Scourge something. That is all the time I can reasonably stall them.”

“And what if they do not like the answers we give to them Issver?” Lenrak asked.

Issver met his eyes. “Let us wait and find out what we need too and then go from there.” Issver told him. Lenrak paused for a moment and then nodded his head.

Issver rose to his feet. “Then we are done for now. We will reconvene in twelve hours my friends.”

PREMONITION

SEPTEMBER 8TH 2575 0500 HOURS

TWENTY-FOUR HOURS TO PRALOR STATION

Mari sighed in blissful delight as Deion’s lips and nose nuzzled the back of her neck and ears lightly while his powerful arms curled around her body to grasp her large breasts and pull her tightly against his equally naked body. The warmth generated by his body was incredible and now that he had turned her, she would also begin to exhibit a higher body temperature. This meant that unless it was very cold, they no longer needed anything more than a simple sheet to cover their naked bodies. Mari still could not believe the events of these last weeks and months, but she was sure of one thing. Having Deion’s arms wrapped around her was something that she could no longer live without. Her tiny frame fit against his like the matching pieces of a puzzle. He had chosen her, of all the females in the universe, he had chosen her. And she had chosen him. Now that she was also wolf, this meant far more to her than anything. Not only did their bodies mesh together seamlessly, but their minds had become almost one as well. Whatever else it meant, this fact told Mari that they were meant for each other by something that was far beyond their comprehension. A year ago this type of relationship would have terrified her, but now she embraced it. His kisses, his touch, his aura, it made her complete.

Now that she was wolf and his wife and mate, he had been schooling her in the intricacies of being wolf whenever they had the chance. The first time she shifted her form she could not get her four legs under her at all. She flopped around on the deck for nearly fifteen minutes, Deion trying to help her but knowing she needed to find her own way as well. She knew it had to be a laughable experience for any who saw it, and this made her feel embarrassment, but surprisingly, not one person laughed at her. Finally it was Deion, his brother Denali and Sadi and Ne’Veha who had stood around her on all sides in their wolf forms and steadied her as she got accustomed to standing on four legs. Once she had command of that, it was off to the races. Mari simply loved being in her wolf form because of the freedom she felt. Within hours she was running throughout the landing bay as gracefully as a wolf five times her age. She learned very quickly and this only added to the premise that she was meant for this. At least to her.

Also, now that she was wolf, her sexual drive was much higher. Her desire for Deion was so powerful and pure since he had turned her and they had been making love as often as time allowed, and doing so in places she would never have imagined. Even as large as his manhood was, it fit within her depths as if it had been made specifically to fill her. It helped that she was so tiny, barely reaching his shoulders with her head when they were standing next to each other, and he could and did carry her all around when she was impaled upon his manhood, loudly whimpering and squealing out her enchantment. She loved the feel of him, the taste of him, the smell of him, and when he pulsed her now with his male wolf aura Mari became almost wet at her center instantly. Her entire body would ignite with a desire and burning she had never felt before, her nipples becoming like hard nubs, her whole body becoming charged with sexual energy. Outside of their bed when he pulsed her with his aura, it was with the utmost love and respect and honor and it allowed Mari to bask in the knowledge that he belonged to her totally. Last night had been no different and they had made each other howl in delight for several hours before falling asleep in each other's arms. This is how he woke her up now, and it made her feel simply divine.

"Are you awake?" Deion whispered in her ear.

Mari chuckled playfully. "How could I not be with your lips dancing across my skin." She answered him.

"Pen enyla forn Mari Leonidas." Deion whispered into her ear.

His words, spoken with such emotion in them, caused Mari to shudder in bliss and she rolled over on the bed, folding her body against his as she took his face in her hands and stared at his beautiful face.

"Pen enyla forn Deion Leonidas." She told him with bright green eyes and a wide smile. "More than I could ever put into words."

This made Deion smile and his arms pulled her tighter. He reached up with his hand and used one finger to pull some of her brownish red hair from her cheek. "What?" He asked her. "You look like you have a question."

Mari shook her head. "No, not anymore." She answered. "I did... I wondered how I could feel for you what I do and feel it so completely. But I haven't since you turned me. I can feel it within you, smell it within you. Technically you are not even eighteen years old, yet I know within you is a wisdom far beyond such years. It makes me love you so much more."

Deion smiled. "Not if you ask my mothers or the Feravomir." He said playfully. "I'm trouble and always have been. Just like Andro."

Mari matched his smile. "But you are all mine." She said.

"Yes I am." He said brushing his lips over her forehead. "You... I know you have had relationships before Mari... but you only hide one from me. I have claimed you as my wife and mate, and you belong to me, you do not need to be afraid of what you share with me. I will not feel threatened if you had feelings for another."

Mari nodded her head. "I know. It's not what you think though." She replied. "No man, no one has ever done to me what you do Deion. It is beyond glorious."

Deion's eyebrow lifted. "No man?" He asked her with a sheepish grin. "Is there... is there something I should know about you Mari?"

Mari slapped his face playfully and smiled at him. "Igord!" She hissed at him. "There was a woman. A Tasmor."

"Like those my father and mothers are with now?" He asked.

Mari nodded her head. "I was with my mother for several months on their homeworld. There was a young woman, she was my age, and she was... she was beautiful Deion. She was the daughter of their leader, the Sovereign Regent. Her name was Emylea."

Deion rolled over onto his back pulling Mari with him. She settled on to his chest as he used his arms to pull them into a sitting position with his back against the wall and Mari settled her hips onto his lap and sat up. She could feel his soft, but still exceptionally large cock press against her center but Mari knew instinctively that nothing would happen now. She was his wife and mate now and he would be able to sense when it was time for them to give pleasure to each other, and this was not one of those times. His hands came to rest on her hips and he looked at her intently as she dropped her hands to his expansive and insanely muscular and well defined chest and simply dragged her fingers across what was now hers completely. His skin, his abdomen, his chest, his entire being.

“It was strange really...” Mari continued then. “Almost from the first moment I met her I could feel that we would be together. She felt it too. She told me as much one night after...” Mari looked at him and saw that his face was genuinely listening to her without other typical male thoughts going through his mind. This was one of the many reasons that Mari found herself so utterly vexed by him. Most Pralor males of his age would have been concerned only with finding their own satisfaction any way they could and they wouldn’t have been able to carry on a cognizant conversation with any woman. Perhaps it was because he was wolf, and these normal late teen urges had no effect on him. He spoke and thought like a fully grown man of many years. Of course, it helped that he shared the memories and values of both his parents, passed to him through their Etheric bond as all Lycavorians did with their children.

“With her it was almost like it is with you Deo. It was passionate and intense and it made me feel free and happy. Emylea too. We talked of so much when we were together, we are very much alike.” Marti told him completely unafraid to share her feelings with him.

“Have you kept in contact with her?” He asked finally.

Mari shook her head. “Relations between the Tasmor and my people were not very good to begin with. They didn’t trust us and we really didn’t do anything to change that. For Emylea to continue a relationship with me after we had left would not have been good for her. Once mother and I left we only spoke once. As much as we hated it I think both of us realized that there could be nothing between us, no matter how much we may have wanted it.”

“You cared deeply for her then.” Deion spoke. “It comes out in your voice.”

Mari nodded. “Like I told you, we were so much alike it was scary sometimes. We became the very best of friends so quickly that it shocked many people. When other Tasmor found out we were sleeping together Emylea didn’t care. She even flaunted it more. I didn’t mind either.”

“Did she get into trouble? After you left?” Deion asked.

Mari shook her head. “No.” She answered with a knowing smile. “Kind of hard to get into trouble for doing exactly what her mother was doing?” Mari saw the confusion on his face and smiled. “My mother was sleeping with Emylea’s mother Saydia and her lover Anthylea at the same time. And Anthylea is a Tasmor Breeder.”

“Oh.” Deion said confused. “What does that mean?”

“The Tasmor are an almost entirely female species.” Mari said. “They have males but their numbers are very few. Over the generations some Tasmor females evolved into Breeders. They have male and female organs, but the male parts are the more dominant with the Breeders. My mother told me...” Mari blushed slightly. “My mother told me that Anthylea was quite well endowed and was exquisitely good at using it.”

“Oh... I see.” Deion stammered as he sat up a little straighter. “I think.” He looked at her. “Emylea was like this? One of these Breeders?”

“What? Oh no!” Mari replied her eyes going wide as she realized what he must have thought. “No!” She exclaimed. “Gods no!” She leaned forward and kissed him deeply. “No Deo my beautiful man, you are the most superbly gifted specimen of a man that I have ever had and I will never want more than that. Or desire another.”

“That’s good.” Deion told her with a shy grin. “Mari you did not need to hide this from me.”

Mari smiled and nodded. “I know.” She replied. “Part of me... I guess part of me did not want to let go of what Emylea and I shared now that I have found you.”

“Then don’t.” Deion told her causing her to look at him with wide eyes.

“What?” She gasped.

“Does this Emylea feel the same way for you Mari my love?” He asked her.

Mari stared at him with those gorgeous eyes and shook her head. “I... I haven’t spoken to her in almost two years Deo. I don’t know.”

“Did she make you happy Mari?” He asked.

Mari met his eyes as he sat up and his arms pulled her closer to him. She naturally encircled his broad shoulders tighter with her arms and stared in to his eyes. “Not as happy as I am now Deo.” She told him. “Nothing could make me happier than being with you now and forever more.”

Deion smiled. "I don't doubt that Mari. You tell me that in your scent and your aura and your resonance. Just as you make me happier than I have ever been or will ever be. But I am not so selfish with my love for you that I would take from you something else that makes you very happy. This Emylea is not another male, and it wouldn't matter even if she was one of these Breeders as you called them, she is still a female. Is she not?"

Mari nodded her head. "Yes, of course."

"Mari you are wolf now." Deion told her. "I am in your blood just as deeply as you are in mine. Neither of us will, we could not want another of the opposite sex. No man could make you feel as I do and no woman can make me feel as you do. Because we are wolves and mates this is not possible unless one of us dies and our bodies change once more back to normal."

Mari smiled at him and leaned close to run the tip of her tongue over his lips. "Desiring only you for the rest of my life? Never even considering another? Oh, I like that Deo my love. I like that very much."

Deion grinned. "Then if there is something still there when you next meet her Mari, do not be afraid to show it."

"And you... you would do nothing?" She asked. "You would not want to be with us both?"

Deion shook his head. "You are all I will ever need." He told her. "I know there are ways..." He looked away shyly. "I have heard my six mothers speaking in private when they did not know I was there. I have heard them say that they can make each other feel things that my father cannot. This does not make them love him any less, it makes them love him more."

Mari reached up and traced his jaw with her finger. "You are so very different Deo." She said softly.

"That is a good thing I hope." He said.

Mari laughed softly and kissed him once more, loving how his arms crushed her close and he quickly dominated their kiss, causing her blood to begin to warm. She could feel it clearly now and it never ceased to amaze her. He pulled away before his kiss could incite them both and he smiled at her.

"As much as I would love to feast on you now, both of us need food." He told her. "And we need to ready ourselves for our mission."

Mari nodded quickly and got her feelings and desires under control. It was one of the very first things that Eliani and Sadi had shown her once she became wolf. She could reign in her desires and keep them in check even when around Deion and his aura was swarming her senses in a non-sexual way. "You are correct." She said with a deep breath.

Deion shifted on the bed and threw his legs over the side and stood up easily with Mari wrapping her legs around his waist and smiling at him. "Then we must shower and go eat." He told her as he began to move across the small room carrying her as if she weighed no more than a feather. "When we are done with this mission I intend to have nothing but desert for days."

Mari grinned and squeezed him tighter. "As long as I am able to partake as well." She told him.

Deion smiled as he stepped into the shower. "That is very much my intent." He said. "Yes, indeed."

"...Do such a thing Koppentotz Aviel?" Andro growled out the words as he trembled with anger.

The Mark II Neural Booster was fully active in the cargo bay of the PREMONITION where they had the most open space. Andro, Dorian, Elynth, Ryner, Sarlana and Murano were present in the cargo bay together as Andro initiated the communication with Laren and Ladur. When it activated, they discovered that their soul sister and brother had also gathered a few others with them, among them Koppentotz Aviel and General Dylin. Laren had filled them in quickly on what had transpired so far, including what Aviel Em'mor had done, though neither she nor Ladur seemed particularly upset about this.

"Forgive me Androcles but I felt I had to." Aviel answered him honestly. "As a member of the government I felt it my obligation to let them know what was happening. I did not give specifics, but they had to know that all of you exist. That you have returned!"

"It was foolish and arrogant! What were you thinking?" Sarlana snapped now looking at him in the Etheric generated transmission. "They will be looking for you now!"

Androcles looked at Laren in the transmission, seeing her dual colored azure and cobalt eyes dancing in the light happily. "Arande?"

They saw everyone where she was turn to look at her with wide eyes as Andro spoke in the ancient Lycavorian language that none of them understood. “Pen taine tye fervon. Ladur mornar pen fes.” I trust him brother. Ladur and I both.)

“Forn wen inniel arande? Fervon?” (You are sure)

Ladur nodded his huge head this time. “Evell wen, jainn.” He answered. (We are yes)

Andro nodded his own head then. “Eana pen gur taine inalo forn fes.” He said evenly. (Then I will trust in you both)

That is when the young Darastrixi pushed away from the wall and moved closer to the group. They had seen him in the transmission but said nothing for no one made to introduce him. He seemed very fit, as had most Darastrixi that they had seen so far, but he appeared to be more thickly muscled than Aviel or Dalis for instance. He appeared to be in excellent physical shape and his movements were measured and careful. A military man if Androcles had to guess, and a well-trained one.

“Why do you speak in a language we cannot understand if you wish us to trust you?” He spoke looking at the image of Androcles in the transmission. His deep but even voice carried a tenor of suspiciousness and distrust in it.

Dytin looked almost horrified that he had spoken in such a manner. “Yobhalcho Dariel, you are out of line!” He spat. “You will stand down immediately!”

Dariel looked at his General. A man he worshiped and had for decades. “Inidra Dytin, you tasked me with a mission. I cannot do that mission if I do not know what is going on. Who are these individuals and why is there a Darastrixi among them? Why am I reduced to being the protector of a child maiden?”

Laren whirled on him. “I am no child!” She snapped. “Or would you like another lesson in objective reality?”

Andro looked surprised but it was Dorian who spoke now. “You assigned someone to protect her?” He asked. “I bet that didn’t go over well.”

“No, it did not.” Dytin agreed.

“Inidra Dytin, Laren does not need a protector.” Dorian told him not seeing Laren’s face light up in pride at his words.

Dytin looked at Dorian with what could have been a lopsided grin. “Yes, I am beginning to see that Dorian.” He answered.

In the few times he had spoken to the brothers he found them to be honest and very open. They would be considered children in age, at least to a Darastrixi, but Dytin Cadat knew the two young men before him had seen more combat than even most of the Sand Strider battalions. Their eyes betrayed far more knowledge and experience with death than most would ever know, the same eyes he saw within Laren and Ladur. It was Sarlana who settled things with the young Darastrixi Yobhalcho.

“Yobhalcho Dariel?” She spoke soothingly. “Are you any kin to Jaerl Dariel?”

Matum Dariel looked at the Darastrixi woman in the transmission with surprise in his eyes. Though seven hundred and thirty-nine years old himself, he was still considered to be what would amount to a teenager in most cultures. He had been orphaned at a young age, a mining explosion having claimed both of his parents. They were newly joined and he was their only child at the time. He had become a ward of the Darastrixi people and as with most wards of the state he was given to the military. Matum grew with the Darastrixi military as his family. He knew nothing else and he excelled at all he did. He didn’t know it, but Dytin had taken notice of him early in his career, and quickly had him transferred to the Sand Strider Battalions. It was here that Matum had truly come into his own and Dytin had watched as he had carved a name for himself. An officer with an exceptional record but one who was also very reserved. His men were his life and he took care of them, forsaking all other things. He had no life outside of the Sand Strider Units and this is what made him so rigid. It was his only failing.

“He is my... he was my grandfather.” Matum answered softly.

“And a finer example of a Darastrixi does not exist.” Sarlana told him.

Matum continued to stare at her. “My grandfather died many thousands of years ago in the Vile Time. I never knew him or my grandmother.” He spoke, his words holding an angry tone to them. “How could you know my grandfather unless...” His eyes went wide. “You are...”

Sarlana nodded her head. "I am the same as your grandfather was young Matum. And your grandmother. They were two of my closest friends. And I am over four hundred thousand years old. Four hundred and forty-two thousand to be exact. But don't tell anyone I said that."

"You are... then you are Doraanar!" Matum gasped in shock. "Only another Doraanar would have known my grandparents!"

"And know them well I did." Sarlana spoke. "Your grandparents and I would meet every three days on the Concourse for dinner."

"You are the last of the Doraanar!" Matum gasped aloud his face now more animated than Dytin had ever seen him. His dazzling Paris green eyes fell upon Dytin. "Inidra we..."

"Matum... did your parents trust in what your grandparent's role was?" Sarlana asked him.

Matum nodded his head. "Oh yes Doraanar!" He answered. "I was very young when... when my parents passed into the next life, but I do remember them speaking with great reverence of the Doraanar!"

"Did you trust in them?" Sarlana asked.

"Of course!" Matum answered.

"Then I ask that you trust in me now." Sarlana spoke. "There is much going on that you do not understand I know. This knowledge will come to you in time, but now is not that time. You trust your general?"

"Yes Doraanar." He replied. "Without question."

"Then trust in what he is doing and what he is asking of you." Sarlana told him. "And when we are all together you and I will sit and speak of times past and I will tell you what is happening young Matum."

Matum Dariel nodded his head instantly. "As you wish Doraanar." He said reverently.

Sarlana looked at Andro and nodded as she lifted his hand and placed it on his chest. "I will speak with Matum when the time comes." She said. "His grandparents were dear friends to me and he will know his history now. You and Dytin need to plan for the unexpected now."

Andro nodded his head. "Thank you Doraanar." He said softly.

"It will be just as important to me as it will be to him." Sarlana said. "The time grows near Androcles and I feel odd now. Just as you and Dorian described to me. And it is growing more powerful."

"Like we are getting closer to it?" Murano asked her seeing her eyes shift to look at him.

"Yes." Sarlana said. "Exactly like that."

"Your continued interaction with us as Praetorians is bestowing to you our ability to sense the Scourge." Murano said. "The feeling is getting stronger because we are getting closer to their territory."

"It is not a pleasant sensation." Sarlana said.

"No, it is not." Murano agreed.

Sarlana took a deep breath. "Then do what you must, but Laren and Ladur come before all else. You know this. All of you." She watched the three of them nod and she nodded her own head. "I will be speaking with Sadi and Ne'Veha in the cockpit if you need me. They are such pleasant company along with your other wives and mates."

Andro watched as she walked out of the Mark II Booster's core and then he looked back to Dorian, who was smiling. "She got you fervon." He said.

"I am pleasant!" Andro protested.

Dorian chuckled. "About as pleasant as a bad case of Folcani Avian Fever."

Laren's burst of hysterical laughter when she heard that drew their attention back to the transmission and those in it. All of them were looking very confused except for Laren.

"Inidra Dytin, what are the possible responses that the Sulevfu Woieuwr can implement." Androcles asked with an embarrassed smile.

Dytin stepped closer. "I have trained most of our officer Corps these last centuries Androcles. I know what they will do and who they will send after us. I developed most of the tactics that we now use." He told him. "Knowing them as I do, they will send two, perhaps three ships after us. They will need to push fast and hard with the advance we already have. All nine of our ships are now in a long range patrol formation but..."

"Wait... nine?" Andro gasped. "I thought you were only coming with one! Where did nine suddenly come from? Why do you have nine ships? How many people are we talking about here?"

"My three warships and six transports." Dytin answered him. "Each transport has roughly five thousand people on them."

“Thirty thousand!” Murano stammered.

“I could not ask them to leave their families behind!” Dytin barked. “We...”

Aviel touched his arm and moved up beside him. “Androcles, there are many of our people who believe as we do. We follow the way of Wer Zezhuanth and...”

“His name is Dadrien.” Dorian spoke now.

Aviel blinked his eyes. “What? You... how could you know this? His name was lost so long ago and we...”

“Not lost Koppentotz Aviel...” Dorian said. “Simply forgotten. We have not forgotten.”

Aviel was stunned into silence as were all of them as they stood in the transmission with the exception of Laren and Ladur. “And the Dahakoan will have his knowledge and will so that...” He said softly. He turned as Laren came up beside him and took his arm.

“So that we can return what was once lost.” She finished the statement for him.

Aviel looked at her intently. “You have known child?” He asked.

Laren nodded her head as Ladur moved closer. “It was not yet time to reveal this.” He spoke. “Now it is time.”

Aviel turned back to Andro and Dorian. “Dadrien?”

Andro nodded his head. “Yes.” He told him. “What were you going to say?”

Aviel shook his head gathering his thoughts. “I was... yes... there are many among our people who follow the Scrolls that Dadrien left for us Androcles. However, we are not looked upon in the same light as the majority.”

“You are oppressed?” Andro asked.

Aviel shook his head. “No, nothing like that.” He answered. “Most would consider us odd. We adhere to his teachings while balancing his word with the present and the future. We make others uncomfortable because they have forgotten most of what he taught us and left for us.”

“And the Scourge despised him.” Dytin added quickly knowing that Androcles would understand that above all else.

Andro met his eyes. “They would actually come after your families?”

Dytin looked at the deck where he was and then back to him. “I do not know for sure. Our leaders have capitulated to the Scourge for so long that they might not see it the same way we do. They either do not see what the Scourge are doing or they are turning a blind eye hoping to keep the status quo.”

“General... there is no status quo with the Scourge.” Murano spoke now. “You either become part of them or you are enslaved. Many of your own people died trying to protect mine. They will not forget this!”

Dytin nodded his head. “On that we agree Praetorian Murano.” He told him. “Aviel and I, many of us, we believe it is only a matter of time before the Scourge move against us in force. Next year, a hundred years, or a thousand years from now, it does not matter. They will come for us when they have the power and numbers to do so.”

“And they would have no qualms about coming after your families to discover what they know.” Andro said with a nod.

Dytin nodded. “We could not leave them Androcles.”

“I understand.” He said quickly. He lifted his P1 and began typing on it. “I will not have innocents put in harm’s way while we do this. Will they fire on their own ships?”

Dytin shook his head slowly. “That I do not know. I would say it depends on how much pressure the Scourge put on them. There is one of their Holy Elites based on our largest space station. So they always have a presence and can attempt to monitor what we do. He was usually the one who facilitated the transfer of our Maiden females.”

Murano moved up close to Androcles now. “Just the one?” He asked.

Dytin nodded his head. “That we know of. That have a detachment of normal Elites on the station but they rarely come out of the compound we allow them to use. Anything else they may have within this compound we do not know about. I have had my men watching it for centuries but now that I am gone...”

“Are they the same as...?” Murano began to ask.

Dytin nodded once more. “I know what you are going to ask and yes.” He told him. “They have changed very little since you fought them in the last war. Their looks are more refined and they seemed to be more intelligent now but they are essentially the same. The normal Elites are more muscular now and they can operate as independent units as well.”

“Then they have evolved?” Murano asked.

Dytin nodded again. “From when you last fought them yes, but since discovering what Aviel showed me, the experiments they have been doing on those Maiden females that they take, I do not know.”

Andro looked up and focused his attention on Dytin. “General, send all the transports and two of your warships to the coordinates Laren is giving to you now.”

Dytin turned as Laren came up beside him and was typing on the data pad that she had. Androcles had passed her the information through their Etheric connection easily and she held it out to him. He looked at the pad briefly and then to Androcles. “For what purpose Androcles?” He asked.

“Those coordinates are across the border and out of Scourge space.” He spoke. “I will have added protection waiting there to meet them. When they arrive tell them to hold position for exactly one hour. My ships will be there first and they will not be able to detect them. They will use that hour to insure that you were not followed. Once they have determined it is safe, they will contact your lead ship and then escort you to a safe haven. All of your ships have Quantum Drive cores, yes?”

Dytin nodded. “Yes, of course.” He looked at Andro. “Your people have developed them as well?” He asked with some surprise.

Andro smiled. “We have come a long way since discovering my grandfather’s ship on our old homeworld.”

Dytin smiled. “So it would appear. Far more than what our scholars ever envisioned it appears.”

“They will escort you to where the rest of our main force is waiting.” Andro told him. “When we are done at the station, we will join with them and continue on to meet my father and mothers.”

“Wait... we must...” Dytin began to speak but Laren took his arm.

“I will explain to you what will happen Inidra.” She said softly. “There is much going on that all of you will be made aware of.”

Dytin didn’t hesitate Andro saw and this more than anything made him far more at ease. “So be it.” He said. “I will order them away within the hour.” He told Andro.

“We will talk in detail when we are together General.” Andro told him. “I give you my word.”

Dytin stood a little straighter. “And the word of a Dahakoan is his honor.” He spoke. “We will see you soon Dahakoan Androcles.”

Andro disengaged from the Mark II Booster and the holographic surroundings all faded to reveal the cargo bay once more. Elynth and Ryner rested on the deck only a few feet from them as he turned to Murano.

“Murano?” He asked.

“The Holy Elites are the conduit to the Scourge Queen.” Murano told them. “The normal elites are simply soldiers. They will be commanding whatever forces that they have near the Darastrixi homeworld. That they are maintaining a presence on one of their space stations tells me that their goal for the Darastrixi is the same as for all others. They intend to conquer them if they do not obey and do what they want.”

Then it is safe to assume that they probably have other forces waiting? Elynth asked.

Murano looked at her and nodded his head. “More than likely Elynth.” He answered. “If they have not taken their planet before now it is because the Scourge fear them. The losses they would incur trying to subjugate the Darastrixi are probably staggering. They are far less spread out than the Pralor people were, but most of their population can be drafted to fight if need be. This is something we do not have.”

“Then pulling Laren and Ladur out now was the correct thing to do.” Andro stated.

Murano nodded his head quickly. “Oh yes.” He said. “If they have been taking Darastrixi maidens and conducting experiments on them, it is for only one reason. Somehow they have discovered that Laren and Ladur exist or they believe that they exist. They know what they are, just not when they would arrive if this has been going on for some time.”

Andro nodded his head as he looked around. “We need to speak with my father and Wayonn.” He said. “Sister? You and Ryner?”

“Give us three hours Andro.” Elynth answered. “Both of us need to eat to replenish our reserves. We will need the extra energy if we initiate a Mark II Booster to your father from here. We have never tried one from so far away.”

Murano nodded his head. "As will I. I was only able to have coffee before we did this one."

Andro nodded his head. "Agreed then. Dorian, Murano and I will join you back here in three hours."

"Can we establish one from this distance Androcles?" Murano asked.

Andro nodded his head. "There is really no distance limit. You know how the Boosters work. Let's just hope the Feravomir, Wayonn and a few of my mothers are nearby when we activate it. It will be far easier to hold the connection if they are."

DARASTRIXETHE-CLASS DREADNOUGHT LEVXIERIV (ENCHANTRESS)

"...Pralor people are not as dead as the Scourge would have us believe." Laren told them as they sat in the forward lounge closest to the bridge.

This news brought everyone in the small lounge to attention very quickly. Dytin had summoned Nahko, Dalis, and Laren's parents to the meeting as well as Matum, Chalith and Shalu. Ladur was beside Ch'teven in the next room which was much larger and provided more comfort for the Vrrarhoinsa species of Darastrix. Most Darastrix ships were built in such a way, with the wall between the two rooms open so that they could partake in different meetings such as this.

"Laren what do you mean?" Aviel asked with wide eyes.

"The Praetorian Murano who you have spoken with is not the only survivor of the Scourge decimation of their species." Laren told them. "Towards the very end many survivors took to the stars and ran. They were able to gather over the next few months until there were many ships full of Pralor survivors. They wandered for many years until finally settling where they are now. The Doraanar has been with them for most of this time, among the surviving Darastrix of one of the seed missions that we allowed them to conduct with our people. They did not know who she was and she never told them, but they have been protecting her for millennia. And she has been helping to guide the surviving Pralors and our Darastrix brothers and sister for all of this time."

"By the will of Dadrien..." Nahko gasped. "Where?"

Laren shook her head. "I cannot reveal that information, I'm sorry. Not now." She told them looking at Dytin. "You understand Inidra Dytin of what could happen if this knowledge became known to the Scourge?"

"You do not trust us?" Matum asked almost indignantly.

Laren met his eyes with no back down in her. "I know everyone in this room and I have for many years or for several months, with the exception of you." She stated confidently. "I have kept this knowledge from them for all of that time. Do not misinterpret your importance Major. I do not need your protection nor do I want it. This information is a sacred trust that I keep with my soul brothers and sister."

Dytin looked at Matum and motioned with his head. "Of course..." He stated coming to his feet. "We do not need to know where Laren."

"When we are with Androcles and the others we will discover this for that is where we are going." Laren told them looking at Dytin. "Very far from here. You trust them Inidra?"

Dytin nodded his head without hesitation. "They are Dahakoan Laren, just as you are. There is no mistaking that. Yes I trust them. I wouldn't have come this far if I did not."

"But why?" Dalis asked now. "Why so far away? We will not be able to influence anything that happens on our world."

"She is safest with her Soul Family." Robati spoke now looking at her daughter. "At least right now. As are we all."

"The last of the Doraanar among the Pralor people for all of this time." Dalis spoke softly shaking his head. "They have been protecting her and done so without question or even the knowledge of who she truly is. It makes what we did... what we allowed to happen even more vile."

Laren nodded her head. "There are several among the Darastrix and a few Pralors with them now that know who she is but they are sworn to secrecy."

"We can do nothing to change the past and none of us had a say in what was done." Aviel spoke. "We must concentrate on the future now. Once the Scourge realize that Laren and Ladur now exist, that the Dahakoan have returned to us and they now possess the power of the Pralor Praetorians as well as the power of the Dahakoan, they will stop at nothing to kill or capture them. For us, for our families, as far away from Darastrixi and Scourge space is the best thing right now. At least until we are ready and Laren is fully cured.”

“Cured?” Matum spoke now. “What do you mean Koppentotz Aviel?”

Nahko looked at the young Major. “Laren is dying.” She told him. “Her body’s cells are breaking down on a molecular level. Right now the only one who can save her is her sepa dask. Her Hadarian Soul Mother.”

Dytin nodded his head. “And that is why we will do exactly as Dahakoan Androcles has instructed us. It is obvious to me that these men and women, those with him, they have seen far more combat than any in this room, including myself. Now is not the time to question them or their strategies.” Dytin looked at Matum. “Major?”

Matum thought briefly of his conversation with Sarlana and then nodded his head. “On my honor Inidra.”

Dytin nodded his head. “Good. Matum... you will choose twelve senior Sand Strider. They will accompany us to the station. The Dahakoan has provided us with a new type of body armor but there is only enough for twenty of us. Once you have chosen the men, prepare a single transport for when we transit to the station. Everything must be perfect from here on out. I will deal with the ships if they come.”

“The station has been deserted for millennia Inidra.” Matum spoke. “Should we not bring more security?”

Dytin shook his head. “No. Twenty and no more. We will not need more.” He looked at everyone. “We must remain united now. For everyone’s sake.”

The internal COM unit in the lounge burst into life. “Inidra Dytin, we are being hailed by Darastrixi ships. A Yobhakcho Darrod Nilich is commanding.”

Dytin smiled. “Yes... exactly who I thought they would send. Very well... I am coming to the bridge.” He looked at them. “Now it truly begins my friends. Now it truly begins.”

VENTORI UNION ADHOC BASE CAMP

“...Says that the Tasmor blood provides the cure Beloved.” Aricia spoke from where she stood beside him in the Command Building with Danny, Thoti, Julie and Colin on one side of the chart table and Saydia, Anthylea, Drenia on the other side. “She and Perlyea confirmed it just before I returned to the surface. The molecular structure and genetic materials all point to this.”

Martin looked at her standing beside him and waggled his eyebrows at her. “You are getting good at this medical stuff you know.” He spoke to her.

Aricia beamed a smile back at him because of the praise and the way his aura made her body tingle. “Well... Anja does say that the more people with medical knowledge around you the better. You do have a propensity for getting into trouble Beloved and we would much rather you remain in one piece.”

“That’s only so you can use my body!” Martin hissed.

Aricia’s azure eyes glowed with happiness. “Of course... why else would we want you healthy? You do make us sing so Beloved.”

Martin looked at Danny. “You see this? No respect.”

Danny grinned and flipped his hand up to slap Martin in the back of the head. “Like anyone will buy that.” He stated. “Even after all these years I still don’t know what they see in your ugly ass.”

“My charming personality.” Martin said with a large, fake smile that he tried to stretch from ear to ear.

Danny shook his head. “Like anyone with half a baked brain will believe that.” He muttered.

Saydia and Anthylea could not help but burst into laughter at this display and the expression that Martin’s face was in. Despite centuries of upbringing and history, Saydia Daret found herself becoming very comfortable in the presence of the males in this room and around the camp. None of them looked at her as a potential bed partner in order to further advance their family or status. The men she had interacted with among the Lycavorians and the many other species she had seen had been nothing but respectful and honorable. They honored her position as leader of the Tasmor and went out of their way to insure she was provided with everything she needed or wanted. Saydia also knew Anthylea was also rapidly becoming comfortable in their presence for she had let her guard down ever so slightly when around these men. Normally Anthylea was utterly possessive of her, a fact that made Saydia shiver in delight, but she also knew that these men and women were very different from what they were used to.

Saydia looked at Anthylea out of the corner of her eye and the memories of the previous night came rushing back to her. Ten hours they had shared with Tobia in their bed, the most time they had had together at one point ever. All three of them had been so passionate and intense, and it pleased Saydia to no end when both she and Tobia were servicing Anthylea, seeing her thrash on the bed before them or reaching for the pinnacle of pleasure while making love to one of them. Last night had been the most pleasurable of nights, for they had not been afraid to try things they had never thought of before. Tobia's excitement affected both of them for she had let all of her desires and inhibitions out and did not hold back one bit. This made Saydia and Anthylea even more intense and passionate as well and the three women fed off of this energy until they collapsed in Anthylea's embrace, her organ flaccid and all of them utterly drained. They had laid in each other's arms simply talking them, Tobia telling them of Murano and the future she now believed had been given back to her. Saydia and Anthylea could tell that this emotion is what made Tobia so passionate and they had smiled knowingly at each other for it was the same emotion that coursed through them for each other.

Martin waved his hand at Danny. "Bah... what the hell do you know?" He spat.

Aricia simply stood there and smiled while she reached across the chart table for a data pad and picked it up. "These are the details they put together quickly." She told him holding out the data pad. "Anja said it was a very fast workup of how they believe the drugs are being used. This Hecerkal infuses their bodies with a compound that heals them very quickly..."

Danny nodded his head. "Yeah we saw that in the fugly we fought." He said. "Even our blades weren't any good really."

Aricia nodded in agreement. "Anja and Perlyea agree that only massive damage will slow them down enough to actually hurt them. This is something our normal weapons will not do. Explosives are the best way to deal with them now but not everyone is as skilled as Colin at throwing grenades."

Colin looked up. "It's not really a big deal. Skipper, I can throw together some classes for our people and the Tasmor. We have lots of training rocks here and I can have our entire complement of G24s shipped down and get them distributed."

Martin nodded. "Do it." He said instantly. He looked at Aricia. "Saaurano?"

"The second compound, this Ledralye, this makes the beasts easier to control for short periods of time, but it also makes them very unstable." Aricia told them. "The third drug, this Tintor, its only use from what Anja can determine, is to make the creatures' metabolism work faster and speed the drugs through their systems quicker."

"And they need our blood because of its natural immunity to the effects of addiction?" Saydia asked.

Aricia nodded her head. "Yes. They have found trace amounts of Tasmor blood in all three of the creatures killed at the research site. Apparently, though it does not make it any less vile, it is not needed in large doses because of the way it is used and that is why far fewer Tasmor have been taken. However, it also requires a steady dosage so that these monsters do not become affected by the addictive nature."

"Christ we..." Martin began to speak.

The Command Center suddenly became alive with dazzling white blue flashes of Etheric power.

"Shit!" Martin declared as his senses lit up and he recognized the powerful Etheric resonance of his sons instantly. They had focused on him exclusively and the communication was coming through very fast. "Saaurano, its Andro and Dori... they are initiating a Mark II Neural Booster communication! And it's a powerful one too!"

"Martin...!" Aricia barked out as she began moving for where Saydia and Anthylea stood with looks of shock on their faces. "The Tasmor! They do not have natural Etheric shields! Andro does not know this and it will damage their brain synapses!"

"Sibfla!" Martin exclaimed as he realized it just as Aricia was yelling at him. He burst forward without question and reached Saydia just as Aricia reached Anthylea and Danny grabbed Drenia.

The three Tasmor woman were then engulfed in something that none of them had ever experienced in their lives. The Command Center became alive with the white bluish light and the images of four individuals and two of the dragon beasts came into view. The entire area around them began to glow in this same light and the room shimmered and changed even as they watched. The Etheric power needed to engage a Mark II Neural Booster was something that very few individuals had. Martin and Torma could do so easily on their own, as could Androcles and Elynth; their Etheric power could not even be charted by normal means. Aricia could engage a Mark II booster with one of her fellow Queens as long as it was a short range transmission. Aside from that, only Helen, Arzoal and their children could engage a Mark II Booster, and then only if they had added help from their dragons and others.

Saydia, Anthylea and Drenia could only gawk in astonishment as the figures shimmered once more and became as clear as if they were in the same room with those they now saw. Saydia's blue eyes were wide as she stared at the image of the two young men who could only be sons to Martin Leonidas. They looked so much like their father it was uncanny. Both of them had the same black hair and height, as well as the exquisite muscular definition from what she could tell. Both of them however, they had breathtaking blue eyes that truly shone within the Booster's cone and Saydia could not help but gasp at how incredibly handsome both of them were. The third man she did not know but he was older and obviously a Pralor by the uniform he was wearing.

Saydia's hands went up quickly to where Martin's were placed on her shoulders and she gripped them tightly as her head pounded and her heart raced. This was not a time for old habits she knew. Whatever was going on would have adversely affected her, Anthylea and Drenia and Martin and Aricia had taken steps to avoid this without thought.

"Breath evenly Sovereign Regent..." Martin spoke to her in a soothing voice. "I am shielding you from most of the effects but it will be a moment before the pounding in your heads clears." Martin could hear Aricia telling Anthylea the same thing as she had grabbed her arms just as the full power of the booster came to bear.

"Father? Mother?" Androcles asked with a confused look on his face.

Martin squeezed Saydia's shoulders. "Once initiated you need to remain unless you have the Etheric ability to leave, which you don't. Aricia, Danny and I will shield you while it is active but I'm sorry, you are kind of stuck in the loop now."

Saydia nodded her head quickly. "I... I understand!" She gasped. "Gods... can all of your people do this?" She asked in amazement.

Martin shook his head as his hands slowly lifted from her shoulders. "No." He stated flatly. "And my son knows better than to initiate one without checking first!" He growled at the image of his oldest son. He looked back to Saydia as he came around in front of her. "Are you ok?"

Saydia nodded her head quickly still holding his hands. "Yes... yes I think so." She stated with wide blue eyes. "The pounding is... it is almost gone."

Martin looked at Aricia who quickly reached out with one hand and placed it on Saydia's arm so that he could turn fully and look at his sons.

"Speak fast boy!" Martin snapped. "Why would you initiate a Mark II without checking first? Especially with your brother, Elynth and Murano in the loop! Do you know how badly that will zap someone who is not Etheric?"

"Forgive me father, I did not have the time to check if you were alone." Andro stated calmly his azure eyes settling on Saydia and Anthylea in the transmission. Martin detected a twitch in Andro's cheek when he focused on Saydia for a few seconds longer and then he knew for sure.

Martin looked back to Saydia and Anthylea. "Saydia, Anthylea, meet my oldest and youngest sons. Andro and Dorian." He looked back to them where they now stood directly in front of them within the Etheric projection. "Both of whom know better than to do what they just did." He said sternly. "This is Sovereign Regent Daret and her First Colonel Anthylea."

Andro bowed his head slightly to Saydia who was looking at him intently. "My sincere apologies Sovereign Regent. My father is correct and I did not check before initiating this type of communication." Andro looked at his father. "Father you..."

Martin held up his hand. "I'll deal with it." He stated knowing what Andro was going to say. "I'll explain it to them."

Saydia looked at him. "Explain what?"

Andro looked at his mother in the projection and his face broke into a smile as he looked into her matching azure blue eyes. “Medwaw.” He spoke affectionately.

Aricia’s eyes were just as bright and her smile just as dazzling. “Aur Ketos.” She said as Martin turned to Saydia once more.

“Are you open to new things?” Martin asked her almost casually a small smile on his face.

“What... what do you mean?” Saydia asked. “Will this affect us somehow?”

Martin sighed heavily. “Because of the way this happened and the power needed to do it, you, Anthylea and Drenia will now have a limited Etheric resonance and the ability to use it.”

“What?” Anthylea gasped with wide eyes. “You mean like you and the Queens?”

Martin shook his head quickly. “Not on as deep a scale, no.” He answered her. “That couldn’t happen unless one of us bites you and the virus within us floods your system. You will be able to...” Martin shook his head once more. “Anse Andro...!”

“Father this is important!” Andro told him. “We need your advice and you may wish to call for the Feravomir and Wayonn. This has to do with...”

Murano spoke for the first time now. “Martin this has to do with the Scourge.” He stated. “We need to speak with you.”

“...you sure Murano?” Wayonn asked.

Saydia and Anthylea were standing close to Aricia, still holding onto her arms. Her presence was a steadying balance for them since this was so new. Martin had indeed called for the woman they knew as Helen and Wayonn. The moment they entered the Etheric Booster Communication, they felt the massive influx of power and Aricia had gripped them tightly. She had apparently told Helen and Wayonn that they had been included in the transmission by accident and they had entered the Etheric projection slowly so as not to make too much of a disturbance. For Saydia Daret, it was the most fascinating experience she had ever been part of in her life. Nothing could compare to this, and while Drenia seemed to be tolerating it, she and Anthylea were relishing in this new and exciting instant. It was one of those moments in your life that you could never have imagined and Saydia was soaking it up. Whatever they were talking about was taking place far from here and did not concern the Tasmor, or so she thought, so instead she simply watched Martin Leonidas’ sons. Saydia had seen large predators on the worlds the Tasmor occupied, and both of these young men moved exactly the same way. There was a confident and lethal grace to their movements, a sense of purpose that told everyone around them that they would not bother you if you did not interfere with them. If you did, then they would kill you in a most violent way. They exuded the same confidence and the same aura of leadership that their father had and they were so young. She took note that Androcles was taller than Dorian, but only slightly so, but he was much more thickly muscled. The definition was exquisite even under the loose clothes they both wore, but it was Andro’s eyes that caught and held her attention. They were identical to his mother’s beautiful eyes, yet they were so much more alive and dancing with the light. For a fleeting instant Saydia found herself thinking what a Tasmor child with eyes like his would look like since most Tasmor were born with dark eyes. Her daughters Emylea, Rena, Faydia and Inara were exceptions to this rule she knew, as she was, but their eye color did not match the bright, near glowing eyes of Androcles Leonidas.

Saydia shook her head and pushed these thoughts aside and began to take more of an interest in what they were discussing. She watched as the older man in the transmission nodded his head.

“Yes.” Murano answered. “Our plan is excellent and so far we have seen no signs of any Scourge even remotely in the area. We are only a few hours from the station now. Armen has SPARTA’S WRATH shrouded and moving in a similar pattern half a light year behind us. We have the Darastrixi ships on long range sensors and just as Andro instructed they have broken off the transports and two warships to move for the new coordinates he gave to them.”

“The cache is intact?” Wayonn asked now.

Murano nodded again. “The Worker Drones we sent ahead have just started to broadcast back to us and they are seeing no signs of activity. They will not begin to power the station’s areas until we are almost there, but from the images Sadi and the others have seen, the station has been deserted for centuries. Even millennia.”

Martin looked at his sons. "You didn't tell me you were going to go into Scourge space boy!" He snarled looking directly at Andro.

"It was the quickest and most efficient way to retrieve Laren and Ladur." Andro replied. "You know that we could not leave them."

"I know that!" Martin snapped. "But we have felt them Andro. You know this. They seemed to have stopped for now, but we don't want to nubous provoke them! Not when we don't know why."

Andro nodded. "I know father." He told him. "Laren is reasonably sure they do not know anything yet. The Darastrixi elders protected her and Ladur viciously and they are certain that no knowledge of their existence came out. The Scourge don't know what they are father and if what Murano says is true then we still have a big advantage."

"The Queen was no military leader Martin." Murano spoke. "She was a Praetorian Mage. And to Xaxon no less. He would not have shared his military knowledge with her in any sort of fashion. Considering what he did to her, I don't believe that he even cared for her at all. He most likely considered her a nuisance. This could also account for her hatred for us."

Wayonn looked at Martin. "Murano is correct Martin." He said evenly. "He always had her doing ridiculous things in order to keep her away from him. Probably to hide what he was truly doing. Many of us scorned him for treating her in such a way, but no matter what we did he never changed."

"Where are you sending them?" Martin asked.

"That is what I needed to talk to you about." Andro answered. "I can't send them back to the Alpha Quadrant. There is too much turmoil there with the Kavalian War and Tenna Deia does not need the added pressure of hiding them."

Martin nodded. "Agreed." He said.

All of them felt the powerful Etheric resonance fill the connection and they turned as Tobia moved into the cone of the transmission. "Send them to Artaaya." She spoke calmly, though her voice faltered as she looked upon Murano.

Murano's eyes grew wide and he came forward. "Tobia!" He gasped.

Martin looked at her and motioned her forward with his head. "Go ahead." He told her.

Tobia stepped up beside Martin as she stared at Murano. He looked even more handsome than she remembered him and his features were even more lean and developed. She felt the tears well up in her eyes and then they were rolling down her cheeks as she smiled at him.

"Murano." She managed to choke out the word.

"Tobia... why did... why did you not tell me?" Murano stammered. His voice held no anger or discontent in it she noticed and this made Tobia's heart grow happy. She thought he would be angry for not telling him and that he would hate her.

"I did not... I did not want to pressure you into something that you could not commit too." Tobia answered. "You were so torn and filled with shame that..."

Murano moved closer, almost standing in front of her in the transmission now. "She is so much... she is so much like you Tobia." He spoke with a smile.

"She has your stubborn streak." Tobia told him.

Murano smiled now and they could all see his eyes were moist. "Yes, yes she does." He said softly. He blinked several times and looked back to where Andro and Dorian were watching. All of them saw Andro nod his head to him and smile. Murano turned back to Tobia. "I have never held to anything tighter to my heart than I did my love for you Tobia. I did not want to..."

Tobia stepped forward until she was almost touching the Etheric projection of Murano. "I know Murano my love." She said softly seeing his eyes grow wide at her words. "I know."

"Mari is... she is a Praetorian Tobia." He said. "She..."

Tobia nodded. "I know that too." She told him. "She is well?"

Murano nodded his head. "She has become wife to Deion Leonidas Tobia." He said and all of them could detect the note of pride in his voice. "She has become like him!"

"You knew?" Tobia asked in surprise.

“My own stupidity may have blinded me to my love for you, but once I discovered Mari was...” Murano stopped and he looked at Martin. “Her face and eyes hold a light within them that I have never seen before Martin. Your son loves her until it takes her breath away. Thank you.”

Martin shook his head holding up his hands. “I had nothing to do with that.” He stated with a grin.

Murano looked back to Tobia. “Tobia we...” He began. “I want what I never thought I deserved Tobia. I want to be... I want to be a family. If you... if you will have me.”

Tobia shuddered gently now and they watched as Saydia moved up behind her and took her shoulders. Tobia’s hands went to hers and squeezed as she looked at Murano. “I will have you Murano.” She said with a strangled voice. “I have never stopped wanting you Murano my love. Never!”

Murano’s face brightened when he heard that and he smiled more than anyone had ever seen him smile before. “We will be there soon Tobia.” He told her. “I will hold you in my arms once more and I will never let go again.”

“You had better not!” Tobia told him with an equally large smile. It took her a moment to regain her composure and she turned her head to share a kiss with Saydia not caring who saw. It was a kiss of thanks and friendship and caring. She looked at Martin once more. “Send them to Artaaya Martin. They will be safe there.”

“What about...?” Martin began to ask.

Tobia shook her head. “We have come a long way from those times Martin.” Tobia told him. “Most have learned to leave the past where it belongs, and many know of the deaths the Darastrixi suffered when they fought this order. Those who died trying to protect our people. This is not something that will ever be forgotten.”

Martin nodded slowly and looked at Andro. “Andro?”

“I will see to it father.” He said.

“Get Laren and Ladur and get here quick boy.” Martin told him. “We’re gonna need you son. Outnumbered takes on whole new meaning with what is coming at us.”

“Father, only the 82nd and the Durcunusaan Scout Ready Brigade is travelling with me on SPARTA’S WRATH and the KINDRED SOUL. I can send the Durcunusaan Division on to you now if you wish.” Andro spoke. “We won’t need them out here and all missions in and around Vanari space are complete.”

Martin nodded his head. “Do it son.” He said. “MJOLNIR’S HAND, NORMYA’S LIGHT and the SPIRIT arrived with their Strike Wings yesterday and I will pull their detachments.”

“Father...” Andro spoke again and Martin lifted his head to meet the eyes of his oldest son. “Why have you not hit this ship yet? I have studied what you sent to me, and a coordinated attack with the ARIZONA and the ARC ROYAL and their Wings could severely damage this ship enough to stop it. Or at the very least damage it enough to slow it down. If you combine the Pralor ships and the Strike Wings of MJOLNIR’S HAND, NORMYA’S LIGHT and the SPIRIT OF HADARIA you could do it.”

Martin shook his head. “The risk is too great.” He answered. “We’d have to fight off the forty odd warships that they have protecting this thing and then...”

“Father!” Andro snapped causing Martin to look at him once more. “It is not like you to let these monsters continue on unmolested or unchallenged. What are you not telling me?”

Martin felt everyone shift their eyes to him and he looked around slowly. Only Danny and Wayonn were not looking at him, they were simply looking at the floor. Everyone else was staring at him and he felt the tug on his arm and turned his head to look into Aricia’s beautiful eyes.

“Beloved?” She spoke softly. “What is it?”

Martin sighed and shook his head. He turned to look at Wayonn. “Tell them Wayonn.” He spoke.

“Martin...” Wayonn began.

Martin shook his head. “I should have known better than to try and hide it from him.” Martin jerked his thumb at Andro. “He’s too much like me. Tell them. It would have come out eventually when we started asking for volunteers.”

“Volunteers for what?” Murano asked now.

Wayonn looked at Murano and pushed off the table he was leaning against. “Your sister Yuriko discovered something during her scans.” Wayonn spoke now. “It was deep within the bowels of the ship and she did not have any idea what it was. She forwarded it to us in one of her reports several weeks ago. Kasdan knew right away what it was. Your father, Uncle and I have been fine tuning a plan ever since.”

“A plan for what?” Andro asked now as his face became concerned.

“The Svorag Mother Ship, for lack of a better definition to describe it, is using a Pralor engineered Reverse Fractal Quantum Dark Matter power core.” Wayonn told him.

Only Murano and Andro knew what he was speaking about and both of them stepped closer in the transmission. “Wayonn no!” Murano gasped.

“I thought... I did not think Dark Matter could be harnessed in any way.” Andro spoke. “When the WIMPS meet they destroy one another.”

Wayonn nodded. “Unless they were asymmetric. Our scientists discovered a way to alter Dark Matter WIMPS during the First and Second Scourge War so that they were asymmetric and therefore the WIMPS would not destroy one another when they collided. According to Kasdan and his history files it was tested once and the ensuing explosion killed over a hundred of our most promising scientists and wiped out the equivalent of three city blocks. The program was canceled and the materials destroyed. Or so they all thought.”

“Are you saying the Svorag completed the program?” Murano asked.

Wayonn nodded slowly. “We don’t know how they got the details to the program but they have managed to fashion a crude Asymmetric Dark Matter power core that is operating on that ship.”

“Lorendo?” Murano asked.

Martin shook his head. “No... Kasdan doesn’t believe this is Lorendo’s doing. If the records are accurate and we have no reason to think they aren’t, he wasn’t even part of the program on a peripheral level. They got it from somewhere else.”

“Where?” Andro asked.

“That doesn’t matter right now.” Martin said. “What does matter is if Yuriko’s sensor scans are accurate the thing is as unstable as all hell. If we attack that thing without shutting down the core first, it will probably cause an overload.”

“And if it overloads?” Aricia asked now.

Andro looked at his father with wide eyes. “It will cause a Black Hole to form within the ship. A massive Black hole and it will...”

Wayonn nodded. “Kasdan estimates it would be the largest Black Hole ever recorded in anyone’s history and it would be powerful enough to destroy every form of life in most of this Quadrant. The gravitational flux would be so powerful it would drag planets from hundreds of light years away into its core, destroying them and all life on them. Artaaya, Honelze, Nepneu, all of the Tasmor worlds, the Kintaur and most of the less developed species. Everything would be killed.”

“Nubou lae!” Andro gasped.

Martin nodded his head. “That’s about what I said son.” He told him. “Getting sucked into the largest Black Hole in the universe is most definitely not the way I want to go.”

Andro looked at his father. “A surgical strike?” He said softly.

Martin nodded his head. “Two teams, assault from two different sides, with the purpose of shutting the core down. Once it is shut down then I can blow it straight to hell. Danny, Wayonn and I have most of the details worked out and Kasdan has just about finished a way to shut it down. We’re close, but not there yet.”

“Father, send for more troops then.” Andro told him quickly. “We have time. If we need to do this before we destroy the ship then we need to hold Honelze.”

Martin shook his head. “Yes I know, but no, I won’t pull more troops from where they might be needed. Pian is going to occupy most of their forces once he ramps up the pressure, but Keleru is a sneaky bastard and I’m not taking any chances with his hairy ass.” Martin looked at his son. “Iama’s father is preparing the defenses around Honelze with his Pride and a whole bunch of Pralor security Forces. Akor’dris and Bae’diraz are giving them extra Drow training and they are taking to it like a fish to water.”

“How many can you field father?” Andro asked him.

“Including the 82nd with you and whatever else we can scrape together...” Martin looked at him. “Just over two hundred thousand.” Martin grinned. “With another five hundred thousand and our air power we could clean their clocks on the ground or at the very least, hold them long enough to shut down the core. As it stands now, it’s iffy.”

“Can the people of Honelze fight?” Dorian asked.

Murano looked at Dorian. “Most of them are simple miners and farmers Dorian.” He answered without any malice in his voice. He turned back to Martin. “But if you ask them Martin, they will fight. Honelze has become their home and we Pralors are tired of running away from our homes. Reach out to them now. Have people sent there to train them. Even a few weeks of training can be better than nothing.”

“I agree Martin.” Tobia echoed Murano’s words. “We need to tell them. We cannot wait until the last minute like when our Empire fell. Tell them what they are facing... what we are facing and they will fight.”

“I have gone over the defensive plan you sent father.” Andro spoke again. “Carina as well while she transits to Manne with Moneus and her Command Team. Murano and Lady Tobia are right and Carina would recommend it right away and you know this. Even if you are only able to train a few thousand of them, they can release our Spartans to fight and take over the security duties.”

Martin nodded his head. “I don’t really have much of a choice do I.” He said.

Aricia stepped up beside him now. “No we don’t Beloved.” She said softly.

Martin nodded his head again. “Ok... what ship is she on?”

Andro smiled. “RAVEN’S WINGS.” He answered.

“Imror’s ship?” Martin asked with wide eyes.

Andro nodded his head. “Admiral Ceneu cut loose his entire BIP. They should be getting to Manne by tomorrow sometime.”

“That man just does not know when to stay away from us does he?” Martin said with a shake of his head.

“His wife told Carina that he enjoys the excitement too much.” Andro said.

Martin nodded his head as his spirits lifted somewhat. If he was going to die fighting, then he would do so surrounded by those who thought like he did and would fight to the last breath in their bodies. “Ok... I’ll speak with Carina and see what other surprises we can put together. I’ll also send her what Danny and I have put together for the assault on this Mother Ship. Get your asses in and out without causing trouble son. I need you and your team with me and my group on this. We’re the only ones with the training to pull it off.”

Andro nodded his head. “As it stands now, we will have Laren and Ladur within thirty-six hours and then we will turn for your location.”

“Don’t stop to sight see you hear?” Martin told him with a smile.

“We won’t father.”

“Murano...” Wayonn spoke now. “If you... if you encounter any Scourge you can leave none alive to warn the others of us.”

Murano nodded his head confidently. “I know Wayonn.” He spoke. “And we won’t, you know that.”

“We’ll be bringing some surprises of our own father.” Androcles spoke again. “You will like them if what Murano tells me is true.”

“Do they go boom?” Martin asked with a twinkle in his dark brown eyes.

Murano chuckled. “Oh yes.” He said. “Very large booms.”

“I like big booms.” Martin said.

VENTORI SAYDIA DARET’S PRIVATE QUARTERS

“...Were concerned Sovereign Regent, for your safety, after we heard of the Kintaur attack and the subsequent...” The Chief of the Tasmor Defense Ministry spoke from the table. “Captain Drenia was not very forthcoming with details.”

Saydia nodded her head as she looked at the nine remaining members of the Tasmor Quorum, minus herself and Perlyea. “I ordered her to be vague for a reason.” She said. “And there was no attack after we arrived. The Kintaur found something that they liked more than battle.”

“What was this?” The woman asked.

Saydia smiled. “Living.” She answered simply.

The Chief of the Tasmor Defense Ministry was someone who Saydia had grown up with for many years. They were very close friends and had no qualms about sharing information and knowledge with each other through the years. Seran Echen was a truly loyal friend to Saydia and the two women were often seen about within the many markets in the capital of Visay on Danerav their homeworld. Seran was also one of the more forward thinking Tasmor. Someone who believed that the Tasmor needed to change with the times as they grew as a people.

“They do seem to care about this very much.” Seran stated. “The vile dogs.”

“I am sure all of you have seen the reports that Captain Drenia has been sending on my orders.” Saydia spoke. “It is time we made the first of many decisions in the upcoming weeks and months.”

“You should return to Danerav Sovereign Regent, so that we may properly debate these things that you have discovered.” Another Tasmor spoke now.

Saydia shook her head. “I will not be returning just yet Vesara Athcer.” Saydia told them. “I am still in talks with the Lycavorian Queens over many things and I cannot leave yet.”

“You are the Tasmor Sovereign Regent and you should not be mingling with these new Lycavorians.” Vesara spoke.

“I am in no danger whatsoever.” Saydia told them.

“How do we know that?” Another woman spoke now.

“Ardal Kaend, you have known me almost as long as Seran.” Saydia spoke. “You have served as the Tasmor Chief Engineer for over two hundred years. Do I look under duress to you? In any way?”

“Well... no.” The woman answered.

“Because I am not.” Saydia said. “I have been treated with the utmost respect and honor among these men and women. The building I am now in are private quarters built just for me. The other Tasmor with me have a large and spacious building as their own, nothing luxurious by any means but very comfortable and workable. You have not seen what these people have done in only a few short days. They have erected what amounts to a small city here on Ventori. Portable buildings, power, computers, it is quite amazing.”

“This brute and self-proclaimed Lycavorian King threatened to kill you and everyone with you!” Vesara snapped.

“That brute as you call him, he shielded us from the Kintaur when they arrived here in force looking to capture or kill us! He imposed his own ships in defense of ours! He told them if they wanted us they had to go through him! And there is nothing self-proclaimed about his status as the King of the Lycavorians. I have seen their history files and I have seen the way the Ventori Lycavorians have treated him.” Saydia looked at the nine women. “All of you know me. You know I am not easily impressed, but what I have seen here these last days is wondrous in nature.”

“They wish to take our entire Lycavorian work force.” Vesara spoke. “The ore from the mines will cease. We will have to return to automated mining and this is not as efficient. This is one of the stipulations we had with the Lycavorians from Ventori Saydia. You know this.”

“The Lycavorians who we rescued from Ventori offered this to us and all of you know that.” Saydia told them. “It was never a stipulation of us helping them. They wanted to repay us for what we did and this was the way that they could. I will not allow this selfless act to be used against them.”

“You...”

“I am Sovereign Regent of the Tasmor people!” Saydia barked angrily growing impatient with them. “I will decide how we will proceed! That is how it has always been and that is how it will remain until such time as the Tasmor Quorum can vote to change our laws and do so successfully and with the full support of our people! As is our law!” Saydia moved closer to the monitor.

“Listen to me all of you, they have already offered medical knowledge and equipment decades more sophisticated than anything we have ever seen. Perlyea is now working with Queen Anja, she is only half wolf, and she is also Hadarian. A species of healers within their Union and her skill and knowledge is majestic to say the least. They have already discovered why our people have been taken by the creatures that have plagued us these last few years. They are called Svorag. In just five days here we have discovered more than we have in centuries!”

“You are among other species as well?” One Tasmor asked stunned.

Saydia nodded her head. "A dozen different species just that I alone have seen. Our people speak of others on their ships in orbit above that I have not seen. The Lycavorians are not the only ones within their Union my friends, and it is vast. Over nine hundred worlds and nearly thirty-three trillion lifeforms form their Union. And Martin Leonidas is their King!"

This news brought all of them up short for they had never heard of such an extensive Empire anywhere.

"Saydia what about weapons?" Seran asked. "Engines and shields for our ships? What about these things. These are what we need."

Saydia nodded her head. "I know Seran, and this can still be discussed, but first..." she lifted her hand and held up the data pad. "This is the first official medical report Perlyea has submitted since meeting the Lycavorians. It officially states that the Gene Therapy treatments she and her staff developed from the willing Lycavorian donors are a complete success. They worked!" Saydia saw their eyes go wide at this news as she knew they would. "Queen Anja has confirmed this with Perlyea at her side and conferring with her through the entire process. According to Perlyea, Anja said it was never a matter of if it would work, it was only a matter of when. It seems it takes different times with different species and their genetic makeup, but she assures me that the Tasmor will lose none of their dominance. The therapy is just that and any Tasmor who wish to take the treatment will be allowed to do so. Even when the treatment is complete, the changes that will have occurred will amount to only two percent of the Tasmor genetic framework. It is all very confusing for me but you will be able to read the whole report in full when you arrive."

"Arrive?" Seran gasped now.

Saydia nodded her head. "King Leonidas has graciously offered the use of one of his best ships to come to Danerav and pick all of you up and bring you here." Saydia told them. "I have accepted. I believe once you see what I have seen you will think as I do."

"Sovereign Regent this is highly unusual." Ardal spoke.

Saydia nodded. "I know, but it is also the only way to insure that you and I have the same information and make our decisions based on this." She told them. "If, for whatever reason, you chose not to get on that ship, which will arrive in eight hours roughly, then I will take that as your resignation of your position on the Quorum and move to have your replacement chosen as soon as possible." Saydia saw the looks of astonishment on their faces and she smiled at this.

"Someone tried to kill me; and not just me, but two of my own daughters as well! My youngest daughters! The Kintaur knew we would be here, and they knew we would respond to the distress call. I am going to find out how and who betrayed me and my daughters and was willing to hand them, and me, to the Kintaur." Saydia lifted another data pad.

"This is my first decision after receiving and reviewing Perlyea's full report on the Gene therapy treatments. As of right now, I am fully abolishing the Tasmor law that dictates to me who must share my bed. I will no longer take males who I have no feelings for into my bed simply to meet some archaic law about the advancement and continued dominance of our people. If you had seen what I have seen in just these last days you would see how laughable this law is in the face of what is out there among the stars."

This caused Anthylea to look at her with huge eyes and a stunned expression on her face as she listened to Saydia continue and her heart raced with adoration and love at the words that came from her lips next.

"I am also issuing this very same decision for every Tasmor Breeder among our kind, including my own daughter Faydia. They will now be able to choose who they take into their bed and have children with and love. This will no longer be dictated by some silly need to keep our species strong. Perlyea's report states that all Tasmor can take this Gene treatment as I have told you and we will never have to worry about the Tasmor vanishing from the stars. Do not fight me on this, for if need be I will take it directly to our citizens and you all know how they will respond." Saydia looked up at them. "My second decision based on this very same report is this... I am officially announcing my Union to First Colonel Anthylea Tomar. After what I have seen out here, I will no longer deny myself the love and emotion that is rightfully mine. That is the right of every Tasmor regardless if they are a Breeder or not. I have loved Anthylea with all my heart for years now and I will not hide this anymore. If you do not like it, I do not care. That is how it will be from now on."

Saydia lowered the data pad and looked at their shocked expressions. "There are many more changes that we will need to institute if the Tasmor are to survive the coming years. We can either make them together, in the best interests of our people, or I will leave all of you behind and go directly to our people and do what they wish.” She told them firmly. “I will meet you when you all arrive for we have much to do.”

Saydia switched off the monitor before they could respond and took a deep breath before she turned to look at Anthylea who stood there dumbstruck. Saydia’s eyes filled with love as she looked at her. “Now we will see who is serious about the advancement of our people.” She told her.

“Saydia you...” Anthylea could not find the words and Saydia stepped right up to her.

“Did you think for an instant that once Perlyea discovered this and told me that I would let it pass?” Saydia told her. “This knowledge is huge Anthylea. It will have an enormous impact on our people.”

“I know but...” Anthylea stammered.

Saydia reached up and caressed her cheek with her long fingers. “I have loved you from the day you entered my life Anthylea Tomar. Now... now the only one who will share my bed is you. Now the only children I will bear will be our children.”

Anthylea did the only thing she could really think of at that moment and she pulled Saydia into her arms and kissed her with every ounce of passion and desire she had within her. Since meeting Saydia Daret, she had only ever wanted one thing and that was now hers. Saydia melted into her arms and responded to the kiss with equal fervor. It was a long, passionate kiss that lasted for several moments before Saydia pulled away with a flushed look to her cheeks. She reached up and traced Anthylea’s moist lips with a smile.

“We have more to do today my love.” She said softly. “But tonight I want you to take me in every way possible that your mind can imagine.”

Anthylea smiled sexily. “That is quite a bit you know.” She said lustfully.

Saydia laughed and kissed her quickly. “Good.” She slid her hands down and took Anthylea arms. “Come... it is time to usher in the future of our people and it begins with us.”

VENTORI COMMAND CENTER

“Exactly when were you going to share this information?” Helen barked at Martin from across the table.

Martin sat with Danny and Wayonn on either side of him, Anja, Aricia and For'mya on the right of Danny. Kasdan and Tobia were sitting beside Wayonn. The holographic image of Carina Leonidas was beside Kasdan on his right, the emitter allowing for them to see her sitting at whatever table she was sitting in front of on RAVEN'S WINGS. Yuriko was beside her, transmitting from OMEN THREE in a similar transmission cone.

“What was I supposed to tell everyone?” Martin spoke now. “Oh, by the way, we can’t destroy this planet killing ship because if we fire at it, the ship’s really nasty Dark Matter Core will blow up and form a Black Hole that will kill all of us anyways?”

“Martin you...” Helen began to retort but he leaned forward and looked directly at her.

“Helen, I didn’t tell anyone because I didn’t know what to do.” He spoke calmly.

This caused Helen to pull up short and stop her words, blinking in surprise. “What?” She finally gasped.

“I didn’t know what to do.” Martin said more gently now. “Jesus, I’m not all knowing! Do you think we want to go aboard that thing and wander around with all those fuglies trying to eat us?”

Everyone saw Danny shake his head quickly. “I know I don’t.”

“Of course not!” Helen hissed back. “But anse un Martin! You are King!”

Martin rose to his feet angrily. “I know that!” Martin barked out. “Someone reminds me of that every fucking day! I am no better than the next man or woman who picks up a weapon and fights! The day someone tries to put me on a pedestal, I am done!”

“Martin you...” Helen began but Wayonn closed his hand over her arm.

“He is right Helen.” He said softly.

Helen looked at the table and shook her head. “You are so much like your father that it drives me utterly insane!” She snapped.

“I’m going to take that as a compliment.” Martin told her with a grin.

“You are an insufferable midaeus!” Helen barked at him.

Martin nodded his head. “I know.”

Carina Leonidas took this moment to lean forward in her chair from the RAVEN'S WINGS. "Feravomir, it is a sound plan and it can be done. Androcles has already proven this and been successful."

"I know that child, but your brother is just as downright reckless and stupid at times as your father." Helen spoke. "Sometimes more so."

Carina smiled in the transmission. "Well, I can't debate that." She said causing Martin to look at her in the transmission with wide eyes. "But they are also the only ones who could pull it off."

"Is this really the only way Lover?" Anja asked him now.

Martin shook his head slowly and returned to his chair. "We've been tossing ideas back and forth for a couple of weeks now Anja. We just don't see any other way around it. If we don't manually deactivate that core, we can't touch the ship."

"There is no way to do it by remote?" For'mya asked now.

Kasdan was the one to shake his head and look at For'mya. "For'mya, I have run dozens of simulations and none of them have been successful. We can't predict what kind of security surrounds the core, what sort of defensive measures they will have in place around the core, and there is no way to guess what type of computer encryption we will encounter. The variables are just too many to attempt a remote shutdown."

"You can shut it down if you are in front of it though right?" Aricia asked him.

Kasdan nodded his head without hesitation. "Yes. And with Mari with us, bypassing security overrides will be child's play. She is a genius in Computer Algorithms and Mutating Numerical Viruses. From there it is just a matter of tapping into the core and shutting down the individual systems in the correct order. Yuriko has been able to get some very detailed scans of the core chamber and the equipment they are using. It is crude, but very effective, and only a brute force attack will work. I have designed the computer program already and now I am just tweaking it. Once Mari arrives we can determine the final activation sequences and the steps needed to initiate the shutdown." He looked around. "But we have to be plugged into the main engineering computer of the ship, and so far we don't know which Pralor Computer System is operating the engineering systems or if it is a combination of several. The only way to correctly determine that is to be in front of it."

"And we have to be correct." Martin said.

"If you aren't correct?" Helen asked.

Martin looked at her. "Then it won't matter, for any of us. No one will survive this thing if it overloads Helen. No one. Not even germs."

"What happens when you shut it down Beloved?" Aricia asked.

"We jettison it out of the ship." Martin spoke. "And then For'mya, Tina and Endy snag it with the STRIKER."

"Me?" For'mya gasped.

Martin grinned. "What... you didn't think I was going to do this without the very best people I have do you?" He spoke. "Anja and Aricia are part of our team and you, Tina and Endy are going to get us there and then grab this thing when we spit it out."

"What do we do with it when we have it?" For'mya questioned him with wide eyes. "I don't envy dragging a potential extinction level Black Hole along behind my ass you know."

"And a beautiful ass it is." Martin spoke with a grin.

"Carians Lover..." Anja declared. "We're talking about an extinction level event here and you are fantasizing about For'mya's ass!"

Martin looked at her. "Yours and Aricia's too, if it makes you feel any better." Martin told her with a wide smile.

"Pervert!" Anja exclaimed softly.

"Mother you would only need to get it out of the immediate area." Carina spoke once more a smile lingering on her face at their antics. "Half a light year at most. It will be enough so that our capital ships can move in and systematically take this Mother ship apart."

"We need to do this. We don't have a choice." Martin said now, everyone turning to look at him. "Even with Andro's troops and ships we are going to be hard pressed to hold them on the ground. The faster we take this thing down, the better off we will be, trust me."

Helen met his eyes. "Why do you say that?" She asked.

Martin sighed heavily. "It's going to be down and dirty on the ground. They will breach the walls. In order to do this, we have to wait until they begin to land troops. That way they will be distracted enough for us to get in almost unseen. The longer it takes us, the more troops they put down. It's not going to be pretty folks, I won't lie to you. We're going to be pretty badly outnumbered."

"I believe I may have a solution to your problem King Leonidas." The female voice said causing all of them to turn and see Saydia and Anthylea standing beside Atropos.

Martin looked at Atropos as Aricia came to her feet. "Brother?" She asked. "This does not have to do with the Tasmor people."

"Everyone needs to hear this arande." Atropos said.

"Hear what?" Martin said. "Forgive me Sovereign Regent, but Tasmor ships will not be anything but cannon fodder in this battle. They just aren't advanced enough."

"But this does concern the Tasmor King Leonidas." Saydia said. "If you fail, these monsters will eventually come for us, isn't that right?"

Martin blinked and thought about that for a second. He finally nodded his head. "Yes I suppose they will." He said. "I won't allow you to put you people into harm's way with those odds however."

Saydia shook her head as she moved further into the room at Atropos's urging. "I know our ships would not be of any use." She answered. "I was thinking more of something else."

"Like what?" Martin asked.

"One million seasoned Tasmor ground troops. All fully trained and tested in battle with the Kintaur." Saydia answered. "That is the amount you said you needed in order to insure you don't lose on the ground correct?"

Martin glanced at Anja and Aricia before moving around the table to stand in front of her. "Please don't take this question the wrong way, but why would you put that many of your people at risk to help us? You don't even really know us."

Saydia smiled brightly feeling happy and free for the first time in her life. "We... the Tasmor are not even close to you in technological advancements but..."

Martin held up his hand. "Sovereign Regent... committing troops to this battle will not encourage me to share our technology with you more than we already are. Too much new technology too fast is more often than not harmful to a people. It takes away the..."

"The satisfaction and purpose of discovering it for yourself." Saydia spoke. "Yes... I agree. I am not asking for technology in return for troops."

Martin glanced at Anja and Aricia before looking back to Saydia. "Then what are you asking for?"

"I have decided that I want my people to flourish." Saydia said calmly. "Anja already started this when she helped Perlyea to discover that the gene treatment she developed with the help of your people from here on Ventori does work for the Tasmor. This discovery will allow my people to go into the future when not so long ago I did not think we had a future."

"That doesn't answer my question." Martin said.

"I wish to petition you directly for inclusion into your Union." Saydia said evenly seeing his eyes go wide. "I wish a future for my people as I told you, and that future must begin with allies. Allies that will help us to grow, but not seek to control us. Allies that will stand with us in times of need and who we can stand with in their times of need."

Aricia rose to her feet now with equally wide eyes. "Saydia, pardon me, but I thought you said the Tasmor Quorum is not as open as many of those with you now. That they are more close minded and backwards than you and many of those who believe as you do. This is what you told Anja and I several days ago."

Saydia nodded her head. "Yes I did, and that is true. Many of them are too set in their ways and only a show of trust and commitment to us would convince them. But I believe I know something that will persuade them that an alliance of friendship, cooperation and trust with your people holds the brightest future for our people. If you agree to it of course."

"I don't like being blackmailed." Martin said.

Saydia shook her head quickly. "This is not what you think." She stated quickly. "I still offer our assistance to you, the troops and whatever else you may require, regardless of what you decide, but this is the one way I know of that will show my people and the Quorum that we will be looked at as equals and not subordinate to a far away Empire.” Saydia said. “That we will have a say in everything just as your Union members do now. We are alone out here King Leonidas and we have had to become like we are in order to survive. That is not how I want us to go forward.”

“So what are you asking for?” Martin asked her in a neutral voice not sure what she was driving towards or if he would like it.

Saydia handed him the data pad. “This.” She replied.

CHAPTER FIFTY-THREE

DARASTRIXETHE-CLASS DREADNOUGHT LEVXIERIV (ENCHANTRESS)

Dytin entered his bridge with Aviel and the others in tow. He ushered them over to the side and out of the way as he made for his command chair. “Report!” He barked out.

“Inidra, three IKLISS-Class Cruisers bearing 359 point 2 and closing.” The female voice replied immediately. “The KAPRAL is hailing us sir. This Yobhakcho Darrod Nilich is growing impatient.”

Dytin nodded his head as he sat down in his chair. “No doubt.” He spoke to no one in particular. “He always was intolerant of being kept waiting.” He turned to the woman who was his First Officer and perhaps his most trusted aide. “Nodra, did our transports make the jump?” He asked.

The female Darastrixi turned from the podium like control panel she stood behind and nodded her head. “Yes sir. Our escorts joined with them and then they all jumped away to the coordinates you gave.” She looked at her two monitors. “They should arrive within nine hours.”

Dytin nodded his head as he turned back. “Excellent. Let’s see what Yobhakcho Darrod has to say shall we. Put his communications through.”

“Stand by.” The male voice spoke now. “Transferring to main holo platform.”

The figure of the Darastrixi male came into existence then, his tan and brown scales healthy and stretched over a muscular figure. His orange hued eyes were narrow and slightly slanted inward giving him a stern look whether he wanted it or not. His eyes focused on Dytin as his end of the transmission came through to his ship. “Inidra Dytin.” He spoke.

Dytin smiled at him. “Yobhakcho Darrod, it has been a long time.”

“Yes it has.” Darrod spoke.

“What brings you all the way out here Darrod?” Dytin asked as he leaned forward in his chair.

“You know why I am here Inidra!” Darrod snapped. “The Sulevfu Woiuewr has ordered that I assume your command and return all of your ships to Icarava. Koppentotz Aviel Em'mor and all those with you will be arrested and detained for questioning. All members of the Livaiji Sulevfu on our homeworld have been detained and are being questioned. You will order your other ships to return from where you sent them and then you will relinquish your chair to me.”

Dytin shook his head. “That will not happen Darrod and you know it.” He said calmly.

“You defy the Sulevfu Woiuewr!” Darrod barked.

“I defy those who claim to lead our people with honesty and integrity.” Dytin spoke once more. “The Sulevfu Woiuewr have neither.”

Darrod looked at him with wide eyes. “What you speak of is heresy!”

“Heresy?” Dytin spat at him as he stood up. “Since when is it heresy to speak ill of the Sulevfu Woiuewr? When has it ever been wrong to question the decisions and dictates of your government? The government you trust to lead your people.”

“You do not question the Sulevfu Woiuewr General, you are inciting dissidence!” Darrod snapped. “You have stolen three warships and six transports! You have left Darastrixi space and are now within Disise space! You are in restricted territory! The treaty with the Disise states that we are not to enter any part of their territory! We...”

“Treaty? Dytin snarled. “The Sulevfu Woiuewr did not sign a treaty, they capitulated to the Scourge out of fear! Fear of losing their positions of power! We allowed the Disise to butcher millions of Pralor men, women and children! On our homeworld! Those of us who protested this action and resisted were butchered by our own people! That is what the Sulevfu Woiuewr ordered done!”

“General, whatever history...” Darrod began to speak.

“Do not speak to me of history boy!” Dytin roared cutting him off and shocking even those members on his own bridge with the emotion that his voice carried. “You were not even a wet spot on your parent’s sheets when the Sulevfu Woiuewr ordered thousands of our own people to be executed! Their only crime was trying to protect those we called friends and allies! Do not dare speak to me of history Darrod Nilich, for you know not what you spew with your words.”

“I am under orders to return you and the other criminals Indira!” Darrod spat. “Do not force me to use measures which would make me disrespect you!”

“So we are criminals now are we?” Dytin snapped.

“You act in disregard for the dictates of the Sulevfu Woiuewr!” Darrod barked. “What do you call that?”

“I call that freedom.” Dytin answered. “To believe in something more than what the Sulevfu Woiuewr tells me I can.”

“What nonsense is this?” Darrod barked.

“The Lorsvek ar Sepas is upon us Darrod.” Dytin spoke. “The Dahakoan have returned and one day soon, the Sulevfu Woiuewr will answer to them for all that has happened.”

Darrod looked at him with wide eyes. “And you base this on the ramblings of priests from the Livaiji Sulevfu and the wild words of some insane Maiden female? Some child who thinks she is the reincarnation of mythical warriors from our history! Who is repaiup now General?” (Crazy)

Darrod was about to continue when he saw the petite female enter the transmission. His eyes grew wide when he saw Laren, her billowing black hair and astonishing blue eyes. He saw her uniquely scaled skinned and how it was unlike any Darastrixi he had ever seen in all his years. Her skin was enough to stop his words, but the fact that she had hair, that is what caused Darrod to blink several times in shock.

Dytin smiled at his expression and looked at Laren who stood beside him proudly. He turned his eyes back to Darrod and chuckled. “Be thankful you are not in front of us Darrod, for Laren here would probably not react well to being called a child.”

Darrod tore his eyes away from Laren and looked at Dytin. “Inidra Dytin, I implore you to reconsider what you are doing.” He stammered. “Whatever issues you have with the Sulevfu Woiuewr can be spoken of and resolved.”

Dytin shook his head. “No, they cannot.” He replied. “Not when they have those like you willing to do their bidding. Automations who do not think for themselves and have no faith. Those who will act on their orders no matter how wrong they may be. Not anymore.”

Darrod turned to the side in the transmission. “Prepare to fire weapons!” He barked angrily now. “You will target engines only!” He looked at Dytin once more. “I will stop you old man!”

Dytin shook his head sadly. “Ah... Darrod.” He said. “You were always so predictable.” He turned to look at Nodra. “Major?”

Nodra nodded her head quickly. “Ready sir.”

“Initiate.” Dytin ordered without pause as he turned back to look at Darrod. “When you have the years and experience to defeat this old man Darrod, please feel free to present yourself to me and we will test that theory. Now however, now you are still a child.”

Laren watched with smiling eyes and the lights on the bridge of Darrod’s ship began to flicker and the few control stations that she could see fluttered and went dark. Darrod turned back to look at Dytin as all power to his bridge went out and emergency lighting kicked in.

“What have you done?” He screamed.

“General...” Nodra called out. “All three ships have lost power to all systems except life support. They are adrift.”

Dytin nodded his head and returned to his chair with Laren standing beside him. “Very well. Helm, execute evasive pattern Jashi Five Two and then return us to our base course.”

“Helm confirms!” The voice barked.

Dytin looked at the transmission once more. “Your ships will regain power in roughly six hours Darrod. Long enough for us to leave you behind and continue on our way. Do not attempt to follow us Major Darrod. If by chance you bumble your way to finding us, you will not like the greeting you will receive should we meet again.”

“General you!” Darrod began to shout but Dytin touched the arm of his chair and the transmission went dark. He looked at Laren who was watching his face. “He always was an sisargh hofiba.” He said. (Arrogant fool)

“What did you do?” She asked in obvious delight.

Dytin smiled at her. “An old trick that was devised centuries ago that most of the younger generations never cared to learn.” He answered. “Every Darastrixi ship has its own command code. If you know the command code you can order the ship to do whatever you want remotely. It is quite useful.”

“You powered down their ships?” Laren gasped.

Dytin grinned. “Yes. Something that will positively drive Darrod insane with anger and something that will not work again I’m afraid. Let’s hope he is not smart enough to trace our course to the station. I doubt Dahakoan Androcles will be as delicate as I was.”

VENTORI PRIVATE QUARTERS SOVEREIGN REGENT DARET

“Me?” Namiri Daret almost shouted as she came to her feet. “I will do no such thing! Never!”

Saydia sat beside Anthylea on one of the couches in the private quarters erected for her and said nothing. The secure communications disc was active and there were three figures in the transmission that was currently operating. Seran Echen, Ardal Kaend and Vesara Athcer were those who sat in comfortable chairs in a private conference room aboard the Lycavorian Union VANGUARD MKII-Interdiction Cruiser. All of them still appeared somewhat in shock at being aboard a ship more advanced than any they had ever seen before, but this did not keep them from exploring what they could and asking as many questions as possible. As Saydia had found out, the only answers denied them were those of a sensitive military or technological nature, but aside from that they were like children in a new store. They were all treated as visiting royalty and Martin did not really know the respect this treatment brought to him among the Tasmor people. It was something that was natural for him to do anyway for he was not as politically dense as many took him to be. Though they had been on the ship for only a few hours, most of the Tasmor Quorum was still wandering the ship with their escort and taking everything in. Saydia had requested Seran, Ardal and Vesara to be in this transmission for the political nature. Seran was the Tasmor Defense Minister, Ardal the Engineering Minister and Vesara was the Chief Tasmor Law Minister. All of which came into play now with what Saydia had presented to Martin Leonidas and his Queens just last night.

“You are the youngest daughter to the Tasmor Sovereign Regent, Namiri Daret.” Vesara spoke evenly from within the transmission. “This was written into our law hundreds of years ago by your own Grandmother. She knew a political marriage must always remain an option for the Sovereign Regent. You have no say in the matter.”

“What?” Namiri gasped.

“It is true Namiri, though Vesara could have been kinder in her explanation.” Ardal spoke more gently knowing that this information did not sit well with her. Namiri and Emylea Daret had always been known as the two most popular, adventurous and forward thinking of the Sovereign Regent’s daughters.

“It is the law.” Vesara hissed. “What is there to be gentle about? If this is meant to be done, she must acquiesce and accept it.”

“I will not accept it!” Namiri barked.

“The advantages of a political marriage to the Lycavorian heir are too numerous to count.” Vesara spoke once more. “These advantages for our people as a whole far outweigh your personal feelings in regards to this Namiri Daret.”

“Then you marry him!” Namiri spat at her. “I have no desire to become the wife of someone who I have never met and have no feelings for!”

“I have heard others talking about him mother.” Emylea spoke now as she took Namiri’s hand. “He already has six wives. They say he is crueler than his father. Why does this need to be? Have we not outgrown such things?”

“This is for the good of the Tasmor people! This is for our future! It does not matter what...” Vesara began to speak.

Saydia chose this time to rise to her feet and turn. “Thank you everyone.” She spoke forcefully, ending Vesara’s comment.

“Sovereign Regent you...” Vesara began once more.

“Will speak to you and the other Quorum members when you arrive!” Saydia snapped. “Thank you.” She looked at Anthylea who quickly leaned over and ended the transmission before Vesara could get wound up.

Saydia looked at Namiri as she moved closer to her. “Mother please tell me you are not considering this.” Namiri pleaded.

Saydia reached out and took her hands. “Emylea... leave us for a moment will you.”

Emylea hesitated for a moment and then turned to exit the building. Anthylea stood up from the couch and kissed Saydia’s cheek before following her. Saydia turned back to Namiri and smiled.

“Sit with me Namiri.” She said.

“Mother you...”

“Please daughter.” Saydia told her pulling her to the couch. Namiri settled to the couch next to her slowly and Saydia turned slightly to face her. She reached up and brushed some of Namiri’s dark brown hair from her face. She had streaks of light blond in her hair now, mainly because of her emotional state. “I have not been the mother to you that I should have been Namiri Daret, and for that I am so very sorry.”

Namiri looked at her with wide eyes. “Mother you...”

Saydia shook her head. “No, listen to me.” She said meeting her eyes. “I never wanted to lay with your father Namiri. Even as successful as he was, I just never cared for him in the least. It wasn’t like with your sisters. I was given time to know the men who would be their fathers, but with your father it was more expected of me because of his victories against the Kintaur. It wasn’t something I was given a choice in.” Saydia gazed at her lovingly. “Part of me resented you for this and I have not treated you as I should have treated you. This was never your fault. When I look at you now Namiri Daret, I see such beauty and life. You have your father’s skills and my brains. A deadly combination to say the least.”

Namiri stared at her mother in stunned silence. These were things she had never expected to hear from her. She knew the relationship between her mother and father was tenuous at best, but she never really knew why. She never spoke of it until now and her father had always spoken of her mother in genuinely kind words.

“Mother you don’t...”

“You have grown into a beautiful woman Namiri Daret and I am...” Saydia spoke. “I am so very proud of you and what you have accomplished.”

Namiri felt the tears well up in her eyes and she squeezed her mother’s hands. “Mother, I have never laid with a man. Only Vinara those few times and she... we both knew it was not going to last.”

Saydia nodded. “I know.” She said softly.

“Are you asking me to do this mother?” Namiri rasped out the words.

Saydia met her eyes and shook her head. “No.” She answered. “I will not ask this of you Namiri. I have no intention of allowing you to be forced do this because of some ancient law. I have started changing things Namiri and it has already begun. I have taken the first steps with Anthylea and Perlyea and the Breeders among our people. I will no longer adhere to laws and rules that have no place in this time.”

“Then why allow the Quorum to know that you presented this to King Leonidas?” Namiri asked.

“Tell me something daughter.” Saydia spoke. “You and Emylea have been among them longer than I, do you trust them? Truly trust them?”

Namiri nodded her head without hesitation. “Yes.” She answered. “They had to do none of what they have done for us Mother. Especially after what Perlyea did.”

Saydia nodded her head. “I know.” She said. “And I agree. Just being among them these last few days, it is almost as if a great weight has been lifted from my shoulders. They are sincere in their actions and I believe they genuinely consider our people friends.” Saydia smiled and her face became relaxed. “I believe Perlyea is also very infatuated with Anja. Almost as if she has discovered a kindred soul.”

Namiri looked at her with wide eyes. “You believe she has developed feelings for Queen Anja?”

Saydia nodded. “Possibly. She would never pursue anything without Aduna’s consent, Perlyea loves her too much, but Aduna has always relied on Perlyea in matters that concern both of them and if this is the case I don’t believe Aduna would disagree.”

“There could never be anything between them mother.” Namiri said. “Queen Anja, all of them, they are devoted to King Leonidas in a way I have never seen before. It is almost like…”

Saydia nodded her head. “Like they are all pieces of a puzzle that fit together perfectly.” She said. “I know… for this is what I feel for Anthylea as well.” Saydia shook her head quickly. “Perlyea would never do something, no matter what she may feel and I believe she has found a true friend in Anja and she knows it.”

“What do you want mother?” Namiri asked.

“I want our people to prosper and grow Namiri.” Saydia answered. “I want us to not fear walking among the stars or what we will discover. I believe we have found a future that could be so very bright with these Lycavorians and others who call this Union home. I want that future for you and your sisters Namiri and whoever you chose to share your lives with. Martin Leonidas and his people could be very powerful allies and friends and that is what we need at this moment.”

“So you want me to do this?” Namiri asked. “To become a wife to this Prince who I have never met? I would have to lay with him and his other wives mother. That is what the Queens do and I have heard his wives share a similar relationship.”

Saydia shook her head quickly. “No, I told you I will not subject my daughters to the same thing I grew to hate so much about our laws.” She said looking at her confidently. “That was never my intent Namiri, believe me. And trust me, after seeing the reaction from Martin Leonidas when I presented this to him, I believe it is not something they practice either. I offered the option to them because it was one of the strongest ways for me to show them that we are sincere in our actions. I want them to know we can be powerful allies.” She explained carefully. “It will also keep Vesara from bringing it up in meetings without me knowing she will go in that direction. I will not haggle politically with these men and women, they could have squashed us like bugs but they instead chose to be honest and direct with us. Just as I intend to be with them.”

Namiri felt relief wash over her and she quickly embraced her mother. “Thank you mother!” She gasped.

Saydia squeezed her as she had never squeezed her before, loving the feel of her daughter in her arms. She reached up and ran her fingers through Namiri’s dark brown hair, the blond streaks fading quickly. “I love you daughter.” Saydia whispered. “Never doubt that. And I will show this love to you forever more now. As I should have done for so many years.” She pushed Namiri back in her arms and saw the tears spilling down her cheeks. She reached up and brushed those tears away. “Once the Quorum arrives we will meet with King Leonidas. I want you to be there. He will dismiss this, we will dismiss this and then we can begin negotiations for our future.”

Namiri nodded her head quickly, her smile making her eyes glow with an almost surreal and unnatural brightness that Saydia loved. “Of course.” She stammered.

Saydia stood up. “Good. Now… now let’s gather Emylea and Anthylea and go to this Food Hall that they have established. I have not been there yet and I have heard our people say that the food is incredible.”

Namiri smiled brilliantly. “Emylea and I have eaten there every day. The food is very good.”

Saydia wrapped her arm around her daughter’s waist and they headed for the door. “Good.” She said. “Now that Anthylea and I are free to show our love for one another I will have to keep my strength up.” Saydia told her with a sexy smile. “She is very passionate.”

Namiri couldn’t help but laugh at the look on her mother’s face and she squeezed her tightly as they left the building. It was going to be an exciting life going forward and she relished the experiences to come.

“...Know what he will tell me to do with this?” Martin snapped as Anja, Aricia and For'mya all sat at the table together and watched him rant and pace back and forth. To say they had been flabbergasted when Saydia presented it to them was an understatement. Martin was so flustered that they quickly called for some time to reflect on everything and Saydia had left them. All of them knew Martin had been up most of the night weighing the offer but unwilling to say what he felt. “He will tell me where to go, how to get there, and where to shove it when I get there! And he will probably do it in five different languages too!”

“Seven Beloved.” Aricia said softly looking at him as Martin turned to face her. “He has finished learning two others since we last saw him if I understand correctly. The Nodon tongue and the ancient Folcani dialect from their southern continent. He does love his languages, as do all of our children.”

Martin’s eyes narrowed. “Is that supposed to be funny?” He asked.

“I’m just saying.” Aricia spoke with a smile.

For'mya leaned forward. “Martin, are you considering this?” She asked. “We promised to never try to direct our children’s lives and we have adhered to that since Andro was born.”

Martin looked at them and sighed heavily as he sat down. “I won’t lie...” He told them. “Yes, I have considered it. One million Tasmor ground troops, regardless of their training level, this would be a huge relief to us.”

“The Svorag numbers really concern you don’t they Lover?” Anja asked.

Martin nodded his head knowing he could not lie to them. He leaned forward in the chair now. “Danny and I have been doing the numbers for days, we are the only ones with any real experience in Defense Force Composition.”

“And?” Aricia asked.

Martin shook his head. “Even with the additional forces Andro has with him, there is no way we can hold Honelze.” He told them. “The numbers just don’t add up. Every simulation I have had Avi run always ends up with us getting our asses handed to us in a big way.”

For'mya reached across the table and gripped his hand. “This is why you have not been sleeping isn’t it?” She asked softly.

Martin threw her a lopsided grin. “Kind of hard to sleep when you are looking at the prospect of becoming one of the fuglies. And seeing everyone you know and love either killed or turned into one of them. Sleep doesn’t really help, no.”

“And if you factor in the Tasmor troops?” Anja asked.

Martin met her eyes. “Having them man all the defensive posts and freeing up our people and General Koguth’s Pride gives us the extra added punch that puts us over the top. We can hit harder and last longer than the Tasmor and if the Tasmor are as good at defense as I have seen Namiri and the others are at offense, then that could very well be the tipping point.” Martin slid the data pad across the table in front of Anja and Aricia. “Avi ran the simulation last night with the Tasmor troops included. Sixty-seven percent less casualties and we eventually win out over their numbers because of our tactics.”

“And if we don’t have the Tasmor?” Anja asked.

“Ninety-two percent chance we all die or become a Svorag.” Martin told them. “Pleasant huh?”

“Then send for more troops as Andro said Martin.” For'mya spoke.

Martin shook his head once more. “I won’t leave the Union thin.” He told them. “Keleru is just bold enough to try something even with Pian chopping at his heels. If that happens Deia already has instructions to turn General Vistr loose and have him kick the Kavalians in the balls so bad they run scurrying back to Cabelir. If he has to defend the Union he needs every Spartan he can get. I won’t pull from that.”

“Martin, at the very least you should discuss this with Androcles.” Aricia spoke now.

Martin rose to his feet as he was shaking his head. “No. I will not compromise my son’s integrity when it comes to the women he loves. I wouldn’t do it to my queens and I will not ask him to do it either. It would be an insult to each one of you if I did that and it would be an insult to Sadi and Carisia and all of them if I asked him to do it. Not to mention that Sadi and the others would probably want to cut my balls off for even suggesting it. I get the feeling they are almost as possessive as you guys.”

Anja smiled at him, her jade green eyes twinkling in the light. “Well, we know when we have a good thing and so do they.” She told him.

“Yes we do.” For'mya agreed with a smile as well.

“We don't do political marriages and I am not going to start now.” He looked at them. “When he gets here we'll figure something out. We'll put our heads together and figure something out.”

Aricia got to her feet and moved over in front of him as Anja and For'mya slid their chairs closer together and began to read more of the data pad. “Beloved, go and have breakfast with Jezima and Meral.” She told him. “We will take care of this.”

“Aricia I...”

Aricia put a finger to his lips and leaned forward to nuzzle his chest. “Trust us Martin.” She said. “Go.”

Martin knew better than to argue with them and even at the mention of food his stomach growled. He finally nodded without a word and turned to move out of the Command Center. Aricia waited for him to exit before turning back to Anja and For'mya.

“He's not telling us something.” She said softly as she moved back to the table. “And it has nothing to do with what is happening out here.”

Anja and For'mya looked at her. “Dysea said something to that effect before she left.” For'mya told them.

“It's also why he isn't sleeping well.” Anja told them. “Whatever he has got going on in there it's taking up a lot of his thoughts.”

“He promised to never keep anything from us.” Aricia said.

“I don't think this qualifies Little Wolf.” Anja told her. “Whatever it is, I don't think it is personal in any way. It's something else and I think he is still trying to figure it out himself before he tells us.”

Aricia nodded her head as she sat down. “And he would not tell us until he is sure of his mindset.” She added. She looked at her fellow Queens and dearest lovers and friends. “So what do we do about this?” She asked.

“Hold on a moment. I might have an idea.” Anja said as she reached for the small console on the table in front of her chair. She entered in a code and tapped it activating the small holo disc. “Perlyea?”

Perlyea's face appeared in the small image and she looked surprised. “Anja? I thought you were on the surface?”

“I am with Aricia and For'mya now.” Anja said. “I have a question for you.”

“Of course, anything.” Perlyea answered.

“How much of your law do you know?” Anja asked her. “The details I mean.”

Perlyea looked at her slightly confused. “It is not my field of study really, so I never bothered to learn much of it. Why?”

Anja plugged the pad into the table. “Saydia gave this to us last night. It should be coming through now.” They watched as Perlyea turned from what she had been doing and moved to the small station beside her. They saw Duewa and others moving in the background in the SPIRIT'S research Lab. They had discovered that Perlyea was a very fast learner and though she didn't know how to use most of the equipment in the SPIRIT'S Research Lab, she was picking things up very quickly. Anja had discovered a fast and loyal friend in Perlyea Kalrr, just as she had with Duewa and she had granted Perlyea almost unlimited access to the facilities on the SPIRIT OF HADARIA and Perlyea was taking advantage of it. As Perlyea viewed the screen her eyes grew wider and she turned back to look at them.

“Saydia gave this to you?” she gasped.

Anja nodded. “Last night?”

Perlyea shook her head. “Namiri will never agree to this.” She said almost immediately. “Namiri and Emylea are the youngest and most headstrong of Saydia's daughters. The most likely to rebel against ancient Tasmor law like this. To my knowledge, Namiri has never been with a man either. There was... there was a young Tasmor woman who she spent some time with a few months ago, but never a male. I can't believe Saydia would try to make her do this.” Perlyea's eyes grew slightly wider and she looked at Anja in the transmission. “She is trying to show you that we are willing to do what is necessary for an alliance. It has to be!”

“I believe we have already established that Perlyea.” Aricia spoke now.

“Yes, I agree Aricia, but this must be an action by her to show the Tasmor Quorum that our commitment must be sincere.” Perlyea answered. “Using this would insure we are bound to the Union in a way no normal agreement or treaty would establish.”

“Perlyea, this is not something we practice.” Anja told her.

Perlyea blinked several times and shook her head. “But I thought, Martin has you and five other Queens. Your son has six wives. None of these... Anja are you saying that none of these were politically driven commitments?”

Anja shook her head. “No.” She answered. “Martin is very much against this type of politically driven agenda, as are the vast majority of our citizens.”

Perlyea looked embarrassed. “Forgive me, I did not...”

Anja laughed gently as did Aricia and For'mya. “Believe us, it is not something that we have not seen before Perlyea.” For'mya told her. “Most people who do not know us cannot understand how we could all love Martin Leonidas so completely. There are times when even we do not understand how it could be, only that it is. That is what matters to us.”

Perlyea nodded her head. “I believe I understand.” She said. “This is how it is with your son as well?”

Anja nodded her head. “Andro is so much like his father that it is scary at times.” She replied. “And to be honest, his wives are just like us.”

“Fascinating.” Perlyea said. “You will have to explain in more detail about this when we have the time.”

Anja looked at her. “Perlyea, will your Quorum allow this?” She asked. “The Tasmor committing troops to this fight?”

Perlyea shook her head slowly. “Without something in return, I doubt it.” She answered. “There are still a handful of hardliners on the Quorum that Saydia inherited from her mother’s rule. They have much influence. Saydia has battled them over many things and usually she has won out, but committing our troops without some sort of signed treaty or agreement with your Union will probably not happen.”

“Even though the Svorag would ultimately come for the Tasmor?” Aricia asked. “At least that is what we all believe, yourself included.”

Perlyea shook her head. “Yes, I do believe that Aricia, but without something material to show the Union’s commitment to the Tasmor people, no, they will not commit troops to this fight regardless of what Saydia, I and others might tell them or the proof we could produce. They are politicians and unlike Saydia, Anthylea and myself, most have never served or fought in any engagement with the Kintaur or their cronies.” She replied honestly. Perlyea thought for a moment. “Saydia had to have known this and she definitely knew Namiri would not accept this so I don’t understand why she would present this to you.”

“Can your Quorum force Saydia or Namiri to do this?” Aricia asked.

“Namiri is the youngest of Saydia’s six daughters and Tasmor law does state that the youngest daughter of the Sovereign Regent must be made available for politically arranged marriages if they will benefit the Tasmor as a whole.” Perlyea answered. “I do not know the specific details to this, but Aduna would?”

“Aduna?” Anja asked.

Perlyea smiled brightly. “She is my... she is my partner.” She answered with a large touch of warmth in her voice that Anja detected right away. “We have been together for nearly three decades now. She commands a small Tasmor Commando unit that provides security for Quorum members when they travel, but her secondary specialty is Tasmor law. Not in any official capacity, but she is very knowledgeable. She is arriving with the Quorum in a few hours.”

Anja looked at For'mya. “When do we meet with them?” She asked.

“They arrive in four and a half hours.” For'mya answered. “The meeting was set for sixteen hundred hours.”

“Perlyea can you arrange it so we can speak with Aduna and yourself before we meet with Saydia and the Quorum?” Anja asked.

“Certainly.” Perlyea answered. “Why?”

“We need your troops Perlyea.” Aricia told her honestly. “Without Tasmor troops we will not win this fight and if we lose on Honelze then the Svorag will be free to return here to Ventori and then strike out for Tasmor worlds as well.”

“Our forces are well trained Aricia but we are not in the same class as your own Spartan soldiers.” Perlyea told her.

“In open combat perhaps not.” Aricia told her. “But in support and defensive positions they would free up our Spartans to do the actual fighting and we are better suited to this sort of combat.”

Perlyea thought about that for a moment and though she wasn't a military person in any real way or purpose, the logic was very sound. She looked at them. "I will pull Aduna away when she arrives. Where should we meet you?"

"Martin will be with Jezima and Meral most of the day until the meeting." Aricia stated. "Meet us at our personal quarters an hour before we are supposed to greet your Quorum. If we need more time, no one will question us. Our quarters have the only other QCR Relay on the ground. And we will need that."

"Your communications relay?" Perlyea asked. "Why?"

"Because if we can't get Sadi and the others onboard for what we have in mind then we are dead in the water." Anja said. "They are just as possessive of Androcles as we are of Martin and they will need to agree with this in order for it to work."

Perlyea smiled. "Interesting. I will enjoy seeing what the three of you come up with. I will bring Aduna to meet you shortly after they arrive."

The transmission went dark and Anja sat back. "What do you think?" she asked Aricia and For'mya.

"I think we are treading in waters that very well may make us more enemies than we want if we are not careful." For'mya stated. "Among our own family too."

Aricia sat back in her chair. "Sadi will be the hardest to convince." She said. "She is too much like me, and I would be hard pressed to agree to something like what we want to propose if it concerned Martin."

"You wouldn't be alone Little Wolf." Anja said.

"No, you would not." For'mya agreed.

"Carians I hope this doesn't blow up in our faces." Anja said softly. She looked at both Aricia and For'mya. "Are we doing the right thing? Should we even get involved in this?"

"Do we want to see the man we love more than our own lives die?" For'mya asked softly looking at them. "Do we want to see our children and friends die? We have experienced this once before and not so very long ago. Look what that did to all of us." For'mya saw both Aricia and Anja shudder gently at the memories of what they had all felt when they thought Martin had been killed. "This threat is very real and as Queens of the Union and mothers, we must do what we can to avert a total disaster. And we must do so in a way that does not require we lose our husband and mate and our sons and daughters in a foolhardy attempt at keeping us alive." For'mya reached out and took Anja's hand in her own, while Anja took Aricia's hand. "You know that Bella, Dysea and Cirith will agree with us."

"I just don't want Andro or Sadi... any of them resenting us for proposing it." Anja spoke softly. "We've never tried to control the lives of our children and now we are sticking our noses into Andro's business in a big way. And this will turn our other children against us as well for they all love their brother and they will follow him anywhere."

Aricia looked at them. "He is our son and he will understand why once he knows what the risk is. We did not raise fools for children. If this is the only way then Androcles will do what he must. And I believe Sadi and the others will too."

"And if he says no." Anja asked. "If Martin shuts us down? Then what?"

Aricia met her eyes. "Then we will follow our path and our mate, wherever it may lead." She said. "There is no other path for a Spartan woman."

PRALOR SCIENCE STATION 489
COREWARD EDGE OF FORMER PRALOR SPACE
NOW SCOURGE TERRITORY

Dytin allowed his hands to glide gracefully over the helm controls of the Darastrixi Long Range Transport as he used the station keeping thrusters to remain unmoving as Matum sat in the co-pilot's chair and allowed his hands to hover over the secondary controls while studying the two monitors in front of him. Laren, Aviel and Dalis were behind them watching silently as they approached the massive, deserted Pralor station.

"They certainly did not believe in doing anything small did they?" Dalis commented as his head lowered to get a better look at the station.

They were only five thousand meters from the station and it filled the entire cockpit window now.

“No they did not.” Dytin echoed absently as his eyes drifted up and took in the colossal landing bay doors which were closed. “Matum?” He asked finally.

“Nothing yet Inidra.” Matum answered. “We’re holding at five thousand meters just as our instructions stated. No signal as yet.”

“Give it time Matum.” Dytin spoke. “Caution must become part of all of our actions right now, especially given where we are. We must trust in the plan.”

“It is a plan we had nothing to do with sir.” Matum reminded him.

Dytin nodded his head as he looked at him. “Do you trust Doraanar Sarlana Matum?”

“Yes sir.” Matum said instantly. “I could... I could do nothing else.”

Dytin nodded his head. “And she travels with four Dahakoan Matum. Do you believe a Doraanar and the Dahakoan could lead us astray? Bring harm to us?”

Matum shook his head instantly, surprising himself with the quickness of his own answer to the question. “Never.” He said.

Dytin smiled. “No.”

Aviel also smiled as he saw the revelation in Matum’s eyes. “And now you realize just how deeply you believe in faith young Matum. It surprises you doesn’t it?”

Matum turned and looked at him. “I... I never... yes sir it does.”

Aviel nodded his head. “Now you know how we felt when we first discovered Laren and Ladur existed. We never really knew how deeply we followed the teachings of Dadrien until the time came to push away all the simple things and look inward.”

Matum looked at him intently. “Koppentotz Aviel... it feels... it feels...”

“Like freedom?” Dytin asked him.

Matum nodded quickly. “Yes!”

“I like that feeling.” He said as he reached across his controls and touched another button. “Nodra? Anything?”

“Sensors are clear.” She answered from the bridge of the ENCHANTRESS which was also holding station five hundred thousand meters from the station.

Aviel looked at his friend’s head. “You expect Yobhakcho Darrod to find us Dytin?” He asked.

“I trained him Aviel.” Dytin answered. “If the Sulevfu Woieuwr has given him full reign to find and bring us back, then he would not hesitate to follow us out here.”

“How can you be so sure Inidra?” Matum asked.

“There are no habitable planets within a hundred light years of our position.” Dytin replied. “The Scourge decimated them when they swept through this area of space. The station is all there is.”

“But this station is not on any of our star charts.” Matum spoke. “How would he know it was here?”

“The same way I knew where it was once Dahakoan Androcles told me this is where we would meet.” Dytin answered. “I accessed the restricted Star Charts in the archives several days ago. The charts that the Sulevfu Woieuwr has deemed off limits to everyone and hidden away in the archives.”

“They don’t want anyone to know what is out here.” Aviel said softly.

Dytin nodded his head. “No, they do not.” He said. “At least not in Scourge space.”

Matum turned and looked at Aviel. “What do you mean?” He asked.

“This is former Pralor space young Matum.” Aviel told him. “This single sliver of Pralor territory separated our space and...” Aviel blinked with a surprised look on his face. “I don’t even remember their species’ name.” He gasped. “How sad is that?”

“It was another of the Scourge dictates to the Sulevfu Woieuwr.” Dytin spoke. “We had to remove all knowledge that the Pralors ever existed from our history books, our star charts, even our lives. All that remained after this occurred was locked away in restricted vaults that even the Scourge do not know we have.”

“I doubt they would be pleased to know of those vaults.” Aviel spoke.

Dytin chuckled softly. “I will not take that bet old friend.” He said.

All of their heads turned when the soft beep sounded from Matum’s console. He focused his attention on that console and his eyes narrowed. “It’s the signal!” He gasped.

“Easy now.” Dytin spoke. “Have them confirm with their number Matum.”

Matum typed on the console quickly and almost instantly there was another beep. He looked up. "The response is Alpha Nine."

Dalis was the one who turned to Laren. "Laren?"

Laren had been silent during the exchange but now she nodded her head quickly. "Alpha Nine is the Lead Worker Drone that Androcles sent in the probes." She answered. "It's correct." The console beeped four more times and before Matum could speak Laren smiled. "Inidra, they are opening the bay for us to enter."

Almost before she finished speaking the massive doors directly in front of them began to part to reveal a dark interior that they could not see within. As the doors opened further however, small interior lights began to come on within the landing bay. They appeared to be emergency lights of some kind, but it was more than enough for Dytin to adjust their controls and using his station keeping thrusters he began to move the transport forward.

"Clear right." Matum spoke as he watched his own instruments.

"Stand by." Dytin told them. "I'm going to set us down quickly so that they can close the doors. The longer they remain open the more power they use."

The transport jerked slightly as Dytin adjusted their position once more, moving past the doors now and into the main portion of the landing bay, but then he extended the landing struts and quickly brought the transport down onto the deck of the landing bay in the far right corner just where he had been told to land. The emergency lighting allowed them to see most of the landing bay's interior now and the many vehicles that were used to move different craft around were scattered about mixed in with different crates of equipment that had been left behind.

Matum was still monitoring his screens and he looked up finally as the ship began to power down. "Landing bays doors have sealed and the bay is now pressurized."

"That was fast." Aviel spoke.

"I have heard of the Pralor Worker Drones." Dalis spoke up. "It is said they were marvels of Pralor engineering and ingenuity. Every Pralor ship had them and they were the ones who handled most of the repairs and such during their war with the Scourge. They were much faster and more efficient."

Dytin lifted the arm of his seat and locked it back into an upright position as he turned to look at them. "Dahakoan Androcles said we must move quickly." He told them. "Let's get everyone moving Aviel."

Aviel nodded and headed out of the cockpit with Dalis and Laren in tow. Dytin turned back to Matum and put his hand on his shoulder. "Matum, secure your station and then arm the charges as we discussed. You maintain positive control of the detonator at all times Matum."

Matum nodded. "I understand General." He answered.

"We will wait for you at the bottom of the ramp. Be quick Major." Dytin told him before moving out of the cockpit.

Dytin moved quickly through the passenger section of the transport as he heard the ramp touch down on the deck. He stopped only long enough to pull two standard issue Darastrixi sidearms and a pulse rifle from the rack over the view window. He slung the rifle and moved forward with the sidearm in his hand, moving through the cargo section and up to the top of the ramp. Laren's father Yokra, still a military man at heart Dytin saw, had dropped to one knee at the base of the ramp waiting for him. The members of Matum's Sand Strider detachment had spread out in a half circle around the rear of the ship and all ten of them were crouched with their weapons at the ready. Aviel, Nahko, Robati, Laren, Chalith, Dalis and Shalu were behind Ladur and Ch'teven who stood back roughly ten meters from the perimeter the Sand Striders had made and looked as if they were ready to spring into action to support them if need be.

Dytin moved the two meters to where Yokra rose to his feet holding the rifle. Both of them turned to see Matum come from the cockpit and make directly to where they stood. Dytin handed him the rifle and other sidearm without thought.

"The charges?" Yokra asked.

Matum nodded his head as he charged his pulse rifle. "Set." He answered. "I have the detonator. It would be a shame to have to destroy such a new ship."

Dytin nodded his head. "Yes, it would. Better the ship than us if things go bad however."

Matum nodded his head. "True."

All of them heard chirping and turned to see the oval shaped Pralor Worker drone scurrying from out of the shadows toward them. Laren stepped up between Ladur and Ch'teven and dropped to one knee as the drone moved right up to the two large dragons as if it did not have a care in the world. Dytin moved down the ramp to stand beside Aviel as they watched.

“These Drones have been around our kind before Aviel.” He said.

Aviel nodded his head. “So it would seem.” He answered. “Come.”

Aviel led them forward now and all of them came up between Ladur and Ch'teven to see Laren squatting down in front of the drone and listening to it chirp away. After a long moment of this Laren nodded her head and stood up to face them.

“Alpha Nine says they have secured the Pilot’s Briefing room and we can move there.” Laren told them. “That is where they have moved the equipment Androcles and Dorian sent for us.”

Nahko looked at her stunned. “Laren you... you understand the noises it is making?” she asked.

Laren smiled and nodded her head. “Oh yes.” She replied. She waved them forward with her hand.

“This way.”

PRALOR SCIENCE STATION 489 PILOT BRIEFING ROOM LANDING BAY 12

Dytin stood silently as he ran his hand up and down his arm in fascination. The room that the drone had led them to was large and held nearly a hundred comfortable chairs arranged in a half circle. It was obviously a briefing room of some sort with several couches and tables along the walls. It also had three rooms adjacent to the main room which appeared to be smaller recreation rooms with more couches and tables and several large monitors along the walls. The monitors were dark and the rooms only dimly lit, but it was more than enough for them to see easily enough.

Dahakoan Androcles had been true to his word and the now empty containers that had once been probes were stacked against the far wall empty of their contents. They had contained twenty of these amazing uniforms as well as several small computers of Pralor design and a handful of light weapons. The uniforms were the items that facinated all of them. They were matte black in color, with several crimson colored stripes in different places, but the material they were made out of was something that the Darastrixi had never seen before. The uniforms were exceptionally light, but easily discernible as body armor of some sort. Each had extra plates along the forearms, chest, shoulders, thighs and shins, but an odd material along the joints that almost felt like armor itself, but was extremely pliable and allowed for near complete movement in any direction of their limbs. Each forearm held a small, two inch by two inch square control panel that operated the incredibly thin layer of almost golden like armor that extended from hidden sections along their arms, legs, chests and backs. The Sand Strider troops with Matum had been most happy about this when they discovered it and had spent the better part of an hour hitting each other with their weapons and fists and marveling how the armor was not damaged in any way, always reverting to its original state.

It had been Laren who had shown everyone how to don the armor and how to activate the thin, extra layer of metal armor. She knew instinctively how to put the armor on and what it could do and Dytin concluded she could have only learned this from her fellow Dahakoan.

Dytin looked up when he saw Aviel and Dalis come up to him, both of them with similar expressions of wonder on their faces.

“It is some sort of composite alloy material that I have never seen before.” Dalis spoke before any of them could. “And the metal armor that extends is amazing. I ran a spectral scan of it with my portable scanner. It is made of a material I have never seen before in any Table of Metals known to us.”

“It seems that this particular branch of Lycavorians are not as backward as our Elbakiw Sulevfu believes.” Aviel spoke looking at Dytin.

Dalis shook his head quickly. “No. Whoever designed and manufactured this should be working for us.” He said excitedly.

Dytin smiled at his enthusiasm as he looked at Aviel. “What else?” He asked.

“Two working Pralor P9 computers.” Aviel spoke calmly. “This was their most advanced portable computer when their end came Dytin. It equals or surpasses our own systems in every way even now, nearly forty-five thousand years later.”

Dytin nodded as he looked around the briefing room. “Based on what I have seen just in this room alone I dare say that we did not know the Pralor people as much as we should have.”

Aviel nodded his head. “I was thinking the same thing.” He said. “Nahko is on one of the computers now with Shalu and Chalith trying to determine what information is on it. There were half a dozen smaller computers, P1s Laren said they are called.”

“What about the station?” Dytin asked.

“Laren says the Drones have cleared these four rooms for us to wait.” Aviel spoke now. “Given what we have seen, or not seen to be more precise, I’d say they have not powered up the reactor core more than a few percent.”

Dytin nodded his head. “Less of a power signature.” He said. “Scourge sensors are not known for being precise and according to the charts out of the restricted archives, there have been no Scourge ships in this area of space for several centuries at least. Why give them reason to change their pattern.”

Dalis nodded his head. “That matches with information we have on them.” He added. “They cleanse a system and then return only so often to insure it is as they left it. If our data and information is correct they left many of these stations intact because they did not want or could not destroy them at the time.”

Dytin nodded as he looked around the main room. “Abandoned station on the fringes of Scourge space that they rarely come to?” He said with a touch of admiration in his voice. “This was a wise move on the part of Dahakoan Androcles. For one so young he is well versed in tactics it seems.”

“Could your Yobhakcho Darrod track us here Dytin?” Aviel asked.

Dytin shook his head. “That depends on how badly the Sulevfu Woiuewr want us back, or if they know what Laren and Ladur are.” He replied. “If they gave Darrod access to restricted charts then unfortunately yes. If they did not, I do not know. He is very smart Aviel. One of the finest officers I trained until he chose to become a member of the Sulevfu Woiuewr Guard.”

“If they know what Laren and Ladur are, do you think they will give this information to the Scourge?” Dalis asked.

“I’m willing to bet that they would not care as long as they keep their power and the Scourge do nothing against our people.” Aviel spoke. “The Scourge have pounded it into their heads for centuries that anything having to do with the Pralor people was strictly taboo. It should be reported to them immediately and they would take care of it.”

Dytin nodded his head. “Perhaps... but unless they have already dispatched ships to this sector, it would take three days before a Scourge ship got close to this station. Our sensors are better Aviel and we detected nothing within five hundred light years of this station. The closest point that has Scourge ships that are active in the system is nearly two thousand light years away. They would not get here in time to stop us.”

“But your Yobhakcho Darrod could?” Aviel said.

Dytin met his eyes. “He could possibly find us, yes.” Dytin answered. “But he will not stop us.”

“How can you be certain?” Dalis asked.

Dytin didn’t take his eyes from Aviel. “I will kill him first.” He replied softly. “The future is already in motion my friends and we cannot stop what is happening. Neither will Darrod. Not if I have anything to say about it.”

PREMONITION
UPPERDECK LOUNGE
FIFTY MINUTES FROM STATION 489

“Mari?” Androcles asked from over her right shoulder.

Mari turned her head slightly from the P9 computer on her lap and looked at him. “They have activated one of the P9s. The wife of Koppentotz Aviel is on it right now.” She answered from the chair she sat in. “The TAP camera you put on the face of the computers is sending a clear signal. Two others are with her, but she is running the computer.”

“What is she doing?” Andro asked.

“Nothing really. Just reviewing the core information.” Mari answered. “She did activate the power monitor and she is running it on the lowest setting.”

Andro nodded his head. “She is being mindful of the power output that they use. Good. That tells me they are being cautious and are sincere in what they doing.”

“That’s good right?” Mari asked.

Andro nodded his head. “Oh yes.” He replied. “That’s very good. Keep monitoring what she does and if any of the P1s are activated by anyone other than Laren let me know.”

Mari nodded her head. “Got it.”

“What about Alpha Nine?” Murano asked as he came up beside Andro.

“He’s keeping the station’s core at six percent power output father.” Mari told him. “Just enough to power the rooms they are in and life support.”

Andro looked at Murano. “Can the Scourge detect that?” He asked.

Murano shook his head. “Very unlikely. Shara was a Mage warrior and they did not delve into the technical aspects of ships. She did not have the practical knowledge to improve Scourge sensors. That was one of their biggest weaknesses. They may have improved them somewhat based on what Dytin relayed to us, but not enough to detect that station powering up. As long as we keep it under fifty percent, we should be safe. That is enough power to open the cache and begin extracting the weapons and equipment.”

“So far, so good yes?” Andro asked with a smile.

Murano met his eyes. “So far.” Murano said with a much more stern tone of voice.

Andro’s eyes glittered in the light. “Spoilsport.” He told him as he turned and headed for the cockpit. Andro moved through the smallish kitchen area and saw Iama securing whatever she could with Fedor assisting her. She wore a full set of the Mark Six Armorpoly Body Armor and a KM12 in a holster on her right thigh. While quite fearless, Iama had no formal training in combat operations and even though she had taken life to defend herself before, Nara had taken it upon herself to start giving her lessons with Fedor’s help. Iama turned out to be a quick learner with Fedor assisting her within their Etheric bond and she had volunteered to secure the ramp and hatchways of the PREMONITION while they were on the station.

Andro cut through the small QCR room and entered the cockpit area, taking the four steps into the upper portion in one short lunge. Then he was looking out the expanse of the cockpit view window and staring at the massive station in the distance. He reached out and squeezed Meka’s shoulder as he passed her station and she nodded quickly, her tail twitching behind her in a relaxed manner. Andro moved up between the two pilot seats and knelt down, both Sadi and Ne’Veha turning their heads to look at him.

“Status?” He asked.

“We got here quicker than we thought.” Sadi answered. “Armen says the station has drifted half a light year since it was abandoned by the Scourge.”

“How long?”

“If we maintain our current speed?” Sadi asked. “Forty-two minutes.”

“How long have they been there now?” He asked.

“Call it ninety minutes.” Ne’Veha answered now.

Andro nodded his head. “Long enough to get settle and put the new armor on.” Andro turned his head back to look at Kameka. “Meka... did the individual armor sets tagged for essential personnel come online?”

Kameka reached up over her head and flipped a toggle switch on her console. The screen to her right lit up with the bio signs of nine different individuals. “Affirmative.” She told him meeting his eyes. “All of them are reading normal Darastrixi life signs based on the data Sarlana gave to us. Should I cross route it to Eliani’s P9?”

Andro nodded his head. “Yes, please. She learns better on the fly anyway.” He told her. Andro turned back to look at the station in the distance, tossing ideas in his head. His right brow furrowed slightly and Sadi smiled at this.

“What are you thinking our love?” She asked him.

Andro looked at her. “What makes you think I am thinking about anything?” He asked her with a smile. Ne'Veha chuckled now. “Because we have seen that look before.” She said. “You are scheming in that demented mind of yours.”

“Demented?” Andro spoke with a fake look of hurt. “I thought you liked my demented side Sirsangai. You didn't seem to mind when I was licking...”

Ne'Veha's eyes grew wide under her helmet. “Stop!” She exclaimed.

Sadi laughed at this. “You did urge him on quite strongly SirsanGai.” She said.

Ne'Veha looked at her. “I seem to recall someone sticking their tongue down my throat because she could not keep from screaming while Saradasaar was bathing a certain part of her anatomy with his exquisitely talented tongue.” Ne'Veha told her smugly.

Sadi blushed under her own helmet. “Oh... that.” She said. “I couldn't help it. I was... I was weak.”

“Weak?” Ne'Veha gasped. “Sadi you are always weak!”

“Excuse me...” Kameka spoke from behind them. “If you don't mind, I'd like to be able to concentrate on my work here and not fantasize about what I will have Daio do to me. If you don't mind of course.”

Sadi and Ne'Veha looked at each other and began to laugh like little girls. Andro looked back and forth between them before leaning forward. “If all goes well, I will happily lick all of you in a very demented fashion once this is done.”

They looked at him with glittering jungle green and dark brown eyes. “We will hold you to that Saradasaar.” Sadi told him.

Andro smiled as he reached up and tapped his jaw activating his implant. “Deni. Murano. Cowen. Prep for insertion, we're going in now!” He ordered before looking at Sadi who had wide green eyes now.

“Andro we...” Sadi began.

“Take us in KertaGai.” He said. “Burst Armen and let him know. Early bird gets the worm you know.”

Andro was turning and heading into the rear before Sadi could respond and she shook her head.

“Carians, we will never be able to predict what he will do.” Sadi exclaimed.

“Early bird gets the worm?” Kameka asked. “What does this mean?”

Ne'Veha turned in her seat and looked at her. “It means we are about to jump into the sibfla.” She explained.

Kameka didn't say anything for a few seconds and then nodded her head. “Ah... I understand now.” She said. “This is a simple extraction however.” She added. “We should not have to deal with any shit.”

Sadi chortled as her hands began to move over her consoles. “You are hanging with us now Meka. Nothing we do is ever easy and it almost never goes according to plan.”

Ne'Veha shook her head as she too began to adjust her controls. “Carians ain't that the truth.” She commented.

Sadi lifted her head and looked out the view window to her left. “Talon One to Talon Two. Head's up Normya, we're going in now!”

“Understood.” Normya's voice was calm as she answered. “Andro got a bug up his mida didn't he?” She spoke.

Sadi chuckled lightly. “You could say that.” She answered.

“Patience was never one of his virtues our mothers always said.” Normya commented. “On your nine o'clock like glue. Tir'ut will take up overwatch in the overhead turret when we follow you into the bay.”

Sadi nodded her head. “Then here we go.” She stated.

DARASTRIXI IKLISS-Class Cruiser

“...Did they disable your ships?” Issver asked with a stunned expression.

Darrod shook his head. “It does not matter now sir.” He spoke. “What matters now is finding them. I need access to the Restricted Star Charts of this sector sir.”

Issver looked at him with wide eyes now. “Why? For what purpose?” He demanded.

“Inidra Dytin obviously knows where he is going.” Darrod spoke. “I must as well. We are in Disise space sir. Our normal charts indicate there is nothing out here in this sector of space! Nothing. If that is so, why would he be out here? As Commander of our military he would have access to the restricted charts for former Pralor space. Now I need that access.”

“Major Darrod, there is nothing out there!” Issver protested. “The General is simply running as far away as he can.”

“Sir! How badly does the Sulevfu Woieuwr want them returned?” Darrod snapped. “I have three ships full of crewmen willing to do their duty but you are risking us for nothing if you do not allow us to do our job.”

Issver thought about that for a long moment and then finally nodded his head. “Very well Major.” He spoke as his hands typed on a console in front of him. “I am sending the restricted charts to your ship now.”

Darrod glanced over to his Second Officer and saw him nod. He turned back to Issver. “Thank you sir.” He said. “I have another question however.”

Issver looked at him. “Yes.”

“Why would the Commander of our military abandon everything he has trained and fought for through the years because of one Maiden female that the Disise want?” Darrod asked. “Who is she?”

Issver shrugged his shoulders. “I don’t really know. She is on the list to be part of our Attaché Program with the Disise. Two of their Disise Ioth Kilnsiri appeared before us this morning demanding we turn her over. Apparently her mother and father did not want her to become a member of this program and they hid her with the Livaiji Sulevfu. That is all the information I have at this time.”

Darrod stared at the man for a long moment and then rose to his feet. “Thank you sir.” He spoke. “I will contact you again when we have them.” Darrod motioned curtly with his hand and the transmission ended abruptly. He turned to his Second Officer as the man worked the controls of his computer station. “Inelor?” He asked.

“Overlaying the charts now.” He replied as he touched one last button and they looked up towards the area in front of them as the holographic chart rose from the podium top. “There are no habitable planets within a hundred light year range.” He answered. “It’s just a large space field out here. Two fields of scattered ship debris, one medium sized asteroid belt, but not much else.”

Darrod shook his head. “He had to be close to his objective or else he would not have sent his other ships away.” He said to no one in particular. “Did we track them?”

Inelor nodded his head. “Their jump took them across the border here.” He said pointing with his finger. “Once they jumped, it’s anyone guess where they ended up.”

Darrod lifted his own hand and moved it through the holographic stars. “This area of space is somewhere we have never been before Inelor my friend. You don’t make a blind jump into unknown space.”

Inelor looked at him. “No, you don’t.” He looked at Darrod. “You think they knew where they were going?” He asked.

Darrod nodded his head. “Just as I believe Dytin knows where he is going. He has never run from anything in his life and he most certainly is not running now. He knows exactly where he is going as I said. The Sulevfu Woieuwr is hiding something from us. They are not telling us something and this is the reason the Disise want this female.” His eyes narrowed and he lifted his finger to point at an obscure position of light. “What is this?” He asked. “All the way out here on the edge of Disise space.”

Inelor typed on his computer console. “A Class Five Pralor Science Station.” He replied. “It’s been abandoned since the Pralor people were wiped out. Over forty thousand years now. This is not on our normal star charts sir.”

“It’s Pralor manufactured so I’m not surprised. The Restricted Star charts that the Sulevfu Woieuwr keep are from before the Disise wiped out the Pralor people. We were not allowed to keep any reference of them in any way so we made these. Only the most senior officers even know they exist. The Disise certainly do not. The station is a Class Five too.” Darrod spoke softly. “One of their big ones.”

Inelor nodded his head. “Yes.”

“Why would he be going to a Pralor Station that has been abandoned for over forty thousand years?” Darrod asked softly.

Inelor looked at him. “You believe this is where he went?”

Darrod nodded his head. “Yes.”

“How can you be certain sir?” Inelor asked him now.

“I’m not... but Inidra Dytin does not think conventionally Inelor.” Darrod said. “All of our ships have changed their Command Codes?”

Inelor nodded his head. “Yes. He won’t be able to do that again.”

Darrod nodded his head. “Set a course for this station. When we will be in sensor range?”

“If we move at maximum speed, three hours.” Inelor answered.

“Make it so Inelor.” Darrod told him. “We need to catch him. I need to know why our Military Leader and the man I have looked up to all of my life is risking everything that he is for some Maiden female.”

“Understood sir.” Inelor told him.

ECHO QUADRANT

HADOR

PRALOR DESIGNATION MOON 739

“...Lied to us!” Konlar snapped angrily at the holo transmission he stood in front of.

“I told you what you needed to know Konlar!” Lorendo barked right back at him from his home on Artaaya.

“Two days it takes you to return my message?” Konlar snarled at him. “You lied to me Lorendo! You told me there were no Alphas left alive! Why is it that I spoke with two of them? A male and a woman! They had both been turned, that much I could tell, but they were turned by Alphas and that makes them Alphas! She said she was a Queen. That her mate was a King! Is this true?”

Lorendo waved his hand dismissively. “They are not from this quadrant of space! They are from the Alpha quadrant and they are trouble! They are violent and barbaric and murdered dozens of my men when we first encountered them!”

“The Alpha quadrant?” Konlar gasped aloud. He saw Lirana begin to rise out of the chair she was sitting in and he shook his head quickly.

“When did you see them?” Lorendo asked now.

“I told you in my message.” Konlar answered him. “They took the two women you had us watching from Honelze more than two days ago now. The she elf said they were going to Ventori.”

“Green eyes or brown?” Lorendo asked.

“What? Green, why?” Konlar hissed.

Lorendo shook his head. “Ventori? Why would she take them to Ventori? And what were they doing on Honelze?” He spoke to himself not caring that Konlar heard him. Lorendo’s eyes grew wide. “He is on Ventori! He must have discovered who they are and he had them taken from Honelze to Ventori! If he is there then he... he will discover what happened there. He will have people on Honelze preparing.”

Konlar looked confused. “What happen there?” He asked. “What do you mean? The Svorag laid waste to the planet.”

Lorendo ignored him as Konlar saw him typing on a computer that he could not see. “I need leverage against Delnash.” He spoke softly. “I need him to back off until I have completed what I am doing.”

“What are you speaking of?” Konlar barked now as Lorendo ignored him.

Lorendo looked up. “I have a new mission for you.” He stated.

Konlar shook his head. “No!” He stated flatly. “We will do nothing for you any longer until you tell me what is going on!”

Lorendo’s eyes narrowed and he leaned forward. “I own you Konlar!” He snarled at him viciously. “I own those with you! I am the one who took you off Ventori all those years ago! I am the one who gave you a superior life and the training to make it even better. I am the one who gave you that ship! You will do what I say!”

“You do not own me or my people!” Konlar growled back at him.

“One word from me and everything you have will come crumbling down Konlar!” Lorendo continued. “I need only give the order, and the Pralor military will descend upon you in droves. They will take your ship and everything you have derived from Pralor technology! They will imprison all of you and take your children from you. I will see to that! Do not test me fool!”

“Forn nubous ronnus!” Konlar spat savagely.

“Do I have your attention Konlar?” Lorendo snarled. “You will do my bidding boy, or I will see to it that everything your father started and that you have gained in the last ten thousand years will cease to exist! Do you understand what I am saying?!”

Konlar stared at the transmission trembling in anger but knowing that he was right. “Tell me what you want.” He growled in a low voice.

“I have it on good information that Delnash’s daughter Mari is right now with Delnash’s brother Murano. What they are doing I don’t know, but they will be returning to Ventori or Honelze soon.” Lorendo told them. “When she does I want you to take her. Take her and kill Murano.”

Konlar shifted on his booted feet. “How am I supposed to do that?” He barked. “They are Alpha wolves. The most powerful of our kind. We cannot meet them head to head!”

“Mari and Murano are not part of your disgusting species!” Lorendo snarled. “They are Pralors.”

Konlar looked at him with wide eyes. “You want me to kill a Pralor and kidnap another?” He gasped. “Are you mad? For what purpose?”

“I need time and you will buy me that time.” Lorendo snapped. “Killing his brother and taking his daughter will send Delnash into a fit. He will forget everything else and devote all his time and efforts into finding her.”

“What am I supposed to do with her?” Konlar barked.

“I don’t care!” Lorendo growled back at him. “Give her to one of your kind as a gift! Or better yet, give her too many! Turn her into one of your kind if you wish and force her to birth another of your disgusting species. Isn’t that how it works? Impregnate one of them and they are bound to you for all time? I don’t care what you do with her Konlar, just take her and kill Murano!”

Konlar glared at the screen. “If we do this... if we do this then you must release your hold on us and let us go about our way! This was our deal! You will honor that deal or by all I hold sacred I will find you and tear out your throat!”

“We will talk about your debt to me when you have completed the tasks I have given you Konlar.” Lorendo told him. “Not before.”

Konlar stared at his image for a long moment, his blood burning in hate and anger. “It will be done.” He said finally.

Lorendo nodded his head. “Good.” He spoke. “Contact me when you have executed this task and have her. Not before.”

Konlar was about to say something else when Lorendo cut off the transmission from his end and left Konlar standing there silently. Lirana rose to her feet now and moved up beside her husband. She pressed her body to his, feeling the tension and anger flowing through him, but also how his body reacted to her touch. After a moment he looked into her dark eyes and leaned forward to touch his forehead to hers as his arm went around her waist and he drew her tighter.

“I have failed us Lirana.” He said softly.

Lirana shook her head instantly. “No. You have done what is needed to keep what we have built.” She told him.

Konlar looked at her intently. “He is lying to us.” He said. “He is lying to us and there is much he is not telling us.”

“What does he mean when he says he needs time?” Lirana asked. “Do you know? Time for what?”

Konlar shook his head. “No, but whatever he speaks of cannot be good. He is trying to hide something, I can sense it in his words. He is concerned and these new Alphas, he fears them.”

“Yes, but why?” Lirana asked softly. “His words only seem to confirm what the she elf told us huor.” (Husband)

Konlar nodded his head. “A Union of Lycavorians from the Alpha Quadrant. How many I wonder? And with Alpha wolves among them. Countless Alphas if what she implied is true.” Konlar stepped away from her, his thoughts all over the place. “What does it have to do with our people on Ventori? We were able to save a few hundred but I thought the Tasmor had taken all of the remaining survivors from the world after the Svorag attacked.”

Lirana looked at him. “Do you think... could he have had something to do with what happen there huor?” She asked. “He has never cared for our people Konlar. Even when your father led us, he always treated us as animals that were beneath him.”

Konlar moved to the large window that overlooked the lush forest moon they were on now. They had named it Hador when they first arrived. Honor in the Lycavorian language. It was meant to inspire them and help keep them anchored in their history. Their history stated that the Alpha Wolves among them had died out or disappeared in the first few thousand years on Ventori. No one really knows what happened to them. Apparently their history was wrong if there were now Alphas in the Quadrant now. Regardless of where they had come from. When his father was approached and given this opportunity by Lorendo all those years ago he had jumped at the chance. There had been many who did not agree with how the Lycavorians on Ventori were progressing and wanted change that the Justice’s did not want. Those are the ones who followed his father off Ventori when Lorendo had given them the opportunity. They had learned quickly that it was for his own nefarious desires, but the men and women who had followed his father had their own agenda as well, and they were not as stupid as Lorendo had always thought them to be. Konlar’s eyes swept over what they had built since then. Children filled the dirt paths below, playing in the forests all around them with happiness and freedom. The natural predators of Hador remained far away from their compound, learning very quickly that they were no match for those behind the walls of the compound. They had far outgrown the ability of the compound to support all of their people and his father had taken actions behind Lorendo’s back to insure that what they had continued and grew.

Lirana moved up beside him now and slid her arm around his waist. Konlar was far older than her seven hundred and nineteen years, nearly three thousand years older, but he had loved her breathlessly from the day he had claimed her as his wife and mate. Their four children played in the dirt paths below them and Lirana hoped that there were many more children in their future.

“What thoughts fill your head my husband and mate?” Lirana asked him softly as she nuzzled his cheek and side of his neck.

“It is time to shift everyone to Vesst.” The voice spoke from behind them.

Konlar and Lirana turned to look at the much older man who now stood in front of the communications disc. That he was part Pralor was obvious to any wolf who could smell him, but his scent also told them that he had been turned for far longer than many of them had been alive.

“Edrao?” Konlar spoke.

“Lorendo is frightened.” The man spoke as he moved up closer to them. “I have never seen him frightened before. I believe things may have exploded out of his control far more than we know.”

“The Svorag?” Konlar asked.

Edrao nodded his head as he moved to the window and looked out over the compound. “They are a large part of it yes, but something else has happened as well, and I believe it has to do with these Alphas that have arrived. You are correct that he fears them, but his disdain for our people has always overridden that fear. Something about these new Alphas, about who they are, this has suddenly become very important to him. And that is not like Lorendo.”

“These two women he has had us watching these last years?” Konlar asked.

“They are part of it, yes.” Edrao spoke. “I don’t yet know how, but things have become more urgent now. Over the past few months he has become more urgent. And it began when these new Alphas appeared in the Echo Quadrant. I took it upon myself to reach out to some old friends on Artaaya who know of us...” He held up his hand when he saw Konlar’s eyes go wide and he opened his mouth to speak. “Stay your words Konlar, for I know what you will say. There are only two of them and they are turned just as I am. Turned by wolves long before you were ever born. They are committed to us and volunteered to return to Artaaya at your father’s request.”

“You have had people on Artaaya all of these years and never told anyone?” Lirana gasped.

“Your father tasked me with insuring the survival of our people.” Edrao told them looking directly at Konlar. “And those Pralors like myself who have been turned, consider ourselves Lycavorian Konlar. Totally.”

Konlar nodded his head. “I have never doubted this.” He spoke evenly.

Edrao nodded his head. "Good." He said. "It was easy to walk among them and not have them discover us. All we had to do was be mindful of using our wolf skills. Several months ago they sent me a coded message about something that happened on the planet Onterom. It had to do with Delnash and it also concerned Lorendo and these new Alphas and Pralor Praetorian warriors of our history."

"Praetorians?" Lirana spoke with wide eyes. "The ones who fought the Scourge?"

Edrao nodded his head. "There is a connection somehow. I have not spoken to them since their message and they have sent nothing further since." He saw the looks on their faces and shook his head. "This is not unusual for them so do not worry. Our biggest concern now is what Lorendo has asked of you now. Taking Delnash's daughter? Killing his brother? He is crazed to ask such a thing of you. This tells me that whatever is happening outside of what we know is very bad. Asking you to do such a thing would expose our existence to the Pralor people and that is something that he has never wanted before. He is becoming desperate and if we are not careful we will be caught up in whatever he has lost control of."

Konlar's eyes narrowed. "The cure facility in orbit?" He asked.

Edrao met his eyes. "I have questioned this for many years given what he has told you, but his actions now are beginning to make me believe this is not a facility that is trying to find a cure for the Svorag virus at all."

Lirana's dark eyes grew wide. "You think he is involved with them?" She gasped.

Edrao shrugged his shoulders. "I do not know, and based on his erratic behavior these last years, I would not want to guess." He answered. "What I do believe is that we need to move everyone to Vesst as soon as possible. It is the only place they will be safe from the storm I believe is coming."

"Those on the station will know the moment we launch the transports we have built in secret." Konlar said shaking his head. "They will notify Lorendo immediately and kill those of our people who they are holding on that station."

Edrao nodded his head. "That is why we need to board that station, find out what it is they are really doing, and then move all of our people to Vesst. It is the only place they will be safe from Lorendo."

"We need to put people on Ventori and discover what is happening there as well." Konlar said. "If there are survivors on Ventori that we did not know of, it should be easy for them to blend in. Whoever this King is, Lorendo said he must be on Ventori. And that is where the she elf Queen said they were going with the two Pralor women."

Edrao nodded his head. "There is far more going on that we are not aware of Konlar my boy." He said. "And now I believe we need to start acting and discover what it is. If we do not, we could lose everything."

Lirana nodded her head in agreement. "I will select a small team to move to Ventori and act as survivors." She spoke. "I will lead them."

"Lirana no!" Konlar protested.

Lirana smiled at the concern in his voice and she pressed closer to him lovingly. He pulled her close and nuzzled her cheek and throat causing her to gasp in delight. He always did have a way with her, even before they became mated. "I have done this before husband." She said finally. "I will discover what is happening there."

Edrao nodded his head. "She is the most experienced in this action Konlar." He told him. "It is a wise move."

"You will do nothing out of the ordinary." Konlar told her. "Get in, find out what is happening and then get out."

Lirana nodded her head with a smile. "I know my husband. You have the hard part. Discovering what is happening on that station is going to be infinitely harder to accomplish."

Edrao shook his head. "Not as much as you might think Lirana." He stated. "Allow me to explain."

PRALOR SCIENCE STATION 489

Laren sat between Ladur's forelegs, her back against his broad chest and her knees drawn up to her chest with her arms wrapped around her shins. Her eyes were closed and she swayed slightly back and forth between Ladur's front legs. Robati Ti'shara knew immediately what was happening and she had waited for several minutes before moving over beside her daughter and settling to the deck slowly beside her. This was one of the times that the molecular differences in her DNA caused her physical pain and the only way she had been able to suppress it through the years was to join with Ladur in this fashion and draw from his power and resonance. No one dared approach them through the years when they were like this, no one but Robati. As always Ladur shifted his front legs from the protectiveness of Laren to allow Robati to sit beside her.

"Laren my child?" She spoke softly as she laid her hand upon Laren's knee.

Laren's eyes opened slowly and she looked at her mother, a small smile touching her lips. "It has passed mother." She said softly.

Robati looked around quickly and then back to her. "The episodes are becoming more frequent child." She said.

Laren nodded her head. "As Androcles, Dorian, Elynth and Ryner grow closer yes." She told her. "They are... they are so much more powerful than I mother. Especially Androcles and Elynth. They are like a supernova when together within the Etheric realm. Sometimes I wonder how..."

Robati gripped her hands tighter. "Speak to me daughter." Robati said. "You have never held anything back from me child. Do not start now."

Laren looked at her mother. "When I feel them within... mother I am... I am so weak when compared to them." She said softly. "Why would Dadrien choose me?"

Robati reached up and brushed some of her daughter's raven black hair from her face. "He chose you for a reason my daughter. Your father and I have believed this from the moment you broke free of your shell and entered this world screeching louder than all of your brothers combined."

Laren's eyes grew wide. "Mother!" She exclaimed.

Robati smiled at her as Laren inched closer to her on the deck. "No one can guess as to why Dadrien chose you my daughter. Or Ladur." She said softly. "Nor why he chose Androcles and Dorian, or Elynth and Ryner. Only time will answer that question."

"I can feel the love they have for me mother." Laren said wistfully. "For Ladur. And not just Androcles and Dorian. All of their brothers and sisters. They don't even know us but yet they love us as if we have been part of their lives since Ladur and I were birthed."

"Perhaps you have." Robati told her seeing Laren's head turn fully to gaze at her.

"What do you mean?" Laren asked.

"This..." Robati waved her hand all around them. "All this is not happening by chance Laren. It is being guided by the gods for a greater purpose. There is a reason Dadrien chose you. All of you. Once you are together, that reason will become known over time." Robati brushed her fingers across her face. "And this pain within you, once your sepa dask Anja has fixed that, you will never have to endure that again for you will be complete."

"I am frightened of what comes mother." Laren spoke softly. "I am frightened of what could happen, what will happen."

"And you think you are alone?" Robati asked her.

"Androcles and Dorian are Lycavorian Spartans mother." Laren said with a smile. "Fear is not something that they feel."

Robati smiled and shook her head. "Oh my beautiful Laren." She said gently. "I have read everything I could find on Lycavorians once you revealed to your father and I who they were. I have just finished with the reports that Dalis was able to secure for us before we left. They are Lycavorian Spartans yes, and their history is storied and long, but do not mistake their strength and bravery as having no fear child. They know fear well, probably better than most, but they have learned to harness that fear. To use it so that it does not incapacitate them. They use that fear to make them stronger."

"I hope I become like them." Laren said.

Robati wrapped her arms around Laren's shoulders and almost broke into tears. "My child, you are so much stronger than you know. You have endured so much in so short a time." She said using her hands to caress Laren's feather soft hair. "You and Ladur both. There are times when your father and I weep because we cannot take this burden from you."

“We have accepted this dask Robati.” Ladur spoke now, his deep voice warm and sincere in its tone. “Sometimes however, sometimes it is much to bear without being able to share it with them.”

Robati nodded her head and lifted one hand to stroke the underside of Ladur’s muzzle. “I know Ladur. But soon that will change and you will never be alone in your souls again.”

Ladur nodded. “Yes, this is true.” He stated. “We...”

Robati sat back quickly as Laren’s head came up like a shot and she was staring at the ceiling above them. Robati glanced up at where she was looking and then back to Laren. “Laren my child, what is it?”

Laren scrambled to her feet now, this action drawing the attention of everyone else in the room. Ladur rose as well, his head now focused at the ceiling above them as he and Laren moved into the main part of the briefing room. Dytin, who had been talking with Matum and several other Sand Strider soldiers rose to his feet now as well.

“Laren?” He questioned her. “Laren... what is wrong?”

Laren’s head dropped to look at him and Dytin gasped when he saw her eyes. The different colored blue eyes were nearly glowing in the dimness of the briefing room, giving off an eerie bluish color throughout the entire pupil area of her eyes.

“They are here!” Laren gasped in delight, feeling her whole body become energized and full of life. “Androcles and Dorian are here!”

PRALOR SCIENCE STATION 489

LANDING BAY 19

SEVEN DECKS ABOVE LANDING BAY 12

The landing bay was once more silent as the PREMONITION’S engines spun down and were quiet. The ramp was down, Androcles kneeling at one corner with Murano to his right, Dorian on the other corner with Jomann to his left. Four sets of eyes swept the interior of the dark landing bay carefully, waiting for the time to move forward. As if on cue, powerful lights began to come on all over the bay, illuminating the massive interior slowly so that no one lost their night vision. Andro lowered his 190A5, the silenced barrel dropping to point at the deck as his ears picked up what he was waiting for. The chirps and beeps of the Worker Drones.

Andro smiled and rose to his feet, moving several meters away from the ramp with Murano while the others waited and they squatted down as Alpha Nine and Alpha Thirteen darted right up to them.

Andro listened to Alpha Nine, who was doing all the chattering, and then turned to Murano. “Murano, Alpha Thirteen will lead you to the engine core. Apparently the Scourge left lots of little gifts for anyone who happened to come here. They have cleared a single path for you and your team. Alpha Nine will take us to Bay 12 through a similar cleared path. That’s all they had time for.”

Murano nodded his head. “I told you to expect this Androcles. Sending the drones ahead was an excellent decision.” He said calmly looking around. “A single path is all we will need however. Insure that no one wanders once you secure Bay 12. I will contact you when we have safeguarded the engine room and begun to breach the Cache.” Murano put his hand on Andro's shoulders. “Trust all of your instincts now Androcles. Wolf, Praetorian and Dahakoan. As I believe your father would say, we are hanging out here pretty far, and we cannot afford to miss anything.”

Androcles nodded his head. “Understood.”

Murano nodded knowing he did not have to belabor the point. He turned back to the ramp. “Engineering Team with me!” He rasped out the command. “We follow the drone!”

No other commands were needed as Drone thirteen turned and began to scurry off with Murano right on his heels. Andro watched as Ridor and Kalis broke quickly from the ramp with everyone moving behind them as they followed Murano, Daio bringing up the rear. Andro cut his eyes just as Dorian and Jomann moved up to his position, followed quickly by Denali, Lisisa, Eliani, Sehri, Sheva, Onera and Arduri. All of them dropped to one knee behind him as Elynth and Ryner came up on their sides, Jeth, Tharua and Soren just behind them. Behind them Andro could see Sadi leading Ne'Veha and the others for the Interior Landing Bay Command station on the upper floor, while Caydren and Cinol moved into defensive positions on either side of the PREMONITION'S ramp. Iama would be just at the top of the ramp, always within eye contact of either Caydren or Cinol. Normya's STRIKER was down a hundred meters from where they sat and Andro could just detect Tir'ut climbing into the large sniper turret on top while his sister would monitor all the sensor data that they were receiving from Armen on SPARTA'S WRATH. Andro felt nothing but pride swell in his chest. Their insertion had gone perfectly and everyone was all business now, for they all knew the danger level was off the charts and they needed to be at the top of their game.

Andro looked at those behind him. "Alpha Nine has cleared a path through leftover nasties." He told them. "We follow him down to Bay 12 and no sight-seeing. I got point with Elynth; Jomann you and Soren bring up the rear. Everyone stay frosty, we don't know what could happen from here on out."

Andro saw everyone nod and he turned back to Alpha Nine. "Alpha Nine, you are it my little friend. Lead us out."

The Worker Drone beeped almost happily, turned on its six spider like legs and began to scurry across the deck towards what appeared to be a large lift of some sort.

No one hesitated and they followed Androcles as he took off after the Drone.

"Laren, are you sure?" Dytin gasped aloud as he squeezed her arms gently.

Laren nodded her head. "Yes. I can feel them on the station." She told him.

"They were not supposed to arrive for hours Inidra!" Matum hissed. "They could not possibly be here already."

"Laren?" Dytin prodded her.

Laren shook her head. "It is them but they are not trying to contact me." She spoke. "And I feel another group as well."

"Another group?" Dytin asked. "Where?"

Laren looked at him. "They are not moving with Andro and Dorian. They are moving in a different direction. They are above us, that much we are certain of. Ladur and I..."

Do not be alarmed arande. Andro's warm voice broke into her and Ladur's minds and they felt happiness flood through them. The others you sense are with us. They have a mission of their own. We are coming down to you Laren. Insure no one leaves the Landing Bay you are in, the Scourge lefts traps all over and they have not been cleared.

Laren looked at Dytin as she gripped his arms tighter. "They are coming to us!" She told him. "Andro says that the others Ladur and I sense are on another mission but we are not to leave the Landing Bay. There are traps all over and they have not been cleared."

"Traps?" Aviel hissed now. "What kind of traps?"

Ladur turned his massive head and looked at him. "Apparently the Scourge left measures in place on the station when they abandoned it Koppentotz Aviel. In case others tried to board it. Andro and Dorian sent two Pralor Worker Drones ahead of them to the station but they have not managed to clear all of these traps." Ladur explained to him.

"General we knew none of this!" Matum protested. "How do we know this information is accurate?"

Dytin looked at him. "Faith Matum my boy. Faith." He answered as he held Laren's hands within his. "But we will not be idle either. Matum, deploy our Sand Striders into a defensive perimeter around the entrance to these rooms. Prepare for an influx of personnel."

Matum nodded his head. "Yes General!" He barked and turned towards the troops who had risen to their feet.

Dytin turned back to Laren and looked at her intently. "You can talk to him?" He asked.

Laren nodded her head with a smile. "Yes!" She spoke excitedly. "He told me... he told me to tell you the defensive perimeter is not necessary, but it is prudent."

Dytin couldn't help but smile. "How soon before they get here?" he asked.

Laren didn't answer right away but then she looked at him. "He says they are following the Drone who cleared the path. They landed in another ship Bay seven decks above us and are making their way down to us now. A few minutes at most he hopes."

Dytin nodded as Robati came up beside Laren and took her in her arms. He turned to look at Matum who was directing their Sand Striders into defensive positions just outside the large double doors into the briefing room. “Matum!”

“Inidra.” He replied turning back to him instantly.

“A few minutes Matum!” He barked. “Defensive action only Major. We do not want to fire upon the Dahakoan please. They would not like that welcome.”

Matum Dariel nodded his head, his own heart racing at the prospect of meeting the only remaining Doraanar alive, and one who had known his beloved grandparents. Grandparents whose memory he had come to worship through the years because of their actions and their deeds.

“Understood General.”

SPARTA'S WRATH

-Colonel Taich? - Armen called from his command chair.

The Lycavorian Executive Officer turned from his spot behind the Tactical officer. “Two million kilometers and holding our position.” He spoke. “Sensors are detecting only one other ship in the area and it matches the configuration of a Darastrixi Dreadnought.”

-Very well. We will hold position here until Murano advises us they have entered the cache- Armen spoke.

“Armen, may I recommend we target batteries eleven through nineteen on the Darastrixi ship.” Taich Neulan said.

Armen looked at the man he had selected as his First officer. -Purpose? - He asked.

“With all respect to the Darastrixi Armen, we are out here with no back up.” Taich told him. “If this goes to sibfla, I'd rather we get the first hits in.”

Armen rose from his chair to his full seven foot plus height and looked at him. His neural networked processed what Taich had just proposed and Armen determined that this thought was a reaction he would not have had. He had dismissed the Darastrixi ship as a threat to their ship but had not considered the implications if the Darastrixi ship had actually been commandeered and was playing friendly. This is something that Armen learned at this very moment as was the purpose of his neural network. He was a learning Avatar and he found he was learning new things every day from his very own crew. This made his many circuits very happy. While he had never been meant to take command of this ship, and with a Pralor crew he probably never would have, but this was not a Pralor crew completely. They were something different. And they were teaching him as well as allowing him to lead. His answer was almost instantaneous as he processed what Taich had told him.

Armen nodded his head to Taich. -By all means Colonel. Make it so. You do not need my permission to insure our ship and crew remains undamaged-

Taich smiled and turned back to his station and began to issue the orders. Armen touched the arm of his chair activating the COM unit there. He could have just as easily used the internal COM that was built into his systems, but he wanted to act as normal as possible and his programming told him this was one way to do that and allow the crew to see that he was not just a machine.

-Bridge to Medical Bay. Lady Serale your status? –

“We are ready for whatever happens Armen.” Serale Leonidas’ voice came over the speakers. “Cvea and I have the main Med Bay ready and three of our portable clinics set up in the areas closest to the teleporters and landing bays.”

-Your plan should we have incoming injuries? –

“All wounded will be teleported directly to the clinics if possible.” Serale answered. “Cvea will assess them there and if needed we can use the internal ship teleporters to move them to the main Med Bay. All major trauma comes here, minor gets treated at the clinics. That is how Eliani wanted it set up.”

-Understood- Armen answered. –Should we receive wounded, internal teleporters will be placed at your discretion. However, all Cargo Teleporters will be directed by the crews assigned to receive our cargo. One of our priorities is getting the weapons systems to this ship-

“We shouldn’t need them Armen but I understand. We will make due.” Serale answered him.

Armen nodded his head and looked around. –Now we wait- He stated.

LANDING BAY 12

It had drummed within them their entire lives.

Who were they? What were they? Why were they so very different?

A constant pounding within their psyche; a hammering of knowledge not yet unleashed. At times it had been so very difficult to find their balance, but Andro and Elynth had learned how to do this very thing through the years and it was something that they passed on to Dorian and Ryner within hours of discovering that they were like them.

Who were they? What were they?

Though Dorian Leonidas was technically just over a year old, he bore the memories of his father, mother and grandfathers before him just as his brother Androcles did. Almost four lifetimes of memories. These same questions had coursed through him even stronger because of his accelerated birth and without Andro and Elynth to help them, he was certain that they would have driven him and Ryner insane. One of those questions was answered when they discovered their Praetorian history and now the answer too many of those remaining questions stood in front of them.

At least many of the answers.

They had entered Landing Bay 12 in typical commando fashion, spreading out from the door and covering each other as they half sprinted across the expanse of the massive bay. They were making for the Darastrixi transport when Andro spied her out of the corner of his eye and came up short, Dorian, Elynth and Ryner following only a split second later. They stood in the doorway of the briefing room, a defensive half perimeter of Darastrixi soldiers in front of them, but there was no mistaking who they were.

That just was not possible.

Andro stared at her for a long moment and finally took a tentative step towards where they stood, Dorian appearing beside him with Elynth and Ryner. He felt it once more screaming out within him right now. The same pull he had felt as a small boy, the same echo that Elynth had felt as an adolescent dragon. The same beautiful peace that they had discovered together deep within their minds in a place that they shared with no one else. This movement caught the attention of Jomann first and he brought the others up short and turned back to watch, Eliani coming up beside him as Deni and the others crowded around them.

“Laren? Ladur?” Andro’s voice was nothing more than a whisper, but Laren and Ladur heard it as clearly as if he had shouted it out at the top of his lungs.

Andro let his A5 drop from his hands to dangle on the quick release straps, Dorian following his movement a second later and the two brothers began to stride toward that line of Darastrixi soldiers with a single purpose, Elynth and Ryner following them a split second later. And noting would deter them. For their part, Laren and Ladur heard it shouting within them just as loudly, and without a moment's hesitation they broke forward at a dead run.

"Laren no!" Robati shouted as Laren's hand pulled away from her.

Nothing in this universe could have stopped her or Ladur and her mother's words fell on deaf ears. Matum turned and was about to step in front of her but Laren simply lifted her hand and sent him sprawling to the side, passing the line of Darastrixi Sand Striders with barely a glance.

Jomann made to move from his spot but it was Eliani's hand on his arm that stopped him and he turned to look at her. "No Jomann." She said softly. Jomann saw the look on her face and cut his eyes to Denali and Lisisa and saw it there as well. It wasn't concern or fear, but a look of great happiness and peace. Jomann knew that Eliani was nearly as close to Andro as Zarah was. He was actually much closer to his two sisters than any of his other siblings simply because of events in their lives that brought them together. Eliani because she had been born, like Androcles, in a time of strife and high emotion for their parents. Zarah because of what had happened on that mountain so long ago. Androcles loved all of his siblings as he had shown so many times through the years, but Eliani and Zarah were the closest to him in an emotional way. Jomann knew this and held himself in check, moving closer to his Anome. Eliani pressed against him with a smile on her face and tears beginning to well in her eyes. She looked up into his face. "This has been... this has been a long time coming Jomann my love." She told him. "It needs to happen now."

Robati clung to Yokra as they watched with wide eyes, Aviel holding Nahko and Dytin standing behind his troops.

For everyone in the landing bay of the abandoned Pralor Science Station it was an event that none of them would ever forget in their lifetimes. All six of them stopped, only a few feet between them. Laren's hands went to her face in uncluttered happiness as she stared at them so close to her. So tall and powerful and so utterly handsome. This was a moment she had never dreamed would happen and the tears flowed freely now and then she was launching herself into their arms. There was not a single breath of pause as Androcles and Dorian held out their arms and caught Laren between them. Her wail of unfettered delight echoed in the bay all around them as their arms pulled her body close to them. It was a sight to see really, her petite form held off the deck nearly a foot, sandwiched between the two much taller brothers, their arms wrapped around her buttocks and each other while her arms flew around their heads and their faces came together. They were too busy to notice the light blue and white flare of Etheric power that engulfed them for a few seconds, though everyone else in the bay did, their eyes going wide at this.

It was no different for Ladur as he came together with Ryner and Elynth in a near twelve ton mass of talons and wings and muscle. It was like a reunion of brothers and sisters that had not seen each other in decades with all three of them playfully nipping at each other with their jaws and the sound of their teeth snapping together echoing in the bay. Elynth and Ryner were rubbing their snouts across Ladur's neck and sides while he tried to move his head back and forth between them to do the same but could not decide who to rub first. This was a sight that had Dytin and the others standing with open mouthed shock at. Such displays of emotion from a Vrrarhoinpa of their species was almost unheard of and to see it taking place with two others of equal emotion was astonishing, not to mention the size of obsidian colored female and the Sinopia colored male.

Laren had no such indecision as she rubbed her cheeks against both Andro and Dorian, nuzzling them fiercely and loving the feel of their skin against hers and delighting in the many sensations that Androcles' goatee caused her to feel. She had never seen hair on the face of any Darastrixi let alone felt it and it was sending little shivers throughout her skin and body. She drew her head back, the tears flowing down her cheeks freely and she placed her hands on their cheeks staring at them both. Laren knew of their Spartan culture, their history, and she knew that they did not openly show emotion on very many occasions, but now she saw the single tear careening down Androcles' cheek and Dorian's eyes were incredibly moist. She could also feel the incredible surge of Etheric power filling her now, radiating from the two brothers and sweeping through her, energizing her body and mind.

"I have... I have waited so very long for this moment in time." Laren stammered, her words coming out in a raspy tone.

“No longer than Dorian and I sister.” Andro gasped softly. “He may not have joined us until recently, but it was always meant to be him and Ryner with us. Always. I see that now.”

Dorian looked at his brother as the tears finally came and he felt an immense aura of love at Andro's words, his arm tightening around his back.

“It is finally done.” The deep voice bellowed from all around them, echoing with in the bay and causing everyone to whirl around searching for that voice.

“And the six are now united as one.” The second male voice resonated from all around them, causing Andro and Dorian to lower Laren to the deck as they turned quickly, looking for the source of the voices, but remaining in physical contact. “And a new breed is born.”

“As it was always meant to be.” The first voice echoed.

Andro looked around the bay, even his keen wolf eyes unable to detect anything. “Show yourselves!” He barked out the words as his right hand closed around his glaive.

The explosion of Etheric power to the side was spectacular to say the least. The bluish white light began as a small orb like object drifting several feet off the deck and then quickly expanded and took shape as the Etheric fingers danced all around like bands of electricity. Two objects took shape actually, one a man and the other, the other was the largest dragon form any of them had ever seen before in their lives. The dark, reddish green scales were stretched over an immensely muscular body of nearly twenty-five meters long and five meters in height. The dragon rested easily on the deck, the massive wings folded along its body in peace, and the glittering white colored eyes looking directly at where Andro, Dorian and Laren stood.

“Saoi sibfla!” Dorian gasped aloud as his eyes took it in. The dragon was easily much larger than Jeth and his father, both of whom were recognized as among the three largest dragons in the Union. Only Arzoal was slightly longer but much less muscular than the father and son. This dragon dwarfed even them and caused Jeth to shift nervously on his feet as the others instinctively prepared to do battle.

The tall figure of the man moved slowly around the front of the Etheric projection of the massive dragon and Andro's eyes flew open in instant recognition. There was no mistaking the tall, powerfully built body or the wild, raven black hair. It was the eyes however, that gave it away completely for Androcles Leonidas and with his heart hammering in his chest and the voices of his wives and mates screaming out in his head about what was happening he dropped to one knee and lowered his head, unable to meet those eyes. Yellow gold wolf eyes that matched his father's in every way.

“Grand... Grandfather Sumar! Dadrien of the... of the Mountain!” He gasped aloud.

The obvious reaction among the Leonidas clan was perhaps the one thing that struck the Darastrixi most after they heard Androcles speak the names. They immediately dropped to one knee behind and around Androcles and bowed their heads in deep reverence. It was Aviel who had pulled Nahko and the others closer while Laren was embracing the young Lycavorians and now, with wide eyes of his own, Aviel Em'mor dropped to one knee as they gazed at the Etheric projections of the man and massive dragon. A dragon that could be only one individual.

“Wer Zazhuanth!” He gasped.

The Etheric image of Sumar, wolf eyes alive and almost glowing, moved closer to where Androcles knelt, Dorian and Laren next to him and his siblings spread out behind him. The Etheric projection was so powerful and clear that you could actually see the expression of his face and the edges of his mouth curl upward in a smile of genuine warmth.

“My family.” Sumar spoke softly. “You don't know how long I have waited for this day to arrive. The joy that fills me cannot be put into any words that I know.” Sumar leaned over slightly looking directly at Laren. “And you child...” He spoke watching as Laren's wide eyes rose to look at him. “You are part of that now child. Just as Androcles and Dorian and all those around you have my blood flowing through them, you do now as well. I hope you are prepared for that.” Laren had no words and her mouth opened and closed several times causing the Etheric projection of Sumar to chuckle. “Get up! All of you! My family does not bow to me!”

“All of you rise as well!” Dadrien barked as his huge head gazed upon the Darastrixi by the doors. “You are all proud Darastrixi, and you bow to no one!”

Eliani was clinging to Jomann's arm tightly, her green eyes wide in disbelief, Lisisa holding her waist as they all crowded together. Androcles could only stare at the image of his grandfather and Dadrien as questions swirled within his mind unlike at any time in his life. So many questions. He glanced at Dorian and Laren and then his siblings behind him before turning back to the image of Sumar.

"Grandfather... grandfather how is this possible?" He finally gasped.

Sumar smiled as Dadrien came up beside him and settled to the deck once more. "The how is a bit harder to explain than the why." He spoke. "Even Dadrien and I do not know all of the answers. I suspect no one does."

"What... what do you mean?" Dorian asked.

"I died that day Androcles." Sumar explained to them. "On our homeworld, I died that day fighting beside my son, your grandmother and so many others. At least I thought I did. I woke with Dadrien staring back at me. It scared the sibfla out of me to be honest." It was Eliani who burst out in the small yelp of laughter at that comment, her eyes flooded with tears and Sumar smiled even more. "You see..." He continued speaking. "I am not the reverent figure so many have come to see me as."

"I... I don't understand." Androcles spoke.

Sumar nodded his head. "And neither did we..." Sumar answered. "The universe is full of things that we cannot explain Androcles my boy, no matter how hard we try to figure them out. Dadrien and I are part of that now, and we have asked the same questions that you and Elynth, that Laren and Ladur and now Dorian and Ryner have asked. We still do not have many of the answers that we have sought together, but we do have many of the answers that you seek. We have existed now, in this form, for over forty millennia. How this came to be we do not know. I believe it has something to do with the Rift of Time among my people. The Pralor people, and what we have believed for so long. That our bodies become energy in some way and our consciousness survives in different forms. For some reason Dadrien and I took this Etheric form and time has had no real passage for us until now."

"Now?" Laren questioned as Aviel led Dytin and the other Darastrixi slowly over to where everyone was as they listened.

Sumar nodded his head. "I will get to that in time." He said. He turned and motioned with his hand to Dadrien. "First, I must... we must apologize to you Androcles. To you, Dorian, Laren, Elynth, Ladur and Ryner. To all of you."

Laren still clung to Andro's arm as she stood there, Dorian's arm around her slim waist. "Apologize?" She gasped. "But for what?"

"For what all of you have had to endure." Dadrien replied. "The pain you have had to endure not truly knowing who and what you were. The doubt you have had within yourselves and the doubt you received from others. The looks of disdain and fear from those who did not know what you were."

"It is our fault." Sumar spoke now. "All of it."

"How... how can that be?" Ladur gasped from where he sat between Elynth and Ryner just to the right of where Andro and the others stood.

"What you are Androcles. What all of you are." Sumar told them. "It is because of us."

"You speak of the Praetorian gene grandfather?" Androcles asked.

Sumar smiled and shook his head. "If only it were that simple." He said. "No... that is not what I meant. The Praetorian gene is something that I always knew would be passed down through my descendants, and through the descendants of those Praetorians who accompanied me on that journey so long ago. That would account for the tall young man behind you who is holding my granddaughter so tightly." Eliani looked up at Jomann's face with adoration as she felt him tighten his hold on her waist and straighten his posture. "No Androcles, we are speaking of the six of you. What you are now is because of us. The dragon blood that flows within you and Dorian, and the Lycavorian blood that flows within Laren, Ladur, Elynth and Ryner. That is because of us."

"But... but how?" Andro asked with wide eyes. "You are not... you do not..."

"We do not have physical form?" Sumar said. "Yes, I know. That does not mean that we cannot influence or guide. As I said, the how of it is exceptionally difficult to explain, but the why is very simple. The short version... in this realm of Etheric life that Dadrien and I occupy, we became friends. We talked of so many things and discovered so much about each other that neither of us knew."

“When you are dead, there is not much more to do.” Dadrien added with an obvious tone of humor to his voice.

Sumar nodded in agreement. “True enough.” He agreed. “We did not know where we were or for what purpose we were there. Only that we were. We discovered that both of us agreed that the evil had not died. That it thrived in many more ways than what we ever could have imagined. The downfall of the Pralor people was only the largest sign that this was true. During one of these moments we came up with this mad scheme of what we could do if we were able to combine ourselves together.”

“The power of a Praetorian and a Dahakoan.” Dadrien spoke once more.

Sumar looked at him and nodded his head as he looked at Andro and the others. “Such a combination of power within the right vassal could accomplish so much in the name of good. The next thing we knew, even from within whatever realm of Etheric power we reside, we felt the moment you were conceived within your mother Aricia’s womb Androcles.” He said looking directly at him. “And you Elynth.” He said turning to gaze at her golden eyes. “Then Laren and Ladur. And finally you Dorian. You and Ryner. Though your arrival proceeded much faster than we expected Dorian.”

Dorian nodded his head. “Yeah... I get that a lot.” He said with a small smile.

“That is when we knew it.” Dadrien said.

Sumar nodded his head. “We knew that somehow... what we thought was only a fantasy had become reality.” Sumar told them. “A reality in you. In all of you.”

“How?” Andro gasped.

Sumar shook his head. “That is the part of the answer that we do not know.” He told them. “I told you there were many things within the universe that we do not understand, cannot explain or have not seen. Dadrien and I believed that is what guided this event. Your creation. Was it a miracle? A process of life that would have happened anyway? I do not know and nor do I care.”

“Grandfather, are you saying we were created by some higher power?” Andro asked.

Sumar’s image shrugged broad shoulders. “You are what you are no matter the cause Androcles. All of you. Isn’t that what you believe?”

“How... how do you know that?” Andro stammered.

Sumar smiled. “How do you think?”

“The Lorsvek ar Sepas!” Laren almost shouted.

Sumar nodded his head. “Yes.” He said. “The Lorsvek ar Sepas. To each of you, when you were born, Dadrien bestowed a portion of his Etheric resonance and essence. It has been part of you for all of these years. Just as the Praetorian gene has been part of you. Now that you are together, each piece will slowly grow within all of you until you know all that he knows, all that I know, and not just from the memories passed to you and your siblings from your father and mothers.”

“We have seen all that you have done in your lives.” Dadrien told them. “All that you are and what drives you inside. It is part of the wolf and dragon blood that flows within all of you. All of you were put here for a purpose.”

“To fight the Scourge.” Dorian said.

“Those vile monsters are only part of it, but yes.” Sumar said now. “At least that is what we believe. Your purpose entails so much more. You are the future, all of you, and the offspring that each of you will have. You will be the Heralds of a New Age.”

“And what if this is not something that we wish for grandfather?” Andro asked him.

Sumar smiled and his image gazed at him intently. “Androcles my boy, you more than anyone among our family with the exception of your father know that you cannot outrun destiny. That no matter how much you try to outmaneuver it, fate and destiny will always find a way. You ran from your destiny for years my boy, until you finally saw that it would have you no matter what you did.”

Andro lowered his head and shook it slightly. “I have always hated that phrase.” He said softly hearing Sumar and Dadrien laugh gently at his words.

“Don’t we all.” Dadrien said. “Don’t we all.”

“We all will play a role in the future.” Sumar spoke. “Lycavorian. Pralor. Darastrixi. What that role will be is something we have to determine.”

“You don’t know grandfather?” Dorian asked.

Sumar shook his head. “No. We have never been able to see the future.” He said. “We have been able to influence some of the events that led up to this day, but the moment all of you came together, the moment you touched each other it was like what you call the Pralor download between Praetorian and Mage. Now all that is left for us to do is gift you with whatever knowledge we can before our time is finished.”

“Finished?” Laren asked moving closer to their images.

“We were never meant to be like this forever child.” Dadrien spoke now. “You and the others are the future and soon we will truly pass into memory. Then it will fall to all of you to continue on as you have.”

“Our time will come soon enough.” Sumar said. “We still have a few things to do before we join those who are waiting for us. We wish to speak with your father as well, but before we do that, I sense Murano is among you Androcles?”

“And Sarlana?” Dadrien asked.

Andro nodded his head quickly. “Yes. Both of them. Sarlana is still on our ship and Murano is moving with others towards the weapons cache here on the station.”

Sumar nodded his head. “Ah yes. Murano no doubt would have remembered that from our time together. He was among only six of us who knew the location of all the caches. Wayonn and Murano were my closest friends and I would like to explain to him why I chose him to remain behind. I know that he has struggled with that through the centuries, though I believe with your father’s help and now yours, he has begun to see his purpose once more.”

“I think he has grandfather.” Andro said with a nod. “He is... he has become so much to all of us.”

Sumar nodded his head. “Good. There is much we must tell you and our time among you is short. Things you need to know. For the present and for the future. There is a war coming and I believe all of you sense it.”

Andro nodded in agreement. “Yes, my father and Wayonn believe such as well.”

“Then there is no time to waste.” Sumar spoke.

VENTORI UNION ADHOC BASE KING AND QUEEN’S PORTABLE BUNGALOW

“...Thank you for coming.” Anja spoke to Perlyea and Aduna as they stood just inside the entrance of the bungalow.

Aricia and For'mya stood beside the couch letting Anja take the lead because of her close working relationship with Perlyea. Whether it was their connection as lovers and friends with their fellow Queens or not they did not know, but both Aricia and For'mya could appreciate a beautiful woman. Perlyea and Aduna were both very beautiful woman regardless of the delicate bone structure along their eyebrows and the edges of their jaws. Aduna was incredibly exotic looking with long, dark brown hair and stunning dark brown eyes. She looked incredibly fit under her Tasmor uniform, Aricia estimating she was close to Dysea’s five foot nine height. Like Perlyea she had large, firm breasts and a slim waist with legs that seemed to go on forever. She towered over Anja’s five foot three frame, and was slightly taller than Perlyea as well. She also stood close to Perlyea, almost in a possessive sort of way and her scent gave away their relationship almost immediately to the three of them. They were lovers obviously, and it did not seem that Aduna was shy about this fact. Or Perlyea for that matter, for neither of them shied away from physical contact with each other.

It was quite obvious to Aricia and For'mya that Perlyea also desired Anja in a physical way and this seemed to radiate from Aduna as well, though they had only just met her. They were not men, so this desire they could smell on Perlyea and Aduna both was not something that bothered them in the least. The six Queens of the Union were the dearest of friends and they had joked of such things through their many years together. Anja was the most public of the Queens, always out and about the Union and therefore the most exposed. Even though she was the only one of them to ever have a separate lover, this was not something that interested her now in the least. She was quite content to have only them share her life and her bed. All of them agreed that Anja Leonidas oozed sexiness no matter how much she tried not to. It was something she just could not help.

Behind Aricia, she was also the most sexually adventurous and the most vocal among them. There had been many times in the past where other women had approached one or more of them and expressed obvious desire to be with them. All of the Queens were flattered at this, but even though many of these women were incredibly desirable in their own right, nothing had ever happened. The Queens of the Union were devoted to one another and would never step outside that bond of love and friendship just for physical pleasure. For'mya glanced quickly at Aricia seeing the way Perlyea and Aduna greeted Anja and she smiled knowingly.

[They desire Melyanna in the worse way you know. It wafts from their pores.] She joked in their private connection knowing Anja could hear them as well.

[Who wouldn't?] Aricia echoed with a smug humor. [She is quite delicious.]

[Enough of that you two!] Anja declared even as she shook hands with Aduna. Aricia and For'mya smiled as Anja directed them over to the couch. Anja moved between them and they stepped close to her, pressing their bodies against her and pulsing her with their female auras lovingly. Anja returned their aura pulses with one of her own and motioned with her hand to Aricia. "Colonel Aduna these are my fellow queens Aricia and For'mya." She spoke.

Aduna glanced first at her love Perlyea and then back to the three Lycavorian queens. She and Perlyea had been together for nearly three decades now, each of them with their own duties and positions but always together. It hadn't been that way in the beginning, as most Tasmor Breeder pairs were put together by decree of the Quorum. All Tasmor Breeders worked as pairs to better enhance the possibility of a child being conceived with whatever female they were with. Aduna and Perlyea had not known one another when they were paired together but they quickly discovered that unlike normal Tasmor Breeder pairs they had much more in common than anyone thought. It took several years, but soon a deep friendship and then scorching love affair developed between them. Since Tasmor Breeders had the reproductive organs of both male and female they soon discovered enormous pleasure with each other and then with the females that they were chosen to Breed. It had gotten to the point that the love they had for each other carried over to the Tasmor females who chose them for breeding. Saydia and the Tasmor Quorum, based on what they saw with Perlyea and Aduna, eventually decreed that any Breeder pair who wished to remain together for purposes of love would be encouraged to do so as long as they understood they would still be required to breed other females. This Decree had been readily welcomed among all the Tasmor Breeders and the last twenty years had seen many more children born, but even still, almost none were fertile males. Though the Breeder pairs were not supposed to know whether they had been responsible for children being born from one of their couplings with other females, Aduna was relatively sure that she had Perlyea had given at least two Tasmor female children. This was still not enough to keep their species alive over the centuries to come and that is why Aduna knew of the enhancements from Lycavorian DNA and had taken part in the first batch just as Perlyea and Anthylea had.

As their time together went by, they grew more deeply in love, to the point where they were now very selective in who they took into their bed and they relished the day when they would be able to have children together.

Perlyea had not been inaccurate when she had said the three Queens were astonishing in their beauty. All of them radiated confidence and dripped sexuality in a way Aduna had not seen from Tasmor females. The elven female was extremely attractive with lush golden blond hair and provocative dark brown eyes and her four inch high elf ears. The pureblood queen was exotic in her beauty, her hair extremely long and a rich black in color that reflected blue in some light. Her eyes were incredible and she had a lush body. It was the red haired one that caught Aduna's attention most of all, just as Perlyea said she would. Their taste in women was nearly identical and through the years Aduna had allowed Perlyea to choose who would share their bed, trusting in their love for each other. Anja's amazingly seductive jade green eyes, her large and incredibly firm breasts and her muscular body were exactly the things that she had Perlyea always become excited about in their women. They had even fantasized together about several of Saydia's own daughters at times, since all of them were absolutely breathtaking in their beauty and none had become joined in any way. Even Faydia Daret, though a Breeder herself, even she could incite passion in both of them.

Anja Leonidas however, she would be the finest of catches Aduna thought, and certainly a woman such as her would make Perlyea and her both commit to a joining ceremony without hesitation.

Aduna nodded her head to Anja as she shook hands with both of the other Queens and then they settled to the couches as one.

“Perlyea has told me... she has told me that there are six of you.” Aduna spoke as she took Perlyea’s hand in her own in a show of her love as she sat back on the couch.

Anja nodded her head. “Our fellow Queens, Isabella, Dysea and Cirith on are Honelze at the moment, helping to build their defenses up.”

“And all of you share each other as well as... this one man?” Aduna asked with surprise and almost disbelief.

All three of them smiled at this for it was not uncommon even among their own people. “Let’s just say that our husband and mate is very well gifted and only he can make us feel what he does.” Aricia said. “Emotionally as well as physically.”

Aduna looked at them and knew exactly what they were saying. Their words rang true in her ears and she knew exactly how they obviously felt. She looked at Perlyea and squeezed her hand. “Yes, I do know that feeling.” She said almost wistfully as she turned back to them.

Perlyea almost seemed to blush at the attention, but she was filled with similar emotion. “We have not seen each other for two weeks.” Perlyea explained. “This trip to Ventori was not planned and it has kept us apart until now.”

“Something I intend to rectify as soon as we are able.” Aduna spoke with a seductive smile.

Anja, Aricia and For'mya smiled knowingly at this. “Well, we will try to make this quick so that the two of you can have most of the evening together.” For'mya spoke.

Aduna looked at them once more. “This... our relationship does not strike you as...?”

It was Aricia who answered with a shake of her head. “It is very common in the Union to be honest. We have a species of elf that are like you in many ways. They are not born as you are, most of them were changed against their will in experiments conducted on them by a former enemy, but for the most part, all of them have now found love and desire with another woman. Our youngest daughter Zarah is in a relationship with another woman and our oldest daughters Eliani and Lisisa share similar relations with the men and women in their lives. So you see, we are not so different in how we view relationships and such. I think it actually gives us much more common ground than others.”

Aduna nodded her head at this reflectively. “Yes, I suppose it does.” She answered. “That is not something we are used too.”

“Nalmos tells us there that are Tasmor females who have developed relationships with many Lycavorians from Ventori.” Anja said.

Aduna nodded her head. “Yes, but in many ways this is frowned upon by the Quorum and many others.” She replied as she looked directly at Anja. “But then things might change for the future now if what Perlyea tells me is true.”

Anja smiled. “Oh it’s very true.” Anja told her. “The gene therapy that Perlyea developed is doing what she intended for it to do. It will increase the chances for all Tasmor Breeders and other females to have children. Many more children. What Perlyea didn’t realize until I told her was that Lycavorian DNA is very specialized and selective I guess you could say. Since Perlyea directed the gene therapy towards reproduction, that it what it will do, but Lycavorian DNA takes its time in altering other genes. Given what she has told me and samples from both her and Anthylea that I have seen, I would say that within the next several months those Tasmor who took part in the initial treatment will be fully changed and therefore able to succeed in what you are trying to accomplish.”

Aduna’s dark eyes grew brighter at hearing this knowledge and she looked at Perlyea quickly and then back to Anja. “Then we... we could have children with each other?” She asked.

Anja nodded her head. “Perlyea can explain it to you in more detail at a later time I’m sure, but the short answer is yes. Even as Breeders you have both sets of reproductive organs for your species. Your reproductive organs and parts are surprisingly very similar to our own in almost every way. If one of you was to become pregnant, that portion of your physiology would take over until after the child was born. Perlyea explained to me that is why your Quorum choose to have your Breeders work in pairs. To increase the odds of a pregnancy.”

Aduna nodded her head looking at Perlyea slightly surprised. She turned back to Anja and tilted her head slightly to her out of respect. “If my love told you this then she must trust all of you a great deal.” Aduna said. “I have always relied on Perlyea’s instincts and that will never change. You are correct Anja Leonidas. I do not believe the Quorum ever expected that so many of their Breeder pairs would fall in love, but that has not stopped us from trying to insure the survival of our species.”

“And it shouldn’t.” Aricia spoke now. “Not in any way.”

“What about... what about those Tasmor that have taken Lycavorian females?” Aduna asked.

“Oh, they would be able to have children...” Anja told her. “It might take a bit longer for the Lycavorian system to adjust to the Tasmor genes, but it would not only be very possible but probably more likely than not. As I said, our physiology is very similar. It would be much faster if the Tasmor was bitten by a Lycavorian, for then they would have the Lycavorian DNA in their system directly needed to effect a full molecular change. Either way, you would have a child of both species who would be very robust and healthy right from the outset given our natural healing factor and the added Tasmor immunity to most known diseases.”

Aduna’s face was bright and animated in the face of this knowledge and she looked at Perlyea once more with love in her dark eyes. “That is... that is wondrous news.” She said finally turning back to Anja.

“Yes, it is.” Anja agreed.

Aduna took a deep breath then and nodded her head. “That is not why you asked me here though.” She said. “Forgive me for going off on my own tangent.”

Aricia shook her head. “Were we in your position we would be just as happy and excited. There is no doubt in that.”

“None at all.” For'mya agreed.

Aduna smiled at their honesty and the sincerity of their words. “Perlyea told me a little of what you wanted to know.” She said. “And I do agree with you and she about the consequences should we not assist you, but I know for a fact that the Quorum will not agree to send our troops to assist regardless of what the risks are unless their conditions are met. Saydia is well liked and respected, but the Quorum is still made up of Tasmor hardliners and they have the majority on the Quorum right now.”

“Saydia gave something to us last night.” Aricia spoke now. “In relation to an arranged marriage.”

Aduna nodded her head. “Yes, Perlyea told me this.” She answered. “However, like Perlyea, I do not believe Namiri Daret would ever accept this. And Saydia would never force it upon her daughter. She loves all of them too much to do this sort of thing.”

“Perlyea said your Quorum could force this upon Namiri.” For'mya said. “Something about the Sovereign Regent’s youngest daughter having to be made available for this type of thing?”

Aduna nodded her head. “They could do this yes, but I don’t believe they would do this for it would make an enemy of Saydia and many of the younger generations of Tasmor if they did. That is not something that they wish to do. Saydia Daret is perhaps the most worshiped leader in our history. Forcing her to do something not of her choosing would be very difficult and probably end their political career.”

Aricia leaned forward now. “Namiri and Emylea have garnered a special affection from our husband and mate for their actions here on Ventori in defending our people. This is not something he would allow her to be subjected too, and I know my son would never agree to this either. We do not have arranged marriages for political reasons anymore.”

Aduna looked puzzled. “Then why are we here talking about it?” She asked. “You are the Queens of your Union. Is this something that you are considering even against the wishes of your husband and son?”

Anja chortled at that and shook her head. “No. Believe me that is not something that we would attempt.” She replied. “Not if we ever want to feel our mate’s arms around us again. Or the love of our son.”

Aricia nodded her head. “Very true.”

“Then why did you need to see me?” Aduna asked.

For'mya held out the data pad to her. “To look at this and tell us if it would be workable and something your Quorum could stand behind without over reaching Saydia’s power as Sovereign Regent.”

Aduna took the pad and began reading, her eyes slowly getting a little wider the more she read. She looked up after several moments and looked at the three Lycavorian Queens. “This is... this is astonishing. You... you would offer this to us?” She spoke with a new tone of respect in her voice.

“Yes.” Anja spoke now.

“But this... it would still require Namiri to lay with your son would it not?” Aduna asked. “Perlyea must have told you that she would not agree to this. We have watched she and Emylea grow into the women they are now and they are at the center of the new generation of Tasmor who are beginning to believe we need to discard these old laws. She would never agree to this.”

“Can we infer from your tone of voice that you do not agree with many of your older laws?” For'mya asked.

Aduna shook her head. “There are many who believe as Perlyea and I. Our people are not as self-sufficient and powerful as we believe. I should think the Quorum is beginning to see this considering the magnificent ship we traveled on to get here. There has been a growing call for many years now to change many of the laws that either do not apply to the present or just make no sense. However, we do not have the influence needed to press forward with such changes.”

“Androcles is second only to his father in the potency of the virus within his blood.” Anja said confidently. “Because of this, there are other ways that would accomplish the same thing, but not require Namiri to share his bed.”

Aduna looked at Anja intently for a long moment. “And these other ways, may I assume that they are not well known?”

“No.” Aricia answered her. “They would work, but they are not well known. We as a species do not believe in randomly turning people without major cause. It is heavily frowned upon actually. We would only turn someone out of love if they wanted this, or if their lives were in danger of being lost. If it was discovered that we came up with this idea and then supported it, let's just say it would not be received very well.”

“Yet you would be willing to support this now?” Aduna asked.

“We need your troops Aduna.” Anja told her. “We cannot win without them no matter what we do or the technology that we have. The numbers just do not add up. Once the Svorag have beaten us, they will come for the Tasmor. This is simply a means to an end for both our peoples.”

Aduna nodded her head. “I see your point.” She said. She looked at Perlyea for a moment and then back to them. “Then we must insure this does not become known.” She said. “I believe Perlyea and I could convince Saydia and Namiri to go along with this. Thankfully, both of them are completely practical. What about this son...” Aduna looked at the pad. “An... Androcles? He is the first born is he not? The heir to your husband. It will not work if that is not the case. The Quorum would not support it otherwise.”

Aricia nodded her head. “He is the Crown Prince and next in line for the throne, yes.” She answered. “He certainly wants no part of being a King, but he is like his father in that way.”

“You do not often meet someone who does not want the power that Martin obviously commands.” Perlyea spoke now. “Your son Androcles must be very unique.”

“Stubborn and pig headed, just like his father.” For'mya stated with a small amount of humor in her voice, but far more love in her tone.

“And he would agree to this as well?” Aduna asked.

Anja smiled weakly. “That is where we will need the help of his wives and mates.” She told Aduna. “Without them backing this plan, there is no way he would do this even if his father ordered him to do it. And Martin will not do that. Ever.”

“If we can convince Sadi and the others that this plan is the only way,” Aricia continued. “Then we have a chance.”

“And if you cannot?” Perlyea asked the question. “You told me yourself they are just as possessive of your son as all of you are of Martin.”

Aricia nodded. “This is true.”

“And if they do not agree?” Aduna asked the question again.

“Well... then we are pretty well fucked.” Anja blurted out in her usual blunt nature.

SCIENCE STATION 489

Matum paced back and forth in front of where Dytin and Aviel were sitting in the pilot's briefing room, his head moving to look over to where the Etheric images of Dadrien and Sumar stood speaking with Sarlana, Murano and the Dahakoan. He would then look over to where the Lycavorians were now sitting with the Darastrixi from their group. The red haired female and Nahko Em'mor were speaking animatedly with each other since they discovered that both of them were doctors. Several of the Sand Strider troops were speaking with Jeth and the other dragons within the Etheric realm. While all Darastrixi had Etheric ability to speak with one another, hardly any of them used it unless it was necessary and none had the ability to speak on such a high Tier level as the new Vrrarhoinpa seemed to be able to speak. This fact itself Dalis found almost irresistible, but when added with the fact that almost all of the new Vrrarhoinpa were hybrid dragons, Dalis had been speaking with them for the entire time they had been in the room with them. Nearly all of the hybrid dragons were larger than normal Vrrarhoinpa and this made Matum nervous. The Sand Strider troops had moved over gradually and many of them were now were speaking with the new dragons and the other Lycavorians almost easily, their curiosity overriding their caution. All of them appeared very confident and quite friendly which caused Matum to be further on edge. A species they had never met before, one which was on their threat list, and they were mingling with them as if nothing mattered.

“You are beginning to wear a path on the floor Matum.” Dytin finally spoke as he looked up at him.

“Should we not be over there Inidra?” Matum finally hissed. “Should we not be included in whatever they are speaking of?”

Dytin and Aviel glanced over to where Laren sat between Androcles and Dorian leaning up against their shoulders, her hands on their knees. He could see Dadrien speaking to them now, Sarlana and Murano nodding their heads.

“If it concerns us, I trust we will be told.” Dytin finally answered turning back to him.

Matum looked at him. “You are a General of our people!” He gasped. “I am a Major with our elite forces! Does that not automatically grant us status to be included in whatever is being discussed?”

Aviel chuckled softly as he ate from his ration pack. He looked at Dytin. “You did say he was headstrong old friend.”

Dytin smiled and nodded his head. “Yes I did.” He agreed. He looked up at Matum once more. “If the Doraanar or the Ancient one Dadrien wanted us to be aware of something do you think they would not tell us Matum?”

“What about the Lycavorians?” Matum pressed him. “They have people in another part of the station while we are forced to remain here! What are they doing? They are dictating to us what we should do when it should be us who tell them!”

“This is a Pralor station Matum.” Aviel said. “And considering that they not only have the blood of Pralors within their veins but they have an actual Praetorian with them, I do believe that trumps any claim that you may think we have. I, for one, have no desire to be killed by a trap set many thousands of years ago by the Scourge. Do you?”

Dytin shook his head. “Not today, no.” He answered.

“We have equipment that can detect traps Inidra.” Matum insisted. “We should be there as well. It is our right!”

Aviel looked up at him now. “Our right?” He spoke. “The Dahakoan have been revered among our people for millennia Matum. What makes you think that you have a right to be with them?”

“We do not even know if they are Dahakoan!” Matum exclaimed now. “Nothing Laren or Ladur has done proves that they are Dahakoan. And I cannot believe that the Ancient One Dadrien would bequeath this sacred gift to those who are not even Darastrixi!”

“But they are Darastrixi! They have the blood of dragons within them! They are also Vrelvel Sargti Matum, at least this Androcles and Elynth. Or will you deny what your Darastrixi blood tells you.” Aviel spoke. “Just as it tells each and every Darastrixi no matter where they come from. And it was they who told us his name! Or do you now deny that this is not the Ancient One.”

“I do not deny this Koppentotz Aviel, I can feel this as well, which only makes it harder to remain over here when we should be over there, included in whatever they are speaking of.” Matum answered. “We are the military officers!”

“If my ears do not deceive me, we would not understand what they are saying.” Dytin spoke once more. “They are speaking in the Lycavorian language.”

“Which is another reason why I do not trust them!” Matum hissed. “How can Laren know their language? Why are they speaking that language and not a language that we too can understand? Are we supposed to believe that the Ancient One Dadrien knows this language? If so, how does he know this?”

Dytin glanced over to them. “I would say he does, since he is speaking it.” He replied turning back to him. “Matum, you are perhaps the finest officer I have ever trained, but you are far too suspicious of what you do not understand.”

“Perhaps because what I don’t understand could be a threat to us!” Matum retorted.

“Or perhaps because you fear what you do not understand.” Aviel told him.

“I am afraid of nothing!” Matum hissed almost angrily.

“Truly?” Aviel said noticing that Dytin was remaining silent now and allowing him to converse with Matum. Aviel had always been the more analytical of them while they were growing and Dytin had always been the more practical. They had learned to complement each other very well during that time and left many adults baffled at their reasoning for doing things. “If you are afraid of nothing Major Matum, then why are you so concerned about what they are doing over there?”

“I am concerned because it... because it may have dire ramifications for us!” Matum stammered out his reply and knew right away that it was a ridiculous notion.

“You are concerned because you feel left out.” Aviel spoke calmly seeing Matum’s face tighten. “You are concerned because you want to be involved and prove to others that you are a superior soldier. Something that we already know. A word of advice Matum, do not wish for something when that knowledge may very well terrify you in the end.”

Matum really had nothing to say to that and he turned around in a huff and moved away from Aviel and Dytin. Dytin looked at his friend. “He is a fine soldier Aviel.” He finally said.

Aviel nodded his head. “If you trained him, I would never doubt that.” He answered. “You cannot trach humility however, my friend.”

Dytin nodded his head. “True.”

“Something tells me that these young men and women we see all around us are far better trained then even your Sand Striders.” Aviel spoke softly as his eyes drifted over the room and he took everything in. “And this will be a painful lesson for Matum to learn if he lets his ego override his common sense.”

Dytin nodded his head once more as he ate a piece of his ration. “A lesson all of us must learn at some point.” He spoke.

“...Are we doing Major?” The Sand Strider soldier asked as he and one other followed Matum. “Our orders were to remain in the bay.”

Matum stopped and looked at him. “The General relies on my skills and I do not trust these newcomers.” He answered. “I wish to know what it is they are doing in another part of this station and I intend to find out.”

“You heard the reports sir.” The second soldier spoke. “This station has traps all over. We should remain within the area that has been cleared by these Drones.”

Matum held up the small, box like object. “We have our own technology for detecting traps.” He hissed. “I do not need these people to help me do my job! We are going to find out what they are doing and why. Now follow me. I have these other individuals on my portable sensor. They are fifteen decks above us and near where the power core for this station is supposed to be. We will find out what they are doing.”

Matum turned and began moving off down the corridor that led away from the landing bay and his two men shook their heads and followed him. They had moved off into the shadows without anyone really noticing and exited the landing bay into the dimly lit and empty corridor. Now they were moving off into a station that none of them knew anything about and this did not sit well with the two junior Sand Striders.

Not at all.

“That’s it! They are in!” Taich Neulan barked from his Tactical console. “They are in Armen.”

Armen came to his feet from the command chair and nodded his head. –Very well. Helm, take us to within ten thousand meters of the station with the bow of our ship. No closer. That will put the two forward teleporters within the envelope of the station and allow them to begin transporting cargo over. And prepare to drop the Shroud when they are ready to initiate transfer–

“Helm answers aye!” The elven helmsman barked out. “Moving to put our bow ten thousand meters from the station! Engaging port and starboard thrusters! Forty percent power!”

Armen looked at Taich. –Colonel if you would move to Cargo Bay Six and insure we are ready to begin transferring the equipment. And be ready to move to the Secondary Command Bridge in case this goes to sibfla–

Taich nodded his head with a huge smile at Armen’s use of the Lycavorian curse word. “On my way.”

Armen turned and looked at the main view screen as the station began to grow even larger. –Now the fun begins– He muttered to no one in particular, though he spoke loud enough for almost all the bridge crew to hear him.

SCIENCE STATION 489

“...Unable to influence events directly, but we discovered that we were able to guide them in a manner of speaking.” Sumar was speaking to them. Laren sat between Androcles and Dorian, her hands on their knees and their hands over the top of hers. Elynth, Ryner and Ladur were behind each of their Bonded Ones, Murano and Sarlana on either side.

“In a manner of speaking?” Sarlana asked.

“Subtle pushes within the Etheric realm mostly.” Sumar answered.

“Darastrixi are unable to manipulate this Etheric realm that the Pralors can.” Sarlana said. “We have never been able to.”

“That is not entirely true Sarlana.” Dadrien spoke now. “Part of the power and abilities of a Dahakoan came from within the Etheric realm. Our unique ability of battlefield precognition for instance. This was just information that I never allowed to be known by those outside the ranks of the Dahakoan.” Sarlana’s eyes were wide in surprise at this revelation. “However, like with the Pralor people, this ability was extremely rare among the Darastrixi, which is why the Dahakoan were so limited in number. An Etheric bond did exist between Vrrarhoinpa and Jilhoipna, just not on so grand a scale as what we now see between Androcles and Elynth, Dorian and Ryner and Laren and Ladur. That is... it is not something that we foresaw.”

“We believe the cause of that is because of what Arzoal did to all of the eggs on Elear.” Sumar spoke once more.

“Grandmother?” Elynth asked quickly her voice echoing just as it had for almost three decades within Andro’s mind. It was the same voice as it had always been, but now he could actually hear it with his ears. Dadrien had explained to them that the moment they physically touched Laren and Ladur, their combined knowledge merged and became one. This also included the knowledge on how to manipulate the vocal cords within their throats that had been dormant for so long.

Andro turned his head and looked at Elynth over his shoulder. “Elynth that new skill is going to take some getting used to.” He said.

Elynth's golden eyes grew a little wider and she lowered her head to engulf his entire shoulder in her muzzle. Sumar and Dadrien watched with some humor as she bit down on his armor gently and then butted him in the back of the head.

"It will allow me to better communicate with Sadi and your other beloved wives so that we may keep track of you more." Elynth told him.

Laren laughed out loud at this action and squeezed Androcles' hand. "I think you are in trouble." She stated.

Andro grinned as he looked at Elynth over his shoulder and saw the love for him in her eyes. "You have no idea." He said. He turned back to the image of his grandfather. "Why do you think the Elder Mother had something to do with that?"

"She was a Pralor before she became a dragon." Sumar spoke looking at Murano. "And I believe she was meant to join our ranks Murano my friend."

"A Praetorian?" Murano gasped.

Sumar's image nodded. "Given time I believe we would have discovered her, just as I discovered Tobia and what she could do, but obviously events took that away from us. If what I believe is true, than as Arzoal manipulated the Etheric skills of every dragon born for millennia, she triggered a much deeper connection to the Etheric realm. Arzoal thought she was protecting them, when in actuality she was increasing their Etheric abilities to levels beyond what they would have had normally. When your father and others found them on Enurrua Androcles, well nature took its course. The Praetorian blood within many of the Lycavorians allowed for a deep Etheric connection to form. For those elves among the first to Bond with dragons, this came about because they evolved from dragons." Sumar looked directly at Androcles. "It is also why I believe she knew exactly who your father was when he arrived."

"She could sense his Praetorian blood." Androcles said softly. "Your blood."

Sumar nodded his head. "Yes." He answered. "It is also why Shiria kept her existence secret even from Wayonn. Shiria is a Praetorian Mage in case you have not already figured that out." His eyes shifted to Murano. "She is meant to be Tobia's Mage."

Murano looked at him wide eyed. "Tobia?" He gasped.

Sumar nodded his head. "They will be the ones to find and train those Praetorians yet to come Murano my friend. They are out there, they just need to be found and shown what path they could follow."

"Descendants from City Ship 41?" Dorian asked.

Sumar nodded his head again. "And City Ship 19." He stated.

Androcles and Dorian looked at him with wide eyes. "City Ship 19!" Andro finally gasped. "Grandfather are you sure?"

Sumar smiled sadly. "I was not certain until you... until you removed my brother's influence Androcles."

Andro's face suddenly dipped and he became silent. "Grandfather I..."

"Do not regret what you did Androcles my staaniketo." Sumar said softly. "It needed to be done and only you had the will to do what... what I could not." (Grandson)

"You tried to save him grandfather." Andro said.

Sumar shook his head now. "Some people cannot be saved Androcles." He answered. "My brother was one of them. When you removed his influence I was able to detect several future Praetorians among the High Coven. Those fools Veldruk and Aikiro were so corrupted by his influence that they never saw it. If I detected them, then there are most likely more."

"So you knew that there were possible Praetorians on all of the ships?" Murano asked.

Sumar nodded his head. "That is why I was so selective in their crews, yes."

"Narice?" Andro asked.

Sumar shook his head. "No." He said. "I would have sensed her the moment she tasted your brother's blood. Her role is no less important however, for only she can pull the Coven from the abyss that Veldruk and Aikiro were taking it down. Only she and her sister."

"Yuri?!" Dorian asked.

“Yuri has become the individual she was always meant to be.” Sumar spoke almost fondly of her. “And she will have a very large role in helping her sister to bring about change for the High Coven and the future as a whole. She will find her path soon enough so I would not worry about her.”

“Will there... are there any more like us?” Laren asked now.

It was Dadrien who chuckled now and shook his massive head. “Child, none will be like you and your brothers and sisters of the blood. You are unique in a way that can never be duplicated. Just as it was always meant to be.”

“Can you see the future Ancient One?” Laren asked softly. “For us?”

Dadrien lowered his head until the image of his snout was only inches from her head. “You are the future Laren Ti’shara.” He spoke as her multicolored blue eyes lifted to look at him. “The six of you. For the Darastrixi, for the Pralors, for the Lycavorians and for all life across the stars.”

“Ah really... no pressure right.” Dorian quipped.

“You are all Dahakoan!” Dadrien spoke firmly. “Darastrixi di wer iski.” He said with supreme confidence. “Dragons of the Stars.”

Androcles noticed first as Sumar’s image lifted his head slightly as if looking up at the ceiling. “Grandfather?” He finally asked.

“Our time grows short.” He spoke. “We must speak with your father before our time is done Androcles. He is the key.”

“Father?” Andro asked. He saw both Sumar and Dadrien nod their heads together.

“Your father is wer Irral.” Dadrien said.

“The First?” Dorian asked.

“The center from which all else evolves.” Dadrien told them.

Androcles felt it first and he rose to his feet quickly, his face puzzled but intently focused. Laren and Dorian stood up quickly and looked at him even as Sumar turned to look at Dadrien with a smile that only Sarlana and Murano saw.

“And it begins now.” He said softly. “Our time here is done.” Sumar spoke. “Go with the gods my family and friends. We will speak only once more before our time is complete. You will know when that is.”

“Sumar wait!” Murano exclaimed just before their images vanished into thin air and the landing bay was empty except for them. “Damn!”

“Andro?” Laren spoke as she reached for his shoulder. “What is it?”

Andro shook his head. “I don’t... I don’t know.” He spoke. “Elynth?”

“I sense it too Andro.” Elynth replied instantly.

“Sense what?” Sarlana gasped.

“Murano!” Andro blurted before reaching for him and clasping his forearm. Murano didn’t hesitate and clenched Androcles’ forearm tightly, even as Laren and Dorian reached out and placed their hands on Andro’s arm. “Murano is this...”

Murano’s eyes grew wide as he felt what Andro was sensing sweep over him. It was easy enough to do with a fellow Praetorian but with both Dorian and Laren included it was far easier than he had ever remembered, something that he would remember in the future. It was also something he had not felt in millennia and it filled him with dread as his eyes grew wider.

Dorian turned and looked at him. “Murano is that...?”

“The Scourge! They are already on this station!” Murano gasped aloud.

SPARTA’S WRATH

Armen was silent as he stood in the center of the bridge allowing his crew to do their jobs and do them well. He had chosen all of them for their ability to adapt as well as their advanced skills. Even Admiral O’Connor had been impressed at the collection he had put together, but Armen knew what he was looking for from the moment Androcles had given him the ship. His neural network was the most advanced artificial intelligence ever designed by Pralor engineers and now that was paying off in droves. He may have been a machine outwardly, and he was unaware that the crew did not think of him as a machine, but Armen had already reached the level of Avi in being recognized as something far more than a simple Avatar.

Armen's head snapped around the moment he heard the beeping sound and he saw the elven sensor tech lean over her dual consoles just as quickly.

"Whoa!! Power surge! A big one! Lower three decks of the station!" She exclaimed as her hands flew across the oversized consoles. "It's not tied into the main grid! It's something else!"

Armen was about to reply when her voice cut him off.

"Sibfla! Active contacts! They just jumped into the station's area of operation! Three Darastrixi ships! Looks like cruiser class!"

Armen's Neuraltronic Processor was already computing and he waited an appropriate time to what he thought a superior Lycavorian could process before he spoke.

-Tactical! Realign all forward sensors on the lower portion of the station! Find out where that power surge is coming from! Operations Officer, report!-

"Detecting a low power transmission from the ENCHANTRESS to the station! I guess whoever this General left in charge is contacting him about the new Darastrixi ships." The man answered.

-He did tell Androcles that he was being pursued but thought he had lost them. It seems that is not the case. What is their status?-

"No signs of weapons or shields but they are closing on the ENCHANTRESS's position quickly." The OPS Officer replied.

-Very well. Contact the OIC of the ENCHANTRESS and have them close to within five thousand meters of our location. Once that is done extend our shield grid to envelope them-

"Raise the Shroud?" The OPS Officer asked.

-Negative. Colonel Taich is still transporting over the equipment we need- Armen answered. -He will require an additional thirty-nine minutes to retrieve what Praetorian Murano directed us to secure- Armen paused for only a moment. -Weapons Officer! Target the three Darastrixi ships with port side batteries nine through twenty-three! Shields and weapons only-

"Weapons aye!"

DARASTRIXI IKLISS-Class Cruiser

"...increased their speed and are closing on the unknown ship!" Darrod's Tactical Officer reported.

"Someone tell me what kind of ship that is?" Darrod snarled loudly. "Is it Scourge?"

"Unknown!" Another voice chimed in. "Twenty-one thousand plus meters in length! It has a beam of nearly four thousand eight hundred meters!"

"Ithquenti!" Darrod gasped aloud. "It's five times our length!"

Inelor moved up beside him and held out the pad. "General Dytin and the others are on the station." He told him. "Sensors are picking up additional lifeforms as well. One appears to be fully Pralor, while another is questionable."

"Questionable?" Darrod spoke. "What does that mean?"

"I've never seen these life signs before, sir." Inelor told him. "One of the signals is indicating a combination of these new signs and Pralor physiology combined. I'm having them pushed through our data base but... the others are clearly Darastrixi, but they are different."

“Different how?” Darrod almost shouted.

“Meagear Inelor! Coming through now!” (Commander)

Inelor tapped his pad and his eyes grew wide at what they saw as he read. “They were in the Elbakiw Sulevfu database! Lycavorian, Elven and Vampiric signs on the station. Darrod...” He looked at his commanding officer. “The Lycavorians are categorized as potential Level Three hostile.”

“Level Three?” Darrod gasped.

“If what the computer says is true, the additional Darastrixi we are detecting are hybrids.” Inelor spoke looking at Darrod. “Ixen and Osear hybrids.”

Darrod looked at him with wide eyes. “Hybrids?” He asked. “That is not possible Inelor, the Ixen and Osear breeds do not even get along with each other. And cross breeding is not something that is allowed.”

Inelor turned when the officer came up to him and handed him another pad. He glanced at it briefly and then looked at Darrod. “The Lycavorians are shape shifters. They can change their forms to that of a Kaldaka. Similar size to us, but the Elbakiw Sulevfu database has them listed as a priority threat because of their robust nature. They are very hard to kill it seems.”

“Were they listed as an interstellar species?” Darrod asked.

Inelor shook his head. “No.”

“Well, they are now! That is obviously a Lycavorian ship! It is nowhere in our database!” Darrod exclaimed looking at Inelor. “Prepare an assault team. Fully loaded and armed. I will lead them. Deploy in standard alpha combat positions and power weapons and shields!”

“Sir, is that wise?” Inelor asked.

“Always act from a position of strength Inelor.” Darrod told him.

“Sir, that ship, it is five times the size of ours.” Inelor said. “The weapons...”

“The Elbakiw Sulevfu database has listed these Lycavorians as a lesser species.” Darrod spoke. “The only logical solution is that they stole the ship somehow and use it to scavenge whatever they can find. They have more numbers than Indira Dytin and they are probably holding them hostage. We...”

“Yobhakcho Darrod! New power source! Not from the main station! Lower three decks!” The female Darastrixi turned in her chair. “Major... it’s Disise!”

Darrod’s eyes grew wider. “Damn!” He barked. “Have the Assault leader meet me in the bay! We need to get them out of there before the Disise find them!”

SCIENCE STATION 489

“...it’s Scourge Armen!” Androcles hissed into his implant even as he saw Dytin and Aviel moving across the deck towards him with several Sand Striders in tow.

Armen did not question Androcles for he knew what he was and if a Praetorian and Dahakoan said that the new power readings were from Scourge, then they were.

-We have not detected any Scourge life signs Androcles so that leads me to assess that they have hidden Cryo chambers in the lower portions of the station. That is the power readings we are detecting. The chambers must be activating and their lifesigns will become trackable momentarily. Our presence here has been compromised Androcles-

“How?” Andro snarled. “Alpha Nine and Alpha Thirteen only cleared select portions of the station and we have been inside those areas this whole time! How...” Andro’s eyes grew wider. “Armen scan the station for any signs outside the cleared areas!”

-Stand by- Armen replied. -Confirmed. Three Darastrixi life signs are showing on our sensors. They are currently on deck twenty-four and moving for Engineering. They are however, outside of the areas cleared by Alpha Nine and Thirteen-

“Nubou!” Andro swore loudly just as Dytin and Aviel stopped beside him. “Inform Ridor and Kalis Armen! Murano is on his way back to them with Deion! How much longer do they need?”

-At least thirty-five minutes to procure everything on Murano’s list- Armen answered instantly.

“The Darastrixi must have set off some sort of sensor trap as they were wandering blindly!” Andro snarled once more. “Sibfla! Armen, jam everything leaving the station. All transmissions except for our command channels. Inform Inidra Dytin’s ship of this and give them our command channels.”

-Three Darastrixi warships have also entered the Station’s Zone. A smaller transport ship has broken from one warship and is currently moving for the station. They will be within range of the emergency hatches adjacent to Landing Bay 12 in two minutes and ten seconds- Armen told him. -I have instructed the ENCHANTRESS to move within our shield envelope and they are currently holding station off our starboard bow-

“Can they bypass the security access codes and open the Emergency hatches?” Andro asked.

-Unknown. If they are good at what they do, it is possible. The Darastrixi have fine engineers Andro. And either Emergency hatch can accommodate a ship of that size- Armen told him. -Androcles, we cannot let the Scourge on this station survive and inform the others that we were here. Permission to initiate Zero Option-

Andro didn’t hesitate. “You do not need my approval to keep us safe Armen.” Andro told him. “Have Alpha Nine and Alpha Thirteen break off from Murano’s group and see to it.”

-Understood- Armen replied. -I will keep you informed of anything new. I suggest you begin moving back to Landing Bay Nineteen and prepare for your extraction-

“We’re on it.” Andro spoke. Andro turned to Dytin and Aviel as Dorian and Laren moved closer to him. “General, three of your people took it upon themselves to go sightseeing.” He told him seeing his eyes darken in anger.

“Matum!” Dytin hissed.

“It appears they set off some sort of motion detector or sensor and now there are Scourge Cryo chambers activating in the lower three decks of this station.” Andro told him seeing both his eyes and Aviel’s go wide.

“That’s why we can sense them now and could not when we arrived.” Laren exclaimed. “They were asleep!”

Andro nodded his head. “Well, they are waking up now and we need to move our asses out of here like pronto!”

“This position is defensible Dahakoan Androcles.” Dytin spoke.

Andro shook his head. “The three ships you said we chasing you just showed up.” He told them.

“Darrod!” Dytin spat. “He found us!”

Aviel looked at his friend. “You did say he was your finest officer Dytin.”

“Well, he is probably aboard the transport that is about to attempt to breach one of the Emergency Hatches on either side of this bay. We need to move and we need to move now.” Andro spoke. Andro turned and looked at Denali. “Deni... Lisisa, Arduri, Aradace and Jeth with you. Get Koppentotz Aviel and the other Darastrixi back to our entry point. Inidra Dytin’s Sand Striders as additional security. Sadi, Nara and Brendi will monitor you and direct from the Command Station there.”

Denali nodded his head. “Moving.”

“Deni?” Andro’s voice stopped him and he looked back at him. “Don’t stop for anything fervon. If it gets in your way, kill it. Zero Option is active.”

Denali Leonidas nodded his head. “Understood.”

“Dorian and Laren with me, Sehri, Jomann and Eliani.” Andro spoke once more.

“Where are we going?” Eliani asked as she came up beside Dorian with Jomann. Sehri moved directly between Laren and Andro and pressed against his side as Laren smiled and leaned over to nuzzle her cheek. Sehri beamed in happiness and took her hand and squeezed. All of them had felt Andro’s happiness when he and Dorian had been holding Laren in their arms, but the fleeting moment of jealousy Sehri had felt quickly went away when she realized it was a brotherly love that swept through Andro and it was a brotherly love that was returned by Laren. Sehri felt no guilt for these feelings for she was a true Alpha female wolf now, just like Sadi and Ne’Veha and Lu’ria. Female Alphas put off a natural pheromone when around their chosen mate and this put off other female wolves if they were smart. This was a normal reaction for them Sadi had told her and it also served to keep other females who were not Lycavorian at bay when it came to their men. Having Lycavorian blood within her, Laren could sense this right away within Sehri and just by instinct alone she made it very clear with her scent that Andro was her brother.

“We’re going to get the General’s wayward children before they get themselves killed.” Andro spoke. “We...”

The bright flash of a teleporter sprang open off to their left and suddenly they were looking at two crates in front of them. Andro’s implant came to life once more with Eirene’s voice.

“Andro, I just had Armen teleport you two crates of the Pralor weapons!” She told him. “Use them well and Fedor says if you get yourself killed he will haunt you for the rest of his natural life.”

Andro smiled at her transmission as the link went dead once more. She apparently did not need for him to reply and they were obviously busy. He pointed to the crates. “Gear up.” He told them. He looked at Dytin. “General I assume you are coming with us.”

Dytin stood a little straighter. “If only so that I can cuff and curse Matum myself for doing something so utterly stupid!”

Andro nodded his head. “Let’s do it.”

SCIENCE STATION 489 LOWER ASTROMETRIC RESEARCH DECK 2

His eyes opened slowly as the cryo sleep gas began to bleed away and then he was sitting up slowly in the portable cryo bed chamber. His head appendages twitched slightly in the coolness of the air and he could hear the air circulators beginning to cycle faster as more of the chambers opened. This deck and the one above and below him had been tied into the portable Scourge power core that had been lying dormant and waiting for the command to bring the chambers to full readiness. Whatever had happened, the computer had detected some breach of the security measures they had left in place.

The Scourge Holy Elite swung his legs over the side of the Cryo bed and stretched his lean, muscular form by extending his four fingered hands and arms above his head. It had been six thousand years since he had been awake, and he hated Cryo sleep. His name was Dalet Nulai and he was among the most senior of Scourge Holy Elites within their entire empire, and certainly one of the oldest alive at nearly thirty-five thousand years of age. He had fought in nearly all of the Second Pralor War and was among the few Scourge Holy Elites to be able to boast that he had singlehandedly killed a Praetorian warrior. More than one in fact.

“Computer, status?” He spoke the command as he placed his feet on the cool floor.

{Multiple Security Breaches detected. Decks 12, 19, 24, 29 and 32. Main Engineering Core has been brought online and is currently operating at 43 percent power output. Detecting multiple life forms within Engineering.}

The mechanical voice replied from the many internal speakers all around this area of the Pralor Station. Every Pralor station that was left intact had a similar contingent of Scourge warriors and one Holy Elite to lead them left onboard in order to keep the station secure. All of them in Cryo Sleep, waiting for the moment when they would be awakened and called to do their duty once more. Stations such as these, while many had never been returned to once taken, were treasure troves of knowledge and data that the Scourge might need one day and they were treated as such. Each also had a Scourge computer to monitor and run the Cryo Chambers and however many decks needed to house the chambers. It was usually between two and five decks that were needed to house the chambers and all of the Scourge equipment.

“Numbers?” Dalet asked as he saw his Scourge Elites beginning to rise from their beds and move to storage equipment lockers set up nearby.

{Main station sensor grid is still offline. Many of the areas are still dark. Active Power Draw has only been routed to two landing bays and engineering at this time. The remaining station is still operating at the lowest settings possible.}

“Life support has been activated?” Dalet asked.

{Affirmative. Life support is active station wide.}

Unlike most species when awoken from Cryo sleep, Scourge could recover very quickly from the after affects and were ready to go into action within minutes, not hours. Dalet pulled open the small locker and began to pull his equipment from inside.

“Lifeform analysis?”

{Sensor readings are intermittent. Lockdown protocols are in place but I have detected Darastrixi life forms as well as several minor species. Lycavorian. Elven. Vampiric and several of unknown origin. Physical composition indicates they have been altered in some manner.}

“Altered how?” Dalet asked.

{Unknown at this time. Internal Sensor access is extremely limited. Attempting to merge sensor streams. Warning. Warning. Pralor life signs detected. Pralor life signs detected.}

This brought Dalet up short and he lifted his head toward the ceiling. “Pralor?” He asked in surprise. “That is not possible. The Pralor people are extinct. We destroyed them.”

{Sensor analysis confirmed. Detecting one Pralor life sign as well as... error. Error. Recalibrating secondary sensors. Analysis is confirmed. Now detecting multiple life forms with Pralor DNA. Sub Species Lycavorian all have Pralor DNA within them.}

“Confirm that!” He snapped.

{Analysis is confirmed. Multiple life forms all registering Pralor DNA Base Code within their DNA strands.}

“But they are not Pralor? They are sub species?” Dalet spoke.

{Affirmative}

“Hypothesis as to how this occurred?”

{Unable to present hypotheses. Data not complete and sensor access is limited to portable units now. I have now been locked out of all sensor controls.}

“Not complete?” Dalet hissed. “How is that possible?”

{Unable to access secure database. Clearance level is not sufficient.}

“I am a Scourge Holy Elite Dalet Nulai, Administrator to the Queen Mother!” Dalet snarled. “Now unlock the databases!”

{Unable to comply. Insufficient Security Clearance.}

Dalet swore under his breath as he began to pull on his uniform and weapons. “Where is the nearest group of intruders to our current location?”

{Deck twenty-four, starboard section thirteen. Three Darastrixi contacts. They appear to be moving for Engineering but their movement pattern is erratic. It appears as if they are unfamiliar with this station}

“They do not know the station as we do.” Dalet spoke. “I want them taken first. I wish to question them as to why they are here. Dispatch a squad from the Deck Four chambers immediately.”

{Issuing order}

“Status of communications?” Dalet asked. “I want to call for reinforcements and the access codes for secure data storage.”

{Unable to comply. All access to communications relays have been disabled by unknown jamming signals and Pralor Security Algorithms.} The computer voice answered. {Do you wish to deploy emergency communications buoy?}

“Negative!” Dalet snapped. “I will find out for myself what is going on.”

{Helios Squad reports they are moving to intercept Darastrixi intruders.}

“Excellent.” Dalet spoke as he turned to face the Scourge Elite who was his Second in Command. “We will proceed to their location as soon as we are ready.”

SCIENCE STATION 489
MURANO’S TEAM
MAIN ENGINEERING
DECK 32 SECTION 9

“Scourge!?! Here?” Ridor gasped. “You’re shitting us!”

Murano shook his head with a slight smile at Deion in reaction to Ridor’s outburst. “No, I am not shitting you.” He answered. “That is not something I would shit you about.”

“Papa?” Mari asked from beside Deion now. “That is what...”

Murano nodded his head. “Yes, we all felt it too.” He answered her knowing what she was going to ask.

Mari shuddered inwardly and pressed closer to Deion’s powerful frame for comfort. It was the most malevolent thing she had ever felt in her lifetime and it sent chills through her body.

“We haven’t finished loading out all of the equipment Androcles and you wanted us to take Murano.” Kalis spoke now. “Daio and I estimate another twenty-five minutes at least before we get it all!”

Murano shook his head. “We do not have the time any longer so we will make what we have work! Zero Option has been instituted and now it is time for us to leave. Send over whatever you can in the next exchange and then prepare to set the charges to destroy everything else.” He told them turning to Mari. “Mari, can you and Eirene remotely monitor the station’s systems from your P9s?”

Mari nodded her head quickly. “Yes.” She answered instantly. “We are tied into all of the station’s command systems via Praetorian Algorithms I wrote over the last week. We can control every portion of the station.”

“Then disconnect from the main frame and begin monitoring all of the internal camera and biometric systems within four decks of us.” Murano said. “Any unknown lifesigns are to be treated as Scourge and avoided and I don’t want them sneaking up on us. And purge whatever footprint you and Eirene have left in the main computer since being connected.” Mari nodded and grabbed Eirene’s hand to move back to their consoles. Murano turned then to Ridor. “Pull Cowen and Sherice back to our location.” He ordered. “Then secure whatever Intelligence data you can. Deion and I are going to sweep the beginning of our route back. We will be no more than a few hundred meters from here at any given time. Hurry Ridor. We do not have much time before they begin to make their way here.”

Deion watched Ridor move back into the hidden cache room and then he looked at Murano. “Should we split up Murano?” He asked. “Mari and the others...”

Murano placed his hand on Deion’s shoulder firmly and looked at him. His fingers curled around the back of his neck and he smiled at him. “You have made my daughter happier than I have ever seen her Deion Leonidas.” He spoke. “I know you have turned her. I can see it in her eyes and her actions.”

“Murano we were going to...” Deion began to speak but Murano shook his head.

“No.” He spoke stopping Deion’s words. “I thought at first that I would be upset over this because of what you are. I am not. Mari is also Praetorian Deion my boy, you know this.”

Deion nodded his head. “Yes.”

“She does not have our experience and skill Deion.” Murano told him. “These are things we will need to teach her, you and I, your brothers and father. Her mother. I also know she will be more wolf in her actions and attitude. This does not frighten me either. What we need to do is allow her to do what she does better than anyone and that is her skill with computers. We must push back our need to protect her and let her do her job, for she is that good.”

Deion looked at him. “Yes she is.”

Murano nodded his head. “Then let us do ours.” He said.

Deion nodded his head confidently and smiled. The knowledge that Murano did indeed approve of Mari now being wolf was a great sense of relief within him. He did not know how Murano would act when he discovered this. That he came to this knowledge all on his own told Deion that he had indeed turned a corner of his life and allowed himself to learn and embrace new things. He could feel Mari's happiness within him as she had heard everything her father had said and he pulsed her with his love. His sisters Nara and Eliani had taught her well in so short a time for he felt Mari pulse him back with her female aura and it was powerful and controlled.

Murano tugged on his arm and motioned to the cache room. "Deion, let us get different weapons. We will need to become familiar with them, for once your brother and father see what they can do I think they will become very popular."

"Sounds like a plan." Deion said. "Then what?"

"Then we must make our way back to Deck 19 and our ships." Murano told him. "That will be the tricky part."

SCIENCE STATION 489

MATUM'S TEAM

"...Lost again Major Matum." The junior officer spoke from behind Matum as they came to the intersection in corridors. In the dimly lit hallways everything seemed to be the same and no identifying marks were on the walls or deck as they were on Darastrixi stations.

Matum glared at the junior officer for only a second as he looked at his data pad. "There are no identifying signatures!" He spat. "Who builds their stations without deck numbers?"

"Here!" The second Sand Strider hissed from the wall. "Deck Twenty-Four, Section Thirteen. The markers are faint so they must be light based. Without full power to the station they must be on top of to see them."

Matum nodded as he tapped on his data pad. "That puts us eight decks below the main Engineering section. There is an elevator forty meters this way..." He spoke motioning with his hand. "It will take us directly to that deck and only thirty meters from the entrance into Main Engineering."

"Major, shouldn't we contact Inidra Dytin?" The junior Lieutenant asked. "They must have noticed we are no longer among them by now."

Matum shook his head. "He does not believe these Lycavorians pose a threat. I do not share this belief."

"They are Dahakoan Matum!" The officer pressed. "And you had to have felt that the large one and the obsidian Vrrarhoinpa are Vrelvel Sargti. We all felt that, it was unmistakable and it cannot be ignored."

"Do not always trust in what you feel Lieutenant." Matum spoke as he began moving in the direction of the elevator. "Often times your feelings and emotions can deceive you."

"Perhaps... but they are telling me we made a mistake leaving the landing bay." The Lieutenant spoke. "We should not be out here wandering about blindly. We do not know this station and it has been abandoned for millennia. We do not know what the Pralor people used it for or what could still be on it!"

Matum looked at him as they got closer to the elevator. "We are sand Striders Lieutenant. We do not fear what we do not know. We..."

The sound of the elevator opening in front of them caused Matum to stop talking in surprise and turn to face the wide double doors as they opened fully and an even dozen Disise Kilnsiri stormed off the elevator with their weapons at the ready and aimed at them. Matum and the others did not even have time to bring their weapons up before the Scourge had surrounded them completely.

"Wait!" Matum shouted. "We are Darastrixi and..."

"Drop your weapons!" The lead Disise Kilnsiri from Helios squad barked.

"We are not a threat!" Matum barked. "We..."

The Disise Kilnsiri stepped into the butt stroke of his rifle which caught Matum square in the side of the head. He dropped to his knees, bright stars exploding in his eyes even as his two men were driven to their knees and their weapons were stripped from them and tossed aside out of reach. Matum felt his own rifle wrenched from his hands and his sidearm pulled from its holster and he heard them clatter to the deck a second later. He shook his head to clear his vision and looked up slowly.

“We are Darastrixi!” He rasped out the words once more. “We...”

“Be silent!” The Disise Kilnsiri barked at him. “You are in restricted Scourge space, aboard a quarantined station! Why?”

“We did not know!” Matum gasped. “We were lost and...”

The Disise Kilnsiri pressed the barrel of his rifle to Matum’s temple. “We only need one of you alive to question.” He snarled. “Kill them! This one is the leader.”

“No!” Matum growled as he sprang to his feet, grabbing the barrel of the rifle with his right hand.

What happened next Matum and Dytin would remember for many years to come.

Matum had time to glance into the face of the Disise Kilnsiri and he saw a flash of intense pain in those cruel dark eyes just before gray white Disise blood showered the entire side of his face and neck and all the resistance against his hand holding the rifle disappeared. His eyes glanced down in time to see the silver flash of unknown metal and then the Disise Kilnsiri’s entire arm fell away just above his elbow. Matum’s eyes grew wider still as he saw this, for he had never seen any form of combat besides simulation and training in all his years. The wet, squishy sound that he heard was sickening as the arm fell away and landed with a plopping sound on the deck at their feet. He looked back up at the Disise Kilnsiri with wide eyes and saw the expression of pain and surprise. There was a loud metal upon metal thud and then the Disise Kilnsiri stumbled backwards and reached for his now missing limb in obvious horrific agony. Matum saw the strangely curved bladed weapon imbedded in the steel wall, blood dripping from the arched blades. Matum looked back to the Disise Kilnsiri to see him staggering back several steps, his black eyes wide in shock. Something yank back the double skull with savage force unlike anything he had ever seen and two armored hands gripped either side of that large head and ripped sideways. The sound of the Disise Kilnsiri’s neck snapping was like a gunshot echoing in an enclosed room and then the Disise Kilnsiri’s body fell away to reveal the armored form of the Lycavorian behind him.

It was the Dahakoan.

Androcles Leonidas sensed a power and confidence unlike anything he had ever felt in his life swirling through him now. It was a combination of what all six of them were feeling and it was coursing through them like a firestorm. His senses had never been more alive and acute, every tiny ripple in the air, every single scent, every sound, all of it combining in a kaleidoscope of sensors that were firing in his brain. His normally superior reflexes were beyond everything that he had ever known and the strength that flowed within his four limbs was far beyond that which any normal Lycavorian should have had.

Andro could feel it flowing through Dorian and Laren as well, through Elynth, Ryner and Ladur behind them. Cascading outward and swirling all around them like a powerful tornado.

They could see everything as if they were looking through all six pairs of their eyes at the same time. They took in every angle, every direction, every detail no matter how minor and it blended into one complete vision of the entire space and world around them.

This was the Dahakoan power flowing through him Andro realized, the ability to see all in every aspect and ratio and react to it before it ever happened. Saar appeared in his hand as if by some unnatural force and was exploding from Flatspace before the thought had even left his mind. The Dragon Armor forged blade snapped out with a speed that Androcles never knew he possessed and bit into the neck of the next closest Scourge, severing the triangular head in one smooth motion. There was no pause in motion as the blade sliced cleanly through muscle, bone and sinew and then Scourge Elite’s head fell to the deck with a thundering thud it seemed. In the same instant, the M4X Pralor Particle Magnum appeared in his opposite hand and leveled at the next two Scourge closest to him. The new Pralor weapon thundered in the wide corridor, two magenta colored flashes from the barrel and the heads of the two Scourge erupted in masses of flesh, blood and bone, blowing the bodies of the two Scourge back with enough force to launch their bodies two meters away from him. Andro was turning to the side but knew it was already over, he had seen everything Dorian and Laren had done, every motion and thrust of their weapons with their own eyes. It was a complete and utter clarity that filled him now. Filled all of them.

To Androcles Leonidas it felt as if he had been reborn.

To Laren, it was the most beautiful sensation and emotion she had ever felt in her young life. The love of her parents and brothers was absolute, this Laren had always known, but the love she felt flowing from Androcles and Dorian and Elynth and Ryner for her and Ladur was almost magically in nature. They swam within each other's minds as if floating in a calm ocean of color, seeing and feeling everything. Over the last months, as she began to feel them more strongly, their resonance echoed within her. Shaped her. Taught her all that they knew. Andro's skills in physical combat were unquestioned and while Dorian was still very young and without Andro's experience, his unique and lethal fighting style had already proven deadly. The moment they had touched in the landing bay, Laren knew all that they knew. She could not explain it, and she did not care. Everything about them had filled her being and finally and forever made her whole. Made Ladur whole. This was the skill she unleashed now without a moment's doubt or hesitation.

Androcles had given her the intricately carved Nehtes while sitting in the landing bay listening to his grandfather and Dadrien. It was perfectly weighted for her even though they had never actually met her, only another sign that destiny had always intended for them to come together.

Only the when was ever in question, and Laren Ti'shara had that answer now.

The words "All of us, to the end" were inscribed upon the pommel in the Darastrixi, Vampiric and Lycavorian languages. The two ends were ringed with dazzling sapphire gems and stones and it was from these two ends that the eighteen inch long, slightly curved blades extended and locked into place even as she leaped without thought into the fray, Dorian's Shi Viska exploding from Flatspace and then braced for her use. It was not something that had even formed in her mind when Dorian dropped to one knee and lifted his Shi Viska towards her lithe body. Laren was already in motion when she saw the shield and she used the powerful muscles in her legs to propel her up and forward, tucking in a tight ball as she executed a flip in mid-air and came down between two of the Disise Kilnsiri. The Nehtes flashed left and right, and both Disise Kilnsiri began screaming in agony as their legs were chopped from underneath them. Blood erupted from their now crippled legs as they went down and showered the sides of Laren's shoulders and neck. She didn't hesitate and lifted the Nehtes once more, one end of it retracting into a single sided weapon and she spun to her right, the Nehtes flashing out with savage power. One of the screaming Scourge became silent as his head was removed from his shoulders. Laren spun back in the opposite direction before the first Scourge head had hit the floor and drove the bladed end of her Nehtes in the back of the double skull of the second Scourge she had crippled. The eighteen inch blade exploded out the front of his head between the two black eyes and his screams of agony died with him. Laren's hand filled with one of the Pralor M4X Particle Magnums and two more thundering blasts echoed in the corridor, two of the Disise Kilnsiri in front of her watching as their innards blew out the front of their bodies and splattered over the remaining four of their comrades who were still alive.

At least for another six seconds.

Six seconds was all it took.

Dorian Leonidas embraced it all now, just as his brother had. Embraced it right down to the core of his existence. Even as Laren launched herself from the face of his shield Dorian was whirling around and then throwing his Shi Viska directly behind his Soul Sister. Laren had seen this within him and landed in a crouch just as Dorian's shield reached two of the remaining four Scourge and decapitated them with no effort in the least. The Shi Viska imbedded itself into the wall behind them even as their large heads gave off an eerie plopping sound as they hit the deck at the same time. Dorian was already blurring in motion the millisecond his Shi Viska left his arm, his dual daggers erupting from Flatspace already in his hands. There was a simple reason that vampires were so feared, and their ability to blur was part of that main cause. It made them very nearly impossible to hit with any kind of gunfire and able to dodge almost any blade strike. Only the Lycavorian people had taught themselves how to fight vampires and this secret they had held close to their souls for many reasons. Dorian used those abilities now as he appeared beside the only remaining Scourge who were alive and trying to determine what was happening with wide eyes. His six foot one height put him almost even in height with them.

Almost was more than enough.

The two daggers, curved almost like Androcles' glaives flashed three times in the light of the corridor, each strike a mortal one, and each opening the Scourge flesh to the cool air. Blood splashed wetly across Dorian and reached as far as where Androcles was standing, coating the walls and deck with the slippery grayish color of Scourge blood. Both Scourge dropped their weapons and reached for the now gaping wounds in their necks, even as Dorian ducked down and opened their abdomens to the station air. His finishing move was to flash both blades across their thick legs and completely sever all tendons and ligaments that connect their lower legs to the nerves in their brains. Murano's teachings about their anatomy had been very thorough and with Eliani providing the areas which were most vulnerable, the unsuspecting Scourge really had no chance in the least.

Eleven seconds.

Eleven seconds was all it took to announce that the Dahakoan and the Praetorians had returned to the universe. It was a message that would resonate across the stars for many weeks and months to come.

Dorian looked at Laren as he rose to his feet, Laren shadowing his movements and they looked at Androcles to their front. They watched their Soul Brother lift the M4X in his left hand and smile.

"I love this thing!" Andro barked out.

As Dytin, Matum and the other Darastrixi looked on with wide eyes, Dorian and Laren began laughing as if they were walking in a flowered park and basking in the sunlight.

Dytin Unel had never seen anything quite like it in all of his years of life as he lowered the Particle rifle and stared at the three Dahakoan in front of him. He had of course heard many stories of the Dahakoan and the Praetorians in battle, yet he never believed he would witness such a thing in the course of his life.

Twelve Disise Kilnsiri laid dead upon the deck in less time than it took for him to form the thought to shoot the first one. He lowered the rifle slowly as he moved forward to a wide eyed Matum.

"Matum!" He barked, getting hold of his emotions and shock much more quickly.

Matum tore his eyes from where Androcles stood beside him and looked at his General. "Indira Dytin!" He stammered out the words.

"Can you move boy?" Dytin barked at him once more. "Get up!"

Matum rose to his feet, unsteady for a moment as he watched Andro move to the wall, grip his glaive in one hand and yank the weapon free. He twirled it effortlessly in his hand and then returned it to its place on his harness.

"General..." Matum gasped. "General I must..."

Dytin didn't give him the chance and reclaimed his weapon from the floor and shoved it back into his hands. "We don't have the time to discuss your foolish and prideful attempts to impress!" Dytin growled at him. "Your bumbling about blindly set off some sort of alarm that activated Scourge Cyro chambers in the lower portion of this station! They are waking up now and coming after us!"

Matum's eyes were wide. "I did not know!" He hissed.

Androcles was in his face now and he stared at Matum with a disgusted expression. "No, you did not know! And that makes you a fool!" Andro shouted into his face. "Know that your actions have put my people and your people in grave danger Major." Andro snarled at him. "If any one of them is taken from me because of what you have done, if my sepa svihelen is taken from me because of your actions, I will insure that you die a very long and very painful death." (Soul family)

"I do not answer to..." Matum began to shout back when he felt the fingers close around his throat and his body was slammed against the bulkhead with no regard for his pain. His own eyes grew wide in fear as he was lifted off the deck a good twelve inches and then he saw those azure colored orbs staring at him. The bright blue color was saturating the entire pupil, making it seem as if his eyes were glowing. Matum's eyes darted to the side and he saw Laren's eyes were identical, as were the brother's eyes. Glowing orbs of a power he did not have and would never understand.

"You will do as I say!" Androcles roared into his face. "Or I will leave you here to die with these pigs surrounding you! Do I make myself clear?"

Matum's own hands were clenched around Androcles' wrist but he knew without question that he would never break the hold that hand had on his throat. He nodded his head quickly, smart enough to know that he was more than overmatched. "Yes." He said clearly.

Andro released his throat immediately and stepped back. "We have to move!" He spat. "They will come to investigate why these Kilnsiri have not reported in, if they are not already on the way!" He looked at Dorian. "Fervon, you and Ryner take point, Laren and Ladur in the center with the General and his men, Elynth and I will bring up the rear. Go now!"

Dorian didn't even blink and was already turning, Ryner moving up beside his Bonded brother as they headed down the corridor the same way they had come.

Andro reached up and tapped his jaw, activating his implant. "Murano, we are out of time!" He spat. "We leave now!"

"We are already moving!" Murano answered.

"Deni?" Andro barked next.

"Just getting to the bay now!" Denali answered instantly.

"Pull KertaGai and the others from the control center!" Andro ordered as he began to follow Laren and Ladur. "Tell Normya to leave her STRIKER! I want everyone on the same ship!"

"Done!" Denali answered.

SPARTA'S WRATH

"...Over a hundred of them now! One hundred and... wait... twelve just disappeared!" The elven woman at the sensor station barked out. "Here!" She said pointing to her large sensor monitor. It had a partial schematic of the station up.

Armen stood beside her and nodded his head. -Those are Scourge lifesigns. And the twelve you just lost are now dead. Androcles and the others have killed them- He spoke almost calmly as he pointed to the monitor. -This is where Androcles was going to intercept the three Darastrixi who wandered off. Please inform Androcles of what you have Senior Lieutenant. Give him numbers and direction-

The elven woman nodded and typed furiously on her console, bringing up the COM channel of Androcles' team, and beginning to relay the information.

-Tactical Officer- Armen spoke loudly as he turned. -Begin countdown on Zero Option if you would. Inform Alpha Nine and Thirteen they have twenty-two minutes to complete the download-

"Acknowledged!"

-Weapons Officer, prep forward missile tubes with ZMF Mark 22s if you would- He ordered.

"How many sir?"

-How many forward missile launchers do we have WEPS? - Armen asked him.

The Lycavorian's eyes grew a little wider. "Yes sir!" He exclaimed. "Loading all twenty-four forward missile tubes with ZMF Mark 22s!"

-Set impact coordinates that I am transmitting- Armen spoke as he sent the coordinates to the Weapons Officer's station via his neural pathways.

The Weapons officer turned back to Armen. "This is... sir we are targeting them all at one location."

-Yes that is correct-

“Sir that many Mark 22s impacting in one location will cause...” The man began to speak.

-It will cause a localized zero matter anomaly. Essentially a miniature Zero Matter Black Hole. I have calculated that we will need to be at least two million kilometers away when it forms or we will be dragged into the anomaly as well- Armen spoke. –Helm, prepare to come to course 3976.4 and engage sub light engines at full when I give the order-

“Helm aye!”

The Tactical Officer moved up next to the Weapons Officer since they were friends and he had no idea what Armen had just said. “What did he mean?” He asked his friend.

The Weapons Officer met his eyes. “Twenty four ZMF missiles targeted at the same location will cause a Zero Matter Black Hole to form. Basically, anything with two million kilometers of that station is going to die. Including the station.”

-Communications Officer, stand by to transmit a warning message to the Darastrixi ship holding position off the station. Inform them that we will be destroying the station using Zero Matter missiles and if they do not wish to be dragged into the anomaly they should withdraw to a safe distance. If they do not follow those directives then I will put two Quantum Matter Pulse bursts through their hull and force them to retreat-

“Ready Armen!” The COM officer declared.

-Very well. Send the message COMS- Armen ordered. –And patch into their COM channels and prepare to intercept them-

The COM officer looked at him. “Why sir?” She asked.

-My historical databases indicate that the Darastrixi are a very prideful species. In many ways they were like the Pralor people. They do not like to be told that they are inferior. If our message does not convince them then I will intercede directly. I estimate a nineteen point three percent chance they will take our word for it-

“Sucks to be them.” The human woman commented as she worked her consoles.

PREMONITION

“...Master Chief! We’re down two pilots so I need you to spool us up and monitor power levels until they get back!” Kameka called from the cockpit.

She sat in Ne’Veha’s co-pilot’s seat and her hands were flying across the three body hugging consoles. Meka heard her implant cackle and then the huff of exertion as Master Chief Joe Ranor was sliding down the short five step ladder into the engine room.

“I’m on it Commander!” Joe’s voice echoed in her ear. “Two minutes!”

“You have ninety seconds before people start pouring up our ramp!” Meka told him. “And they will be running Master Chief!”

“Shit! We’ll be ready ma’am!” His voice answered her.

LANDING BAY 19

Denali had his finger stuck in his right ear as they exited the elevator and began moving down the short corridor into the cavernous landing bay.

“Again!” Denali barked as he skidded to a halt. “Give it to me again!”

“One hundred and thirty-three left!” The Tactical Officer’s voice echoed in his implant one more time. “They are coming at you from two different directions! The Smaller group is five decks below you and moving up quickly. The Second group is larger and following Prince Androcles down.”

“Where is Murano’s team?” Deni barked the question.

“Entering the bay now on opposite side!” Murano’s voice cut in.

Denali looked up and could just make out the mass of bodies moving from far across the landing bay. It had to be at least three thousand meters across the bay and he could tell they were running full out.

“Prince Denali! The two freight elevators down the east corridors!” The Tactical Officer barked over the COM. “It appears as if they are headed for both of them and will converge on the deck beneath you and then come up in them!”

“Where’s my brother?” Deni barked.

“His team is just entering Bay 19 from the south west!” The TAC Officer replied.

All of them heard the screeching sound of steel as it twisted and snapped in the distance and then the landing bay lit up as multicolored lights began to come on and power across the entire bay began to rise.

“What was that?” Sadi screamed from up in the Control Center of the landing bay.

Denali looked up at the clear glass partition of the Bay Control Center forty meters above the landing bay itself.

“They appear to be Internal Pressure Alarms of some sort.” The TAC officer’s voice replied.

“Androcles just closed one approach into this bay!” Murano commented. “We must do the same. Denali the one you came up!”

Denali nodded without speaking. “Aradace with me!” He barked to his Bonded sister as he turned and began to run back the way they had come.

Murano looked at Aviel and the other Darastrixi, all of them still in somewhat of a state of shock.

“Arduri, Eliani, get them onto the ship and secure them!”

“We can fight!” Aviel protested.

Murano shook his head and looked at Eliani. “Not this enemy, no.” He stated plainly.

Eliani knew instantly what he was talking about and she nodded. She turned to Jomann quickly and leaned up to kiss his cheek. “Be safe my love.” She whispered before she turned back and took Aviel’s arm gently. “Koppentotz Aviel, please. This is not going to be a fight that we want to be in the middle of, trust me.”

Nahko took Aviel’s other arm and still holding Robati’s hand she helped Eliani and the blue skinned female towards the strange looking ship in the distance. Murano looked at the half dozen Darastrixi Sand Striders who had not budged and were prepared to do battle. Murano smiled at their courage in the face of the unknown. He had heard many things about the Darastrixi Sand Striders and all of it was excellent.

“Who is in command while your General is gone?” Murano asked.

“I am Praetorian.” The senior Darastrixi stepped forward.

“You know who I am?” Murano asked.

The Darastrixi shook his head. “Not your name, but what you are.” He answered. “We have heard stories of Praetorian battles with the Disise. We would be honored to fight beside you.”

Murano nodded his head. “Well this could definitely spill into the landing bay. I need you to set up a defensive perimeter around the ramp of our ship. They are going to try and stop us from leaving. We can’t let them.”

“Understood.”

Murano looked at Sehri who was still somewhat wide eyed at the pace of things but she was remaining calm due mainly to the connection she had with Sadi and the others. “Sehri, go with them and shield the rear of the ramp. None can get through. Even one of these monsters could do untold damage if they got onto our ship.”

Sehri nodded instantly and looked at the Darastrixi. “This way!” She barked before she began to sprint towards the PREMONITION.

Murano turned and looked at Mari and Eirene who were both kneeling and working furiously on their P9s. “Mari... can you slow them down?” He asked.

Mari shook her head. “No.” She exclaimed. “We have the station completely locked down! Nothing should be working without our bioscans! They must have some sort of override device! Something built by us to unlock any lockdown we try. They can’t stop us but we can’t stop them either.”

Murano nodded his head and looked at Deion and Jomann. “They have had enough years with our technology to do quite a bit.” He said. “That’s it then. Both of you on the ship. Keep trying from there but you need to get out of the bay.”

“Father...” Mari began to protest.

“No!” Murano barked at her. “This is a fight you cannot be part of!”

“Father there are over a hundred of them!” Mari complained.

Murano nodded his head. “And if we have to worry about you and Eirene we will be distracted. I know what you are daughter, but you do not have the training to be part of this! I will not lose you after just discovering you! I won’t! And I do not wish to explain to your mother how I allowed that to happen.”

Deion moved up to her and pulled her into his arms. He leaned over and nuzzled her cheek and ear causing Mari to sigh wistfully in delight as his aura swept around her. “Go Mari.” He said to her. “We will take care of these fools and then follow.”

Mari looked up into his dark brown eyes and could not help the emotions of love and adoration from coursing through her. “If either one of you gets hurt I swear mother and I will haunt you forever!” She exclaimed as she turned to look at Murano.

“Of course.” Murano said as she stepped up to him and hugged him tightly.

“Father you...” Mari began but his finger on her lips stopped her words.

“Do not fear for us Mari.” He said. “But whatever you and Eirene can do to perhaps help would be much appreciated.”

Mari nodded her head, then turned and grabbed Eirene’s hand. “We can do more if we plug into the PREMONITION’S computer system! Come Eirene.”

Deion turned and looked at Fedor and the others. Ridor, Kalis, Daio, Sherice and Cowen were ready and he knew it. Murano watched Mari sprint off for a few seconds more and then turned back to them. “Cowen, you and Sherice get on one of these equipment lifts towards the back of the bay. It should give you more than enough clearance to fire freely. The common Scourge warrior that we saw at the end of the war had a triangular shape head with two eyes. If you see one of these creatures with four eyes and you have a shot, you must take it Cowen. That is a Scourge Holy Elite. They are the core. Without him, the others will splinter.”

Cowen hefted his sniper rifle and nodded. “If I see one, he will die!” He said.

“Go!” Murano told them. He looked around quickly and then back to the others. “Ridor, you and Kalis get the rest of your team set up among the equipment crates. We will try to hold them in the corridor as long as possible, but it won’t last. Any who get past us will belong to you, Jeru and the other dragons.”

Ridor and Kalis nodded their heads. “Prisoners?” He asked.

Murano shook his head. “The Scourge do not surrender and we don’t want prisoners.” He told them. “If they make it past us, kill them.”

“Done.” Ridor replied as he hefted his Particle rifle and began moving off with Kalis and the others.

Murano turned to Jomann, Deion and Lisisa. “Lisisa, Nara is coming down to be with you but you must remain in the second line with the dragons and Nara. You are Praetorian Mage’s but it will distract Denali and Deion if you are in close battle. You and Nara direct the dragons and Ridor’s team from upon Jeth and Mayla and allow them to draw from your echo and resonance. Until there is time to train you more that is all you can do right now. Again, anything that makes it past us will fall to you. You will need to kill them quickly Lisisa.”

Lisisa nodded her head as she began moving for where Jeth sat on the deck. “I understand Murano.” She said as she leaped easily onto Jeth’s back and into the saddle. “We will handle it.”

Murano felt charged with energy, just as the others did. He had felt the massive surge of Etheric energy within both Androcles and Dorian during their brief fight in the corridor above them and a slightly less intense surge from Laren. Murano had once thought that he would never face the Scourge in battle again. He had hoped he had seen the last of them for all time. He should have known better than to believe that, but at least now he would rejoin battle with them in a manner befitting a Praetorian. He would do battle with them with fellow Praetorians all around him and this made him swell with confidence and pride.

He turned when he felt Androcles and the others approach and he saw them. Grayish blood covered many spots on their armor and from experience Murano knew just how close they had come to the Scourge. His head jerked around when he heard a similar screeching and tearing noise and he knew then that Denali and Aradace had sealed the elevator that he and the others had come up on.

“They are gathering by the freight elevators one deck beneath us.” Andro spoke now. “Do they think we will allow them to assault this bay uncontested Murano?”

“I don’t think they know how many of us there actually are.” Murano spoke now. “Armen can scan them from SPARTA’S WRATH but Mari and Eirene have locked out all internal systems to include sensors. They are using some sort of bypass device to move between decks but they cannot tell how many of us there are. Did you see...?”

Andro shook his head. “No. I felt him though. He was close.”

“They are the conduit to the Queen.” Murano said. “That is why you felt him. He was probably going to meet with those he sent to intercept the Darastrixi.”

“He won’t like what he finds.” Andro stated almost casually. To anyone else it would have seemed the most insane statement but after his time with both Martin and then Androcles, Murano knew it was the laconic nature of the Leonidas family when in the face of the unknown. It was not that they were unafraid, it was how they dealt with that fear that set them above so many others.

“They appear as I told you?” Murano asked.

Androcles and Dorian both nodded now. “Somewhat different in the shapes of their heads but yes.” Dorian answered.

“They have evolved since you last fought them Praetorian Murano.” Laren spoke now as she came up between her Soul Brothers. “The Holy Elites more so.”

Murano nodded his head. “I thought as much. We will need to sit down and compile everything we have discovered and cross reference it with what you and your people can tell us Laren. Your insight will be key to me.”

Laren nodded her head. “Of course. And now?”

Murano lifted his Saberstaff in one hand and the particle magnum in the other. “Now we fight.” He stated. “None can survive to speak about us being here. None of them.”

NINE MINUTES EARLIER DECK TWENTY-FOUR SECTION THIRTEEN

Dalet Nulai was quiet as he stared at the bodies of his men in the now empty corridor. He was cursing under his breath as his personal squad moved among the bodies insuring that none of them still lived. The armored form of his First filled his vision and he looked up, bringing his mind back to the present.

“All of them are dead Holy One.” The Scourge spoke.

“They left their Cryo Chambers without putting their armor on!” Dalet hissed angrily.

“They wished to intercept the intruders before they escaped.” The First said in defense of the dead men.

Dalet knelt next to one of the headless bodies. “A bladed weapon was used here.” He stated. “There is no known metal substance that can cut through our armor! They were fools to begin the search without their full gear!” He placed his hand on the chest of the body. “Brave fools, but fools nonetheless.”

“There is particle scoring on the walls Holy One.” The First said.

Dalet turned back around and looked at him. “Pralor weapons?”

“They are the only known species to have built such weapons.” The First answered.

Dalet closed his eyes and shook his head. “I sense something else as well.” He said softly. “Something powerful and intelligent.”

“Holy One?” The First questioned.

“A presence.” Dalet continued as he stepped gingerly among the bodies. “Three such presences. Incredible power and focus. It is... it cannot be!” He gasped.

“Holy One?” The First asked once more.

“Praetorians!” Dalet gasped as he turned to face his First again and his eyes opened. “I sense Praetorians on this station!”

“Holy One, we destroyed the Praetorians.” He stated. “We butchered the last of them only a hundred years into our second war with them. That... that cannot be what you feel!”

“But it is!” Dalet gasped. “It is different somehow, but I do feel them! Their echo is faint, like they are somehow hiding themselves within the Etheric realm, but I can still sense them.”

“Holy One are you certain?” The First gasped now unable to believe this information.

Dalet nodded his head slowly. “Only Praetorians are capable of killing our kind with such precision First. They got off no warning to us. Darastrixi cannot do this.” He stated waving his hands over the bodies.

“How can that be possible Holy One?” The First asked him stepping closer to his figure. “We searched for over three centuries for any Pralors that may have escaped our purge of them. We found nothing.”

“The computer AI, before it lost the connection to the internal sensors, it stated it had detected one full blooded Pralor and many others with Pralor blood in them.” Dalet spoke. “All of them were on this station.”

The First shook his head. “I do not see how Holy One.” He told him.

Dalet lifted his wrist and activated his link the main core of his computer. “Do you have any access to the internal sensors?” He asked.

The small screen on his forearm blinked several times. {Negative. All of the main and secondary systems have been locked out using rotating Pralor Algorithms. All I have remaining are the small Bio dampeners placed throughout the station.}

“Can you use those to tell me where they have gone?” Dalet asked. “Check Bio readings and changes in the decks of the ship! Do it now!”

{Stand by. Scanning.} The computer answered him. {I am detecting Activated Bio Dampeners in successive order indicates that intruders have all moved to Landing Bay 19.}

Dalet looked at his First. “That is where their ships will be.” He stated. “Order all of our forces to converge on this Landing Bay 19! Do it now!”

{Transmitting new orders!}

Dalet looked at his First. “We will return to them.” He said. “For now let us capture those who are responsible.”

SPARTA’S WRATH

“Armen, I have that Darastrixi transport!” The COM officer barked as she turned her head to look at him.

-Kameka’Caleo your status please? – Armen spoke from where he stood.

“I have extended the radius of our local jamming field Armen but Sadi and Ne’Veha say the moment we engage our engines from standby mode it will drop.” Kameka’Caleo answered.

-Understood. A few moments is all I need- Armen answered.

“Well, if they are looking for them, they won’t see them now until the field comes down.” Kameka answered him.

-Thank you- Armen turned and looked at his COM officer. -Transfer to main holo disc. Quickly now, for Androcles and the others are about to engage and we do not need this distraction now-

“Activated! Go!”

MAJOR DARROD’S ASSAULT TRANSPORT

“No longer in the landing bay!” The co-pilot shouted as he turned his head.

Darrodd came up behind him. “What do you mean no longer there?” He snarled. “We are about to breach!”

“Their lifesigns have moved!” The man answered. “They were moving up but we have lost them. Something is jamming our sensors now. Something from within that station!”

“Some sort of localized jamming field!” Darrodd remarked. “It has to be.”

“What has that kind of power sir?” The co-pilot asked. “No ground based jamming device that we know of can completely block a signal.”

“We are not dealing with...” Darrodd began to speak but another alarm cut off his words and the co-pilot reached above him.

“Our COM system is being overridden!” He barked. “Someone is taking over our channels! I’m receiving a message!”

“A message!” Darrodd exclaimed “From who?”

Darrodd spun around as the small communications disc on the opposite console next to the engineer’s station came alive with the face and upper body of a strange looking, orange hued eyed figure.

-...Darastrixi transport ship currently about to attempt to breach the landing bay on Pralor Science Station 489. I am Commander Armen. Autonomous Avatar of Crown Prince Androcles Leonidas of the United Lycavorian Union and the commander of this vessel. If you continue your attempts to breach the landing bay you will force me to fire on your ship and destroy you. I ask that you respond within the next twenty seconds or I will order your transport terminated-

Darrodd immediately stabbed down on the communications panel. “I am Major...!” He began to shout angrily.

-I know exactly who you are Major Darrodd of the Darastrixi Home Fleet- Armen told him without pausing. -This will not change the outcome of your situation should you choose to ignore my message-

“There are Darastrixi aboard that station!” Darrodd barked. “I intend to land and retrieve them!”

-General Dytin and those with him will not be on the station for much longer- Armen answered him. -We have initiated a core overload of the station’s internal power matrix. In eighteen minutes the station and everyone on it will be destroyed. I insist you pull back your transport unless you wish to perish with however many Scourge remain alive after my people have departed-

“I do not take orders from you!” Darrodd growled at the image of Armen. “General Dytin and those with him are criminals of the Darastrixi Empire and you will hand them over to me! Then you will power down your ship and prepare to be boarded.”

-Major we are not in Darastrixi space and therefore any authority you think you may have does not exist- Armen explained. -And there is nothing that would ever convince me to allow you to board my ship. I have given you the only warning you shall receive-

“Who are you?” Darrodd barked. “Where do you come from? We do not recognize your ship class! I want answers!”

-What you want is of no concern to me- Armen told him. -As I said, I have given you the only warning you will receive. When the station overloads, everything within half a million kilometers will be destroyed as well, including your three ships. We will already be gone. The choice is yours Major-

The communications ended abruptly just as Darrod was going to say something and his eyes grew wide at the display of incredible insubordination.

“Major!” The pilot yelled now. “Orders!”

Darrod looked out the view window and saw that they were about to slip into the Emergency Bay.

“Major!” The pilot screamed once more turning his head.

“Abort!” Darrod shouted. “Abort the breach!”

The transport yanked sharply to starboard and began to pull away from the massive station.

“Back to the ship!” Darrod snarled angrily. “Back to the ship now!”

SPARTA'S WRATH

“...Are changing course and returning to their ship.” The TAC Officer announced.

“More bluster than balls.” The Elven Helm Officer commented, drawing chuckles from many on the bridge crew.

-Crude but accurate- Armen stated with almost a humorous tone in his voice.

“Armen!” The COM officer barked out. “We just received the signal from Alpha Nine and Thirteen. They have initiated the reaction.”

Armen nodded. -Very well. Now the countdown begins-

SCIENCE STATION 489

Murano lowered the particle magnum after firing into the ceiling four times and taking out more than half of the light fixtures. Sparks flew from the destroyed units and smoke began to drift lazily down in to the wide corridor.

“Better for us.” Murano stated as he saw Andro looking at him.

“Why don’t we just short out the elevator?” Deion asked from where he stood. “Drop it down like we did the others?”

“We don’t know if that will kill all of them and we have to be sure.” Murano answered him as he returned to his spot beside Deion.

“Blowing up the station will damn sure kill them all.” Deion continued.

“But how many will escape if we leave and realize the station is going to be destroyed?” Murano told him.

“Anse Murano!” Deion exclaimed. “You are just a bundle of good news!”

Murano chuckled softly as the levity of the moment hit him. It was that laconic nature again, using humor to mask and control the fear they all felt. It appeared as if even the youngest of Martin’s children possessed this skill, or perhaps because it was how they were raised, but whatever the reason, it served its purpose as Murano felt the tension among all of them lift just a little bit. All of them were Praetorians in this corridor, connected in such a way that they were able to sense each other’s emotions to an extent. They were feeding off of each other and this made Murano very happy. This is what Praetorians of his time often did when facing battle together and knowing that all of them were family made this even more powerful now Murano knew. They would fight and die for one another as only siblings could.

Laren had been watching the numbers on the door controls falling and when it reached their level she gripped her Nehtes tighter. "They are here!" She rasped out the words.

The humor fell away and what took its place were seasoned Spartan combat warriors all. She may have been Darastrixi, but Laren Ti'shara shared the memories of her Soul Brothers just as they shared hers and she knew all that they knew. Everyone understood this and recognized it for what it was. Something they could not explain but accepted as destiny and fate.

The doors opened to the two large freight elevators and nearly a hundred Scourge warriors filled the corridor then, all of them in armor of some sort and carrying weapons. That they did not come out firing was something that took all of them by surprise and this made it so they did not fire initially. They watched the Scourge take up positions covering one another since there was no actual cover in the freight corridor. It was a surprising move yes, and an even bigger surprise when the lone Scourge stepped into the center of the corridor and held up his hands. His armor was a different color, a darker gray than the others and he had no visible weapons, but there was no mistaking the four black eyes on his head.

"We do not wish to fight!" Dalet barked out the words.

"My ass!" Murano muttered under his breath causing Deion to look up at him with a lopsided grin. "He's stalling for time so that the elevators go down and pick up the rest of his men."

"Let him stall." Deion whispered back with a grin. "When the time comes it won't matter one bit."

Murano met his eyes and smiled. "No, it will not."

"He is an Ioth Kilnsiri!" Laren hissed the words vehemently as the hazy corridor began to clear somewhat in front of them.

They could see nearly three or four dozen Scourge warriors along the sides taking cover behind whatever they could find that had been left in the corridors. The lone figure became clearer as he approached slowly with his hands held out in front of him. His double skull was no longer hidden under the helmet which he had dropped to the deck. His head was in the shape of a delicately curved triangle, with two black eyes on each upper layer of his skull. Each side of his head had two, small finger like appendages that twitched from time to time. This made him very different from the simple Scourge soldiers they had been fighting for they did not have these appendages.

Androcles turned his head to the left slightly and looked at Laren on his right. She held the Nehtes in a defensive posture, extended under her arm out to the side. Her body armor was splashed with the grayish Scourge blood, as was all of their armor. Her bright, multicolored blue eyes were now nearly glowing as were Dorian's and Andro's own eyes, the blue filling nearly all of the pupil. Andro turned his head even more to look back at Murano who was crouching just behind Deion's shoulder. Jomann and Denali occupied the opposite side of the wide corridor and Andro felt pride swell within his chest. Though they had fought their way here through a huge portion of the station, none of them appeared winded in any way. All of them were splashed generously with Scourge blood, but he saw the set of their eyes and knew they would stand. A quick glance behind them and he saw Elynth, Ryner and Ladur poised by the massive opening into the landing bay, their dragon Armor fully extended and protecting their bodies.

"Murano?" Andro questioned.

Murano nodded his head quickly. "Laren is correct." He replied. "They are the Queen's Guard. Loyal to the core. He is the one who has been driving them. The others are just normal Elites. Soldiers. They look differently but there is no mistaking what they are."

"If you know what I am, then you know that you cannot win!" The voice boomed out causing Andro to turn back and see the Holy Elite stop only fifteen feet from him. "More of my warriors are waking even now. More are coming up to this level. We will overwhelm you by sheer numbers in moments. I am Dalet Nulai and if you surrender to me peacefully, you will all live. I guarantee this to you."

"I know you are a butcher of innocents!" Murano screamed.

"And I know you Praetorian Murano." Dalet spoke slowly, his eyes focusing on Murano. "I did not believe it when I first came to realize it was Pralor people on this station. We thought the Pralor people dead and extinct at our hand. Then I saw what you did to my men who were sent to take the Darastrixi. Then I knew. And your face is known to every Holy Elite Murano, have no doubts about that considering your actions."

All of them could feel the struggle within Murano not to lash out right then but they were impressed with his will and how he held it together. None of them had any idea it was their strength of will and purpose that Murano was drawing on to control his own emotions. As he had discovered since finding Martin, their emotions were the fuel for their power and Murano had been learning every day how to harness that as they did so easily. He discovered it was their love of others and the closeness they shared that allowed them to do this and Murano had begun to embrace that more ever since he discovered Mari.

“Do not mince words monster!” Murano snapped at Dalet.

“The only reason you are not already dead is because of these fine young specimens you have with you Praetorian Murano. We had thought all the Praetorians dead. We thought your people extinct but it appears we were mistaken. My Queen will be most pleased when she discovers that there are more of you.”

Dorian looked at Androcles now. “Is this ugly fuck for real fervon?” He asked in an almost humorous tone of voice. “We’ve been dropping these fuglies all over the station.”

“We were measuring you, young Praetorian.” Dalet spoke once more as his red eyes fell on Dorian. He did not understand the lack of fear within them. He had always instilled fear in others when he faced them down, but he did not sense that within these individuals. The one who had spoken was different, as were the female Darastrixi and the strange blue eyed one. He did not know their species, and while he could sense the Pralor blood flowing within them, they were definitely not Pralor. “You are different from the Praetorians I have fought before, you, the one beside you with the strange eyes and the Darastrixi female, but I have prevailed against them all. It will be no different now I am afraid.”

“Oh really?” Dorian quipped once more. “He’s a cocky tukannupae isn’t he?”

Murano felt the curl of the smile touch the corner of his lips at Dorian’s comment. It was an evil smile that held nothing but malice and death and he felt the surge of power and emotion within all of them and he embraced that now as he never had before. “Trust me when I tell you that you have never fought anything like them.” He spoke loudly from behind Androcles.

Dalet’s four eyes grew wider as he saw the strange metal armor begin to extend and wrap around all of those in front of him. It was engulfing their entire bodies, wrapping over the black and red body armor they already wore. Dalet was fascinated as he watched, never having seen anything like it in his life. He took a slight step back, his hand dropping to where his weapon rested on his belt and he watched as the armor engulfed all of them fully, leaving only parts of their faces exposed. His eyes grew even wider when he saw the one in the middle lift his right hand with the strange looking blade in it. Even in the reflection of the dimly lit corridor he could see Scourge blood on the edges of that weapon. His eyes grew wider still as he watched as shimmering blueish Etheric shields activate somehow, wrapping around all but the old Praetorian and this encased their bodies like a form fitting skin. It was unlike anything he had ever seen. His eyes rose and he looked directly at the strange blue eyes of the one in the middle.

“It was you!” He gasped aloud. “You killed my men!”

“Elynth!” Andro shouted out the word.

“We are ready!” Elynth answered back instantly, the echo of her voice reaching across the landing bay and causing Jeth, Tharua, Aradace and all of their dragons to look at her with shocked expressions. She had spoken words. Actual words, and her voice sounded exactly like it did when she spoke within their minds. They had no time to contemplate this as in the next moment all hell broke loose. They did not see Sarlana smile from within the PREMONITION, for it was her guidance that prepared Elynth and Ryner for when they met Ladur. The moment they touched their Soul Brother, the vocal cords that had lain dormant within her and Ryner sprang to life instantly, filled with the knowledge they already possessed and allowing them to speak from the outset. It was a gift that every dragon among the Union and on Artaaya would soon learn and then pass on to their children in the future to come.

Andro touched the button on the side of the glaive and the curved blades extended. “Let’s dance!” He screamed just before he launched that strange weapon into the air directly at him with insane speed.

Dalet could only watch as that bladed weapon, designed unlike any weapon he had ever seen before, slammed into the head of his First directly between his wide spread eyes. It buried itself nearly eight inches in his First’s skull, Dalet hearing the sickening crunch of bone and the wet sound of flesh parting. Then his First was on the deck at his feet, his eyes open in a lifeless stare, the glaive buried nearly three quarters of the way into his large skull.

“Now!” Elynth screamed out the word, seeing everything within Andro's mind as clearly as if she was thinking it herself.

An instant later, two streams of pure, three thousand degree flame erupted from Ryner and Ladur, followed by one flame tinged stream of super-heated three thousand five hundred degree air. All three of these cones of death shot straight down the corridor at the stunned Scourge with unerring accuracy and absolutely no remorse.

The Scourge soldiers all cringe and ducked out of instinct when seeing the flame and this served to do exactly as Androcles had hoped. It caused them to pause in their actions and seek shelter behind whatever crates remained in the corridor.

Andro was turning away from them even as those streams of flame reached for him. He simply looked at Murano before grabbing his arm.

“Androcles no!” Murano barked as Andro forced him in the other direction.

“Dori! Laren!” Andro snapped. “Do it!”

Murano was struggling against Andro's pull to no avail. “We cannot let them out of the corridor!” He shouted. “We will lose our advantage!”

Andro shook his head. “No!” He snarled. “Our advantage is out there!” He practically heaved Murano up on his shoulder and broke into a run even as Murano watched with shock as those streams of fire and flame tinged superheated air stopped just in front of the Scourge and disappeared. They hadn't reached far enough back to touch the Scourge and Murano was about to scream out once more when Andro opened his thoughts to him in that instant. Murano saw what he was going to do and Murano could do nothing but approve as they raced out of the end of the corridor between Elynth and Ladur, Andro lowering Murano without even stopping his movement and Murano falling into a run beside him. He saw Androcles reach back with his hand as if trying to grasp something and incredibly Murano witnessed the glaive he had thrown tear itself from the head of the Scourge Elite and flash through the air into his armored palm even as they ran.

The moment Androcles gave them the word, Laren lifted her Nehtes in one hand and drove it down into the floor of the corridor just as hard as she could. She channeled all of her power into the blow, directing a massive Etheric burst down through the Nehtes into the deck. She felt Dorian execute a similar move and their Nehtes struck the floor in the same instant, and their glowing eyes watched as the floor heaved upwards, buckling steel plates and then setting them on a collision course with the bunched up Scourge at the end of the corridor. The Etheric wave built up speed and power as it raced at the Scourge, buckling and shattering every floor tile in its path as it cascaded down the corridor.

Dalet could only watch in horror as that blade tore itself from the skull of his First and flashed away. As Dalet turned to watch it he saw it then. A wave of Etheric power, and that wave carried with it millions of pieces of steel in front of it as it ripped the deck apart in its motion. Dalet had expected a move like this by the Praetorian, as it was a standard combat move for them. They would send lances of Etheric power through whatever surface they were on to stun Scourge warriors and give them time to regroup. He and his men had been prepared for such a move, their new armor designed in such a way as to reflect the Etheric power back. What he saw coming at him however was not etheric lances, but tiny slivers of metal traveling at impossible speed. Never in all of his battles with Praetorians had he seen such a move and he had time for only one warning to his men.

“Down!” He screamed at the top of his lungs even as that wave slammed into them.

Dalet was one of the lucky ones, seven of his men getting caught upright in that wave when it smashed into them, lifting their bodies from the deck and tossing them around like so many pieces of trash, while million slivers of steel stabbed into their armor at blinding speed. First one, then another, then another, all of them were shredded to pieces of flesh and blood. Almost as if their bodies were simply torn asunder and disintegrated before his very eyes. Dalet continued to watch as that wave moved past his men and smashed into the elevator doors. He gazed on in awe as the doors were peppered by that same cloud and they too were disintegrated before his very eyes. Then Dalet knew what was going to happen and he was powerless to stop it. The four massive beams that acted as guides for the lifts bringing up the rest of his men were struck by that destructive wave and Dalet could only sit there and watch as those beams were struck with such force that they snapped and curled outward.

Dalet Nulai watched in stunned shock as both of the freight elevators lost all power and began an uncontrolled free fall downward. He could only watch as over fifty of his men were killed outright in the blink of an eye by the impact of the elevators at the bottom of the nineteen deck plunge. Rage filled him then. Pure hate and rage and he whirled around to see the two figures moving back into the landing bay at a sprint. With an unearthly roar of anger and hate Dalet rose to his feet in the smoky corridor and pointed toward the landing bay.

“Kill them!” He screamed out the words. “Kill them all!”

Dalet Nulai did exactly as Androcles Leonidas had hoped he would do.

Praetorian and Dahakoan though he may have been, Androcles Leonidas was still a Spartan and second only to his father in tactical genius. The Scourge did not know them, did not know how they would fight. He quickly determined once the exchange between the Holy Elite and Murano had begun that this Scourge had no idea who he was facing. That would be his downfall.

Andro's father had never been predictable to an enemy in battle and more often than not this was always their advantage. He had learned these lessons from his father well and had used the Etheric connection he had with all of his siblings, Jomann and the members of his team to tell them what he was going to do. They were prepared within seconds. The moment Dorian and Laren cleared the corridor towards the elevators they felt the shudder of the elevators reaching the end of their death fall even nineteen decks up as they were.

They stood perhaps five meters apart, all of them facing the doors into the freight corridor. Laren and Ladur on his right, Dorian and Ryner on his left. Elynth was just behind him, Denali and Aradace on Dorian's left side, while Deion and Jeru were to Laren's right. Murano stood just beside him. Jomann and Soren stood off to the side not because they were not bonded brother, but because Jomann could use his skills far more effectively in a small group. Soren knew this and while they were not bonded together by way of the Etheric realm, they were both brothers in the forge of combat. No matter their species, Jomann and Soren were brothers of a different sense. Both had fought and lost during the Evolli war, on the foul planet of Alba Tau. That place had been the forge. A forge of blood and fire and sweat that had changed so many within the Union. They both had lost something special to them, yet they now had gained something far greater.

The instant the first Scourge cleared the massive double doors in a dead run, Soren launched Jomann into the air above the entrance with a powerful swing of his thick tail. Jomann's tall, powerful body went airborne in a precise trajectory over the top of the doors, the Pralor particle rifle dancing in his hands. Jomann's power was unique, even Murano never seeing the ability to warp time as Jomann did. To them he appeared to be moving at normal speed, but to Jomann himself it was as if everything was moving in slow motion. So clear and pure was his connection that everything came into focus for him.

What Murano did not yet understand fully were how the emotions play a role in this breed of Praetorian. Jomann's love of Eliani and Brendi, so utterly pure and uncontested in any way gave him a clarity of mind that few ever really knew. His devotion to them was complete, honest and flowed throughout his being in such a way that it allowed him to be pure of mind. This emotion and the power of it granted him the ability to slow time around him and act out in order to protect them. As Jomann was launched through the air by Soren's tail, he rotated his body upright, pointed his weapon down and fired seven shots as he rotated over the top of the double doors. Each shot from the particle rifle blew apart the head of a Scourge Elite as they exited the corridor, spreading grayish blood and brain matter across the deck all around them, their bodies coming to immediate halts in their momentum and dropping to the deck, causing their brethren to stumble over their corpses as they followed behind them.

Androcles counted to three slowly in his head and then Saar and Cana erupted from Flatspace and Andro twirled the swords effortlessly in his hands. He waited... feeling the pureness of Dorian and Laren beside him... and then he saw him. He emerged from the freight corridor, his face a mask of rage and hatred and Androcles Leonidas nodded his head.

“Go!” He screamed.

With no hesitation and Spartan war cries that would have made their father proud, the Leonidas family attacked.

SPARTA'S WRATH

“...have engaged Armen!” The Tactical Officer shouted from his station. “Son vada carians! It’s...”

-We can review the battle at a later time TO. We have our own job to do as well- Armen told him even as he stepped in front of him.

The TO nodded and his hands moved across his console. “Yes sir! Alpha Nine and Alpha Thirteen are back aboard the PREMONITION! Princess Sadi and Princess Ne’Veha are back aboard as well and with Commander Caleo they are powering her up! All data we were able to cram into the portable storage units has been teleported over and we took everything Praetorian Murano wanted plus a little more!”

-Status of the core dump into our data banks? – Armen asked.

“That will be complete in seven minutes! The station’s computers were filled to overflowing!” the TO answered.

-Androcles will not let this battle will not last seven minutes- Armen spoke as he turned to look out the massive view window at the station. –Helm! Prepare to come about one hundred and eighty degrees and engage main engines! The moment we receive the signal from Princess Sadi that they are clear, execute a full power turn using all of our station keeping thrusters and go to maximum sub light speed-

“Armen that will scorch the station pretty bad.” The Helm Officer told him.

-It will not matter. Anything left alive on that station will die in nine minutes regardless- Armen spoke. –Let us be prepared for when we are needed-

SCIENCE STATION 489

Murano knew within the first ten seconds that everything his dear friend Sumar had hoped to accomplish had indeed come true. The Praetorians had been reborn, and they were far more capable than the Praetorians of his time. As he took the head from a Scourge Elite with a powerful swipe of his Saberstaff, Murano knew where his place would be. These young men and women were faster and stronger than he would ever be. Their Lycavorian and Vampiric blood gave them that naturally. A sense of calm came over Murano as he began to slowly draw back from the others as they forged ahead. Sarlana had told him that they would be leaders and teachers for the future generations to come. As he slipped further back, Murano realized that generation had come. This did not upset him as he thought it would, it emboldened him. As he felt the Etheric power swirling all around him, Murano had never felt more at home in his entire life. Sumar had known this and that is why he had left him behind. He was to be the guide for the future generations, and the mentor that they could all come to for assistance. Androcles had said as much to him not so very long ago and he remembered those words vividly.

“I don’t know where we will end up Murano, but no matter what we are, Dahakoan, Praetorian, you and Sarlana are part of that which will make us whole. Never doubt that. We need you just as much, if not more, than you need us.”

Murano let these thoughts guide him as he drew back further and let them take the fight to the enemy. He had no dragon bonded to him, and while powerful, his Etheric connection was far less than those before him. He soon found himself beside Ridor and Fedor in a defensive U shaped perimeter around the rear of the PREMONITION. The Darastrixi Sand Striders were providing the inner perimeter for the ship, Sehri projecting a powerful etheric shield around the immediate rear of the ship. Murano smiled inwardly to himself. He felt powerful once more. He felt important. Not just for the hope of the future of his people and that of his life with Tobia and Mari, but hope for all life across the stars that would do battle with the Scourge in the coming months and years.

Murano turned back to watch the fight and only one thought crossed his mind.
This was only the beginning.

It truly was a glorious battle, at least to those Darastrixi and non-Praetorians who were able to witness it. Aviel and Dytin stood just behind Sehri, protected by the Etheric shield she was projecting, their eyes filled with awe and their expressions one of disbelief. Neither of them took note of Maruk's eyes which watched them intently as close as they were standing to his future Bonded sister.

What they were witnessing was a clash of titans as far as they were concerned. There had not been a battle between Darastrixi and Scourge forces for over a million years, and no other species in their quadrant would ever challenge the Darastrixi for their might was too much. This day they were witnessing the first challenge to the Disise dominance and it was not going well for the Disise.

While the Sand Striders rode their Vrrarhoinpa into battle, they did not fight as one unit as they were seeing now. What they were watching was nothing short of amazing. The three Lycavorian females moved along the peripheral of the actual fighting, sitting atop the three Vrrarhoinpa that they knew were Bonded to them. A light blue Etheric shield encased both the women and the dragons and they were wielding Pralor particle rifles with deadly accuracy, taking down any who strayed near the edges of the battle taking place. The meat of the battle was taking place far in front of them, five Lycavorians and a Darastrixi female and six dragons that were defying everything Aviel and Dytin had known throughout their lives. The dragons were in the thickest of the fighting with the Disise, their weapons fire glancing off Etheric shields that no other Vrrarhoinpa could ever hope to project. They witnessed amazing dexterity and power from these Vrrarhoinpa the likes of which they could never have foreseen. The unique and unusual armor allowed them to use their wings and battering rams, their heads as clubs, and their tails as instruments of death. The cross bred dragons, the two near obsidian colored ones were the most impressive, not just because of their size but because of the skill they were showing. It was quite unlike anything Aviel and Dytin had ever imagined they would witness.

Viewing this as they were, Aviel, Dytin and even Matum who stood just behind them, their reasons for coming on this mission were affirmed beyond a shadow of a doubt. This was truer for Matum who now had to make up for mistakes that could have cost others their lives. He allowed his natural arrogance to come forth in the face of men and women who were ten times the soldier he thought he was. Including the Darastrixi female who was rapidly beginning to mean much more to him than anything he had ever felt.

This was it.

The culmination of years of questions with no answers.

They had their answers now, and it was these answers that had successfully unleashed everything inside of them that had waited so long to come out. Everything was so focused and clear. No doubt. No hesitation. It came from within them as surely as the breath that filled their lungs. They had only one thought within them and that was to protect and love those they cared about. Six minds and souls merged together in one unyielding force. Six minds and souls that shared everything about each other without pause.

Each blow by Saar and Cana fell an enemy of the future. Each thrust by Laren's Nehtes took down an enemy of life. Each slash of dual daggers snuffed out a bringer of death. They were like six pieces of a perfect ballet, dancing among the Scourge with grace and power unlike anything the Scourge had witnessed before. Andro stood among the gore and slashed his swords across the broad chest of the Scourge with savage power, opening the monster's chest and abdomen to the air of the landing bay. He ducked down low to the deck as Elynth's armored wing whipped over his head and smashed into two more Scourge who had attempted to come up behind him. As the edges of her wing cleared his helmet Andro was reaching up with his hand as he stood to his full height and he caught Laren's hand as she leaped into the air above him. He felt her fingers close around his wrist and then he was throwing her in the air towards another group of Scourge. As Laren twisted her body around in midair she extended her Nehtes once more and fell among the three Disise in a crouch. Using the power of her momentum and her natural strength she slashed forward and back with one hand, removing the legs of two of the Disise with barely any pause. She swung the blunt end of her Nehtes back across her body intending to smash it into the face of the third Disise but his large hands dropped his rifle and he caught the blunt end of the Nehtes between his palms.

"Darastrixi witch!" He screamed at her.

Laren didn't blink and depressed the recessed button on her Nehtes. The eighteen inch long, delicately curved blade extended out in an instant, punching a hole through his hand and directly into his face under one eye. The tip of the blade exploded out the back of his skull and Laren ripped sideways with her wrists, taking half of his misshapen head with her.

"I am no witch Disise monster!" She screamed. Laren felt him in her mind and braced herself as Dorian blurred to her, scooping her up in his arm and then they fell upon four of the last five Scourge. An Etheric diamond from Deion blew out the chest of one, while Denali reached out and lifted two others into the air with his own Etheric power. Dorian finished his blur with Laren in one arm and she leaped straight up to smash her Nehtes down across both of their bodies, driving them down with incredible force to crash face first into the deck, their skulls rupturing at the impact. Dorian lifted his dual blades and prepared to take out the last one when he heard the boom of the particle rifle. He was turning away without a second thought as Jomann lowered his rifle from behind him after sending the single particle round through the center of the Scourge's face.

Dorian whirled around as he came to his feet, searching for more targets, but seeing nothing but bodies all around him. His armor was generously covered with Scourge blood, his glowing blue eyes wide and alert. He and Laren found him first, Denali, Deion and Jomann next. Andro strode through the blood and gore on the deck of the Pralor station directly at where Dalet Nulai stood, his guards down around his feet their blood spilling all around. Never in his life had he experienced such a thing. Fear gripped his heart and mind as he stared at the savage monster that strode toward him with the two swords in his hands. Swords soaked with the blood of his Scourge warriors. Those glowing azure blue orbs were focused on him alone and Dalet snatched his weapon from the holster on his leg and brought it up to fire.

Andro didn't try to dodge or deflect the shot, he had seen enough of the Scourge weapons this day bounce off the Etheric shields to know that it might hurt, but it would not do serious harm. The shot was well placed and hit him square in the chest causing him to stagger slightly and wince from the pain, but his Dragon Armor plating held. Androcles lifted his hand and reached out with his Etheric power to grasp Dalet's hand holding the weapon. He clenched his fist tightly and Dalet roared with pain as the sidearm bent and twisted in his fingers. He had to throw it down to the deck or else it would have crushed his hand around it and he stood up to his full height staring at Androcles as he stopped only five feet from him.

"What are you?" He screamed. "You are no Praetorian!"

Androcles stared at him from across that small space and watched as he reached behind his back and withdrew two long cylinder like objects. He watched as the Scourge gripped them tightly in either hand and he realized they were fighting sticks like Dutkne used. Different of course, forged from some kind of metal, but Dalet obviously was well skilled with them.

"What am I?" Androcles spoke aloud even as his siblings closed in around him, moving to support him if needed.

It was Laren who held up her hand quickly and turned. "No!" She barked to everyone. "They are the chosen weapon of the Ioth Kilnsiri. The Chidragi! Wyverns! No one can match them! Only Androcles!"

Dalet looked at Andro. "You have Pralor blood within you but you are no Praetorian!" He snarled.

"Oh but I am a Praetorian Ioth Kilnsiri." Androcles spoke once more. "I am the rebirth of the Praetorians foul monster!"

Dalet lost it then and attacked.

Laren was correct in that the two steel rod like cylinders were the chosen weapon of the Holy Elite. They were masters of the dual sticks known in the Darastrixi language and the Chidragi, and for millennia had used them to inflict pain and suffering during battle and during torture. No Scourge Holy Elite had ever been beaten when using his Chidragi. That was about to change.

Dalet Nulai was famous among the Scourge population as a Master of the Chidragi. He had never been beaten in training or battle when using them. He always felt they made him invincible.

He was wrong.

Andro stood his ground with Saar and Cana in his hands. The Scourge was a blur of motion as he attacked, wanting to beat this boy into bloody submission for what he had done here today. Dalet Nulai soon discovered that he was not as good as he thought. The Scourge Holy Elites were much faster than normal Elites and this speed had helped them to win many battles, but this day Dalet Nulai had met his match. Their arms moved faster than the eye could follow, Androcles meeting each thrust with a counter thrust, each blow with a defensive form that blocked it. Even Ridor and Kalis who were standing in the line with the others began to gravitate towards the fight. It was unlike anything they had ever seen. Unlike anything anyone had ever seen, and it showed in the expressions of the faces of everyone around them.

Andro was more relaxed now than at any time in his life. He felt the overwhelming love and devotion from his wives and mates flowing through him, the unquestioned confidence and love of his siblings wrapping around him. He felt Elynth's power combining with his, coursing through his veins, the Dahakoan sense swirling within his mind as he saw everything the six of them saw, anticipating every move that Dalet could make. Dalet continued to attack, pressing forward and circling Androcles, who matched his every move. He was becoming angry and careless but it was just not...

-Androcles... we are ready- Armen's voice exploded in his head from his implant.

That was the trigger.

Andro brought Saar and Cana together in a clash of steel that drew sparks and caused gasps from everyone nearby. Dalet was pressing down with all of his strength against those two blades, not understanding how they could hold against his superior weapons. He glanced up into Andro's eyes and saw the glowing orbs staring back at him, but he also saw something else. He saw something familiar in the features, and it took only a moment for him to realize what it was.

"You!" Dalet hissed loudly into Andro's face. "I know you!"

Androcles smiled at him and it was anything but pleasant. "And you will contemplate that knowledge in the abyss monster!" Andro snarled at him.

Androcles twisted his wrist, turning Saar in his hand and flicked the blade up with savage strength. It overpowered Dalet easily and then the Scourge felt the bite of steel against the armor of his left wrist and his eyes went wide when that sword sliced through his armor as if it wasn't there. He screamed in pain and brought the arm back, which only enabled Androcles to flick Cana to the right and remove Dalet's right arm just below the elbow.

Dalet staggered back as blood gushed from the two wounds. His mind was awash with pain and knowledge but he could not focus and he dropped to his knees in agony and looked at Androcles who slowly lifted Saar and Cana and willed them back into Flatspace.

"Who... I know you!" Dalet screamed out the words. "You... you are dead!"

Andro smiled once more, his dual fangs becoming fully exposed as the smile grew. He stepped forward and looked down at Dalet. "You asked who I was." He spoke the words calmly in a voice that was not his own. "I am death incarnate monster." He leaned over closer to Dalet as he stared back at him. "We are the embodiment of the vengeance of a people long forgotten." Andro moved in a blur and gripped Dalet's head in his hands, twisting his body impossibly around until his head was facing away from him and he was looking down at his arched chest and legs in front of him.

"Pray to whatever gods you may have Scourge monster." Andro snarled loudly. "Pray for mercy! For I will have none!"

Androcles exerted all of his strength in one motion. Every ounce of Lycavorian and Darastrixi strength within him. Everything he had been taught. He channeled it all and twisted with all of that combined force. Dalet's head was ripped savagely to the side, the sound of his neck breaking in five different places echoing loudly in the now quiet landing bay. Andro dropped the body immediately even as the last vestiges of Dalet Nulai twitched and jumped on the deck of the station.

Elynth was beside him in an instant and she lowered her head to touch his cheek, while Dorian and Laren moved up on either side of him. Andro and Dorian lowered their heads to hers for she was so much shorter than them, and then Ryner and Ladur finished the group, all of them touching in some manner.

“It is over my Soul Brother.” Laren whispered softly. “It is done.”

Androcles looked at her glowing multicolored orbs and smiled. He shook his head slowly however. “No my Soul Sister...” He spoke.

“It is only just beginning.” Dorian finished his brother’s statement.

CHAPTER FIFTY-FOUR

VENTORI

UNION ADHOC COMPOUND

LEONIDAS PERSONAL QUARTERS

“...No!” Saydia snapped softly. “I will not allow this! No!”

Perlyea leaned forward at the table and looked at Saydia. She, Aduna, Anja, Aricia and For'mya had spent the last three long hours hammering out what they were relatively sure the Tasmor Ruling Quorum and the Union Senate would accept. They had to contact Deia on two different matters, but she only confirmed for them what they had thought. This Deia Leonidas, Martin Leonidas’ Aunt, she had impressed Perlyea with her knowledge and words. It seemed that confidence and intelligence ran in their family among the women as well as within their people, which would make it easier to deal with the Tasmor Quorum in particular and the Tasmor people as a whole. Tasmor males were gaining more and more political clout every year, but even they did not seem to question the female dominance of their society. It was also something that had been ingrained in all of them for centuries and that was not something that was just forgotten in a day. Tasmor males knew this and were patient and understanding.

They had also spoken with the other three Queens of the Union who were currently on Honelze. Once more Perlyea had been more than impressed for Dysea, Isabella and Cirith were equally as extraordinary and Anja and the others. The vast knowledge and the attractive beauty of these six women was enormous and convincing. Each of them had an outer, physical majesty that was incredibly stunning to say the least. They had a natural physical beauty that was only enhanced by their exceptionally desirable physiques, but each of them was also a confident and powerful woman who could handle almost any given situation that they faced. They had finally brought Saydia and Namiri into the circle and that now included Anthylea as well since she and Saydia were now a recognized and bound couple by Tasmor law. Saydia had seen to that almost immediately after instituting the law regarding the Tasmor Breeders. Perlyea and Aduna were going to do the same thing as soon as they returned to Danerav.

“Saydia...” Perlyea began.

Saydia shook her head more forcefully now. “No. I made a promise to my daughter and I do not intend to break that promise Perlyea.”

“Mother you...” Namiri began but was respectfully interrupted by Aduna.

“Sovereign Regent, I have made discreet inquiries of my detachment.” Aduna spoke now. “They have told me that Vesara Athcer does not like how you brought the entire Quorum here. She feels that you have embarrassed them and over reached your bounds while intruding on their power. Several others are in agreement with her.”

“If I had not threatened them with the loss of their positions and titles, they would not have come!” Saydia protested. “If left to their sensibilities the Tasmor people would drift and fall into obscurity! They have no vision for the future beyond what their own personal needs are!”

“I don’t disagree Saydia, nor does Aduna. You know that.” Perlyea spoke once more. “But you also know as well as I do that Vesara will do whatever it takes to either discredit you directly or go around you.

Using this clause in our law regarding Namiri is exactly something she would do to try and diminish you and embarrass you. She knows how you feel for your daughters, and knowing you would not be able to stop her would only embolden her. We are just using it to our advantage for better reasons than she would and before she can use it against you.”

“I will put a Referendum to our people then!” Saydia spat.

Aduna nodded her head in agreement. “A Referendum that would undoubtedly pass with overwhelming support. However, you would not be able to do this in a timely enough manner for it to matter to our people in the long run. Or Namiri for that matter. By the time this came up for a vote of our people, the Svorag will have already overrun Honelze and removed the one force that could stop them.” She looked at Saydia intently. “They would be upon us before we could stop them.”

“I support giving Tasmor troops to the defense of Honelze.” Saydia complained. “I have already told King Leonidas this!”

“Which Vesara and the other hard liners would block just to make you look bad, and you know this.” Perlyea said. “They are so set in their ways, in Tasmor dominance in all things, that they would do this just to spite you. Even after what has taken place these last weeks they still think themselves superior. Especially to any male, including King Leonidas. That is why Anja, Aricia and For'mya are putting this forth with the backing of the other three Queens of the Union and their Prime Minister. It is why they included Aduna and myself in its creation. We know what we face and we certainly do not want the Tasmor to vanish into oblivion. Aduna’s knowledge of our law is what helped us.”

Saydia looked at Anja where she sat between Aricia and For'mya. They had remained silent up to now. “I thought... I thought your people did not practice arranged marriages.” She said.

“We don’t.” Aricia answered her. “This situation is different however, and this required a lot of ingenuity on our part to be honest.”

“And a small amount of dishonesty.” For'mya said with a grin as she leaned into Anja affectionately.

“More so to make it work within the framework of your laws.” Aricia continued with a smile at For'mya’s words.

“I don’t understand.” Saydia told her.

“This will only work if Namiri, our son and his wives agree to it.” Anja spoke now. “If they do however, then it will give you the clout and support you need to go around these hard liners in your government and allow you to support us with your troops.”

“What about Martin?” Saydia asked. “I do not wish to be on the receiving end of your husband’s anger Anja. I have seen what happens to those who anger him, and it is in no way pleasant.”

Anja shook her head. “Let us worry about Martin. As Queens we have always had a great deal of latitude in working out different political agreements. That is essentially what this will be, but we are just going to present it in another light, which is how others will see it. Martin doesn’t often question us, but if he does we can make him see our point of view.”

“So you will use your female influence over him?” Saydia asked.

Anja chuckled softly. “It’s more his influence over us really.” She replied. “But Martin is very different than most men. When we have him alone with us, without outside influence, he will usually see things our way once it is explained to him. We don’t manipulate him as much as get him to see it from our point of view. When he sees how it will be presented he will know it is for the best.”

“And how will it be presented?” Saydia asked.

“In a way that makes it appear as if it is something else.” Aricia said. “It very well may help you to see just who among your own Quorum is behind you and who is against you.”

Saydia glanced at Namiri beside her and then back to Aricia. “Now you have truly lost me.” She stated.

“My son is... our son Androcles is very unique. As are the six women who share his life.” Aricia began. “We would like to explain it to you, Perlyea and Aduna will comment on how it affects the Tasmor, but you have to be willing to listen Saydia Daret. As Anja has told you, Namiri must agree to this as well, or it will not work. But if she does, there will be things that are expected of her. Things that she will be exposed to and witness. Things that are very sensitive in nature to our people, but more importantly to our son.” Aricia looked at Namiri. “Namiri?”

Namiri nodded her head. “I will listen.” She said.

“This is not something taken lightly Namiri.” Aricia said. “If you commit to this then you will be committing yourself to our ways. Androcles is much more forward thinking than his father in many ways, but he is also much more grounded in tradition and our Spartan nature.”

“Namiri you don’t have to...” Anja began to speak but Namiri shook her head.

“I will listen Queen Anja.” Namiri said again this time more seriously. “I do not wish to see my people butchered by these Svorag monsters and if there is a way we can stop it then I will listen. And I also believe as my mother does that a continued relationship with your people is the only way we will survive going forward.”

“We will contact Sadi and the others once Namiri has agreed to this, and then they will convince Androcles that this is for the best.” Aricia spoke. “As we will convince Martin. Sadi is Androcles Anome, his soulmate in our ancient language. They met by fate and chance when he was only eight months old and he has loved her with every fiber of his being since that day. Just as he loves all of his wives and mates equally now. You see, Androcles was born fully aware of all life around him. He was fully aware even within my womb while I carried him and he used his Bonded sister as his conduit to the outside world. He...”

Saydia and Namiri Daret were utterly enthralled almost from the outset as Aricia began to explain what they intended. Perlyea and Aduna had heard some of it already but even they were drawn into the story as Aricia, Anja and For'mya began to weave a future for both their peoples just by their words.

ADHOC COMMAND CENTER VENTORI

“...Is Laren Ti’shara father, your Sepas Hianag. Your soul daughter.” Andro spoke from within the QCR communications transmission. Wayonn, Danny, Helen, Arzoal and Tobia were in the transmission with him, while Murano, Sarlana, Dorian and the young women none of them had ever seen were with Andro.

Martin could only stare at the stunning young woman. That she was Darastrixi was quite obvious, but that she was something else as well was equally as obvious. Her long, black hair matched the color of Andro and Dorian’s hair, her multicolored blue eyes matching the color of Andro's azure orbs and Dorian’s cobalt blue eyes. She had a combination of what appeared to be soft, normal skin and Darastrixi scaled skin, but it seemed to fit her perfectly and she did not look out of place at all. She looked at him almost shyly from within the transmission but even from across the stars Martin could feel her strength within the Etheric realm and how it filtered and flowed within his two sons. They were allowing him to feel her now for the first time, and to Martin she was another burning point of light within the realm that was their family and he sensed that somehow she had always been part of them.

Martin Leonidas did not often let his faith show through publicly, but he believed deeply in a higher power and that power had brought this young woman to them for reasons they had yet to determine. It was not something he was going to question however, not when his sons had accepted her without hesitation and his other children would no doubt do the same.

“I will welcome you to my family properly when I see you Laren.” Martin spoke with a smile. “Your parents and brothers as well. But know that I am so very happy to see you. Just don’t let these two knuckle draggers corrupt you before you get here.”

Laren chuckled softly as the small tears fell from her eyes. “I won’t Sepa Opsola.” She said with a brilliant smile and happy eyes.

“You are a vision of beauty child.” Arzoal spoke now causing Martin and the others to look at her on their end of the transmission.

“It is a blessed honor Elder Mother.” Laren told her bowing her head. “Andro and Elynth have showed me so much of you in their lives.”

Arzoal laughed softly in dragon fashion. “Yes, I am sure they have.” She stated with a knowing tone of voice. “I will need to tell you the truth when we can speak together.” Arzoal looked at Martin who was staring at her as Laren laughed on her end. “What?” She demanded.

Martin pointed at her and then back to himself, doing this motion several times. “That is going to take some getting used to.” Martin said. “Being able to... you know.”

Arzoal reached over with her head and butted Martin in the shoulder causing him to stagger slightly. “Be careful what you say Martin or I will have words with your wives and mates.”

“I’m just saying!” Martin spoke holding up his hands in defense.

“I see you have been practicing Arzoal.” Sarlana spoke now from within the transmission.

Arzoal nodded her massive head. “Only in private Doraanar, just as you instructed me. Helen and I have been working hard on it.”

Sarlana nodded her head. “Excellent.” She told her. “We will have much help when we arrive. Several of the Darastrixi among those with us have already expressed great zeal for teaching these skills to you and those Darastrixi among you.”

Martin held up his hand. “Ok, ok, on to the point of this little call.” He told them with a smile. “Give me the skinny boy!” He spoke looking directly at Androcles.

“We put twenty-four Mark 22 ZMFs into the station father.” Andro told him. “Not to mention overloading the core. There was nothing larger than a fingernail when we finally were able to scan the area.”

“Soi Sibfla.” Danny muttered. “A little overkill don’t you think Mandri?”

Andro shook his head. “No Tenne.” He answered. “Not when you consider what was on the station.”

Martin looked at his sons and his eyebrows rose on his face. “We’re listening.” He said.

“Murano were there...” Wayonn began his eyes wide.

“Yes.” Murano replied. “Over a hundred of them.” He told them. “They were in Cryo Chambers on the lower three decks of the station. They would have remained in stasis had a Darastrixi soldier not gone off wandering. He triggered some sort of alarm that caused the computer they had operating to wake them. We must assume that any Pralor facilities that were not destroyed will be the same. We will need to inform Delnash of this so we do not attempt it again.”

“Murano did you...?”

“None survived old friend.” Murano told him. “We will need to gather all the Praetorians that we know of once we have returned in order to show all of you, but they are all dead and they were not able to transmit any messages. Armen made sure of this.”

“You fought them?” Martin asked.

Androcles nodded his head. “Yes. We had no choice. No one was injured father. I don’t think they expected us to be there.”

“There was a Holy Elite among them Wayonn.” Murano continued. “They appeared somewhat different than when we fought them in the last war, but they are essentially the same. He was... he was surprised to see us. He knew what we were and he was surprised. He said as much.”

“Then Delnash and the others are safe?” Wayonn asked.

Murano nodded his head. “It appears they are not aware of any Pralors that escaped the Purge, no. If they are not looking for us, then we are safe. For the time being.”

Wayonn nodded his head. “That is good. It will provide a little peace of mind for Delnash and the other Chief Elders. At least for the immediate future.”

Martin looked at Murano in the transmission. “Were you successful in getting to the cache Murano?”

Murano nodded his head once more. “Oh yes.” He said with a bit of pride in his voice.

“Armen has our detachment of Worker Drones reverse engineering the schematics we were able to take.” Andro told them. “We should be able to build replicas within several hours. After that it is just a matter of mass producing them. Our Master at Arms has already conferred with Nehtes back on Earth. After viewing the schematics Nehtes believes we can streamline the design to something we are more familiar with and begin mass producing them within a week on Earth. He will look at them more closely and begin custom work as soon as he is able for my mothers and any others who need it. Armen assures me that we have enough material here on SPARTA’S WRATH to build sufficient quantities for all of our forces there in the Echo Quadrant and still have at least double in reserve. I wasn’t even aware we had a weapons manufacturing shop on the ship until Armen told me.”

Wayonn nodded his head. “It was one of the improvements that we wanted incorporated into the VORTEX-Class Heavy Cruisers.” He said. “SPARTA’S WRATH was to be the first of her kind. She was the first of her kind. We just...”

“We ran out of time.” Murano added also nodding his head. “It is of no matter now. We have her now. She is Androcles’ ship and now we have the designs and we must convince Delnash to shift at least a part of their production and Worker Drone capability to building these weapons. We also took enough of the weapons and explosives as they are now to equip a full company when we arrive Martin.”

“Convincing him won’t be easy.” Martin said.

Murano shook his head. “He will listen to me.”

Martin nodded his head in agreement. “I’ll let you handle him then.” He said.

Androcles could not hold it in any longer. “Father... grandfather Sumar and Dadrien appeared to us.”

Martin’s eyes grew wider and he moved closer to the holo disc. “What?” He gasped not expecting this in the least. “Where? When?”

“Within moments of us meeting and touching Laren and Ladur.” Andro replied. “Father it was...”

“It was inspirational father.” Dorian finished. “It was as if we were...”

“In a dream.” Laren finished.

“Father, it has been grandfather and Dadrien guiding us all of these years.” Andro spoke. “They...”

“What!?” Martin barked. “How! Speak to me son!”

“They are the reason that Dorian and I are like we are. Who we are. Elynth and Ryner as well. Laren and Ladur. They are the ones who have been influencing events for centuries to make it so we could exist.”

Helen rose to her feet now her eyes wide and she stepped up to Martin, her hands going to his arm and squeezing. “Androcles are you sure?” She gasped.

Andro nodded his head. “We sat and talked with them for over three hours Feravomir. Right there in the landing bay. They told us so much father.” He told them. “And they said they needed to talk with you and Torma father. That they would do this soon.”

“Me?” Martin Leonidas gasped.

“You are Wer Irral.” Laren spoke now. “The First. The center from which all else will evolve.”

“Come again?” Martin asked with wide eyes.

“There is much we need to talk of father.” Androcles said. “All of us.”

“Yeah... I’m getting that.” Martin said.

“There is something else father.” Androcles spoke as Dorian and Laren got to their feet. “Something that we need to show you.”

“I’m not going to like this am I?” Martin said.

Andro shook his head. “It is just... odd.” He said as he began to unbutton the fleet fatigue top he wore. Dorian was doing the same and Martin and the others watched as they stripped out of their t-shirts as well. Laren apparently had no qualms about this either, though she held the t-shirt over her firm breasts. She knew instinctively that no one among those she was with would look at her in any sort of manner that wasn’t respectful.

As if on que, all of them turned around and Martin’s eyes grew wide in shock as he saw the intricately designed tattoo markings on their skin. They covered nearly all of their backs and shoulders, part of the carvings going up alongside their necks. Most of the ink was dark, but there were parts that were done in both red and green ink. It was the most detailed piece of tattoo artwork Martin Leonidas had ever seen in a tattoo, and he had seen enough of Pablo’s work to know he was a master.

“Holy shit!” Martin finally gasped as he felt Danny come up beside him.

“That’s... that’s some serious artwork there Mandri.” Danny spoke with some awe in his voice.

Andro looked over his shoulder. “It must have happened when we embraced Laren the first time. We did not think anything of it, but Eliani said she and the others saw a very brief flash of Etheric power. Like a living pulse. Carisia and Lu’ria saw them first as I was changing. Carisia said they almost felt alive beneath her fingers.”

“Sheva and Onera said the same thing father.” Dorian echoed.

“Jesus... what are they?” Martin gasped as he moved even closer and looked at the intricate markings intently.

“A key.” Sarlana spoke now as she moved up between Androcles and Laren. “They are a key Martin Leonidas.”

“A key?” Wayonn asked now. “A key to what?”

Sarlana shook her head. “That I do not know. I know they represent a key for some of the pictographs are in an ancient dialect of the Darastrixi language. A language only Dadrien and those from his time would have known and spoken.”

“Sarlana, can you translate them?” Martin asked.

“Oh yes, once I gather the relevant scrolls from Artaaya.” She answered him. “The other images and words, and I only assume they are words, they are in a language I have never seen before. If it is a language at all. Whatever it is... it is far more ancient than anything I have ever seen.”

“Christ we don’t need more questions!” Martin exclaimed.

“This is not something that needs to take away from what we must do Martin.” Sarlana told him. “We have scholars that can do this. I already have many images of these writings and we will figure it out. Their training with Murano must continue.” She smiled. “Since most of those with us are Darastrixi and among them are some wonderful scholars, this will be our task.”

Martin nodded his head and looked at Andro as he pulled his shirt back on. “How long until you get here boy?” He asked.

“We will rendezvous with the remaining ships of General Dytin tomorrow morning father.” Andro told him. “Twelve hours to take a full head count and load out and we will depart tomorrow afternoon. Figure four days to your location since the ships with us do not have SPARTA’S WRATH’S engines. I gather you want us to remain away from Honelze for now.”

Martin nodded his head. “Too much activity there and that fat ronnus Lorendo might figure something out.” He replied. “Come here to Ventori and we can decide what to do from there. Your mothers have a handle on things there right now and we are needed here more to help get the rebuilding going.” Martin looked at his son. “Did your mothers get in touch with Sadi?”

Andro nodded his head. “Yes. They got the message when they returned. What is all that about?” He asked.

Martin shook his head. “I don’t know but I imagine we’ll find out at the same time.”

“Why does that sound rather ominous?” Androcles asked.

Martin shook his head. “You have six mothers boy, never try to outthink them.” He told him with a grin. “That has never worked out in your favor in the past. Or mine for that matter.”

Andro chuckled. “No it has not.” He said. He looked at his father. “It will be... it will be very good to see you father.”

Martin met his eyes and smiled. “You have no idea.” He said with a small laugh. “Your uncle and I are outnumbered here you know.”

Andro laughed himself and nodded. “We will see you soon father.” He said.

Martin nodded his head as well and looked at them. “We’ll have a major head shed when you get here. Delnash and all of his senior folks too. It’s time we started to get the ball rolling.” He looked at Laren then and took a step closer to the holo disc again. “I look forward to seeing you in person Sepa Hianag. And holding you in my arms.”

Laren simply beamed at this and she nodded her head quickly. “As do I Sepa Opsola. As do I.”

Martin smiled at her and Laren saw that it took the sternness from his face instantly. She knew now why so many feared her Sepa Opsola. His presence alone, even in the transmission, was intimidating and just from his gruff manner you knew he was not one to be trifled with. Martin looked at Andro one last time.

“We’ll see you in a few days son.” He spoke. “Try not to get lost.”

“I will do my best father.” Andro answered. “No promises however.”

Martin laughed once more as the transmission ended and he turned slowly to look at those within the room with him. He looked at Arzoal first off.

“Arzoal?” He asked.

“I have left it to Teniri to decide who to send Martin.” She spoke once more. Her voice sounded exactly the same as when she spoke in their minds and to them it would take some getting used to, but adaptability was not an issue with most of the Union citizens. “She knows the dragons with her better than I. She says that only a hundred are truly ready for the type of battle we could see on Honelze.” Arzoal paused and shook her massive head. “What we will undoubtedly see. They are not trained to the level of our Bonded Pairs however, and Iriral does not have the combat training of Elynth, Isheeni or Torma.”

“Where are they now?” Martin asked.

“They have begun shuttling them to Honelze.” Arzoal answered him. “Twenty-five are currently on the planet, but we are keeping them sequestered away from the settlements to avoid raising eyebrows. The rest will arrive over the course of the next two weeks. Teniri says to rush their deployment will only cause Lorendo’s people watching them to become suspicious.”

Martin nodded his head. “Ok. I don’t want to give that midaeus any kind of advantage.” He spoke. “Once Andro gets here we can send Anthar and Majeir. They have superior combat skills and they can assist Iriral until more of us arrive. They won’t need Carisia or Lu’ria with them for that.”

Arzoal nodded her head. “Excellent. Anthar is more of an unorthodox persona and Majeir is the perfect complement to him.”

“If Armen and your Nehtes are correct and they can make weapons that are more familiar to us based on the particle design we developed the transition will be much easier for everyone involved.” Wayonn spoke.

Martin looked at Danny intently. “I want our teams outfitted first Dan.” Martin told him. “Whatever they come up with I want our folks to have it first. We’re going to be in the shit first with Andro's team and I don’t want us not knowing our weapons.”

Danny nodded his head. “Done deal.”

“We will need to perform a Praetorian meld Martin.” Wayonn told him now. “When they arrive all of us need to join and share everything that we have learned.”

Martin nodded his head in acknowledgement. “Wayonn... I’ll leave that for you to set up. You and Murano will need to guide us on that.”

“Dutkne has done this with me before and he and Andro will have shared everything about the battle by now. If I know my grandson he will already be preparing to direct the others when we get together. It will be much easier with the three of us guiding the others. We have the most experience in this sort of thing and until everyone is comfortable doing it, we will need to practice.”

“Did you do it often?” Martin asked him.

Wayonn nodded. “After every major battle.” He replied.

“Then I guess we are going to need to start.” Martin said. He looked at Helen. “You ready for that Helen. You have always wanted to get inside my head.” He told her with a smile.

Helen snorted in disgust. “The only individuals that wish to get into your head and the head of your son should be committed to a facility for the mentally insane for all time.” She spat causing the others to chuckle softly. “What sane person would wish to see what chaos looks like?”

“Hey! That’s not fair!” Martin exclaimed.

“I will need to talk again with Anja about this.” Helen said with sly smile. “We do not have any facilities to house such people. Perhaps we will need to change that.”

Martin looked at her as she spun around and left the room with a huge smile on her face. He could only smile as Wayonn shook his head in delight and Danny was holding back his snide comment.

Martin shook his head with a smile. “Well... at least everyone is in good spirits.” He said. “We’re going to need that.”

“Yes we are.” Danny agreed.

Martin turned to Danny now. “Nalmos is waiting for us.” He said. “About three thousand will be moving in from across the immediate area that he was able to contact. Anja and Anuk are going to meet us there.”

Danny nodded his head. “We got teams of medics and everything else waiting.”

“Just like Eden City all over again huh?” Martin spoke.

Danny smiled at him. “Building that city was the best time we ever had and you know it.” He told him.

Martin nodded his head. “Yes it was.”

“This is... will this even work?” Saydia finally asked after a few moments. Everything had been explained by the three Queens and Perlyea and Aduna and Saydia had to admit it was quite ingenious. It did require a bit of deception on their part, but deception was a large part of politics in many ways. And this deception would actually benefit both of their peoples in a way most people would never see.

“It will work if we want it to work.” Aricia answered her question.

“But this will look like an arranged marriage to your people.” Saydia said. “Something you have told me they will not accept.”

Aricia shook her head now. “No. It will look just how it has looked as Androcles has met each of his wives and mates over the last two years. He has seen each of them within him before he has ever met them. Only when he was old enough to actually love Sadi in a manner befitting a Leonidas did he reach out to claim her. Once he did that, each of them fell into place just as he had seen. Just as they were meant to in the greater scheme of things. This is what our people have seen in this time and it is what they will see again. They will not question it. Despite what you may see or hear about our son, he is very much like his father in that he believes deeply in faith and destiny. That is what we will use now.”

“Emylea has heard...” Namiri began to speak now but she was tentative because of what she was asking. “She has heard that he is terribly scarred from battle. That many cannot look into his eyes without turning away.”

“Really?” For'mya asked softly. She glanced at Anja and Aricia and saw the look of confusion in their eyes as well. “That is interesting.”

[Kinsoargai?] Aricia asked within their private connection.

[It may well be nothing, but I have heard talk among the pilots of a young elven female in Operations that has said these same things on the ARC ROYAL.] For'mya answered.

[Someone who has never met him?] Anja asked.

For'mya nodded her head. [Yes. I will look into it soon enough. It seems too much like a staged event. Especially now.]

[You want some help?] Anja asked her.

For'mya shook her head quickly. [No. If this is what this young woman is doing I will set her straight.]

Among the six Queens of the Union it was well known that Androcles held a very special place in For'mya's heart now after what he had done. His actions allowed For'mya to keep her faith and her hope alive. His actions returned to her all that she loved dearest in this universe, and his actions saved the two children she had borne in her womb. Her life would never have reached this point if not for Androcles and the love he carried for her as his second elven mother. Aricia and Anja knew For'mya would savage this young woman for talking bad about Androcles in any way if this was the case.

Anja returned her attention to Namiri now. “Fifteen percent of his body is covered in scar tissue, yes.” She answered Namiri honestly. “All of them earned in battle. But if you are asking if he is deformed in some way, no Namiri, he is not. Whoever Emylea heard that from is very incorrect.”

“Forgive me, I did not want to sound conceited.” Namiri spoke quickly hoping she did not offend his mothers.

“It is an honest question.” Aricia told her. “And one that most in your position would ask I'm sure. This will only work if you are willing to act the part Namiri. You must be a willing participant in the ruse in order for it to work. Sadi and the others will help you if they agree to this, but you need to be willing and able to do this. That is why we think it is best you meet them first via our COM relays.”

“Won't others begin to question this after a time and I do not... I do not show the signs of... of becoming like him?” Namiri asked. “Lady Perlyea has already explained that the virus in his blood must be transferred to me in order for me to show signs of changing. If he does not bite me and I do not sleep with him or the others, this will eventually come out.”

Anja shook her head in response. “Luckily, there are other ways to make that happen.” She said. “Albeit they won't be as effective, but they will work. And trust me, our son has a reputation of disdain for any sort of news organization. He thinks they are all vermin. They won't push too hard when it comes to that for fear of incurring his wrath. Being on Andro's bad side is not a very healthy proposition.”

Aricia and For'mya couldn't help but chuckle at this. “How true.” Aricia said.

“I will do it.” Namiri blurted out.

Saydia looked at her daughter. “Namiri you...”

“Mother you know as well as I do that this is the only way to insure that we have a future as a people.” Namiri stated. “If this agreement, secret though it may be, if it insures that we win this fight, then it is a small price to pay.”

“I know but...” Saydia began to protest.

Namiri shook her head. “We are involved now mother.” Namiri said. “For whatever the reason, whatever drove you to help them before, we are involved now. We cannot undo what we have done. I do not wish to see our people brought down by these monsters and I know you do not.” Namiri reached out and took her hands. “It is only for a year mother.” She said. She looked at Aricia. “Is that right?”

Aricia nodded her head. “Two years at the most depending on what is happening. The information we release will have to be done at certain times in order for it to look plausible but within two years definitely.”

Namiri nodded her head. “That is nothing when held against our people’s future.” She spoke turning back to her mother.

Saydia squeezed her hands tightly while Anthylea held Saydia’s shoulder in a show of support. Small tears rolled down Saydia’s cheeks and she smiled. “I never imagined that you would turn out to be the strongest of my daughters Namiri.” She gasped softly. “I am so sorry.”

Namiri allowed her to pull her into the embrace and she relished in the feel of her mother’s arms around her. She didn’t see Anja rise to her feet and look at the others.

“I’ll let Aricia and For’mya talk with Sadi and the others with you. I have to meet Martin and the rest of our team for the refugees that are coming in from the mountain ranges all around us.” Anja spoke. She looked at Perlyea and Aduna. “Want to come along?” She asked. “Field Operations are always so much fun with Marty and the gang.”

Perlyea glanced at Aduna surprised and saw her nod quickly. She turned back to Anja. “Of course.” She answered rising to her feet with Aduna.

Aricia looked at Saydia and Namiri as Anja led Perlyea and Aduna out of their quarters. “I will initiate the call and we will speak with them.” She told them. “Do not be shy Namiri Daret... Sadi and the others will surprise you. They are just as intelligent as they are beautiful.”

Namiri nodded as she looked at her. “I am ready.”

SPARTA'S WRATH PRIVATE LOUNGE FAMILY DECK

The six Crown Princesses of the Lycavorian Union were crowded around each other at the table still discussing the mission on the station. More to the point, they were talking about Andro's new tattoos and what had happened when first Carisia and then Sadi and the others had run their fingers over them. All of them were beginning to see just how very special the man who had claimed their hearts was. It was amazing to them that he could steal their breath away and make each of them whimper in delight in his own way. It was also so very amazing just how easily the six of them fit together. They were lovers, friends and sisters all wrapped into one and all of them loved Andro and each other more than their own lives. Even Sehri, who had been with them the shortest amount of time, even she had given up on trying to figure it all out and simply accepted it for what it was. It felt so very right and loving and trying to figure out why was pointless.

They had changed into casual clothes, and Sehri was detailing to Carisia and Lu'ria how she and Marux had held the bottom portion of the ramp on the station during the battle. Carisia and Lu'ria knew what she was describing, for it was exactly how they felt when fighting with Anthar or Majeir. Soon it would be time for them to truly bond and even they knew it now. Sadi, Ne'Veha and Caliria were discussing the mad dash from the control center back to their ship even as the Scourge were breaking into the landing bay.

All of them now wore casual outfits, mostly form fitting jumpsuits that Lu'ria had gotten all of them to wear and fall in love with. The jumpsuits were different in cut and material, but all of them were tailored to fit each one of them perfectly in order to accent their figures.

The COM panel on the large table chirped and all of their heads came up as Carisia reached out and tapped the panel.

“Yes.”

“The transmission from Queen Aricia and Queen For'mya is coming in Princess.” The Duty Officer spoke from the bridge.

“Very well lieutenant.” Carisia answered. “You can transfer it here.”

“Stand by.” The voice replied.

“Did Aricia give you any idea what this was about Sadi?” Lu'ria asked.

Sadi shook her head as she shifted in her chair. “None. Only that it was very important and we needed to speak with them without Andro present.”

“Which is surprising all by itself.” Ne'Veha commented.

Sadi nodded her head. “Yes it is.”

All of them turned to face the transmission as it synced and came into view on the table and then they were seeing Aricia and For'mya with three other women who they did not recognize.

“Aricia, For'mya...” Sadi began.

VENTORI

“...Looking as beautiful as ever.” Sadi's soft enchanting voice filled their ears and they both smiled.

There was a time, albeit a very brief one, where For'mya had contemplated killing Sadi Leonidas for what she had done. Fate had stayed her hand then and now she was so very happy it had. For'mya, Anja, Aricia and their fellow Queens had looked after Sadi through the years, though never actively intervening for any reason. Sadi was a powerful woman in her own right and they knew she did not need their assistance. Each of the women Andro had claimed were powerful, confident and so very beautiful. All of the men and women their sons and daughters had claimed were of equal stature and it made the Queens of the Union very proud.

“As are all of you Sadi.” Aricia answered with a smile.

Namiri Daret was somewhat taken aback to be honest. She did not expect to see such stunningly beautiful females sitting in the transmission. All of them were breathtaking to say the least, one of them having such delicious dark skin and incredible white hair which stood out right away. Namiri noticed she had the same kind of ears as Queen For'mya and realized she was an elven female. There was a second elven female with long, dark brown hair and bright, incredibly dark eyes. Namiri could tell just from looking at her that this elven female had the most proportionate figure of all of them, and it was ravishing to say the least from what she could see. Another was as exotic looking as any Tasmor female Namiri had ever seen with her long raven black hair and fetching Maya colored blue eyes.

“The mission went well I take it.” For'mya asked now as she leaned forward in her chair.

They saw Sadi nod her head. “A few hiccups, but nothing that we could not improvise our way out of.” Sadi answered with a nod. “I'm sure you will read the mission debrief in detail so I won't bore you.”

“Everyone came back, that is all that matters.” Aricia added.

“Yes,” Ne'Veha agreed. “That is all that matters.”

“Aricia, why have you asked to speak with us?” Carisia couldn't contain her inquisitive nature and she blurted out the question. “Without Andro and in a secure location?”

Aricia couldn't help but smile. Carisia Leonidas had been sure that Andro's birth mother would never accept her love for him or vice versa. Aricia had turned out to be the strongest supporter Carisia had and the one who had become her closest confidant shortly after it was announced that she was Andro's wife. A daughter of Yuri Moran, not the most popular person within the Union or on Earth for that matter. Carisia had been certain this fact would have destroyed any hope of people trusting her. That had turned out to be furthest from the truth in the end and her actions right after Zarah had been attacked had proven that to even the most skeptical man or woman.

Aricia looked at Saydia and Namiri briefly. “Thankfully our son chose women who like to cut through all the rensibfla and get right to the point.” She commented.

Namiri heard the blond one Sadi laugh and then all of them were chuckling in some manner while the dark haired exotic one looked embarrassed somewhat. Namiri blinked several times for she felt a flush course through her skin at the sound of their voices. It was almost like a musical sonata as seamlessly as they blended together.

“Carisia, Sadi, Ne'Veha, Lu'ria, Caliria and Sehri...” Aricia spoke as she motioned with her hand to where Saydia and Namiri sat. “Allow me to present to you Saydia Daret, the forty-ninth Sovereign Regent of the Tasmor people and her youngest daughter Namiri Daret. The woman behind them is Anthylea Tomar, First Colonel to Saydia and her bound mate.”

Sadi took point in the conversation as all of them expected her to do as Andro's Anome and the best speaker of them all.

“Sovereign Regent, we are honored and it is a pleasure to meet you.” Sadi spoke. “Andro has told us of the things his father and mothers have spoken of in regards to you. He was very impressed.”

Saydia blinked several times in surprise. “He was?” She stammered.

“To impress Androcles means you first have to impress his father and mothers.” Sadi spoke. “You have done that quite well according to Andro. And that is no small feat.”

Saydia was also taken aback somewhat. This young woman, indeed not one of them had blinked when Aricia had introduced Anthylea as her mate. All of them were astonishingly beautiful Saydia had to admit, and looked to be in incredible physical condition. She glanced quickly at her daughter and saw Namiri staring at them intently.

“You... you have me at a disadvantage young lady.” Saydia spoke now. “I... I do not know much about you.”

Sadi chuckled. “Good.” She replied. “That is the way we like it. The Netnews vermin won't bother us if we stay out of sight and out of trouble. Something that is exceedingly hard to do considering the man we all love is prone to trouble finding him even in the middle of space.”

Lu'ria rolled her amber colored eyes Namiri saw and then she laughed softly. “How true.” Lu'ria stated.

“As to the point of this transmission and why we asked you what we did?” Aricia started again. “We have a situation here. I don't know how much Andro has told you of what his father has told him, but we need something from you.”

Sadi didn't hesitate. “Name it.” She spoke quickly.

“Sadi you need to hear us out first.” For'mya spoke now. “This is not a normal request and it is more political than anything else and we want you to feel free to say no. All of you must agree to what we wish to do.”

“I'm not sure I understand.” Sadi spoke looking at Sehri and Ne'Veha quickly before going back to For'mya. “What do you mean?”

“I'm sure Andro told you, or you have read the reports that Martin will not pull any more troops from the Alpha Quadrant to support our operations out here.” Aricia said.

Ne'Veha was the one to nod now. “Yes. Andro suspects that Martin is wary of unnatural issues that might arise if we pull more troops away from home.”

Aricia nodded her head. “We don't know exactly what he is thinking, but essentially that is what he has decided. There is a way however, that we can accomplish what we need to do without more of our troops.” Aricia told them. “It requires the Tasmor to commit a million of their ground troops, which Saydia has already generously offered. However, the Tasmor Ruling Quorum is at odds with her over many things and this would be one of them. They will not allow this unless certain concessions are made.”

Namiri noted how Sadi's face twisted briefly into one of disgust and she suddenly liked this young woman more.

“Politics.” Sadi spat.

Aricia nodded. “Politics.” She answered.

“What can we do Aricia?” Carisia asked now. “We are not even there yet.”

Aricia looked at For'mya quickly and then back to Sadi, Carisia and the others in the transmission.

“Sadi, in order to keep everything we know and love from being absorbed or killed by these Svorag monsters, we need you to convince Androcles that all of you need to take Namiri as a wife and mate.” Aricia blurted out the words.

Sadi Leonidas blinked rapidly several times not sure she had heard her correctly. She looked at Carisia and Ne'Veha and saw the confusion on their faces as well and turned back to Aricia.

"I'm sorry..." Sadi said. "I don't think I heard you correctly. Did you say we need to convince Andro that we need to take this young woman as our wife and mate?"

Aricia took a deep breath. "Yes." She said.

This brought all of them to complete attention and they crowded closer to Sadi within the holo transmission. Six very beautiful and very dominant young woman who were extremely possessive of the man they all loved.

"Aricia, perhaps you should explain..." Sadi spoke calmly but the touch of anger in her voice could be detected easily. "Before we decide to end this very strange communication before it ever really gets off the ground."

"Bear with us please Sadi." Aricia told her. "Just listen..."

VENTORI NORTHEAST CORNER OF CITY

There were far more than three thousand Martin saw, and they were not coming from the direction they were supposed to be coming from. He was squatting on the ridge roughly fifty meters above the natural depression in the terrain that allowed the refugees to move down the mountain with relative ease. The slope was gradual and nowhere near as rocky and hazardous for the many elderly that Martin's keen wolf eyes could detect. Anja knelt beside him on his right talking quietly on her implant for she knew her husband and mate was deep in thought. Zarah, Lucia and Radem knelt on his left, both Zarah and Lucia looking alert and aware of almost everything around them. Radem knelt just behind them, looking confident and healthy for an Evolli. Martin had not seen them in nearly four days now but he knew Radem had taken them up into the mountains to begin what Martin had asked of him. They appeared as if they had slimmed down slightly, their uniforms hugging already well-muscled and very female figures, but both Zarah and Lucia were still very young and both had now lost much of their remaining baby fat in these last weeks. Their figures were beginning to take shape and looking just as their mothers looked. Very feminine, lean muscles that were becoming more defined as each day passed. Martin had shared a look with Radem when they first appeared and silent acknowledgement had passed between them. Zarah and Lucia were turning into two of the finest protégés that Radem had ever trained and that was only after four days of seeing what they could do. It would take many more months and possibly years of training, but Radem was certain the two of them would become the deadliest of their kind.

Anja was speaking with Perlyea and Aduna, who were kneeling on her opposite side, in soft whispers. They had been chatting of many diverse things the entire way here, laughing at different times, almost as if they had known each other for decades. It actually made Martin happy to see this because he knew that outside of the six of them, none of his Queens had very many close friends even though he encouraged this. Perlyea and Aduna were rapidly becoming accepted by all of them as friends and they were growing closer as each day passed.

Anja turned her head back to him and she nudged his arm to make him look at her. "Jules says there are at least another thousand still in the trees Lover." She told him. "Looks like close to six thousand total by quick count."

Martin nodded his head slowly looking into her jade green eyes. "You going to tell me what the three of you are scheming in your heads?"

Anja's eyes shimmered with delight as she looked at him and she smiled. "As soon as we have all the details worked out, yes. You know we will."

Martin stared at her further for an extra-long moment. [Are you happy Red?] He asked finally within the private connection they shared with each other. Martin Leonidas shared a similar private connection with all of his Queens and another connection that was just for the seven of them, which is the one they almost always used.

Anja looked at him confused for a second. [Come again?]

[Are you happy?] Martin asked her once more. [With me? With your life?]

Anja's eyes grew a little wider at this question and she scooted closer to him, pressing her forehead to his and reaching up with her hand to grasp the back of his neck and stroke the long black hair there. [Why would you ever ask me a question like that after all of these years?] She spoke softly. She pressed the back of her other hand against his cheek. [Are you sick?]

[Things haven't exactly worked out the way we envisioned them outside Eden City you know.] He told her with a grin. [We...]

Anja put a slim finger to his lips and stopped his words. [I would not trade one day with you and the others for anything in the universe Martin.] Anja told him. [Not one hour. Not one moment. I am so happy with my life; with your love of me, my love for Aricia and For'mya and the others, our children together, everything that we have. I would not change one single thing about my life. None of us would. No other man could possibly make us feel what you do Lover, emotionally or physically. And the sex is... it is just out of this world good. We...]

Martin snorted and grinned at her now. [I get it.] He said.

Anja smiled brilliantly and met his eyes. [Well... maybe I would add a couple inches in my height. I'm so damn short.]

Martin smiled once more and leaned forward, pressing his forehead to hers harder and he kissed her full lips softly. [I like you just as you are.]

Anja took his face in her hands and stared at him, almost losing herself within the depths of those dark brown eyes they all adored so much. [Martin Leonidas, I love you more than I could ever put into words. We all do. And we love each other just as much. None of us would change a damn thing. Ever. For anything.]

Martin closed his eyes as she kissed him, slowly running her four inch long tongue along his lips as she knew he loved so much. She looked at him with her jade green eyes, the sunlight reflecting just right and making them glitter in the light.

[I just wanted to be sure.] Martin told her softly.

Anja smiled at him. [Well, be sure and stop with all these morose questions.] She told him. [Carians... you have the worst timing in the universe.]

Martin chuckled softly and nuzzled her cheek and neck causing Anja to gasp ever so softly in delight. [You, Aricia and For'mya seem to be getting along pretty well with Perlyea and this Aduna.] He told her, staring in to her eyes. [Even though she just got here, Aduna seems to resonate with you guys just as much as Perlyea. They appear to be very much in love and this resonates with you guys.]

Anja nodded her head with a smile. [They are good people Lover.] She said. [We have discovered quite a bit about them, mostly from Perlyea, but also from Aduna since she has been here. We have a lot in common with them.]

[That's it?] Martin asked her.

Anja looked at him intently. [Martin Leonidas...]

[Their desire for all of you is obvious even to a newborn wolf Red.] He told her. [But for you, it's very pronounced. And I'm not stupid Anja, I can sense that all of you are attracted to them.]

[Yes, they are attractive.] Anja answered knowing she could never lie to this man who she so loved. [They are very attractive in fact. All of us think so. We would be lying to you and ourselves if we said otherwise. That does not mean anything.]

Anja heard him chuckled within the connection even though his face remained impassive and he gave no outward appearance he was laughing. [Anja, it's me.] He told her. [They are very beautiful women, but they are not males, so you don't have to worry about me acting out like a possessive Alpha.]

[But they are females who happen to have both sets of reproductive organs.] Anja told him bluntly. [And while they are not anywhere as gifted as you Lover, they are impressive. Do you think we want to jump their bones? Is that it?]

[That's not it and you know that.] Martin told her. [I have been saying for years that the six of you need friends; outside friends that all of you can relate too. It seems Perlyea and now Aduna meet that criteria and I don't want any of you to lose that because you think I might not approve of them because of what they are packing between their legs. I would hope whether or not I approve doesn't matter to you guys.]

Anja stared at him for a moment and couldn't help but laugh gently in their connection at his rather blunt way of saying things. [Whether or not you approve of who we choose to call friend does matter to us Lover. Perlyea and Aduna have connected with us in a way no one else has, yes. They are confident, smart and drop dead gorgeous, but we have each other Lover. When you aren't around, we have each other to confide in and to keep each other warm.]

Martin nodded his head. [I know.] He told her. [I just want you to know that if it ever came up...]
[Martin...] Anja said.

Martin shook his head quickly. [Just don't discount it because of what you guys think I might feel about it.] He told her. He reached up and ran his fingers along her cheek watching as her eyes closed in happiness. [I want you; all of you, I want you to be happy Red. If being friends with Perlyea and Aduna, with anyone really, if this allows you to experience things with them that you can't with me, if that makes you guys happy, then that makes me happy.]

Anja opened her eyes and looked at him with unabashed love. [You are unlike any man that we have ever known Martin Leonidas.] She told him. [And that is why we love you like we do, and why we will always love you.]

Martin smiled at her and leaned forward to nuzzle her nose and cheek. [And that is a very good thing for me.] He said.

"Ahva?" Zarah's voice broke into their private moment and they both turned to look at her. (Papa)

Zarah motioned with her head and they followed this motion to see Nalmos scurrying up the side of the ridge with another, younger Lycavorian beside him and Danny and Pablo right on their heels. And they were moving with determination. Nalmos had full blown purpose to his life once more and his physical form showed. His few medical issues had quickly fallen by the wayside, as had all the issues with those who they had already encountered. Anja and her team of doctors and medics saw to that from the outset. Though he was nearing a hundred thousand years of life, Nalmos had regained his youthful vigor it seemed, something the events of the recent years and months had taken from him. Martin watched as he navigated the ridgeline with relative ease and moved up to where Martin and Anja stood. The second Beta Lycavorian seemed slightly out of place and less sure. He had to be one of the refugees for he did not look as healthy as those they had already encountered. Even so he looked in excellent shape if a little under nourished, and very alert mentally.

"Nalmos... I don't suppose that you know where all these new folks are coming from?" Martin asked as he rose to his full height, Anja with him as Nalmos moved up next to him. "My people say there are almost six thousand total."

Nalmos nodded his head as he caught his breath. "Martin... this is Junior Justice Denrak of our port city Microu. It is roughly fifty kilometers east of here along the coast."

Martin nodded his head. "Yep." He spoke. "That was going to be our next stop once we got Jorlari situated."

Nalmos nodded his head. "Denrak had just begun his first term as Junior Justice when the Svorag attacked. He has been keeping those survivors of Microu alive for months now. I was able to contact him just yesterday and have him bring his people in. They have been moving all night to get here."

Martin nodded his head and held out his hand to Denrak. "A pleasure to meet you." He said.

Denrak looked at Martin in shock at his outstretched hand. He appeared to be just about Martin's age by his scent and still looked quite young, meaning he did not appear a day over twenty-five. "Milord... I cannot! You are... you are an Alpha! And King!" He spoke bowing his head.

Martin rolled his eyes in disgust at this. "I ain't God Denrak! I'm just like you." He hissed softly. Nalmos nudged Denrak to comply and the young man finally reached out and took the hand and shook it. Martin smiled and made a show of looking around below them. "Ok... I'm assuming all these other refugees are with you and that that would account for the additional survivors we were talking about when you came up." He stated. "How many in your group Justice Denrak?"

"Just under three thousand Milord." Denrak answered quickly and Martin saw he wasn't going to get him to call him by his name. He was too young and too inexperienced.

"You came cross country?" Martin asked.

"It was not far Milord." He answered. "We have been staying in the mountains outside Microu anyway."

Martin's eyes narrowed. "Why not in the city remains?" He asked. "At least there you can use whatever shelter endured."

"That is why I brought him up to see you right away Martin." Nalmos said.

"I'm not following." Martin said.

"I think there may be another bunker like the ones here in Jorlari." Nalmos said. "Denrak told me at night, from the mountains, they could hear strange noises and see different lights from parts of the city."

Denrak nodded his head. "They were like animal noises Milord." He echoed Nalmos. "I did not want to send any of my people back to investigate. I had few enough of our surviving military as it is to defend the civilians. We would go to the city to scavenge supplies and such but only during long, day light hours where we could see things coming."

Martin looked at Nalmos. "Another underground bunker?" He asked. "Our sensors should have picked it up Nalmos. We found the others."

Nalmos nodded his head. "Yes I know, but then I remembered that your Colonel Collins mentioned that your shipboard sensors could be affected by trace ores in the surface terrain or water."

Martin nodded his head. "Yeah."

Nalmos moved a little closer. "The coast all along this region of the continent is rich with high concentrations of Rubidium Ore pebbles. I checked with Colonel Collins and she says this is one of the elements that can affect your sensors from orbit."

"It would not give an accurate scan." Martin said to no one in particular.

Nalmos shook his head. "Not underground, no." He answered. "And this Ore is very prominent in and around Microu. Even as crushed dust in the streets and surrounding areas."

"We got a four member team in that area Marty. We can have them do a quick recon." Danny spoke up now.

Martin nodded and looked at Pablo. "Tell Jules to give the order Pablo. Not too close though, just in case. And check in every hour on the dot."

Pablo nodded his head. "Will do Skipper." He said before turning and jogging off.

Danny stepped up close to Anja and looked at him. "We are stretched real thin until Andro gets here fervon." He said seeing Denrak's eyes grow a little wider at his use of the ancient language and his casual interaction with the Alpha who was King of their people.

Martin nodded his head. "I know and it is driving me nuts." He said. He looked at Denrak. "How many soldiers do you have among your group?"

"Barely two hundred survived the attack on Microu Milord." Denrak answered. "The officer in charge has been keeping them together quite well. They saved many hundreds of lives in those first days. The Commander, he deserves awards that I cannot give to him. To this day he keeps his men ready to defend the civilians at a moment's notice. There are another hundred or so among my group that are armed and can fight."

Martin shook his head. "No, I want only the trained ones." He said. "Danny, once they get to Jorlari, pull this Commander aside and get him and his men seen by Anja's medics. Pull from our reserve stores on the ARC ROYAL and let's put them to work."

Danny nodded his head. "Done."

"There is something else Milord." Denrak said. "I don't know if it is important or not but..."

Martin looked at him. "Go ahead. Right about now, anything you can tell us is of use. We will discount nothing."

Denrak looked at Nalmos quickly and then back to Martin. "Once we began traveling here to answer Justice Nalmos's call, a group of new survivors joined my people in the last two days. About twenty of them. They just wandered into our group from all around as we moved through the timber and tried to blend in. Others have done this in past Milord and we never thought anything of it. Until now."

"Until now? Why is now so different?" Anja asked now as her own short hairs began to tremble.

Denrak nodded his head. "I know all of my people Milady." He answered her. That she was an Alpha female and Queen was obvious to Denrak even before he got this close to them and he called her Milady almost by instinct. Despite her diminutive size, her female wolf aura reeked of power. Her unique female scent was saturated with the King's scent marking them as mates to any wolf with half a brain. Her female aura projected indifference to any male wolf who could smell her, indicating that she was mated and had been for many years.

Denrak could taste her Alpha female aura and being a male he could sense right away that she was not an available female. He found himself briefly hoping that the many young Beta males within his group did not attempt to pulse her with their auras. He did not think it would turn out well for them. "We have been together since the beginning, and they are not part of my group. We have had to scavenge for food and shelter for three years now, yet these newcomers, they look healthy and fit. And their clothing is not as it should be after three years of hiding and running in the mountains."

Anja nodded towards him in acknowledgement. "Very perceptive Justice Denrak." She told him.

"And they are Betas Denrak?" Martin asked.

The young man nodded his head quickly as he looked back to Martin. "Yes. But none that I have ever seen as I said, and we have been together in the mountains for a very long time Milord. I would know them if they had been citizens of Microu."

Martin nodded his head then. "I figured as much. They landed on Ventori two days ago." He told the two men seeing their faces twist into utter amazement. "They tried to sneak onto the planet through what they thought were small gaps in our sensor grid of the Ventori planetary system. Big mistake on their part, they are thinking like Pralors and not wolves, but they don't know that. We've been tracking them since they landed about fifty clicks outside Microu. They left five on their ship, a short range Tasmor transport of all things, something that the Tasmor will be very interested in I'm sure. Fourteen of them moved to just outside where your people were camped in the mountains above Microu. Once Nalmos contacted you and they discovered their opportunity to act, they began to blend into your people as you moved here."

"You have known about them this whole time?" Denrak asked with a stunned expression.

Martin grinned at him. "Justice Denrak, you will come to discover that there is very little that escapes my notice when it comes to the safety and concern of my people. Like I said, they are thinking like Pralors, not knowing that I am one sneaky tukannupae."

Nalmos chuckled at that while Denrak looked at Martin with wide eyes. "I am... I am only a Junior Justice Milord." He stammered in reply.

"You were a Junior Justice." Martin corrected him. "I just promoted you. At least until we can get things situated here and we can hold new elections among the survivors. That will be a while since the Tasmor are still organizing ships to bring our people home here. It might take several months."

Denrak continued to stare at him in open mouthed shock. "Carians!" He exclaimed.

Anja laughed softly at his reaction. "He has that effect on a lot of people." She told him with a smile.

"Have they tried to do anything?" Danny asked Denrak now.

Denrak shook his head now, not only to clear his thoughts, but to try and get a handle on what was happening. "That's just it." He told them quickly. "They only seem to be interested in observing what is happening. They rarely talk to anyone not in their immediate group and they are much more alert than most of the others."

"They have got to be from the same group Dy ran into." Dan said without a hint of doubt referring to Dysea by the nickname they had given her all those years ago while they were building Eden City.

Martin nodded his head. "Sure seems like it. But why? Why spy on your own people?"

Anja looked up at Martin beside her. "They were tracking Jezima and Meral when Melda Min bumped into them Lover." She said. "They were Betas on that ship too and Dysea did tell them where she was going. Maybe they decided to put someone down on the surface to find out about Jezima and Meral."

Martin looked at Anja for a moment and she saw that same vicious protectiveness for his grandmother and aunt that she saw for her and his other Queens. The kind that did not bode well for those who were trying to hurt those that he loved. Martin didn't turn away from looking at her but his next words were directed at Danny.

"Fervon, put Colin and Jules on these new folks and tell the team we have following them to drop back some." Martin spoke firmly. "Watch them from the shadows and when they get back to the ADHOC we'll take them."

Danny didn't hesitate and nodded his head. "Done."

Martin looked at him this time. "And Dan... have Nayeca put a couple extra bodies on my Grandmother and Aunt. Discretely. I'll let Archer and Asa know so that they are aware."

Danny's face was emotionless as he nodded once more. "I'll take care of it." He spoke and turned to head back down the ridge.

Martin looked at Denrak, who appeared quite intimidated by Martin's very demeanor as an Alpha Wolf and King. "Denrak, what say we get down there and help your people through this last piece of timber?"

Denrak looked stunned. "You... you Milord?" He gasped in shock.

Martin looked indignant and Anja laughed at his expression. "Yeah." Martin finally answered him. "I do pretty well in the timber you know."

ADHOC COMPOUND ROYAL QUARTERS

"...is where we stand." Aricia finished explaining what their situation was. The one thing that Namiri noticed above all else was that each of them kept looking back to her with gorgeous colored eyes and they appeared to be looking right through her. "This is not something we came to lightly Sadi, but we felt it needed to be tried. We know that you and Ne'Veha and the others might refuse, as is your right. I know Anja, For'mya and I had a hard time reconciling this when we put ourselves in your positions. Androcles might refuse even if you do agree with us, but it is something we felt we needed to ask."

"Do not think less of us for this approach Sadi." For'mya added.

It was Ne'Veha who shook her head instantly in response to For'mya's words. "Never." She said. "That is not something we could do. Not when we now know all the details."

"Aricia, will this even work?" Sadi asked as she looked at the data pad in her hand. They had transmitted the details to them via secure COMs so that they could review them while they spoke.

"Only if it appears Namiri was meant to be with Andro and all of you." Aricia answered honestly. "We have spoken with Deia and she agrees that if it appears to have happened as it did with all of you, then our people will not question it. If our people do not question it, then Saydia is certain the Tasmor will not."

Saydia nodded her head. "As strange as it may seem, my people tend to look at other culture's beliefs in very honorable terms. What Aricia has explained to me about how her son has found all of you, how all of you found him, that is something that would be looked upon by my people as almost religious in nature and they would view this as very favorably for Namiri. Almost as a sign really. Even the Quorum would not question it because of how your people view it."

Sadi sat back in the chair she was in and exhaled heavily. Aricia noticed this and leaned forward in her chair. "Sadi, speak to us. What are you thinking?"

"Does Andro know about this?" She asked evenly. "He knows about the serious lack of numbers, yes, and Martin not calling for more troops? But this Svorag ship?"

"We don't know for sure, but knowing how he and his father communicate far more than we are aware of, I would have to say yes." Aricia answered.

Sadi nodded her head in agreement at that statement. "We don't know when or how he does it, but we are pretty sure he speaks to Martin every day."

Aricia nodded. "Anja, For'mya and I agree." She said.

"And if he knows about it and has not acted on it, then that means he shares Martin's view point on the issue." Caliria finished saying what they all were thinking.

Aricia nodded her head as well. "Very true Inamarno." Aricia spoke calling her by the name all of them had given their blue skinned wife and fellow Princess. "Neither of them will endanger the welfare or future of the Union for any reason. Pulling large amounts of troops when they feel they will be needed back home is not something they will do. They will try and solve the issue here or die trying."

Sehri looked at Sadi now. "That is why he has had trouble sleeping these last few days Sadi." She said. "He is trying to develop some sort of plan to act upon to counter this. It has to be."

Sadi nodded her head. "I think you may be right DuanGai." She said.

"Martin has had Avi running the numbers here for days Sadi." For'mya interjected then. "None of the scenarios are promising in the least. So far all of them have all of us being killed or transformed into one of the Svorag."

"What about the attack on the mother ship?" Carisia asked. "Won't that help?"

Aricia nodded her head. “It will keep them from being able to resupply the Svorag that they land, but that one ship has almost seven million Svorag on it Carisia. We don’t know how many they will be able to land before we destroy it. If we can destroy it.”

“Do you hesitate because you do not trust the Tasmor?” Saydia asked.

Lu'ria was the one to answer that question and put that issue to rest right away. “Lady Daret, if the Tasmor were not trusted, we would not be having this conversation and discussing what we are discussing.”

Saydia looked at the table sheepishly and shook her head. “Of course.” She spoke looking at Namiri as her daughter squeezed her arm. “That was silly of me to say.”

“It was honest.” Carisia added now. “Namiri Daret... may we call you Namiri...?”

Namiri stared into those Maya blue eyes of the raven haired vampire woman and nodded. “Of course.” She replied instantly.

“Are you certain you are willing to do this?” Carisia asked her. “Aricia, For'mya and Anja have told you that if we do this, you must act the part. And you must be convincing. We will help you in every way we can, but you must be willing to see and do things that you might not have done before. Things that Tasmor might not normally do.”

Namiri glanced quickly at her mother and then back to Carisia. “I know that I will need to act as the six of you act. As one of his wives and mates.” She answered her. “That I may need to sleep in the same bed as all of you. That...”

Sadi leaned forward next to Carisia’s head. “That’s not what she means Namiri Daret. You have been among our people Namiri.” She said evenly. “You know how we act with each other? How Aricia and Anja and For'mya act with each other?”

Namiri nodded her head. “Yes... I have seen it with Aricia, Anja and For'mya here.”

“You will never be asked to do something that you do not wish to do.” Sadi told her. “Ever. By any of us or Andro. As for the sleeping arrangements, our quarters here on the ship are on a private deck. We can arrange something comfortable for you while we are here, but the planet is far less private and...”

“I will do what is necessary Sadi Leonidas.” Namiri told her evenly. “I believe in the need for this for both our peoples to survive. And I also believe that I will not be forced to do something that I do not want to do, but I know I need to play a role. I can do this. I know I can do this.”

Sadi smiled slightly at her response, sensing the strength and intelligence in this young woman even through the communications. And Sadi had to admit, Namiri Daret was very easy on the eyes to look at. She could feel Sehri and Ne'Veha and the others agreeing with her in that regard just by the ebb of their Etheric resonance. “Yes, we believe you can as well.” She echoed Namiri’s words. She looked at her fellow Crown Princess’s and saw all of them nod their heads together. They were all in agreement as Sadi knew they would be after having all of the facts.

Sadi shifted her jungle green eyes back to Aricia and For'mya. “I think you knew we would see things just as you, For'mya and Anja do once we knew all of the facts Aricia.” She said with a smile. “We are too much alike.”

Aricia nodded her head. “I had a feeling, yes, but we needed to let you hear the details and decide for yourselves.”

Sadi smiled and looked first at Carisia, Lu'ria and Caliria and then Sehri and Ne'Veha on her opposite side. “We are way too much alike you know.” She said turning back to Aricia.

Aricia and For'mya chuckled heartily at this. “Yes, we certainly are.” For'mya answered. “And this drives Martin and Androcles malda.”

Sadi and the others nodded and laughed with Aricia and For'mya. “Yes it does.” Sadi spoke.

“I think perhaps we should get acquainted with Namiri since we have the time.” Caliria told them. “If it is acceptable to her, we would like to speak with her alone.”

“I would like that!” Namiri said with an unusual amount of excitement her mother saw. “I would like that very much.”

Aricia nodded her head as she began to rise. “Certainly. Take as long as you like.” She looked at Saydia and Anthylea and motioned them up as she turned to look at Namiri. “Saydia why don’t we leave them alone and we can work out the details of how you will present this to the Quorum.”

Saydia nodded her head. “Of course.”

VENTORI LIRANA'S INTEL GROUP

Whatever she had been expecting it was not what she was seeing.

Lirana had selected nineteen men and women to accompany her on this mission. All of them experienced fighters with ample experience. Many of them had far more experience and many more years in age than her, but because she was Konlar's wife and mate, that made her unique.

The sensors on their Pralor transport had allowed them to measure the gaps in the sensor cones of the many ships in orbit above Ventori when they arrived. They had remained hidden with the edges of the third moon's gaseous rings while conducting their scans and finding the best way down to the surface. There were very few gaps and they had to thread the needle in order to reach the surface undetected, almost getting caught once when a sensor beam swept over them inadvertently. They had finally made it to the surface and intercepted the calls of this Chief Justice Nalmos and their location. It was easy enough to make their way over land to intercept this group coming from Microu, which they did. What they found had stunned all of them since they believed that no survivors existed on Ventori after the Svorag attack. Lorendo had told them that those the Tasmor did not rescue were left to die and the planet was a dead hulk now. He had lied to them yet again and Lirana was beginning to share her beloved husband and mate's viewpoint of the Pralor Lorendo.

For over a day they listened and moved with this group of survivors from Microu, until finally they came face to face with those they had only heard about in stories as children.

Alpha Wolves. And lots of them.

Lirana and her group had been dumbstruck to say the least. These Alphas were unlike any of the stories they had heard. Alphas were supposed to be the most powerful and violent of their species. Yet what she had witnessed in the last few hours alone had most certainly changed all that. She saw one Alpha wolf, a hulking man well over six feet tall, one child perched on his shoulders and one in each of his arms as he walked them down the side of the ridge. The children were laughing in his arms, his tanned face bright and happy as he told them obviously funny jokes in order to make them laugh so. She had seen two other Alphas move to where four men were carrying a makeshift carryall between them and they took this burden from the men without question. Lirana saw many Beta wolves mixed in with the Alphas, all of them looking fit and more powerful than any Beta she had ever seen with the exception of her husband and those among her people. Several of the Beta wolves she saw giving instructions to Alphas, which were acted on almost instantly. She saw many other men and women who were not wolf, but Lirana could sense something about them was different. She saw at least four other species among the men and women alone, species that she had never seen or knew existed. What she did take note of right away was the fact that every form of burden that the Beta wolves from Microu carried was taken from them almost immediately when an Alpha or one of the other new people came close. She saw elder women being carried gingerly down the mountain, injured men and women were being swarmed but who she could only assume were medical people of some sort.

Lirana was jarred from her thoughts as she walked when one of the most senior men in Konlar's command appeared next to her. He was a grizzled old veteran and had been a close friend of their family for decades. He always made it his goal to insure her security whenever he was with her.

"Lirana?" He spoke softly as he fell in beside her.

"Neral... what have you discovered?" Lirana asked as they continued to move along the ridge towards the valley below.

"Whoever they are, they are far more organized than any I have seen in my lifetime." The seven thousand year old Beta wolf told her.

Lirana glanced at him. "What do you mean?" She asked him.

"Even as they help those around us, they have dozens more in the timber all around us providing security." Neral told her. "I can smell them, but I cannot see them."

"Do you feel it as well Neral?" Lirana asked.

He glanced at her quickly. “Yes. The aura of an Alpha wolf that surpasses all those we have seen and felt so far on this planet by a margin I cannot begin to explain.”

Lirana looked around as they continued to move. “I have never felt so many powerful auras in one place like this. So many Alphas... but so many powerful Betas as well.”

“They are extremely well equipped and well-armed.” Neral told her. “They move with the grace and effortlessness of seasoned combat veterans Lirana. Men and women who have faced battle before and been victorious. Lorendo did not tell us this.”

“No he did not.” Lirana said. “And I feel coming here was a mistake.”

“What do you mean girl?” Neral asked. “We have been very careful in our actions.”

Lirana nodded in agreement. “Yes we have.” She told him. “What we did not take into account because we have not been here since the Svorag attack, is how refugees would look. Our garments are not worn and ripped. We are healthy and well fed while the others are not. We stand out in too many small ways for it to be a coincidence Neral.”

Neral nodded his head after a long moment. “Yes, I see your point.” He spoke softly. “What do you suggest?”

Lirana shook her head. “I don’t know to be honest.” She replied. “We wish to see where they are taking the refugees and where the two women we were following have gone but I fear that if we continue further we will be discovered.”

“Do we give the abort signal?” Neral asked her.

Lirana was silent for a moment and then shook her head. “No. We need to discover why Lorendo wanted these women so badly. And the only way to do that is to find them in whatever camp they have put together. We will continue on but tell everyone to be extra cautious in what they do and say to others.”

Neral nodded his head and then slowly moved off. Lirana heard the excited squeal of several children and her head whipped around and her eyes grew wide. The single source of the overwhelming Alpha aura she and the others had been feeling was now only a few hundred feet from her. Martin Leonidas had hauled two children into his arms as they moved down the rocky ridge, another male carrying a third and the children were delighted in this. She saw the petite Persian red haired female, also incredibly powerful and with an Alpha female wolf aura that far surpassed her own, helping the mother of the children, for she appeared several months along in pregnancy once more.

Something inside her told Lirana that they needed to turn back now, that none of this felt right at all. Almost as if they had already been discovered. That couldn’t be possible she knew, at least not that she was aware of, and her husband and her people needed the intelligence that she could get them. She pushed her fear and doubt to the deep recesses of her mind and then continued walking along with all the others.

ECHO QUADRANT

HADOR

PRALOR DESIGNATION MOON 739

Edrao entered the medium sized bunker and saw Konlar standing by the computer station and the man controlling it. He turned at Edrao’s entrance and watched as the much older Pralor/Lycavorian elder moved to get a large mug of clear, mountain water and then moved over beside him.

“Lirana?” Edrao asked him.

Konlar nodded his head. “They made it into the system and onto the surface with no issues.” Konlar answered with a touch of pride.

Edrao knew that Konlar worshiped his wife, mate and mother to his children and while there were three thousand years between them in age, for their people age was really not a factor because of their longevity. Lirana had been smitten by the broad chested Konlar almost from the outset and their union had been seen many years before they actually became mates. Lirana was one of the most skilled and tested females among their Pack, and as Konlar’s wife she also was looked up to by many.

“Then my tactic worked?” Edrao asked.

Konlar nodded his head. “There were gaps in their sensor coverage of the system. Our Tasmor contacts say that this King has requested that all Lycavorians from Ventori be returned as soon as possible if that is their wish.”

Edrao looked at him with wide eyes. “He requested it?” He gasped. “He didn’t demand?”

“Apparently not.” Konlar said. “There are rumors from the Tasmor homeworld that there was a confrontation with a Kintaur fleet. This Lycavorian King killed a senior Kintaur officer in front of the fleet’s commander, a Sector General, then had their ship destroyed. The Kintaur fleet quickly departed Ventori space after this. He protected the Tasmor Sovereign Regent, who appears to be on Ventori as well.”

Edrao sipped his water. “You have been busy Konlar my boy.” He said.

Konlar nodded his head. “I don’t trust Lorendo. He is up to something and I will not have us dangling out in the open while he gets away free. We have many contacts within the Tasmor society, and we have always helped each other.”

“An arrangement that appears to be paying dividends now.” Edrao said. “What else?”

“They do not know very much because of the layers of security, but as you know it is not often the Tasmor Sovereign Regent leaves their homeworld.” Konlar spoke. “She is currently on Ventori with two of her daughters, the youngest ones. If the reports are accurate, they are working out some sort of mutual agreement. Part of that is bringing the surviving Lycavorians back to Ventori. The Tasmor fleet has already begun to prep for this, and there are a few Tasmor ships within the system that are transiting back and forth. That is why I had her use our Tasmor transport to land. Less chance they would be questioned if discovered.”

“The Lycavorians do almost all of their mining.” Edrao spoke softly. “Their mines are poison to Tasmor. How will this affect their production I wonder?”

“Our contact was not sure, but they were reasonably certain that the Sovereign Regent wasn’t given much of a choice, but that concessions were made.” Konlar said.

“Concessions?” Edrao spoke. “The Tasmor Sovereign Regent is not known to give concessions easily. That would be an interesting event to witness. What do these Alphas have that the Tasmor could want?”

Konlar motioned to one of the screens surrounding the man who sat in front of them. “Look.” He stated pointing to the screen.

Edrao leaned closer and his eyes grew even wider as he saw the many large warships in the image. He moved closer. “Warships?” He gasped.

Konlar nodded his head. “And lots of them.” He told him. “Lirana’s transmission before they went to the surface spoke of over forty warships of varying size within sensor range of the transport. Very large and very well armed from what she could make out. They didn’t scan any of them but she is reasonably certain they are using a power source based on Pralor technology Edrao. Your concerns about why Lorendo is acting as he is now may have just been answered.”

“Carians, Alpha Lycavorians with Pralor technology!” Edrao gasped.

Konlar nodded his head. “And if they are using it to bargain with the Tasmor, then it makes sense that the refugees from Ventori would begin returning soon if this King called for them. It is in our blood and instincts to follow the most powerful Alpha Edrao. You know this.”

Edrao nodded his head. “Yes.”

“If this Alpha is powerful enough of an influence to alter the Tasmor Sovereign Regent’s point of view...” Konlar said.

Edrao nodded once more. “I know.” He said. “Hopefully Lirana will be able to tell us more. There is no point in speculating until we know more.”

Konlar nodded now. “Agreed.”

“What about the station?” Edrao asked.

Konlar leaned over and altered the view of the monitor they were using by tapping the screen twice. “You were correct.” He stated. “The miniaturized Worker Drone pods that you developed are working perfectly. We were able to fly them right up to the facility and insert them via one of the exterior vent shafts. We are getting pictures of the inside of the facility that we have never seen before.”

“Why does the way you say that make my skin crawl?” Edrao said softly.

“It is as you feared Edrao.” Konlar told him. “Whatever it is they have been working on all these years is not a cure for the Svorag virus. They have been able to access several areas with the drones, keeping them out of sight, but all they have recorded so far are extreme quarantine measures and vacuum sealed doors and hatches. They have only been able to enter a third of the facility. The other areas are sealed with force fields and security measures I have never seen.”

Edrao looked at him. “Konlar... do you realize what this could be?” He asked.

Konlar nodded his head slowly. “And I hope we are wrong.” He said softly.

VENTORI ADHOC BASE

They were selected very early on in the grueling eighteen month long Durcunusaan training regime. They were singled out for one thing or another, whether it be increased intelligence, reflexes, endurance or simple strength. Once this was completed, their standard Durcunusaan training was altered slightly to make the tasks and training even harder than they normally were, but done so in a way that it was never really noticed.

They were being tested further and did not know it.

Selection for inclusion into the ranks of the famed Durcunusaan was the single most stringent process anywhere within the Union military. The only possible exception being the Omega Teams, and the Nexus Grid personnel, but in order to be considered for them, you had to have been active military for at least ten years. The Durcunusaan candidates were the youngest and brightest of the many cultures within the Union as a whole and all of them were subjected to the exact same standards of testing. No difference were made for species or gender, this was one of the very first and most important controls that Vengal and Vistr had put into place from the onset of the program. While it was true that the Durcunusaan were mostly made up of Lycavorians, Elves and Vampires, there were nearly a dozen different species from within the Union who were members of the Durcunusaan and all of them had succeeded where so many failed. The failure ratio had improved slightly over the years since their inception, but it was had the highest drop-out level anywhere within the Union military. Perhaps one in five thousand graduated Durcunusaan training, and each class was roughly five hundred when they began.

Then there was the Hippeis Sedla.

Only three species made up the Hippeis Sedla, and that had not altered since their origins only months after the Durcunusaan were created. By decree, Lycavorians, Elves and Vampires were the only species allowed to hold positions within the Hippeis Sedla, mainly because of the species of their six Queens. Just recently, an addendum to their charter had been added and now two Hadarians were in the final stages of their training as full Hippeis Sedla. Out of over a thousand Hadarians that had applied, only two had been able to survive the training until now. Both were female obviously, but the lone male who had lasted until the just before the last phase, he was now undergoing additional training that would make him one of the most sought after surgeons within the entire Union military and rank him fourth in line to command the entire Union Medical Corp behind Queen Anja, Princess Eliani and Star Colonel Anuk.

The Durcunusaan Hippeis Sedla were a breed apart.

Each was approached after their graduation from normal Durcunusaan training when all the celebrating and ceremonies were over. Each was given one day to make the decision, none of those chosen to be asked had mates or children. All of them were single and in the peak of physical perfection. Those who volunteered after being given the opportunity were then spirited away to a remote Durcunusaan base. No one knew where this base was, but most of those who had graduated the schooling were sure it was not on Apo Prime where the main Durcunusaan training facility was. It was here on this base that they began three years of what would amount to the most grueling, cruel and sometimes humiliating training any of them had ever been subjected too. The training for the Hippeis Sedla was broken into six different phases of six months each. Fail one stage, no matter where it was in the order, and you were terminated from the program, never to be allowed to try again.

There were three requirements that were inescapable even before the individual was considered for the Hippeis Sedla. They had to be a Tier Six Etheric user, they had to have at minimum a Degree in one field or another, and the last requirement was that they spoke the ancient Lycavorian language fluently.

The First Phase was simple six months of survival and showing that you had what it took physically to endure hardships beyond any that were expected of normal soldiers. Very few candidates finished this stage without the scars to prove their worth.

The Second Phase of the training was six months' worth of becoming intimate with every known Union military weapons system and becoming experts with all of them. Assault rifles, handguns, heavy weapons, Nehtes, swords and knives. All of them had to be mastered in order to pass this Phase of the course. Fail one weapons system and you failed the phase.

Phase Three was a six month long field operation where you were dropped on a planet and you had to survive alone for that six months, all the while avoiding being captured by the many enemy forces that were looking for you. If you were caught, you were out of the program.

Phase Four was completely academic in nature. A six month stint at the Apo Prime University taking advanced classes in whatever field the candidate had excelled in during school. During this time, the candidate also had to learn an additional language to complement their use of the ancient Lycavorian language.

Phase Five was perhaps the most difficult phase since the individuals were paired with another candidate and they had to learn to work through the differences of their personalities to become a smooth operating team. This is when they learned that they would always be paired with another wherever they were sent and to guard whoever they were supposed to guard. It was during this Phase where many candidates washed out. They were unable to work seamlessly with another individual to the point that everything they did was almost second nature to them both. If they did wash out of this phase, each individual was given a glowing recommendation and a promotion and then placed within the normal Durcunusaan forces, usually leading to leadership positions within a year or so because of the advanced training they had received.

Phase Six is where these teams, usually down to four or five teams of two, brought it altogether and made it work. Phase Six was six months of real world missions that could take them anywhere in the universe and into any situation. Once in Phase Six you were considered an active member of the Hippeis Sedla and were treated as such. Essentially Phase Six was a probationary period that you had to pass in order to be recognized. Only one team had ever failed to complete Phase Six in the twenty years that the Hippeis Sedla had been in existence, and they had been killed standing back to back during the nightmare that was Alba Tau. Their names now resided on the Durcunusaan Wall of Honored Dead at the main facility on Apo Prime and the graduation grounds at Thermopylae.

Vengal had known immediately who he was going to send the moment he received the communication from Martin Leonidas and they now stood just inside the doorway of Jezima and Meral's quarters on Ventori. Jezima and Meral both had protested loudly when they had arrived and Martin told them who they were. After twenty minutes of ranting at Martin and finally seeing the set of his impassive face they both relented and were introduced to the two individuals who would die to ensure the protection of their charges, even if that meant letting innocents fall to accomplish that goal.

The Hippeis Sedla were not known for being gentle in anything they did. If it put their charges at risk, or it was a threat to them in any way, that risk and threat was eliminated without remorse or pause.

The pureblooded female vampire was barely five feet tall and was the picture of exotic and surreal beauty. Her black hair hung well past her shoulders, her normal pale blue eyes bright and ever so alert, and able to change to the cobalt blue of her vampire persona in a blink. The Lycavorian male was six foot three inches tall, with wild brown hair that was tied into a pony tail and stunning teal green eyes. When in wolf form he was close to the size of the Leonidas males and this was due to the purity of his Lycavorian blood and the fact that his ancestors were members of King Resumar's inner Circle.

Colonel Archer Elmand's own great grandfather had fallen the same day as King Resumar, fighting by his side. Colonel Asa Rakish was the daughter of purebloods who had come to the Union with Queen Isabella. Her mother and father were honored members of the City Council of Tuya on Apo Prime and her four brother and three sisters all served the Union in some capacity. Their parents had raised them to be what some would call super patriots, but they had always worn that term with pride. They were an odd pair when you looked at them in a relaxed position, but they had become the most effective team the Hippeis Sedla had ever produced in their twenty plus years of existence. Vengal knew what Jezima and Meral meant to his King and friend and only the very best he could send would suffice.

Martin Leonidas had approved immensely when he saw who Vengal had sent.

Jezima looked at them as they sat beside one another at the small counter that separated the small kitchen from the rest of the living area of the portable bungalow. She and Meral had spoken well into the evening hours the night before with them and Jezima found them to be fascinating to the extreme. Meral she knew was having a harder time adjusting to what it meant now that they had discovered Martin and the others and just what their roles would now mean to the billions of Lycavorians who descended from those Sumar, Wayonn and the others had helped to shape. She was coming around Jezima knew, but it would take her a bit longer to get used to it.

Jezima looked at Archer and Asa as they sipped the mugs of coffee as Meral came into the small kitchen behind her.

“So what happens now?” Jezima asked them.

Archer looked at Asa with a confused expression and then back to Jezima. “I don’t think I understand the question Lady Jezima.” He spoke.

“Do you limit what we can do and where we can go?” Meral asked. “That is what my mother is asking.”

Archer looked surprised at the question and glanced once more at Asa. It was she who took on that question.

“We are not here to impede what you choose to do Lady Meral.” Asa told her. “Only to protect you.”

Meral looked at her. “But protecting us is keeping us from doing what we want to do isn’t it?” Meral asked confused now.

Asa smiled brightly. “Perhaps in times past.” She said. “Not any longer. Not with Archer and I.”

“We were going to see the new Lycavorians that Martin was bringing into the compound today.” Jezima said.

Asa nodded her head. “Then that is what you will do.” She told them. “As I said, we are not here to restrict what you do, only to protect you should the need arise. You must understand, whether Martin or the Queens have told you...”

Jejima looked surprised. “You call him by name?” she asked.

Archer nodded his head. “He insists upon it for all the Durcunusaan.” He said in reply. “As do the Queens. They know many of us by name and both Asa and I have served with them before. It is not something that many of my comrades are comfortable with but my ancestors were part of King Sumar’s Inner Circle and Asa’s parents were with Queen Isabella when they first came to the Union. Neither of us seems to have an issue with it.”

“There are those who do not feel for the King and Queens what most of our people do.” Asa told them. “They feel they would make better rulers.”

Jejima looked at her. “That always seems to be the case.” She said. “A single individual or group who thinks they are better suited to rule over others and believe they should have the power to do so.”

Asa nodded her head. “Yes it does, no matter the form of government that rules. They would like nothing better than to see the King and Queens disgraced or dead. Too many have targeted those he loves to try and get to him in the past. After Queen For’mya was taken, it was decided by General Vengal that everyone who is a Leonidas or close family member or friend would have Hippeis Sedla protection. In your case, it means far more than you know for you are...”

“Essentially you are the mother to us all.” Archer told her rising to his feet and seeing Jezima’s eyes grow wider. “From you is where our Pralor blood began, you are King Sumar’s mother and sister! We honor all those who settled among our people so many millennia ago, and you will be loved just for who you are.”

“And hated.” Meral said but with no malice in her voice.

Asa nodded her head slowly. “Perhaps by those who crave power to subjugate and rule, but that is not for you to worry about. That is our job. And we are very good at our job.” She said.

“I don’t like all this attention.” Jezima spoke softly.

Meral stepped up to her and placed her hand on her shoulder. “Mother, we have hidden for so long.” She said after a long pause. “We cannot hide any longer. We must trust in Martin now. He is your son’s descendant, my brother’s descendant. He is our family. They all are. We never doubted Sumar. It is time for us to once more honor who we are. Who he was.”

Jejima looked at her and nodded her head after a long moment. “You are right Meral. Forgive me.” She said.

“There is nothing to forgive Lady Jezima.” Asa told her.

Jezima took a deep breath and nodded her head once more. She looked at Archer and Asa. “Then we will do what we want just as you suggest.”

Archer nodded his head with a smile. “Excellent!”

VENTORI
ADHOC COMPOUND
PORTABLE COMMAND BRIEFING CENTER

“...This true?” Vesara Athcer gasped as she lowered the data pad and looked at Saydia sitting at the head of the table, Aricia and For'mya standing just to her left holding hands, while Anthylea stood to her right.

Saydia nodded her head slowly. “Namiri informed me of this only this morning. Needless to say I was quite taken aback.” She told them.

“You expect us to believe this?” Vesara hissed as she leaned forward.

“I don't particularly care what you believe Vesara!” Saydia snapped at her. “You and several others on this Quorum still cling to the false ideal that we, as Tasmor, are the dominant species in this universe even after what you have seen here. There are species out among the stars that could squash us like insects and still you won't let this ridiculous ideal go. We are among one of those species even now, and yet all they wish is friendship and allies so far from their own home. They have but a miniscule fraction of the power they could bring to bear on any enemy with them now and you sit there unwilling to see this. This is happening whether we want it to or not! I was equally as surprised when Namiri informed me of this. She has always been the more introverted of my daughters, you all know this, mainly because of who her father is and the circumstances that put the two of us together. This is not something that I expected her to announce to me, but after what little I have seen, I am not going to question it. I do not understand all of it, and that is why I have asked for Queen Aricia and Queen For'mya to be here, in order to answer these questions. You can question Namiri herself if you choose, but I doubt very much she will tell you anything. When I left her, she was speaking rather animatedly with those she has been able to feel for weeks now. And she was quite happy.” This was not a lie for Saydia had stolen a look back into the COM center as she left and Namiri was indeed speaking with Sadi and the others in a very energetic manner.

“This is only a means for you to wrest control out of the Quorum's hands!” Vesara barked.

“I am wresting control of nothing!” Saydia snapped. “I am simply informing you of an event that will alter our relations with the Lycavorians.”

It was the Tasmor Defense Minister who put an end to the growing squabble between Saydia and Vesara. “Saydia... you have seen this... this power that they have?” Seran asked leaning forward in her own chair and making her voice rise above Vesara.

Saydia nodded her head slowly. “Briefly, yes. Namiri and Emylea have seen even more of it and what they can do. Tobia tried to explain it to me after she first came to be among us, but I did not listen.” Saydia turned her head and looked at Aricia. “Aricia...?”

Aricia smiled and stepped up beside her at the table. She lifted her left hand and all the Tasmor present at the table jumped in shock as the Etheric knife burst into existence extended from Aricia's closed fist.

“It is called Etheric power.” Aricia stated. “You must have seen it among the Pralor people even just a little.”

It was Seran who nodded her head quickly. “Yes... yes, but never so blatant and in such physical terms!” She gasped.

Aricia nodded her own head. “It is common among the Pralors and my people, Etheric abilities as a whole, but to be able to do this...” She lifted her hand and showed them the Etheric knife once more. “This requires a certain gene to be present in our bodies. For some of us, like myself, it allows us to do things others cannot. For others like For'mya, it is passed to them in a dormant state through a bite from one of my people that turns them. For'mya and Anja were not always wolves as I was and...”

Aricia went on speaking for nearly an hour, with For'mya adding things at different times to compliment what she was saying. Even to Saydia, though she had heard some of it, it was truly amazing to get a more detailed explanation. Aricia and For'mya Leonidas were very well spoken and extremely intelligent and this was quickly noted by the women on the Tasmor Quorum. They were also incredibly patient as they fielded questions that seemed silly, but that they answered nonetheless and with no arrogance in their tone in the least.

“...Do not consider ourselves better than another species simply because of our advanced technology.” Aricia was finishing. “We were just as you are now once; on the cusp of great discoveries that would lead us into the stars and beyond. We can help you to discover them, help you develop them, but we will not simply give it to you.”

“So you will not give us better weapons and technology to improve our ships?” Vesara asked rather indignantly.

Aricia met her gaze. “Simply give it to you? No.” Aricia answered her calmly. “Giving you technology that you are not ready for would be counterproductive.”

“Who are you to say we are not ready for this technology?” Vesara demanded.

“Your demeanor right now suggests that you are not.” Aricia told her. “Your scent speaks of arrogance and dominance. Several of you here at this table radiate this same scent. It is easy enough for us to detect it in your scent so denying it would be pointless I’m afraid. It is part of our nature as wolves. Working with your people to help you discover this technology would be much more beneficial in the long run.”

Seran leaned forward in her chair, holding up her hand to stop Vesara’s retort to the common sense answer. Seran had been convinced the moment they landed on this planet that Saydia had been correct. She was far more interested in seeing the Tasmor grow as a species than dominance of any form. If what was happening between Namiri Daret and the son of this Queen was an indication of the future, the days ahead would be so much brighter. “Excuse me Queen Aricia... unlike my Quorum colleague Minister Vesara, I am more interested in seeing our people thrive going into the future.” Seran ignored Vesara’s angry look and gazed directly at Aricia and For'mya. “What... what exactly does this mean?”

Aricia took a deep breath. “It means that Namiri Daret will become a Crown Princess of the Lycavorian Union. She will become my son’s wife and mate.” She told them. “You must understand, this has happened with each of my son’s wives and mates. As they came together, they grew in power enough to detect others who would share their lives. Sadi, Carisia and Ne’Veha were the first, but then came Lu’ria and Caliria and then Sehri. They felt each one of them within themselves as they came together. Just as they now feel Namiri. And she feels them.”

“But Tasmor... our people... our species, we do not have this power that you and the Pralors have.” Another Quorum member spoke up now. “How could it be?”

For'mya nodded her head. “There is much even our own people do not yet understand about Etheric abilities. Sadi, Androcles’ Anome, she believes that because Namiri is not yet sensitive to Etheric abilities, they were unable to sense her until all of them were finally together.”

Vesara leaned forward once more. “Namiri Daret will have a say in your government?” She asked openly. Several Tasmor Quorum members rolled their eyes in disgust Aricia and For'mya both saw. It appeared all of them knew what Vesara desired most of all. Power and influence.

Aricia nodded her head. “She will have the ability to influence or support something, and because she will bear our family name, it will carry quite a bit of weight, but ultimately the final decisions will be made by Martin, myself and my fellow Queens, in complete conjunction with the Union Senate and Prime Minister.”

“So your... your King does not have the final say in political matters?” Vesara pressed.

“Martin is King of the Lycavorian Union, the Union military falls under his full authority, and he does have a major influence and vote in domestic and other political matters, as do we all, but no, neither he nor us are the final word on an item or agenda that will affect all of our people.” Aricia answered her, which was not entirely true. “We are not a true monarchy in the definition of the word.”

“And what would this mean for the Tasmor?” Seran asked.

“Namiri would be a member of our family.” For'mya answered. “This alone would tie the Tasmor to the Union as no treaty ever could. It would mean open trade between the Union and Tasmor, mutual agreements of defense and cooperation, the sharing of training regimes and the ability for the Tasmor to travel to the Union freely once trade routes and travel corridors are established.”

“And the Kintaur?” Seran asked.

Aricia smiled slightly. “Given what has already occurred here on Ventori and the Kintaur people’s enslavement of our people, they would become our enemies just as they are yours. As they already are.” She told them all seeing their eyes go slightly wider. “Our husband and mate has little tolerance for those who enslave others, and our son Androcles has even less.”

“What about mutual defense treaties?” Another Quorum member asked now. “Would your ships assist us if the need arose?”

“We would be allies.” For'mya answered. “As Aricia has already said, your enemies would become our enemies. Joint training and missions are things that can be determined and worked out in the future, yes. To answer your question directly, yes.”

“We would need to inspect him?” Vesara blurted out.

Aricia blinked as Saydia’s eyes went wide. “Vesara that is out of line!” She declared.

“It is our right!” Vesara proclaimed. “We have inspected all of those who have shared your bed! We will be the final say in this! Not you and not your daughter!”

“So you would dismiss what this could mean for an archaic ritual that is hundreds of years old?” Saydia demanded.

“Yes!” Vesara spat. “I will not approve this... this Union without it!”

“How dare you!” Saydia snarled now coming to her feet.

Aricia looked at Saydia. “I don’t understand.” She spoke. “What does she mean?”

Seran rose to her feet now reaching for Saydia’s arm even as Anthylea did as well in order to keep her calm. “It is an ancient Tasmor ritual Queen Aricia. Those chosen to share the beds of any member of the Sovereign’s family. The Quorum reserves the right to inspect them to insure they will be suitable... suitable reproductive material for the Tasmor.”

Aricia looked taken aback and she looked at For'mya quickly. She turned back to Seran. “You wish to physically inspect our son?” She asked.

“He will present himself to this Quorum for inspection. Questions will be asked of him and we will decide if he is a quality specimen for breeding with a Tasmor daughter of the Regent’s blood.” Vesara snapped. “That is our law.”

“Androcles Leonidas is a Crown Prince of his people!” Saydia snapped loudly. “He is not Tasmor and therefore not subject to that law! For you to demand this is preposterous!”

“It is even more important because he is not Tasmor!” Vesara quipped right back. Vesara looked around the table. “I believe I have the support of the majority on this issue!”

Saydia noticed that all but Seran nodded their heads in acknowledgement of Vesara’s words and this made her even angrier. Aricia and For'mya detected the spike in her scent because of her anger and Aricia moved up beside her.

“I will make the arrangements.” Aricia blurted out.

“This must take place before he arrives here.” Vesara continued. “Before he sees Namiri Daret in person! There can be no delay!”

Aricia looked at For'mya. “Kinosaurgai?” She asked.

“We can use the HELIX Corvette assigned to ARC ROYAL.” She answered almost instantly. “We have their coordinates and course, we can have them hold position and jump to them in perhaps twenty hours.”

Aricia nodded her head. “Then I suggest all of you rest for the remainder of the day. We will leave in the morning.”

“Aricia...?” Saydia began but Aricia shook her head.

“No, we will honor your traditions just as we ask that you honor ours.” Aricia spoke. “It is only fair.”

Vesara nodded her head arrogantly. “As well you should.” She snapped and then spun around and walked out of the building. The other Tasmor Quorum members rose and followed her out with the exception of Seran, who moved closer to Saydia Daret.

“I swear to all the gods in the stars I am going to see that woman fall!” Saydia snarled angrily.

Saydia turned to fully face Aricia once the room was empty but it was Seran who spoke first. “What is going on Saydia?” She asked causing her to turn and look at her. “We have been friends for over fifty years and I know you. What is going on?”

“Seran...” Saydia began.

“No!” Seran interrupted her. “I alone have thoroughly read the many reports submitted by Drenia and Anthylea. I know that these Svorag monsters are as large a threat to our people as to everyone else in this Quadrant. You obviously have a plan worked out with the Queens here. I know your daughter Saydia, Namiri is as stubborn as Emylea and she would not...”

Saydia looked at Aricia. “I don’t believe Namiri is the issue any longer.” She said. “Is she?” She asked.

Aricia shook her head quickly. “This is not something we anticipated.” She replied. “We did not know about this custom of yours.”

Anthylea stepped closer now. “Your son... he will not look fondly upon this I take it?” She asked.

For'mya moved up closer to Aricia and their hands came together and their fingers interlaced. “That would be an understatement.” For'mya spoke now.

Aricia looked at Saydia. “The last person who attempted to do something similar to this with our son, he was a member of what we call the School of the Mages.”

“Do we dare ask what happened?” Anthylea asked.

Aricia looked at her. “The man spent four months in a body cast and another six months recovering from his other wounds.”

“Your son beat him?!” Seran gasped in shock.

For'mya shook her head quickly. “No! Well... not really.”

“What do you mean?” Saydia asked.

“Andro only hit him three times.” Aricia answered.

UNION ADHOC BASE

NEW DESIGNATION FOB DISCOVERY

It was a testament to Union engineering skills really.

Miranda Lorian, ranking military officer in the Quadrant behind only the King and General Simpson, had re-designated the ADHOC command base as Forward Operating Base Discovery. Even in the few short weeks they had been here it had grown far larger than anyone really thought it would.

FOB Discovery now stretched nearly two miles long and half a mile wide alongside the clear waters of the lake shore. Using the lake as a major defensive wall, the base expanded outward. Hundreds of the portable buildings were now set up within the perimeter of the base to house the refugees and the Union troops that were on the ground. Two fully staffed Medical facilities, four massive Mess Lounges and a number of other buildings that housed equipment and power generating materials. The lakefront perimeter was used as a beach for swimming and relaxing, though you had to ignore the four foot deep trench line that had been dug around the entire perimeter and then reinforced with the six foot high, one foot thick Dragon Armor wall. It had become standard for a field operating base of this size to utilize the malleable Dragon Armor to help defend it. With so many uses for the incredible metal, it was only natural for it to be used in base defense. Light and nearly indestructible, elven engineers had devised an ingenious interlocking system that allowed the eight foot sections of wall to be anchored together and then sunk into the ground to make it nearly impossible to knock over. When it was finished, the perimeter wall was between six and eight feet tall encircling the whole base, making FOB Discovery the most heavily defended position on Ventori at the moment. Sensors of all kinds had been laid across the terrain all around the base, to include many in the water of the lake. Defensive positions were many, each of them with heavy weapons charged and ready to use. While not as heavily fortified as the base on Manne, FOB Discovery had become the center of Union Operations on this planet and would remain so for the foreseeable future. While they were not many Union troops left on board the ships above, many engineers and techs had volunteered to pull shifts on the perimeter as well as run patrols. Even so, it made many of the standard Union Spartans operate on a higher alert level to compensate until more troops arrived with Prince Androcles and his forces. They had not expected to find this on Ventori and were unprepared for all of the survivors, but as they did so well, Lycavorian Spartans adapted to their changing environment. STRIKERS and MENKLA transports were coming and going from the airfield on the far end of the base nearly every hour rotating personnel, lifting off with patrols or bringing the more severely sick or injured refugees up to the advanced medical facilities on the ARC ROYAL.

This is what had Lirana's attention as they approached Discovery. Never had she seen anything like it in all her years. She saw a multitude of species that she had never seen before in her life, though predominantly it appeared as if the base and personnel were mainly Lycavorians and the long eared individuals. Neral had moved up to walk alongside her as they got closer to the base and he too was awestruck by what they were seeing. Many of their people had moved closer to them as they got closer to the entrance of Discovery, which was very well defended by heavily armed men and women. Two heavy weapons positions were posted just at the entrance but were not threatening in any manner. They were occupied by several stern faced Lycavorians who appeared to be exceptionally alert.

Had Lirana and Neral been better versed in military tactics they may have detected it, however they were dealing with Lycavorian Spartans, men and women far better trained than they would ever know. When the single word erupted above the voices of the refugees they were unprepared for the devastating quickness and precision.

“EXECUTE!”

Before the sound of the single word had finished echoing in the air, Lirana saw a strange shimmering of movement directly in front of her and her eyes went wide as the body of two young women and a large reptilian looking individual appeared right in front of her. Lirana never saw the leg sweep that Zarah executed with perfect precision and she felt her body lift into the air effortlessly as she lost control of her motion. She did not see Neral beginning to fall backwards in the same fashion, but because of his larger size Radem stepped into a ridge hand blow right behind Lucia's leg sweep and did not pull any power from the blow. A Beta wolf he may have been, Neral was still a powerful man, and Radem was taking no chances. Even as Neral fell back, the soft popping sound of PSGs deactivating surrounded the entire area, and Union troops rushed forward to disarm and push the men and women on Lirana's team to the ground while covering them with firearms and bladed weapons.

Lirana landed hard on the ground beneath her, but kept her wits about her enough to attempt to roll and rise to her feet. She got nowhere as Zarah spun completely around until she was facing Lirana once more and straddling her body. Her Shakur fighting knife glimmered in the morning light and Lirana froze as she felt the blade come to rest against the soft skin of her throat. Never had she seen anyone move so fast, and her dark eyes looked at Zarah Leonidas above her with stunned shock.

“Move one centimeter and I will open your throat to the air around you and you will die right here!” Zarah snarled at her, the cobalt blue eyes of her vampire side very easy to discern and her much thicker and stronger wolf teeth exposed completely.

“Hi there!” The deep voice bellowed and Lirana watched the man she had seen earlier move into her view as she lay pinned to the hard ground. He stepped up behind the young woman and leaned over her shoulder. “Beautiful work daughter.” Martin praised her as he kissed her head gently. “Absolutely brilliant.”

Zarah beamed at the praise from her father, but she kept her eyes on Lirana.

“Jules! Colin!” Martin called out as he looked up and down the line of refugees. Julie, Colin and Pablo each had a body pinned beneath their weapons, while a full squad had others surrounded and disarmed. Many of the refugees had scrambled away in the confusion and sat huddled on the ground as they witnessed the Lycavorian Alpha Wolf King they all had heard about.

“Secure!” Julie called out, her K12 KM jammed into the neck of the man beneath her legs.

“We're good Skipper!” Colin echoed his vampire lover's words, his P190A5 stuck under the chin of another man.

Martin saw Pablo and the others nod to him from where they were standing and then Martin looked back to Lirana as Helen came up beside him clutching the K14 KM in her smaller hand.

“What is your name?” Martin asked her.

Lirana cut her eyes to Zarah and then back to him but remained silent. She grit her teeth and shook her head slightly. Her eyes grew wide when she saw the older Alpha female kneel beside her head and look at her. Her aura was staggering to say the least, nowhere near as powerful as the Persian haired female she had seen earlier, but definitely more powerful than her or any female she had ever felt before.

Helen gazed at the attractive young female, smelling the fear coming from her and the others. She kept her face at ease and slowly returned her K14 to the holster on her thigh. All of them had taken to carrying weapons because of what had happened in the past and where they were.

“My name is Helen child.” She spoke very calmly and with a soothing voice that stunned Lirana. “I am the Feravomir of the Lycavorian people.” She saw Lirana’s eyes go wide at this and she smiled slightly. “You know what that means? Good. You have only one chance now child, for you and your people have been caught spying on us. Those of us from the Lycavorian Union, where we are all from, we don’t deal with spies in very kind ways. You have entered the domain of the King of the Lycavorian Union, Martin Leonidas. Given recent events, we are not a very forgiving people right now.”

Helen reached out and placed the back of her hand to Lirana’s cheek.

“We are however, your people.” Helen spoke. “We have secured those with you and we have taken your ship. We have been watching you since you entered this system.” Helen saw her eyes grow even wider. “That was very foolish trying to sneak into the system in what you thought were breaks in our sensor grids. We are not the Pralor people young lady, even though much of our equipment and ships is based on their technology, and we do not use their tactics.”

Lirana’s head turned slightly when she saw the second male figure move up beside the huge figure of the Alpha King. Her eyes narrowed when she realized that while the man was an Alpha wolf, he was also Pralor by his scent.

Wayonn looked at Martin. [Their ship is ours. A standard Tasmor transport with a few Pralor modifications. Emylea Daret confirmed this.]

[They try to fight?] Martin asked him.

Wayonn shook his head. [They surrendered without incident.]

Martin nodded his head and looked at Helen for she had heard their exchange. [Good.] Martin spoke softly. [I sure as hell don’t want to start killing the people we came all this way to save.]

[Perhaps we should show them that Martin.] Helen spoke.

Martin held her gaze for half a second and then nodded his head. He moved quickly, startling Lirana and her eyes grew wide in fear when he reached for her.

“Leave her alone!” Neral screamed from where he lay on the ground. “Do what you will to me but do not harm her!”

Martin ignored him and grasped Lirana’s arms as Zarah moved out of the way. To her surprise his touch was not forceful in any way and he pulled Lirana to her feet in front of him with hardly any effort in the least. Lirana’s head came only to his chest and she had to look up into dark brown eyes that seemed to bore into her very soul. Lirana could detect not only the sweet, honey like scent of the Persian haired female she had seen earlier upon him, but five other very feminine scents were buried deeply within his blood and on his person. Three of them were more pungent than the others, but she knew that was only because those three had been with him recently. These six different female scents were burned into his essence just as hers was burned into Konlar’s blood and resonance. They were all his mates and from his scent she could tell that the devotion to each of them was unquestioned.

Martin held her arms in front of her and met her wide eyes. “We can do this one of two ways.” Martin told her as he released her arms. Lirana was no fool however and she knew the young woman beside her would strike her down well before she attempted anything. “You are spying on my people. My family. I am going to assume you are from the same group that met my wife and mate Dysea, the tall, platinum blond with incredibly tasty ears.”

“The one with pointed ears!” Lirana blurted out before she thought about it and Martin smiled at her.

“Yep! That would be her.” Martin said. “You were following two Pralor women then. I want to know why. You came here to Ventori for a reason. I want to know why. You did not come here to try and attack anyone because you have limited weapons, but you came for a reason. Tell me that reason. You are Lycavorian, my people, and my kind regardless of what caste you belong to. You will not be injured and you will be treated with the utmost respect and honor.”

“If... if I answer your questions.” Lirana stammered.

Martin nodded his head. “Yes.”

“And if I do not?” Lirana asked.

“Trust me that is not really an option.” Martin told her seeing the set of her jaw. “If you do not, then I will execute each one of you, discover where you came from with your ship’s computer and I will get my answers from whoever is there. And I’ll start with him.”

Lirana was shocked at the speed with which he moved and then K12 KM appeared in his fist in a single blink of her eyes. She saw the large weapon level at Neral beside her and then the tongue of flame and deafening boom as the weapon fired. She screamed as Neral was blasted back away from her, landing several feet away with the left side of his chest rapidly soaking with blood.

CHAPTER FIFTY-FIVE

VENTORI

FORWARD OPERATING BASE DISCOVERY

The portable CIC building conference room was partially filled once more, the wide transparent wall allowing them to look into the heart of the Union operations on Ventori. It was not something Lirana had ever seen before in her life, Konlar and others having a much smaller and less sophisticated base with nowhere near the level of technology and equipment.

Lirana had only heard stories as a child about the Alphas of their people and how they had disappeared over the course of several centuries after Lycavorians had settled Ventori. No historian had a really good idea of what happened to them, only speculation and rumor. Alpha wolves were the most intelligent and most powerful of their species and Lirana was very nearly overwhelmed at the utter strength of the many wolf auras she had felt since coming into this camp. Hundreds of Alpha males and females dotted the camp, as well as very powerful Beta wolves of both genders. Beta wolves that certainly dwarfed what she had ever felt among her own people with the exception of her husband and mate Konlar. Lirana also knew that Alpha wolves were the most violent and unpredictable of their species and when the Alpha King shot Neral with no hesitation or remorse, this knowledge was slammed home in a fashion she was unaccustomed to.

Screaming in horror she had wrenched free of his grasp and ran to where Neral lay on the ground bleeding heavily. As she pulled Neral’s limp body into her arms, she began to tell them everything while in the same breath begging them to save him. She didn’t see the slight nod from the King but she watched the red haired female move quickly out of the crowd and settle next to Neral. Lirana watched through amazed but tear stained eyes as Duewa easily dropped her hands to his chest, the white glow of her healing power flaring into view and she drew out the projectile and quickly healed the damage done to him by the 12.7 mm round while the King squatted by his feet.

Lirana glared at Martin in rage as he squatted next to her and Neral, a look that obviously had no effect on him in the least. She remembered his words to her then.

“That was only a demonstration.” He had told her. “I can and I will order your executions if you do not answer my questions, and I won’t lose a wink of sleep over it. I won’t want to do this but make no mistake. I will. It is my responsibility as King to protect my people and I will do just that, no matter what. You and your friends are Beta wolves and I have no desire to hurt any of you, but so far all you have done is sneak around and try to blend in like an enemy would do. I’m trying to repair and rebuild what was once here, but I can’t do that when there are others of my own kind operating against me and threatening members of my family.”

“We have threatened no one!” Lirana snarled at him.

“You were following two Pralor women on Honelze.” Martin told her. “One of them is my grandmother by blood. The other is my aunt by blood. My family.” Lirana’s eyes had grown wide at this information as she stared at him.

“You are... you are an Alpha Lycavorian!” She exclaimed. “How could they...?”

“That is a rather long and boring story.” Martin answered her. “What is your name?”

Lirana had stared at him for a long moment unsure of what to do or say. His presence alone frightened her terribly, especially after what he had just done, but his aura right then was radiating a soothing calm unlike anything she had ever felt. “Lirana.” She answered him finally. “My name is Lirana.”

“This is the situation Lirana.” Martin told her. “I want to know why you are here. I want to know why you were following my family. I want to know how you got a Tasmor ship and that Pralor frigate your mate was commanding...”

Lirana looked at him with wide eyes. “How... how did you...”

Martin smiled at her, a rather disarming smile considering that he could probably kill her before she knew she was dead. “You have four children don’t you?” Martin asked her. “I can smell each of them on you, and your husband and mate. He is a strong and proud Beta and I’d like to meet him in the future. We can do this civilly Lirana, we can sit and talk, or I can have each of your people interrogated. It would not be pleasant for them or for you and I’d rather not have to resort to such measures.”

“Do I have a choice?” Lirana asked him with some indignation.

Martin shook his head. “Not really. You and your people are here gathering intelligence for someone else. Technically you are spies and I don’t treat spies very well. I’d much rather we talk as Lycavorians and wolves.”

“My... my people?” She gasped.

“They will be placed in a separate building but they will be fed and treated with respect and honor.” Martin told her.

“Prisoners?” Lirana said.

Martin met her eyes. “Only if that is what you choose to be.” He told her. He looked at Duewa. “Dee?” He asked.

Duewa nodded her head. “Let me get him to the clinic to make sure he doesn’t have any adverse reactions to my healing power and then I will have Thoti bring him to the CIC.”

Martin nodded his head. “Good enough.” He turned back to Lirana. “It is your choice Lirana.”

That decision was easy for Lirana and now nearly an hour later she was sitting in what they called the CIC Briefing Room with a steaming mug of delicious, dark liquid in her hands and several different types of bread and rolls on the table in front of her. The bread had smelled delicious but she was still very wary of what was happening all around her. She didn’t realize that Martin and Helen could detect this easily and both of them tore off precut slices of the thick bread and began to eat them. The impulse was too great and her mouth was watering and Lirana soon did the same thing and was eating the almost wickedly divine tasting bread in great chunks because it was so good.

Lirana recognized the Tasmor Sovereign Regent sitting at the table, her First Colonel beside her, but she did not recognize Tobia aside from the fact she was a Pralor. The huge black skinned Alpha stood at the end of the table by the King and while their lips were not moving, it almost seemed as if they were talking to one another somehow, as their expressions and such changed from time to time. The attractive woman who had told her she was the Feravomir of the Lycavorian people sat beside her and while she looked young and in excellent health, Lirana could smell that she was well over four thousand years old. The woman had asked her a few questions about her family trying to draw her into a casual conversation and while Lirana was vague in her answers, they had not pressed her. They had yet to ask her any real questions and she didn’t know why until the door opened and she saw the tall Alpha leading Neral into the room with the Persian haired Queen behind them holding hands with two other females. Both of these females were also Alpha females with incredibly powerful female auras.

Lirana rose to her feet as Neral rushed to her and embraced her tightly at the end of the table. He looked at her, holding her at arm’s length as if inspecting her.

“Are you hurt?” He asked.

Lirana shook her head quickly. “No.” She answered. She looked at his chest and moved her hand to where he had been shot. “You were the one who was shot.” She said finally.

Neral nodded his head and covered her hand with his. “It is completely healed.” He told her. “As if it did not even happen.”

“I saw her...” Lirana began. “It was amazing Neral... her hands were glowing and...”

“Her name was Duewa and she is Hadarian.” Helen spoke now as she got to her feet and moved closer to them, both of them turning to look at her. “They are founding members of our Union and are they Healers.” Helen looked at him with a warm smile. “Lirana here has told me your name is Neral?”

Neral nodded his head warily as he glanced at Lirana and then back to Helen. “Yes.” He said in reply. “I heard you... you said you are the Feravomir of our people?”

Helen nodded her head. “Yes.”

“We... we read of the Oracles in our history scrolls.” Neral spoke. “You do not... you do not fit that description.”

Helen smiled now. “Were they all wearing body covering robes that fell to the floor and looked to weigh a hundred pounds?”

Neral’s eyes grew a little wider. “Yes!”

“Don’t believe everything you read.” She told him. Helen took his arm in her hands. “We are not your enemy Neral.” She said softly.

“You... your King shot me!” Neral quipped.

Helen nodded her head. “You are anse lucky he did not kill all of you outright.” She told him sternly which caused him to look at the floor. “He may be King but he is also an Alpha wolf who is very protective of his family and those he loves. Ever since we arrived in this far quadrant of space, people or creatures have been trying to kill us. We do not take kindly to that as I am sure you understand.” She squeezed his arm now. “Honesty is your weapon now. Prove to him and to us you are not our enemy and you have nothing to worry about.”

“Helen?” Martin’s voice echoed in the room from the other end of the table.

She looked at him and nodded ushering Neral to the chair beside Lirana. “Sit down with Lirana Neral.” She told him. “You have nothing to fear from us if you are honest. I give you my word as Feravomir that this is true.”

Neral nodded his head slowly and moved to the chair beside Lirana and settled into it slowly. He looked up at where Martin stood near the other end of the table and saw the three Alpha females all take chairs around him. The raven haired female behind him and the red haired female directly in front of him, while the blond female with pointed ears sat in front of her. All of them radiated power in their auras that like Lirana, he had never felt before.

Martin turned his head when the door to the CIC opened once more and he saw Jezima and Meral enter with Archer and Asa right behind them. Neral watched with surprised eyes as he went over to them and embraced them both in long, emotional hugs, kissing each of their cheeks.

Jezima relished in his embrace, feeling his power and strength not just physically but within the Etheric realm as well. She shivered in delight, for his essence and resonance spoke of her son in every way. She met his eyes and saw him staring at her adoringly. “We heard that you discovered those that were following Meral and I. We wanted to...”

Meral squeezed his arm now. “We wanted to know why.” She told him.

Martin nodded his head. “Of course.” He told them. “Grab a chair.”

Jezima and Meral looked to where Aricia and the others were and they were quickly drawn in to the embrace of Martin’s Queens and chairs were brought over to make room for them. Martin reached for Archer’s arm and they clasped forearms tightly before he leaned over and touched his forehead to Asa’s.

[They understand?] He asked both of them.

Archer and Asa nodded together as they erected additional Etheric shields around their conversation naturally. [We explained it to them.] Asa answered.

Martin nodded his head. [Good.] He said. [You have no other priority. Just them.]

Archer nodded his head. [We understand Martin.] He replied. [We will not fail you.]

[I know you won’t.] Martin answered. He turned back around and looked at Lirana and Neral who were staring at him. He stepped back to the table and moved up behind where Aricia sat, placing one hand on her shoulder and one hand on Anja’s shoulder.

“Let’s begin with where you got your hands on a Tasmor ship and how you acquired a Pralor Frigate and the know how to fly it. The Lycavorians here on Ventori were barely into the Space Age yet you obviously know how to control these ships.” Martin spoke to both of them now. “And know that lying to me about anything will only make things really bad for you.”

Lirana glanced at Neral and saw him nod his head. She turned back to Martin. “I can... I can only tell you what our history has been since we left Ventori.”

Martin nodded his head. “How is it that you left Ventori to begin with?”

“My mate’s father was approached by a Pralor.” Lirana spoke now. “He offered him a deal that would see several hundred of our people taken from Ventori and provided everything we ever dreamed for in exchange for working for him.”

“A Pralor?” Tobia asked now. “Are you certain?”

Lirana nodded her head. “He is a ronnus who hates us and treats us as if we are beneath him and...”

Martin chuckled softly stopping her words and shook his head. “That definitely sounds like someone we know so well.” He said almost casually before his eyes grew a little wider and he looked at Lirana. “Wait a minute, do you know his name? He is a fat little fuck with pudgy cheeks and a funky twitch in his eyebrows?”

Lirana nodded her head quickly, her own eyes wide. “Yes! He still to this day gives us our directions in what he wants us to do.”

Martin looked at Wayonn. “Lorendo.” He said.

Wayonn nodded his head as Lirana’s eyes grew wider in shock. “It has to be. And it would certainly explain quite a bit.”

“You know him?” Neral gasped now looking at them from his chair. “How... how is that possible?”

Martin pulled a chair from the wall closest to him and he moved it over beside Helen before lowering himself into it. “Tell me.” He told Lirana. “Tell me everything.”

“It began almost twenty thousand years ago and we...”

SPARTA'S WRATH

72 HOURS FROM EDGE OF ECHO QUADRANT

HOLDING POSITION UNTIL RENDEZVOUS WITH THE QUEENS

Whether it was the excitement from the past few days and weeks, the discovery of Laren and Ladur and the tattoos they all now wore, or simply because he desired his wives and mates as he always did, whatever the reason the six Crown Princesses of the Lycavorian Union had enjoyed an utterly debauched last ten hours that none of them would forget for a very long time. Or at least until he did it to them again.

Their lovemaking had always been intense and boundless, but in the weeks since he had dispatched Dante Moran, Androcles had been a different person in many ways. He was more humorous and not as serious outside of their bed, and he was far more playful and even more attentive in their bed. This night she and Ne'Veha had been the receivers of most of his carnal attentions to their ethereal delight, but Carisia, Caliria, Sehri and Lu'ria were by no means left out. Their cries of heavenly passion had filled their quarters each time Andro had taken them and he had taken them each twice, driving them insane with his touch and aura. Sadi had to admit that there was something simply divine about having seven sets of lips and seven tongues all exploring at once. It made for some very delicious pleasure.

Ne'Veha and her fellow Crown Princesses were now collapsed on the huge circular bed in their quarters, their limbs entwined together as they clung to each other completely spent and exhausted. Androcles on the other hand was still aroused and energized and he had taken her into the living area of their quarters and proceeded to have his way with her. Sadi could not have been a more willing participant and her soft gasps of delight and urging filled the room until finally they found themselves on the large couch just as they were.

Sadi’s naked flesh was plastered to Andro’s powerful body, his twelve and a quarter inch manhood buried within her velvety depths and causing her to shudder continuously as her climax built once more to a crescendo. His fingers danced across the flesh of her sides and back, sending electric jolts of rampant desire cascading through her non-stop. She was moving her hips atop him, simply grinding their loins together in circular motions and relishing in the shivers of pleasure that skirted outwards from her center. Her large breasts were pressed against the skin of his chest, her nipples enormously hard and responding to the sensations of his male aura flowing all around her. Sadi could feel every throbbing millimeter of his length within her, feeling his length begin to throb faster and hotter. She felt his hands come to rest on her firm ass and hold her tight and even as waves of her orgasm began to spill outwards, Sadi felt his body stiffen, his manhood become like steel inside her and then he was groaning aloud as his searing hot seed began to fill her as only he could. Sadi whimpered in orgasmic delight as her own release followed his an instant later and she clutched at his shoulders, pulling his head to her breasts as her head lolled back, her jungle green eyes open wide and her dual wolf fangs fully extended. There were times when he could pummel her tirelessly and she wailed in unabashed delight the whole time, and then there were moments when he simply made staggering love to her barely moving a muscle. This was one of those times, and as always it was the most intense of their orgasms because of the slowness and love that they felt for each other. It is was what set Androcles apart in all of their eyes, and he never failed to show them that they belonged to him body and soul, and that he belonged to them in every way imaginable.

Sadi held a dreamy smile on her face as she felt the last of his explosions within her ebb and she pulled his head from her breasts and lowered her face to his. She nuzzled his cheek furiously, her lips parted in enchantment and she teased his earlobe with her tongue for a long moment before pulling her face back and looking into his gorgeous azure blue eyes. They were staring at her with ethereal brightness and it made Sadi shudder in happiness as she gazed into those beautiful orbs.

“Carians pen enyla forn sarad inion Androcles Leonidas.” She stammered still slightly out of breath.

Andro smiled at her and she saw his eyes twinkle in the light. “I love you more.” He told her softly. “All of you.”

Sadi smiled and drew her fingers across his cheek and through his goatee lovingly. “Why didn’t you tell us that you knew what vexed your father aur enyla.”

Andro blinked several times at her sudden question, his hands tightening on her firm ass and he pulled her closer to him as he straightened himself more on the couch. She did have a way of jumping from topic to topic at times, her mind always running circles, and that is one of the reasons why he loved her so. He shrugged his broad shoulders after a moment. “He did not have all the pieces in his head to make an informed decision.” Andro answered her. “We did not want to worry anyone until we knew for certain what we were up against.”

“And not pulling more troops from home?” Sadi asked him.

“He feels that Tenna Deia and Tarifa will need them.” Andro spoke softly. “To pull more troops out here would have gotten out eventually. The Netnews vermin would have reported it and our enemies back home may have acted on that information.”

“Kavalians?” Sadi asked.

Andro nodded his head. “They are one possible enemy that still could hurt us at home, yes. My father was thinking more internally than anything else I believe.”

“Internally?” Sadi questioned.

Andro stared at her beautiful face for a long moment and nodded once more. “I don’t know everything he is thinking but he believes there may be an internal organization that may cause Tenna Deia issues before the election.”

“Going up against your aunt would be very foolish for most anyone doing so.” Sadi said with a smile.

Andro grinned. “On this I would agree.”

“You put up far less of a protest against this plan of your mother’s than any of us thought you would.” Sadi told him softly, leaning over to caress his cheek with her own, relishing in the sensations it caused within her.

“It is kind of hard to protest when...”

Sadi laughed and put a finger to his lips stopping his words. “You dare not say that!” She said. “Do not blame this on Enylarcopri because you are so talented in that way! She could not help herself. None of us could.”

Andro reached up and stroked her cheek with a smile, running a finger across her lips as he did so. The way he smiled at her made Sadi shiver in delight for his features grew so much more handsome when he smiled. “For my mother’s to have even thought of doing something like this...” Andro answered. “...They had to have determined that father was not telling them everything. Or they wanted to relieve whatever stress they could from him. They know father and I will do anything to insure the survival of the Union and our people, no matter what it is. This is a means to an end KertaGai. Nothing more. I know that.”

“Then why would your father not pursue it?” Sadi asked him.

Andro shrugged his broad shoulders. “He told me that he feels Emylea Daret will become part of our family very soon in the future. He does not know how but he has always been able to sense these sort of things.”

Sadi thought back briefly to that night on the island when Martin Leonidas had told her almost that very thing. She nodded her head slowly. “Your father is very unique in that way.” She said.

“He did not want the Tasmor to think he was asking them for this because of Emylea.” Andro said. “He did not think it completely through as my mother’s did, nor did he think to use the Tasmor laws in the manner they are using them. My father sees the Tasmor as we once were when my grandfather led them after the Black Day and during our time as slaves. He likes them KertaGai. And he does not like anyone quickly. These Tasmor have affected him in a way most do not. He likes their pride and their honor and does not care that most of their race is female or that they have females who act as our males do.”

Sadi chuckled at that and nodded her head slowly. “I think your father enjoys meeting new species regardless of what he says openly.” She told him.

Andro grinned. “I think you are right.” He agreed with her. “He says that my mothers have found fast and honored friends among the Tasmor. More so than at any time in their lives. He wants to insure that this continues and grows.”

“Namiri seems very similar.” Sadi told him. “She is very smart and proud of her people. We spoke with her for almost four hours Andro and we all found her captivating.”

“Do you think she can pull this off KertaGai?” Andro asked. “She will need to fool her people more than ours. My siblings we will never be able to fool, but everyone else must buy into this ruse if it is to work.”

Sadi nodded her head. “With our help, yes.” She answered confidently. “Even DuanGai seemed eager to do this. We all know what is at stake here my love, and we can do this.” Sadi tilted her head slightly. “Can you?”

Andro nodded his head slowly. Sadi knew that he had been against it when they first approached him. He was so much like his father when it came to hating politics and anything having to do with politic maneuvering like this. They explained to him their reasoning as well as the reasoning of his mothers and why they were suggesting it. It took them several hours but he finally caved to their rational thinking as Sadi knew he would.

“Yes.” He told her.

Sadi took his face in her hands. “You will need to act with her just as you do with us in public my love. In every way. I know that does not sit well with you because you think it is a betrayal of us. It is not, for we will be doing the same thing. We made a promise to each other that our people came first my love. We all did. This is something we need to do for our people. And Namiri does it for her people.”

“I know.” Andro told her with a nod.

“Then stop thinking and be yourself.” Sadi told him.

“Do you know why my mothers wanted us to stop and wait for them?” Andro asked.

Sadi shook her head. “No. The request came as a surprise for me as well.” She answered. “Especially after speaking with them not so long ago.”

“Well, we will just have to wait and see.” He spoke.

Sadi felt him shift on the couch and then his hands closed firmly around her ass. “What are you doing?” She asked with a smile.

“I’m going to carry my KertaGai to our bed and lay her among our wives and mates so that we can get some much needed sleep.” Andro said.

Sadi pressed her face to his neck as he stood up easily with her in his arms and she sighed deeply. “That sounds wonderful.” She spoke softly.

Andro smiled and made his way into their bedroom, seeing that Ne’Veha and the others were awake and looking at them. He didn’t hesitate and climbed onto the bed while Ne’Veha and Carisia made room for them. Each of them crowded around Andro and Sadi as they settled to the bed, Andro’s arms reaching back and pulling Ne’Veha and Carisia close while Lu’ria, Sehri and Caliria pressed tightly to them. Soon it was very difficult to see where one of them began and the others started, which is exactly how they all liked it. Sleep came easily to them and within moments all of them were once more sleeping soundly in the arms of those they all loved.

HADOR PRALOR DESIGNATION MOON 739

“...Any way to be certain?” Konlar asked his technician who sat at the computer console in front of him.

The female Lycavorian shook her head. “Control on any one drone is limited to say the least. Having one of them trying to access a computer station would never work.”

“You are recording all of this correct?” Edrao asked her.

“Oh yes.” She replied. “There is no way for one of the drones to penetrate the secured areas without setting off some alarm. Everything is vacuum sealed, with motion and bio-metric sensors everywhere.”

“So trying to get into the secured areas to find out what they are doing will not happen?” Konlar spoke.

“Without an access card of some kind, or the correct bio-metric reading from a senior staff member of researcher, no.” She told him. “We can’t duplicate an access card, we don’t have the equipment. And unless there are things I don’t know about, you can’t duplicate a bio-metric signal either.”

“We can send the videos to my people on Artaaya.” Edrao spoke. “They will know what this place is. And what they are doing. I will take them.”

Konlar looked at him. “What of my people on that station?” He asked.

Edrao put his hand on his shoulder. “Let us wait until we find out what it is.” He said. “Have you heard from Lirana?”

Konlar shook his head. “No.” He replied. “She was supposed to send the signal when they arrived at the Base Camp but nothing yet.”

Edrao nodded his head. “She is very skilled Konlar. Have faith in her.”

Konlar nodded his head. “I do.” He stated without doubt. “I just... I worry for her.”

“You chose well my friend.” Edrao told him and Konlar chuckled.

“I did nothing. She chose me.” He answered. “And to this day I do not know why. There were many handsome young wolves for her to seek the attentions of. Why did she pick me, old beast that I am?” Konlar looked at him. “Lirana and my children are my life now. I will do anything to protect them.”

Edrao grinned. “I know.” He replied. “And Lirana knows that and she loves you more and more each day. What about that fool Lorendo’s request?”

Konlar shook his head. “The ship that he sent us the specs to... they are not any good. We’d never be able to get them off a ship that size. We will need to do this when they get to Ventori or to Honelze. Depending on where they go.”

Edrao nodded his head. “The team we left on Honelze?”

“Still hidden and awaiting instructions.” Konlar replied. “Their last report indicated that the female Alpha with the pointy ears has returned and they seem to be going about and reinforcing the settlement’s defenses.”

Edrao looked at him. “Its defenses?” He asked softly. “That is odd.”

“I thought so as well.” Konlar told him. “It is a large settlement yes, but it has never been a strategic one. At least not to my knowledge.”

“Perhaps there are things that we do not know.” Edrao said thoughtfully.

Konlar looked at him intently. “Edrao... do you believe that there is any way Lorendo is responsible in some way for what happened on Ventori?”

Edrao met his eyes. “Why?”

“They are still our people Edrao.” Konlar said. “Those monsters... they almost destroyed my entire species!”

Edrao shook his head. “No my friend. Not all of them it seems. If these new Alphas are here now, perhaps they know...”

“Sir!” The excited voice interrupted Edrao’s words and both men turned to look at the technician who handled their COM array. “We are receiving an incoming transmission! It’s on a secure channel like I have never seen before! Origin unknown!”

Konlar and Edrao rushed over to the station. “Unknown!” Konlar demanded. “It is not Lorendo! He is the only one who has our transmit codes!”

The man shook his head. "This is not Lorendo. The level of encryption is far more than he has ever used! It's almost... I want to say it is a QCR burst but I have never seen one of those so I can't be sure."

"QCR?" Edrao spoke. "The only species capable of such a thing are Pralors. How would they know that we are...?"

The small command center was suddenly bathed in an eerie soft white glow and all of them turned as the small transmission cone opened near the side wall of the facility.

"Whatever it is, it's has penetrated our ciphers and jamming nodes as if they aren't even there!" The COM officer declared. "It is..."

There was a small flare of the white glow and then they were looking at the face and body of a tall, and very powerfully built man. A Lycavorian Konlar and Edrao knew instantly, and an Alpha wolf without a doubt. The transmission cone shimmered for several seconds and then it cleared to the point that it appeared as if he was standing in the room with them. The man was silent for several moments as the transmission cleared and then they took note of the black shoulder length hair and the deep, dark brown eyes. His skin was deeply tanned and they all saw the scar that started on his forehead and passed over his right eye and onto his cheek. It had to have come from a blade tip Konlar knew and that meant close in fighting. And if the blade had gotten that close and he still stood there, it could only mean that this man was not to be trifled with.

Konlar and Edrao stared at the transmission in stunned silence as did everyone in the room. Nothing like this had ever happened before in their history and none of them knew what to expect.

"Hi there!" The man spoke evenly. "My name is Martin Leonidas and I do believe we need to talk." He held out his hand and Konlar's eyes went wide in horror when he saw Lirana take that hand and move into the cone of the transmission.

"Lirana!" Konlar almost yelled. He glared at Martin in the transmission. "If you... if you harm her I will hunt you down and kill you slowly!" Konlar yelled at the transmission as his eyes changed and his fangs extended.

"Konlar my love..." Lirana spoke quickly now. "I am fine! We are fine!" She said urgently.

"Lirana!" Edrao gasped now.

"This is... Konlar this is King Martin Leonidas." Lirana spoke calmly. "This is... this is the King of the Lycavorian people my beloved husband and mate!"

"Lirana where is Neral?" Konlar stammered. "Your team... are they..."

He saw Lirana look up at the Alpha wolf beside her and he said something to which she nodded her head. Those dark brown eyes focused on him once more. "We need to keep this transmission short on the off chance that fat ronnus Lorendo or his cronies might detect it. Your wife and mate is here on Ventori, but you already knew that didn't you?"

"If you hurt her I will..." Konlar began to speak again.

"Husband no!" Lirana exclaimed.

"That's the second time you have threatened me." The Alpha Martin Leonidas spoke. "Don't let there be a third Konlar."

"Konlar listen to him!" Lirana spoke again.

"Your wife and mate and all of your people are here with us. They are safe and are being treated with the utmost honor and respect. They are guests after all." Martin spoke once more. "We have been talking, Lirana and Neral with me and my people. We have discovered some very interesting information these last few hours."

"What do you want?" Edrao asked the question now.

Martin turned his eyes on Edrao. "I am not talking to you sir, I am talking to him, so sit down and shut the nubou up!" Martin told him sternly his eyes changing and his dual fangs extending instantly. Konlar's eyes grew wide when he saw the vicious dual fangs, never having seen anything like it in his life. Konlar held out his hand and put it on Edrao's forearm at the Alpha's use of the ancient language, but he kept his eyes on the Alpha. Lirana stood too close to the Alpha to suit him but she did not appear in distress and he was not acting possessive of her in any way for this he would detect right away from his younger wife and mate.

"I ask that you do not hurt my people." Konlar began. "They are only there doing what I ordered them to do. They..."

The Alpha appeared confused and he shook his head. "Hurt them?" Martin interrupted his words. "I have no intention of hurting your mate or your people. They are my people as well."

"I will give you whatever you want for their safe return." Konlar told him.

Martin shook his head. "You misunderstand the purpose of this transmission Konlar." He spoke evenly. "I don't want anything for their return. They are in no danger and they are under the protection of my family."

Konlar blinked several times. "I don't... I don't understand."

Martin nodded his head. "That is why I would like for you to get on board your Pralor Frigate and come here." Martin said. "Tell no one where you are going and for sure don't let that slobbering fool Lorendo know what you are up to. We have some things to discuss and I would prefer to do it in person."

"What?" Konlar gasped.

Martin nodded. "You may bring whoever you like and you can come armed if you wish. I will have people as well however. We have mutual interests Konlar and one very bad and very smart mutual enemy."

"Enemy?" Konlar asked hesitantly.

"You don't honestly believe that you could have abducted Murano and my son's wife and mate do you?" Martin asked him.

Konlar glanced at Lirana quickly and back to Martin. "Mate?" He stammered.

Martin nodded his head. "Lorendo has tasked you with killing the brother of the Pralor Chief Elder and taking his daughter." He spoke. "What he failed to tell you is that the Chief Elder's brother is a Pralor Praetorian and that is not something you would have been able to do. He also failed to tell you that Delnash's daughter is actually his brother Murano's daughter and she is now the wife and mate to my son Deion." Martin grinned when he saw Konlar's eyes grow wide in disbelief.

"Lorendo doesn't actually know that yet, so if you could keep that to yourself that would be cool." Martin spoke almost happily. "He was sending you in blind Konlar. Now, the two most important things that he forgot to tell you are that Murano and Mari are with my oldest son Androcles, his siblings and roughly five hundred warships and upwards of a hundred thousand of my son's troops. He also forgot to mention that you would not have gotten within a thousand meters of Murano or Mari without either one of my children detecting you or one of those thousands of different troops. He was sending you on a suicide mission Konlar. He knew it too. He's a self-serving tukannupae who doesn't care who he hurts in order to get his way. "

Konlar looked at a wide eyed Edrao and then back to Martin with an equally shocked expression.

"Yeah, I figured he didn't tell you that." Martin said shaking his head. "Come here to Ventori Konlar. I didn't come all the way across the galaxy to kill my own people. I came out here looking for them. Come to Ventori so that we can talk. You will find I am not the man I'm sure Lorendo told you I am."

"And if I do not?" Konlar spoke.

Martin shrugged his broad shoulders. "That is your choice, but that will also mean you will not see your wife and mate for some time. Your people will remain here with us for their protection. And it will also not stop me from blowing that evil, god forsaken station in orbit above you to tiny fucking pieces."

"Konlar!" Lirana spoke now. "My love please. I am not under duress. I speak to you as your wife and mate and the man I love with all that I am. Come here. Please."

"You are an Alpha!" Konlar snapped. "I have your word no harm will come to her or my people?"

Martin nodded his head without hesitation. "On that you have my word." He told him. "Though I can't guarantee that they won't become addicted to our food." He said with a smile as his eyes and fangs changed back to normal. "Your wife and mate has been eating me out of house and home of our bread."

Konlar saw Lirana blush almost immediately and he knew instantly that she was in no danger. Her reaction to the Alpha's comment was a shy smile and he had seen her make this same expression on many occasions.

"I can be to your location in eighteen hours." Konlar spoke.

Martin nodded his head immediately. "Eighteen hours it is." He said moving closer to the transmission and appearing to move closer to Konlar in the room. "I will protect your people as I would protect my own. There is far more going on here than you know Konlar and I would much rather we be allies than enemies. For the sake of our people's future. All of our people."

VENTORI DISCOVERY BASE

Answers.

To say that the answers to so many questions came the longer Lirana and Neral spoke would have been the understatement of the millennia. For Martin Leonidas, they were answers to questions he had asked for many more years than he could remember. Thirty minutes after Lirana had begun speaking he had called Arzoal to hear what Lirana was saying. After a brief period where Lirana and Neral had scrambled back in utter fear at the size of the monster that appeared in front of them when the outer wall lowered to allow Arzoal to participate, Lirana began to speak again. Thirty minutes after that, Martin had initiated a priority QCR COM link with Delnash on Artaaya and then he too was involved in what they were hearing. They let Lirana and Neral continue for another two hours before both of them stopped and looked around the room at everyone who had remained silent up until now.

“By the Ancients within the Rift of Time...” Delnash finally muttered to himself as he sat back in the chair he was sitting in on Artaaya. He was in his office and Two seven had insured the room was secure.

Martin had been pacing the room behind Aricia, Anja and For'mya for the last thirty minutes as Lirana spoke and he stopped now and nodded his head. He looked at Lirana and Neral both.

“You are certain of everything you have told us?” Martin asked them.

Lirana nodded her head quickly. “Yes. Edrao has maintained detailed records of every single communications this man Lorendo has made since Konlar’s father lead our people. He does not know of course, for he forbid us to do such a thing. He did not know about Edrao and the other Pralor people who joined our pack in the beginning. Edrao made sure of this.”

“He was the one in the transmission with your mate?” Aricia asked.

Lirana nodded her head. “Yes. I noticed his expression when you said what you did to him. He will not be happy.”

“He will get over it.” Wayonn spoke before Martin answered. “This Edrao has files on everything?”

“Only he or Konlar can access them, but yes.” Lirana answered.

“Even concerning my ship child?” Arzoal asked from where she rested on the ground.

Lirana nodded quickly. The huge dragon had asked several questions as she was speaking and her voice was so soothing and warm that it put Lirana at ease almost immediately. That a creature of such size and power had such a beautiful voice amazed her. “Yes. We do not know exactly what he used the ship for prior to meeting Konlar’s father here on Ventori but Edrao is certain he had the ships for several hundred years at least before coming to find us.”

Arzoal’s massive head turned to look at Martin, but he was already gazing at her. Of all those in the room only Martin, his Queens and Helen knew the complete story and the results of that ship not returning to Elear when it had been programmed to. Arzoal’s actions when the ship did not return had set in motion of chain of events that had cost thousands of dragons their lives. She no longer carried that shame, Helen, Martin and Androcles insuring they saw to that. She had done what she needed to do in order for her species to survive.

“Probably using it to set up his little empire.” Danny spoke now. “No record of Arzoal’s ship still existed. It had been reported lost. No one would be looking for it and no one would question a Pralor ship out here when they first arrived.”

“True enough.” Martin echoed his words.

“Lycavorians are extremely adaptable and can endure far more than most species.” Helen said. “He knew those on Ventori existed so that means he had records going back from when the Pralors used us as a seed Species. He knew they were here.”

“And from what I understand Lorendo was one of the main supporters of settling on Artaaya.” Tobia spoke.

“Yes.” Delnash nodded his head.

“It also means he may have records dating back to before the Pralor Empire fell.” Aricia said now. “Records that could be used now. History Scrolls, anything.”

“He was part of the Science Convocation.” Tobia added nodding her head. “He would have had access to such things.”

“Lirana, how long has that facility been in orbit on Hador?” Martin asked.

“As long as I have been alive.” Lirana answered.

“It was finished when I was a boy King Leonidas.” Neral added now looking at him. “I am almost nine thousand years old. I remember my own father working in orbit with thousands of others to build it.”

“So he had someplace else he was working on the Svorag virus before having the station built.” Martin said. “They began appearing almost twenty thousand years ago according to Murano and others. He was working out of somewhere else then.”

“How many of your people did he take from Ventori?” Helen asked.

“At first we thought it was just those from Konlar’s pack.” Lirana answered. “We did not discover until later that he took thousands of our people.”

Neral nodded his head. “Single packs were spread out across the planet.” He said calmly. Neral had deduced very quickly, just as Lirana had, that these Lycavorian Alphas were unlike anything that they had read about as children growing up. Their auras radiated power and so much confidence, yet not once were they looked down upon in any way. Even the King treated Lirana with the utmost respect and he had even apologized for shooting him. A sincere apology that Neral had never expected. These actions endeared these alphas to him in a way that insured his honesty and hope going forward. “Before we began building the cities, many packs chose to remain solitary and alone King Leonidas. He could have done this easily. It was Konlar’s father Joreg who united all of us once we were relocated to Hador. That is where our schooling began for the Pralor equipment.”

Martin looked at him. “I think we can dispense with the King rensibfla while we are all together.” Martin told him. “It seems kind of out of place don’t you think?”

Neral looked at him for a long moment, a smile spreading across his face. “Yes I suppose it does,” he said.

“Lirana do you know how many people are on this station in orbit?” Martin asked.

“Edrao estimates several thousand at least.” Lirana answered.

“We still need the original location of where he began the work on the Svorag virus. And if it is still active.” Martin said. “Would the station have this information?”

Neral met his eyes. “It is possible.” He answered. “We are not allowed access to the inner station. Only the cargo bays in order to offload supplies and food for those working there. Over the years many of our people did not return and they were never seen from again.”

“He kept them to use as test subjects no doubt.” Anja spoke again. “That might explain what happen to the Alphas that were among the Lycavorians on Ventori when they first arrived here.”

Martin looked at her. “Red?”

Anja turned in her chair to look at him. “Think about it Lover.” She said. “The Svorag that jumped onto our ship on Twelve Alpha. It was a turned female Pralor. A turned Alpha female Martin.”

Martin’s eyes grew a little wider. “You didn’t say anything about that.” He gasped.

Anja shook her head. “I didn’t think it mattered up until right now.” She told him.

“Anja, Lorendo didn’t start dealing with the Lycavorians on Ventori until roughly twenty thousand years ago.” Helen spoke now. “Nalmos and now Lirana say the Alphas disappeared long before that.”

Anja looked at her and nodded. “That is true, but Lorendo created this virus. And it infected a turned Pralor Alpha female. That tells me he knows where the Alphas from Ventori are at the very least. And he has dealt with them. If not the Alphas from Ventori then some other Alpha Pack. How else would they have come in contact with the Svorag virus? And they need to be relatively close. Within this quadrant somewhere at least.”

“Could he have turned them all Anja?” Martin asked her with some awe in his voice.

Anja met his eyes. “I don’t know Lover.” She answered. “The Svorag we had on our ship was a turned Pralor and she was turned by an Alpha. She had to have been part of whatever team had interaction with them long enough for an Alpha to take her as his mate and turn her. That implies that Lorendo knows where another colony of Lycavorians exist. Quite possibly the Alphas that supposedly disappeared from Ventori.”

“Carians this man is like a cockroach.” For'mya muttered to no one in particular. “He infects everything he touches.”

It was Delnash who leaned forward now. “He pulled Arzoal’s ship off its pre-programmed course costing how many dragon lives! He used it to transport these Beta wolves off Ventori, interfering in their natural course of evolution! Then he used them as uninterrupted slave labor to do his bidding so that his hands could remain clean!” Delnash was wound up and all of them could see it. Even Tobia had never seen him so angry in all her years of knowing him. “I will see him taken into custody and punished like no other Pralor in the history of our people! I will...!”

“No!” Anja declared loudly as everyone turned to look at her.

“Anja he needs to be...” For'mya began to speak as she turned to look at her with wide eyes.

“He needs to answer for his crimes I know!” Anja declared. “All of them, in the worst possible way, but if we act too soon we will never know what else he has done!” Anja spoke. “What other species he has interacted with or used as test subjects! We need to find out!”

“Red...” Martin spoke putting his hand on her shoulder.

Anja turned her head to look at him. “Lover this is too important!” Anja protested. “We can’t just...”

“I agree with you.” Martin told her meeting her eyes.

Anja’s jade green orbs grew a little wider. “You do?” She asked stunned.

Martin nodded his head. “Yes.” He spoke.

“Martin we need to act now!” Delnash protested.

“Anja is right.” Martin said firmly. “This ronnus made the Svorag virus! He has infected thousands of Pralors, Lycavorians and Tasmor alike! Thanks to Lirana here we know where the main orbital facility is, but how many other creature labs does he have out there? How many other species that we have not seen has he interacted with, or used as test subjects just like Anja says! So we squash out the Svorag here, and that is a big if, but if we do, what happens ten years down the road when more pop up! Or a hundred years! I will not risk everything we can rebuild here, everything that we can build together now on the hope that we discover everything! No... when the time is right, when we have reviewed these files that Lirana’s mate has, then we will act. Then we will take him.”

“He will not tell us anything willingly fervon.” Danny added. “You know that.”

“Oh, he will talk.” Martin assured them.

“How do you know this?” Delnash demanded.

Helen met Martin’s eyes from across the room where she now stood beside her Bonded Sister. “Because he is going to use drugs.” Helen spoke. “And he is going to give Lorendo to the Drow for questioning aren’t you?”

Martin met her eyes. “Yes.”

Helen nodded her head without hesitation. “I approve.”

“Who are... who are these Drow?” Delnash asked.

“The dark skinned elves!” Perlyea exclaimed from the side. “Like Daniel Simpson’s woman. With the white hair!”

“They will get the answers for us?” Delnash asked now. “These Drow?”

It was Wayonn who nodded his head now. “Oh yes. They will get the answers we seek.”

“How do you know this for sure?” Saydia spoke for the first time. “If what this young woman has said is true, he is responsible for the deaths of my people. They will demand justice be served Martin.”

“It will be served.” Martin snarled softly. “It will be served.” He looked at her. “Do you trust me Saydia Daret?”

Saydia was surprised by the question but all she had to do was look at where Perlyea and Aduna stood on the side of the room; all she had to do was look at where Anja and Tobia sat. All she had to do was think about what they had discovered as a people in the last week alone between the Tasmor and the Lycavorians. The values and ideals that they shared.

Saydia returned her gaze to Martin. “Yes.” She answered confidently.

Martin looked at Arzoal. “Lorendo will pay Arzoal. I give you my word he will pay for everything he has done. I promise he will answer for everything Delnash. We need to be smart about this however. There is too much at stake.”

Arzoal bowed her massive head slightly to Martin. “You are one of four Talon Guardians of our species Martin Leonidas.” She told him. “You and your son I trust without question or reluctance. Your word is your bond to us. You and your son. You have never broken your promise and nor has Androcles and if you say he will face your justice than I can be patient.”

Martin nodded his head to her and looked at Delnash in the transmission. “Chief Elder Delnash?”

“You ask much of me Martin.” Delnash spoke. “If what Lirana has told us is true, and I for one have no reason to doubt her word, not after what we already suspected, he is responsible for attempted genocide and so many more crimes that I cannot begin to imagine.”

“You’ll get no argument from me there sir.” Martin spoke.

Delnash took a deep breath and slowly nodded his head. “Swear to me Martin.” Delnash spoke looking at him. “Swear to me that he will not be the cause of another purge of my people. Your people.”

Martin took a breath. “I...”

“Swear to us my grandson.” Jezima’s voice rose in the room now and Martin turned to see her rise from her chair. “Swear to your Aunt and I as you swear to the Chief Elder, swear that you will not allow him to do what my son did. Swear to me that you will do what must be done as your grandfather did. As my son did, no matter how much it weighs on your heart and no matter what you have to do.”

Martin held her gaze for a long moment and he felt Aricia reach up and take his hand to squeeze it. He glanced down at her beautiful face and saw her nod her head. He cut his eyes to both Anja and For’mya and saw them mimic her action and he lifted his head back up to look at Jezima, Meral now standing and holding her mother’s arm tightly in support and confidence.

“I swear to all of you in this room now, on the lives of my children, Lorendo will face justice for what we know he has done.” Martin spoke the words slowly. “And it will be neither swift nor painless. On that you have my oath as King, as a Praetorian and as a Spartan.”

Wayonn nodded his head as he felt his wolf blood stir and he stepped closer to the table. “Then we will speak of it no more.” He said. “We need to focus on our tasks ahead now. This information will change how we will do things and we definitely need to put a plan together before Androcles arrives.”

“Because he has the troops?” Delnash asked from within the transmission.

Wayonn shook his head. “No. Because when he arrives here and discovers what Lorendo has been doing and what he has done to dragons, even Martin will be hard pressed to hold him in check.”

“This is true.” Arzoal echoed. “Now that we know what the cause of his affinity for my kind and theirs for him stems from, he will wish to act. And this is not something we want to happen. Not yet.”

“Why?” Saydia asked.

Martin looked at her. “Because for what he has done, my son will light fire to the stars until Lorendo is dead. And not just dead, but in lots of little pieces dead.”

“Is this not the ultimate goal?” Saydia pressed.

Aricia looked at her. “You will see for yourself when you meet him Saydia, but our son Androcles is unique in many ways.” She explained. “He loves his family without doubt or remorse and he...”

“If you are a friend to us, to our family, to our people, then Andro will go out of his way to help you in any way he can, including fighting beside you.” Martin told her. “If you happen to be on the wrong end of that emotion...” Martin lifted his hand and waggled it back and forth. “Not so much.”

“Meaning?” Perlyea asked now.

“Meaning that if you think I am an ugly, scary bastard...” Martin smiled now. “Get on the wrong side of my son Androcles and his siblings and the definition of frightening takes on a whole new level of meaning.”

“Do they even make a word for that?” Danny asked him with a small grin.

Wayonn nodded his head. “Jorbhe.” He said. “Jorbhe.”

VENTORI 0330 HOURS

Discovery Base was quiet.

Very few men and women moved around at night except for the ever present security that now covered the entire sprawling base. Thankfully it was dark enough near the lake's edge for Martin to sit and contemplate many things. He wore only his fatigue pants and boots, his upper body bare to the night sky and cool breeze. His dark eyes searched the stars above guidance. So many things were happening at once and on nights like these Martin would find a spot to be alone and work things out in his head. The stars soothed him in a way that the warm bodies of his wives and mates could not. Torma was with him in his mind, but he rested beside his beloved Isheeni in the large open air shelter where all of the dragons stayed. Martin smelled them long before they made their way to where he was, perhaps taking a meandering path to his location in order for him to focus his thoughts better.

He looked up to his left when Helen settled to the ground beside him and Arzoal just on her opposite side. She moved her powerful body with grace and precision considering her massive size but as with all dragons in an unknown area, she kept her talons bunched under her body in case she had to move quickly. Martin smiled as Helen sat beside him and held out the mug of Aricia's coffee she had in one hand while sipping the mug she held in the other. Since she had stopped using her Etheric power to disguise her features as that of a much older woman, her true beauty had begun to shine through more and more. She was barely four thousand years old and in Lycavorian terms she could still be considered a child, though no one in their right mind would ever call her that.

"We thought this might help." Helen told him finally.

Martin smiled and nodded his head as he sipped the steaming mug of coffee. "And it does." He told her.

They sat in silence for a long time simply staring at the stars, Spartan Praetorian and Mage, positions that neither of them had ever envisioned they would hold not so very long ago. Helen knew he would speak when he was ready and she simply enjoyed the feel of his aura and confidence within the Etheric realm as she always did. There was something so very different about this man, something that could not be explained in simple words. To this very day it was impossible to illuminate or to even comprehend what it was that drove so many to him to do his bidding. Trillions of men and women alike, from so many different species, they would die for him with but a single uttered word. They would die for him because they knew that he would stand with them to the bitter end no matter the result. Only deeds and actions could inspire such fanatical loyalty from so many Helen knew, and though he hated it to the extreme, Helen knew Martin was aware of this. He followed his father's words with everything that he did. Fight with your head, but lead with your heart. It was this same, almost simple mentality that he instilled in his children every single day as they grew and this action garnered even more loyalty to him. To his family. She knew those who served with Androcles practically worshiped him. They would follow him to the gates of whatever hell awaited them and they would do so willingly for they believed in him as they believed in his father. This ability, though they knew not how it came to be, it came from Martin Leonidas. It came from within him, radiated from him naturally and Helen knew that there were times when Martin feared it. He had grown so much since the day she had first met him in Sparta, and there was much growing still yet to come she knew.

"So what do we do?" Helen asked him finally as she brought her own mug to her lips and sipped her coffee.

Martin glanced at her. "That's a pretty open ended question Helen." He said.

Helen nodded in agreement. "It certainly is." She answered.

"Do you ever regret that day I first came to Sparta?" Martin asked her turning to look at her.

Helen shook her head without the slightest bit of hesitation. "Not for one moment since." She told him meeting his gaze. "Not for one moment since."

Martin looked up over her shoulder at Arzoal, her flame colored eyes staring down on him intently. "Arzoal?"

Arzoal blinked several times and then lowered her head closer to Helen's shoulder so that their faces were only inches apart. "Does the word "never" cover it?" She answered.

Martin chuckled softly and nodded his head. "Yes, I suppose it does." He told her with a smile. "Though I would have to say that both of you are slightly malda for the answers you gave."

Helen smiled. "Well... there is that to consider." She said with a twinkle in her eyes.

Martin turned back and looked at the stars once more. “We need to know what he has done.” Martin said. “Anja is right and she is a hell of a lot smarter than me. We need to know what he has done and how far his reach extends. It’s the only way that we can truly roll up everything he has put his filthy hands on.”

“You left very quickly after speaking with Lirana’s young husband and mate.” Arzoal commented. “And you said nothing to no one.”

Martin nodded his head. “I needed to work things out in my own head.” He replied. “I can only listen to people blither and blather for so long.”

“I assume then that you know Aricia and the others leave in a few hours to meet with Androcles.” Helen spoke. “You know why they are taking the Tasmor Quorum?”

Martin nodded and sipped his coffee once more. “Andro has already agreed according to Sadi and his wives and mates. She speaks for all of them just as Aricia does.”

“He agreed to this Martin?” Arzoal asked the tone of her voice with an inflection of surprise.

“I was surprised too.” He said.

“You shouldn’t be,” Helen told him. “His duty to our people and our Union is absolute. Just as yours is. He learned it from you, so you should not be surprised. Now tell us what you feel Martin.”

“They are part of our future Helen.” Martin said. “The Tasmor. Namiri. Her mother. All of them. My instincts tell me to pull them tight and give them as much help and protection as I can. That we will need them in the future.”

“And you told Andro this?” Arzoal asked softly.

Martin nodded his head. “Why do you think he agreed to this scheme of his mother’s?” He answered. “He loves them all but this is not something he would have agreed to no matter who they were.”

“Namiri is going to become a wife to him Martin.” Helen said.

Martin nodded. “For now.” He told her. “She is not meant for Andro and the others though. But she will have our name for the rest of her life.”

“Someone in our family?” Arzoal asked.

Martin nodded again. “I can’t see who clearly, but yes. She’s tough and smart, just like her mother and she knows it is just a role. Just as Andro and Sadi and the others do.”

“This is being done to get the Tasmor to help us with Honelze isn’t it?” Helen asked.

“In part, yes.” Martin explained. “Saydia offered it to us before we ever came up with the idea. I think she sees that their future lies with us. With the Union. And she will do whatever she needs to in order to see that happen.”

“I have noticed that the Tasmor woman Perlyea has become very close with Anja, Aricia and For'mya in a very short time.” Arzoal commented evenly. “It is a very strong attraction but there is something else that goes far deeper.”

Martin nodded in agreement. “I’ve noticed that too. Anja, For'mya and Aricia as well. They are not shying away from it as they have in the past. I encouraged them to embrace it and this time I think they will. The physical attraction is a small part of it, but I believe they all feel a deeper connection.”

Helen reached out and put her hand on his thick forearm. “Martin Leonidas you are talking to us now.” She said gently. “What weighs on your mind?”

Martin met her gaze. “The unknown.” He replied.

“Are you not the one who lives by the saying never to fear the unknown?” Helen asked with a smile.

Martin nodded his head. “The unknown that we know.” He said. “What worries me is the unknown that we don’t know.”

Helen and Arzoal both blinked at that statement. “Martin that does not make any sense.” Helen finally said.

“But in a way it does.” Arzoal spoke.

Martin nodded once more. “We know what Lorendo is capable of based on what we know he has done and what we suspect he has done.” He explained. “What we don’t know is what he has caused to happen based on his actions. That is what worries me?”

“Cause and effect.” Helen muttered.

Martin nodded. "He has directly influenced and changed the course of evolution for three species that we know of." Martin said. "What we don't know is how many has he changed that may not even have been directly affected by his actions."

"You are speaking of the Alphas from Ventori aren't you Martin?" Arzoal asked.

"Part of it, yes. What Anja said got me to thinking." Martin continued with a nod. "We don't know if he had anything to do with that or if it was just some sort of natural process of evolution in this quadrant of space. What I do know is that we are a very hard species to kill and we are not talking about a few dozen here. We are talking about an entire caste of Alpha wolves Helen. Our people. Where did they go? How did they die? Did they die?"

Helen was silent for a long moment and finally nodded her head slowly. "Yes, I see what you mean." She stated.

"Could these answers be found in what we will discover in the future?" Arzoal asked.

Martin nodded his head. "Yes, they could be." He answered. "Something tells me that we won't like those answers if we get them."

Helen looked at him intently. "I do not like it when you play the harbinger of doom." She said softly. "When you do such a thing Martin Leonidas, it is far too ominous."

Martin chuckled gently and nodded his head. "Tell me about it." He said. "It seems like that whenever I find an answer to a question, that answer only gives me more questions."

Has it not always been this way for us? Torma's deep voice echoed in their minds now and they turned as his huge body glided gracefully out of the darkness and he settled to the cool grass behind Martin.

Martin jerked his thumb back at Torma. "The voice of reason." He spoke sarcastically.

Torma's massive head, clearly twice as large as Martin's upper body, moved forward to butt him in the shoulder causing him to almost drop his coffee. One of us has to be reasonable. Torma spoke.

"Hey! Careful!" Martin exclaimed balancing the mug in one hand while shoving against Torma's massive head with the other. "This stuff is like the nectar of the gods ok!"

Helen and Arzoal smiled at their antics. Twenty plus years they had been doing such things and it never ceased to cause others to smile. Martin Leonidas held nothing back from only three people in the universe, things that he did not share with even his wives and mates or her, and those three individuals were his true brothers in Daniel Simpson and Torma and his son Androcles.

"So where does that leave us?" Helen asked him.

I believe Anuk says it best Feravomir. Torma answered. Flying by the seat of our pants hoping our asses don't catch fire and drop out along the way.

Even Helen could not contain the laughter that burst forth and it felt very good to say the least. Helen gripped Martin's arm and squeezed as her laughter softened. "Oh my...!" She gasped aloud. "I do believe he has been associating with you for far too long." She declared.

Martin grinned. "Yeah. We get that a lot." He said. He leaned back against Torma's foreleg which was just behind him, knowing that it would be there. "We'll find out some things once we take down Lorendo's floating nightmare show." He spoke finally.

"We may be able to impart more answers to your question if you will allow us." The voice spoke from behind them.

Consummate soldier that he was, Martin Leonidas was moving long before the last words were spoken, his Shi Viska flaring into existence as he spun in the direction of the voice. Torma was half a second behind him, his wings flaring and his muzzle turning back in a snarl. Helen and Arzoal were slower on the uptake of what was happening, but hearing the voice and not detecting any scent moving up on them could only mean trouble and both of them were moving three seconds after Martin had risen to his feet, Helen's own Shi Viska appearing from within Flatspace and Arzoal rearing back her massive wing to snap it forward in a killing blow.

Martin stared at the glowing Etheric projection in front of him over the expanse of his Shi Viska, his dark brown eyes wide. The size of the Etheric projection of the dragon was immense, a good one and a half times Torma's substantial size, but it was the image of the man that froze Martin Leonidas in his spot. There was simply no mistaking who it could have been, at least not for Martin.

The image of Sumar moved closer to Martin in the cool night air and held a wide smile on his face and what, astonishingly looked like tears, staining his cheeks.

“You do not recognize your own blood Martin my boy.” Sumar spoke with the same dark brown eyes that were one of Martin’s most prominent features. “I know Androcles told you that we spoke.”

“Grandfather!” Martin gasped aloud unable to fully believe that this apparition in front of him was actually the man who had started it all. “Grandfather Sumar?”

Sumar chuckled. “That’s not exactly the reaction I expected. You are usually more colorful.”

“Dip me in sibfla and call me beven.” Helen muttered aloud as she stared at him with eyes that did not appear to fit on her face they were so wide.

The Etheric projection of Sumar looked at her and burst out in uncontrollable laughter, joined in a second later by the deep rumbling of Dadrien just behind him. He turned back to look at Martin.

“Now that is what I expected from you!” He announced to Martin. “Close your mouth boy... we have a lot to talk about!”

“...She loves you.” Sumar spoke softly. “You know that don’t you?”

Martin cut his eyes from where they were watching Helen and Arzoal recede into the distance chatting away like school girls. He turned his head back to look at the Etheric image of his blood grandfather ancestor. The grandfather to his own father. “Excuse me?” He stammered.

“Helen.” Sumar spoke again. “She loves you.”

Martin shifted on his feet. “Grandfather we are not...”

Sumar chuckled. “Not in that way boy!” He told him. “But she does love you.”

Martin glanced back and saw her small form easily and he nodded his head. “And I love her.” He replied.

Sumar’s image nodded. “Good. As Praetorian and Mage should.” He responded.

“You sent them away.” Martin said turning back once more to look at him. “Why?”

“It is time that we spoke with you and Torma alone.” Dadrien answered that question.

“What happened to my sons?” Martin asked them.

“As we told Androcles, we don’t truly know how it came to be.” Sumar answered him. “Only that it did and we sensed it within you first.”

“Me?” Martin said. “I don’t have dragon DNA in my body like they do! How could you have sensed it from me?”

“We sensed it the moment Androcles was conceived. The moment Elynth was conceived in her egg with Lycavorian blood in her veins.” Dadrien told them. “You do realize they were conceived within days of each other. The moment Andro was conceived in Aricia’s womb he reached for Elynth and found her. We don’t know how it came to be Martin; only that it was.”

“It came as a surprise to us as well.” Sumar continued. “How the gene came to be in you we do not know. Only that it was carried by you and then passed to your son. You no longer have the gene, which is rather confusing as well. We don’t usually lose DNA in such a way.”

“And Dorian?”

Sumar nodded his head. “It happened in the same way. We felt it briefly in you as the conduit and then it was gone. Passed to Dorian. We felt it in Ryner and Laren and Ladur. All of them. As we told Androcles, we cannot explain it, for even we do not comprehend it. You must understand Martin, this was something that neither Dadrien nor I ever considered until after we had been together for centuries. It was only something that we spoke of once and that was only casually.”

“But it happened!” Martin hissed.

Sumar nodded his head slowly. “The hand of destiny or fate we do not know. But yes, it happened.”

“And no one heard you?” Martin asked.

Sumar smiled and looked at Dadrien. “I assure you... we have been quite alone for some time.” Dadrien answered.

“And you don’t know where or how. Yeah I got that part. Sibfla... this stuff gives me a frigging headache!” Martin said nodding his head.

“And you have guided my daughter and Androcles Dadrien?” Torma asked now.

Dadrien shook his head. “Not guided no. From the moment Androcles reached for her they have been of one mind. Just as Dorian and Ryner are, just as Laren and Ladur are. All of their choices have been their own. We have whispered to them in a sense, within the fabric of the Etheric realm, whenever they were torn. But we have never directly influenced them. Their connection makes that impossible. Just as it does for you and Martin. It runs too deep, and is far too intertwined. That is a power even Sumar and I combined could never hope to alter or influence.”

“That power, that connection, it was triggered by Isheeni and Aricia’s connection within the Etheric realm, but the power and depth comes from you two.” Sumar said.

Martin looked at him. “Us?”

Sumar nodded his head. “Laren called you The First. The center from which all else will evolve.”

“I don’t suppose you could explain that?” Martin asked him.

Sumar smiled and motioned with his hand along the shore of the lake. “Walk with us.” He said.

Martin looked at him. “You know grandfather, whenever someone has asked me to walk with them, they usually tell me a whole bunch of stuff that I either ain’t going to like or they tell me I need to kill someone.”

Sumar met his eyes. “Indulge us grandson.” He said as he began to walk.

Martin glanced at Torma who lifted his wings in a shrug and then they began to follow. Sumar waited until they caught up to them before he began speaking.

“You have always believed in a higher power haven’t you Martin?” Sumar asked.

Martin nodded his head. “For the most part, yes.” He answered.

Sumar met his eyes. “And so do I. As the Darastrixi do, and almost every known species in the universe.”

“So you believe this higher power is at work here?” Martin asked.

“In a manner of speaking yes.” Sumar told him. “It is something we do not understand or comprehend. This force, this higher power is directing events. Shaping them. At least where it concerns us.”

“Why?” Martin asked.

“That is a question both Dadrien and I have asked many times through the course of our lives.” Sumar answered. “How is it that he and I were brought together when over a million years separated our life experiences?”

“How is it that Arzoal chose the one dragon egg among the thousands in that chamber to transfer her consciousness to?” Dadrien asked. “The single egg in that chamber that was the last of my physical descendants?”

Martin’s eyes flew open and he looked at Dadrien. “Your descendant!”

“I did have children Martin.” Dadrien spoke with some humor. “One hundred and forty-three to be exact. One of them was chosen for the Seed mission by the Pralors that brought the Darastrixi to Elear. She was killed by the denizens of that world, but her legacy was the single egg that Arzoal chose.”

“Why didn’t you... why not tell her?” Torma gasped now.

Dadrien shook his head. “It is not my place.” He told them. “She will discover this in due time, at a moment where she will need to make the single most important decision of her life as a Pralor and then as a Darastrixi. Until that time she cannot be distracted and I ask that you do not tell her.”

“Dadrien that...” Torma began once more.

Dadrien shook his head. “No.” He spoke more firmly. “It must be this way Torma. It must be this way in order for the chaos that now grips the Darastrixi to be washed away. Only Arzoal can do this. It also means that your mate and your daughter are my descendants Torma.” Darien looked at him. “And now you must see this and what this means.”

Martin looked at Sumar with wide eyes. “Aricia and Isheeni. Androcles and Elynth.”

Sumar nodded his head. “The bloodlines of the two most feared enemies the Scourge have ever known brought together as one.”

“And you believe...?” Martin asked the question.

Sumar nodded his head. “Whatever the higher power, as we believe it to be, it is affecting events all around us, and it is doing so for a reason.”

“Then how could they...”

“Be gods?” Sumar finished his sentence. “Why not?” He asked his own question. “Who is to say that whatever higher power it may be, who is to say that they are not gods and thus directing events in order to face evil head on.”

“That is assuming that whatever higher power this is, that they are benevolent.” Martin commented.

“Or are they simply maintaining a balance within a fragile universe in order to keep the universe moving forward?” Sumar finished once more. “There is no clear answer, but there are many questions my grandson. Questions that Dadrien and I have been asking for millennia.”

“With no answers.” Torma spoke.

Dadrien nodded his massive head. “With no answers.”

Martin chuckled and shook his head. “Answers have been eluding me for some time.” He stated. “Answers to a whole lot of questions.”

“Indeed.” Sumar told him.

“The tattoos that Androcles, Dorian and Laren now wear?” Martin spoke looking at him.

“Sarlana is correct.” Sumar told him. “They are a key.”

“To what?” Martin asked.

“They are a key to something that Dadrien and I both have left for you. We recognized the markings.” Sumar told him. “But it is up to you to find it Martin.”

“Grandfather, I don’t have time for games.” Martin said rather testily.

“Oh it is not a game my boy...” Sumar answered not taking offense. “We simply cannot remember.”

“What?” Martin gasped.

Sumar nodded his head even as Dadrien answered. “It is the truth Martin.” Dadrien said. “Whatever it is, we no longer have the memories of what or where to provide to you. They have been removed. Perhaps as a means to keep this secret safe. The tattoos that Andro, Dorian and Laren now bear on their bodies provide the route and key.”

“So this higher power took it away from you?” Martin asked.

Sumar nodded his head. “It would appear so. Or we may have relinquished them willing. We do not know, hence why we still have so many questions that we cannot answer.”

“Well, that is just plain fucking stupid!” Martin hissed.

Sumar laughed now. “And we certainly agree, though we would have been a tad tamer in our description of it.”

“Why do something like that?” Martin asked.

“The only reasons that we can find sense in, is that you were not ready. That none of you were ready and only the journey to this knowledge will make you ready.” Sumar spoke. “That it is not the time for you to discover these things. Perhaps because there is still so much we do not know.”

Torma shook his huge head and blinked his golden eyes. “Now my head is beginning to hurt.” He stated aloud causing Dadrien to laugh.

“Now you know what we have felt for centuries as we have tried to decipher these very things.” Dadrien told him.

Martin shook his head. “How did you... how did you keep from going malda?”

Sumar looked at him and smiled warmly. “We focused on you. And then Androcles and Laren when they were born. And finally Dorian.” He told him. “When Dadrien and I first came together we could feel that you were the center of it all and now that feeling within is even more evident to us. Everything that is happening now, everything that will happen, it revolves around you and moves outward to swirl around Androcles, Dorian and Laren and those they are bound to. Within the Etheric realm that all of you inhabit are the answers to it all.”

Martin looked at his Etheric projection. “Really grandfather... no pressure. No pressure at all.” He said causing Sumar to smile. “Lorendo and these Svorag are going to be bad enough and now...”

“Lorendo is a worm!” Sumar hissed with an obvious vehemence in his tone. “The man has always been a worm and that will never change. He has never forgiven me for not saving his son all those years ago, and no doubt he took great joy in sabotaging our Seed Mission because he knew what I had planned. I sincerely doubt he ever realized how that would turn out, though I’m sure that he knew, and was powerless to do anything about it because of the Scourge and their invasion.”

“He knew?” Martin gasped.

Sumar nodded his head. “Of that I am quite certain. He knew exactly what he was doing and exactly where our ship crashed. My guess is he hoped the Lycavorians, our people, would solve his problem for him and kill all of us.” Sumar chuckled. “He was so very wrong and that is why he hates our people so.”

“Grandfather... the Scourge have...” Martin began.

Sumar nodded his head. “Yes, I know. You and Wayonn are correct in that the threat to the Alpha quadrant has stopped. For the moment.”

“Do you know why?” Torma asked.

Sumar shook his head. “No Torma, I do not. And that worries me. There is much we are unable to see happening and I fear Lorendo has only made things worse. His hatred of me and our people clouds his reason and judgment. If he ever had any to begin with.”

“The recent encounter Androcles and Murano had with them on old Pralor station is a clear sign though.” Dadrien spoke once more. “They are very much alive and active. Far more active than we believed.”

“Can’t you see them from where you are?” Martin asked.

It was Dadrien who shook his massive head now. “This place we reside, it has curtailed our ability to sense the Scourge as we were once able.”

“Curtailed?” Martin asked.

Sumar nodded. “We do not have the abilities we once had. Whether it is because we are no longer corporeal beings or something else we do not know. We could not sense Murano until he no longer shielded himself. The same can be said for Tobia, though I am very happy she survived. She will be a great asset to the Praetorians to come.”

“Shiria and my Tenna Deia are seeking out those with the gene. They have devised a way to discover them.” Martin offered.

“Ah yes, Deia.” Sumar spoke. “Another in the long line of powerful, confident females that my bloodline has merged into our own. Just as you and Androcles have done. All of my grandsons and granddaughters. Watch that boy Jomann though...” Sumar said. “He is powerful that one and he loves my granddaughter like a blazing sun.”

Martin grinned inwardly at this for he had sensed it in Jomann as well. As a father it was always nice to hear from someone else that his daughter had chosen someone who would love her senseless. And Androcles and her other brothers would never have let it carry on had they not felt the same about Jomann and his intentions with their sister.

“They are my strength.” Martin said softly.

Sumar nodded his head in agreement. “Just as my beautiful Gailina was for me.” He took a deep breath in the Etheric projection and nodded his head. “Back to important matters now.” He spoke. “As I was saying, our ability to sense powerful Etheric presences is now diminished. You and our blood we can sense, but anyone not within close proximity to you or those of our family, if they can shield well, we will not sense them. Even family, yourself or Androcles, if you chose to shield from us we would not be able to detect your essence. Tobia is a master with this skill, it is why even as a child I knew she would be important.”

“You appeared to her?” Martin asked.

Sumar nodded his head. “Her parents, in secret just before we left on the Seed Mission, so that they would know her importance.” He answered. “I also compelled them to forget that they ever saw me. Only to heed my wishes. Tobia’s father was Captain of one of the ships that escaped the purge of our Empire.”

“You know that Tobia and Murano...”

Sumar nodded once more with a smile. “Oh yes.” He stated. “And now, perhaps the most powerful of those who fought beside Wayonn and I is now tied to our bloodline forever because of Deion and Mari. An unexpected but pleasant turn of events to be honest. Since our abilities have been reduced to what they are now, detecting anyone of Etheric power is a questionable proposition at best if they can shield even remotely as well as you and Androcles can. As Tobia and Mari can. As I said, it is not something I expected but it also allows us to achieve our goals more easily.”

Martin winced slightly and Dadrien detected this. “You do not like what we have done through the years?” He asked. “We can see it in your eyes and on your face. Androcles had much the same manner when we spoke to him.”

Martin looked at him. "I think it has to do with not being in control." He told him. "I do understand, and given the circumstances I would probably have done the same thing. It's just difficult knowing that much of what we have done has been staged."

Sumar shook his head. "No, not staged Martin." He said. "All of your decisions Martin, all of the decisions made by Androcles, they have all been your decisions. No matter what they have been. I give you my word." He explained. "Dadrien and I simply gave you the means to see each decision from every aspect. Nothing more. We did not influence you one way or the other."

"But you have influenced others?" Martin said.

Sumar nodded his head slowly. "Not directly, but in a manner of speaking I suppose that we have, yes." He answered honestly.

Martin stared at him for a long moment. "Grandfather, you and Dadrien are among the few who have ever actually admitted to this throughout the whole of history."

"Perhaps." Sumar told him with a shrug. "You and Androcles are my blood, as are all of your children. Elynth is Dadrien's blood, as are all of Isheeni and Torma's offspring. We are not ashamed of anything we have done."

Martin nodded his head. "I suppose I would not be either." He stated softly. "Do you regret anything grandfather?"

Sumar was silent for a long moment before meeting his eyes. "The only thing I regret is not being able to say goodbye. Lorendo robbed me of that and my parents and siblings joined our ancestors within the Rift of Time never knowing."

Martin looked at him now. "Ummm... grandfather, perhaps I should tell you something before we go further."

SPARTA'S WRATH ANDROCLES' READY ROOM

It couldn't really be called a Ready Room. It was more like an apartment as far as Andro was concerned. It was situated just off the port side of the bridge for easy access and contained not only a small bedroom, but also a large conference room as well as office area. Androcles had refused such accommodations at first until Armen had told him he could not change the layout of the Ready Room without altering the structure of the entire deck. Armen had known Androcles would refuse thanks to Sadi, for she was the first one he showed it too. With her help they had transformed the Ready Room into a mini CIC and briefing center. They both knew that Androcles wanted to be close to the action and this is how they accomplished that.

The conference room portion now held a massive polished oak table donated by those at Dreamland with all of the toys built directly into the table that they could hope for. Portable computer screens and small consoles that could rise right out of the polished top. Along the outer portion of the wall that held the huge view window now stood a waist high counter with a small kitchen set up.

The huge table now held thirteen occupants, with another six involved from their ships via secure holo COMs. As was usually the case in meetings like this, plates of different kinds of food were spread out on the counter and table itself with pitchers of water, coffee and juice. To say it was one of the most amazing things Dytin and Aviel had ever seen would have been silly. Both of them were occupying chairs on one side of the table and neither of them could stop sampling the incredible food before them. Eliani and Jomann sat beside one another close to where Andro sat at the head of the table, Denali and Ridor beside them. Ridor had become the unofficial co-leader of Andro's personal team behind Jomann it seemed and this did not bother anyone in the least. Even Daio had begun taking direction from the young man, though they were the same rank. Ridor had the same drive and presence as his father and this was naturally evident to everyone around him, causing them to look to him for direction. Ridor took this in stride and had blended into the role without really knowing it. Cvea was happier than she had ever been in her life, fully embracing her role and status now without even a glance back to her past. Eliani found she was incredibly smart and Cvea was already light years ahead of normal medics in their training due to Eliani's guidance and her ability to retain information and learn so quickly. Ridor would brief everyone on the team when he was finished here and they all knew it. Androcles didn't keep anyone out of the loop for any reason. They were blending very well as a team and it was almost scary to see them in action together. Rumors were already starting to make their way around how they were essentially a younger version of the King's personal team and everyone knew how lethal the King's personal team was.

Dorian and Laren sat beside one another on the other side of the table to Aviel's left. Sarlana and Murano beside them. Sa'sur sat to Androcles' right side as Admiral of the Fleet that they now had. She loved her new job but hated that everyone called her Admiral now. Armen stood directly behind and to Andro's left, choosing to stand as opposed to sitting. His large frame was not suited for one of the smaller chair that circled the table. Deion, Nara and Mari were finishing up some training classes in order for them to be awarded their Agoge graduation certificates. Sadi and all of the Princess of the Union to include Lisisa, Arduri, Iama, Sheva and now Onera were in the landing bay where the PREMONITION was docked and seeing to the ship. While Dorian had not yet claimed Onera in the manner of their people, the half Immortal and half vampire daughter of Yuri and Pa'cour had become a member of their family without question and most had already begun referring to her as Princess. Knowing his brother as he did Androcles knew Dorian was waiting until they saw Yuri and Pa'cour and he could ask for their permission and blessing. Andro knew it wasn't necessary for he already knew what Yuri and his father had spoken of those months ago, and they would agree immediately.

In the six holo images on the massive table were the senior officers of the fleet that now surrounded SPARTA'S WRATH, as well as the commanding officers of the two Spartan ground divisions that were currently bunked on the KINDRED SOUL WASP-Class Assault Carrier and the DAGGER'S TOUCH, another WASP-Class Assault Carrier that had joined them from Dreamland. They were the first two of an entirely new class of ship that had already proven its abilities in combat. Forty more of the WASP-Class Assault Carriers were due to be finished before the end of the year with another hundred and fifty planned by the end of next year. Josie Miller occupied one of those images, the other taken up by General Washington, Commander of the 82nd Cataphract Division and Captain Ron Patton of the KINDRED SOUL. Colonel Mosont represented the Durcunusaan Ready Division.

Andro had let them chat with one another for a few moments as they had just got done briefing each other on status and mission and readiness but now he sat forward in his chair to continue the briefing.

"Ok, we've covered all the standard reports so far and all of us have had a few days to see my father's initial reports and his own tactical assessments and recommendations regarding the situation on Ventori. Now we get to put our heads together since this planet is new to all of us and is completely different from our mission on Honelze. Open floor people, who wants to start?" Andro asked.

"Hell, I'll jump in feet first." Patton spoke from his holoimage. "Admiral Lorian has the planetary system locked up tight, as we all expected, but she is a fighter pilot by nature. She thinks like a fighter pilot. We need to position the KINDRED SOUL and DAGGER'S TOUCH where we can bore right in Andro. Once we drop, we go in and establish command operations centers. That is what we do. Sitting on the edge of the system does us no good."

Aside from the men and women in the room with them and those within the holoimages currently displayed, there were precious few in the Universe who would refer to Andro by his given name and they all knew it. It was an honor to be considered a friend and equal to this young man and they made sure of it.

Sa'sur nodded her head. "I concur Andro." She stated. "Manda is best when left to air to air. She knows her stuff and there is none better but when it comes to ground support leave that to the experts."

Androcles nodded. "Let's hear it."

"Your father doesn't want a big signature." Patton spoke again. "At least not on Ventori. So we go in fast, a high polar orbit, drop one brigade and half our complement of KADEN'S loaded for bear to set up a mobile Command Base in and around this Discovery Base. Not the ADHOC they have now, but a working Command Base. Then we take up a holding position in orbit with DAGGER'S TOUCH on either pole so that way we are always connected to the ground. Each of us will pull twelve hour shifts as Command Support Ship. That way our crews will be rested and ready to answer whatever call comes from the surface."

"Josie's Brigade I take it?" Andro asked.

Patton nodded his head. "You've worked with her before and she and her people know how you operate on the ground."

"You guys have worked on this I see?" Andro spoke with a grin.

Washington, Patton and Mosont just grinned devilishly and remained silent. Andro looked at Armen. "Armen?" He asked the hulking avatar. No one took offense at this for they knew how close Androcles had become with the Avatar and to be honest it was becoming harder and harder for any of them to refer to him as just a machine.

-It is a sound tactical plan- Armen answered. -SPARTA'S WRATH will maintain orbit directly over Discovery Base and KINDRED SOUL and DAGGER'S TOUCH will use her as a pivot for all signals-

"Exactly." Patton spoke from his holoinage.

"Two Brigades." Andro spoke rising to his feet and moving to the large Star Chart on the wall which currently showed the terrain around Jorlari for two hundred miles in all directions. "General, I want another Brigade dropped here." He pointed to a location roughly a hundred and thirty miles between the center of Jorlari and the remains of another city.

Washington nodded his head. "Can do. Their mission?"

Andro returned to his chair. "According to Manda's extensive scans of the surface, Avi believes that this is where the main facility on Ventori is for whoever was conducting the vile work we have all seen the reports on. My father wants it investigated and if there is any sign of Svorag presence you are to call in an orbital bombardment from Admiral Sa'sur."

The room was silent for a moment before Josie was the one to speak. "Androcles, there could be survivors in and around that city." She said softly. "An orbital bombardment will kill everything within five kilometers of the city limits."

Andro nodded his head. "My father has had scouts in the area for the last twelve hours. It's been kept very quiet. Only my Uncle Danny, the interim leader of the Beta wolves on Ventori and my mother Anja know about it. She is concerned that a facility of this size could very well hold hundreds of the creatures my father, Uncle and their team fought in the bunker close to Jorlari. If that is the case, they are not equipped to fight these monsters. At least until we arrive. My mother does not wish to take the chance any of them could get free from the facility. They are all in agreement that this facility needs to be taken out."

"They have two ARIZONA-Class ships with them Andro, plus over thirty refit ships with modified Pralor tech." Patton spoke now. "They could obliterate the entire planet if they wanted with the firepower they have. Why wait if they think it is such a risk?"

-The facility has power to it, though an attempt is being made to mask this power signature- Armen spoke now. -This power source appears to be energizing a sophisticated sensor network built within the Ventori satellites in orbit. If it is active then they would be able to monitor all ship movements in orbit. King Leonidas does not wish to take the chance that they would release whatever abominations within the facility before we were able to destroy it-

"If this sensor network is active, won't they know the jig is up when we enter the system and park right over their heads?" Ron asked.

-By then it will be too late for them to react. We will have already deployed the extra Cataphract Brigade and Admiral Sa'sur will be standing by to give the order to fire- Armen answered.

"I expect an updated report when my mother's arrive in twenty-eight hours, but unless anything changes let's move forward with this plan." Andro spoke. "Just be prepared to dance in the wind as my father says. In case anything comes up at the last minute." Andro saw all of them nod their heads in agreement. "We'll hold here until they arrive and then immediately make our last jump into the Echo Quadrant. From there it will take us another twenty-one hours to reach Ventori. Make sure everyone is well rested and updated on the plans. Dismissed."

Andro waited while the holographic discs grew dark and everyone in the room rose from their chairs and began to exit except for Dorian, Laren and himself and General Dytin and Aviel. When the room finally cleared

Andro moved up and locked the door to the conference room and then went back to his chair as Dorian and Laren moved to the two chairs on either side of him.

Dytin had seen this young warrior in action along with Laren and Dorian and their dragons in the cargo bay of that station and he had no doubts that they were indeed Dahakoan. The things they had done were beyond anything he had ever read about or see in his lifetime and that was saying quite a bit. He and Aviel both could sense that Androcles was a Talon Guardian within their blood. It was like an instinct within them, a powerful pull of nature and they did not deny it.

There had not been Talon Guardians in existence among the Darastrixi for almost a million years and being able to feel two on board this very ship was almost overwhelming to every Darastrixi that was here on the ship with them and among their own transports. It was perhaps the most revered of positions one could hold outside of the legends of the Dahakoan; two positions that were part of the cornerstone of Darastrixi history and legend that had been nearly forgotten and Androcles Leonidas now held both of them.

“I assume you wanted us to remain for a reason Androcles?” Aviel asked when Andro returned to his seat.

Andro nodded as he looked at the two men. “Yes.” He spoke.

Aviel looked at Dytin and then back to Andro. “What can we do?”

Andro leaned forward now. “Dorian and I have spoken with Laren and Ladur at length about the state of the Darastrixi government.” He told them.

“Androcles, our leaders are... they are not bad individuals!” Dytin spoke quickly. “They are...”

Andro held up his hand for him to stop, which Dytin did. “You misunderstand what our interest is General.”

“You are Dahakoan Androcles. Dorian. Laren.” Dytin spoke. “All of you. It is within the realm of your power as such to bring an end to those within our government if you deem them evil in any way. This is something that is part of our history and law and our people will not question it.”

“After what Laren and Ladur have told us, we don’t see them as evil General.” Andro told him. “We see them as apathetic and disingenuous. More concerned with appeasement and maintaining the status quo because that is what they have known for so long.”

“And not wishing to lose their power or control.” Dorian added.

Aviel nodded his head reluctantly. “Yes Dorian, in some respects you are correct in what you say.”

“And how long has that been going on?” Andro asked.

“For far too long.” Aviel answered softly.

Andro looked at them for a long moment. “Dorian and I have dragon blood in our veins. Laren, Elynth, Ryner and Ladur have Lycavorian blood in their veins. How it came to be and why is of no matter any longer. We are Dahakoan.”

Dytin and Aviel nodded their heads. “Yes, you are.” Dytin told them firmly. “There is no doubt of that. But you are so much more. All of you.”

“That is why we need you to teach us.” Dorian spoke now leaning forward.

Aviel and Dytin looked taken aback. “Teach you?” Aviel gasped after a moment.

“Teach us what we need to know.” Andro told him. “Teach us about our people, because that is what we are no matter where we came from. The dragon blood in our veins makes us such. Sarlana cannot do it for she has been away from her people for too long and she has stated this very thing.”

“I am no teacher!” Dytin spoke.

“No, you are a warrior General.” Laren spoke now. “And we need that.”

Dytin looked at them with wide eyes. “After what... after what I saw on that station there is not a Darastrixi alive that could stand against any of you in single combat. And together you would instill fear into the hearts of any who stood against you.”

“We don’t want to instill fear General Dytin.” Dorian said. “We want to instill hope.”

Dytin looked at his friend Aviel and saw him smiling slightly and he turned back to meet Dorian’s gaze. “You are serious?”

“Barring an unspeakable act of depravity General, we will not impose our will on the Darastrixi people.” Androcles said. “Or more accurately, the government. We need to show the Scourge for what they are and we can’t do that with violence.”

“Some of those men and women are complicit in the taking of our Maiden females Androcles.” Aviel told them. “Some younger than Laren. The Scourge have tortured them for centuries. Someone must answer for that.”

Andro nodded his head in agreement. “And someone will. But they will answer to the Darastrixi people as a whole.”

“We cannot go back!” Dytin spoke. “The history scrolls you speak of that could be used to teach you what you want to know reside within our libraries and museums. We would be arrested on sight! Anyone aligned with us would be arrested on sight.”

“We are not asking you to go back.” Andro said. “We are asking that you teach us. There are over thirty thousand Darastrixi among you now! Thirty thousand! Some older than Sarlana I have been told. That is who we want to learn from.”

“To what end?” Dytin asked.

Andro met his eyes. “One day we are going to return.” He told them as he rose to his feet. “It is on that day when we will act as Dahakoan and set our people free.”

“How?” Aviel asked.

Andro smiled and looked at Laren who had a decidedly dark twinkle to her beautiful multi layered blue eyes. “We have made a promise to each other. All six of us. On that day, we are going to return every Darastrixi Maiden ever taken by the Scourge to the planet of their birth.” Laren told them. “And woe unto the monsters who choose to stand in our way.”

Andro looked up from the huge table and saw his brother Byron enter the conference room just as Dytin and Aviel exited. Byron Leonidas was the youngest Leonidas child in actual years since Dorian, Fedor and Eirene had their births accelerated, and he was also the least well known. Their parents had kept information and even photographs of Byron, Retta and Calyb Leonidas very tightly controlled for many different reasons, foremost being their privacy as they grew. Though even at just under seventeen years of age, his half elven brother looked to be in his early twenties and was cut from the same mold as his father and brothers. His five foot eleven frame was tightly packed with muscle and extremely well defined in the same, ripped muscular fashion as his Spartan blood declared. His light blond hair was cut short and wavy but there was no mistaking his half elven ears and the deep brown eyes of their father. He had been eagerly undergoing his Spartan Agoge while on the ship with Retta and Calyb, the condensed classes far more structured and intense than normal, but something that all of them reveled in to be honest. The senior instructors who had been finishing Deion and Nara had now turned their full attention to Byron and the twins and they were advancing rapidly through the training.

Andro knew something was up the moment he saw the look on his younger brother’s face and He turned to Dorian and Laren who were standing beside the table. “I’ll see you two in the gym.” He spoke as he collected the data pads and pushed them aside as Byron came in.

Dorian understood the statement and look and playfully punched his brother in the arm while ducking to the side. Byron laughed and connected on an uppercut to Dorian’s shoulder. “Too slow!” Dorian barked as he held Laren’s hand and they exited the conference room.

Andro waited until the door had once more shut behind them and then he looked at his brother. “You look like you have a lot on your mind fervon. Care to share?”

Byron looked around. “I can come back if you are busy.” He stated.

Andro grinned and pulled out the chair for him. “Take a seat Byron.” He said as he settled into the chair. “Though, if you are looking for advice on playing the Kanare again you have come to the wrong place. I twisted the notes so badly when mother tried to teach me she never let me hold the instrument again.”

The Kanare was a multi stringed elven instrument of music much like the Cello from ancient Earth. Byron Leonidas was a master of the instrument even at this young age and many Master Elven Music scholars on Elear considered him a prodigy on the delicate instrument.

Byron chuckled as he sat down in the chair. “Mother forbid you from playing because you were too forceful and broke the strings whenever you tried to hit C note. We went through four Kanare before she gave up. And they were expensive.”

Andro shrugged his broad shoulders. “Ah well.” He looked at him. “What’s up brother? I know you did not come up here to lecture me on my pitiful skills with the Kanare.” Byron shifted in his seat and Andro noticed that his palms were sweaty. He leaned forward in his chair and looked at his younger brother. “Spit it out fervon.”

Byron looked at Andro intently. No matter what, their brother Androcles had been there for all of them throughout their entire lives. It did not matter what the problem was, what time of day it was, or where he was, if one of them needed him Androcles had always been there. None of their siblings feared telling Andro anything and Byron Leonidas took a deep breath.

“Andro I don’t want to go to the Fleet Academy.” Byron blurted out quickly. “I want to go to Elear and attend the Pi’liate Music Institute.”

Andro sat back in his chair while staring at his brother. Though half elf, Byron’s wolf blood was supremely dominant within him just as it was in all his halfblooded siblings. While the ancient Leonidas bloodline enabled him to match most pureblooded Alpha wolves evenly, purebloods with the original bloodlines of the five packs from Lycavore like Androcles, Jomann or their Uncle Danny, not to mention their father, they could defeat him quite easily. They were much stronger, faster and had far more endurance than most other wolves. Their senses were also much more acute and Byron thought for sure he detected anger in his brother’s scent and posture.

“Andro, I want our family to be known for other things besides war and politics. I want us to be remembered for the arts as well. All of us have a passion for music and art and culinary skills thanks to our parents, but none of us have pursued them. I didn’t come to this decision lightly fervon! I have been thinking about it for months now. I don’t want father... I don’t want father to be angry. I don’t want you to be angry. I just want to lead...”

“A normal life?” Andro interrupted him.

Byron met his eyes. “Yes.”

Andro rose to his feet and moved across the room to stand in front of the view window and was silent. Byron rose to his feet and followed him, standing behind him. “I know you are disappointed.” He began. “I know father will be disappointed as well. I just...”

Andro turned and looked at him. “Do you have so little faith in us fervon?” He asked him softly.

Byron looked at him with wide eyes. “What?”

Andro reached up and took his brother’s head in his hands. “Why do you think we do what we do fervon. Me, Eliani, Denali, Resumar, Arrarn, our other siblings and our father and mothers? Why do you think we do what we do every day?”

“I don’t understand.” Byron told him. “To defend our people. Our family.”

Andro shook his head. “We do it so that you and Retta and Calyb and the siblings that we will have in the future... we do it so that you don’t have to!” Andro told him. “We do it so that you can have the normal lives that you desire.”

Byron looked at him in shock. “I thought you would be... I thought you would be angry.” He gasped.

“Carians why would I be angry fervon?” Andro told him. “We have known since you were three years old that music was your calling, our entire family has known this. Why do you think we always had you play the Kanare at gathering and dinners? Why do you think I have had you make me the data tapes of your work? It is utterly brilliant fervon, and it is your music that brings me happiness and peace when I listen to it.”

“But father...” Byron stammered.

“Father?” Andro exclaimed. “Father has wanted you to make this decision for months! Ever since your time came to attend your Agoge.” He told him tightening his grip on Byron’s head. “Our mothers have kept him from talking to you about it because they wanted it to be your decision.”

Byron blinked several times in shock and his hands lifted to come to rest on his brother’s forearms. “Andro, you are serious?”

Andro laughed and pulled his brother into a rib cracking embrace. “Do you want me to bring Eli up here to confirm to you what I say fervon? She would just slap you in the head and cuss you for waiting so long to make this decision.” He pushed him back just as quickly and looked at him. “Father has never wanted his children to follow in his footsteps. We have chosen to do this Byron, so that you and Retta and Calyb and any who come after do not have to. So that you would be free to choose whatever path in life made you happy. You have no idea how happy this is going to make our parents fervon. It’s about nubous time you know! Your sisters are going to throw a party because of this!”

Byron let Andro pull him into another embrace and this time he returned it as his eyes teared up and he held his brother with as much power as he was able to muster, which was considerable to say the least.

Andro pulled him back once more and looked at him with a smile on his face that Byron had never seen before. It actually softened his brother’s normally intense features almost to the point of childhood. “Have you contacted them? When can you start? What can I do?”

Byron’s face split into a massive smile as well then and he shook his head. “The next class begins in six months. I have already enrolled.”

Andro squeezed his shoulders. “Our mothers are going to sibfla when they find out you finally came to your senses.” He said with a grin. He pulled him close and headed for the door. “Come fervon... it’s time to tell our siblings. They have wanted a reason to have a party and you just gave them one!”

Byron Leonidas was all smiles as he held his brother when they exited the conference room. He knew as a half breed that there were many elves on Elear who considered him and any like him to be inferior. The natural elven superiority often overrode the common sense for many young elven males. Yet he had never been more proud of the name he carried and the blood that ran in his veins and the love he felt for his brother than at this very moment in time. That pride and love would nearly triple in the coming months ahead, he just did not know it yet, or the reasons behind it.

Yet he soon would.

VENTORI DISCOVERY BASE

It was perhaps, the most moving reunion that Martin Leonidas had ever witnessed. Even though they were on this very planet, his Etheric abilities had been severely curtailed with his death and then his reincarnation as an Etheric representation and he could not sense them at all. Jezima and Meral were still shielding at extremely high levels that only Martin, Helen and his Queens could detect. Sumar had been filled with disbelief at the knowledge Martin gave to him that they were still alive, and even as he subjected him to a barrage of questions, Martin had reached for Aricia and the others to bring Jezima and Meral to where he was.

Jezima and Meral could not understand why Aricia and the others had brought them out here into the night until they came around the edge of the building and saw the clear Etheric projection of the son and brother they had lost so long ago. Dadrien had watched from beside Martin as Sumar moved over in front of them without question, Jezima and Meral collapsing into the arms of Aricia, Anja and For'mya, a tidal wave of tears erupting forth from their eyes. Sumar had not hesitated for an instant and squatted before them, reaching for them. There was no way he could possibly touch them physically, so Sumar did the next best thing. He used his hands to channel his limited Etheric ability now to wrap around his mother and sister. Aricia, Anja and For'mya moved over beside Martin, all of them gazing at the immense Etheric figure of Dadrien beside Torma. All of them had tears in their eyes and they pressed tightly to the man they all so loved. Martin didn’t remember how long they had sat there, and he didn’t care to be honest. First Isheeni had walked out of the darkness to settle beside her beloved Torma, both of them caressing each other’s scales. Then Miath and Aurith drifted out of the darkness to settle on the opposite side of Dadrien, staring at the Etheric projection of the very first of their kind with awe. The draw within the Etheric realm was simply too much and soon Helen and Arzoal had returned, followed by Zarah, Lucia and their dragon Seyra.

Soon there were dozens of Lycavorians and elves surrounding the area, all watching with utter reverence and respect. The commotion had woken most of the Tasmor guests and they too came out of their respective quarters to follow the Lycavorians as they made their way to the edge of the lake. Saydia, Anthylea, Perlyea and Aduna stood beside each other, many of the Lycavorians and elves having dropped to one knee in a show of reverence for what was happening, allowing them a full view of the reunion that was taking place. All of them with wide eyes at the two Etheric projections before them. It was unlike anything any of them had ever seen in their lives. Namiri and Emylea stood together beside their mother taking it all in and unbeknownst to their mother, feeling every bit part of what was happening in front of them. They didn't know how, only that they did and it felt wonderful to say the least. To the many Tasmor that were watching it all seemed so magical and amazing and this only served to make each of them believe that perhaps what they had discovered here, what their Sovereign Regent was working to make permanent, perhaps this is what was meant for their people. Many began to drop to one knee as well in a show of respect for what they were witnessing, a movement that did not go unnoticed by the many Lycavorians and elves who were in the area now.

Martin turned his head when he felt Wayonn's hand come to rest on his shoulder. Aricia was tucked against his right side, For'mya and Anja on his left, all of them with tears in their eyes and Martin detected the hint of moistness in Wayonn's eyes as well.

"Martin it..." Wayonn stammered.

Martin nodded his head with a smile. "It feels incredible." He said.

"Carians... it feels perfect." Wayonn echoed his words softly.

"Go Wayonn." Martin said softly looking at him.

Wayonn shook his head quickly. "I cannot." He spoke. "It would..."

"You were just as much a brother to him as his own blood Wayonn." Martin told him softly. "Now go and do what you have longed to do for millennia. Go and say goodbye. I do not know how much longer he and Dadrien will be able to hold these forms and you will regret if you don't."

Wayonn met his eyes for a long moment and then rose to his feet. His whole body was shaking as he inched his way closer to the trio in the middle of the open field and then Jezima and Meral reached for him just as Sumar's face turned and saw him. Then it was too much and Wayonn moved forward to settle between Jezima and Meral who instantly leaned against him in love.

It was emotionally overwhelming for many who were witnessing it, a goodbye that was over forty thousand years in the making. It was something that everyone who witnessed it would remember for the rest of their lives. It was something that they would remember and try to live up to and emulate for others to experience.

It would never be forgotten.

For'mya shivered in delight as Martin's arms held her off the ground and his kiss stole her breath away. Her arms were wrapped tightly around his shoulders as they kissed and Anja and Aricia looked on. They held hands tightly, each of them having experienced the same sort of kiss from Martin only seconds before, leaving both of them flushed and exceedingly happy. His kisses always set their blood to churning, and for For'mya and Anja this took place even before they were fully wolf. Martin set For'mya down and leaned over to nuzzle her four inch high elven ear with his nose eliciting a gasp of intense delight from For'mya as she gripped his arms tightly. He held her close to his side and looked at them.

"You three try to stay out of trouble ok." He told them as Aricia and Anja moved up close to him, Aricia pressing up against For'mya's back as Anja tucked herself under his opposite arm.

"You should be one to talk Beloved." Aricia told him with a smile. "You need us to keep you out of trouble."

Martin grinned. "Now ain't that the truth." He said.

Anja placed her hand on his abdomen and squeezed him tightly. "Just keep in mind that you have three other mates who will want your undivided attention when we return to Honelze. And we already told them you will fulfill your duties as their Alpha and husband." She told him with a twinkle of happiness in her jade colored eyes.

Martin smiled and leaned over to kiss her full lips once more. "I have every intention of doing just that." He told her. "All of you need to keep an eye on these Tasmor Quorum folks. I get the sense that some of them don't like us very much."

Aricia nodded her head in agreement. “Do not worry. That is why Namiri and Emylea are coming with us as well. Saydia and Perlyea insisted that they both needed to go even when the Quorum demanded they remain behind.”

“You know Andro ain’t going to be too happy about this inspection thing.” Martin told them.

For'mya nodded her head. “Yes... that we do know.” She said.

“Make sure he doesn’t squash them or blow them out an airlock or something of that nature will you. It wouldn’t due for our joint relations if he did and you know how he hates political posturing.” Martin said.

“Don’t do anything with the information Lirana’s mate might tell you without checking with me first Lover.” Anja told him. “Dee, Radra and I are the only ones with the know how to contain this type of weapon.”

Martin looked at her. “I got this Red.” He said. “I’m reckless but I ain’t stupid.”

“That would be debatable by some Beloved.” Aricia told him causing Martin to lean over and nuzzle her neck firmly, making her gasp in delight.

For'mya placed her hand over his heart and looked up into his face. “We will be fine Martin Leonidas.” She told him. “Trouble follows you our love. Not us.”

Martin nodded his head sheepishly. “Yeah, tell me about it.” He said. “I’ll see you all in a few days.” Martin watched as they turned and took each other’s hands with For'mya in the middle as they made their way towards the STRIKER that was idling on the makeshift airfield. They would use that to transit up to the ARC ROYAL and then use the HELIX-Class Pralor Corvette to make their way to Andro.

He turned his head slightly when he felt Danny come up beside him. “They here?” He asked.

Danny nodded his head. “They just entered the system and contacted Manda as directed. This Konlar seems on the up and up fervon.”

Martin nodded his head. “Yes he does, but let’s not take any chances Dan. They so much as twitch oddly, blow that ship out of the stars and execute every single one of them here on the ground. I will not allow Lorendo to find out what we are doing.”

Danny nodded his head. “I figured as much. So did Manda. She’s got eight main batteries targeting the ship and will maintain the lock until she hears otherwise from you.”

Martin turned to look at him as the STRIKER began to lift off. “Let’s go to work fervon. We got a lot to do before they get back and kick my ass.”

Danny laughed. “They are going to do more than kick your ass!” Dan said. “But you already knew that.”

Martin grinned widely. “Let’s go clean out some vermin shall we? I want Jorlari cleaned out and ready to receive refugees before my children get here. They’ll call me a slacker if it isn’t.”

Danny smiled again. “Nalmos is waiting for us on the west side of the city. The Master Chief has everything set up and Zarah and Lucia have their teams on the perimeter. Give the word and we’ll hit the last two facilities in the city and then clean it out.”

Martin nodded his head. “No time like the present.” He said.

SPARTA'S WRATH

Aviel and Dytin moved into the massive lounge on the port side of the ship and found Nahko and Dalis sitting with Laren’s parents and Sarlana. The lounge was perhaps half full with many different species to include Lycavorian, Elf and Vampire. Dytin was getting better at telling them apart physically, the elves were obvious really with their four inch high ears. He had learned that those who were half elf usually had much smaller ears but they were still pointed. Vampires for the most part were fairer skinned than the other species, their tans not as dark or deep. There were two reptilian species that he had seen himself as well as several bird like individuals. There were perhaps a dozen Darastrixi sitting at three tables and mixed in with several different species. Androcles had allowed the Darastrixi from the transports and other warships to shuttle to SPARTA'S WRATH and make use of the many different facilities on board. Dytin and Aviel were fascinated with the food types and had sampled everything they could in the days they had been here. Though he knew he did not have to tell the Darastrixi this, he had informed everyone that this was the ship of a Dahakoan and they were to maintain decorum at all costs. No wandering off to see parts of the ship they were not allowed into or asking too many questions. The warning was not needed he discovered on the second day, for several of the engineers from the Union had invited their Darastrixi counterparts aboard for a tour of the ship and it had only grown from there. Many of his officers and crew were aboard the ship learning from their Union counterparts and there were many more families aboard than he had thought Androcles would allow. He had been meaning to ask Sarlana about this and now would be his opportunity as they moved up to the table.

Nahko looked up as they approached and took chairs. "Aviel, Dytin, we believe we have worked out a plan to begin instructing all of the Vrrarhoinpa among the Pralors and even back within their Union." She told them. "Once we begin, we can train them to use their vocal cords just as we do and they will be speaking within six months. Ch'teven, Shalu and Chalith are already beginning to select groups as teachers from the transports."

"The Union?" Dytin asked.

"Darastrixi are an integral part of the Lycavorian Union General Dytin." Sarlana told him. "They hold seats within the ruling body of the Union and they have a say in everything that happens."

Dytin looked at her. "The Dahakoan did this?" He asked.

Sarlana shook her head. "Androcles' father." She answered him. "He and Elder Mother Arzoal together almost three decades ago when our kind was first discovered. Martin's Anome Aricia, who you will meet soon, she is Androcles' birth mother and it is she who is the one who first discovered they could bond with our kind, but it was Martin and then Androcles who took that to the next level. The Darastrixi within the Lycavorian Union are free and happy and even better educated for their ages than those on our own homeworld. They needed to be in order to survive. Arzoal has done wonders as their Elder Mother."

Aviel looked at her intently. "Doraanar... this Elder Mother that you speak of... she was once a Pralor. She transferred her conscious mind into a Darastrixi egg. She allowed our kind to cross breed among species. Is it wise to refer to her in such terms? Her actions will not sit well with many of our people."

Sarlana tilted her head slightly as she looked at him. "As you well know Aviel, Darastrixi eggs do not form conscious thought until they reach full maturity. Indeed they do not truly exist until the egg reaches its full maturity, since our minds do not evolve until the fourth stage of egg growth. Arzoal transferred her mind into an egg that was still in the first stage of its growth. She was among those Pralors who cared for our eggs on Elear and she knew this. This is the reason it took over a hundred years for that egg to hatch. Since that egg hatched, she has done nothing but devote her life to the Darastrixi as one of us. Every decision she has ever made has been to keep those Darastrixi with her, under her rule and guidance, safe and alive.

"It is the members of the Elbakiw Sulevfu and UrIkrisir Mamiss themselves who brought this about! We should never have allowed the Pralor Science people to use Darastrixi on Seed Missions knowing that no Elder Mother was among them. They should never have been allowed to leave our planet without the knowledge that Arzoal possessed when she did what she did!" Sarlana leaned forward at the table slightly irritated. "One of the Dahakoan is the product of that very cross breeding you speak of and she is a Talon Guardian. Do you question that? Do you wish to challenge that?"

Aviel shook his head quickly. "Of course not Doraanar. That knowledge is without question. I did not mean..."

Sarlana took a deep breath and calmed down knowing that Aviel was a good man and only wanted what was best. He would avoid confrontation at all costs, but if push came to shove he would fight savagely, just as any Darastrixi. "Many of those bonded to the Lycavorians and Elves and Vampires within the Union are cross breeds and they are among the most powerful and honored Darastrixi in this Union. Elynth's own father Torma, his name is spoken of with awe by all species within the Union for what he has accomplished. As has his son Jeth, Elynth's brother. Trust me when I tell you, given their size and prowess in battle, either of them would squash the most experienced Darastrixi warrior with barely any effort. You have seen the many history files that I gave to you Aviel; what they have accomplished through the centuries, what Arzoal has accomplished with no guidance whatsoever from the fool Elbakiw Sulevfu or the UrIkrisir Mamiss! What she alone has built without their fool dictates. Do you truly wish to drive a wedge between our people by denouncing Arzoal?"

"Doraanar that is not what I meant." Aviel said quickly. "I am..."

"He is only stating what the Elbakiw Sulevfu and UrIkrisir Mamiss will say when it is discovered." Dytin finished for Aviel as Nahko reached over and grasped her husband's hand in support. "I have read the files you gave to us Doraanar as well. Every single one of them and this Arzoal holds my utmost respect, as well as Aviel's. What she has accomplished is beyond imagination. The Elbakiw Sulevfu and Urlkrisir Mamiss will not see it that way however."

"I do not care how they see it." Sarlana spoke. "It is a fact. If the Elbakiw Sulevfu and the Urlkrisir Mamiss truly wish to do something utterly stupid, something that will turn our people against one another, than that would be it."

"What do you mean?" Aviel asked.

"If the Elbakiw Sulevfu and Urlkrisir Mamiss choose to denounce her, or any of her many actions, there will be civil war among our people." Sarlana spoke plainly looking at them across the table. "They will be denouncing over five million of our own people. The actual number of Darastrixi within the Union is a closely held secret but Arzoal has brought them back from the brink. Where only a few thousand once survived, between the several planets they call home within the Union now, their numbers have grown to over five million. Most of them near the age of Elynth and Ladur and Ryner. Those who sit on her Dragon Council are the oldest among them as it should be, but none of them adhere to the simplistic rantings and dogma of old men who have been in power for far too long. They have done this without the ridiculous edicts of the Elbakiw Sulevfu and Urlkrisir Mamiss to guide them. Arzoal's teachings fill their minds and their hearts. They are freer than any of our people have ever been in our history. Any attempt by the Elbakiw Sulevfu and the Urlkrisir Mamiss to take this away from them will be met by force. Any attempt to persecute Arzoal for her actions will earn the ire of not only the Dahakoan, but Martin Leonidas and the entire Lycavorian Union. The Darastrixi of the Union do not fight alone General, Aviel. They are revered among many of the species within the Union." She said meeting each of their eyes. "They are part of a much larger whole. A whole that includes over thirty trillion lifeforms who will fight with them and beside them without question. And fight viciously if they have to. Trust me when I tell you, I have met Martin Leonidas and I have seen but a tiny glimpse of what the Dahakoan's father is capable of. You have seen for yourself what Androcles' siblings are capable of, what their normal troops are capable of. They are Spartans! A word that strikes fear into the hearts of their enemies. If the Elbakiw Sulevfu and Urlkrisir Mamiss think they will come out on top of that particular conflict, then they are some of the stupidest individuals I have never met in my life."

Nahko chuckled at the last part of Sarlana's statement. "Finally, someone who is not afraid to speak their mind." She looked around the table at all of them with a smile. "Present company excluded of course."

"She will need to appear before them at some point in the future Doraanar." Dalis spoke now. "For their blessing."

Sarlana nodded her head. "I know this. I only tell you what will happen if they act like the fools they appear to be."

Aviel shook his head quickly. "That is not a concern of ours now. I look forward to meeting with her and speaking with her at length." He said firmly. "Her experiences out here among the stars alone are more than any of us have ever seen. I wish to learn from her just as she can learn from us."

"She is an Elder of our people and my men and our people will treat her as such." Dytin added from his chair. "And the one who is called Teniri. She is also considered an Elder Mother I understand. Named such by Arzoal herself."

"And they have fought the Scourge." Aviel spoke once more. "Something that our people have forgotten how to do. Trust me Doraanar, there is more that they can teach us. Like Dytin, I have read all you have given to us on her and her past and I assure you, she holds nothing but my respect. And awe."

Sarlana smiled and nodded her head. "I know Aviel and forgive me my harsh words, but being among Androcles and these men and women has made me unafraid to voice my opinions and emotions. It is quite refreshing to be honest."

Dalis nodded his head from his chair. "Yes it is." He spoke.

"Is this part of why Androcles allows our people on his ship Doraanar?" Dytin asked now. "He has allowed hundreds of our people to come aboard and see how they do things and this is something I did not expect."

Sarlana nodded her head. "All of you must understand what I have learned in these last weeks among them. Androcles and Dorian, their father Martin, their siblings and mothers, they are Lycavorians and Spartans first and foremost. Family is the center of their universe, some would say even to a greater extent than the Dahakoan. Since his birth Androcles has looked out for each of his siblings as their guardian. There have been times where he has defended them viciously as well. When it was discovered that he had Darastrixi DNA in his body, when he and Dorian discovered what that meant, the connotation of that, they embraced it fully and without thought. Just as he is Lycavorian, he is also Darastrixi, just as Laren is Darastrixi, she is also Lycavorian. We are his people. That is their mindset and focus. If ever there was a species that could help the Darastrixi to drag themselves kicking and screaming into the future, these are the men and women to do it.” Sarlana looked at them.

“They are a loyal people to a fault, they will do anything, go to any lengths for a friend or family, for that is how they are built. However, if you betray them, treat them as inferior or try to forcibly impose your will upon them, they will release uoinota ias wer guawysverni upon you. And there will be no respite from their skriiod.” (Hell among the heavens) (Wrath)

It was Dalis who said what all of them were thinking.

“Then so be it.” He said softly.

UNKNOWN SPACE

She was Lycavorian by birth.

One of the strongest Alpha female wolves to have ever lived among her species in their entire history and once considered to the most powerful Yowa to ever walk the green plains of Lycavore. There were many names throughout history for what she was and the many different species among the stars, but the most common and well known was surprisingly a human word.

Witch.

Her fascinating amethyst colored eyes were gazing over the clam, gleaming surface of the massive lake outside the wall sized window. The surface of the azure and jade colored water was glittering in reflection with the rising of the sun over the mighty peaks to her east. One of the many oddities of this beautiful world that she had long ago grown accustomed to. She smiled when her wolf ears picked up the telltale sound of hurried footsteps in the anteroom of her large and comfortable home. Far larger than she would have liked, but she had long grown accustomed to this as well. She didn't turn when she heard the four heartbeats enter through the sliding doors and she only lifted the mug of sweet tea to her lips and drank from its warmth.

“I could hear all of your hearts racing before you even entered my home.” She spoke the words still looking out upon the lake. “What vexes my dearest friend and our three strongest warriors so that they feel the need to rush here so quickly?”

“Revered Mother...” The tall woman spoke from beside the two much younger females and the single male.

“Nicha, how many times must I tell you in a single millennia to speak my name when we are alone?” She said with a smile as she turned slowly and looked at the blond hair of the woman.

The woman smiled and bowed her head. “Dynina.”

Dynina brushed aside the long, thick locks of her raven colored hair, and sipped her tea once more as her amethyst eyes settled on the two women and male. “And how are my favorite grandchildren this day?”

The two young women and male bowed their heads to her in response. All of them bore the raven colored hair of her bloodline, as well as the deep tans that Lycavorians usually had because none of them spent much time inside. They were different however, the black ring surrounding the vertical slit of their pupils. All of them with amethyst colored eyes like herself. The texture of their exposed skin was also different, though no less soft in its touch, with its scale like nature.

“Dynina... the crystal has activated.” Nicha spoke with excitement in her words. “The... the Heralds are among us!”

Dynina nodded her head and motioned with her hand to the side where they all saw the small, glowing multicolored blue crystal on the credenza. Its glow was bright and steady and cast a bluish glow on the wall behind it.

“I sensed them the moment they came together.” Dynina answered calmly.

Nicha looked at her with wide eyes. “You have known?” She gasped.

Dynina nodded her head slowly. "They are my blood Nicha, of course I have known. I have known for many years that they exist."

"Why have you not told anyone grandmother?" The young female asked bluntly. "Why have you not told us?"

Dynina moved forward and looked at them with a loving smile. "Because it was not time my beautiful Perlae." She replied. "Now however, now that they have finally united and come together, now it is time for the puzzle to be complete. Now it is time that you, Ishma and Awser join them. Only together will you be able to decipher and use the markings all of you carry. Are you prepared? Are your Bonded Ones prepared?"

Awser looked at his grandmother. "It is the day we have waited for staania." He told her with bright amethyst eyes. "The day we have prepared for all of our lives."

"Remember your tasks and your duties." Dynina told them. "They are more powerful than any who have come before them, including all of you, and they will need you to help them to focus this power. And you will need to deliver my message to their father, for only he will be able to act on it. Only he will be able to control and command them all."

"We understand grandmother." Ishma spoke.

Dynina nodded her head and turned to set her tea on the knee high table before turning back to them. She reached up and let her hands explore each of their faces as she smiled. "Your task is the most important that we have undergone since we arrived here. Soon it will be time to reveal ourselves and it is you who must guide them here and then on to our final destination wherever that may be."

Dynina watched as the three of them clasped their hands together tightly. "We will not fail you grandmother." Perlae said.

"I know you will not." Dynina said. "I have seen it. But even I cannot see what is beyond, so you must be wary. They must be wary." Dynina smiled and dropped her hands. "Go now. Say your goodbyes to your parents and then gather your Bonded Ones and make your way to the ship."

The three of them bowed their heads to her and then quickly turned and left the room. Nicha moved up beside her friend and adopted sister. "You worry for them?" She spoke softly.

Dynina nodded her head. "They are my blood." She answered. "I swore to my sister I would see them stay safe. She knew what they were born for from the moment they entered this world and she sacrificed her life in order for them to survive."

"Do you fear that they will be rejected?" Nicha asked. "We know that they do not trust easily."

Dynina nodded her head. "But when they do trust they do so utterly and without any question." She said. "Do I fear they will be rejected? No." She turned and reclaimed her tea from the table. "They are of my blood my friend, and once it is discovered who they are and where their blood comes from, Androcles and Martin, their family, they will embrace them as family as well. It is the nature of wolves."

"Can we succeed Dynina?" Nicha asked her.

"We have waited over forty thousand years." Dynina answered. "Waited and planned just as we were instructed. It is why we have remained hidden here for so long from everyone. My people. Your people. Kenroe's people. The darkness is upon us once more Nicha, and it will spread to every possible corner of the universe if we do not stop it this time. We have no choice but to succeed now my friend."

"But they have infiltrated so deeply." Nicha said.

Dynina nodded her head. "Yes they have. But they have never faced what will be arrayed against them this time." She looked at Nicha and smiled, her wolf fangs extending fully and revealing the savage, dual incisor fangs in the front. "They have never faced my bloodline in battle before. We will see how they fare against those who do not fear them or their vile kind. I would not want to fight us, and I am one of us, just as you are."

Nicha smiled. "Yes I am." She stated.

Dynina took her hand. "Once they have departed destroyed the portal completely Nicha." She said. "It must not be left active for anyone to find and trace back to us."

Nicha nodded. "I will see it done."

Dynina sipped her tea once more. "Now comes the hard part." She said with a slight smile.

"What is that?" Nicha asked her.

"Now we wait." Dynina answered. "Now we wait."

CHAPTER FIFTY-SIX

VENTORI JORLARI

Konlar firmly gripped Lirana's lush figure in his arms and crushed her to him, spinning her around in happiness where she greeted him at the bottom of the ramp of their transport. He had not known until this exact moment how much his much younger wife and mate truly meant to him and he made a silent vow to himself to never put her in danger again. Lirana's arms were wrapped tightly around his broad shoulders and she excitedly nuzzled his roughly bearded face in delight as his male aura swarmed around her. Even with all of the Alpha wolf auras she could detect since coming here, they did not compare to Konlar's wonderful scent and aura in her eyes and heart.

Edrao stood just to the side of them with a small smile on his face as he watched for a moment and then he turned his head to look around. The immense airfield they had landed upon was larger than anything he had ever expected to see and the odd looking craft were situated all around them. They had only been to Ventori once since the Svorag had attacked and they found it desolate and devoid of life. Standing here now he did not get that sense from the surrounding area. He could see several of the aircraft lifting off into the distance, the sound of their engines powerful yet muted from this distance. He could see heavy weapons placements all around the airfield to include very well-armed security. His head came back to the rear of their ramp when he detected movement and he saw the single, tall Lycavorian make his way forward, three very stern looking soldiers behind him. All of them were searching the area around them for threats and it was obvious they were there to protect this Lycavorian. Edrao's eyes grew wider when he realized that this Lycavorian was an Alpha, but he was also just like him.

He was a Pralor.

Konlar lowered Lirana to the ground finally and she gazed up into his eyes with an adoring smile and love.

"You are not hurt?" Konlar asked her once more, reaching up to caress her cheek under his fingers.

Lirana nodded her head quickly, relishing in the feel of her mate's touch upon her. "I am fine." She told him, squeezing his hands in hers. "We are all fine my love."

"I should never have let you come here." Konlar stammered. "I put you in danger!"

Lirana shook her head this time. "If you had not, then we would not have discovered what we have husband." She told him.

"How did they... how did they discover you?" Konlar asked.

"Does that really matter now?" The new voice spoke and Konlar turned to see the Alpha Lycavorian walk fully up to them. He had obviously been waiting patiently while Lirana greeted her mate which told Konlar quite a bit right away.

He tucked his arm around Lirana and pulled her tight to him, meaning to protect her as he saw the three heavily armed soldiers just behind this Alpha. Konlar also noticed instantly just what Edrao had noticed. This Alpha was also a Pralor, yet his scent also marked him as being someone who had been turned for far longer than even Edrao.

"Welcome to Ventori." Wayonn told him. "Though I dare say this was your planet long before it became ours."

"Yours?" Konlar exclaimed.

Wayonn smiled and nodded his head. "Oh yes. Ventori is now the second planet in the Echo Quadrant that has become part of the Lycavorian Union."

"And you would be?" Edrao asked.

"I am Wayonn." He replied evenly. "And we are certainly glad that you chose to come here."

"Who are you?" Edrao asked once more. "What position do you hold?"

Wayonn shrugged his shoulders casually. "I have no real title." He answered. "Though I imagine Martin and others are hard at work trying to think one up. Most everyone just calls me Vali'star Wayonn."

"Prophet?" Edrao spoke.

Wayonn nodded his head. "A silly name since I am anything but a prophet, but that is what they have been calling me. I can't get them to stop honestly."

"You are... you are Pralor." Konlar said softly.

Wayonn nodded his head. "I was a Pralor yes, just like your advisor Edrao here. Though I was turned many years before either of you were born."

"An Alpha?" Konlar asked.

Wayonn nodded once more. "My wife and mate was an Alpha." He replied. "It was she who turned me."

Edrao moved slightly closer to him. "How did you...?"

"How did I become turned?" Wayonn said with a calm voice and smile. "That is a story that would require some rather extensive time to tell, but it is one that you will discover over time I'm sure if you decide to remain among us. We are very fortunate you decided to come here. There is quite a bit that we need to discuss."

"Where are our people?" Edrao demanded. "We will not talk until we know our people are safe."

Wayonn met his gaze. "Your people are fine." He answered. "You need only ask Lirana here for the truth in that."

Konlar looked at Lirana and she nodded her head swiftly. "They are unhurt husband." She told him. "All but Neral are within a portable building at their base camp with food and beds and many comforts."

"Prisoners?" Edrao snarled as he glared at Wayonn.

Wayonn met his eyes. "They are no more our prisoners than you are." He stated before looking at Konlar. "If you wish Konlar, I will have them escorted here and then you may depart Ventori without further delay. However, that choice will require us to label you and the Betas that follow you as potential threats."

"Now you threaten us!" Konlar hissed.

Wayonn shook his head. "I'm not threatening you." He stated. "I'm simply conveying the facts to you. It was you who sent your wife and mate and others who follow you here to Ventori to spy on us; to gather intelligence on us. Not the other way around. Or do you now wish to deny that is what you were doing?"

Konlar glanced quickly at Edrao and then back to Wayonn who could see the questions in his eyes. "I..."

"We detected your mate's ship the moment that it entered Ventori's system." Wayonn told him calmly, interrupting his words. He looked at Edrao deciding to give a little information to them. "Our ships and equipment may be based on Pralor technology as you no doubt have discovered by now, however we are not Pralor in our tactics or our means."

"You... but you are a Pralor." Edrao spoke, his tone less hostile now.

Wayonn shook his head. "As I said, I have been Lycavorian for far longer than I was ever Pralor." He stated evenly. "Lorendo was the one who saw to that, though I sincerely doubt he ever envisioned the consequences of his actions."

"Lorendo again?" Konlar spoke.

Wayonn nodded his head. "His hands are far dirtier than even you imagine." He told him. "He has been using you and your people to further his own agenda, which is not something that would benefit you or any of our people should they come to fruition." He looked at Konlar. "As Martin told you, we are not the enemy."

"You would just let us leave?" Konlar asked.

Wayonn nodded his head. "If that is what you wished. Those were Martin's instructions to me." He replied. "The end result of that decision would be solely on your shoulders however. We will eventually discover what Lorendo is up to, with or without your help. When we do, we will act on that information accordingly. When we do act, it will be neither quick nor painless for those aligned against us."

"We are not aligned against you!" Konlar gasped.

Wayonn met his eyes. "Aren't you?" He asked tilting his head slightly to the side and meeting his gaze. "Lorendo has had you following two Pralor women. Two women who happen to be family members to the Lycavorian King. His grandmother and his Aunt." Wayonn saw Edrao's and Konlar's eyes grow wide at this information. "You are beginning to understand now aren't you? Martin Leonidas is very protective of his family as you no doubt understand being wolf."

Konlar nodded his head as he looked at Lirana quickly. “How is... how is that possible?” He answered looking back at Wayonn.

“That is a story for the ages.” Wayonn told him. “But it is fact. Perhaps one day you will hear it, but know that is what drives Martin Leonidas. If you wish to depart Ventori with your people, you will be allowed to leave without harm or pressure, but it would be you dividing our people. That is not something Martin wants. The only thing he loves more than his own people are his Queens and his children. He wants to speak with you and meet the man who has lead his people this far and obviously led them with purpose and care. It is your decision to make but before you do, know this...” Wayonn met his eyes intently. “If you decide to leave now and it is discovered that you knowingly took part in anything that happened here on Ventori, then he will hunt you down and there will be no place that you can hide in this entire Universe.” Wayonn stepped closer to him. “That is something that we do not want to happen.”

“We may not... we may not have been here,” Konlar spoke. “But these are my people! I would never do anything that brought them harm! Never!”

Wayonn nodded his head. “That is what Martin determined as well.” He turned slightly behind him and motioned to the closest Durcunusaan troop that was behind him. The man nodded and lifted his hand to his face, activating his jaw Implant. Within what seemed like mere seconds an odd looking hover vehicle came barreling up to their position and came to a halt. It had apparently been standing by just over the crest of the hill. Martin turned back to Konlar and motioned to the armored vehicle. “This is one of our Heavy Lifters. Our main ground transports. Please...” He spoke pointing to the Lifter. “We can stop at the barracks where your people are in Discovery Base and then I will take you to see Martin. They are currently on the other side of the city of Jorlari cleaning out the last nests of these Svorag vermin.”

Konlar looked at him with wide eyes. “He does this himself?” He asked in shock.

Wayonn chuckled softly. “Martin Leonidas does not sit back and let others do for him. He only waited until his Queens departed and now he is fighting in the thick of it with his men. His Queens would not have allowed him to do such a thing.”

“He sent them away so he could fight?” Edrao asked.

Wayonn shook his head. “No. They have a diplomatic mission that they are on with the Tasmor Sovereign Regent. But now that they are gone, Martin can act more recklessly than if they were here. Something he does quite well. Come... you will not be disappointed I assure you.”

Wayonn turned and began moving for the Lifter and Konlar felt Lirana nudge his side. He looked down into her face and saw her nod her head. He had come to trust her female instincts completely since they had been mated and he would not change that now. Squeezing her hand he began to follow Wayonn.

HELIX-CLASS CORVETTE
ASSIGNED TO ARC ROYAL ENROUTE TO SPARTA'S WRATH
ETA THIRTEEN POINT 4 HOURS

They were designed and built for speed and quick strikes, and while they would never match the newly created and built PREMONITION in capability, the HELIX-Class Pralor corvettes were quite proficient. This particular Corvette had been tweaked by the engineers at Dreamland and while still retaining its speed and ability to fight, it was now used mainly as a transport vessel. Unlike the PREMONITION, the HELIX-Class Corvettes had only one main deck and two separate crawl spaces above and below the main deck. The central portion of the ship was configured in typical passenger carrying capacity with many comfortable chairs and couches spread out in the three different sections of the ship. The forward section was where Saydia sat with Namiri, Emylea and her four other daughters who had recently arrived on a Tasmor warship to be with their mother once they had heard of her union to Anthylea. All of them were overjoyed that she had finally fulfilled the one wish they all knew she had and that was to marry the beautiful and exotic Anthylea. The caramel colored Anthylea had been an anchor for their mother for many years and the adoring love they had for each other was without question. Faydia Daret was especially close to Anthylea for she was a Tasmor Breeder herself, and she sat with Anthylea speaking in soft tones, always seeking advice from the older woman in how she should act and present herself. Rena, Inara and Kelale sat with their mother, Namiri and Emylea trying to discover all that they could on the Lycavorians and other species that were among them. Emylea and Namiri were excited about this trip for their own reasons, Namiri because she knew this was an important mission. What she was going to do was secret, only Emylea knowing what the situation was all about. She had spoken to Sadi and the others for quite a long time and found them to be extremely friendly and humorous. They were already planning to meet her when they arrived and begin the ruse that would bring the Tasmor people together with the Lycavorians for many years to come. Namiri learned much from Sadi and the others about Androcles, and to say that his sense of honor and pride impressed her would be only partially true. If everything they told her about him was true, he could very well be just the man she had been looking for all of her life.

Emylea Daret on the other hand, she wanted to see Mari in the worst possible way. The bubbly Pralor woman had smitten Emylea from the beginning and they had shared a beautiful and passionate relationship for several months while Mari was with her mother Tobia on the Tasmor homeworld. Neither of them wanted it to end, but they knew Emylea would not have been able to continue their torrid relationship once Mari left, for the Tasmor Quorum would never have allowed it. Emylea Daret was heartbroken when she discovered Mari had married one of the Lycavorian Princes, but she loved Mari and to know that she was happy would make Emylea happy. She didn't look forward to seeing her with another person, especially a male, but Emylea hoped she would be able to hold her one last time.

The center section of the ship held all of the Tasmor Quorum members, while the rear section held only four passengers, two of them Jacina and Recia. It was here that Aricia stopped when she caught Jacina's scent and her azure eyes found her easily enough and went wide when she saw her. She had caught the faintest taste of her scent when they began the journey but she dismissed it as an accident.

"Jacina?" Aricia gasped as she moved over to the small couch where she sat with Recia.

Jacina's face lit up when she saw Aricia and she got to her feet quickly. "Aricia!"

The two women embraced tightly, and Aricia pushed her back looking at her. "Carians Jacina you look beautiful! Your hair is...!"

Jacina smiled shyly. "It is a new beginning for us." She spoke evenly. "I felt it was needed. Anja's hair color is gorgeous and I tried to get as close as I could."

Aricia let her fingers trace through Jacina's long hair and smiled. "It's beautiful. You are beautiful." She said. Ever since they had first met her in that Svorag mountain horror, Aricia knew that Jacina would play a role within their family in the future. Martin and her fellow Queens knew this as well, but even Martin could not see how it would play out. She ran her fingers over Jacina's cheek. "Just don't tell Melyanna that... she will never let us live it down."

Jacina laughed and nodded her head. "I won't." She said.

Aricia looked at Recia and took the chair next to the couch where they sat. "Recia, you are looking beautiful as well." She said taking her hand as Jacina returned to her seat.

Recia had fully recovered and Anja had declared her free of the Svorag virus many weeks ago but because of advanced changes within her body due to the virus, there were still small portions of her body that retained the almost scale like skin of the Svorag. They were small and in places that no one would ever see, but they were very sensitive to the touch and Recia was still learning to control the urges these sensations brought out in her. One other thing that remained from her near transformation was the almost lizard like, eight inch long tongue that had not returned to normal. It was something Recia had come to terms with, but she was also still learning to speak normally once more.

Aricia had to admit that those reminders aside, Recia was a very stunning woman. Her body was lean and muscular in a very lush feminine and way, her breasts firm and perky. Her long blond hair was the color of fresh wheat and her stunning blue eyes were clear and alert.

Recia squeezed Aricia's hand and smiled brilliantly. "I have Anja, For'mya and you to thank for that." She spoke. "You and they saved me. Saved us."

Aricia blushed slightly, unaccustomed to the praise. "We only did what was right." She said.

Recia nodded her head. "Perhaps." She answered. "But you did not have to help me these last weeks and months as you have. None of you did. Remaining by my side while I came to terms with what happen to me. I will forever be in your debt."

Aricia shook her head. "There is no debt to be paid." She replied. Aricia took her hand in both of hers and looked at her intently. "How are you doing? Really?"

Recia smiled and nodded her head. "Better than I ever thought I would." She replied honestly. "I don't remember most of it to be honest, just brief images. They are fading for the most part thankfully. Anja has given me a treatment for the patches of Svorag skin that remain. They are still sensitive but she said this will fade as I become more used to them." Recia looked at her with a genuine smile. "On a brighter note, I can now lick my eyebrows."

Aricia's eyes grew wide as the long, eight inch tongue extended from her mouth and rose up to move slowly along Recia's eyebrows. Recia couldn't help herself and she began to laugh and this caused Aricia and Jacina to break out into laughter as well. After a moment Aricia regained her composure and looked at them. "I did not know you would be coming with us." She finally said.

"Anja suggested it." Jacina answered. "She said your son's ship will have the most advanced labs in this quadrant. Even more so than those on Artaaya. We want to work and that is where we will do the most good in fighting these monsters."

Aricia nodded her head. "I understand." She said.

"I want to... I want to eradicate all of them." Recia spoke in a low, harsh voice. "I want to make them pay for what they did to us. To others."

Aricia squeezed her hand once more. "That is perfectly understandable and accepted." She told her. "Direct that anger and desire in your actions Recia. Do not let it ferment inside you. And do not let it rule who you are inside."

Recia met her eyes. "I would not have been able to do that without you and Jacina and the others." She told her honestly. "Now, now I know I can."

Aricia smiled and leaned over without hesitation to kiss her cheek and nuzzle her skin in a friendly fashion. "You will always have us." She told her. "That is without question. Besides, Anja would never let such intelligent and gifted researchers like you and Jacina to escape her direct hand. She surrounds herself with the brightest and the best and that is why she is so skilled herself."

"What is this ship like?" Jacina asked now.

Recia nodded her head. "We have never been on a VORTEX-Class cruiser before. We've never seen one except in history files."

Aricia smiled. "Well then I guess we will discover this together for neither have we." She answered. "We can get lost together and have one of our children come to our rescue."

Recia and Jacina laughed at that as Aricia got comfortable. Jacina was to be part of their family in some way Aricia knew and the young woman, really only a few years younger than her though she had been in stasis for over nine hundred years, she fascinated Aricia. Recia was struggling to rebound from what had happened to her and being on Andro's ship was the perfect medicine.

Time would reveal all to Aricia and their family and no one would be unhappy to say the least.

The Flight Deck of the HELIX-Class Corvette held not only the two standard pilot seats, but also a third center seat that was slightly elevated and directly between the two pilot seats. The Flight Deck was larger than anything that Endith, For'mya and Tina had ever flown before, but all three of them were thoroughly enjoying the space. Tina sat behind For'mya in front of an immense computer console that monitored every aspect of the ship. Further back in the spacious deck was a refreshments counter and couch with a knee high table. It was on this couch that Perlyea sat with Aduna. Anja turned from the refreshment counter and handed each of them a metallic mug with steaming cinnamon flavored tea.

"I spoke quickly with my daughter Eliani before we left." She told them as she turned back and retrieved her large mug of coffee. "She told me SPARTA'S WRATH has four different main Research Labs and we are going to commandeer one of them." She spoke as she settled in the comfortable chair across from Perlyea and Aduna. "I have all the research and data we have gathered since coming out here on my P9 and once I download it to the computers in the lab we can get to work. Once this business with Androcles is done."

Aduna glanced at Perlyea quickly, Anja taking notice of the look that passed between the two women.

“What?” Anja inquired of them. “What’s wrong?”

Perlyea smiled and leaned forward. “There is nothing wrong.” She answered. “Aduna just has... she has questions about the Gene Treatment.”

“What questions?” Anja asked settling her eyes on Aduna.

“Perlyea has explained it to me.” Aduna spoke now. “It’s not that I do not believe her,” Aduna looked at her with a loving smile. “She is brilliant at what she does,” Aduna turned back to Anja after Perlyea reached out and squeezed her hand. “It is true then that we will be able to have children?”

Anja knew right away what was flashing through Aduna’s mind. After so long trying to have children together, Aduna was hesitant to believe that it could actually happen now. Anja smiled and leaned forward in her chair. “Yes.” She answered. “I have looked at all of her work and what she did in combining the needed parts of the serum. It was actually incredible work considering that technologically speaking Tasmor Medical Science is about a thousand years behind ours. That is a testament to her skill really.”

“I took the Gene Treatment shortly after Perlyea though.” Aduna spoke. “I know you told her it will take time but...”

“But it’s been almost two years and nothing?” Anja asked her.

Aduna nodded her head. “Yes.” She looked quickly at Perlyea. “Not that I don’t mind our time together these last two years. They have been glorious.”

Perlyea blushed slightly and smiled. “They certainly have.” She agreed.

Anja chuckled at their coy looks for one another and she set her mug down on the table. “The evolution of Lycavorian DNA is an amazing thing really.” She said. “It has been changing for millennia and it continue to change. It is adaptive to its environment. It does not matter that those on Ventori are Beta Wolves and you used their DNA; you would have had the same result with the DNA from an Alpha. When I told Perlyea the time frame of when the changes within your body will be complete it was a rough estimate. All the tests we have done since have proven this. Changes are occurring Aduna, in you and Perlyea and every Tasmor who took the Gene Treatment.”

“I know.” Aduna said softly. “I just want...”

“We want my love.” Perlyea said. “We want to start a family.”

Anja smiled at them. “And you will.” She said. “What is happening to you, within you; it is very similar to what goes on within our own people. Just in the last thirty years alone, among the Lycavorians within the Union, we have had to change how we view the things we grew up with because our females were coming into adulthood much sooner than they had in the past. Aricia went through her Coming of Age when she was barely over a hundred years old for example, but now our females are entering their Coming of Age in their late teens. Our males are moving into their own adulthood even sooner.”

“Sooner?” Aduna asked.

Anja nodded her head. “Just as it is with our young females, they look older than they actually are in years, because evolution of our species has made this so. Experiences and events have caused this to happen for whatever the reason, and our DNA changes with it. My theory, and there are many theories, is that because we can imprint our children in the Etheric realm, it makes them older than they actually are. Our physical bodies are finally catching up. It took exactly eighteen months for my body to adapt after Martin turned me. With For’mya and Dysea it took a few months longer. Duewa was bitten less than a year ago, but the changes in her are almost complete. It is no different for the Beta wolves that Perlyea’s serum was created with. They may not have gone through as many changes in the same time period as the wolves in the Alpha Quadrant, but that’s the amazing thing about Lycavorian DNA. It is always changing.”

“And it will not alter us?” Aduna asked.

Anja shook her head. “Like Perlyea has probably told you already, she only used enough DNA strands to create the serum. Whatever changes do take place within you, they will be on such a miniscule scale you probably won’t even notice them entirely. Some of them you might. All of you will be healthier, that is just part of the Lycavorian Healing Factor that you will more than likely notice. Aside from that, your senses might be a little more sharp, your endurance a little higher, but nothing that will alter you as a Tasmor. Essentially, over time, the serum will have fixed whatever the issue was that was keeping your Breeders from having children in more numbers. You will still be completely Tasmor.”

“And those Tasmor Breeders that... the ones who entered into relationships with females from Ventori?” Aduna asked. “I only ask because... my sister has taken a Ventori female into her bed and they are very much in love with each other.”

Anja nodded her head. “They will be able to have perfectly healthy children. I mean we could probably do a Gene Projection and see what a child of such a union would look like, but if they are healthy, what does it matter?”

Aduna shook her head with a smile. “It does not matter.” She said as she sat back on the couch and looked at Perlyea with a new twinkle in her dark eyes.

“Would they be able to shift as you do Anja?” Perlyea asked.

Anja shook her head. “That I can’t answer.” She replied. “Not until a child from a union like that is born. Then it can be tested and determined if that is plausible. I mean we could guess and probably be right, but we wouldn’t be completely sure. I don’t like to guess either.”

Perlyea looked at her intently, glanced at Aduna and then back to Anja. “You can smell that we desire you can’t you Anja? Aricia and For’mya as well.” She asked softly.

“Perlyea!” Aduna gasped in surprise.

“There is no point in hiding it any longer.” Perlyea spoke frankly. “Not if we are going to spend so much time together in the future.”

Anja stared at her, unsurprised by Perlyea’s candor. She was a very strong and intelligent woman and so was Aduna. She, Aricia and For’mya had detected this wafting from their scents just as Martin had said. It grew more pronounced in Perlyea once Aduna had arrived since they were already lovers and in a deeply committed relationship. That desire reflected in Aduna as well because of their feelings for each other. Anja had known this would come up sooner or later and that they would need to address it. Aricia and For’mya agreed to let Anja handle it since it appeared she was more of the focus for both women.

Anja looked at both of them with her jade green eyes. “Aricia, For’mya and I, Dysea, Bella and Cirith, we have loved each other for so long, shared each other and Martin for almost three decades.” Anja spoke softly. “The love we have for each other is no different than what you and Aduna have for each other. Martin is the only man any of us have loved or desired in all that time. He is the only man that any of us have wanted to love. He is a part of us, just as Aduna is a part of you and you part of her Perlyea.”

Perlyea looked at Aduna with adoring eyes and nodded her head as she looked back to Anja. “Yes.” She said.

“Ever since Martin first claimed each one of us, we have always had each other.” Anja continued. “No doubts, no regrets and no hesitation. In that entire time, because of who we are, we have never had those we could speak with, be with, that were what you would call true friends. That is what we have always desired to be honest and until we met you Perlyea and then Aduna, we did not fully see that for ourselves. Martin has known that all of this time, he is scary sometimes with what he can see in others.” Anja looked at them. “You are both such beautiful women, strong and intelligent, and yes, desirable. These are the exact things we all look for in those we choose to share our bed with. Were we any other people, I don’t think any of us would blink at the opportunity to be with you. Unfortunately, we are other people and our love for Martin is not something we take lightly. It is absolute. What we share with him we could not share with another no matter how much we cared for them. It is the same for you and Aduna isn’t it?”

Perlyea looked at her exotic lover and closest friend in the universe. She reached out and took her hand before turning back to Anja. “Yes, it is.”

“So you understand.” Anja told her, some relief in her voice. “We have discovered, all six of us, true kindred spirits in you and Aduna. True friends that we can have sister like bonds with. That is what we can have. What we want to have, if you and Aduna are willing.”

Perlyea was silent for a long moment and then she reached across the small table for Anja’s hand. “I think I would relish that friendship far more than anything else we could share.” She said honestly.

“As would I.” Aduna echoed almost immediately.

“We can be malda sometimes, and half the time we chase Martin around trying to keep him out of trouble, but it would be a glorious time.” Anja said.

Perlyea looked at Aduna and then back to her. “Then we accept.” She said quickly.

Anja squeezed her hand. “You don’t know how happy that is going to make us.” Anja told her. “You really don’t.”

Aduna smiled. “If it means we will see wonders throughout the stars that we never imagined, then it will make us equally as happy.” She said.

Anja laughed softly. “A lot of those wonders have tried to kill us recently.” She said.

“No one ever said it would be easy.” Aduna came back.

Anja shook her head. “No, they didn’t.” She said with a smile.

“Tell us of your children Anja.” Aduna asked her. “All of them.”

[You did not tell them what our Beloved told you Anja.] Aricia’s sweet voice filled Anja’s mind.

[What would be the point in that Little Wolf?] Anja answered. [None of us would ever act out in such a way, regardless of whether Martin agrees with it or approves. He wants us to be happy no matter what, and if he thinks something will make us happy, he will agree to it. That is why he told me what he did about Perlyea and Aduna.]

[This is very true. We have seen this in the past with him.] For'mya agreed from her co-pilot’s seat without turning around.

[They are beautiful and very desirable... and in another life I wouldn’t hesitate to jump their bones.] Anja said. [But we are in this world and this life and I love my life. And they are not Martin Leonidas.]

[Avoi.] Aricia spoke softly.

[Besides... the only gigantic slab of meat I want dipping into my honey pot is Martin Leonidas’ gift. That man plain nubous us until we are stupid.] Anja spoke with a large amount of humor.

Aricia and For'mya nearly lost it in hysterical laughter at Anja’s words but they were able to maintain their control in their respective areas and only laughed within their private Etheric connection with their fellow Queens.

[Oh... Anja Leonidas, you are so bad.] For'mya declared, her voice tinged with humor.

[She is so right though.] Aricia commented, still laughing in their connection as well.

[Stop!] For'mya hissed in laughter. [I still have to help Endith fly the ship and I can’t do it if I am thinking of that!]

Anja looked at Perlyea and Aduna and saw their confused looks and she smiled brilliantly at them. “Our children?” She said. “I should probably start with Androcles since he is the oldest of them. Well, technically Lisisa and Yuriko are the oldest, but they always defer to Androcles.” Anja lifted her mug of coffee and sipped it. “Androcles is...”

VENTORI NORTHEAST QUADRANT OF CITY FOURTH SVORAG BUNKER

Neither Konlar nor Edrao had ever seen anything like it.

Discovery Base was massive they soon discovered as they entered through the main gate area. They were directed to an area just off to the right of the gate where they exited the vehicle and then Wayonn led them through the paths of the base. Konlar was more of a space captain unlike his father, though he did manage to detect the many positions filled with heavy weapons along the perimeter wall that had been built. Everyone was armed inside discovery Base, even the Tasmor soldiers he had seen moving freely within the perimeter. Whatever was happening here Konlar decided, the Tasmor were now fully part of it. They had over two dozen warships in orbit around the planet, and their heavy transports were moving back and forth between those ships and the surface. They had detected the Flagship of Saydia Daret in orbit as well, which Konlar knew was not a usual sight. The Tasmor Sovereign Regent was approachable he knew, but she did not easily trust those who were not Tasmor. Apparently something had taken place here on Ventori that had changed all of that. The Tasmor troops he saw were working hand in hand with Lycavorians and at least half a dozen different species that he had never seen before.

Lirana's team was resting in the large, portable building he saw when Wayonn led him into the facility. Their gear was stowed in different spots along the many cots that dotted the floor but the largest thing that Konlar noted was that all of them had their weapons and they were within easy reach. That single fact told him all he wanted to know since no man of any common sense would allow his enemies, or those he thought to be enemies, to keep their many weapons in such close proximity. Konlar greeted each of them with Lirana and all of them spoke of the wonders they had seen just inside this base. They had been restricted to the interior of the base, but they were not limited to where they went inside the walls. Many of them had spoken with the different Lycavorians in the camp, Alpha and Beta wolves alike, not to mention the different species. After a longer amount of time than he thought they would be allowed Wayonn motioned that they needed to move on. Konlar didn't hesitate, for just being here had begun to bring out something in him that he had never felt before. It was almost like it permeated the air of the camp all around them.

Confidence, pride and hope.

Two emotions that were in short supply among his own people for they were always wondering what the future held for them and their children. Konlar had many questions when they reentered the interior of the Heavy Lifter and he didn't hesitate once the vehicle began moving.

"How... how many Alphas are there in this Union?" He asked. "Do they hold all the power?"

Wayonn turned in his seat slightly. "I don't have exact numbers." He told them evenly. "I know that Lycavorians make up about a third of the total population of the Union. Perhaps a little less. They are one of the four founding species for the Lycavorian Union."

"One of four?" Konlar asked. "I did not... our history scrolls told us that Alphas did not work well with others."

Wayonn nodded his head. "That may have been true when your ancestors were taken from Lycavorian and brought out here by the Pralor people, but it has not been like that for nearly thirty thousand years." He replied. "I should know, for I was one of those who helped to bring about that change."

"You are... you are him aren't you?" Edrao asked now with wide eyes. "You are the Wayonn who occupies Pralor history files alongside Chief Elder Pralor Sumar! You were his Praetorian Mage! You were lost millennia ago! How could this happen..."

Wayonn nodded his head once more. "Quite a bit happened actually." He said. "The short version... our City Ship crashed on Lycavore some forty thousand millennia ago. Instead of killing us, the Lycavorians absorbed the surviving Pralors into their packs. We did this willingly after discovering that the Scourge had all but destroyed our own people. Through the many generations that followed, Sumar's descendants took on a leading role in the future of our people and many changes were instituted over time. The caste system that existed between wolves was left in the past. There are thousands of Beta wolves in positions of influence and power within the Union, just as there are Alphas. You have seen for yourself in our camp that Betas or even Omega wolves are treated no differently. We are one people after all."

"Then Sumar is...?" Edrao began to say in shock.

Wayonn shook his head. "No." He answered softly, his mind flashing back to the Etheric projection of his dearest friend and how he finally got to say goodbye to him. "Sumar died defending what he had come to love, just as many did in that time. The man you are going to meet is his great grandson by blood." Wayonn told them. "And he is also the rightful King of the Lycavorian Union. All Lycavorians, wherever they may be."

"By the Ancients within the Rift of Time!" Edrao gasped. "If... if what you say is true then he is..."

Wayonn nodded his head. "Yes. He is a Praetorian." He told him. "And just as powerful as his grandfather was, if not more."

